Just roughly I might point out that according to the last figures I was able to obtain there are still 388 retired C.N.R. employees on pensions of less than $25 a month. There are still 2,245 on pensions of $25 a month, and a total of over 8,000 on pensions of less than $80 a month. When one looks at the amounts of money in the Canadian National Railways pension fund, when one discovers that the interest being paid on that fund each year is an amount greater than is being paid out in pensions, one can understand that the employees feel on all counts that they have a right to an increase in their pensions.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is not the time to debate the whole broad issue itself. I shall do that on another occasion. I know that I cannot expect the minister to tell me tonight that the increases I am seeking for retired C.N.R. employees, like the increases I am seeking for retired civil servants, are going to be announced. But I do hope he will give an affirmative reply to the question I put to him—will this matter again be taken up with the Canadian National Railways? I know it has been done in years gone by. On some occasions I think it was done with a certain amount of determination. More recently I think it has just been referred to the C.N.R. and the answer has come back that the management wanted to do nothing about it. Previous ministers have attempted to get rid of the matter in that way. I hope this new government, which is going in for a new approach to the problems of the people of Canada, will take this matter more seriously and hence my question to the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Richardson): Will this matter be taken up with the Canadian National Railways?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, may I say first of all that I appreciated the suggestion which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) made yesterday morning that I might reply to him at ten o'clock. This has given me some opportunity to consider the question he has directed to me. I should also like to thank him, as a fellow Winnipeger, for welcoming me to the late show to make my first appearance.

I wish to say that I share the hon. members' concern for the retired personnel of the C.N.R. and in fact for all pensioners who find their fixed income inadequate in the face of the rising cost of living. The hon. member has mentioned some of the very low pensions. I am aware of the fact that at one time the C.N.R. did not have compulsory contributions to its pension plan. There are, therefore, today some pensioners who are receiving low pensions arising out of the fact that during their working years they were not members of a compulsory contribution plan and did not make personal contributions to a pension plan.

It is my understanding that pensioners in this category and also the pensions of all retired employees have been reviewed frequently by officials of the railway. I can assure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that the government will continue to consult with officials of the railways concerning the position of pensioners.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—NIGERIA—ACCEPTANCE OF INVITATION TO SEND OBSERVER

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, earlier today I raised a question with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) concerning Biafra. Since I regarded it as a matter of considerable urgency I have requested that we discuss it tonight. I appreciate the fact that this evening I have, perhaps, more time to elaborate on this subject than I might have had this afternoon.

We have heard questions and comments from both sides of the house reflecting the concern of Canadians everywhere about the situation in Biafra and Nigeria. We have heard the Secretary of State for External Affairs explain the difficulties involved in taking this matter before the United Nations. We have heard of the efforts of the Canadian government to make food available in both the areas which have been recaptured by Nigerian forces, and in the area still controlled by the Biafran authorities.

I believe the number of questions on this matter indicates that we are still searching for the most useful role for Canada on this matter, and that we are striving to expand what we can do to reduce the suffering in that part of the world. Certainly, I am sure all members of this house who have directed questions to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, did so in the hope that perhaps we might be able to expand our efforts and do more for the victims of this tragic war. I was therefore very interested when the appointment of General Milroy, as a Canadian observer with the federal Nigerian forces was announced ten days ago. It was my feeling at that time, shared, I am sure, by other members of this house, that the presence of such an observer would have an inhibiting effect on the actions of Nigerian military personnel engaged in battle.

It is clear, however, that a team of one Canadian, one Swede and one Briton is not large enough to carry out the observations required.

• (10:10 p.m.)

I, therefore, directed my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, which I would like to repeat now. What steps have been taken to provide General Milroy with the staff that he so obviously needs to carry out his mission successfully?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Anderson) for giving me an opportunity of answering at somewhat greater length than if I had been permitted to answer the question today at the opening.

The original invitation from the Nigerian government was for one observer from each of the countries that were requested to send observers, namely, Britain, Sweden, Poland, Canada, as well as the United Nations and the Organization of African Unity. The Nigerians have now agreed that each may have an assistant, and Major General Milroy, the Canadian observer, has recommended that one be provided. We are dispatching an officer, Lieutenant Colonel E. B. M. Pinnington, to Lagos tomorrow.

Canada's response to the Nigerian invitation for an observer was dictated by our anxiety for the innocent people affected by the fighting in Nigeria. General Milroy arrived in Lagos September 18 and has had a series of meetings with the other observers and with Nigerian officials, including a meeting with the head of state yesterday. The observers are leaving Lagos today to begin a tour of the battle areas. It will be recalled that we asked the Nigerians for assurances that the observers would have full freedom of movement. I am pleased to report that during his meeting with observers yesterday, General Gowan gave these assurances.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—ARMSTRONG, ONT.—REQUEST FOR ACTION TO RELIEVE POVERTY

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, in one of the semi-isolated northern corners of the Thunder Bay constituency there is an example of abject poverty, a social blight so serious that it would mar the landscape of any society, much less a just society. The majority of the Indian population in the Armstrong community for members of the White Sands band. These people, formerly located along the shores of Lake Nipigon, were forced to relocate as their fishing economy declined. The relocation took place over a period of years with no formal pattern or organization, with the result that the Indian community around Armstrong developed on a haphazard, squatter-like basis.

This land of opportunity for so many of us has given these people precious little. They live in shacks, through which the arctic winds blow. Their homes, if we can flatter their dwellings by calling them homes, are almost completely bare of furniture. They are one-room structures, often with uninsulated board floors, housing anywhere from eight to 12 people. Occasionally, there is part time employment for these people; there are welfare cheques for some, and the children are allowed to receive an education provided they leave home and attend a residential school.

The Indian Affairs branch has continued to provide schooling for all students of registered Indian status at residential schools either in Kenora, McIntosh, or at St. Joseph's school in Fort William. Approximately 35 children received this service in the past year. The Armstrong community had never considered the migrating Indian people as a part of their responsibility, and presumably this viewpoint was reinforced each time the branch made separate arrangements to school the Indian children in residences.

I hasten to add, Mr. Speaker, that the white citizens of Armstrong must not be made the culprits or the scapegoats for the situation there. What we see in Armstrong is the universal problem of cultural conflict, poverty and poor race relations. We cannot expect the citizens of Armstrong to come up with a solution to a complex problem where so many others have failed.

During vacation time, the children come home from the residential schools, but home to what? To poverty, disease and despair.

Some say, let these people wake up, show some initiative, and then they may deserve our help. But I ask, Mr. Speaker, does a medical doctor say to a man hit by a bus, "stir yourself, make an effort, and then I will render aid"? The Indian people of Armstrong have been knocked down and knocked out, socially and psychologically. In many ways, they are a primitive people who have come into contact with a larger, more developed and stronger culture, which consequently overwhelms them. They need help. My plea on their behalf is not merely for more handouts, although they must certainly be assured of life's necessities, particularly as they face another bitter northern Ontario winter.

What the community of Armstrong needs is more than just immediate aid, it also requires someone who can show them a better way. There must be placed in this community without delay a full time community development officer; one who is willing and able to patiently teach, guide and direct these people back into the main stream of Canadian life, a person who can gain the confidence of the Indian people and be trusted by them: I suggest that Armstrong become a pilot project in our attack on poverty, in particular as it affects the native citizens of Canada.

And so I repeat my question put in the house this morning to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chretien):

In view of the desperate social conditions and shocking poverty which exists among the Indian people of Armstrong, Ontario, a situation which has recently been brought to the attention of the nation and which has resulted in the exclusion of Indian children from public school education in Armstrong, what immediate action does the government intend to take in order to remedy or alleviate this serious problem?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I would like first of all to congratulate the hon. member on his very impressive and heartfelt remarks about the Indian situation in the Armstrong area which is part of his constituency. I realize this is a very difficult situation and I can well understand the feelings of the honourable member.

The Indian situation in Canada, and especially the one relating to their poverty, is a problem that I have examined closely for the past two months. I want to assure the honourable member that I have spent many hours on this subject. On visiting several reserves, I have seen the same problem that exists in Armstrong.

With regard to the school situation in Armstrong, this is a case where explanations are in order. Admittedly, the federal government must look after the Indians in the educational field, and we have endeavoured to give the Indians who abandoned their reserves to live in the Armstrong region the best education available. Unfortunately, although the department has, on several occasions, proposed to the local authorities, besides granting financial assistance for the educational costs of these students, to defray the capital costs for enlarging the school facilities in that locality, the offer has not been accepted by the municipality nor by the authorities concerned. This caused the department to send these students of Indian origin to pursue their studies in surrounding municipalities such as Fort William and other places mentioned by the hon. member.

I would like to assure to the honourable member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Penner) that our main concern in this case consists in taking all the necessary measures in order that the children living in the Armstrong municipality may be given their education in that municipality and kept with their families.

I asked departmental officials to continue trying to negotiate with the provincial and local authorities in order to allow the children to go to school. In my opinion, it is important that Indians should be able to receive the same schooling as whites and, if possible, attend the same schools, because they must be considered as being on an equal footing with other Canadian citizens and as having a right to the same social benefits. They should therefore be able to sit on the same school benches as white children.

I can assure the hon. member that I am very concerned with this problem of Armstrong, and in particular with the problems of education, sickness and underemployment. I thank the hon. member for having brought this problem again to the attention of the public.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.24 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, September 25, 1968

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

REVISED MAIN ESTIMATES, 1968-69

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting revised estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1969, was presented by Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board) and read by Mr. Speaker to the house.

STATEMENT BY MINISTER FOLLOWING TABLING OF REVISED ESTIMATES

• (2:40 p.m.)

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it may be of assistance to the house to have a brief statement on the revised estimates for 1968-69 which have just been placed on the table. The original estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1969 were tabled during the last session of parliament. However, their consideration was not completed during that session, so that estimates for the current year must be introduced during this session.

Last March the then minister of finance gave an undertaking to the house to reduce expenditures for 1968-69 by $75 million and to table a revised schedule of estimates. The revised estimates just tabled reflect reductions of some $80 million in controllable programs for which funds have to be voted annually by parliament. These reductions are shown by department and agency on columns 2 of pages 6A and 6C of the revised blue book.

Certain other developments which have occurred since March have made it necessary and desirable to amend further the original estimates. On July 12 last the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced certain transfers of functions among ministers. These changes are also reflected in the revised estimates; and departments and agencies have been grouped under the minister responsible for them.

The passage of time since last winter, when the original estimates for 1968-69 were prepared, has made it possible to up-date and refine expenditure forecasts for statutory programs which are traditionally shown in the blue book, but for which funds do not have to be voted annually. In addition, we have included in the revision expenditure estimates for two statutory items which do not appear in the original estimates. I should like to emphasize that, with respect to all these statutory items, parliament has already appropriated the necessary funds in the substantive legislation which authorized these expenditures.

For most of these statutory programs, payments by the federal government are determined by a number of factors defined in the legislation itself and the government has no choice but to make the payments called for, unless parliament decides to modify the legislation. For instance, payments to provinces under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, under the Canada Assistance Plan and for post secondary education depend upon the level of expenditures incurred by the provinces which the federal government must then match.

In order to present to parliament up to date estimates of total budgetary expenditures for 1968-69, a number of statutory items—identified on page 6C of the blue book—have been revised upwards by $433 million in total. I should add that the increases in the three programs I have just mentioned account for some $229 million of the total. Another $67 million of the total increase is attributable to additional public debt charges, and the inclusion—for the first time this year—of statutory expenditures for medicare and last June's general election account for a further $49 million.

Finally, we have included in the revision the following essential requirements, totalling $33 million, for which parliament will be asked to appropriate funds. An additional amount to cover the anticipated operating loss of the Farm Credit Corporation during 1968-69 of $1,400,000; payments to the United States mint for coin production to meet the high demand for coinage, $210,000; additional provision for the Treasury Board contingencies vote for anticipated public service salary adjustments arising out of collective bargaining, $25 million; an addition to the original provision for the government's share of the premiums for the group surgical-medical insurance plan required as a result of the participation in medicare of fewer provinces than expected, $6,218,000. In total, these changes bring budgetary expenditures for 1968-69 to a figure of $10.671 billion.

The house will be aware that the estimates blue book contains not only the anticipated expenditures of a budgetary nature but also lists those loans, investments and advances which parliament is asked to vote. Since the original main estimates were prepared, several essential requirements have arisen. A list of these, which total $200,026,812, will be found on page 6D of the revised blue book. The bulk of this requirement is accounted for by two large items, neither of which appeared in the original estimates. They are: additional contributions to the International Development Association, $81,081,000; and deposits in the Bank for International Settlements in Basle in support of sterling, $107,343,750. These additional requirements bring the loans total for 1968-69 to $684 million.

I trust that hon. members will find useful the statement on pages 6A, 6B, 6C and 6D of the revised estimates which shows for each department and agency the relationship of original estimates to the revised estimates for 1968-69.

I move:

That the message of His Excellency, together with the estimates presented this day, be referred to the committee of supply.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield, Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question for clarification purposes. Am I correct in assuming that the estimates that are being tabled today are in fact some $400 million higher than the estimates tabled last spring?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, there has been an increase in the total of the estimates—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that it is irregular to have debate on this type of matter. It is in order, under the standing orders, for spokesmen on behalf of opposition parties to make comments. I see the hon. member for Edmonton West seeks the floor.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, with the greatest respect the question put by my leader was of great help. After all, since we have no copy of the blue book but have heard only the lengthy statement the minister read out, it is impossible to make any meaningful comment other than to say, "Well, tomorrow we shall have interim supply and very likely we shall have more to say."

In so far as, shall we say, the accuracy and nature of the estimates, my only comment is that of course the government has had six months experience in refining and honing these estimates.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And in trimming the taxpayer.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Of course the money has already been spent. The government knows what is contained in the estimates and it knows that what it will present really are not estimates. We shall be looking at some sort of quasi public accounts. I think we shall have more to say about that tomorrow.

Mr. Baldwin: We have a $400 million bill here.

Mr. Woolliams: What happened to the philosophy of pay as you go?

Mr. Baldwin: It's go as you pay.

Motion agreed to.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

TABLING OF STATEMENT SHOWING SPECIAL WARRANTS

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, by leave I would like to table the report to the House of Commons, of September, 1968, being a statement showing special warrants issued under section 28 of the Financial Administration Act following dissolution of parliament on April 23, 1968.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the minister table this report?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

STATEMENT RESPECTING ATTENDANCE OF MINISTERS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I should like to make a statement in connection with the attendance of ministers in the House of Commons during question period. It has been the practice in the Canadian House of Commons for as many ministers as possible to attend daily at that time. The desirability of continuing this practice has been questioned. For example, the special committee of the House of Commons on procedure of the house stated in its fourth report:

> We believe that a minister ought to have more to do than to sit in the chamber each day just in case a question may come his way.

The problems of government today require in the national interest that ministers have more time to devote to departmental business than is now available during the day. In an attempt to provide extra time to ministers, a change was made last spring in the system whereby the cabinet handles its business. The cabinet committee system was restructured and regular meetings of the cabinet committees are now scheduled. This has permitted the cabinet and its committees to examine more thoroughly and expeditiously the ever-increasing number of matters before it. At the same time, the meetings of the cabinet committees have been scheduled in such a way that each minister will be free from committee attendance on certain days of the week.

I am now asking the co-operation of the house in the trial of an arrangement with respect to ministerial attendance during the daily question period. I am proposing that all ministers will attend on Wednesdays, and each minister will attend, in addition, on two other days each week. I will try to be here when orders of the day are called each day.

A roster of ministers in attendance on different days will be prepared and provided to members. It will, of necessity, remain fixed and will be subject to variation only in very exceptional circumstances. This is necessary if the ministers are to have an adequate opportunity to administer their portfolios, and if hon. members are to know each day which ministers will be in attendance.

It is only after very careful consideration of both the parliamentary and executive responsibilities of the government that I am proposing this arrangement. I fully realize the importance of members being able to question the ministers of the crown on important matters relating to the policy and actions of the government. There is no doubt in my mind about the need to keep ministers answerable to this house, or about the key role of the question period in enabling members on both sides of the chamber to make ministerial responsibility a fact of our parliamentary life. This is fundamental to our system. I suggest that the proposed arrangement does not conflict with that principle or with its effective operation. I do feel that the relatively small disadvantage of not having every minister in attendance every day for possible questioning on precisely that day is far outweighed by the advantage to the public interest in providing the ministers with more time to devote to administration and planning, while still being available three days out of five to answer questions.

In closing, I want to emphasize that I am not proposing a rota system of the kind now followed at Westminster. That system works in such a way that very often only one minister answers questions on any one day after a period of notice sometimes as long as three weeks. I am asking this house, under these arrangements, to try a situation in which one half of the ministers would be here every day of the week except Wednesday, when all of them would be here. I assume that, at least for the moment, it is not the intention of the house to impose a notice requirement more stringent than what now prevails.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): It is most regrettable that the Prime Minister and the government should have chosen to make a unilateral decision on a matter which so vitally affects the relationship between ministers of the crown and the House of Commons. It is particularly unfortunate in the light of the fact that the house recently reached agreement on provisional rules, establishing a reference of the question of permanent rules to a committee which is to be set up. It is, I think, most regrettable that this question, along with other important questions to be considered, was not referred to the committee rather than decided unilaterally by the government.

I am at a loss to understand why the government should have felt it necessary to take this unilateral course of action on a matter of such importance, especially when the committee is to report back with regard to permanent rules by December 1. Why was a matter of such importance to the house not referred to the committee instead of being decided by the government itself?

I am not in a position to question the authority of the government to take this decision, but it is clear that the length of the question period has been covered by the provisional rules, the rules now in effect. In other words, this is a general subject which has been covered by the traditions and, specifically, by the rules of the house and I do not think it is a very good omen for the future consideration of our rules when this kind of unilateral decision is taken by the government especially, as I said, after agreement relating to provisional rules had been reached and shortly before a committee is to go to work on the whole question.

I notice in passing that the day on which all the ministers are to be here is about the shortest question period of the week—30 minutes. I simply want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I think this is regrettable. I think it indicates the attitude of the government toward the house. I think a unilateral decision of this sort tends to downgrade this house. I ask the Prime Minister and his colleagues not to proceed with the matter in this way, but to refer it, along with the general question of rules, to the committee that the house has authorized to be established.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I join with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) in registering a protest against this unilateral decision, and I also join with the Leader of the Opposition in asking the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the government to suspend putting this system into operation until the matter has been considered by the special committee which was agreed to yesterday by a unanimous decision of the house.

I do not think the Leader of the Opposition was too strong at all in suggesting this is a slight that is being handed to this house. As a matter of fact I think it is offensive—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —the day after we agreed unanimously to a committee on procedure, the day after this very question was discussed across the floor of the house and opposition was expressed to it, for the government to make this announcement today. I must point out that the very work of the special committee is already jeopardized.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We have had pretty satisfactory discussions among house leaders and I felt from those discussions that we could have an effective committee. Almost immediately, however, the question will arise that if we do not agree to something the government wants, then the government will do it unilaterally.

I hope the Prime Minister will reconsider.

Mr. Woolliams: We are the masters of this house.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The Prime Minister stood in his place today and paid lip service to two principles. One is that it is the essence of our system that members of parliament meet the cabinet, meet the ministers across the floor of this house. The second principle affecting our system is the importance of the question period. But I say this is only lip service when the Prime Minister turns around and says that on certain days we are not going to be able to meet the ministers, on certain days we are not going to be able to exercise the question period as we have been exercising it in the house for many years.

I want to urge for the consideration of the Prime Minister and others, and for the consideration of our friends of the press, that the question period is not one of the main trouble spots in the procedures of this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): During the question period members are here and the galleries are full. A certain amount of political warfare does take place, but without political warfare parliament is not parliament. I suggest that this whole aim to downgrade the question period, to have some ministers not here, is a backward step in terms of the operation of the House of Commons.

I point out one other thing. One of the problems we have in the House of Commons—we have it in all parties and there are times when we have it in ours as much as in others—is maintaining full attendance in this chamber. The house is not always fully attended all day, as members know. Now we are going to have the example that during the question period, which is regarded as a most important period when attendance has been full, some of the ministers, up to half of them on most days, will not be here.

I think this is bad for the image of parliament, and I hope that those who write about the image of parliament will say so. The Leader of the Opposition has already referred to the fact that it is a bit of an empty gesture to have all the ministers here on Wednesday.

On that day the question period lasts only 30 minutes, but we are to have all the ministers here then, with their knowing that many of the questions to be asked will not get to them.

If we are going to have a question period like this, let us have it on Monday when we have an hour, or let us have an hour for the question period on Wednesday; but either way I think it is a retrograde step. It downgrades the importance of the question period, the time when the political warfare takes place. Above all, Mr. Speaker, I think it is an offence, an insult, a slight to parliament for this unilateral decision to be announced the very day after we, in good faith, unanimously agreed to set up a special committee to study the rules and procedures of the house. I hope the government will reconsider its position.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (3:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière) Mr. Speaker, my first words on behalf of the Ralliement Créditiste will be to say that the statement just made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is an act of sabotage with regard to a democratic government which must be responsible and which is answerable to the House of Commons.

I have the impression Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister has made a mistake by failing to ask the views of the various opposition parties before making a statement which cancels yesterday's very interesting and very brilliant discussions about the creation of a committee to study parliamentary reform.

We fully agree with the Prime Minister that the government and the ministers should be more efficient, because there is room for improvement there. However, if cold water is thrown on democracy right here in the Canadian parliament, without any warning being given to the opposition members, that amounts, in my opinion, to an act of sabotage which should be unanimously condemned.

On that matter, we, of the Ralliement Créditiste, fully agree with the proposals made by the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Messrs. Stanfield and Knowles), who have just blamed the government.

Mr. Speaker, we are against this proposal even though it seeks to increase the efficiency of the government. We would rather have the matter referred to the parliamentary committee set up last night, and we should make use of it.

To save democracy, we therefore ask the Prime Minister to revise his position as soon as possible.

INDUSTRY

AREA INCENTIVE PROGRAM—CHANGES AFFECTING ELIGIBILITY

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, I wish to outline the plans of the government concerning its policy on subsidies to encourage industrial expansion in those areas where exceptional intervention is necessary to improve the employment situation.

As we have done regularly in the past, we have continued to check the designated areas periodically on the basis of the present criteria, in order to determine whether changes should be made.

As a result of that analysis, we added a new area to the list, namely the one which corresponds to the Lévis federal manpower centre, near Quebec. Neighbouring areas of Ville Saint-George, Mégantic and Montmagny have, for some time, been included in a designated area. Lévis is in the same economic area, that of the Chaudière valley, which on the whole meets the requirements for eligibility. The low level of average income for non-agricultural families is only one indication of the underemployment which exists in that area.

That is the only change made in the list of designated areas under the present rules of the program, Mr. Speaker. However, the government is considering much more important changes in the future.

The proposed changes will be implemented in two stages, since there are two acts governing the program. First of all, an area is designated according to the second part of the Department of Industry Act. However, the actual ways in which financial assistance is given to the eligible areas are set out in the Area Development Incentives Act.

The second part of the Department of Industry Act will therefore be replaced by the bill on the reorganization of the government which will, among other things, suggest the creation of a new department to take over the work of various agencies which, up until now, have dealt with different aspects of economic development.

In order to avoid uncertainty in the business world, I would like to emphasize that the government does not want reorganisation to result in the elimination of the program relating to the underdeveloped regions. As long as new legislation concerning incentives has not been introduced, those incentives will be made available throughout the regions now considered underdeveloped under the law being administered by the Department of Industry.

Furthermore, the bill concerning government reorganization that will be introduced shortly will establish the basic principles under which underdeveloped regions will be recognized. Therefore, I agree with the Prime Minister's comments on this subject a few months ago. Consequently, a region will be considered underdeveloped either because it has a low level of employment in the region concerned or because employment is low on the whole territory including that region.

This policy is much less restrictive than the one prevailing in the past. Its first results will be particularly important for the Maritime provinces. Should parliament adopt this new principle, the result will entail the admission of the three regions now under the responsibility of the Maritime provinces manpower centre that have until now, been excluded from the program. Those regions, Mr. Speaker, are Halifax, St. John (N.B.) and Fredericton. It is our intention that the incentives being offered by the development agency shall be made available to these regions, and that will be possible as soon as parliament has agreed to the government recommendations concerning reorganization.

I would like to say a few words about the second group of changes that we propose to introduce. These changes are related to the present incentive program.

The legislation governing incentives for the development of certain regions will expire on a precise date. Grants are only available for those projects which will be completed or in operation on March 31, 1971. In view of the fact that two years or more might elapse between the formulation of a project and its realization, new legislation will soon be necessary. It is the intention of the government to introduce such legislation very early next year.

That legislation will follow a serious study of the whole depressed areas incentive program. The review has already advanced far enough for me to state that it will involve significant changes. I hope that we might avoid some aspects of the program in operation, which have not been very productive and, at the same time, we want the incentives to bring about results where the need is the greatest.

As I said earlier, it is very important not to leave the industry unaware of what is going on during the review period. That is why I wish to emphasize at this time that the government in its new legislation will propose transitional measures in order to protect the interests of corporations which are now planning to invest in the designated areas. If those corporations are eligible for incentives under the present legislation, those incentives will be made available to them and will be paid to them even though, for major reasons, the industry concerned will be able to start its production only after March 31, 1971, the deadline in the present legislation.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the government has today recognized what has been known by almost everyone in this house for the last five years; that is, that the three manpower regions in the maritimes should be designated. What is disappointing in the statement made today is that there seems to be no realization that if an area development program is to be a true development program it should be based on a better criterion than unemployment. We know that unemployment is a serious problem. We have raised this matter with the government on different occasions.

An area development program cannot solve the problem of unemployment. We need a greater and more general policy than that. An area program should be one which would take into consideration the potential growth of the area rather than treat an area as a charity case. As is the case now, in many instances the area development program has been a cruel hoax or promise held out to the people which did not materialize, and which did not increase their prosperity.

I hope that when the minister develops the program he will establish a new department to co-ordinate the various programs which exist now and that he will seriously consider the importance of seeking new criteria of long term growth and stability for the areas, rather than what I think is the technically faulty criterion of unemployment. It is not adequate for the purpose and does not solve the problems of the people who are involved in these areas.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to my friend the minister that I am pleased that the policy regarding designated areas is being revised to make it possible to treat the maritime region as a designated area, which I think is the effect of what he has announced. I also understand that the minister stated the program has a limited life and will expire in 1971. This statement therefore, by itself, so far as anything firm is concerned, is of limited value and will be effective for a limited period. The important thing is the policy that the minister proposes to introduce. Naturally I will not try to pass judgment on that in advance, but I am sure the whole country is looking forward with great interest to an announcement of its contents.

Let me emphasize again that for any policy to be effective for the development of regions of slow growth there must be a very high degree of co-ordination of the policies of governments. Certainly if this policy is to be effective we must have a very high degree of co-ordination of the policies and the departments of this government.

I am concerned that the program the government has in mind involving the establishment of a new department with certain responsibilities of a regional nature will fall far short of obtaining the required co-ordination, and may have the disadvantage of encouraging other ministers to feel that they no longer have any responsibility for the development of regional policy.

Let me emphasize once again, before the government presents its policy to the house, the importance of this highest possible degree of co-ordination for the development of regional policy in areas of slow growth, if it is to be at all effective. As I have said, we are looking forward with great interest to an announcement of specific policies and programs, and I hope the minister will be able to make this announcement at an early date.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I listened very attentively to the statement made by the hon. Minister of Forestry and Rural Development and there is no doubt that the member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) was happy to hear it. I understand that the decision to make the region of the city of Lévis a designated area fulfils an election promise which could not have been kept otherwise.

As for the Maritime provinces, I think that they will welcome the improvements the minister intends to bring by way of designating areas. We must not believe that the Maritimes are the only provinces which got very little out of the legislation on designated areas, as we knew it before.

For example, my riding is encircled, as in a horseshoe, by neighbouring designated areas, especially on the Ontario side. Therefore, and for the greater good of my area—Abitibi, that I know well—I should like to ask the Minister to recognize that there exists a third criteria in the manner of designating the areas. We know that the low level of employment, the high level of unemployment, the low salaries contribute to designate an area.

In my view, the minister should also admit the fact that the decreasing demography of an area should be taken into consideration while designating areas in order to incite new industries to establish there and stabilize the economy.

Those are the remarks that I wanted to make, Mr. Speaker, in connection with the statement made by the minister. Later, when more direct propositions are made concerning the establishment of a new department, we will have at that time the opportunity to express our point of view.

AGRICULTURE

CORN—CONCURRENT ACTION TO HELP IN MARKETING

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a brief statement regarding the action that has been taken and the action contemplated to deal with the serious situation in the corn marketing areas of Ontario.

As you will be aware, there have been a number of questions directed to me from both sides of the house during the past few days. In addition to that, I have received representations from the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, the Ontario Farmers Union and many other organizations representing corn producers in Ontario. They have suggested solutions, or partial solutions such as accelerated depreciation on storage, freight assistance, price support levels, extended research for some new and better varieties and restrictions on imports of corn.

I have been discussing this matter with the Minister of Agriculture for Ontario because obviously some of the solutions suggested clearly lie within the jurisdiction of the province. I simply want to advise members now that as soon as possible, and this will be within a few days or perhaps early next week, as soon as the officials of my department and the officials of the Ontario department of agriculture can work out the details of what can be done, we intend to have a meeting of the two ministers and their officials to try and work out a solution that will be effective.

After examining the problem and the suggested solutions we hold the opinion as of this date that concurrent action by both levels of government within their jurisdiction is the only effective solution to the problem.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, speaking as a representative of this party and of the farmers of this country I should like to say that the statement by the Minister of Agriculture today is in its entirety unacceptable to the farmers of this nation. For 18 months we have been pointing out to the government, as have the farm organizations, the state of the economic climate surrounding this great commodity. Many of the farm organizations have made at least four representations to this government in the last few months. At this time, when we are in the middle of the harvest for this year and when the market has collapsed already to such a degree it is quite apparent that the farmers of this nation will not recover their investments, the minister stands in his place and says this is a joint responsibility between the federal and provincial governments. At this late date he is suggesting that we call in the ministers of the provinces concerned to meet with the federal department to discuss this problem in order to see whether some solution can be found.

The minister has spoken of research in respect of new varieties, freight subsidies, and whether or not some restrictions can be placed on the importation of this commodity into this country. The farmers of this great nation expected concrete efforts on the part of this government, and an announcement today outlining the ways and means whereby a minimum price acceptable to the farmers would be established in order that advantage might be taken of that price during the current crop year.

The members of this party and the farmers of this nation will realize that the action taken by the government today will do nothing to alleviate the suffering and that it is an attempt to gain time. If this course is followed I doubt very much whether any action will be taken in time to help the farmers in respect of the 1969 harvest, let alone the harvest about to take place.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I put a question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) asking him whether some assistance would be given to farmers in the form of accelerated depreciation for grain storage in order to help them with storage problems, not only in the corn area of Ontario but also in the wheat area in western Canada. With regard to the second matter, regarding wheat, I did not hear him make any statement of the government's intention to assist the farmers there. We are faced with a very serious problem of grain storage in western Canada which, as has been pointed out with regard to corn, was evident six months ago. It has now been compounded by the extremely difficult harvesting conditions, and according to the latest report certain areas in western Canada may well be facing disaster for much of the harvest. I would appreciate an early statement as to the assistance which may be given with regard to storage and a clarification of the additional provision made for drying grain, because we will have a great deal of damp, tough and damaged grain, and I think we should have a statement in this regard very early.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, like the other members, I just took cognizance of the statement delivered by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), concerning corn in the province of Ontario.

I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary to the hon. minister (Mr. Côté) whether similar steps have been taken in cooperation with the Quebec Agriculture Department authorities in order to find a solution to the same problem existing in that province. Corn growing in the province of Quebec is increasing from year to year and the Quebec producers are obviously more and more interested in getting subsidies from the federal government, through agreement. The problem lies obviously within the federal and provincial jurisdictions and concerns agriculture in the province of Quebec. Therefore, as a representative of the farmers in the eastern area of that province, I would suggest to the Parliamentary Secretary to the hon. Minister of Agriculture, if this has not been done yet, to enter into negotiations with the province of Quebec, for the benefit of the farmers in the eastern area of that province.

CITIZENSHIP COURT

Question No. 12—Mr. Caouette:

1. How many judges sit in the Citizenship Court?

2. How many cases were heard by the Citizenship Court in 1965, in 1966 and in 1967?

3. Where does this Court have its Record Office?

4. Does this Court sit across Canada?

5. What is the jurisdiction of this Court?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Citizenship Branch as follows: 1. The Governor in Council may designate any court or person in any part of Canada to act as a Court for the purposes of the Canadian Citizenship Act, and any officer of the Canadian forces outside of Canada to act as a Court for the purpose of dealing with applications for citizenship made by persons serving in the armed forces of Canada outside Canada. A Court is defined in the act as meaning any superior, circuit, county or district court including in the Province of Quebec, any district magistrate as well as any court or person designated to act as a Court for the purposes of the act. In addition to courts defined by the act, 15 magistrates courts in Newfoundland have been so designated as have 56 persons across the country. Fourteen of these persons operate full time courts in 13 different locations while the remaining 42 handle cases on an occasional basis in areas remote from the normal facilities.

2. It is not possible to give the exact number of cases heard in Canada during a year because statistics are not always available on cases rejected or deferred by the courts of law. However, a very close approximation of the total number of cases heard in Canada may be given as follows: (a) 1965, 32,902; (b) 1966, 31,975; (c) 1967, 33,376.

3. All court records dealing with cases under the Canadian Citizenship Act are now forwarded to the office of the Registrar of Canadian Citizenship in Ottawa. Although this was also the practice prior to amendment of the Act in July, 1967, before that time records of applicants rejected or deferred by the normal courts of law were not so forwarded.

4. Yes.

5. To examine alien and such other applicants for citizenship as may be referred to them in order to determine if they possess the required qualifications and whether they are not fit and proper persons to be granted citizenship. Upon grant of citizenship by the Minister to administer the oath of allegiance and deliver the certificate. In the conduct of proceedings under the act, by appropriate ceremonies, to impress upon the applicants the responsibilities and privileges of Canadian citizenship.

*PUBLIC SERVICE COLLECTIVE BARGAINING, ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Question No. 35—Mr. Coates:

1. Has the Public Service of Canada, represented by the Treasury Board, initiated collective bargaining with the representatives of the employees in the trades, labour and service occupations in the Atlantic Provinces using as the basis for these negotiations the prevailing rates of similar occupations to these groups in the locale of their employment?

2. Does the Public Service of Canada at the present time adhere, for permanent employees, to a policy of equal pay for equal work regardless of the location of the employee of the Public Service and, if not, when was a new policy formulated and what groups of employees does it cover?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): 1. The Treasury Board has entered collective bargaining with the bargaining agent for the occupational groups of "general services" and "general labour and trades" which include employees in the Atlantic provinces as well as other parts of Canada. Since these negotiations have not yet been completed, it would not be appropriate to reveal positions taken by the parties during the negotiations.

2. The government has had, for many years, a policy of paying rates of pay based on those prevailing in the locality under a variety of regulations, such as the prevailing rate employees general regulations (1949), the ships crews regulations (1954) and the ships officers regulations (1950). The practice of reflecting rates prevailing in the locality has been continued in the collective agreements recently negotiated for employees in the ship repair and the printing operations groups in the operational category.

BIRD POPULATION IN CANADA

Question No. 148—Mr. MacLean:

1. Has it been established that any species of migratory or non-migratory birds native to Canada, have undergone a serious decline in population in the last twenty years in part or all of their range in Canada?

2. If so, what are the populations most seriously affected?

3. Have the causes of any population decline been established and, if so, what are they in some of the most serious cases?

4. Is there any evidence that bird populations are being reduced, because their eggs are being rendered infertile by residues of DDT?

5. Is there any evidence that any populations of Canadian birds are becoming extinct due to an accumulation of DDT in the natural food chain, as is the case with the peregrine falcon in the Eastern United States, and with the Bermuda petrel?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Yes. Greater prairie chicken, peregrine falcon, prairie falcon, pigeon hawk, Swainson's hawk, bald eagle, gyrfalcon and probably other birds of prey.

2. The greater prairie chicken has now been virtually extirpated from western Canada. The Eastern race of the peregrine falcon has seriously declined.

3. Yes. In the case of the prairie chicken, destruction of habitat is the most likely cause. For peregrine falcons, organochlorine insecticides now appear to be the most likely cause.

4. Yes. It now appears that organochlorine insecticide residues, of which DDT residues are the commonest, are the most probable cause of the hatching failures in the recent peregrine falcon decline.

5. The decline of the peregrine falcon in the eastern U.S. has apparently also taken place in adjacent parts of Canada, and this decline now appears to be principally due to the accumulation of organochlorine insecticide residues, including DDT, in the natural food chains of these birds.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL SECURITY

ATTEMPTED SALE OF MILITARY SECRETS—REMOVAL OF CLASSIFIED DOCUMENTS FROM GOVERNMENT OFFICES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the question I raised yesterday regarding security, will the Prime Minister inform the house whether any classified documents were removed from government offices by the individual in question, and whether all these have been recovered?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know of no such documents which have been removed; but if there is further information possessed by the Minister of Justice, he might want to state it now.

Mr. Nielsen: Come clean, John.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I have nothing to add, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I did not hear the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I have nothing to add to that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Horner: Justice must be done!

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Am I to understand the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice to say that none were removed, or that they do not know of any being removed?

Mr. Turner: Perhaps I might answer that question, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I took the position—

Mr. Woolliams: Of secrecy.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —that investigations by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police or the federal forces of this country involving suspected unlawful activity are being continuously carried out, but in the absence of charges being preferred it would not be proper, nor in the public interest, to make public the results of such investigations, to make them a matter of public record, nor to delve into the facts involved in those investigations.

I believe this is particularly applicable to investigations that may involve national security. The statement I made yesterday, and I repeat it today, is not a statement of new policy; it is a statement of principle and is a reiteration, a repeat of what virtually every minister of justice has said in reply to similar questions, including Hon. Davie Fulton who on April 29, 1959, stated that the government had consistently followed a policy of complete reticence concerning security work.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I am not asking the Prime Minister or the Minister of Justice to violate any security procedures. I asked a question to which I think the house is entitled to an answer, namely whether in fact any documents were removed and, if so, whether they were recovered. Surely this does not involve any breach of security on the part of the government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Leader of the Opposition is restating the question he asked before.

An hon. Member: It has never been answered.

Mr. Speaker: As the Leader of the Opposition knows, the rules of the house allow him to ask that question, but there is no obligation on the part of the ministry to answer it at all, or to answer along the lines which the questioner would like.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The matter of security does not enter into the equation when the question is asked: Who was this person? Apparently he was removed, or was gotten out of the civil service because of his misconduct. I ask the Prime Minister whether he will not give the name of this person, because unless he does the opprobrium of suspicion will rest upon every civil servant who has got out since January 1.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it is conceivable that the release of the name of the gentleman would not be a security risk. I do not want to comment on that. But it would obviously be a breach of fundamental civil liberties and basic human rights.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: I think the gentlemen of the opposition can imagine that a man who has not been prosecuted by the government, a man against whom we did not decide to proceed, would be rendered a much greater disservice if we were to name him publicly than the hypothetical disservice to thousands of public, civil servants who are under suspicion, according to the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. Diefenbaker: After that specious dissertation on the subject of civil liberties, Mr. Speaker, I ask the right hon. gentleman a simple question. Because of what was found out, was this man told to get out? If so, did not the Prime Minister try him without regard to his civil liberties?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEwan: Answer that.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I direct a supplementary question to the Solicitor General. In view of the fact that the news media have on two recent occasions obtained information which should have been classified as confidential or top secret—and I refer to the Dorlot case and also the case we are discussing at the moment—is the Solicitor General carrying out inquiries into R.C.M.P. security?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General is carrying out inquiries as to what leak, if any, there was and where it came from.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. What class of security documents and information did this man have access to? That is, were they low grade, such as confidential; medium grade, such as secret; or a higher grade, such as top secret.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams).

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, surely one of the members of the government is in a position to answer that question—either the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice or the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Nobody had risen. The Chair is allowed to surmise that no minister wants to reply. The Solicitor General may want to say something.

Mr. Baldwin: This is not their day to answer.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, in these cases it must be apparent to all that it is extremely difficult to make information public without incurring the risk of compromising measures that are constantly being taken to protect the safety and interest of the country. There are statements to this effect in Hansard—if hon. members want references to this question, of various former prime ministers of this country and ministers of justice over the past 15 or 20 years, on this point.

It must be obvious to all hon. members that in a case of this nature which involves, or may involve security, without jeopardizing the public interest it is not possible to start answering bits and pieces of information of the sort envisaged by the question that has been asked.

Mr. Nielsen: Why was he not prosecuted?

Mr. Stanfield: Would the Prime Minister say whether the government or the police know the whereabouts of the individual in question?

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question arises out of some of the answers given today, but in particular out of the answer given by the Minister of Justice yesterday, when he said that the whole matter was referred to the law officers. When the matter was referred to the minister or the ministers of the government by the law officers, did they consider that an offence had been committed? If so, why was a charge not laid; and if it was not, why was this man dismissed on those grounds?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think that under the rules and precedents of the house I am entitled to rely on the statement that the opinion of the law officers of the crown was sought; that it was the opinion of the law officers that a prosecution should not be laid; and that this opinion was concurred in by the senior officers of the R.C.M.P.

In the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be unfair and would be an unwarranted intrusion into the reasonable privacy of the individual concerned to relate here, behind the absolute privilege and total immunity of parliament, the procedure or substance of the investigation into the suspected criminal conduct of an individual. No charge having been preferred, how would this individual defend himself?

Mr. Hees: Why was a charge not preferred?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I address a supplementary question to the Prime Minister and ask him whether he will now answer the question I put yesterday to the Minister of Justice and which the right hon. member for Prince Albert repeated a few moments ago. If no charges have been laid against this individual, bearing in mind the civil liberties to which the Prime Minister referred, on what basis was he either dismissed from the public service or asked to resign?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this opposition wants to protect, apparently, the liberties of an individual. If the man wishes to protect himself he can go to the opposition. He can give his name. He can make public, if he wishes—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Trudeau: Hon. gentlemen are asking us to reveal the name of a man we decided not to prosecute, who left the civil service under circumstances known to him. The opposition is trying to make a martyr out of a man who, in his own judgment, decided it would be better to follow this particular course. He is at liberty to go to hon. gentlemen and have his case stated by them.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder whether hon. members would not judge that we have passed from a question period to a debate. I do not want to limit hon. members but I will allow the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre a supplementary question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is a question of privilege. The Prime Minister just answered a question about naming the individual. I did not ask for the name. I do not want the name to be given. I asked the Prime Minister to answer directly this question: If no charges were laid against the individual, and bearing in mind the principles of civil liberties to which the Prime Minister adheres, why was he dismissed or asked to resign without any kind of trial?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if it helps the opposition, I do not mind stating a matter of general principle here. If the R.C.M.P. find that a man has done things for which, perhaps, he cannot be prosecuted successfully but they have sufficient knowledge that he has been acting in a way that is detrimental to the public service, it is conceivable that whoever is responsible for the employment of this man will go to him and say: "These are the facts that we have against you. We could make a case; you might win on a technicality, or perhaps you would not. However, you have the choice of resigning, or we can fire you. If you want to appeal under the procedures of the civil service legislation"—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is this the rule of law?

Mr. Trudeau: Of course this is the rule of law. We all remember in this house the Spencer case where the opposition decided to make a martyr out of a man who was free—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would take the liberty of reiterating the opinion that I expressed a moment ago and also remind hon. members that we will be in supply tomorrow, when we could easily pursue the debate which has been initiated now. It can be continued at length tomorrow. I see a number of members are anxious to ask other questions which are also important, and I suggest that they should be given the opportunity to do so.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in that connection would the Minister of Justice be here tomorrow?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, if the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert will give me his word that he will be here, then I will be here.

AGRICULTURE

P.F.A.A.—REQUEST FOR SURVEY OF CROP CONDITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. C. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture that I feel is quite urgent. My question arises out of the very serious situation that has been created in western Canada owing to the very wet and impossible harvest conditions. Many farmers are going to be up against a serious feed shortage unless they have—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member kindly ask his question.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): My question is: Has the minister and his department asked the P.F.A.A. officials to make a survey of the seriousness of the situation?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes.

Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the serious situation, have any plans been made to assist farmers with regard to drying facilities for wet grain? In order to get feed for livestock many farmers will be forced to take tough or damp grain off the land.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the minister might want to make a statement on motions tomorrow or at some other time.

MOVEMENT OF DAMP AND TOUGH GRAIN TO LAKEHEAD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Would he inform the house what action he has taken to facilitate the movement of damp and tough grain from the prairies to the lakehead terminals, and also tell the house when he expects the terminals to be in a position to process such grain? I notice that it must be the day off for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, so could the acting minister answer?

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture could answer both questions on motions tomorrow.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

MILK—POSSIBILITY OF COMBINES INQUIRY

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the price war now going on between the dairies and the jug milk chains in Toronto and Montreal, and in view of the need to ensure that the interests of consumers will be protected, will the minister seek an early meeting with both the Ontario Milk Marketing Board and the Quebec Agricultural Marketing Board in order to help resolve this problem?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the director of investigation and research under the Combines Investigation Act is familiar with both situations. Should the facts involved indicate an offence under the Combines Investigation Act, an inquiry will be launched.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister tell us whether he intends, in the future, to hand over to Quebec the amounts of money earmarked for French speaking countries, so that Quebec might use these funds according to the wishes of the Quebec government, as it was suggested this morning by the premier of that province?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question of the hon. member is much too general to be put at this time.

EXTERNAL AID

NIGERIA—MOVEMENT OF RELIEF SUPPLIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs which I hope is not too general. Can the minister now break the blockade of silence surrounding movements of relief supplies to Nigeria and Biafra?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that that is a very general question.

Mr. Fairweather: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister had an opportunity to consider the implications of the question I asked him yesterday about the statement of the Nigerian military commander that no relief supplies would be allowed to pass through occupied territories.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have taken the opportunity of inquiring into the circumstances under which the statement was made. It was made a month ago, I think, by a divisional commander of the Nigerian army. The Nigerian government has stated that it intends to work with the International Red Cross for the relief of hunger in all parts of Nigeria and, in fact, is moving supplies behind the advancing armies.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which has to do with Canada's desire to have the matter of Biafran suffering considered by the United Nations General Assembly. I ask the minister, since our delegation missed its opportunity for unilaterally placing this item on the agenda of the United Nations, is our delegation now seeking the support of a majority of the members of the United Nations so that this item may be added to the provisional agenda?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman no doubt will have read my letter to U Thant asking for his advice on how best to advance this humanitarian work. We have also been working in the meantime with the delegations of other countries. We are still seeking an opportunity to put forward a resolution that will deal with this humanitarian question, and not be lost in a sterile debate about the future of Nigeria.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Am I to infer from that answer that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is satisfied with the amount of relief supplies getting through to the people of Biafra?

Mr. Sharp: No, I am very dissatisfied, and I hope the house will join in supporting not only the voluntary efforts made in this country but the efforts of all countries around the world to open the way for getting supplies to those needy people.

An hon. Member: Paul Martin could have done the job.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs how he reconciles the answer he has just given with the answer he gave earlier to the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) in which he said that the Nigerian authorities apparently were moving supplies forward in a satisfactory way.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GENERAL DE GAULLE INVITATION TO VISIT OTTAWA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Can he tell us whether he intends to invite the President of the French Republic to Ottawa next year when he comes to visit Quebec?

CZECHOSLOVAKIA—AGGRAVATION OF SITUATION BY INCREASE IN MILITARY FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the unfortunate experience the people of Czechoslovakia are still going through, is the hon. gentleman giving consideration to the view that by maintaining or increasing our military forces in Europe we might be worsening the situation of the Czechoslovak people by giving the Soviet union an excuse for maintaining troops there?

Mr. Speaker: The question as asked appears to be argumentative.

LOTTERIES

MONTREAL—EXPRESSION OF OPINION AS TO LEGALITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (Ste-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister.

I should like to know if the Prime Minister, in the course of his visit to Mayor Drapeau during the last Liberal convention—incidentally, the day before the municipal lottery was officially announced—was invited to give his opinion with regard to the legal aspect of mayor Drapeau's lottery?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think that the question is in order. At any rate, if in the opinion of the hon. member there is some urgency, he may give notice for debate later on at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, in view of the ruling given by the Quebec Appeal Court on that matter, I should like to know if the opinion of the Prime Minister coincided with the decision of Mayor Drapeau in that respect?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I had indeed heard the question, but I do not think that its degree of urgency warrants an immediate answer.

[Mr. Rondeau.]

MONTREAL—WITHDRAWAL OF MAILING PRIVILEGES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): I have a question for the Postmaster General, Mr. Speaker. Has he cut off all mailing privileges for the city of Montreal, since the law requires that those privileges be curtailed in cases involving lotteries. If they have not been cut off, will he cut off those privileges?

An hon. Member: A good question.

Mr. Speaker: I have some doubt about the urgency of the question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member feels there is urgency, perhaps he wishes to come back at the time of adjournment, with the minister.

[Later:]

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Postmaster General. Since a constituent of mine, a parish priest, had all mailing privileges suspended as the result of sending a few, crummy half dollar lottery tickets through the mail for a good cause, can he advise the house why the mailing privileges of the city of Montreal will not be suspended?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is along the same lines as some others which have been asked. Since there is general interest in the matter perhaps the minister might answer.

Mr. Kierans: I think we shall give the mayor of Montreal a few days to make the appeal, and after that I hope the new omnibus bill will be passed which might declare lotteries legal.

Mr. Diefenbaker: So that's the plan. Did you have permission to speak?

Mr. Harkness: On what basis does the Postmaster General justify going completely against the law in this regard?

An hon. Member: Presumption of innocence.

Mr. Kierans: I think everybody knows this is under appeal, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I tried to reach the Postmaster General with a supplementary question earlier, Mr. Speaker. How can the hon. gentleman tell this house that the question of the use of the mails is under appeal, when the appeal is as to the legality of a lottery? When the clergyman formerly referred to was denied the use of the mails the service to him was suspended. There is no appeal being made in the courts, to my knowledge, concerning the use of the mails.

HOUSING

TASK FORCE—STATEMENT CONCERNING PARTICIPATION BY OFFICIALS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Transport, who I see is with us in the house today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nesbitt: Yesterday I directed a question intended for the Minister of Transport to the acting minister, who said he would take notice of it. Is the minister in a position to answer that question today?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, could my hon. friend say which question that is. Several are before me.

An hon. Member: Welcome back, Paul.

Mr. Nesbitt: My question dealt with the matter of whether provincial and municipal officials have been invited to testify before the task force on housing which the minister is heading, and a supplementary question dealt with complaints from city of Toronto officials that they had inadequate notice to prepare their briefs. I expect the minister will have seen my question.

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have advised all provincial ministers responsible of our visits across the country. We have also written to the mayors and reeves of Canada to advise them of our studies and to invite their participation. I regret that the notice given for the preparation of briefs was perhaps short and inadequate. Notice was short because of the urgency we attach to this problem and because of our determination, hopefully, to come up with some report by the year's end. We have indicated to the city of Toronto, for example, that if they have a brief ready for us before the inquiry next week end we shall be glad to receive it and to discuss with them this urgent problem facing all Canadians.

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Could he tell us whether the federal commission on housing and urban development has scheduled meetings to take place in western Quebec? I know that such meetings have taken place—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question should be put on the order paper.

[English]

EDUCATION

AGREEMENT ON GRADE AND SUBJECT STANDARDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): My question is directed to the Secretary of State, Mr. Speaker. In view of the Canadian School Trustees' recent resolution calling for more uniform education standards across Canada, will the minister give consideration to establishing a national office of education to provide leadership for greater interprovincial agreement on grade and subject standards for Canadian schools?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question should be placed on the order paper.

CRIMINAL CODE

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO CONTROL WIRE TAPPING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): My question is for the Minister of Justice, Mr. Speaker. We have heard quite a bit about civil rights today and I wonder whether the minister is considering including in the amendments to the Criminal Code a measure to control wire tapping?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am awaiting the formal brief of the Canadian Bar Association to be sent to Ottawa, in accordance with their resolution passed in Vancouver. I am also awaiting the report of the Royal Commission on Security.

Once I receive these documents I hope to bring it at an early date a bill having to do with wire tapping, but I doubt that it will be included in the omnibus bill.

RESEARCH

POSSIBILITY OF REDUCTION OF SCIENTIFIC UNDERTAKINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): My question is for the President of the Treasury Board, Mr. Speaker. Considering the statement the minister made to a three nation chemical conference in Montreal this week that Canada must more than triple its expenditures on research, can he advise the house if the government intends to reduce or otherwise curtail any more scientific undertakings?

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether the hon. member does not agree that the answer to this type of very general question should be conveyed to the house by way of a statement on motions.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR PLANS TO MEET CHALLENGE OF CONTAINER TRAINS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): My question is for the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. In view of the statement by the president of the National Research Council that Canadian railways are likely to lose much Europe to Asia traffic to a United States land bridge, what specific plans can the minister announce which will enable the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. to meet the challenge of United States container trains?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has asked a question which, in my view, ought to be answered by a statement made on motions.

YUKON QUARTZ MINING ACT

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING BILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): My question is addressed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, Mr. Speaker. Since it was announced in the speech from the throne that the government intends to introduce a measure respecting the Yukon Quartz Mining Act, and since this legislation is of great complexity and length, will the minister consider putting this matter on the order paper soon and making the bill available to hon. members, so that it can be studied?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I do not know when we will be able to proceed, but I think we will be able to table the bill referred to by the hon. member for Yukon two or three weeks from now.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SPECIAL COMMITTEE—PROCEDURES RESPECTING INSTRUMENTS IN VIRTUE OF STATUTES

The house resumed from Tuesday, September 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale):

That a special committee of twelve members, to be named at a later date, be appointed to consider and, from time to time, to report on procedures for the review by this house of instruments made in virtue of any statute of the parliament of Canada.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): When the house rose last night, Mr. Speaker, I was dealing with this question of the appointment of a committee to examine procedures for the review of statutory instruments. At that time, I made reference to the fact that there has been a great development not only in Canada but in other countries which have given the administration the power to make delegated legislation.

The background or justification for this practice has probably never been better stated than by the Donoughmore committee in 1932—command paper 4060—and I should like to take the liberty of referring to one passage from this committee's report. It summarizes the need for delegation under four heads:

1. Pressure upon parliamentary time is great.

2. The subject matter of modern legislation is very often of a technical nature.

3. If large and complex schemes of reform are to be given technical shape, it is difficult to work out the administrative machinery in time to insert in the bill all the provisions required; it is impossible to foresee all the contingencies and local conditions for which provision must eventually be made.

4. The practice, further, is valuable because it provides for a power of constant adaptation to unknown future conditions without the necessity of amending legislation.

All these reasons may be valid, but this does not lessen the need for parliamentary scrutiny of subordinate legislation after it has been enacted and when it is in operation. I hope that the special committee which is proposed will want to ask various questions. I hope, for example, it will want to ask whether we are passing bills which authorize the minister or the council to exercise a legislative authority fully as wide as that of parliament itself. I hope it will want to ask whether the Canadian practice of having statutory instruments made chiefly by order in council rather than by ministerial regulation gives adequate ground for thinking that our instruments are less dangerous than those made, for example, in the United Kingdom. I hope the committee will want to ask whether this house ought to employ an officer to review statutory instruments in some such way as the Auditor General reviews expenditures made pursuant to parliamentary appropriation. Finally, I hope it will want to ask whether this house should set up a standing committee to scrutinize the orders and whether we should establish procedures by which both individual members and the committee could seek to have orders altered or revoked.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): The minister has put the matter to us in rather cold, legalistic terms. I think there is far more to this than he has indicated. I recall returning to Canada at the end of the last war. Before going to my home to resume my occupation I spent some time in Edmonton trying to refresh my memory and catch up with some of the laws which had been passed. I remember going into the court house library in Edmonton and being shown by the librarian a set of all the regulations and orders in council which had been passed during the years I had been absent. There they stood—volume after volume, shelf upon shelf and row upon row. And all these documents, intimately and deeply, had the power to impair the rights, privileges and personal position of the ordinary men and women of this country.

Later on, I recall presiding in this house over a committee established to examine the possibility of dealing with the War Measures Act. We were asked to consider what regulations might be passed and what else could be done to preserve some of the terms of that legislation. It was proposed in the course of one of these meetings that some of the regulations in connection with certain areas of discussion should be brought before the committee in order that we might form an opinion before making a recommendation to this house. Mr. Speaker, we were told that if this were done so many documents would be brought that there would be no room for the committee itself to sit, so numerous were those regulations.

This is a very serious and controversial subject involving an area in which we in Canada have done nothing so far. In this respect, we are years behind other countries which have faced this problem, met the challenge and made some progress in dealing with it. My approach to this question differs from that taken by the minister. I listened to his speech yesterday and I have since reread what he said. The terms of reference contained in this resolution are, I suggest, fairly wide.

> That a special committee of twelve members, to be named at a later date, be appointed to consider and, from time to time, to report on procedures for the review by this house of instruments made in virtue of any statute of the parliament of Canada.

I hold that up and compare it with what the minister said yesterday when he was giving his views as to what this committee might do, the areas into which it might go, and the areas which it should not consider. As recorded at page 438 of yesterday's Hansard he said:

> One of the means of controlling administrative action to prevent interference with the rights of the individual is of course by providing legal rights of recourse, either by appeal to the regular court system or by means of prerogative writs—

I accept the first part of this. I think all of us must accept the fact that if powers have been given by a statute to any group or to any individual, whether it be the governor in council, a minister, or a person, to act, and if in addition to that right there is also given, the right to the subject who may be affected to have recourse to the courts by a method of appeal set out in the statute, and the terms of which are perfectly plain, then quite obviously this parliament should not be and must not be concerned with an issue of this kind.

But I reject out of hand the theory that because prerogative writs may be applied where natural justice is denied this means that these writs will always be applied or that we shall be free to look at these areas. These are the things this committee should be examining.

As recorded at the top of page 439 of yesterday's Hansard the minister went on to say:

> This resolution and the committee to be set up will not deal with that subject matter. One of my responsibilities, as President of the Privy Council, will be to suggest further procedures—

I think this is an issue which will run collateral to the inquiries by this house.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): But it is not an issue for this committee.

Mr. Baldwin: I understand that, but I do not think there should be any inhibition of this committee about contemplating this problem or the proposal of remedies merely by saying that prerogative writs do apply, or merely to say the minister has, in the terms of reference he might receive from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the right and the duty of considering other related aspects of this problem. I think there should be a full and complete inquiry.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I do not think there is any restriction in my words, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Baldwin: Good; I am glad we got that settled, Mr. Speaker. There should be the widest possible terms of reference and the widest possible consideration. I do not think there is any question about that.

Too many people have suffered injustices and inequities with no recourse as a result of delegated legislation. I recognize, all of us must recognize, that in this modern day the need to deal with the complexities of a social and economic life prohibit incorporating into a statute all of the areas of discussion, all of the proposals, all of the contingencies which might arise from time to time. We have to provide flexibility or we simply could not prepare, complete and pass a statute to meet the situation with which we are dealing. So, we have to provide that certain powers be delegated to boards, to tribunals, to corporations or to individuals, or as is most usually the case, to the governor in council.

I accept that, but in addition to any right of appeal, in areas which are not covered by appeals to the courts there has to be given to this house and to this parliament a means of making good the lack which has existed far too long of dealing with injustices and inequities which apply and which flow from these delegated legislative powers. This is what I think our committee will deal with, with the widest possible opportunity and the widest possible scope.

It may well be, Mr. Speaker, that we will decide that an ombudsman should work hand in hand with this committee. I have talked to those who occupy, and who have occupied, this position in other countries. One of the difficulties which they have found is the fact that too often they operate in a vacuum. There is no means, outside of the normal realm of publicity, by which they can bring specific complaints to the legislative body in order to secure a measure of examination and investigation and a declaration by, for example, a parliamentary committee.

In addition to that, I would like to think that the committee would recommend a procedure whereby under certain conditions—and I think there will have to be criteria, there will have to be a yardstick—it will be possible to bring into this house, for discussion and consideration, a delegated authority where there has been a case of abuse; where the result of applying the authority which has been given has been to bring about something not probably contemplated or which causes injustice.

I am not suggesting that in doing this we would have to take up government time. The practice which prevails in the United Kingdom is that, by means of petition, it is possible to bring up a matter for discussion in the house, coupled with the right to move for the annulment of the offending instrument. Then, it might well be that when we come to consider this issue we will propose that with regard to certain statutes the right to pass orders in council, which is given by those statutes, should be subject to the inhibition that the orders in council should be brought back to parliament, if parliament is then sitting and, if not sitting, then within a reasonable time after parliament resumes. We might propose that these orders in council should be laid upon the table and, unless approved by this house, they would expire within a limited time.

I am not suggesting that this can be done or should be done in all statutes, but there is a strong case to be made that in certain instances the right to pass orders in council, the right to pass regulations, the right to make orders involves an area so crucial, critical and important to the liberty of the subject, that these orders in council should not be allowed to continue beyond a definite time until considered and approved by this house.

These, Mr. Speaker, are some of the areas I think we should traverse and cover. I think this is a tremendously important committee and I have great hopes that from it will flow some very beneficial results.

When the minister was speaking yesterday, I was searching for a little phrase which I recalled from before, and I found it last night. It comes from the immortal Shakespeare. Possibly the minister will remember it.

> But man, proud man,
> Drest in a little brief authority,
> Most ignorant of what he's most assured,
> His glassy essence, like an angry ape,
> Plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven
> As make the angels weep.

I refer that to the minister. He might pass it on to his colleagues and to the Prime Minister. I think it is a very useful thing to bear in mind by those who occupy temporarily the seats of the mighty.

I think this applies to civil servants and others who are given this delegated authority; good men, honest, conscientious men, but entrusted with this power they have the opportunity to cover up mistakes, to hide some inequity and injustice, to sweep their problems under the carpet. They know that at the present time there can be no right of review because if the matter is brought on to the floor of this house it is brought in such a way that it cannot be dealt with and disposed of effectively.

I think that most of those who have been given this power exercise it intelligently, honestly and equitably. However, I suggest that if it were known this power of review existed, if it were known that there would in fact be a committee of this house with the right to make the sort of inquiry I have envisaged, that would have a most salutory effect upon those who have been given this power and in their dealings with the common people, with the ordinary man, they would exercise a degree of vigilance and care which I am afraid in many instances today they do not do.

I think this is a particularly good time to bring this up. We hear talk about the just society. We heard the Prime Minister this afternoon make a unilateral declaration concerning the government's proposal with regard to the question period. As I have indicated before, I believe this is just another example of the very dangerous course which the Prime Minister and his colleagues seem determined to pursue. When I heard during the election campaign about a just society I thought it was about time the people of Canada grabbed their hats and headed for the storm cellars. The great society, the new deal, the old deal, the middle age deal, all involve a proliferation of boards, tribunals, orders, regulations, directions and directives. Governments which come into power on an election platform based on issues of this kind operate like a yo yo; there is a lot of motion but no progress.

The statute books are filled with statutes giving rights, powers and regulatory authority to others which entitle them to deal with the fortunes and lives of the people of Canada. I venture to say, in the course of the next four years, if the people of Canada are so unfortunate as to have this government inflicted upon them for that length of time this is what we will find in the statutes which this government passes. We have the poor bewildered people of this country, the ordinary man. I believe it was Lincoln who said that God must have loved the ordinary man because he made so many of them. The ordinary man, in the general course of events today, is overpowered and overshadowed by bigness—big industry, large labour unions and big government. I suggest we will see more of this from now on.

It may well be that the better quality of life about which we hear a great deal may be improved by the passage of statutes giving government officials and the governor in council power to pass regulations, but I do not think so. I think it is about time we recognized that we have imposed upon the people of this country a bureaucratic jungle. I have no hope that we will be able to hack it down. I do hope, however, that through measures of this kind it will be possible for us at least to clear out a little space where the ordinary man can stand tall and straight again, see the blue sky, through recourse to the remedies which we hope will flow from the recommendations of a committee of this kind. We hope that he will be given the opportunity by an appeal from some of these measures to once again become an individual.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I cannot quite copy the lyrical turn of phrase we have heard from the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin); but I have a few observations which I should like to make on this motion. We, in this party, are happy to give this motion our enthusiastic support. All members are aware of the enormous growth of delegated legislation. It is a phenomenon in this day of modern democracies. With the growing demand for legislative action, with the inevitable complexity of such legislation and the need for flexibility it is quite impossible for parliament to deal directly with the total field of legislation. Hence, the practice of the wide delegation of legislative powers to the cabinet and other so-called subordinate bodies.

It is quite useless to bemoan this tendency, although for the past 50 years legal pundits headed by Lord Hewart, in the "New Despotism", have made it a subject for their eloquence. Although it is quite useless to bid the flood turn back, we must establish some effective review of delegated legislation if the whole democratic process of parliament is to be meaningful and not simply an empty and mocking phrase. Perhaps I might cite an example. Parliament has passed the Immigration Act which in theory lays down an immigration policy for Canada. In fact, from some knowledge, I would venture the opinion that 95 per cent of our immigration cases are dealt with by means of regulations passed by orders in council. The essential immigration policy of this country has not been subject to effective review by this house.

I, personally, am pleased that the committee, by the terms of the motion, is directed primarily to a review of action by this house in connection with subordinate legislation. There are, as members have pointed out, other forms of review such as judicial review and administrative review. Other suggestions have been made, such as the appointment of officials like ombudsmen. All of these are helpful and may even be essential. I suggest, however, that it is this house of elected members which is and should be primarily both the maker of laws affecting the people of this country and the protector of the people of this country against encroachment by the executive and its servants. Any effective steps we can take to make the supremacy of parliament more real and effective should be taken. This is essential if we are to have a fuller and more genuine democracy. We assume that the committee will be appointed, and we hope it will find useful ways for parliament to review delegated legislation. We also hope when the report of this committee is made that it will be referred promptly by the government to the house for action.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few brief remarks on that notice of motion to set up a committee to consider procedural changes. As a new member who has had however the opportunity and the advantage to attend innumerable sittings of the house—as a visitor and secretary to the leader of the Ralliement créditiste for three years—I have seen with my own eyes the work done in this historic chamber and its quality.

Mr. Speaker, the remarks I want to make at this stage are more of a general nature and do not deal, except occasionally, with any standing order; instead they will urge the members of that committee to pay particular attention to the spirit in which that committee should sit, in my opinion.

Mr. Speaker, the recent statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to the effect that the question period would be changed according as ministers are present or absent is, in my opinion, a breach of the fundamental parliamentary rule, in view of the setting up of this committee. I hope that the matter will be referred to that committee in due course and that report will be made to this house.

Mr. Speaker, in this parliament, we have a very important part to play, and to do so, every member should be able to exercise his fundamental rights as representative and spokesman of the people, according to the standing orders. I think that every member must make every effort so that order is maintained in the house, and a higher standard is given to this debate.

Mr. Speaker, moreover, it is my belief that Canadians truly want to be present in this house through their members whom they elected by a majority vote.

Mr. Speaker, all Canadians are present here in our discussions through the representatives they have elected, as I was saying a moment ago. All the people of Canada have a right to demand representation in the debates of the people's chamber, for it is indeed their chamber, and I feel sad about the attendance to various degrees here. I realize that members are involved on all sides in a great number of problems but the fact remains, I think, that some recommendations should be made and studied by this committee in order to assist the members so that they may fulfil their legislative and administrative roles more adequately.

As a new member and without hurting anybody's feelings, I will simply say—and I repeat it—that participation in the debates of this house has been lacking. Several members and ministers are absent. People want us to say aloud in this parliament what they are thinking at home. I believe this governing principle should be continuously and permanently observed by each of us.

Secondly, I would like to say that I am disappointed with the many members not participating in our debates. I have, on several occasions, witnessed this situation as I have in the past three years, been listening to the debates from the gallery. Is our participation, Mr. Speaker, a matter of saving face or does it consist in contributing something to the debates? It will be the responsibility of the committee to examine this point thoroughly and ask questions.

My third comment is in connection with the quality of our discussions in this house and about the manner of our interjections. I do not claim to be better than the other members in this respect. It is a conversation between deaf persons and it has become worse since the Prime Minister has muzzled his ministers, thus preventing them from cooperating with other members.

I would therefore appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that those three comments be taken into consideration, incomplete as they may be, at the meetings of this committee, so as to improve the rules of this house and its performance.

I hope that the amendments which will be passed will improve the standard debates, encourage a thorough dialogue and an exchange of views among all parties of this house in short, that they will constantly promote a fuller co-operation from each of us.

I believe that our democracy will be lively if every member of this house is also lively. We must help the new members to integrate in their new parliamentary background and to get acquainted with the rules of the house with a view to increasing efficiency in their work.

I would like to suggest, Mr. Speaker—and I hope I abide by the rules by so doing—that lessons on parliamentary procedures be given by you, since you are an expert in this field and that I understand you teach at the University of Ottawa. Otherwise, some other capable person could give them. This would familiarize new members with the rules of the house and help them to take a more active and intelligent part in the debates.

I feel certain that many old hands in parliamentary matters would also benefit from taking those courses. An effort must be made to help the member of parliament, to revalorize his role. That is the spirit in which amendments should be made, Mr. Speaker, in order to turn the member of parliament into a real legislator and a competent administrator.

If we are to review and modernize our rules, we should also try to give back to the members their true role, that of full participants instead of spectators who seem to wait for the Messiah.

If our standing orders, which no longer answer our present needs, are to be changed, these changes should be made in a certain spirit and according to a basic principle: rethinking and redefining the role of the member of parliament and parliament itself, and establishing the proper priorities. However, it must not be forgotten that we are here to express what the people are thinking.

I duly appreciated the most timely observations made last night by the right hon. member for Prince-Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), namely that the people must be informed of what is said and done in this historic and unique house.

In this respect, Mr. Speaker, I find it unacceptable that the Hansard should not be sent, at Her Majesty's expense, to any person requesting it. I am convinced that the hon. member for Prince-Albert will agree that Her Majesty would be pleased to allow Canadian citizens, eager to be informed, to receive this report, where the facts are not sifted out by the financiers, who would distort them, in order to keep the people in the dark and so to lead public opinion where they would like it to go.

Mr. Speaker, considering that there are about 4,000 subscribers to the Hansard, I am appalled to think that such a service is not being provided; this is one of the very serious reasons why people take no interest in the work of the house.

Mr. Speaker, I should also like to point out that the procedure should respect the role of the member, that of a representative and a spokesman. A member is a spokesman. Because of that, he must know what his constituents think. To know what they think, each member should, in my humble opinion, set up a permanent consultation system within his riding each time an important bill is put before the house.

For instance, take the famous omnibus bill which will be brought in shortly. At that time, it would certainly be opportune, in my humble opinion, or each member to hold some sort of very honest referendum in his riding, in order for him to know the opinion of the people, and to allow a free vote to be taken, not a party vote as used to be the case with the old parties.

In short, it is a matter of bringing the people to really participate in the administration of the country. No matter what our debates are, no matter what procedure we adopt, if the Canadian people do not participate directly or indirectly in our debates, if they do not read them, we are wasting our time.

Consultation could be achieved through the mailing of circulars, letters, or through other means, in order to bring out the idea that a member is really a spokesman.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to pursue my remarks further, save for the following conclusions. I am particularly pleased that the parliament has an air of youth about it, and that it has several young members.

I am 25 years old and I am happy to sit in this parliament; a 22-year old member of the New Democratic Party, sits here also I believe. I want to congratulate him on his election and offer him my close co-operation, with a view to showing the old campaigners that young parliamentarians can do as well as their elders, provided the latter will co-operate.

Obviously, the young need the experience of the old and that is why, Mr. Speaker, I should like to appeal, at this point, to the old timers of parliament, and ask them to co-operate with us, to help us integrate. If one day they begin to feel a bit tired, we shall be here to help them. Some people have ulcers; we are in good health. Our elders have clever heads; we may have good ideas, but we lack experience.

If all those things are put together, Mr. Speaker, I think some good work can be done. But if each party refuses to come down from its ivory tower, it is useless to think that the House of Commons can engage in a lively, human and dynamic dialogue. It will be useless, because we will waste our time and end up in the best dialogue of the deaf one has ever seen.

The hon. member for Prince Albert said last night that if the debates were put on film, the end result might not be a horror movie, I say that it might be a comedy, Mr. Speaker, if things remained as they are right now.

Parliament must be dynamic to catch the interest of dynamic people. It must be serious if it wants to get the attention and the interest of serious people. It must be young to attract even more young people. It must be efficient so that competent people from every sphere will take interest in it.

I believe in democracy as long as it is respected and lived. I want to blame this government for the way it scorns democracy by refusing to answer the questions put by the opposition, and not behaving according to a true democratic spirit. I am thinking of what took place this afternoon, with the question period confined to Wednesday and the ministers allowed to be absent.

We must have a responsible government, responsible to the opposition and to the people, because we all owe an accounting to the people for our presence here. We must give an accounting to the people for the business we have to discharge here.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding my remarks, I say: Give us all the standing orders and procedure that you want, if a positive, dynamic, vigourous, human legislative program, fit to tackle the true problems, is not presented to us, these standing orders and procedure will be meaningless and ineffective.

• (4:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the resolution before the house which states that a special committee of 12 members, to be named at a later date, be appointed to consider and, from time to time, to report on procedures for the review by this house of instruments made in virtue of any statute of the parliament of Canada.

I should like to commend the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), for initiating and championing the move to have this resolution placed before the house, because I consider that any effort made to regain the supremacy of parliament is a move in the right direction. I have been aware of the power of the present government of Canada, and this has worried me and many members of the house because sometimes governments which have more authority than parliament might not be as sympathetic as the democratic process would require.

I think the resolution, as stated, epitomizes the concern that in some cases instruments of government may be given unlimited power, thereby taking away some of the authority and powers which should rest with parliament.

My major reason for speaking on this resolution arises out of my particular concern as a result of recent action taken by an instrument of government in connection with a province of Canada which I will name shortly. In trying to bring this point to the attention of parliament, permit me to quote from the legislation which cemented the union between Canada and Newfoundland in 1949. In that year when Newfoundland entered confederation, one of the terms of union agreed on by the Canadian government and Newfoundland was term 31 (a) which stated the following:

> At the date of union, or as soon thereafter as practicable, Canada will take over the following services and will, as from the date of union, relieve the province of Newfoundland of the public costs incurred in respect of every service taken over, namely,... (a) the Newfoundland railway—

On April 1, 1949, by order in council the governor general in council entrusted to the Canadian National Railways the operation and management of the Newfoundland railway. The operative words of that order in council as it relates to the case are:

> —Therefore, His Excellency the governor general in council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Transport, is pleased to order that, effective April 1, 1949, the Newfoundland railway, including rights-of-way, wharves, dry docks and other real property, rolling stock, equipment, ships and other personal property ... the title to which is vested in His Majesty, be and they are hereby entrusted in respect of management and operation thereof to the company on the terms in the Canadian National Railways' Act expressly specified, namely, that such management and operation shall continue during the pleasure of the governor in council—

As all hon. members are aware, the terms of union and subsequent arrangements were agreed upon by the two governments, namely the government of Newfoundland and the government of Canada, both of which also agreed that the arrangement would remain in existence during the pleasure of the governor in council.

In 1966, legislation was brought in creating what is now known as the Canadian Transport Commission, and the statutes of Canada 1966-67 outline the agreements made or the legislation governing the actions and operation of the said Canadian Transport Commission. During the summer of the present year, the Canadian Transport Commission, under the chairmanship of Hon. John W. Pickersgill, showed exactly what powers this particular instrument of government had and also how it intended to use this power. In the summer of this year, the commission made the following decision with regard to the request of the C.N.R. to abandon the rail passenger service in Newfoundland. As we all know, last year the C.N.R. placed an argument before the Canadian Transport Commission that the rail passenger service serving the whole of Newfoundland be abolished.

Last summer, the commission, which is an instrument of the government and which has the power to make a decision in this respect, stated the following:

> The Railway Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission hereby orders:

This is a decision of the Canadian Transport Commission with regard to the C.N.R. application.

> —shall, on April 15, 1969, discontinue passenger train service between St. John's and Port aux Basques, in the province of Newfoundland.

I ask my colleagues and all members of this house: Where was there reference in this decision to the government of Canada? I ask again—while indicating my support for this resolution which points out the great need for a review of the powers and procedures of the various instruments created by statute—were the government of Canada, the parliament of Canada, the government of Newfoundland, the minister in question or the governor in council, all duly elected bodies, consulted in the making of this decision? There is absolutely no reference in this particular document to any authority other than the Canadian Transport Commission and its president. I say, further, that although I am quite aware of the fact, as was indicated recently by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) in a statement to the house, that an appeal is in order—and we hope an appeal will be presented—I nevertheless state here and now that this kind of action should never be allowed to transpire, regardless of the fact that there is an appeal pending.

I asked a question in the house recently. My question to the Minister of Transport asked why the Canadian Transport Commission made the decision to abandon the rail passenger service. The reply given by the minister indicated that, because of technological changes which are taking place in our society, because of the improved use of aeroplanes, and because of the increasing cost of rail passenger services, the Canadian Transport Commission made the decision to abandon the rail passenger service in the island of Newfoundland.

I asked, further, at what time the government of Canada or the minister responsible would make a decision as to the abandonment of all rail passenger services across Canada. As the house is quite aware, this question was ruled as argumentative and no reply was received from the minister. I realize now why it was argumentative. I should have asked the question of the president of the Canadian Transport Commission, Mr. Pickersgill, rather than the minister. This was quite obvious.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lundrigan: What I am trying to say in support of this resolution is that this kind of action by one of the creatures, one of the instruments of government, can lead to the abolition of rights of not only individuals but a whole population. If the government of Canada, this parliament, is going to establish and retain creatures which have practically omnipotent power, I consider this to be a very serious situation.

I am speaking on this issue and making reference to this particular case because I feel it is not only a provincial matter. I like to think it is very much a national issue. I believe that if the president of the Canadian Transport Commission, and the Canadian Transport Commission itself, can without due regard to parliament, without presenting its case to the government of Canada, to the duly elected representatives of our country, make decisions of this nature, why cannot they make a decision to abolish the whole C.N. passenger service across Canada?

This is a matter of great concern to the people across the whole dominion, because I fear the power of the Canadian Transport Commission. This is the specific reason I so strongly support this resolution and ask that the government make every effort to give to such a committee the widest possible terms of reference.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as my colleague, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), has already pointed out, we very enthusiastically welcome this motion. I hope we do not have cause to say about this motion, after it passes, what we had to say today about a motion we passed yesterday. At any rate, we feel very strongly that there is need to study the whole question of how parliament can review the legislation that is passed by bodies to which we delegate the authority to pass such legislation.

As is already clear from the debate that has taken place, various bodies are given this authority by parliament. We just had a reference to the Canadian Transport Commission. My colleague from Greenwood referred to what happens in the field of immigration. Indeed, there are a great many boards and commissions that are given what amounts to legislative authority by acts of parliament.

I rise to speak in particular of a very important body which gets this kind of authority from parliament and which I think all too often abuses it. I refer to the cabinet itself. After all, that august body consisting of the ministers of the Crown does have the right to pass orders in council in terms laid down for them in various statutes of parliament. However, it is a very clear principle that the cabinet does not have the authority to legislate beyond the terms given to it by an act of parliament.

I want to refer to one particular case which I think demonstrates the need for this kind of review. I have made a brief reference to it already by asking a question of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner). My question was put to him on September 17, as recorded in Hansard at page 102, when I asked him about an order in council which was passed in April, based on the Financial Administration Act.

I asked him in particular if he would compare the passing of that order in council with one that was passed by the Diefenbaker government in June, 1962. I asked, to be even more specific, whether the Department of Justice had checked all aspects of this matter before giving approval to the passing of this order in council. It struck me as rather strange that when I asked about this order in council the Minister of Justice did not seem to know which one I was talking about. When he did come back with the answer a few days later, namely yesterday, he managed to give me the good old one word answer. His one word answer to my question was simply "Yes". In other words, all I have been told by the Minister of Justice is that all aspects of this matter were considered by the Department of Justice before approval was given to this order in council.

To make my point, a brief bit of history has to be given, but it is history well known to many members who are still in this House of Commons. In June, 1962, a week after the election on June 18 of that year, the government of that day passed an order in council which had the effect of raising import duties. This is something that only parliament can do; we thought everyone knew that. But the then government of Canada found an ingenious way by which it could raise import duties. It did it by order in council. It used the Customs Tariff to raise various categories of duties by a rather large amount, and then reduced them to the figure it wanted by applying the remission privileges contained in section 22 of the Financial Administration Act. It was ingenious, but there is no doubt in my mind that it was wrong, that it was an abuse of the power to pass legislation by order in council.

I think it is a statement of fact that I was the one who discovered it and first started asking questions about it in the House of Commons. But for the purposes of what I want to say now, the more important fact is that it was the Liberals of that day who came in for the kill. It was Hon. Paul Martin, who sat in the front bench on this side of the house, and the present Minister of Justice who sat in the back bench on this side of the house, who really went to war, who really manned the barricades, who really called for the downfall of the Conservative government because it had exercised the privilege of passing legislation by order in council, which it was the right of parliament only to do.

The government of that day, of course, told us that the Department of Justice had found that this order in council was perfectly valid, that it was properly drawn and quite legal. But a few months later, after an election had taken place, we had a change of government. In the meantime, some people were taking the government to court over this order in council because, after all, duties had been raised by a substantial amount.

So the new Liberal government got from the same Department of Justice the opposite ruling, a ruling quite contrary to the ruling that had been given to the Conservative government. The ruling then was that the order in council of June, 1962, was invalid and that there had better be legislation to validate it.

I recite that bit of history, Mr. Speaker, not to open old wounds but to place it before the house to enable us to see what is now happening. Let me repeat that in 1962 and 1963 this was a terrible abuse of the power of order in council. The Liberal government now comes along and uses the same order in council technique, the same statute—the same Financial Administration Act, section 22—to reduce duties. The order in council reads, in part, to the effect the duties will be the amount they would have been if parliament had passed the resolutions that were placed on the order paper on June 1 and November 6, 1967. The order in council, in its very language, admits that the government is doing by executive action what it had earlier thought had to be done by an act of parliament.

I see that you are on the edge of your chair, Mr. Speaker, and that it is after five o'clock, so I will continue my remarks when we return to this motion.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business, namely notices of motions, public bills.

HIGHWAYS

REQUEST FOR CONSTRUCTION OF SECOND TRANS-CANADA ROUTE

Mr. Ambrose Hubert Peddle (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give immediate consideration to the advisability of constructing a second Trans-Canada Highway that would link Labrador with the rest of Canada and thus develop the greatest remaining storehouse of natural wealth in Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the concept of a second trans-Canada highway is of such magnitude and will involve the spending of such a colossal sum of money that it probably sounds presumptuous, or some such word as that, when advanced by a new member of parliament. It is very possible that Joey Smallwood more than any other individual in Canada would do more justice to the introduction of such a motion. As everyone knows, Mr. Speaker, he can roll a couple of billion dollars—he would call it $2,000 million—off his tongue without batting an eyelash. I doubt whether he would have any conception of just how much money it is, but he would certainly have no difficulty in talking about it.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to talk about the money involved. I would not know what I was talking about anyway; any mention of an amount over $5,000 and I tend to freeze. Neither am I suggesting that the construction of a second trans-Canada highway commence tomorrow morning. I am simply suggesting that, in the opinion of this house, the government should give immediate consideration to the advisability of the construction of such a highway. I have done no research whatever on this question, Mr. Speaker. The financial, geographical and other research I leave to the government; they have the facilities.

Since entering this house two weeks ago, Mr. Speaker, I cannot say that I have been particularly impressed with the system of priorities that has been developed by this government. The people of Canada, tired of minority governments, were caught by the glamorous, rosy, urbane, shopping plaza campaign of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). They supported him in great numbers and expected great things. They were led to believe, in fact, that great things would be forthcoming.

The public looked forward to great surprises on the opening day of this parliament. They had a right to expect such an announcement that the government would give full consideration to the advisability of the building of a second trans-Canada highway. And if not this, Mr. Speaker, then certainly some bold project that would indicate that this government had some vision, some imagination and desire to continue to make Canada a truly great nation. The only surprise I have received since coming to parliament is to learn that the minister of external affairs has red hair. I had always thought it was black; I had seen him only on black and white television.

We also heard that this was going to be a "jumping parliament". The only jumping that we have seen from this parliament, Mr. Speaker, has been on this side of the house, hon. members jumping up and down to catch Your Honour's eye to ask a question.

Seriously, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that Canada's future greatness lies in her present cities, as great as they might be, where most of our population is presently concentrated. In my opinion, whatever real future Canada has lies to the north. We have this enormous expanse of territory with untold and unheard of wealth buried beneath it. We must have a government with the imagination and daring to develop it.

I do not know much about Canada's north generally, but I do have some idea of that part of the north that lies in my own constituency of Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador, and in that great land mass of Labrador. The surface in Labrador has not yet been scratched, Mr. Speaker. It is a great, rich land mass, a wilderness that has been successfully developed from an industrial point of view in just three tiny areas that on the map look like three 10-cent pieces. There are, of course, countless small fishing settlements along the east coast of Labrador, but what I speak of is the fantastic industrial potential that lies inland.

I am proposing, Mr. Speaker, that this government give consideration, not only in the interest of Labrador but in the interest of the whole country, to the possibility and advisability of constructing a second trans-Canada highway to the north of the existing trans-Canada highway. This highway would join the present highway in the far west, cross Canada, go through northern Quebec, down through Labrador, across the Strait of Belle Isle, a distance of some eight or 10 miles, by means of a tunnel, bridge, causeway or what have you, and then come down through northern Newfoundland to connect with the present trans-Canada highway. In effect, this would make it a trans-Canada loop or belt, or whatever you wish to call it.

The people who live in Labrador now, in the towns of Labrador City, Wabush, Goose Bay, Happy Valley and, of course, that big power development at Churchill Falls, and in all the coastal communities are virtually prisoners. They have no access to the trans-Canada highway, or in fact to any highway. They have no access to Air Canada, except at Goose Bay perhaps once a week. The fare there is exorbitant and makes the journey completely impractical. The people have no access to the C.N.R., and it looks as though the whole province of Newfoundland will soon have no access to the C.N.R. They have no access to the C.B.C. Now and then canned programs are made available to them. I know of instances where our people have watched national hockey games in June.

Our people are Canadian in name only and are without the privileges enjoyed by other Canadians. Their pioneering spirit has received no encouragement and our up and coming generation has been given no road to follow other than the road which leads to prison. Most people say that since Newfoundland is an island, it is impossible to link it with the trans-Canada highway system. Those people forget that a large part of Labrador is also part of Newfoundland and shares a border with Quebec. Those living in Labrador are entitled to be linked by highway with the rest of the country just as people living in all other provinces are linked by highways to the rest of the country. Such a link ought to be forged where it is physically possible to do so. Joey Smallwood's unholy fear of Quebec should not be a factor in preventing such a link.

Quebec seems to get on quite well with Ontario. You can go from Ontario to Quebec by road and from New Brunswick to Quebec by road. I do not know if the proposal of a highway link with any part of Newfoundland has been considered seriously by previous governments, but if it has been considered and if a study has been made, then I should like to see the report on that study. If such a study has not been made, then I should like to see it made. It is high time that governments forgot their preoccupation with a few of our large cities and concentrated their attention to some degree on that part of the country which holds the key to our future, the north.

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, the notice of motion presented by the honourable member from Newfoundland and Labrador, who represents the constituency of Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Peddle) reads as follows:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give immediate consideration to the advisability of constructing a second Trans-Canada Highway that would link Labrador with the rest of Canada and thus develop the greatest remaining storehouse of natural wealth in Canada.

I may say at once, Mr. Speaker, that this motion is quite natural and well meant and it is, on the part of that member, a sign of clearsightedness. I would be inclined, as a matter of principle, to second his motion, especially if the honourable member would add that this highway could cover a part of the province of Quebec: for instance, starting from the Hyppolite Lafontaine tunnel in Montreal and going through Berthier, Trois-Rivières, Quebec, across to Tadoussac and as far as the Labrador region. As a matter of principle there is obviously no objection to that. This is a remarkable project, as was said by the honourable member, and it is an undertaking that is bound to create considerable development in one part of Canada that contains untold wealth. However, Mr. Speaker, I believe two factors must, at this time, be considered. The notice of motion introduced by the hon. member—with all due respect—seems to be worded in an equivocal language. In the first place, it reads in part:

—the government should give immediate attention to the advisability of constructing a second Trans-Canada Highway—

"Immediate attention"—Mr. Speaker, in the course of the debate on the Speech from the Throne, I heard some hon. members say that the government had not done this or that, had not examined this or that, and that we do not know where we are heading with the just society. Questions are being asked as to where we are headed with the new procedure.

Therefore, the opposition seems to understand that this new government, that wants to create a new policy, already has, as regards work groups or task forces as our English friends say, a large number of organizations, and the one responsible for administration will have to work day and night for many years to come in order to get all this done. If we are going to tie them down to the consideration of a project of this scope immediately, I am under the impression, Mr. Speaker, that it will be too great an enterprise, that we are putting the cart before the horse.

After all, as my honourable friends say, one must set certain priorities. Now, there are things that have been left undone and that cannot be settled at present. Hence, it is unwise I think—and I will attempt to prove it in a few minutes—to force the government to consider this question immediately.

Secondly, the hon. member talks about the advisability of building a second Trans-Canada highway. I say that this is ambiguous Mr. Speaker. To me, a Trans-Canada highway is one that would start in British Columbia—I say this in English in order to please my friends who chide me for calling it "Colombie-Britannique" when I am asking them to say "Trois-Rivières" instead of Three Rivers—and go through all the provinces up to Labrador and Newfoundland.

Well, Mr. Speaker, there is ambiguity here. To me, this would be an interprovincial highway. First, we would have to get both provinces to come to an agreement, which would not be a mean thing, Mr. Speaker. Everybody knows that since the Labrador matter has been discussed for many years now. Some people in my province say that Newfoundland robbed them of Labrador and they will not change their mind easily about that. Therefore, can one imagine how we could have them come to an agreement in order to build that interprovincial highway, with the federal government contributing its share eventually, which would bring no objection on my part, but I should remind my hon. friend that the government is already facing projects that will require almost phenomenal investments. There is, for instance, the medicare scheme, which has not been implemented yet to all practical purposes and which is going to cost, it seems, some $800 to $900 million. The provinces are reluctant to adopt this plan, as they claim they cannot afford it.

Therefore, if it is doubtful if this is really a Trans-Canada highway, and if the whole Canadian people are required to pay the cost, I wonder whether this is very wise.

Secondly, there is the Prince Edward Island causeway where the work has been progressing slowly because of the present financial situation. There is a good deal of other projects which the government had considered and initiated such as, for instance, the C.B.C. building in Montreal the construction of which has to be postponed due to the financial situation.

Even if the project were only to be considered at the present time, it would mean considerable investments, because appraisals are always expensive. A feeling is then created in the country which is contrary to the directives of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and of the leaders who control Canadian finance. According to them, all levels of government, whether municipal, provincial or federal, should now set an example by restricting their investments, encouraging individuals to do the same, because of the uncertain financial climate which exists in the whole world and naturally also affects Canada.

Therefore, psychologically speaking, if we undertake a project needing an investment of several million dollars, we run the risk of having the Canadian public say: the federal government is irresponsible; they ask us to restrict our investments, they have put off projects already decided on, mapped out and accessed because of the existing financial problem, and yet now they are undertaking another multimillion dollar project.

Information about those things can be obtained, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I have here the annual report on the Trans-Canada highway for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1967, published by the Department of Public Works. And just to prove you, for instance, that it would be difficult for Quebec, Newfoundland and the federal government to come to an agreement, it is only necessary to note that the first bill goes back to 1949, but its expiry date had to be postponed several times, that Quebec decided to participate in the project only in 1960, on several conditions and that, finally, the cost of the whole thing was $825 million, and to use an expression which is quite popular at home, $825 million it is not just peanuts.

In my opinion, this notice of motion is ambiguous, equivocal, in that it refers to a Trans-Canada highway when it is instead an interprovincial one. If my hon. friend wants to pursue his project—which I agree has a certain merit—he should see, for example, our friend the Premier of Newfoundland, suggest that he meet the Premier of Quebec, then that they clear the ground or, at least, understand each other and he should make sure that they are ready to work together, which is not too certain, and get them to decide whether they are able to pay the 50 per cent share of their required contribution or the percentage agreed upon.

That is not too sure, because they both have financial difficulties, and here, I can picture the premier of my province pulling aces out of his sleeve and saying: "You stole Labrador from us; first, give back Labrador, if you want us to talk business." If the premier does not say it, some of his ministers or other Quebecers will, and maybe Mr. Smallwood will voice his own conditions. This might be the first step; only after that could the provincial government intervene. But as far as I am concerned, it would be illogical at this moment to let the public know of the idea that the federal government would embark upon a project of that importance, even though it is worthwhile—and I repeat that it is—because all worthy projects have to be implemented step by step.

I am sure that out of the 263 members here, 200 have brilliant plans for the investment of government's money, and a thousand good reasons, but there comes a time when we must say: Well, we have to consider our means, because the bill will go to the taxpayers.

Efforts are made to reduce the budget. I saw how our friends opposite reacted this afternoon when the main estimates were mentioned. Right away someone said: Have they increased or decreased? Then, someone else said: No, they have increased but savings have been made just the same in the sense that otherwise the estimates would be much higher. What should we think about the passing of such a notice of motion? I assess it only if it covers the province of Quebec and I made some rapid calculations. Even if it covers the province of Quebec only and the part concerned in Newfoundland and then connects with the national highway, $400 or $500 million have already been spent. Although the bill is very worthwhile, my friends will no doubt understand that, even if we would all like to drive a Cadillac or fly in a Jet Star, if we cannot afford them we do not buy them.

I come back to one of my earlier conclusions: the notice of motion as drafted is ambiguous because it is not about a Trans-Canada highway, but an interprovincial highway, which is something completely different. Furthermore, it burdens the government with an immediate responsibility, since it says that the government should give immediate consideration to it. I see, for instance, the president of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) who stays up until all hours, not to go on a spree, but to do his homework for the next day. He will be called upon to create a specialized research team, to find experts to give immediate consideration to that. He or another minister, will have to keep an eye on these studies, at a time when the idea of ministers being absent during the question period is being frowned upon. He will surely have to be absent if he is given an additional burden. He is quite busy enough as it is and the same goes for other government experts.

Then it is equivocal, premature and does not take into account the fact that the federal government has already some considerable commitments of which it must defer the carrying out, because it must precisely take into account the taxpayers' solvency. This is why the opposition is charging the government with having overburdened the taxpayers; but such a procedure which existed well before the government was in power, is obviously adjusted to the cost of living and meets all the demands of the members which lead the government to make investments even when they are beyond its means.

Now, I will summarize my comments, Mr. Speaker. The government has already undertaken to make huge investments beyond the reasonable limits which it had set. It should now honour its first commitments.

Secondly, a situation is created which runs counter to the directives emanating from the honourable Minister of Finance, since word has spread that the government is ready to commit itself, without batting an eye, to a multi-million dollar project, even if it is deemed as worthy as it was said to be, a moment ago.

Thirdly, Mr. Speaker, this project is drafted in ambiguous terms, since it deals with a trans-Canada highway, whereas it should be an interprovincial highway, I think, not a trans-Canada highway. I also believe that, previous to this, an agreement should be reached between Newfoundland and Quebec, and this will not be easy. It is not necessarily for the federal government to take the first step toward such agreements. This should be done by our Newfoundland friends, the main parties in this matter. It is they who want to be in, so it is they who should start consultations with the Quebec government.

If they manage to reach a reasonable agreement, this will give the federal government time to breathe, at least for four or five years, as it will probably drag on judging by the time it took for the Transcanada highway. Now, in 4 or 5 years' time, the financial international climate will have improved—at least we hope so. Of course, the federal government's situation will have certainly improved too and it is quite possible that at that time it will be in a position to say: You made an agreement. This is an interprovincial highway. The two provinces concerned have reached an agreement and we are ready to contribute for such proportion, since it has to do with the development of natural resources in a part of the country where resources are plentiful.

Mr. Speaker, it is the reason why, whilst I recognize that in principle the proposition is worthwhile, I object to it for the reasons I have just enumerated.

[English]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Peddle) on having introduced this motion. I admire the frankness with which he admitted that he has not considered all its implications. What he is suggesting is something very far reaching, a highway from the east to the west. Well, we have heard a similar proposal made many times, but the suggestion has always been that the highway be built from the west to the east. The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) is in favour of starting this new second trans-Canada highway in northern British Columbia and heading it eastward. It is interesting to find a new member wanting to start it in the east and head it west.

The hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) is probably wrong on three or four counts. One of them would be the assumption that this proposed second trans-Canada highway would go through Trois-Rivières. I am sure we have in mind that it would be placed much further north, in which case it would not have much effect upon Trois-Rivières.

It was interesting to hear those two hon. members speak, because obviously the one on the Liberal side is not liberal but conservative, and the one on the Conservative side is not conservative but liberal—with a small "c" and a small "l", of course. The situation is that the man who calls the tune must pay the piper, and the hon. member for Trois-Rivières is on the side of the house which is more directly concerned with raising the money. It is probably easier to consider this proposal from the point of view of the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador who would have less preoccupation with raising the necessary money than would a supporter of the government.

I believe there would be a great deal of merit to the development of a second trans-Canada highway. I know much argument was advanced against the federal government becoming involved in the building of the first trans-Canada highway. The proposal to build this highway was advanced in the early 1940's and was brought to fruition in the Trans-Canada Highway Act of 1949. The first highway was built on a voluntary basis. Any province could participate if it wished to get the benefit of the program. If it did not wish to participate it need not, and the province of Quebec stayed out until the early 1960's.

Difficulties have arisen in some provinces regarding the development of interprovincial highways. The hon. member for Trois-Rivières was correct in saying that some highway programs have already resulted in an interprovincial exchange. This is true with respect to the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec. This gives rise to my interest in this matter. In Ontario we designated the northern route of the trans-Canada highway through the northern part of the province, and highway No. 17 was designated as the southern route of the trans-Canada highway. Such a program spurs people's imagination. By building the trans-Canada highway we provided a route from east to west which now carries most of our Canadian traffic. A person from the west finds it no longer advantageous to travel through the United States to get to eastern Canada. As a matter of fact, he can travel through central Canada over two different routes.

The building of the trans-Canada highway resulted in greater development of tourist industries, the profit from which is now more than the cost of building the highway. The highway was built with a 50 per cent contribution of the cost to a provincial government by the federal government, and the federal government made a 90 per cent grant of the cost covering 10 per cent of the route through a province where the most difficult construction was involved.

I am sure that if that 10 per cent link in Labrador were to take the form of a tunnel connecting Labrador to Newfoundland it would produce some interesting results. I understand that studies have been made concerning a proposal to build a causeway from Labrador to Newfoundland, and it was discovered that if a causeway were built the course of the Gulf Stream would be changed. As a result England would have a climate similar to northern Canada. It would have snow and ice for six months of the year, and most of the northern Europe would be in a semi-frigid state for four or five months of the year.

If the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador does a little research, I am sure he will find it not too difficult to raise subscriptions from European countries and Great Britain to help finance the construction of a tunnel rather than a causeway, because a tunnel would not affect their climates.

I have had the opportunity of travelling through northern Quebec. I know of the construction taking place in many of its northern areas. There is a very good highway coming from the west through Rouyn, Noranda, Val d'Or, and La Verendrye park down to Mont-Laurier. If one is travelling from west to east and wishes to come to Ottawa I recommend that highway. I think westerners should travel it at least once because it is a very interesting trip. It is not much longer than any other route although it appears to be longer. If this highway were the northern route of the trans-Canada it could be extended through the Lake St. Jean area, over to Labrador City, on into Labrador, and from there reach the island of Newfoundland.

I believe that with the advent of a second trans-Canada highway tremendous development would take place in the area through which it runs. Almost all of the railway development in the northern areas of B.C., Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec has been in a north to south direction. The only feasible way to provide transportation across those northern areas is by highway. If a highway were built many natural resources would be opened up for development.

It is all very well for the government to say it will not consider a second trans-Canada highway. I wonder, has it not considered some of the advantages which would flow from the building of a second trans-Canada highway. For many years I, as a Canadian, was not proud of the fact that if I had to go to western Canada I had to drive through the United States to get there. Our country was developed by the building of a railroad across it. But now modes of transportation have changed. A second trans-Canada highway is necessary.

We are plagued with unemployment, but I would not suggest that we should build highways to help combat unemployment. We would be very disgusted if we saw the federal government participate in a program of pick and shovel work to help fight unemployment.

Many rugged construction problems were solved in the building of the first trans-Canada highway. The lessons learned then, covering methods of construction and the building of a highway in winter time, could reduce the costs of a second highway. It is not easy to forecast the cost of such highway construction, nor is it easy to forecast how much resource material would be developed as a result, but I suggest that any party which wishes to implement a vision of expansion, as well as the vision of a just society for all parts of Canada, must give consideration to providing modern means of transportation in northern areas. Such a program would meet the wishes of the people living in the northern areas, and people in the rest of Canada have always shown a great deal of sympathy for the development of under developed areas.

While the hon. member who has proposed this motion has apologized for not having done a lot of research on the matter, I think the government has not done enough research. I think the hon. member is correct in his proposal for a second trans-Canada highway and for suggesting that a study be undertaken to see what it costs, and what the eventual benefits flowing from it would be. I think the government must have a much better answer before it can refuse the hon. member the opportunity of a study of this matter which is long overdue. I should like to congratulate the member who comes from the east for initiating a program that has long been the hope of some people from the central and western parts of Canada. I hope he is in this house long enough to see the completion of this highway, and I hope there will be a tunnel rather than a causeway. Those who live in other parts of the country, and who may be interested in our second trans-Canada highway, will be pleased if the government takes action.

Mr. Gustave Blouin (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the notice of motion which appears on the order paper under the name of the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Peddle), and in view of the fact that I represent the large Manicouagan riding, which borders on the province of Newfoundland, I thought that I could perhaps supply some explanations and information, because I have myself often discussed that project and I have talked about it several times with various associations in my riding.

I know that the new member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador has noticed many times that the people he represents in the mining towns of Labrador live isolated, without any communication. This is a fact, Mr. Speaker, that you can only appreciate if you are there or if you have the opportunity to visit that extremely large territory. Of course, following some tremendous mining developments, the number of people has increased, year after year, and they ask, quite rightly, for a communications system, mainly roads.

There is one railroad to serve certain towns but that railroad is used mainly by the mining companies for their ore; the population of those towns do not find it at all suitable.

A while ago, I said that the boundaries of Newfoundland, which are adjacent to my riding, give rise to about the same problems that I have to face. But when we speak of a Trans-Canada highway we speak of roads, of provincial jurisdiction. Indeed, on several occasions when I brought up the matter, I was always told that previous federal-provincial agreements would be necessary. The notice of motion of the member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Peddle) stipulates, as a suggestion, that contacts will have to be made with the provinces concerned.

I have already brought together the representatives of the municipalities interested in the matter, as well as representatives of Chambers of Commerce and of various other organizations. I told them, and I repeat it now, that there are organizations and instruments which can be used to develop that part of the country. This brings me to speak of the contribution of the federal government towards the construction of access roads to our natural resources. The federal government participated, during four years, on the basis of 50 per cent of the cost, in the construction of access roads, precisely with a view to developing our natural resources. I put a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Pepin) last year in this regard. I put it on September 29, 1967, that is a year ago, and asked him:

> Has the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources renewed an agreement with the Quebec government for 1967-68 with respect to the construction of access roads to natural resources? In the affirmative, what is the share of the federal government under this agreement?

Naturally, the reply I received was a simple no. And so, the agreement was not renewed last year. In addition, I added, as given on page 2683 of the Hansard for September 29:

> I know that not long ago, there was a meeting of the provincial ministers of mines and, if I am not mistaken, the renewal of this agreement was requested. Consequently, I would ask the minister to take note of this request, because the 50,000 citizens in my riding who are now working in the mining industry have no means of transportation, except by air. There is also the railway but, as everyone knows, that is for the mining operations.

Personally, I feel that requests have already been made, that consultations or meetings have already taken place. It was always said that there were instruments, machinery within the federal government that could help the provinces interested build such a road.

I do not see why federal-provincial conferences should not be held to reach some agreement. I had said also that it was not really part of the Trans-Canada highway because everyone knows that it does not go through the North Shore or Labrador.

However, I added that there might be a section of the Trans-Canada highway for whose construction the federal government could grant aid. Speaking of instruments and machinery, an agency like ARDA could take part in such projects. ARDA is an agency which has already made agreements with provincial governments, and which can also give its assistance and contribution to such programs.

Mr. Speaker, I know that a great deal of work has been done. Many requests have been made and in the last three or four years, I personally tried to make contacts and undertake what might be called profitable negotiations.

I know that at the present time, people cannot remain completely isolated from the rest of the world. With regard to the road which might be a section of the Trans-Canada highway, and which would run along the north shore, I must tell my friend of Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Peddle) that there have been meetings with the former Minister of Labrador Affairs. Rather extensive studies, and reports were even made. A delegation from Sept-Iles even met the Premier of Newfoundland last year, always in connection with that highway. It had been suggested that the road could run along the north coast until the strait of Belle-Isle and that it might be necessary to build a tunnel under the strait of Belle-Isle or a pier over it.

I could say that following certain studies—international agreements would be necessary—that project for the construction of a pier was abandoned. At the present time, a ferryboat runs across twice a day. Even if there is no proper road, there is however a portion of road extending for about 40 miles around Blanc-Sablon. In the strait of Belle-Isle, a ferryboat runs from Sainte-Barbe, (Newfoundland) to Blanc-Sablon, twice a day.

Another portion of road is under construction—I mentioned earlier the participation of the federal government in the development of natural resources and the construction of access roads from Baie-Comeau to Manicouagan, thanks to a subsidy granted by the Department of Energy, Mines and Natural Resources. The road extends about 40 miles. About 80 miles remain yet to be built, but that road running through Manicouagan could serve at the same time the towns of Gagnon, Wabush, Labrador City, Schefferville, and eventually the Churchill Falls project. Work has already started—

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Would the hon. member permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. Blouin: Certainly.

Mr. Valade: I would not want to interrupt the hon. member for Manicouagan, who champions very well the interests of his riding, but I would like to merely ask him what he thinks about the statement and the answer made by his colleague, the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (M. Mongrain), who so justly taxed our colleague of wanting to spend the Canadian government's money, when it does not have the means to spend that money. Am I to understand that the hon. member for Manicouagan does not agree with the hon. member for Trois-Rivières?

Mr. Blouin: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member for Sainte-Marie, I am pleased to say that I have listened with the greatest interest to the remarks made by the hon. member for Trois-Rivières, who always expresses himself well, and who has dealt with the financial aspect of the matter.

Of course, that is an interesting aspect, and it can get difficult when projects of millions of dollars are at stake. I do understand that, for any government, those projects are not easily implemented. But I think that my colleague for Trois-Rivières expressed himself very well, particularly on the financial aspect.

However, to go back to the financial matter and to the development of the north, in Newfoundland as well as in Quebec, there is room for fantastic developments, Mr. Speaker, projects of $2 billion for the construction of railroads, towns, port facilities, etc. This means that the federal government has also drawn large revenues from the investments made in that area of my constituency and this would justify consideration of the plan. Indeed, I read in a recently published magazine The Region with a Future, that the mining companies operating in northern Quebec and in Newfoundland pay each year some $25 million to the treasury. I think therefore that this would justify some federal investments in spite of other plans, as my hon. colleague for Trois-Rivières so well stated. However, I am aware of the fact that this is impossible because of various problems throughout the country. Certain projects are urgent, but a population of about 50,000 inhabitants cannot be indefinitely neglected.

Request for Second Trans-Canada Route

I think that all the members on both sides of the house do not realize how the population has increased in that part of Labrador. Now, speaking of Labrador, I wish to mention that Labrador is not located only in Newfoundland but also in Quebec, I must admit that most of it is in Newfoundland, but still a part of it is in Quebec. I wish to emphasize that when one speaks of Labrador one must not forget that there is also a part of it in Quebec. It is true that most of Labrador belongs to Newfoundland, but nevertheless a part of it belongs to Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that the federal government has agencies and instruments which could be used for such projects. But beforehand, there must be a federal-provincial agreement.

These agencies, these government institutions could help by participating in such a project. Legislation concerning participation in the construction of access roads to our natural resources could be brought up to date. There is the ARDA program, which is important and could help in such an undertaking.

We should all work together to help these isolated people and give them the means of communication to which they have a right. If we used to this end the revenues I mentioned earlier—for this undertaking would certainly justify such an investment—I think we could get some concrete results.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, for the convenience of hon. members would the government house leader restate the sequence the government proposes to follow in placing business before the house tomorrow and Friday?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The first order of business will be a motion for interim supply. When that has been dealt with the house will return to the motion to set up a committee to report on procedures to deal with statutory instruments. Following that, the government proposes to call the resolutions preceding the three farm finance bills.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock this house stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2.30 in the afternoon.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

THE LATE HON. DANIEL JOHNSON

EXPRESSIONS OF REGRET ON PASSING OF QUEBEC PREMIER

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the background of our great country is composed of telluric elements of great resistance. Each one of these elements contributes to the strength and personality of our country. From day to day those elements become more obvious, for it will not always be so. From time to time one is tempted to doubt the vigour of the Canadian identity, but in times of distress or of deep reflection, the powerful ties which unite us as Canadians stand out boldly.

Mr. Speaker, one of those ties is the stature of the men who are dedicated to public life in our country. Another tie is the fact that those in power in Canada have always, each in his own way, dedicated themselves to the welfare and the progress of Canada.

It may be said that Canadians have been well served by the men in their public life and that, when one of them passes away, regardless of what part of the country he comes from, it means a loss for the whole country. When a man of Daniel Johnson's stature leaves us, it is not merely the Canadians of that part of the country who are dealt a blow, but Canada as a whole.

[English]

Daniel Johnson exemplified those traits which any political leader, or any man, could well choose as standards of measurement: dedication to his country and his province; pride in the achievements and beauty of his culture and its language; courage in the face of adversities both personal and political; calmness and moderation on occasions when a lesser man would have exhibited neither; loyalty to his party and its convictions; devotion to his family.

All Canadians know that our country is going through a period of capital importance for our future and that the basic values themselves are those which are sometimes questioned when the future is discussed.

There is no doubt that Mr. Daniel Johnson was one of the distinguished participants and interlocutors in that important dialogue which is now going on between Canadians and through which he was trying to find the common values on which the country could agree and unite. We will not forget that his objective was the recognition and the protection of the rights of French Canadians, since that protection is a matter of conscience for all Canadians and it is also, I think, the objective of all good men in Canada.

The people Mr. Johnson represented in the legislature, those who had elected him, those he had served for many years in his riding, know that they could not have a more conscientious, more energetic and, may I say, gracious spokesman.

On behalf of the government of Canada I express my most heartfelt sympathy to his family, to Quebeckers and to the government of Quebec.

Death could not come, Mr. Speaker, at a more untimely moment for this great Canadian.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I was much grieved to hear of the death of Hon. Daniel Johnson.

His friends knew how heavy was his task but we hoped he had completely recovered and was able to resume his duties.

His death is a cruel loss for his family and deprives the country of an experienced and very talented politician. The country loses a man who, even in cases of disagreement at the official level, liked to retain cordial personal relations with the people he met.

He was a gentleman and those who knew him will regret his courtesy, his warmth and his charm.

• (2:40 p.m.)

[English]

Daniel Johnson lived his life in the public service, Mr. Speaker. He was first elected to the legislature of Quebec in a by-election late in 1946. He was re-elected six times and served his legislature as deputy speaker and his province as a member of cabinet. Nearly seven years ago he was elected to lead his party. He led it well, and in June, 1966, became the premier of his province, one of the most important and difficult positions in this country. It is a good record, sir.

He was premier of Quebec at a time when the evolution of events in that province caused concern in other parts of Canada. It was therefore inevitable that he should be to a certain extent a controversial figure in his country.

I think that, at the present time, a premier of Quebec who loves his people and his country and wants to be loyal to them cannot help but be a controversial figure.

His course was a difficult one, but he followed it with patience and good humour.

He travelled across the country with his family. He wanted to get to know the country as well as he knew the province of Quebec where he was born.

Daniel Johnson wanted to build both Canada and Quebec, and he devoted his life to building a country where all Canadians could fulfil their aspirations.

On behalf of my party as an officer of the House of Commons and personally, because I had the opportunity to work with Premier Daniel Johnson and because I respected and considered him highly, I wish to offer my sincere sympathy to his family, his friends and colleagues as well as to the fellow-citizens of the deceased premier.

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I join with the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition in expressing our deep sense of shock at the death of Premier Daniel Johnson, and our sincere condolences to the government and people of Quebec and to the family of our late, distinguished Canadian. I speak on behalf of our party and of my colleagues who are here with me. I might add that a short while ago, over the telephone, our parliamentary leader, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), asked me to express his deep regret that illness prevented him from being here today to express his sorrow on this occasion.

We were all shocked this morning to hear the news that came to us. Only yesterday we watched and heard Daniel Johnson on television. He seemed to be in good health; certainly he was in good form as he discussed issues that are of concern to us in this country.

When we think of him we are conscious of the fact that he was an articulate exponent of his point of view, a point of view shared by many of our French speaking fellow Canadians. It must also be said that although he expressed strongly and vigorously his point of view, a great deal of credit goes to him for the fact that we have developed a state of dialogue in this country with respect to relations between French speaking and English speaking Canadians, and with respect to relations between Ottawa and Quebec.

Mr. Johnson, as I say, was a vigorous exponent of his views but he was also a loyal Canadian who believed that the destiny of this country is for us to remain together and build a strong and united Canada. Not only will the people of Quebec miss him, but Canada as a whole can ill afford to lose such a leader at this time.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleagues of the New Democratic Party, I wish to express my most sincere sympathy to Mrs. Johnson and to the members of her family.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Ralliement Créditiste I wish to join with the other members of the house to say how we were deeply grieved this morning at the news of the sudden death of Hon. Daniel Johnson, premier of the province of Quebec.

Such a death will be deeply mourned by all the Quebec people and the whole French Canadian nation, and especially by the people of Bagot county, a great part of which is included in Shefford constituency which I have the honour to represent here and which has just lost its member of parliament.

As premier of his province since 1966, and member for Bagot since 1946, he might still, on account of his experience and talent, have served the province of Quebec and all the French Canadian people for many years to come.

In its unfathomable ways Providence has decided that he would no longer be with us after giving yesterday the most eloquent and the most important press conference of his whole political career, as if it were to be the crowning achievement of his work.

How forcefully are we reminded of the fragility of life. Although it is full of great possibilities, it is at the same time limited and conditioned by its span and its events.

Mr. Johnson had the courage of his convictions. He had his own disposition, of course. I knew him very well because on many occasions, as members of a good part of the same riding, we presided at the opening of the baseball or hockey season and at the inauguration of sports centres or schools. That is how I came to know the premier of Quebec as a public man and also as a good father.

On television yesterday he said something which impressed me this morning. He said that his illness had made him more human. But today his ailment takes him away from humans and puts an end to his life.

This afternoon he was going to inaugurate the Manicouagan dam which is the most important hydro-electric project in Quebec.

Hon. Maurice Duplessis died in Schefferville, an important mining centre in Quebec. His successor, Hon. Daniel Johnson, died on duty in Manicouagan, an hydro-electric centre in the same Quebec area, in circumstances similar to those which preceded the death of Mr. Duplessis, who liked to look upon Hon. Daniel Johnson as his own son.

History will rate Daniel Johnson as a politician and a statesman who has definitely marked out French Canadian political life. His love of work, his loyalty to his province, his clearsightedness will be missed greatly in Quebec. The strenuous political life which he had set for himself and the responsibilities which he had to assume have unfortunately taken away too soon this dearly beloved father from his family.

On behalf of the Ralliement Créditiste we express our deepest sympathy to Mrs. Johnson, her children and all his relatives, and especially his constituents in the riding of Bagot.

Some of his political enemies might silently rejoice. As far as we are concerned, we share the grief of the whole French Canadian people.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. Leader of the Opposition, that this house do now adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the motion of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), seconded by the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), this house stands adjourned until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 2.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, September 27, 1968

The house met at 11 a.m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the honour to inform this House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate has passed Bill S-2, an act amending the Publication of Statutes Act, for which the concurrence of this house is desired.

GRAIN

WHEAT—PRODUCTION, MOVEMENT, PRICES AND OBJECTIVES—CANBERRA MEETING

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement on wheat. World wheat production in 1968 will likely exceed 10 billion bushels, the third consecutive year in which the 10 billion bushel mark will have been surpassed. This is well above the average of the early 1960's. Competition for export markets will continue to be very keen. During the current crop year, for the period August 1 to September 18, Canadian exports of wheat and flour were 46.7 million bushels as compared with 43.6 million bushels in the same period last year.

Adverse weather conditions in western Canada have delayed the harvest and two weeks of clear warm weather are still required to enable farmers to complete their harvesting operations. Approximately 50 per cent of the crop remains to be harvested at the present time; the grades will be lower this year due mainly to frost and sprouting. The magnitude of the problem associated with handling tough and damp grain will depend a great deal on weather conditions during the next few weeks.

Top priority is being given to the movement of grain from the lakehead terminals to eastern positions for export and domestic use. This movement has been very impressive since the strike ended. During the first ten days of work over half of the 11,863 box cars waiting on track were loaded into the lakehead terminals. This has freed cars for movement from country points, and the movement from country elevators is now proceeding in a more normal fashion.

If there are large quantities of grain with high moisture, the Canadian Wheat Board, the Board of Grain Commissioners and the private grain companies will make every effort to handle such grain from the farmers before it goes out of condition. However, first priority must be given, before the close of navigation, to the movement of clean, dry grain to the lakehead for onward shipment to eastern positions.

As the house is aware, the purpose of the recent Canberra meeting was to review the world wheat situation and the operation of the new international grains arrangement since its entry into force on July 1. The result was positive. Exporter representatives expressed their determination to operate the new arrangement effectively and achieve its objectives, including the observance of the arrangement with respect to minimum prices. Satisfaction was expressed with the operation of the agreement to date and understandings were reached on action to be taken to strengthen the arrangement. It was agreed to fix minimum prices for two Australian hard wheats, and price guide lines were set for certain other wheats not listed in the schedule. New procedures were accepted for the collection of reliable ocean freight information for the calculation of minimum price equivalents and for keeping international wheat prices and export performance under continuing review.

The decisions and recommendations of the Canberra meeting will now be submitted to the prices review committee of the International Wheat Council, which includes representatives of importing countries. This committee will meet in early October, in London. The successful outcome of the Canberra meeting will contribute to price stability for wheat and facilitate the effective implementation of the grains arrangement.

The objective of the government of Canada and the Canadian Wheat Board is to secure 25 per cent of more of world wheat trade. This will mean exports of 1.3 billion bushels in the next three years.

Sales of Canadian wheat are being aggressively promoted on a direct seller to buyer basis. In conjunction with Expo, the Canadian Wheat Board invited all the major wheat buyers from around the world to visit Canada for marketing discussions and tours of our grain facilities. These visits aroused a great deal of interest and are now being followed up by Canadian Wheat Board missions into overseas markets wherever a sales potential exists.

I have written personally to senior trade commissioners of each of my department's offices abroad to ensure that no sales opportunity is overlooked. They are to submit market development suggestions based on their on-the-spot experience.

Private grain companies in their position as agents for the Canadian Wheat Board have a vast network of overseas contacts and are vigorously pursuing all export opportunities.

Individual sales on credit terms are being negotiated and I expect that the extension of credit arrangements by the government will result in the conclusion of significant sales in the near future. The government continues to purchase substantial quantities of wheat and flour for Canada's food aid program.

In order to mobilize more effectively the energies and experience of associations and organizations directly concerned with wheat exports, the government will establish, as a matter of priority, a national grains council. The Minister of Agriculture and I will be meeting with the interested groups in Winnipeg on October 16 to discuss the scope of the council's membership, its organization, administration, and terms of reference.

As I stated earlier, our objective is to export 1.3 billion bushels of wheat during the next three years. We are determined to do that or better.

In conclusion, the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) and I are collaborating closely on all these matters. He will shortly be introducing legislation to double the level of cash advances for grain producers. Together with our colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, and with the help of the national grains council, we shall be addressing ourselves urgently and intently to both the short and long term problems and opportunities for the Canadian grain industry. The grain economy of Canada is a matter of national interest. Success in our production and sales policies and performance is a major factor in Canadian prosperity from east to west.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I am pleased the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has seen fit to make a statement. Many members of the party to which I belong, particularly from western Canada, have been pressing for information from the minister ever since this session began.

At the outset I might say we are happy that at long last the government recognizes the situation to be a serious one. I agree that western Canada is encountering serious difficulties from the point of view of climate. But farmers have faced bad weather before. The most serious problem which faces western Canada arises from the fact that when the international wheat agreement was negotiated by the former government—and many of the ministers responsible are members of the present administration—the negotiating team did not reach the conference at Geneva on time. In our opinion, and in the opinion of many experts in the agriculture field, the farmers of Canada were shortchanged in this regard. Before the agreement was approved by the various parliamentary institutions and governments of the exporting and marketing nations, the United States, a business country with a large surplus, dumped her grain on many of Canada's traditional markets.

This situation is the most serious which western farmers have faced since 1956 when approximately 700 million bushels of wheat were piled up on the farms and in the elevators. Crops are above average in most parts and quotas are very low—practically negligible. Financing is hard to come by at this time of the year and as a result farmers are having difficulty in meeting their obligations. Young farmers especially, who just entered the trade within the last few years, are unable to meet their mortgage payments, and if it were not for provincial legislation in Alberta and Saskatchewan foreclosure would be the letter of the day. Therefore I must say that on the shoulders of the government rests the responsibility for the fall-off in markets.

Members of the government can bring in new legislation which is commendable in reference to increasing the cash advances, and which will temporarily relieve the situation. On that matter I congratulate them, but the fact remains that the grain trade will not become healthy unless farmers are able to sell their commodities; and the loss of markets is the responsibility of the government.

Since the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) has said that the spokesman for western agriculture is now the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatchewan (Mr. Lang), together with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson)—and this is no personal criticism of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce—I would hope that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will see to it that the Wheat Board will fall mainly under the jurisdiction of a man from western Canada. I say this because when the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatchewan and the Minister of Agriculture go out to western Canada to discuss agricultural problems, the main problem involved is with regard to the Wheat Board and grain markets. How then can they intelligently answer western farmers, when the jurisdiction for the Wheat Board is in the hands of another minister who is not out in the field at that time?

Without personal criticism of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who did an excellent job last year with reference to exports of petroleum, the first recommendation I would like to see emerge is that jurisdiction over the Wheat Board should be placed in the hands of the Minister of Agriculture, as was the case during the term of office of another government, or in the hands of the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatchewan, who has said he would inherit that jurisdiction.

As the Winnipeg Free Press has pointed out, the main thing is to export grain. Many critics are talking about a two-price system, but that would not mean very much to the western farmer because domestically we consume approximately only 50 million bushels in Canada, including some domestic consumption for feed stock. Therefore if we introduced a two-price system, as suggested by some experts, providing another nickel a bushel for exports, it would not help the western farmer very much. It is the responsibility of the government to find markets, and I repeat that the responsibility for the loss of those markets lies directly on the shoulders of some of the ministers who sit in the government.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the minister has now made a statement in the house. Certainly it was time that a statement like this was made to clear up some of the serious doubt that farmers in western Canada have regarding the strength of our position in international grain markets.

I am glad the minister feels that as a result of the Canberra meeting there is finally going to be some real stability in the new international grains agreement. But if I heard the minister correctly he said that agreement has worked satisfactorily up to now, and with this I would have to disagree. It has not, and the farmer in western Canada paid the shot last year by sacrificing sales and holding the line while the ground was cut from under us by other exporting countries. I sincerely hope that the minister's confidence in the I.G.A. and in other exporting nations is now justified.

I also hope that at an early date the minister will give us some of the facts as to what will be done by the proposed national grains council, and what its purposes will be. Until now we have had a grain organization, in terms of the Canadian Wheat Board, the Board of Grain Commissioners, and the integration of farm organizations into the advisory committee of the wheat board, that farmers have considered satisfactory. I think this house should be clearly told what the purposes of the proposed national grains council are, who is going to be on it, and what it is going to do.

A statement which appears in the Winnipeg Free Press, and which was circulated to us, says that there is a need to sell more for less. As a farmer I never became rich selling more for less. There apparently are people, not in this house I am sure but in some places, who believe we should do this. No mention was made of the inland grain terminals being used for drying purposes. I hope this will be part of the program for taking care of our out-of-condition grain. Because of the confidence I have in the officials of the Canadian Wheat Board and the Board of Grain Commissioners I fully expect that this will be part of the program.

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, we are happy to note that one of the great Canadian resources is the abundance of western wheat. We ask and we hope that the government, fully aware of its responsibilities, will look upon this abundance as a manifestation of God's generosity.

This generosity should be used to feed humanity. There is no lack of technical means to transport this wheat to the countries which need it and it is the duty of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), in co-operation with the Minister of Finance, (Mr. Benson) to find ways to distribute part of this Canadian wealth to those countries.

There is always a railway transportation problem for the eastern farmers, as the minister has stressed.

In 1962, in this house, I asked that grain elevators be built and transportation made by water. Everyone welcomed the suggestion that the waterways should be used to help the eastern farmers but, although the Liberals have succeeded the Conservatives, the problem has not been solved yet and today the question is how to move western grain to the eastern farmers. The farmers would pay much less by water and greater consumption would result, if the farmers did not have to leave their farms.

I cannot understand that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Côté) has not found a way to have grain elevators built in eastern Canada so that grain, so plentiful in western Canada, can reach eastern Canada, and farming can become an economic operation.

I hope, therefore, that this affluence will be distributed throughout the world, after the problem has been solved in Canada, so that this plenty which God allows will not be a punishment but a blessing for all the Christians of the world.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

STATEMENT RESPECTING OPERATIONAL CHANGES

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I have a statement regarding certain changes in the operations of the Post Office. The Post Office Department in its continuing study of the requirements of the various services has reached the conclusion that a number of changes should now be made. The increased costs of labour, supplies and transportation has added substantially to the cost of operating the Post Office Department. We consider that the department must operate within the limits of the revenue produced. The contemplated changes will produce a substantial reduction in the cost of operating the department.

Our studies have indicated that several services are no longer required to the same extent as in the past. Business firms generally are operating on shorter hours and on a five day week. There is not, therefore, the same need to provide postal service on week ends when most businesses are closed. I should like to remark here that approximately 80 per cent of all first class mail originates in business and in government. It is, therefore, intended to close the post offices on Saturdays. Deliveries of mail will not be made on Saturdays. This will include letter carrier service, parcel post and rural route deliveries. Special delivery service will continue to be provided on a seven day week basis. Mail will continue to be processed and forwarded to destinations over the week end in order to be available for delivery on Monday. Mailings are generally very light on Saturdays and Sundays and this essential work can be carried on by a minimum staff.

In order to provide the means to purchase stamps on Saturdays, sub post offices which are operated in connection with retail outlets which are open on Saturdays, will remain open. A program to instal additional stamp vending machines will also be undertaken.

These changes, which are scheduled for implementation on February 1, 1969 will provide a much more desirable work week for the majority of postal employees. These changes represent significant improvements in working conditions and we are convinced they will be readily acceptable by the majority of Canadians.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I may say at the outset that this is a somewhat casual way of announcing the diminution in the service of one of the great public utilities of this country. I note the minister is announcing on a week end that in effect the postal services will be operated on a five day week. Let me reflect further on the merits of the case.

I should like to say in passing that it is regrettable that the traditional courtesy extended in the house of allowing opposition members to have a gander at statements of ministers is not being followed. I have some difficulty in dealing with what the minister has just said. I noted his reference to the closing of some sub post offices and the retention of service in some others. It would strike me that, according to the dissertation that he has just made, he might be in danger of having the jurisdiction in effect, in relation to the service to be rendered, geared to another authority rather than the government of Canada. I think these matters must be looked at with great care.

It is also my belief that the whole subject might have been introduced in a less casual way, so that the matter at this initial stage could have been reflected upon by the people of the country. It could then have been given more serious consideration.

I can promise that in the future we shall have more to say about this matter. At this time we have no reason to believe that there is not a good deal of merit in the suggestion. We do want to see improved facilities for the workers in our post offices, but we do not want any detriment to the service to our public.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I join with the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) in expressing some amazement at the casual way in which a long standing practice in this country can be changed simply by a government announcement. It does seem to me that, with an item in the name of the Postmaster General on the order paper, which means that in due course we will be discussing matters affecting this department, there might have been a discussion in the House of Commons about this proposal before it was brought into effect.

The Postmaster General has made some pretty categorical statements about the extent to which businesses are on a five day week. It strikes me that he has been a bit rigid in what he has said, and that parliament ought to have had the opportunity to consider the position of those who may require service over the week end. I would point out that the suggestion that special delivery service will still be available on Saturday and Sunday is a way of saying that if people must have service on week ends, which they have been used to over the years, they will have to pay higher rates.

As the hon. member for Hillsborough suggested, there is undoubtedly merit in the idea of streamlining and making changes. We should not be people who say that because something has always been done, that is the way it should always be done. However, it does strike me as a bit alarming that we are beginning to get this succession of announcements on a unilateral basis from the government benches as to changes that are going to be made.

We had one from the Prime Minister a couple of days ago that we did not like. Now we have one from the Postmaster General. Who next without prior discussion, is going to stand up and tell parliament what is going to be done? As I have already said, there is an item on the order paper which we will reach in due course. I hope that when we reach it, we will be able to discuss all aspects of the work of the Post Office Department.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, first I wish to tell the minister that we are glad of his endeavours to rejuvenate the Post Office Department and make it more efficient. However, I also want to tell him that we are disappointed that opposition parties have not been consulted once again—it is always the same thing. Opposition parties are not here just for the sake of appearance and should be consulted before measures like the one which is now proposed are adopted.

Evidently, the department must keep its operating costs within its income to be economical and to balance its budget. A close look at the revised estimates tabled this week reveals that operating costs—at least, as given—are much higher than had been expected. What has happened? No one knows and we cannot find out.

Le Devoir, on May 23, 1965, reported as follows, and I quote:

> In his report dated September 27, 1965, Justice Anderson made the following comments:
> "While in the process of determining whether the salary rates of postal employees are fair and reasonable, I reached a point where I wondered whether, with a view to ensuring a better postal service in Canada and to meeting the needs of the people who deal therewith, it might not be advisable to hand over the administration of that service to a crown corporation."

I do not mean to say that we are necessarily in favour of setting up a crown corporation, but I feel the house should know whether or not the hon. minister intends to transform the Post Office Department into a crown corporation, or whether he intends to continue making changes of minor importance as he is now doing?

Mr. Speaker, should those be the intentions of the minister, I feel it would certainly be in order for him to advise the house before making them rather than after.

NAVIGABLE WATERS PROTECTION ACT

WATER POLLUTION—AMENDMENT RESPECTING FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR REMOVAL OF POLLUTANTS

Mr. Richard J. J. Durante (Comox-Alberni) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-105, to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act (prevention of water pollution).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Durante: Mr. Speaker, it is the purpose of this bill to place financial responsibility on the owners for the immediate removal of a wreck or its cargo causing water pollution or constituting a danger to water fowl or marine life.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBILITY OF BALANCING BUDGET

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the statement in the prospectus filed by the government with the United States securities and exchange commission on May 25 this year, stating the intention to "reduce expenditures further to a level of $10,225,000,000 which would bring the government budgetary position for the fiscal year of 1969 very close to a balance," is it the intention of the government to honour that commitment to have the budget very close to balance?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this seems like the beginning of the debate on the budget.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Answer.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the estimates which were tabled the other day obviously make it clear that expenses which are not controllable by the government have risen beyond any expectation. It is obvious that we cannot break a statute or an agreement which has been reached with the provinces, and that these expenses have exceeded everyone's expectations. We have tried to compensate for that by cutting very seriously into all the controllable expenditures. We have done so in spite of the repeated demands by the opposition that we spend more in every area, and their objections to any cuts that we announce any day.

I think the federal-provincial conference of finance ministers which is coming up in the next couple of months will attempt to reach agreement with the provinces that cuts be made in the areas non-controllable by us. If we succeed, we will be able to tell the United States that we will come as close to meeting our intention as we can. But until we have either the authority of this house to reduce our statutory obligations, or authority from the provinces to reduce our matched grants, we cannot make this commitment.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Prime Minister believe that either of the alternatives that he suggests, reducing the obligations shared with the provinces or reducing the statutory obligations of the government, have any prospect of enabling the government to achieve close to a balanced budget this year? Are these suggestions put forward seriously in reply to my question?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I repeat that this is really a budget debate. If I were to say we would triple taxes, I am sure we could balance our budget; but this is not a statement I am prepared to make now.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it the intention of the government to try to balance the budget without raising taxes?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

TRANSPORT

BOUNDARY BAY, B.C.—REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT SURVEY OF RAIL LINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. Will he consider authorizing an independent engineering survey of the economics involved in re-routing the contentious Boundary bay railroad in British Columbia?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I invite the hon. member to place his question on the order paper.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION TO INCREASE RETIREMENT PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister and ask him if he intends to introduce during the present session legislation providing for an immediate increase in the pensions of superannuated civil servants?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is an example of the attitude of the opposition which complains each time we make reductions and which, on the other hand, would blame us if we wanted to increase taxes.

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that already this session the Minister of Finance has said this matter is under consideration, will the Prime Minister answer the question that was just put to him by my hon. friend?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

EXTERNAL AID

BIAFRA—CRITICISM OF CANADIAN POLICY—SHIPPING METHODS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, has the government received a communication from the 80 Roman Catholic bishops who have been meeting in Winnipeg this week, strongly criticizing the government for hiding behind the curtain of non-intervention in Biafra? If so, would the Prime Minister table the communication and the government's reply to it?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any such communication. While I am on my feet I would say clearly to the churches, to the Canadian people and to the members of the opposition that there is a distinction between the government aiding Biafra over the head of a friendly state like Nigeria, and the churches themselves. The Red Cross did not get as much money from the Canadian people or from the churches as was hoped. If the Canadian people want to do more about Biafra, they are certainly welcome to do it; but both they and the opposition should realize there is a great distinction between the Canadian state helping a rebellious cause in a friendly nation and the Canadian people doing it themselves.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hees: I have a supplementary question. I am sure the churches will be interested in the lecture which the Prime Minister has read to them; and as he has said that he is not aware of any communication—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member kindly ask his question.

Mr. Hees: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister check with his office when he returns to it because I think he will find there a little something waiting for him.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I wish to direct my supplementary question either to the right hon. Prime Minister or to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In the light of the fact that food for Biafra, in contrast with food for federally held territory, can arrive only by way of the Red Cross on the Fernando Po and the church groups on Sao Tome, will the government undertake to send some of the latest shipments of food to these islands so that they have some hope of reaching the Biafran people.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, permit me to answer the question. I spent some hours with General Wrinch of the Canadian Red Cross discussing this question, and I think it can be done.

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Would the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell us if he intends to assist Biafra before or after the occupation by federal troops?

[English]

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my second supplementary question relates to the actual shipping of food. In view of the fact that the Red Cross and other relief organizations have said that Hercules aircraft are by far the best for this type of shipping of food into Biafra, has the government considered lending Hercules aircraft for this purpose to the Red Cross?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, there has been some discussion of this matter with the Red Cross. It is the considerations raised by the Prime Minister that have caused us to pause. Of course we would have no difficulty if the Red Cross and the other organizations which are supporting the Red Cross wish to charter a plane and fly it in any cause that they wish, but it is quite another matter for the government to get involved directly because I am afraid that that would be considered a very unfriendly act.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): The Swedish government is doing it.

Mr. Stanfield: Do I understand the Secretary of State for External Affairs to be suggesting that Canada would be reluctant to provide a plane for the Canadian Red Cross to bring relief to the people who are dying because it might be regarded as an unfriendly act?

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is what he said.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Hees: Here he goes again.

Mr. Trudeau: Does the hon. member not wish me to speak?

Mr. Hees: Go ahead. We are all very enthusiastic and very pleased to hear you.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, may I repeat the government's position that we have helped the Canadian Red Cross; that much earlier we sent an aircraft, and offered Hercules aircraft to them. One of them went to Lagos with food and drugs.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): What good is it to Lagos?

Mr. Trudeau: It is good for Lagos. We were acting in the way the Red Cross have suggested and we would still do that for the Red Cross. The point at which the government stops is when it is committing an act of war against a friendly state, which in this case would be Nigeria.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Trudeau: Don't say oh. Listen a little bit.

Mr. MacEwan: Heil Hitler.

An hon. Member: Dictator.

Mr. Trudeau: I invite volunteers from the opposition or from the churches to do as have volunteers in other parts of the world, that is to fly into Biafra to help these people. If the Canadian government were to put an air force plane manned by air force personnel at the unconditional disposal of the Red Cross, and if that plane were to be shot down over Nigeria, I am sure the opposition would ask us to send troops in there to protect our own people, and if they did that they would be showing a sense of irresponsibility because our action had been met by a hostile reaction. This is the dilemma in which we find ourselves. We commend the Red Cross, the churches and the members of the opposition as well as those members of the public for wanting to do something to help.

Mr. Bell: You are changing your mind now.

Mr. Trudeau: We cannot intervene, short of commiting an act of war against Nigeria and intervening in the affairs of that country. May I repeat that 29 out of 33 members of the Organization for African Unity have refused to do so. These African states themselves have said they would not interfere in the affairs of Nigeria. It would be very wrong for Canada to interfere in the affairs of Nigeria and to send our own army and air force there, even under a humanitarian guise, to do something which would be a violation of that nation's frontiers. I hope that even if the opposition does not see that, the Canadian people will. If they want to be generous with their lives and their money, I wish to heck they would.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Later:]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the right hon. Prime Minister, following the speech he has just made.

He said that he did not want to take steps which the O.A.U. itself does not intend to take. Is the right hon. Prime Minister familiar with the reasons preventing the O.A.U. from taking a stand at present in the Nigerian conflict?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, those meetings were public—they were taking place in Algiers—and I think that the reports we have received are available to everybody.

The African states consider this to be a civil war within a state. All these African states themselves are made up of a great many tribes. They know that if one tribe rebels in just one of these countries, whether it be in Congo-Brazzaville, Congo-Kinshasa, Nigeria or Senegal, and if all the other African states were to intervene to help this one rebellious tribe, there would be fighting and bloodshed all over Africa. That is what they see and what the opposition does not seem to understand.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. I should like to ask the Prime Minister, in view of how the situation in Biafra has touched the conscience of the Canadian people—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Saltsman: —is he not prepared to have the government—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

UNITED NATIONS

BIAFRA—RESOLUTION TO DISCUSS HUMANITARIAN ASPECTS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask him, in view of the fact that this matter of Biafra covers two or three departments, whether he can now give us any information that the deep humanitarian feelings of the Secretary of State for External Affairs for the starving people in Biafra have impelled the government to bring about, together with other nations in the United Nations, the introduction of a resolution.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I answered this question at the last opportunity I had for answering questions. We are still hoping it will be possible to have the humanitarian aspects of these tragic events discussed at the United Nations. However, as I have said before, I do not believe it will help the starving people of Biafra to have a debate in the United Nations on the political future of Nigeria, and that is the reason that most countries have been very reluctant to introduce a resolution in such a way that it would lead only to that type of debate.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have a further supplementary question. May I ask the minister why Canada has not given a lead in this regard and launched a resolution, and why it has not found out which nations are against action being taken. While we talk and the United Nations dilly-dallies on this, thousands are dying every day.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, if I had any evidence to suggest to this house that the introduction of a resolution of this kind would help the people of Nigeria and Biafra, I would certainly have no hesitation in introducing it. The information I have obtained from all the countries with which our delegate has discussed the matter is that this must be approached in a way which will ensure that the United Nations deals with the humanitarian aspects and that a debate between the great powers of the world on the future of the government of Nigeria is not entered into.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I have a supplementary question. I wonder whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs could tell the house if he has had any reply to the letter which he wrote to the secretary general of the United Nations, and if he has, will he table it so that the house can see it?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to have a reply by this week. It has not yet been received. I shall certainly table it as soon as it is received.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. Since the Prime Minister and his government concern themselves with intervention in the internal affairs of Nigeria, why the somersault? They arbitrarily interfered in the internal affairs of Rhodesia and now there has been a complete somersault.

Mr. Trudeau: This was a United Nations decision; that is the whole difference. It was a Security Council decision.

DRUGS

AVAILABILITY OF VACCINE TO COMBAT INFLUENZA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the minister of health and welfare. In view of the alarming statement made by a prominent Canadian doctor that the A-2 flu bug will hit North America this fall, that it will be severe, and that at present no virus vaccine is available, can the minister assure the house that all necessary steps are being taken to provide the vaccine so that the public may be protected?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I believe the department is going to deal with this matter but I should like to take the question as notice and reply early next week.

MONTREAL—CLOSING OF ATWATER MARKET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ian Watson (Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister of consumer affairs. In the light of the projected closing of the Atwater farmers' market in Montreal, would the minister undertake to consult the Minister of Agriculture to determine the feasibility of joint consumer affairs-Department of Agriculture action to encourage farmers' markets in suburban and urban areas of Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has made a representation which I assume has been noted.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PAYMENT FOR MEDICAL TREATMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that medical doctors have been receiving from the federal government only approximately 50 per cent of their scheduled fees for providing medical services to the Indian people, can the minister assure the house that he will clarify this aspect of the government's policy when he makes his statement early next week?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I should like to ask the minister of health and welfare whether drugs are being dispensed on Indian reservations by unqualified persons, and whether this has been brought about by the government's economy drive. If so, how does it square with the just society?

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, about 10 days ago I asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs whether he would consider the establishment of a standing committee for his department. I wonder whether he is in a position to say whether or not a decision has been made, and, if so, what it is?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer is that I am still considering it.

REQUEST FOR MEMBERSHIP OF COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): My question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Now that the minister has announced by way of a press release that the federal-provincial conference on consumer affairs is to be held in Ottawa, beginning on October 28, will he tell the house whether the government has made up its mind as to the membership of the consumer council.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Speaker.]

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

POSSIBILITY OF ESTABLISHING CROWN CORPORATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Postmaster General.

Has he appointed a task force to study the possible conversion of the Post Office Department into a crown corporation? If so, will a report be tabled before the passage of the next post office legislation as announced in the Speech from the Throne?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): The answer, Mr. Speaker, is no. Such a report will not be filed before a year. Besides, it has no relation whatsoever with the bill, except that both will contribute to making the Post Office Department more efficient and more modern than ever.

[English]

BROADCASTING

MONOPOLY CONTROL OF MEDIA

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. It is in connection with order in council 1968-1809 and the press release issued yesterday regarding radio and television broadcasting facilities in Canada.

In the course of that statement, Mr. Speaker, the minister said that this is the first step to implementing the broadcasting ownership program. I ask the minister whether it is a fact that the next steps that the government has in mind and is giving consideration to are those dealing with monopoly control of broadcasting and newspapers in certain regions of Canada, the investigation and inquiry into interlocking control of media facilities, and the consequences arising therefrom?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in fact it is one of the questions under study, together with the regulations which will govern community antennas.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister give the house, in a short moment or so, some idea what the government has in mind in this regard, over and above the assurance that Canadian artistic standards shall be maintained by controlling the percentage of foreign ownership of these media?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that there is any connection between those two questions.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that the type of information now sought by the right hon. member should be given by way of a statement on motions.

IMMIGRATION

FACILITIES TO PROVIDE ASSISTANCE IN EDUCATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of his predecessor's refusal to provide teaching facilities for both English and French to newly arrived immigrants, and his own assurance that he will take a second look at the problem, can the minister inform the house whether or not the government intends either to finance or to assist in developing services that would provide this teaching to immigrants, and also provide immigrants with a better understanding of their responsibilities in the matter of citizenship?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that that information could also be given by the minister in a general statement on motions.

Mr. Thompson (Red Deer): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. With reference to your statement, the fact is that immigrants are arriving every day. The other day the minister said he had the answer to my question and he was prepared to give us that answer. Could we now have the answer to my original question?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, recently the Leader of the Opposition asked a similar question. He asked whether the policy laid down by my predecessor was to be changed, and I undertook to consider that policy. I have done so since the Leader of the Opposition asked his question. The policy is to remain unchanged.

AIR CANADA

WINNIPEG, MAN.—CONSULTATION WITH UNIONS AS TO SALE OF BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of reports that Air Canada is considering the sale of the maintenance base at Winnipeg to a private concern, will the government make an early statement on this proposal, and can the house be told whether the Air Canada unions are being consulted about the matter?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion of my hon. friend is merely speculation that is based on the work of the committee set up to study possible future employment at the base for the men who work there. A number of solutions have been and are being studied. It would still be premature at this time to say what will be the final result, but I can assure my hon. friend that I think we are getting closer to a solution. I hope to have a statement to make in the not too distant future.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister take note of the second part of my question, which was: Are the unions affected being consulted?

Mr. Hellyer: They certainly will be consulted, Mr. Speaker, before any decision is taken and implemented. I think they are pretty well advised as to what discussions have taken place, but they will become directly involved if a particular solution involves continuing arrangements with the employees that they would have to be party to.

THE BUDGET

INQUIRY AS TO PROBABLE DATE OF PRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is addressed to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Now that revised estimates have been tabled could he, since the Minister of Finance is unavoidably absent, give the house a closer approximation of the date when the budget is to be presented?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. That is in the hands of the Minister of Finance.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PENITENTIARIES

REQUEST FOR RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold Winch (Vancouver East): My question is addressed to the Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker. Since a special joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons on penitentiary matters has for two years been unable to complete its studies, will the minister advise the house if he will give favourable consideration to the early re-establishment of this committee?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I should be glad to take that suggestion under consideration.

HOUSING

TASK FORCE—ALLEGED IRRESPONSIBLE OBSERVATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. It is based on a Toronto Star report on the Charlottetown meetings of the task force on housing, the authenticity of which I have checked. My question has particular reference to statements by two members of the task force in which there is the implication that Prince Edward Island is a hopeless economic case. I particularly refer to the statement by Mr. Campeau of Ottawa to this effect: Why should we, in the rest of Canada, pay so much to keep people in Prince Edward Island?

Will the minister advise the house if such irresponsible and insulting remarks by people sent about the country at public expense are considered helpful to the solution of our housing crisis, and whether by reading to them the riot act and the terms of reference under which the task force was set up we might be able to prevent other gratuitous and offensive lectures, thus bringing about concentration on our grave housing problems.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: Give it to them, Heath.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has made a suggestion. I assume it will be considered by the minister.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

CONSULTATION WITH QUEBEC IN PREPARATION OF MEASURE

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Could he tell us whether the federal government has had consultations with the Quebec government regarding the drafting of a bill on the status of French and English as official languages in Canada?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The only part of the bill which could be directly or indirectly of interest to the province, would be the part dealing with the definition of bilingual areas, and this is the reason why we have decided that after the bill has been read for the first time, we shall send a copy thereof to all the provinces. There were no formal consultations, but of course information was exchanged at the level of officials.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NORAD—OPPORTUNITY TO DISCUSS RENEWAL OF AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Speaker. Considering the reply he made on September 17 to the effect that the government has no objection if the house wishes the Prime Minister or the minister to make a statement with regard to the renewal of the NORAD agreement, will the minister undertake to make such a statement within the next few days?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CZECHOSLOVAKIA—ORAL COMMUNICATIONS WITH U.S.S.R.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): May I take this opportunity to answer two questions which were put to me recently. The first question was by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Schreyer) who asked whether I would table or otherwise make public the contents of notes received by Canada, as a member state of NATO, from the U.S.S.R. subsequent to the invasion of Czechoslovakia. I said on September 24 that I was not sure whether a note had been sent or whether there had been oral communications. I have now confirmed, as I indicated then, that the two communications made to the Government of Canada by the Soviet ambassador were made orally and not in writing.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA—ASSISTANCE TO CANADIAN NATIONALS FOLLOWING RUSSIAN MILITARY ACTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The hon. member for Kootenay West asked me some days ago if we had received any requests for assistance by Canadian nationals who were visiting Czechoslovakia at the time of the recent invasion and, if so, had all these requests for assistance been processed. Our records disclose no instances of unfulfilled requests for assistance by Canadians who were visiting Czechoslovakia at the time of the crisis.

BIAFRA—ASSISTANCE TO STUDENTS IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): I have a question to direct to the Secretary of State for External Affairs regarding Biafra. Since there are in Canada Biafran students who risk losing their scholarships, and other Biafrans under the auspices of the Nigerian government who are afraid to return to Biafra, will the minister state whether his department is considering assisting those students to remain here and continue their studies. Also, will such persons be given special consideration in obtaining immigration visas to Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have been aware of these cases now for a number of days and the entire matter is under consideration. It is very complicated. Some of these students are sponsored by the Nigerian government and they have been notified that their scholarships are withdrawn. Others are financed directly from Biafra; they have lost their source of income. Still others find that their passports have expired. They do not know whether they will be able to get back to Nigeria. It is all most complicated and we are looking at the matter sympathetically.

Inquiries of the Ministry

VIET NAM—POSITION RESPECTING BOMBING BY U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Speaker. Does the statement made by the minister in this house on Monday, September 23, on the question of the United States cessation of bombing in Viet Nam mean that the government has changed its position from that taken one year ago today when the then Secretary of State for External Affairs asserted that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question as asked is argumentative and cannot be accepted.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In the light of stories that are circulating, can the minister advise the house whether the intense neutron generator project is to be cancelled in order to pay for the furnishing of the minister's departmental offices?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Order, Joe.

Another hon. Member: A supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question was not allowed and therefore there ought to be no supplementary question.

An hon. Member: Very luxurious, Joe.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, since, because of yesterday's circumstances, the President of the Privy Council did not have his chance of leading us into the promised land, I wonder if we could inaugurate the new rules today. Could I ask the minister what will be the order of business to be placed before this house. What are his intentions or the intentions of the government with regard to business for the coming week.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, with the indulgence of the house may I refer to the business to be conducted between now and Friday, October 4, inclusive. As hon. members know, we shall begin by calling the motion for interim supply. When that has been dealt with we shall continue with the debate on the motion to set up a committee on statutory instruments. When that has been disposed of we shall then call the three resolutions with respect to farm financing, that is to say, with respect to the Farm Credit Act, the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act, and the Farm Improvement Loans Act. It would be desirable, Mr. Speaker, that at such time as the bill announced by Your Honour this morning as coming forward from the other place could be dealt with under the rules, debate be interrupted to deal with the bill to amend the Publication of Statutes Act so that parliament may declare itself on the form in which statutes are to be published before other measures receive royal assent.

Subject to our dealing with the Publication of Statutes Act we would continue, after the farm financing resolutions, to consider the resolution preceding the bill to authorize the Windfall extension of Canadian National Railways, the time for and the various stages of which may possibly be abridged after consultation, in view of its non-controversial nature. We would then proceed to the resolution dealing with the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, and then that dealing with amendments to the Post Office Act. We would then move on to the second reading stage of the farm financing bills, assuming that the Windfall amendment has been dealt with, and to the second reading stage of the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, as well as second reading of the amendments to the Post Office Act. The timing of all this is, of course, subject to the difficulty of predicting the length of debate on each measure, as well as unforeseen events which may take place.

Mr. Baldwin: Having in mind the controversial and difficult nature of the omnibus Criminal Code legislation and the fact that it deals with five specific areas, involving a number of substantive changes in the law in addition to procedural changes, would the minister consider discussing with his colleague, the Minister of Justice, the fixing of an early date for at least the introduction of this measure into the house so that the government might have the benefit of the advice of members of the opposition as to the best way of dealing with this bill on second reading? The government seems to be irresolute, now, and might benefit from advice from this side of the house.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I will be pleased to discuss this aspect with my colleague, and I appreciate the suggestion.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question with regard to a point which might be considered in connection with Monday. In view of the fact that arrangements are being made for a number of members of parliament to attend the funeral of the late premier of Quebec, could there be an understanding that Mr. Speaker might have authority to delay the start of Monday afternoon's sitting until those of us who attend the funeral are able to return? Then, if necessary, we could sit straight through the rest of the day.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It seems appropriate that the house should meet at 2.30, but adjourn until later that day when the hon. members referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will have returned.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreeable?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF FUTURE PLANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. As 15 days have passed since the opening of parliament, is the government now in a position to give a report to the house on the development and future plans of Devco?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I would have to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to consider that question.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I did not hear the question. Would the hon. gentleman repeat it?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Perhaps I had better wait until the Minister of Justice gives the minister his instructions. Since 15 days have passed since the opening of parliament, is the government in a position to give a report on the development and future plans of Devco?

Mr. Greene: Not at the present time, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I am sure the Prime Minister will accept this supplementary question. Inasmuch as the legislation passed to set up this crown corporation requires the government to make a report to parliament within 15 days of the opening of a session, or of parliament, and since this period has now expired, should not the Prime Minister, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, or somebody on that side know at least what Devco is, and ought not the government to be in a position to make the report which the legislation says is required on the fifteenth day?

Mr. Trudeau: I will ask about this. I will even ask the Solicitor General to help us find out something about it.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I realized when I asked my question that a ruling had been made to the effect that members are not permitted to direct questions to ministers of the crown on matters outside the scope of their departments. The government is trying to get away from that ruling. Nevertheless the ruling has been made. Possibly the Minister of Labour could take it upon himself to instruct his colleagues with regard to this development corporation.

Some hon. Members: Manpower.

FISHERIES

STATEMENT BY MINISTER AS TO PRODUCTIVITY REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): On September 20, the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate inquired when the Winspear productivity report was expected and whether it would be tabled in the house. This study of productivity in the frozen fish sector of the fishing industry of Newfoundland, financed jointly by the federal and provincial governments, is proceeding in two phases. A report on the first phase, a preliminary survey of the situation, has already been received by the two governments and distributed to the industry.

The final report is expected by the end of October. As to its tabling in the house, that will be conditional on the obtaining of permission from various firms whose operations will be dealt with in the report.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

CANADIAN FOLK ARTS—TRANSPORTATION COSTS TO MEXICO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I should like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. Is the minister prepared to reconsider his decision denying a federal grant of $7,000 to the Canadian Folk Arts Council to help defray transportation costs to Mexico, in view of the embarrassment and frustration presently being experienced by the council?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): A number of representations have been received on this subject from hon. members on this side of the house. I have undertaken to consult with my colleague the Secretary of State regarding this matter.

Mr. Alexander: Can the minister give the house some indication of the date upon which an announcement may be forthcoming? There is, of course, urgency attached to this matter.

Mr. Drury: I think an answer has already been forthcoming. What the hon. member is asking for is a favourable answer, or a change of decision. I cannot give an undertaking with respect to that, except to reply as rapidly as I can.

Mr. Alexander: Is the minister aware that a denial may mean that Canada would be unrepresented at the world folklore festival held in Mexico city, in conjunction with the Olympics?

Mr. Drury: I am aware of the difficulties of the situation, Mr. Speaker.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

• (12:20 p.m.)

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether it was the intention of the minister to make any further statement but if it was I would be glad to give way to him.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, apart from giving the usual assurances that accompany this measure it was not my intention to make any further formal statement.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to propose any amendment or to withhold the granting of interim supply. Still, in the circumstances there are a number of things I feel impelled to say to the committee.

One must begin with the estimates tabled by the President of the Treasury Board a few days ago, and with the statement that the minister made in tabling them. The revised estimates presented to the house amount to some $10,670 million for the current fiscal year, more than $400 million higher than what we were assured by the government on various occasions would be the maximum. In other words, the estimates now tabled exceed the commitment given by the government by some $400 million.

We must consider the circumstances that prevailed when these assurances were given over a period of time. Last winter the government was in a state of financial and political crisis. One must recall that in the last fiscal year the government was operating at a deficit of some $800 million and that last autumn, almost a year ago, the then minister of finance and the then president of the treasury board, as a result of concern about inflation, began to be concerned about the size of the deficit and began talking about cuts in estimates for the year in which we now find ourselves.

Hon. members who were here in the house at that time will recall the talk of hon. gentlemen opposite about the cutting they were doing to the extent of some $650 million, I think, on estimates not yet presented to the house. Of course this was exposed as the phony claim it was since it was nothing more than the normal process of a government cutting back on estimates presented to it by departments. Nevertheless this was the beginning of a series of assurances given to the house and the country by the then minister of finance and the then president of the treasury board.

Eventually estimates were presented for the present fiscal year, and in accordance with statements made previously by the then minister of finance and the then president of the treasury board the total of these estimates was just under $10,300 million without any provision for medicare or write-off of the Expo deficit. The then minister of finance also proposed certain tax increases, and the budget was discussed on the basis of those estimates and those tax proposals.

In the month of February the roof more or less fell in on the government. A severe financial crisis developed, including a severe drain on the Canadian dollar, and this provoked further assurances from the then minister of finance and the then minister in charge of the treasury board in order to ease the minds of the gnomes of Zurich as well as the Canadian people. Further assurances were given, including a reduction of some $75 million more from the estimates.

Let us have no mistake, Mr. Chairman, as to what the firm commitment of the government was. The firm commitment was a ceiling of $10,225 million on estimates for the current year, although at that time I think the minister of finance of the day still made an exception with regard to medicare and the write-off in connection with Expo. However, as matters developed, further assurances were made during the election campaign, in the course of selling a Canadian bond issue in the amount of some $100 million in the United States. A further assurance was given involving the honour and the good faith of Canada.

In the prospectus filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission, which I referred to this morning in a question to the Prime Minister, a prospectus signed by the Minister of Finance who I am sorry is not in the chamber, it was stated that it was intended to reduce expenditures further to a level of $10,225 million without qualification, even dropping the qualification relating to medicare and the write-off of Expo. This was a firm commitment in the prospectus filed with the S.E.C., which went on to say that this would bring the budgetary position for the fiscal year 1969 very close to a balance.

When the President of the Treasury Board tabled the revised estimates the other day he tried, rather skilfully, I thought, to give the impression, without saying so, that the government was living up to any commitment it had given because it had made, as it promised to do, a cut of $75 million, indeed, a little more, in the estimates over which it had control. Let there be no mistake, Mr. Chairman. The commitment made by the government was with regard to total estimates without qualification, and the revised estimates tabled in the house the other day by the minister violated that commitment to the extent of more than $400 million.

Last winter the assurances given by the then minister of finance were that the increase in expenditures this fiscal year over last would be held to about 4 per cent. In fact, according to the revised estimates it is about 8 per cent, which is just 100 per cent wrong, Mr. Chairman.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Stanfield: Of course there have been suggestions made to the press that the provinces are to blame for this increase in items which the government was unable to control, amounting to over $400 million. It is worth while to take a minute to consider the items that are causing the excess. There is an item of over $67 million for public debt charges, representing the increase in the cost of carrying the public debt over and above what was previously estimated. I suppose the provinces are to blame for that. Then there is an amount of over $28 million for payments under the tax sharing arrangements. I suppose the provinces are to blame for the faulty estimating involved in that.

• (12:30 p.m.)

Mr. Drury: I might point out to the right hon. gentleman that the action by provincial administrations—

Mr. Stanfield: I am not the "right honourable" yet, but if the government continues behaving the way it has been I will not have to wait very long. This estimate is entirely within the control of my hon. friends opposite. I refer to the estimate of what payments will have to be made under the tax sharing arrangements. Provincial behaviour is not involved in this at all.

Another item is an amount of $13 million to cover the carrying costs of the temporary wheat reserve. I suppose this is a result also of the behaviour of the provinces. Then we have $7 million for the unemployment insurance fund, $2½ million for family allowances, $13 million for the Atlantic development fund and $19 million as the contribution to the public service superannuation account. I am not against these at all. The point is that there is absolutely no foundation for the suggestion by officials of this government that the mistake in estimating which was made was due to faulty figures provided by the provinces.

The shared cost programs do enter into the problem of the excess of $400 million. About $230 million is accounted for by the hospital insurance plan, the Canada Assistance Plan and the plan regarding post-secondary education. If we deduct these items there are still items amounting to some $200 million which have nothing to do with the shared cost programs.

Let us take these three items I have mentioned, the hospital insurance plan, the Canada Assistance Plan and the post-secondary education plan. Are we to believe that the officials of the Treasury Board are so incompetent when making estimates to be presented to this house? We must bear in mind the praise that was lavished on the Treasury Board by the previous president of that body. We were told about all the tools they now have for making forecasts. We heard about the computers and the highly sophisticated procedures by which they are now capable of making estimates four or five years in advance.

Mr. Hees: They cannot even make them four or five days in advance.

Mr. Stanfield: We might take as an example the Canada Assistance Plan. The revised estimate in this regard is nearly $47 million higher than the first estimate for the current year. In the first estimates that were tabled the sum of $205 million was provided for the Canada Assistance Plan. Actually an amount of over $35 million more than that was spent in the previous fiscal year. In other words, the Treasury Board presented to this house estimates for the current year for the Canada Assistance Plan $35 million less than the amount actually spent last year. I do not know what one makes of that.

I suppose one might say that these initial estimates were calculated quite a while ago and that since they were probably made up at this time last year they were reasonable. Suppose we agree to that and say that that is all right but perhaps they were not as careful as they should have been. We might even agree that at the time they were made the estimates regarding the expenditures under the Canada Assistance Plan, assistance to post-secondary education and the hospital insurance plan were not bad but were reasonable.

We must remember, however, that these assurances about the total amount of the estimates for the coming year were not only contained in the estimates which were tabled in the house before Christmas but were repeated in the house in February. Late in February the house was given the repeated assurance that the estimates for the current fiscal year would be held at $10,225 million plus medicare and Expo. Are we to believe that the officials of the Treasury Board, with all their sophisticated paraphernalia and procedures, did not know in February that there was something seriously wrong with the estimates? Certainly by that time the provinces had all made their estimates for the year. They may not have been tabled in the legislatures but they certainly were available to the ministers here.

When the former minister of finance and the former president of the treasury board gave these assurances to this house, to the country and to the world late in February, how much care did they take to check the validity of the assurances they were giving? I do not want to be unfair but I suspect these assurances were given rather loosely to enable the government to take care of the financial and economic crisis in which it was then involved. I believe the intention was to create the impression in Canada and throughout the world that the finances of the government of Canada were well under control. In the light of these estimates which now have been tabled there would seem to be very little that is farther from the truth.

Suppose, however, that the officials of the Treasury Board were sufficiently inefficient—and I find this difficult to believe—as not to realize by the end of February that the estimates which were tabled were seriously out of joint. How then do we justify the assurances that were given by the Minister of Finance and by the government generally during the election campaign and in this solemn prospectus which was filed with the S.E.C. on May 28?

Does the government ask us to believe that on the 28th day of May the Treasury Board officials did not know that the estimates they had presented to the house regarding the shared cost programs were seriously wrong? On May 28 the government of Canada in a prospectus filed by the Minister of Finance solemnly set forth its assurance that expenditures would be held to $10,225 million and that the financial accounts of the country would be in approximate balance.

I would say that if by May 28 the people in the Treasury Board did not know that their estimates in relation to these shared cost programs were seriously wrong they ought to be fired. Certainly the statement in that prospectus, coupled with the facts that have come to light since as a result of the tabling of the revised estimates, constitutes a very serious reflection on the government and the people of Canada. I do not know whether any prosecution is possible, but certainly if a private company made a statement like that and it turned out that there was no foundation for it, there would be a great deal of trouble.

I suggest that the people of the United States as well as Canadians who bought these bonds will be convinced that the government of Canada is either dishonest or stupid.

Mr. Hees: Or both.

Mr. Stanfield: In light of the information we now have, who could believe that on May 28 any minister of this government, who had taken the trouble to make inquiries, would sign that prospectus in good faith? That is only part of the story, Mr. Chairman. There have been bond issues sold since on the basis of the continuing assurance by members of this government that the ceiling on expenditures of $10,225 million would be maintained, and that in this fiscal year the accounts of the government would be close to being balanced. Every security sold by this government in recent months, including those sold in the United States and Canada savings bonds, and there have been hundreds of millions sold, has been sold on the basis of this assurance from responsible ministers of the government. Therefore I must say, although it is a serious thing to say, that the government of Canada in recent months has been selling bonds under false pretenses.

I say in all seriousness that the Minister of Finance, the President of the Treasury Board and the Prime Minister of this country must or ought to have known that the representations which were still in the minds of the people of Canada and others who were buying Canadian securities that the ceiling would be maintained and the budget would be approximately in balance were wrong. The President of the Treasury Board, the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister knew that every person buying a bond, be it a Canada savings bond or any other kind sold by the government of Canada in recent months, was doing so on the strength of commitments made by this government that the ceiling would be maintained and the accounts would be in approximate balance. These ministers and the other members of the government knew that was so, and they could not help but know.

This may be a smart trick and a smart way to sell bonds, but it is a reflection on the honour of this country. The assurance that was given last February—it does not need to be described as having been given in bad faith and I do not make that charge—was given with insufficient care and with excessive enthusiasm to get out of a scrape. Assurances were given to the United States on May 28, and I do not know how they could have been made or believed by the Minister of Finance if he made any inquiries at the time. Whatever other criticism I might make of the Minister of Finance, I did not think he was sufficiently lacking in intelligence, if he made any inquiries, to believe that the statements in that prospectus were true. Whatever allowances one can make in respect of what happened last February and May, what allowance can anybody possible make for the behaviour of the government in recent months in selling Canadian securities on the basis of these representations which the government must certainly have known were false?

The Prime Minister's admiration for Machiavelli is well known, but I think he is pushing it a little too far. The people of Canada are proud of Canada's reputation, and whatever else they might have thought of this government or any Canadian government I am sure they would like to believe the government is honest and that it deals with Canadians and the rest of the world in good faith. This government has betrayed the people of Canada. The Prime Minister of this country must accept responsibility for misleading Canadians and the rest of the world by this vital misrepresentation.

Where are we now? This government has smeared the reputation of Canada. We have higher taxes imposed and we are confronted apparently, judging from the statement of the Prime Minister this morning, with a large deficit. We also have serious unemployment, which I perhaps should have put at the top of the list in terms of importance, and we have excessive inflation. We have the makings of a nice mess.

The government has been guilty of serious mismanagement. It has created a high degree of uncertainty, and it is important that we have a budget as soon as possible. We must be concerned now about the reputation of our country and we must be concerned about the outlook in terms of taxation, deficits and inflation. We must also be concerned about the strait-jacket in which the government feels it is confined as a result of the growth of what the government refers to as statutory plans or shared-cost programs. We must be concerned about the government curbing the development of necessary programs for the development of the country.

Let us consider the items that have already been cut by the government to achieve the reduction of $80 million about which it boasts. These cut-backs have been made in respect of items such as manpower training and mobility, airport construction, foreign aid, capital spending on Indian communities, national research scholarships and cultural activities. In other words, Mr. Chairman, in spite of the increase in taxation imposed last winter, which was substantial, and in spite of the very substantial deficit with which we are confronted, programs in very important areas necessary for the development of the country are being cut.

It is not possible for me to say just how serious the outlook is. I cannot tell until we have more information not only about the plans for this year but also about the forecasts for the next fiscal year, which I suggest we should have as soon as possible in order to judge the situation in which we now find ourselves. If we are given any such information we will do our best to believe it.

The government have expressed concern about shared cost programs. They have indicated that a review is under way. I wish them good luck, but I suggest that their procedure is much too limited in scope to have very much effect. You just have to ask yourself, what are the areas of rapid growth and shared cost programs, to see the difficulties. The hospital plan is one. That plan is in effect. I think the government has a considerable amount of difficulty in doing much to slow down the rate of growth and costs. I think the provinces are doing their best to administer that plan economically and effectively.

Post-secondary education is another. I think we would all agree that it would be a very serious mistake if this program were cut back. It would be a very serious mistake for the future of hundreds of thousands of Canadians and the country as a whole. So far as the Canada Assistance Plan is concerned, I think the approach has to be much broader than apparently the government has in mind. I believe the government has to think in terms of an overhaul of its whole anti-poverty program and should seek a new approach rather than the one suggested, which is just an attempt to place ceilings on the program now in effect.

Then there is the subject of medicare. I say in all sincerity that if the government feels it is necessary to review—and I do not criticize this; I see their problem—the rapidly escalating costs of existing shared cost programs, is not this the time to heed the request of the provinces to confer about the medicare program? Is not this the last chance the government really has to exercise some control over the escalation of the cost of shared cost programs?

I think the provinces sincerely want a medicare program. Most of them have indicated that they do not really like the present one; they are concerned about the effect it has on their other priorities. The government of Canada seems to be seriously concerned about the strait-jacket in which existing shared cost programs are placing them. If the government considers this to be the time to review existing shared cost programs, is this not all the more reason to meet the provinces and talk seriously about the medicare program? This may be the last chance the government has to keep this country out of a serious strait-jacket.

There were a good many other things that I wanted to say. The difficulty in which the Leader of the Opposition now finds himself is that there are so many things to be said against the government, and I do not wish to trespass too much upon the good nature of the house. But I will say that this parliament is only two weeks old, the government has been in office for about five months, and there is still time to change. There is still time for the government to pull itself together and begin to deal frankly and responsibly with parliament and the country.

Mr. Crouse: And honestly.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Stanfield: I have spent some time this morning developing one aspect of this matter, the lack of frankness of the government and the secrecy running through the whole fabric of the government. There is still time to break out of the financial strait-jacket in which the government believes it is. There is still time for the Prime Minister to call a halt here and now to the uncertainty and confusion growing about the policies of the government and their sense of commitment.

What is the impression given by the government? As I indicated this morning, they are certainly not committed to frankness. They seem to be committed neither to the monarchy nor to republicanism, neither to the parliamentary nor the congressional system of government. They seem to be fully committed neither to collective security nor to withdrawal from NATO. Certainly the government is not committed to compassion either at home or abroad. It has abandoned the anti-poverty program, and we express serious concern about the government's lack of concern with regard to Biafra.

The government has no commitment to excellence in Canada. It has cut down on science programs, on research and even on the arts. There is uncertainty in the country about the government's determination to play a part in western defence. There is uncertainty on the part of Canadians about whether we can expect the government to translate into action what we have always thought were Canada's ideals of compassion as well as justice for people. There is uncertainty in the scientific community and universities about whether the government takes seriously the need for scientific development in Canada. There is uncertainty about what has taken place in the discussions regarding the constitution.

There is a growing feeling in Canada that the government has no real sense of commitment. This being the case, let this chamber demonstrate that we have a sense of commitment. Let us encourage the government to courageously break out of its financial morass. Let the committees on external affairs and national defence draw up a program that could provide some relief, even at this late hour, to Biafra. Let the committee make its own assessment of Canada's role in NATO. Let the appropriate committee give the government a sense of priority so they may establish priorities in these fields. Let us have a committee study the constitution. Let us involve members of this house in the vital work of achieving a national consensus. That is what we are here for. Let the government appoint a committee of this house, or of the Senate and House of Commons, to study the question of poverty.

Before this house met the Prime Minister promised the country that this would be a jumping place. It looks like a jumping-off place for the government. But let us make it a jumping place. If there is no sense of commitment on the part of the government, let those of us in the opposition, those on the back benches on this side of the house, demonstrate that parliament and its members do have a sense of commitment, a sense of conviction and a sense of compassion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): One o'clock.

Mr. Stanfield: Let this chamber make up, as best it can, for the deficiencies of the present government.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to follow the arguments put forward this morning by the Leader of the Opposition, but I am sure we shall all await with interest a possible reply from the government to the points that he made. However, I do wish that when Liberals and Conservatives discuss this question of government expenditure they would look at it in terms other than just amounts of money and whether these amounts are higher or lower than were predicted. It seems to us that what really counts when you are dealing with government expenditures is the way those expenditures are made and the way in which taxes are levied for the collection of the necessary revenue.

We are concerned, of course, about economy. We do not wish to see unnecessary expenditure and we think waste should be squeezed out. However, our main concern about government expenditures is that they be directed toward making life secure and just for the people of this country. We think that is the purpose of government programs, that money spent on them, unlike much of the money that is spent in the private sector, is an investment in people. We want to see a further development of government programs which make it possible for people to have decent incomes, decent homes, adequate education and social security. We are not fazed by statements such as the Prime Minister made this morning when he suggested that the opposition asks for lower expenditures and at the same time for more programs. We think it is the business of the government to set up programs for the good of the people of the country, and we recognize that they have to be paid for.

The other side of the coin, as I have already suggested, is the manner in which government revenues are collected. We think that collection should be on as fair a basis as possible, that taxes, fundamentally, should be levied on the basis of ability to pay. There are details in the Carter report with which we may not agree, but in the main we regard it as an excellent document advancing the idea that taxes can be collected according to ability to pay, and also advancing the proposition that wealth should not escape taxation to the extent that is the case in this country. As I say, we get a little tired of these altercations back and forth between the government and the official opposition over the amount that the budget or the estimates may reach. What is important to us is the things on which the money is spent and the fairness of the taxation methods by which it is collected. We find both of the major parties deficient on both these counts.

I do not intend to elaborate any further on that aspect of the matter, but there is one other general comment I would like to make and then there are a couple of details to which I wish to refer. I may say that one or two of my colleagues also have some matters of detail about which they will be speaking later this afternoon.

The general comment I wish to make—and I am glad for this purpose to have the ear of my friend, the President of the Privy Council—is that I think the exercise in which we are engaged today demonstrates once again how urgent it is for us to review the methods by which we vote supply. Today we are being asked for roughly nine-twelfths of the year's estimates. The resolution is set up in such a way that it takes cognizance of the interim supply which was voted in the old parliament last March. It also takes cognizance of the fact that the government lived on Governor General's warrants for several months during the period of the election and thereafter. But the fact is that this motion not only covers all those months of expenditures which were not discussed in detail but goes on to provide supply for October, November and December.

In other words, when this debate is over and we have passed the interim supply bill we will have approved nine-twelfths or 75 per cent of the year's expenditures without—and I say this quite frankly—any discussion in detail of the expenditures themselves.

We had the opportunity of making speeches on interim supply last March and we have the opportunity of making speeches today on matters of policy or on issues about which we are concerned. But if we keep this up for the whole 19 days that we have allotted ourselves for discussion of the 1968-69 estimates and supply at this session, we still will not get around to an examination, in any kind of detail, of the estimates that are before us.

I have been here for quite a few years now, Mr. Chairman, and cannot remember a session when we really did this kind of job and went into the details of the expenditures to ascertain whether or not they were correct, whether or not they were valid, whether or not they should be cut down or increased. We just do not use our supply days for that purpose. We use the days and we use the items as pegs for making speeches about matters that we think are important.

I do not deprecate what we are doing, Mr. Chairman. I do not downgrade it at all. I think it is important. It is an opportunity to get up on the floor of the house and deal with issues that we think are alive and current. However, in the process of doing this the job of critically examining the estimates just is not done by the House of Commons. It has been done in advance by Treasury Board. In a year or two from now it will be done by the public accounts committee after the Auditor General has made his report.

Mr. Baldwin: If the government ever sets up the committee.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is a good point too.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): We want you as the chairman.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What I say now is not by way of castigating anybody. I am not assessing the blame. But unless there is some new machinery of a sort we have not had during the quarter of a century that I have been connected with this house. I do not see estimates being adequately discussed on the floor of the House of Commons. We have too much to do.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Even if we were to spend a whole year examining the billions of dollars of estimates, Mr. Chairman, we still would not do the job. The officials are not here for questioning, and the ministers are not as bright about these things as we might wish them to be. Perhaps they are not as bright—period. Surely the case becomes stronger every year for a reference of the estimates to committees that have the time and the research assistants to enable them to do the job properly. Otherwise, Mr. Chairman, we might as well give up the notion that in parliament we have any control over the pursestrings. The only control that is really exercised is by Treasury Board; and this morning the Leader of the Opposition wanted to fire the staff of Treasury Board. Then where would we be?

Therefore I plead that we take this matter pretty seriously. Someone may throw this back to me and tell me that I am one of those likely to be on the committee on procedure and that is the place for us to consider this problem. But, Mr. Chairman, we need the backing and the desire of the house for new machinery to do the job, a job that certainly has not been done for a great many years.

Total government expenditures for the year 1968-69 as at last report—they may go up again before the year ends—are in the order of $10,670 million, of which $5,780 million require to be voted. The rest of the money is provided by statute. By the time we get through with the exercise in which we are engaged today and include the interim supply that we voted last March, we will have voted $4,894 million out of that $5,784 million that is before us for this fiscal year without discussing any of the details at all.

In terms of examining the estimates, Mr. Chairman, this exercise is nothing but a farce. I do not say that debating interim supply is a farce. I think that having supply days when we raise issues such as that which the Leader of the Opposition felt he had to raise this morning and that other hon. members will raise this afternoon is all to the good. We are making good use of our time and I defend it. But the job that we talk about doing, examining the estimates, is just not being done by members of parliament anywhere at any time. I hope that the exercise we are going through today, will demonstrate the importance of the job that the procedure committee has to do, namely, to bring back some suggestions as to the ways and means of handling supply.

I said, Mr. Chairman, that while I was on my feet there were a couple of detailed matters to which I wanted to make reference. They are items that came up this morning. I am sorry that the ministers concerned do not happen to be here at the moment, but they may wander in. Maybe this is not the day that they do not have to be here.

This morning I asked the Minister of Transport about the Air Canada overhaul and maintenance base at Winnipeg. In particular I asked him whether there was anything to reports that Air Canada is considering selling that base to a private firm, one of several being mentioned in press reports. I also asked him whether this matter was under consultation with the unions of the employees who work for Air Canada at Winnipeg.

I must say that I was not at all satisfied with his answer. The minister's answer confirms that something is in the wind. He said that the report was speculative, but it looked like pretty solid speculation by the time he got through his answer. I had to press him a second time to answer the question whether or not the unions concerned are being consulted, and in effect he said that they know what is going on and that he will bring them into the picture just before the last documents are signed.

This is not good enough, Mr. Chairman. This is not participatory democracy. This is not involvement—and you remember that word, Mr. Chairman. The Prime Minister did not make many speeches during the last election campaign and the ones that he did make were pretty short. But the word "involvement" got into every one of them. This is what this great new political force was up to—getting the people of Canada involved in the running of their affairs. One of the affairs that affects people most of all is their work.

We suggest, Mr. Chairman, that if democracy means anything and if involvement means anything, the employees who work for Air Canada at Winnipeg should have some say if changes are being contemplated which put them into a position where they either have to pull up stakes and leave Winnipeg, as so many others have had to do, or transfer their employment from a crown corporation for which they have been glad to work to a private corporation for which they may not be so pleased to work. I urge the Minister of Transport not to think that he can satisfy us by saying that the unions will be told just before the ink is dry on the final signatures. They should be in the picture now in terms of the involvement which the Prime Minister said would be the key to public affairs in this country.

The other subject that came up again this morning, Mr. Chairman, is one which has been raised quite often. It arose this morning in a question from a friend of mine to my left who asked what the government is doing about the pensions of retired civil servants. I am sorry that the Minister of Finance is not here; we knew all week that he would be away, of course. However, I remind the Minister of Finance that during the time he was president of the treasury board he repeatedly declared his personal support for doing something in this regard. He knows the statements he made to some of us personally. He gave us the impression that it was only because the then minister of finance, now Secretary of State for External Affairs, did not agree that nothing could be done. Well, Mr. Chairman, the then president of the treasury board is now Minister of Finance and in a position to carry through with the things in which he said he believed.

I remind the government and this house that a report was tabled on May 8, 1967, which unanimously recommended that these pensions be increased. We all know that the amount of money in the public service superannuation fund is growing every year. There is more in the fund at the end of each year than at the start, despite the fact that pensions are paid out of it. I contend that the retired employees of this government are justified in claiming the right as well as the need for an increase in their pensions.

I am not going to be put off on this matter by the cavalier answers of the Minister of Finance or the retort the Prime Minister made this morning when he said, in replying to my friend's question, "See, this is the opposition. They ask for the cutting of expenditures and then right away they want more money to be spent."

As I said at the beginning of my remarks, the whole question when dealing with expenditure is not the amount being spent, not whether it is too high or too low or whether it is higher or lower than last year's amount. The question is, is the money being spent wisely? Is it being spent fairly and in the interests of the people? We should continue asking that that be done.

The only other comment I wish to make about finances is that I am alarmed about the many references being made to federal-provincial conferences on shared cost programs. We are hearing such references from the Prime Minister, the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Most shared cost programs directly or indirectly assist people. They provide funds, allowances, services, loans, work, or what have you, and when this government starts talking about reassessing those programs as a means of curtailing expenses it sounds to me as if it is planning a program of retrenchment so far as meeting the needs of the people of this country is concerned. That is not good enough.

I say to the government, listen all you want to the Leader of the Opposition and his claim that you must squeeze out waste and budget and estimate better than you have been doing, but do not think you are doing a public service when you plan the budget to save money if you save it at the expense of programs which aid the people of this country. So far this government has not demonstrated to us that it has any kind of new look or that it is trying to bring about the just society through the involvement of our people in the affluence of our times. Surely that is the important aspect of any monetary or fiscal program, and this ought to be our concern when we are dealing with the estimates of this government.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I shall be brief, all the more so because the Liberal whip has asked his members not to prolong their remarks unduly.

I wish to take this opportunity to thank the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and make a couple of suggestions to him during the debate on interim supply.

Mr. Chairman, on September 9, we received a news release from the Minister of Finance which read as follows:

> The Honourable E. J. Benson, Minister of Finance, today released the details of final revenue and expenditure figures for the fiscal year 1967-68 and and of the Government's assets and liabilities and net debt position as at March 31, 1968.
> Revenues for the fiscal year as finally determined were $9,077 million, or $22 million more than the preliminary figure of $9,055 million published in the Canada Gazette of May 25, 1968. Expenditures were $9,869 million or $6 million more than the preliminary figure of $9,863 million. The budget deficit amounted to $792 million, as compared with the preliminary deficit of $808 million.
> At March 31, 1968, the gross liabilities of the Government amounted to $32,926 million, of which $20,580 million consisted of unmatured bonds and treasury bills. Net recorded assets totalled $16,169 million and the net debt of Canada amounted to $16,757 million.
> On a national accounts basis, it is now estimated that federal government transactions recorded a deficit of $423 million in 1967-68. The national accounts are a comprehensive measure which reflects the overall economic effect of government financial operations. On this basis, total revenues for the year are estimated at $10,881 million and expenditures at $11,304 million.

Today, the new minister comes to us with a certainly more realistic budget, because half the fiscal year is almost over. We have six months more to go, and a deficit of approximately $368 million is expected.

The Journal de Montréal on September 26, 1968 carried the following comments:

> The estimates reflect a considerable increase in the payments made by Ottawa to the provinces. The total amounts to $10.670 billion for the coming fiscal year whereas in the preliminary estimates they amounted to less than $10.3 billion.

As the needs of the provinces are constantly growing, and due to the fact that the federal government always gets the lion's share of taxes, it is quite normal that it should be called upon, from year to year, to increase its payment to the provinces. We find that quite normal, with regard to the payments to the provinces.

It is also stated that part of that increase is due to election expenditures. Indeed, the cost of the elections, which amounted to almost $14 million, certainly did not contribute to reducing the expenditures of Canada.

During the election campaign, probably after that heat which often dries up the budgets a little, we were told that the estimates would be kept down, even though we were sure beforehand that they would not be. That is why the candidates kept saying that some expenditures would be cut and the budget balanced, which gave the people the impression that the estimates would be kept down. That is exactly the kind of talk heard during the election campaign, and I said that it was impossible for a government to keep the budget down without cutting expenditures. Some unnecessary expenditures can be cut, of course, but it is impossible to cut those which are necessary, those which force the government to be fair with all the provinces in all areas.

This increase is also imputed to a rise in the amounts paid for studies, for continuative education. At this point, Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the department to these amounts which will reach close to $275 million this year. It should control those expenditures more carefully. The objective is very good but we often notice in our areas, and it is probably the same everywhere else, that the management of these courses could cost less and be better adapted to each area.

The cost of medicare and hospital insurance will also increase. All these increases seems reasonable to me, Mr. Chairman, and there is no need to give very careful consideration to these expenditures to see that they are for the good of the people.

But the main question we ask ourselves with regard to these increases, is whether the government really looks for money where it is to be found. That is an important question for the members of the Ralliement Créditiste, because, in our opinion, so long as the financial system endorsed by the two old parties exists, we will keep on taking money from the little man, on the principle that if you want to get a dollar you have to ask for five. That, Mr. Chairman, is the principle we must get rid of. Discussions in the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs will have to deal with better ways of using our financial ressources, since we say that Canada is very rich, to serve the Canadian people and our society, instead of trying all the time to protect financiers and large companies, always at the expense of the worker.

According to the table showing the revenues, I note that personal income tax is still the best source of revenue.

I would like today, without being too naughty, to call the attention of the minister to the advisability of considering further the revenues of the country and forget a while the citizens' incomes.

I have often heard it said: Try to tax proportionally the rich and the poor, or to say it differently, be fair. We note there are so many exemptions granted to the higher levels that we are not at all surprised today, when living among the people and meeting the workers all year long, to hear recriminations and even a rebellious rumbling among the people who realize that they are taxed 150 per cent, while those who should be taxed enjoy the favours of the house and the Minister of Finance.

I believe this is the main point. It is the reason why I was asking earlier: Where shall we take the money in order to administer a budget? To this let us add at once: without discrimination—and when I say "without discrimination", I mean by that it is discriminatory not to raise the maximum non-taxable income to $5,000 for a married man and to $3,000 for an unmarried man.

This, Mr. Chairman, is what I call social discrimination and we obviously shall have to eliminate it in 1968 or in 1969. Today, I appeal to the Minister of Finance, because he knows that there are some big magnates, some large companies, some large trusts, which do not pay any or hardly any income tax, while on the other hand the poor man with a family to support has to pay taxes on his meagre income which allows him the bare necessities of life.

I do not object to taxing luxuries, but when we have reached the point where, in a Canada that is said to be the second richest country in the world, we are taxing essential items, I must say that there is something wrong with our financial system. I wish today to put the finger on that flaw in the system for the benefit of the Minister of Finance, and I ask him simply—I do not want to talk much longer, this is why I took the floor, so that I may draw his attention to this point—if he wants to make both ends meet to go and get the money where it is and not where it is not, that is, in the workman's pockets.

[English]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I wish to be brief. I wish to say at the outset that I have no special mandate to speak in the name of the government; there are many ministers who will do that. But as a member of the government party I find it very hard to be one of the targets of this machinegunning without fighting back to a certain extent.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Now, I have listened to the remarks made by the hon. members of Her Majesty's loyal opposition. When I hear the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) speak of the opposition, I draw my own conclusions. There must be a loyal opposition, another less loyal and then another disloyal. Since nobody ever makes any distinction when speaking of Her Majesty's loyal opposition, I am compelled to do so.

I have listened to the remarks made by the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and I must say that he has performed a surgical operation without any anaesthetics. He has not even thought about giving the government any anaesthetics before operating and he was somewhat cruel in his operation. I am not saying that he was not a little bit right. I say that he has contributed here serious arguments which offhand, seem firm until, of course, we hear the responsible minister's reply. I believe he made an important statement. It was based on facts and figures. He acted as a statesman should, without guile or meanness. This must be acknowledged. I would not go so far as saying that he was any more right than the others.

The speaker for the New Democratic party, a while ago, has none the less conceded a few important aspects to the government, on which he disagreed with the loyal opposition of Her Majesty, but in the same breath, he expressed his own demands.

The spokesman of the Ralliement Créditiste has of course referred again to the philosophy in which he believes—and I think he is sincere—but it does not seem practical to those who feel that one has to live within one's means.

But the serious inconsistency in this whole debate, Mr. Chairman, is that on the side of the opposition—loyal, more or less loyal or disloyal—they accuse the government first of all of having exceeded its estimates by some $400 million. The government is accused of acting dishonestly towards the buyers of government bonds. At the same time, Mr. Chairman, while the government is accused of having spent some $400 million more than it had said it would, it is asked to spend hundreds of millions more.

The spokesman of the New Democratic party, for instance, claims that the pensions paid to superannuated civil servants are inadequate and could be increased.

The Leader of the Loyal Opposition of Her Majesty, after blaming the government for having spent $400 million too much, takes them to task for having cut down expenditures for research. Some of my backbencher colleagues demand investments of half a billion or a billion dollars. In fact, the government is blamed, for instance, for not constructing immediately the causeway leading to Prince Edward Island. It is called upon to build another Trans-Canada highway. In the meantime, that same party tells the government: you have spent $400 million more than you had forecast.

What has the government done? I would think it has acted as the family provider in looking after the needs of the Canadian community. When the government was accused of fraudulous deeds with the bond buyers, I think that was a case of slander against it. I think this matter must have been overlooked by the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition who is usually more concerned with the interests of the country. If it is said across the country and throughout North America that this government is dishonest and selling bonds under misrepresentations, there is no telling what the results will be. I say this is not right and I know the minister will soon set the matter straight.

As a backbencher of this government, I must point out this lack of logic that I find hardly acceptable from people as intelligent as those who participated in the debate in blaming the government for spending $400 million in order to meet urgent requirements of the Canadian people. At the same time, the government is being blamed for not having spent some $1 billion, for instance, for pensions, for the completion of miscellaneous public works which have been posponed, for curtailing some investments in research, for neglecting to send food supplies to Biafra and, finally, for not doing enough about the sale of the western wheat.

One of these fine days, Mr. Chairman, we will have to make up our minds: do we want to spend money or not? If we spend and if we invest, we will have to raise taxes. But as soon as taxes are raised, the opposition criticizes the government severely for looking for money where it is to be found. There is no logic in our organization any more.

I know that our friends in the Ralliement Créditiste have a magic formula, and I would be the happiest man on earth if it were adopted. However, my friends in the Ralliement Créditiste forget that we belong to an international financial club in which there are some 70, 75 or 80 member countries, and that we cannot reform our monetary system unless those other countries decide to do the same at the same time, or our international trade—

Mr. Latulippe: Would the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, if my hon. friend would be kind enough to let me finish my speech—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Trois-Rivières has the floor.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I apologize for my weaknesses, but I am a man apt to lose the thread of his ideas when he is interrupted. If my hon. friend would be kind enough to wait until I have finished, I will be happy to answer his question, if I have some time left. I will have time, as I am going to be brief. And I will be happy to answer him, because I respect him.

Mr. Chairman, our friends should realize that wishful thinking is fine, that it is fine to say: We are going to reform the Canadian monetary system, but we are not alone in the world. As science develops, contacts between countries will become more numerous and we will be more interdependent. From the monetary point of view, we are probably more interdependent than in any other sector. That is indeed wishful thinking.

I excuse most of my friends, for I believe them to be sincere, but, in my opinion, to make people who are uninformed believe that these things could happen thanks to a magic wand which would reform the entire system is to mislead them.

Mr. Chairman, I want to defend the honour of Canada and that of the present government. I object to the statement that the government is dishonest in its representations. I deny the assertion that the government has broken its promise, since it has spent $400 million more than it promised it would, particularly in view of the fact that the very people who tax the government with this are the first to ask it to make investments far beyond its present means. This is obvious inconsistency which will probably persuade the Canadian public that the opposition is too stubborn in its role, and that, at times, it becomes inconsistent and illogical.

Mr. Chairman, I should be pleased to answer the question of my hon. friend.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I should like to put a question to the member for Trois-Rivières. He claims that we are members of an international pool and that without this international pool it would be impossible to finance Canada.

I should like to ask him, for instance, whether, if the other nations, including the United States and England, did not exist, we should starve to death in Canada?

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, the question of my hon. friend the member for Compton, whom I have just quoted and whom I respect highly, is to my mind a bit illusory, hypothetical and, up to a point, childish.

It is inconceivable indeed to imagine, even for a moment, that Canada could subsist if the United States, England, France and Germany did not exist. It is almost childish to speak of so hypothetical a situation.

More than ever, Mr. Chairman, we live in times when the whole world, even the United States which is probably the richest nation in the world, depends on the economy of the other nations; this to such an extent that when, for instance, England has financial difficulties, all her trading nations realize the necessity of helping her. The United States, the most important supplier of money to the world, which are now spending billions of dollars in Viet Nam, indeed reprove those countries that bank on American dollars to live on and weather those periods which we call inflationary, or financial difficulties, whatever they are called. But this is not our main point of interest and I mention it only incidentally.

I should like to remind my friends that even though they may be perfectly right in having such human objectives, we must still be realistic and quit dreaming, because dreams do not cure disease nor solve problems. Problems are solved by concrete solutions.

The purpose of my comments is to say to the hon. members opposite: You are not logical, you are inconsistent, you are blaming the government for its huge expenses and you are the first to ask it to spend more. Let us not say black and white in the same breath.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The question of the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) has led the hon. member for Trois-Rivières to begin a second speech.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

I wish to point out that my time is not up, but I thank you just the same, because I have completed my remarks.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Three Rivers is certainly in his right slot. It was a good deal more interesting—

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege—

[English]

With regard to my hon. friend, Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege I wish to tell him that my home town is incorporated in French and in English, and in the English version it is incorporated under the name of Trois-Rivières.

Mr. Nielsen: In any event, he is in the right party now after having shifted from being an independent. It is a typical sort of reaction for someone on his side of the house to take ten minutes to answer a simple question which took one minute to put, if that. It is indicative that although this is a new government, as has been pointed out, it is carrying on the same policies of doubt, the same old policies of uncertainty and confusion completely characteristic of its predecessor. It is not my intention this afternoon to put any blame for this sad state of affairs on the Prime Minister because, after all, he has been there only a short time. Like others, however, I do say that there has been absolutely no improvement in the situation.

The uncertainty with regard to external affairs has been very specifically pointed out this morning and this afternoon. In the field of economic policy there is not only doubt but, as was driven home in no uncertain terms this morning, there is outright deception. In the conduct of the business of this house there has been confusion. That is the record amassed in an extremely short time. We have a new government, yes, but there is nothing new about the manner in which it has been carrying on. The mistakes that are being made are kept more secret by the ministers who live in fear of being fired if they do not keep their lips sealed. There is uncertainty in respect of the policy concerning Czechoslovakia. There is confusion, dawdling and incredible incoherence in respect of our NATO policy.

With regard to the conduct of affairs in this chamber we heard the incredible proposal made last Wednesday by the Prime Minister that we should accept some kind of absentee government through the removal of half the members of the cabinet from their seats during the question period. What are they doing that is so urgent? Have we reached a point where cabinet ministers are so preoccupied that they cannot be in the house for an hour or less every day for the question period? Are questions of the government of this country of such an insignificant nature that ministers should not be required to answer questions on a daily basis? Is reform in some of the very vital areas of legislation unimportant? There have been cuts with regard to airport improvements and air navigational facilities, a matter of vital safety to the public. Are we to be denied the information to which the public is entitled because the minister concerned is not here during the question period? Is the very sad plight of our Indian people not sufficiently important to require the presence of the ministers responsible?

There is unemployment and a host of other extremely serious problems. These problems have been generated by the standard set by this government. Now the Prime Minister suggests that some kind of absentee government should be set up in spite of these very pressing and urgent problems in respect of which the ministers should give answers. Is there to be any importance attached to the question period? If ministers are not present to answer questions, then the question period becomes absolutely valueless.

I do not intend to go through the authorities because the proposition is self-evident. It is not my intention, after so many years of precedent, to defend the question period, the time when members have the opportunity to place before the government matters of an urgent and serious nature. I do not wish to be met with the charge that I am basing my argument on precedent simply because I do not want change. When the Prime Minister made the statement the other day that perhaps the question period in itself is not the factor that should be blamed, the hon. member for Trois-Rivières gave an indication of why the answer period is just as vital a factor in considering any alteration in the approach to this whole matter. Certainly the correct approach is not to have ministers absent.

The Prime Minister has not attacked the necessity of the question period in making his announcement. He simply put forward a unilateral proposal which would make the question period meaningless. The Prime Minister is quoted in Le Devoir of May 9 as saying that ministers have to waste at least an hour a day playing politics in the commons and that little would be lost if a régime were established that would liberate ministers from tiring parliamentary sittings. With this kind of attitude one might expect the type of announcement which the Prime Minister made on Wednesday. That attitude is an attack on the rights of the people who sent all of us here to probe the ministry by means of questions which are required to be answered in the public interest.

The minister without portfolio from Quebec—I believe he has a portfolio now but I am not certain which one it is—said in Montreal on June 2, as reported by the Canadian Press on June 3, that the government wants to put an end to useless debate. This is the attitude of the ministry. Of course, the less time ministers spend in the house the less the exposure they are subjected to by the legitimate questions of the opposition, to which the public is entitled to answers, and the more likely they are to stay out of trouble. Perhaps that is the Prime Minister's motivation. The only conclusion I can come to is that his ministers have not been doing too well and regard parliament in the same way as the last Liberal government did. Therefore he simply intends to get rid of a nuisance or embarrassment.

I can inform the Prime Minister that if this kind of attitude on his part and on the part of his ministers continues his charisma will disappear very quickly. The arrogant assumption that the presence of ministers not only is not necessary but will not be available is a slap in the face of parliament. The ministers should and must be here during the question period. Otherwise, why bother to have a question period at all? If the house is to accept this and if the Prime Minister does not reconsider it, this is just a first step along the road to the ultimate throttling of parliament and the ultimate supremacy of the executive over the people as represented here in the commons.

I am not alone in that view; it has been stated before. Professor McWhinney stated very recently that the legislative arm of the government is being submerged in the supremacy of the executive. In my view, if this were true it would be a very undesirable trend. It seems to me that this type of announcement by the Prime Minister only drives the nail in the coffin of that kind of trend.

What are we to expect? During the last session and in the debate following the events of February 19 the Prime Minister said—and he believed it, because he nodded his head here two or three days ago when it was tossed across the floor—"we are the masters of the house", implying that "we can do as we please because we are the government, we are perfection personified." The implication is why bother to ask questions? They may not regard our questions as important, but the people who sent all of us here to ask questions have a different view. What, for instance, could be more important than the development of responsible government in our country, constitutional changes and a host of other matters, not to mention security and one or two other recent events which have been the subject of questioning during the question period?

The Prime Minister says that half of the ministers will be here. This is not really anything new because there are only half of them here at the best of times. There is the distinct danger that the half which will be present at any given time will be those who, in the Prime Minister's estimation, will not be asked questions.

Let me place before the Prime Minister another point for consideration. The absence of ministers will not deter the members from asking questions, but may have the opposite effect. I, for one, would just as soon put questions to the Prime Minister as the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Prime Minister can be assured if the ministers are not in the house he will find himself fielding a greater number of questions. Perhaps that is what he wants. The members elected by the people of Canada sit here on their behalf, and have the unquestionable right to require the executive to give answers, to provide information and to account to the people. The Prime Minister is trying to curtail that right. The matter is as simple as that.

I have said enough to indicate that the Prime Minister should seriously consider this ill-advised move. If he is aware of the source of this information he should seek out the author and unveil to him some facts about parliamentary life. The ministers cannot be abstracted from their daily responsibilities in this house. That is their primary responsibility.

The Prime Minister may talk about what is done in England and other places, and we will take his word for it. Nevertheless, he will not and cannot suggest that England, which is a unitarian state without a complex regional situation as we have here, is the same. The ministers are deliberately kept out of the house under the English system for several days during the week when questions are being asked. The Prime Minister, in his usual fashion, has explained the matter in honeyed tones of sweet reason, but there remains the inescapable conclusion that in essence there is a matter of government convenience and protection involved rather than the protection of the public interest.

As others have said, we have uncertainty in foreign affairs with the most uncertain foreign minister of all times. We have seen uncertainty in the conduct of the business of this house and uncertainty in the management of the economy. There is this legacy from the Pearson days of massive uncertainty which this government will have to throw off. On Wednesday we had another incredible example of government posturing and posing as the saviours of the economy, trying to turn an increase in spending into a saving. We all remember the story of the emperor's new clothes. The statement by the President of the Treasury Board yesterday was an apt illustration of that children's classic. I am sure you will remember the story. No one dared to tell the emperor that his beautiful suit of new clothes was non-existent, or at least existed only in the minds of his tailors. The emperor was in fact stark, staring naked. That was the position of the minister, at least economically speaking.

The minister talked about a saving here and a saving there, showing how the government by parsimonious cutting and scraping had saved $80 million. He went on to add, as an afterthought, even with that $80 million saving the total amount of the estimates was some $400 million above the previous unrevised, unexpurgated and unedited version. What was said by the then revenue minister, now the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development? He speaks about members saying one thing and then being inconsistent by saying something else. Let us hear what the new Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development had to say when he was the revenue minister. He said at Calgary on June 3, as reported by the Canadian Press on June 4:

> The next budget will be a balanced one and every attempt will be made to hold the line on tax increases.

That is what one of the ministers that hon. members now support said on that occasion. Let's consider what the finance minister said in Saskatoon on June 8, as reported by the Canadian Press that same day. He said:

> The Trudeau government if re-elected will reform the existing tax structure rather than adopt recommendations made by the Carter royal commission, which would give Canada 'a radically different tax structure.'

We can see that coming. The same minister said at Grande Prairie on June 7 as reported by the Canadian Press:

> —economic expansion, reduced government spending and a balanced budget has increased international confidence in the Canadian dollar.

Here is one minister speaking in one case about a balanced budget, which apparently had already been achieved, and another minister saying that if the Trudeau government were re-elected there would be a balanced budget. Now we have these revised estimates presented by the President of the Treasury Board last Wednesday. They are up to their old tricks. They are trying to dazzle us with the same verbal footwork they displayed during the last election. This is what appeared in the candidate's handbook of the Liberal party:

> Employment and growth depends on stability in prices and costs . . . The Main purpose of a selective prices and incomes policy is not government control over prices or incomes or any interference with competitive market courses. Rather it is to improve the framework within which a free market can work . . . by assessing the impact of particular changes so other sectors of the economy, public and private, will know what action to take . . . tell other industries whether they should increase or decrease their dependence on a particular good or service . . . give government a guide to tariff or tax changes . . . and bring home to the price charger that his short run benefit may conflict with his long-run goals.

That, in a nutshell, is the economic philosophy of those who now sit on the treasury benches. Now, we see this mysterious alchemy of Liberal government financing; by the wizardry of the wizard of Kingston, the present Minister of Finance, who is an old hand at this kind of thing, we have an increase of some $400 millions represented to us and to the people of Canada as a saving of $80 million.

The President of the Treasury Board laboured manfully—we give credit where credit is due—but one had the impression that he really did not convince even himself. Here is an hon. gentleman whom I am sure was as aware of the nakedness of the pretence he was trying to foist on the house as we all were, but in the presence of jovial Merlin, the wizard from Kingston, of course, he was compelled to plough on trying to transform a sow's ear into a silk purse. Even though the purse was empty, I suppose it was better than no purse at all.

The present Minister of Finance is an old hand at this kind of fiscal sleight of hand. Few will forget his most dazzling performance during the last session when, with copious pages of notes, he managed to show, to his own satisfaction at least, that by not accepting in toto the budgets as presented by each department he had managed savings running into millions of dollars.

There is only one way we can reduce this kind of psychedelic financing—if we have to "make the scene", using the proper terminology in view of the changing scene on the other side of the chamber—to reality. It would be, for example, when a man's wife asks for a mink coat and he persuades her to settle for marten he convinces himself that he is much further ahead. This is the kind of thing that does not show up in a balance sheet. If this is to be the basis of this government's financial policy, it is evident that they can convince themselves they are doing a very fine job as long as their grasp continues to exceed their reach.

I am afraid, and I say this with all sympathy and the utmost good will, this government will have difficulty in convincing anyone above the age of three or four years, at any rate—although they seem to have convinced the hon. member for Trois-Rivières—that increased total expenditures of more than $400 million amounts in reality to a saving of more than $80 million. At least I know that in the part of the country I come from, that kind of arithmetic is looked upon with grave suspicion and would certainly lead to questioning whether those indulging in it were competent to handle this nation's finance. I am inclined to think they are not.

What has been happening? The last financial report of the government, for March 31, 1968, the end of the fiscal year, showed a deficit of some $790 million. By no stretch of the imagination, even of the wizard of Kingston, can a deficit of $790 million be palmed off as a surplus. Therefore, it will have to be made up. On top of that we now have an additional expenditure of $400 million. Therefore, one can see that this government is heading furiously for its first billion dollar deficit. No wonder the Prime Minister took time off a few weeks ago to watch the Canadian Grand Prix. I suggest that he should spend more time watching his Minister of Finance who is now putting on the greatest fiscal Grand Prix of all time.

Meanwhile the previous minister of finance is doing for Biafra what he did for Canada's finances. One can only sympathize and shudder. We have had the excuse that the increases are statutory. Who brought forward the statutes? Whose policies were embodied in those statutes? Whose policy was the kind of medicare which this government has shoved down the throats of the provinces, at fantastic cost?

The Prime Minister said today during the question period, and I am quoting him, "We cannot break an agreement with the provinces". But that is precisely what his government did last year, or was it this year, when it reneged on the payment of the federal share under the vocational school arrangements between the federal and provincial governments. I do not believe there is a premier who did not convey to the Prime Minister and his ministers of the day his resentment of the action of the federal government.

Now, the government has the gall to get up in the house and bleat about the terrible cost of medicare. The former prime minister said it would not cost much, because the majority of the provinces could not afford it. We would have had medicare now if this government had met the provinces halfway and had done what the Leader of the Opposition has been calling upon them for months to do. We would have a medicare program that the provinces and Canadians in general could afford. What has happened in Saskatchewan? The government is forced to increase premiums and the deterrent cost in order to keep that program going. This is the kind of program the government wishes to force upon every province of Canada.

In regard to statutory costs, these are policies of this and the previous Liberal government of ill-starred memory, some of whose proponents are still with us. Now they say: Isn't it too bad. Everything is expensive, and we cannot control these things. If they cannot control these things, the only thing they can do is resign and let somebody who can, control them. Are they telling us now that they did not know what medicare would cost? Are they saying now that they did not take it into account? We have two provinces actually in medicare. They say medicare is throwing out their accounts. Yet the government solemnly stated in this house that they wanted all the provinces in.

You would have to go back to Hamurabi to find shattering evidence of total incompetence such as we have had from this uncertain and confused government. They are blaming the increased costs on the Canada Assistance Plan. They brought in this plan with a heralding of trumpets. Now they say: Isn't it too bad; it costs too much money. Certainly it costs a great deal, because the Canada Assistance Plan has simply contributed to the welter of overlapping, duplication and waste in welfare for which the Canadian taxpayer is having to pay. No one knows this more than the Prime Minister. He says he is taking steps to end it—at least, he has promised to do so—but it appears that he has not yet had time to go into action.

Therefore the country is still saddled with the hodge-podge of welfare bureaucracy with which the Pearson-Sharp legacy has left it. This is where the cost comes in. The Minister of Industry and the President of the Treasury Board get up in this house and cry about these increased costs. I sympathize with them; but why does not the government take action instead of indulging in these shallow attempts to convert real increases in the deficit to imaginary surpluses or budgetary balances? Even that phrase is now forgotten, because it is no longer a balancing of the budget but is referred to as a balancing of the national accounts.

I see no real change. There was supposed to be a fresh, new breeze that would invade this chamber and governmental approaches after the last election. There is certainly no change that I can see either in this chamber or in the policies of the new government. Indeed, the same old bunch is there, and obviously the same old policies are there. There seems to be no real intention of the Prime Minister to weed out the suffocating policies of the past and to follow the oft suggested course put forward, in terms of medicare and better policies, by the Leader of the Opposition and others during the last few months.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, it is a pleasure for me, as a new member of parliament for the constituency of Moose Jaw, to speak briefly on the motion before us at this time. I realize, as others in this house, that the popular thing to do is cry out against government spending, no matter what that spending may entail. However, I am certain that every member in this house realizes that although a few savings can be effected in some quarters, the over-all budget must be recognized as having to be adjusted to the needs of the nation.

The questions I raise are whether the needs of every part of the country are being adequately met and whether assistance is being fairly distributed. I believe it is important for members of the house to understand that the constituency of Moose Jaw is made up approximately in the proportion of 50-50 in terms of rural and urban population. It can be suggested, therefore, that I am fully aware of the problems facing the rural and urban populations.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

I would not like to see this government cut expenditures in fields that are having, and will have, disastrous effects on the economy of the constituency which I represent. I am sure every member of the house is of the same opinion in so far as his constituency is concerned. I am certain that all members of this house, and in particular all hon. members from the west, are aware of the seriousness of the agricultural situation at this very time. I have just returned from the Moose Jaw, Outlook, Davidson, Dinsmore, Central Butte and other areas of Saskatchewan where I have found the situation to be serious, to say the least.

I realize that many members of the house, especially those from eastern Canada, do not realize the importance of the agricultural industry as it affects everyone in this country. I would respectfully suggest that if the agricultural industry suffers, then so does the entire economy of Canada. It is not good enough for the Minister of Agriculture to say that the government is keeping a close eye on things. Action is needed now to provide assurance to our western producer that cash will be available to meet his heavy commitments. There must be a guaranteed price for farm commodities, be they from the east or from the west. The cost of production to the farmer must be recognized and a fair return must be realized by the man who is doing the producing.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that there must be a guaranteed minimum price of $2.12 per bushel for wheat and $3.12 a bushel for the first one thousand bushels of wheat delivered from each farm unit to the domestic market. It has been said by some editorial writers and some members of parliament as late as today that the wheat industry needs no subsidy nor do we need a two price system for our grain. I can only say that it escapes me why the prairie farmers should be asked to subsidize some of the very same people who are saying no subsidies are necessary. Every other wheat exporting nation in the world, except Canada, supports its agricultural economy. I say it is high time that we appreciated the fact that we must support this basic industry.

It would appear to me that it is very unfair of this government to expect the Canadian farmer to compete with the treasuries of other countries, and this is what is happening at this particular time. The other countries are supporting their basic commodities, and we in Canada must do the same. It is high time we took a close look at the situation. It may be interesting to note the drastic change which is taking place in our agricultural industry today. In the year 1942-43, 119,127 permit books were issued in Saskatchewan, while in the year 1966-67 some 92,302 were issued. This means that there has been a drop of some 1,118 permit books a year in each of the last 24 years. I ask that this government realize the plight of the agricultural producer and not cut but rather increase budgets in that area.

Another serious and immediate problem facing the city of Moose Jaw is that of the inability of that city to qualify for the area incentive program. As you know, Mr. Chairman, we are located some 42 miles from a rather large centre to the east of us which has the advantage of being the seat of the provincial government—which, by the way, I am given to understand should have been located in Moose Jaw but was stolen away one dark night many years ago.

It may be that the average wage level and the unemployment level make it difficult for Moose Jaw to qualify for the designated area incentive program. The reason for this of course is that thousands of displaced railway workers, Robin Hood flour mills workers, and packing plant workers, are required to travel to outside locations to find employment, leaving the city in a difficult economic position. The Minister of Forestry and Rural Development said that the government plans on checking this program periodically in order to see where exceptional intervention is necessary to improve the employment situation. I would ask this government to give favourable consideration today, not tomorrow, to the designation of Moose Jaw as a designated area under the area incentive program which was mentioned in the house as late as yesterday. I am completely familiar with the situation in Moose Jaw. Having sat on the city council for four years, I know that we have lost at least four industries which were prepared to settle in our city but which located in another area under the incentive program.

I am given to understand that we may obtain an industry soon if Moose Jaw becomes a designated area. I suggest it is easier, and far more reasonable economically, to stop the disaster which will result if centres such as Moose Jaw are not given the same advantage as others. This matter is urgent, and I ask the government to consider the designation of Moose Jaw as an incentive area.

The third point I would like this government to consider is our transportation system. I do not think that I have to tell the members of this house about the difficulty of travelling from one part of the country to the other. I do not think I have to say how congested our airways are becoming in our young nation. I do not think any of us are looking forward to the day when planes will have to circle for many hours before landing. We all realize that an efficient air travel system costs millions of dollars, and it is safe to say that millions of Canadians do not want to fly when other means of transportation are available.

I have here an article from the Winnipeg Free Press of July 29, 1968 in which it is said that the congestion in U.S. airports is costing the government some $50 million a year. I suggest that if this government took the initiative and instituted an efficient transportation program, then possibly we could save a considerable amount of money in the future in so far as airports alone are concerned. We know that the government must give consideration to the establishment of a more efficient transportation system in our nation, and this must include an efficient rail system from coast to coast. We know the C.N.R. has taken the initiative in so far as passenger traffic on rail lines is concerned, and I suggest it is high time the government gave consideration to the establishment of a committee which would look into the over all structure of rail traffic. I have heard very recently that the C.P.R. is considering taking off eight cars from its transcontinental train, the Canadian. I suggest that those who have tried to obtain space on either C.N.R. or C.P.R. passenger trains are aware of the difficulties which are encountered.

I believe it is time an over-all program was instituted which would take these factors into consideration. I will not bring forth all the problems that are besetting our constituency at this time, but I would like to respectfully suggest to this government that there are areas in our economy that need immediate attention. I have mentioned just a few of these, and although I have not referred to the plight of old age pensioners and those on fixed incomes I expect a government which believes in a just society to have legislation in force in the very near future which would bring relief to these citizens. I ask this government to be realistic in its financial policies and not to favour one segment of our society to the detriment of the other. People must be given equal opportunities, otherwise, they will find it difficult to say "I am proud to be a Canadian".

I say that any deficit incurred by the introduction of a national medicare plan is, in my opinion, well justified. It is only through such a plan that all citizens can receive equal treatment. In my opinion, any member of this house who speaks against a shared cost medicare program must be considered "suspect" and acting on behalf of private insurance companies. I, personally, commend the government for holding its position with regard to the national medicare plan. The people of Saskatchewan know what medicare means and they are not prepared to return to the days where the law of the jungle prevailed. Then, those who had money received treatment and those who were in financial difficulties found themselves treated as second class citizens. The previous speaker mentioned the Saskatchewan medicare program when he was condemning the government for over expenditure. I do not take issue with over expenditure but I do take issue with the protest against an increase in cost in relation to the medicare program in Saskatchewan. Saskatchewan knew that the cost of medicare would mean an increase of approximately 5 per cent per year. The medicare insurance commission's annual report, which has just come out, shows that this estimate was correct. I can assure this house that the people of Saskatchewan realize that medicare is a program which they want. They showed it by voting in six new members of the New Democratic party.

I could dwell at length on the individual items in this interim supply motion, but nothing would be accomplished. My only purpose in bringing these items to the attention of the house is to indicate a few of the areas which need close attention and which need a greater infusion of government spending if conditions are to be improved in this country of ours.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I am happy to have the opportunity to say a few words on interim supply.

I understood that the government or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) wanted to balance the budget this one time. There is talk of balancing the budget, the economy of the Canadian government.

Mr. Chairman, we are in favour of economic balance, but all efforts made to balance the budget have led us to economic and political chaos. That is where the balancing of the present system has led us because it is impossible to try to balance it, because it is mathematically impossible.

By trying to balance the government system, we throw the economy of corporations and individuals out of balance. If we want to balance the government budget, we must impose a higher tax on companies and individuals. Now, by taxing companies and individuals, we reduce the purchasing power, and by so doing, we bring about recession, we increase unemployment, and the consequence is a complete breakdown of the system.

The hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) said earlier that in the present system, it is normal for a government to make allowances for facts, for present circumstances, to get along according to its resources, to rely on others to take action. If there were no other countries, we could not live, we would starve, but as they exist, we have to co-operate.

We have to follow suit. If they are destitute, we must be destitute; if they restrict credit, we have to restrict credit. In order to balance the budget, Mr. Chairman, we must restrict the credit available to the people. This restriction of credit leads to disaster and stagnation for, under our present system, one has to go into debt to do anything. We need money to balance the budget. The government has only two ways of raising money: personal income tax or new loans.

At the present time, the government is practically at a point where new loans are impossible. New bonds worth $500 million were issued at the beginning of the month.

We assumed another obligation because we issued another $500 million, another half a billion dollars, in bonds on June 15 during the election campaign. As a matter of fact, the government of Canada has just floated another bond issue totalling $500 million.

For instance, in the June 15 issue bearing interest at different rates, the highest rate being 7¼ per cent over a period of 27 years, it must be noted that one share of the $500 millions was intended for the reimbursement of $283 millions, at 2¾ per cent, that is an increase of 4½ per cent in the interest rate.

So we are trying to balance the budget by paying more on bonds. We are not even able to buy back our old bonds; we have to get new loans at new interest rates to pay back our bonds. That is why I would like the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to tell us what he will do to balance his budget. If all we can do is strengthen capital, pay more for capital already borrowed to pay it back, if that is all we can do how will we balance our budget?

With regard to the bond issue of June 15, for instance, which bore interest at 2¾ per cent, they cost $27,500 a year per million dollars; now they will bring 7¼ per cent, that is to say cost $72,500 per million dollars, an increase of $45,000 per million dollars, without any more work on the part of those financiers or millionaires who lend money to the government to try to balance the budget. Is that the way to balance the budget? We hear about a just society, a united Canada, economic balance but everything is done to disrupt, to unbalance the economy, to turn economic somersaults, and that leads us also to political somersaults.

With regard to all those 283 millionaires who owned $283 million invested at 2¾ per cent and who will now get 7¼ per cent, that is $45,000 more each year, without working any harder, they will therefore earn $12,735,000 more from the $283 million loan and again the small labour income will be taxed to favour the large management income.

This is a quite recent and obvious fact, and we complain that our just society is continuously widening the gap between the rich and the poor in the same country. We do exactly like the old countries with the same economic and political systems which we have: We widen the gap between the poor and the rich to such an extent that the rich become richer and the poor poorer.

If people have to pay more taxes, to tighten their belts even more, why, for once, everywhere in the world and in our country, Canada, would financiers not tighten their belts a little? Why should we continue to allow this capital and the interest rates to increase at the expense of the individual, of the small wage-earners? It is the poverty of those people which increases; everywhere in Canada, there is a lot of talk about dealing with the problem of poverty; it is a monumental joke. Never, in this house has any party ever solved that problem. As long as such abuses are allowed, we will see a continuation of the present economic imbalance; the more this situation deteriorates, the more the people will be inclined to rebel.

That is where matters stand now, Mr. Chairman. No member of the old parties raises that economic question; none of them is willing to raise that problem which is disastrous, dreadful, unfair to society, that pernicious economic problem which corrupts society the most.

That is where matters stand, Mr. Chairman. In Canada, production is abundant, capitalization too exacting and consumption deficient.

Mention is made of boosting the economy of our country because all great economist, all university professors talk about increasing productivity. We now have a $28 billion surplus in productivity; it is not a problem of production, it is a problem of consumption. No one is willing to finance consumption instead of financing production only.

Production is the starting point of consumption. Production is financed, but nobody wants for anything in the world to finance consumption. Consumption can be financed by the distribution of surpluses in the Canadian economy. Such a distribution can be done easily. But nobody wants to hear about that; therefore, there is no intention of settling the problem, the only intention is to maintain the same economic chaos and even make it worse. We will never solve the problem in that manner.

These three main points are presented in technical terms in a 300 word statement which I made in this house in the past. I already gave the Canadian parliament, through various explanations, the proof, the literature concerning all economic requirements, as well as the evidence given by experts, accountants, bank managers, directors of companies or corporations, representatives of special interest or pressure groups, representatives of all the university, social, national or international fields in that connection.

What we need is the same formula for everyone; a formula for income, expenses and profits. Mr. Chairman we must balance incomes with expenses and profits; taxes with reserves, individuals with families and communities; needs with costs and prices; management with employees and dependants; capital, with work and the right to live. An economic balance must also exist especially between production, consumption and capitalization. This is the great part played by the economy and in that case, nobody wishes to interfere with high society. As long as our executives, our economists, our Ministers of Finance and the members of the house do not wish to intervene to balance the economy especially between production, consumption and capitalization, the problem will exist.

Like everywhere else, production in general is overabundant. We should only have to fill the gaps and the shortages by drawing from the enormous surplus or from the extravagant reserves. There are extravagant reserves, Mr. Chairman, which are allowed by the Minister of Finance, by the government in power, but those extravagant reserves, which are hidden, which are secret or semi-secret, are never touched. As to the capital surplus, it is not taxable.

If you do not have any money, instead of always emptying the pockets of those who, owing to the present system have already too little or are already short of money, go and see where the reserves are hidden, go and see where there is too much money and take it. You will then be able to finance and balance your budget, while at the same time providing a minimum of security to various corporations or individuals.

All this can be done by the federal government in Ottawa. Under the present constitution, no other group, not even the provinces, has the power to stop the central government from regulating currency, credit, banks, the circulation of money, capital interest and the rights of Canadian citizens of which the first is the right to life.

Under the Canadian constitution, it is definitely up to the government to fix interest rates, but the government is evading its responsibilities. It is allowing interest rates to fluctuate according to the trend on the market. The market, the stock exchange, and all those bodies which are exploiting the people are tolerated and approved by the present government and the present Minister of Finance.

If we cling to this monetary system to try and have a balanced economy in Canada, we will never come within reach of it. We will never be able to have a balanced economy if such corrupt practices are not eradicated, because they are prejudicial to all citizens who have a right to the good life in this country that overflows with riches. The country is rich, but its people are poor, they are starving, they are taxed and in debt up to their necks.

Expenditures exceed the estimates of governments of all levels: federal, provincial and municipal. The same situation exists for school boards, and in 99 per cent of Canada's economic agencies. And we think we can balance the budget with the principles, the data and the practices of the past, when such principles and practices have led the country to disaster and to ruin.

The present problem is supposed to be settled without anything being done about our economic disaster.

The most important of all justices, Mr. Chairman, is the economic justice. It is the justice of the primum vivere assured to each Canadian citizen, the basic justice. Everything else will come to boot. First things first. All this cannot be obtained immediately within the framework of the present monetary system. No need really to change anything. Just let us find out where things went wrong.

There is a gross injustice in the income tax schedule. The taxpayers pay $3 of income tax while corporations pay $1, a $2 difference. Corporations enjoy extraordinary privileges as far as income tax is concerned. Individuals, on the other hand, have to pay their taxes in full. Their income tax is deducted from their salary, it is deducted from their pay cheques. One steals from the working man, one steals the bread from the mouth of Canadians, from the poor ordinary citizen, but one lets large corporations get richer by allowing them to pay less taxes than the wage-earner.

When a corporation pays $1 in income tax, the individual citizen has to pay $3. And this does not take into account the extravagant reserves and all kinds of privileges which enable corporations to capitalize exaggeratedly and by all kinds of means. Those who know what is going on in financial circles are well aware of this.

Mr. Chairman, the economic potentialities of our country have increased at a vertiginous rate, but with our present system of increasing debt, we are inevitably heading for the abyss, where we are being precipitated head down as our country is in the process of being built. Those who are putting us head over heels in debt are slowly choking us. The present government allows it, as did the former government.

If we accept scientific and technological progress, why not also accept progress in the field of public financing? Social credit would specifically allow man a just share of the manufactured products.

There will be more and more unemployment amongst Canadian workers if we refuse to recognize the primacy of man over money.

Automation should please man and help him, instead of crowding him towards poverty and that type of insecurity which lowers him in his own eyes.

Instead of being cool towards the logic of our principles and philosophy, the people, the various classes of society, social organizations, everyone should realize that they provide the only way to give man access to the goods created by machines, progress and science.

We have reached that turning point in the economic activity of our country. We must accede to progress through social credit, lest we be smothered by progress as it exists in our present economic system.

If we really want security with freedom, it is up to the people to make a choice. The financial problem is everyone's problem. Social credit alone tackles money problem, current problems.

Instead of taming men, women and children, as the old parties do or have done in the past, social credit wants to tame money and credit, so that human beings can fulfil themselves freely.

As much money and credit must be made available to the people as there are goods and services. That would make for a balanced Canadian economy, that would ensure honest comfort to each and everyone. We could increase family allowances. We could pay higher pensions to the elderly, the disabled, the blind and the veterans.

Let us use the Bank of Canada to that end, to facilitate the development of our natural resources to finance the provinces, municipalities and school boards, to help the farmers and promote housing.

Instead of levying taxes on building materials, we could readily help the taxpayer by abolishing the tax levied on those materials and by lowering interest rates and thus reduce administrative costs, instead of tolerating usurious interest rates as the old parties have done since confederation.

Except for depressions and wars, what did the old parties bring us? We had the Grits for 22 years and the Tories for five. What was the difference between the two of them over 27 years?

Mr. Chairman, it is time to put our cards on the table. We are not satisfied, the Canadian people are not satisfied with the present system operating in our country. There is general dissatisfaction, there is fear, insecurity and unnecessary hardship. A great deal of essential goods are lost and, on the other hand, two thirds of the people of the world go hungry.

It is a barbaric absurdity. For lack of figures, human beings are dying and our governments, which see all those people die, still refuse to establish figures.

The banker's pen increases the figures only by increasing debts. Since no one likes to get further into debt, they avoid the banker. There is a shortage of debts, but we can see no abundance of debts.

No other alternative but to turn to the banker to satisfy our right to necessities. It is not the will of God that there should not be any borrowing facilities. Those are rules made by our governments, by men, by human beings who call themselves intelligent.

They merely say: Working men, farmers, increase your production, bring out the goods of the earth. As the banker does not bring out his credit at a rhythm equal to your bringing out the goods of the earth, you will have to give them away or let them perish or stop producing them. Bring up children, good Canadians; give them a good education by dint of privations, prepare them for life, but as the banker will not allow any credit at the same rhythm you are bringing up children and educating them, your young people will not be able to sell their labour, they shall be unemployed and shall lament over irretrievable errors.

When it comes to money and figures giving access to goods, man is being adjusted to figures. Man is there, hungry, while there is an abundance of bread, a lack of credit; no credit be given, bread will mildew and man will disappear. That is what we are coming to with our economic system.

Mr. Chairman, I would still have many things to say, but I will limit myself to suggesting that as long as we have not assumed our responsibilities and as long as we have not adjusted our economy to the present goals and real facts, we will be faced with the discomfiture of economic and political somersaults.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, for several days I have been endeavouring, along with my colleagues, to secure some statement from the government on the subject of international and commonwealth events. It is now evident that the house will not have any opportunity to discuss these questions for weeks, if not for months, to come.

This is a subject which the government is not very anxious to discuss, or have discussed, because in the period since June 25 the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, have gone from bungle to bungle in connection with several matters. I mention immediately that although the Prime Minister is not in the house his office was notified that I intended to deal with some matters in connection with which mention would be made of his stand; I can appreciate, knowing the weight of responsibility which rests upon him, his inability to be here. This afternoon as I look over the house, realizing that we are dealing with a most important matter involving the expenditure of vast sums of money by way of interim supply, I begin to ask myself whether we in this chamber are discharging our responsibility of examining the expenditures of the government.

May I point out that before the election was called three months' interim supply was passed. During the four month period after the election the government secured its supply by way of Governor General's warrants. Now, it is asking for a further three months' supply for October, November and December. Hundreds of millions, billions of dollars are involved. How many ministers are here? Three. Is it any wonder that my hon. friend from Yukon should ask: why should this government wish to follow the course enunciated yesterday under which ministers would stay out of the chamber more often. This is one occasion, connected with the expenditures of the country, which demands their presence. I know they are busy—turning out press releases. But the time has come when the people should know that by this scant interest they show contempt of the chamber to which they give their vocal allegiance.

In the past several months, and I intend to refer particularly to international affairs, Canada has sunk to its lowest level in the opinion of other countries in consequence of the uncertainty which has been shown and the loose statements which have been made by the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, a state of things which can only lead to international misunderstanding and international chaos. Before I turn to this subject, however, may I say that I was glancing through the general summary of expenditures this year in which are set forth the savings being effected. One of them is $34,368,200 in connection with the centennial commission. They are not spending that amount this year. That is understandable because the centennial is past. But they put in a saving of approximately $35 million in order to bolster up this fancy variety of financing in which they are indulging. The people need not be deceived. I have to be careful in the choice of words, and I say the Canadian people are going to get the greatest taxation picking that this country has ever known because of the wastefulness of the government.

I remember how they spoke in such pious terms and said that the day of deficits was past. That was back in those dark years of 1963. Today we face the largest deficit in Canada's history at a time when there is an expanding economy, because of the fact that waste has become the yardstick on which this government operates.

I want to be fair. Speaking the other day about the just society, and looking at all the M.P's who have been honoured by securing highly paid positions—some did not run; others ran, also ran—I said that the just society was apparently just for Grits. I have to amend that. Today, a new sense of responsibility and respectability is added by the fact that Hon. Michael Starr has been joined with the 15 or 16 others. All I can say is that the addition of Mr. Starr reduces my previous observation by one eighteenth.

Mr. Drury: We seek talent where we can find it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I must hear those words from the hon. gentleman. I don't want to miss anything. What did he say?

Mr. Drury: I just remarked that we look for talent where we can find it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There are still quite a few defeated Liberal candidates and I can only be convinced they don't have those qualifications. I certainly realize their qualifications don't equal Michael Starr's. When this government starts running out of Grits for appointments we are indeed approaching the millenium.

All over the world we find peoples and nations at loggerheads with Canada. When the government picked the Rossillon affair I think it went to the bottom of the barrel to find something on which it could build a case. It has all the earmarks of a smokescreen to cover up the international shortcomings of the government. Our troubles with the United States began in the summer in connection with the underselling of wheat in various parts of the world. When we were in office we told them, "You shall not do that." But the United States administration today does not pay much attention to what Canada says, and Canadian notes.

You will recall the famous case of Hal Banks, when the government of Canada was greatly shocked by the political conduct of the Secretary of State in the United States in doing something in an election year that had not been done by the administration in that country throughout the years, overruling their pseudo or semi-judicial officers. Then after that event, which I criticized at the time as a political event, we find that a very fabulous sum was advanced by Banks' trade union to the Democratic party shortly after Mr. Banks received that declaration of purity and freedom from extradition.

I have been wondering why it is that France and the United States have practically turned their backs on Canada internationally. However, the answer is clear when one reads a statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He piled up deficits and was not able to carry out properly his financial responsibilities, but now he is tinkering in international affairs in regard to which his knowledge is certainly not of the best. He made a speech in which he said, "We go all over the world distributing money". Look at the distribution.

I find in the general summary that the external aid office this year will expend $142,503,000, or $9,315,000 more than last year. I always thought these expenditures were for the purpose of raising standards, to assure the people in lesser economically developed countries that they would have new opportunities. But that is not so today.

Here is what the Secretary of State for External Affairs said in Edmonton on June 10:

> Canada will limit the number of countries it will help . . . beneficiaries will be the West Indies, some French speaking countries, mainly in Africa, and countries already under the Colombo plan—

That is all right if the sentence ended there, but then the minister gave the reason for these contributions:

> Canada's aim is to check American influence in the West Indies and France's influence in its former colonies—

Did you ever hear of the granting of international aid on such a basis, that you are trying to undermine American influence in the West Indies, and the reason you are giving assistance to former French colonies is in order to separate them from de Gaulle and the government of France? That is the most frightful commentary on the unaltruistic purposes for which assistance is being given today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is hard to understand. If he were not a man of sober second thought one would come to the conclusion that he spoke under the inspiration of the moment. In effect, the minister said we are operating in the West Indies and helping their people so that American influence will be diminished.

Mind you, cabinet ministers in the last few days have been very concerned about Africa and the feelings of African countries. Yet, the Secretary of State for External Affairs says we are going into Africa to see whether or not we can chisel away any close relations between France and her former colonies. Actions like that certainly do not breed good feelings internationally.

Then we come to the field of the Commonwealth. I do not apologize at all for mentioning the Commonwealth, but it has become one of the dirty words in the government's vocabulary. There is no mention any more of the Commonwealth. I wonder why. For several years I endeavoured to secure the consent of the various Prime Ministers to meet occasionally in Commonwealth capitals for those conferences that bring together the various nations. At one time there were only two or three who objected. In 1968, the Prime Ministers of the Commonwealth offered to come to Canada for the first time in all history, and the government of Canada said no. If I understand the reason it was, "We are not ready for them." This is a strange commentary on a government that one would think would realize the strength, the efficacy and the mission of freedom of the Commonwealth.

I am not going to mention the crown today except in a passing way. The other day in the house I said that for some reason there was no mention of the Queen or the crown in the speech from the throne. The only reference to the throne is in the name of the speech. I wonder why? Well, I made a remark the other day and it was challenged. I obtained a copy of the special program on the Liberal leadership convention which was a remarkable effort on the part of the C.B.C. I enjoyed every bit of it. It was well constructed by Cameron Graham, one of the finest producers we have in our nation. At page 12 we see what the announcer said:

The most important regional meeting of Liberals is at the end of January in Montreal. It's the first opportunity for Pierre Trudeau to demonstrate his platform style, and the verdict of most of his audience is ecstatic. He is confronted with a tricky political problem when the delegates pass a resolution to abolish the monarchy in Canada.

I do not know what was tricky about it. The Secretary of State voted for its abolition and now he is one of the cornerstones of the government of Canada. So, there is no penalty to anyone who holds the view that there should be abolition of the monarchy. Here is what the Prime Minister said when speaking to newsmen after the Montreal Liberal meeting:

Question: Was it just an accident that you weren't in there when the vote was taken?

Trudeau: It's an accident, yes.

Question: What would you have done? How would you have voted?

Trudeau: I probably would have voted against it, but just because I like to be against the current, I suppose.

Now, there is the highest justification for anyone to vote against the abolition of the monarchy; he preferred to be against the current. Then, the questioning continues:

Question: You would not have abstained though?

Trudeau: I might even have abstained. I think I would have voted against,—yeah.

I think that is the proper pronunciation of "yeah".

Although probably that's just because I'm an ornery person.

We never found him that way. We heard him today benign, unsaturnine and attractive in the way in which he answered questions. He said:

If I'd have been completely logical—

Now, this is where the mind comes into it. He went on:

—I would have abstained because I . . . you know, I don't give a damn.

I thought the Prime Minister said that he had not uttered those words. That is the attitude of the government on the question of the monarchy. "I don't give a damn." That is not enough. This Commonwealth means more. Our constitution says that parliament consists of the Queen, the Senate and the House of Commons. Surely, an answer such as that is bound to rouse feelings of annoyance, exasperation and worse.

Let us pass on to the question of Czechoslovakia. In the month of May NATO was to be emasculated. It was said that our troops were not needed over there any more and that they should be brought home. The Prime Minister said—and I always have the quotation for those who would like to have it—that so far as NATO is concerned he would retain the political membership. One week before Russia moved into Czechoslovakia one of the representatives there said that there was no danger whatever. What about all these people who are over there? They do not know what the U.S.S.R. is going to do. We know today how they strike against their friends. Yet there are those who say they have turned over a new leaf and that all is going to be well. That sort of talk should be all over now that we have seen the fate of Czechoslovakia.

What did the Canadian government say about Czechoslovakia? Well, the first observation by the Prime Minister was, "Let the people behind the iron curtain stew in their own juice." He let these people behind the iron curtain stew in their own juice. This is no longer a private member but the Prime Minister of Canada speaking of a country where the little bit of freedom was breaking down under the tanks and troops of the U.S.S.R. What did the Secretary of State for External Affairs say? His words were these, "The attack on Czechoslovakia is disappointing." Is it any wonder people are asking what is this government's concept of international affairs. There have been two versions of the "stew" observation. One is that if the iron curtain countries are having troubles at home let them stew in their own brew. The other is, "Let them stew in their own juice". Neither is the kind of observation that a great nation like Canada should be making. This was the Communist "Munich" for Czechoslovakia. It will not be the last. The U.S.S.R. promised to get out. They are still there and they are buying winter clothing which means that they intend to stay, and Canada says, "Let them stew in their own juice."

After three or four weeks of prodding the government did decide to let some of these refugees into Canada, but for four long weeks this government did nothing but cynically stand aside and look upon Czechoslovakia as just another country.

Then we come to the question of Biafra. That is one of the most sordid stories in Canadian history. The Secretary of State for External Affairs swings his arms out widely and says he is a humanitarian. Humanitarianism will not meet the situation in Biafra while thousands die each day. The people of Biafra will not survive by the use of empty words which is the result of a bureaucratic balancing act by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Just think of the cynicism in the answers given regarding Biafra. On July 10 the C.B.C. inquired of the Prime Minister what Canada was going to do with regard to Biafra. This was just two and a half months ago. His answer was, "You have the funniest questions." What is this? Is this an appreciation of the seriousness of events there?

Later he said aid might be sent to all the needy persons, but it could not be sent to everyone. I should like to see what the priorities are that rate before the needs of the Biafra people. That is not the attitude of a government filled with the spirit of humanitarianism as voiced by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

What are you going to do about the situation? The members of the opposition have pressed for action. What answer did we get again today? We received a cynical shrug and the answer that nothing can be done. Weeks ago we told the government to try to bring this matter before the United Nations and we were told that could not be done because the government did not know how to draft a resolution that would be humanitarian. It didn't want a political resolution, but for God's sake, will this government act now when thousands are dying? The answer we receive is that the government must be careful because 27 African states believe that this is an internal affair. These are most of the African states to which we are giving aid. Are we giving this aid, as suggested, to undermine the relationship between them and the republic of France?

The Prime Minister had an interview, program no. 51-22103-8001, and he was asked about this question. He said:

—it wasn't my purpose to try and achieve any awards for the Speech from the Throne or from my speech in the debate. That's not the object of government, is it, to get bleeding hearts or purple hearts,—

He finally ended up in the course of that interview by saying this:

Well I'd like to discuss it with you, Mr. Lynch. I would like to discuss it with the Canadian people because my heart bleeds as much as anyone else's when I know that people are starving. But there have been civil wars before, and the question is, once again, that the African states decide that this thing is an internal question.

He went on to say that if we act we will have our planes shot down. Why will Canada not act by placing a motion before the United Nations? If the other nations will not join Canada, we will at least have given the lead to the world by saying that this is wrong.

Why is there this unimaginative diffidence to act? Sometime the government will have to act, perhaps when these people over there are all dead. Perhaps then this government will step in and say it will put a resolution before the United Nations. I suggest in all seriousness that something should be done now. I agree that the government cannot do everything and may not get such a resolution through but at least if it tries, Canada will be taking a stand which it has not taken up to now. All the elusive evasiveness of saying that we have sent over quite a bit to Lagos, and we are sure that somebody is getting it, does not help. There is no way that we can force the government to act on a matter like this. The inertia of the government in respect of this matter cannot be met by an opposition that is smaller in number, but at least we can present a viewpoint and ask once more that the government take action.

I do not know who is the acting minister or the acting acting minister of external affairs, but I take it—what is his portfolio—it is the Minister of Industry and so on. I can never keep up with the way you fellows change because you change like a shuffleboard. You go round and round, but I do not intend to deal with ministers without portfolio today. We do have a Minister without Portfolio from Saskatchewan in the chamber. All I can say to him is that I would have liked to see Saskatchewan represented by a minister rather than one without portfolio.

One begins to realize now why the government does not want international affairs discussed. There has been one fumble after another. The government created this smokescreen as a result of the Rossillon affair, and it has fumbled in respect of Biafra and Czechoslovakia. This is a government that sits, listens and wonders. At some time, it will have to act. We ought to have a debate on international affairs. The Prime Minister today brushed aside our questions. He often looks over at us as though he wondered how he ever got here. His attitude gives the impression that he wonders why we discuss matters like this when his government is in office. My mind goes back to February when they threw the rule book out the window and the then Minister of Justice said in effect: We are your masters. The government had a minority then, but today it has a majority.

Mr. Nielsen: Heaven help us.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The masters of February have a majority today with the result that we are faced with the largest deficit in history. We now have millions and millions of bushels of wheat in storage, and no attempt is being made to face the problems of western Canada, or problems in general; yet taxes have been increased three times in the past two years. This is the government composed of all the whiz kids.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock, in order for the house to proceed to the consideration of private members' business, shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

REFERENCE TO TABLING ANNUAL REPORT

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, before we proceed to Private members' business I wonder whether I might have the permission of the house to revert to motions to refer to the report of the Cape Breton Development Corporation which was tabled in English on April 23 of this year, and on September 19 of this year in French, referred to in the question asked by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I think it might be of assistance to hon. members in the house to indicate that the report, being the annual report of the Cape Breton Development Corporation for the year ending December 31, 1967, was tabled in English on April 23 of this year, and may be found at page 841 of Votes and Proceedings. The French language version was tabled on September 19 of this year. In addition to that, at page 50 of Votes and Proceedings, there is the following notation:

Interim capital budgets of the Cape Breton Development Corporation for the year ending December 31, 1968 pursuant to sections 21 and 26 of the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act, 1967, together with a copy of Order In Council P.C. 1968-709 dated April 10, 1968, approving same. (English and French).

This is in respect of the matter the hon. member inquired about this morning.

Mr. Donald S. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, having regard to the question I posed earlier today, let me say that I was aware of this fact. I wanted to know when the government was going to make public this report in view of the requests by the people of Cape Breton. In addition, I am glad to have discovered that someone in the government has finally found out which minister is responsible and has come up with an answer that could not be provided this afternoon by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and three of his cabinet colleagues.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills, private bills.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND APPLICATION TO PROFESSIONAL SPORTS

Mr. Donald S. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-2, to amend the Combines Investigation Act (professional sports).

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am reintroducing this bill. It was originally put forward by the then hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard on February 25, 1966. Because that hon. member is now present in the person of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford), I reintroduce the bill with all the confidence in the world that he will stand up and support it. I am also confident he will persuade his colleagues on the front benches and the back benches on that side of the house to support it.

I am sure the bill will have a speedy passage, because of the remarks of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) during the election campaign when he told an audience in British Columbia that every major city in Canada is entitled to an N.H.L. team. I realize that as far as T.V. returns are concerned, this will be painful. I know that an expansion of the N.H.L. to include Vancouver, Calgary, Saskatoon, Regina, Hamilton, Fredericton, Saint John, Halifax and St. John's, Newfoundland, will be quite a task. But the Prime Minister thinks this should be brought about. In view of the fact that the member who originally introduced this bill is now a minister, and the Prime Minister is very much in support of it because he also indicated his intention to carry out an investigation of professional sport. I fully expect the bill to be passed this afternoon.

As I have said, the bill was originally introduced by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and has received the support of the Prime Minister, according to the statements he has made. The purpose of the bill, of course, is to bring professional sports under the Combines Investigation Act. I do not expect the minister to support something that is in any way different from the bill he introduced, and therefore I shall quote the remarks of the minister as reported at page 1779 of Hansard for February 25, 1966:

> This bill will amend the Combines Investigation Act to provide that those who conspire or combine together to limit or restrict the opportunity in Canada of persons to participate in or observe any professional sport and which operates against the public interest shall be guilty of an offence and liable to imprisonment for two years.

With those words, Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks and look forward to receiving the full support of the Prime Minister, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, his colleagues in the cabinet and government backbenchers.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this excellent bill, No. C-2, to amend the Combines Investigation Act to include professional sports within the purview of the act. I foresee very good prospects for its ultimate success, because the history of this measure is that it is supported by at least three of the parties represented here. It was introduced by a member of the government, the then hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, on two previous occasions, as Bill No. C-132 in 1966 and as Bill No. C-99 in 1967. Also, as we have just heard, the bill was introduced by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis). Therefore, it apparently enjoys the almost unanimous support of this house.

As a member from a riding in the greater Vancouver area, I have a particular reason for being sensitive about the way professional sports franchises are awarded. This is not only because recently, in spite of substantial federal and local investment in the most modern sports facilities in Canada, the $6 million Coliseum in Vancouver, that city has twice been turned down by the N.H.L. in its request for a major hockey league franchise. The reason given originally for this refusal was that Vancouver had no suitable rink. This reason is no longer pertinent. The specific reason for the latest refusal escapes me at the moment, but I think it revolved around the proposed ownership of the team and the franchise applicants, who were somehow undesirable.

We of Vancouver also recall that some 15 years ago our first request to have a Canadian football league franchise was rebuffed. Our subsequent application was successful. However, I will not dwell or elaborate upon B.C.'s professional football team. In any event, hockey fans where I live are being denied the opportunity—and I quote from the bill—to participate or observe professional hockey as it applies to the major league. Some people where I live are unkind enough to say that the lower mainland people cannot watch first-rate hockey because a three-way split of television revenue would obtain, instead of the present rather comfortable Toronto-Montreal arrangement of lucrative television proceeds.

The former hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, now the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, had this to say when introducing his bill in 1966. I shall not read the same portion of his remarks as was read by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond. Further down on page 1779 of Hansard for February 25, 1966, the then hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard is reported as having said:

> While this amendment includes all professional sports it is immediately directed at the National Hockey League whose president, Mr. Clarence Campbell, has made it clear that its owners are interested only in their own welfare and not the public interest.

I am certain that members of my party would agree wholeheartedly, as I do, with this statement. Since it was pointed out previously that the matter of combines legislation comes under the direct authority of the hon. member who previously introduced the bill, the now Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the amendment before us should proceed with the speed of lightning.

This is a very fortunate private member's bill indeed, Not only was it originally sired by the minister directly concerned, but it has been adopted by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond, and I would be pleased to act as its godfather. But if this were not enough, at least two other ministers of the Crown have spoken in positive terms about the sentiments expressed in the bill. On June 4, 1967, the then registrar general, now the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), was reported in the Toronto Star as follows:

> Ottawa to rule 'pro' sports Turner says.
> Registrar General John Turner said in the commons yesterday the government intends to put professional sport under the regulation of federal authority.

The article further says:

> He said he hoped the Combines Investigation Act can be amended soon to include professional sport.
> Today, an official in the combines branch revealed that the government move was touched off by Vancouver's failure to get a National Hockey League franchise. When the N.H.L. doubled in size this year by adding six teams, the new franchises went to U.S. cities.

One year later, on June 4, 1968, the government re-emphasized its position when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stated during an election campaign visit to Selkirk college in Castlegar, British Columbia.

> "The federal government must do more for sports," he said. New N.H.L. franchises have gone entirely to the United States instead of partly to Canada, while U.S. baseball's national league has awarded a franchise to Montreal.
> Every major Canadian city is entitled to an N.H.L. team, the Prime Minister said.

It appears then that we have what amounts to an all party agreement that professional sport is indeed a big business and that clearly it belongs within the regulatory conditions of the Combines Investigation Act.

There is one other aspect of the bill to which I wish to turn my attention for a moment, and that is the phrase "restrict the opportunity of Canadians to participate in". I should like to put the emphasis on the words "to participate in" professional sports because I believe that it expresses the personal freedom aspect of the bill as opposed to the public interest aspect which I have just discussed.

With the growth of television sport programs and the attendant commercialism, an inverse relationship is developing whereby major leagues are growing at the expense of the minor leagues. In the short run there are fewer opportunities for athletes to earn their living by doing things they do best and like to do best.

Since there are fewer opportunities for professional athletes to learn their trade in independently owned minor leagues and teams, there is a consequent limiting of a player's freedom to sell his services to his own best economic advantage. Particularly pernicious is the current vertical integration of the sports industry which allows an "owned" player to be consigned to the minor leagues—on occasions permanently and without his consent—at a time when other major leagues could use him and he would like to play for them. This is feudalism of the worst possible kind and a direct invasion of the rights and freedoms of an individual.

The Carl Brewer amateur reinstatement case was a recent example of the power of the N.H.L. owners, but most fans will remember how early attempts at forming a hockey players union—a right now given freely to other citizens in an enlightened age—were crushed by the moguls.

Questions about players' contracts have been raised repeatedly in this house, so it is not a matter of small concern or even a new one to the people of Canada. Just over a year ago the N.H.L. governors finally accepted, after a difficult fight, a players association, not a union but a fairly innocuous sounding thing called an association, to fight for players' rights and contracts.

The fight is far from won, and that is why we need to pass this bill as it is, paying special attention to the phrase "the right to participate in professional sports" for the sake of the individual athlete. I am not speaking now of the star or the exception, but rather of the average athlete whose professional life is exceedingly brief—it is even worse than a politician's—and much of whose time must be devoted to his profession so that often little time is left over for him to prepare for another career when his playing days are over.

In conclusion, I want to make two points. There are powerful lobbies constantly at work both here and in the United States to exempt professional sport from the anti-trust legislation. Over the years the U.S. congress, especially in the 1950s, has been bombarded to exempt professional baseball, football and hockey from the anti-trust legislation, and many attempts have nearly succeeded. In 1961, the sale of television rights was exempted. Senate judiciary committees in the United States have made anti-trust recommendations relating to sport. I cite these cases to indicate that a large section of the people in the United States and their elected representatives have had reason to believe that professional sport is a big business, a virtual monopoly, and needs greater public control.

The final point I would like to make in support of the bill is to say that I think we can take one further step along the road to encourage greater interest and accomplishment in Canada's young athletes and thereby stimulate Canadian pride inspired by such people as Barbara Ann Scott, Harry Jerome, Nancy Green and Jean Belliveau. "Champions", says Nancy, "provide the impetus to get people participating at the grass roots level".

I commend the bill as a measure to bring champions and major sports to more people in Canada sooner, to encourage our athletes to stay in Canada and to receive recognition by playing for Canadian teams before live Canadian audiences. May I also remind hon. members of the statement made by the Minister of Health and Welfare on August 14, as reported in the Toronto Star, when speaking about the new sport task force when he said "I can't really see how the franchises come within the terms of reference".

I am certain that this bill will ensure that individual and public interests are well cared for. I, therefore, believe we should pass the bill with all possible haste.

Mr. Hyl Chappell (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, while I admire the desire and the attempt of the mover and seconder of the bill to break the hold of these so-called sports barons over their athletic serfs, or to put it another way, to loosen their tentacles from the youthful players in the hockey farm systems, I must speak against the bill because in my opinion it is not possible to accomplish the desired result by a public bill. Nor do I believe it is wise to consider a sport amendment to the Combines Investigation Act at a time the whole field to which the act relates is under intensive study and review.

Since February 29, 1966, the date referred to by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis), this is what has happened. In July, 1966, the late Hon. Guy Favreau, former president of the privy council and the minister then responsible for the administration of the act, announced that the whole subject of consumer affairs, including combines and restraint of trade, was being referred to the economic council for a comprehensive review and for a report. He also said that any amendment to the legislation should be in keeping with the fundamental philosophy of the act and that it would be unwise to enact temporary or piecemeal amendments.

In March of 1968 the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), then minister of consumer and corporate affairs, stated in the house that the prohibitions in the Combines Investigation Act did not cover the service factor of the business community under which sports would be classified but related only to articles which could be the subject of trade or commerce, their transportation, storage or rental. He also asserted the desirability of obtaining a possible new jurisdiction, namely civil jurisdiction, for enforcement of the act under the trade and commerce head of section 91 of the British North America Act. At that time he pointed out that the specific subject, as referred to the economic council, was still under consideration by them.

The director of investigation and research, under the act, in his report tabled in the house, stated that a research study into service industries, at present not within the scope of the act, including professional sports, was in progress. At present, parliamentary authority to legislate in this area rests upon jurisdiction in the criminal law field. Because of the nature of the enforcement, the act appears criminal in purpose. However, it is well recognized that at least to date the purpose of the legislation is an economic one, namely, to provide competitive behaviour and thus to maintain free and open competition as a stimulus to the optimum use of resources in a free enterprise system.

It may very well be that the economic council may find a concurrent basis for authority under the trade and commerce head of section 91 of the B.N.A. Act which would then allow civil enforcement. In my opinion it would be much better if those entrusted with the enforcement of the act had the alternative of proceeding by civil action, leaving to criminal proceedings only the most flagrant violations.

In a criminal prosecution, the proposed indictment usually goes before a grand jury which can throw it out, and sometimes does. If the grand jury allows the matter to proceed, a criminal trial follows. The criminal process is long and expensive. Quite often the prosecution is not successful because the issues are numerous and complicated and the onus of proof is heavy in a criminal case.

While I was acting for the prosecution in a case under the Combines Investigation Act, I was struck by the time and expense necessary to prepare to prove all the details required in this type of criminal prosecution. I expressed the view at that time, and do so again, that breaches of the act could, in most cases, be dealt with more efficiently and with less expense in a civil action.

What are the advantages, Mr. Speaker, of proceeding in a civil action? First, there is an examination for discovery, which is like a pre-trial examination of the other side under oath. At this time admissions can be obtained as to the great majority of the facts and all of the documents are produced and admitted. This would narrow the issue and reduce the number of witnesses at trial. This in turn would cut the length of trial and expense. For years these lengthy proceedings under the Combines Investigation Act, proceeding as they have on a criminal basis, have been congesting our courts and slowing the judicial process. The average length of time for one of these proceedings is from one to two months.

One might ask how a civil procedure could be effective when we cannot provide for punishment by fine, as in a criminal case. We must remember, however, that in civil proceedings we have the injunction or restraining order which is most effective. If, after the injunction is granted, the breach of the act continues, an application can be made to have the directors and officers of the corporation committed to jail or fined for contempt of court. This can be far more effective in enforcing the act than a fine against the corporation, which is usually paid out of the corporate treasury and does not cause any hurt to the person who caused the offence. Further, in a civil case the offending corporation would be required to pay the legal costs of the proceedings against it, which in many cases would exceed the amount of the average fine imposed.

Another possibility is the consideration of the American system where an independent commission issues a cease and desist order, leaving it up to the alleged offender to show that the order should not stand.

Section 32 of the act to which the proposed amendment would be attached, and under which most of the prosecutions are brought, reads as follows:

(1) Every one who conspires, combines, agrees or arranges with another person:

(a) to limit unduly the facilities for transporting, producing, manufacturing, supplying, storing or dealing in any article,

(b) to prevent, limit or lessen, unduly, the manufacture or production of an article, or to enhance unreasonably the price thereof,

(c) to prevent, or lessen, unduly, competition in the production, manufacture, purchase, barter, sale, storage, rental, transportation or supply of an article, or in the price of insurance upon persons or porperty, or

[Mr. Chappell.]

(d) to restrain or injure trade or commerce in relation to any article, is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for two years.

I emphasized the word "unduly", Mr. Speaker, because it appears in the first three paragraphs (a), (b) and (c). There have been many judicial interpretations of the first three clauses. The Supreme Court has stated that section 32 is designed to protect the public interest in free competition, and that it is a crime to conspire, combine, agree or arrange to unduly prevent or unduly lessen it. The statute proceeds upon the footing that the preventing or lessening of competition to the prohibited degree is in itself an injury to the public.

I do not know of any prosecution under paragraph (d) to which the proposed paragraph (e) is similar in thought and wording. In the first three paragraphs the word "unduly" is used, and this is a guideline for the courts. But under paragraph (d) there is no guideline and no words of limitation. The words are so wide as to be practically meaningless.

The proposed amendment, which if agreed to would be paragraph (e), appears to follow the thinking in paragraph (d) and simply states that to limit or restrain persons from participating in or observing sport to the detriment or against the interests of the public is an offence. A prosecution under this paragraph would indeed be most difficult, and I feel would not accomplish the result sought.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, as proposed paragraph (e) reads it is conceivable that a charge could be laid against a coach for benching a player or against a refereee for suspending a star player for two or three games, particularly if this occurred during a national play-off. Is that what we seek to have included?

In any event, Mr. Speaker, the proposal is out of step with the philosophy of the act. It does not deal with maintaining competition among employers of athletes as with other employers covered by the act, but rather seeks to protect the rights of people to participate in or observe a professional sport. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, if the act is to be widened to include services, as the Economic Council and director of investigation and research under the act may very well conclude, it may be that many other services should be covered,—I can think of many but I shall not name them—in which event all of these new sections should be drafted together to conform with the over-all philosophy of the act.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, while I support what the mover and seconder of this bill and the earlier bill wish to do, I think it unwise to amend the act in this manner when it is most doubtful that it could bring about the desired result. The research that is going on will probably produce a far more effective and efficient procedure.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this bill because my interest in it arises from the fact that it is an attempt to break open the combines act and to bring in a new type of offence or new type of matter which is not there now. As has been mentioned by other hon. members, the combines act presently covers offences relating to the sale of or trading in commodities; it does not deal with the sale of or trading in services.

For some time now I have supported movements to change the act to cover services. This bill is an attempt to amend the combines act to bring within its terms professional sport. While I support the thought and principle behind this attempt, I think it would be bad legislation if we amended an act such as this, or any other act, merely to bring in individual instances each time there was a complaint. This time it might be professional sports; another time it might be the laundry business or business consultants, and so on. A public service industry might be involved. I submit our legislation would be much improved if we amended the Combines Investigation Act to cover the sale of services as well as the sale of commodities.

Some hon. members of the house and many members of the public wonder why it is an offence to restrain trade and fix prices with respect to the sale of commodities when it is not an offence to fix prices with respect to the sale of services. There seems to be no good reason for the distinction. Looking at the history of the act we see that when it was first passed the main problems related to trade in commodities and not to services. Then service businesses were operated under small proprietorships in local shops, and so on, and competition was intense. Now large syndicates are in the service industries. Appropriately, as mentioned in this bill, one must include all professional sports, which are very big business indeed.

I would be favourable to amending the Combines Investigation Act but I want the amendment to bring in not just professional sports but service industries generally, included in which are the professional sports industries.

We are told that the director of investigation and research for the combines department often receives complaints related to combines in service industries. Since his authority is limited, he has not been able to take action. In some instances where the applicability of the act is uncertain, that is, in gray areas, there have been actions before the courts in cases where services have been tied to the sale of commodities. For instance, there is the well known case of the Queen V. Beamish Construction, which went to the Ontario Court of Appeal. In this case different construction men combined together before submitting construction bids to the Government of Ontario, I believe. They were charged under the Combines Investigation Act and the Ontario Court of Appeal decided that since these men were to build something for the Ontario government they were combining to sell services; and the sale of services did not come under the act. Therefore, what happened was found to be not illegal.

There is also the case of the Queen V. Canadian Coat and Apron Supply, in which a company was charged with violating the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act in that it was restraining trade with respect to the supply of towels and laundry services to different businesses. That case was dismissed because the court found that the company performed a service; and service industries, even in instances where commodities were involved, were not covered by the act.

I think, therefore, that the act ought to be amended to cover service industries, since there may be a restraint of trade which involves services as well as commodities. I submit that this ought to be considered. As the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Chappell) said in his speech, the entire Combines Investigation Act and all pertinent combines legislation has been referred to the economic council for consideration and recommendation.

A major complaint against the Combines Investigation Act is that there is confusion in the minds of many about its true principle or purpose. Is the Combines Investigation Act designed to attain economic goals or is it principally criminal legislation? Many, including economists and experts in this field, feel that the Combines Investigation Act, in its concentration on restraints of trade, concentrates too much on the fact of combines rather than on what may be good for the economy. It has been suggested that we ought to decide whether a combine or a monopoly is good or bad for the country. In drafting or applying such legislation consideration ought also to be given to the state of employment in the economy, to the balance of payments, to the effect that any particular industry has on our foreign trade, to the formation of domestic capital, to the question of the ownership of Canadian industry and to regional development and economic planning. All those factors ought to be taken into consideration before we decide whether a combination or monopoly is illegal. The present act does not allow for these considerations.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Would the hon. member permit a question? There has been reference to the fact that this bill, in referring only to professional sports, is narrow. Before others of the hon. member's party attempt to talk the bill out, does the hon. member not think it might be a good idea to allow the hon. member who originally introduced a similar bill, the hon. member who is now the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Mr. Basford to say whether he now supports the principle of the bill he previously introduced.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. If the hon. member has a question he ought to ask it now.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): With respect, sir, I submit that the Chair ought to govern the conduct of hon. members according to the rules of the house. I do not think it is the duty of the Clerk of the house to interfere with proceedings in the house or to call to the attention of the Chair what is happening in the house.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I have the floor. I heard the question and am willing to answer it. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond—I preferred the name of the old constituency, Cape Breton South—asked me, I think, if I should like to see the minister introduce a bill similar to the one I am suggesting ought to be introduced. I say, yes. I feel that perhaps—

[Mr. Allmand.]

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I said nothing about having the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs introduce an amendment to the bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. There is no point of order.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is not entitled to put words I did not say into my mouth. I said nothing about the introduction of any bill by the minister. I asked whether the minister would support the bill he originally introduced. I believe that bill was allowed to carry and, as I recall, there were objections at that time—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, if I had had a chance to look into that bill when it was introduced my criticism of it would have been similar to my criticism of the hon. member's bill this afternoon.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Is that so?

Mr. Allmand: I have great respect for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I know that when he introduced his bill he was so taken up with the situation in Vancouver at that time that he did not look at other aspects of the matter. I know that today the minister takes a broader view.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Oh.

Mr. Allmand: The hon. member had a chance to speak this afternoon. He took that opportunity and now I wish he would remain quiet while the rest of us are attempting to make our speeches.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Allmand: I believe that now that the hon. gentleman is a minister and has responsibility for this legislation he would agree that it would be better to make provision for a broader amendment which would include all the service industries, among them professional sport. In fact, I believe the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond would also approve of this suggestion. I notice he took up the exact wording used by the minister when he drafted this bill; there was not much originality shown on his part. But he supports the principle, and I believe he would also support a broader amendment which would cover the service industry generally.

When I was interrupted I was discussing the need for an even more drastic amendment to the combines legislation because, as I have said, the present legislation does not consider the ultimate goal which a combines act is intended to achieve; it does not consider a situation in which combines and monopolies might be in the best interest of the economy. In Britain, in the common market countries and in Australia, changes have recently been made in the combines legislation to allow these factors to be taken into consideration. These countries have legislation similar to our own. Restraint of trade is illegal, but they do provide, now, for a situation in which the establishment of a monopoly might work to the benefit of the economy as a whole by speeding industrial growth, helping the employment situation, advancing foreign trade, and so on.

A number of studies have been made on this point including a most important one by V. W. Bladen and S. Stykolt who wrote a paper entitled "A Combines Policy in the Public Interest". They stated that the Canadian combines policy had paid too much attention to the form and too little to effects; that competition, as it had been interpreted by those administering the policy, had seemed to be an end in itself rather than a means to an end, that end being a well functioning economy delivering the maximum amount of goods and services at a minimum real cost.

In other words, what we need is a complete revision of this act, taking into consideration the part which combines might play in helping a society achieve its economic goals. The economic council has been asked about these things and we shall have to await a report. In the meantime, with respect to this bill, let me say I would support a measure which would include professional sport but that if we are to amend legislation as important as combines legislation we should not do so piecemeal but include an amendment which would cover all the service industries.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): I commend the sponsor of this bill. I know he has a great personal enthusiasm for this measure, an enthusiasm which is shared by many members of this house, particularly, I think, by some of the members from the province of British Columbia.

We have reached a point where professional sport, indeed all the service industries, should be made subject to combines legislation. This amendment is a good amendment but it does not go far enough. I am confident that the report of the economic council will propose that regulations be more far reaching than the type anticipated in this amendment. Professional sport in this country, now growing at a phenomenal rate, should be regarded in the same light as any other business enterprise. Cartels in professional sport are just as wrong as cartels which operate in restraint of trade and against the public interest in any other sector of the economy. Yet some of the professional promoters, particularly the hockey moguls in Canada today, attempt to suggest to us that their sole interest is to provide leisure-time entertainment for the working people of Canada and that profit is the furthest thought from their minds.

They claim they are not in business, that they are sportsmen, and that because they are sportsmen their activities in the area of professional hockey and football should not be made subject to the normal regulations which apply to industry in Canada. They say they are not in sport for money; they just want to provide lots of fun for Canadians on Saturday nights. And when it is suggested that they should be made the subject of investigation they throw up their hands in horror and say they are being dealt with unfairly and that they are victims of discrimination.

The plight of the hockey barons in Canada today is somewhat less tragic than the plight of little Eva hopping about on the ice floes. The National Hockey League is big business in every sense of the word. Last year Maple Leaf Gardens Corporation netted a profit of $900,706. In the six months ending February 29, 1968, they netted $735,702. The Canadian Arena Corporation of Montreal in the year ended June 30, 1967, realized profits amounting to $487,658 and in the year ending June 30, 1966, $506,233. The current market price of Maple Leaf Gardens stock, one of the hottest on the market at the present time, is $32.88, today and the Price of Canadian Arena Corporation stock is currently $355.00.

These are interesting figures in relation to an industry which says it is not really in business at all. It is estimated that the philanthropic triumvirate made up of Stafford Smythe, Harold Ballard and John Bassett have seen their extensive holdings of Maple Lead Garden Corporation stock increase in value five times since they purchased it, and on the basis of the $3.10 a share dividend declared last year each of them or their companies trotted home with half a million dollars in dividends alone. I suggest there are many companies in Canada governed by combines legislation which failed to match this heady and scintillating performance. Yet we are told professional hockey is not big business in Canada.

Ask the people of Vancouver what they think about the N.H.L. and whether or not it is big business. Two years ago our great Canadian game of hockey pioneered new territories. It was expanded. It was not a case of "go west, young man." It was "go south to the United States, where the action is." Did Vancouver, or Calgary, or Winnipeg get a franchise? Were the Maritimes even considered? No! It was the "hot" hockey cities of Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Philadelphia, Oakland, Los Angeles and Minnesota which were awarded franchises. Vancouver, with the finest hockey arena in the world, seating over 15,000, was left out in the cold.

Forget about the fact that Vancouver is a great sports town. Forget about the fact that even with a somewhat indifferent football team we can fill Empire Stadium with 30,000 fans for every home game. Even forget about our history as a former Stanley Cup city, for indeed we were competing for the Stanley Cup at one time. Forget about our contributions in men and money to the national game of hockey. Forget all about that. The franchises went to the United States, to some centres where the fans could not care less, where they did not know what was taking place on the ice. Oakland, California, had 1,500 fans for one game, watching a listless team, in a centre filled with bewildered, dispirited people.

Why was Vancouver left out? Mr. Clarence Campbell and the directors of the N.H.L. said they did not think the quality of the Vancouver presentation was adequate. Mr. Speaker, the person who was going to help to run hockey in Vancouver was Foster Hewitt. But they said that he did not know enough about hockey. The fact is not that Vancouver lacked experienced management. The fact is that Mr. Stafford Smythe came to Vancouver and he wanted the people of Vancouver to give him, free of charge, a vast chunk of real estate in downtown Vancouver where he said he would erect a hockey stadium. He wanted, in effect, a licence to print money. He, was very upset at the ingratitude of the natives of British Columbia when we rejected his proposal.

More important, these sportsmen, these philanthropists of the N.H.L. did not want to split up the $2.5 million that they get each year from television rights. They did not want to divide it three ways with another Canadian club. More than that, Mr. Speaker, when they looked at the television possibilities of those United States "markets" they fairly drooled, and any suggestion that they wanted to advance Canada's national game in other Canadian centres went completely out the window.

What do these Canadian sports bosses want this year? There are record profits at the Gardens, and record profits at Montreal, but now they want $4 million for the television rights. They have not given any indication that they want to divide this money with new clubs in the Maritimes or with clubs in Vancouver, Winnipeg, Calgary, or any other centre. In Maple Leaf Gardens seat prices are going to be boosted again. This is not bad for an organization which says it is in a non-profit business, that it is not really in business at all, that it is really 'just there to please folks". British Columbia has been patted on the head. They say that if we stand in line, if we watch our P's and Q's and if we are loyal to N.H.L. standards then, when they expand again, we just might get a franchise. I tell you this, Mr. Speaker, the people in western Canada are not holding their breaths.

Then, there are some people who say that this is a business which should not be regulated. What about players' contracts? Here again the N.H.L. is riddled with restrictions on freedom. Where else in the world would you find a situation where a hockey player, when he decides to retire, cannot find work in any other hockey organization, even upstairs sweeping the floor, unless he gets permission from his former owners?

Take the case of Red Kelly, a former member of this house. What happened to Red? You read about it. Most of you sports fans know. He retired from the Leafs and wanted to coach the Los Angeles Kings. The Leafs management told him, "You cannot get that job with the Los Angeles Kings unless we make a deal with the Los Angeles club." The fact is that under the feudal sports baronies established in the National Hockey League, Red Kelly couldn't sell popcorn for the Los Angeles Kings unless he got the approval of Stafford Smythe and his pals.

There are still some people in Canada who want to defend the status quo. They say it is the same all over the world. It is not, Mr. Speaker. Take the case of the Baltimore Colts' Ray Berry, an outstanding player for the Baltimore team. The day he retired he was hired by the Dallas Cowboys as end coach. He had his new job the following day. There were no deals, no feudal property rights involved. He was a free man. In England soccer players are often sold by their clubs. "Transfer" is the word they use in England, and the price may go up to $300,000. What happens when a player is transferred from one team to another in Britain where they are very zealous about the protection of human rights and freedoms? The player is called in and asked if he wants to be transferred. If he says yes he gets a percentage of the transfer fee. In Canada, if an N.H.L. player does not report to the club to which he has been sold then that is the last time he puts on skates in Canada or anywhere else.

How long are we going to tolerate a situation like this in Canada, let alone the matter of the profits? The Profits which are being gathered by these organizations are not subject to regulations affecting normal business. Some sports writers have said that N.H.L. players are well paid. Some of them are, but others of real talent are languishing in the minors, caught in that feudal web where their rights are restricted, a web which prevents some of them from making the N.H.L. with some other team. Clubs should not be able to send players to the minors if other N.H.L. clubs can use them.

I believe that players should be tied to specific clubs only for the length of their contracts instead of being the lifetime property of the clubs with which they sign. In any other business, and hockey is big business, if an employee works with a major company and fulfils his obligation to that company, he can go to work in an ancillary field. Why are civil rights denied to so many of our professional athletes?

Professional sport must be placed under federal regulation, but this should go beyond professional sports. It should also apply to service industries, and we should make sure that the kind of legislation which we pass in the House of Commons is going to be air tight, is going to be water tight, that it is not going to be possible for some of these professional sports promoters, making millions of dollars as they do each year, to find a loophole through which they can drive wedges to the detriment of the public. The sooner this is done the better, especially in view of the substantial increase in leisure time which will result in expansion of professional sports of all kinds.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the Combines Investigation Act must be amended to provide that those who conspire to combine, to limit, or restrict the opportunity in Canada of persons to participate in or observe any professional sport, and which operate against the public interest, shall be guilty of an offence and appropriate action taken. I look forward to the recommendations which will come from the economic council, and let us hope the government acts on a broad scale, not on the worthy but limited scale suggested in this bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Before you announce the adjournment of the house, Mr. Speaker, could I just confirm for the benefit of hon. members that, subject to the arrangements we made earlier this day about the possibility of the house sitting later on Monday, we will continue with the debate on interim supply.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It being six o'clock p.m. this house stands adjourned until Monday next at 2.30 in the afternoon.

At 6.01 p.m. the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, September 30, 1968

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BIAFRA—TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE WITH UN SECRETARY GENERAL

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The government has now received a reply to its letter to the Secretary General of the United Nations. I should like to table copies. In view of the interest shown in this subject I wonder whether the house would wish to have this reply, together with the original letter which was tabled in the House of Commons earlier, printed as an appendix to Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house wish these documents to be printed? Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: For text of letters referred to above, see appendix.]

PLUTONIUM—ANNOUNCEMENT OF SALE TO FRANCE

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Officials of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and the French Commissariat à l'Energie Atomique have for some time been engaged in discussions in order to work out satisfactory arrangements for the sale to France of plutonium produced in the Canadian nuclear power reactors at Rolphton and Douglas Point, Ontario. These arrangements have been completed and have now been approved by both the government of France and the government of Canada.

The French Commissariat à l'Energie Atomique has undertaken intensive research in the development of plutonium burning, fast breeder, nuclear power reactors. Although France is able to fill some of her requirements for plutonium domestically, additional quantities are required in order not to delay the development program. Current Canadian programs, on the other hand, do not fully utilize the plutonium being produced in our reactors. Discussions between the French Commissariat and A.E.C.L. on the possible supply of plutonium from Canada, therefore, came as a natural outcome of the collaboration between the two government agencies.

It is a long standing policy of the Canadian government that nuclear materials be exported from Canada for peaceful purposes only. With the full agreement of the French government it has been decided that the plutonium which will be used in the French civil nuclear program will be transferred to France under the provisions of the agreement between Canada and the European Atomic Energy Community, of which France is of course a member. This agreement provides for the application of EURATOM safeguards, and for procedures whereby Canada may obtain assurance that the Community's safeguards and control system is satisfactory and effective for any material transferred under the agreement from Canada to the member states of EURATOM. The role is fully compatible with Canada's signature of the test ban treaty and of the NPT.

I should also like to point out that the agreement concluded between Canada and India in 1963 regarding the construction of a nuclear power station in Rajasthan, India, similar to the Douglas Point nuclear power station, provided for reciprocal bilateral safeguards on the Rajasthan and Douglas Point nuclear power stations and any special nuclear materials produced in them. The government of India has therefore been consulted regarding the safeguards arrangements to be applied on transfers to France of plutonium produced in the Douglas Point nuclear power station.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy Royal): The statement just made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs is interesting. It would be better, of course, if spokesmen for other parties had been given some warning so that useful comment could be made.

I am sure this party is delighted to know that emphasis has been placed on non-military use, and also that there is provision for full inspection. I hope France has been urged to sign the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we should simply like to congratulate the government on having taken a firm stand in connection with these arrangements, namely its insistence on the provision that the plutonium we are to export will be used for peaceful purposes only.

While I am on my feet I think it might be useful to suggest once more to this minister and to all ministers that when statements of this nature are to be made on motions it would be an act of courtesy if copies were provided to spokesmen of opposition parties.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, we are happy also to hear the minister's statement to the effect that the plutonium transaction with France has been concluded. It is true that, for some years, the Canadian government's policy had been to refrain from any transaction if that metal was to be used for war purposes. But since the French government gave the assurance that this plutonium will be used for peaceful purposes, in France as well as throughout the world, I feel that the Canadian government deserves to be congratulated on its firm stand.

Like those who spoke before me, I would ask the minister concerned and his cabinet colleagues to let us know before hand when they have important announcements to make to the house in order that we may be able to express more easily that we have to say on those various subjects.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CHEESE EXPORT INCENTIVE SUBSIDY

Question No. 14—Mr. Caouette:

1. Does the Department of Agriculture pay an export incentive subsidy to cheese producers in Canada?

2. If so, what was the total amount paid in each province in the last three years?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): 1. No. The Canadian Dairy Commission pays an export subsidy on cheddar cheese exported to Britain through its export equalization fund established by a deduction from the direct milk subsidy payments made to producers of manufacturing milk in Canada.

2. Export subsidies on cheese for the past three years totalled: 1965-66, $1,065,492; 1966-67, $1,349,731; 1967-68, $1,554,300.

Export statistics are maintained on a national basis only and it is not possible to identify the province of origin of the cheese exported. It is estimated, however, that approximately 25 per cent of the cheddar chese exported to Britain is of Quebec manufacture and the balance mainly from Ontario.

REFIT BIDS FOR GOVERNMENT SHIP "NEW LISKEARD"

Question No. 16—Mr. Crouse:

1. Has the government reversed its policy of calling for competitive bids on the refit of government-owned Canadian ships and, if so, on what date was the change announced by Cabinet?

2. Were competitive bids called for the refit of the government research vessel New Liskeard?

3. What are the names of the refit yards bidding on this work and the name of the successful contractor?

4. Who determined the nature of the repairs required on the New Liskeard and the amount of money to be spent for this work?

5. Is the New Liskeard presently under refit and, if so, what is the name of the company doing the work?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Defence Production): 1. No. The government has not reversed its policy of calling competitive bids for the refit of government owned vessels. The shipbuilding procurement policy approved by cabinet in July 1965 is still applicable.

2. Yes. An invitation to tender was issued on September 20, 1968.

3. The following firms received the invitation to tender. Questions

3. Have any of these battalions been disbanded, or are to be disbanded?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): 1. and 2. 3. Have any of these squadrons or companies been disbanded, or are to be disbanded?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): 1. and 2. 2. What strength does the proposed new war establishment provide for signal squadrons or companies?

3. Have any of these squadrons or companies been disbanded, or are to be disbanded?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): 1. and 2. 2. What will be the war establishment of these RCEME units and detachments consequent upon the reductions in strength announced for armoured, artillery and infantry units?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): 1. and 2. It is not considered to be in the public interest to divulge war establishments of military units, nor is it departmental policy to release individual unit strengths. R.C.E.M.E. personnel assigned to active fighting units are no longer identifiable as organizational entities. However, as of July 1, 1968, there were 3 field workshops with a total strength of 680. These workshops, as such, will be absorbed into service battalions.

REGULAR FORCE ARTILLERY REGIMENTS

3. Have any of these regiments been disbanded, or are to be disbanded?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): 1 and 2. As of July 31, 1968 (a) how many officers and men of the Canadian Forces were serving in fighting units of the forces (i.e. ships, battalions, regiments, air squadrons, etc.) (b) how many personnel were engaged in administrative, training and other non-fighting jobs?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): All personnel of Canada's armed forces are trained for combat duties. It is difficult to distinguish between personnel engaged in "fighting jobs" as opposed to "non-fighting jobs". However, as of July 1, 1968, out of 99,817, there were approximately 9,900 and 23,400 combat officers and men respectively performing administrative, training, and other related duties.

TENTS AND PORTABLE COTTAGES, PRINCE ALBERT NATIONAL PARK

Question No. 46—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Has the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development received representations from the Cabin Tent and Portable Cottage Association and/or the Provincial Government of Saskatchewan requesting that the order made to discontinue shack tents and portable cottages of the Prince Albert National Park in the National Park should be revoked?

2. Will the government give reconsideration to the decision made in this regard?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Yes. The members of this association have expressed concern lest the department revoke annual permits and summarily evict their members from the park. Nothing can be further from the truth. The department has not issued any such order. Effective May 1 new permits will not be issued for cabin tents but all persons who held permits in 1967 will be permitted to renew these annually for as long as they desire. The purpose is to permit long range development of prime public lands occupying the best beach areas in the park for the benefit of all visitors.

ARMED FORCES PENSION FUND

Question No. 60—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Is it the intention of the government to initiate action to tie the serviceman's pension to the cost of living index and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, when?

2. Is it the intention of the government to initiate measures to use the pension fund to improve pensions for servicemen, decrease the contributions now required of servicemen, harness the fund's growth for any purpose which may provide greater benefits to the serviceman, in each case, and, if not, for what reason?

3. Is it the intention of the government to allow this pension fund growth to continue indefinitely, without adjustment, and, if so, does the government intend to use the fund for purposes other than those for which the fund was established, if not, what does the government intend to do with the growing fund's net surplus?

4. Is this pension fund capable of sustaining the increase that would result from tying the pension of those now serving in the Armed Forces to the cost of living index, without increasing the financial burden to the taxpayer, and, if not, for what reason?

5. What is the average number of monthly pension payments being made to a serviceman from his retirement to death?

6. What is the current life expectancy of the male and female respectively, statistically?

7. Will the government consider adopting measures to tie the pension of servicemen to the cost of living index and, if not, for what reason?

8. Will the government consider adopting measures to tie the pension fund to improve pensions for servicemen, decrease the contributions now required of servicemen, harness the fund's growth for any purpose, provide greater benefits to the servicemen, and in each case if not, for what reason?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): 1. The government is still studying its position on introducing amendments to the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act.

2. No.

3. As indicated in the report on actuarial examination of the Canadian forces superannuation account in the consolidated revenue fund as at December 31, 1965, which was tabled in the house on September 12, 1968, and the deficiency reported therein, there is no surplus available to use the fund for any other purpose than that for which the statute provides.

4. No.

5. and 6.

Members of the forces retiring at	Average number of monthly pension payments from retirement to death		Current life expectancy

8. In view of the deficiency reported in this latest valuation, there is no surplus available to carry out any of these measures.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

ARMED FORCES PENSION FUND

Question No. 61—Mr. Forrestall:

1. (a) What is the current cost to the public for training a transport pilot, a combat pilot, a radio navigator, a dentist, a medical officer and a lawyer (b) what were the total training costs to the public in each category for 1966 and 1967?

2. What was the value of the servicemen's pension fund in the fiscal years 1965-65, 1965-66, 1966-67, respectively, and what is the current value?

3. During these same periods, how much has the servicemen's pension fund paid out to retired service personnel, and how many officers and men respectively were paid?

4. For the same years, how much money was paid into the pension fund by servicemen, and how many officers and men were involved?

5. What was the growth rate of this pension fund for the same periods and what is the current interest rate applicable to the fund for calculation of the annual growth?

6. Is it the intention of the government to initiate action to obtain professional pay for the Engineers of the Armed Forces and, if not, for what reason, and if so, when?

7. Will the government consider adopting measures to establish and provide professional pay for Engineers in the Service?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): 1. (a) Transport pilot, $112,500; Combat pilot, $197,000; Radio navigator, $90,900. In so far as a dentist, medical officer and a lawyer are concerned, the cost of their training is for the training they undergo when entering the service to become officers, having completed their professional training prior to entry. This amounts to approximately $3,500 per officer. It is not possible to isolate the individual cost under the subsidization scheme whereby medical and dental officers are assisted in completing their professional studies. (b) The accounting and financial system within the department is not designed to produce this data.

2. January 1, 1968, $2,686,160,343.

3. (a) January 1, 1968, $37,469,385.

See Hansard 5/12/66 page 10701, and 22/11/67 page 4562, for balance of reply to 2 and 3 (a).

(b)	Officers	Men
1964-65	4,075	8,762
1965-66	4,972	11,338
1966-67	5,690	13,610
Jan. 1, 1968	6,106	14,813

4. (a)	(b)	(Estimated)
		Officers	Men
1964-65	$35,431,743	16,768	98,024
1965-66	34,391,596	16,003	91,834
1966-67	25,349,494	15,651	87,693
Jan. 1, 1963	26,853,077	16,388	86,314

5. See Hansard 5/12/66 page 10701.

6. This question was considered at the time of the 1966 pay reviews and the decision made that the pay rates for regular line officers are appropriate for officers qualified as engineers.

7. No.

3. What is the position of the federal government on the Quebec-Newfoundland dispute over ownership of Labrador?

4. Has the federal government held discussions with the Government of Newfoundland about Labrador and, if so, what was the nature of these discussions?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. No.

4. No.

CHANGES IN RURAL MAIL SERVICE

Question No. 86—Mr. Coates:

1. How many rural post offices in Canada have been closed or are to be closed in the remainder of the present fiscal year and since June 25, 1968?

2. How many rural routes have been cancelled by the Post Office Department or are to be cancelled by the Post Office Department in the present fiscal year and since June 25, 1968?

3. How many extensions to existing rural routes have been approved since June 25, 1968, that involve the cancellation of existing rural routes?

[Translation]

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): 1. Sixty-four Rural Post Offices have been closed during the present fiscal year, and it is expected that approximately 250 additional Rural Post Offices will be closed in the remainder of the fiscal year. All closings have taken place since June 25, 1968.

2. Fifty-six Rural Routes were discontinued since April 1, 1968, and it is not known how many more may be discontinued during the remainder of the fiscal year. Of these 56, 28 were discontinued since June 25, 1968.

3. Extensions and rearrangements to 27 existing Rural Routes have been approved since June 25, 1968, to serve the patrons of the Rural Routes discontinued since that date.

AIRPORT ACCOMMODATION FOR SUPERSONIC TRANSPORTS

Question No. 89—Mr. McCleave:

1. What are the lengths of the longest runways at Gander, Halifax, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Calgary, Edmonton and Vancouver airports?

2. Has the Department of Transport carried out studies to determine which, if any, of the above airports could accommodate supersonic transports (hereinafter referred to as SST's)?

3. If so, what are the results of such studies with regard to (a) length of runways, and (b) weight-carrying capacities, of each airport?

4. Who is carrying out the SST studies by the Department, and approximately how much money is being spent on same?

5. Do such studies consider the noise nuisances created by SST's, and methods of overcoming the same?

6. If the noise level is considered excessive to humans and domestic and wild life (a) is the Department considering the location of SST airfields where such nuisance would have a minimum effect, or (b) is it considering a legislative ban on flights, because of such circumstances?

7. When are SST's expected to be ready for regular commercial travel?

8. What is the average amount of time that is taken in Canada to develop new airports, or to make drastic alterations to older ones (with examples)?

Hon. James Richardson (Acting Minister of Transport): 1. Gander (8,900 feet), Halifax (8,800 feet), Montreal (11,000 feet), Toronto (11,050 feet), Winnipeg (11,000 feet), Calgary (12,675 feet), Edmonton (11,000 feet) and Vancouver (10,600 feet).

2. Yes.

3. (a) Preliminary manufacturer's performance specifications indicate that sea-level runway lengths of 10,500 feet (Concorde) and 7,650 feet (Boeing 2707) would be required when operating at maximum gross take off weights.

(b) With respect to weight loadings not all runways and taxiways at the specified airports would be capable of handling SST aircraft, however, each of the eight airports has at least one runway and adequate connecting taxiways to permit SST operations.

4. A Department of Transport Air Services SST study group, in consort with the air services aviation systems planning group, is monitoring all developments of the SST programs and adapting Department of Transport planning techniques and philosophies to meet the emerging requirements. Consultations with major air carriers and manufacturers are held on a regular basis for exchange and coordination of all pertinent information. Canada is also represented on the International Civil Aviation Organization technical panel on supersonic transport operations by an official member from the Department of Transport.

No direct expenditures are incurred by these studies. Members of the study teams are regular air services employees.

5. Yes. This is an international problem being studied vigorously by all concerned. In the Department of Transport a sonic boom/noise "subcommittee" of the SST study group is engaged in continuing studies related to the over-all assessment of these problems.

6. Considerable research is being conducted in the United States and United Kingdom on the physiological effects of noise and sonic-boom overpressures on human and animal life. These and many other studies are being closely monitored by the SST study group subcommittee on sonic boom/noise.

(a) Locating SST airports in remote areas would certainly be given consideration if results of the research studies suggested this course of action. Hopefully, technological advances will preclude this necessity.

(b) The Department of Transport has every intention of protecting citizens, animal life, and property from any inherent dangers associated with the noise and sonic-boom phenomena generated by SST aircraft. Under the authority of The Aeronautics Act (part I) a regulation has already been promulgated which states that "No aircraft shall be flown in such a manner as to create a shock wave, the effect of which is to create or likely to create a hazard to other aircraft or to persons or property on the ground." (The air regulations, part V, para. 515.(c))

7. As near as can be determined the Concorde would enter commercial service in early 1972 and the Boeing 2707 in late 1976.

8. Airports range in size and complexity from a simple, small, single runway to a sophisticated international airport with a complex and intricate system of runways and facilities. The former could take up to two years to complete from land acquisition to completion, while the latter could require anywhere from five to seven years. Pitt Meadows, B.C. fits into the first category (two years) and Edmonton international airport the second category (seven years). On the other hand Toronto and Montreal international airports as well as other major airports are constantly undergoing changes, alterations and modifications to keep pace with the unprecedented growth rate of passenger and air cargo traffic.

CELEBRATION OF BATTLE OF BRITAIN

Question No. 93—Mr. McCleave:

1. Did members of the Canadian Armed Forces take part in ceremonial parades and church services marking the Battle of Britain and, if so, in what centre or centres?

2. Were wreaths placed by the Canadian Armed Forces in such memorial services on Battle of Britain Sunday?

3. Has the role of the members of the Canadian Armed Forces been restricted or eliminated with reference to Battle of Britain observances and, if so, on what authority?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes, as follows: (a) Ceremonial parades and church services were held at CFS Sydney, Moncton, Chibougamau, CFS Lac St. Denis, CFS Moisie, CFB North Bay, Ottawa, CFS Moosonee, Kapuskasing, CFS Falconbridge, Toronto, CFB Winnipeg, CFS Gypsumville, CFS Beausejour, Moose Jaw, CFS Yorkton, CFS Alsask, CFB Penhold, CFS Dana, CFS Beaverlodge, CFS Holberg, CFS Kamloops, CFB Comox, Victoria. (b) Special church services were held at CFS Gander, CFB Greenwood, CFB Summerside, CFB Halifax, CFB Shearwater, CFB Cornwallis, CFB Chatham, CFS Val d'Or, CFS Mont Apica, CFB St. Hubert, CFS La Macaza, CFS Sioux Lookout, CFS Armstrong, CFS Senneterre, CFS Ramore, CFB Portage La Prairie, CFB Cold Lake, CFS Baldy Hughes, Venture Division Fleet School Esquimalt, 1 Air Division Europe. (c) Ceremonial parades were held at Saint John, Bathurst, Chatham, CFB St. Jean, Goderich, Peteborough, Brandon, Edmonton.

2. Yes, at Moncton, Saint John, Bathurst, Chatham, Ottawa, Kapuskasing, Peterborough, Toronto, Brandon, Gimli, Moose Jaw and Edmonton.

3. No.

BANK OF WESTERN CANADA

Question No. 125—Mr. Paproski:

1. What is the present status of the Bank of Western Canada which was chartered by Parliament over two years ago?

2. Is it in process of liquidation and, if so, has or will the charter be surrendered and when?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. A special general meeting of shareholders of the Bank of Western Canada held on September 14, 1967 voted in favour of winding up the Bank. A winding up order pursuant to the provisions of the Winding-up Act was issued by the Manitoba Court of Queen's Bench on October 30, 1967 and the Clarkson Company appointed as liquidator. On February 1, 1968, the liquidator made a payment to shareholders of $13 per share. On August 14, 1968 it was announced that the liquidator expected to make a final payment to shareholders in October 1968 and that the expected amount of that payment was between $1.60 and $1.75 per share.

2. As indicated in the answer to question number 1, the Bank of Western Canada is still in the process of liquidation. The Bank Act is the charter of each bank named in schedule A of that Act. The name of a bank remains in schedule A until it is removed by act of parliament. If a bank's capital has been returned to its shareholders in the process of liquidation, in view of the provisions of section 37 of the Bank Act, such a bank would be unable to use its charter without specific government authorization.

HOUSING DEVELOPMENT, SCARBOROUGH TOWNSHIP, ONT.

Question No. 128—Mr. Brewin:

1. What is the present status of plans to develop housing on the approximately one thousand acres at Malvern in Scarborough Township on the property acquired by the federal-provincial partnership in 1953 for housing?

2. Have definite plans been made for provision of services and on what date is it anticipated that the actual housing will be built and available for occupation?

3. Are any of the houses to be made available to Ontario Housing Corporation or other authorities for public housing?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): 1. Following a feasibility study, sponsored jointly by the federal-provincial partners in 1967, consultants were appointed in March 1968 to prepare a development plan for the Malvern Lands. Provided a plan of subdivision can be registered by mid-1969 it is expected that the installation of services will be underway by the end of that year.

2. The appointed consultants have responsibility for the design of services and supervision of their installation, the timing of which is covered in 1 above. Actual house construction will follow immediately on the installation of services.

3. Yes.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED U.S. REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN BUDGETS OF ALLIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of reports that the United States has asked its allies to increase their defence budgets I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether any such request has been made of Canada. If so, what has been the reply of the Canadian government?

Hon. Michell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as Secretary of State for External Affairs I received a note from the Secretary of State of the United States at the end of the week in which the United States expressed its views concerning what should be an adequate response by the NATO allies to the invasion of Czechoslovakia. There was also a comment in particular about the kind of response they would like Canada to make. No reply has as yet been made. I doubt very much whether a reply will be formally made.

All these matters are to be discussed at the NATO council. At that time Canada will indicate its general position.

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask, simply for clarification, whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs is not prepared at this time to say what are the suggestions of the United States with regard to this matter.

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker. I expect that as matters develop there will be an opportunity to be more specific about Canada's plans, but at the moment we have simply received these representations from the United States and they are under study. I do not think it would be appropriate for me to reveal them at the moment. They were presented to us in the form of a general view of the United States that there should be a firm response from the NATO allies to the invasion of Czechoslovakia.

Mr. Stanfield: After the government has had an opportunity to consider the request will the Secretary of State for External Affairs be prepared to make a statement on this matter, giving the house this information?

Mr. Sharp: At the appropriate time, when the government has reached a conclusion as to the general plans, I am sure the house would expect me to reveal them and would expect that indeed there would be some debate on the matter.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the report is correct that he will not be attending the meeting of the NATO foreign ministers? If that is correct, who will represent Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows he must ask the question directly, and must not ask the minister to either confirm or deny a report.

Mr. Winch: May I ask whether the minister intends to be at the NATO foreign ministers conference which has now been called.

Mr. Sharp: The meeting which is to be held in New York is a meeting of the foreign ministers who will be in New York to attend the United Nations general assembly. Unfortunately the invitation I received was for a day for which I had made a prior engagement some months ago. I felt that I could not break this engagement because of the inconvenience I would thus cause to a great many people. However, I shall have an opportunity later to discuss with the same foreign ministers the subjects which will then be under discussion.

Mr. Stanfield: Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs be represented at this meeting of NATO, and if so by whom?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am not certain this will be necessary. This is not a meeting of NATO; it is a dinner being put on by Dean Rusk of the United States to which he has invited the foreign ministers who happen to be there, but not all of us will be there.

EXTERNAL AID

BIAFRA—AVAILABILITY OF CANADIAN AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in view of the Prime Minister's announcement that he is willing to make aircraft available for relief aid to Biafra, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to outline the conditions under which the Canadian government will make these aircraft available?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could best answer by reading from the press release issued today as a result of my meeting with General Wrinch of the Canadian Red Cross, held at the end of the week. In that press release I said:

> —the government was prepared to facilitate these relief operations by providing a Canadian forces Hercules aircraft and crew to the Canadian Red Cross for participation as soon as practicable in relief operations in areas under the control of the Nigerian government.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, since these voluntary organizations have raised supplies and money, and in view of the fact that the major problem seems to involve the cost of paying for these aircraft, is the Canadian government prepared to finance the use of the Hercules aircraft?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I made it quite plain that the Canadian government is prepared to provide a Hercules aircraft for use in Nigerian territory.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether the Canadian Red Cross made any request to the government for assistance in their efforts to get relief supplies into the area of Nigeria that is controlled by the Biafrans.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, in answer to that particular question I will give you the relevant sentence.

Mr. Fairweather: How about making a statement on motions and dealing with this properly?

Mr. Sharp: I felt that I had made a number of statements on motions today. I am very happy to answer these questions if anyone wants the answers. This is the relevant portion:

> General Wrinch and the minister exchanged views as to how Canada might contribute most effectively in meeting the immediate needs as well as those that might arise in the somewhat longer term. General Wrinch said that in view of the limited response to the public appeal made by the Nigeria-Biafra relief fund of Canada, neither the fund nor the Canadian Red Cross was able to meet the request of the international committee of the Red Cross for an aircraft to participate in the International Red Cross' relief operations.

It was following that that I said:

> —the government was prepared to facilitate these relief operations by providing a Canadian forces Hercules aircraft and crew . . . in relief operations in areas under the control of the Nigerian government.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should have tabled this press release which resulted from the discussions I had with General Wrinch. I will be happy to do so in order that it will be on record when I answer the question. Would the house be agreeable to reverting to motions for the purpose of filing these documents?

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether about three weeks ago UNICEF asked the Canadian government to provide aircraft to get food into the starving areas of Biafra, and whether it is a fact that the Canadian government has not yet replied to that request.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of such a request, but I may be mistaken so I should like to examine the record. I do not remember such a request being made.

[Later:]

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the Canadian government received any communication from the government of Nigeria to the effect that if the Canadian government delivered food or medical supplies to Biafra by any means other than that to which the government of Nigeria agreed, that country would in fact judge this act to be an act of war?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, there have been no communications quite like that, but the Nigerian government, like most governments, has said it is very jealous of its national sovereignty.

Mr. Broadbent: I have a supplementary question. I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he could refer the members of this house to any legal authority which would support—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows he cannot ask the minister to interpret a statute or otherwise give his opinion as to the legality of a matter.

HOUSING

TASK FORCE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON HEARING OF SUBMISSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, but in his absence I will direct it to the acting minister. Will the acting minister make a statement on motions tomorrow concerning the activities of the task force on housing, with particular reference to the manner in which the task force is conducting its hearings in the city of Toronto? I ask this question because of the great criticism of the actions of the task force in Toronto, with regard to which the minister has been accused of being selective and of practising discrimination.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member can only ask a question and may not put forward an argument.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering whether the acting minister could tell us if we might get a statement tomorrow.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to answer today. I am certain the hon. member knows that the task force on housing has set a very tight schedule. It has agreed to have its report finalized by the end of December. This is almost record time for an undertaking of this kind. Under the circumstances the task force may not be able to listen to all the briefs presented to it, but I am certain that the briefs directed to the task force on housing will be studied carefully by the chairman and the personnel making up the task force.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nesbitt: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased the acting minister has been able to give us a statement. Now perhaps he could tell us why the task force has refused to hear the submission of the Toronto real estate board.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the acting minister whether the task force on housing, or the road show as it is sometimes now called, is committed to a definite number of days' hearings in the city of Winnipeg.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, the schedule of hearings has been published, and I am certain the number of days in Winnipeg will be revealed in that listing of hearings.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the acting minister would bring to the attention of the minister the wishes of the members of this house that the submission of the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell) and the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Weatherhead) should be put on the record before the task force.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Translation]

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

POSSIBILITY OF ESTABLISHING CROWN CORPORATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General.

Can he tell the house whether a task force has been appointed to study the possible conversion of the Post Office Department into a crown corporation?

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether this question should be allowed. However, if it is urgent, I see no objection to the minister giving an answer.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, first, I have to set the record straight. Last Friday the member for Lotbinière divided his question into two parts. Now, after reading the Debates report, I notice that I answered the second part only.

The answer to the question put this afternoon by the hon. member is yes. Such a force has been set up and its report will not be filed before a year.

INQUIRY AS TO METHOD OF REDUCING OPERATING COSTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General in reference to his announcement of last Friday and the planned reduction in the operating costs of his department. Can the minister advise whether the reduction is to be achieved through a diminution in the number of employees in the Post Office or through a decrease in the earnings of said personnel?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question should be placed on the order paper.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question has not been accepted, so there cannot be a supplementary. The hon. member may wish to ask another question on the same subject.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Postmaster General whether his announcement of last week means that rural mail delivery, which is the only method rural people have of obtaining newspapers, is going to be cut off on Saturdays?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, as far as the weekly newspapers are concerned I would—

Mr. Monteith: These are daily newspapers.

Mr. Kierans: With regard to daily newspapers, I should think there would be some difficulty here and that they will receive the Saturday newspapers on Monday.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Peters: Horse and buggy days.

Mr. Kierans: I think we have to take account of the fact that we are attempting here to introduce some real measures of efficiency.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Kierans: If there should be savings of the order of $13 million to $15 million, we must set this off against any disadvantages which there might be; and I understand, after listening to hon. members across the way speaking on the supply motion, that they are anxious to save money. If this is so, I think we might leave it to the newspapers to accept the challenge and find their own solution.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it this government's idea of efficiency to require people to receive their Saturday newspapers on Monday?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): May I ask the minister a supplementary question in connection with the proposed reduction in the quality of the mail delivery service. Has his attention been called to sections 55 and 56 of the Post Office Act, which state that it is an indictable offence for any person wilfully to delay or detain the delivery of mail—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question as asked by the hon. member is not in order.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Postmaster General. May I ask the hon. gentleman if the city of Montreal will continue to receive its mail every day including Saturdays in defiance of the Criminal Code; and does the minister not intend to take any action?

Mr. Kierans: I suggest to the hon. member that no complaint has been raised against the city of Montreal at this moment by the minister of justice of Quebec who is charged with the carrying out of the various articles of the Criminal Code.

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): I should like to ask the Postmaster General how he is going to save money by discontinuing the rural mail service on Saturdays. Will it be by paying less money on the contracts with the rural mail carriers?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is a point of debate.

An hon. Member: This is a good question.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MONTREAL—IMPLEMENTATION OF REPORT RESPECTING GRAIN HANDLERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In view of the current rumblings of possible trouble among the grain handlers at the Montreal waterfront, I wonder whether the minister could advise the house as to what action the government is taking concerning grievances, and especially the implementation of the Cohen report which was tabled in March?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, over the week end I was informed by the head of the National Harbours Board that the recommendations of the Cohen report will be implemented immediately.

Mr. MacEwan: I have a supplementary question. Is my understanding correct that one reason these recommendations were not implemented before now was that they were not passed by the Treasury Board?

Mr. Mackasey: It was described by the harbours board simply as an administrative error.

AGRICULTURE

CHEESE—DUMPING OF EUROPEAN PRODUCT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, on September 24 the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings asked me whether we were initiating an investigation to find out whether or not cheese was being dumped in Canada. I have obtained a transcript of the speech of the president of the National Dairy Council of Canada which he delivered in Vancouver, out of which I should like to read part of one sentence, if I may. It reads as follows:

> Practically every dairy country in the world is encouraging greater production by means of artificial pricing and while, on the one hand, they are dumping their surpluses on the world market through heavily subsidized exports—

At the time I gave an undertaking that we were going to investigate whether this alleged dumping was a fact, but on the basis of this statement it is my conclusion that the allegation is hardly sufficient reason for an investigation.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Is it a fact that cheese is being dumped in Canada?

Mr. Olson: If the president of the dairy council or anyone else will refer us to any specific matter which would indicate that cheese is being brought into Canada in violation of what is contained in the anti-dumping code, we will investigate it. However, my reply now is that this statement does not indicate it.

Mr. Hees: I have a further supplementary question. Would the minister be good enough to get in touch with the gentleman in question to find out what he was complaining so vigorously about when he spoke in Vancouver, as reported by the Canadian Press?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

COMPLAINTS RESPECTING SITUATION AT ARMSTRONG, ONT.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. However, since this appears to be his day off in the house perhaps I can direct it to the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Port Arthur. Has the government taken steps to investigate the situation relating to Indian complaints at Armstrong, Ontario, brought to light on the initiative of the Company of Young Canadians at the Indian-Eskimo association meetings in Toronto over the week end?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I think the minister's absence is quite understandable, since he is in Quebec today on an obvious mission.

May I say in answer to the hon. member's question that yes, investigations are under way with regard to the sad situation in the town of Armstrong, and a full report will be made in due course.

Mr. Dinsdale: I have a supplementary question. Has the minister received or asked for a report in connection with the participation of the Company of Young Canadians in this affair?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, it is known that the Company of Young Canadians has participated on this occasion, and I presume their activities will be described in the report which is expected very shortly.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR DELAY IN REPAIRING U.S. SEAWAY SECTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, or in his absence to his parliamentary secretary. In view of the repairs to be made to the United States portion of the St. Lawrence Seaway, which it is indicated will shorten the current shipping season to a point that will make it virtually impossible to keep up our current wheat export commitments, are any efforts being made to arrange with the United States to repair the seaway after it would normally be closed because of weather conditions?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that the question might be placed on the order paper. Its urgency is not apparent to me. The hon. member might wish to have it discussed at the time of adjournment.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

INTRODUCTION OF AMENDMENTS TO JUVENILE DELINQUENTS ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I directed a question to the Solicitor General respecting the intention of the government to bring forth amendments to the Juvenile Delinquents Act, and the minister took it as notice. I wonder if he has the answer today.

[Mr. Andras.]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): The question was whether we proposed to bring forward the amendments at this session. The answer is that the legislation is in the course of preparation. I doubt very much if we will be able to submit it to the house for consideration at this session.

Mr. Gilbert: I have a supplementary question. Is it the intention of the government to set up a youth and juvenile research bureau in view of the serious juvenile delinquency problem we have today?

Mr. McIlraith: I would think not in that form, but a good deal of work is being done on this problem in the department, which I hope to be able to place before hon. members when the estimates of the department are before the standing committee.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF PUBLIC ADVISORY BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the acting Minister of Transport. May I say that I am sorry I did not get Your Honour's attention at the minister's weekly brief appearance last Friday. In answer to recent inquiries, can the acting minister say whether the co-ordinating unit on highway safety within his department, as promised on October 17 of last year, is now functioning; and can he also report on any progress on uniform national highway standards?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the first question should be allowed, but I believe the second question is of the type which should be the subject of a statement on motions. If the minister so desires he could reply to the first part of the hon. member's question.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister of Transport wished to answer this question himself. However, in his absence I would like to make this statement.

During the last session the minister indicated that a public advisory board, composed of representatives from the provinces, industry, safety organizations and other interested groups, would be created to advise and guide him on the problems of road and motor vehicle traffic safety. Accordingly consultations have been held with the officials of the provinces in preparation for a conference with the provincial ministers concerned. This conference will take place just as soon as the provincial ministers are prepared to convene, and it is expected that the public advisory board will be established immediately following these discussions.

Mr. Bell: I should like to thank the acting minister for this answer and ask him if he will consider a permanent appointment as minister of transport, because we do a lot better with him.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

RECONSIDERATION OF POLICY RESPECTING RURAL MAIL CONTRACTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): May I address a question to the Postmaster General. I wonder of the government is considering changing its policy in respect of the payment of rural mail carriers.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder whether the hon. member is not asking a question which has already been asked and covered by the minister in previous statements.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, we have a number of different types of contracts, and we have met with the mail carriers. We are reviewing one or two of these contracts, and I may be in a position to make a statement further to the letter I mailed to the members of this house.

TRADE

PROHIBITION ON SALE OF CANADIAN TURBOT IN U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs in view of the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce as well as the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the appeal on October 2 against the banning of the sale of Greenland halibut in the United States after November 21 by the United States food and drug administration, and in view of the substantial contribution this fishery makes to the Newfoundland fishing industry, can the minister tell the house what role the government of Canada will play in supporting the fishing industry in this most important event?

Mr. Speaker: Again, this is the type of information which would normally be given by the minister by means of a statement under motions. The minister may wish to indicate whether he is prepared to make such a statement on motions.

Mr. McGrath: I wonder whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs would refer this question to his colleague the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, to see if he will make this statement tomorrow.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I would be happy to do so.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—REPORTED ISRAELI OFFER TO VACATE OCCUPIED AREAS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can he say whether the state of Israel received the approval or support of the Canadian government in its decision to vacate the areas it now occupies in Arab states, with the exception of certain strategic locations? Does the Canadian government believe this is a reasonable suggestion on the part of the Israeli government, and if so has the government given consideration to something which is vital to the continuing integrity of Israel, namely whether the Canadian embassy will be transferred from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the situation in the Middle East is, of course, of very great concern to the Canadian government. Our position has been, and remains, that the best hope for a settlement in that area rests in resolution 242 of the Security Council and in the efforts of Ambassador Jarring to see that it is implemented by both sides. I have heard that the Israeli government is now proposing some immediate measures. These will certainly be looked upon sympathetically by the Canadian government, and we hope they will appeal to all sides so as to promote a settlement.

On the second question, the moving of the embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem, the Canadian government has not taken this step because the question of the future of Jerusalem has been a highly controversial one. The Canadian government did not feel it would contribute to the solution of that problem by moving its embassy now.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank the minister for his reply, and I ask him whether the Canadian government gives support to the idea of the city of Jerusalem, with all its sacred monuments and places, becoming part and parcel of Israel.

Mr. Sharp: The best answer I can give to that is that this is one of the most vital parts of the settlement that is now being negotiated. I do not believe it would contribute to the settlement for outside parties to take a firm position on any of these questions. These are matters that I believe are now being negotiated between the Arab states and Israel under the terms of resolution 242.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR ELABORATION OF STATEMENT ON CANBERRA MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, but in his absence I shall direct it to the acting minister. Having regard to the statement the minister made to the house on Friday, September 27 concerning the Canberra meeting of exporters under the international grains agreement, will the minister elaborate on that statement in view of the fact that Mr. John Schnittker, under secretary of agriculture in the United States, is quoted in the Globe and Mail as saying—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask his question directly and not quote newspaper articles in support of his question.

HARBOURS

ROBERTS BANK, B.C.—RESPONSIBILITY FOR RAILWAY LINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): May I direct a most urgent question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the statement made in Vancouver on the immediate situation in respect of Roberts Bank, is the minister in a position now to inform this house whether a decision has been made that responsibility for the route and financing of the railway to Roberts Bank is federal and not provincial?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would think the matter is still subject to review and discussion. I should expect that the responsible minister, the Minister of Transport, would be making a statement—

Mr. Winch: Where and when? Time is getting short now.

Mr. Laing (Vancouver South): The Minister of Transport is a regular attendant in this house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Laing (Vancouver South): I would expect he will be making a statement on this matter.

Mr. Winch: May I ask a supplementary question. If the Minister of Transport has been reporting to the house on this question, why did the minister make a statement in Vancouver since he does not know the answer?

VETERANS AFFAIRS

IMPLEMENTATION OF REPORT ON PENSION COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Is it the minister's intention to introduce veterans legislation before the end of this year as a result of the recommendations of the Woods commission?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): First of all the Woods report will be referred to the veterans affairs committee. We will have to ascertain what decisions the members of that committee will take before the minister can decide what legislation will be enacted.

Mr. McIntosh: May I ask a supplementary question. Does the minister realize that if this report is dealt with by a committee it will be another year before veterans legislation appears in this house?

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs and ask whether it is his intention to follow the practice of the Postmaster General and continue sending out form letters to members who have written to the minister on behalf of veterans with problems. I am concerned about this matter, sir. Is the department to send out a form letter in every case to the effect that "We are very busy but we shall answer your letter at some time"?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's remarks take the form of a grievance rather than of a question.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

AUTOMOBILES—INCREASED PRICES AND REDUCED WARRANTIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. James McGrath (St. John's East): My question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Mr. Speaker, but it is of such urgency that in his absence may I direct it to the acting minister. In view of the fact that Canadian automobile manufacturers have indicated that as well as increasing prices of their products for the coming year they also intend to decrease the value of what the consumer pays for, by reducing their warranty on new cars, will the minister say whether the government intends to take a public position on both the actual price increase and the fact that there is an obvious value decrease to the consumer, to say nothing of the decrease in protection, in that warranties apparently will be substantially reduced?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Since the hon. member's remarks are in the form of an argument rather than of a question, they are irregular.

UNITED NATIONS

BIAFRA—FAILURE TO BRING MATTER BEFORE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Speaker. It is in connection with the minister's efforts to have the United Nations general assembly direct its attention to the Biafran question. Can he advise the house why Canada failed to have this matter inscribed on the general assembly's agenda at a time when Canada could have done so unilaterally?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that his question is argumentative. It is not in proper form and is not acceptable.

AGRICULTURE

CORN—INQUIRY AS TO ASSISTANCE TO ONTARIO GROWERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): My question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister in a position to say what assistance the government will give the corn growers, or will he wait until the tractors all arrive here?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Without replying to the last part of the hon. member's commentary, I want the hon. member to know that the Ontario and federal departments of agriculture are very actively considering proposed solutions as well as the legal and economic implications of those solutions.

Mr. Baldwin: We are in for a long period of gestation.

REPRESENTATIONS AS TO DIFFICULTY OF BUILDING FARM STORAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): In view of the seriousness of the crop storage situation in western Canada, can the minister say whether he received a letter from the president of the junior board of the Saskatchewan farmers' union concerning the inability of young farmers to build storage facilities because of lack of money and lack of credit ratings?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is not in order for an hon. member to ask a minister simply whether a letter or message has been received by the minister.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Two weeks ago the Minister of Agriculture indicated that he would look into allegations that there was a serious shortage of structural steel for the building of grain storage facilities. I take it the minister has looked for two weeks. Could he now make his report?

Mr. Olson: I, as minister, did not undertake to find out the reasons for a shortage of structural steel, or whether in fact there was such a shortage. I said I would try to ascertain whether any department of government was competent to make that sort of inquiry.

Mr. Schreyer: A further supplementary question. Can the minister say what department of government will be prepared to look into this problem?

Mr. Baldwin: The department of active consideration.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister of which is not present today.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO DEVALUATION OF FRENCH CURRENCY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): In view of the absence of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), I shall direct my question to the acting minister.

Has the Department of Finance been informed or is it aware, one way or another, of the risk of a franc devaluation and, as a result, of the pound?

Mr. Speaker: I think the question of the hon. member is too general and, as such cannot be asked in the present circumstances.

Mr. Fortin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Without questioning Your Honour's judgment, I believe that the devaluation of the franc is a very precise subject.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that the rules allow him to tell the Chair he wishes to discuss the question at the time of adjournment if he believes the Speaker has erred in his judgment.

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MONTREAL—INCENDIARY BOMB AT BLACK WATCH ARMOURIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): I wish to direct a brief question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister any report to make to the house about the investigation conducted by his department into the placing of an incendiary bomb at the Black Watch armouries in Montreal. Especially, could he assure the house that this attempted sabotage was in no way instigated by foreign agents?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): We investigated this incident, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member knows, the bomb or device had already exploded without doing damage when it was found by the Montreal police. Therefore the matter was not worrying enough for us to conduct a more extensive investigation.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

PANARCTIC OIL—GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATION ON BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): My question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In his absence perhaps his parliamentary secretary might take it as notice. In the light of reports that the government of Canada has put up 45 per cent of the capital of Panarctic Oil Explorations but is represented by only one director on the 14 director board, can the minister say whether the government intends to act in order to alleviate this disproportionate representation?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, may I take that question as notice.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF CANADIAN INDIAN LEADERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, may I direct Your Honour's attention and the attention of hon. members to the presence in the gallery of some distinguished Indian leaders of provincial and national Canadian Indian organizations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

State items 1 and 65, Transport item 5, (Schedule B) of the said revised main estimates, $6,681,409.50;

Less the amounts authorized by Appropriation Act No. 2, 1968, $1,118,202,797.17, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending the 31st of March, 1969.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words about the Biafran question. After hearing the Secretary of State for External Affairs waffle for several days about the unfortunate situation in Nigeria, we heard the Prime Minister on Friday make a clearcut statement. I welcome the Prime Minister's participation in this serious question but I suggest that his line of argument of Friday last had as its basis bad legal reasoning and an even worse morality.

From the first days of this session of parliament we have heard nothing but evasive answers from the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The minister says that our government does nothing to aid the Biafrans because the Biafran government objects to our using their one airstrip. The minister did not say that that airstrip could be used for the transport of military supplies as well as food; nor did he say that the Biafrans were prepared to build an alternate airstrip if we, in turn, were prepared to send in food and medical supplies.

Next we heard from the Secretary of State for External Affairs that the government was concerned about upsetting the feelings of the government of Nigeria. He suggested that the Nigerian government would be upset if Canada flew medical supplies and food to Biafra. Finally we heard the deplorable statement from the Prime Minister last Friday that any intervention by the government of Canada in the matter of Biafra would constitute an act of war against Nigeria. It seems to me we have gone all the way in the past ten days from evasive platitudes by the Secretary of State for External Affairs to a position of legal improbability and moral indifference on the part of the Prime Minister.

Let me say a couple of things on this point. First, it was by no means clear that if Canada, acting on its own as a nation, were to fly food and medical supplies into Biafra contrary to the wishes of Nigeria, we would be acting in an aggressive or warlike way toward Nigeria. The whole body of international law as it has developed since 1945 suggests that strictly from a legal point of view the Canadian government would be acting quite properly. The Canadian government could cite all kinds of precedents both in international law and in conventions passed by the United Nations to support its position. The United Nations convention against genocide, the United Nations statement on human rights, the legal precedent of the Nuremberg trials—all could be cited by the Canadian government in support of a decision to send food and medical supplies to the starving people of Biafra whether or not the government of Nigeria approved.

In saying this I am not suggesting that genocide is necessarily being practised in Nigeria. This would presuppose a deliberate policy on the part of the Nigerian government to murder a whole group of people, which is not being assumed by myself or by my hon. friends in the New Democratic party. But we do know that thousands of people are starving daily and we do know that from this point of view we could and should act. Surely this is all that is required. It is not necessary to presuppose that genocide is being committed. We do have good evidence from independent bodies all over the world that thousands are starving and this should surely be enough to justify us in going ahead.

Even in terms of international law Canada could present a good case, in my view, for going ahead and acting as a sovereign state. Of course, what many members of the house have suggested is that Canada should not act as a sovereign state but should act indirectly through the International Red Cross as Sweden has done. Does the Prime Minister, who comes here with his moral homilies about private behaviour and government behaviour, really suggest that the government of Nigeria would say that Canada, by bringing food and medical supplies to Biafra, was engaged in a belligerant, hostile and warlike action? Would Nigeria dare claim before the United Nations or any other international body that by bringing food and medical supplies to a group of starving people we were acting in a warlike manner? I suggest this is nonsense, and the government must know it is nonsense.

I placed a question before the Secretary of State for External Affairs a short while ago and received an answer to the effect that the Nigerian government has not suggested to the Canadian government that an action of the kind I am supporting in terms of providing food and medical supplies to the people of Biafra would be seen as an act of war. It would appear, therefore, that this is simply an assumption made by the Canadian government itself, or else it is a loosely worded, inflammatory statement made by the Prime Minister to avoid moral and political responsibility. Instead of helping starving people the Prime Minister has presented to the house an argument which I suggest is without legal foundation in terms of international law. At the very least, it can be thoroughly disputed in terms of international law. Yet he has presented this view as a self-evident truth which no reasonable and intelligent men should take for granted.

As I say, from a legal point of view it was probably an erroneous statement to start with. But beyond the question of legality lies the moral issue. I suggest that even if in terms of international law the position taken by the Canadian government in deciding to send supplies were seen to be incorrect, we do have nevertheless a moral responsibility when thousands of people are starving. The same thing happened in the thirties in Germany. Many governments at that time took the position that it was an internal matter; they did not want to upset relations with another government so they did not concern themselves. Are we to stand back now, at the end of the sixties, at a time when thousands of other people are starving and base our apology for lack of action on a dubious line of reasoning to the effect that we might be acting illegally? To me, this is a clear act of bad morality and something of which we in this house should be thoroughly ashamed.

I welcome the Prime Minister's decision to take part in a discussion of this question. He finally did have something to say to the house on this subject when he spoke on Friday. Unfortunately, what he had to say was illogical, misleading and morally offensive.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, just a few words at this stage of the debate on interim supply to refer to some assertions or insinuations made in this house last week, last Friday to be more precise, by a government member. I want to say that the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain), former mayor of his city, former independent member of parliament, stated in this house, after a referendum held in his riding, that 92 per cent of his electors preferred to see him remain an independent member rather than see him shift his political allegiance to any political party whatsoever.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Last Friday, referring to the spokesman of the Ralliement Créditiste, the member for Trois-Rivières said:

> The spokesman of the Ralliement Créditiste has of course referred again to the philosophy in which he believes—and I think he is sincere—but it does not seem practical to those who feel that one has to live within one's means.

The member for Trois-Rivières was then speaking exactly like the ministers of the crown, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and the other members of the government party, today as well as in the past. In fact, when Conservatives were in office, they were saying exactly the same thing, that the Créditiste doctrine however good it may be is not practical, and that we must, indeed live within our means.

Mr. Chairman, in our opinion, the means at our disposal are those which allow us to develop our natural, intellectual and other ressources. We should adjust our finances to these possibilities instead of trying to adjust our development to our financial means. That is the realistic thing to do. We see and we face reality, while succeeding governments only see financial objections to the programs which could be undertaken in Canada.

If we ask ourselves: Can we build housing for those who need it; do we have wood; do we have nails; do we have bricks; do we have the materials necessary? In my opinion nobody knows the answer. Everybody without exception will answer: We have all that in Canada, but we do not have the money to put the materials together and to build houses for our people. And it is the same in all fields. There is an ever-growing need for universities, hospitals, schools, but it never occurs to a member to ask himself: Do we have contractors, engineers, talented men, people with a good head on their shoulders? Do we have materials to build hospitals and schools, or whatever we need? But we say at once like the member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain, who incidentally does not depart from the custom of the old parties, that we do not have the necessary money.

At present, Mr. Chairman, it is fantastic to see what is happening in Canada. Our municipalities kneel before the government, begging it not to discontinue winter works which helped municipalities during the difficult months of the year. To provinces which have to deal with great financial problems, the federal government says: Tighten your belt because we have no money either, no credit, no financial means. We too have to cut expenditures, not because we do not need services, or we do not want to provide them, but because we do not have the means to financing them. That is the problem, but nobody is tackling it. On the contrary, we go on saying, like the hon. member for Trois-Rivières, and I quote:

I know that our friends in the Ralliement Créditiste have a magic formula, and I would be the happiest man on earth if it were adopted.

However, he does everything he can not to understand it, and he keeps repeating that the formula is magic. The hon. member for Trois-Rivières is certainly in the clouds, as all the others. If a war was declared to-morrow morning, I expect the hon. member for Manicouagan (Mr. Blouin) would also find it funny, but God knows that there are a good many destitute people on the North Coast.

Mr. Blouin: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Caouette: Is this a point of order or a question?

Mr. Blouin: Would the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. Caouette: Certainly, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Blouin: If the hon. member for Temiscamingue reads further in Hansard, he will see that I too, last Wednesday, spoke about the notice of motion presented to the house by the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Peddle).

Mr. Caouette: I take the word of the hon. member for Manicouagan, Mr. Chairman. I accuse him of nothing I simply quote certain facts. I tell him that the majority of the members in the old political parties who sat on the government side have always given the same answer, and the hon. member is aware that this government gives exactly the same answer as the previous one.

What I want to bring to the attention of the hon. member is the fact that in his riding as in mine, as in all the other ridings, we have to face the same problems which are not problems of production but problems of distribution of existing goods. The goods exist, if they did not, it would be different.

If we lived half a century ago, we would have to ask ourselves by what means a man could double or treble his production, or even increase it fivefold. But today this is not the case anymore. With automation, with the use of modern discoveries, science and machinery, the Canadian produces a hundred times more than he can consume and I have had, Mr. Chairman, a weeklong example of this. I happened to be a member of a delegation of French-speaking Canadian parliamentarians and to meet in Paris and Versailles French-speaking parliamentarians from Africa, Europe and South America. We were able to witness each and everybody's problem while encountering people eager to reach arrangements and understandings as between members of the great French-speaking family. We are not against this; we are aware, however, that their problems are not confined to the aspect of language but have also to do with economics. As for the black people of Africa we met, their sole desire is to enjoy the right to live in their homeland; they ask for nothing else.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Caouette: In France, Quebec is often quoted as an example. They tell us: France is going to save you. Mr. Chairman, the contrary is far more probable, for Canada could perhaps help to save France.

During our stay in France, we learned that the Fiat Company is controlling today 30 per cent of Citroën, because the French did not have the necessary capital to save their own automobile industry.

Some tell us that France will save us financially. I studied the French standard of living. Please note that I am of French descent, but I am a Canadian, and if the two countries must be compared, let us not be shy about it. On the last evening of our visit we were invited to a formal banquet. There were men and women there who came from all parts of the world, or almost, and I had the opportunity of discussing with someone who is active in politics. But I was not content to attend that banquet only. I had the opportunity of visiting French workers, of seeing French farmers, their organization with regard to productivity, their means of distribution, of seeing what the standard of living of the French worker, of the French farmer is compared to that of his Canadian opposite.

Mr. Chairman, the difference is unbelievable. The salaries in France do not amount to even 50 per cent of the salary paid to our Canadian workers. The worker in France pays about 35 to 45 per cent more rent than a worker in Canada; and here, in Canada, how we complain about the rents being too high. You can imagine what the situation is like in France.

I ask about the cost of a pound of butter and I am told it is $1.35 a pound. I am speaking about France, not about China, and their workers earn half as much as ours. To our question: How much does an automobile worker earn in the employ of Citroën or Renault? We get the reply: from $2,400 to $2,700 in Canadian dollars. It is higher.

And with regard to modern conveniences, they know nothing about it, absolutely nothing. I was staying at the Hôtel Royal de Versailles. It is time-worn, it is old. They have not got around to installing toilets next to each bedroom: you have to go down the hall, as we used to do here in Canada 35 years ago. Their way of life is not at all like ours. They are perfectly happy with their traditions, and God knows there are many. We saw quite a number of castles dating from the reigns of Louis XIV and Louis XV, as well as huge and marvelous paintings, but this does not prevent the complaints of the individual dying of hunger. This is always something!

Mr. Chairman, meanwhile the farmers are stuck with their products. This is in France, not Africa. In Africa, the conditions are not any better, they are worse, Africans are asking France to help them. From the cultural point of view, I recognize that France has a part to play, but the Frenchman is mostly interested in economic matters.

In Africa, the same problem exists. A French-speaking priest from Madagascar told me that they had just received a gift from the United States: three modern and well-equipped ambulances with drugs, lancets, and the like. They sent that to us in Madagascar, but imagine the difficulties we have encountered. They are too long for our roads and too wide for our streets, it takes the whole width of the street. We had to park the three ambulances in a field and it was hardly large enough for them. These are facts, Mr. Chairman. To turn in a Madagascar street, the ambulance would have to back up at least three times and go forward four times before being able to get around the street corner. It is not modern.

We must not bear a grudge against those people, but when we hear some people here clamouring that Canada is deprived of everything, it is false. However, Mr. Chairman, I do not mean that we must not try to correct abuses which do exist in Canada. This should not prevent us from seeing that a large number of our people lack the necessities of life.

On the whole, we have much greater opportunities here than in any of those countries, France included.

French culture is all well and good but if we have to go back 50 years, Mr. Chairman, we are not interested. Before going to France, I did not mind too much hearing "Frenchmen of Canada". But when I came back, last night, I much preferred to hear "French Canadians". It might mean the same thing, but I am not prepared to say so.

We are happy to be Canadians and in spite of everything we hear, the delegates from other countries respected us when they knew we were from Canada. There were only six Canadian parliamentarians and we were treated like kings with great tactfulness.

We noticed on the spot that their problems are still unsolved. Before trying to solve ours, they should deal with their own because that will keep them busy for a hundred years. For at least a hundred years, because there has been little change in a great many years.

All that, Mr. Chairman, to say that I have been asserting for the last 25 years that we live in the country with the greatest potential in the world. Our country has more natural resources than the United States. However, we must consider the fact that modern technology and evolution nevertheless originated in the United States which, no matter what people say elsewhere in the world, have rendered tremendous services.

We had the occasion, for instance—I mention that in passing—of speaking of satellites to extend the French-speaking community or enable citizens in French-speaking countries to see one another on television. But the technical facilities in all those countries are next to nothing while the United States controls 95 per cent of the facilities already in operation. Whether it is in English or in French does not matter, the technical possibilities belong to the United States.

Even if we wanted it to be otherwise, and in some areas Canadians are stirred up against United States, we should realize—as shown by facts—that our standard of living is closely related to that of the Americans. However, this does not mean that we should let ourselves be exploited or crushed. No. But let us begin by understanding that what we have, we have not created by ourselves; that we have been helped on our continent, not by Africa, not by China or Russia, but by a country on our continent. And before making wild gestures against our neighbours, let us start by watching what goes on in other countries of the world, and then we will become realistic.

Mr. Chairman, we all wish to become fully independent and have a maximum of sovereignty. This is everybody's wish. This is each individual's wish, whether he comes from a family of 10, 15 or 20 children. Each one wishes to attain his own individual freedom and his own individual sovereignty. Whether he is a businessman, a professional, or a farmer, or whether he is working in another areas of the Canadian economy, each individual wishes to be respected and not to receive orders from anybody.

We are all individually and collectively in the same situation. We wish to be a sovereign nation. Unfortunately, there is a impediment preventing Canada from becoming sovereign. The impediment is of a financial nature. It is not because there is a shortage of intelligent people. Not at all. It is purely and definitely financial, but every government has managed to overcome that financial impediment or hindrance for war purposes. If a war were to break out tomorrow morning, no minister would rise to say: Unfortunately, we cannot participate in the war effort because we have no money. On the contrary, all of them would introduce a motion providing for the adoption of the necessary estimates in order to set up war industries and to set the whole system in motion. Nothing would be lacking, of course not. We would be told, this is an emergency.

Emergencies exist in peacetime just like in wartime. When Canadian mothers wonder what to give to their children the next day, it is essential for a responsible government to assume its responsibilities. It is urgent for a government composed of human beings, blessed with intelligence, to see through those fictitious impediments created by those who control the economic blood of the nation, those who control our money and credit are the real leaders of the country, those who grant permissions. But people like the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) do not see that.

The hon. member for Trois-Rivières continued and I quote:

> I excuse most of my friends—

—he was talking about the Créditistes—

> —for I believe them to be sincere, but, in my opinion, it is to mislead people who are uninformed—

Imagine if this is an intelligent remark. The hon. member for Trois-Rivières is no doubt well informed, and this is why he sits on the last benches of the Liberal party. We can be sure that he will stay there for a long time. I am convinced of this—because puppets never get very far in this world. To be a good backbencher you always have to stand up and fight. I continue my quotation:

> —to make people who are uninformed believe that these things could happen thanks to a magic wand which would reform the entire system is to mislead them.

Why talk about a magic wand? There is no question of a magic wand. It is simply a question of passing legislation like any other which we have already passed. Let us pass legislation in order to suppress poverty in Canada—call it what you want—but it will be legislation which will make everyone reasonably well off.

This does not mean that everybody will be rich or a millionaire, but it does mean that every Canadian will at least be assured of a decent standard of living, of a minimum of comfort. He will be assured of having three meals a day, decent clothes, decent housing, medical care when necessary and of getting the education that is available and must be accessible to all. That is the vital minimum, a decent standard of living. Once that is provided, let competition and private initiative be free. If someone has enough initiative to build up a good business or to run an important industry, let him be free to do so, but at least let all the people without exception be assured a decent standard of living. We do not need a magic wand to bring this about, merely a law which will guarantee a decent standard of living.

The Prime Minister told us the other day: We have no money. However, he did not tell us that we have no schools, that we have no clothes, that we have no hospitals, that we have no doctors, that we have no professionals, that we have no different social classes, for he knows that we do have them. He did not tell us that all the stores in Canada are overstocked with goods, that not a single one of them has run out of goods because manufacturers have quit producing them. Nor did he tell us that the farmers had quit producing. No. We are even stuck with agricultural produce, with wheat, and in our own provinces stuck with our fruit and vegetables. Why? Because we cannot sell them. The Prime Minister did not say there was a shortage of those things.

He told us: For a lack of money, we are forced to discontinue those services, we are forced to discontinue winter works programs, we will be forced this fall to study with the provinces the possibility of decreasing social welfare to those who are totally destitute. We are forced to. By whom? By finance, by the financial system.

And at the same time, we are told through the interim supply bill that the interest alone on the national debt of Canada will cost this year, without taking into account the interests the provinces, municipalities, school boards, and individuals will pay, one billion and a half. The Prime Minister did not say: We will ask the financiers to wait ten years before we start paying them premiums or interest. No, that is sacred, we have no right to touch that.

In fact, the total interest this year amounts to $200 million more than what we paid last year. Two hundred million dollars! This is just peanuts according to the government. It is possible that Canadians are overtaxed to provide for the paying of interests to capitalists, that cursed race devouring Canada. We are caught in those conditions, but nobody considers introducing some legislation. We hear about a magic wand to change conditions.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to dwell on that matter. I simply wish to tell you how much some hon. members, such as the hon. member for Trois-Rivières, are off the beam and that they are precisely those who prevent the passage of federal legislation which could guarantee decent means of living to which I referred earlier to all Canadian citizens.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the consideration of the supply motion provides a good opportunity to emphasize and clearly state what is suggested by the Créditistes when they say: To make financially possible what is physically possible. Not create endless, unlimited credit, but according to what we can physically do. Newspapers will not say a word about that.

An hon. Member: They are not there.

Mr. Caouette: They are not there; anyway, there is no one in the gallery. They are there when the time comes to attack the Ralliement Créditiste or Social Credit, or to say: The Créditistes repeat themselves. To my knowledge, newspapers have been repeating themselves by flattering the Liberals, then the Conservatives, for about 35 years. Nothing changes, but we do not worry about it. They did not give us our seats in parliament and they will not turn us out either.

[Mr. Caouette.]

However, we shall make every effort to have accepted the system we suggest, that is to make financially possible what is both physically possible and desirable for the people of Canada. It is as simple as that. It is not a question of a machine which will print endless dollars, it is a question of making credit available on the basis of the rate of production of the Canadian people. It is an economic system, an accounting system. It is Pius XI—and not I—who said in 1931, 37 years ago already: Economics will only reach its objectives when it will make available to everybody—not only to the Liberals, not only to the Conservatives, not only to the members of the N.D.P., but to everyone—a part of the goods that God's nature and men's industry can produce, and such a share ought to be large enough to provide for each and every one at least a decent living. This was said 37 years ago. Still, up to now, the point has not been understood. Delegates and ministers are sent in Europe, and everywhere else. They are supposed to find world markets for the export of our current products, of Canada's production next year, and so forth. Ministers are sent to inquire from our own nationals and find out what they need. In our opinion, the first demand that should be satisfied is on the Canadian market. Now, let us first meet the requirements of that market. Afterwards, we might send ministers to France and other European countries, to Africa, Japan, China, the North Pole and the South Pole, and dispose of our excess products. But in the meantime, Mr. Chairman, I wish the government would take its responsibilities and give us a system that will help us satisfy the needs of each and every Canadian citizen.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste spoke eloquently of the opportunity to help peoples in other parts of the world. I agree with him that we are happy to live here in Canada, where conditions can be changed and improved. I also agree with him in recognizing that we must work now to bring about the necessary changes and improvements, and that is why I want to speak of Canada this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (4:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I feel that the Canadian people as a whole are very much disposed to give this new government a full chance to show what it can do, knowing that it is the first government for a long time to be in a majority position, although some of us felt that the former government had a de facto majority. However, this time there is no doubt on the point. Therefore I believe that most Canadians are saying: Now that they are there for the first time with a big majority, let us see what they can do.

We are all in accord with the objective of the government in trying to streamline parliament and become more efficient in the ways in which we do things here. We are not going to be in accord if it comes to the point where the opposition will be silenced or restricted in bringing to the attention of the government the conditions in this country and the needs of our people. We, too, have suffered from the old-fashioned methods of carrying out the business of parliament and we are thoroughly in agreement that we need a greater modernization and streamlining of our parliamentary procedures. However, Mr. Chairman, I think there is a real danger that in streamlining the procedures of parliament the government may be inclined to take for granted that it can talk in terms of getting ready and proceeding to explore programs and policies for future years, and does not have to do anything in the immediate present to look after the needs of the people of this country. I would point out that those needs are very great at this time.

In short, I am afraid the government may be throwing out the baby with the bath water because people, tolerant as a great many people in our constituencies have been, are worried about certain moves which have already been made in respect of the needs of Canadians. I refer to the cutting off of the winter works program. I refer to the fact that we have been told there will be no increase in family allowances this session in spite of the rise in the cost of living. I refer to the fact that we have been told there will be no increase in the basic old age security pension even though the cost of living has risen tremendously.

I refer to the casual reply given today in connection with veterans legislation. I know such long range programs will take time but I feel there will be a terrible interim between now and subsequent sessions when, if these programs are not improved, people will continue to suffer hardship. People like ourselves, who are reasonably well off, know nothing about the hardship these people will have to endure. We do not know what it feels like to live from pay cheque to pay cheque. We do not know what it feels like to be mortgaged to the hilt as a great many people are, even people fairly well off relative to the poverty line, in order to get all the things that modern advertising tells us are "musts" if we are to live like modern human beings. We do not know what it is like to suddenly have an increase in the cost of living, or to find oneself or one's family stricken with illness, or in one way or another to have the pay cheque removed. It is a catastrophe when any of these things happen.

I am afraid this government does not realize that there are in our country people for whom the just society cannot be put off until next year, the year after that or the year after that, that the beginnings of the just society must be made manifest in a great many more concrete ways this session. It is all very well to say that we cannot afford these things. However, I looked at the estimates the other day and saw that a very nice, big chunk of money, $27,246,000, had been allocated for a medical research council. I am not quarrelling with that, although I would like to know more about how this money will be spent. But I also note that in the estimates there is no similar allocation to start a human research council to carry out research into the conditions under which people in this country live and to which the leader of the Creditistes just referred.

It seems to me that so far in our deliberations in this house one thing has been almost overlooked. I refer to a brand new point in the report of the Economic Council of Canada. This feature of the report has been highlighted in the press. It was again highlighted in the Toronto Globe and Mail today. I refer to the poverty that exists in this country, poverty which we condone as the headline in the Toronto newspaper says. It is pointed out how very low the minimum wages in this country are relative to the needs of families living under today's conditions.

Evidence is mountain high that conditions in this beautiful, rich country of Canada, as we heard it described this afternoon, are far from what they must be if we are to develop the full potential of our population. We know that half our population, the lower income half, is living in varying degrees of insecurity and frustration. We know that one Canadian in five is living in poverty. I suggest to hon. members that when half of the population is living in varying degrees of insecurity and frustration we have an unstable, unsatisfactory situation with regard to which the government must take action. Even if the government's majority were twice as large, if it does not take action it is heading for trouble, in capital letters, because people will not stay indefinitely in such a condition.

I think there is still some misunderstanding, certainly in some government offices, about the modern meaning of the word "poverty". In order to do away with any misunderstanding on this point. I quote the definition given recently by the Economic Council of Canada. I do so because I do not think it has been brought home sufficiently. It is as follows:

> To feel poverty is, among other things, to feel oneself an unwilling outsider—a virtual non-participant in the society in which one lives. The problem of poverty in developed industrial societies is increasingly viewed, not as a sheer lack of essentials to sustain life, but as an insufficient access to certain goods, services, and conditions of life which are available to everyone else and have come to be accepted as basic to a decent, minimum standard of living.

The economic council is at pains to point out that poverty is relative. This means that even if conditions in Canada are much better than those in Africa, France or anywhere else, conditions here are not, relatively speaking, much better because in Canada the difference between poverty and affluence is very great. People in this country who are poor can see others with wealth, affluence, comfort and security, to which they themselves have no access.

We in this group have worked very hard over the years to have measures of social security passed to close that gap. But I point out that we have today reached the stage where social security measures necessary and indeed essential as they are, are no longer enough. We have to go beyond social security. In a society where no one has a modern car, no one is poor because he does not have a car. However, in our society the great majority of people have cars. This means of transportation has become the accepted way of life and those without cars are regarded as substandard people living in substandard conditions.

It is all very well to talk about the dignity of poverty. There is no dignity in poverty and no status in poverty and we should not be thinking in terms of more handouts here and there and more social security here and there.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

This is not enough, necessary as it is. We have to give people access to those things which will make modern living possible for them.

Old age pension, family allowance and unemployment insurance measures have been enacted as well as measures during wartime to control the prices of goods and services. Again I agree with the leader of the Créditiste party that if during a war in an emergency something can be done to control the cost of living, this same action can be taken in an emergency in peacetime. If half the population suffers from some degree of insecurity and frustration and one-fifth of the population is in poverty, how many more people have to be in such a state before it is considered an emergency? There is an emergency now for 20 per cent of Canadian families who do not have the basic things they need.

We have enacted measures to help the provinces with various social security programs. Now we have medicare. I was glad to hear the announcement over the week end that on April 1 Manitoba will also join the federal medicare program together with Nova Scotia, British Columbia and Saskatchewan. I have been prophesying for a long time that the old age pension story would be repeated all over again and that after the first province joined the others would dribble in one after the other, as they did with the old age pensions program, and it will not take nine years for them to do so in this case. The Prime Minister said with reference to medicare, "we have had enough of that free stuff", but the people of Canada have got to the stage where they are determined to live in a modern way.

Whether the government likes it or not, it is now deeply involved in the problem of ensuring that modern housing is provided for those who cannot afford it themselves. It is true that the Minister of Transport may now be riding off in all directions at once as did Don Quixote on his horse, Rosinante, with a task force which I believe is now creaking a bit in the joints. But all the same the government will find out that a task force on housing will not bring the horse to the stable. She will also have to be fed and looked after properly because the people want housing and want it badly.

When we find several cabinet ministers as well as the Leader of the Opposition advocating a guaranteed annual income, we can see that the pressures for social change are mounting fast in this country. These pressures are greatest in our big cities. I think that the problems of the cities must be dealt with in a big way and must be dealt with now. We should not wait until we have the just society in a blueprint to deal with the problems in big cities.

Some hon. members may have seen the article in the Montreal Star of September 19, 1968 quoting Adolph A. Berle Jr. It said:

> In a recent issue of Saturday Review, Mr. Berle launched an attack on the facade of the gross national product—that annual figure which politicians and economists love to cite as reflecting a nation's economic health. All the GNP tells us, Mr. Berle contends, is how much money is expended in any given year for goods and services. What it does not tell us is what he calls the gross national disproduct: the toll taken on a society by garbage, waste, air and water pollution, violence, vandalism, malnutrition, disease, deaths and injuries caused by motor vehicles, respiratory ailments related to consumption of tobacco—

Where is the hon. member for Surrey?

> Until those things are also computed and subtracted from the GNP to arrive at true net national product (not as that term is used at present), we will not have an accurate picture of our society and its needs, says Mr. Berle. It is a refreshing theory and one that does not deserve to be brushed off, as it already has been by some economists. Their sole job, they argue, is to compute, not philosophize or indulge in value judgments; they have no way of determining what is "good" or "bad".

It is because we need so badly an accurate picture of our society and its needs that I would seriously urge an item in the estimates for a human research council. I submit that there is another reason for it apart from building a quality society—and how I was taken to task for that term when I referred to it last year in the committees. I think we badly need a quality society. I submit there is another reason why this government, beside building a quality society, should undertake human research with special emphasis on urban dislocations and urban problems.

If the government is to spend the taxpayers' money wisely and if it is to cut out waste and unnecessary spending, we must have an accurate picture of today's society and its needs. If we are to have a just or even a sane society, we will have to look hard at certain areas in our population. We will have to be prepared to spend money on them so that we can cut expenditures in other areas.

I wonder whether we have any idea of the cost of poor housing across this country. I wonder whether any estimate has been made of how much taxpayers' money is going into the cost of physical and mental illness, delinquency and crime, family breakdown, divorce and all the other social ills which stem from bad housing. I think there is a scandalous waste of the taxpayers' money in these directions. To say simply that municipal, provincial or federal money will be spent on them is no answer, because John Q. Public and Jane Q. Public have to pay the bill whether it is spent through the federal, provincial or municipal authority.

Today we are spending millions of dollars of the taxpayers' hard-earned money on completely unnecessary expenditures which arise from bad conditions owing to bad housing, bad town planning and bad environmental conditions for our people. The same thing is true of pollution. We are just beginning now to realize the vast amounts of taxation which will be needed to cope with pollution if we allow it to continue. Pollution of water, air and soil and noise pollution all exact their toll not only in terms of human well-being but in terms of wealth production and in terms of having to pay hard-earned taxes to try to clean up the mess. Neglecting pollution means a scandalous waste of taxpayers' dollars.

Then we come to the people themselves, the waste of our human resources both from the standpoint of our own development and the development of the wealth production of this country. Thousands of people now on social assistance could and should be converted from social outcasts into self-respecting citizens and taxpayers.

I have been through the public housing developments in my own and in adjoining ridings and I know there are men and women there eating their hearts out because they are obliged to live on social assistance with its stigma of public charity when they know perfectly well that if they could get the necessary training for the kind of work they could do they would be able to hold up their heads with pride and contribute their share to the wealth of Canada instead of having to sit there and take handouts. These people are not down and out, except that they are shut out of our way of life; they are shut out of the community of life that the rest of us share. Research into human problems could aid enormously in developing a process for getting these people off social assistance and on to the taxpayers' rolls.

Interim Supply

This week, in Ottawa, the final sessions of the royal commission on the status of women are being held. I want to say to hon. gentlemen on the ministerial benches that in my view the biggest single waste of human resources in this country now is the waste of womanpower which is not being used properly across this country. I am not referring to women who are comfortably situated because their husbands can earn enough for both of them, and who go out and do much needed community work in their spare time. I am not referring to the professional women who are able to get out and fight their own battle for equality, or to the technically trained women. I am referring to the housewives of this country, many of whom must go out and earn a living because there is not enough in one pay cheque to keep the family according to modern standards.

These women are not aided by the manpower legislation we have now because while there is a man standing by with the name of husband, they are precluded from getting the training they must have. This is wrong. It is a terrible waste. I notice a large yawn by a Cabinet member opposite whom I shall not identify. This situation should not be permitted to continue if this government wants to go on for its full term. Women scorned are notoriously apt to turn on the people who do the scorning. I feel sure that the women of this country are just beginning to get well organized. I should like to see this womanpower harnessed.

It is the women of the lower income groups about whom I am most concerned. We need to provide machinery so that they do not have to neglect their families. I know that we are going to have to provide machinery for child care bit by bit, so why not do it now on the proper scale? An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. If we are to prevent this waste of womanpower, we should not be shutting these women out of places that can provide the training they need. We should not be forcing these dreadful catch as catch can arrangements for the care of their children, because most of these mothers have no means of seeing that the children are properly looked after while they are earning what is needed.

Another group I wish to mention is our young people. They are probably the most important group of all because they are the ones who are going to be taking over when we are finished. You will notice that I said "we", because I think even the youngest in this house will not be going too far into the future if we continue to have measures such as we have had in this house. Young people today need a purpose in living, and that is why the universities have become the hotbeds they have. Of course, there are some young people there who are feeling growing pains. There are some others, undoubtedly, who are hell raising. There are some others who are there just raising a fuss for their own purposes. Most of the fuss, though, that is being raised in universities is being raised because the young people today feel that there is no genuine social purpose animating our communities in Canada today, that our government is not giving the lead in the new direction that we need, that it is leaving out certain sections of the population altogether.

The young people feel that the government does not really provide enough channels for them, does not provide the new ideas for the kind of development in this country that will enable us to have the quality living that we have to have in the future. These young people do not want to become adjuncts of manufacturing or advertising establishments. These young people want to be engaged in creative and scientific work in the service of their community and communities beyond the seas. They do not believe they are getting the leadership they need from this government.

These are some of the things I want to say this afternoon because I think I speak for a very large community of people in Canada. I know I speak for the people in Vancouver-Kingsway because there are few people in Vancouver-Kingsway who are sitting down expecting a government handout. However, there are many people who have to have help with their problems, just as there are in other ridings. There are a great many people indeed who feel that life is more than getting a pay cheque apportioned to cover the cost of the modern appliances for modern living. They want to see quality living.

These people want to see educational opportunities for their young folk, opportunities away beyond what these young folk can get today. They want to see the older people have the opportunity to do their share of the needed work of the community without being penalized in regard to their already pitifully small pensions. These people want to see a better country. I speak for them this afternoon, Mr. Chairman, and urge this government, before they get settled into the old rut and the old ways of governments, to realize that we are in 1968 and that a new century is just around the corner.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. Drury moved:

That towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending the 31st March, 1969, the sum of $3,776,197,303.75 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, as set forth in the resolution concurred in this day in the committee of supply.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Drury thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-108, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1969.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the second time?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): By leave, now.

Mr. Drury moved the second reading of the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, before we pass this motion for second reading could we have a firm statement from the government as to its intentions with respect to the balance of the current year's estimates? When we have passed this bill we shall have passed over 75 per cent of the year's estimates, only the amounts for the months of January, February and March remaining to be passed. There also remains in the minds of hon. members of this house the notion that we ought to discuss estimates. Is it the intention of the government to refer most or all the estimates for this year to the appropriate committees for study?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it would be the government's intention to refer the estimates we have been dealing with today to an appropriate committee for study and report.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee and reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time?

An hon. Member: By leave, now.

Mr. Drury moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SPECIAL COMMITTEE—PROCEDURES RESPECTING INSTRUMENTS IN VIRTUE OF STATUTES

The house resumed, from Wednesday, September 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale):

That a special committee of twelve members, to be named at a later date, be appointed to consider and, from time to time, to report on procedures for the review by this house of instruments made in virtue of any statute of the parliament of Canada.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the motion which has now been called was being debated on Wednesday, September 25. A number of members had spoken and I believe I had the floor when debate was interrupted. Before continuing with my remarks I express the hope that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) might be asked to come into the house—if this is one of the days he is allowed to come—because I regard this as a matter of considerable importance.

I was talking last Wednesday and propose to continue talking about a particular order in council which was passed on April 25 of this year by the present government. I refer to this order in council because it shows, in an outstanding way, the need for the kind of committee we are proposing to establish, a committee to consider ways and means of reviewing legislation that is enacted by bodies to which we delegate certain authority.

As was indicated in speeches last Wednesday, quite a few boards, commissions and other bodies are given authority to enact legislation. I wish to refer to one particular body, namely the cabinet itself. I think the committee to be established by this motion ought to take a pretty good look at the way in which the cabinet exercises authority under orders in council to enact legislation, and some way ought to be established of reviewing this practice.

The particular example I referred to last Wednesday bears mentioning again. By way of background I reminded hon. members that in June, 1962, the Conservative government of the day passed an order in council which had the effect of raising import duties. It is generally understood, I think, that the law of the land is that only parliament may impose taxation. The Conservative government in 1962, just after the election of June 18, found a novel and ingenious way of raising taxes by order in council. They did it in a one-two way.

Initially they raised taxes by a considerable amount under a section in the Customs Tariff. Then they reduced those taxes to the level they wanted to achieve by using section 22 of the Financial Administration Act, which gives the Governor in Council power to remit any tax if the Governor in Council feels that it is in the public interest to do so.

I will not go into all the whys and wherefores of the 1962 story but I repeat with emphasis that the Liberals of the day attacked this action bitterly and vigorously. One after another, led by Hon. Paul Martin who was in the front row and supported by the present Minister of Justice who was in the back row, they stood up and denounced what had happened. We were in the fight, too, but the main point of my story is that the Liberals contended that this action by order in council was invalid and illegal. Both they and we tried to get the government of that day to give us the opinion from the Department of Justice upon the basis of which it had been decided that this order in council was valid. The government refused. Hon. Paul Martin had a motion on the order paper seeking to have this opinion tabled. We debated it at length; it was talked out, of course, under the rules of that day. We could not get what we wanted. The point is that the Liberals made a stand on that occasion. Here was the government using section 22 of the Financial Administration Act for a purpose for which it was not intended. They took the same position when they were the government by getting parliament to pass a bill validating the order in council to which objection had been taken, thus confirming that in their view it was invalid unless passed, or approved, by parliament.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these same people are back in power—I realize there are some new faces, but they belong to the same party. And they are now resorting to the very trick which they condemned out of hand when the Conservatives practised it in 1962. This time the Liberals found they wanted to change the customs law. I agree there is a slight difference of direction. The Conservatives wanted to put certain import duties up; the Liberals wanted to bring them down. The Liberals placed the appropriate motions on the order paper of the last parliament preparatory to doing this very thing. They were put on the order paper on June 1, 1967, and on November 6, 1967. But they were never passed, because parliament was dissolved before we got round to them. However, the fact that these resolutions were on the order paper clearly indicates that the government knew that the way to get the customs law changed was to get parliament to change it. But they did not get the law changed. Parliament was dissolved on April 23 and two days later, on April 25, the Liberal government of the present Prime Minister passed order in council PC1968/816 which relies on the same section 22 of the Financial Administration Act which they said in 1962 could not be used for this purpose.

This is somewhat technical, but I think the actual terms of this order in council should be on the record, so I shall read its operative sections:

1. This order may be cited as the Customs Tariff Remission Order, 1968.

2. Remission is hereby granted in respect of all goods imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on or after April 24, 1968, and all goods previously imported for which no entry for consumption was made before that date, of that part of the customs duty and sales tax payable thereon under the Customs Tariff and the Excise Tax Act equal to the amount by which

(a) the customs duty and sales tax payable thereon exceeds

(b) the amount of the customs duty and sales tax that would have been payable thereon if legislation had been enacted before the date of this Order based upon the resolutions relating to the Customs Tariff tabled in the House of Commons on June 1, 1967, and November 6, 1967.

I have read the entire operative part of the order in council. It says, in the plainest of language, something like this: By order in council we have brought in the law which parliament did not pass because it was dissolved before it could deal with certain resolutions which were on the order paper. Well, if this is not doing precisely the same thing as the Conservative government did in 1962 I do not understand the meaning of words.

The difference is, of course, that in 1962 the Conservatives used this device to raise import duties. There were companies and interests in this country which did not like this, and they were taking the government to court. In the present instance the import duties were reduced, so nobody is taking the government to court. But is this the touchstone of our political morality? Is this the basis upon which to use the power given by order in council—you use it when you can get away with it and you do not use it when you cannot get away with it? I think this is just as clear a violation of the proper use of these powers as that which was condemned so roundly by the Liberals in 1962.

I asked the Minister of Justice a question about this issue some days ago during the orders of the day question period. I asked him whether all aspects of it had been checked, especially bearing in mind the previous decision by the Department of Justice, before approval was given to the order. All I got by way of answer was the one word "yes". I am afraid I do not have a great deal of confidence in these opinions from a Department of Justice which can rule one way in 1962, the opposite way in 1963, then back again in 1968.

I shall not take the time to put the whole text of section 22 of the Financial Administration Act on the record. I read it again today, and it is clear to me that it is not the kind of provision which is to be used in a general way for reducing a tax for doing away with something which parliament has enacted. I believe this misuse of orders in council needs to be examined very carefully, and this is one of the reasons I am supporting the motion which is now before us, in the hope we can be given an opportunity to look into this kind of thing.

As a matter of fact, I suspect there have been a number of occasions upon which this power has been misused. I have another order in my hand—P.C. 1968-832, passed on April 30, 1968. It has to do with investment in the Churchill Falls Labrador Corporation, popularly known as Brinco. This is a long order and I do not intend to read it all. But again it is a question of the government drafting an order in council which relies on section 22 of the Financial Administration Act.

The government decides that it wants to exempt from taxation investment in American dollars in a certain development, namely, Brinco. The law is there. The law says such investment is subject to taxation. But the government simply declares that under section 22 of the Financial Administration Act these taxes are to be remitted—they need not be paid because a decision has been made by order in council.

I know the law is there about many taxes and about a lot of income taxes that people have to pay but if we stand up and ask the government to pass an order in council to reduce income taxes, or allow workers a tax exemption for what they spend on tools and on travelling to and from their places of work we will be told by the government: We cannot do that by order in council; it can be done only by act of parliament. But when the government wants to do something which it is clearly prevented from doing by the wording of our statutes, either the Customs Tariff or the Income Tax Act, it uses section 22 of the Financial Administration Act in this very ingenious way to achieve its will.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, the rafters of this place, if there are rafters in it, really rang back in 1962 when the Conservative government of that day was blasted by the Liberals. We took part in the fight on that occasion. As a matter of fact, I think I was the first one to discover the matter and brought it to light, but it was the Liberals who took on the battle. The place just rang, debate was hot and heavy, over this dastardly act of the Conservatives, using this order in council to legislate by order in council in an area that was clearly restricted to the parliament of Canada. Now a Liberal government is doing the same thing, and they are getting away with it because what they have done is to reduce taxes in the case of import duties through order in council P.C. 1968-816, and in the case regarding Brinco through order in council P.C. 1968-832. As I say, nobody is taking this government to court, but it is still an improper use of the medium of an order in council.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, I cite this because I think that on its merits it needs to be dealt with, and on its merits the government has to tell us, especially with its record in relation to the 1962 incident, why it has taken this stand. But in addition to the merits of this particular case I cite it as an example in support of our contention that the time has come for a committee to work out ways and means whereby parliament can review the exercise of delegated legislation either by boards or commissions or by the government itself.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, as an introduction to my remarks on this motion I would like to refer briefly to the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) speech to this house at the opening of this session. First, I would like to say I agree with much of what he had to say as recorded at page 73 of Hansard for September 16. As a Canadian I can say I hope his remarks were sincere, which will prove me wrong in my former interpretation of his political philosophy. I hope his words were not just mere window dressing because I wish to commend him for some of his remarks, but because of his actions since that occasion at the opening of the house I have now developed some reservations.

On that occasion the Prime Minister said, as recorded on page 72 of Hansard:

> It is the government's function to propose legislative solutions. It is the opposition's task to question these solutions and attempt to improve them or propose alternatives.

We hope that the government will accept some of the alternatives that we have proposed and that we intend to propose. We are not opposed to change in our parliamentary rules, as some people in this house and in the press seem to think, provided freedom of speech is maintained. The Prime Minister went on to say:

> Neither role can be subordinate to the other. It goes without saying that any proposal for procedural reform must assist both sides of this house to function more efficiently. Anything less would be self-defeating. Anything less would diminish the very institution which we seek to assist. The discussions which have been proceeding on and off for the past fortnight, or even longer, among the representatives of the several parties in the house must not be permitted to continue indefinitely.

Our house leader, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), has stated that this party is willing to co-operate. He has stated that time and time again both in this house and outside it. But he has also said we will not capitulate. I hope that the government understands our position in this regard.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

The Prime Minister went on to say:

> Nor should they be permitted to lead, either by agreement or in the absence of it, to procedural changes which will upset the delicate and essential balance between government and opposition so necessary to the proper functioning of parliament.

In regard to the proper functioning of parliament I say that with proper co-operation from both sides parliament will function, but co-operation actually is a two-way street. As I said before, it does not mean that the opposition will capitulate. I hope that the Prime Minister meant what he said. He went on to add:

> Good legislation, effective legislation, requires the expenditure of extensive effort on both sides of this house.

We agree with that. He also said:

> It is our responsibility as members to engage here in discussions which are as knowledgeable as possible.

But, Mr. Speaker, we as members of this house have many other responsibilities. We as private members have responsibilities that are possibly a little different from the responsibilities of members of the government, and I wish to refer to one or two of our responsibilities.

I would like to remind the Prime Minister that it is our responsibility, as members of the opposition, to see that the government does not always impose its will on parliament, and by "parliament" in this context I mean the people of Canada. It is also our responsibility as elected members of this house to see that freedom of speech is maintained. I think this is the foremost responsibility of backbenchers on this side of the house. However, it is also the responsibility of the government to see that freedom of speech is maintained.

It is also our responsibility as elected members to be accountable to the citizens of Canada for any authority that we delegate to other agencies, and that is what this resolution is about. It is also our responsibility to right some of the injustices we have inflicted upon the public by reason of authority delegated by members of parliament. It is also our responsibility to see that our democratic system of government is upheld and maintained, and that is one of the reasons that I am speaking on this resolution today.

If I may refer to a couple more passages in his speech, the Prime Minister went on to say:

> Every opportunity to learn more about proposed legislation, and more about the social or economic or other situations which have given rise to that proposed legislation, must be followed by all of us. It is my feeling that the advantage in this respect has too long rested with the government.

With that I agree. He also said:

> For that reason a most important concept which has been proposed to members, along with other procedural reforms, is the provision of public funds to permit opposition parties to obtain the services of researchers, advisers and experts to assist them. The government cannot function without expert assistance. For the same reason, neither should the opposition be expected to do so.

I understand from our house leader that there has been some talk of this but no action.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if I may I want to refer to two speeches that were made in the other house—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member to remind him that the house is dealing now with a very specific motion. The speech which the hon. member is now making may have been very relevant to the original resolution which was debated and adopted by this house, but, unless the remarks he has made until now are purely introductory in nature, he cannot go on making a general speech relating to a resolution which has already been adopted by the house. This motion deals with a very limited aspect of procedure in that it provides for "the review by this house of instruments made in virtue of any statute of the parliament of Canada," and this has been the very limited scope of the debate we have had until now by all members of the house who have taken part in the debate.

Mr. McIntosh: As I said, Mr. Speaker, it was my introduction. I am leading up to what the Prime Minister said about the matter of delegated legislation. I must lay the background because how we deal with the resolution will have a bearing on how the government will act upon it. This instrument must have teeth. I do not wish it to be simply an instrument of government. As I said a moment ago, two speeches were made on this subject in the other place by two hon. Senators. Senator O'Leary said:

> The opposition must never accept research facilities as a favour from the government. Those facilities should be given to the opposition by parliament itself—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is entirely out of order to quote from speeches made in the other place about matters which are currently under discussion in this house.

Mr. McIntosh: Then I shall get down to the point in the Prime Minister's speech which deals with the resolution. At page 73 of Hansard he said:

> A possible change, for example, but one which must be examined carefully, is the practice of delegating legislative authority, in terms of ministerial orders and orders made in council, and in the sense of decisions of quasi-judicial bodies. Whatever we decide, it should be based on a full knowledge of both the strengths and the weaknesses of our present practices.

I should like to deal mainly with the weaknesses of our present practices in respect of delegated legislative authority. This is very important. In my opinion the discussion on this resolution is long overdue. In my opinion it deals with one of the most important, most neglected and even one of the most dangerous aspects of the present method of governing our country.

We are, at last, opening the door on the question of the use of the delegated powers of parliament. This is a very large and formidable question that has created problems which, if not solved now, could eventually lead to our complete impotence as a governing body. If any member believes I exaggerate, let me simply refer him to the vast body of writing on the subject that already exists. Let the doubters search their own correspondence which they have had with their constituents, read the daily press and recall their own personal dealings with any one of the hundreds of government agencies. I am sure they will then agree that every day in this country there are hundreds of instances, some of insignificance, some of great importance, where the rights of citizens have been encroached upon by the unbridled use of power by public servants.

No one in this house is more eager than I to deal thoroughly and quickly with this resolution. My interest in the question is of long standing. It dates, in fact, from the day more than ten years ago when as a freshman member of parliament I suddenly became shockingly aware of the power of and the abuse of power by our national bureaucracy. This bureaucracy is not composed simply of the host of civil servants who man the ministerial departments of government. It includes the army of those who staff the crown corporations, the boards, the agencies, the commissions and regulatory bodies that have sprung up like weeds as the business of governing the nation has become increasingly complex and difficult.

Let me hasten to say that the problem of the exercise of power and the misuse of power delegated to an unwieldy and largely autonomous bureaucracy is not peculiar to Canada. It affects all countries with a democratic form of government and, I suspect, even those countries which subscribe to monolithic and authoritarian forms of government. Many of these countries have attacked the problem over a long period with varying success. I know of none who believe they have found a complete answer. But it is my hope that by dealing intelligently with this resolution we will be taking a giant step toward our own satisfactory solution.

I have said that my concern with the question is of long standing. In 1962 I was concerned enough with the many examples of arbitrary and unjust use of power by bureaucrats at all levels to introduce a private member's bill seeking to establish some control over bureaucratic oppression. This bill came forward for debate as Bill C-39 of 1963. It was in the form of an amendment to the Civil Service Act. It would have made it an offence for "any person holding an office, commission or employment, temporary or permanent, in the service of the government of Canada, at the nomination of the crown or at the nomination of any of the officers of the government of Canada" to "deprive or attempt to deprive a person of any right or freedom recognized and declared in the Canadian Bill of Rights." My aim at that time was set out in the explanatory notes to the bill:

> —to ensure the application of the Canadian Bill of Rights to the multitudinous and ever-multiplying federal statutes, rules, orders, regulations, bylaws and proclamations; to the end that the citizen may go in peace about his lawful occasions free of wrongful harassment in legal guise by holders of public office. The bill gives the Canadian citizen a voice to warn and a rod to chasten those of his servants who, in pride of the power he has entrusted to them, corruptly pervert his laws to his own hurt; to crown servants it gives the Canadian Bill of Rights as the golden rule by which to measure the rights and freedoms of the citizen—

Perhaps that was not the right method by which to achieve my aim. Perhaps the time was not ripe. The fact is, however, that the problem was pressing then and is even more so today, six years of legislation later. My aim remains the same. However, this time there appears to be more chance of achievement. As everyone knows, a private member's bill has scant chance of becoming law. Its fate is usually to be talked out as was mine. The measure before us today is a government resolution backed not only by the stature of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Drury) but the prestige of the Prime Minister whose remarks on the subject both inside and outside this house have left little doubt that he is in agreement with taking some steps to curb official licence. It has the further advantage, I am led to understand, of approval in general terms by all parties in the house.

It is true that the resolution as it stands is nothing more than an expression to set up a special committee to consider the problem of what might be contrived to enable this house to effectively police the powers parliament has already delegated or may in future delegate to various branches of the public service under statute. But I believe it is to be an historic start. It is my hope that the discussion of the need to adopt the resolution will go a long way toward helping the deliberations of any committee that may subsequently be set up and toward enabling this house to meet adequately the vital question of controlling the arbitrary exercise of power by the bureaucracy. I can think of no more urgent problem facing the twenty eighth parliament. We all are familiar with the chorus of criticism in recent years of parliament and parliamentarians. I think much of the criticism is exaggerated and misplaced. But we cannot very well blame our critics for confusing government, as seen through the activities of parliament, with government as experienced by the average citizen when faced with parliament's administrative apparatus, the bureaucracy.

Most critics, when their charges are examined, are found to have had a brush with the uncontrolled and unsupervised use of delegated authority and not with parliament. They have been understandably unable to distinguish in such cases between those in parliament who create the instrument of power and those outside parliament who anonymously wield that power. In my opinion this has been largely our own fault and the fault of our colleagues in previous parliaments. There has been a failure on the part of members to attach conditions and safeguards to the transfer of responsibility and power. Too often they have lightly passed on the responsibilities placed upon their shoulders by the fact of their election to parliament to appointed officials who are not subject to the harsh accounting of public opinion. Too often we have given power without ensuring that those to whom power is delegated will exercise it unselfishly and with impartial justice.

If there is a bureaucratic tyranny, if there is bureaucratic oppression, if there is periodic abuse of trust granted in good faith, and I for one believe there is, then it is we in parliament who are to blame. By adopting this resolution and endorsing the course of action it envisages I believe we can go a long way toward making restitution.

We can no longer slough off our responsibilities on others or give unrestricted grants of vast power with the attitude of "let George do it". If there is one thing we are charged with as members of parliament it is to ensure equal justice to all Canadians and to protect the rights and liberties of the individual and the rights and liberties of minorities.

There is no more deadly enemy of the democratic form of government, no more secret and sinister threat to our free way of life, than the arbitrary exercise of power beyond the forms and processes of ordinary law by hordes of anonymous officials.

By electing us to parliament, the people of Canada have placed in our hands tremendous power. If we transfer this power to others and fail to ensure that it is not used to victimize those who gave us this trust, then we are derelict in our duty and we will have opened wide the door to dictatorship by bureaucracy and we will have betrayed our cherished heritage of individual liberty and democratic government.

We are being asked to set up a committee that will study the problem of enabling the house to review instruments made in virtue of any statute of the parliament of Canada, that is to say, a committee that will recommend the establishment of some agency or procedure and some means of allowing parliament to make accountable to parliament those who exercise power in its name. I think this is a timely resolution and very appropriate.

If such a committee is set up I believe it is important that there be a clear understanding beforehand of what is expected of it. It is important that its members know exactly what this house wishes it to do, what general line it is expected to pursue and something of the dimensions and importance of the problems that it will be asked to consider.

First, let it be clearly understood that there is nothing essentially wrong about the delegation of authority. I believe this to be an essential operation of modern government. Without delegation of power and authority government today, complex and fantastically detailed and growing more so every day, would scarcely be possible. Without such a device we would face a complete breakdown of government administration, chaos and anarchy.

It is not the delegation of power and authority which is dangerous, it is rather the imperfect manner in which, up to now, it has been done. We have been careless and irresponsible in the use of what should be an essential and effective tool of government. Professor Harold J. Laski was not among the many constitutional authorities in Great Britain who decried delegated authority and the increase in so-called administrative law. He did not agree that it was a dangerous trend which should be stamped out. In his "Parliamentary Government in England" he described the delegated power as:

> —an elementary procedural convenience essential to the positive state.

Having said that he warned:

> The vital thing is that parliament should be in a position to make objection to any use of it when it deems fit, and that it should be so able to examine what is done in its name as to make it certain that nothing to which objection can be taken escapes from its purview.

In other words, he says to use the device but to take sensible precautions. This sums up, I think, in my view what the resolution now before us seeks to do.

The question that will most closely concern any committee that may be set up as a consequence of our adopting this resolution will be the means whereby parliament will always be in a position to keep delegated power and authority within its purview. I feel sure there will be many who will immediately think of the old idea of an ombudsman. It is a theory that I favoured for a long time. But surely setting up an ombudsman would merely be establishing another government official. When we consider the scant regard paid by the executive to our present economic watchdog, the Auditor General, we realize how ineffective this would be. Besides, appointing another official outside parliament to do a job that is clearly that of members of parliament would be begging the suggestion that this was just another abdication of responsibility. We must not abdicate our responsibilities as members of parliament as has been done in the past.

In the experience of some countries, most notably and most recently the United Kingdom, the office of ombudsman appears to have degenerated into a general complaint bureau or, alternatively, into a futile bit of window dressing for the democratic process. What we need, I believe, is a parliamentary body that will be armed with power to call witnesses and for the production of papers without regard to governmental rank or influence, and that will be empowered to pursue its own course free of direction or influence by the government. It must be strong enough and free enough to ride close herd on all recipients of parliament's delegated authority and to command their compliance and respect.

The pattern of the public accounts committee of this house with its chairman drawn from the opposition ranks might be a very good one to follow. To me the essential features must be that its findings, reports and recommendations must carry with them some compulsion on the executive or individually responsible members of the executive, the Prime Minister and cabinet ministers, to take subsequent action. The very least that must be done is to ensure that anything turned up by the watchdog group gets a fair and public hearing in this group.

I believe the relationship of the cabinet to any such body will dictate its success and also its failure. Let us never forget, when we consider the untrammeled exercise of power by the bureaucracy, that the executive, in light of recent parliamentary history, must be placed at the head of any list of those to be scrutinized. It would be my hope that any method that may be developed for overseeing the indiscriminate use of power would consider as a priority item the use of that executive device we know, as referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), as the order in council.

I would like to recall to members the words of a committee of the Canadian Bar Association as quoted in the Montreal Gazette on November 11:

> Under democratic institutions the people expect to be governed, but on condition that the laws should be discussed in the open, traversed by the criticism of the opposition and be the result of free and enlightened decision by parliament.

There is no governmental device more murky and less open than the order in council.

Having suggested some of the forms which the proposed body might take and some of the lines along which I believe it should operate, I should like to warn against some of the things it should not be and some of the things it should not be allowed to do. There is always a grave danger that what appears on the surface so fair and so promising can be perverted into something menacing and tyrannous. Such measures as are encompassed within the resolution before us can be looked at in two ways, viewed from the front or the rear according to the person who is looking with a purpose.

What I am seeking to warn against is this house establishing one type of thing and finding later on it is being used quite differently. A parliamentary body, ostensibly intended to police misuse of delegated power, could equally well be utilized by a skilful and cynical executive to cover up wrongdoing. An unscrupulous and dictatorial executive could turn it into an instrument for preventing exposure of anything embarrassing to it, for burying aggravating disclosures, delaying remedial action and for scattering dust in the public eye. Anyone who has any experience with parliamentary committees will realize just what I mean. In fact, mention was made of this the other night by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) when he referred to the use of the committees system. The use of a government majority and a government chairman to stifle discussion and frustrate action is not unknown. The embalming of a committee's findings by the simple expedient of tabling is not unknown. I realize that in many statements inside and outside the house the Prime Minister has endorsed the theory of parliament controlling the growing power of bureaucracy. I was reassured to find traces of this sentiment in the speech from the throne and more specific endorsation, as I said when I started my speech, when he spoke on leaders' day in the house.

I also noticed in the speech from the throne mention of a plan to centralize all government information services in order to better inform Canadians about their government and bring individual Canadians closer to their government. This is a very estimable aim, a laudable endeavour if indeed those things are the end result. But just suppose that for one of many possible reasons the Prime Minister is not able personally to direct such bold new enterprises as the centralized information service and the enterprise envisaged in this resolution; suppose the initiative in these matters falls to others, particularly into the sphere of the advice and influence of senior civil servants. Both projects could change in the twinkling of an eye from necessary and effective projects to dangerous props of arbitrary government.

I hope members opposite will forgive me for mentioning such an unlikely possibility as a Liberal government seeking to perpetuate itself in office, but I do so only to illustrate the care that must be taken in establishing any agency of parliament to carry out such a delicate and provocative task as policing delegated powers.

I have not attempted at this time, Mr. Speaker, to deal at any great length with the background and development of the problem of delegated authority, delegated powers, administrative law and related topics. There is already a vast amount of literature on the subject. I am taking it for granted that everyone here is at least aware that the problem exists and is urgent. It is a reality of our times in regard to government, but it is by no means new. The first world war, with its tremendous burdens upon government, its compounding of government responsibilities, accentuated something that had already existed for a long time. In 1929 the government of Great Britain studied it and took measures to control it. These measures are still operating today, however narrowly and faultily their critics may think.

In the same year the Lord Chief Justice of England, the right hon. Lord Hewart of Bury, described it as "the new despotism" in a book that has become a classic text on the subject. As early as that day he wrote:

> A little inquiry will serve to show that there is now, and for some years past has been, a persistent influence at work which, whatever the motives or intentions that support it may be thought to be, undoubtedly has the effect of placing a large and increasing field of departmental authority and activity beyond the reach of the ordinary law.

He was concerned about parliament relinquishing its powers in the interest of expediency or apathy, to the detriment of our rights and liberties. On this he wrote:

> Much toil, and not a little blood, have been spent in bringing slowly into being a policy wherein the people make the laws, and independent judges administer them. If that edifice is to be overthrown, let the overthrow be accomplished openly.
> Never let it be said that liberty and justice having with difficulty been won, were suffered to be abstracted or impaired in a fit of absence of mind.

As members, we have all had experience at one time or another of misuse by public servants of power delegated to them by us and exercised by them against their fellow citizens. I do not say that this is always deliberate, always calculated, always vicious. Sometimes it is mere bumbling, but bumbling the consequences of which can too often be escaped because there is no accounting. We should remember that delegated authority is wielded in the vast majority of cases by nameless, faceless bureaucrats who feel completely secure from retribution, hidden as they are in the maze of the public service jungle. Most abuses take place out of the public eye. I feel that publicity therefore is one of the chief weapons against abuse of power. I doubt if any department, including the Privy Council, any board, commission or other agency of government fails to contribute its daily mite to the staggering annual total of injustices done by government to its citizens.

It would serve little purpose at this point, Mr. Speaker, to cite individual cases. I am sure all of us could provide enough of these to take many sitting days and swamp Hansard. My files, in any case, are full of instances of bureaucratic injustice, and at a later time I will speak of some of them.

To my mind the worst aspect of the whole problem of the abuse of delegated power lies not with the actions of ordinary, middle-run civil servants but with the top brass of the public service and the opportunity it gives them to become a real threat to our chosen system of parliamentary democracy. I believe it is with them and their exercise of powers, especially in view of their position of tremendous influence and persuasion on ministers, that any parliamentary supervisory effort should be chiefly concerned.

I have said on other occasions in this house, and I should like to repeat it, that it matters not what party is in power and forms the government, it is really the power elite of the public service that runs the country. The government of the day is a captive of the top civil service brass; ministers are only hostages, completely dominated and directed by their top departmental officials.

This dominance is exerted by virtue, partly, of experience but principally through the power delegated to the appointed officials by statute. It is vital to oversee the use of this power if we are to maintain even the figment of elected government governing. As for the ordinary member of parliament, if the senior civil servant does not disregard us as being such small change as to be beneath his notice, he treats us like children who must be disciplined and never indulged. If any of you who have been to departments have not yet found this out, you will do so in the next few weeks or months. I am talking from experience.

On this point I would like to quote what James Harvey and Katherine Hood have to say in their book, "The British State":

—delegated authority amounts to virtually uncontrolled making of laws by government departments, and demonstrates the immense powers wielded by the senior permanent officials of the civil service.

They say further:

The cabinet would never be able to sustain the "dictatorship" which it nowadays exercises over the House of Commons without the indispensable assistance of the permanent civil service.

Later they say:

—a highly effective conspiracy of silence surrounds the activity of the civil service.

Mr. Baldwin: And the cabinet.

Mr. McIntosh: As my colleague the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has just said, and the cabinet. Judging from the remarks of the Prime Minister in the past two or three weeks, there may in future be even more than we have been used to. I believe it is high time this silence was broken, that light was allowed into the dark places of the civil service power structure, and senior departmental officials were compelled to answer publicly and openly for the discharge of the trust handed them by parliament. If we set up a committee as suggested in this resolution, if that committee functions the way we want and expect it to function, it will give us this open criticism. We as members of parliament will be responsible for the power we have delegated. I think that is our main responsibility. I think this is one of the first responsibilities we should consider in this twenty eighth parliament, that we are responsible for delegated authority.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Writing of the implications of administrative justice, that handmaiden of delegated authority, N. C. Hinton in his "Government and the Citizen" noted:

The implications of this type of justice hardly need underlining. The citizen loses the benefit of the traditional impartiality of the courts. His rights may be adversely affected if they run contrary to government policy. Administrative decisions may fly in the face of true justice and logic.

I believe it is our duty in considering the purpose of this resolution to ensure that our citizens are provided with some means whereby parliament can protect them from administrative abuse and injustice. I repeat that anything we do along this line must be effective and meaningful to ordinary Canadians, in other words, to our constituents. It cannot be mere camouflage, and I hope that the Prime Minister was not giving us just window dressing. I hope he was sincere in what he said. If we fail in this, we will have done a grave disservice to our people and our country.

I have never advocated that the practice of delegating authority be discontinued or even curtailed. All that is needed is supervision of its use. It can be an exceedingly valuable tool of government if properly handled. This is an opportunity to make it really effective. Let us cease the old practice of giving some anonymous group of appointed officials a blank cheque except for our signature with every piece of legislation we approve, which in fact is what we have been doing.

As some new members in the house may find out, the regulations are actually more powerful than some of the acts of parliament. I have found that out in individual cases. In other words, under our present system we have delegated our authority to these civil servants, and we have done so indiscriminately and with no responsibility. We cannot afford any longer to hand out so casually our power of attorney as members of parliament. Power to govern is our responsibility. Let us assume it fully by making sure that what is done in our name is done fairly, openly and with justice for all.

My early experience with the monster of bureaucracy wielding unregulated power has compelled me to fight it over the years. I am happy to take part in another such battle, as you well know, Mr. Speaker. Let me conclude by cautioning that in my view there is no surer way of poisoning parliamentary democracy than by abdicating our power without supervision of its use.

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, in his speech, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) bemoaned the fact that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) had replied too briefly to his question of September 17 in which he outlined a similarity of methods and tactics between the Conservative government of 1962 and the Liberal government of 1967.

The hon. member recalled that, in 1962, the Conservative government had levied a new tax through an order in council, whereas in 1967 a Liberal government had reimbursed taxes also through an order in council.

Now, a mere look at the circumstances will show that the similarity of the two methods mentioned by the hon. member is more artificial than real.

In fact, in 1962, when parliament had not yet been convened, the then Conservative government had enacted a new tax by order in council under section 22 of the Financial Administration Act and section 4 of the Customs Tariff.

Now, in 1967, when a new method of tax collection had to be adopted, a budget and budget resolutions were put before the house. It is well known that when a budget resolution is tabled in the house, it is effective immediately. What happened is this: the Department of National Revenue started collecting that tax according to the Financial Administration Act in general and not under a section of the act, all that in accordance with the authority conferred by the said act.

That is, I think, the great difference between the two methods used and, besides, I am happy to think that the consideration of this resolution might bring a solution to those who complain about government interventions simply by orders in council.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Is it not a fact that the Department of National Revenue also collected a certain other tax that was on the order paper but had to refund that tax when parliament did not pass it? Therefore, is the government not doing precisely the same thing in this case, namely, legislating by order in council something that parliament has not passed?

[Translation]

Mr. Cantin: Mr. Speaker, I think that this is the whole difference. As soon as a budget resolution is introduced in the house, the Department of National Revenue is compelled to start its collection as prescribed by the new resolution, and that is what it did.

Of course, the dissolution of the houses—

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But is that not subject to passage by parliament?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think perhaps the debate might be continued in committee.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Except for the fact, Mr. Speaker, that we do not go into committee on this resolution.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am referring, of course, to the special committee which will be set up as a result of this resolution.

Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as indicated item No. 6 on the order paper has been called. At the same time I wonder whether, for the purpose of the debate on this motion, there might be an agreement among hon. members that the debate might also range over the subject matters of items Nos. 5 and 7 on the order paper so that the subject of farm financing generally could be dealt with in the course of the debate. In this way perhaps it may be possible to have a broader debate.

Mr. Baldwin: We would be quite agreeable to this suggestion, Mr. Speaker, and we will not exercise our right to prevent the government from straying from the path. But I would like to go a step further and ask the government house leader and other house leaders to consider the possibility, when we have exhausted the day which is normally allotted to this subject, of pursuing the matter along the same lines so that there would in fact be one continuous debate. I am offering this suggestion so that the government house leader may review it before the day is over.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps before the house expresses its opinion on the proposal made by the President of the Privy Council I might mention that there might be some slight difficulty in the fact that we are now starting a five hour period allotted to this resolution. A five hour period is allotted on each of these resolutions. I am wondering whether the house wants to agree on a five hour period for each resolution, that is, a total of 15 hours, and so commence a 15-hour period on these resolutions. Since we are just starting the five hour period on one resolution, perhaps there should be some agreement because there are procedural difficulties once we have started.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I suggest that we agree to the proposal that in any discussion of order No. 6 there be sufficient latitude to deal with orders Nos. 5 and 7, and let nature take its course so far as time is concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that we will report the three resolutions out of the committee of the whole after the debate has been completed in committee of the whole?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No, Mr. Speaker, but I believe the provisions of standing order 34 would prevent hon. members from referring to Nos. 5 and 7, so this provision should not be applied during the debate on item No. 6. Members could refer to the subject matter of those two resolutions.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ELIGIBLE CLASSES, AMOUNT OF CAPITAL, INTEREST RATES, ETC.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Farm Credit Act to broaden the classes of persons eligible for loans under the act; to increase the amount of the capital of the Farm Credit Corporation; to substitute for the present rates of interest on loans made under the act (except any such loans made pursuant to applications received by the corporation before September 13, 1968) such rate or rates of interest on any loans made after the coming into force of the said measure as may be prescribed by the governor in council; to provide further for certain changes in connection with the administration of the act and for other matters related or incidental thereto.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Béchard in the chair.

Mr. Olson: I notice it is now six minutes to six. I wonder whether we could call it six o'clock so that I could make my statement on the three resolutions at eight o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment this evening are the following: the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway—Harbours—Roberts Bank (B.C.)—constitutional jurisdiction respecting railway line; the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville—Transport—potash—request for inquiry into freight rate; the hon. member for Hillsborough—the Biafra question on the United Nations agenda.

[English]

It being 6 o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

STUDENT LOANS

SUGGESTED INTEREST FREE LOANS TO UNIVERSITY STUDENTS

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of introducing a measure which would allow loans to university students to be made interest free.

He said: Mr. Speaker, on August 21 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) announced that during the 1967-68 lending year, loans were made to 90,371 students. The total amount was $57,053,410. The government has estimated there will be a total of some 100,000 loans to students in the 1968-69 year, in a total amount of some $60 million. Since the act came into effect in 1964, 132,000 students have received loans totalling $160,900,000.

In his August 21 announcement the minister also gave the revised criteria for loan applications with regard to students independent of parental financial supervision. Formerly, such students were required to have completed three years post-secondary studies or be employed one year or be married. The new criteria demand four years of post-secondary studies, one year's employment and an age level of 21 years or marriage. The new criteria have been protested by the students union at the University of Saskatchewan. Student loans are interest free until six months after graduation at which time students start paying back and at which time interest at the rate of 5¾ per cent is applied. Up to then, interest is paid by the government to the banks since student loans are government guaranteed bank loans.

Under the new formula proposed this summer, interest rates applied to loans taken out in the 1968-69 academic year will go from an estimated 7¾ per cent to 8 per cent, adding from $1.5 million to $2 million to student repayments. The argument is advanced that the government should pay the total interest and make the loans interest free to students who in the year after graduation are faced with pyramiding costs of getting established in a profession and paying off multitudinous debts of which student loans are only a part.

Speaking in parliament on June 21, 1966, the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) suggested a number of improvements to the student loan program, including reciprocity between the Quebec and national plans as well as a remission of debt for students achieving a certain level of scholastic excellence. At that time the minister stated he looked to the day when tuition fees would be eliminated. One would hope the government at this time would take to heart the recommendations he made then from the freewheeling position of a minister without portfolio, prior to assuming the cares of office associated with the senior cabinet position he now holds.

Certainly, if the government cannot see its way clear to accept the advice of the present Minister of Justice and remove tuition fees completely through remission of loan payments to outstanding students, at least it could move at this point to remit interest rates after as well as before graduation, since the amount involved is minuscule in the light of the government's total requirements but nevertheless could be very significant to the individual student.

The point raised by the present Minister of Justice in 1966, relating to the dovetailing of the Quebec and Ottawa plans, was certainly well taken and was evidence of his appreciation of the divisive nature of the two student loan plans, one for Quebec and one for Ottawa. Regrettably, no advances have as yet been made permitting total reciprocity between the two plans. It is to be hoped that in his present responsible position he will again speak out in the cabinet council in favour of a national Canadian plan, thus permitting students from every province to study in any other province rather than the present divisive and restrictve program introduced by the Pearson government.

The total of student loans in Alberta in 1967-68 came to $6.4 million for some 10,500 students; in Saskatchewan, $5.9 million for some 7,300 students Manitoba, $3.2 million for some 4,600 students. Thus, on the prairie provinces the student loan program is of vital importance. There is no question in so far as students across Canada are concerned that the loans should be interest free, and rather than increasing the interest rate in the current academic year the government should undertake to remove completely from the shoulders of students the accumulative burden of high interest payments. Generally speaking, it is students from low income families who most require loans. It goes without saying that such students should be encouraged in every way to attain the maximum development of their potential.

From the economic viewpoint expenditures on education cannot be considered expenses; rather, they are investments. The more highly educated a student becomes the greater become his earning potential and productivity. He therefore pays increased income tax and in the long run the state benefits.

A few days ago I talked with some students from a nearby university and it soon became apparent that students of slender financial means felt society had discriminated against them. Through no fault of their own they had to live in squalid conditions in inferior quality housing and be faced with the prospect of a large debt on graduation. Now that debt carries considerable interest. Their feelings of being treated unfairly become stronger when they saw fellow students from well to do families living a life of relative financial ease, through no increased effort on their own part and not being faced with a large debt to pay after graduation.

By and large, Canadian students are a responsible and dedicated group of Canadians. In no country in the world does education play so important a role in the development of a nation as in Canada. This is an added reason for the necessity of accepting a greater degree of governmental involvement in education. Above all, it is necessary to foster closer relationship between secondary educational institutions in Quebec and those in the rest of Canada.

For too long we have had education going one way in one province and another way in another province. Surely, Mr. Speaker, since we all have the same staggering responsibilities in every province for the development and consolidation of this nation from coast to coast, we ought to move heaven and earth to improve and co-ordinate relations between students and educators, and between those in the general education movement in Quebec and educators in the other provinces.

Nothing could be or is more dangerous to the future freedom, independence and prosperity of this nation than the separation and compartmentalization of its secondary educational systems. Make no mistake, Mr. Speaker, Canada's future as a free and independent nation today is trembling in the balance. We all know how difficult it will be for Canada to survive in freedom against the tremendous social, economic and political pulls of the United States and Europe. It will be difficult for this country to remain united under the present circumstances. How much more difficult would our survival be if our country became a conglomeration of petty principalities.

We all know how much freedom and liberal thought exists in those areas of the world where nations are divided and national boundaries have stimulated generations of hatred. That sort of thing must not be our fate. That must not be the fate of our continental destiny.

Our education must be more in tune with the needs of the nation. It must be at a modern pace and use the tools of the electronic age rather than at the leisurely pace of 50 years ago. We must have education in depth. Education must be available to all who can utilize it, be they French, English or members of those other races and cultures whose presence has added a new dimension to the power of Canada. In this connection I cannot do better than refer to remarks made recently by a former member of the government, hon. Robert Winters, president of Brazilian Light and Power. Speaking in Windsor, Ontario, on September 21, Mr. Winters said:

> To bring such facilities and faculties to all who have the wish and the ability to use them is a financial undertaking of the first magnitude. It requires the resources of all levels of government and the private sector.

He also said:

> The level of education and the standard of national economic well-being are interrelated. In our case, it is the major reason for the shortfall in our economic performance compared with our better educated neighbours to the south.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, education cannot be geared exclusively to economic performance. It must be related to advancement in the entire field of human knowledge—science, economics, literature, the arts and so on.

Unquestionably, since Canada's population as it relates to national development is smaller than a similar sort of population in most other countries, we must derive the utmost benefit from our educational system so that each Canadian may make a maximum contribution to the national advancement. There was a time when education was largely a matter of self-improvement. Today education affects the progress of our country, the mutual understanding among its citizens, the unity and development of the nation and the scientific, social and political evolution of our times. For this reason the federal government must share a greater part of the burden, not only with the provinces but also with the students.

It has been said that it is easy to suggest programs that entail the spending of government money; but it is another thing to determine from where money to pay for such programs is to come. I know that those who will speak against this idea will say to hon. members in the opposition, "I thought you wanted the government to save money and here you are, asking for more money to be spent. You cannot have it both ways." The field of education, I submit, ought to have priority over a great many other fields. At this time it might be well for the government to reassess some of its programs and determine whether all or part of the money being spent in those programs is being spent to the best advantage. One program which comes to mind is an across the board handout to our entire family population, namely, the family allowance program.

I ask the government to consider one question at this time when it is short of money and is considering its priorities. Do families with a taxable income of $10,000 or more annually really need a family allowance? Do such families need this little handout which was inaugurated many years ago when economic conditions were so vastly different? That program could be reassessed, keeping in mind national priorities and spending money in areas of greatest need. Personally, if other sources of funds can not be found, I think education is important enough to warrant a little increase in taxation.

Recent changes in federal participation have resulted in federal contributions to capital and operating costs of universities being increased to approximately 50 per cent. At the same time very little has been done to ease the burden on students. It is illusory for those in the government to think that saddling a student with a large financial obligation which must be repaid shortly after graduation is in any way a gift to the student. It is not. The debt makes it possible for the student to graduate. Then, when all his resources are needed to enable him to become established, he is faced with a large debt which he must repay.

If Canada is to keep pace with the advances made in the United States and elsewhere in the world in medicine, space, science, aeronautics and so on, and not be hopelessly left behind in the expansion of knowledge, nothing is more urgent at this time than assistance to our students. As a small beginning, I urge a total remission of student loan interest charges.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, may I congratulate the mover of the motion. I agree with many of his points but I must say at the beginning of my remarks that though I support his motion my heart really is not in it. I feel that we must view education from the standpoint of Canada's place internationally and from the standpoint of its effects on our own population.

A couple of weeks ago the government was severely criticized for scrapping its winter works program. The government said that the winter works program was done away with because it was inadequate. Personally, I consider the student loan program totally inadequate. When the government thought its winter works program was wanting, so to speak, that program was scrapped forthwith. I know that we heard many vague mutterings on the subject of winter works. Nevertheless, a number of programs were suggested to take its place.

Today we are considering a reduction of loans and not the complete elimination of any particular grants. Perhaps we might consider this matter along the lines we considered the winter works program, if that is not taking our line of reasoning too far out of the way.

I do not think, as I said, that the Canada student loan program goes far enough. The house may recall that the inception of the program lay in some campaign promises in the 1963 federal election. We heard a good deal from the Liberals about 10,000 student scholarships. When the promise was transformed into legislation in 1964, as if by magic it became the Canada student loan plan.

This plan has indeed helped to put thousands of students through university. It has also placed thousands of students in debt six months after their graduation. What we need today in this country is a greatly expanded accessibility of education for students. Too few students go on to receive higher education; 16.9 per cent is the most recent figure I have heard, compared with well over 40 per cent in the United States. I think we have to consider education as being a right, not a privilege. Education should be considered as a means of enriching the human resources of our country, not only for the production of saleable skills but in the cultural aspects. The good life has to mean more than the ever-increasing consumption of goods. Accessibility means that regardless of income worthy students need travel allowances, better housing, far more in the way of educational and classroom facilities, much more by way of health facilities, books, supplies of various kinds. Our country is wealthy enough to provide a great deal more aid to students in all these directions—selfishly, if you like, because we depend on these students to provide the leadership in our society in the future.

There is a sociological side to accessibility. Even if we were to make university education completely free tomorrow it would take some sections of our society years to catch up with what this really means in terms of human betterment. I am thinking of the chronically unemployed, the chronically underprivileged, those who have checked out of our society and who do not understand that the way to a better life is through better education. So we must do more than provide free university education. We must set up a whole program along the lines of Headstart, a program which must be comprehensive and embrace our whole system of education. Only by such action can we put Canadians on an equal footing with students in some of the eastern countries and even in some countries of the west.

For too long we have depended upon the importation of skills. It seems to me there is something a little immoral about sending Canadian agents abroad to steal, if you like, the talent they find there, to drain the brains of other nations and make good the deficiencies that we have failed to overcome in our own. I am thinking of teachers, doctors, nurses; they are most welcome and we cannot do without them. But generally speaking they come from countries with a lower standard of living than our own which need the services of these people even more than we do. Their presence here indicates that we have failed to do our job in the past and that we must consider giving greater support to our educational system at the secondary level.

The only way in which we can upgrade technical skills is by means of a massive injection of funds. Social capital is what our country really need. So I support the resolution for interest-free loans, but only as a half way house. I believe higher education should be brought within the reach of all who can profit by it. This is not the case today. Too many of the wrong people are going on to higher education. We have a long way to go before we can avoid wasting the abundant potential skill of our people because we are failing to provide the kind of training from which so many of them could profit.

Too many are deprived of these opportunities because they cannot afford them. It is not because they are lazy and do not want them or do not need them. I should like to quote from an article in today's Montreal Star in which student borrowing is discussed. I shall begin half way down the first column on page 4;

> Last year, over 90,000 students across Canada borrowed $57,000,000 under the plan for higher education.
> But the plan has also had a checkered career. It clearly has not brought as many students from the lower income groups into university as had been hoped; the university population continues to be overwhelmingly from families in the upper levels of the economic scale.
> Nor has it done much to even out economic disparities across the country. Experience suggests that the best program of student assistance is a combination of loans and provincial grant programs of significant magnitude.
> Above all, it has failed to satisfy the students from what may be called the psychological point of view. To get a Canadian student loan, eligibility must be established; the application form is essentially a means test and, in the case of dependent students, it is a means test of their families' ability to send them to college.

We have all heard the argument on the means test. I do not want to go into it again now. I think the position of this party with regard to a means test, a needs test, or anything of that nature is perfectly clear, and to say anything more about it at this point would be redundant. Fifty seven million dollars sound like a lot of money. But remember, these are loans, not grants. We spend $140 million on NORAD each year without batting an eyelid, without even bringing the question up in parliament; we deal with it by order in council.

The house will recall that loans are made to certain students with government backing; the government guarantees the lending institutions repayment plus interest at the rate of 5¾ per cent six months after graduation. This was the situation until August 16 of the present year. The date fixed for repayment is one upon which most borrowers would find it extremely difficult to raise the money required. Six months after my own graduation, for example, I was attempting to start a career and establish a home. Had I been faced with repayment of a major loan I would have been in extreme difficulty. We are putting thousands of students in hock and I do not think this will help our country in the long run.

The interest rate was, as I say, 5¾ per cent until August 16. A lot of students took advantage of these loans because they were all they could get. But only recently we found that the private lenders were no longer content with an interest rate of 5¾ per cent; they could get far more on high rise buildings, and, loyal corporate citizens that they are, they began to turn off the financial tap. The government came to the rescue by an arrangement which involves increasing the rate of interest by 2 per cent; from now on the figure is tied to the rate on government bonds plus an additional 1 per cent for administration. I note that a flexible rate of interest is also contemplated in the proposed legislation affecting farm improvement loans; the rate is to be flexible and capable of adjustment by order in council. Is this to be the pattern of government legislation in the future? If such is the case we are disturbed, because such a practice would be contrary to the interests of the very people we are trying to help.

In August, 1968, the loan rate was pegged at 7¾ per cent—the bond yield plus 1 per cent, plus a further 1 per cent for administration. I suggest the government should find other ways of subsidizing student loans. It is well known that throughout their lives these students will be bearing a larger share of the country's burdens through the higher income taxes they will be called upon to pay as a result of their greater earning capacity. The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) made a speech at Woodstock on September 1 in which he made reference to this aspect, and I should like to quote somethnig from what he said:

> About 54,000 veterans resumed their education at the university level, and it was estimated several years ago that, at that time, they had already paid enough in additional income tax to equal the cost of their education.

Another 80,000 took technical or vocational training of one sort or another, thereby improving their employment potential and enhancing their contribution to the Canadian economy.

If the Canadian economy and the Canadian government's position are going to be enhanced by students going to university, then the government should do everything possible to assist them to do just that. It should not institute measures that are regressive. In my view the raising of the interest rate on student loans by 2 per cent is a regressive measure.

In this house we hear daily that we are in the midst of an inflationary spiral, and we also know that throughout the past summer many students had extreme difficulty in finding summer employment. If students are unable to earn money during the summer it follows that they will be more interested in borrowing money for their education. They should be assisted as much as possible when they go to borrow money from government sources, if it is the government's intention that they should do so, and I am not prepared to say I agree with that intention if it puts students deeper in debt.

The affluent can go to school quite easily. There is no problem there. Our problem in Canada is to broaden the educational base so that more of our young people can go to post-secondary institutions. I myself was most favoured to go with two of my high school classmates to university. My parents had the financial means to send me to university. However, there were a great many others of my age who had the ability to absorb university education but they did not have the means to attend university. I have always felt that others would have benefited equally, or perhaps to a greater degree, from the experience that I received by chance. Our job is to arrange our assistance so that it is no longer due to chance or accident of birth that students can go to university. The opportunity to go to university should be based on a student's ability to learn and not on his ability to pay.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I wish to comment briefly on the ceiling imposed on student loans. The $1,000 ceiling really goes only two-thirds of the way toward meeting the cost of a student's year at college. I myself have a daughter at school, and most people estimate that a student living away from home is faced with a charge of some $1,500 per year for the various costs associated with going to university.

This session we have heard a lot about manpower training and retraining, about greater facilities, greater emphasis and greater opportunities. Is this just talk? Is this a case of what the Lord giveth He will ultimately take away?

This motion, Mr. Speaker, is a step in the right direction but it is only a timid step. We support it, knowing its imperfections. For years we have pressed and will continue to press for the provision of higher education at public expense in the same way as for over a century we have offered elementary and secondary school training to Canadian students.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make very brief comments.

In the first place, I wish to congratulate the mover of the motion which we wholeheartedly support, since it will help a class of very needy people.

Mr. Speaker, I will restrict my comments, in order to co-operate with the mover and prevent the motion from being postponed until Doomsday, as it happens most of the time.

Mr. Speaker, a student is a worker in the same capacity as a labourer in an industry and in a manufacture or as a farmer. A student is a worker since he must devote ten, fifteen or twenty years of his life to his studies. His sole difference with a labourer is that he has no income while attending school or university. He is a worker without any income and therefore must be helped. Then the government very imaginatively thought of offering non-existent jobs. I was one of those students a few years ago. I am now twenty-five and, since I finished my studies two years ago, I myself suffered from this practice. My debts at the present time total about $4,000, because I received no help from the government. I could not find a summer job because there were none to be had. As a result, I find myself today in the House of Commons. That is not too bad; however, all students do not become members of the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is extremely important that we help the students. The work they are offered, to supply them with an extremely low minimum income, is obtained either through patronage or petty politicking.

Usually, the jobs are unimportant or the student must go to another province. This entails heavy expenses and he comes back home with no money in his pockets, to start a year of attendance at university which costs him an average of $7 a day. Who is the eternal victim? The student. In most cases, the student comes from a big family with a very low income. He has no money. The family allowance of $6, granted to the head of the family, is not a present after all. How do you expect a father to help his son, especially in view of the average per capita income, in Quebec and elsewhere?

Mr. Speaker, the problems facing the students could be discussed, but I said I would be brief. It all boils down to making financially possible what is physically desirable and feasible. In other words, financial capital should be put at the service of human capital whose potential is almost boundless. Students could be helped in two ways: first, through interest-free loans, as proposed in the notice of motion; and, second, by paying the students a salary.

But, knowing our present governments and those we have had in the last hundred years, we realize that it is almost impossible to give students a salary. Governments refuse to tackle the real problem.

Then, there are loans. But there again, they belong to the field of the "most desirable". That is why I join the mover of this motion in an attempt to keep it from being put off indefinitely.

Mr. Speaker, to my mind the situation is important and, at this point, I refer to the summary of the fifth annual review of the Economic Council of Canada. On page 7, one can read as follows:

> The ultimate purpose of our economic and social goals is to provide all Canadians with access to higher material standards of living and a higher quality of life.

A higher level of education or economic security will make possible a better quality of life.

Mr. Speaker, when a student leaves what we call CEGEP in Quebec and high schools in other provinces to go on to university, he has to borrow money. He will not be able to borrow more than $1,000. Let us suppose he attends a university for four years to get a bachelor's or a master's degree: When he leaves, he will have a debt of $4,000 maybe $5,000 or $6,000, depending whether he lives far from home and goes home every weekend, whether he buries himself in his studies or joins a round of parties, having in view social as well as intellectual accomplishments.

But once that same student, having secured his degree starts to earn a living, he comes up against all kinds of difficulties when trying to get employment and after spending 20 years studying, he still has to face five, six, seven, eight and even ten years of his life during which he will have to repay this same loan at extravagant rates of interest. It is somewhat similar to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

And the government is to blame Mr. Chairman, for having increased the rates of interests of its loans from 5¾ to 7¼ per cent. As the member from the New Democratic party pointed out a while ago, it is a regressive measure and I wonder how a government can introduce a similar measure in 1968.

I shall not stress that point further, Mr. Speaker. I should like to take part in this debate to say openly that the Ralliement créditiste takes pleasure in supporting heartily all intelligent legislative measures that will assist the individual, the human being, make him freer in an increasingly automatized world, filthy with wealth and which denies the individual economic means that would permit him to live honourably in his own country. It is therefore with pleasure that I support the member's motion; I hope he will broaden his outlook and that the same loans, without interest, will be made available to all Canadians.

• (6:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Judd Buchanan (London West): Mr. Speaker although it may be strange, in some areas I find myself in agreement with the comments made by the members of the opposition. I feel, however, that to some extent we are going after a gnat with a shotgun. I do not believe the significant question is whether the young men or young women who have been through university do or do not pay interest on their student loans. I think we are attacking the problem from the wrong end. It would seem to me that it should be of far greater concern to us whether the young men and women in our society who have the ability also have the opportunity to go to university. Once they have been there and have graduated they are in a much better position to repay these obligations than are the individuals in our society who never have had the opportunity to attend university.

I have some interesting figures published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics for the year 1966. If one receives an elementary education during his lifetime he can expect to earn $131,000. One who receives up to three years of secondary school education can expect to earn $168,000. One who receives four or five years of secondary education can expect to earn $209,000. The university graduate on the other hand can expect to earn over his working life an average of $350,000. This is almost three times what the men and women without an elementary education will earn and about 50 per cent or 75 per cent greater than the individual who has had secondary school education. Therefore I do not believe the problem regarding those who have completed university education and who are now out in the the labour market is really as significant a problem as that regarding those young men and women who should be attending our universities and are not.

I believe all education—and here I share the opinion of some members opposite—should be free for all. This basic human right should be available to all to enable them to achieve their fullest development. This is a right which must not be restricted in any way by accident of birth, economics or geography. The right to education at every level should be free and within the reach of all who have the ability. This should be a guaranteed right to everyone without equivocation. There still are many Canadians who could and should be attending university but who are not.

It is interesting to note that a survey by the Canadian Union of Students found that 25 per cent of our university students are from the homes of wage earners who are in the top 6 per cent bracket. I am prepared to grant that much more than purely matters of finance are involved. There is the question of motivation. Reference has been made to the Headstart program and other programs which might be of assistance to students in the younger age group.

I still believe that the lack of financial resources unquestionably prevents many young men and women attending university. I believe also that we should be looking at the matter of some form of subsidy for the young men and women who live beyond the commuting distance of a university. It is much easier for someone who has the good fortune to live in a university town to attend university than it is for someone who lives 250 or 300 miles away. I am not concerned as much with those people who have gone to university and are now working as I am with the others who should be going to university and who for one reason or another have not been given the opportunity to do so.

My friend in the New Democratic party must be using some figures which are different from mine. It is my understanding that approximately 23 per cent of all Canadians in the 18 to 23 age group are attending post secondary education facilities whereas the figure on the other side of the border is double that, 46 per cent. I grant that there may be some variation in this because someone might argue that in some areas our education is superior, while in others perhaps it is not. In our modern economic and social structure it is absolutely vital that we do not waste the resources of our young men and women. I feel this is the most vital resource we possess and that we must do everything in our capacity to capitalize on it.

Earlier I mentioned fees. It is my understanding that fees now account for less than 15 per cent of the operating revenues received by universities. Therefore, in that context, the malarkey we often hear of a person having worked his way through university really is not true. He may have provided 15 per cent of the cost, but the other 85 per cent of the cost is borne by the taxpayers at large. I believe that to set this up as a barrier to prevent men and women attending university, who should be there, is absolutely wrong.

I would like to make one additional observation. The government is already spending substantial amounts of money on post secondary education. The members of the opposition the other day berated the government for its fiscal irresponsibility. The biggest single factor in causing the government to be $400 million out in its estimates, in spite of cutting $80 million from its controllable expenditures, was the cost of the shared programs which we have with the various provinces. For post secondary education, instead of the estimated figure of $137 million this year we will require $375 million for that purpose. Therefore, $240 million of that $400 million is accounted for by the additional expenditure now being made on post secondary education. It is interesting to note that the present total amount paid in post secondary school fees in Canada is approximately half of that—$130 million.

I believe we should be examining this whole area very carefully to determine whether it would be possible to develop some scheme whereby we could eliminate the payment of tuition and provide some sort of subsidy for the young men and young women who must travel from beyond commuting distance to attend university. However, to exhibit such concern for those who have graduated and who will be in a position to earn over their working life an income two or three times that earned by the less fortunate folk who do not attend university seems to be a very blatant example of locking the barn door after the horse has been stolen.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like briefly to congratulate my colleague the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) for drawing the attention of the house to this most important subject. I congratulate him for doing so in his first notice of motion. Needless to say I agree with the motion. I am impressed by the arguments he has put forward.

I was concerned during the whole of the period between the dissolution of the last parliament and the recalling of this one about the number of students who came to me in anxiety because they were not able to find summer employment. I do not think that at any time since I became interested in this subject, and I have been in university work for a long time, have I seen a greater indication in these affluent times of difficulty on the part of individual students in meeting the basic needs of their university education.

While it may be said that of course this motion does not deal in toto with this immense problem, it is one practical and useful suggestion which falls within the purview of the legislature to which we belong. Certainly it would be very thoughtless of us if in what the hon. member calls this electronic age we missed any opportunity in our search for education in depth for all. If we miss any opportunity to further the purpose which would appear to be in the minds of all who have spoken today, and the views which they hold so sincerely, it would be thoughtless.

Like one of the hon. members who has spoken, I have memories of going through that exercise which, in the archaic language of yesterday, we used to describe as working one's way through college. Some people recommend this as a recipe for all their successers. I have no patience with such a point of view. I think of the many opportunities to advance one's knowledge which are denied to young men or young women who by economic necessity are forced to devote a part of their time to the hard, grim task of keeping body and soul together as they tread the halls of learning.

I welcome this suggestion of the hon. member. It is a very good one, and I think it is timely because, in spite of our affluence, I do believe there is a crisis in this very area of education. Hon. members in other parts of the house have pointed out documentation in respect of this very matter. We hardly need tell ourselves that the human resource is the one we dare not fail to develop to its fullest. If we compare what is going on in other countries we have no reason to be complacent.

The hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) stated very simply—this has been said before and it should never be forgotten—that it is the ability to learn and not the ability to pay which should be the criterion. There is a wastage of human resources and I am sure that this very day there are young Canadians who are not at university because of financial reasons. I agree also with those who have pointed out that the $1,000 figure is now unrealistic. I agree too with what they have said about the interest rate. I am appalled at the number of students who have applied for loans as they now exist, and have been turned down. There is disappointment among youth. I suppose somewhere all across Canada there are 50,000 young people who are disappointed because they did not receive these $1,000 scholarships that were promised in 1963 at the rate of $10,000 per year. But I would say, as in all of these things, that we must deal not in the past and drink the sour wine of unfulfilled promises, but urge, and I am sure the hon. member had this in mind, that in all the planning this government may do, and in all its efforts to mobilize our resources we surely must begin with those resources the hon. member had in mind as he constructed this interesting, valuable and helpful notice of motion. I say again how much I appreciate his initiative and his thoughtfulness in dealing with this subject, one demanding great priority.

[Translation]

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on this notice of motion introduced by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) and asking that the government should study the possibility of removing the interest rate on loans to students.

The students loan program was put into effect in 1964 and I think it has helped many students already. Since 1964, 132,000 students have taken part in the program and approximately $160 million have been loaned by banks and guaranteed by the federal government.

I was fortunate enough to take part in that program because barely a few years ago I was a student. I can say that the program was welcomed with much enthusiasm by the students; they appreciated it and I think that it was at the time and still is a priority for the federal as well as the provincial governments.

On August 21 last, the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) explained that new administrative principles had been followed mainly so that only the students who really needed the program could participate therein. To that purpose, the administrative principles had been studied by the federal government and the provinces participating in that scheme, and by the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

I think that when the government considers the possibilities of implementing a program and spending more money on a certain program, it must determine which one of the two would be of greater use to the country. Whether it is directly paid by the federal government, or under an agreement with the provincial governments, it is very important to decide.

I would like to point out to the house that there are still areas in this country where primary schools do not have the necessary facilities to give pupils as good an education as elsewhere in the country. The same is true for high schools, and I can give you an example. There is a lack of physical education facilities in many places, and I think especially of my own province, New Brunswick. In my opinion, there is a priority at the secondary level. There is also a gap in the development of a physical education program.

The hon. member for Athabaska now suggests a measure of assistance for the students. He and other hon. members have spoken of helping the students. I completely agree. I think that we should seriously consider the possibility of helping anyone who wants to study, only in that case let us help the students. A student who graduates is no longer a student.

For example, in the last academic year, between July 1, 1967 and June 30, 1968, about $57 million were lent to 90,371 students. At the interest rate of that time, which was 5¾ per cent, that amounts to about $3 million. The hon. members of the opposition agree that we must have priorities and that we must help the students. They ask us to give $3 million to students who have graduated and who have entered a profession, who are now lawyers, chartered accountants or professors, and to forget about the other programs. In my opinion, priority should really be given to students in secondary schools, in primary schools and in university. We should give priority to those groups that really need it.

The hon. member for Athabaska mentioned also that our graduate students are in debt when they leave college. Supposing a student borrows $5,000; now, according to the new administrative criterions, if a student is given a loan of $5,000, it means that he was unable to find work during the summer or that his parents are not well-off. According to the program, he may have nine and a half years to pay back that $5,000. My figures are not necessarily correct, however it would mean that he could repay $43 a month on the capital and about $25 or $30 on the interest, which would amount to about $68 a month or $816 a year. In my opinion, our country is now going through a period of inflation. Wages are going up, and I do not think that $816 a year could really inconvenience a student once he has graduated. It could, for instance, inconvenience a student who would have to pay back that money while studying, but not once his studies are over.

• (6:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to speak on the motion, but I want to make one or two suggestions in the next minute. First, I agree wholeheartedly with the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) that this is just a halfway measure in meeting the problem. I think it will help in about a year with regard to student unemployment. I believe we should pass this motion, not talk it out.

Second, we should encourage the government members of the house to do something about university accessibility. This should be a matter of government policy. The government should be doing things like paying university fees, expanding university facilities, facilities for students, and so on. Now, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the question be put.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the student loan program is to assist students to get an education. Once equipped, most of them are in a position to look after themselves. While I am not against the abolition of interest rates of this type, I believe the priority today should be in raising the ceiling of income which parents are allowed to earn before their children become disqualified from obtaining a student loan.

A number of people have discussed this aspect of the student loan program with me, telling me, as the case may be, that they had a son or a daughter turned down because the family income was in excess of the qualifying amount. At the same time, I sympathize with those parents, because their income was not really that much when one considers the responsibilities with which they were faced.

Many of the young people with whom I have spoken would look favourably upon there being an increase in the number of students who can qualify for a student loan by reason of a higher income ceiling which parents are allowed to earn. Their emphasis was on the importance of providing students with money while attending university. My strong feelings with regard to providing more funds for student loans under the federal-provincial agreement is conditioned by my own experience. Other hon. members have today mentioned students who are going through something of a state of depression because of their lack of funds while attending university. I am in full sympathy with the feelings of these people. This is why I am taking a very strong stand on increasing the amount of these loans. It is very depressing when a student sitting in a small room in a city a long way from home does not know where his next dollar is coming from.

Therefore I believe the emphasis today should be on the humanitarian aspect of educating our young people and producing the funds with which to educate them, because I believe they would be quite happy to look after themselves if they were provided with interest free loans during their university education and for six months afterwards.

Many favourable comments have been made here today about the abolition of university fees. This would of course help immensely. But we must consider that a young person who borrows a great deal of money while attending university is faced with paying it back after completing his university education, at a time when he has to set up a new home and start a business career, with all the expense involved.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

I think the day will come when we will abolish these interest rates. There is indeed considerable pressure for the abolition of university fees. If we remember our history, we will know that in Canada in the early days fees were payable even to attend many secondary schools. No one would think of doing this today.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You have done it.

Mr. Hopkins: May I call it seven o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The hour appointed for the consideration of private members business has now expired. I now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At seven o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ELIGIBLE CLASSES, AMOUNT OF CAPITAL, INTEREST RATES, ETC.

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Olson—Mr. Faulkner in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Farm Credit Act to broaden the classes of persons eligible for loans under the act; to increase the amount of the capital of the Farm Credit Corporation; to substitute for the present rates of interest on loans made under the act (except any such loans made pursuant to applications received by the corporation before September 13, 1968) such rate or rates of interest on any loans made after the coming into force of the said measure as may be prescribed by the governor in council; to provide further for certain changes in connection with the administration of the act and for other matters related or incidental thereto.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, as this is the first opportunity that I have had or have taken to speak in this chamber during this session I would like to acknowledge and to express my appreciation to all hon. members on both sides of the house who have sent me messages wishing me well in my new post.

Members in the opposition will realize that most of what little training I have was received on that side of the house, and while I know that all hon. members are sincere in wishing me well in this task and are also offering to co-operate, I am sure there will be occasions when their responses will sound like anything but full co-operation. Yet, I know this is part of the way in which business is done in this house, and since I participated in that kind of response over the last number of years I will understand fully when it happens.

Mr. Baldwin: We think some of the minister's colleagues could stand a little more experience over here.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): There is no prospect of that.

Mr. Olson: I hope they do not get it for a long while.

I also wish to express my appreciation to the house leader for proposing that the three resolutions dealing with farm credit be considered almost concurrently. We are not asking that the rules be amended or suspended even temporarily, but certainly it is a fact that items Nos. 5, 6 and 7 on the order paper deal with farm credit, and the divisions between the various purposes of the acts following these resolutions is an arbitrary one. Indeed some of them overlap in many respects, and if the house accepts the amendments that I intend to propose, there will be even more overlapping of the acts.

I also wish to acknowledge the co-operation of the house leaders of the other parties in allowing us to proceed in this way with the discussion of the three resolutions.

The resolution in item No. 6 dealing with the Farm Credit Act which established the farm credit corporation and through it provides long term mortgage credit to Canadian farmers, is one of the most important government programs for the support and development of the agricultural industry.

I will not spend a lot of time on the background of these acts because I know that most hon. members, whether they were in this house prior to this parliament or not, are familiar with it, although I think a very brief explanation is in order so that the resolutions may appear in a more cohesive form.

The objectives of the program are to provide the capital to facilitate the organization of Canadian agriculture into viable farm units in the hands of our competent farmers so that agriculture may make the greatest possible contribution to the Canadian economy and provide farmers with equitable returns for their investment of capital, work and skills. It provides the opportunity for individual farmers, in consultation with credit advisers trained in farm organization and management and in farm financing, to obtain the capital required to reorganize, develop or expand their farm businesses, and thus is a most potent force in bringing about the adjustments and the rationalization in the use of farm land so essential to a viable agricultural industry.

Very briefly, it appears from statistics relating to the number of loans, that from the inception of the operations of the corporation in October 1959 until the end of March of this year, the corporation has made more than 72,000 loans for a total of more than one billion one hundred million dollars. About 50 per cent of these funds have gone toward assisting farmers to buy additional land to enlarge their farms. A very significant proportion has gone toward financing the construction of buildings and other improvements to farm land necessary for efficient production.

Between 1961 and 1966 the number of farms in Canada with gross sales in excess of $5,000 per annum increased from about 140,000 to about 192,000. In the same period the number of farms with gross sales of more than $10,000 per annum increased from 50,000 to 95,000 or 90 per cent. While there were many factors involved, there is no doubt that credit under the provisions of the Farm Credit Act made a very significant contribution to these adjustments. I also think that keeping agriculture efficient, not only in terms of cost but in terms of keeping an orderly flow of the raw material needed for our food industry moving into the stream, is also important to people other than farmers.

It is therefore important to emphasize that the beneficial results of a program of this nature accrue not only to the farming public but to the public at large in terms of the efficient and low cost production of food.

To keep pace with the rapid changes taking place in agriculture, there is a continuous need for adjustments in our farm credit program. Several of these adjustments are now being proposed. Further adjustments will be made in the light of and following the report of the agricultural task force which has been established to recommend guide lines for agricultural policy.

As agriculture has developed, more and more farmers are arranging to conduct their farm businesses in co-operation with one another in various forms of partnerships, farming corporations or co-operative associations. It is important that these developments be recognized and that credit facilities be adjusted to meet the increased capital needs where two or more farmers wish to organize and operate their businesses together.

Another important amendment deals with Indians on Indian reserves. Indian farmers situated on reserves have so far been unable to borrow from the farm credit corporation because of their inability to mortgage their land. It would seem appropriate that the corporation be given authority to enter into appropriate agreements wth the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development so that appropriate arrangements can be made to provide credit for the development of viable farm businesses on Indian reserves.

Another important amendment that we will be proposing has to do with father and son business relationships. While the total number of farm operators is gradually decreasing, it remains essential for the future viability of the agricultural industry that there be a continuous flow of competent young men into agriculture. For this reason, it seems necessary, particularly in view of the increasing capital costs required to establish a viable farm business, to provide additional facilities to assist competent young men to get into this field. In particular, it seems desirable to adjust the provisions of the legislation so that a father who wishes to expand his farm business to bring in his son as a partner will be able to obtain the capital required to develop his farm to a size that will make it attractive for the son to join in the farm business. Amendments to this effect will be proposed.

When the Farm Credit Act was passed in 1959, the interest rate which the corporation might charge was fixed at 5 per cent. As we are all aware, interest rates in the general economy fluctuate from time to time. Any great differential between the rate at which the corporation lends money and the general level of interest rates will tend to distort the demand for credit from the corporation. In economists' terms, unrealistic interest rates tend to cause misallocation of resources, and in particular terms any savings as a result of a subsidized interest rate on capital borrowed for the purchase of land could make the cost of the land excessively inflationary. For these reasons, it seems desirable, quite apart from the question of the subsidization of interest, to amend the Farm Credit Act so that rates can be established by the governor in council from time to time in relation to interest rates in the economy in general.

Turning to another aspect of this subject now, Mr. Chairman, I may say that at the moment the authorized capital of the Farm Credit Corporation is $40 million. On the basis of this capital, the corporation is authorized to borrow up to $1 billion, so that the total funds available to the corporation for lending amount to $1,040 million. On September 17, the total amount outstanding to the corporation on its commitments exceeded $1 billion. At the present rate of approval of loans to farmers, the total funds available to the corporation will be used up by the end of October or early November of this year. For this reason, it is essential that the authorized capital of the Farm Credit Corporation be increased in order to permit this lending program to continue. Of course, Mr. Chairman, I hardly need to add that amendments to provide for this will be proposed.

If I may, Mr. Chairman, I am now turning to the other resolutions, in compliance with the agreement we made earlier today. I should like to make a very brief explanation of some of the amendments that we intend to propose in respect of the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act. This act was enacted in 1964 and lending commenced in January of 1965. Very briefly, the objective of this program is to provide a simple means whereby three or more farmers may co-operate in the purchase and use of farm machinery, thus saving overhead machinery costs. May I give a few statistics in relation to this act? From the inception of lending to the end of July of this year, 444 loans have been made to 346 syndicates for a total of about $3.7 million and for the purchase of about 1,388 machines of various types. Although the number of syndicates formed may not seem large, it is significant to know that some of the syndicates have found this operation so successful they have returned for second, third and even fourth loans to expand their co-operative use of farm machinery.

In the light of the experience to date, Mr. Chairman, there are several amendments to the program that now seem desirable. The present act requires the members of the syndicate to be farmers who are farming independently of each other. Experience shows that those farmers who co-operate in the purchase and use of machinery tend to extend their co-operation to other aspects of their farming operations. For example, some of them may pool their land use to overcome problems relating to the timeliness of seeding and harvesting operations. As a result, they are no longer farming independently. For this reason, it seemed desirable to amend the legislation to that three or more farmers may borrow even though their operations may not be independent of one another in all the ways that the act now requires that word "independent" to be defined.

Some farmers have organized their co-operative efforts through the promotion of co-operative associations or corporations. At the moment, such farmers would be required to enter into separate syndicate agreements in respect of the use of machinery purchased through loans under the provisions of this act. We feel the terms of their association or incorporation already provide the basis upon which they might co-operate in the purchase and use of machinery. It seems unnecessary that they be required to enter into separate, new agreements in order to operate under the provisions of the act.

Much of the machinery and equipment which is most suitable for co-operative use by a group of farmers is of the type that requires installation in buildings designed for it. Examples of this would be equipment required for the washing, grading and packaging of fruits and vegetables, grain drying equipment and of course some types of production equipment. At the moment, the act provides only for the purchase of machinery. I believe it should provide also for the financing of the building site and the specially designed building required for the installation and proper use of this machinery or equipment. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, amendments will be proposed to incorporate these ideas.

To carry this a little further, there are buildings which may be profitably used co-operatively by a group of farmers in the various aspects of their farming operation. An example of this would be the efficient storage of fruits and vegetables which may require large, well equipped buildings beyond the needs or indeed the means of any one individual farmer. A group of farmers could profitably co-operate on the construction of storage facilities for products such as apples and potatoes. It would be possible to build a storage large enough to be economic and adequate for the needs of all.

Another example is the hostel type of housing accommodation for seasonal labourers in areas where the type of crops being produced require an extensive amount of this kind of labour. We are all aware of the difficulties in obtaining seasonable labour for some types of produce. We recognize that one of the principal difficulties is the lack of housing accommodation for these workers. A group of farmers could co-operatively build the kind of housing accommodation required. For this reason, it is desirable to amend the provisions of this legislation to provide credit for the construction of buildings which groups of farmers might use co-operatively for this purpose in particular, but for other purposes as well.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take a great deal of time going through introductory remarks in connection with the other resolutions. There will be other opportunities. However, I should like to spend a few minutes now introducing resolution No. 5, which is the one that deals with the Farm Improvement Loans Act. The resolution indicates a number of amendments, Mr. Chairman, to the Farm Improvement Loans Act, which will reinstate this important farm credit facility in a way to permit it to serve the farming sector even more effectively than it did in the past.

Hon. members will require little by way of general introduction to this program, which is so well known. I must put on the record, however, a few statistics related to its history. It first came into effect in 1944 as a measure to encourage our chartered banks to make term credit readily available to farmers across the country, for a wide range of important projects, at reasonable cost. To this end the government guaranteed all loans made by the banks for purposes set out in the act. This guarantee has been renewed by parliament from time to time in respect of loans made during three year periods. The most recent period was added in September, 1964, to run from July 1, 1965 to June 30, 1968. Hon. members may recall that it did not prove possible to deal with this measure before the three year guarantee period expired on June 30, 1968. In view of the subsequent dissolution of the house, this is the first opportunity to bring this measure before the house for consideration.

Meanwhile, however, the Minister of Finance indicated publicly that it was his intention to seek amendments to the act as soon as possible to include another lending period and to make improvements in the legislation. As his predecessors had done previously under similar circumstances, the Minister of Finance advised the banks that when the legislation was introduced in the house the new lending period would be made retroactive to July 1 and that any loans they made after June 30 according to the terms and conditions now set out in the legislation would be covered by the government guarantee.

This act first came into effect nearly a quarter of a century ago to help make term credit more readily available to farmers on reasonable terms and conditions. As the Minister of Finance explained to the house when the measure was first introduced, the Farm Improvement Loans Act was designed as an incentive to banks to enter the term lending field to farmers on a major scale.

A maximum rate of interest of 5 per cent was included in the act, which rate at that time was sufficient to cover the banks' cost of operation and give them an incentive to go after the business. I think hon. members will agree that this legislation has been eminently successful in achieving its objective. The use that has been made of this facility over the years has shown considerable growth. Annual lending of about $10 million in 1946 rose to $100 million by 1960, and to the $200 million level by 1965. Since then, the growth has been slower.

The Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Minister of Agriculture but I must advise him that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

An hon. Member: What about the 1967 figures?

The Chairman: Has the minister the consent of the committee to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Olson: I thank hon. members for their courtesy, and I shall not transgress too much on the time of the committee. I was saying that the figure had increased to $212 million in 1966. I believe someone opposite me asked what the 1967 figures were. There was a slight decline in 1967 to about $204 million.

Mr. Hees: Is that slight?

Mr. Olson: This indication of slower growth and decline in 1967 may have been explained in terms of developments affecting Canadian agriculture generally; but subsequent developments suggest that it is a reflection of the increasing reluctance of banks to commit funds at 5 per cent, despite the presence of the government guarantee. During the latter part of last year and the early months of this year, when interest rates rose sharply, bank lending under the Farm Improvement Loans Act fell off sharply and virtually ceased some time before the lending period formally expired on June 30, 1968.

I mentioned a moment ago that this act was designed as an incentive for banks to make these loans, and I think it is important to keep in mind that the objective of this legislation is to facilitate the making of guaranteed loans to farmers; but the ultimate decision on whether such loans are made rests with the lender. Farm improvement loans are guaranteed by the government as to their repayment in the event of default, but the lenders are the source of financing. The lenders of these funds must, of course, take into account the prevailing general level of interest rates and the cost of them of their sources of funds.

An amendment to the act which makes the rate prescribable by regulations would enable the government to establish maximum rates that would be below rates that farmers would have to pay in the absence of the guarantee, but that would be high enough to enable the banks to continue to lend their wholehearted support to this program. It would also provide the flexibility necessary to see that the program continues on a fair and equitable basis to both borrower and lender by ensuring that the rates reflect changes over time in the general level of interest rates. Under these circumstances it should be possible for a new group of lenders to become active under this program.

The amendments I have just referred to would have the effect of reactivating operations under the act. I shall now turn to other amendments that would significantly broaden the operations under the act.

As hon. members are aware, the credit requirements of the farming sector for land purchases are now met almost in their entirety by the Farm Credit Corporation. With the rapidly growing credit requirements in recent years for both major and minor land purchases this has meant a growing demand on the government's cash resources. Of course, F.C.C. provides a good deal more than the funds to meet these credit requirements. There are many progressive and profitable farming enterprises in the country today which became that way not only because they borrowed from the F.C.C., but also, and perhaps more so, because they received expert guidance and counsel from F.C.C.'s highly trained staff or agricultural experts. The F.C.C. has, however, financed in the past numerous smaller purchases of land not requiring the specialized service of the F.C.C. but capable of being suitably handled by regular commercial lenders. A case in point would be a relatively small piece of land that may come on the market and help a farmer round out his existing farm holdings. We are proposing to make such relatively minor land purchases eligible under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. For larger land purchases a farmer would of course continue to look to the F.C.C. for financing.

The addition of the purchase of land as an eligible loan purpose and the flexibility that is proposed on interest rates makes it appropriate to broaden the range of lenders among whom a farmer may wish to choose when making his financial arrangements. The proposed amendments would add as eligible lenders loan, trust and insurance companies, which are particularly familiar with mortgage lending, and credit unions and caisses populaires, which could service their member-clients over the entire range of loan purposes under the act.

The inclusion of credit unions, which have a long and strong tradition in rural areas and particularly in western Canada will, I am sure, be welcome by those interested in rural co-operative movements.

To accommodate this new loan purpose without unduly restricting a farmer's ability to borrow under the act for other purposes, such as the purchase of equipment, the amendments would raise the maximum loan amount that may be outstanding to a farmer at any one time to $25,000. An amount of up to $15,000 may be outstanding in respect of land purchases. The present loan limit of $15,000 for loan purposes, other than the purchase of land, would continue to apply, but both these loan limits would be made subject to a new over-all ceiling of $25,000. If a farmer wished, he could continue to borrow up to $15,000 for purposes covered in the present act, and have in addition up to $10,000 for the purchase of land. If he preferred to use up to $15,000 for the purchase of land, he would be able to obtain a government guaranteed loan up to $10,000 for other prescribed purposes.

Mr. Chairman, I think we all recognize the importance of continuing what has so far been a very successful program. The proposed flexibility of interest rates, combined with the participation of new lenders, the addition of a new loan purpose and higher loan amounts, will no doubt provide the basis for a further successful period of credit support for farmers.

This is a brief outline of the amendments we intend to bring forward when the bills to follow these three resolutions are brought into the chamber. We have done the best we can, when framing these amendments, to make these three acts as useful and effective as possible. While they may not be perfect, I think they go a long way toward recognizing and making provision for needed development in agricultural credit requirements.

In conclusion I wish to thank all hon. members for the co-operation they have extended to me during the past few weeks. I know there are many problems in the field of agriculture and that these changes in farm credit legislation will not solve all of them. However, they will go some distance and we hope members in all parts of this house will co-operate with us in allowing us not only to deal with all the resolutions as a package, but to bring the subsequent bills forward one after the other; because I think the whole debate on these three bills deals essentially with one subject, that of farm credit, and it would be difficult to separate the three resolutions, or the three bills, and deal with them in the course of three separate debates.

The reinstatement, with improvements, of the Farm Improvement Loans Act is needed at once. Not a day goes by without a large number of letters passing over my desk from farmers who ask how quickly we can re-enact this piece of legislation. So it is needed right away. The need for the changes in the Farm Machinery Syndicates Act and the Farm Credit Act may not be so urgent, but we have committed all the money we are authorized to commit to the Farm Credit Corporation. So without making any attempt to restrict debate I would ask hon. members in all parts of the house to expedite the passage of these bills in order that we can make these services available to farmers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Danforth: Speaking on behalf of the Official Opposition I wish to express appreciation to the minister for his introduction of these three measures, so important to agriculture at the present time. I wish also to thank the hon. gentleman for giving us details of the amendments he proposes. They are many in number. We cannot hope to deal with all of them this evening, so the opposition reserves the right to consider them one at a time in later stages of the debate.

The hon. gentleman has pleaded with us tonight to pass these bills very quickly, telling us that the money is badly needed by the farm community. He certainly speaks the truth. But, Mr. Chairman, these funds have been needed, now, for many months by those engaged in agriculture. It would be interesting to see an evaluation of the hundreds of thousands of dollars spent by the farmers of this nation in higher interest rates because this government in its wisdom early last year declined to put this necessary legislation before the house.

Mr. Nesbitt: You would not even call the house early enough.

Mr. Olson: It was offered to you, but you would not deal with it.

Mr. Nesbitt: You were not over there, then.

Mr. Danforth: The minister speaks of the 5 per cent interest rate. Under the Farm Improvement Loans Act the money is not available to farmers at the present time. The minister knows that for months this source of money has dried up, forcing farmers to pay interest rates of 13 per cent, 14 per cent and even more to the loan companies and the machinery companies in order to obtain new machinery or take advantage of the opportunity to improve their efficiency.

What we have before us tonight at long last is an admission by the government that agriculture needs more money, and a statement that interest rates will be permitted to rise in order to make this money available. We who sit on these benches intend to scrutinize the amendments very carefully. As far as farm improvement loans are concerned, and loans to machinery syndicates, we wish to make these available as quickly as possible, knowing how desperately they are needed.

May I suggest, since those two bills deal with short term loans, more or less, and since farm credit loans are a long term proposition, that the government seriously consider sending the latter piece of legislation to a reconstituted standing committee on agriculture, where an opportunity might be afforded of examining the procedure by which such loans are made, and the terms which might be placed upon farmers. Every member of this house has encountered instances where farmers' applications for loans have been refused, on the ground that they are already operating economic units, and therefore do not need loans.

At the same time other farm loans have been refused because farmers as yet do not have economic units and therefore cannot obtain them. As a result many farmers of this nation have found it almost impossible to comply with the regulations and obtain the necessary funds for expansion. So, Mr. Chairman, it is our earnest desire that the government give serious consideration to referring this one, of the three measures, to a standing committee, for an examination of the terms of the bill and the amendments proposed.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out that the government does not solve any of the major farm problems by offering farmers an opportunity to get deeper in debt. In other words, Mr. Chairman, every farmer of this nation knows you cannot borrow yourself out of an economic obligation.

An hon. Member: Not even the government can do that.

Mr. Danforth: We found through the years that when extensive credit was available it has increased the cost of land, it has increased the cost of machinery and, according to the government's own statement, in the last six years it has put the farmers, through the farm credit bill alone, $1,100,000,000 further into debt.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I want to point out to the government that the farming community is going to look at these three bills with a great deal of suspicion, not because farmers do not want this money, not because they do not appreciate the increase in credit, but because they are going to be very suspicious of the open end where the government, at its discretion, may state what the rate of interest shall be, and at its discretion change the rate of interest.

In these bills I think we should have a definite formula, perhaps related to the present interest rate, in order that when they approach government for money farmers themselves will know definitely what they will be expected to pay this year, next year and any other year. So we must look at this part of the government's proposals with a great deal of suspicion and caution.

Further, Mr. Chairman, farmers today are going to be most hesitant in increasing their financial obligation, because during the last six years they have not been able to obtain any indication from the government as to where it thinks agriculture should go. There has been no policy, so much so that today a so-called efficient farm, as the government points out may, by the government's definition, be an inefficient farm tomorrow. This occurs, not through any fault of the operator, not through actual inefficiency of the operator, but because of changing trade patterns that are encouraged by the government, because of changing labour requirements that are encouraged by the government, because of a tremendous increase in imports being allowed by the government, and because of changes in tariff regulations which in themselves, taken singly or collectively, can reduce the gross returns of the most efficient farm, put it in a position of operational inefficiency and therefore, according to the government, place it in a position where it should pass out of existence.

Because of the substitute products coming on the market and because of overproduction in some segments of it, the dairy industry is in trouble. Every member of this house realizes that. Most dairy operators are of the considered opinion that in order to compete on an international basis they must be most proficient and efficient in their operation. With dairying, as it is today, some dairy farms will require $100,000 additional capital in order to modernize and take advantage of the most recent innovations. But dairy operators are sound businessmen and they are not going to borrow $100,000 unless they know the government's plans for the future of the industry.

We cannot have, as we had in the past under the previous government, three different national dairy proposals or plans in three years, with the result that dairymen had no idea what the government proposed for them. Businessmen are going to look at this very carefully before they tie up their funds for years in advance. The government tonight speaks of additional credit for farmers. We on this side say that farmers before they take advantage of this credit have a right to know what the government's policy is.

What has happened in the last three years to the farmers of this nation? The Ontario sugar beet industry passed out of existence. What about the farmers who took advantage of farm improvement loans to buy beet combines? They paid $3,000 or $4,000 for beet combines, but because of lack of a government sugar policy the beet industry went out of existence. How are those farmers expected to finance and pay for those machines?

What is happening to the corn industry today? Hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of farm equipment is tied up in it. Hundreds of thousands of dollars of Farm Credit Corporation money is tied up in enlarging corn farms. What is going to happen if this commodity passes out of existence, due to the economic climate? How are those farmers going to repay their loans?

What is going to happen to the canning industry if we allow, as we have done, imports to come into this country to such a degree that that industry and those engaged in it are on a marginal economic existence? What happens if we cannot sell our wheat? Who is going to repay these loans totalling $1,100,000,000 that farmers have borrowed since 1961? If the the farm industry collapses who is going to repay this money?

What is going to happen to our beef industry if we increase imports of beef from Agentina and other countries? What is going to happen to the tomato industry if we continue to import tomatoes from Mexico, Bulgaria and Portugal? These, Mr. Chairman, are the questions farmers are asking. Where do we go from here?

Mr. Stanfield: To the just society.

Mr. Danforth: Farmers realize, but the government does not, that under present policies the farming industry can no longer exist as a great industry in Canada. They do not need a task force to tell them what the problem is: They know what the problem is. The problem is that they are no longer governed by the law of supply and demand, or the law of a free enterprise system. They know that as little, local, provincial co-operatives they cannot hope to deal efficiently and effectively with state controlled sales and state controlled subsidies. They know that as individual farmers, as co-operative farmers or as provincial organizations they cannot compete with managed markets. They cannot compete with international food chains that can buy all over the world, and through their own distribution systems take advantage of vast markets.

The farmers turn to the federal government for this. They want to know what the federal government intends doing about it, and whether that government will provide them with the domestic market. They wish to know whether we are to have our own Canadian market, or whether the government intends as in the past to encourage imports in a desperate last ditch attempt to force down the cost of living. Is the farming community to be sacrificed for this? Are the farmers to be asked to bear the brunt of the new taxation measures the government proposes? What will happen to the farming community under the new GATT trading arrangements and the Kennedy round? This has never been discussed in the house. The government has not stated its policy in this regard. Certainly it has indicated that some industries will be hurt and that an attempt will be made to compensate those industries, but where does the farming community fit into all this? Many times when a farming industry is not hurt directly, if some of the allied industries are hurt it is the farmers who pay.

The minister tonight has stated that there is an attempt to increase the credit to the farmers of this nation. I compliment the government on this and on some of the amendments which I believe will help the situation. I should like to point out, however, one example. Under the syndicates act accommodation is to be provided for seasonal labour. In other words, if a group of farmers wishes to employ seasonal labour to harvest the crop in season, be it strawberries, tomatoes, apples, tobacco or some other crop, under the terms of the act, as I understand it, the government will be prepared to lend the money necessary to construct the accommodation. What will happen if this labour is imported from Jamaica, and the immigration policy changes? What will happen if the local canning company to which this produce is delivered is put out of business because of imports? W ll this group of farmers, which can no longer engage profitably in this endeavour, be forced either into bankruptcy or into paying off these loans?

I suggest that through the extension of credit alone we can neither answer nor hope to answer the many serious problems facing agriculture today. The farmers of this nation who have been waiting impatiently for years are now told that when the task force makes its report the government will consider the recommendations. It is no wonder the farmers of this nation are impatient. They know what the problems are, and they expect government action to solve some of these problems. They expect the government to act on their behalf. Farm credit alone will not suffice.

Recently we have seen what can happen with regard to a commodity, and I am speaking once more of corn. In a single year we have reached the point where, at the present time, the receipts for this crop are considered to be lower than the cost of production. We have seen what has happened in the case of sugar beets. Farmers who for years considered this to be their main crop suddenly found that they could not grow it any longer. We have seen what has happened to the small canning companies across this nation when they have been faced in the marketplace with sudden imports.

We have seen what can happen with regard to credit. Farmers who have depended on the Farm Credit Corporation or the Farm Improvement Loans Act to help them in time of need have found, through government action, that this source of credit has been taken away from them. When they have needed a loan, they have attempted for months to survive without it. We are about to see what may happen under the changing trade patterns brought about by the Kennedy round.

I do not wish to appear to be pessimistic, but under the changing regulations in respect of the dumping duties, and the trading which has been taking place on a commodity basis, I fear there are some segments of the Canadian agricultural industry which will be in dire circumstances. Therefore I say to you, Mr. Chairman, and through you to the government, that we intend to do all we can in an attempt to get this legislation through the house as quickly as possible. But we will do our very best to see that the interests of the farmers of this nation are taken care of, because it is long past the time when members in this house should be awakened and made aware of the circumstances faced by the agricultural community today. They should begin, in a constructive manner, to do something about it. We cannot introduce this legislation, but when the legislation comes before the members of this house we intend to do our very best to serve the farmers of this nation.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, when speaking for our group with regard to this credit program that is being offered to the agricultural industry as a whole, I must say that I believe some real opportunity to do something new and imaginative may well have been missed. While I say this, I am aware that the minister knows I have a considerable respect for his ability, since we have known one another for a number of years. When one looks at this program he must consider that although the intention is that more money will be made available to farmers in the form of credit, it is proposed that this money be made available to them—I think we must assume—at a much increased rate of interest. The term used was that the present rates are unrealistic. I suppose therefore that we will have some realistic rate, and this will depend on what particular economist we are listening to at what particular time.

Are these interest rates to be realistic in terms of the farmers' costs of production? This remains to be seen. Before I talk about interest rates, however, I should like to say that what is lacking here more than anything else is a co-ordinated approach to farm credit in an attempt to tie together the long term, intermediate and short term credit. Certainly a very high percentage of farmers are now using these three types of credit.

What we are being offered here is just a continuation of what we have had. The proposals in respect of the Farm Improvement Loans Act are just the same, with some added money made available. The Farm Credit Corporation will continue to operate as it has. There is no method of tying these together so as to have a package approach. In that way the whole scope of the farming community could be served.

Back in November of 1962 a working paper was prepared for the royal commission on banking and finance by D. W. Carr and Associates. This working paper was in respect of farm credit in Canada. As far back as that date Mr. Carr and his associates made some recommendations on this very subject. The report said:

> The most important lenders in short and intermediate term farm credit were the chartered banks. A significant part of this lending was under the Farm Improvement Loans Act through which a degree of public responsibility for such farm credit had been initiated. To carry out these responsibilities effectively and most profitably the banks operations under F.I.L.A. clearly needed the specialized technical guidance and advice of agricultural credit experts. The interest of both the banks and the farmers would be best served by F.I.L.A. having closer association with the federal Department of Agriculture. This could enable F.I.L.A. lending to be expanded with the confidence that the risks were minimized by sounder lending techniques for both F.I.L.A. and ordinary farm loans and should thus reduce the risk on the banks' ordinary farm loans also.

Instead of following this line and looking for more advice we are going to open up this field to the insurance and trust companies, and the government is going to guarantee them against loss. This means that if, as a previous speaker has suggested, a farmer gets in over his head, the farmer himself is taking the risk. There is always a risk when you lend money but it can be minimized, and this is one way it could have been done. The report then continues indicating that a co-ordinating body should be set up to co-ordinate the various lending agencies and states:

> A most important function of this development co-ordination body would be to establish in the beginning more adequate sources of information for appraising trends and developments in farm financing, to initiate research and analytical appraisals of changes and problems in farm credit demand and in its sources of supply, to develop and promote the use of improved techniques by both private and public lenders and to review and develop measures to meet the changing needs in credit services to farmers.

This information has been available to the government since 1962 and the government paid good hard cash to get it, yet it has not been used. What the report is saying in effect is that more should be done in the way of what is being done by the Farm Credit Corporation. The Farm Credit Corporation has an electronic farm accounting program which is now serving 2,700 Canadian farmers, providing them with information which is important to their day by day decisions and long term planning. The Farm Credit Corporation states that farmers use this service for a wide range of purposes in the size and operation of farms and so on. The report states that this information is important to the development of lending methods to meet the changing needs of farm financing in Canada. The corporation's success with this electronic farm accounting program has been a contributing factor in the general interest in developing a national farm recordkeeping program. The corporation's experience has been made available to those involved in developing such a national program.

I hope this information will be used. This is the type of thing that should be tied in with other lending programs. If we allow the banks and trust companies to enter the short and intermediate term lending field, without any safeguards and without having any cross reference information, in a certain number of years we will look around and see that some of these loans have become bad loans. But no one will have the precise information which would indicate the reason for such a situation.

It is in this direction that I suggest our farm credit policy should be headed. I see no indication in the resolutions now before us or in the remarks by the Minister of Agriculture that there is any concept on the government side which recognizes this need. We have a real opportunity in this lending field to obtain information and working knowledge of what is happening, but we have never taken advantage of that opportunity.

The Farm Credit Corporation has made some advances over the years and is doing a better job than the old farm loans board, its predecessor. It is gathering information and giving more guidance and counselling to the farmer, although to my knowledge it has not yet built up the specialized staff of supervisors that should be available. Perhaps this is government policy.

The Carr report finally states:

> The most effective way of initiating this development agency would be to establish a public body probably attached to the Department of Agriculture to co-ordinate these various development activities. The established governmental agencies for direct farm credit could be fitted into it to fill their role as a part of the over-all credit system developed under this body and continuing to supply the important services they had established. Thus the Farm Credit Corporation could maintain its mortgage services supplemented by the new facilities as they were developed by the co-ordinating body.

This working paper concludes by stating:

> —progressive improvements in farm credit services in Canada could be expected, the path of agricultural adjustment would be made smoother and less difficult for farmers and the competitive position of Canadian agriculture would be strengthened.

Whether this would happen or not I do not know, but this is a what the fifth annual report of the Economic Council suggested we should be aiming for; and credit should be part of the policy followed to reach these objectives. We are not going to meet these objectives as a result of what has been submitted to us. I suggest with all sincerity that the Minister of Agriculture should be concerned about this situation and should consider these suggestions.

I have no particular objection to the trust companies and insurance companies getting into the lending field. I suppose that in a free enterprise economy, which hon. members on the other side of the house support, it is up to those companies to decide. However, on looking back at what they have done for farmers, I am wondering just how much good such a policy will do for agricultural communities. When one looks at the long term record, he sees that these companies have done very little. Perhaps for their own reasons at this time they want a piece of this action.

The risks of agriculture are there, and they are big risks. Those of us in the business know how big they are. The government will be doing the farmers of Canada no favour if they increase the credit risks in farming. The previous speaker outlined at some length the situation in agriculture and farming. I realize the situation as well as he does, but I do not want to take up a great deal of time telling the government what I assume they surely know, that agriculture and farming is not one of the industries that will carry an 8 per cent and 9 per cent interest rate.

Surely they know that. But they come to this house with resolutions which say, in effect, "We are not going to leave it to parliament any more to set the interest rates for the Farm Credit Corporation. We are not going to leave it to parliament to set the interest rates under the Farm Improvement Loans Act." Apparently they do not think parliament has the good, common sense to do this, although parliament has done it since the inception of these measures.

The government says, "We will not leave that with you. We want you to write us a blank cheque, and in our good, reasonable and wise time we will set some realistic interest rates." Have they so little confidence in the economy that they feel they cannot bring before parliament a level of interest rates that will survive for three years; or are they afraid that if they alter the interest rates which now exist in an economy in which we are trying to live, parliament will not accept the interest rates they will have to propose? Are they unwilling to say to the people of Canada that farming in this country is in such a situation, and the earning margins are so low, that if we want farmers to stay in business we have to subsidize the interest rates as they exist in Canada? These are the circumstances which exist; the previous speaker did not exaggerate.

From the papers I have before me I could quote the president of the Dairy Council of Canada, who said we used to get one-fifth of a cent margin on a quart of milk, but many farmers are not now receiving this margin. You can open the books in Saskatchewan on the farm management study that has been carried out by farm clubs and the provincial department of agriculture, and the story is there for you to read. You can go to Manitoba and get the same kind of information. The story is there to be read. We do not have to guess any more in connection with many of these things.

Therefore I say that this parliament should not accept the suggestion in these resolutions that the interest rate be left to the tender mercies of the government. I say this is a proper decision for this house to make. Whatever interest rates are proposed, they should be put into the act and brought before this house.

To realize the problems which exist in agriculture one has only to read some of the briefs from farm organizations. I have here a brief from the National Farmers Union. This is one matter on which the National Farmers Union and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture do not diverge to any great extent. The submission of the National Farmers Union says, in regards to credit:

> What is important is security of tenure, and this, in our view, can best be provided by realistic public policies and participation combined with a social concept on the type of rural community our nation should be aiming for in the future. The Farm Credit Corporation is now a useful instrument, but is too restrictive in its lending policies, requiring, as it does, unreasonable security on its loans. For example, in a recent case, a farm wife in Saskatchewan was required to sign away her rights under the provincial homestead act on the home quarter section of land which, in addition to two other quarter sections of land, was required by F.C.C. as collateral for a loan of $12,000 for the construction of a farm home.

I wonder whether the trust companies and insurance companies will be more generous when they become a part of the credit program. I have my doubts. Let me quote from the Union Farmer:

> —J. B. Hansen, Royal Bank supervisor, who will be in charge of the bank's revamped agricultural headquarters. At the same time it was announced that the bank, realizing that farming today is big business, has appointed representatives in the prairie provinces who are "experts" and will advise on agricultural questions.

I have no objection to the bank appointing experts to advise on agricultural questions. If they think they are to lend a great deal of money, they will probably need experts. But this proves the point I put forward at the beginning of my remarks, that if the job was being properly done within the Department of Agriculture, the bank could turn to the trained men in the lending department of the Department of Agriculture and say, "We are willing to be part of the program. We are willing to lend the money. What are the facts?" Do we want each bank employing a bunch of experts, for whom we are all going to pay? With regard to the Farm Credit Corporation, the trust companies and insurance companies, is each one going to build up his own little gathering of experts, so-called?

One thing about the farmer is that he never runs out of experts. I am always amazed at the number of people who are sure they know how to run his business better than he does. I have set out some of the things that I think are relevant to these three resolutions, and with that I leave it to the minister responsible.

Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, may we ask the minister a question or questions?

The Deputy Chairman: Not without the consent of the committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I agree to let the hon. member ask his question or questions now, if he wishes to do so, and I shall then continue with my remarks, if that is in order.

[English]

Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Thank you. Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Is the committee agreeable to giving unanimous consent to the hon. member to ask a question of the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Chairman, I ask the Minister of Agriculture for clarification on a question of fact. Is it his, or the government's intention to open the loans field under the resolution which is No. 5 on the order paper to all trust or loan companies, or are some specified? Under item No. 6 the minister speaks about broadening the class of persons who can acquire loans. Is he still retaining the requirement that they must be farmers?

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Olson: I do not mind answering that kind of question at this time, but I should like to say that a reply to those kinds of questions would require a speech. I think it would be better if spokesmen for the parties, and any hon. member who wishes to comment on my introductory remarks, would confine themselves to the opening statement, before going into the very broad questions which the hon. member has just posed.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I am happy, in the name of the members of the Ralliement Créditiste, to answer and to comment upon the very interesting speech made a few moments ago by the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) concerning the three resolutions intended to extend farm credit.

Mr. Chairman, in an article published in the Financial Post on January 29, 1966, Mr. John Schryner said this:

> The transfer of agricultural property to the new generation has created a great demand for farm credit. This transfer began early in the 1960s and, according to some economists, will continue during the 1970s before declining gradually.

I am very pleased with this statement by Mr. Schryner and also with some of those made by the hon. Minister of Agriculture in his speech a few moments ago. The minister announced that he would introduce measures intended to encourage young people to take possession of their land and to continue their parents' work.

Mr. Chairman, we know that the problem of young farmers is enormous. We must, therefore, encourage them to show a greater interest in agricultural matters and, to do that, we must take steps to help them become integrated in that sector.

I would like, therefore, to tell the Minister of Agriculture, who is here tonight and has delivered an eloquent speech, that I thank him for the particulars he gave us and I hope he will take further steps to help young people to become integrated in the agricultural sector.

Mr. Chairman, today is a time of reflection for eastern and western farmers alike. It is a time of reflection or meditation, if you like, because if there is one group which is serious, it is the farming community.

The farming community has always been the quietest. As mentioned recently by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), it has always been the one that worked when it was asked to, that produced when it was asked to, and which remained silent when it was told: Produce and keep quiet.

Mr. Chairman, the farm people as a group have given a lot in the past, they have never refused to produce. But today the farmer is asking himself: Why bother to keep up production when my products are selling at a loss? That is a serious problem, Mr. Chairman, and I hope that the Minister of Agriculture will take note thereof.

[Mr. Olson.]

It has often been said that the production problem has been settled once for all. As a former Social Crediter—I doubt that he still is—the minister is well aware of it. Production in itself can easily meet Canadian needs. As far as the consumer is concerned, his purchasing power is inadequate to buy and sell that production. The problem is there, Mr. Chairman. When one says that Canada is a rich country, one means that it is rich in possibilities, rich in resources, rich in its future, rich in goodwill, rich in hopes and, for the Canadian farmer, it is rich in disappointments.

We now have in Canada a floundering farming industry. How come? Because each time a farmer could hope to get some kind of assistance, a loan from the Farm Credit Corporation for instance, the same silent thief is always there to prevent the farmer from improving his lot and I refer to the rate of interest. The rate of interest, the so-called silent thief, is protected by all governments, either Liberal or Conservative.

Mr. Chairman—and I will be brief—in 1955, the consumer price index rose to 112.1, as against 100 in 1949. In 1964, the same index reached 132.4 and I did not obtain yet the figures for 1968, since the minister took us by surprise. But nevertheless, the consumer price index has shot up once more.

And, during the same time, has the farmer's profit increased? I ask the minister: During the time when the consumer price index was continually rising, did the net profit of Canadian farmers, the western or eastern farmers, increase proportionately to the cost of living?

I know the minister is sincere enough to answer: No.

Mr. Chairman, that is the core of the problem. First of all, we must adapt our modern needs to a modern economy. That is why we must adjust our agricultural policies to the conditions of a modern economy and, as such, several suggestions contained in the resolutions introduced by the Minister of Agriculture can meet the need I mentioned, namely, to adjust our agriculture to a modern economy.

In this connection, in a while I shall enumerate a few bills which surprise and please us; they represent as many bills that had long been hoped for. Obviously, as the minister said, we cannot solve all the problems at the same time, but the fact remains that the minister did not mention one problem this evening, which is every bit as urgent, if not more so, than those of production, the expansion of farms, the financing of farms or the purchase of agricultural equipment: I mean the problem of marketing our agricultural products. Even if the farmer does produce tons and tons and tons of potatoes, tons and tons and tons of carrots, he cannot be expected to go bury himself under his carrots and potatoes.

Mr. Chairman, someone must buy his potatoes, his carrots, his oats, his wheat, his corn, and God knows what else. In this regard, let me give you an example, which concerns my riding of Lotbinière—incidentally, I invite the members to come and visit it because it is one of the most beautiful in Quebec—and I take as a pattern a short article published in the magazine Semaine Illustrée dated September 11, 1967. I quote:

They bury their potatoes in the ground in order to benefit from Ottawa's assistance.

At this stage, I invite the Minister of Agriculture to listen to me, carefully, because what I am going to say is worthwhile. It is as intelligent as changing a dollar for four quarters.

The potato producers of the Victoriaville area have had such an abundant crop this year that they had to sell them at a ridiculous price or bury them in the ground in order to receive a special subsidy of one cent a pound from the federal government. It is estimated that about three million pounds have thus been disposed of in that area while people are starving to death everywhere in the world, and even in Quebec.

Let us look at the scandal prevailing in the field of agriculture.

In the past, the Bois-Francs farmers received about two and a half cents a pound, but this year the crop was amazing. Due to this surplus production, potatoes only yielded one and a half cents a pound with the result that several farmers are on the brink of bankruptcy.

And the majority of the farmers had to bury their potatoes in the ground in order to get one cent subsidy from the federal government.

When government measures force the farmers to use more or less honest means in order to manage, these measures are, in my opinion, restrictive.

That is one of the first things I wanted to say on that subject. I am very disappointed that, at the beginning of this session, amidst all this opportune and inopportune talk of a just society, an unjust society and a society "just for fun", a measure should not have been introduced to help the farmers to market and sell their products at a reasonable price.

Mr. Chairman, agriculture must be considered in the following way: Since we all have to eat, we owe a great deal to our farmers, who provide us with the food we need. Agriculture is the very basis of our society. There is nothing to be gained, as consumers, by acting to the prejudice of the farmer. Farmers say they could get more for their products. They also say that we could pay less, that supermarkets could still receive a fair profit for their investment.

However, as soon as we look at a situation not through blue or red glasses, but objectively, we see it in a new light. Who should we believe?

Mr. Chairman, in 1961, the number of farmers in Canada was 480,000. Since then, more than 20,000 farmers have given up agriculture. Why? We will be told that farms are not economic. Therefore, farmers go to the cities where they become victims of unemployment. Then, another minister takes over. They are educated and they become the educated unemployed.

Mr. Caouette: In the riding of Mercier.

Mr. Fortin: That is right, in the riding of Mercier.

We will really have become hewers of wood and drawers of water, at the agricultural level, if we fail in our rich country to make agriculture more attractive as a profession.

Mr. Chairman, a "head of lettuce" to take an expression from the farmers' vocabulary, and there are three in the Ralliement Créditiste—for which the farmer gets a nickel is sold 35 cents or 40 cents at the supermarket. On the other hand, if the farmer tries to get 6, 7, 8, 9 or 10 cents for it, it will not sell. Mr. Chairman, there is no need to draw a picture, those figures tell the story. I know that the Minister of Agriculture is aware of that, and that is why I am telling him those things, to refresh his memory, so that he will remember them a long time. I welcome those three resolutions for the following reasons.

First, it is the proposal to extend loans through Farm Credit corporation and other organizations to a larger number of farmers. I think it is a positive measure and I commend the Minister of Agriculture for it.

As far as these loans are concerned, we of the Ralliement Créditiste are objective, as everyone can see. It has been said, Mr. Chairman, that these loans will be used for the construction of buildings and will enable farmers to purchase farm machinery. In my opinion, this is an excellent measure.

Second, it raises the maximum amount of a loan to $25,000. I think this is a constructive measure. One must not always criticize but see what is good and what is not.

There is another observation I should like to make at this stage as regards something I find very encouraging and which shows goodwill on the part of the minister, namely his intention to encourage loans so as to accelerate the setting in motion of co-operatives. Farmers group themselves into co-operatives, and the minister intends, through such measures, to encourage for good and all the co-operative system. Here again, I agree heartily with him and congratulate him. This will not be all, for there are two sides to the question.

There is also the purchasing of land by the farmer, in order to increase his turnover. Here again is a measure that can be constructive I think, that could also be double-edged. What will become of the farmer who will sell his land to his neighbour? Will he become unemployed? No trouble. Let them come to Lotbinière and they will see that there are problems, that cases like that do exist.

Mr. Chairman, I am strongly against a measure that was introduced at least 14 times and here is why: the minister expects such a measure to increase the number of lenders. He takes for granted that insurance companies, loan companies, credit unions, Caisses populaires and chartered banks will be of some help. As long as he refers to the Caisses populaires, I agree but when he refers to chartered banks, credit unions, loan and insurance companies, I say that the Minister of Agriculture contradicts himself, repudiates his past convictions and comes to terms with trusts that exploit people.

Mr. Chairman, in order to give an example, let us suppose a $2,000 loan. Someone applies to the Banque Canadienne Nationale, he will end by repaying $2197. Listen carefully to this: the annual rate of interest is 9.48 per cent at the Bank of Montreal—I am still referring to the $2000 loan, spread out on a two-year period—so, you get $2000 and you repay after two years $2205, at a rate of interest of 9.87 per cent. At the Provincial Bank—for that same loan—you will repay $2208 at an annual rate of interest of 9.98 per cent. Therefore, when the minister tells us, in his resolutions, that he wishes to abolish the rate of interest on loans, as regards farm credit machinery, farm implements, buildings and so on, he wants to abolish the rate of interest of 5 per cent in order to give all that to insurance companies, loan companies, trusts, credit unions or some other companies. I say that the minister is a friend of the trusts, that he is not at all siding with the farmers but rather siding with the financial sharks.

The Beneficial Finance Corporation for the same $2,000 loan levies a 5 per cent interest. No reference is made to a $25,000 loan. What would be the rate of interest on such a loan? Is that conceivable? A $25,000 loan from the Beneficial Finance would yield 23.74 per cent interest. This is far from 5 per cent. It will destroy everything that remains of Canadian farming.

I am convinced that the members of the Ralliement Créditiste as well as all other members would be very grateful if the Minister of Agriculture would state the rate of interest which he has in mind rather than leave the matter to the governor in council. We would then be aware of the lending terms and the difficulties which our Canadian farmers will soon be experiencing if this legislation is passed. I simply say that it will be the downfall of agriculture if transactions are carried on with finance companies in order to increase loans up to 23.74 per cent, as we have seen.

Mr. Chairman, I believe there is an enormous scandal in our present day world and I wish to remind you that agriculture is the basis of our society. Before concluding, I would like to say briefly—as I do not want to labour the point—that in 1934, according to the official statistics of the League of Nations, 2,400,000 people died from starvation—this has nothing to do with the capacity of production—and 1,200,000 people committed suicide; on the other hand, 1 million carloads of wheat were burned—wheat, not Liberal members—and 267,000 carloads of coffee were burned. This can happen not because our farmers are not able to produce more, but because there are no agencies to sell the products to the consumer. The farmer always produces the same products.

In 1934, 516 million pounds of sugar, 50 million pounds of rice and 50 million pounds of meat were destroyed.

I am not making up those figures. The League of Nations disclosed them in 1934, just as we were getting over the depression.

Mr. Chairman, the Canadian farmer is grappling with such a problem that he never knows whether he will be able to balance his budget or make ends meet tomorrow. In any event, he is not sure of being able to put in the crop. When he has managed to do that, he is not sure of getting a crop, because if he has a crop, he cannot be sure of having good weather. Nor is he sure—even supposing he should be very lucky—of being able to sell his products.

How then can we expect the farmer's son to be interested in taking over the family farm? A near impossibility is expected of him. For the guidance of the members, I should now like to read the following text:

> The prospect of being saddled throughout his life with a debt running from $60,000 to $100,000 is not likely to encourage young people to go into agriculture.

That was an excerpt from an article published in the magazine Farm Credit Expansion in Canada written by Mr. Ross and published in the Canadian Farm Economics, Volume I, No. 1, dated April 1966. I give this reference in order to interest the rural members in agricultural problems.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to dwell any longer on this matter. In any event, I attempted to highlight the good points of the three resolutions which I sincerely believe will help our farmers. It is useless to study them in detail, since the members who spoke before me dealt with them.

However, I should like to underline the points we feel are important, the points we are happy to see on the order of the day. But let us not forget this: as long as we do not have some organization for the marketing of farm products, we will not solve the agricultural problem.

Before bringing my remarks to a close, I should like to make one specific request—the matter is urgent—and ask that the eastern farmer be taken care of. I should like to invite the Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Côté) who is supposed to represent the eastern farmers, to act with a bit more speed. That would help, I think, because the eastern farmers have grown impatient.

• (9:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Chairman, I wish to begin my remarks by complimenting the minister upon his clear explanation of the bill before us. Also, I congratulate him upon his recent elevation. May I also say that I am in complete agreement with the principle involved in this resolution. No one can disagree with the renewing of a plan which, while it was operative, had such a beneficial effect on the farming economy. That the plan has been allowed to sink into limbo for the past few years is something else again.

I wonder if the government, and the Prime Minister in particular, has any idea of the hardship that has been caused by allowing the Farm Improvement Loans Act to wither and die because of an election. In my province alone the sale of farm equipment has declined to such an extent that many dealers have been forced into bankruptcy. One wholesale firm in a three month period reports 18 failures in its list of dealers. This is one result of the inconvenience caused to farmers who were unable to finance replacement equipment, needed especially because of adverse weather experienced during planting, cultivating and harvesting seasons.

I welcome the renewal of the Farm Improvement Loans Act, but I question some of its clauses. It seems to me that the cabinet of this country is taking on a job for itself that is completely unnecessary. I see no point whatever in having interest rates left to the cabinet to decide, in their wisdom. This prerogative is completely unnecessary. In my view it is further evidence that this government wishes to extend its tentacles into every phase of life of the Canadian people. There may be an exception as far as the bedrooms of the nation are concerned, but this unilateral setting of the interest rate is really none of the cabinet's business. Surely the government can negotiate with the financial institutions of this country and come up with a permanent rate. Let it be a fluctuating rate, if you like, but let it be established through a publicized formula.

Experience over the years has shown that the farm improvement loan has not been abused. The loss ratio in relation to the amount lent has been minimal and I suggest that a formula along the lines I have suggested could be worked out. For example, most financial firms and banks know what their overhead is. They know their costs of administration and we know the loss ratio. Why, therefore, can a formula not be worked out based on the prime lending rate of banks and other financial institutions, plus an agreed surcharge. I do not know what the surcharge might amount to; I am sure the banks would tell us. If one bank wanted 1 per cent and another needed only three quarters of one per cent we might even see a little competition entering the business.

I cast no reflection on this cabinet in what I am about to say, sir. There might come a time when what I am about to refer to may have an effect. While we have 264 members of parliament, our cabinet has 28 members. I submit that it would be much easier for a powerful financial lobby to influence a weak 28-man cabinet than to influence the entire house.

An hon. Member: But it is not weak.

Mr. Hees: Look again.

Mr. McCutcheon: We have had weak cabinets in Canada before, and very possibly we shall have them again.

Mr. Hees: I'll bet on this one.

Mr. McCutcheon: Why should a matter as important and delicate as this be left to a group that could be vulnerable to extreme lobby pressure? By this one, unnecessary unilateral act the cabinet are leaving themselves open to charges that they have set the rate too high. When this happens, and happen it will, there will be those in this country who will suggest even that someone is getting a kickback. If, on the other hand, the rate is too low, what will happen? We shall see taking place what took place this year and last year. There just will not be any farm improvement loan money available.

I deplore the wording in the resolution because it is all so unnecessary. I suspect that in this resolution we are seeing more of the ideas of those who want the cabinet to be supreme, and the house filled with little rubberstamps.

I am also in agreement with item No. 6 on the order paper, the resolution preceding the bill to amend the Farm Credit Act. I agree particularly with the concept of broadening the classes of persons eligible. Yet, here again, we are running smack into another intrusion by the governor in council, the cabinet, which also in this instance wishes to set interest rates. Probably there is more justification here for the cabinet to set interest rates than there is in the case of farm improvement loans. Under the Farm Credit Act government money goes out; under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, bank money is lent under a minimal government guarantee. I say there is no need to change the interest rate under which moneys will be lent under the Farm Credit Act. The present high interest rates will not always stay in effect.

[Mr. McCutcheon.]

Some in this youthful cabinet are old enough to remember that we did not always have these high interest rates. Less than 30 years ago people with money to invest were happy to buy government bonds yielding 3 per cent. Who is to say that with farm credit loans running for upwards of 30 years interest rates will not come down drastically long before those loans are paid off. Over the past 100 years the money market has shown a remarkable history of ups and downs. Some economists go so far as to predict when these cycles will take place. For my purpose this evening it is sufficient to mention what has happened in the past 50 years.

From 1919 to 1929 long term Canadian dollar bonds gave an annual average yield of 5.07 per cent. From 1929 to 1939 the average yield was 3.88 per cent. From 1939 to 1949 the average yield was 2.93 per cent, and from 1949 to 1959 that average yield was 3.67 per cent. What the average for this decade will be is anyone's guess. Most decidely the average yield will be up. Certainly the rate will be as high as or higher than any we have seen in this century. Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, these trends were evident a century ago, and before that. There is nothing new about them.

I therefore urge the government to keep at 5 per cent the lending rate on moneys lent under the Farm Credit Act. If necessary, the government ought to put government money into the corporation administering the act. If it does that it will have a credit mark opposite its record, a mark which will show that the government, in one instance, tried to keep our agricultural industry alive.

I say again that these high interest rates will not last forever, and the burden on the treasury would be small in relation to the long term good which could be accomplished. Probably before many years have passed, before many of these liabilities are paid off, interest rates will once again be down. The inflationary effect of subsidized interest rates which the minister mentioned will not, in practice, have much of an impact. In my view the cabinet would do well to spend more of its time maintaining a climate in which our farmers could sell their products at a reasonable price. I suggest it would be far more profitable for them to spend their time on this, rather than sit around setting interest rates.

Mr. Peters: There are really three types of credit in which the farmers are interested.

They include the credit given by the Farm Credit Corporation, a long term type of credit backed by the total assets of the borrower, including the land. In most cases the land and the commodities backing the mortgage are sufficient to cover the credit granted.

The forerunner of the farm credit bill was the Veterans Land Act, which taught us how to administer credit at the lowest possible cost, with a minimum of loss and the correct amount of supervision. There are two other types of credit in which the farmer is interested. One is the type covered by the farm improvement legislation. A farmer borrows on a relatively short term basis against a mortgage, expecting to repay the money within a reasonable period without tying up his land or committing the total value of his operation for very long.

A third form of credit in which farmers are interested is not covered by any of these bills, though it is one upon which farmers depend, using it to carry on their operations until the crop comes in. They borrow this money from finance companies, banks, instrument companies, machinery companies, fertilizer companies, seed companies and other agencies, including the local co-operative, on a short term basis. This type of credit has always been difficult for farmers to obtain, and they pay for it at the going market rate which is usually very high.

It seems to me that the third credit provision in the minister's group is a stupid one. The hon. gentleman himself was critical when the former minister introduced this legislation providing credit for syndicates purchasing farm machinery. In practice this legislation benefitted only rich people. The former minister, now in the other place, had some very rich friends. I note that only 346 people have taken advantage of this legislation, and I am somewhat surprised that the minister has not dropped these particular provisions. The former minister, now a Senator, knew nothing about the needs of the average farmer but he did have some rich friends who could benefit from this legislation. I believe the average amount lent under these arrangements was $75,000.

I think the minister should take a look at what is happening. These people never have any difficulty about buying more land or getting credit for farm improvements on a long term basis, they never find it impossible to get short term credit for their day to day operations, and for these reasons I suggest they need little consideration from the government when it comes to the formation of syndicates.

It is possible that some poor people did take advantage of this measure. But two or three farmers do not get together to buy a combine, or, if they do, they will not be speaking to each other when the cutting season comes. It is not for operations of this kind that the legislation was designed. The hon. gentleman may find some exceptions, but I think he will discover that for the most part these arrangements cater to the Cadillac trade, which should not be the responsibility of parliament.

I have said on many occasions that farm credit at an interest rate in excess of 5 per cent on a 25-year basis is more than a farmer can afford. I would rather see a farmer go broke without credit than get the credit and go broke. At least he would have something to salvage. Some of the provinces have made this kind of loan tough to get. A quarter section has to be reserved for a familly as a homestead, and cannot be seized in payment of debt. This is the situation in Saskatchewan. Why? Because literally thousands of people lost everything they had got together throughout the years, including, finally, the homestead they lived on. This happened to so many farmers that the people elected a government which decided to protect at least the homestead against seizure.

My own family lived on a farm which had been mortgaged for $14,000. My father scraped together $5,000 or a little less in order to buy it. The people who had owned it previously were good farmers; they had also been engaged in the logging industry. They borrowed money and expanded. Then, through no fault of their own, circumstances arose in which they could not meet their obligations and they found themselves without the farm.

We are speaking of three different kinds of farm credit when we discuss these bills and, as I say, there is probably a form of credit which is not covered by any of them, one to which I hope the minister will soon give consideration. I am referring to the short term credit necessary to carry on day to day operations. In my area this has been extremely difficult to raise from any of the lending sources.

May I call it ten o'clock?

Progress reported.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

● (10:00 p.m.)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, for the business tomorrow we will start with the bill to amend the Publication of Statutes Act. After that is finished we will go on to the resolution preceding the Windfall amendment for the Canadian National Railways, and thereafter we will return to the resolution stages of the three bills we were considering this evening.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

HARBOURS—ROBERTS BANK, B.C.—CONSTITUTIONAL JURISDICTION RESPECTING RAILWAY LINE

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, a week ago today I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) the following question, as recorded at page 326 of Hansard:

> In view of the situation of continuing conflict concerning British Columbia Hydro's rail route to Roberts Bank, and in view of the fact that the provincial government controls a sole and vital link between two federal facilities, the port and the national railway system, what action does the federal government intend to take in regard to the problem of constitutional jurisdiction that is involved?

It would be almost possible, Mr. Speaker, to overestimate the amount of concern that this matter is causing among citizens of the lower mainland of B.C. As a matter of fact, my colleagues in this party have been trying unsuccessfully to get an answer to this question ever since we came down here. My colleague from Vancouver East was the latest to try this afternoon to get some ministerial statement on the matter.

The British Columbia cabinet has authorized the B.C. Hydro and Power Authority to build, or in part to rebuild 17 miles of track which would form part of an access rail line to Roberts Bank in the Matsqui area in order that initially shipments of coal from the Crowsnest area can be made to the new super port.

The reason that public opinion in the lower mainland area is so upset is that the provincial government has completely ignored the recommendations of the Lower Mainland Regional Planning Board which, along with its 28 member municipalities, was given by this same provincial government the responsibility of land use planning and zoning for the whole lower mainland area.

The planning board strongly recommended an alternative rail route to provide service to Roberts Bank via the existing Fraser river industrial and railway corridor. The board warns that the B.C. Hydro route jeopardizes the future of the people of the lower mainland, of half the population of British Columbia. It advises that this new rail traffic would create additional major hazards of accident, air and soil pollution, would cause further noise intrusion, and would damage the appearance of the countryside completely unnecessarily. Land values in the immediate vicinity of the railway would go down and municipal tax revenues decrease as a result.

Most serious of all, the B.C. Hydro route would spell the destruction of the Boundary Bay area with its unparalleled recreation potential and its natural beauty on a magnificent scale. With this would go the destruction of one of the few remaining wildlife sanctuaries that exist in southern B.C.

No wonder that the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose), who represents a part of this whole area, declares that the proposed location of the railway defies every tenet of enlightened land use planning and reduces the Lower Mainland Regional Planning Board to complete irrelevance. I believe that all members in this house from British Columbia share this view.

From the standpoint of the federal interest much is involved. A super port is to be built at Roberts Bank and the control of the port is clearly within federal jurisdiction. Equally clear is the need for the federal authority to have undisputed access to the port.

The provincially controlled B.C. Hydro railway line to Roberts Bank would be connected with the interprovincial rail lines of Canada, which again are clearly under federal jurisdiction. Surely this situation presents a constitutional problem for the federal government, one that calls for immediate consultation with the provincial authorities, and one that certainly cannot be dodged, at least any longer.

The fact that two federal cabinet ministers seem to have differing opinions about the degree of federal jurisdiction in this matter—they have made no secret of their differences, at least judging from speeches they have made in B.C.—merely points up the need for a speedy and decisive solution. They both cannot be right. This matter is either under B.C. provincial jurisdiction, or federal jurisdiction.

Quite apart from the problem of federal access to the Roberts Bank port, but very relevant to the problem, is the federal government's interest in regional planning and the conservation and development of Canada's natural resources, both from the standpoint of productivity and of human environment.

In a matter of such great significance to our province and indeed to the whole of this country I submit that the federal government owes the members of this house, the people of British Columbia and all the people of Canada an explanation on this point. I believe we should have a statement concerning the government's intentions. I honestly believe that the federal government is no longer in a position to evade this matter, and leave it to the provincial government to hold the whip hand in respect of this Roberts Bank situation.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we are grateful to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) for having deferred this question until last Thursday, at the request of the government, to be answered by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer). Then, due to the untimely death of the premier of the province of Quebec and the adjournment of the house on Thursday, there was no opportunity for the hon. member to raise her point and for the Minister of Transport to reply. Regrettably both the Minister of Transport and the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Richardson) had engagements which required their presence outside the house this evening.

The Minister of Transport has received many briefs from parties concerned with the rail route to Roberts Bank, in particular a detailed report from the Lower Mainland Regional Planning Board. He is presently studying all these briefs. The constitutional aspects of this question are still under review. It would appear from the evidence, on the basis of the representations received, that the constitutional aspect concerns the effect on regional planning and urban development by the rail route selected by the B.C. Hydro and Power Authority. For these reasons it would appear that the matter is one involving the jurisdiction of the provincial government in the area of regional planning, and neither the effectiveness nor the ineffectiveness of transportation to Roberts Bank.

TRANSPORT—POTASH—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO FREIGHT RATE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, last Tuesday I directed the following question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer):

> In view of the serious consequences to railway services and employees in Saskatchewan from the proposed changes in transportation of potash by I.M.C. of Esterhazy, is it the intention of the minister to call for an inquiry into the freight rate structure for the transportation of potash to the United States and overseas markets?

I asked this question for a number of reasons. It also related to a question I had asked previously concerning what the government intends to do to avoid any serious repercussions which might arise when they start trucking potash. Their intention is to truck potash from Esterhazy to the United States border, where it will be loaded on to freight trains for delivery to Chicago and other United States markets.

If potash is moved by truck, naturally some of the railway employees in the area will be laid off and there will be serious repercussions in the whole region. The hon. member for Regina Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) and I had a three day visit to the area where we spoke to many of the people involved in the potash industry, and other workers as well. The main complaint the people in the potash industry had concerned the high cost of transportation.

In directing this question to the minister I have in mind that if the rail rates for the shipment of potash were lower the company might be encouraged to ship more of the product on the railway system through Melville. I ask this question in the interests of the employees in the railway industry.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) previously raised this question in the house the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) relayed his concern to the management of the Canadian National Railways. Since this is a business venture on the part of the mining company and the transportation companies, it is natural that there should be negotiation between the parties so a compromise can be reached as to the cost of transportation services. These negotiations are presently under way to establish a competitive transport rate for the potash. Considering however that it is bulk potash that is to be transported, it is difficult to perceive any transportation method other than rail being used. It is the hope of the Department of Transport that an agreement will be reached by the railways and the mining companies in the very near future.

UNITED NATIONS—BIAFRA—FAILURE TO BRING MATTER BEFORE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, the question I asked this afternoon and did not quite succeed in fielding dealt with a matter of great importance. The people of Canada are asking what is being done about the Biafra situation, and they are asking particularly why the United Nations is not dealing with the matter in some way.

I note that the minister referred to the danger of divisive action if this matter were dealt with in general terms, and I noticed that the Secretary General used similar phraseology. I want again in passing to note that the United Nations does deal with a good many divisive items and it would be somewhat unrealistic to confine the attention of the United Nations only to those questions on which there was harmony.

Surely in a matter of burning concern and deep anxiety to our people, and to thoughtful, sensitive people throughout the world, we should not be fearful of lack of unanimous support for the suggestions we might make. It is my contention that the question should have been on the provisional agenda of the General Assembly long ago. If the government had thought it wise, it could have been directed to one of the non-political committees, and the second and third committees come into my mind immediately. At this juncture I would agree that the Security Council is not the avenue for discussion at this time.

The UN does not deal only with political questions. There is a wide range of interests and debate, as anybody who has been there knows. The field is literally the world, and the agenda is immense. This session the General Assembly has 90 items on the provisional agenda. Surely it is not a cardinal point in Canada's foreign policies that we must be universally loved and have unanimous support for our eternal endeavours. If any effort to have the UN general assembly deal with the humanitarian aspects of the Biafra situation, with the starvation and suffering of thousands of people, should put us in a minority position in the assembly—and this seems to be part of the government's thinking—then I say that on such an issue this would be an honoured position and a noble posture for this country to be in.

While the minister knows, I am not sure that the public know the procedure in respect of the General Assembly agenda. It is not as difficult as we have been led to believe. Rule 13 of the rules and procedures of the General Assembly lists the ways in which the provisional agenda is formed and what it shall include. Rule 13(e) says that the provisional agenda of the regular session shall include all items proposed by any member of the United Nations. Had this item been proposed any time during the summer, when the government had this matter very much in mind, as we were told, the UN could have been seized of it at any time, and thus this technical hurdle would have been overcome. Hopefully, had the whole situation been resolved by the O.A.U.,—and that would have been a lot to expect,—there would be no great difficulty in the United Nations dropping that item from the agenda.

Nor is it terribly difficult to recall situations where items are not in fact reached. In other words, the fact that the question may have been dealt with in another milieu was no excuse for the delegation of Canada not having this item placed upon the General Assembly agenda. Thus could the General Assembly mobilize world opinion to ameliorate the suffering of the Biafrans.

I note that the secretary general in his letter mentions insufficient financial support as a reason for the failure of voluntary organizations to bring about the amount of relief required to the population suffering in Biafra. Of course he is right. But the General Assembly, surely, would be the forum in which world interest could be stimulated and a measure of world relief and sacrifice, in financial terms, could be encouraged.

It is regrettable that among all the items in the 90-item agenda, this is not included. There are so many ways in which an item could have been constructed. I see here item No. 45: Multilateral food aid. Item No. 46 is: Increase in the production and use of edible protein. There are many, many items which are not political items and would not raise the spectre of these divisive repercussions which have been mentioned. But alas, that has not been done. It should have been done. I do not think the government should raise the great curtain of impenetrable difficulty in having the UN seized of the matter.

It is regrettable that the opportunity was missed and I hope the minister and the government will make every effort to compensate for their failure to take action when action was easier than it may be now. We wish them well in whatever action they may feel it incumbent to take.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, perhaps it might be of some assistance to the house if I read the relevant section of the letter from the Secretary General of the United Nations in reply to mine in which I asked how best we could bring this matter before the United Nations. He said:

> I am most grateful to you for your letter which reflects the consistent interest shown by Canada in regard to the United Nations and to questions of a humanitarian nature. I wish to tell you also of my deep appreciation for your references to my statements regarding the distressing fratricidal strife in Nigeria, and I am greatly encouraged by your support of the position which I have taken concerning this situation. I agree with you that raising the situation in Nigeria in general terms before the United Nations General Assembly could be divisive, particularly in light of the resolutions adopted by the last two meetings of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity in Kinshasa and Algiers, respectively.

If the government felt that it would be possible to add one little bit to the amount of aid that would get through to the starving people in Nigeria-Biafra by raising this question in the United Nations, we would be glad to do so. We would do this if we felt that by raising the questions in the United Nations we could in any way contribute to the relief of the suffering that is going on in Nigeria-Biafra.

We found, however, on exploring the situation that the countries which shared our concern believed that all that would happen—and I had to agree with them—was that there would be a political debate about the future of Nigeria, and that this would lead not to an increase in the amount of aid but to a kind of divisive, political debate that would actually detract from the aid that might otherwise be going to these suffering people.

This was our view and, as you will see from the letter that I have read from the Secretary General, it was his view. I have no reason to question that judgment. However, I would add that it is my view and the view of the government that we should be working for the establishment of some kinds of procedures in the future when situations like this arise again, when there is an acknowledged method of dealing with these humanitarian concerns, by establishing rules that receive international agreement, and establishing agencies that are unquestioned when they want to supply aid to the innocent victims of a civil war such as this one. It seems to me that this is how we should be concentrating our efforts now. It is quite clear from what the Secretary General has said, and from our explorations, that to raise this question now would only raise the political issues which would detract from it, and would not aid the suffering people.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

APPENDIX

CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING AID TO NIGERIA-BIAFRA

Ottawa, September 21, 1968

Dear Secretary-General,

I wanted you to know that the Government and people of Canada share with other nations throughout the world the distress and dismay which you have expressed over the terrible toll of destruction, starvation and loss of life resulting from the tragic fratricidal strife in Nigeria. As you so eloquently stated on September 13 to the meeting in Algiers of Heads of State of the Organization of African Unity, "In the name of humanity it is essential that everything be done to help relieve the impact of this tragic conflict".

In face of this concern the Canadian people and indeed public opinion in many other countries find it difficult to understand how the United Nations could fail to concern itself with the humanitarian task of preventing death by starvation for these suffering people.

The Canadian Government fully supports the efforts of the OAU to assist the Nigerian peoples in their search for a solution of their political problems. That organization in a resolution adopted at its recent conference in Algiers asked all member states of the UN and the OAU to abstain from any action susceptible of impairing the unity, territorial integrity and peace of Nigeria. You said you believed that the OAU should be the most appropriate instrument for the promotion of peace in Nigeria and that it has been agreed that all humanitarian aid to victims of the Nigerian conflict should be channelled through the International Committee of the Red Cross. The Canadian Government agrees with these statements.

I realize that to raise the situation in Nigeria in general terms before the General Assembly could be divisive. There may nonetheless be a role for the UN in stimulating effective action on the humanitarian problem of opening ways of delivering relief supplies to the needy. This could help meet the earnest desire of people everywhere not only to offer assistance but to see that the help being given reaches those who are in greatest need. I can not help but feel that in these circumstances every avenue must be explored.

I know that you and your representative in Nigeria have spared no efforts to urge the parties to facilitate the flow of aid to the civilian population. As a contribution to the efforts being made by the international community, Canada has made over one million dollars available to the International Red Cross for relief supplies for Nigeria. Canada has also responded to the invitation of the Federal Military Government to send an observer, along with those of other nations, the OAU and your own representative to observe the conduct of the Federal Military Government's troops. The Algiers resolution of the OAU appealed once more to all the interested parties to cooperate with a view to assuring the rapid despatch of humanitarian aid to all those who need it. We would like to see effect given to this appeal by the most effective means available.

In the light of these considerations, the Government of Canada would be grateful for your views as to any additional ways in which the good offices of the UN might be brought to bear at this time in relieving the suffering of the people of Nigeria. We for our part are studying possible measures which might be taken by the international community to assist not only in alleviating the effects of the fighting but also in the vital work of reconstruction in devastated areas.

Yours sincerely,

Mitchell Sharp

Press release

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

For immediate release

30 September 1968

NIGERIA

The Honourable Mitchell Sharp, Secretary of State for External Affairs, received on September 27 the following message from His Excellency U Thant, Secretary General of the United Nations;

Sir,

The Permanent Representative of Canada to the United Nations has forwarded to me your message of September 21, concerning the situation in Nigeria.

I am most grateful to you for your letter which reflects the consistent interest shown by Canada in regard to the United Nations and to questions of a humanitarian nature. I wish to tell you also of my deep appreciation for your references to my statements regarding the distressing fratricidal strife in Nigeria, and I am greatly encouraged by your support of the position which I have taken concerning this situation. I agree with you that raising the situation in Nigeria in general terms before the United Nations General Assembly could be divisive, particularly in light of the resolutions adopted by the last two meetings of the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the Organization of African Unity in Kinshasa and Algiers, respectively.

The question of humanitarian aid to the victims of the Nigerian civil war has been and continues to be a matter of deep concern to the entire United Nations family. Considerable efforts have been made to obtain medical, food and other supplies and transport them to staging areas in Nigeria and to other sites in the neighbourhood, such as Fernando Poo and Sao Tome. The United Nations Childrens Fund in particular, in close cooperation with the International Committee of the Red Cross and other organizations, has been fully involved for some time now in providing urgently needed assistance. The fund has allocated $700,000 for this work and the Executive Director is submitting to his board, for their approval, a further allocation of $1,-500,000, a part of which he has already found it necessary to commit in advance in light of the urgent needs.

With these resources, which have come largely from private contributions, UNICEF has been and is continuing to provide medical supplies, foodstuffs and vehicles, and is also sending supplies contributed in kind by governments and industry to a further value of approximately $9,000,000. It is also covering the costs of some specialized personnel working with other agencies in the field. The fund has also made a contract for a small helicopter airlift for local delivery in territories around Calabar which have passed again under federal control.

The International Red Cross, which is coordinating the humanitarian assistance to Nigeria, has chartered a number of planes which have been transporting supplies into the war affected areas. Important church relief organizations have also chartered and are operating planes for this purpose. However, for military reasons adduced by one side of the conflict or the other, it has not been possible to establish a sufficiently effective air-bridge to meet the needs of the afflicted civilian population. The main immediate problem, in the view of experts in the field, is to find adequate means for transporting into the war affected areas the supplies which have accumulated at various staging points.

Involved is an extremely difficult logistical problem which includes not only finding such means for transportation by air, land and sea as may be required, but also of enlisting the cooperation of commanders in the field who naturally have a tendency to give first priority to military commitments.

There is particular concern regarding the need to strengthen the airlifts. For various reasons, including the destruction of roads, airlift capacity is required throughout the region on both sides, and it is not considered that this need will disappear if the military situation changes.

The combined efforts of the International Red Cross supported by national Red Cross societies, voluntary organizations and the family of United Nations organizations have not been able to bring the amount of relief required to the civilian population. This is not only because of the restrictions just referred to, but also because of insufficient financial and logistical support.

For the reasons outlined above, I believe there are two main areas in which governments can be particularly helpful. First, it would be useful for governments to lend their support, by public pronouncements and by such action as they may deem appropriate, to the recent appeal of the Organization of African Unity on Nigeria to all interested parties to cooperate with a view to ensuring the rapid despatch of humanitarian aid to all those who are in need of it. In addition, I feel that governments could increase their logistical and financial support to the organizations concerned with the relief effort. The details concerning such support could be discussed with the International Red Cross and with UNICEF. I know that both institutions would welcome the opportunity of discussing concrete ways in which governments might assist in the task of alleviating the plight of so many innocent victims of the armed struggle in Nigeria.

Accept, Sir, the assurances of my highest consideration.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, October 1, 1968

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF DEPARTMENTAL REORGANIZATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the anxiety being expressed throughout the country by Indian organizations and other spokesmen for the Indian people, including the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Andras), about the failure of the government to consult the Indian people before proceeding with the reorganization of the department of Indian affairs will he undertake to reconsider these proposals in consultation with representatives of the Indian community in Canada?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as this house knows there has been constant and intense communication with the Indian population since this government took office on all aspects concerning the Indian population. The reorganization of the department is something which had been initiated quite a while ago. It is just a matter of internal structure, and the obvious design is to make the services of the government to the Indian and Eskimo population more efficient. It is really a consequence of Indian Affairs being no longer just a branch but being a whole department; because it was a matter of internal reorganization we did not feel it was necessary to advise the Indians in advance of the day that it was going to take place.

Mr. Stanfield: As a supplementary question, will the Prime Minister state whether, before proceeding with this reorganization, the government did or did not consult with the national and regional Indian advisory councils, which I understand were established by the government for precisely this purpose of consultation.

Mr. Trudeau: I believe, Mr. Speaker, that both Mr. Chrétien and Mr. Andras have been discussing this general idea amongst themselves and with the people concerned, but they will have to answer for themselves when they are in the house. I have no specific information on that.

Mr. Stanfield: As a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister inclined to meet with representatives of the Indian Brotherhood of Canada, which organization has strongly protested this reorganization and demanded a meeting with the Prime Minister to discuss the matter?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have not considered that yet. I have not received this invitation. I do not know of it, but I am inclined to believe that the minister and the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Andras) are very expert and able at this, and that whatever they have decided is a good decision.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that representatives of the Indian people have made it clear that they consider this reorganization more than an internal housekeeping affair, would the Prime Minister give consideration, first of all, to tabling the details of the reorganization and, second, referring the matter to the appropriate standing committee so that representatives of the Indian people could make public their observations and their criticisms of this plan?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Chrétien tells me he had intended announcing this to the house on Friday—

An hon. Member: You mean the minister.

Mr. Trudeau: —but in view of the number of statements on motions he has postponed it to Wednesday of this week, and I think I can say with authority that Mr. Chrétien plans to make a statement to the house tomorrow on this matter.

An hon. Member: You mean the minister.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): As a supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is Mr. Trudeau now.

Mr. Dinsdale: —the Prime Minister indicated that consultation had been going on between the Minister without Portfolio (Mr.

Andras) and the advisory councils at the national and regional level. In view of that statement could the Prime Minister inform the house whether, as the Minister without Portfolio indicated, he, the Minister without Portfolio, had not been consulted until last Monday on this fundamental reorganization of the department?

Mr. Trudeau: I would have to obtain this from the minister himself because my information, Mr. Speaker, is that there has been ample discussion between the minister and the Minister without Portfolio on this matter.

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): As a supplementary question, can the Prime Minister say whether a two volume report on Indian poverty areas prepared by ARDA has been suppressed, and whether he will undertake to make this important report public?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Trudeau: Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, questions relating to ARDA come under the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development, and I will have to ask him to consider this.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): I will take the question as notice.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the statement made by the Minister without Portfolio, who has been assigned by the Prime Minister to Indian Affairs, to the effect that he had not been informed of the reorganization until last Monday; in view of his statement that he would have been happy to see it postponed but that he has asked for a full report on its depth and the rationale, and in view of the obvious confusion relating to responsibilities, will the Prime Minister undertake to make a statement to the house on motions which will delineate clearly to the house, to the country and to the Indian people the authority and responsibilities of these respective ministers with regard to Indian Affairs?

Mr. Trudeau: I can do this now. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development obviously is the minister responsible for everything coming under his department. He is being assisted in one special aspect of his duties by the Minister without Portfolio. The line of responsibility, however, is clearly through the minister with portfolio. I understand the problems of hon. members with regard to this matter, and I assure them that I share them.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Does the Prime Minister consider the remarks of the Minister without Portfolio to be a cabinet leak?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON CONVERSATIONS WITH FRENCH PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he intends to make a statement to the house concerning his conversations a day or two ago with the Prime Minister of France?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I understand it is not customary to make a statement after such conversations, and I had not planned to do so.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PARTICIPATION IN DESIGN AND DEVELOPMENT OF NEW PLANE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address this question to the Minister of National Defence. Will the minister confirm whether Canada has asked for an extension until October 15 before announcing whether the government intends to participate in the European consortium for the design and development of a new general purpose fighter bomber, and will the minister say whether a decision has yet been reached by the cabinet on this subject?

Hon. Leo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Yes, we have requested an extension to October 15. No decision has yet been reached.

Mr. MacLean: Can the minister say whether the decision on this matter is related to the review of defence and foreign policy, and will he confirm whether this review has been completed at the official level and is now before the government for consideration?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): There is a degree of relationship, but I think the decision can be taken even before the conclusion of the review of external affairs and defence. There is a certain relationship, but I do not believe we will have to have the conclusions of the review before we make up our mind whether we should participate.

[Translation]

NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

STEPS TO OVERCOME SHORTAGE OF MEDICAL PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Oza Tétrault (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare.

In view of the acute shortage of medical staff and hospital beds in Canada, especially in the Gaspé peninsula and in Abitibi, can the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare tell the house whether he intends to announce efficient measures in order to improve the situation?

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I am not aware of a shortage in the particular area to which the hon. member referred. I shall look into it and report to the hon. member later.

PUBLIC SERVICE

LABOUR DEPARTMENT—STATUS OF WOMEN'S BUREAU

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): My question is for the Minister of Labour. Yesterday before the royal commission on the status of women complaints were made regarding the Department of Labour and the bureau for women within that department. I should like to ask the minister whether his department has any plans to strengthen the staff of that bureau and make it more effective for women.

Mr. Speaker: Order, I think both the question now asked by the hon. member and the question asked by the previous hon. member are rather general in scope. I fail to see the immediate urgency of the problem in the question asked by the hon. member. If there is urgency he can perhaps indicate his intention to debate it at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Allmand: Ten o'clock.

[Later:]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. I may say that it is in the same area as the one asked by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, but Your Honour will appreciate it is a different question. Will the minister, at an early date, be announcing the appointment of a new director of the women's bureau of his department?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): A new director was chosen a few days ago, Mr. Speaker, and allowing for the appeal period under the provisions of the Public Service Act I should be in a position to announce the new director on Monday or Tuesday of next week.

Mr. Allmand: I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether a decision has been made to upgrade the position of the director in accordance with the brief submitted to the royal commission, and whether the director will receive more pay.

An hon. Member: Put the question in caucus tomorrow.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Will the minister be prepared to table the correspondence with Mrs. Findlay, who occupied that position as chairman of this bureau, since the circumstances under which she resigned are set out therein? At the same time would the minister say whether the cause for which she resigned has been looked into with a view to ascertaining the true facts, and whether there will be an improvement in conditions for the new appointee?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, one of the recommendations Mrs. Findlay made was that we upgrade the position. I am pleased to announce to the house that we have upgraded the position so that the salary of the new director is beyond the recommendation of Mrs. Findlay.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the minister table the letter from Mrs. Findlay, so the house can judge whether she has been upgraded or downgraded?

OIL

REPORTED REDUCTION IN U.S. IMPORTS FROM CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is urgent and of national importance, and I direct it to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Did the United States make a unilateral decision to cut back the quotas on imports of crude petroleum from Alberta, Canada, to the United States of America, or was this a result of negotiation between Canadian trade groups and the United States.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the national oil policy is a matter of continuing negotiation and arrangements between ourselves and the United States. The present arrangements are discussed fully with our United States counterparts and I think have been very much in the interests of the Canadian oil producers over the years.

Mr. Woolliams: Perhaps the minister did not quite understand my question. We all realize that the national oil policy is subject to negotiation, but did Canada negotiate this export loss in crude petroleum to the United States or was this done on a unilateral basis by the United States?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, I think the Canadian market in the United States has been increasing every year. It has gone up from some 117,000 barrels five years ago to, I think, more than 300,000 barrels per day during the first three quarters of the current year. I believe it is very much in the interest of Canada that this policy has been so effective.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, in view of the report that appeared yesterday about the large cutback in receipts by the United States of Canadian oil, which indicates that the oil policy is not operating in the way it was intended to operate in 1961, will the minister make a statement on motions as early as possible outlining how it is operating?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of the fact that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources did not answer the question I should like to give notice of my intention to debate this at ten o'clock.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

INABILITY TO OBTAIN APPROVAL OF SEAT BELTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In his absence and the absence of his parliamentary assistant perhaps it may be taken as notice. My question deals with automotive safety. Will the minister check with that part of his department which deals with the establishment of automotive safety standards to determine whether complaints have been made to the department by car importers who claim they cannot sell seat belts because—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Mather: —they cannot get them approved by the department?

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF BRIEFS BY TASK FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Will he use his good offices in an attempt to persuade the Minister of Transport to give an adequate and proper hearing to important briefs prepared by highly responsible and knowledgeable organizations such as the Toronto real estate board, which has attempted to present a brief to the task force on housing without apparent success?

FINANCE

COMPENSATION TO VENDING MACHINE OPERATORS FOLLOWING COINAGE CHANGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I should like to direct my question to the acting minister. In view of the increased circulation of the new Canadian coinage, which is not of such a nature as to work in vending machines, will the minister inform the house whether the owners of vending machines will be compensated for the mechanisms they will have to replace?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. My recollection is that this question has been asked before. I must confess that I do not remember whether an answer was given at the time, but perhaps the hon. member might like to promote a discussion of the subject at the time of adjournment.

DRUGS

INQUIRY AS TO ACTION TO CONTROL INCREASED NARCOTICS TRAFFIC

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, in view of continuing reports about dangerous drugs such as LSD, STP and others falling into the hands of teenagers and even children, I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare what steps his department is taking to tighten controls in respect of distribution of these extremely dangerous drugs.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the question the hon. member is asking is of a very general nature. Perhaps the minister would consider making a general statement on motions.

Mr. Monteith: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister do this?

Mr. Munro: I would be pleased to consider that, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

NANAIMO-COWICHAN-THE ISLANDS—INQUIRY AS TO BY-ELECTION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in order to complete the complement of members of the house, has the Prime Minister yet come to a conclusion as to a by-election for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, so that all constituencies in Canada will have representation in this house?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): There is no conclusion yet, Mr. Speaker, but one will be forthcoming.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This year, next year?

CANADIAN YOUTH PARLIAMENT

REQUEST FOR RECONVENING OF AD HOC COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address this question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that in June of 1966, a parliamentary committee adopted the idea of a Canadian youth parliament, and in view of the fact that three former prime ministers and all provincial governments also endorsed the idea, would the Prime Minister consider reconvening the ad hoc committee on the establishment of a youth parliament, to bring this project to reality?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will discuss this matter with the house leader, Mr. Speaker.

DIVORCE

AMENDMENT OF PROVINCIAL RULES OF PROCEDURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Justice. Can the minister say whether the attorneys general of the provinces will be contacted with a view to amending the rules made pursuant to the new Divorce Act so the object of the act can be attained in cases of desertion?

Hon. John. N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I gather the reason prompting the hon. member's question relates to the recent ruling by Mr. Justice Stewart on an order for substituted service. We are not yet sure whether that case will be appealed, so I will not go to the substance of it.

There is latitude under section 19 of the Divorce Act for the superior courts across the country to amend the rules of procedure within that act, and there is also scope for the governor in council to do the same thing. I said on another occasion that if over the next few months the provisions of the Divorce Act prove to be unworkable in certain respects, we will consider making in this house whatever amendments are necessary.

CONTINUATION OF PREMIUMS ON HOG CARCASSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Agriculture. Is it the intention of the minister to discontinue the premiums now paid on high quality hog carcasses when the new regulations in respect of grading are introduced?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is not the intention to discontinue the premiums being paid on hog carcasses, but obviously when the new regulations come into effect on January 1 next some adjustments will have to be made to the programming because the grades in respect of which premiums are now being paid will no longer be in effect.

Mr. Hales: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the minister refers to "some adjustments" does he mean that premiums will not be paid?

Mr. Olson: No, Mr. Speaker, the minister does not mean that.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPLY OF FRENCH GOVERNMENT RESPECTING ACTIVITIES OF REPORTED AGENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that on September 11 the Prime Minister charged that the government of France had acted in an underhanded and surreptitious way in the Rossillon affair, I ask him whether Canada has received a satisfactory explanation or assurances from the government of France regarding the activities of Mr. Rossillon while in Canada.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should confess that I did not think of asking about the Rossillon affair yesterday when I talked with the prime minister of France.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): You said it was important.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Are we to assume from this answer that in the view of the Prime Minister this matter does not today seem to have the importance that it had on September 11?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is argumentative and is not in order at this time.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister.

[Translation]

Could he tell us if the Rossillon affair is as important today as it was a fortnight ago?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, when one deals with a problem and expresses one's point of view, I do not think that it is desirable to drag it with oneself all the time; I think that we must go on and deal with new issues, and that is what we did yesterday with the Prime Minister of France.

HOUSING

REPORTED STATEMENT BY UNITED CHURCH AS TO RESPONSIBILITY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the statement over the week by the United Church of Canada that it "lays the full blame for the housing shortage on the shoulders of the federal government" does the Prime Minister intend to give this important church body the same kind of lecture he meted out to the Roman Catholic bishops—

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think there should not be—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: —for daring to criticize government policy? Can we have an answer? We could not hear it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the fact that the Hellyer commission on housing has refused to hear some 20 briefs which were to be presented because they appeared to be critical of government policy, can the Prime Minister say whether this is to be the pattern followed across the country as this travelling circus moves throughout Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We will go on to another subject. Hon. members cannot ask supplementary questions to questions which were clearly out of order.

INCOME TAX

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE EXEMPTION INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, perhaps my question should be more appropriately addressed to the Minister of Finance, but since he is absent I address it to the Prime Minister. In view of the 10,000 signature petition recently received by the Prime Minister's office from the Ontario association of retired women teachers emphasizing the distressed financial condition of many elderly Canadians, will the government consider raising the income tax exemption at an early date?

Mr. Speaker: With reference to the question now asked and a number of questions asked previously, I should like to remind hon. members that questions are for the purpose of seeking information and not for the purpose of giving information to the house. Many questions start with the words "in view of". I am sure hon. members know it is not according to the form recognized by the house to ask a question based on a statement of fact. I suggest to hon. members that as much as possible direct questions should be posed. Perhaps the hon. member might like to rephrase the question.

Mr. Rose: Is it the government's intention at an early date to consider raising the income tax exemption for Canadians?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at an early date we will be making a statement on the budget; at that time we can take it that the minister will have given consideration to all kinds of problems such as these mentioned by the hon. member.

TRADE

PROHIBITION ON SALE OF CANADIAN TURBOT IN U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Yesterday the hon. member for St. John's East directed a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs relative to the sale of Greenland halibut. At that time the minister stated that a reply would be given today on motions by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. However, that reply was not given, so I should like to put the following question to the minister. In view of the fact—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Crouse: —that the United States food and drug administration will hear an appeal tomorrow against the banning of the sale of Greenland halibut in the United States after November 21, and in view—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I fail to see the humour in my question. May I point out, for the benefit of those hon. members who do not know it, that last year this industry was worth some $4 million to Newfoundland.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member kindly ask his question.

Mr. Crouse: Will or can the minister indicate what support his department is giving the fishing industry in this important matter?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, several members of the department will be attending the hearings in Washington on Wednesday as observers.

Mr. James McGrath (St. John's East): I have a supplementary question. Will the minister state whether the government of Canada will support the fishing industry in this appeal?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister without Portfolio who has some responsibility in this area will be making a statement today.

[Later:]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): I should like to reply to a question asked by the hon. member for St. John's East, to which reference was made earlier. The government was asked for an explanation to be given in connection with the marketing of Greenland halibut. The government has asked that an extension of time be given in this matter. The government took this action because of a lack of consultation with the people concerned before the United States action was taken. The government will not be involved directly in a matter involving an agency of another government. Of course we have no opinion to express on the appropriate name to be chosen.

FORESTRY

NEW BRUNSWICK—REPORTED RECURRENCE OF BUD WORM INFESTATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Hugh John Flemming (Carleton-Charlotte): My question is for the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. Has the minister received representations relative to the serious condition of the forests of New Brunswick and the alarming deterioration in quality which many knowledgeable persons consider has been caused by a recurrence of the bud worm infestation?

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether the hon. member would not think this question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Flemming: May I with great respect, sir, suggest it is a very alarming situation.

WATER RESOURCES

INQUIRY AS TO DEVELOPMENT OF NATIONAL POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In the light of the report of the Science Council of Canada, which was just released, has the minister accelerated his review of our water resources and pollution problems in order to develop a policy?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there are many facets, of course, to water policy in so far as the federal government is concerned. There will be a meeting in Halifax next week at which many areas of this problem will be discussed with provincial ministers. Certainly the report of the science council is one item which will be given consideration in formulating any new policy.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I have a question for the Prime Minister. I was going to preface it by a statement that, in view of the fact that the Vice President of the United States made a statement with regard to the question of bombing, and so on. However, since Mr. Speaker has pointed out that we should not do so I will be more direct and ask the Prime Minister if it is government policy that the United States should cease bombing North Viet Nam.

COMMUNICATIONS

REPORTED POSSIBLE CONTROL OF CANADIAN COMPANY BY FRENCH INTERESTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): I have a question for the Postmaster General in his role as minister designate of communications, and I have pruned it both of news and views. My question relates to telecommunication satellites, to which he made reference in the press the other day, and in particular has reference to French banking interests obtaining an interest in Canadian Marconi. Can the minister advise the house whether he has now investigated these reports, and whether he can acquaint the house with his findings with relation to this very important matter?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I believe the information should be given to the house, if it is going to be given, by way of a statement on motions.

[Mr. Aiken.]

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

RECONSIDERATION OF POLICY RESPECTING RURAL MAIL CONTRACTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I should like to address a question to the Postmaster General or the minister in charge of communications. After sober second thoughts since yesterday, has the minister changed his decision about cancelling rural route deliveries on Saturdays, so the people who live on these routes may continue to receive this very important service?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is submitting an argument in favour of a point of view. That is not a question.

Mr. Hees: The question may be argumentative, but I am just asking if those people who live on rural routes in Canada and who need this service may continue to have it. I know the minister wants to answer.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): I always have sober thoughts. My second thoughts are the same as the first. We will move to a five day week for very good economic reasons.

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): I have a supplementary question for the Postmaster General, Mr. Speaker. If the five day week comes into effect will new contracts be issued to rural mail carriers, or will they just be paid five sixths of the payments under their present contracts?

Mr. Speaker: Order. My understanding is that the new policy will not come into force for some months. Under the circumstances I suggest the question should be put on the order paper.

Mr. McCutcheon: There is a lot of concern amongst these poor people throughout the country, Mr. Speaker. They would like to know what the future holds, and if the Postmaster General could give me an answer it would certainly be appreciated.

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, at the present time the contracts cover payment for six days work and six days use of gas and oil. When we move to the five day week I would think hon. members of the opposition would feel I was very loose with public funds if I were to continue to make payments on the basis of six days pay for five days work, and six days use of gas and oil rather than five. Obviously the contracts are going to be renegotiated.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): My supplementary question is to the Postmaster General. Would he consider the capital cost of a man's investment in a car over a seven day period as compared to a five day period?

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think we are getting into debate. I realize that the matter is very important, but I suggest to hon. members that the importance of a matter is not decreased by putting the question on the order paper. If there is urgency I would think we should have the matter debated at the time of adjournment.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, with respect, in view of the circumstances in which the answers have been given I think the Postmaster General's answer is incomplete. If he were to settle the matter now very briefly it could save us ten minutes at ten o'clock.

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, you will note that I spoke of direct, out of pocket expenses, the cost of gas, oil and so on. Obviously in the renegotiation of contracts one takes account of the fact that depreciation is an annual, non-cash cost. I think what bothers most members of this house, and certainly myself, is the basic fact that a great many contracts are given to people at levels which do not allow them to earn a satisfactory living. I think we are quite aware of this. The same situation obtained during the régime of the Conservative party. I think the difference between the present Prime Minister and the former prime minister is that the present Prime Minister has a Postmaster General who is going to investigate these matters.

Mr. McCleave: If that is the attitude we will debate the matter at ten o'clock.

GRAIN

STATEMENT ON RATIFICATION OF INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I have two questions of which notice was taken and to which I should like to give a reply. The first question, asked by the Leader of the Opposition, had to do with the ratification of the international grains agreement. All but five countries signatory to this agreement have now ratified it or deposited declarations of provisional ratification. The five which have not done so are Greece, India, Lebanon, Spain and the Vatican City state.

RURAL DEVELOPMENT

NORTHWESTERN QUEBEC—ACCESS ROAD TO JAMES BAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development.

With regard to northwestern Quebec, is the department thinking of helping with the construction of an access road to James bay?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, the new department which has not been set up but which has none the less started to study the problem of regional development, is considering the problems facing every part of this country, including Abitibi.

AIR CANADA

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is the right hon. gentleman in a position to tell the house how soon we may expect an appointment to the position of head of Air Canada?

An hon. Member: As soon as they find a Liberal.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): We have a lot of those. I can only tell the house that this is the subject of very active consideration between some ministers and myself.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): What about Judy?

Mr. Trudeau: We do have some candidates, but they do not include the one the hon. member mentions. I will have an announcement for the house soon.

PUBLIC SERVICE

STATEMENT ON PAYMENT OF BILINGUAL BONUS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet I could give an answer to the question put a few days ago by the member for Lotbinière.

I may say that an additional payment of 7 per cent of the salary was established about two years ago for secretaries, stenographers and typists holding a position in a department where bilingualism is required and who make use of their knowledge to a large degree. The Public Service Commission has been endeavouring for some time to set up proficiency standards and means to appraise the competence one should possess, before considering an extension of the bonus principle to other classes of employees. We are expecting a report on that subject. It is easy to understand that the clerical classes are much more complex and varied than the stenographer classes.

Mr. Speaker, as for the part of the question dealing with the staff of the House of Commons, I must point out that those employees come under your authority.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON FEDERAL REVENUES AND EXPENDITURES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of the indication that the expenditures in the current year will exceed the original estimates by some $400 million, and in view of the estimate of a respectable financial house that the revenue of the government might be some $250 million less than the estimates, will the Prime Minister indicate to the house whether the estimates of revenue for the current year will in fact be as projected, or above or below the projection?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Leader of the Opposition will expect me to answer speculations of financial houses, reputable or not, about the budget, which will be discussed very soon in this house.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I was not asking my right hon. friend to answer a question asked by a respectable financial house, but to answer a question asked by myself.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO LOBSTER FISHING LICENCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries which is urgent inasmuch as fishermen must know immediately where they stand in this respect. My question is whether the minister is contemplating any changes in the method of lobster fishing licensing for the coming season and, if so, will the minister announce these changes?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, we do not contemplate any changes as of this moment, but future changes will be announced in due course.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As a conservation measure, has the minister given any thought to amending the lobster fishing regulations so that fishermen would be required to immediately return to the ocean all female lobsters when caught, whether carrying seed or not; and has he received any representations along these lines from the Atlantic provinces fisheries ministers?

Mr. Davis: Some representations have been made, Mr. Speaker, and the matter is under study.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

AUTOMOBILES—REPORTED OVERPRICING OF SAFETY DEVICES, SPARE PARTS, ETC.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister of consumer affairs. In view of the mounting allegations that the auto industry is overpricing its safety devices, repair parts and its products generally, can the minister indicate whether the government intends to commission an investigation or hearing into these complaints?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): As I said previously, Mr. Speaker, I am considering whether there should be a standing committee on consumer affairs appointed by the house. I have also said that the whole question of costs is under review by the government, and particularly by the Prime Minister who will be making a statement on the matter in due course.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister tell the house when he expects to appoint the members of the consumer council, the chairman of which was appointed as early as July 16?

Mr. Basford: Very shortly, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLICATION OF STATUTES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING FORM OF PRINTING

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-2, to amend the Publication of Statutes Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, to begin with I should like to review for the house the history of this bill in the previous session of parliament. It was first introduced in the other place in 1967 during the course of the last parliament. It had been given second reading in the other chamber, considered there by the standing committee on banking and commerce, given third reading and passed, whereupon it reached this house in the spring of this year.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I wonder whether copies of the bill could be distributed to our desks before we proceed with it. I know we have copies upstairs but we do not have them here.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think it is being distributed now, Mr. Speaker; the bill is at the table.

I was saying that last spring, just before parliament dissolved, the bill was introduced into this chamber. It was given first reading but debate on second reading had not been concluded at the time the house was dissolved.

A week or so ago the bill was introduced once more in the other place; it was given second reading and sent to the standing committee on banking and commerce. Certain technical amendments were made to it in the other place and the bill was given third reading. The text that hon. members now have before them incorporates the amendments made to the original bill by the Senate. I might say that those amendments are accepted by the government and the bill is now before this house for second reading.

The purpose of the bill is to give the governor in council authority to publish the statutes in a certain form. At the present time, as members know, under the existing Publication of Statutes Act, the statutes must be published in separate volumes, in English and in French. The purpose of this bill is to enable the government to publish the statutes in another form, having the English and French texts in adjacent columns on the same page, thereby putting both versions of the statutes in the same volume. By courtesy of the house leaders of all parties, Mr. Speaker, bills have until today been submitted to this chamber in that form. Therefore Bill S-2 itself, which we are now discussing, appears in a form similar to that which would be provided for under the regulations by the governor in council should the house adopt this bill.

The Revised Statutes of Canada to be published in the course of the coming year will be printed in the form recommended by the commission on the revision of statutes and it is the intention that the revised statutes be in both languages, printed on the same page in parallel columns, thereby including both languages in the same volume. Since the revised statutes will be in this form the government feels it would be appropriate to publish the annual statutes in the same form.

For the information of all members the Clerk has at his table specimen copies of the revised statutes as they will appear when published, and hon. members who wish to see them could perhaps call at the table, or possibly the pages can distribute copies to those who are interested.

The reason for the introduction of this bill is that while section 133 of the British North America Act provides that the laws of Canada shall be published in both languages it does not provide that they should be published side by side. As a matter of fact, they have been published until now in separate volumes, one in English and the other in French. The intention now is to publish the two versions in the same volume. I believe this will prove to be a convenience in a number of ways. I believe the legal profession itself will derive benefit from the change.

I should like to recall to hon. members of this house learned in the law that the rules adopted by the courts in the interpretation of statutes provide that a statute in one language, if of doubtful interpretation, may be compared with the same statute in the other official language. In 1935, in the case of The King v. Dubois, the Supreme Court of Canada held that the two versions of a statute must be read together and that the meaning in one case might be limited or extended by the corresponding words in the other version. In the province of Quebec the statutes are already printed in parallel columns, first in French and then in English. In 1937 the Quebec Superior Court in the case of Robitaille v. Beaupré upheld the proposition that where one version of a statute is susceptible to a meaning different from the other version, the version most consistent with the intention of the legislation should prevail.

I am suggesting it will be a great convenience to the bench, to members of the bar and to people generally to find both versions of a statute printed on the same page in the same volume, each casting light, meaning and interpretation one upon the other. I think I would be remiss if I failed to mention the feeling of the government and, I hope, of this house, that if we are to talk in terms of the equality of both official languages in Canada we should not limit ourselves to section 133 of the British North America Act. If we are to mean what we say, French speaking Canadians should be made to feel at home not only in Quebec but in other parts of the country, and have equal access to the law in their own language. The act of placing each version in parallel columns grants equality to the languages used. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said before the Senate committee last year when he was Minister of Justice, having two versions separate but equal, that is to say, in separate volumes, is not the same as having them equal and in the same volume. There should be equal access to each version in the same volume.

I was present during the last debate on this subject and listened with great interest to what was said by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner).

Mr. Horner: Do you want to hear it again?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, thank you. But the hon. member did express a point of view which deserves a hearing in this house and I do not contest his right to have made that speech one bit. Having heard that speech, as well as the speech made on that occasion by the former hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, Mr. Churchill, I realize that some concern is felt about the additional cost of the new volumes and the size it is anticipated they may reach. When we reach the committee stage, if the house allows us to proceed, I believe I should be able to demonstrate that the cost will not be appreciably greater than the current cost of producing these volumes, that the price paid by purchasers will not be appreciably more, and that the size of the volumes will not be appreciably increased. In other words, we intend that the volumes should be of a convenient size to carry into a court. We do not contemplate a cumbersome type of binding or printing.

I do not intend to deal with the amendments made in the Senate unless this matter is brought up during the committee stage. I shall simply add a few remarks having to do with the publication of statutes generally and the possibility of accelerating the speed with which these statutes can be published and revised. I think this is related to the larger area of legal reform, of bringing the law up to date with technology and the introduction of a greater degree of computerization in connection with the publication of the statutes in permanent form. I would think that the availability of the statutes in the two languages would enhance this possibility. Since 1960 much has been said and written in this area and today studies on these lines rank as a highly specialized discipline called jurimetrics. I have had something to say about this outside the house but so far I have had no opportunity to mention it here.

I have only a few more things to say, Mr. Speaker, because I am sure the hon. member who is representing the minister of justice in the shadow cabinet, which is rather an illusory concept at best—

Mr. Woolliams: When they have a case won, good counsel do not talk too long.

Mr. Baldwin: Don't talk your client into gaol.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): If that is the understanding, I will sit down.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the minister sat down because I think there was an understanding—indeed, he knew there was an understanding—that we would try to get this bill through today. It is, after all, a procedural matter. I appreciate the minister's wish to explain the bill and the advantages attaching to it, but when he got into the political realm to try to wrap up a few votes I thought he lost his purpose. We on this side agree with what he proposes. Let us get on with the job and approve the bill without delay.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the applause one gets when his speech is brief I shall also be brief.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We think that this proposal is a sensible one and we are happy to support the bill that is now before the house. The only serious objection that anyone has made to me has been to express the fear that if we do this with the statutes we might start doing it with Hansard and other documents, and Hansard would become very thick if it had to contain a days' work in both languages in one volume.

However, I think that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) has dealt with that point by making it clear that section 133 of the British North America Act does make a difference between debates in the House of Commons and acts which parliament passes. It is quite clear that the acts which parliament passes must be printed and published in both languages, and it seems to us it is a matter of common sense that both language versions should appear in the same document.

We have already had a bit of experience with this in that our bills introduced thus far this session have been printed this way. We have had a sort of companionate marriage of the two languages and it has worked. This idea might well be proceeded with, and we are happy to support this bill on second reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton, seconded by Mr. McIlraith, moves that the said bill—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, perhaps there is some disposition in the house to go on with the other stages today.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) moved that the house go into committee to consider Bill No. S-2, to amend the Publication of Statutes Act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Béchard in the chair.

On clause 1—Distribution.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, before clause 2 carries I would like to say one or two words. It seems to me there is nothing wrong with the bill and it is very hard to oppose this type of legislation. I had the opportunity of participating in the move to get rid of one section of the statutes that most members of parliament never saw. There used to be another section attached to the statutes that one could order privately each year if one wished. With the deletion of that section I suppose we now have a little more money for printing statutes, but I wonder whether this is not really looking ahead to something else.

The idea of printing both language versions side by side may be all right but it is something that does not apply to very many people. I am sure that those who wish to conduct their business in the French language probably do so in toto and those who wish to conduct their business in English do so in toto.

Except in the rarified field of appeals there does not seem to be much use for this step. In instances of appeals lawyers may discuss the interpretation of a particular phrase in both languages. They may even go further than that and look into the interpretation given by the legislature when passing the bill, but in the main both versions are not going to be used. It seems to me that this step is a sop, more than anything else, to an expression of opinion widely prevalent in Canada today to this effect: Let us do something that is not really going to do anything, but nobody is really opposed to it.

If this bill really means what is says, providing for universality of both official languages in our statutes, then it seems to me that the courts will have to give some consideration to this matter. When I go over to Hull in the province of Quebec to pay a parking ticket or a fine for going through a light, since the law there is different from what it is in Ontario the court proceedings are conducted entirely in French and I do not know what is going on. I have had this experience personally. I have stood in the prisoners' dock, or whatever it may be, but I have not required the statute covering the offence. In any case it was probably a provincial statute. Therefore the usefulness of this proposal to the individual is going to be limited.

This may apply only to courts but it raises the whole problem of bilingualism. If the statutes in future must be in both languages I will need a knowledge of both languages, and it is time the federal government gave consideration to moving forward with a national education program that would make it possible for the average person to read the statutes in both languages. This is not possible for the average person now; yet we do not seem to be moving in that direction. I know the minister may say that this is not a federal matter at the present time, but if we do not make it a federal matter printing the statutes in both languages will not mean much.

I am sure many people will be able to understand the French and English versions simultaneously, but I am doubtful that many will be able to understand them well enough to arrive at a fine point of interpretation in making an argument. High school education in Ontario will not give a person that understanding of the other language, and so I suggest that we are in a way putting the horse behind the cart rather than in front of it.

If Canada is to become a bilingual nation, and if it is the intention of the government that it become so, then I hope this is only a beginning and that we will set about making it possible for this form of printing the statutes to be of some use to at least 75 per cent of Canadians who have no use for it now.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—Printing of Statutes.

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few comments on this bill and say that I am quite pleased with its amendments.

I do not agree with the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) when he speaks of the cost which could be increased. I have been led to understand in any case that there could be a cost increase for those who wish to obtain the Revised Statutes of Canada. Personally, I must say that I have been practising law and that I am still doing so, and I believe that the members of the bar in Canada are generally pleased with this measure, because instead of having to purchase both editions, they will certainly benefit by having the bills included in a single volume.

There is no doubt that a single edition, even if it is more bulky, will normally cost less than two editions and when lawyers, at least in Quebec, have a bill or a legal problem to study, they will be able to read both versions, English and French, in the same volume. I know personally a number of lawyers throughout Canada who do exactly the same, whether they are English-speaking or French-speaking.

I believe this is an extraordinary initiative, Mr. Chairman, and that is the reason why I wanted to emphasize it.

[Mr. Peters.]

[English]

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words about this bill. I recall all the fire and thunder in the house back in November, and I must say that this debate seems like an afternoon tea party. However, I am sure most members are very happy to have this bill brought before the house at this time.

• (3:40 p.m.)

The argument of the past, especially with regard to French, is that there has been difficulty in respect of the printing of statutes in separate volumes. This bill is a welcome reciprocation to the province of Quebec which has for years published its statutes in English and French side by side. This has given a feeling of equality not only to the English speaking people in the province of Quebec but also to the French speaking people. Other provinces in Canada should follow suit with regard to the step taken by the federal government. The question of bilingualism is a very important one. As time goes on lawyers who become accomplished in both languages will be able to understand the niceties of the differences in the definitions of words.

I was quite impressed with what the minister said this afternoon concerning the rulings of the Supreme Court with regard to the different versions when read together rather than separately. This is a good trend and one which should be developed. The government is to be commended for its initiative in this regard. I can recall the difficulties I had when studying French in high school and during the immersion course here. I look forward to my children being able to speak French with a facility equal to that with which they speak English. This is the feeling which should prevail among the youth of today. If this is to be one nation we must understand one another's language. We must be able to show patience and understanding while this development takes place. If there is a psychological separation and a language separation it follows that there is a political separation. This is the very thing I should not like to see happen.

This is an appropriate bill to be introduced at this time. When one thinks of some of the lesser arguments which have been put forward concerning the doubling of the size of the statutes, the fine print and the doubling of the cost it would appear that these arguments are negligible and nonsensical in relation to the larger problem with which we are faced today. Therefore we in the New Democratic party welcome the introduction of this bill at this time. It will establish the tone and setting for all other bills which will be introduced in this house from today forward.

Mr. Peters: As a further argument in support of the passage of this legislation, I notice that chapter 252 of the Revised Statutes, which was referred to by the minister, is already printed in this form. We would not want not to make an honest woman of the government.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I accept that comment in respect of my virtue and that of the government. This was put in exemplary form so that members would have it before them. It in no way anticipates the decision of this house.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, no one appears to be opposing this bill. I was interested to hear the remarks of my friends to the left, because I believe if we became involved in a debate on the pluses and minuses of this bill the whole thing might begin to get off the rails. However, I have a question in respect of clause 2. I cannot understand why, as was the case in respect of the old statutes, this legislation does not set out the form for these new statutes but rather leaves it to the governor in council and the cabinet. Certainly I believe this form is suitable to all members on this side of the house, but what assurance have we that in five, ten or 15 years hence the form may not be changed? Can the minister explain the reason the form is left up to the cabinet. In the old act it was specified and set out.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is a very good question indeed. As a matter of fact, it provided the substance of a debate in the other place. Members in the other place took the position that the governor in council should have more leeway than was originally contemplated. The reason is that the science and art of printing, electronic data processing and so on are so fluid and so revolutionary that if we were to set out all these specifications for the printing of the statute itself they would probably be outmoded within the next year or two. The form was set out in the original statute and made more flexible in an amendment, but now with the tremendous revolution in respect of data processing and computers we must have considerable flexibility. It will be done by order in council and the regulations will be published. We give our undertaking that the volumes will be published in the form already presented to the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: Mr. Chairman, with regard to clause 2, I am very happy with the changes made by this bill. I must say there is still a delegation of parliamentary authority to the governor in council.

I realize that the rapid evolution of modern technology may necessitate immediate changes, but I am a little sorry to see that parliament is now delegating its authority, when specific provisions were made concerning the way in which this was to be done.

Of course, it is provided that, in future, statutes will be printed in both English and French, on the same page, and bound in one volume. However, in the final analysis, everything is left to the discretion of the governor in council. I rather deplore this situation.

[English]

Mr. Hales: I am at a loss to understand why the minister wishes that the bill set out that the statutes should be printed by the Queen's Printer. We might find that the Queen's Printer was too busy or it might be decided to call for tenders in order to obtain a better price for the printing of these statutes.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We did not contemplate that we would ever have to let out a contract for the printing of the statutes beyond the Queen's Printer. I do not see any reason for this. I believe the Queen's Printer is eminently capable and the most convenient resource for printing the statutes.

Mr. McKinley: When the new Revised Statutes are made up I presume they will be of some considerable thickness. It seems to me that if the volume is a large one with marginal notes on both sides one might have difficulty in reading the marginal notes on the right hand side. Can the minister assure us that the marginal notes on both sides will be readily accessible?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It may be that these volumes will be slightly wider because of the marginal notes. In the example of the Revised Statutes which has been circulated you will notice that we are contemplating having the marginal notes in alphabetical order in each language. You will see that they do not appear in the same order in both languages but that there are cross-references. I can assure the hon.

member that the marginal notes will be easily readable.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Surely the minister does not mean that the marginal notes, on their own, are in alphabetical order but rather that the paragraphs, for example, the interpretation paragraphs of chapter 252, are rearranged so as to be in alphabetical order and the marginal notes therefore follow in that same order. is being cut-back to 100,000 barrels per day.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is right.

• (3:50 p.m.)

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Clause agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Title agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall I report the bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a third time?

An hon. Member: By leave, now.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

AUTHORITY FOR CONSTRUCTION OF ALBERTA BRANCH LINE

Hon. James Richardson (for the Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize and provide for the construction of a line of railway in the province of Alberta by Canadian National Railway Company from the vicinity of Windfall on the Windfall extension to the Sangudo subdivision on the Canadian National Railway in a westerly direction for a distance of approximately 51 miles to the Bigstone property of Pan American Petroleum Corporation and of a connecting spur extending in a northerly direction for a distance of approximately 9 miles to the South Kaybob property of Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited and its associates at a total expenditure of $10,435,000, not to be exceeded by more than 15 per cent.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Chairman, this is a resolution preceding a bill to enable the Canadian National Railway Company to complete approximately 60 miles of new branch line trackage to serve the requirements of two new sulphur recovery plants, one of which has been completed and the other of which is being built. They are both in the Alberta gas fields west of Windfall.

This trackage will consist of a branch line about 51 miles in length extending westerly from a point on the existing Canadian National line near Windfall to the Bigstone property of Pan American Petroleum Corporation, and also a spur about 9 miles long extending northerly from that line to the South Kaybob property of a syndicate headed by the Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited. These properties represent important new industrial developments and new sources of sulphur and liquid petroleum gas and can be looked to for a substantial contribution to the economic activity of the region where they are located as well as to Canada's export trade.

The plant a Bigstone is already in production and the one at South Kaybob is well advanced with completion scheduled for November, 1968. The need for the service which the new rail facilities will provide is therefore pressing.

The estimated cost of the railway trackage including a crossing of the Athabasca river is $10,435,000, averaging approximately $174,000 per mile. In accordance with the usual practice the resolution authorizes the expenditure of that sum and allows for an additional 15 per cent if required to cover contingencies. The usual borrowing powers are also included.

The management of the C.N.R. has informed me that by means of traffic guarantee contracts made with the two companies whose names I have mentioned, the C.N.R. is assured that the products of these plants will be shipped over the new lines and over other lines of the C.N.R. in such volumes that the revenue therefrom will support all the costs of the lines and the movement of the traffic including amortization of the contemplated new capital investment and will also make a satisfactory contribution to the overhead of these railways, or that failing the shipment of such quantities of traffic compensatory payments will be made to the C.N.R. instead.

The new trackage will also stimulate industrial activity and the development of other resources in the area, including similar mineral prospects and the extensive timber resources in the Whitecourt forest district through which the new lines will pass. Indeed, I can now state that a second sulphur plant at South Kaybob is already under construction and planned for completion late next year. There is also a strong likelihood that another such plant will shortly be developed along the route traversed by the new trackage.

Needless to say, any such activity so stimulated will not only benefit the business community generally but will also improve the contribution made to Canadian National's net return from these lines. I am, accordingly, satisfied that the economics and other justifications for the project contemplated by this resolution are sound, and I recommend this measure to the house.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, this party joins in the hope that this measure will be rapidly approved. We think it will indeed add considerably to the economic potential and the further development of the north. I should like to point out to the minister, however, that he is getting dangerously close to the areas where igloos exist. Those of us who were in this house some years ago will remember that we contemplated at the time we formed the government the construction of railways and other forms of development in the north. We were met by the rather curt suggestion that we were building railways and developments from igloo to igloo.

This railway will be approximately 75 miles, as I understand it, from where the Pine Point railway starts. I am glad to note the measure of education that this government and hon. members on that side have been exposed to. I hope they will continue to be exposed to the educational opportunities available as a result of listening to members on this side. I should like to think this is the beginning of a regeneration. Some years ago when we attempted to get approval in this house for the construction of the Pine Point Railway we were met by obstruction and obstinacy from the then opposition.

I remember that for several years I carried newspaper clipping which indicated that the then leader of the opposition, now a former prime minister, Right Hon. L. B. Pearson, felt that the only man who believes the Pine Point railway was going to be built was the hon. member for Peace River. The hon. members who comprised the government at that time believed the north had great value to Canada. We were determined and insistent, and we achieved this construction which has added so greatly to the development of the area and the economic possibilities for Canada. I hope now that this is an indication that the government will listen to the suggestions and advice which so often come from this side of the house.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, as far as I know we support this resolution.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Peters: I have not consulted anyone else. We are very pleased that the government has taken this direct method of providing a railroad in an area where development is at the moment taking place. We have opposed the development of certain railways in other parts of Canada, particularly where they have been under private ownership and the building of the railway restricted developments other than those of the private enterprise.

The minister stated his hope that the Canadian National branch to be built in this area will haul not only the products for which the railway has negotiated with the entrepreneurs in the specific field but the products of other enterprises. I understood him to say that other enterprises in exactly the same field would be able to open up and develop by reason of the assistance provided by this railway.

Our objection in the past to privately owned railways—I am thinking particularly of the one that concerned Hollinger and another large mining company—was that they refused to haul a competitor's product. In this way, although they were a common carrier they dominated the area a few years ago and have therefore restricted for many years its growth and development.

I therefore wholeheartedly support the development by Canadian National in this field, because no one can doubt their ability as a common carrier. I agree with the minister that in providing the carrier for this resource they will be opening up a new area that may produce many other commodities and types of development because the railway is there. I believe, therefore, that the government has adopted a proper approach in authorizing through this resolution the building by Canadian National of this large extension of line. There will be considerable difficulty in crossing the Athabasca river, but the line will open up the whole of the vast area alongside and at the head of the railway.

Therefore, for a change, I wish Canadian National well in this venture. Coming from a northern area, I know that communications of a broad nature can be the greatest asset to a newly developing area and that progress will flow from the presence of a carrier willing to co-operate in the development of the area. In years to come I shall certainly insist that Canadian National does so.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I am very happy to support this resolution. We need this kind of transportation in order to get our crude petroleum and by-products to the markets. This brings me to something that happened in the question period today which is pertinent to the matter under discussion. When I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources about the markets to which these products will be carried, he gave the most slippery answer that has been given in the house for some time. That answer was that the Conservative party supported and created the national oil policy.

Since the national oil policy came into being in 1961 there have been more exports of Canadian crude petroleum than ever before. We were able to fill the vacuum left after the Suez crisis. The former minister of trade and commerce asked a supplementary question. In fact, it was he who created the national oil policy which enabled us to reach the target, in domestic consumption and export markets, of about 800,000 barrels of crude petroleum a day. Alberta and western Canada were able to move this much crude petroleum. At the time the Conservatives were defeated we had reached that target.

I now wish to pay a compliment to the Liberals. For a number of years that target was maintained under the Liberal administration, but people who are familiar with the petroleum industry have told me—I cannot divulge their names because it would involve a breach of confidence—that there has been a cut-back of 25 per cent in our exports to the United States. When I put the question to the minister, he denied this fact.

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Woolliams: I am dealing with markets and what I am saying is relevant to the issue under discussion. Don't try to cloud the issue. The fact is that this is the situation. The answer given by the minister was a slippery one in order to hide the fact that he has lost petroleum markets. I have been interrupted by the Minister without Portfolio who comes from Saskatchewan. I say to him—and this is on all fours with the subject we are discussing—that we have lost a great part of our grain markets. Richardson and Sons of Winnipeg have said this is the saddest thing that has happened in years. That should hit the Minister without Portfolio right between the ribs.

Therefore we are wholeheartedly behind this resolution. It is a wonderful thing to get petroleum and its by-products from the wellhead to the market. But the government cannot be allowed to continually lose markets. Also, they cannot be allowed to give this kind of slippery answer to the house when the country knows what is happening.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, just one word to say that we support the bill unreservedly and we are happy that a railway line about 60 miles long will be constructed in order to promote the transportation of oil. We are all aware that change seems to be the salient feature of our modern society and, therefore, we must continually adjust ourselves to the needs of our economy.

Mr. Chairman, oil is becoming increasingly important. It has become a means, an essential tool for our modern society and we must unite and do all we can to allow the Canadian people to profit by these changes. To react to changes by denying them, and by burying one's head in the sand would be stupid.

That is why we must support the bill and we like to congratulate the minister, for introducing it.

[English]

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, in rising to support this resolution I should like to compliment the minister for his interest in the expansion of Canadian National Railways in order to service this area. I am very interested in the kind of development this will bring to the Canadian north. I think the government is to be complimented for taking this kind of interest in northern development.

I know that the federal government has taken an extreme interest in this facet of our development but I cannot help feeling a little jealous and perhaps a little critical of the preference afforded this area. The riding of Fraser Valley West from which I come is also in the throes of railway development. I speak of the railway development by the British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority which will in effect build a new line to carry unit cars of coal to the new, federally financed port of Robert's Bank in southwestern British Columbia.

This new railway line will connect two federal facilities, the federally financed port of Robert's Bank and the C.P.R., which I believe comes under the jurisdiction of the Railway Act. The hon. member for Surrey, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway and myself have been attempting for some time to get the Department of Transport and the Minister of Transport to take some responsibility in this matter. As you know, the government has now—

• (4:10 p.m.)

The Chairman: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member in view of the certain degree of latitude granted the hon. member for Calgary North, but he must try and restrict his remarks to the subject matter of the resolution.

Mr. Rose: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I realize we are speaking about a new railroad, but in supporting the resolution before us I should like, with respect, to request that the Department of Transport consider the points I have put forward concerning my own riding.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct a question to the minister. Is it the intention of the government to refer this matter to the standing committee on transportation as has been the rule in the past?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that that was thought to be desirable in this case. This legislation follows the pattern of all similar legislation for C.N.R. branch lines.

Mr. Horner: That is the very point I was speaking to. In the past it has been the practice for legislation concerning the extension or the building of a branch line to be referred to a standing committee so it could consider in fuller detail the financing and contract arrangements with regard to the tonnage to be hauled. In view of the remarks made by the government house leader concerning the greater use of standing committees I doubt that the government would wish to break an established pattern with regard to railway legislation and not refer this matter to the committee.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): May I speak to this point, Mr. Chairman? If the hon. member or anyone in the official opposition wished this matter to be referred to the standing committee, certainly we would be prepared to do so. However, there is one point I might mention which I think the hon. member for Peace River might recognize, namely, that there is an element of urgency in the bill from the standpoint of getting the operations under way before snowfall. Nevertheless, I concede the justice of the remarks of the hon. member for Crowfoot in that it has been customary to refer such matters to the committee. When we reach the second reading stage of the bill we can certainly make the reference if it is specifically requested. Perhaps I can put it the other way round and say that unless there is a disposition to put the legislation through the house at an early stage we would make that reference.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, may I speak on that matter? When we get to second reading the house might be disposed to show a little longitude as well as latitude and we may be able at that time to ask some questions which may determine our position with regard to sending this bill to the committee. Perhaps members on this side may be satisfied after putting some questions on second reading. It may be that we may then decide there is no necessity to send the bill to the standing committee.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That would be quite agreeable, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a brief point with regard to the resolution before us. First, I wish to congratulate the minister on his introduction of this measure. I presume it is the first one he has introduced in the house and therefore I congratulate him in that regard.

My point is one which I mentioned in the house two years ago regarding railway crossing safety signal devices. I realize from the description of this railway in the resolution that it is probably located in an area remote from that part of Canada which I represent in this house and perhaps there will be no motor roads crossing the railway. Even so, however, I think the validity of my point will be recognized by the government, namely, that it should be the responsibility of all railways, in this case the C.N.R., that all railway crossing safety signal devices be included in the capital cost of such projects. I point out to the minister and the government that municipalities should not be held responsible for any part of the cost of the installation of new railway crossing signal devices.

Canadian National Railways

In the past we have been too prone in this country to grant charters to railways without ensuring that the responsibility for the installation of railway crossing signals lies with the railway. That is why we have so few railway crossing signals in Canada today in proportion to the number of dangerous unprotected level or grade crossings.

May I therefore bring this point to the attention of the house for the second time in about two years. The last time I brought it before the house we were considering a railway in Labrador. This time I want to emphasize again that it should be the responsibility of the railways—and from now on this should be so in all new railway construction—to ensure that safety devices are built in and that their cost be provided for at the time of construction so that municipalities will not be required to ask the railway commissioners that this be done.

I have had experience in this regard in the municipality of Napanee which several years ago had to apply to the railway commissioners for railway crossing signal devices to be installed at a crossing in the town. I believe that at that time it cost the town over $3,000 for its share. No municipality in Canada should have to bear such expenses. They should always be borne by the railway. Last year I was a member of the northern affairs committee which visited the Northwest Territories and I noticed at least one crossing in Hay River which did not have safety signal devices installed.

I hope the government will give heed to the point I have made today and will ensure that this safety recommendation is implemented.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Richardson (for Mr. Hellyer) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-109, respecting the construction of a line of railway in the province of Alberta by Canadian National Railway Company from the vicinity of Windfall on the Windfall extension to the Sangudo subdivision of the Canadian National Railway in a westerly direction for a distance of approximately 51 miles to the Bigstone property of Pan American Petroleum Corporation and of a connecting spur extending in a northerly direction for a distance of approximately nine miles to the South Kaybob property of Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited and its associates.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

[Mr. Alkenbrack.]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, in view of the remarks which have just been made and notwithstanding the provisions of the standing orders I wonder whether the house would be agreeable to going on with second reading of this bill at this time rather than putting it off until another day.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to this proposal?

Mr. Horner: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There seems to be a lack of unanimity on the proposal. When shall the said bill be read a second time, at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ELIGIBLE CLASSES, AMOUNT OF CAPITAL, INTEREST RATES, ETC.

The house resumed, from Monday, September 30, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Olson—Mr. Faulkner in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Farm Credit Act to broaden the classes of persons eligible for loans under the act; to increase the amount of the capital of the Farm Credit Corporation; to substitute for the present rates of interest on loans made under the act (except any such loans made pursuant to applications received by the corporation before September 13, 1968) such rate or rates of interest on any loans made after the coming into force of the said measure as may be prescribed by the governor in council; to provide further for certain changes in connection with the administration of the act and for other matters related or incidental thereto.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, when this resolution was last under discussion I was pointing out that there were really three forms of credit involved, only two of which are covered by the resolutions before us. The Farm Credit Corporation, of course, covers long term lending under a supervisory staff. The farmer puts a mortgage on his land and holdings as a guarantee for the loan.

The second type of credit available to the farmer is through the Farm Improvement Loans Act. This type of credit has been used principally, according to the reports made under that act, for the construction of buildings, the purchase of machinery and other basic improvements to the farm. This type of loan is generally secured, at least to some extent, by a chattel mortgage and is guaranteed by the government.

The third type of credit a farmer must use is similar to a business loan. This money is used to cover his operations, to purchase fertilizer, seed grain, gasoline for his tractor and other operating expenses, perhaps including food and the maintenance of his household. Such loans are granted on the basis of the credit rating the farmer has established with his entrepreneurs.

It is in this latter area, of course, that many farmers find the greatest difficulty and in which our legislation has not really been that all-embracing. However, it is in the first type of financing that I am most interested, that under the Farm Credit Corporation. This credit is the mainstay of the agricultural industry in Canada and it is in this area that the farmers' ability to make regular payments will be influenced by weather, crop conditions and so on.

In this field, Mr. Chairman, we learned a great deal from one particular man. I refer to the chairman under the Veterans Land Act, Mr. Rutherford, who passed away several years ago. Almost singlehanded, Mr. Rutherford looked at agricultural problems as they affected the war veterans who wished to go into agriculture. He was able to build the Veterans Land Act into an agency that covered the three types of financial requirements of the veterans going into agriculture. Most of these veterans were willing to accept supervision from the officials of that department who were highly qualified and always very sympathetic. Over the many years the Veterans Land Act was in operation, because of the co-operation of the department the losses amounted to less than 1 per cent. I feel that everyone would say, therefore, that it was a highly successful operation in the agricultural field and one which the Farm Credit Corporation tried to copy but without too much success.

First, in my opinion, the corporation failed to provide the type of supervisory staff necessary in this long term lending field. I know the chairman of the Farm Credit Corporation, and I know him to be a sincere, energetic civil servant working on behalf of the farmers of this country. However, the corporation has failed to convince the government that one of the ways a farmer has to be subsidized is in the obtaining of long range credit. The annual report of the Farm Credit Corporation for the year ended March 31, 1968 indicated that it had made loans to the tune of $263,-236,500 and had lost $40,239. The total loss of the Farm Credit Corporation, including the operating loss, amounted to something like $3 million. I believe the minister will agree, because he has been on this side of the house and has certainly thought about the problem, that a $3 million loss covering the operating expenses is a very small price to pay for the support and expansion of agriculture in Canada. We are certainly subsidizing many other organizations that would not produce anywhere near the funds the Farm Credit Corporation has produced.

It is true that loans have been difficult to obtain. The report indicates that this year we are paying something over 6 per cent for money. I think the minister will agree, as a previous speaker pointed out, that the cost of borrowing money has fluctuated over the last 25 or 30 years from 3 per cent to 6 per cent. I am sure that if the minister reviews the 25-year period he will find great fluctuations in the prices farmers have received for their products. In general, however, those prices have not increased to an extent that would permit the farmer to pay double the interest rate he was paying. It seems to me, therefore, that either the farmer has to receive subsidies or the consumer will have to pay more for agricultural products. You can solve the problem one way or the other.

I am of the opinion that people in Canada are getting off very cheaply in so far as agricultural products are concerned. Let us use, as an example, the figures cited by the hon. member of the Ralliement Créditiste party who spoke yesterday. He mentioned that potatoes were selling at $1.50 per hundred pounds or 1½ cents per pound. Anyone who knows anything about the production of potatoes will be aware that this price is well below the normal cost of production. A farmer would have to be in love with producing potatoes to produce them at that price. However, the consumer gets the benefit of low cost agricultural products in this field as well as others, including wheat products, dairy products and so on.

I am of the opinion that any increase in the mortgage rate is intolerable, and I would vote against any increase in the interest charged on Farm Credit Corporation loans. I would do so for a very simple reason. I would rather people did not enter the agricultural field today than see them spend the next ten years breaking their necks to repay a loan, probably ending up in the slum of some city because the corporation had taken over the farm. This sort of thing will happen as sure as I stand here. The farmer has no control over the marketing of his commodity or over the financing of his loan.

If governments in the past had not believed in subsidizing the farmers by fixing the interest rate over a 20 or 25-year period, then we would have left the matter to banks and other lending institutions in the mortgage field. If a farmer goes to his local credit union, caisse populaire or trust company and borrows money to buy gas for his truck or for his year's crop at 10 or 12 per cent and then goes bankrupt, the lending company, having charged him a high enough rate of interest in the first place, can afford to take its share of the loss. But when mortgages are granted to farmers I think the government has the responsibility of maintaining a reasonable rate of interest, and I consider 5 per cent to be reasonable.

I do not like wheat pools, Mr. Chairman, because although they are co-operatives they have tended to become so large that the membership has no say in their day to day operation, and in my opinion has not had too much say in some of the decisions that have been taken. However, in the publication, the Western Producer, the following appeared on the subject of farm credit:

> Low returns to agriculture production often make interest rates higher than 5 per cent an excessive burden which hinders progress in agriculture in both the farmers' interests and the public's interest. It is therefore essential that through the Farm Credit Corporation or through an expanded and restructed federal agricultural credit service, a supervised "package" credit service be developed that can meet the short, intermediate and long term credit needs of farmers on a planned basis and at a moderate (i.e. 5 per cent) rate of interest. Such a service should very soon be made available.

I agree entirely with that comment. I believe that if the governor in council is allowed to set the rate of interest it will reach a similar level to that charged by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. It will probably be 1 percentage point higher than the current government rate at the time, and the rate for farmers will be in the range of 7 to 7½ per cent on a long term mortgage. I ask, Mr. Chairman, what happens in the case of a calamity occurring, such as a crop failure? How long can you compound 6, 7 or 8 per cent interest? Any farmer will be able to provide the answer.

Therefore, it falls upon the minister to decide whether or not he should maintain the rate of interest on such loans at 5 per cent, this figure having been fairly representative of interest requirements in the market for the last 30 years. If he does so, then the rate will have to be subsidized, but a $3 million subsidy on the part of the government on borrowings of $263 million does not seem to me unreasonable. Are we to charge an interest rate that will bankrupt the farmer, or oppose a bill that will give the farmer an inadequate money supply for expansion in the agricultural community? Personally, I would rather small farmers were not able to borrow money than see them charged a rate of interest at which they cannot repay their loans.

We have all seen those advertisements on television—I have taken part in some myself—where a man goes down to his local credit union, or whatever it is, and borrows money wisely, and all that sort of thing. However, I also know that this money has to be paid back. A worker who loses his job or gets sick for two or three weeks finds Household Finance sitting on his doorstep. I remember once working in an industry that went on strike, and I not only found the finance company on my doorstep but during the course of travelling around the country I found their agents in the lobby of every hotel at which I stayed. Certainly I would not want this sort of thing to happen to our farmers.

So far as the Farm Improvement Loans Act is concerned, I think that here the government is paying off an election debt. The government received a great deal of assistance during the last election campaign from finance and insurance companies. In my area some insurance companies had two or three people working in the election campaign, presumably because of some of the things I have said over a period of time about certain insurance companies. However, I am sure this sort of thing was general; I have heard it took place in a number of ridings.

If this legislation passes, certain finance, trust and insurance companies are going to set up an advisory body which will tell the farmers how to handle the money they lend them and help them in general. These companies do not need to help the farmers. The government is going to guarantee these loans. These loans will not be subject to an interest rate of 5 per cent; this has already been decided. Once the ceiling on interest rates has been lifted, these companies will be hungry for the market. And why not? This is a market in which the loans are guaranteed by the government, and so these companies cannot possibly lose.

I am aware of the fact that during the last 11 years many farmers have had difficulty borrowing money from banks and obtaining credit. I am sure the minister also is well aware of this. Both of us have been here long enough to have participated many times in debates on the problems of the old legislation which set up the Canadian farm loans board. There was a total lack of respect in the agricultural community for that agency.

The minister and I also participated in the setting up of the Farm Credit Corporation, and I think that he will be the first to agree that this legislation, so far as the opposition was concerned, was patterned on the Veterans Land Act. We wrote into the legislation the supervised credit provisions contained in that act. As Canadians, I think we were proud of what we did under the Veterans Land Act, and to my mind one of our greatest accomplishments was the stabilization of the interest rate veterans had to pay over the years.

Similar provisions were put into the farming legislation because there was no one on either side of the house who did not agree that the agricultural community was experiencing difficulties in most of its operations. Farmers could not be saddled with a high interest rate when their returns produced an annual net income of something less than $3,000. Therefore, I hope that the minister will at least consider the provision of long term mortgages, as is the case under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, and subsidize those loans so as to maintain the interest rate at 5 per cent. This is a field where we have to rely on private enterprise to put up the money, though, of course, we are furnishing guarantees.

I trust the minister will give serious consideration to retaining the present interest rate. Apart from anything else, this would serve as a yardstick by which the minister could measure the extent of treasury commitments by way of guarantee. I am sure the minister will bear this in mind, because he is as interested in the welfare of the agricultural community as I am, and no one believes he wants to return to the old days when people could lose their homes and property as a result of inability to pay excessive interest rates. I believe that the government, through subsidization, should over the long term bring about equality in interest rates levied on the mortgage type loans which are the backbone of financing in the agricultural community today.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, in rising to speak on these three resolutions my opening remarks must be directed to the question of urgency to which the minister has referred. I wish to make it clear to you, Mr. Chairman, and to the country at large that it is parliament's duty to examine legislative proposals and the government's duty to regulate the order of business.

We were told that the measure which came up for discussion earlier today was urgently needed and that action should be taken in a hurry. We have been told that the farm improvement legislation has expired and that all the money available has been lent. It was the duty of the government to have called parliament one month earlier than it did so that all these matters could have been dealt with. If hon. gentlemen opposite continue to follow their present course they will wait until everything becomes urgent. Then we, as law-abiding members of the opposition, would be asked to forgo any opportunity to speak or to call attention to defects in the legislation, in favour of passing everything in a hurry. I wish to make it vividly clear why the government did not get unanimous consent to proceed to second reading of the previous bill.

The purpose of the farm improvement legislation a few years ago was to guarantee loans made by the banks so they could lend money to farmers. This act died on June 3, 1968 and it is now being reinstated to 1971. Three changes are proposed by the minister—a new interest rate, loans on land and an increase in the total amount of the permitted loans.

It is interesting to note that the minister's first piece of work for the Liberal government in parliament is to introduce three bills each of which contains provisions for increased interest rates. Consider this in the light of the minister's background. For years and years he campaigned in Alberta in favour of lower interest rates, particularly for the agricultural industry. Yet the first stroke of business he does after crossing the fence is to present parliament with three bills each of which increases interest rates. I wonder what his friends back home will think of this stroke of business. I am certain that the farmers do not consider higher interest rates a necessity today though it may well be that the government does. Remember, it was a Liberal government which two years ago took the ceiling off interest rates, and we all saw what happened last year. They shot skyward. Fortunately, they are now receding somewhat, but this government is still not happy. They want carte blanche to allow them to increase interest rates at any time in connection with this piece of farm legislation.

In this context it is interesting to recall what the minister himself said about farm income, upon which rests the ability to repay these loans. It is all very well for the hon. gentleman to say that this bill will increase the amount available to farmers from $15,000 to $25,000. It is not the government which will lend this money. The banks will be asked to lend it and the banks will not lend it unless the borrowers can repay these amounts. That is the sole criterion.

In an article on agricultural policy which appeared in the Leader-Post on July 27, 1968, the minister is quoted as saying:

> The mechanics of the solutions may be different, but getting costs and receipts far enough apart so there is a reasonable income left is what is needed.

I ask the minister my first question. Are these proposals likely to get costs and receipts far enough apart so there is a reasonable income left? The answer is obvious. They are not. How can they when the hon. gentleman has increased one of the farmer's basic costs?

We on this side of the house recall some of the remarks made by the minister in the course of a previous debate on this subject in April, 1966, as reported in Hansard at page 4325. This is what he told us with regard to increasing the money available to farmers:

> Finally, I want to say that there has been an alarming increase in the price of farm machinery. We had a manifestation of the concern in this regard yesterday in the house. I am wondering whether there has not been an increase in the price of farm machinery because the maximum amount available to an individual farmer was raised from $7,500 to $15,000 only a short time ago.

While I do not accept his premise, I ask the minister a second question: Is it logical, then, to expect that if the permitted amount of loan is increased from $15,000 to $25,000 the price of farm machinery will go up? When we sat on the agricultural committee and studied this question the machine manufacturers bare facedly admitted that they charged what the market would bear. It was as clear as that. Now the minister proposes giving the farmers more money. Is it logical to suppose that the machine companies, for a time at any rate, will try to capitalize on the situation, at least until they realize that in a few years the farmers will be broke?

Mr. Olson: Has the hon. member read the statement that I made last night?

Mr. Horner: I read the whole speech and I found it most unenlightening. It contained a number of hidden suggestions and I propose to deal with them quickly. The minister talked about bigger guaranteed loans to farmers and said the size of the average loan to farmers had increased. I am concerned about the ability of the industry to pay back these loans.

What do we see happening? One of the three agencies of the wheat board, James Richardson and Sons, states that it has never seen the wheat marketing position look so poor as it does today. What does the government say? I saw the minister of industry on television the other day and he said: "Well, we cannot say; we have big hopes; we shall make a statement in a day or two." Mr. Chairman, all of western Canada is in a state of uncertainty.

We have had a difficult fall. I believe the farmers will get their crops off the land, but they want to know whether the government is making a firm attempt to market their wheat. Here is an article I clipped from the Manitoba Co-Operator. The heading reads, "Canadian Action Hurts Wheat Sales." Is that a very encouraging heading? The article dealt with the Canberra meeting and said in part that of the five major exporting nations that met at Canberra the United States was the only one complaining. It complained about Australia's pricing policies and about France's pricing policies. Canada, the article said, was not complaining. Canada was in a conciliatory mood and was prepared to work things out.

Does this give encouragement to our farmers and help them to put up with the troubles that nature has provided them with this fall? It does not. It signifies to the farmers that the government does not care. The United States is fighting the battles of the Canadian wheat farmer. The United States set a target for its wheat exports of 750 million bushels last year, and this year it has announced the same target figure. What target have we had from our government?

As I said, the minister went on television and shrugged his shoulders. This shrugging of shoulders is becoming a very popular habit on television today. The minister said, "We cannot really say, but we have got a couple of good announcements to come." If there were good announcements to come a grain marketing firm like James Richardson would not have said that it never saw the market prospects look gloomier.

The minister's basic responsibility is to assure that the agricultural industry will be able to pay back the loans that he is advocating through this and the other two resolutions. What about farm machinery sales during the past year? It is a well known fact that bankers will lend only that amount of money that a person is able to pay back. A person can increase his farm machinery requirements from $25,000 to $45,000 but the banks will not advance him the difference.

While I am dealing with the subject of bankers lending money I would point out that many hon. members have stood in this house and said that the agricultural industry is a good credit industry, and that only one-tenth of one per cent of the amount of loans made by the Farm Credit Corporation were not repaid. However, banks do not have a good reputation with regard to taking risks. This farm improvement loans legislation guarantees up to 10 per cent of an individual bank's losses. Why have the banks not taken a greater risk? Why have they not been prepared to take a greater risk? I suppose the reason is that they would say: We are not too confident of the agricultural industry in Canada.

We have not seen the government nail down an agricultural policy. When the former minister of agriculture was asked a question about agricultural policy he replied "I have set up an advisory policy group in that regard and they are going to bring down a policy pretty soon." The present minister said the same thing last night—"Wait until I hear from my policy advisers." They are four university professors. If they ever got into a barnyard they would not know their way out of it. What kind of policy will they produce?

Machinery manufacturers charge all the market will bear. I point out that machine sales this year are down drastically—34 per cent in the province of Saskatchewan, 22 per cent in Manitoba, and 26.6 per cent in the province of Alberta. According to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, these three provinces purchase over 60 per cent of all the farm machinery bought in Canada. This gives some idea of the present state of confidence in the agricultural industry. Farm machinery sales would not be down if farmers and bankers had confidence in the industry. Yet the government is reluctant to make a forecast of market prospects for wheat this year.

It is a well known fact, based on Dominion Bureau of Statistics figures, that farm net income corresponds directly to the amount of wheat sales. I would like to quote from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics annual report on farm net income, in the hope of showing the great need for the minister to come out and state emphatically what his policies and objectives are. The report states:

> Total farm net income ... which takes into account changes in farm inventories of field crops and livestock, amounted to $1,529.1 million in 1967, 21.2 per cent below the 1966 record—

This gives some idea of the problem confronting the industry today. What are the prospects with regard to 1968 farm net income? I was going to say that wheat sales are down something like 50 per cent but the figure is not quite that. They are down a good 33 per cent. Total wheat sales, including flour, for the crop year ended 1968 were down $330 million. Yet we hear the Minister of Agriculture say, "You cannot have a subsidized interest rate because it gets things out of whack in the economy and the economists advise against it."

But the government has no trouble guaranteeing the automobile manufacturers a subsidy of $50 million a year. It has no trouble guaranteeing subsidies to other sectors of the economy. However, when the agricultural industry asks that its interest rate not be increased the minister suggests that he cannot do anything about it. He was the one who cried for years in the province of Alberta that interest rates were too high. We now find him advocating that they should be higher.

I should now like to direct my remarks to the Farm Credit Corporation. The Farm Credit Corporation was devised out of the old farm loan board. It was specifically designed to help farmers who could not definitely be stated to have efficient units. But in the past few years we have seen a drift in the direction of the Farm Credit Corporation helping farmers who are on what might be called efficient and economic units.

It is high time that the whole question of the Farm Credit Corporation and its policies be referred to the standing committee on agriculture. As I read the minister's remarks last night he talked about the advisability of making Farm Credit Corporation loans available to Indians and other people. The resolution is very specific in that regard. It speaks of:

> —a measure to amend the Farm Credit Act to broaden the classes of persons eligible for loans under the act;

That is a broad statement. I believe that the whole question of the Farm Credit Corporation's policies should be referred to the standing committee on agriculture which could deal with all aspects.

Farm Credit Act

As recorded on page 4324 of Hansard for April 26, 1966, the Minister of Agriculture said:

> If we refer to the records of the Farm Credit Corporation we find that the regulations applicable to young people have perhaps been a little too rigid.

Last night he said that he agreed that regulations have to be made under which a father and son can carry on a business in co-operation with one another. Has this not been the policy? If it has been, why is it not working? Certainly it was our understanding of the Farm Credit Corporation legislation that farms could be passed from father to son without too much difficulty.

I think everyone on this side of the chamber, including members to my left and right if they come from agricultural areas, is well aware of the fact that the Farm Credit Corporation has done a tremendous job. But I know that the minister, if he were not occupying a seat in the cabinet, would be the first to agree with me that during the last few years there has been a tendency for the Farm Credit Corporation to slip away from its original purposes and intent.

I am quite prepared to let the farm improvement loans legislation go through as rapidly as possible, but I say without any hesitation that the Farm Credit Corporation legislation and the policies of the corporation should be referred to the standing committee on agriculture. Not since its inception in 1959 has the Farm Credit Corporation been examined by the agricultural committee in any real sense.

I remember well when the farm machinery syndicate bill was before parliament. At that time the minister said that this matter could be taken back to the agricultural committee every year if we did not like it. He said that it could be referred to the committee and reviewed by the members of the committee every year. Since it was passed I have noticed that the regulations have been changed and that loans are now being made on buildings. Under the original bill each farmer had to sign a guarantee covering the total amount of his loan. In the proposed resolution we see that the corporations, co-operatives and so on will all be eligible and that individual members will not be broken down. I take it that if a corporation is formed in such a manner that each farmer is responsible only for his share of the net borrowings of the corporation the corporation still will qualify for a farm syndicate loan.

Under the old bill, if seven farmers could join together to borrow $100,000 I did not see any sense in each one of those seven farmers having to guarantee the $100,000. This is the way the original bill was drawn up. I believe that each farmer should guarantee only that portion for which he is responsible and not the total amount. I certainly would like to think that this could be dealt with having in mind the reason the farm syndicate legislation has not been the success the minister concerned thought it would be. I believe the number of loans has been approximately 444. The minister can correct me if I am wrong. Therefore it has not been the success the minister thought it would be. Why has it not been a success? It has done a good job with regard to the lending of money to families but it really has not broadened its scope. Loans to farmers for building purposes would aid the farmers generally.

We on this side of the house believe the interest rate on Farm Credit Corporation loans should not be allowed to increase. There is nothing wrong with the subsidization of loans for a period in respect of the agricultural industry when that industry is in difficulty as it certainly is today. When I first became a member of parliament many years ago the Farm Loan Board was making a profit and paying income tax on that profit. If the minister doubts my words he can look at the records for the year 1956-57. This is an indication that interest rates can fluctuate over the years. The corporation can make loans for a period of up to 30 years. In that period, 5 per cent might balance out to be exactly the right rate or perhaps even too much. Certainly it is not necessary to have a fluctuating rate. This would mean, for instance, that when the agricultural industry is in difficulty the interest rate would be high and when the agricultural industry is operating on a sound basis the interest rate would be lower. The opposite should be true. When the industry is in trouble the government should lower the interest rate and when the industry is buoyant perhaps it no longer requires subsidization.

I doubt that the minister would say that he is increasing the interest rate today because the agricultural industry is backward. Perhaps we should take a look at the situation round the world today. In the United States the question being asked is whether they should pay the farmer more than $10,000 a year not to farm. The dairy industry in the United States is subsidized to the hilt. One might look at the situation in respect of the European common market. Wheat and almost every other agricultural product are subsidized. Pork is subsidized to the amount of approximately $14 a hundredweight. In the Netherlands, for example, a pound of cheddar cheese worth 55 cents is selling for 17 cents a pound. In other words, they are subsidizing their dairy industry.

There is no question in my mind about the fact that the agricultural industry is today one of the basic industries of this country. It is one of the main employers of this country, perhaps even a greater employer than the federal government and all other governments combined. To the surprise of many people in the province of Alberta the agricultural industry there is still the main employer. What is this government doing? It is not allowing the net income of the farmer to increase. Rather, it is allowing his costs to increase and thereby accentuating the cost-prize squeeze. The government very recently increased the farmer's costs by allowing the St. Lawrence seaway charges to increase another percentage point.

We are told that the government does not know what the wheat sales will be this year. We are told that there are great expectations for the next three years averaged together, but we do not know about this year. Sales are necessary now when the agricultural industry finds itself in a state of flux. Grain sales are off, farm net income is low and more people are leaving the farms. They are not necessarily leaving because they want to but because their income is not comparable with that of those in other parts of our society.

It is the duty of the minister to ensure that all those who are engaged in the farming industry today earn an income comparable with that earned in other sectors of our society so that they will be in a position to pay back the amount of money he is prepared to lend them.

Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Chairman, several hon. members have indicated already that the Minister of Agriculture, in effect, is guaranteeing a sound and sure thing to the financial institutions. As a farmer, a backbencher and a new member I had the impression that the Minister of Agriculture had the responsibility of looking after the interests of the farmers. Perhaps I am mistaken. In view of some of the speeches which have been made some doubt has been raised in my mind. As a farmer and a member representing an agricultural district I feel a certain measure of insecurity and doubt about the position of the agricultural industry in western Canada. This is the only industry about which I can speak with any authority.

There has been considerable doubt in my mind about the policies of the present Minister of Agriculture and the desire of the government to do something about solving the farmers' problems. One thing I am sure of; I am aware of how much money I am not making. We have had this experience before in the field of agriculture. If the Minister of Agriculture is a farmer he must have had a certain amount of experience of this kind. We are guaranteeing to the financial institutions a sure thing in the lending of this money to farmers. Are the farmers to be the ones to take the risk and to become the entrepreneurs of the new society? Are they to take the risk while the financial institutions are given a higher rate of interest? I understand the interest rate has gone up because the risk has increased. I assume that the Minister of Agriculture is a farmer and that he is interested in the problems of the farmer. I assume also that he is determined to proceed with the legislation which is on the order paper. Therefore I wish to make some suggestions to him in respect of some items which I think might improve the legislation.

First, I should like to suggest that any lending institution that is not familiar with the farming industry should not be allowed to lend money under this legislation. Farmers can get into enough trouble without advice from those who have no particular interest in the industry except to make money.

I suggest to the Minister of Agriculture that interest payments should not have to be made more than once a year. Frequently when you borrow money from a bank you are required to pay interest once a month or at least once every six months. This is a compounding of interest rates and in direct conflict with the Farm Improvement Loans Act as it has been. Under that act interest payment has only been required once a year.

It is my belief that the interest rate should be set by parliament. If we cannot set an absolute rate here, we should have a formula whereby it is tied to the bank rate and it should not be higher than 1 per cent above that bank rate. I have the uneasy feeling that if we allow rates to be set by order in council they will be higher than we are now paying.

If a bank or lending institution is to receive a guarantee from the government the interest rate should not be too high.

Let me turn for a moment to the Farm Credit Act. I asked a question of the Minister of Agriculture last evening about broadening the classes of individuals under the act. As yet I have received no reply. It is my suggestion that under this act only practising farmers should receive loans. I am not opposed to government boards or agencies lending money to anyone else, but that should be done under some other act or authority. Let us restrict eligibility under this act to practising farmers.

Mr. Olson: May I ask the hon. member whether he is referring to the F.C.C. when he makes that statement?

Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): I was referring to the Farm Credit Corporation, yes. Eligibility should only pertain to practising farmers. I want to refer particularly to those people I feel the Farm Credit Corporation should be considering. If there is to be a broadening of the classes of individuals eligible for loans, I suggest the loans should be made to those who need them most. The terms under which those who wish to borrow money can qualify should be broadened.

It may be that loans should only be made on the basis of an individual's ability to farm, but that is not the case at this time. One has to have a certain equity, and if you do not have a rich family or a well known friend you will never get a loan. It does not matter how efficient a farmer you may be or how shrewd a businessman you are, you require a certain amount of money. I hope the minister will consider broadening the aspects of the act in this regard.

Let me tell you about a young farmer with whom I was discussing the problem of getting started in farming. I asked why the Farm Credit Corporation could not buy economic units as such and lease them to young farmers with suitable qualifications for a period of five or ten years. At a later date they could have an option to purchase the farm. This young farmer, who was not of the same political persuasion as myself, agreed with me and suggested that if the Farm Credit Corporation purchased economic units they should be leased only to young farmers who wished to start farming.

In my district many farmers are reaching the age when they will wish to dispose of their farm units. Many of them have built up reasonably successful and fairly large units. There is a shortage of young farmers who are in a position to get started, and I think it only reasonable that we provide a more effective way of acquiring farm units for those who wish to farm and do not have adequate backing. Very often a father who is able to start his son in farming finds that his son does not wish to stay at home. Often it is necessary for a farmer with four or five sons to obtain assistance to get them established.

I repeat that we in parliament should set the interest rate. This is government money we are discussing and we should have some control in this regard. If the Minister of Agriculture becomes ashamed of what the interest rate is I think he should let us know. If he is not prepared to allow parliament to set the interest rate I feel the bill should be referred to the committee on agriculture where it can be thoroughly discussed.

Under the provisions of these two acts I think it will be possible for farmers to borrow enough money to get started, purchase machinery and operate efficient economic units, as we understand them in west central Saskatchewan where there are many such units. With higher interest rates costs will increase and it will be very difficult even for those who have large economic units to make any money. I discussed this matter with a farm loans manager who said it was becoming more difficult for the individual farmer to obtain an adequate net return, in spite of the fact he may have $100,000 or $150,000 tied up in his particular enterprise. This is the opinion of a man who should know, and he had no axe to grind with me. We were just discussing this matter in a practical way.

What will happen to those farmers or operators who for reasons beyond their control find themselves without enough money to continue operations? Obviously the minister has recognized agriculture as a commercial industry rather than as a subsistence activity. I suggest to him that it is not enough to settle for adequate capital and encouragement to individual farmers to take courses in farm management. We must also have volume of production at adequate prices. I am sure that the minister, who is the operator of a fairly large farm, I understand, realizes the importance of volume and what happens when volume decreases. If we do not sell a great deal of our farm production we will soon see a lot of individual farmers in trouble. This is not only true of farmers but also of those who service their industry such as farm dealers and others. They too depend on large volume businesses, and a very small margin off the top can put them in trouble.

The situation in respect of the sale of grain has been discussed in this house during the debate on the throne speech and at other times. Apparently the Minister of Agriculture cannot or will not do anything about grain sales. He refers the matter to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. He does not know what to do about the situation so he refers it to the Prime Minister. Obviously the Prime Minister, with no farming background, does not know what to do about it so he discusses it with the flower children. Where does this leave the farmer? It is high time something was done.

With all due respect to the Minister of Agriculture, let us not separate capital requirements and farm management from the marketplace and prices that are adequate if the farmer is to make a going thing of his particular economic enterprise.

[Translation]

Mr. Dumont: Mr. Chairman, as the representative of a riding where 35 per cent of the people are farmers, I would like to say a few words about the resolution of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) to extend the definition of the categories of people who can get loans, to increase the capital of the Farm Credit Corporation, etc.

I am a little worried about that possibility of allowing people other than bona fide farmers to secure those loans, because the day might come when someone will buy so much land that he will be able to control what we call a parish in Quebec. That worries me in the sense that there would then be a controller of farm life who would not be interested in keeping up the operation of that family farm in Quebec which, although larger today, must not be abandoned.

I have often heard—and I was able to check that information—that, in Quebec and even throughout Canada, for every 30 farms whose operation is abandoned a hospital must be built. Many hospitals are now built because seeds do not contain, through good family farming—the vitamins or fertilizers necessary to their growth. Those products are not wholesome for Canadians as they used to be.

Farming has been commercialized and I see in this resolution the possibility that some businessmen may take advantage of the borrowing right and end up by controlling unduly large farms. If there is unemployment now in Canada, why should we stop operating family farms which enabled father, mother and children to work together, especially if we consider the farming vocation of the province of Quebec, and let one single man control a whole parish, as I was saying earlier.

I am in favour of the family farm so that farm products which used to be healthful for our people may continue to be so. Indeed, our farmers of the province of Quebec, thanks to the family farm which they had operated well, had succeeded in maintaining the health of our Canadian citizens.

A review of the figures quoted by the Minister of Agriculture shows a number of astronomical loans, that is 72,000 loans for a total of $1,100 million.

Taking those figures into account, I would like to know how many Quebecers have taken advantage of this legislation? It is probably one of the reasons which explains the massive desertion of farms in Quebec, because the loans were never granted in that province in the same way as in the rest of Canada.

I do not object to the prosperity of agriculture in the west or in other parts of Canada. But I also wish that agriculture in Quebec would be profitable, because at the present time, a considerable number of farmers apply for social welfare, because the family farm does not provide them with a living.

In 1962, when the minister sat on this side of the house, I had asked—he is aware of it, and this could be done this year also, since we can now buy feed grains at a low cost and without delay—that grain elevators be built which would allow the eastern farmers to purchase feed grains at a lower cost.

I am not sure, but it seems to me there should be limits to borrowing, to giving more rope for anyone to strangle himself even more. Let us permit the farmer to manage his farm and earn sufficient income to live decently.

If we allow the farmers to borrow even more money at higher interest rates, this will certainly play us a nasty trick, as was the case when banks were allowed to lend money at higher interest rates; we see today that the financial sharks, the bankers are eating each other up. Tomorrow, farmers will be chased after in an effort to lend them money, and little by little they will be strangled, because agriculture does not pay.

A while ago someone said, and I read it in the papers, that an additional subsidy of two cents per pound would be paid for butter. But, and this came right after, that subsidy would be used to pay for its storage. The farmer then will not feel any of its effects. We would need immediate measures.

The other day I heard the hon. Minister of Trade, Commerce and Industry (Mr. Pepin) say in the house that the western wheat posed problems. I know, even now, a company in Quebec, which is ready to supply us with a barge to go and get the grain out west, to transport it down the St. Lawrence seaway, unload it at a seaport, so that the farmers can go and get it. They would then have some income to enable the family farm to keep on progressing.

Grains keep much longer in elevators, but even during the fall, with the nice weather we are having in Quebec, if the barge were loaded over there and came to the eastern ports the farmers could organize a bee and purchase wheat at $1 or $1.50 less per hundredweight. Then the undertaking would be profitable. We do not ask for permission to choke the farmer a little more. What we ask, is the right for him to a better income. This would be much better than making loans of $50,000 or $60,000 available. One always says, and there is a truth therein: "Tell me who is helping you financially and I will tell you who is taking advantage of you."

You want to broaden the provisions of the Farm Credit Act. This is only logical and I do not see any objection to it. What I object to is that we would do this to the prejudice of the family farm in Quebec. Why do we not take example on the Quebec agricultural legislation which provides for the repayment of the interest rate on loans. It seems to me we could provide for a rebate of this kind on federal farm loans. This would help directly the farmer who is even now leaving the farm to join the crowd of people depending on social security cheques for their living.

Social welfare for these people now amounts to $248 millions. Whether we want to or not, we have to grant social welfare and build hospitals. That money is spent nevertheless although there is no help for the farmers.

Therefore, as representatives of the province of Quebec and in the case of my constituency where 35 per cent of the population are farmers, we ask for the immediate adoption of legislation that will contribute towards the true restoration of the family farm. Considering the figures I have just given, I maintain that, at the present time, Quebec is not benefitting from loans as its agriculture is not profitable anymore. Produce is being imported from the United States through commercially organized farms where the land is over-cultivated. It must be remembered that over-cultivated land will, in the end, not yield what the country needs as a minimum for feeding its people.

I would myself ask another question. If the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Côté) has a word to say about the farmers, why does he not contribute something that would be really helpful to the province of Quebec? Perhaps the parliamentary secretary has forgotten that his party had promised the appointment of a Minister of Agriculture for Eastern Canada. That promise never materialized and it melted with the spring snow. That had been promised in January and its realization would have assisted the eastern farmers as distinctions could have been made between problems of western and eastern Canada so that solutions could have been found.

These problems, however, are not yet settled. Feed grain is sold at prices which simply exploit the farmer, for government subsidies for transportation by rail are given to the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. instead of being given to the farmers. In my riding, the feed grain could be moved by truck and delivered to the farmers, which would allow them to make more money. I would like to see credit given for initiatives like these, instead of the money going to people who will commercialize the farms, for there has been too much of that in the past. We must go back to what we have known in Quebec, and that is why we ask the Minister of Agriculture to take concrete steps.

Since I came to this house, on September 12, or since my election on June 25, I have concerned myself with this problem of feed grain in the hope of increasing the farmer's income and of stopping the commercialization of family farms. A company agreed to provide a barge which would fetch feed grain free of charge; that would mean a higher income for the farmer. We would then see fewer of these $25,000 or $30,000 loans at interest rates which are too high and which prevent our farmers from having an income which would allow them to live decently.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I ask the minister not to make it too easy to borrow at any price, for we have had one bad experience of this sort with the banks when we allowed them to lend money at uncontrolled interest rates. Everyone regrets this step which was taken, but it is too late, for the legislation has been passed. I therefore ask the minister to consider all aspects of the situation, so that we will not have to go back on our decision later.

[English]

Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Chairman, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to speak on the three resolutions before us because I was a member of the agricultural committee at the time the Farm Credit Act was first brought in and I recall much of the action that took place. There was a great need for such a bill. However, I am certainly in wholehearted agreement with what was said by the hon. member for Crowfoot this afternoon when he proposed that this resolution be placed before the standing committee on agriculture because it is my view that it is necessary to amend and review this legislation from time to time.

As will be recalled, when the Farm Credit Act was first brought in its primary purpose was to help young farmers to get a start because we found in western Canada that young people were increasingly being forced away from farms and consequently farms were being deserted and left to elderly people who had to try to carry on by themselves. The introduction of the act brought a ray of hope to farmers in western Canada because it gave an opportunity to young people to obtain capital to work on farms and enabled the senior citizens to retire.

I found that as time went on we drifted away from the goals which we set for ourselves under this legislation, and it is now helping to a larger extent the big farmers. I have noticed that in recent years many young people must be subsidized in order to stay on their farms but their applications for loans have been turned down and they have had to take on other employment so as to enable them to continue farming. The farming situation in Canada has worsened to the point where farmers must be subsidized in this day and age. Farming is the life of these people and what they want to do, but in many cases they can only be part time farmers and must take other employment in order to meet their obligations and to put their farms on a sound economic footing.

I therefore support the proposal made by the hon. member for Crowfoot that before this resolution is passed by the house it should be considered in the agricultural committee. I strongly urge the government to refer this resolution to the committee before it makes any changes in the Farm Credit Corporation.

We realize the value of farm improvement loans. Farmers must have this credit in order to carry on. There is no point in having farm improvement loan legislation if there is no money available because the rate of interest is too low and banks do not want to lend money. This is what we have experienced in the past years. I do not think there would be any harm in having this matter discussed in the agricultural committee.

I think consideration must be given to increasing the amount of capital of the Farm Credit Corporation because farmers have had to increase the size of their farms. At present this is an economic necessity. Farmers must have sufficient capital to purchase the necessary machinery and farms must be large enough to be economic. This amendment to the act is very necessary.

I should like to point out that there are many farmers on smaller units. These people must crawl before they can walk. I have known qualified farmers, men who have been raised on the farm and decided to make farming their life work, who have been turned down when they applied for loans. As I pointed out, I for one feel that I would not like to see the interest rate on Farm Credit Corporation loans allowed to fluctuate at will because I feel this would be very detrimental.

I feel differently about the other resolution covering farm improvement loans. As I pointed out, we saw what happened last summer when there was no money available to make farm improvement loans. We saw what happened to business throughout western Canada. The lack of business was noticeable because people were unable to purchase much needed machinery when farm improvement loans were not available.

I do not intend to dwell very long on the third resolution concerning the co-operative purchase of farm machinery. I have been unable to find that this idea has worked to the advantage of the farmers. There are certain types of machinery that farmers can own jointly. In my part of the country, however, farmers have to do their work in seasonable weather, so it is not too long until they want to own their machinery. I do not believe this act has been used to any extent in my district. Years ago there were machinery syndicates, but I have been unable to find any such syndicates in my district today except where a family is concerned.

I urge upon the minister that before any great changes are made in the Farm Credit Corporation the matter should be brought before the committee on agriculture. In so far as farm improvement loans are concerned, as I have said there is no point in having the legislation on the books if the interest rate is such that there is no money to borrow.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Chairman, in rising to take part in the debate on this resolution, I first of all want to comment upon the minister's reference to the urgency of expediting the passage of this measure. I can certainly sympathize with this attitude, and I do not want to see the mounting pile of letters on his desk get any higher before some action is taken. Nevertheless, I trust he will try to forgive me if I suggest that there is a very heavy responsibility on the Liberal party for the delay in introducing legislation on this subject. I trust the minister is not suggesting the corollary of this particular statement because I feel that proper discussion of this legislation is required. I suggest that adequate discussion of this measure should in no way be considered as delaying its passage or implementation. It seems to me there are some fundamental points we do need to consider in dealing with this resolution.

First of all, I think that farm credit cannot be considered in isolation from general farm policies and programs. I think that credit can be a trap if it is not tied in with other farm programs to ensure that every farmer will have adequate returns for his produce. In this regard I noted this statement the minister made as recorded in Hansard for yesterday, page 599:

> The objectives of the program are to provide the capital to facilitate the organization of Canadian agriculture into viable farm units in the hands of our competent farmers so that agriculture may make the greatest possible contribution to the Canadian economy and provide farmers with equitable returns for their investment of capital, work and skills.

I agree that in so far as the provision of capital does assist in bringing about an efficient farm enterprise it does contribute to the farmer's well-being. Nevertheless, this is no substitute for adequate legislation to ensure that the farmer does have adequate returns for the produce he takes to the market as a result of the capital investment he has made.

The second fundamental point that I think needs to be commented upon has already been dealt with by a number of hon. members. I do not intend to deal with it at any great length. Nevertheless, I have to refer to it. I refer to the lack of a comprehensive approach to the credit problem. I feel that we have in the proposals before us at the present time a patch-work program rather than an adequate, comprehensive approach to credit problems.

The third fundamental point, I think, is illustrated in the government proposal to allow interest rates to be set by market forces. I suggest that in fact this means throwing the farmers to the wolves because the farmer has to operate in an economy where he does not have adequate bargaining power, where he does not have economic power of the same degree and nature as that possessed by many other people in other sectors of the Canadian economy. At the present time in this country we have high interest rates. This is a fact in every sector of the economy. One example that has been referred to in this house in recent weeks has been the housing situation and the high interest rates connected with housing. The farmer is also going to have to accept his share of the bill to pay for the mess that has been created by this government.

I believe that the government has to take the responsibility for the skyrocketing interest rates in Canada today. This came about following the revision of some of our monetary legislation at the time the Bank Act was revised and some other measures were before the house. I was not here but it has been confirmed by other members that the present Minister of Agriculture voted against some of the revisions of the Bank Act and the change in the interest rate structure. The fact is that the problems of the farmers were known before 1963 and result, as I pointed out, from the low degree of bargaining power the agricultural industry has in our present economic structure. Given that situation, we may have to recognize that even though it may be wrong we are going to have to levy high interest rates. What do we do, then, with regard to the agricultural industry, an industry that is in a very poor economic position within the total framework of the Canadian economy? There are several alternatives, and I think the government should consider some of them.

The first alternative is for the government to ensure that the farmer has adequate bargaining power through orderly marketing machinery and also, where necessary, guarantee a proper price for his produce. The second alternative is to hold down interest rates and, if necessary to accomplish this, provide the capital for our farm credit program. The third alternative is to subsidize interest rates where necessary. I suggest that these alternatives should be looked at by the government before this legislation is put in final form.

In taking a look at the proposed amendments to this act I note, of course, its extension to credit unions and caisse populaires. They can also lend money under the provisions of the Farm Credit Act. Yesterday the minister made a reference to the extension of the Farm Credit Corporation legislation to Indian reserves. All hon. members in the house applauded this proposal when the minister brought it before us. Certainly I feel that the idea is good, but when one takes a closer look at this provision I believe there are some serious questions that should be asked and answered. The minister stated yesterday, as recorded on page 600 of Hansard:

> It would seem appropriate that the corporation be given authority to enter into appropriate agreements with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development so that appropriate arrangements can be made to provide credit for the development of viable farm businesses on Indian reserves.

This is fine in terms of fulfilling the objective of enabling the Indian people to develop farm enterprises on Indian reserve lands. However, I should also like to suggest that there are some fundamental questions here. The first of these is the fact that these agreements will have to be made with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I quite recognize, of course, that in framing any particular act the minister will have to live within the confines of the legislation now existing. However, I suggest for the consideration of all members that once again we are tying in here programs that are designed to help the Indian people with our present framework within which Indian people are completely dependent upon the benevolence of the Indian affairs branch of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

I think, we need to take a look at the principle involved. Certainly I should like to inquire of the minister whether in fact there were consultations with the Indian people prior to bringing this proposal forward. I hope this was the case. I also hope that as a result of any agreements arrived at the Indian people will be able to deal directly with the Farm Credit Corporation instead of having to go through the administrative framework of the Indian affairs branch. I am sure that the minister and many hon. members are aware of the serious delays that have been encountered by many Indian people who have attempted to do something to advance their own economic position.

I have one example before me, Mr. Chairman, of the type of intolerable delays that exist so far as the Indian people are concerned. I have before me a letter addressed to the director of Indian affairs in Ottawa. It is from Mr. Harry Buffalo who lives on the Moose Wood reserve which is south of Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. Copies of the letter were sent to the hon. member for Moose Jaw and to a number of others as well. I should like to quote some parts of the letter in order to indicate the type of difficulty many Indian people experience in their relations with the Indian affairs branch. While I am not in a position specifically to confirm the contents of this letter, I can say from my own personal experience that I have run into similar cases of frustrating delay encountered by the Indian people. Mr. Harry Buffalo states:

> During the last few years I have been trying to build up a cattle herd to become self-sufficient.
> I now have 51 head of Hereford cattle, 10 of which I bought by a loan from the department of Indian affairs.
> The problem is the lack of haying equipment. The Band obtained (this spring) new haying equipment complete with baler. This haying equipment has been used exclusively by the overseer and his family, these people have no more than ten head of cattle among them and the hay has been put up and sold privately, with the result I have no hay to winter my stock.
> On August 2nd, 1968, I went to Regina and saw Mr. Reid. He suggested I see Mr. Hanson at the Duck Lake agency. Mr. Hanson was to send a man to Moose Wood reserve but he never came. (If he did he didn't come to see me.)
> Mr. Reid said that I would need $450 as a down payment to buy equipment through the revolving fund. This presents no problem as I could sell two head of cattle to raise this amount or I could borrow this amount from the credit union if I had a statement from the Indian department that I am eligible for he revolving fund loan. (If and when I can get any action from the department of Indian affairs).
> I have been to Duck Lake numerous times to see where I stand with getting the use of the hay equipment now on the reserve. My last effort was three weeks ago when I had a lawyer contact Mr. Ivan Ahenkew at Duck Lake. Mr. Ahenkew said he would be down to see me the following Monday, but never came. (He came to the reserve about a week ago and came to the house, but did not bother to come where I work or wait for me.)

I hope you can picture the position I am in:

1. The haying equipment which is now on the reserve has not been made available to me and I want to know why this equipment has been used only by the overseer Mr. Wm. Eagle and his family.

2. The delays in Regina for not going ahead as promised so I could buy my own equipment.

3. The promises from Mr. Ivan Ahenkew and others at Duck Lake to get in touch with me and straighten these matters out. Promises that were never kept.

We have heard a lot recently about making the Indian self-sufficient. My family are all getting good educations and I am trying to bring them up as good Canadians but how can anyone get ahead getting the run around from supervisors, regional director's office in Regina, Indian agents and other buck passers whose word and promises are no good . . .

It is too late now to save all of my breeding stock, some will have to be sold to winter the rest.

Please see that I am not in this same position next year, anything your department can do at your level would certainly be appreciated.

Yours very truly,
Harry Buffalo

This, Mr. Chairman, is the type of situation that I know has been experienced time and time again by Indian people in dealing with the Indian affairs branch.

One of the resolutions before us amends the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act, and some references have already been made to this act. I think there is no question that if we are going to amend the Farm Credit Act, this act should also be amended so as to maintain consistency in the legislation. I certainly approve and go along with the proposed extension to co-operative associations.

A question has been asked by some people that I should like to hear the minister answer. Who is using the act? It has been suggested that it is mainly the large farmers who are already quite secure in their farming operations, that the act is really not for those farmers who could really obtain some value from it.

I want to make a few more remarks on this resolution, Mr. Chairman, so I would ask whether we might call it six o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. So that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business I will now leave the chair.

[Mr. Burton.]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment this evening are the following: the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand)—Public Service, labour department, status of women's bureau; the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams)—Oil, reported reduction in U.S. imports from Canada; the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave)—Post Office Department, reconsideration of policy respecting rural mail contracts.

It being six o'clock p.m. the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, public bills.

PRIVATE BILL

ATLANTIC PEAT MOSS CO. LTD.

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-103, an Act respecting Atlantic Peat Moss Co. Ltd.—Mousse de Tourbe Atlantic Cie Ltée.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I move this bill because it is extremely important for my area, and more particularly for a small village that depends upon the operations of a company. The Atlantic Peat Moss Co. Ltd. has been operating in the Lamèque area, in the constituency of Gloucester, for about 15 years and employs an average of 70 people. In 1968, the total amount of the salaries paid was $199,930.

In June last, the Department of Consumers and Corporate Affairs notified the Atlantic Peat Moss Co. Ltd. that it had not filed its annual report. As the head office of the company is in Montreal and the operations were taking place in New Brunswick, the notices could not reach the directors of that company nor the people responsible for that report. The company was dissolved under an act passed by this house.

• (6:00 p.m.)

[English]

I do not want to give the impression that I am among those who believe that laws are made to be broken. But this company has been dissolved and because of the financial implications it is important that it should secure new letters patent. As hon. members know, in the peat moss industry depletion has to be accounted for every year and in this case depletion has gone on for so long that if the company were to apply for a new charter there would need to be a new balance sheet altogether showing an entirely different picture. The working has been depleted for 15 years, so there would only be about 10 per cent of the net value left at this time. For these reasons I ask the house to pass this bill so that the company can continue to operate. It is located in a designated area and if it were to cease its operations the consequence would only be increased welfare payments for this country and higher unemployment.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I beg this house to pass this bill because it is of tremendous importance for about 70 employees. Moreover, if this bill were not passed, the company would have to stop its operations and the government would have to pay unemployment insurance benefis or welfare allowances to those workers on top of those which they already receive, because this is a designated area.

[English]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I have looked at this bill and I appreciate the comments made by the hon. member with regard to it. It is certainly not in the form of any bill I have previously seen in the years I have spent here. Perhaps because I am not a lawyer the intent of the bill is not very clear to me. I gather either that the company has gone bankrupt or that something else has happened to it leading to a situation which we are asked to correct.

The explanation given by the hon. member also raises a couple of questions. It is not a sponsored measure of the ordinary kind; the hon. member has a healthy interest in it because of the employment aspect. But I am surprised consideration has not been given to some other way of handling what is neither an incorporation nor a renewal of the letters patent. I fail to gather whether the original letters patent were federal or provincial. It would seem to me there are several reasons for handling this matter in another way. We now propose establishing under federal law a company which has to meet several criteria. What we are really doing is this: we are endorsing criteria which were applicable 15 years ago under the letters patent.

I do not necessarily disagree, but I am concerned about the form of redress available to petitioners in cases which must obviously be outside the prerogative of the letters patent office. However, I presume this bill will go to the committee where the question can be discussed further. While I have no objection to this particular case I would certainly not like to see this format used more generally. Widespread use of it would undoubtedly detract from the value of the provisions we have made for letters patent and the right to make decisions with regard to them.

Recently there has been a tendency for more companies to be established by letters patent and fewer by private bills. The trend seems to be reversing in the present instance. No doubt it is worth while to do so since this company is operating in a designated area where 70 employees are dependent upon it. I only hope some consideration will be given to the propriety of this method of relief when relief is not obtainable in any other way. I hope the bill can be sent to the committee for further study at which time those responsible for the administration of letters patent will be in a position to tell us why their legislation was not sufficient to permit what seems to be a simple continuation after default by misunderstanding.

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, looking at the contents of the bill, I can talk with factual knowledge, because I know that at the present time there are companies of that kind in the Rivière-du-Loup and Trois-Pistoles area. Unfortunately, these companies are controlled by American people and this is another one of our resources where the profits at least are going to the United States. Here again we are but hewers of wood and drawers of water, or drawers of moss, in this case.

I should like to know from the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) who introduced this bill, first—he tells us that the head office is in Montreal—who are the shareholders and is this a Canadian company. I should like to see an end to the exploitation of our resources by foreigners, and such information would be very useful to the whole house.

I am well aware that 70 employees have earned $199,930. But again, they are only water bearers. We would prefer the directors to be some of our own people. This is the information that I want. Further, they are Americans operating this company in New Brunswick. I would prefer it if we passed a law in order to keep in Canada 51 per cent of the shares.

I am asking for this information in order that the debate may continue its normal course. I do not have any objection if this can be useful to our people, but personally, I want an answer to my questions.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer the question asked by the hon. member for Frontenac. The shareholders—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. Does the hon. member for Gloucester merely want to answer the question asked by the hon. member for Frontenac? Otherwise, if he speaks now, he will close the debate.

Mr. Breau: I will answer that question, Mr. Speaker.

The shareholders are all Canadians and the capital stock of this company is entirely Canadian-owned.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF RELATIONS ACT

DESIGNATED EMPLOYEES—EXTENSION OF PROHIBITION OF RIGHT TO STRIKE

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-4, to amend the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, when I prepared this bill I did not realize it would come up so quickly. As a matter of fact, I was speaking with the hon. member who is sponsoring the bill before mine on the order paper and I thought he was ready to proceed. I would have liked to have more time but in the circumstances I will proceed anyway.

I might also say that when I filed this bill I did not know I would have the luck to have it drawn so near to the top of the list. I thought it might come up for debate after the Woods commission had reported, but it came up near the top of the draw and the Woods commission is not expected to report until later in the year.

This bill, which proposes changes in the Public Service Staff Relations Act, aims to prevent strikes in the public service where certain public services are essential to the national economy. Section 79 of the Public Service Staff Relations Act sets out the way in which designated employees are determined. At present that act prohibits the right to strike to designated employees, and designated employees are those:

> —whose duties consist in whole or in part of duties the performance of which at any particular time or after any specified period of time is or will be necessary in the interest of the safety or security of the public.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, when parliament passed that act in 1966 it agreed that the right to strike should be limited. It agreed that the right to strike, although it is an important right in a democratic society, was not unlimited and could come into conflict with the public interest. At that time it decided to draw the line at those employees whose duties consisted in protecting the public safety or security.

My proposed amendment would enlarge the area of designated employees. If adopted, designated employees would include not only those whose services are necessary in the interest of the safety or security of the public but also public service employees whose duties consist of services essential to the functioning of the national economy and without which Canada's national and international trade would be seriously impaired. These employees are not defined specifically in my bill, nor are those whose services are considered essential for safety and security.

Under the Public Service Staff Relations Act, when a union asks for certification the public service board first determines whether the employees involved fall within the category of those whose services are necessary for safety and security. Under my amendment it would also have to determine whether the employees concerned fulfil services which are essential to the functioning of the national economy.

What I am doing is not proposing that we take away the right to strike from public servants generally but that we extend the area of designated employees that already exists in the act so that those employees whose services are necessary for the national economy would be considered designated employees, something which would be determined by the board in the same way as the board now makes its determination with respect to other designated employees.

It is my opinion, and the opinion of many other people in this country, that although the right to strike is an essential right in a democratic society it, like all other rights, is not unlimited. All rights can be abused. In civil law we have the theory of "abuse of rights". We also have a principle of democratic society that no private interest should prevail over public interest, over what is good for the public as a whole. When we passed the act in 1966 we accepted that principle and we decided we should have a category of designated employees. Therefore when I voted for the act in 1966 I was convinced at that time that the definition of designated employees in it would be sufficient to protect the public interest.

I was not a member of the committee which studied that matter, although I was very interested in it. As all hon. members know, it is not possible for one to participate in all the committees of the house. At that time I was a member of the consumer affairs committee. It was very active and I could not attend the hearings of both committees. I had to rely on the report that was brought down by the committee dealing with the Public Service Staff Relations Act, which included the present definition of designated employees. Although there was doubt in my mind at that time I voted for the act because I felt that the definition of designated employees would cover all situations necessary to protect the public interest.

All hon. members know that there are many instances where we have to restrict rights, not because it is good but because it is the lesser of two evils. I think this is such a situation right here. I am not dogmatic about this solution, but I say it is in the interest of the public to provide protection against crippling strikes when the public has no means of bargaining and where the employer and the employee, because they cannot reach an agreement, not only hurt themselves in their bargaining process but also to a greater extent hurt the public and may damage the public interest on a long term basis. That interest of the public is paramount, and although the right to strike is a good, desirable right it has to be restricted in certain instances where it produces one of those situations in which you have to chose between the lesser of two evils, the two evils being the abuse of the public interest and the curtailment of the right to strike. As between those two evils, curtailment of the right to strike and abuse of the public interest, we have to draw the line in certain cases, and I propose that we move the line a little farther over than it is at present.

Mr. Peters: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Allmand: Yes.

Mr. Peters: Just for my edification, would he indicate what event has happened since the act was passed that has brought about this change of mind?

• (6:20 p.m.)

Mr. Allmand: There has been a considerable increase in the number of strikes in the public area. There was the postal strike this summer in respect of which I believe this type of provision might apply. As I say, however, the decision on this would be one for the public service board. Later I shall quote figures to show that the number of strikes in the public area has increased considerably.

Mr. Peters: The hon. member mentioned the postal strike. Would this apply to all the people who were involved in that strike?

Mr. Allmand: No, I do not think it would. There might be employees in any department, for instance, who might be involved in providing safety and security, but not all the employees in the department would be so involved. In other words, it would be a matter for the public service board to determine just as it is now a matter for it to determine. As I have mentioned, in making this proposal I am not suggesting a new principle. The principle already exists in the law. It is just a matter of carrying the principle a little farther because I believe that the present definition in the act is not satisfactory.

During the summer months when we had several strikes in the public area some people called me stating that all strikes in the public service should be outlawed. I cannot agree with that. I feel there are many areas in the public service where a strike would not hurt the public interest. For example, if the employees of the National Film Board, the C.B.C. or many of the civil servants working in more traditional departments went on strike this might not affect the national economy and therefore would not be against the public interest. However, there are areas in respect of which the public service board must be able to determine whether or not the employees should be allowed to strike.

I have mentioned a few areas in the public service where I did not think a strike would be contrary to the public interest and would not harm anyone. Even though the liquor strike in Quebec at the present time is serious and many people are hurt by it, I would not consider this strike to be contrary to the national economic interest of Quebec or the society in which the Quebec liquor board operates, although it has caused a good deal of harm.

On the other hand, however, there are areas in which no one would question that the right to strike should not be allowed. I have in mind police departments, fire departments, the army, and so on. In the middle there are many types of public employee who might be considered to be in a grey area, such as the postal workers, transportation employees, hospital employees, teachers and others. These are areas in which there is a complex question as to whether or not the right to strike should be allowed.

I would hesitate to suggest that we should name in the statutes certain classes of employees. I believe all we can do is set out the principle of the designated employee approach. I think this is the correct approach. The matter is left to the public service board to determine one way or another whether any class of employee falls under the definition. The solution of arbitration as under the present act, of course, is not a perfect one. But in a situation where a strike is very harmful I believe it is the lesser of two evils.

In arbitration a good judgment may be produced, one in respect of which both parties may agree, or there may be a judgment in respect of which one party is satisfied and not the other. On the other hand, I think more is served in the long run by having good arbitration procedures than is served by allowing a strike to continue for a long period with no arbitration procedures or other solution. I have here an editorial from the Montreal Star in which the question of arbitration is discussed. It deals with the recommendations of the Rand report in the province of Ontario. I must say that although I support some of the recommendations in that report I do not support all of them. In commenting on the Rand report the editorial in the Montreal Star of September 7, 1968 states:

> A major argument against the creation of the industrial tribunal is that it would be impossible to find the kind of super-geniuses the commissioner envisages for this role. He speaks of tribunal members who would have training and education in political science, economics, sociology, psychology, labour relations, philosophy and history, as well as experience in labour law. This demanding list of qualifications is a correct evaluation of the complexities involved in industrial relations. But there is a shortage of Messiahs who could fulfil such a role.

The Star editorial is suggesting, in other words, that the type of man necessary to bring about just decisions under compulsory arbitration is not available and because he is not available, therefore we should not have this type of thing. Again I return to the argument I put forward before. In no forum in which we settle disputes are there perfect arbitrators. Even the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada are not perfect men; they are not Messiahs. The men who settle arbitration matters are not Messiahs.

There are situations where a man owns property and the state decides that that property is necessary in the public interest. In this situation the state offers a certain sum of money to the person who owns the property and if that person refuses that sum of money the bargaining is not continued until a price is arrived at. In this type of situation the feeling is that the public interest is paramount and boards are set up to decide what the price should be. A decision is arrived at by the board. The decision may not always be a perfect one. Sometimes the state may not be satisfied. It may feel that the board has granted too great an award for this property. On the other hand, the citizen may feel aggrieved. This situation is felt to be the lesser evil compared with allowing the bargaining process to continue, especially when the public interest is involved.

In answer to the editorial in the Star we say, of course, that there are no perfect judges or arbitrators and there are no perfect members in this parliament. Although we have passed and shall pass laws in this parliament which are not perfect they are the best attempt to deal with certain problems. In areas in which the public interest is involved we must have a system for stopping strikes which are against the public interest. The hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain), as reported at page 365 of Hansard, delivered a very good speech during the throne speech debate in which he referred to this very subject. He quoted part of a statement made by Walter Reuther, the prominent United States labour leader. The hon. member for Trois-Rivières quoted Mr. Reuther as having said:

> It is high time the unions stopped settling their problems at the expense of the community. It is time also for governments to give them such means of settling their problems which will allow them not to depend on strikes alone.

Later in his speech the hon. member quoted figures in respect of strikes in Canada over the last few years. He stated that in 1962 Canada had 290 strikes, that in 1963 we had 318 strikes and in 1964 we had 327 strikes.

• (6:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must interrupt the hon. member to bring to the attention of the house that his time has expired, and determine whether it is the wish of the house that he be allowed to continue beyond his allocation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Give him another five minutes.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker and members of the house, I have been looking at the clock but I was a bit confused. There was a private bill before public bills and I was under the impression that my time ended at 25 minutes to 7.

Let me conclude by stating that such a system will not only relieve hardships to the public, but also certain hardships to the workers. A survey was made among the liquor workers of Quebec during the present liquor strike which revealed that 80 per cent of them want to return to work, and a quick settlement to the dispute.

Let me say also that compulsory arbitration does not necessarily mean an unjust settlement. If we have properly trained arbitrators, although they may never be perfect, I suggest that, in comparison, we can have settlements that in the long run will be much more fair and just than the settlements following most of our strikes.

It is not my belief that the solution I put forward in this bill is a perfect one, and I am not dogmatic about it. I understand the Woods report will be presented later this year. I hope it will bring forward solutions to strikes in the public interest which will protect the public but still maintain that right to strike. I hope this can be done in such a way that, although we accept the right to strike as a general principle, the paramount interest will still be that of the public.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose the second reading of this bill. I must say, in fact, I am a bit surprised that such a bill is being introduced by a member of the Liberal party, a member who was here during the last parliament when the government which he supports brought in the legislation which is now known as the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

In taking this position I do not stand here to say that I like strikes or want strikes to take place, either in the public or the private sector. I do suggest there are worse things than strikes and I would hate to see in Canada that kind of society in which workers were denied the right to withdraw their labour if they are not satisfied with the conditions that obtain. In other words, I would hate to see an arbitrary—I might as well use the word—slave state situation, which our society would become if the workers could be told arbitrarily that they must work, regardless of the conditions under which they are employed.

Mr. Allmand: May I ask the hon. member a question? Does he approve of the present areas of the act which apply to designated employees?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I was coming to that point. I appreciate what the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace (Mr. Allmand) has in mind. Although he was a member of the last parliament he was not a member of the committee which went over this bill very thoroughly. I happened to have that privilege, and I am fairly familiar with its terms and the kind of discussion that went into the final decision as to what its terms would be.

As the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) will recognize, the final draft in respect of this area was not precisely what was proposed in the first place. Let me go back behind what the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace was saying, and point out that initially the government said that it was bringing in a bill which would give civil servants the right to strike. When we got the bill we discovered that it was not quite that blank a cheque. On the contrary the right was circumscribed even before we reached the point the hon. member has mentioned. We amended the original provisions so I need not go into all the details, but the way the legislation now reads it provides that a bargaining unit has initially the right to choose between following a course which leads eventually to the right to strike, or to choose to follow a course which leads to arbitration without any right to strike.

I think one of the advantages of a committee was demonstrated in that we got that part of it improved. The original government draft made it necessary for the bargaining unit to make its decision very early in the process, and the decision was binding for quite a long period of time. I forget the exact period but it was binding for longer then we thought necessary.

The government agreed with arguments put forward that this needed to be modified. Thus as it now stands the bargaining unit does not have to make its choice until it gives notice to bargain, and, having made a choice, it applies only for the life of that particular agreement. We think this is an improvement, and I am glad to see the Minister of Labour nodding his head to confirm that the position is as I have stated it.

Thus a bargaining unit of the civil servants has a free choice. It can choose a course that leads to the right to strike or it can choose a course that leads to arbitration. If it chooses the second, it rules itself out of the right to strike at least for that round of collective bargaining.

We went a bit further. We provided that even in the case of those civil servants who elected at the proper time to follow a course that would include the right to strike, that right is limited by a section which says that the unit or the employees in the unit still cannot have that right to strike if their services are such that this would endanger the safety or security of the public.

Let me tell my hon. friend that there were those on the committee who wanted that section worded more broadly or more narrowly, depending on one's point of view. They wanted to put in the general phrase "in the public interest". We in the committee were able to make the point that if you talked about the public interest, the expression is so wide you would remove from everybody the right to strike. So we narrowed it to the terms that are now there. The only people who are denied the right to strike are those whose services are important to the safety or security of the public.

I suggest that Canada is still carrying on, in spite of the strikes we had this past summer. It is good to know, however, that freedom of collective bargaining in labour relations in Canada remains unimpaired. Some of my labour friends might not agree that it has not been impaired to some extent. Generally speaking, however, we still have what we had, and I think this is worth the price we pay in having a few strikes, such as those of the past summer.

The hon. member mentioned strikes in the public area, and I know he is quite interested in the strike that affected the seaway. It is my understanding that the tonnage on the seaway this season will be greater than it was last season, in spite of the strike that took place this year. Statements have been made regarding the grain handlers strike, to the effect that no commitments were lost and that our trade was not really jeopardized. I suggest that the frightening things said about strikes do not always materialize, and that we do have to set over against the harm caused by strikes, the gains that we achieve by maintaining a free society, a free economy, and the right to free collective bargaining.

The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace said he is not against the right to strike but that he wants to balance things. He said further that he is not introducing any new principle in this bill. Let me say to him as strongly as I can that I think this is a dishonest bill. I think this bill actually takes away from our civil servants, once and for all, the right to strike which, within certain limitations, the act has given to them. I have indicated that it is limited already.

Mr. Francis: May I ask the hon. member a question in respect of that remark?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes.

• (6:40 p.m.)

Mr. Francis: Surely the bill would not take away permanently the right to strike, but it would be purely for the life of an agreement as such, as related to the other sections?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) read the bill a little more carefully. Remember that already, because civil servants have to make the choice, some deny themselves the right to strike. Remember that for the others this right is, of course, during the term of the collective agreement; but it is provided in the legislation that there cannot be a strike of the unit as a whole, or employees in that unit, if they are involved in work that concerns the safety and security of the public.

If the public service staff relations board had the instruction proposed in this bill, they would say, "There can be no strike because the employees concerned are engaged in work that concerns the safety or security of the public." But they would also have to say this if the employees' duties consisted of performing services essential to the functioning of the national economy and without which Canada's national or international trade would be seriously impaired. If our public servants are not engaged in work that is essential to the functioning of the national economy, what are we paying them for? All our public servants are engaged in performing services that are essential to our national economy directly or indirectly, and many of them are engaged in performing services that affect Canada's national or international trade.

That is why I say that if you gave the public service staff relations board that kind of instruction, you would be saying to the board, "Take away from all our public servants the right to strike", which was given by the legislation itself. That is why I use a word that is perhaps a little stronger than those I sometimes use with regard to private members bills: I think this bill is dishonest. I think that if the hon. member wants to take away from public servants the right to strike, the bill should be amended in such a way that this is done categorically, and not in this indirect way which has the same effect.

Therefore I think this bill should not be given second reading by the house. I hope we will hear members on the government side speak on this question. I am interested in the attention the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) has been paying to the previous speaker and to me. I suppose it is too much to hope that we will hear from him on this subject, but I hope we will. He said some pretty good things about this right when he was handling a couple of strikes with which he had to deal during the first few weeks he was Minister of Labour. But I hope he will agree with me in particular that this legislation has not yet had enough of a trial for us to make this kind of change.

As a matter of fact, this is one of the things some of us were complaining about last summer when the postal workers were on strike. A great many people, including many members on the government side, said this was a right they should have. Then they said we must take it away from them. The same people who a year before were boasting of the fact that we were giving them the right to strike, the first time these people exercised that right said it must be taken away.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes.

Mr. Allmand: The hon. member said my amendment was dishonest because it in fact tried to take away the right to strike. But does he not think the words in the bill would not have this effect? I refer to the words "national or international trade would be seriously impaired". Does the hon. member not think that these words contradict what he says? In other words, this provision would apply to those civil servants whose duties were necessary to the economy, and when you add the words "Canada's national or international trade would be seriously impaired", does the hon. member not think this contradicts what he has said?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not. I am glad the hon. member has quoted me correctly in saying that I think his bill is dishonest, not the author of the bill. You do not modify it by putting in the words "seriously impaired". Remember, of course, that the only people who strike are those who can cause some inconvenience, some dislocation; otherwise there is no point in striking. The strike is part of the process of employees trying to get better wages or working conditions. I suggest in practical terms that any group of public servants who tried to strike under the provisions of the law as it now stands would, if this phrase were included in the law, be met by a board that would have to say, "The work you are doing affects the national economy".

You can say that about any group. This provision would apply to all those whose work affects the national economy or Canada's national or international trade. It does not have to be both; it is "national or international". I do not know how you would define "national trade", but I suppose it means the general trade and commerce that goes on in the country. Certainly the postal workers would have been affected by this provision, as would the grain handlers and the seaway workers. This would also apply to all those classes of public servants who are likely to exercise the right to strike. I am not implying that all these people I have talked about are public servants, but any of them likely to strike would come up against the provisions of this prohibition that the hon. member would seek to write into the legislation.

I agree with the hon. member and all those who say we should find a better way than the strike as a means of solving labour difficulties. But I think those who say we should come up with a better way have an obligation to produce that better way before they take away the one we now have. Arbitration boards have not yet proven to me that theirs is a better way. Perhaps in a few years we will have had some experience in the public service—and mainly that is what we are dealing with here—both ways, because some bargaining units have elected the right to strike and some have elected arbitration. Perhaps we will have some experience and can obtain some advice as to which way to move. But at the moment, until some better way is produced—not just called for, argued for, not just statements that there should be a better way—I do not think it does any service to labour relations in this country generally, and I certainly do not think it does a service to labour relations in the public service, for this kind of legislation to be brought before this house.

It took a long, long time for us to get a government of this country to bring in the kind of legislation that was put into effect during the last parliament. We gave it our endorsation. We should like to have made further changes in it, we would like it to have been even better. But I make no qualification now; it was good legislation. Our public servants are trying to live with that legislation and work it out. They are finding some difficulties with it. But I suggest that at this stage, to say that clamps should be put on it and that certain rights given to our public servants should be taken away is a disservice to the cause of good relations between our public servants and their employees, the government and people of Canada.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a good deal of interest to the speeches that have preceded mine in this debate. I had the privilege of serving in this house in a previous parliament when the first steps were taken toward collective bargaining in the public service. The report of the preparatory committee, to which reference has been made, was certainly one of the basic documents upon which the legislation which is now enacted was eventually constructed.

I know that the joint committee, which held extensive hearings, weighed long and carefully these sections of the act before the decision was made to incorporate them in the form which has been described. The government of Canada—and I have listened with interest to my hon. friend on the other side—and many members on this side of the house took an active and conscientious interest in promoting what he himself described as a good piece of legislation.

Many members on this side of the house were very much concerned that the government of Canada should act as a good employer. They decided after very careful review that the right to strike should be generally permitted and an exception should be made where very definite reference was made to the safety or security of the people of Canada.

May I say with the greatest respect to my colleague who introduced this piece of legislation that I do not share his views. I do feel it is important that the legislation which has been introduced should be given a fair period of trial. This it has not had. We are in a formative stage. The very preliminary phases of certification are not completed. There is no question that the process of conclusion of collective bargaining agreements will be a time-consuming one which, I am confident, will bring an entirely different spirit and atmosphere in the public service of this country. I am very reluctant to see anything done at this stage which would disturb what is now being undertaken.

Like other members of this house, this summer I received a number of representations from my constituents. There are those who believe that the postal workers should not have had the right to strike. They argued—and I received a volume of correspondence in this vein—that the right should be proscribed by legislation, and that amendments should be introduced immediately in the house which would have that effect.

There are things that are worse than strikes on occasion. There is no assurance that laws which will prohibit the right to strike will be observed simply because they are laws. During the war when there was a grave danger to national survival we had strikes. Even the severest penalties did not deter men and women under certain conditions from withholding their services on the labour market. Strikes are not always economic strikes, and in general only in economic strikes is the legislation fully protective.

There are many other factors behind a strike, and if I may be so bold as to suggest, the strike of postal workers which took place this summer had more to it than met the eye. Behind it was a struggle of groups for leadership of the union, and the rise to the top of one section of the union whose conduct in a previous strike in 1965 had had a singular impact on certain members of the union. There was the question of the relationship of different groups whose prestige was at stake. I do not believe that a simple prohibition of the right to strike would have assured Canadians that there would have been no strike. But I was very proud of the record of the government of the day, and I am sure hon. members on the other side, and particularly the hon. member who preceded me in this debate, would agree that the conduct of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) in this strike was one of which all Liberal members are proud.

The right to strike was not impaired by precipitous or ill considered action. We regretted the strike very much and it cost many Canadians a price which they could ill afford. However, the strike was eventually resolved within the framework of collective bargaining.

I am one of those who believe that collective bargaining is the best way to resolve these matters. It is sometimes rough, and sometimes irresponsible parties abuse it by resorting to strikes that are ill advised. But the best discipline against it is the discipline of the members of the organization when they realize that they do a disservice to everyone concerned when they resort to a strike which cannot be justified.

Nor do I have that much confidence in the conduct of arbitration boards. The government of this country has had a grave responsibility in setting some kind of pattern which would halt the progress of inflation. A pattern as close as possible to 15 or 16 per cent was indicated as highly desirable. I am not certain that the use of arbitration would have been consistent with the patterns of stability which the government was seeking. There are instances of awards of arbitration boards which have been in excess of the guide lines the government was trying to develop on a voluntary basis. Nor do I have confidence—and the mover of the bill indicated he also had some reservations—that the sort of persons who are chosen to do this farsighted job of applying arbitration and mediation services have those great talents to judge all the facts which are involved in the circumstances. This calls for skills which very few people possess, and I do not believe that arbitration itself is any guarantee that the other objectives which the government of the day must pursue can be found.

I hope that this bill will receive a long and careful examination by members of this house before it is enacted into legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments on Bill No. C-4, to amend the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

One could consider, as an example, a situation where an individual comes to us. Two things can happen to him. Most probably he will be taken ill once in his lifetime. Do we have to wait until then to cure him by using a lancet or should we try preventive treatment? If one applies this example to Bill No. C-4, this measure seems to be the lancet solution rather than preventive treatment of our labour problems. I do not think that giving or withdrawing the right to strike will solve a problem. That would be taking one step forward and one step backward, but it would be better and more responsible to introduce positive measures.

Preventive medicine, Mr. Speaker, applied to labour relations, is a good solution to which we should turn as soon as possible, in the public service as in industry.

Preventive medicine maintains the human machine in good condition, just as regular maintenance does for equipment. What has been provided for to minimize the effects, for instance, of labour conflicts, or disputes in the public service? Almost nothing. That is why preventive clinics should be set up or, if you wish, advisory groups to establish contacts between the various parties, in order to know what grievances have been submitted, and compulsory arbitration resorted to, but not just any arbitration. Then it would not be necessary to go on strike; the security of the state would be protected, and workers, public servants and employees could still be heard.

Mr. Speaker, if we refer to one of the briefs of the Labour Congress—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry but I must advise the member that the hour appointed for the consideration of private members business has now expired.

[English]

At seven o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Olson—Mr. Faulkner in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Farm Credit Act to broaden the classes of persons eligible for loans under the act; to increase the amount of the capital of the Farm Credit Corporation; to substitute for the present rates of interest on loans made under the act (except any such loans made pursuant to applications received by the corporation before September 13, 1968) such rate or rates of interest on any loans made after the coming into force of the said measure as may be prescribed by the governor in council; to provide further for certain changes in connection with the administration of the act and for other matters related or incidental thereto.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Chairman, if I may continue the remarks I was making before the private members hour, there are some broader questions involving credit that I should like to discuss briefly. One of these, which has already been raised in this debate is, what is the effect of credit? No one will argue that the legislation we have had in Canada over the past number of years has not done a lot of good. This legislation has certainly filled some of the yawning gaps that existed in the credit field some years ago. To the extent this has facilitated land transfers, it is really a case of more money chasing the same amount of resources. In so far as this brings about the consolidation of uneconomic farm units, it has produced more efficient farms and has improved over-all productivity. It certainly has helped individual farmers, but it has also contributed to the inflation of land prices. In fact, land prices are skyrocketing in many parts of Canada, and they continue to go up.

I feel I have to take issue with one statement the minister made last night. He is recorded in Hansard at page 600 as stating:

—unrealistic interest rates tend to cause misallocation of resources, and in particular terms any savings as a result of a subsidized interest rate on capital borrowed for the purpose of land could make the cost of the land excessively inflationary.

[Mr. Speaker.]

This is, to some extent I suppose, a textbook discussion of the subject. I should like to suggest to the minister that the fact an individual had reasonable interest rates for farm credit over the last number of years has not really contributed to the inflationary spiral of land prices. I should like to suggest that farm needs, technological changes and the availability of credit rather than the cost of credit have, in fact, influenced the initial decisions made by farmers to take advantage of the credit available. Of course we, in our group, are arguing that this does have very significant effects on future costs for farmers. However, I feel it is still true to say that, in many respects, our farmers have no choice but to take advantage of much of the credit that has been available. There is still a good deal of the "next year" philosophy present in farm circles.

The Farm Improvement Loans Act has helped the farmer in the purchase of farm machinery—that is as long as the banks would lend money. The purchase of machinery and equipment generally does improve productivity; but in a situation where machine companies are allowed to set prices on the basis of market forces—and I think it has to be acknowledged that they have had, in some respect at least, something of a monopoly situation—the prices of machinery are bound to go up. The farmer has no choice, really, but to pay the shot if he is going to stay in business. The result has been that the farmer has been caught in this vicious cost-price squeeze. We have had static prices and rising costs. Thus, in spite of higher productivity, farmers have been at a disadvantage. We have had higher costs and lower returns which, in turn, have forced many of our farmers to expand. The only way out of the situation in which they found themselves was the use of larger machinery to carry on their operation. In some cases, after such machinery has been obtained it has been found, as a result of the cost-price spiral, that more land was needed in order to make use of the machinery economic. So, the vicious spiral continues.

Many farmers today are asking if it is necessary for each generation to buy out and repurchase the land they require for their farming operations. It seems to me that some of these problems need to be examined. The government established the Barber commission to investigate farm machinery prices. According to latest information, this report will not be available for some time. In the meantime farmers need machinery. At the moment, they are at the mercy of the machinery companies. If the government is really going to help farmers, they should take action to halt rising machine prices until longer run measures can be developed.

Last winter, Mr. Chairman, in western Canada we heard rumblings from Ottawa that farm credit legislation was receiving a long hard look. This raised the hopes of many people in the west that some new answers would be forthcoming. What happened? On the basis of what we see on the order paper, there are some housekeeping amendments; there is more of what we have had. We are throwing the farmer to the tender mercies of the market, as evidenced by the proposal in respect of interest rates. We do not have a comprehensive approach with regard to credit.

In this regard, it is disappointing to find that we have not tied in the total situation facing agriculture, involving both commercial farms and what might be defined as non-commercial farms. The approach of some people is, of course, that we have to get rid of non-commercial farms. I feel this is a false approach because there are many of these farms that could be helped to achieve an efficient and worthwhile economic status. Essentially, what we need is a different kind of credit for commercial and non-commercial operations. The present program is essentially helping commercial farmers. I feel we do need to have a look at other types of credit that will help what we might define as non-commercial farms.

In addition, we also have the situation facing young farmers which has been dealt with by some of the preceding speakers in this debate. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar has said we must consider the social consequences of what kind of rural community we are building and helping to encourage by the legislation before us. It is for this reason we need a comprehensive approach toward all aspects of credit needs. I think this makes good economic sense. It makes good social sense.

If this government is really dedicated to priorities, then it must come up with more than what is now on the order paper. No one will quarrel with the claim that the immediate needs have been brought to a crisis point by the dilly-dallying of the Liberal government. However, there is no indication in the legislation, except for one small reference in the minister's remarks, that the government is looking beyond the immediate, usual, typical, crisis needs. I hope that this attitude will be forthcoming and that we will have a more comprehensive look at the situation. I urge that the agriculture committee should hold hearings, both in respect of the present legislation and the longer run aspects of farm credit programs, in order that we can better establish the type of credit that is needed and also establish the relationship of credit programs to other farm policies and programs. In this committee, we would bring together specialists and experts, information and experience available in Canada and elsewhere and undertake a thorough study of farmer's needs, in order to arrive at an adequate, sound and far reaching credit program.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I want to thank hon. members for their advice—I may say some very constructive advice—in relation to the three resolutions that are before this committee by agreement. I think I should try to answer briefly some of the comments that have been made. I know hon. members cannot discuss the provisions of the bill in detail because they have not yet seen them. However, the bills are ready, and as soon as the resolutions are passed obviously they will be brought on. At that time perhaps a much more specific and intelligent discussion of the provisions of the bills can take place. I tried in my opening remarks to deal briefly and yet fairly comprehensively with the general idea behind the amendments; but, of course, the actual bills themselves will be more helpful to hon. members.

May I now reply briefly to some of the comments that have been made. The hon. member for Regina East who has just taken his seat took a very constructive approach to the whole question of farm credit. He complained that it was not tied to three particular aspects of farm policy—orderly marketing machinery, subsidized interest rates, and that sort of thing. May I remind him that these bills contain amendments to our farm credit acts. It is not the government's intention that these three bills be a complete revision of all our agricultural policies within the ambit of the three suggestions the hon. member made.

The hon. member also said, as a positive statement, that land prices were skyrocketing, that the interest rate was not causing this but that the availability of credit was the major factor. With that I agree, Mr. Chairman. One of the reasons the interest rate charged by the Farm Credit Corporation ought to move with the market is that in fact there is a distortion or artificial dislocation of the use of these funds if the rate is substantially lower than the market rate. This has the effect of inflating land prices, depending on the amount available. This is a simple economic fact with which I am sure all hon. members agree.

The hon. member also suggested that the agriculture committee—I presume he means the standing committee of this house—ought to take a look at the whole farm credit picture, its programs and policies. I have no objection at all to this, Mr. Chairman. As soon as the agriculture committee is constituted it may take up this task. The report of the Farm Credit Corporation, or any of the others could be referred to the standing committee so that that committee can go into the matter.

Several hon. members mentioned that they would like to see one or more of these bills referred to the standing committee. I thought I explained rather clearly at the outset that there just is not time. The Farm Improvement Loans Act amendments are needed now. The farmers have been denied facilities provided under this act. First of all, the act expired on June 30; but even more important, the effective operation of it expired long before that, owing to the fact that the interest rate was fixed at a statutory limit which was insufficiently attractive to the banks. Consequently they would make no loans.

What the government is now asking is to amend the act so that it will again become operative at a rate of interest that will attract the co-operation of the lenders, in this case the banks. We have also said we would be prepared to guarantee loans by other financial institutions, provided they met the conditions.

The hon. member for Meadow Lake also suggested that the F.C.C. amendments should go to committee. Another problem here, Mr. Chairman, is this: The capitalization of the Farm Credit Corporation is presently $40 million. As I explained, this allows us to lend up to $1 billion. Almost all of that amount of money has now been lent by the corporation. This capitalization needs to be expanded so as to accommodate applications after the date this $1,040 million has been used up.

The hon. member also said that he would not accept the suggestion that the interest rate be turned over to a board. In other words, he would not agree to a board setting the interest rate. The resolution makes very clear that the interest rate is not going to be set by a board, but will be set from time to time by the governor in council.

Mr. Nesbitt: That will be worse.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, it may be worse in some opinions, but I must remind hon. gentlemen of the opposition that on June 25 the people of Canada decided who was going to make the laws of this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Olson: Hon. gentlemen opposite, who have been reduced in number from 96 to 72, I think it is, ought to have got the message by this time.

Mr. Harkness: You might remember that you still represent a minority.

Mr. Olson: If the hon. gentleman for Calgary Centre does not like the terms of the elections act, then I suggest he make representations to the appropriate committee and see whether he can get the act changed. I think the ballots were added up in the proper way, Mr. Chairman, and you know what was the result.

Mr. Harkness: You are just bringing in a red herring. I merely reminded you that you represent a minority of the people of Canada.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I suggest that any party that gets more members in this house than any other party has the right under the traditions of this country to form the government.

The hon. member for Frontenac wondered whether or not broadening the classes of people who would be eligible to borrow under the F.C.C. act would result in corporations controlling what he referred to as full parishes, as far as agriculture is concerned. I should like him to know that we are broadening the base so that family corporations, of which there is an increasing number in farming, as well as co-operatives would be eligible to make application. However, this particular aspect of the legislation will be confined to farmers who are actually farming.

The hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley made a number of suggestions. He wanted to be assured that no loan company would be included under the F.I.L. act unless it was familiar with agricultural operations. I do not know exactly what the hon. member means by this. If he is suggesting that there should be some restrictions so that these companies could not over-extend the amount of a loan to the point where the farmer could not pay it back, then I do not think this is really a big problem. The problem we are now having is to find financial institutions, be they banks or any other, which will lend farmers as much money as they want to borrow. Certain regulations, of course, in relation to government guaranteed loans will be laid down, and also I hope there will be an interest rate that is substantially lower than what might be called the competitive or commercial rate now in effect for this type of loan.

The hon. member also wanted some kind of means test incorporated into the F.C.C. legislation. According to my notes, he said that loans should be made only to those who need them the most. I am not entirely sure, Mr. Chairman, how this can be applied. The purpose of the Farm Credit Corporation was to finance the creation of economic farm units which would be able to pay their way, as well as return to the farmer a reasonable living.

If we were to prescribe a regulation of this kind in trying to set up economic farm units, no matter how good or how humanitarian the idea might be I am not sure it would be compatible with the economic considerations which we hope are not lost sight of in this act. The hon. member also suggested that the interest rate should be set by parliament and that the question should go before the standing committee. Well, I explained a few minutes ago that we needed to increase the capital of this corporation without delay, so that it could carry on its services to farmers.

The hon. member for Crowfoot complained that machinery sales, in western Canada particularly, had declined anywhere from 26 per cent to 34 per cent in Saskatchewan, and I agree that this is so. But it is well known that a large percentage of all farm machinery purchased prior to ten months ago was financed through the provisions of the Farm Improvement Loans Act, until interest rates elsewhere rose sharply and the banks stopped lending under this legislation. That is why we are here asking that the rate be changed so that it will again become attractive to the banks to make these loans.

My information is that machinery sales will increase as soon as this legislation is reactivated. Dozens of farmers have written to me asking when the new provisions might be expected, and they are delaying the purchase of machinery until that date because the rates offered them now by the banks and other institutions are as high as 10 or 12 per cent. We think there will be a marked reduction in the cost of these loans to farmers if the government guarantees are reinstated, resulting in rates substantially lower than those now being asked. The hon. member also urged that the subject of the Farm Credit Corporation be referred to the standing committee but, as I explained a few minutes ago, we need this increase in capital quickly.

The hon. member for Timiskaming claimed that the farm machinery syndicates were of little interest to the small farmer, but only to what he referred to as the Cadillac trade. I suggest to him that exactly the opposite is true, and this is borne out by our limited experience of the legislation. It has allowed groups of farmers to finance a Cadillac type of farm equipment which they could not otherwise afford to buy; a machine might be too big or too expensive for one individual to purchase but it could be bought through a syndicate in co-operation with other farmers.

Through this legislation credit facilities have been provided enabling small farmers to buy the type of machinery which "Cadillac farmers" could probably buy themselves as individuals. So I think the hon. member's argument is completely contrary to the spirit and purpose of the act. He also expressed his concern about the interest rate, and this is a theme which ran through most of the speeches made by hon. gentlemen opposite. I did not follow the gist of all he had to say, but it leads to the same argument again: The interest rate has to be set high enough to induce the banks and other lending institutions to support the act. At the same time, with a government guarantee they can lend at substantially lower rates than those now being charged for this kind of credit.

Mr. Horner: Would the minister permit a question? While he is dealing with farm syndicates would he mind outlining in detail the responsibility which each shareholder must accept under the new policy?

Mr. Olson: I am sure the hon. member is familiar with the provisions contained in the act at the present time. I hope he can be patient for a little while because I am ready to bring on all these measures, now, and he can read the provisions in detail. He could then be given a complete explanation as to what those words mean. Even if he and I do not understand them completely, I shall have experts present at that stage who will.

Mr. Horner: I gather from that remark that the minister himself is not quite sure about them and wants the experts help him explain.

Mr. Olson: I wish to thank the hon. member for Lambton-Kent for his kindly opening remarks. He may disagree with parts of the several resolutions. However, I think he is in fundamental disagreement with the principles set forth by the hon. member for Kent-Essex, who seemed to think the government had the responsibility to move in and take over in connection with almost every farming activity—marketing, rates of interest and so on. The hon. member for Lambton-Kent thought we should let the banks carry on their traditional role in farm credit. He was wondering about the publication of the interest rates and the formula which should be used to calculate the interest rate from time to time. I am not sure I know just how often interest rates would be changed. The proposal is that they should be changed "from time to time" and that is the phrase used. But applicants would certainly know at the time they made their applications what the interest rate was to be, and there is no intention of changing the interest rates in connection with a signed contract.

Then the hon. member was worried lest some time in the future there should be a weak cabinet responsible for setting these interest rates. All I can say in response to that is that we must proceed on the assumption that all governments will be as strong and as resolute as the one we have today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Olson: The hon. member for Lotbinière had something to say about potatoes and the fact that potatoes had to be destroyed before qualifying for payment at the rate of 1 cent a pound. I believe his criticism was directed toward the federal government as being responsible for these rules and regulations; but according to my inquiries this is a matter for the provincial government, and the hon. member will have to take this question up with the provincial authorities.

The hon. member went on to say there were many political and financial problems in the international arena. I do not disagree with this. We have to try to resolve these difficulties while facing the realities of the world situation as it is; we must do our best for the agricultural community while living with the policies set in the international market.

I was very happy to hear that he agrees with many of the amendments that have been suggested. I am also happy to note that he agrees that hon. members of this house ought to be co-operating to bring about as quickly as possible the improvements that have been proposed. I can assure him that it is our hope that the rate will be lower than 9 per cent or 10 per cent. If I understood him correctly he was apprehensive that the rate might go up to 9 per cent or 10 per cent. It is certainly my hope it will not be that high.

The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar claimed that all of the federal government farm credit acts and farm credit programs were not in a package. Indeed this series of resolutions and bills does not put all of the credit into one package, but I have to say to him that presenting these measures to the house in a package was a step in the right direction. We wanted to have a full debate without complaining about the rules of relevancy, dividing the debate into the various fields of farm improvement loans, the credit corporation and so on.

We believe that the Farm Improvement Loans Act is one of the easiest ways to provide credit for the purchase of machinery, and even of small portions of land, and the latter is contained in the resolution. Where there are larger amounts and longer terms involved we believe they are better handled under the Farm Credit Corporation and by the very competent field staff it has all over the country to supervise this lending.

I think the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar knows very well why the private lenders are not in this field. It is simply because of certain experiences they had 20 or 30 years ago, and that the service and the interest rates charged by the F.C.C. have been such that any private financial institution would not want to compete with them. I agree with him that there probably is room for some additional co-ordination, but we have to balance that with the fact that we need to get the F.I.L.A. under way as quickly as possible, together with the increase in the capital for the Farm Credit Corporation.

The hon. member was also worried about the problems of the banks and other institutions in having to set up field services and acquire a lot of additional supporting staff to make loans for land under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. At this point we do not have all the detail worked out, but I would like to advise him and other hon. members that we hope some kind of arrangement can be made so that the field services, the competent personnel of the F.C.C., could be made available in an advisory capacity to the banks and other financial institutions making loans for land under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, and which do not at this time have the assessors to give them advice on that point.

Turning now to the remarks of the hon. member for Kent-Essex, who was first and certainly shall not be last, he wanted the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act sent to the standing committee on agriculture.

Mr. Danforth: The Farm Credit Corporation.

Mr. Olson: Well, I have to give him exactly the same answer I have given previously, that we need the amendments now and we do not have enough time to send it to the committee.

Mr. Korchinski: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Olson: I shall be finished in just a few minutes. There are other ways of having the committee undertake an investigation or study of farm credit. One is by referring the report of the Farm Credit Corporation to the committee. It would achieve essentially the same thing, and would not hold up the passage of the amending bill so that we can make the necessary changes.

The hon. member for Kent-Essex also said that we should not keep putting off decisions pending receipt of findings and recommendations from the task force. I want to say to him that we are not putting off decisions. We are moving ahead with a group of amendments that we think are useful and beneficial at this time, but we are not ruling out accepting some of the recommendations of the task force when it has had enough time to gather together the research projects it has initiated. We are moving now, and we will be prepared to move again on further amendments when the task force comes forth with its recommendations.

The hon. member also complained that there should be a fixed formula rather than a prescribed interest rate for the Farm Credit Corporation. If we set down a fixed rate such as the economic rate, I would remind him that the definition of an economic rate used to be 1 per cent above the amount that money costs the government, or the Farm Credit Corporation. I further suggest to him that a prescribed rate would be better than providing an economic rate in the act, because a prescribed rate provides the opportunity to change the rate from time to time, and it does not necessarily have to be 1 per cent above the cost of funds to the corporation.

Mr. Horner: What about one half of one per cent?

Mr. Olson: A prescribed rate could be that. It could be less than the Minister of Finance charges the corporation.

Mr. Horner: Are you prepared to argue that it should be less?

Mr. Olson: I suggest to the hon. member that it could be. A prescribed rate is a decision that is reached by the governor in council from time to time, and I think we need the kind of flexibility that would be embodied in a prescribed rate, rather than some fixed formula. Mr. Chairman, I simply wanted to answer some of the questions raised by hon. members in their speeches since I introduced these three resolutions. Again, in closing, I want to thank hon. members on both sides for being helpful in bringing their views to me with respect to farm credit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Korchinski: Since the minister has indicated there is no time to take the Farm Credit Corporation before a committee I wish to ask him, according to the amount that is being lent at the present rate, how much time it will take to deplete the corporation's reserves?

Mr. Olson: My information is that under present capitalization we cannot extend more than $1,040 million, and that we are right about there now.

Mr. Korchinski: How long will it take before this is depleted? Will it be a month or two? Maybe three weeks would be all that would be necessary for the standing committee to finish its work.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I have been around here for eight or nine years now and

I doubt if we could complete the study, in a standing committee, of a bill of such magnitude in a matter of three weeks. I would not like to risk the Farm Credit Corporation being placed in a position of having to turn away all applicants simply because the act was going through some process and we could not get it back into the house, amend it, and have it passed. I cannot tell the hon. member the exact date that the F.C.C. is going to run out of funds. All I know is that its commitments to date and the applications it has in now, even though all the applications have not been approved, exceeds the amount of the capitalization.

Mr. Horner: The minister suggested that after he was finished he would be glad to answer questions. In view of the necessity that the Farm Credit Corporation be granted more money, after having granted more money to the corporation would the minister refer the last annual report of the corporation, which would include of course the farm machinery syndicates credit bill, to the agriculture committee for study and advisement.

Mr. Olson: I do not know whether such a committee even exists at the moment. I do not know whether I would like to refer a report to a non-existent body. Because I have not been here all that long, I am not quite sure whether we can in fact refer such a report. I think perhaps the committee, to some extent, is its own master in that regard.

Mr. Horner: The minister did not understand my question. All I want from him is his assurance that he and the government are fully prepared to offer to the agriculture committee the annual report of the Farm Credit Corporation for a detailed study. If the committee should reject that offer, then that would be fine.

Mr. Olson: All the estimates are to go to the committees. I expect there is an item in the estimates which would cover the subject the hon. gentleman has in mind, and the exhaustive study the hon. gentleman wishes could be made at that time. It is obvious that the committees will be extremely busy, and therefore it would be difficult to give the undertaking the hon. gentleman desires because we do not wish to load up the committees with more work than perhaps they can do.

Mr. Horner: The committee members, who are farmers, are very industrious.

Mr. Olson: We will take the suggestion into consideration.

Mr. McCutcheon: Last evening I thought I had made a reasonable suggestion concerning a formula to arrive at interest rates. Would the minister tell me why this government appears to be unwilling or afraid to allow the light of day to enter into the procedure of establishing rates.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, this government does not take a position of preventing the light of day into anything. As soon as this resolution passes we will bring on the bill, and then hon. members will be in a position to see in considerably more detail what is contained in it. If the hon. member for Lambton-Kent has stated a precise formula for establishing rates, I must have missed it because I do not have a reference to it in my notes.

Mr. Horner: We will move the amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Chairman, now that I have the floor, I would like to express some views about such an important and controversial matter.

I am very happy to have heard the comments of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) beforehand. I must say that I am not convinced of the value of the bill presented by the minister, and instead of trying to establish what priority must be given to finding institutions which will agree to lend money at an unknown interest rate, I feel that it is more important to examine the situation of the farming people and to find other ways to help them.

I would be in favour of looking for ways and means first to guarantee acceptable prices to all farmers and then to determine the possibilities of consumption of our production before thinking of imports.

I wonder whether the most important thing at the present time is to find lending means. Surely it is a worthy undertaking, but it is not a very brilliant measure in the present circumstances.

The bill broadens the classes of persons eligible for loans, and also broadens the purposes for which loans can be made. Those are things which I endorse in principle. However, when it comes to increasing loans from $15,000 to $25,000, when we consider that the rate of 5 per cent was the maximum rate of interest payable by farmers and that we cannot guarantee a fixed rate for that extension of loans, I wonder how we, who committed ourselves to defending the farming class, who honestly undertook to find solutions to help them, could vote in favour of such a measure without denying our commitments.

Besides, I wonder what would be the situation of those members who agreed with such a proposal. How can anybody honestly vote in favour of such legislation, as I am convinced that all those members representing constituencies with agricultural areas have, like all the others, pledged themselves to fight this interest rate, to help the farmers and to find solutions.

The solution proposed by the Minister of Agriculture does not, under the present circumstances, appear very brilliant or acceptable.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think that the loans are a matter for concern. It is certainly possible to help our farmers through the granting of loans, but increasing them will not solve the problem. Loans would simply prolong the present agony of our farmers.

I feel the need is more pressing for means to ensure first of all, decent prices to our farmers. Subsidies are, to my mind, mere band-aids. What our farmers need urgently is for the government to find the means of enabling them to farm their land more profitably.

For instance, I imagine the Department of Agriculture is aware of the April commission report which was submitted to the province of Quebec and which indicated that underground drainage was a priority in that province.

I fail to understand why no one has ever mentioned that the government could put a certain amount of money at the disposal of Quebec; and I imagine that the same problem exists in Ontario where many farmers must have paid the cost of that drainage themselves. I should think that it would be advantageous to allocate certain amounts of money for that underground drainage in the various provinces of Canada which need it, thus enabling our farmers to work on their land earlier in the spring, and later in the fall.

I think this would help our farmers. We might have to come to grants which are only poultices. They are instruments to guarantee prices, and it will only be through co-ordination and planning that we will be able to help our farmers. I think that is what they hope and want. I also believe it is our duty to try and find a plan adjusted to the various kinds of farming that exist in the various areas of this country.

It is certain that, in Quebec particularly, we have diversified farming. This is no reason, I think, not to give each kind of farming the attention it deserves. This diversified farming could even allow the farmers to have a better life if we had some planning and this is the responsibility of the government.

With regard to the research station established in Quebec under federal jurisdiction and according to a certain plan, I think it would be profitable to find markets to meet the demands of the population and to direct the farmers to those markets where the demand is increasing. They could be helped to practise land selection, for example, which would allow them to make better use of their land, since production would be geared to the quality of their land.

In my opinion, these measures would be much more beneficial than trying to find more credit.

I realize that the farmer needs a certain amount of credit, but I do not think we can solve his problems or help him to a better life by lending him more money or by passing a law which would force him to pay a higher rate of interest. As the hon. minister said a while ago, the interest rate of 5 per cent seems unacceptable to him. As for me, I do not honestly think that the farmer is inclined and able to pay more. Of course, the government will have to agree to pay the difference in rate if it is really necessary to increase the interest to over 5 per cent to find that money. But I do not see the possibility of supporting the motion when I cannot get the assurance that the farmers will continue to pay a rate of 5 per cent on their loans.

When considering the situation of the farmers in Canada, I feel sure that we all honestly want to improve the condition of that class of citizens. May I make a suggestion, Mr. Chairman? In my opinion, we could find cheaper labour for those farmers. How? This time, I will disprove the argument that the government could put forward, namely, that we do not have the necessary funds. In fact, I think that such a suggestion would not call for supplementary estimates on the part of the government, in view of the fact the farmer could go and get that manpower at the employment office as he does at the present time. During the harvesting season, when there is a great demand for labour, I wonder if the government could not accept that the individual who actually receives unemployment insurance benefits would go and work on the farms.

The Unemployment Insurance Commission then would not make him lose his benefits, and the farmer could undertake to pay him the same amount that he receives from the Unemployment Insurance Office. This way, the farmers could get cheaper labour than they do at the present time and the worker then would have to work on the farm and get twice the amount of the benefits he receives at the present time.

Let us suppose a weekly average of $45. Whether he is earning $45 a week or receiving unemployment benefits of $45 a week does not bother the government. Besides assisting the worker, the adoption of such legislation would be a tremendous asset to the farmer who could, at the same time, obtain more farm labour and avoid the loss of his crops. His crops could be stored more quickly, thus avoiding losses because of frost or rain. Such an undertaking would be the solution we are looking for that would help the farmer to market his produce at a reduced cost price. Furthermore, improvements in prices to consumers could be envisaged and they would consist in better prices for the consumers of agricultural products. I think this measure would be applicable in this case. This is one method for our farmers to obtain labour at a cheaper price. There are a thousand ways to help them. I hope the government will give this matter serious consideration. At any rate, I hope that, in the course of discussions in this house concerning the agricultural class, it will be granted the respect and consideration it deserves. Granting the farmers the consideration they deserve and sharing their concern through workable and clear legislation will surely help them.

Mr. Chairman, those were the comments I wanted to express. I had to make them and I assure the present government that it is impossible to limit our discussion to granting additional credit, for this is not the priority we should give the agricultural class of this country, and especially those I represent in my province.

[English]

Mr. Schreyer: Those of us who knew the Minister of Agriculture when he sat on this side of the house know that at one time at least he had some very definite ideas and convictions about agricultural policy. On numerous occasions we used to discuss things over here behind the curtain, including our ideas relating to the case that could be made for price supports of farm products in this country. We talked, too, about the maximum extent of price supports possible. We know also that the minister had some views about agricultural credit.

When I listened to his speech in introducing this legislation to the house and recommending it to hon. members I found it a bit painful. He has learned the language of the establishment pretty quickly. When he succumbed to the Liberal party they took him to their bosom and whispered code words into his ears, because he came across with a pretty good imitation. Perhaps he was convincing to hon. members opposite, but he was really not very convincing to hon. members in this part of the chamber. Surely the minister must have some grave misgivings about the course of action he has recommended to this house.

The Minister of Agriculture recommended a course of action which will have the effect of increasing interest rates to the farmers of this country. Perhaps he more than anyone else here should know that increased interest rates will increase the cost of production. The government should be prepared to follow this credit legislation with a measure respecting farm income and price supports. We are being invited at this time to agree to the suggestion that we squeeze the farmers a little bit harder, as though they have not been squeezed hard enough in the past decade and a half. I am sure the former hon. member for Assiniboia, who now sits in the other place, will have some explaining to do.

Does the minister realize that according to the fifth chapter of the report from the Economic Council of Canada our agricultural industry has greater problems than the industry in the United States? The council has shown in its report tabled a few weeks ago that the rate of growth in agricultural productivity is lagging behind that of the United States. At this point I might say that I am not sure this is the case. I came across a recent publication from Toronto in which two learned economists take a rather different view about the relative growth rates in the two countries. I have not heard the minister take issue with the contents of the fifth chapter of the Economic Council. If he has not taken issue, one must presume he agrees in large part that the growth of agricultural productivity in Canada has not been keeping pace with that of the United States. If that is the fact we should be doing something about it. One of the things we should not be doing is increasing the cost of capital to our farmers.

The cost of farm credit in the country to the south of us is being maintained at a rate considerably lower than it is here. Does the minister have any information to give this house as to the present United States rate applying to farm credit loans being granted now by the farmers home administration in the United States, which is the credit granting agency there?

It is my understanding that all classes of loans being granted by the farmers home administration in the U.S.A. are being granted at an interest rate of 5 per cent, except for emergency loans which are granted at an interest rate of 3 per cent. In connection with the farmers home administration across the border, since I am on the subject, here one has a concrete example of the kind of thing that my colleague the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar referred to the other night, namely that there should be more scope and variety in the kinds of farm credit available to farmers in this country. There should be operating capital loans, and these should be of a short, intermediate and long term nature. They should be available more as a package, and there should be much more credit supervision in respect of farmers taking out such loans. This is not the case at the present time.

I do not want to deal with this matter at any greater length because it has been adequately covered by other hon. members. But I again stress that the minister is not only disappointing us but is displaying a certain amount of gall in asking us on this side of the house to approve a measure that will have the effect of increasing interest rates, and therefore the costs of production which, according to my very rapid and rough calculation, will mean an additional $10 million a year in production costs in this country. If interest rates were to increase by one or two percentage points, amortizing this over 25 or 30 years it will amount to an additional cost of many thousands of dollars to a young farmer taking on an operation in a transfer between father and son.

All of this can hardly be justified. The minister has one argument. He wants us to agree to amend the existing farm credit statutes because he says the present rates are unrealistic. I believe he used the word "unrealistic". I ask, unrealistic to whom?

Mr. Woolliams: To the banks.

Mr. Schreyer: To the bankers, no doubt, and the bankers association. But to farmers who have been struggling under low profit margins and low income levels for many years, any increase in interest rates is unrealistic. It all depends whose ox is being gored. One can see that the minister's approach is not far removed from that of the bankers association, otherwise he would not say the present interest rates are unrealistic.

I should like to quote just three sentences from the fifth chapter of the fifth annual review of the Economic Council of Canada:

> Prices of farm products have increased much less than prices of other goods and services over the past two decades. This has meant that the prices of the goods sold by farmers have, on average, increased less rapidly than the prices of goods purchased by farmers. And this has meant, in turn, that part of the income-generating benefits arising from the rapid rate of growth of agricultural productivity have been shifted from the farm sector to other sectors of the economy.

There is an admission by the Economic Council of Canada that there has been an impressive increase in agricultural productivity and efficiency, that there have been impressive benefits accruing therefrom, but that the benefits which have been realized from this increased efficiency and productivity on our farms have not been retained by Canadian farmers but have been passed on to other sectors of the economy. That being so, it is not difficult to justify making a plea to the minister that agricultural credit, and in particular the operations of the Farm Credit Corporation and long term credit, be maintained as instruments of national policy. One may be prepared to concede grudgingly that capital that is lent under the aegis of the Farm Improvement Loans Act is, after all, money that is being lent from private sources and through private channels, and there is probably not much that can be done to contain these interest rates in the light of the action taken by this government two years ago when it revised the Bank Act.

At that time the government took the ceiling off interest rates. Now Canadian farmers are paying the consequences of this ill-conceived action which the Minister of Labour, I must say to his credit, did not vote for at that time. The Farm Credit Corporation is quite another matter. It is a crown corporation, a public corporation. It can acquire the necessary moneys through the government of Canada from the sale of government securities.

With respect to the operations of the F.C.C. and the interest rate charged on farm credit loans, a government with any intention at all of trying to keep down the costs of production as far as it was in its power to do, any government which had a real sense of concern about the income level of Canadian farmers, would maintain the Farm Credit Corporation and the interest rate as a deliberate instrument of national policy.

If there is to be an element of subsidization, so be it. So there should be, particularly in the light of the statement which I have just read from the report of the Economic Council of Canada which of course can be found in other places as well. Any economist who has carried out an in-depth analysis of the farm industry and farm income in this country is bound to come to the same conclusion, namely that the benefits which have been realized from an increase in productivity on Canadian farms has been passed on to other sectors of our economy.

There is, therefore, a place here for reciprocation. The reciprocation should come at least in the form of a Farm Credit Corporation loan interest rate that is kept low and stable, say at 5 per cent. Does this government have so little confidence in its ability to bring down interest rates in this country that it feels it cannot live with the 5 per cent interest rate now being charged by the Farm Credit Corporation?

Interest rates have climbed in the past 18 months and, one assumes, have reached a peak of the cycle and will now start to subside. It is to be assumed that fairly soon they will be coming down to the trough which existed a few years ago. This government does not think in terms of cycles in the economy any more. They have taken the lid off interest rates. I suppose they now think they will never again see the day when interest rates are what they were in the early part of 1965.

I know other hon. members have submitted to the minister that, if not under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, at least with respect to the Farm Credit Corporation—a genuine attempt should be made to try to keep the interest rate—at its present level, and that should be done as a matter of deliberate policy. I assume this is why some hon. members have asked that this bill respecting the F.C.C. be referred to the standing committee on agriculture. The minister was evasive in this respect. I did not understand him to say definitely no, but I certainly did not understand him to say definitely yes.

There is one question I would like the minister to answer either tonight, tomorrow or when the bill reaches second reading, and that is how he and his colleagues in the cabinet intend to play any part in improving the productivity of Canadian agriculture, if they take action to increase the cost of loan capital to Canadian farmers. We know that the amount of capital input required by the farmers has been rising dramatically each year. It is hard to estimate just what the average required capital input is these days, but let us say it is approximately $75,000 or $80,000. It will certainly be more than that in a few years. The government proposes to increase the cost of this essential factor, but it will not do very much to help that industry increase its productivity. I wish the minister and the Economic Council of Canada would get together.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, I understand there are three resolutions now before the house, one of which will be voted upon in a very few minutes. I shall therefore confine my remarks to the subject matter of this resolution prior to the vote, and continue on with the other two following it.

When the subject of agriculture in any of its forms comes before the house we have to remember two things in looking at the proposed legislation concerning agriculture. One is that agriculture is still by far the largest industry in Canada, and the second is that agriculture is a particularly unique industry for two reasons: One, that it is affected very much by the weather, which is a very important factor because in this country, as we all know, the vagaries of our climate can have a tremendous influence on the crops produced, and the second is that agriculture, because of its very nature, is very much affected by the actions of other governments. I think that while other industries are affected to some degree by the actions of other governments, no industry is affected to the same degree as agriculture, and I will come to this a little later on in my remarks.

I think these two facts are very important and should be borne in mind, because much of the legislation affecting agriculture is regularly misinterpreted by many sections of the public. There is no other industry that is affected by the weather, and that is as uncertain as is agriculture.

There is perhaps a third factor which must be remembered, namely that it is certainly the responsibility of any government to ensure that the food supply of this country and of certain other countries which rely on Canada is protected.

It is for these reasons among others that very often agriculture has received special consideration in the days gone by. I am referring of course to subsidies, subsidized interest rates and the like. This is very important because of the three rather special factors which do not affect other industries to the same extent. I have heard it said, particularly by those who do not come from farm communities, that farmers are always complaining, and that they always get special attention. But I repeat that there are no industries in this country, and so far as I know anywhere else, which have these special qualities and which need special concern.

The first resolution before us concerns the farm credit corporation. The minister has attempted to answer some of the questions that have been put by members of this house, but I am afraid I cannot agree with his answers. It is certainly interesting to see how things change. I can remember the time when the minister sat in another quarter of the house and when he used to think that any interest rates were the handmaiden of the cities of the Plain. But now that he is on the opposite side of the house he no longer has any worries about Sodom and Gomorrah, and thinks in fact that higher interest rates are appropriate. It certainly seems very strange how things change over the years in this house. So far as the Farm Credit Corporation is concerned, I certainly hope that the minister and his colleagues will not insist on any change in the 5 per cent interest rates. Loans made through the Farm Credit Corporation are very long term in nature and we know that at the moment interest rates are high—but they tend to average at 5 per cent over the years. In any event, for the three reasons I mentioned earlier, agriculture deserves special consideration, and I think that 5 per cent is a reasonable rate of interest to be charged; certainly no more.

I also agree with other hon. members who have suggested that the bill on the Farm Credit Act should be referred to the standing committee on agriculture. The minister tried to explain this away rather vaguely by saying it should be passed in a hurry because the need of the farmers is urgent. This explanation might apply to the farm improvement loan bill, but I do not think it applies in this case. It is true there may be some farmers waiting to make applications after the act has been amended, but I think more farmers are interested in finding out how some of the policies on loans are evolved. If I recall correctly, it has been about 10 years since the Farm Credit Corporation or any of its officials have been before the committee on agriculture. Only the other day this government suggested that we look into the matter of delegated legislation. I think it would be a very good start if the committee on agriculture started looking into some of the activities of the Farm Credit Corporation, how their policies are made, who gets loans, etc.

I am sure these things would be of great interest to farmers, and most farmers applying for loans would not mind waiting a few days longer if they could get some of the other matters ironed out. When in a cavalier fashion the minister brushed this suggestion off, I think he made a big mistake.

I hope that when the standing committee on agriculture is set up, the minister will recommend to his colleagues in the government that sooner or later the activities of the Farm Credit Corporation be referred to the committee for study, because many of the things I mentioned are of great concern to the farmers. I hope that if he will not do it by means of this bill, when it appears, he will do it in some other way.

So far as the farm improvement loans resolution is concerned, we still do not know exactly what the government will do with respect to the interest rates, except that we know it will increase them. I think everyone knows that one of the difficulties people have in obtaining loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act is that the interest rate has been set at 5 per cent.

I raised this matter a good many times in the last parliament, and I am glad to see the government will do something about it. If the interest rate is only raised to a small degree and some sort of sliding scale is evolved by the cabinet, I do not think it will help very much, because at the present time banks lend all the money they have available for loans at 10 per cent and more, and they do not worry too much about guarantees. The fact that these loans are guaranteed by the government will not be a great incentive. There will be some improvement, no doubt, if the interest rate is raised, but that is not the answer. I do not believe this is going to answer the demand for loans. I should like to suggest to the minister—

• (9:20 p.m.)

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Nesbitt: —that rather than have an uncertain interest rate—

The Chairman: Order, please. Pursuant to standing order 61A, it is my duty to now put the question. Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar on a point of order?

Mr. Gleave: No; am I not permitted to make a speech?

The Chairman: No, according to standing order 61A the time for the discussion of this resolution has now expired, and it is my duty to put the question. All those in favour please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Chairman: All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Chairman: In my opinion, the yeas have it. Shall I report the resolution?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Olson thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-110, to amend the Farm Credit Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FARM MACHINERY SYNDICATES CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENTS TO BROADEN PURPOSES OF LOANS, ENABLE CO-OPERATIVE ASSOCIATIONS TO OBTAIN LOANS, ETC.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure amending the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act to broaden the purposes for which loans may be made under that act; to enable co-operative farm associations and certain farming corporations and other associations to obtain loans under that act without the members or shareholders thereof being required to enter into any other formal agreement; and to provide for other consequential and related subjects.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

Mr. Nesbitt: A few moments ago, I was discussing the matter of interest rates in connection with the Farm Improvement Loans Act. At that time I indicated that I thought whatever scheme the minister devised for slightly increasing interest rates under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, there will probably be difficulty in obtaining much additional money that way. At the present time, of course, the banks are able to lend most of the money they have available for loans at a much higher rate of interest than the government will be able to provide. The banks will not be worried about security because at the present time they do not seem to be bothering about that aspect of things.

Consequently there is something I hope the minister might take into consideration and that is, instead of increasing the interest rate under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, which loans are in the nature of short term or interim term credit, the government might set up a fund similar to the fund it has for the Farm Credit Corporation. In this way, those who borrow under the Farm Improvement Loans Act would know exactly what rate of interest they would be paying. If this arrangement were set up, then the government would not have to rely on the banks to lend money to farmers at whatever interest rate may be decided if the banks decided to lend the money at all.

The farmer would have some assurance of how much interest he would have to pay over the years. I feel that if the government really wants to help farmers with regard to short term loans, the thing to do would be to set up a fund similar to the Farm Credit Corporation fund, and set an interest rate of 5 per cent. When the minister was discussing the Farm Improvement Loans Act he said that some of the functions of this act and those of the Farm Credit Corporation overlapped. He said people could borrow money from a bank under the Farm Improvement Loans Act to make a small purchase of land. Since there is an obvious attempt, apparently, to sort of overlap the arrangements between the Farm Credit Corporation and the Farm Improvement Loans Act, I would think a good way would be to combine the two, put both short term and long term credit under the Farm Credit Corporation. This can be done quite easily by setting up the necessary fund. Then we would not have people going to a bank and finding one branch of the bank turning down a farmer, while another branch said yes. We would get some standardization in this way, as well as lower interest rates.

At the moment, the need for credit of those engaged in agriculture is great. If the government had taken a greater interest in farm policies in days gone by, there would not be the necessity for the extension of credit facilities at this time. Most people do not want to borrow money because it is very difficult to pay it back at the interest rates that are charged now. As I said earlier, I believe the government has a very special responsibility toward agriculture because the government has the responsibility for preserving the country's food supply. We now have a very serious problem in agriculture, and this may very well have a great bearing on the amount of funds available, and the interest rates under this proposed resolution. I refer to the corn problem in Canada.

This problem is a complex one as most agricultural problems usually are. Very briefly, Mr. Chairman, it is this: First, Canada produces at the present time approximately 70 per cent of its corn needs; the rest comes from the United States of America. Second, the United States government subsidizes in one way or another United States corn growers so that the United States grower receives approximately $1.35 per bushel U.S. funds. Third, the United States grades its corn very differently from the way Canadian grades are rated. This helps what is popularly known as the dumping of corn in Canada. Somebody put it very well when he said that this is "dumping by grading." Fourth, United States corn tends to come into the Canadian market just before the Canadian corn is harvested. Fifth, at the present time the United States government, because of a very large corn crop in the United States, is very anxious to get rid of its stockpiles of corn which it has been piling up for the last year or so. Room is required to store new corn.

Now, Mr. Chairman, remember that the growers in the United States are getting at least $1.35 per bushel as a result of United States government subsidies. This United States corn is dumped on the market in Chicago as low, so I am informed, as 31-cents a bushel. Granted, this is probably very low grade corn, but lots of tricks can be played with the grading of corn.

This, Mr. Chairman, hardly seems fair. Since we import 30 per cent of our corn needs, perhaps slightly more, from the United States, the price in the United States tends greatly to affect the price in Canada. I am reliably informed that by the end of this week one of the popular grades of corn in this country will be selling for about $1 per bushel. Corn costs the Canadian farmers an average of $1.22 a bushel to produce. I realize it is difficult to be accurate when talking of averages, but according to the best information I have been able to get, that is the present cost to Canadian corn farmers. If the average price goes down to $1 per bushel, then it is very easy to see what is going to happen to the corn farmers of this country.

Perhaps the government did not foresee this coming, Mr. Chairman, but many corn farmers did. A lot of the best corn lands in Canada have been sold in the last short while to what I am informed are wealthy buyers of land from other countries, particularly the United States. These people are purchasing a lot of our best corn lands. I do not think this is an exactly desirable state of affairs. We often complain about our industry, our resources and our lands being taken over by our good neighbours. I do not blame the United States for this; business is business. I blame the government for allowing this sort of thing to happen. If the farmers are forced to sell their corn at $1 a bushel, and perhaps even less before the season is out, since it costs them $1.22 to produce the result will be inevitable.

Dumping is normally understood to be a situation where a country sells its produce abroad at a price lower than it sells it on its domestic markets. Mr. Chairman, this is a piece of fancy fiction. As anyone with experience with dumping duties knows, dumping can be achieved in all sorts of ways—by means of subsidies, direct and indirect, soil banks, special grading of a product, avoidance and evasion of laws, evasion of GATT, and in other ways.

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that while technically the United States government may not be dumping corn in Canada since it is selling it, and has been selling it only recently, at 31-cents a bushel in Chicago, it is in actual fact dumping corn in this country, and everybody knows it. This is not the fault of the Canadian farmers. It is not because they are inefficient. It is because the government permits this to happen. The government has very much of a responsibility to protect the people of Canada from this sort of activity. The responsible officials of the Department of Agriculture must have known that this would take place this fall; everybody else seemed to know. However, nothing has been done.

It is the responsibility of this government to protect Canadian citizens from acts of foreign governments. This whole problem, Mr. Chairman, has been caused by the activities of the United States government. I do not blame them. After all, they are only looking after their own people and their own problems. However, their actions affect us. They affect our country and our farmers, who are good and efficient farmers. I suggest that we should not stand for this kind of activity that is depressing the price of Canadian corn.

One argument that has been made, and I think a fallacious one, is that if we cannot produce corn economically in this country, then we should let the corn farmers grow something else. This reminds me of an old expression which was attributed to the unfortunate Queen of France, who said: "If they have no bread, let them eat cake". This of course does not make sense. The United States might not have a surplus of corn next year so there would not be any to dump. In that event, there would be no corn in this country, and this might cause quite a few problems. We cannot rely on the surplus of other countries to furnish our needs. We need an adequate policy in this country to ensure and preserve our food supply. Occasionally we may have to pay for this in the form of a subsidy, but we can spread the payment among the taxpayers. This is small insurance to pay for ensuring that we do not become reliant for food on some other country, and perhaps find ourselves without at some future date. I suggest it is the responsibility of this government to protect our producers from the kind of competition with which they are putting up at the present time.

In addition, Mr. Chairman, quite a bit of U.S. corn is being brought into Canada at prices that, although they vary all the time, tend to be very close to the price presently being paid in Chicago. A lot of people have been wondering who it is who imports this corn into Canada. I do not know who it is. There are some questions on the order paper inquiring into this matter and I hope they will soon be answered, because lots of stories are being circulated. I am not going to say anything more about this, but I think in fairness to all concerned the whole matter should be clarified. I think we should be told who is importing this corn.

Now, Mr. Chairman, since this problem has been presented, we might be asked what are we going to do about it. There have been a number of agricultural organizations in Ottawa the last few days speaking both to members of the government and the opposition. Some of these organizations have suggested that legislation should be quickly prepared to put the corn growers under the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board. I suggest this would restrict movement of corn. It would certainly stop the importation of this very low cost corn from the United States, it is true, but there are many other disadvantages. Frankly, having discussed the matter with a number of people, I do not think this would be a very good arrangement.

Since time is of the essence, the Canadian corn harvest having now commenced, I think something must be done right away. It is no use the minister saying that various groups of corn growers have different solutions, and when they decide what they want he will give it to them. That is passing the buck. The minister has told us that the people of Canada put this government into office, and I suggest that they expect some decisive action both from the government and from this minister.

I respectfully suggest to the minister that what he should do, since time is of the essence is, by order in council, put corn under the terms of the stabilization act to provide an adequate return to the grower. This could be done quickly. I think he should place it at approximately 115 per cent of the last ten-year average, which would provide a return of approximately $1.39 a bushel to the grower. This will cost the taxpayers money, but it is a small insurance to avoid the problems I referred to earlier. Remember that if the corn growers do go out of business it will put a lot of people out of work. The Cockshutt Co. at Brantford announced the other day that it was letting 500 people go because of lack of demand for farm machinery, arising from uncertainty about markets for agricultural products, including corn. As I say, this proposal will cost some money, but so would extra payments from the unemployment insurance fund. So for Heaven's sake let us keep the farmers in business, give them a proper return for their labours, and ensure the nation's food supply.

Since the government is economy minded these days, it might help somewhat if they would try to stop the dumping of cheap corn in this country. This could be done in a number of ways—through discussions with the minister's opposite number in the United States, or perhaps by a suggestion that if no action were taken severe anti-dumping restrictions might be passed. Putting corn under the terms of the stabilization act would be an incentive to the government to try to keep cheap corn out of the country, since to let it in would cost the government money. It would also allay all the fears and uncertainties now present in the minds of corn growers. It would prevent many going bankrupt. It would protect Canadians against unfair competition from abroad. The machinery exists. The action I suggest need only be for a 12-month period; in the next 12-month period the government could possibly find other means of dealing with this problem, perhaps some modification of the Wheat Board arrangement. The government would have time to think of a better solution. Any kind of subsidy should, I think, be only of a temporary nature; but what I have suggested is a good way of doing things, a viable and direct way, and I hope the minister will give it consideration.

Mr. Olson: I simply wish to say that I have no objection to referring the report of the Farm Credit Corporation to the standing committee, with the qualification that we would have to wait for that committee to be established. And the first order of business ought to be for that committee to consider the estimates to be referred to it. If, after considering the estimates, the committee decides that it wants to go deeply into the subject of the Farm Credit Corporation I do not see why this report should not be referred to the committee as its second task. I do not wish to repeat the argument against sending the bill itself to the committee. But the committee could carry out essentially the same study if the report were sent to it.

Mr. Baldwin: If the estimates are sent to the committee they would include the appropriation directed to the Farm Credit Corporation, and with all respect to the minister's good intentions the committee does not need his consent, or that of the government, to make whatever examination it sees fit. It is seized with the task of considering all the estimates, including those of the Farm Credit Corporation. I assume this would include the right to call witnesses, including members of the corporation. I suppose they might even be asked about the report.

Mr. Olson: That is precisely the argument I was making a few minutes ago. I said the committee was not prevented from looking into this matter, regardless of whether or not the government referred the report of the F.C.C. to it or not. The committee has full authority to make this kind of examination when the particular item in the estimates comes before it. However, a number of hon. members wanted a further assurance that we would give the committee an opportunity to examine the operations of the F.C.C. I am sure the hon. member for Peace River has now succeeded in convincing his hon. friends that they already have the right to which he has referred, and do not need any assurance from the minister.

Mr. Baldwin: I think my hon. friends were concerned that the government should not use its majority on the committee to prevent their making uninhibited use of the occasion to examine the chairman of the F.C.C. if they thought that was necessary. I realize the hon. gentleman cannot indicate in advance what attitude government members will take in the committee, but I hope he will use all the influence he has to make sure they will not seek to prevent the committee making this kind of examination.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the hon. member for Peace River realizes full well that the minister would not attempt to use his influence, that is, if he has any, in that way. On the other hand he would not wish to use his influence in compliance with his request to inhibit the progress which the committee might wish to make from day to day.

Mr. Gleave: I should like to make some further remarks on this subject in the light of the farm conditions we are facing, and which we shall have to contend with in connection with this farm credit program. I believe that agricultural conditions, the earning power of farmers and their ability to ensure a satisfactory profit margin are factors relevant to our credit program, and that the credit program is an integral part of the total farm picture.

If anyone doubts this he should look at the history of the depression in the 'thirties, when we found ourselves in debt adjustment courts because farm earnings were insufficient to carry the debt load the operation had incurred. We had to review that debt load and make adjustments involving a substantial loss to farmers and to those who had provided credit. Let us not doubt that this could be repeated, though perhaps not on the same scale or in exactly the same way. Even though it is said that history repeats itself, it often does so in a fashion somewhat different from the experience of the past.

So, the credit program which the government proposes and may intend to carry out must have reference to the farm conditions that actually exist. Judging from the throne speech and this legislation before us, the government's agricultural program is practically entirely the credit program. There is no mention of the national marketing boards that were spoken of during the election campaign. I do not see them here. Yet when one looks at the situation of agriculture he must concede that all is not well.

When farmers will abandon their fields and take to the roads, with tractors in the province of Ontario, surely it is worthy of notice. When you also see tractors being used for the same purpose of protest in the province of Saskatchewan, surely it is worthy of notice. This credit program does not take notice of the basic changes that are taking place in farming, and of the manner in which industry is impinging on the farm picture. Yet this will have to be a part of the whole.

The government says it cannot tolerate the delay involved in referring the Farm Credit Corporation legislation to a committee, yet time will have to be spent picking up the pieces if the legislation does not do the job effectively.

If the interest rates are increased the government, as I understand it, proposes to be a sort of umpire between the lenders and the farmers, to say what the rate will be. I suppose if the rate is high enough and the farmer is being choked the umpire will say, "You will have to let him up so that he can breathe, so that he can go borrow some more money and pay some more interest, or else he will just fold up". I think this is the serious situation we are looking at.

The minister says that the Farm Credit Corporation supervisory staff could be made available to the lending agencies. In all seriousness I ask him whether the corporation has that supervisory staff? When I say supervisory staff I mean staff that has been specifically trained and is being specifically used to supervise farm credit.

[Mr. Gleave.]

Mr. Olson: I would like to draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that I am sure I did not say supervisory. I said advisory.

Mr. Gleave: I thank the minister, but it is not advisory staff that will be needed. It is trained staff that will be needed in the Farm Credit Corporation, and if they are to assist other people they will possibly do so in an advisory capacity. But my point, Mr. Chairman, is that unless the corporation now has trained supervisory staff it cannot lend such staff to anybody else.

This is one of the important points in the whole program if we are going to draw upon other credit companies and insurance companies that we are told will be selected, including those already qualified in the farm field. I would appreciate it if the minister would advise us how these companies or corporations, that will be lending money to farmers, will be selected? Is it going to be open to any that may care to come in?

Personally I would not want to have the job of saying it will be this one or that one, but perhaps there are people within the Department of Agriculture who are qualified to say it will be this one or it will be that one. If there is going to be a selection we should know the basis of selection. These are some of the important points that need to be cleared up.

Mr. McQuaid: Mr. Chairman, in the very short time at my disposal this evening I would like to deal chiefly with item No. 6. Although this item has been carried I understand an arrangement has been arrived at whereby it may still be discussed. Perhaps at this time, however, I might call it ten o'clock.

The Chairman: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: It being ten o'clock it is my duty to rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, before we move on to the adjournment motion perhaps I could announce the business for tomorrow. We will continue with the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act resolution, which is item No. 7 on today's order paper, and then proceed to item No. 5 on today's order paper with respect to the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Then we will go on to item No. 8, which is a resolution preceding a bill to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, and after that we will deal with the resolution preceding the amendments to the Post Office Act.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC SERVICE—LABOUR DEPARTMENT—STATUS OF WOMEN'S BUREAU

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de Grâce): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I tried to ask several questions of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) regarding the Women's Bureau in his department, but was ruled out of order. Questions were also asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), and by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), but I believe the answers given were not complete. Therefore I put this matter on for discussion tonight.

It was reported yesterday that the Canadian Union of Public Employees announced a brief, which will be submitted to the Royal Commission on the Status of Women this week, stating that the Women's Bureau in the Department of Labour is not doing a proper job in protecting the rights of women as employees.

There were also certain remarks made by Mrs. J. Findlay, who had been director of the Women's Bureau and who retired from that position last February. Both made several criticisms against the bureau, and I can list them as follows. First, they said that the bureau did not have an adequate staff. At present it has only three persons in it. Second, they said that the director did not have enough authority or status, and consequently did not have an important enough role within the Department of Labour. It was suggested that Treasury Board should re-evaluate and upgrade the director's position. In this respect there was also criticism that a new director had not been appointed since the retirement last February of Mrs. Findlay. Third, they said that the Female Employees Equal Pay Act passed in 1956, which comes under the Women's Bureau in the Department of Labour, is not adequate, does not have enough teeth, and generally is not sufficient to do what it is supposed to do. Some people have suggested that this act be brought into line with the Canada Labour (Standards) Code and the Fair Employment Practices Act.

The fourth criticism is that the present bureau and the law which it administers is not generally known among women employees. It is suggested that as a consequence women have not taken advantage of the provisions that are already there to protect them. It is suggested further that the bureau should set up an information service to make known to the women the rights they have under the act, which the bureau is in a position to enforce for them. Another suggestion is that the bureau take a more aggressive position with regard to seeking out areas in which women are discriminated against. I might say in respect of the use of more information services, that the story which appeared in the Globe and Mail today was right beside an ad by the Department of Labour Women's Bureau which set out clearly the type of work it does.

I think more should be done in this regard by the Women's Bureau, which comes under the federal Department of Labour. The brief also criticized the lack of communication between the Women's Bureau and other departments within the federal government which deal with matters relating to women. Mrs. Findlay said that although she had certain jurisdiction over many laws which are intended to protect women there was no real communication between her bureau and the other departments of government. She felt that there should be this communication.

The sixth point in the brief is a criticism of the manpower retraining programs in respect of their work among women. I am aware that this does not come under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Labour, but since it is brought up in the brief and is related to labour I think it should be mentioned. It is stated that many women who have been housewives for a long period and who wish to enter the labour force are not able to find employment which would make them productive people in our society.

At present we are not making the most of our female labour force. The Economic Council of Canada has stated that we must take steps to drastically increase our economic production. One certain way of doing this is to have an active, content and highly trained female labour force. I believe that our women should be given a full role in our economy with men. This will benefit not only the women but also the whole society. I hope that the minister will give careful consideration to the CUPE recommendations.

Mr. Jim McNulty (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of my remarks may I say that the minister agrees essentially with many of the observations made in the brief presented to the Royal Commission on the Status of Women by the Canadian Union of Public Employees and re-emphasized this evening by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand).

Statistically, according to the latest figures available, the number of women working in Canada at the end of June 1967 was approximately 170,000. These women are covered by the Female Employees Equal Pay Act or by the provisions of the Public Service Act. At the request of the minister, shortly after he took office a review of the Women's Bureau was made as well as an appraisal of the act to which I have just referred. Steps were immediately taken to fill the vacant role of director of this important branch and to upgrade its classification to bring it more in line with the degree of importance that the minister attaches to this area of his department. As a result of this study, a director has been chosen at a classification and salary that is in line with those paid to other branch heads. The name of this director will be announced very shortly, provided of course that there are no appeals against her choice as permitted under the Public Service Act.

While I am sure all members realize that federal jurisdiction extends to a comparatively limited number of women in the work force of Canada, it is realized that the federal department has a responsibility to lead rather than follow the provinces in recognition of the growing importance of women in the labour force, and to do everything in its power to eliminate all forms of discriminatory practices.

As the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce has pointed out, the Female Employees Equal Pay Act is basically good legislation. Its weakness rests with the fact that it acts only on complaints brought to our attention by affected workers. Perhaps as Mr. Little of the union pointed out, we have not made sufficient efforts to acquaint women with this act and its provisions. Perhaps the unions have been lax as well in not acquainting their membership with the provisions of the act; but indeed Mr. Little was frank and honest enough to indicate that the unions themselves are not without blame.

Proposed changes to the act have been suggested to the minister, but it is hoped that these changes can be reviewed when the report of the royal commission is changed, in order that the act be made as perfect as possible.

It is obvious, for instance, that the proposed changes must permit the department to initiate action and determine whether or not discrimination is being practiced against the female segment of our working force. If past history is any indicator, provincial legislation usually follows shortly afterwards.

[Mr. Allmand.]

OIL—REPORTED REDUCTION IN U.S. IMPORTS FROM CANADA

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, today I asked two questions of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The first one was, briefly, did the United States make a unilateral decision to cut back the quotas on exports of crude petroleum from Alberta, Canada, to the United States, or was this the result of negotiation between the two countries. I received an answer which gave statistical information about what has happened in the past. I am not talking today about what has happened. I then put this question to the minister:

> Perhaps the minister did not quite understand my question. We all realize that the national oil policy is subject to negotiation, but did Canada negotiate this export loss in crude petroleum to the United States or was this done on a unilateral basis by the United States?

I have discussed this matter with the top people in the oil industry and they advise me there has been a cutback for the next quarter of 10,000 barrels of crude per day. As a result of that situation the Calgary Herald of September 28, 1968 carried the following heading: "Alberta oil exports cut" and the subheading "U.S. to restrict imports". This article was written by Fraser Perry, one of our more reliable newspapermen, who thoroughly understands this particular subject.

I wanted to obtain an answer from the minister as to whether this cutback had been negotiated, or is the result of unilateral action by the United States. I was not being critical of the government.

The article to which I referred reads in part as follows:

> United States action which could cost Alberta export sales totalling close to 10,000,000 barrels of crude oil in the next three months, has created new tensions in Ottawa, Washington and the oil centres of North America.

This is causing tension as well in Calgary, the oil capital. The oil industry has stated without reservation or equivocation that there has been a cut-back. I am not denying or arguing for one moment that since the implementation of a national oil policy in 1961 there have been negotiations, or that the National Energy Board set up by the Conservative government has done an excellent job in this regard. Neither am I denying that in the last three months there was an improvement in the export of oil. What I am saying is that now there is a cut-back.

Several months ago when I suggested there was a cut-back in the export of grain the former government practically laughed me out of the House of Commons. This government has statistics which show what a great job it is doing in this field, and I am not denying that. What I am saying now is that it does not make any difference whether you have statistics or not, if representatives of the industry were in my place tonight they would tell you that the maximum exports we have ever had represent only 30 per cent to 40 per cent of our production.

The Canada Year Book, which I think is pretty reliable, indicates that we import crude petroleum into eastern Canada through the Montreal market to the extent of 395,000 barrels of crude oil per day from Venezuela, Arabia, Iran and Iraq. We export to the United States—I say "we", but it is American capital that is bringing the crude petroleum in here—on an average only 295,000 barrels of crude petroleum daily. A few days ago this figure was cut by 10,000 barrels.

It is obvious that the minister did not negotiate on behalf of Canada; it is obvious that it was a unilateral deal. I say this is obvious because the minister would not answer the question today. He wanted to give statistics on what had been done in the last three months. I am not questioning his figures; he and I can give figures. But as of today we have lost the export of 10,000 barrels per day from the Calgary area. This is the seriousness of the situation. The industry has pointed this out. I do not think the minister would argue with the newspapermen, companies in the United States and the industry in Canada; surely he will not do that.

I have here some figures which were obtained from the National Energy Board. In the first quarter of 1968 the industry in Calgary exported 293,000 barrels of crude petroleum per day to the United States. In the third quarter of that year the figure was 353,000 barrels per day. But there has now been a cut-back to 280,000 barrels per day, which is less than the average mentioned in the Canada Year Book. This is less than the average last year, and there is definitely a fall-off.

In addition, Mr. Udall, the minister of the interior of the United States, has advised the industry in the United States that they must cut back on their imports of crude petroleum from this country. That is only a suggestion from the government in Washington, but as my good friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) appreciates, when they get a suggestion like that, they take it as an order.

In the Puget Sound area, which is the Washington-Vancouver area, 140,000 barrels of crude petroleum per day go in. That figure is being cut back to 100,000 barrels per day. Because of this situation I sought information from the minister today as to what the government is doing about it. I wanted to know whether they were negotiating with the United States. Are they saying to the United States, "You have the Montreal market. You refine crude petroleum. You bring in 395,000 barrels of crude petroleum per day, and that finds its way into refined products that are sent to Toronto and even farther west." This is the area which was negotiated between Canada and the United States and is our western supply centre.

So basically we are in this position: We are losing our domestic market and our exports. We want to keep up our gross national product, but the same thing will happen in western Canada with regard to petroleum as happened with grain. This government said they would give western Canada representation, and they would give some power to the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatchewan and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) from Alberta. It is true they are now members of the cabinet, but they are being stripped naked of their jurisdiction and powers in this government. That is our complaint, and we are trying to get information from the minister.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

I repeat that I am not quibbling about whether the figure was 117,000 barrels, but I am saying there has now been a cutback. I want to know whether this was a unilateral or a negotiated arrangement. If it was a negotiated arrangement, why did Canada give in to the United States?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can quite understand why the hon. member who poses this question would not be too concerned to discuss figures, because I believe that when his party was in office the sale in districts one to four was something in the neighbourhood of 117,000 barrels a day. But in the third quarter of this year the sale in districts one to four was in the neighbourhood of 350,000 barrels a day.

Improvements have taken place to this degree through the implementation of the national oil policy, which is a very sensitive and delicate exercise but which has worked well in the Canadian interest. There is of course no quota restriction as such from the United States. Unlike the hon. member, I do not believe everything I read in the newspapers. I have seen newspapers that made mistakes. It may be that some of the figures they have quoted are not accurate because the United States does not have an express barrier against imports, or express import quotas. Canada enjoys the overland exemption which was given to us by presidential decree in the United States, but because we enjoy this preference we must work in conjunction with the department of the interior and the state department to ensure that our exports to the United States do not completely upset their markets.

We must try to achieve a just and equitable proportion of the increase in markets as they accrue, and this we have done through the process of negotiation with the department of the interior. As I said, in the third quarter we were able to get a very large share of the market in districts one to four because of the fact that there was a shortage of supply, and because new and very large capacity lines from the New Orleans area had not yet been completed. Hence we got a far greater share than would have normally been anticipated as our proportion and just share in the increased market. Now this new line from the New Orleans district is complete to the market area where we normally sell the Alberta crude, and certainly the United States department of state has expressed the hope that, now that the line is complete, Canada does not continue to take up as great a quantity in this area as they did in the third quarter.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

The negotiations are proceeding but there certainly is no unilateral cutback. It is a matter of working out a satisfactory export from Canada which is in the best interest of our producers, and in increasing sales from this area without bedevilling the game to the degree that the United States might withdraw the overland exemption. If that ever happened I am sure my hon. friend would not be at all happy because this would certainly not serve the best interests of the Alberta producers.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—RECONSIDERATION OF POLICY RESPECTING RURAL MAIL CONTRACTS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, September 27, the Postmaster General in a brief statement to the house announced the curtailment of mail deliveries starting on February 1. The key sentences in this statement which appeared at page 496 of Hansard were the following:

> Deliveries of mail will not be made on Saturdays. This will include letter carrier service, parcel post and rural route deliveries.

This gives rise to any number of questions, but these are at least three of them: The hardship on those expecting six day mail delivery; what happens to the working conditions of the mail carriers; and the particular subject of this inspiring debate, namely what effect it will have on the rural mail carriers. And of course the public interest must also be considered.

My own question to the Postmaster General, among the many being put to him today, refers to the formula that would be used to achieve new contracts with rural mail carriers who have had capital expenditures on their automobiles, as a rather necessary and basic part of their contract. The Postmaster General's answer to other questions was that he was not willing to spend six days money for five days service. I would point out to him that there is a capital investment in a car. While the minister can order the rural mail carriers to deliver five days a week instead of six, he cannot stop the depreciation on the car. It will continue from one week to another.

I believe the minister will agree with me, and I think most members will agree with me, particularly those in rural or partial rural constituencies, that the rural mail carrier does not have a happy life. He is usually in competition with somebody else before he can get a contract to deliver the mail. He usually pares the cost as close to the line as he possibly can—and sometimes goes below it, because after a period of two years these contracts are almost always renegotiated with the department itself. The rural mail carrier must take his chances on a rise in the cost of automobile licences or a change in the rate of car insurance. These things can make a very substantial difference in that gentleman's financial position.

In so far as the car itself is concerned, he has to meet monthly payments. My experience, and I dare say this has been the experience of many other members, has been that the financing of cars gives rise to more legal problems for the people across Canada than anything else. I hope therefore that in paring costs or cutting down the deliveries from six days to five, some heed will be paid by the Postmaster General and his department to the capitalization of the vehicle, whether it be a bright and shiny car or some old heap driving Her Majesty's mails down the highways and byways of this nation.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) and myself are at odds on this question at all. I simply said, in reply to his question this afternoon, that obviously the contracts will have to be renegotiated. I recognize the points the hon. member has brought out, that the mail carrier is faced with certain fixed costs such as depreciation whether he works five days or six days. These costs are not going to be reduced, nor are his insurance charges. Obviously any renegotiation of the contracts will take account of these facts.

On the other hand, the mail carrier will not be working six days a week. He may or may not be in a position to find other employment on Saturday or over the week end. The point is we certainly should not allow the contracts to stand as they are because the direct, out of pocket expenses such as gas and oil and all the rest will not be expenses for that Saturday. Obviously there is room here for renegotiation. There is room for taking account of the public interest and the responsibility of the minister to act wisely as a trustee of the public funds which are placed at his disposal. There is room here for reasonable renegotiation, with all that word may imply.

As I suggested, the Post Office Department and the government are sensitive to the fact that a great many mail contractors are not gaining an adequate living. This fact raises other problems, such as whether we should not—we are doing it, by the way—conduct a complete re-examination of the rural routes as they presently exist to ascertain if it is not possible, when two contractors side by side make $3,000 or $4,000 a year each, to amalgamate the two routes and thus assure one rural mail carrier of a reasonable living.

All of these questions are to be included in a general re-examination by the department, and this examination is going ahead very rapidly. We recognize all this, Mr. Speaker, and in the bill to come down I think the hon. member will also find we have taken account of it. With regard to the precise problem he has raised, that of depreciation, we may even make some suggestions about longer contracts that will provide for a better depreciation of the contractor's equipment.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.28 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INDIAN AFFAIRS

STATEMENT ON REORGANIZATION OF DEPARTMENT

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Prime Minister stated in the house that I had planned to make a statement to the house last week concerning the reorganization of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. However, since there were many statements made on motions on Friday and because of the death of Prime Minister Johnson on Thursday, I was unable to do so. I should now like to make the statement I had planned last week.

When Indian affairs merged with northern affairs to form the new Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in 1966 it was intended that some reorganization be undertaken to consolidate activities that were being carried out by the various branches of the new department. Two branches were providing education services, one to Indians and the other to Eskimos. The same situation prevailed in respect of welfare services, engineering services and other services which obviously could be carried out more efficiently and more effectively if they were amalgamated. Indeed, the consolidation of activities was one of the main purposes of the government reorganization.

Proposals to effect this consolidation had been under discussion with the Treasury Board for the past year, and recently received the board's approval. The new framework recasts the organizational pattern of the department from the old one of Indian affairs branch, northern administration branch, national and historic parks branch and Canadian wildlife service to a new pattern involving three distinct program areas; first, social affairs program; second, economic development program; third, conservation program.

The social affairs program will cover education, community development, welfare, social affairs, cultural affairs and Indian trust administration. The economic program will cover major resource development in the Canadian north, industrial development for both Indians and Eskimos, land management as it applies to Indian reserves and wet-land acquisition. It will provide economic research and advice in these areas and will include the management of territorial resources and related government functions in the territories. The conservation program will include national parks, historic parks and sites and wildlife.

While this internal reorganization at headquarters involves a major regrouping of the previous programs and the branches and directorates responsible for them, the basic regional structure will not be altered although it will be strengthened to provide increased support for the department's economic and social programs. The need for an accelerated economic development program has been evident for a long time. The need for such an accelerated program to promote resource and industrial development on reserves has been emphasized by representatives of the Indian people, private individuals and groups on different occasions. The new structure of organization recognizes this need and will allow us to use our resources more flexibly and more effectively to meet this need and as well allow us to administer existing programs and programs which I will announce in the house at a future time. Also, as stated by the Prime Minister yesterday, it makes available to the Indian people the resources of the whole department rather than those provided in the past by the Indian affairs branch alone.

Mr. Speaker, I and the government are committed to consultations with the Indian people in respect of amendments to the Indian Act and in respect of major policy objectives. Since my department is held responsible for the development of programs to assist the Indian and Eskimo peoples I consider it of the utmost importance that the department be as effective as possible. I believe this reorganization will accomplish this. I have arranged to have a booklet explaining the reorganization sent to all members of the house, Indian representatives and the territorial governments. This should be received shortly.

Statement on Indian Affairs Reorganization

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I accept the sincerity of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien), also the sincerity of the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Andras). But surely it is not enough to say that the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has decided on its own that these structural changes were of insufficient interest to require consultation. Such an appearance of bureaucratic indifference is bad enough at any time, but it is particularly unforgiveable when it is widely known that the attitude of officials of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, rightly or wrongly, already constitutes a cause of tension between the department and the people it is supposed to serve.

Nothing will be solved by administrative changes which deepen the division between the department and the Indian communities. This careless refusal by the government to consult with the Indian community, or to take steps to inform Indian spokesmen of the changes, has added another unnecessary complication. It was caused by the kind of casual approach to the responsibilities of government that is becoming all too familiar. Canada cannot afford more tension or more delays in assisting the Indian people to achieve equality and opportunity.

The official opposition fully approves of the special assignment of a minister without portfolio to help develop an effective Indian policy, and we very much regret any indication that the government is insincere in that assignment. One of the very unhappy consequences of this more recent insistence on secrecy by the government is that it has damaged the reputation and the effectiveness of the Minister without Portfolio. The fact that the government would fail to consult even him is bound to raise suspicions that his assignment is window dressing, his influence is nil, and that he is deliberately circumvented by the minister and officials of the department of Indian affairs.

This action has also served to undermine the appearance of co-operation and good faith the government sought to achieve when with great fanfare it created national and regional advisory committees of the Indian people, for exactly the purpose of consultation. The failure to consult these committees on this matter will confirm the fear that the committees were established as another empty gesture.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

There are at least three issues here. One is the failure to consult. The second is the failure to inform the Indian people by making a deliberate point not to distribute this memorandum. Certainly there is no shortage of people to write press releases in the department of Indian affairs, and it was not budgetary restraint which kept this information from the Indian people. The third point is the content of the memorandum on reorganization itself. The minister has said the document does not concern policy in any substantive way. Let me quote from the foreword by the deputy minister of Indian affairs and northern development:

—the purpose being...to eliminate any difference in policies affecting the treatment of the Indian and Eskimo peoples."

That dedication is bound to cause concern. By statute and by treaty, commitments made to the Indian people do differ from those made to the Eskimo people. There are statutory and treaty differences which, on the face of this document and in the words of the deputy minister, the government proposes to eliminate. The word "eliminate" is a strong word, especially when it comes from a department of which the Indian people are already suspicious. The content of this document, the manner of its preparation and the refusal to put it into circulation are bound to increase suspicions and widen the gulf between the Indian peoples and the department created to serve them.

Yesterday it surprised us that the Prime Minister had no record of a request for a meeting with the Indian Brotherhood of Canada, which according to the telegram sent to me was requested at noon of the day before the question was raised in the house. The house has a right to expect advice as to whether the Prime Minister intends to act on that request and meet with representatives of the Indian brotherhood.

Second, the Prime Minister left questions unanswered concerning whether consultations occurred between the minister and the national and regional Indian advisory committees. There was an indication that the ministers would provide that information when they both returned to the house. I can only assume there has been no such consultation.

There is a very serious question as to why it is necessary to restructure the department now when we are told that the Indian Act is under substantial review. Furthermore, the Minister without Portfolio on television on Sunday night made a serious suggestion that the reorganization ought to be postponed. I can only assume that he had his reasons. In light of his reservations and the great concern of the Indian communities, as well as the uncertainty generally about governmental policy concerning our Indian peoples, this reorganization should be reviewed immediately. There should be consultation with representatives of the Indian people. There has been consultation with the Treasury Board, but apparently with no one else. I should think there ought to be consultation also with the Minister without Portfolio.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, either this departmental reorganization is a matter of substance or it is not. If it is not a matter of substance, one must wonder why the minister and his colleagues induced the news media to give it such prominence. If it is a matter of substance, obviously the representatives af the Indian people should have been consulted, particularly in view of the pledge and commitment which this government gave to consult the Indian people. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that they should have been consulted.

It makes nonsense of the efforts of the Minister without Portfolio, who has been charged with the responsibility of travelling this country from coast to coast to meet with the Indian people in their localities to get their views and solicit their ideas, if as we understand there is to be a fundamental reorganization in the department without the slightest bit of consultation with representatives of the Indian people. There is no excuse for this.

I notice in the written statement of the minister that the discussion with regard to consolidation and reorganization within the department have now been going on in the department for a whole year. Surely there was ample time to consult the representatives of the different Indian bands across the country. I notice, too, that the minister made reference to what he wants us to accept as fact, namely that because this government recognizes that there is a need for an accelerated economic development program for Indian reserves and for Indian people, it was felt there was some urgency in proceeding with the reorganization of the department.

I am glad to see the government admits there is need for an accelerated economic development program for Indian reserves, but precisely because economic development on reserves is a matter that is so vital and so directly concerns the Indian people one would think that at least their views would have been solicited as to the form the department's organization would take with respect to programs of economic development.

I cannot take my place, Mr. Speaker, without making reference to a plea the minister makes in the concluding paragraph of his statement. He says he must have the freedom necessary to organize the department in the manner necessary to carry out its responsibilities in the most effective way possible. That sounds to me a pretty lame sort of excuse for not consulting the Indian people with regard to this matter. The minister says he must have freedom to manoeuvre and to organize his department. We all recognize that there is need for administrative discretionary power to be exercised by the minister and his officials. We also know, however, that the plea for more freedom for those who exercise power is one that has been raised by arbitrary rulers over the centuries. I am not overstating or exaggerating the situation when I say that the plea of the minister that he must have more freedom to reorganize and set up the operations of the department is in itself not good enough.

I conclude by saying that since the government have made the commitment and the pledge, and given it so much publicity, to the effect that they intend to consult the Indian population of this country, they should honour that commitment and pledge right after having made it. So I suggest that the government start doing that, and they can begin by having the two ministers of the crown, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Minister without Portfolio consult each other. I think that would be a good start.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, we listened carefully to the announcement made by the hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien). I thank him for having sent me a copy of his statement in proper form and in English, with the words "traduction"—"translation" stamped on it. It seems to me that it would have been simpler to send me the original rather than have it translated and sent to my office. The hon. minister is making a sign to show that he does not even know what is going on in his office.

Statement on Indian Affairs Reorganization

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

I should have liked to have had the French version myself; however, the translation was not ready and I had to read my statement in English. I would have preferred to read it in French.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister should have waited until tomorrow to make his statement.

The minister intends to reorganize the Department for Indian Affairs and Northern Development and he has suggested the three following points:

1° Social Affairs Program—
2° Economic Development Program—
3° Conservation Program.

The hon. minister and his officials are right in wanting to reorganize the department, because the Indian and Eskimo problems are often brought before the house and no solution has been found yet.

The minister also said in his statement, and I quote:

[English]

I am committed and the government is committed to consultations with the Indian people in respect to amendments to the Indian Act and in respect to major policy objectives.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, judging by some letters addressed to me by Indians, I wonder what the consultations held until now have been like. Is an Indian from Montreal or Quebec the only one who has the right to be consulted by the government to establish the policy of the Canadian government with regard to the Indians and the Eskimos? We get complaints to the effect that only a few are consulted and that the Indian or Eskimo people as a whole are completely unaware of those meetings and discussions, and to such an extent that I ask myself quite honestly if the funds allocated to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development are not used mainly to pay salaries to white people, officials of the federal government, to try to lull some Indian or Eskimo chiefs to the disadvantage of the Eskimo and Indian people of Canada.

It seems to me that it is time to act, and not in back rooms, not as a result of decisions taken without the knowledge of parliament, and especially the Indians who are demanding results.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the statement will be useful and will not have disastrous results but good consequences, so that finally consultations will really be held between the population, between the various Indian and Eskimo organizations and the government authorities in order to find a solution to that problem and give justice to those people, as they have a right to expect.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

STATEMENT RESPECTING INDIAN HEALTH SERVICES

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am now in a position to make the statement concerning Indian health services that I promised the house a week ago on Monday.

Early this year as part of the government's drive to halt inflation a general paring was made through all departments. Indian health services were involved in this as well. In an effort to maintain current standards and services within the over-all framework of government fiscal policy, directives were sent out which put forward fields of activity which could be cut back without endangering the over-all health of the Indian and Eskimo communities.

There was a good deal of protest over this from those who felt that we should not attempt in any way to economize where our native Canadians were concerned. Accordingly my predecessor made a clarifying statement to the house on March 26—

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): To whom was it clear?

Mr. Munro: —pledging that services would be maintained at their present level, and that we would make sure no individual suffers in the process of bringing spending into line. In accordance with this declaration a new set of directives were sent out to all field officers concerning these principles.

In reply to the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) I might mention that the directive dated March 6, to which he specifically referred last Monday, was sent by the director of the Manitoba zone to the Indian bands in that province only. After my predecessor's remarks to the house a further correcting directive for Manitoba was sent during the latter part of April confirming the current level of services to individuals, as it was for the rest of Canada.

Replying to the question of a lack of federal-provincial consultation as implied by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Simpson), which was prompted by the remarks of the Ontario health minister, Dr. Dymond, I should like to state that the field officers of my department, Drs. Thompson in British Columbia, Rath in the prairies, Butler in Ontario, Savoie in Quebec, and Hirtle in the Atlantic provinces, are in regular informal consultation with provincial deputy ministers.

In addition our Ottawa based officials have been in contact with their provincial counterparts at the last dominion council of health, at meetings of the advisory council on hospital insurance and during the general negotiations on medicare. Furthermore, the director of Indian health has been in special consultation at various times in the recent past with the provincial health departments in Saskatchewan, Quebec, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. I myself, since assuming this portfolio, have discussed the field of Indian health with elected representatives of the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

To be more specific about the matter raised by the hon. member, Dr. Dymond objected to a directive dated July 19 sent by our Ontario regional director, which in effect claimed provincial discrimination against reserve Indians on the question of OMSIP. The fact is that an Indian on a reserve who earns little or no taxable income is not eligible for a free or partly subsidized OMSIP certificate whereas another citizen in this indigent status, including an Indian not on a reservation, is entitled to a free or partially subsidized OMSIP card.

It is our hope for the future that the provinces extend health and medical services to reservation Indians on the same basis as they are extended to other citizens, including the same basis for payment. We feel that Indians should be full and equal citizens of the province in which they reside, and to further this intent we expect to be discussing the whole area of Indian health with the provincial health ministers before and during a federal-provincial health conference tentatively scheduled for the end of October. Pending new arrangements, it is our firm resolve to keep up our present level of services and improve them where necessary to make sure that no Indian is inadequately treated for personal health problems.

There remain two further matters mentioned in Friday's question period to clear up. First, on doctors' fees for treating indigent Indians under federal jurisdiction, I would like to say that doctors receive about 75 per cent of the provincial fee schedule in such cases, or approximately the same rate paid by either the respective municipality or province for treating non-Indians at public expense. Where the rate differs from this principle, other arrangements are made to pick up overhead costs, such as provision of clinical space.

On the second point raised by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, that of drugs alleged to be dispensed to Indians by lay persons, I should like to say that this program in the provinces is an extension of a program long under way in our northern regions known as the lay dispenser program, which has been in effect there for over 40 years. The persons involved, after a training program at Sioux Lookout, are sent throughout the area mentioned in a recent press release to places either too small or too mobile for a permanent nursing station. The dispensers are trained to give first aid and may dispense simple drugs only on the directions of the nurses in the area with whom they get in contact by telephone to have prescriptions given. If the case is serious the nurse has the patient sent in to the nearest nursing station.

The ranks of lay dispensers are the best we can find and include licensed practical nurses, teachers, religious sisters, Indian women and ministers' wives whom we consider qualified. My department knows of no case of injury to health caused by treatment given by these people. In fact the program has been of tangible benefit to the people involved and in many cases has hastened recovery. If the hon. member knows of any specific instances where this program has resulted in any damage to any Indian's health, we will be pleased to review them. It is our information that the person who made these charges has since stated that he was not saying any deaths had resulted, but only that they theoretically might occur. As it stands, the dispensers provide better emergency medical services than are available to many other small communities in Canada.

I and the officials of my department are aware that, like any other service, there is a need for periodic review and improvement, and that Indian and northern health services is no exception. We are now conducting that review with a view to making improvements in both services, and to this end are now and have been conducting consultations with provincial authorities and, more importantly, with the heads of the Indian organizations themselves.

Statement on Indian Health Services

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I believe the words of the minister in the statement he has just made will do little if anything to quell the great fears and tremendous concern that our Indian people have in relation to what this government are planning to do to the health services they have hitherto been providing to our Indian people. This great concern and the fears of the Indian people were, of course, generated by a directive that was put out last March 6 and to which the minister has just now referred. This directive was sent out to the health zone people in the province of Manitoba, and also to the chiefs and councillors of all Indian bands.

At the time questions were asked in the house it was our understanding that the then minister would put out a clarifying directive. To the best of my knowledge from contacting the chiefs on some 26 Indian reservations in the constituency of Churchill, Mr. Speaker, to this day no clarifying directive was ever sent to them. The Minister of National Health and Welfare has said that a directive did go out. It went out, as I understand it, merely to department officials. We have told the Indian people, as we had been advised by the minister, that this new directive would be sent to them and would be part of the consultation with the government. We on this side of the house have always maintained that no planning of this nature should be done without adequate consultation with the Indian people.

The minister has stated that on several occasions there has been some consultation. He referred to the question raised in the statement by the minister of health of the province of Ontario. He forgets though, Mr. Speaker, that the minister of health of the province of Ontario made a categorical statement that the federal government is trying to unload its traditional responsibilities for health care of the Indians and Eskimos on to the provinces without discussion or consultation.

We say, Mr. Speaker, that consultation must be had, and that it must be prior consultation. We also say there should be continuing consultation among the ministers who are concerned. It was quite clear to us on this side of the house when we raised this question last March that the then minister of Indian affairs and northern development knew nothing of the plans of the Department of National Health and Welfare to curtail certain Indian health services. So when the government across the way talks about consultation, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that they consult among themselves where this is necessary.

The minister also pointed out in regard to doctors' fees that the doctors were receiving about 75 per cent of their scheduled fees for the services they provide to the Indian people. From what we have been able to learn, Mr. Speaker, we understand that the doctors are receiving only approximately 50 per cent. I am wondering whether this is not just another indication of the feeling of this government that our Indian people are second class citizens.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, there must be consultation. The government has said in announcing these plans that they had been in the making for a long time. I wonder just how much time the government intends to spend consulting the Indian people. When you plan these things in a bureaucratic fashion for over a period of a year or two or even more you cannot expect just to meet briefly with the Indian people, ask them to assess the matter and then come up with a decision in quick order.

The minister also mentioned, Mr. Speaker, that consultation has gone on with the provinces, and I covered that point when I referred to the statement of Dr. Dymond. There may have been some talks, but from what we can find out from the provinces no one knows just who is going to pay for these services if they are shunted off as a responsibility of the provinces.

These are matters, Mr. Speaker, about which this house should know. If the provinces are going to be asked to handle these matters, and after consultation they agree to do so, then this house should know who is going to pay the cost. We should know whether the federal government is going to continue its financial responsibility. However, as I say, when dealing with matters that deviate from or abrogate treaties with our Indian people, there must be consultation. In regard to treaties Nos. 1 and 6 which deal with medical services, our Indians are certainly entitled to consultation because such services have always been accepted by them as a treaty right.

I should like to give a strictly personal opinion, Mr. Speaker, without in any way casting any reflection on language questions that are being raised in Canada at this particular time. I think we have here a pretty sad state of affairs, particularly when we are trying to get national unity. At a time when one language group is making strong submissions to have its language not only preserved but expanded, with its protection written right into our constitution, this government is abrogating the rights of the Indian people without even consulting them. I think this is a question at which Canadians should take a good look.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister will carry on a series of consultations not only with the provincial authorities but with the Indian people themselves. They should be given time to look these questions over. The government has already deprived the Indian people of many of the hunting rights they were given under treaty. I hope the government is not now arbitrarily planning to tell the Indian people that somebody else other than the federal government is going to have to look after their medical services.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Simpson) referred to the fears and concern of our Indian people which, he said, will not be allayed by the statement the Minister of National Health and Welfare has just made. I should like to add that not only are the Indian people themselves concerned about their medical services and medical treatment, but that Canadians generally are concerned about this question and are most anxious that we do the best we can in the matter of health services for our native people.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare has again tried to assure us today, as he has on previous occasions and as his predecessor tried to do, that the current level of health services is being maintained. I have followed these discussions pretty closely and have never detected any attempt on the part of the present or former minister to tell us what is meant by that statement. When we are told that the current level of services is to be maintained does that mean the current level in dollar terms, the current level in the total number of doctors and others at work in the face of increasing needs, the current level of services actually being made available to our individual Indians and others in our northern areas? That definitely ought to be made clear. Not only do we feel there should be an absolute guarantee as to these services; not only do we feel that the full level of services to our people ought to be maintained; we feel that that level ought to be improved.

When we discussed this matter last March many statistics were put on the record showing the wide gap existing between health services being made available to the Canadian population generally and the health services made available to our Indian and northern peoples. We spoke about the gap in service standards, about differences in mortality rates and so on.

We feel it is not good enough for the government to maintain the level of services which our Indian people were getting. We are ashamed of the inadequacy of that level. The whole point of the protest we made last March and the whole point of the debate at that time was that our Indians cannot get by with the sort of health service that is at present being provided. In other words, we ought to be improving the health services we make available to our northern and Indian peoples.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Also, I support the plea which has been made by my hon. friend from Churchill who said that in this area, as in all aspects of our relations with our Indian people, there ought to be consultation with them. I trust that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Minister without Portfolio have heard the message and understand that there should be consultation generally with respect to these matter. I say to the Minister of National Health and Welfare that these remarks apply in his case also.

One statement by the minister gave me particular cause for concern, a concern I have felt many times when hearing members on the government front benches speak. He expressed the hope that the provinces would make their adjustments so that Indians within the provinces would obtain the same services other Canadians in the provinces obtain. It seems to me that here again we are calling on the individuals concerned to wait until something is developed. It is not good enough, Mr. Speaker, to say to our Indian peoples "Well, if we do not do something, the provinces will." The provinces on the other hand may say "No, no. It is up to the federal government to do something." In the meantime our native peoples are not enjoying the health care and services they need. Certainly the level of those services ought not to be at the level set last spring, but at a much higher and better level.

I am sure that we in this house who speak about this issue are supported by Canadians generally from coast to coast when we say we want a square deal in terms of health services for all our Indian and nothern peoples.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think hon. members might be reminded of the provisions of our standing orders at the present time.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, like all the others who already spoke on that question, we agree on the necessity of self determination for Indians and Eskimos, but I would like to emphasize one point.

The government intends to gradually shift its responsibilities for Indians onto the provinces, as is the case for Quebec, for instance, which has been insisting for some years on assuming the whole responsibility for Indians and Eskimos on its territory. It is obvious that, before a decision is taken, agreements should be prepared in conjunction with provincial governments, agreements which could be negotiated afterwards with the people concerned, the Indians and the Eskimos.

As far as the Eskimos in northern Quebec are concerned, I can speak with full knowledge of the facts, as I have an Eskimo sister-in-law. I have heard a lot about the problems of the Eskimos and, frankly, I believe that the policy established for years has encouraged a certain decay. From now on any policy in that regard should have as its essential object to safeguard the original culture and mentality of the people who will thus greatly enrich the whole country.

WATER RESOURCES

TABLING OF INTERIM REPORT ON LAKE AND RIVER POLLUTION

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the house I wish at this time to table the second interim report of the Canadian-United States International Joint Commission on the pollution of lake Erie, lake Ontario and the international section of the St. Lawrence river.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table this document?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if hon. members wish me to comment briefly on the matter of ministerial statements. I do not wish to lecture hon. members in any way, but I refer hon. members to the provisions of standing order 52 which says, in part, that ministerial statements should be limited to facts which it is deemed necessary to make known to the house, and should not be designed to provoke debate at this stage; also that replies by spokesmen on behalf of parties in opposition should be brief.

I realize it is easy to provoke debate; at the same time brevity of speech is a relative concept in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: I feel that some of the statements or comments which have just been made did not conform entirely with the spirit of standing order 52. I submit that hon. members might keep these comments in mind on other occasions.

1. What has been the total cost to July 31, 1968 of the National Centre for the Performing Arts?

2. What is the estimated final cost of this project?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. $35,691,287.

MARRIED QUARTERS FOR ARMED FORCES

Question No. 58—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Has the Department of National Defence issued directives to all, or any of the residents in Service Married Quarters, regarding the length of time they are permitted to hold such accommodations and, if so (a) when was this order issued, by whom and under what policy would such action be taken (b) is the Department or any other branch of government now giving consideration to the location of adequate alternative housing, particularly for those families with large numbers of children (c) to how many people and at what Canadian Force Bases have such notices been circulated?

2. Is active consideration being given now to expanding the facilities now available for the serving Forces?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes, in May 1967, a Canadian Forces administrative order was issued to all formations on the authority of the chief of defence staff, which permits the officer commanding a command to limit married quarters' continuous occupancy to five years, or such longer period as he considers appropriate. Prior to May 1967, an identical order was in effect for the R.C.N. but not for the army and R.C.A.F. The authority to limit married quarters' occupancy was introduced so that all members of the forces should be given an equal opportunity of sharing the limited number available.

This order has been invoked by the officer commanding maritime command in regard to married quarters at CFB Halifax and Shearwater.

A survey of the 1922 married quarters administered by CFB Halifax revealed that 69 service personnel have occupied married quarters for periods ranging from nine to sixteen years.

In view of the long waiting list, the officer commanding maritime command ruled, in accordance with the CFAO, that personnel who have occupied married quarters continuously for ten or more years must vacate so that others may benefit from available housing at reasonable rent. Consequently on August 1, 1968, the 69 service members mentioned above were given one year's notice to vacate. To date none of these have requested assistance in finding alternate accommodation. However, each case is being dealt with on its own merit and it is not anticipated that any undue hardship will result.

At CFB Shearwater, the survey revealed that occupancy of the 301 married quarters available varied considerably depending upon rank, size of family and other circumstances.

However, in accordance with the directive issued by the officer commanding maritime command some of those who received notice under the previous R.C.N. order have had it rescinded, e.g., one family with five children, although having more than ten years' occupancy, has been granted an additional year of tenure because they were unable to locate housing and the man was posted to sea duty. Ten families were given one year's notice on August 1, 1968. To date none have requested assistance.

2. Yes, every effort is made to improve the housing situation throughout the forces, within the limitations of the defence budget.

LEASES IN BANFF AND JASPER PARKS

Question No. 114—Mr. Paproski:

1. What is the present federal government policy regarding the awarding of leases to hotel and motel operators in (a) Jasper National Park (b) Banff National Park?

2. What are the financial conditions precedent to the awarding of hotel and motel operators' leases in the above-mentioned parks?

3. What is the present period of leases?

4. What is the procedure as to calling tenders?

5. To what parties, groups or individuals have leases been awarded in each of the above parks in the last five years?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. In Banff and Jasper national parks public calls for tenders are made when new park lands are being offered for hotel and motel development by private enterprise. The tenderer making the most acceptable proposal is awarded a commercial lease. Proposals are assessed on the basis of the proposed annual ground rental rate and/or proposed concession fee based on a percentage of gross annual receipts from all sales and services; compatibility of architectural and landscaping designs to the motif of the area; number of units of accommodation to be developed; schedule of development to provide the number of units of accommodation proposed for the site; quality of service and rates to be charged to the public; quality of furnishings and equipment to be provided; demonstrated ability to finance, manage and operate the concession at the amount tendered.

If no acceptable proposals are received, or if the department is unable to negotiate acceptable terms with tenderers, the department may then negotiate with any interested party on a first come, first served basis for the opportunity to develop the land. In such cases the requirements of the tender call are used as the basis for negotiation.

2. Those tendering on visitor accommodation concessions must make a deposit in the form of an acceptable cheque, money order or draft made payable to the Receiver General of Canada in the amount specified in the call for tenders. Tenderers must show proof of financial capability to construct, equip, and operate the facilities.

3. Commercial leases are for periods of up to 42 years.

4. The department's requirements are defined and terms and conditions established. Then there is a public call for tenders by posting of notices in public buildings and by placing of advertisements in the major newspapers published within the region. Also, copies of the notice are sent to parties who have indicated an interest in such a development.

5. Leases for hotel or motel facilities have been awarded to the following parties between September, 1963 and September, 1968: (a) Jasper National Park; Jas-Day Investments Ltd; Tonquin Valley Motel Ltd. (b) Banff National Park; Mountaineer Motel Company Limited.

2. Who are the members of the National Indian Advisory Board?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Since it was established, the National Indian Advisory Board met as follows: (a) in Ottawa, January 10 to 12, 1966. This meeting was held for the purpose of describing to the board the programs and priorities of the Indian affairs branch. (b) in Ottawa, September 19 to 23, 1966. CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN U.S. TRAINING PROGRAMS

Question No. 181—Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West):

1. Has the Minister or any of his military advisors decided against further participation by Canadian Service personnel in a number of American military training programs, whether relatively free or at a stated price?

2. Specifically what is the degree of future Canadian participation in such training programs as Course 1181 at Fort Bliss, Texas, a missile guidance training program, in which Canada is not now represented?

3. Has the retrenchment in participation in U.S. based training programs resulted in a cut back in the free flow of information to Canadian forces personnel in the relative sectors of military training and equipment?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): 1. No. Canadian Forces personnel participated in United States military training programs only when similar training is unavailable within Canadian resources. The extent of this training is governed by the availability of funds to cover tuition fees, travel and temporary duty expenses. There has been no other reason to limit participation provided a valid training requirement is established.

2. Attendance at various courses outside of Canada are reviewed annually to determine their relative importance and priority. Two Canadian Forces officers have just completed the guided missile systems officer course 4F-1181 at Fort Bliss, Texas. No candidates are planned for the next course. 3. Does the Minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs intend to investigate the loss leader tactics employed in the sale of bread in the light of this recent price increase?

Orders for Returns

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. Yes.

It is the policy of the director of investigation and research under the Combines Investigation Act to scrutinize all significant price movements which come to his attention for the purpose of considering whether they reflect a breach of the act and he will take any action that may be required under the act.

3. The Combines Investigation Act does not make the use of loss leader tactics, as such, an offence. However, section 33A of the act does prohibit certain forms of predatory pricing. The director of investigation and research under the act will continue to keep the situation under review and will take any action that may be required under the act.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand.

Motion No. 10—Mr. Fortin:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all correspondence, telegrams or other documents exchanged between the Minister of Agriculture of Canada and the Minister of Agriculture of the Province of Quebec since January 1, 1965, relating to the request for assistance to the producers of maple sugar and syrup.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, with regard to this motion I am advised by my departmental officials that there is no such correspondence on record. EXTERNAL AID

STATEMENT RESPECTING PREFERENCE IN WORLD BANK LOANS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister, who I am delighted to see in the house apparently unbruised after returning from hostile territory. Could the hon. gentleman say whether the Minister of Finance was speaking for the government of Canada when he specifically endorsed Robert McNamara's plan to give first preference for world bank loans to countries which are willing to bring in programs of population control; and will the Acting Prime Minister say whether the Minister of Finance was stating the official policy of the government of Canada and of the Department of External Affairs?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity to see or read what the Minister of Finance said, but certainly he is there representing the government of Canada and in the statements he would make in respect to those matters under his jurisdiction, including financial matters of various sorts, he would be speaking on behalf of the government of Canada.

Mr. Stanfield: For clarification, Mr. Speaker, then can we assume that this was an authorized statement?

Mr. Hellyer: I would not want to comment specifically without having a chance to see it, but I am sure the Minister of Finance, who is a most responsible and alerted minister, would not say anything that was not completely in accordance with government policy.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of this being the apparent policy of the government of Canada with regard to world bank loans, could the Acting Prime Minister indicate whether the government intends to apply this policy to Canada's own policy of foreign aid?

Mr. Hellyer: No, I am not in a position to comment, Mr. Speaker, but this is not a new question. It is one which has been raised from time to time throughout the years. It has been commented on by U. Thant, Secretary General of the United Nations, and is a matter of real concern to many people in many parts of the world.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And a very wrong principle.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I am simply seeking information. Perhaps the Acting Prime Minister could take the question under notice and he himself, or the Prime Minister upon his return, advise the house whether this is the policy of the government.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AIR CANADA

WINNIPEG—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT RESPECTING OVERHAUL BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister in his capacity as Minister of Transport. Is he yet in a position to make any statement regarding the future of Air Canada's maintenance and overhaul base at Winnipeg?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): There is nothing I can add to my previous statement, Mr. Speaker. The question is under immediately active consideration at the present time. There are alternative proposals being studied by the government and by the committee which had been formed but which now, regrettably, is operating without the direct assistance of the province of Manitoba. I still hope we will be in a position to make an announcement soon.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, may I ask if there has been any consultation either on the part of Air Canada or on the part of the government with the unions that are affected, since I raised this matter last week?

Mr. Hellyer: I cannot answer that question specifically, Mr. Speaker.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): As a supplementary question I would like to ask the minister whether the delay in this regard results from the fact that a task force has been set up to determine the course of Air Canada and the suggestion made by the chairman of that committee during the election campaign that he believed in a merger of Air Canada and C.P. Air Lines. Is that merger under consideration?

Mr. Hellyer: The first question, Mr. Speaker, as I understood it, asked if there was any connection between any delay with regard to an announcement concerning the future of the base at Winnipeg and the interesting proposition put forward by my colleague the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Richardson), and the answer is no.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, when the government is considering the replacement of the president of Air Canada does it intend to decide this important matter on the basis of merit only, and will political patronage be kept out of it?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. While the different possibilities regarding the Air Canada overhaul base at Winnipeg are being considered, actively considered, under immediately active consideration, etc., will the minister give the assurance that no more employees of Air Canada will be transferred elsewhere from Winnipeg?

Mr. Hellyer: I cannot give a categorical assurance, Mr. Speaker, but I can tell my hon. friend what I am sure he already knows; that we have been getting the co-operation of the company in the last few weeks in respect of this matter. Every effort is being made to reach a decision so the employees in Winnipeg will know what options are available to them.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But no consultation with them

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that many things in Air Canada seem to have come to a standstill, how soon will the minister be able to announce the name of the new president of Air Canada?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to the Prime Minister's statement to the house with respect to this matter.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy Royal): How does "immediately active consideration" differ from plain consideration?

TRADE

PLUTONIUM—REPORTED SALE BY U.S. AT HIGHER PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the honourable minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Could he tell the house why the United States is selling plutonium at $43 per gram whereas Canada got only $22 per gram for the plutonium sold to France?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member's question, if in order, should be put on the order paper.

[English]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Would the minister comment on the significance of the unusual policy of the wheat board of having lower grades of wheat predominate at export outlets, and say whether it indicates a change in the export pattern?

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the hon. member would not agree that the question as asked is not in order. The hon. member cannot ask a minister to comment about a statement such as the one to which he referred.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

PANARCTIC OIL—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO EMPLOYMENT POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. I believe the matter is urgent. It arises as a result of the many statements evolving around the Panarctic Oil project. Would the minister undertake to commence an investigation for the purpose first of determining whether the government has been guilty of or has condoned discriminatory practices against Eskimos, as recently alleged; and second, ascertaining the benefits or otherwise derived by Eskimos in the Northwest Territories from the Panarctic Oil project and whether such persons have been affected by discriminatory practices?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): I think the suggestion of the hon. member is very commendable. I will refer the matter immediately to the fair employment practices branch of my department for investigation.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct this question to the attention of the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. Is he prepared today to make a report to the house which he indicated last week that he hoped to be in a position to make about this time in respect of the setting up of a parliamentary committee on the national capital?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not ready.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ONTARIO—DENIAL OF RETRAINING OPPORTUNITY TO CHRYSLER WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address this question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Would the minister advise the house whether any further consideration is being given to the plight of over 300 Chrysler workers who have been denied the opportunity to upgrade their education or to complete grade 12?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as you know we are undertaking quite an ambitious training and retraining program in the province of Ontario. In the first six months of this year we have put several thousand persons in place for training. I shall be happy to consider this request in the light of the over-all program.

STEPS TO RELIEVE UNEMPLOYMENT IN SHIPBUILDING INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Defence Production. Following the recent meeting of the minister, the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce with representatives of the Canadian Shipbuilding Association, could the minister now advise us what steps the government is taking to alleviate the unemployment in the shipyards of Canada which has been referred to as perilous?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hesitate to make this suggestion, but the minister may wish to make a statement on motions.

REQUEST FOR FAIR EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In view of charges of sex discrimination in employment which was made yesterday by the president of the Canadian Labour Congress, and in view of the need to ensure that women workers will receive equal pay for comparable work and equal opportunity in respect of hiring and advancement, will the government consider the enactment of a fair employment practices act?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, 23 years ago I learned not to argue with a woman. I think the idea is commendable. I should like to refer the hon. lady to the remarks made at ten o'clock last evening by the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce in respect of this subject and my opinion on the matter.

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether the contractors working on federal-provincial road renewal projects are permitted to pay their employees wages considerably below the prevailing rates, as is now the case in St. John's, Newfoundland?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, we do have a minimum wage which we enforce quite rigidly. We do have, I must admit, a problem in respect of federal-provincial projects, but where there are any deviations permitted they are usually allowed only to give the working force in a particular area as much work as possible. I am not aware of the particular situation to which the hon. member alludes. If he will bring it to my attention I shall give him an answer as soon as possible.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF DEPARTMENTAL REORGANIZATION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, as a quadruple Indian chief naturally I am interested in the Indians. I should like to ask the minister—and I do so with great respect for the industry which he is applying to his portfolio—whether because of the deep uncertainty among Indians everywhere across Canada he would give consideration to holding back the reconstruction or regeneration of the Indian department and himself pay a visit to the various major Indian reserves across Canada, in order to obtain the views of the Indians rather than the views of civil servants.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as "Chief Gooslap" a title given to me recently I am happy to answer the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

This reorganization, as I said earlier, has no other purpose than a more efficient administration of the department here in Ottawa. We have no intention of changing the situation in the reserves among Indian bands. We intend to maintain the same system but as we had in Ottawa education services for Eskimos, education services for Indians, an engineering service for Indians and one for Eskimos, etc., in short, as there was a duplication of services, we decided to amalgamate them to enable Canada's Indians and Eskimos to be better served by the headquarters in Ottawa.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the course the minister is following is as simple as he says it is, has he consulted with the general factotum, the Minister without Portfolio, and has he yet been able to convince that gentleman who is close to the Indians that the policy the minister has in mind is the correct one?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, whom I congratulate on being chosen chief of an Indian tribe; it suits him very well.

I would like to know whether, in view of the statement he has just made, the minister intends to make financially possible for the Indians what is physically realizable.

INDUSTRY

URANIUM—POSSIBLE PRODUCTION INCREASE FOLLOWING PLUTONIUM SALE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. As a result of the sale of plutonium to France has any new allocation been made or will one be made to producers of uranium for the sale of their product?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the sale of uranium is in any way necessarily tied to the plutonium sale. The plutonium sale was an independent sale. As hon. members know, the international safeguards were adhered to in that particular sale. It is not in any way tied to, nor does it necessarily connote, any new or future sale or arrangement.

Mr. Harkness: I think the minister knows that plutonium is derived originally from—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Harkness: May I ask the minister whether he intends to acquire new supplies of uranium in order to replace the plutonium which has been sold?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that his supplementary question might be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Harkness: I should like to ask another supplementary. Was this sale of plutonium made at a very substantial reduction from the going price?

Mr. Speaker: That supplementary should also be placed with the first one on the order paper.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

USE OF NEW DRUG CONTAINER TO PROTECT CHILDREN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. A Windsor firm has offered to the market a virtually child-proof pill container. In view of the fact that many children have died because of the ease with which some drug containers can be opened, has the department made a study of these new containers? If such a study should prove that the containers are effective, will the minister give his assurance that their use will be made compulsory in order to remove this threat to the lives of children?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker. That recommendation came about as the result of a committee set up by our own food and drug directorate. We have referred this matter to the specifications committee which will set up a subcommittee to consider the specifications for a bottle top. When this study is completed we intend to incorporate the specifications in the regulations of the Food and Drugs Act.

Inquiries of the Ministry

DIRECTIVES RESPECTING MEDICAL TREATMENT OF INDIANS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It arises out of his statement on motions. Could the minister inform the house whether the revised directive of April to which he referred, which restored the traditional medical rights of our Indian citizens, has been replaced by yet another directive which reverts to the earlier restrictions, one being issued before the election and the other one following the election?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker. To the best of my personal knowledge it has not been repudiated by any further directive, and these services are now being maintained at the previous level.

Mr. Dinsdale: Is the minister not aware of the directive of July 15 from the regional office in Edmonton?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare with reference to the statement by the minister regarding medical treatment for our Indian people. Will the minister advise the house whether fees for the transportation of sick, injured and indigent Indians to hospital from the Eskasoni reserve, which were cut off by his predecessor, have been reinstated? I am sure the minister will realize it is most difficult for a person with a broken leg to walk 30 miles to the hospital at Sydney.

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, my information is that this service was not cut out at any time, but I will check this out and provide an answer.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his reply, but I should like to ask him whether he would be so kind as to pay the several hundreds of dollars owing to individuals who have transported sick and indigent patients to hospitals but have been refused payment by the department.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT ON POVERTY AREAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development whether he is now prepared to answer the question which he took as notice yesterday, regarding whether the two volume report prepared by ARDA on Indian poverty areas has been suppressed, and will the government make this report available if it has it?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, no report has been suppressed. There was an internal report on departmental affairs which we now have and which we are considering. As soon as it is submitted to the government—probably to the cabinet—I will be able to inform the house of its recommendations.

[English]

Mr. Simpson: Was the report which was received brought to the minister's attention?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, Mr. Speaker. There was a report. I have received it and I intend to discuss it with the cabinet. Later on we shall presumably make recommendations regarding it.

TRANSPORT

PROPOSED NEW CANAL BETWEEN LAKE ONTARIO AND LAKE ERIE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, has the Minister of Transport received any proposal from the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority relating to a new ship canal between lake Ontario and lake Erie, pointing out the short time that yet remains before the present canal facilities will reach the saturation point? If so, is the government giving consideration to implementing a plan and, if not, why not?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question should be placed on the order paper.

WATER RESOURCES

INQUIRY AS TO PRAIRIE CONSERVATION PROJECTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development in his capacity of reporting to the house on the P.F.R.A. I might say that the urgency of this question is due to the climatic factor of the approaching winter.

In view of the reorganization of the minister's department and the resulting serious slowdown in the development of water conservation projects in the three prairie provinces, will the minister say when this reorganization will be completed and these urgent and important water development projects resumed?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, the reorganization will not be completed before the new law is accepted by the house, so I presume that in a few weeks or perhaps months everything will be reorganized.

DRUGS

INQUIRY AS TO ACTION TO CONTROL INCREASED NARCOTICS TRAFFIC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. L. Whiting (Halton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether his department is waging an all-out war on the use of drugs? Young people are experimenting with drugs without realizing the serious effects.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Whiting: What is the department doing to educate young people, and is serious consideration being given to using modern communications techniques such as films, T.V. programs and—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that questions should not be speeches, however short. I would suggest that the important question he has raised should be put on the order paper.

HOUSING

RECEPTION OF BRIEFS BY TASK FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport to give an assurance to the house that his task force on housing, as it proceeds from one city to another, will make appropriate arrangements to receive briefs from important and major organizations. I have reference to the brief of the Toronto real estate board which apparently was not received by that group in Toronto.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish I could give such a general assurance. As my hon. friend will appreciate, the response to the work of the task force has been so great it is quite impossible to hear all of the representations that might be made by larger organizations. The only way this could be done would be by extending the time allocated to us for reaching some conclusions. If we did that I think my hon. friend would agree it would not be possible to prepare any possible legislation for presentation this session and before next year's building program begins.

I think we will have to do the best we can and hear as many groups that have submitted briefs as possible. We must hear from a wide cross-section of these groups in order to get a varied point of view of all the ideas that are available. These will then have to be considered along with a reading of the other briefs in an attempt to reach some conclusion before the end of the year.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, will the minister give the house some idea as to what criteria are used in the selection of the briefs that are heard and considered and those that are not?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is the type of information, if it is to be given, that should be given on motions.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Transport give the house an assurance that the government is taking his task force as seriously as it took the task force of the Minister without Portfolio?

HARBOURS

ROBERTS BANK, B.C.—COMMENCEMENT OF RAIL LINK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he has been informed as to the starting date of the proposed rail link between Roberts Bank and our national railway system and, if so, what is it?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not been informed as to the starting date. As my hon. friend is no doubt aware, there have been a number of representations made in respect of the route of this railway. To the best of my knowledge no firm date for its commencement has been announced.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AGRICULTURE

CORN—PROPOSED EMBARGO ON IMPORTS FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he has met with his cabinet colleagues and discussed the possibility of placing an embargo on the importation of corn into this country, particularly in view of the position the producers find themselves in at this time?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have had meetings with many people including members of the cabinet in relation to this problem.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, has the minister dealt with the specific subject of placing an embargo on the importation of corn with his cabinet colleagues?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows very well that I cannot answer that kind of a question because the discussions, the agenda and everything else that takes place in cabinet are confidential.

Mr. Baldwin: Confidential and inadequate.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Crowfoot. I quite appreciate the point taken by the Minister of Agriculture that he cannot disclose anything that takes place in cabinet. But can the Acting Prime Minister assure us that none of his colleagues who took part in that decision had a conflict of interest in reference to the importation of corn?

CHEESE—DUMPING OF EUROPEAN PRODUCT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet perhaps I might answer the questions that were asked on September 24 and September 30. I have been in touch with Mr. LeClerc, president of the national dairy council, concerning cheese dumping or the allegation of cheese dumping in Canada. Mr. LeClerc advises that he was misquoted in the press release and he said that in his view there is no cheese dumping now. What he actually said was, "If there was cheese dumping as there has been in other areas of the dairy industry we would have to look into it further". Mr. LeClerc therefore has no specific evidence of cheese dumping in Canada.

Inquiries of the Ministry

BIOLOGICAL EFFECTS ON CHICKENS OF MICROWAVE TOWER RADIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture or to the Minister without Portfolio from Winnipeg, since I understand he is something of a farmer as well. I would like to ask the minister whether he has received a complaint signed by several hundred residents of central Manitoba alleging that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask the question directly.

Mr. Schreyer: I put the question to the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister say whether his department will establish or initiate research into the biological effects on chickens of microwave tower radiation?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Schreyer: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the laughter of hon. members might leave the impression that the matter is a bantering one, but it is quite serious and I hope Your Honour will take it that way.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is why the Chair suggested that this very important and serious matter be placed on the order paper.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

INQUIRY AS TO INCREASE IN WELFARE PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, in view of the just society the hon. Mr. Trudeau has promised us, would the Minister of National Health and Welfare tell me whether the handicapped and the blind will see their pensions increased this year at the same rate as the old age pensions.

Mr. Speaker: The question of the hon. member is much too general and I would remind him and the other members on both sides of the house that it is preferable to refer to a minister in making use of his title rather than of his name.

[Mr. Olson.]

TRADE

WHEAT—DELAY IN ANNOUNCEMENT OF SALES CONTRACTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Last year we were told that the low sales of wheat were as a result of the fact that we did not have low quality grain. This year we apparently have it. Why is there a delay in announcing any specific contract for the sale of wheat?

Mr. Baldwin: A low quality government.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member mind repeating the last part of his question?

Mr. Korchinski: Last year we were told we could not sell wheat because we did not have sufficient quantities of low quality grain. I am now asking—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question as asked is clearly argumentative.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, when will an announcement be made that a contract has been signed for the sale of low quality wheat?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, another hon. member just referred to the fact that the wheat board was taking measures to bring these low grades of wheat to export points. Obviously this is a policy that the wheat board intends to follow. Obviously, also, the wheat board has no intention of announcing, before the wheat sales take place, where they are going to take place. So the hon. member will know—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for High Park.

AIR TRANSPORT

EDUCATIONAL REQUIREMENTS FOR TRAFFIC CONTROL INSTRUCTORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Walter Deakon (High Park): Mr. Speaker, this question I wish to direct to the Minister of Transport. It has been brought to my attention that the status of the Department of Transport air traffic control instructors—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask the question directly.

Mr. Deakon: Mr. Speaker, I have to tell you what it is about before I ask the question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Deakon: I have been advised that the Department of Transport air traffic control instructors for civil aviation have been dropped from grade 6 to grade 5 level. This lower grade appears to be a level held by some of the people receiving this instruction. In other words, the instructors and some of the people they are teaching are at the same level. Has the minister considered this problem and, if so, what solution has been arrived at?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question should be placed on the order paper.

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP

INQUIRY AS TO TRAINING OF IMMIGRANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. In view of the increasing number of new immigrants, particularly from Czechoslovakia, and in view of the fact that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration has stated that it is not the responsibility of his department to provide language training for these people, could the minister tell us whether his department is undertaking to supply training in citizenship for new immigrants, including language training?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker, not only have we considered the question but we have set up a detailed project in this respect; as soon as the government will have adopted a policy thereon, the house will be informed.

FARM MACHINERY SYNDICATES CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENTS TO BROADEN PURPOSES OF LOANS, ENABLE CO-OPERATIVE ASSOCIATIONS TO OBTAIN LOANS, ETC.

The house resumed, from Tuesday, October 1, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Olson—Mr. Béchard in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure amending the Farm ...dicates Credit Act to broaden the purposes for which loans may be made under that act; to enable co-operative farm associations and certain farming corporations and other associations to obtain loans under that act without the members or shareholders thereof being required to enter into any other formal agreement; and to provide for other consequential and related subjects.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. House in committee of the whole on a certain proposed resolution to amend the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act. Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. McQuaid: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make it abundantly clear at the beginning that I am completely in favour of the broad, general principles outlined in the resolution now before the committee. I do not think there is anybody in this house, in fact I do not think there is anybody in Canada, who will deny the necessity of supplying credit to those who are today engaged in our farming industry. It is generally recognized that there is an increasing demand for farm credit and that this demand arises from the capital requirements of farm business.

It is very evident that farming today is big business and requires a tremendous amount of capital. As an example we have the figures issued recently by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics which tell us that the capital value of farms in Canada in 1966 was $19 billion. That is a lot of money in any man's language. Of this amount, $13 billion was in respect of land and buildings, $3.5 billion for capital and equipment and $2 billion for livestock. In other words, our farmers have a large capital investment in their businesses.

Even in the maritime provinces, which are a comparatively small portion of Canada in so far as area is concerned, farm capital amounts to $443 million. In the province of Prince Edward Island the amount for land and buildings is $72 million, for capital and equipment $35 million, and for livestock $20 million. This means that $128 million has been invested by the farmers of Prince Edward Island in their operation. Therefore I suggest there is absolutely no question that farming today is big business and requires a tremendous amount of capital.

In order that capital may be available to farmers, credit facilities must be extended to them. This is the reason I say that we on this side of the house are in no way opposed to any measures which will make capital more readily available to our farmers.

Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act

There is the further fact that it is costing more than ever before to farm in Canada today. For example, in 1966 the farmers of Canada spent $479 million on farm machinery in just one year. It would be interesting to know where this $479 million went. The fact is that $149 million was spent on farm tractors, $20 million was spent on planting and fertilizing machinery and $10 million was spent on barn equipment. Our farmers are naturally trying to make their labour as light as possible and are buying modern equipment in order to lighten their burden, and also because of the fact that farm labour is getting increasingly more scarce. To continue, $3 million was spent on spraying and dusting equipment, and $73 million was spent on combines. This is the amount of money which was spent on farm equipment in one year. It represents an increase of 12.2 per cent over what was spent six years ago in 1960. So it must be obvious to anyone who gives the matter any thought that credit must be expanded and more money must be made available to the farmers in order to enable them to buy equipment which is urgently needed by them.

In 1966 $13 million was spent on farm implements in the Atlantic provinces. In the province of Quebec $46 million was spent, 21.4 per cent more than was spent six years ago. In Ontario $102 million was spent on farm machinery. In Manitoba $62 million was spent. In Saskatchewan, where the most money was spent, $141 million was spent on farm machinery. In Alberta $102 million was spent, and in British Columbia, $10 million. I think that these figures must be convincing and must satisfy everyone on both sides of the house that additional credit must be made available to our farmers.

My chief complaint against the Farm Credit Act now in force is that apparently it only helps the big operators. The small farmers are not receiving the help from the Farm Credit Corporation which they should get. I remind the house that there is still a place in Canada for the small farmer. The annual report of the Farm Credit Corporation, while it does not say so in so many words, very definitely implies that there is no place in their program for the small family farm. This is not as it should be.

Let us look at the figures. In last year's report it is stated that the Farm Credit Corporation made 11,559 loans for a total of $251 million. If we divide the number of loans into the amount of money lent we will find that the average loan by the Farm Credit Corporation last year was $21,734. Apparently the corporation does not want to have anything to do with the small operator. How is the small operator going to survive if the policy of this government agency is continued in this way? As I said, there is a very important place for the small farmer, and I think that the necessary arrangements should be made with the Farm Credit Corporation so that the money required by the small farmer is made available to him.

The policy pursued at present by the Farm Credit Corporation is not the policy that was followed by the body which it replaced. When the old Canadian farm loan board was in existence it helped the small farmer. If we look at the average amount of the loans granted by the Canadian farm loan board we will find that it was around $3,000 to $5,000. That money was of some help to the small operator. Today, however, the small operator may just as well stay away from the Farm Credit Corporation because he receives no help and no encouragement from them.

As I said, there is still a place for the small farmer. To prove that there is a place for the small farmer and that he still plays an important part in our agricultural industry today, let me point out that in 1966 there were 430,000 census numbered farms in Canada, 104,000 of which, or 24 per cent, were in the 100 to 200-acre class. I suggest that this is a small farm. The small farmer might just as well stay home as go to the Farm Credit Corporation looking for help because they are just not interested in him unless he wants a loan of $10,000, $15,000 or $20,000. Where is the small farmer to get the money?

The minister said in his statement on Monday night that the resolution dealing with the Farm Credit Corporation was designed to help the young man engaged in farming. In many cases the young farmer who is trying to establish himself does not need or want a $25,000 or $30,000 loan. There are many young men who can get along on less and who could probably set up a decent farming establishment if they could obtain credit for $5,000, $6,000 or $8,000. These men can get no help at all from the Farm Credit Corporation, and this is one of the weaknesses of the corporation as it is now constituted.

Only one province in Canada, Alberta, has farms in excess of 100 to 200 acres. In that province the average farm is larger than that. However, in Canada today 24 per cent of our farms are in the 100 to 200 acre class, and I suggest that help must be made available to these farmers.

I wish to say a few words about the interest on these loans. Personally I cannot go along with the suggestion of the minister or of the government that the interest rate on Farm Credit Corporation loans must be increased. If we look at the last financial statement issued by the Farm Credit Corporation we will find the following statement in its 1967-68 annual report:

> Approximately 80 per cent of the funds lent by the corporation bear the statutory interest rate of 5 per cent. The corporation borrows funds from the Minister of Finance at current interest rates which are much higher than the average rate the corporation may charge, thus creating an interest deficit which lasts for the duration of the loan.

Then the report goes on to say:

> To finance its lending program during 1967-68, the corporation borrowed $194.5 million from the Minister of Finance at an average interest rate of 6.16 per cent ... The average interest rate on the corporation's borrowings is 5.294 per cent.

If we subtract 6.16 per cent, which is the cost of the money to the corporation, from the 5.29 per cent the farmers were paying, we get a difference of only .87 per cent. Surely in this just society in which we are supposed to be living the government can absorb that .87 per cent. The financial statement of the corporation shows that this difference in interest cost the corporation $3,809,000. When we consider that there are 1,960,000 people living on farms in Canada today, it means that the government is subsidizing them to the extent of only $2 per person. Surely this government, which thinks in terms of nothing less than billions and spends money like drunken sailors, can afford to absorb this $2 per person. This amount could be saved if some efforts were made to cut down the waste and extravagance in the various departments of government. We have heard rumblings and murmurs about green telephones, waste paper baskets costing $75 and electric pencil sharpeners. Some of these expenditures could be eliminated and money saved. In this way, enough money would be found to make up the very small difference of point .87 per cent or $2 for every man, woman and child who resides on a farm in Canada today.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Horner: British Columbia is subsidized a lot.

Mr. McQuaid: There are many things that are subsidized, though I am not complaining about that. When the coal industry in Nova Scotia got into trouble a year or so ago, the government did not hesitate to advance money to help that industry. There are 1,069,000 people living on farms in Canada today. Farming in Canada is big business, as I mentioned a moment ago, if one considers the capital investment in the industry. Surely the government could find enough money to absorb this small difference.

In his statement on Monday, as recorded on page 600 of Hansard, the minister is reported to have said:

> —unrealistic interest rates—

A difference of .87 per cent is not an unrealistic interest rate.

> —tend to cause misallocation of resources, and in particular terms any savings as a result of a subsidized interest rate on capital borrowed for the purchase of land could make the cost of land excessively inflationary.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, the giving of $2 for every person residing on a farm today in order to help the farmers is not going to make the price of land excessively inflationary. It is not going to mitigate the purposes for which the Farm Credit Corporation was established. Everyone will not be able to go to the Farm Credit Corporation to borrow money simply because the interest rate is low. The act stipulates that the farmer must have an established operation before a loan can be made, so it is only such farmers who will be going to the corporation. Surely the government can extend this privilege to that large segment of our population.

As I say, if the waste and extravagance in other government departments were eliminated the money would be found. We must remember that if a farmer has to pay more interest on the money he borrows he is adding to his operating costs. If his operating costs increase he will have to get more for his products if he is going to stay in business. If he has to get more for his products the consumer has to pay the added amount. All we are doing by raising interest rates, in the final analysis, is raising the cost of the product to the consumer. The results will flow back to the consumer. If the amount involved were a billion dollars, there might be some justification for the government's position. However, as I say, last year the amount involved was only $3,800,000 or $2 for every man, woman and child residing on a farm in Canada. I suggest very seriously to the government that it could very well afford, in the interests of the agricultural industry, to absorb that difference or it could be absorbed by eliminating waste and extravagance.

There is another aspect of which I do not think the government should lose sight. I refer to the fact that much of the money now coming back to the Farm Credit Corporation is the result of the repayment of loans made several years ago, perhaps 10 or 20 years ago. At that time this money was borrowed at a reasonably low rate of interest. I suggest that the government give consideration to establishing some sort of revolving fund so that the money which is coming back to the Farm Credit Corporation would not go into the treasury but would rather remain as a credit to the corporation. This money would be earning interest until such time as it was needed. If the government felt it was unable to absorb the whole of the $3,800,000, the money now being returned could be used to help relieve the situation a bit. In any case, Mr. Chairman, I am definitely opposed to any policy which will tend to increase the costs of those farmers who are borrowing money from the Farm Credit Corporation.

So far as the Farm Improvement Loans Act is concerned, those loans are government guaranteed bank loans. I do not believe the interest rates on those loans should be fixed by the governor in council.

I am sure the farmers of Canada have serious doubts about whether this is the proper thing to do. Surely some formula could be worked out whereby a percentage just a little above the cost of money to the government could be established. Some formula could be worked out to establish a more or less fixed rate of interest so the farmer will know what he is going to have to pay. Leaving the matter up to the governor in council is definitely not satisfactory. I think the minister and his department will find that the banks will go along with this idea. These are government guaranteed loans. If the government guarantee is worth anything at all, a bank should be glad to advance these loans. The percentage of loss will be small. The experience of the Farm Credit Corporation indicates this fact. If you look at their report you will find it shows a very small percentage of loss. This same small percentage of loss would obtain under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. The farmers of this country are honest. They do their best to pay their bills, and they will do so if they are given a decent break. If the government guarantee is worth anything, surely the banks will definitely go along with the setting of an interest rate a percentage point above the cost of money to the government.

I have little more to say, Mr. Chairman, except that when the Farm Credit Corporation bill comes before the house I will oppose it if it tends to increase the cost of money to our farmers. Again, I would recommend to the government that they give serious consideration to an attempt to broaden the scope of the Farm Credit Corporation so that it will be of some benefit to the small, family farmer who is still very important to this country.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, before discussing some of the points I should like to raise in connection with the resolution before us concerning farm credit I should like to extend congratulations to the Minister of Agriculture on his appointment. He represents a constituency in which I used to reside, and I am happy to see that we have a Minister of Agriculture who comes from a rural part of Canada similar to the rural area I am fortunate enough to represent. He used to farm in the area where I relieved as a station agent, so I heard a great deal about him, most of it favourable. I must confess that what I have heard about him in recent months has not been nearly as favourable, although I might have been talking to the wrong people in that area.

The resolution before us and the subsequent bill propose a number of changes in farm credit legislation, two or three of which I think are anything but desirable. The main intent of these changes is to increase the rates of interest charged under the Farm Improvement Loans Act and the Farm Credit Act. In my opinion, this is another instance of the old line parties providing more socialism for the rich. This has too long been a practice and habit of the present and previous governments. The main beneficiaries of these changes will be the money lenders. A couple of thousand years ago the money lenders were driven out of the temple, but it seems they have sneaked in the back door with the aid of governments in this country.

No one in this house, Mr. Chairman, will oppose measures that increase the availability of capital for agriculture. But surely such measures should not contribute to the increased cost of farm production. Farmers are about the only large economic group left in this country who have no say in how much they receive for their products. Therefore they have continually been faced with static or falling farm prices. At times they have received small increases but those have been accompanied each year with larger and larger increases in the cost of farm production. This is the old cost-price squeeze that every member of this house has been hearing about since the early fifties, and about which the minister spoke many times at great length when he was sitting in another part of this chamber and representing another interest.

It seems to me, that bringing about changes in the act to allow the governor in council to peg interest rates in accordance with the prevailing rate at any given period of time adds an additional cost to farm production for which the farmers are not prepared to stand. I must say that one of the reasons I am in this house is that many farmers have told me they are not prepared to stand for this sort of thing, and that they had lost faith in their previous governments who did stand for it.

With the prospect in the current year of lower farm incomes the government's plans for higher interest rates under these measures come at the worst possible time. All indications are that the grain harvest on the prairies this fall will produce substantially less high grade wheat and record quantities of low grade. Instead of good No. 2 or 3 northern wheat to sell we may have a lot of No. 4, 5 or 6. The prospect is for a lot of tough and damp grain being harvested as well, which, of course, can mean heated and out of condition grain in the farmers' grain bins later this fall.

Let me illustrate the situation by giving the price today, basis Regina, for No. 2 northern wheat. It is $1.48½. I was in my constituency last Saturday and Sunday and had a conversation with one farmer who had made two rounds in a field of wheat early in September before the rains came and threshed a few hundred bushels of wheat. The crop was running between 25 and 30 bushels to the acre. He took samples to his elevator and they were graded No. 2 northern. Then the rains came. Periodically since then he was able to get in half a day or a few hours of combining, and the samples that he next took to the elevator were graded No. 5 wheat. So instead of getting $1.48½, basis Regina, he will get $1.23½, a drop of 25 cents per bushel. In addition, he has combined some of that wheat tough out of sheer desperation to get as much threshed as he could. Tough wheat, Mr. Chairman, means another four cents less per bushel.

The bins of this farmer are full of fairly high grade wheat from last year. The fact that he will have lots of low grade wheat may make the Minister of Trade and Commerce and also the hon. member for Winnipeg South happy because it will undoubtedly make it easier to sell larger quantities of grain on the export market. However, it will not make the farmers any happier, because large quantities of low grades of grain sold at a lower price mean a lower income to the farmers. Surely these difficulties are bad enough without the farmer applying for a farm improvement loan for the purpose, say, of building additional grain storage, either a lumber or a steel bin, which by the way are very difficult to get, being faced with a higher rates of interest, particularly when the building is for storing low grade wheat which will return to the farmer less money. The chances are that unless the farmer can get his grain out of the bins and into the elevators a great amount of it will be lost through spoilage. With the kind of harvesting conditions prevailing during the last few weeks in western Canada, surely this is the worst possible time for any government that has a social conscience even to contemplate higher interest rates for farm improvement loans and Farm Credit Corporation loans.

The standard excuse for increased interest rates, of course, since their rapid rise last winter and spring has been that the banks will not lend money under the Farm Improvement Loans Act at the present fixed rate of 5 per cent because they can get much better rates elsewhere. Personally, I feel that that is too darned bad for the banks. I submit that now is the time for the minister and the government really to do something about beginning the new politics. After all, production of food is of national importance. Surely now is the time for the Minister of Agriculture and the government to declare as a national policy that this most basic of all industries is no longer to be the victim of the cost-price squeeze, that this government will no longer burden farmers with increased cost of production as a result of its own legislation.

Canada, has one of the largest areas of good agricultural land of any country in the world. It is filled with the most competent and efficient farmers of any country in the world. Only the organizational genius of the present government and previous old line party governments could see to it that we now have 20,000 fewer farms than there were in 1961.

I submit, that the legislation the minister now has before this committee should continue the practice of incorporating a fixed interest rate and that this interest rate should remain at the present 5 per cent. That means, of course, subsidized interest rates for all of the farming industry. I might add that I feel that this should also pertain to the farmers of the sea as well as the farmers of land. This legislation, should require the lending institutions to make such approved loans at that fixed rate. If this government and the Minister of Agriculture wish to implement some of the new politics about which we hear, they will also direct some of the capital that is available for all kinds of investment to investment in farm loans. Surely the capital needed for farm improvement loans and for Farm Credit Corporation loans is far more urgent and carries greater priority than capital for fancy shopping centres and fancy hotels. That is why direct government intervention—call it compulsion or whatever you will—is required. The money market should be told what amount of the available capital will go into the field of farm credit and farm improvement loans.

The minister mentions that there is great urgency to pass these measures, no doubt because the capitalization of the Farm Credit Corporation is almost exhausted. The corporation is nearly out of money. The other day the minister said that the bill to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act must be passed at once since the previous act expired last June 30. However, about one and a half pages earlier in Hansard, he reported that the Minister of Finance had publicly assured the lenders that the new legislation when passed would cover guarantees retroactive to June 30.

Surely the minister and the government can make certain that, no matter how long it takes to pass legislation, loan applications may continue to be received, processed and approved. In the case of farm improvement loans the banks know that whenever the legislation comes into force, their loans will be covered by the guarantees retroactively.

In the case of the farm Credit Corporation it takes six to eight months on the average for loans to be approved. Sometimes it takes a year. The approving of loans has some time taken so long that land farmers wanted to buy was sold to others. Here, too, the government ought to arrange for the receiving, processing and approving of loan applications to continue before the amended legislation comes into force. Lending institutions are protected by the knowledge that the legislation is about to come into force. In an emergency, should it happen that the funds of the Farm Credit Corporation became exhausted, farmers could walk into banks, credit unions or other financial institutions and borrow money at prevailing rates on the strength of the approved loan application. In any event, farmers could be accommodated over a short period until such time as there is more capitalization for the Farm Credit Corporation.

It is unlikely that the great majority of loan applications through the Farm Credit Corporation will be approved, let alone processed, in the immediate future. That being so I fail to see why the minister is raising all this fuss and furore in trying to push this legislation through the house as quickly as possible. His haste, it seems to me, shows nothing less than a desire to bring about an increase in interest rates as fast as he can. I shall be interested to hear the comments of the hon. members for Assiniboia and Saskatoon-Humboldt to their constituents on the subject of increased interest rates applicable to loans made under this legislation. I shall be interested to hear what explanations they make. I assure them that they have not heard the last of this matter for a long time to come.

I plead with the government, as others before me have pleaded, to fix the interest rate applicable under the legislation at the present level of 5 per cent. I submit that the most basic of our industries, agriculture, is entitled to this priority. If the cost of money is more than 5 per cent for farm credit the government ought to pay the difference out of the national treasury.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I only want to say a few words about the bill now before the house.

This bill deals with agriculture and I am very happy to notice that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) is now occupying his seat. He is a capable minister in this field as he was himself a farmer. As a matter of fact, he is still a western farmer.

There is no doubt that the minister knows and understands the agricultural problems. When the present Minister of Agriculture was sitting on this side of the house as a Social Crediter he used to chide the government about the interest rates being too high and about the loan increases that did not solve the farmers' problems.

He is now the Minister of Agriculture. He is introducing legislation that is identical to the one he was fighting against when he was a member of Social Credit in this house.

For instance let us examine resolution No. 5 which reads in part as follows:

—a measure to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act in order to provide for a further three-year loan period—to substitute for the 5% rate of interest on guaranteed farm improvement loans made under the Act such rate or rates of interest as may be prescribed by the Governor in Council—

This implies that, from now on, those farmers unable to obtain credit or loans at 5% interest will perhaps be forced to pay 8, 9, 10 or 12%. The government will not then pledge itself to reimburse the difference in interest rates. That is not an improvement for the farmer, and the Minister of Agriculture, the member for Medicine Hat, would have a hard time explaining that to the farmers of his own riding, for that is not what he told them during the 20 or 25 years of his political life.

Today, he comes to us with legislation in every way identical to the previous one, but which allows the farmer to get deeper into debt, to incur debts today that he will not be able to repay in 10 or 20 years from now; and so agriculture will still be in the same state of stagnation in 10, 15 or 20 years from now, and the minister is well aware of it.

From here on in, farmers will be allowed to borrow $25,000 instead of $15,000 for——the purchase of land as an addition to an existing farm enterprise—

They cannot manage to earn a livelihood with the farms they already have; how can we imagine that agriculture will be saved by bigger farms.

My honourable friend the minister owns thousands of acres of land out west. Some of my relatives in southern Saskatchewan have whole sections of land—"You are looking for land? Here you are—". The problem is not limited to the size of farms. The problem is to have a farm policy which will enable the farmers to live on the land they are farming. That is what is lacking, and the minister is not proposing anything to that effect.

Taking for granted, Mr. Chairman, that agriculture is the basis—and I do say the basis— of the whole economic structure of Canada, we must work to improve the living conditions of the farmers, and not crush them with such legislation authorizing the loan companies and the trust companies to take control of the farms through long term or short term loans. Everyone knows that, and the minister knows it too. As I said, agriculture is the basis of the whole economic structure. Hon. Members' coat tails and top hats would just hang in the parliamentary restaurant on the sixth floor if there were no farmers in Canada to provide the food everyone needs.

And what are we doing to help the farmer? Three measures are introduced in succession to burden him even more, and the minister will say to Canadian farmers: See how liberal we are—not Creditistes, no sir—Liberals. Had he been a Creditiste, he would never have introduced such a measure. At any rate, we will recall what he said when he was sitting with us on this side when the government was putting forward such measures. As Social Credit spokesman on agriculture, he was driving the government into a corner in an attempt to indicate the course it should follow.

Today, on the government front benches, the minister takes over where the previous government had left off.

An hon. Member: With a smile.

Mr. Caouette: With a smile, true enough, but the farmers will not feel like smiling.

Mr. Chairman, we should not let finance companies look after that. It is a fact, this is again a financial problem.

At noon, I received a delegation of Ontario corn producers who, at the present time, have to sell their goods at a loss. The hon. minister met them a fortnight ago. No solution has been found to their problem. The Americans are dumping corn in Canada, when our production cannot meet the needs of the Canadian consumers. We have to import corn and we allow American dumping in Canada. Then, corn producers in southern Ontario have to suffer tremendous losses and the hon. minister is quite aware of that.

There is some uneasiness in the field of maple syrup production in the province of Quebec. The hon. minister knows that we produce a first grade maple syrup. At the present time, the Beauce producers have a million gallons of maple syrup in stock but no attempt has been made to help them dispose of their goods from last spring. However, it would be possible to dispose of them. I noticed last week that there was no maple syrup in France. We could perhaps sell them some and have agricultural instead of cultural exchanges.

Mr. Chairman, in the dairy industry, for instance, the farmers of Ontario and eastern Canada are bringing pressure to bear on the government and the Minister of Agriculture with a view to having a set price of $5 or $5.25 per hundredweight for manufacturing milk. The government has not changed its policy since the last elections. It is exactly the same. We adopt measures to enable people, who even now cannot make a decent profit on the sale of their produce, to get into debt even deeper, and to have the privilege of paying higher rates of interest. What a policy of grandeur this government of ours has. What a responsible policy. Mr. Chairman, under this resolution which reads in part as follows:

—to authorize the Minister of Finance to designate certain trust and loan companies and insurance companies and certain credit unions, caisse populaire and other co-operative credit societies as authorized lenders under the Act: to establish a limit of $1,200,000,000 as the aggregate principal amount of guaranteed loans that may be made by all authorized lenders in that period and a limit of $300,000,000 as the aggregate amount of guaranteed loans that may be made by authorized lenders other than banks during that period—

To help the small lenders... The government is willing to take pity on the fate of the small lending concerns but he forgets to take pity on the farmers' lot. Lenders, okay; farmers, not okay.

Here is another point, in resolution No. 7, as given on the order paper. I quote:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure amending the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act—

With regard to farm machinery, I still remember the days when the present minister was the Social Credit member for Medicine Hat—he was the spokesman for his party in matters of agriculture—and, at that time, he denounced with virulence the shameful exploitation of finance companies which strangled the farmers when they bought farm equipment.

Everyone knows, for instance, that a small Ferguson tractor—I have sold them—which used to sell for $1875, now sells for $4300. The farmer borrows and will be able to borrow again at higher interest rates so that his small tractor will cost him $6,000, but his production does not increase. He does not get higher profits for his produce. What will his situation be in five or ten years from now with such laws?

It is all very well to tell the farmer: You can now borrow $25,000. When he gets his loan, the farmer is happy because it allows him to spend $25,000 instead of $15,000. However, when the time comes to pay back the capital plus the interest, and the farmer has not made a profit on the sale of his products, how can he possibly pay back the capital plus the interest when he cannot even pay back the capital? That is what the government does not understand. However, I am certain that the Minister of Agriculture understands it, for he said it often and loudly enough in this house when he was with us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, we do not ask for miracles, but if the government could introduce a bill intended to help the farmer by fixing the interest rate on loans at a ceiling of 2 or 3 per cent, for example, the minister would then really be helping the farmer by guaranteeing not only the loan the farmer gets, but a market for his products.

As I have said, if one million bushels of wheat were grown instead of one thousand, the loss would be greater. No need to be a genius to understand it and the minister understands it. The problem is not to know whether or not we can get the farmer more deeply in debt. Everybody knows that the farmer can, owing to the government guarantee, run up more bills. The farmer wants to know whether he will have the opportunity to sell his products at prices which will allow him to make a profit. That is precisely what the government does not take into account. The minister does not talk about that. Marketing is left to organizations such as the U.C.F., to farm associations such as the wheat pool in the West. It is left to agencies which absorb part of the production or the profits along the way, so that the farmer is always in the same situation.

As I said, Mr. Chairman, agriculture is the basis of society. The farmer cannot afford to strike. If he is a milk producer, everyone knows, for instance, that cows are not on holidays on Sunday and that he has to do the milking on Sunday as on any other day of the week. That means seven days a week, 365 days a year. The farmer's day starts at 4 or 5 o'clock in the morning and ends at 8, 9 or 10 o'clock at night. But there are some people who get up at 10 o'clock in the morning to milk the farmers dry. That is happening in our own country, in Canada.

Mr. Chairman, all members should realize the importance of agriculture, when all classes in society have the right to strike for better conditions of living, and obtain them. There have been strikes throughout Canada, in every field. There was even one in my own place which ended Monday. For what? Salary increases. But the farmers cannot afford that. The only recourse he has is to ask his member of parliament to pass legislation to help them, to guarantee the sale of their products. But the government procrastinates and finally presents legislation, saying to them: We help you, we enable you to go in deeper, to be worse off, to give you the assurance that you may not sell your products, but you will be able to get further into debt. They are thus given the assurance of more insecurity instead of security.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I believe that a solution is urgent and I bring up the matter again. The Minister of Agriculture who is acquainted with the problem of Canadian agriculture could find a solution, since he is so competent.

I travelled with the Minister of Agriculture to Russia and Czechoslovakia. The first thing which interested him in those countries was to see what was going on in farming and the minister knows what the trouble is. But he is caught in a government strait-jacket which compels him to bring down some bills which he inwardly disapproves, I am sure. He cannot admit it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: This is why he said in this house, as I did myself, that we are caught in a terrible financial system which is crushing us and nothing is done to free us.

• (4:50 p.m.)

It seems to me that if the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) would get up one morning and say: "I am the Minister of Agriculture of Canada, the first man responsible for agriculture in this country. Due to my knowledge of economics, to my knowledge of the créditistes tenets—here, he might stretch a little, expand his chest a bit, spread out his arms and loosen the purse string—I am going to do such and such a thing". Mr. Chairman, this would be a good thing and the hon. minister would help all the farmers in Canada. But he is afraid.

However, we are going to help him, we are going to support him, provided he makes up his mind and introduce other types of bills, bills which will not crush the farmer even more. In my views, these bills aim to strangle the farmer, to give another turn of the screw.

It does not mean, Mr. Chairman, that as a matter of principle, we are dead set against loans to farmers. They are useful for the farmer who is assured to make a profit and who needs to borrow money in order to expand. However, we know beforehand that the farmer who is borrowing $25,000. instead of $15,000. has no guarantee of a better price for his products and that he is already operating with a deficit. What we need, is legislation designed to help marketing and to enable the farmer to sell at a profit. It would be easy then for the farmer to find lenders; actually, the government would not even need to underwrite the loans, or to tell the farmer where to go or not to go. Let the government do its job. Let the Minister of Agriculture give to the farmers in my consttiuency, in the provinces of Quebec, Ontario and in the whole of Canada, the undertaking that there will be a market for their products. In two years, Canadian production will increase threefold or even fivefold and we will then be in a position to meet the needs of our population; indeed, we are able to do it now. We will then be in a better position, all over the world to help the poor, as well as the underdeveloped countries where people die of hunger. It is said that two-thirds of the world population are hungry—

[English]

The Chairman: Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Chairman: Is there unanimous consent that the hon. member continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I thank my colleagues for allowing me to carry on. I think there are only two minutes left before you call it five o'clock so that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business.

I see that one of my good friends wanted to rise but, I think as there are only two minutes, he might easily wait until tomorrow.

Mr. Chairman, as I am in fine fettle, I shall proceed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: I think that the Minister of Agriculture takes the biscuit. I am amazed. Since I have known him—and he is one of my good friends—he has been most eloquent in the house on the matter in hand. But today, he introduces these bills. I am astounded, and my colleagues who have known him well are astounded too. In fact, this is the man who if I am not mistaken, was to become eventually the leader of the Creditiste movement in Western Canada and, perhaps, the successor to the present Premier of Alberta. I cannot understand how he can attempt to introduce such bills today.

At any rate, Mr. Chairman, I wish that all the honourable members, and first the hon. minister, would understand the importance of our agriculture but in its true sense. We must not help our agriculture to deteriorate further, to get bogged down deeper, but we must recognize that agriculture is the basis of our economy and that when we help our farmers, we help ourselves, we help the other classes of society, we help the country, because in a country where agriculture is prosperous, the other classes are also prosperous. In fact, a country where agriculture is dying out, where it tends to die out or to decline, is doomed. We have had examples of that in Czechoslovakia and in Russia. I have seen examples of it in France last week where the farmers are faced with a lot of hardship, from which social troubles are likely to stem.

Mr. Chairman, in closing I wish that the hon. Minister of Agriculture would finally introduce bills really intended to assist the farmer and not to get him deeper in debt and get him fast out of the picture.

[English]

The Chairman: Order, please. It being five o'clock, in order for the house to proceed to the consideration of private members' business it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit at the next sitting of the house.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

SUGGESTED GUARANTEED MINIMUM INCOME

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the possibility of passing a law under which every Canadian citizen, who is without work or other source of income, would receive a guaranteed minimum income as a way of recognizing, in a practical fashion, the dignity, the value and the economic rights of the human being, in the context of the economic life of the nation; that the amount required for the payment of the guaranteed minimum income be derived from the national product so as to increase neither the taxes on individuals and companies, nor the cost of living, nor the price of any product or service; that this measure could, with advantage, replace the contributions and payments of all the systems of unemployment insurance, social welfare, family and personal allowances, Canada pensions and Quebec pensions, that the economic recognition of the guaranteed minimum income would be to the greatest advantage of all the citizens of Canada, and, at the same time, would be of great benefit to all the principal sectors of the national economy.

[Mr. Caouette.]

• (5:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, about this notice of motion which I put on the order paper and which appeared for the first time in the September 20 issue, I wish to give only the main points of that method which would provide a guaranteed annual income to every Canadian citizen without any source of income.

It must be clearly understood in particular that it must be done within the ordinary framework of our monetary, economic and political systems and under a free enterprise system. In our present economy, it is possible to do something to improve the lot of Canadians without purchasing power. If it is normal that the national production of $68 billion be divided between consumption and capitalization, let us keep our methods of production, consumption and capitalization, but let us make only a slight change in the distribution of the purchasing power precisely where it is lacking, namely among the Canadian citizens without any income.

It is not necessary to turn our economy topsy-turvey. Nothing is to be changed in the production process; but change is to be made in the allocation of the purchasing power for 7.6 million citizens contributing to production on top of that, there would be an individual guaranteed minimum income, according to the age for all independant citizens. This program must be implemented within the framework of our monetary, economic and political systems. This technical formula of a guaranteed purchasing power to citizens without a job and without any other income, can, in my opinion, replace all programs of family and personal allowances, the subsidizing of services and many other pension plans in Canada and in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, one administration only instead of a hundred, one universal program only, and financing consisting simply of the recognition, by a definite credit, of the right to live for every unemployed citizen. The right to a set and predetermined salary for work as agreed upon between the employer and the employee is recognized; so is the right to a set and predetermined interest on all capital invested or loaned as agreed upon by the debtor and the creditor, by the borrower and the lender.

In any event, in our present free enterprise economy, production and financing would be allowed to operate as usual. The distribution of purchasing power would continue to operate as it does now, by distributing the salary according to the work done and the interest according to the capital invested, in the case of the 7,700,000 citizens who participate in the production. However, the guaranteed minimum income and the right to the basic needs of the other 13 million citizens could be regulated.

All this could be done now, by adopting a single and universal legislative measure on the transfer of payments, to solve once and for all the problem of the guaranteed minimum income, monthly and personal.

The Canadian citizen who is without work and without income has a right to live, he has a definite right to live, at the minimum level recognized and evaluated on the basis of the economic facts of our Canadian national life.

The application of this technical formula would replace almost all those expensive and clumsy transfer payments and would solve the income problem of the 13 million Canadian citizens who have no other income.

And so, in Canada, 20,700,000 citizens would be assured of having 20,700,000 personal purchasing powers. I realize, of course, that this summary opens the door to a mass of perfectly legitimate questions.

However, I take this opportunity, as a member, to insert this notice of motion in our public documents, so that any one might refer to it according to his interest and his wishes.

I know that it is very difficult to understand that, within this formula, the guaranteed minimum income could be paid without leading to an increase in taxes, or an increase in prices and the cost of living, for individuals as well as companies.

That is precisely the point on which I am willing to give all the required information.

Mr. Speaker, if we wish hardship, poverty and insecurity to disappear from the Canadian scene, certain steps must be taken to that effect. The means I propose are of course quite different from all that is being done now and which has led the population to the state of imbalance of which we talk and which we want to correct and rectify.

But we cannot correct or rectify it by acting as we did in the past; we must necessarily change or add something and, to my mind, there is a technical method which can readily be added to the machinery of our present systems, monetary, economic, political, capitalistic, democratic, and of free enterprise.

I point out to the house that the distribution formula of the guaranteed minimum income for each dependent Canadian citizen is a formula that can and should apply within the regular framework of our economy, of our political system, of our parliament, provided that the 264 representatives of the people, elected by the people, legislate accordingly. And according to the old saying, where there is a will, there is a way. It is true that this is more and more justified if we refer to a circular letter of May 1967, which we received from the External Aid Office, concerning international development, and I quote:

> The West Indies, long standing partners of Canada —Canadians have for a long time shown interest for the improvement of the West Indies'—towards the end of the fifties, the Canadian government had considered the possibility of granting financial aid to the West Indies Federation—In 1958, Canada announced it was making a $10 million grant.

The report added:

> In 1964-65, the assistance program was still greatly extended. Canada then allocated estimates of $9 million, $3½ million in grants and $5½ million in loans—
> Moreover, there was a conference of the heads of the governments of Canada and of the West Indies in Ottawa in July 1966. Canada announced that it would increase its aid still more. The estimates for the fiscal year 1966-67 showed an item of $13 million in aid to the Caribbean islands, consisting of a subsidy of $6,100,000 and of $7 million in loans. Canada also informed the West Indies that a minimum of $75 million would be given to them in the next five years.

Mr. Speaker, in answer to a comment directed by an hon. member to the minister responsible at the time—the Secretary of State for External Affairs—the minister declared that these expenditures would be beneficial to our industries and our trade This money, he said, would result in those countries buying more Canadian products.

If funds that are given to foreigners help the good functioning of our national economy, it is clear that funds given to Canadians would bring the same results, and would, at the same time, give families a little comfort.

Comfort and security are exactly what is not sought by the present system. On the subject of victims of the Canadian income tax, allow me to quote from page 1534 of the Hansard of June 14, 1967:

> For instance, the unmarried person who earns a salary of $4,200 pays an income tax of approximately $475, after a deduction on $1,000, which leaves a net income of $3,725.
>
> The head of the family earning $4,200 pays $128 in taxes each year after benefiting from a deduction of $2,000 for himself and for his spouse, and a deduction of $1,150 for the three children, if we suppose that he has one aged 19 who is a student, one of 14 and one of 8.
>
> The 14-year-old child receives an allowance of $8 a month, or $96 a year. The 8-year-old child has an allowance of $6 a month, or $72 a year. That adds $168 to the income, which then amounts to a total of $4,368 a year—$4,368 less $128 tax, which brings it to $4,240.
> The net income of a father of three children of 19, 14 and 8 years old is $4,240 after payment of $128 income tax. The single person having the same salary of $4,200 has a net income of $3,725, after payment of $475 income tax.

I ask you to note, Mr. Speaker, that the difference between taxes and allowances leaves this father with a surplus of $515 to take care of his wife and his three children.

Therefore, here is the result: $515 more for four more persons, which is about, per person, $125 a year, or $10.50 a month, or 30 cents a day. Mr. Speaker, 30 cents a day for a man who has a wife and three children. Just imagine the small amount the members of a larger family can expect.

Mr. Speaker, 30 cents a day is the maintenance cost of little dog of 30 pounds. If the present system leaves 30 cents a day for the dog, I hope that, in the framework of a just society, we will grant to the Canadian mother an amount equal to her rank and her worth.

In order to have our industries and our trade run smoothly, a second group of citizens should be granted subsidies and I want to refer to students. At this stage, I will quote from an article published in L'Action of Tuesday, August 20:

> Loans to students are curtailed by strict regulations.
> Last week, the federal government announced a change in the formula which will add at least 2 per cent to the cost of bank loans under the student loan program.
> Two factors have made these changes necessary: banks have lost money when lending to students at the relatively low rates of 5¾ per cent provided by regulations since the inception of the program four years ago.
> [Mr. Godin.]
> Furthermore, the summer was bad with regard to employment for students and many of them will go back to university penniless.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that, for most students, life is not easy, and the system of loans at high rates is ideal, in my opinion, to train these young people to become tax collectors. However, I submit also that tax collectors do not alone account for the smooth running of the Canadian society.

Many other professionals are urgently needed. We need doctors, engineers and economists. To train honest, worthy and fair-minded men, it is absolutely necessary to free those young people from the chains of finance.

Mr. Speaker, if the estimates contribute to the development of foreign countries, let us develop ours by the same methods.

The third group which, in my opinion, would need additional help for the satisfactory operation of our industries and trade is made up of the old people, those who have reached retirement age. They should get monthly pensions much higher than those they are getting at the present time in order to be able to afford the things they are entitled to, namely medicine, a maid, or when they have to go to an old people's home, they should not have to be satisfied with the few crumbs given them after their ordinary room and board has been deducted from the little they get.

Mr. Speaker, the fourth group that should get something for a higher efficiency of our industries and businesses, is that of Canadian children, those who will replace us tomorrow. They also should get an amount proportionate to the cost of living. In view of the fact that since 1944, the member's salary has increased more than fourfold, considering that governments pay $60 a month to foster homes, considering that they pay $120—up to $150 a month in the Montreal area—to orphanages for the care given children of the same age, it would be in order, I think, to give more than the ridiculous amount of $8 or $10 a month now received for children in regular families.

Mr. Speaker, the method aims at helping families to flourish, and the family being the foundation of society I think that parliament should consider the problem seriously.

In order to have a prosperous country, let us first ensure the prosperity of all persons and all families. If families are prosperous, all institutions will be prosperous too. They will disappear if they are not useful to the population.

We are witnessing a program of retraining of the labour force and we see small armament contracts. We have witnessed the payment of grants for winter works. Some advantages are at present being granted to designated areas. However, the economic unrest is growing.

Some ministers and members of the house as well as some highly paid economists seem to ignore the Canadian population, which is aware of this and quite understandably concerned. In view of the insecurity, poverty and deprivation of many things in the midst of affluence, we should be concerned.

Mr. Speaker, bundles of leaflets have been thrown from the gallery before. Not so long ago, a bomb exploded inside this parliament. From time to time, large and noisy delegations assemble on parliament hill. I have chosen the most courteous manner and I would suggest that a notice of motion be introduced on this subject in order to at least call the attention of the house to this matter through a normal and parliamentary process which is recognized and agreed to by everyone. This procedure is, I belive, the most logical, practical, official, regular, democratic, parliamentarian and I would also add the most efficient.

Mr. Speaker, along this line of thought, the motion which I have the honour to introduce to my colleagues today is intended to assist the 13 million Canadians who are penniless and subject to all kinds of taxes levied by the government at all levels.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I hope that all the members who are in favour of the development and progress of the country will grant me their support.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the hon. member for his interest and concern in the great problem of poverty in Canada and the improvement of assistance and welfare administration. I myself approach the problem somewhat differently, but I do want to congratulate him most sincerely upon his interest in the problem and for placing the matter before the house.

We claim to be a country that is concerned about equality; yet countless Canadians live today as they have lived for generations, in a web of poverty without the means, and very often without the will, to make use of their lives. It is now well documented that the hidden community of the poor in Canada is falling farther and farther behind, while the rest of us are moving forward. These people are the cruel victims of a modern technology and a modern economy which denies them jobs and a society which all too often would like to believe that they do not exist.

The most striking instance of inequality in Canada concerns, of course, our native people but there are many others, as is now well documented. It is simply not acceptable in this age of affluence for children in Canada to be raised in a virtual prison of poverty where they are exposed to bad health and bad habits and where they have neither the incentive nor the chance to learn, to leave or to break out. Yet these are now the well documented conditions of poverty and deprivation in Canada.

There are no easy or instant answers. Poverty is a complex and stubborn problem at any time, and I suggest in all sincerity that now we have the added difficulty of having to repair the damage done by a Liberal government which broke faith with the poor. They declared a war on poverty and established a special secretariat for that purpose. That has now disappeared into obscurity and has effectively lost its impact and its identity.

No government can make a man more than he is, but a government can help break down the obstacle of chronic poverty and unemployment or lack of skill and it can help to develop an environment which will encourage each individual to pursue his full potential. It is my view that this must be the liberating purpose of the social policies of the government. We have nearly reached the level of minimum security in Canada, security from want and fear. Now we must encourage individual Canadians to use their freedom to enable them to live full lives. That is what I mean when I speak about improving the quality of life in Canada, and that is one of the reasons that we must develop a truly national policy of human resource development.

The other reason is economic. There is full and persuasive evidence that it is good economic sense to follow a policy which makes productive citizens out of people who might otherwise live in poverty or unemployment or in dependence on the state. I think we must change the thrust of social policy in Canada and emphasize programs which will bring disadvantaged Canadians to a point where they have an equal chance to help themselves. Rather than simply subsidize reliance upon the state, we should encourage self-reliance.

For example, we must improve our programs of technical training and manpower mobility with the purpose of making available to every Canadian the trade and the skill he requires to get a good job and to do it well. I notice with great regret that one of the economies practised by the government, as is apparent from the estimates recently tabled, has been to cut back on the estimates for manpower training and mobility. We must begin a thorough attack upon the causes of hard core poverty in Canada and we must make use of the experience of other governments and private groups here and in other countries.

On the subject of the development of our human resources, I tried during the election campaign to initiate a dialogue between the parties on the problem of poverty in Canada. I had hoped we might have an intelligent discussion on the subject of how we might end the tragic waste of lives and the stupid waste of money that are inflicted on this country by chronic idleness and chronic poverty.

Naturally there is concern for people who because of age, disability or some other cause are permanently removed from the labour force. There is an obligation, which I think is accepted by all of us, to see that they have an income that will sustain them at a decent and civilized standard of living. We cannot feel satisfied that we have obtained that standard yet.

But there is a much more serious problem, more costly to the economy in terms of money and in terms of wasteful, idle and unproductive human resources. It is now clear there are thousands of people in this country who have been born into poverty, were raised and are living on public welfare when they can receive it and are perpetuating a cycle with each new generation born and raised in the same circumstances. They lack education or training and frequently they lack motivation. They lack an environment or an upbringing which develops incentives to work. Many of them would not be able to recognize an opportunity if they had one.

It is now clear that these people are to be found everywhere in Canada, in the slums of our cities, on our farm lands, and among industrial workers whom technology has overtaken and deprived of their traditional employment. They represent a continuing and a growing charge on the country in many ways. Worst of all, they represent a waste of human resources that our country and our economy cannot afford, and a blight on their own lives. Many of these people are on welfare, and we have a welfare system which frequently makes it difficult for people to get off welfare. We have a philosophy and a program in this country which keep people on welfare rolls rather than encourage them to free themselves. This system does not combine temporary assistance or assistance as long as is necessary with incentive, and so it kills incentive and perpetuates the need for assistance. The system is not related to need and circumstances and so it is inequitable, uneven and, most important, frequently ineffective. Nothing could be clearer from the experience of a generation or more in this country than that our welfare system at present is wasteful and inefficient, that it is not doing a constructive job either for the individuals affected or for the country as a whole and, worse than that, it is perpetuating poverty and dependence from generation to generation.

Here I might just refer briefly to a statement which appeared at page 138 of the last report of the Economic Council of Canada. It reads as follows:

> In many such cases, the increased earnings have in effect been "taxed" at very high marginal rates, sometimes amounting to 100 per cent or more. This type of occurrence defeats the purpose of anti-poverty policies designed to encourage the development of income-earning potential. It is of course no easy matter to devise policy mixes that ensure adequate minimum income but also incorporate incentives to seek earnings, but this is all the more reason for devoting much thought and effort to good policy co-ordination.

These are some of the considerations that I have had in mind for some time and which I have tried to discuss for some time. In the case of those who are old and handicapped or are outside the work force, the responsibility of the government, of course, is to provide an adequate income. In the case of that large group who are physically and mentally able to work but do not for one reason or another, I emphasize the need for incentives, training and opportunity.

We have not had much of a discussion on this subject. We certainly were not able to have it during the campaign and we have not really had it since, although the Economic Council of Canada has made a very significant contribution to the discussion of the problem in recent months. The Prime Minister responded to my invitation to discuss the matter by making offhand remarks to the effect that I have promised to pay an income to everyone in the country. This and other crude distortions of my position have been their substitute for informed discussion.

I suggest we must reform our welfare system which in so many instances discourages people from working and adopt a plan which encourages rehabilitation and initiative. I say to the people of this country that, for reasons of economics as well as compassion, we must get to work on this. We must rescue a new generation of youngsters trapped in poverty and dependent upon welfare. The cost of perpetuating the system we have had is far too high, both in terms of human resources and economic loss.

• (5:30 p.m.)

In the United States, for example, authorities have become worried about the waste and ineffectiveness of the present welfare system. There is a strong consensus growing there in favour of a program that would make dependence on welfare something less than permanent by combining assistance with incentive and providing skills to take advantage of opportunities to work. The studies done on this subject indicate that such a program is perhaps far less costly than any system of indiscriminate payments. I think it is fair to say that some of the candidates who have been seeking the presidency of the United States support this general concept. Included in this group would be Mr. Nixon, Mr. Rockefeller and even Senator McCarthy. The idea has been supported by the captains of industry, leaders of the labour movement and a vast number of economists of widely differing economic views. However, the idea does not seem to interest this government.

The Economic Council of Canada has suggested that we should study very carefully some of these proposals that are being put forward and some of the experiments being conducted in order to get our system on a different basis. In order to eliminate poverty and get the waste and inequalities out of our welfare system, we must move toward a new concept and a better program. We must begin seriously a thorough study to develop a program that will be effective in Canada and in Canadian circumstances. The goal of this program must be to stop the waste of lives, to stop the waste of money and, above all, to stop perpetuating poverty and perpetuating dependence.

The Economic Council of Canada has thrown a challenge to the government of Canada and to all of us. I think we should accept it. We must recognize that an effective approach to this problem involves all levels of government and is not just a matter of this parliament passing legislation. An effective attack will involve discussions, consideration and co-operation, and we must get at it.

I think it is important that the government of Canada accept the challenge that has been given to them to meet with the provinces to begin these discussions and to get on with the job. It is time we made a start. I again congratulate the hon. member upon introducing the subject and bringing it before the House of Commons. While I certainly cannot support the resolution in this form, I am very pleased indeed that he has presented us with an opportunity to discuss this subject. I again urge the government of Canada to give its most urgent consideration to the problem of poverty and to the challenge that has been placed before it. The government should begin the difficult process of making far better use than we do now of our most valuable resource, the people of this country.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity extended to us to take part in a debate on a guaranteed minimum income for Canadians. I should like to compliment both the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) on their contributions to this debate. In the past few decades parliament has enacted many measures of social and welfare legislation which were proposed by the successive governments of Canada. It is only fair to mention at this time that every measure of social welfare on the statute books of our country has been introduced by a Liberal government.

In the battle against poverty, the most recent efforts of the Canadian government have been the Canada and Quebec pension plans, the Canada Assistance Plan, and the guaranteed income supplement. In all fairness, it should be stated that the Canada Assistance Plan has taken care of many income needs and welfare requirements of Canadian residents. These measures go a long way in providing a certain basic guaranteed income to our residents.

Such a guaranteed annual income program has also recently been dramatically brought to our attention by the special Senate committee on aging under the chairmanship of Hon. David Croll. This committee submitted its final report on February 2, 1966. In its report the Senate committee recommended the establishment of a guaranteed income program to provide allowances during the entire life of Canadians beginning at the age of 65 and following certain guide lines. The committee proposed that the federal government give immediate study to this proposal.

As a result of the Senate committee's recommendation, the federal government introduced a guaranteed income supplement which came into effect on January 1, 1967. In the first fiscal year of its operation the guaranteed income supplement was made available to 715,000 Canadian residents. An amount of $235 million was added to the income of old age security pension recipients by this plan. The present Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro), when speaking to the House of Commons on May 19, 1967, also mentioned a guaranteed annual income for Canadian residents. He stated, among other things, that this type of social assistance would be under intensive discussion by politicians as well as many economists in our country. He stated also that the policy of a guaranteed annual income would sooner or later be implemented in Canada and that if it should be, and he hoped that it would be, he also foresaw the possibility of a dismantling of much of our social welfare legislation.

For several years Mr. Speaker, proposals for a guaranteed minimum income have been advanced by sociologists, economists and politicians. The concepts of a guaranteed minimum income and a negative income tax have also been the subject of much debate in the United States, as mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition. Only a few weeks ago, some members of the Ontario select committee of the Legislature studying taxation problems were quoted in the Toronto press as being favourable to the establishment of a guaranteed minimum income in Canada.

Reference is made in the wording of the motion put before us by the hon. member to the dignity, the value and the economic rights of the human being. I should like to bring to the attention of the house the fact that early in 1968 the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who was minister of justice at that time, took part in the federal-provincial constitutional conference and issued a paper entitled "The Canadian Charter of Human Rights". In this paper, one of the rights which he defended was an economic right. He stated that the universal declaration of human rights included such rights as the right to work, the right to protection against unemployment, the right to form and join trade unions, the right to social security, the right to rest at leisure, the right to an adequate standard of living, the right to education and the right to participate in the cultural life of a community. The guarantee of economic rights, he said, was desirable and should be an ultimate objective for Canada.

In the fifth annual review of the Economic Council of Canada, which was also mentioned during the course of this debate, we learned that the problem of poverty in Canada was extensively treated and studied. The economic council also outlined the extent of low incomes in Canada and made a few recommendations. Among these was a recommendation for income maintenance when necessary and possibly the adoption of a negative income tax or a similar program that would provide families with a guaranteed annual income.

We should note, Mr. Speaker, that the economic council also stated in that report that it did not wish to pass judgment one way or the other on such proposals at the present time and would like to confine itself to nothing that the adoption of income guarantees has been advocated by a number of distinguished political figures and economists. The council also stated that the possibility for the usefulness in Canada of income guarantees should be subjected to serious and thorough study.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the economic council suggested that this study must embrace, among other things, an examination of the costs and anti-poverty effects of a considerable range of existing policies, and how income guarantees would to some extent replace the present plans. In its view, we learn that only by having such broad studies made would it be possible to form a proper judgment whether some type of broader income guarantees might usefully be added to Canada's efforts in its attack against poverty.

It should be noted that the economic council has asked for greater efforts without delay to exploit the considerable anti-poverty potential of the Canada Assistance Plan. It is understandable that to come up with an adequate guaranteed annual income it would be necessary to establish an acceptable minimum standard of living for families and single persons residing in Canada. In terms of income, such standards would differ appreciably between various regions of this vast country. The establishment of such standards would also be a difficult and perhaps a controversial enterprise, but very essential.

The increasing problems of modern living and the right to a decent standard of existence call for continuing attention by all levels of government. I believe there will always be some families and individuals in various parts of this vast country who will be unable to participate fully in the economic life of Canada because of age, disability, sickness or other reasons. To ensure an adequate standard of living, social assistance to such people should be provided in a way that will enable them to have at least a fair share in our affluent society.

In discussing the hon. member's motion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that the concept of a guaranteed annual income is definitely a desirable one. However, he has introduced into his motion a few specific points which would raise many difficulties. One part of the hon. member's motion states that a guaranteed annual income should be given to every Canadian citizen who is without work or other source of income.

It should be pointed out that citizenship is not at the present time a requirement for any social security program in Canada. There is no social security program, either provincial or federal, which requires citizenship as a qualifying condition for either coverage or payment of benefits. It should be mentioned that ten years' residence is the usual requirement for social assistance. Residence, however, is not the only requirement. The aspect of eligible age is also one of the conditions to qualify for certain pensions now available in Canada.

Another aspect of this motion which raises some difficulty is the inclusion of the words "without work or other source of income". The motion, therefore, excludes those who are working for an insufficient income, those who work on a part time basis, or those who do not work at all and have insufficient income from other sources. In my opinion, a guaranteed annual income should not have any restriction except the one of need and residence. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the motion as it is now worded is not specific enough as regards coverage. The motion would seem to include housewives, dependants, students, other people not working and even those who have no intention of going to work.

It could be argued that the provision of a universal guaranteed annual income would undermine the incentive to work of persons who feel that they could get as much under this program as if they were employed in marginal occupations. It is quite likely that a guaranteed annual income program would induce certain members of the population to withdraw from marginal employment. But it should be stressed that the actual cost to an individual or family of accepting a guaranteed annual income in lieu of working means the virtual acceptance of a rather low standard of living. The inducement to improve one's standard of living through increased income may still be sufficient incentive for persons who are capable of employment.

Many of the opinions expressed about the effect of high taxes, social security benefits and the incentive to work are based on attitudes rather than empirical evidence. There is not much information available today on the effect of high income tax rates and work incentives in all income groups. The effect of high marginal tax rates on low income classes may be quite different from their effect on upper income groups. The two groups may react quite differently because their attitudes toward work may not be the same or the levels of the average tax rates do not seem equally burdensome.

The hon. member also mentions in his motion that the guaranteed minimum income should be derived from the national product so as not to increase taxes on individuals or companies, the cost of living, or the cost of any product or service. The new program of a guaranteed minimum income for Canadian residents will, I believe, be considerably more expensive than the aggregate cost of the programs which it may replace.

Some economists have estimated that federal and provincial governments now spend about two and a half billion dollars per year on welfare schemes. It has been stated that a guaranteed annual income would cost the United States approximately $20 billion and in Canada would amount to about one and a half to two billion dollars per year. It is therefore evident, Mr. Speaker, that the new expenditure required to provide such a guaranteed annual income for Canadian residents would result in higher taxes, or increased borrowing by the government, or replacement of all social welfare programs by all levels of government, or the inflation of currency, or some combination of these choices. There is no other possible way, Mr. Speaker, in which a guaranteed annual income could be financed from the national product, as suggested by the hon. member in his motion. The financing of the increased cost consequent upon this measure means that taxes would most likely have to be increased and that additional pressures would be put on the price level, therefore making it impossible at the present time to meet the objectives of this motion.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the fact that poverty still exists in many sections of the Canadian population means that our present social welfare system on the federal, provincial and municipal levels, as well as the assistance provided by charitable organizations, seem to be inadequate to deal effectively with the problem. A politically feasible, socially desirable and financially possible scheme for Canada, however, should be set up in such a way as to minimize both budgetary and real costs while providing an adequate minimum for those people who are unable to work or have insufficient income from other sources.

To provide such an annual guaranteed income means, Mr. Speaker, that we need more research on many aspects of this problem. The present administration is committed to the removal of any existing inequities in our social welfare system and I am confident that the present government is tackling the problem of poverty vigorously. I wish to express the hope that soon the correct measures will be implemented by this parliament.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is quite correct that there are defects in the motion proposed by the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin). Some of us do not think that his way of carrying out his idea would work. But the gist of my hon. friend's motion is that this House of Commons should begin to consider a new idea, the idea of a guaranteed income for all our people. I regret that to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) this motion presented only an opportunity to berate the Liberal government for what it has not done and that for the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) it presented only an opportunity for him to boast of what he claims the Liberals have done.

An hon. Member: And what's that?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Sooner or later, and I hope it will be sooner rather than later, all of us who think we are in positions of leadership in this country will have to face this new idea of divorcing incomes, social welfare, pensions, and things like that, from work and the old concepts we still have. Sooner or later, we must recognize that life itself carries with it certain economic rights. This motion places that question before us and I congratulate the hon. member for Portneuf for proposing it.

I regret that the rules of the house permit only one hour to discuss this question. Only five or six minutes of that hour are left to me to speak, so that some of my thoughts on the subject will have to be expressed on another occasion. Likewise, some of the interesting quotations on my desk must also be saved for another occasion. I must, however, draw the attention of the house to a few quotations I have because they come from a responsible person working in this field and they suggest to us, I believe, some new ideas that we must consider.

I hold in my hand a copy of an address that was given recently in Winnipeg by Dr. Reuben C. Baetz, executive director of the Canadian Welfare Council. Dr. Baetz was giving an address at the Social Service Audit workshop held in Winnipeg. His address was delivered on September 19.

As I say, if time had permitted I would have quoted a great deal from the remarks of Dr. Baetz. In the meantime I wish to quote to the house some remarks that are very much to the point. He said:

> In any consideration of social rights and social welfare, the matter of a sufficient income, as a right, must sooner or later be faced squarely.

He is not talking about social welfare or the money you obtain because you work or do not work; he is not talking about a minimum income, a minimum wage which is just enough for a man to get along on; he is talking of a sufficient income as a right. He goes on to say:

> This may be extremely unpalatable to some, but the logic of it is impossible to escape. Dostoevski said "income is coined freedom". In our society of free enterprise the man with sufficient income has substantial freedom. He has a wide range of choices as to where he lives, how he is housed and clothed, what he eats and drinks, and who his friends and neighbours should be. Conversely, the individual with an inadequate income loses substantial freedom of choice and action, and can become the most fettered and dependent of all men.

Dr. Baetz again asks the question, "Does a man have the right to an adequate income?". This is what we should be talking about when we discuss this subject, Mr. Speaker. We should discuss not just compassion in dealing with the poor, not just minimum incomes or the minimum wage, not just a handout for the people who live on the other side of the tracks to enable them to continue in their meagre existence. We should be discussing adequate incomes for everyone.

Replying to his own question, Dr. Baetz said:

> This question has social, economic, moral, and political overtones. As a nation we have not resolved the question, either at the intellectual or practical level. The result is a prolonged and gigantic 'ad hocery" in social welfare programming. To the extent that we continue to "waffle" at the philosophical level, we will continue to "waffle" at the administrative level. If we are honest with ourselves we will recognize the present inconsistency in our position which states that no one should starve, but no one is guaranteed an adequate income either.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that that is as far as our contemporary society has gone in this field. We say that no one should starve and therefore we hand out relief, welfare and unemployment insurance. Yet when someone suggests that we guarantee an adequate income to all our people the hon. member for Parkdale stands up and says that this means allowances for women and children—Why not?—and it will cost an awful lot of money.

In an age as affluent as our present society, in an age where computer techniques enable man to go to the moon and return, surely we can declare our belief in the rights of human beings and devise a system that will provide a guaranteed annual income to all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I see that time is passing. I must save the rest of my ideas until I speak on a motion under my name later, perhaps in two or three days. But, Mr. Speaker, I hope you will allow me to read another sentence from the comments of Dr. Baetz. He said:

> I suspect that one or two decades hence, when the crop of post World War II students now coming out of university will be making the decisions, we will have some scheme for a guaranteed annual income which will probably be integrated with our taxation system. They will no doubt look back with some amusement at the income maintenance efforts and underlying philosophies in the "swinging 60's"!

We must do a lot better, Mr. Speaker, and we had better start doing it soon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: The hour put aside for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: May I ask the government house leader to indicate the order of business for tomorrow and possibly Friday?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I propose that tomorrow we continue with the debate on the resolution preceding the bill to amend the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act, item 7 on today's order paper, thereafter proceed to item 5 on today's order paper, the resolution preceding the amendment to the Farm Improvement Loans Act, and thereafter proceed to second reading of Bill C-110, item 6 on today's order paper. I shall be making a statement tomorrow with respect to the business for the oncoming week during the question period, at which time I shall deal with the business for Friday and for next week.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, October 3, 1968

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

ANNOUNCEMENT OF INCREASE IN MONEY ORDER FEES

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I have a declaration to make; and I may say we are getting out these declarations before the study of the post office bill in order that all members of this house may have a better and broader idea of some of the changes that are being made in the post office.

The cost of post office money orders will increase as of November 1. Increased revenues of approximately 25 per cent are expected from the new fee structure. These increased revenues will not balance the money order operation now, but when coupled with a new money order system which will be fully operative by 1970, this service will then begin to pay its own way.

The new fee structure simplifies the money order operation in that seven fees only are required for the transmission of money in amounts up to $100 to any point in Canada or to any country with which the Canadian post office has an agreement for the exchange of money orders.

While the maximum fee of 25 cents per $100 in Canada remains unchanged, a minimum charge of 10 cents has been introduced. The complete schedule of fees is as follows. Money orders for less than $1 will now cost 10 cents; less than $5 will cost 15 cents; less than $15 will cost 20 cents, and up to $100 will cost 25 cents. Money orders in all amounts to the United States will cost 25 cents. Money orders to the United Kingdom of less than $10 will cost 25 cents; less than $50 will cost 50 cents and up to $100 will cost 75 cents. Money orders to other countries up to $50 inclusive will cost 75 cents and from $50 to $100 will cost $1. We expect to recover about 82 per cent of our costs for the money order system. Therefore it can be seen that pressure remains on the department to introduce new, efficient and modern techniques in order that it may recover the additional 18 per cent, which is something of the order of $2,500,000. I do not think the public would forgive us if we solved our problems only by increasing rates.

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I should first like to thank the minister for his courtesy in supplying the opposition with an advance copy of this announcement. However, we are particularly sorry that this government has once again seen fit to hit the little people. The minister apparently has a great concern about making the Post Office Department pay its own way. I am not sure where I stand in that regard, but I am wondering whether—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McCutcheon: I am just wondering whether the minister might prevail upon his cabinet cohorts to do what they can to make the C.B.C. pay its way.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to confirm the fact that the Postmaster General was courteous enough to let us have copies of his statement, but that does not make the statement any easier to accept. The Postmaster General says he is making these announcements one at a time so that when we reach the discussion of his proposed legislation we will have the total picture. I suggest that what the Postmaster General is demonstrating is that we ought to amend the Post Office Act so parliament will have control over more of the rates than is now the case. We seem to have control over the postage rates for first class mail and a few other things, but there are many aspects of the postal service and many charges which apparently the government can put into effect by executive action without getting parliamentary approval. This ought not to be.

• (2:40 p.m.)

This announcement today, when coupled with other announcements concerning increased charges, and when coupled also with the announcement that the delivery service is to be reduced to a five day week, gives a total picture of increased charges and reduced service. We do not think this is the kind of package we should be getting from this government which is dedicated to the concept of new politics.

I have just one other comment, Mr. Speaker. Every time the Postmaster General makes an announcement he recites the cliché about the department paying its way, as though that were an article of faith. The hon. member who preceded me said he did not know where he stood on this issue. I say to him, to the Postmaster General and to the government as a whole that it is not an article of faith that every individual service provided by the government has to pay its way. National defence does not pay its way; the Senate does not pay its way. There are many things in our structure of society and government which do not necessarily in themselves pay their way. There are services that government is set up to provide. We think this is a false cliché that the government should not be able to get away with, as the Postmaster General tries so often.

We shall be well armed for the discussion on the post office legislation when it comes, but it seems to us that if there are many more of these announcements it will be one great big package of reduced service and increased charges, and we do not like it.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I too thank the hon. minister for his courtesy in sending us a copy of his statement. I also congratulate him on sending me a text written in perfect French, something we do not see too often.

Mr. Speaker, according to the statement of the minister, the income of the department will be over 25 per cent higher than in the past. Now, everyone knows that as the result of the recent postal employees' strike, salary increases of some 17 per cent were granted.

But today, the minister announces a 25 per cent increase in returns, and that means not only an increase in returns, but also an increase in taxes for the Canadian people, because the Canadian people will be paying those fees or new taxes.

Now, we see that the fee on a money order for 1 to 99 cents will be 10 cents, and 25 cents on a $15 to $100 money order.

As the minister is a member of the government that is working towards the just society it promised, why does he not suggest, at the same time, to all his friends who voted for the present government, that they ask for one-cent money orders instead of $100 money orders, to enable the government to make 10 cents per money order instead of only 25 cents for a $100 money order?

It seems to me that would fill up the coffers of the government more easily, because, naturally, there is a lack of funds. Every time similar statements are made, we are told that there will be an increase in taxes. While he was at it, the minister could have proposed the issuance of one-cent money orders only, which would mean returns of 10 cents each time a money order is made out. The minister would then have no financial problems and only the Canadians, especially those who elected this government, would realize to what extent the just society is being set up in Canada.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MEMBERSHIP OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON PROCEDURE

Mr. Bernard Pilon (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the order of the house made on September 24, 1968, I move:

That the special committee on procedure appointed on September 24, 1968, be composed of the following members: Messrs. Aiken, Blair, Deachman, Forest, Horner, Jerome, Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre), Lambert (Edmonton West), Lang, Macdonald (Rosedale), Olson and Rondeau.

Motion agreed to.

AGRICULTURE

CORN—REQUEST FOR PERMISSION TO TABLE STATEMENT AND DOCUMENTS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table a statement on corn in English and in French along with four background papers, also in both languages.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table these documents?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

An hon. Member: What kind of statement?

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Before this statement is tabled could the minister indicate what it is? Merely to have an indication that there is a statement is not sufficient. We should have some amplification.

Mr. Olson: I would be glad to read it, but it is seven pages long.

An hon. Member: What is it?

Mr. Olson: There are additional copies available now in both languages which could be handed out to hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister has asked for leave to table these documents. If there is no leave, the documents cannot be tabled.

CORN—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON STABILIZATION POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Not knowing what might have been in the statement mentioned a minute ago, and in view of the uncertainty surrounding the government's intentions and because of the expected arrival tomorrow of a cavalcade of corn growers, will the minister undertake to clarify very succinctly the government's intention with regard to the stabilization of the corn market?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to read the statement if the house were willing to revert to motions so I could do that, but it will take eight or ten minutes to do it.

Some hon. Members: Let us revert to motions.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSING

TORONTO—RESTRICTION ON ADVERTISING BY NEW REAL ESTATE COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. It concerns his responsibility for housing. Can he tell us whether he has investigated the charges made in Maclean's magazine that a new Canadian real estate company has been denied access to the classified sections of two Toronto newspapers; and if the minister has investigated these serious charges could he inform the house?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I understand that information has been received in my office in respect of this matter and I propose to send it to the combines investigation branch. If they feel that an investigation is warranted, I might also send it for consideration to the Toronto real estate board.

Mr. Saltsman: I have a supplementary question. I wonder whether the Acting Prime Minister would also consider referring this matter to his task force, since it would probably be of interest to them in their study of housing in Canada.

Mr. Hellyer: I think that is a good suggestion. If the allegations prove to have some foundation then it would of course be a matter in which the task force would be interested.

PILOTAGE

INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION OF ROYAL COMMISSION REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Transport.

Could he tell the house whether his department intends to act on the recommendations of the royal commission on pilotage and introduce a bill in this house in the near future?

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is proposed that legislation will be introduced during the current session which will be of an interim nature. Then additional legislation covering the question of pilotage on a more comprehensive basis will be introduced perhaps at the next session of parliament, as soon as agreement can be reached as to what the long term legislation should be like.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. Minister of Transport for his answer. I think it is going to make many Canadian pilots happy, particularly those in the riding of Lotbinière.

I would like to ask the minister whether he intends to introduce interim measures until he can present the legislation which he has just mentioned, in order to assist Canadian pilots in taking some retraining, since their situation is untenable at present.

[English]

Mr. Hellyer: If I understand the question correctly, Mr. Speaker, that is what we propose to do.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): May I ask the minister whether the interim legislation to which he has just referred will apply to all pilotage districts, or to just one or two particular districts in Canada?

Mr. Hellyer: I do not believe I can answer that question from memory, Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether it applies to all districts, but it certainly would apply to the St. Lawrence and great lakes basin, which are primarily affected.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BIAFRA—INQUIRY AS TO VISIT BY CANADIAN MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I do not know who is acting as minister of external affairs, but I am sure the house and the country would like to know whether the department has ascertained if the political pilgrims to Biafra arrived in that country with greater ease than food and other assistance has been able to achieve.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I am no better informed than those who also read the newspapers. However, if it is of interest to the house I will secure a report for tomorrow.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister say whether the high commissioner's office in that country is being advised regarding the work of mercy of these gentlemen, and whether the co-operation of the department is going to be given to assure their safety?

Mr. Drury: The gentlemen referred to as the pilgrims will get the usual courtesy extended to every Canadian by our high commissioner in Nigeria. Unfortunately we do not have a high commissioner in Biafra.

TRADE

PROPOSED ACTION TO STABILIZE PRICES OF PRIMARY COMMODITY EXPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy Royal): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and it arises out of the recent meeting of the I.M.F. and the world bank. Does the government prefer not to act now on the proposal to help stabilize the prices of primary commodity exports from underdeveloped countries?

[Mr. Bell.]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Perhaps I could be given 24 hours to study the question and discuss with the hon. member its full purport; then I would give an answer tomorrow.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I wonder if the minister would make representations to his representative that steps be taken to stabilize the prices of world commodities other than just those from underdeveloped countries, such as corn for instance?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

VISITS TO RESERVES BY PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): My question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. As the minister is probably aware, during the last parliament the committee on Indian affairs was authorized to make visits to the reservations, which was not done to any extent. Can the minister assure the house that this same authorization will be given to the standing committee on Indian affairs and northern development?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me the hon. member is referring to a question relating to the internal management of the committee, and such a question should not be asked at this time.

Mr. Simpson: May I reword the question. Can the minister assure the house the committee on Indian affairs and northern development will be called together very quickly?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I hope so, Mr. Speaker; soon.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

COMPLAINTS RESPECTING CURTAILMENT OF NEWSPAPER DELIVERIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): I should like to ask the Postmaster General to check his department to ascertain whether he has received complaints from the daily newspapers of Canada about the curtailment of service, which they claim will result in Friday's newspapers being delivered to people on rural routes on Monday?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking whether the minister has received such representations. The question as asked in those terms is not in order.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Postmaster General say what arrangements will be made so that Friday newspapers will reach their readers before the following Monday or Tuesday?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, we are going to hold meetings early next week with the circulation managers of the various Canadian dailies or representatives of their associations. I have heard from some papers, and I think I am breaking even in the editorial comments. Some are good and some are critical.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

DICTATION BY SPONSORS OF SCHEDULING OF PROGRAMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Walker (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. With particular reference to the Quentin Durgens, M.P. television series, does the C.B.C. allow sponsors to dictate the scheduling of such programs?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): It is quite obvious that, as a rule, the C.B.C. does not allow sponsors to dictate the time when programs will be shown. With regard to the particular case mentioned by the hon. member, I will be glad to check and get the information.

[English]

STUDENT LOANS

SUGGESTED RELAXATION OF NEW REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question that I planned to direct to the Prime Minister, but in his absence I will direct it to the Acting Prime Minister. The urgency of my question relates to the Prime Minister's experience with university students in Regina yesterday.

Will the Acting Prime Minister indicate to the house whether the government contemplates relaxing the tight criteria that is now evident with respect to student loans?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the second part of the question might be placed on the order paper.

INDUSTRY

CAPE BRETON—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON DEVCO REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, and because of the urgency of this matter to the people of Cape Breton, I would ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the government is now in a position to make a statement on the Devco report; or is the minister prepared to table that report?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice and bring it to the Prime Minister's attention.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this question has been raised with the government as a matter of urgency. Telegrams and messages are pouring in from Cape Breton asking for a report from the government, which report was due before this. Since the report is overdue I think it is time the government found out who is responsible for making that report.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the minister responsible would like to say something about this.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, I received the report a few days ago. I intend to study it and later on I will see what I am going to do with the report.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): A supplementary question. Would the minister take into consideration the urgency of this matter to Cape Bretoners and make the report available, in view of the fact that the time allotted under the legislation has now passed?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I have received the report which is dated October 1. If the hon. gentleman would be nice enough to give me time to read and study it, that would be appreciated.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

RECOMMENDATIONS OF INDIAN-ESKIMO ASSOCIATION RESPECTING COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Does the government intend to carry out any further reorganization of Indian affairs administration in order to give effect to the recommendations of the Indian-Eskimo Association of Canada to transfer community development functions to a native Canadian development institute?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, that suggestion from the Indian-Eskimo Association has been received and like any other recommendation made to our department by the groups concerned, it is being given serious consideration.

[English]

Mr. Burton: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development now supplied the Minister without Portfolio with a copy of the booklet outlining the reorganization of the department?

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): I wish to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Could he assure the house that he will make available to members of parliament or, at least, to members of the Indian affairs committee, a copy of the discussions now taking place in Quebec and in other parts of the country?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, officials are taking note of every meeting. Rather than a word for word report, it is an account of the gist of the arguments advanced. I hope that at the end of the nineteen consultations now being held, a report of the opinions expressed by the representatives will be made available to members of the committee and, perhaps, to all the members of parliament.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

[English]

HARBOURS

ROBERTS BANK, B.C.—REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING RAIL LINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Douglas A. Hogarth (New Westminster): My question is for the Acting Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, but is addressed to him in his capacity as Minister of Transport. Will the minister advise the house whether action has been taken by the minister as a result of representations made pertinent to the rerouting of the rail link to Roberts Bank.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that on the face of it this question might be placed on the order paper. If there is urgency which is not apparent to me the hon. member can give me appropriate notice and the matter will be discussed at the time of adjournment. There can be no supplementary question.

[Later:]

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see the Minister of Transport in his seat. I am directing this question to him in his capacity of Acting Prime Minister with his peculiar knowledge as Minister of Transport. My question is, was the Minister of Public Works announcing government policy in Vancouver when he said that the federal government must control the railway access to the Roberts Bank port?

Mr. Hellyer: I have not seen the report referred to by my hon. friend.

Mr. Nowlan: I have a supplementary question. The other day the Prime Minister was asked a somewhat similar question in your absence—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should direct his question to the Chair.

Mr. Nowlan: Just to edify and educate the Minister of Transport, a question was asked of the Prime Minister, and he said the Minister of Transport when he returned would in time make that statement. I wonder whether you are in a position to make that statement as Minister of Transport.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. gentleman knows he must address his question to the Chair.

Mr. Nowlan: Is the Minister of Transport prepared to declare the policy that the Prime Minister said the Minister of Transport would declare when he returned to the house? I am glad to see him back.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Annapolis Valley was just ruled out of order because he referred to the Acting Prime Minister as "you", or "did you", or so on. I would remind the house that the swinging Prime Minister, who wants to make this a swinging place—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is not the reason the hon. member for Annapolis Valley was called to order. I am sure he realizes what the situation is.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): The Prime Minister made reference to ministers of his own cabinet by name the other day and was not called to order for it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I thank the hon. member for his lecture.

[Later:]

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Is the government currently discussing with the B.C. provincial authorities the jurisdictional problem involved in respect of the rail route to Roberts Bank?

Mr. Hellyer: No; not officially to my knowledge. We have taken the position that the routing of the railway owned by the B.C. government is a matter exclusively within the jurisdiction of the province. At the same time we have noted the interest of all because of the controversy in respect of land use. It is in this connection that we have expressed our concern, and we have made representations to the government of British Columbia in that context.

Mr. Nowlan: I have a supplementary question in order to perhaps clarify my earlier question of today. Would the Acting Prime Minister kindly look at the statement by the Minister of Public Works in Vancouver last week end and report to the house concerning whether that is government policy? Will he also advise the house when we might expect a statement on the position of the federal government in respect of the Roberts Bank access road?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to take note of the suggestion and find out what the Minister of Public Works has said in this connection.

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, will the minister please inform the house whether a legal opinion has been obtained as to whether this is a provincial or a federal railroad?

Mr. Hellyer: At least one, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether it is the intention of the government to seek a definitive legal opinion on this matter?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

EXPO '67

REPORTED INABILITY OF AUDITORS TO VERIFY REVENUES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): My question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Since in its recent audited statement Expo '67 showed an approximate loss to Canada of $274 million, and since the two auditors said they were unable to verify all the revenues received, can the minister explain this failure to verify revenues? If so, can he say in what form the auditors communicated with him?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether this question ought to be allowed. If there is urgency perhaps the hon. member might indicate where the urgency lies.

Mr. Hales: This is an urgent matter, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister ought to advise the house whether he has an explanation for this failure to verify.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, first of all I cannot accept the premise that this was a loss. I think it was an investment in Canada, in the future of the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pepin: On the specific subject of control of revenue, the Auditor General has indeed made a comment in his report. The best answer I can give the hon. member is given by the corporation itself. At page 18 of its annual report are found these words:

> The control of the direct currency receipts of Expo 67 has been considered one of the largest activities of its kind in the World. The management faced one of its greatest challenges when, within the first days of the opening of the exhibition, it became necessary to proceed to a review and to adapt all its installations in order to accommodate—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the minister kindly come to the conclusion of his reply.

Mr. Pepin: The easy answer is that the money not accounted for, some $97,798, represents one tenth of one per cent of the revenues of the corporation that the Auditor General could not certify. The record of the Expo corporation in this regard, I am told, is as good as the record any similar corporation could have achieved.

Mr. Hales: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I asked the minister whether he had received a letter from the auditors explaining the failure to verify. That is the question I should like to have answered.

Mr. Pepin: No. The point is made in the report of the Auditor General. I regret that everything was not forecast or foreseen by Expo as well it might have been had it been operating in heaven.

Mr. Hales: May I direct a supplementary question to the President of the Treasury Board. Has the loss mentioned in the report been taken care of in the estimates that have just been tabled? If so, under what department does the matter come?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think the house will recollect that last fall it was indicated that special provision outside of regular estimates would be made in respect of the deficit, if any, for Expo. There is no provision in the current estimates to cover this.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will this matter be covered by supplementary estimates?

Mr. Drury: If, Mr. Speaker, the deficit is to be resolved or concluded this year, it will have to be done by way of supplementary estimates. If, however, the deficit is not to be closed out in the current fiscal year, there will be no need for a supplementary estimate this year.

Mr. Hales: A further supplementary question to the President of the Treasury Board. Since Expo corporation must close its books at the end of March, 1969, will this matter appear in the estimates or will there be a supplementary estimate to cover it?

Mr. Drury: As I pointed out, Mr. Speaker, and as the hon. member just mentioned, the books only close on the last day of the fiscal year. There is then a choice of dealing with this matter in the current fiscal year, in anticipation, or in the next fiscal year after the event. That choice has not yet been made.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR NAMES OF NATIONAL COUNCIL MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Will the minister assure the house that he will table the terms of reference and list of members of the proposed national grains council before that council is actually established?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The Minister of Agriculture and I are meeting in Winnipeg, and following this we shall appoint members to the council. Who those members are will very rapidly become public knowledge. If my hon. friend wants me or the Minister of Agriculture to table the names of these hon. gentlemen, I will gladly do so.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

QUEBEC—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the honourable Postmaster General.

In view of the critical economic situation in the eastern townships, would the honourable Postmaster General tell the house whether he intends to implement the decisions of the government to build two federal buildings, one in Coaticook, and the other in Lac Mégantic, which would contribute to giving assistance and work to the unemployed.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member might want to put this question on the order paper?

TRANSPORT

PROPOSED NEW CANAL BETWEEN LAKE ONTARIO AND LAKE ERIE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a question for the Minister of Transport relating to my question of yesterday regarding the ship canal facilities between lake Erie and lake Ontario. This is an urgent matter, since those facilities are quickly nearing the saturation point. My question is this. Has the minister received a recommendation from the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority urging the expansion of these facilities?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not really think this matter is of sufficient urgency to be dealt with on orders of the day, but since the question has been asked, however, I shall try to answer. A report was tabled some months ago on the study which has been made in respect of the future of the seaway, and particularly of the Welland canal. This report has been under study by an interdepartmental committee for some time. There is not yet a recommendation available for consideration by the government. In the meantime, as a result of technological improvements in the handling of ships, improved control methods and other means indicated, we may be able to prolong the usefulness of the existing canal system by some number of years, with a consequent saving of tens or hundreds of millions of dollars to the Canadian taxpayer.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF INTENTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister prompted by an item in today's Toronto Star quoting government spokesmen to the effect that the Prince Edward Island—New Brunswick causeway project has been scrapped; that the bitter pill has been prepared and the sugar coating is being sought. Will the Acting Prime Minister advise whether the government still honours its commitment to Prince Edward Island and intends to build this causeway?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I think I should refer this question to the Minister of Public Works.

An hon. Member: It is his day off.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Never on Thursdays.

Mr. Hellyer: May I reply by saying there has been no change in the position of the government since the last occasion on which this question was raised in the house, and that any change in policy which might be made would be reported to the house in the usual way.

AIR CANADA

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Is the report true that the minister intends to appoint Mr. Rod McIsaac to the presidency of Air Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member no doubt realizes that he cannot ask the minister to confirm or deny a report.

Mr. Hees: Ten o'clock please, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hellyer: As a former minister of transport the hon. member must know how little influence the minister really has.

AGRICULTURE

CORN—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON MARKETING POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): My question is for the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker. Has the government formulated a definite policy regarding corn marketing? Has this policy been made known to the press, or does the minister intend to follow the normal course and announce government policy in this regard in a statement in this house on motions?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I tried to table a report a few minutes ago but hon. gentlemen in the opposition refused.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Olson: Well, they did, Mr. Speaker; they refused to accept it. The reason I did not read it is this that since it is very comprehensive it would take ten minutes to do so.

Mr. Ricard: Revert to motions.

Mr. Olson: Even though members opposite did not allow it to be tabled, there are copies around.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Let it be quite clear on the point raised by the minister that he asked leave to table a statement as to the contents of which we had no idea whatsoever. If the minister, like his colleagues, was prepared to make statements which are succinct and directed to the facts, we would be prepared to entertain them. This is what the standing orders provide for. I think the minister has no right to slip in information through a procedure of this kind because he is not prepared for members on this side to comment on it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Olson: On that point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am fully aware of the procedure referred to. But I think the house leader for the other side should know that this subject of corn marketing in Ontario and the problems involved is very broad and complicated, and I could see no useful purpose in making the statement any shorter.

Mr. Danforth: May I ask the minister whether, if this side of the house is prepared to revert to motions, he will make this statement to the house today?

Mr. Olson: Yes. I have it here and I am prepared to read it if hon. gentlemen opposite wish to revert to motions.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: We must have unanimous consent, and the Chair has heard negative replies to that suggestion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Ricard: From the Liberal side.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Can the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as leader of the house indicate the nature and order of business for the coming week?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Today we propose that the house consider first the two farm financing resolutions, the resolution preceding amendments to the Farm Improvement Loans Act and then the resolution preceding the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act amendments.

We would then call today second reading of Bill C-109 with respect to the Windfall extension of the C.N.R., in the hope perhaps of receiving third reading also by leave of the house.

Tomorrow we would call the resolution preceding amendments to the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, and when that has been completed the resolution preceding the amendment to the Judges Act.

On Monday we would call the second reading of Bill C-110 to amend the Farm Credit Act, and thereafter second reading of the other two farm financing bills. On Tuesday we would call first the resolution preceding amendments to the Post Office Act and, when that has been dealt with, second reading of the bill amending the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act.

On Wednesday we would proceed with the further stages of the farm financing bills, and continue during the remainder of the week with those bills, together with the advanced stages of the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act and of the Judges Act, if the latter has not already been completed.

The foregoing is subject, of course, to variation, depending upon the time when individual measures are dealt with and, of course, to interruptions due to events not at the moment foreseen.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Is the leader of the house in a position now to say when the budget will be presented to this house? Will it be on the 17th?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I am not in a position to make an official statement on that point. I can assure the hon. gentleman it will not be next Thursday.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): In view of the fact that the Minister of Agriculture was prevented by some of his colleagues from making his announcement on motions—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nesbitt: —would he agree to make the statement during discussion of the resolution which will be before the house in a few minutes?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the question might be directed to the minister at that time.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO ORGANIZED AND SYNDICATED CRIME IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Would the minister of Justice let the house and the country know whether consideration is being given to the setting up of a commission to inquire into the massive increase of crime by gangs and international syndicates; and also whether his department is giving any consideration, in view of the increase in the number of murders with guns and other weapons, to any change in the law respecting capital punishment?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): In answer to the first question may I say we are constantly reviewing measures of law enforcement, particularly in the light of the serious aspects which have become apparent in recent years. As the right hon. gentleman knows, of course, primary responsibility for the day to day administration of justice lies in provincial hands.

In answer to the second question, there has been no contemplation of reviewing the law on capital punishment at the moment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister not agree that responsibility for full investigation into international and syndicated crime within Canada rests with the national government, while enforcement of the law is a matter for the provinces?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I would go so far as to concede that. It might well be. I should like to have a meeting, after the presidential election in the United States, with the attorney general of the United States to discuss this subject.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Has the minister received any request from the attorney general of the province of Quebec to set up a royal commission to examine the spread of crime across the nation, particularly in the light of what my right hon. friend has said about the increase in murder?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I had better take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR PENSION INCREASES FOR AMPUTEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia): I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. While awaiting completion of the study of the Woods committee report, would the hon. gentleman consider allowing an interim increase, possibly beyond 100 per cent, to triple and quadruple amputees?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question was asked a few days ago by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

RESEARCH

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORTS RESPECTING CANCELLED PROJECTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I have a question to direct to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. On September 23 the Prime Minister promised to consider tabling the scientific reports relating to the cancelled projects of the Queen Elizabeth observatory and the intense neutron generator. In view of the possible revival of the observatory project may I ask when these reports will be tabled?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No decision has yet been made in this regard. If my memory serves me correctly only the report with respect to the Queen Elizabeth telescope was referred to in that question; I do not recall any undertaking with respect to the ING project, though I may be wrong.

Mr. Aiken: May I ask, then, when the Queen Elizabeth observatory report will be made available?

Mr. Greene: No decision has yet been taken in this regard.

UNITED NATIONS

REPORTED STATEMENT BY SECRETARY GENERAL ON BOMBING OF NORTH VIET NAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): My question was intended for the Secretary of State for External Affairs but in his absence I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary. In view of the fact that U Thant, Secretary General of the United Nations, said the United States must unconditionally cease its bombing of North Viet Nam as the first step in a peace settlement, does the Secretary of State for External Affairs agree with the Secretary General that the United States must unconditionally stop the bombing of North Viet Nam as the first step in stopping the war in Viet Nam?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question as asked is not in order.

[Translation]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the honourable Secretary of State for External Affairs, but in his absence, I shall put it to his parliamentary secretary.

In view of a serious breach of the established practice and the violation of the rights of member states by the Canadian ambassador to the United Nations, according a written communication of the Irakian delegate to the United Nations, does the Canadian government intend to relieve the ambassador of his duties?

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

RIVERS, MAN.—REPORTED CLOSING OF BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): I should like to direct this question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the defence council recommended to the minister that the Canadian Forces base at Rivers be closed by April 1969 and, if so, where does the matter stand?

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether the hon. member would consider the advisability of placing the question on the order paper.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO ENFORCEMENT OF FISHING ZONE LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct this question to the Minister of Fisheries. Is it the intention of the minister to recommend to the government that it scrap its plans for the unilateral implementation of the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act as passed on July 15, 1964?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, far from scrapping Canada's 12 mile fishing zone I would have us enforce the headland to headland limits within which Canadians have exclusive fishing rights. I would be even more aggressive. I believe Canada must take a growing interest in the management of our offshore fishery resources on both our coasts. By that I mean our fishery resources extending out to the limits of the continental shelf. Better management on our continental shelf obviously includes areas where other nations have historic rights, and where we therefore do not have an exclusive right to fish.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary should be directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but in his absence I will ask either the Acting Prime Minister or the Minister of Fisheries to deal with it. On March 12, 1968 the former secretary of state for external affairs stated that it was his intention to request another international conference—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The form of the hon. member's question is certainly out of order. The hon. member is aware that he must ask a direct question.

Mr. Crouse: Is it the intention of the government to ask for the convening of another international conference in order to bring about the desirable features which the Minister of Fisheries has enunciated today?

Mr. Davis: I think it will be necessary to have at least one and perhaps several international conferences in order to achieve some of the objectives I have already outlined.

INDUSTRY

QUEBEC—REQUEST THAT PORTNEUF BECOME DESIGNATED AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Would he tell us if consideration of the report submitted to him by the Economic Council of Portneuf concerning the situation in my constituency will soon enable him to recommend that this area be recognized as soon as possible as a designated area?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it would be advisable for the hon. member to learn that the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development is responsible for this federal program.

Mr. Godin: Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. Minister of Forestry and Rural Development will take due note of the question.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, I have taken due note of the question.

DRUGS

MARIJUANA—CONSIDERATION BY HOUSE COMMITTEE OF CONTROL MEASURES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question was originally for the Prime Minister or the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Perhaps in their absence and because of the urgency of the matter I might direct the question to the Acting Prime Minister. Because of the growing menace of the use of marijuana and the conflicting attitudes toward its control as expressed by the Prime Minister, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the deputy minister of national health and welfare, would the Acting Prime Minister use his good offices to have this urgent matter referred to the appropriate house committee as soon as possible.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Acting Prime Minister): I shall be glad to bring my hon. friend's question to the attention of the Prime Minister.

HOUSING

RECEIPT OF BRIEFS BY TASK FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport in his capacity as the minister who reports to the house in respect of housing. Due to the interest in the activities of his housing task force, will the minister undertake to make a statement on motions tomorrow and at that time tell the house how many briefs have been received by the task force to date, how many of those have actually been heard, and what criteria are applied to determine whether a brief will be heard or merely received?

Mr. Woolliams: Is it on a political basis?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): No, it is not a political question. It is a question of there not being sufficient hours available to hear all the excellent briefs that have been prepared. As I believe I have already indicated to the house, we appreciate the tremendous interest that has been shown—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The suggestion made by the hon. member was that a statement be made on motions. I believe this was the question that was asked.

Mr. Hellyer: I could not give that undertaking at this time, Mr. Speaker.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

AMENDMENTS EXTENDING PERIOD, RESPECTING INTEREST RATES, ETC.

Hon. H. A. Olson (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act to provide for a further three-year loan period ending June 30, 1971; to substitute for the 5 per cent rate of interest on guaranteed farm improvement loans made under the act such rate or rates of interest as may be prescribed by the Governor in Council; to extend the purposes for which guaranteed loans may be made to include the purchase of land as an addition to an existing farm enterprise; to increase from $15,000 to $25,000 the maximum amount of any loan that may be made under the act to a borrower together with any amount owing in respect of other guaranteed farm improvement loans; to authorize the Minister of Finance to designate certain trust and loan companies and insurance companies and certain credit unions, caisse populaire and other co-operative credit societies as authorized lenders under the act; to establish a limit of $1,200,000,000 as the aggregate principal amount of guaranteed loans that may be made by all authorized lenders in that period and a limit of $300,000,000 as the aggregate amount of guaranteed loans that may be made by authorized lenders other than banks during that period; to increase the present limit of liability of the Minister of Finance in respect of loans made by individual lenders to encourage lending by small-volume lenders; to provide further for certain changes in connection with the administration of the act and for other matters related or incidental thereto.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Bechard in the chair.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, will the minister now take this opportunity to make the statement he was not able to make earlier? Apparently he can use this opportunity under the relaxed rules of relevancy to make that statement.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, the house agreed to relax the rules of relevancy in dealing with the three resolutions, Nos. 5, 6 and 7 which were to be taken together as they all deal with the same subject matter, namely farm credit and its various divisions. There has been no agreement sought or indeed made to relax these rules of relevancy to the point where we can now deal with other matters during our consideration of a resolution on farm credit.

Mr. Baldwin: We are willing to do so.

Mr. Nesbitt: I do not know whether Your Honour was in the chair last evening, but I made some extensive remarks about the corn marketing problem, and I related those remarks specifically to the rules of relevancy adopted during the discussion of these resolutions. I was not called to order by Your Honour and there were no points of order raised by hon. members on the government side of the house. Surely this gives the minister latitude so he can at this point make an explanation and answer the questions I posed.

Mr. Horner: Money is no good if you cannot pay it back.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I realized that the hon. member was completely and clearly out of order when he was making his speech. I did not raise any objection because it seemed that occasionally, although not very often, he tried to relate the problems of corn marketing to farm credit. I do not believe that because he got away with being out of order I should do something that would be equally out of order.

Mr. Horner: Make a statement.

An hon. Member: Your halo is getting tarnished.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I would be delighted to speak about this question of relevancy and make a spirited defence of the right of the minister to make a statement at this time. I am quite sure he knows that any question in respect of farm financing is related to the financial position of farming, and surely that subject is relevant to the statement which he now has and is bursting with enthusiasm to make. The question of relevancy is quite apparent and we are quite prepared to admit that it is in order for him to make a statement regarding the financial position of farmers. This qualifies any statement he has in respect of the government's position regarding the corn marketing situation. Such a statement would help the farmers to assess their financial position and in this way it is relevant. I am happy to defend the minister's right in this regard.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I regard corn marketing problems, in Ontario particularly but in other parts of the country as well, as being of great magnitude. I cannot accept the contention that the subject matter of the resolution before us is not also of great importance to the farmers of Canada. They have been waiting for quite some time for amendments to these acts or, if you like, the reinstatement of them. We think it is important that we get on with these resolutions and the bills to follow as quickly as possible.

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

There are many other agricultural problems. I am the first to admit that, but I suggest that if we relax the rules in order that we may have a wide open discussion about all these problems when we are attempting to get these amendments through we would in effect frustrate the objects of the government in this regard.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, the minister has related his remarks to a statement on government corn marketing policy. Surely he should assure the corn producers that they will have some degree of security in the production of corn. He should make his statement now. He has already given it to the press. This resolution relates to the Farm Improvement Loans Act. It is a well known fact that the banks will not lend money to farmers if the industry is not financially sound so that they can repay the loans. It is the minister's obligation to this country and to members of this house to give some assurance to the corn producers that government policy will be such that farmers will be able to repay their loans. The minister has already given this statement to the press. Is he afraid to make the same statement now to the elected representatives of these people? That is the only conclusion I can come to because he has the consent of the house to do so during the consideration of this resolution.

Mr. Olson: I am not afraid to make the statement, and I offered to table it. This statement was made a few moments before I came into the house and all of the information is now available. Hon. members in the opposition know that today is the last day for debate at the resolution stage. If there is unanimous consent that we relax the rules in order that we may discuss many other things than farm credit I am willing to do so. Let me remind members of the committee that there probably will not be sufficient time between now and the end of this day for all members who wish to make statements about farm credit to do so. If we are going to enlarge the subject of debate some hon. members who wish to speak on this matter will be prevented from doing so. If there is unanimous consent to relax the rules of relevancy I will read the statement.

Mr. Horner: You must be afraid.

Mr. Olson: I am not a bit afraid.

[Translation]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Although the matter discussed a while ago by the committee is very important, it is difficult for the Chair to relate in some way the resolution now under consideration and the difficulties encountered by corn producers in Ontario.

Furthermore, in view of the extensive statement made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) on introduction of the three resolutions to amend the Farm Credit Act, I believe the minister can now dispense with further comments and the committee members should limit their observations to the resolution now under consideration.

• (3:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Chairman, on this occasion I would of course like to congratulate the minister for having reached the high level of a ministerial position after making the transfer from this side of the house to the government side. In years past I sat very close to the minister when he was on this side of the house and recall that on many occasions he was with us, so to speak; he was on our side with regard to many issues. On the issue of finances he was definitely against high interest rates.

However, apparently the Liberal party has asked him to really earn his stripes, because the first bills that he as a minister will be introducing deal with an increase in interest rates. We all know that the Liberal party has become the party of high interest rates. We all know that the Liberal party has become the party of big business. Apparently the minister, having gone over to the other side of the house, has not, as we had hoped, taken some of his principles with him. We hoped that he might improve the Liberal party, but he has apparently left his principles behind and has done everything the party has asked him to do.

When the Bank Act was last reviewed in the House of Commons these words were used. I quote from Hansard of March 17, 1967:

> It seems to me that all that is going to happen or the practical application will be that the banks will be charging 7¼ per cent for all the loans they have out now at the statutory limit of 6 per cent. One effect of this move is simply going to be to raise the cost of living, the cost of operating at the manufacturing level and the wholesalers' level, so the ultimate result will be an increase in the price structure.

The speaker continued with these words:

> Even if that were true, Mr. Chairman, I think the members of parliament have a responsibility to the Canadian people. They need to look at the whole economy to see what the net result of the change is going to be. No matter how I look at it, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the end result will simply amount to an increase of 1¼ per cent on all the loans and financing of the chartered banks. As I said, if you include this increase in the cost of manufacturing operations and throughout the whole distributive system, then I suggest there will be a significant increase in the cost of living as a result. I think this is one of our primary responsibilities and something we need to be concerned about.

The author of those words is none other than the present Minister of Agriculture. He went on to say in the same speech:

> You just have to try to do what the hon. member is trying to do now, and that is place a new definition upon your words. Having said something the hon. member is trying to explain it away hoping that we will forget the words he used. But in this chamber what we say is written down, and what was written down was what I quoted.

I often wonder whether the minister sleeps well at night, having taken on the big responsibility of his portfolio. He represents many farmers and must be aware that they are in dire straits and are faced with great difficulties. I think he really wanted to do something for these farmers, but what he is now doing is not helping them. The minister is really trying to improve the position of the banks.

How did we get ourselves into the present position? In this connection I should like to quote from the annual report of the Farm Credit Corporation. On page 7 of that report the following words appear:

> It has become more difficult during the past decade to generate capital from farm income as operating expenses have increased more rapidly than farm product prices.

This has been the root cause of our difficulty. Apparently the minister thinks that this measure will provide a solution. I remember that on the occasion of the Bank Act being reviewed in the house I asked the then minister of finance the following question, as reported in Hansard of March 21, 1967:

> Should we find ourselves in the position that for two months after the coming into force of this bill there are fluctuations in the interest rate and the banks decide they must first see how the rates level out and as a result restrict loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, what safeguards are available to farmers? I realize that the point I have raised is only a possibility, but what guarantees are there that farmers will be able to obtain loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act?

The reply of the then minister of finance was:

> This is a highly hypothetical question and perhaps I should not even attempt to answer. There are strict provisions in the law against any such conspiracy as the hon. gentleman has described. Second, I cannot believe that the banks of this country will stop providing the services they have been providing for farmers under the Farm Improvement Loans Act when greater freedom is given under this act. It is my belief, and it can only be a belief, that it will be in the interest of the banks to continue serving farmers under the Farm Improvement Loans Act as they have in the past.

Those were the words of the minister who was trying to tell us that he was really working in the interest of all industry. However, as it turned out he was only working in the interest of the banks on that occasion. I warned the minister at that time that we would be in this difficult position. The minister now stands in his place and admits that we have got ourselves into a fix because the government did not take that problem into consideration.

Three bills will be introduced which will deal primarily with capitalization and the availability of credit to farmers. These bills are supposed to improve the farmers' position. However, when one looks at the situation that has existed in the last few years one realizes that more and more loans have been granted to farmers. It appears to me, therefore, that these bills are a deliberate attempt by the government to drive the small farmer off the land. This is a deliberate policy of the government. When one reads the bills sent to our offices, one realizes that this is in fact the case.

The annual report of the Farm Credit Corporation shows that in the past ten years $915.75 million has been lent to farmers. In other words, in order that the farming industry may survive it has had to borrow $915.75 million. In addition, as of December 31, 1967, farm improvement loans totalled about $428 million. This means that in the last ten years the farming industry has found it necessary to borrow $1,343 million in order to keep going. But at the same time we have lost some 10,000 farmers off the land each year. I relate these two things.

It has always been in the interest of the country to provide economic farm units. However, the effect of the proposed legislation will be to speed up the removal of farmers from the land. Apparently this is the only solution this government has. One can reach no other conclusion after looking at the bill and realizing that as much as $100,000 will be made available to farming corporations. How can anyone who obtains a loan of $40,000 compete with another person who obtains $100,000? Surely only one conclusion can be reached. How can a farmer who does not necessarily wish to borrow any more stay in the business? How can he survive against this type of competition? How can the industry stay in the hands of the farmers rather than large corporations? How can one keep the farmers on the land? It will not be possible. As the minister himself said, what these bills will do is to increase the cost of production. Who will be the one who will be hurt? It will be the small farmer who has been struggling for years to set up a unit which he thought was economic, but faced with this type of competition from large farms and corporations he will not be able to survive.

[Mr. Korchinsky.]

When the Farm Credit Act was first introduced the intention was to help the small farmer. However, under this legislation the only thing that can happen is that the small farmer will be driven off the land and in this way his troubles will be solved. We will in fact be telling him: Forget your worries. That is all that the minister is doing.

When the minister was on this side of the house I thought he had the interest of the farmers at heart. When I first heard he had been appointed Minister of Agriculture I said to myself, there is a man who understands the position of the farmers. I am sure he still understands the position of the farmers, but he is certainly not helping them. In fact, he is doing directly the opposite. He is forcing the farmers off the land and he will increase the cost of production. He must have considered the bill at length and he must know that its effect will be to enable the corporations to buy up land. We have had vertical integration for years and farm unions have made representations to former governments. People who have had any kind of interest in farming communities have always been concerned about the fact that vertical integration is driving the small farmer off the land.

What will these bills achieve? They will increase the rate of vertical integration to the point that anyone who has any love for the land, the ability to work the land and has spent years trying to stay on the farm will realize that those days have gone by. Where will it all end? We will see a lot of people mortgaged to the hilt. Right now, 25 per cent of all farmers have mortgaged their land. At this rate there will be nothing left but mortgaged land. It will all be either in the hands of the government or in the hands of the corporations. You can take your pick. There will either be corporations owning all the land, which is not advisable, or the government will hold all the land, which is communism. No one else will be able to afford it. It is called either communism or socialism, the term used in communist countries, but neither one is acceptable to farmers. It is unacceptable because agriculture is the only industry left in which an individual can still fully participate together with his family. This will not be possible once this bill is put into effect.

It is quite evident that the only solution this government has is to enlarge the amount of credit available. What will happen then? I warned the previous minister when he introduced the bill increasing the amount available for loans that the one thing which would definitely happen would be the inflation of the price of farm land because the corporation which has $100,000 will outbid the small farmer with $40,000. How will the government get around that problem? Surely this will be the result when the amount available for loans is increased.

This is not what the farmers are interested in. Wise use of credit is great, but not when the government is deliberately trying to get the small farmer off the land because they seem to have no other solution to the farm problem. They are making it possible for the big corporations to outbid the small farmers. This causes social problems, the rush into cities, urban problems, a housing shortage and the reckless abandonment of farms. In the last five years we have disturbed 75,000 farmers. Fifty thousand have moved off the land because they have not been able to keep up, and the other 25,000 have mortgaged their land.

I will now move on to another subject, Mr. Chairman. We are broadening the purposes for which loans may be made, and repeated representations have been made by various organizations that this be done. This may be advisable in areas where facilities such as are provided by trust companies, caisses populaires, credit unions and so on are available, but since when have these institutions granted money at a lower rate than chartered banks? As far as I know none of them does. The banks will look at the rates offered by credit unions and trust companies and they will say: If our competitors can charge this rate, why can't we? Surely they will be entitled to come to this conclusion. The end result will be that interest rates will go up as a result of this competition. It will have the opposite effect from what we really want.

The result will be that land will be owned by the large corporations and interest rates will go up to a rate which some order in council may or may not set. We will end up in the same position as that in which we were in the thirties. I remember that people in my parents' generation used to say; "You will have to be very careful and stay out of debt". That was their attitude. Perhaps they had a reason for adopting such an attitude. Now the young generation think they have all the answers and they put democracy to the test. They must have a lot of money and everything must be available. That is why we must have all this credit. They say, "we do not care as long as we have credit. We will worry about paying for it later". The interest rates will then be higher than the principal. Young people nowadays do not care whether they own the land as long as they have the use of it. Is this the type of society we want? I do not think I want to encourage such thinking. I wish to register my protest right now. This is not the direction which I would like to see the farming industry take.

It has been said that interest rates will have to be increased. When we look at the annual reports of the banking institutions, we should be concerned that the banks are not lending more money at this low rate of interest. My opinion is that loans could be granted to farmers at the same rate as loans are granted to hospitals and municipalities. The banks may say those loans are secured by taxes, but there is only one tenth of one per cent involved in connection with farm improvement loans and that amount is guaranteed by the government. There is no risk involved. The more money that is available to farm machinery companies, the higher they raise their prices. Do not think for one moment that when that amount of money is available to the machinery companies they are not going to take advantage of it. They say to the farmer, if you do not buy machinery we will sell it to the big corporations. In order to stay in business, the farmer has to be able to pay the same price. The machinery companies even stated that they would charge all the market would bear. This statement was made to the committee investigating the farm machinery business by the president of Massey-Ferguson.

I want to return to the question of the profits of banking institutions. I have already mentioned that the farm industry has borrowed $1,443 million and at the same time the industry is losing 10,000 farmers every year. In so far as the profits of the banks are concerned, I note that in 1966 the Bank of Montreal had a profit of $19,905,000 and in 1967, $20,720,000; Nova Scotia, $11,700,000 in 1966 and $12,909,000 in 1967; Toronto-Dominion, $10,892,000 in 1966 and $12,284,000 in 1967; Commerce, $24,473,000 in 1966 and $26,575,000 in 1967; Royal, $27,432,000 in 1966 and $30,278,000 in 1967.

Who needs the help? Are we going to stand here and say that the banks are in real trouble when they are showing profits of this type? Are we going to say that they cannot provide the type of service needed at a lower rate? Surely they could if they so desired. Someone has said that they could but they will not do so. If they will not do so, then the government has a responsibility to provide the long term credit that is needed by setting up a corporation which could do the job.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret that I have to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Korchinski: I thank the committee and I shall be brief. I want to quote from a speech made by the leader of the Créditiste party. On this particular occasion, February 23, 1968, he had a report which he obtained from the other place. This report resulted from a question asked by Senator Pouliot, and it indicates the loans made by Canada to certain other countries. I am going to name the countries and the rate of interest on the loans. To Korea we lent $1 million for 37 years at 3 per cent; Pakistan, $44 million at no interest for a period of 50 years plus 10 years of grace, or 60 years; to Thailand, $1 million at no interest for a period of 50 years; to the Caribbean Islands, $1.8 million at no interest for a period of 60 years; to Jamaica, $8.25 million at an average of three quarters of one per cent; to the West Indies, $250,000 without interest for 60 years; to the Argentine, $756,000 at three quarters of one per cent for 60 years; to the Central American Bank for economic integration, $3,780,000 at three-quarters of one per cent for 60 years; to Chili, $8,460,000 at three quarters of one per cent for 60 years for part of the loan and 3 per cent interest for 37 years for the balance of the loan.

[Mr. Korchinsky.]

I could go on, and perhaps I should cite two or three more examples. We lent the Republic of El Salvadore the sum of $3,240,000 at three quarters of one per cent for 39 years; to Mexico, $540,000 at three quarters of one per cent for 60 years; to African members of the commonwealth, $3,500,000 at 6 per cent for 30 years and $1,600,000 without interest for 60 years.

All I say is that if we can be charitable to other countries surely it is in our own interest to provide money to an industry that provides food. Certainly we do not live to eat, but we do eat to live. If we want to provide food as cheaply as possible for Canadians, and if we want to provide food as cheaply as possible for the rest of the world and be charitable in that way, then surely it is only sensible to provide the agricultural industry with loans at a low rate of interest.

Mr. Horner: May I just ask a short question of the Minister of Agriculture? Will he assure the house that tomorrow when the corn growers are here he will meet with them and give them a fair hearing? Will he discuss with them the statement he made to the press?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, much more than that, I can say that for the past week or more officials in my office have been as helpful as they could possibly be in making arrangements in Ottawa for the tractors of these farmers and for all other facilities that will be needed to have a meeting here on parliament hill. We also have a room at the Department of Agriculture that will hold 200 or 300 people and we could meet there, if weather does not permit a meeting outdoors.

Mr. Hees: Are you going to be there?

Mr. Olson: Certainly I am going to meet with them. We are doing everything we can to be as helpful as we can.

Mr. Mazankowski: Could I ask another question of the minister?

The Deputy Chairman: Is it on the same subject?

Mr. Mazankowski: Yes.

The Deputy Chairman: I have recognized the hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I have been very surprised at some of the things that have taken place this afternoon. While I do not believe in reincarnation, certainly the Minister of Agriculture has been showing some of the shades of Jimmy Gardiner and some of the characteristics of C. D. Howe in his disregard for parliament. During the discussion of this resolution concerning farm credit the minister has stated that the farmers need this piece of legislation in a hurry. However, he knows full well that the Farm Credit Act ran out in June of this year. He knows, too, that there has been very little money lent for a period of eight or nine years because of the reluctance on the part of the banks. The minister says we should have passed this legislation in February. This is probably the kind of legislation the house would have passed in February, and it is damn well the legislation that this house expected to pass in April when parliament sat for one day. I do not believe, therefore, that the minister should look at the opposition with a jaundiced eye but rather that we should perhaps look at the minister with a jaundiced eye.

I am surprised at the minister because he knows the rules as well as anyone in this house. There are three or four high priests of the rules, and he is one of them. If anyone knows how the rules should operate, he should. He is one of the self-appointed high priests. I believe that the matter of corn prices warranted an examination by the minister today. In my opinion this debate is not remote from the price of corn in Essex county, but it certainly is remote from the price of corn in Timiskaming because none is grown there. Climatically Timiskaming is not in the right area. However, in Timiskaming there is another problem which makes it absolutely necessary that farmers receive credit at a reasonable rate of interest. That rate is probably in keeping with the rate suggested by the hon. member for Témiscamingue.

The hon. member for Mackenzie indicated how generous we have been with interest rates charged to other countries. Apparently we have lent money at a very low rate of interest. There are shades of C. D. Howe, and certainly some conservatism with a small "c", in the legislation before us now, which does not seek to establish an interest rate for a particular industry but follows current levels. This means that the business community is controlling most of the expenditures of the government.

The Postmaster General made a statement this afternoon in which he said that his department must pay its own way. There are those who believe that even from the days of Wells Fargo it has never been necessary for the post office to pay its own way in that it has served to unite the people of the nation by supplying them with certain facilities which were not available to the individual. The same may be said of the Farm Credit Corporation.

We should not be interested in the interest rates charged by banks. If a farmer has enough collateral he can borrow money from a bank at the current interest rate, whatever it may be. It is not necessarily 1 per cent higher than that charged on government loans or student loans.

I suggest that in view of what happened in Regina last night the image of this government will become quickly tarnished. I am not one to participate very much in the question period, but I was surprised that nobody asked about the revolution of students in Peru and their participation in the military coup there. I am also surprised that nobody asked about what may become a serious problem for the Olympic games because of the student riots in Mexico City. The government must recognize that we need money to develop our natural resources, whether these resources be in the form of student education or agriculture.

I suggest, that we should not try to make money on loans to farmers. As in other pieces of legislation that deal with farmers, we should try to establish some advantage that will accrue, not necessarily to the farmers individually but to the industry generally.

We have made some serious mistakes. I am not sure whether it was the government's mistake that the stabilization board did not anticipate the present corn problem, but we certainly did not anticipate any difficulty when we developed the national dairy commission and established industrial milk prices. However, through our action we changed the small one-can farmers into producers of industrial milk who no longer separated cream on the farm. These farmers had to borrow large sums of money from the Farm Credit Corporation to buy a bulk tank, which in Timiskaming costs between $12,000 and $14,000.

As a result of this policy which was formulated in Ottawa, our farm separated cream industry, which was the backbone of small farming operations in Canada, was transformed into a bulk producer of industrial milk. We have also changed the operations of almost 90 per cent of the farmers in western Canada who carry on mixed farming. We have asked them to borrow money under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, under other farm legislation and even under ARDA in order to establish themselves as economic units. I suggest that when we become involved in matters such as this we should be guided by some principle. This principle must surely be the provision of sufficient credit to develop our industries and in turn our national economy. Thus the role of credit is very important.

Personally, I do not give a damn if we lose $5 million or even $10 million through farm improvement loans provided they are a subsidy to industrial development. I believe many more people would be more receptive to subsidizing the development of a stable and progressive industry than to subsidizing other operations which turn out to be calamities. I do not know how much the cheese subsidy amounts to or the subsidy on powdered milk, but there is a surplus in this area of 200 million or 300 million pounds.

The farmers in Ontario have been forced by the government into bulk tank operations. The government told the farmers that they would not buy milk from them unless it was in bulk tanks. The Ontario milk marketing board decided that milk should be in bulk tanks. Any milk in cans is probably not under the operations of the milk marketing board of Ontario. This kind of control having been exercised, these farmers have had to borrow in order to expand their operations.

We are the people who indicated to the Ontario farmers that no longer was a family farm to consist of 160 acres. I suppose in western Canada a family farm unit would be a full section. We are the people who have declared that a multiplicity of units must be brought together to make one economic farm unit.

We have also suggested that farmers should buy farm machinery, and so farms are becoming automated in the same way as other industries. This costs money. As a result farmers have to borrow money, and in my opinion they should be able to borrow it at a rate they can afford. I suggest we are misleading our farmers when, on the one hand, we advise them to buy a new tractor or other pieces of farm machinery and, on the other hand, allow the banks and lending institutions of this country to raise their interest rates to a level that puts loans to farmers out of their reach.

The minister is in the agricultural industry himself; I understand he is a rancher. This is one segment of the industry that has had a certain stability during the last few years, though I believe those engaged in this occupation say it is not as stable as it should be. Nevertheless beef prices in Canada have become fairly stable over the last eight or ten years, and the result has been a fairly stable industry. However, one sector of the agricultural industry is in serious difficulty, our corn producers.

The other day a very good friend of my father's came to my office. He and my father for some time had shared responsibilities on the old Ontario milk marketing board. This chap was in the dairy business a few years ago but over the years he became discouraged with the dairy business and moved into the production of corn. In this project he was given assistance in the form of a large loan made through a government agency. Now he finds that it costs him $1.20 to produce a bushel of corn. At noon today I noted that corn was listed on the market at something less than $1 per bushel.

I know the minister is not a financier but I ask him, what hope is there for the survival of agricultural producers when their produce sells for less than its cost of production? Even if my figures should be out by ten cents either way, the farmer still stands to lose substantially. Yet in spite of these conditions the federal Department of Agriculture is making the stupid recommendation to allow the chartered banks to set interest rates on farm improvement loans.

Those in agriculture in this country are not stupid, and that is why they are coming to Ottawa. The minister is a farmer and no doubt he has a tractor. He knows tractors are slow; they are difficult to handle on the highway and are boring to drive long distances. The minister must know that tractors are en route to Ottawa. Police are escorting them at a set speed of 15 miles per hour. The minister will agree with me that if he were a farmer he would only mount his tractor and drive it to Calgary or Edmonton if he had a very compelling reason for so doing.

The minister says that this resolution is not about corn, and I agree. This resolution is about money, and if it passes the farmers will have to pay more for the money they borrow. I submit that parliament should not permit an increase in the cost of money to the farmer while at the same time permitting a decrease in the price of farm products.

Always, even in my C.C.F. days, I have supported the concept of parity prices for farm products. A parity price would mean that the farmer would have his production cost and would be allowed an additional wage for the work he did. When he sold his produce on the market, he would be entitled to a return equal to his outlay. Sometimes he might even be lucky enough to make a small profit on his investment. But the important consideration is the parity price.

What is the present situation? The farmer is faced with rising production costs and falling market prices. Yet the government is bringing in legislation that will increase the price of money that farmers borrow. I submit the government should look again at the concept of parity prices.

If the government is unwilling to consider parity prices I submit it ought to consider subsidizing farm production. I do not apologize for mentioning this concept, since without a subsidy our farmers will suffer losses. They cannot enter the open market and borrow money at 5 per cent. Consequently they will suffer losses, and that is where a government subsidy comes in. I believe the government could, with great advantage, make subsidies to agriculture available in the field of farm improvement loans.

No farmer with a team of horses, 160 acres, a walking plow, seed drill and all his other equipment can possibly make a living today. He might have done so five or six years ago but he cannot do so now. Often I attend the markets in my area and very often you will see from 400 to 500 day old to week old calves on the market. This indicates that these calves are not being raised on the farm and that farmers in the area are engaging in the production of milk, either industrial or fluid. All those in agriculture need short term credit and I think the greatest service this government can do agriculture is to stabilize at reasonable rates the cost of such credit.

No doubt hon. members will remember the millionaire farmer who for a while ran the Department of Agriculture. We heard complaints to the effect that the Liberal government was in such terrible political straits that it was necessary to appoint an agricultural minister who came from the east. Personally I thought the appointment was a good one. The government ought to continue appointing such men to such posts. I remember the days of Jimmy Gardiner and the 40 years in the wilderness for eastern farmers. I remember the days of the former minister from the west who is now a senator. I also remember the days of farm syndicates when some could afford pieces of machinery worth $75,000 and when the federal government enacted legislation for 364-odd people in the very rich class. My point is that those people cannot be considered the backbone of agriculture in Canada. Those who today form the backbone of agriculture need money to operate their farms, to expand and to make changes.

We in parliament over the past five or six years have devised tools to help the agricultural community. In my area I have found a form of assistance other than farm improvement loans in current use. The ARDA people are buying land. The ARDA people will buy the farm across the road and rent it to a youthful farmer.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I must inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peters: I thank the committee and I shall not abuse the privilege it has extended. I was saying that ARDA buys land. Under the ARDA legislation farms much larger than is realized are being assembled and then rented. As I said, the ARDA people buy the farm across the road and the one down the road and they may rent them to a young farmer under certain conditions. Over a period of three years he will be able to collect a large block of land in respect of which only a nominal payment is required. At the end of the period, three years or five years, he will be given the option of releasing it or of making payments to ARDA.

• (4:30 p.m.)

My point is that we have a responsibility in the field of credit to ourselves, to the agricultural sector and to the whole of Canada, and that if we are not completely opposed to subsidies we should admit that one of the most equitable ways of subsidizing agriculture in this country is through the provision of low-cost loans to farmers. I would therefore appeal to the minister to reconsider these resolutions. His party did not go to the nation as supporters of a completely free enterprise economy. They put forward the idea of a just society. As I see it, among other things this means refusing to burden agriculture with interest rates which will make the banks rich while causing hardship to the agricultural workers of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, we are discussing the farm problem which is extremely serious, because farming is a basic industry, not only in Quebec but also in the whole country.

I have listened with a great deal of attention to the remarks of the hon. members from other parts of our country, and I have come to the conclusion that the farm problem exists all across Canada. I cannot understand that, in the case of an industry as important as agriculture, ways cannot be found to solve a problem which is of concern not only to the farmers but also to the whole people.

The farmer's returns are inadequate as compared to the number of hours he has to devote to his work during the production cycle and as compared to his invested capital. That is why he often has to resort to borrowing in an effort to improve his production capacity. The government probably thought that by making his credit facilities easier at reasonable interest rates, he would be able to improve his position and to stabilize his enterprise.

Various problems prevent the farmer from developing his operation, putting it on an economic basic in all respects and getting from it a stable income. The main problem is that of prices because the farmer never knows what to expect in that sector.

The farmer never knows beforehand, except for a few products, what price he will get when he puts his production on the market. That is what happened last year to hog producers, for instance, and to egg producers who had to put their products on the market at a price lower than the production cost. That was not the way to increase their income, allow them to become financially independent and survive in a normal way.

What would happen to a manufacturer, for instance, if at the other end of the production line in his plant the price offered for his product was lower than his production cost? He certainly could not stay in business very long, he would go bankrupt. That is the situation in which agriculture finds itself in our country. It is likely that no one wants to call it bankruptcy but everyone is complaining that agriculture is in a very precarious situation.

[Mr. Peters.]

Among the obstacles which also prevent the farmer from getting a foothold, from surviving in a normal and advantageous way, there is the weather over which no one has any control.

The farmer is faced with those difficulties. He sometimes suffers heavy losses due to excessive rain, drought or insects which destroy the seeds and prevent him from getting something for his work. I know that neither the government nor the farmer can do something in that field. However, it seems to me that such drawbacks are quite enough, without us having to bear on top of that the ups and downs of an unstable market as far as prices are concerned.

I wonder whether a generous increase in the farmers' borrowing opportunities would settle their problem or whether it would be to the sole advantage of lenders who expect a higher rate of interest. Would this rise in the rate of interest be profitable to the farmer, or rather to financing institutions making the loans?

Another factor which prevents the farmer from bearing the expenses which a normal development of his business entails, is the cost of farming machinery. The problem by far exceeds the limits of a given milieu. Farm equipment sells at a very high price and the manufacturers do not always take into account the eastern or the western agriculture, in their manufacturing.

Some spare parts are sold at an excessively high price, absorbing a large part of the farmers' income because, very often the spare parts cannot be readily adapted to the various kinds of equipment bought in Canada.

In order to lower the production cost of farm machinery, it might be a good idea to encourage the setting up of strong Canadian industries in Canada that could manufacture equipment suitable to our needs, as well as spare parts which could be used as equipment of different trademarks without too much inconvenience.

Mr. Chairman, I may be drifting away from the subject but I shall come back to it. I am not too keen about this measure, because it does not really meet the needs of agriculture in eastern Canada. The agricultural economy of Quebec has always been centered on the dairy industry. An increase in the size of farms and of dairy herds is offered as a solution. I am convinced of one thing: in the province of Quebec the dairy industry has been, remains and will remain for a long time, the basic industry in our agriculture.

However, the increasing number of milk cows, each year, in Quebec and the decreasing number in Ontario shows that the dairy livestock is also decreasing in the other provinces. This gives Quebec the first place in Canada as far as the dairy industry is concerned.

We have 38 per cent of the whole dairy livestock, and milk production of Quebec represents 35 per cent of our Canadian production.

In 1966, Quebec farms produced 6,500 million pounds of milk bringing $224 million to the producers. That is not enough to remedy the situation, and it would be necessary to increase prices in order to raise the revenue of dairy producers.

Price support should be increased on a continuing basis, always taking into account prices, costs and production.

Consumers, hearing a farmer talk about the increase in price support, will perhaps think, and quite rightly, that if the government complies with our request, consumer prices may go up.

However, the Créditistes submitted during the election campaign a proposal which would allow the government to satisfy both the producers and the consumers by using the Bank of Canada to advance the necessary credit to the Canadian Dairy Commission. This commission would then grant the necessary subsidies to the dairy producers, which would allow them to get a reasonable price for their products and have a decent income which would make it possible for them to expand their operations as much as reasonably possible.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favour of the enlargement of farms. We have been practising it in our area for a certain number of years. We are also in favour of increased herds of milch-cows, in order to have profitable family businesses which can survive. Then, our sons will be truly interested in the survival of our agriculture for the advantage of the Canadian community and the French-Canadian community.

But by experience, Mr. Chairman, I know that a given moment, one cannot go over a certain limit, because if the size of the farm is unduly extended, we will have to resort to outside labour and this would be quite costly. It would contribute also to increasing the cost of production and, finally, it would reduce the net income, so that the situation would not be improved.

There is also some uncertainty with regard to the policies of the federal and the provincial governments. The federal government has a word to say in the field of agriculture, through its legislation on the international market, etc., and the provinces also have some responsibilities. But it often happens that when a farmer goes to the government, either federal or provincial, to ask for help, he gets the following answer: "Go to the provincial government, this does not concern us," or "Go to the federal government, this does not concern us." And so they pass the buck, while the farmer waits, suffers and, in the meantime, the situation grows worse. That is why the agricultural situation will continue to deteriorate, unless an agreement is reached and the responsibilities of the federal and the provincial governments in the field of agriculture are clearly defined.

Incidentally, allow me to make a suggestion: there is a lot of talk about a new constitution, etc.; but where agriculture is concerned, when a new constitution is drafted, I should like the situation to be taken into account, and an attempt made to correct it, by defining exactly what responsibilities belong to the federal government and to the provinces in the field of agriculture, so that one might know where to look in our society.

Mr. Chairman, before bringing my remarks to a close, allow me to draw the attention of the house to the resolution before us. There is a huge question mark in my mind. On page 14 of the annual report of the Farm Credit Corporation, one can read the following:

FINANCING

Farm Credit Act

To finance its lending program during 1967-68, the Corporation borrowed $194.5 million from the Minister of Finance at an average interest rate of 6.16 per cent—

Further on, the result of the difference between the interest rate paid by borrowers and that paid to those who financed the government is given.

Approximately 80 per cent of the funds lent by the Corporation bear the statutory interest rate of 5 per cent. The Corporation borrows funds from the Minister of Finance at current interest rates which are much higher than the average rate the Corporation may charge, thus creating an interest deficit which lasts for the duration of the loan. A continuation of the excess of interest cost rates over interest revenue rates will result in cumulative and rapidly accelerated annual operating losses.

Mr. Chairman, I should like the minister to tell us, while this question is under study, whether there is really a relation between the report of the Farm Credit Corporation and the bill which would allow the cabinet to increase the interest rates on loans granted to farmers.

Mr. Chairman, in a general economic development program we have to take agriculture into account. Agricultural policy must be a part of a general economic policy. The conventional distinction between agriculture and industry tends to conceal or at least to deny the fact that agriculture is itself an industry which, in addition, generates more industrial activity, wealth and jobs. This is why I said at the onset that agricultural industry is an essential industry which affects not only the farmer but the population as a whole.

We must direct and organize farming in such a way as to integrate it efficiently in the mechanism of modern economy, and more particularly the food industry. Mr. Chairman, I cannot understand why there is so little concern about an industry which is so important for all the people of the world, since we need from the cradle to the grave the fruits of labour of that industry in order to exist. We need food every day of our lives, and it is in the farming industry that we find it.

How is it, Mr. Chairman, that the land that feeds mankind is not able to provide a living for a man? This land that feeds all human beings in the world is not able to give a decent livelihood to the one that works it for the benefit of the whole population.

We must definitely rid agriculture of its traditional characteristic of being necessarily and indefinitely dependent on the state.

Mr. Chairman, it is getting embarrassing for the farmer, year after year, to keep asking the authorities for a recognition of his rights so that he can survive and develop. We should at least ensure his survival and development permanently.

Mr. Chairman, if one day the situation of agriculture is such that the best farmers do not earn an honest reward, then all will be lost.

The economic nature of modern agriculture compels us to assure for the farmer, in all fairness, the same standard of living, the same economic and social benefits enjoyed by the other citizens engaged in economic activities requiring as much knowledge, capital and work. That must be the social and economic status of the real professional farmer.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

Mr. Chairman, the farmer is not asking the state and society for a special status or special advantages. In working towards this aim, we should avoid measures and methods of organization which would tend to make the farmer a ward of the state and force us to witness, without being able to do anything about it, the progressive disappearance of initiative, of the right of the farmer to expand and improve his operations according to his means, his skills, his will to succeed, his sense of responsibility and his own efforts. We could lose a great deal.

In short, we should, I agree, give the farmer greater credit facilities but, for heaven's sake, let us not raise the interest rate and let us guarantee the farmer better and more stable prices, so that he may repay his loans without any difficulty.

Let us suppose that a 40 year old farmer borrows $25,000 to improve his farm by purchasing more land.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to inform the hon. member that the time allotted to him by the rules has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee agree to allow the hon. member to continue his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank you and my colleagues for this generosity. I will not abuse it, you may be sure.

As I was just saying, let us not raise the interest rate. Let us guarantee the farmer better and more stable prices, so that he will be able to repay his loans without too much difficulty. I was saying that if a 40 year old farmer borrows $25,000 in 1968 in order to make his farm economic, he has no hope of increasing his income in the near future unless he can get better prices for his products.

Would we have really succeeded in helping him, or would we have not in actual fact managed to bind him tighter, as well as his son who will have to take over tomorrow?

Mr. Chairman, I am prepared more than any other hon. member to collaborate fully with all my colleagues in this house and in the government, in order to try and make things better, through suggestions, work and studies of all kind. The survival of that business, that vital industry will therefore be ensured and our families will be able to keep at it. This business, which is described as a family business, will make it possible for those engaged in its operation, to feel happy and proud to be Canadians.

Thus, if ever events threatened to snatch it away from us, we shall find people attached to the land, ready to fight as true patriots, in order to preserve something which really belongs to us and which is advantageous to the whole nation.

[English]

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I was rather disturbed to hear the minister indicate earlier that he might not be available tomorrow to meet the corn producers. They have spent a great deal of time and energy to come to Ottawa on their tractors to bring their serious problems to his personal attention. I hope the minister will have the good sense to make himself available all day tomorrow and meet the corn producers when they arrive in the morning. It is my belief that he will require all day to explain to them the statement he made earlier. He said in effect that the government is unwilling to do anything to help them.

Mr. Olson: That is not right.

Mr. Hees: If the minister believes that anywhere in his statement he has indicated he intends to help the corn producers I would be interested to hear him outline the nature of the help after I have concluded my remarks.

The government has finally, six months too late, brought in the necessary amendments to the Farm Improvement Loans Act. The farmers of Canada have been deprived for months of the necessary credit they should have had through a continuous operation of the act. As a result they have been faced with two alternatives. They either had to put off necessary improvements to their farm operations because this credit was not available to them or they made these necessary improvements with money borrowed at exorbitant rates.

The minister said the other day in the house, as recorded at page 601 of Hansard that he was not able to bring in these amendments until this time. Let me read what he said:

> This guarantee has been renewed by parliament from time to time in respect of loans made during three year periods. The most recent period was added in September, 1964, to run from July 1, 1965 to June 30, 1968. Hon. members may recall that it did not prove possible to deal with this measure before the three year guarantee period expired on June 30, 1968. In view of the subsequent dissolution of the house, this is the first opportunity to bring this measure before the house for consideration.

Had the Prime Minister kept his word when he advised the people of Canada, right after being chosen leader of the Liberal party and Prime Minister, that he intended to call parliament immediately to clean up the legislation then on the order paper and then take a summer recess to be followed by an election in the fall, these Farm Improvement Loans Act amendments would have been before the house months ago and our farmers would not have been denied the credit they have needed in the past six months. The farm community would then have found it much easier to continue its operations than has been the case. This is a direct result of the Prime Minister going to the country in April. No one can disagree with the statement that these Farm Improvement Loan Act amendments, with which we are now dealing six months too late, were not passed earlier because of the unwillingness of the Prime Minister to call parliament early in May.

Farming is a business operation today, and I am sure that everyone will agree that credit is necessary to any business operation but cannot solve the problems facing our farmers today. These problems have been in existence for some time. As we know, the farmer has for many years been caught in a very real cost-price squeeze. To find out exactly how the farmer has been doing for the past ten years I obtained the relevant figures from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics which keeps such figures for the government. I wanted to find out how the farmer had been making out in the last ten-year period, what he had received for his products and what he had to pay for the things he had to buy. During this ten-year period prices paid by our farmers increased by 35.1 per cent. The prices received by our farmers for the things they sold increased by only 24.3 per cent.

• (5:00 p.m.)

It is easy to see from these figures that during the past ten years our farmers have become steadily worse off year by year. It is clear to us, and I hope it will soon be clear to the government, that this situation must be corrected if we are to preserve agriculture as our basic industry and if we are to preserve the family farm as the basic unit of agriculture. Far too many young men are today leaving the farm because they do not see a bright future in farming. The policies of this government during the past five years have been responsible to a great extent for this situation.

I believe the best way to solve the cost-price squeeze in which our farmers find themselves today is for the government to establish a royal commission to examine all facets of the operation of our farmers, food processors, machinery manufacturers and all those who sell our food products in their various forms—in fact, the whole farming operation from the time the seed goes into the ground until the customer buys the product in whatever final form it is made available to him. This royal commission should also study the cost of those things the farmer has to buy in order to carry on a normal operation. It is important to find out who is making an abnormal profit in this whole process.

One thing is sure, our farmers are not making an abnormal profit; they are making only a reasonable and steadily declining profit, as is made clear by the figures I mentioned a few moments ago. The profit of our farmers has been slipping year by year. The situation of our farmers has become steadily worse. If we are to retain agriculture as our No. 1 basic industry, keep young farmers on the farm and make it possible for the family farm to remain our basic agricultural unit, we must solve the problem of why the cost-price squeeze has been increasing year by year.

So I once again urge the government to establish a royal commission to examine this whole problem in all parts of the country. We must do whatever we can to solve the problem with which farmers have been faced for many years and which has become worse year by year. The cost-price squeeze is gradually throttling the farming industry in Canada.

I should like to speak briefly about one of the problems which our farmers face. This problem particularly affects farmers in the province of Ontario and points up the need for credit being made available quickly and at low interest rates in order to help farmers who are faced with serious adverse conditions in their farming operation.

I speak particularly of the problem of those who grow and process tomatoes in Ontario. I have been advised by the president of the Ontario food processors that the average processed cost of canned tomatoes and tomato juice is $5.30 a case of 24, 28-ounce cans. Canadian growers and processors have been encountering very serious competition from processers and growers in France, Spain and Bulgaria. The products produced in these countries can be landed and sold in Canada at a price that varies between $5.20 and $5.60 a case. The reason these products can be landed and sold at this low price is that in each of the three countries I have mentioned the product is subsidized by the government.

This situation was made clear to the government earlier this year by two organizations, the Ontario food processors in their very excellent brief presented to the government, and the Canadian food processors in their very excellent brief. These briefs pointed out clearly the problem faced by our growers and processors. They pointed out the subsidy paid per case in the countries of origin of those products. They asked very earnestly that the government impose a countervailing duty on these products, when they land in this country, equivalent to the subsidy paid in the country of origin. That is a sensible request. If this is not done, our processors and growers cannot fairly compete with processors and growers in the countries I have mentioned. The present situation is having a very detrimental effect on Canadian growers and processors.

I strongly urge the government, and the minister who recently took over this portfolio, to seriously examine these excellent briefs which were presented earlier this year to the government. I urge the government to impose countervailing duties equivalent to the subsidies paid in the countries of origin. The situation that exists is making it impossible for Canadian processors and growers to make a reasonable profit, to be able to compete, stay in business and help the Canadian farming industry to flourish and produce a good livelihood for those who subsist by the industry.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, I should like to point out to the house the stand on farm credit taken by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture at their board of directors meeting in July of 1968. I shall quote the resolution they passed at that time:

> That legislation of the farm improvement loans type providing government guarantees on bank loans for farm purposes, at the lowest possible rates of interest, should be immediately enacted.

• (5:10 p.m.)

It goes on to say:

> Many farmers require long, intermediate and short term credit to develop their farming operations to meet modern conditions of production, and low returns to agriculture production often make interest rates higher than 5 per cent an excessive burden which hinders progress in agriculture in both the farmers' interests and the public's interest. It is therefore essential that through the Farm Credit Corporation or through an expanded and restructured federal agricultural credit service, that a supervised "package" credit service be developed that can meet the short, intermediate and long term credit needs of farmers on a planned basis and at a moderate (i.e. 5 per cent) rate of interest. Such a service should very soon be made available.

The C.F.A. requests that at a very early date the federal government, and its agencies in the farm credit field, with the members of the advisory committee to the F.C.C. enter into detailed consultations with the C.F.A. on detailed farm credit policy requirements.

Both of our farm organizations which are national in scope, the National Farmers Union and the C.F.A., have taken similar stands on the matter of farm credit. I cannot understand how a government responsible to the farmers of Canada as a whole would disregard the recommendations of both and instead say they propose to change the credit program so that the interest rate will be set by the governor in council. Obviously it will be higher than the present rate; otherwise, of course, there would be no point in changing the act. How can they propose to do this in spite of the recommendations and advice received from the collective farm organizations in this country? There may be times when farm organizations, like anyone else, may not be entirely correct, but in this field I think their advice and recommendations should be very carefully considered. If they are not considered, the result will be an escalation of costs in the farm sector and in farm production.

I should like to read what an economist on the staff of the Economic Council of Canada, Wolfgang Illing, said, speaking on the rising cost of housing in Canada:

The rising cost of money has had a greater impact on the over-all price of housing than the increased cost of serviced land.

He went on to say:

The cost of borrowing money to buy residential property and the cost of serviced land in urban areas are the principal causes, with the cost of borrowing the more important of the two.

He gave some interesting examples. He said:

An increase in interest rates from about 6 per cent to about 9 per cent has added more to the monthly payment of an average mortgage than a $5,000 increase in the price of the building lot would have added without a change in the interest rate.

A 25-year $16,500 mortgage, at 6 per cent with a $106 monthly payment, results in the payment of $15,200 in interest for a total repayment of $31,700. The same mortgage, at a 9 per cent rate, would result in monthly payments of $137, and interest payments of $24,500, for a total repayment of $41,000.

This is approximately a little short of $9,000 added to the price of the house as the result of the increased interest rate. What is being proposed here is that we should do the same to the farmer. The result will be an increase in his production cost comparable to the increase in the cost of housing. We will end up in agriculture as we have done in housing. In housing we have expensive money and a shortage of houses, while in agriculture we will have expensive money and reduced production without the efficient, well organized farm units which we should have in this country. We will put the small farmer against the wall and we will put the large farmer under a debt load which it will take him years to repay, if he ever does.

Of course, as the minister said, the government has the power to do it if they choose to. Speaking the other evening, he pointed out to the opposition that "the hon. gentlemen opposite who have been reduced from 96 to 72 ought to have got the message by this time." He said that in effect the government has the power to do it and they will do it over the opinions and opposition of members on this side of the house.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I ask the hon. gentleman to read the sentence preceding that one so as to put what I said in context. Hon. members opposite were challenging the right of the government to propose legislation. That is why I mentioned the numbers.

Mr. Gleave: Does the minister wish me to read the preceding sentence from Hansard? It is a fairly long statement.

Mr. Olson: To do so would be fair. I leave it to the hon. member to determine what is fair.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, I grant the minister the privilege when he rises in his place to read whatever he may choose ahead of what I said. I have no objection to reading it, but this is the opinion he expressed. I do not want to put him in a position in which he does not choose to be. If he does not choose to say that, he does not have to. What I am pointing out is mainly the position of farm organizations and the opinions which they have expressed which, I say with all due respect to the minister, should be carefully considered because these organizations represent the rank and file of the farmers across our nation. They represent L'Union des Catholiques Cultivateurs de Quebec, the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, the Ontario Farmers' Union, and many others from all provinces. These organizations represent farmers all across the country and it is their considered opinion that the present 5 per cent interest rate is the maximum that the farm industry can bear and continue to be productive.

I have here an article from the Western Producer for September 26 which is headed, "Western Grain Industry: We Must Export or Die". The article contains the text of an address by Charles W. Gibbings, president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. He points out the precarious position of the western grain industry. It is in a difficult, tight position. He is quite right when he says that we must export grain or we will not survive. I am a farmer in that area. When the grain industry is in that position, is this the time to revise the credit structure of the farm industry in Canada? Is this the time we should pick, when the industry is already struggling for survival? Do we pick this time to add to the increasing costs of production of the farmers out there who are already struggling with increased costs of machinery and fertilizer and the other things that go into the production of grain? Are we, as a government and a people, going to make a decision that will add another straw to the camel's back? At this time the corn growers of Ontario are declaring themselves to be in the same position.

I believe all these things should be carefully considered when we talk about adding to the cost of money. We can make more money available for the farmers to borrow, as we are proposing to do under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. There is a provision in this measure to increase the amount of money available. I suppose some of our farmers will be desperate enough to avail themselves of the increased amount of money in order to try to bail themselves out of the hole in which they are, to try to delay the day of reckoning which must surely come.

However, let the house remember why the Farm Improvement Loans Act was passed in the first place, and why the Farm Credit Corporation came into being in the first place. The Farm Improvement Loans Act was passed in the first place because farmers were in such a state they could not get credit from the ordinary sources. They could not get credit to tool up, to buy the machines that were needed as a result of the depression and following the second world war. At that time the whole agricultural industry had to be retooled and re-equipped and credit had to be found to do this job. These measures, the Farm Improvement Loans Act and the Farm Credit Act, were designed to do this job. The interest rate was set at a point which it was considered the industry could carry at that time. We can make the extra money available, but if we do so at a cost which the industry cannot bear, or if we make this money available to an industry which is in a precarious financial position, then we are only going half way. In addition to these measures we will have to have a marketing structure, a price support structure and an over-all agricultural policy which will keep the industry in healthy condition. I believe this is the first consideration which should be before this house, to see that agriculture is in a healthy financial condition and that credit is available at a rate the industry can bear.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take advantage of this opportunity to congratulate the minister on his appointment to this portfolio. I hope he will take as his example the former member for Qu'Appelle who showed more understanding and sympathy for the Canadian agricultural industry and economy than, in my period of service in this house, has been displayed before or since. I should like also to take this opportunity to invite the minister to attend the international plowing matches which are going to be held in Wellington county beginning October 16. I hope he will avail himself of the opportunity to see some of the best farm land in the world.

The introduction of this measure, provides an opportunity for members of this house to present to the minister some of the problems in connection with farm credit and agricultural problems in general. Credit, whether it is for the householder, the farmer, the merchant or the industrialist, has become a way of life. Sometimes it is rather interesting to note that it would almost seem that the size of the loan or mortgage has become a status symbol. I well remember a comment made by Dr. Howard of Chalmers United Church in this city in referring to modern philosophy. He said modern philosophy was made up of wall to wall carpeting and back to the wall financing.

I sometimes think that the use of credit should be a subject in our school curriculum because it has become of such universal importance. Sometimes it is too easy, sometimes it is too expensive and in many cases it is abused. Of late we have had instances of this in the Farm Credit Corporation and there have been instances cited in connection with student loans. In providing legislation covering this subject I sometimes feel we should proceed very carefully because, after all, we are legislating not just for today. We are introducing legislation that may last for 40 years. Perhaps it would be well to listen to the words of Mr. Leach, president of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, who said:

I am concerned about what sort of economy those in their twenties today will inherit from us who are two and three times their age.

Today's extravagances, while they can be perhaps financed by borrowing, will have to be paid for ultimately by the younger people and maybe we who are in our forties and sixties should have considerable concern about this.

I am particularly concerned about the cost of credit to farmers. During this debate it has been stated that making credit available does not get to the root of agricultural problems. I feel that the cost of credit can assist the farmer who is faced with a rising cost of operation with no compensatory increase in the price of his products. However, Mr. Chairman, this is not new. Since I came to this house in 1953, year after year reference has been made to agricultural statistics which threaten to destroy financially the farmers of this country. However, we must give the farmers credit for being able to do something about their problem. The only way they have been able to overcome the cost-price squeeze—and I think they deserve a great deal of credit for this—is by their ability to make one, two, three and sometimes ten blades of grass grow where only one grew before.

• (5:30 p.m.)

In that connection, it is rather interesting to note that in the introductory speech of the Minister of Agriculture—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The Chair has been informed that a messenger from the other place is now on his way to this house. Therefore the proceedings of this committee will be suspended and I do now leave the chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform this house that a message has been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate has passed Bill No. C-108, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1969.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: While I have the floor I should like to advise hon. members that the matters to be discussed at the time of the adjournment period are the following: the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman), Consumer Affairs; the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose), Education; the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Hogarth), Harbours.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

• (5:40 p.m.)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Publication of Statutes Act.
An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1969.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

AMENDMENTS EXTENDING PERIOD, RESPECTING INTEREST RATES, ETC.

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Olson (for Mr. Benson)—Mr. Béchard in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act to provide for a further three-year loan period ending June 30, 1971; to substitute for the 5 per cent rate of interest on guaranteed farm improvement loans made under the Act such rate or rates of interest as may be prescribed by the Governor in Council; to extend the purposes for which guaranteed loans may be made to include the purchase of land as an addition to an existing farm enterprise; to increase from $15,000 to $25,000 the maximum amount of any loan that may be made under the act to a borrower together with any amount owing in respect of other guaranteed farm improvement loans; to authorize the Minister of Finance to designate certain trust and loan companies and insurance companies and certain credit unions, caisse populaire and other co-operative credit societies as authorized lenders under the act; to establish a limit of $1,200,000,000 as the aggregate principal amount of guaranteed loans that may be made by all authorized lenders in that period and a limit of $300,000,000 as the aggregate amount of guaranteed loans that may be made by authorized lenders other than banks during that period; to increase the present limit of liability of the Minister of Finance in respect of loans made by individual lenders to encourage lending by small-volume lenders; to provide further for certain changes in connection with the administration of the Act and for other matters related or incidental thereto.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, I was discussing the wonderful contribution our farmers have made to this country and the wonderful efforts they have made to keep their heads above water. I was surprised to hear the statistics quoted by the minister when he spoke about farmers. He had this to say as found on page 599 of Hansard:

Between 1961 and 1966 the number of farms in Canada with gross sales in excess of $5,000 per annum increased from about 140,000 to about 192,000. In the same period the number of farms with gross sales of more than $10,000 per annum increased from 50,000 to 95,000 or 90 per cent.

Those statistics almost give the impression that farmers never had it so good. However, the statistics quoted as coming from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings this afternoon would indicate that this is not true. Farmers, however, have become increasingly efficient, despite what the studies of some may indicate. The fact is that in 1930 one agricultural worker fed 11 persons, in 1946 one agricultural worker fed 13 persons, and at present one worker in the agricultural industry feeds 33 persons.

In the same connection I was interested in a recent newspaper editorial which said:

• (5:50 p.m.)

Canada's farmers have an impressive record of producing food efficiently. Food exports over the years have earned large sums of needed foreign currency, while the abundant supplies of low-priced food for our own consumers have been a vital factor in the rapid rise of the standard of living of most Canadians.

But it is becoming apparent now that farmers are growing weary of subsidizing Canada's economy with cheap food.

This is very true, Mr. Chairman. Among the prime elements in arriving at the cost factor in modern agriculture must of necessity be the cost and availability of credit. It would appear that the legislation proposed will increase the availability in areas where credit can be provided. However, in connection with the cost there appears to be considerable doubt that the farmers of Canada will be treated in the same realistic way that they were in 1958 when the party to which I belong was in power.

Many of us on this side remember the battles we had before the rate of 5 per cent was maintained and I do not think I am giving away any caucus secrets when I mention that we had considerable battles with some of our own urban members as to the reality of maintaining that rate on the part of the Farm Credit Corporation. It would seem, to judge by the small number of speakers from the other side of the house in this debate, that even though some of them come from important agricultural areas they are not particularly interested in this aspect and I sometimes wonder whether in those secret caucuses we have heard so much about they have stood up to persuade the Minister of Agriculture that this interest rate should be maintained at 5 per cent.

So far as the farm improvement loan legislation is concerned I feel the minister should indicate some definite formula so that farmers may know just where they are heading—probably a formula associated with the prime bank rate. Experience has shown that farmers are just as good credit risks as institutions which get the prime bank rate and I feel that in the case of farm improvement loans the figure should be arrived at on the basis of a definite formula easily understandable by farmers and of assistance to them.

If the farmers of Canada are to be forced to pay the high interest rates current at the present time they will have to receive more money for their products. Then what will happen? The cry today is that the farmers are the favoured group in our national picture. We who represent the farming areas are getting tired of the finger being constantly pointed at the farmer as the one who receives the greatest chunk of what is spent on the higher cost of living. It is true the price of food in the marketplace may have increased the cost of living but in many cases this higher cost has been created between the farmer and the consumer as a result of the increased costs of processing, packaging, freezing and transportation.

One of the reasons I rose to take part in this debate is my feeling that in addition to this legislation we in Canada need some type of assistance in cases of emergency and disaster. This idea was suggested some time ago by the Federation of Agriculture in one of its briefs. The necessity for legislation along these lines was described in a paragraph which stated:

> Occasionally farming areas are struck by sudden national catastrophes such as severe drought, large scale floods, storms of hurricane force, severe infestations by insects, plant diseases of epidemic proportions, severe frosts at certain periods for plant and tree growth and other natural hazards.
> Damage to buildings, fences, machinery, fruit trees, livestock and land in addition to actual loss of production under such disaster conditions can be very severe. When this happens, many farms are in immediate need of credit for the purpose of restoring actual assets destroyed or damaged and for current farm operating and living expenses until production can be brought back to normal.

This recommendation appeared in a brief presented by the Federation of Agriculture in support of some form of federal emergency loan legislation. The need was brought vividly to my attention this year when a hurricane blew through the township of Proton in the southern part of Grey county. The heading in the local newspaper reads: "Thousands of Dollars Damage By Cyclone In Proton Township". The article reads in part:

> One of the most destructive storms to have ever struck this district tore a narrow path through Proton Township on Thursday, Aug. 22, 1968, about 4:00 p.m. At least four barns and other buildings were unroofed, a silo demolished, shambles made of two residences, hundreds of trees broken and uprooted, hydro and telephone lines disrupted, rail fences scattered and grain flattened.

Farmers have no control over occurrences of this kind which take place more often than some people think. It is almost impossible to take out any kind of insurance to cover hurricane damage and I feel strongly that some form of assistance should be available. When I returned to Ottawa I wrote to the Minister of Agriculture asking whether he would give consideration to doing what the province of Ontario already does, that is, match dollar for dollar what can be collected by friends and neighbours in the particular area affected. In passing, I should like to congratulate the people in the Proton area who have taken such a practical interest in their own neighbours by collecting more than $10,000 to help the victims of this hurricane. This will be matched by $10,000 from the provincial government and I can see no reason why it could not be matched by a similar contribution from the federal government. Even though the minister has up to now refused to make assistance available along these lines, I hope he will reconsider his attitude because the amount involved would not be large, not nearly as great as we understand the former minister of agriculture intends to spend on refurnishing his office. Possibly it would only amount to $10,000 or $15,000, but we feel its provision would be of great assistance to those concerned.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Six o'clock.

Mr. Howe: There is one other thing. I should like the minister to suggest to the farm credit administration office in that area that the farmers affected should, if they find themselves in difficulty as a result of the circumstances I have described, be allowed a little extra time in which to repay their loans.

To sum up, I sincerely hope the 5 per cent rate can be maintained under the Farm Credit Corporation and that in connection with farm improvement loans some definite formula can be provided such as linking the rate to the prime bank rate. Further, I hope Canadians can be given some type of emergency disaster loans and that the minister will give favourable consideration to matching the action of the provincial government in assisting the farmers of Grey county who lost crops and property in the hurricane.

The Chairman: In accordance with the provisions of paragraph 15 (4) of the standing orders the hour for the consideration of private members' business has been suspended for this sitting. Accordingly, I do leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Ritchie: In rising to speak on farm credit I feel that there are substantial areas, particularly in respect of the Farm Credit Corporation, that deserve wide scrutiny at this point. Since the original Farm Credit Act was instituted there has been a substantial change in farm economics, marketing problems and in the general economic climate in which the farm industry must operate. During these past ten years there has been a phenomenal increase in the price of land, in the price of machinery and farm operating costs. The increase in land price has been aided by the rapid rate of inflation, competition from would-be new farmers, and competition by established farmers who increase their holdings when the amount of land available remains static. There is just no more land being created. As well, there has been some demand by investors as a hedge against inflation. All this has increased the amount of capital required to carry on a viable farm operation so that the capital required is now in the neighbourhood of $60,000 to $100,000 for a modest farm.

So far as farm improvement loans are concerned, in respect of which the banks and other companies will be lending money, it would seem that the rate of interest on money should be tied to the prime interest rate. This would introduce a flexibility into the lending which I think would be very advantageous and would prevent a situation that has occurred in the past few months.

In relation to the Farm Credit Act I should like to point out that the amount of farm capitalization necessary to carry on an adequate farm is of a large order. The capital repayment necessary to pay for a farm involving a $60,000 to $100,000 capital investment is in the nature of $3,000 to $5,000 per year. This is a very heavy burden for the farmers to bear in relation to their earnings. With the high level of income tax this means that the farmers' standard of living is seriously compromised. He is placed at a serious disadvantage in respect of his living standards, compared with his counterpart in the city who has the advantage of having the necessary capital supplied by others. In discussing with young farmers the reason they leave the farm for relatively low wage jobs in the city, this would appear to be a factor.

Although it is not usually recognized as such, in our high cost economy, the old adage that the farmer lives poor and dies rich will be much more applicable in future than it is at present. It would seem obvious that, in the future, capital repayment on land for farms by the individual farmer will have to be spread out over long periods. Indeed it will be likely that in his lifetime a farmer will not often retire the debt acquired in the purchase of land and the building of his farm unit. In order to retain the family farm unit it will be necessary to allow the accumulation of capital by a farmer and his family to some greater degree than is allowed under our present taxation structure. This would require the calling of witnesses before a committee to study thoroughly the agricultural field, the lending field and the taxation field. A means must be found by which the farmer will be in a position to retain more of the capital he has accumulated, particularly in view of the very high income tax level. Some thought should be given to a program which would allow a farm to be passed from generation to generation without complete refinancing. I notice a change in the resolution which might have been incorporated for the purpose and, if so, I welcome it as a useful instrument.

A small farm has now become a small business the operation of which requires a major effort on the part of the farmer. The business of lending money should be considered in the light of the fact that the individual farmer is a businessman generally alone, and that therefore our present taxation and social structure, as in the case of a small business, does not give the farmer a proper opportunity to take his place in society. If the family farmer does disappear in the foreseeable future his demise will be caused by the taxation policies in relation to business. At the present time the family farm, on the whole, is efficient and provides more food more cheaply than does any corporation. However the family farm must be allowed to operate and breathe; otherwise it will be taken over by corporation farms to the disadvantage of the whole community. The Farm Credit Corporation has been established now for a long time, but in view of the great changes and a whole host of new problems that have arisen it should be studied in depth.

The only way to achieve this is for the agricultural committee to carry out a study in depth of this problem. Until this is done the interest rate should not change from its present level of 5 per cent and should not be subject to change by the governor in council operating in secrecy and without accountability. The farmer must know what his interest rate is to be. There should be no doubt on his part concerning the interest rate. An interest rate of 5 per cent is reasonable on the average over a long period. Although the funds for lending by the Farm Credit Corporation are taken out of the consolidated revenue fund, much money has already been paid back into the fund, so that to some extent it is self-sustaining. No change should be made in the interest rate or in the terms of interest until there has been a review of the necessity for this, and of the other factors involved in a study of the interest rate.

It might be that the Farm Credit Corporation has funds of its own which it could use for the purpose of carrying on modest research. It might be reasonable that a young farmer could be given a rate of interest lower than the normal rate for a period of time, until he becomes established and is in a position to pay a higher interest rate. Farm credit is a very important factor in the business of farming. In considering the problems which face farmers today it is on a par with marketing. It is absolutely essential that a good system of farm loans be evolved and that changes be made to meet varying conditions. There must be greater means by which farm credit can be obtained. These bills seem to be merely a hurried extension of existing legislation, and do not indicate that there has been thoughtful consideration of the needs of the farmer.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to enter this debate because I have a feeling that it has already been prolonged to too great an extent. I believe that if we are really concerned about the plight of the farmers and the interests of the farmers we would have discontinued this debate two or three days ago, and would have proceeded with our business of passing these bills.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Douglas: It is not only the bills referred to in these resolutions which are being held up, but there are other important bills waiting in the wings, such as the bill concerning the increase in cash advances. Much of the debate so far has been more or less irrelevant, and certainly it has been time consuming and repetitive. I am afraid that a good deal of it will be repeated when we discuss the bill in the house later.

What are we supposed to be doing here? I believe we are supposed to be discussing three resolutions which deal with programs which have been in operation for some years, and which have been accepted and used by the farmers of Canada. We should be discussing the renewal of the Farm Improvement Loans Act, revisions to the Farm Credit Act and revisions to the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act. But we seem to be ranging very far from these topics at times.

In regard to the Farm Improvement Loans Act, I think it is important to reactivate this as soon as possible, because many farmers are waiting for these loans. I do not think it is particularly beneficial to farmers to have us spending time trying to assess blame, or take credit for things done or left undone in the past years or months. I think it is important to get these bills introduced and passed. The farmers are waiting for this legislation in order to make use of these provisions.

I am very pleased to hear that credit unions are to be allowed to become lending institutions under this act. The provisions which make it possible for farmers to borrow money under the act to purchase small land holdings over a relatively brief period of time will be beneficial as well.

I want to say a few words about the Farm Credit Act and the farm syndicate loans act. Farmers have accepted the provisions of these acts, and they have accomplished at least two beneficial results. They have made it possible for farmers to attain economic units, and have created a great deal of efficiency in farm units in Canada. They have also made it possible to transfer farms to the younger generation, and this is one of the most important things that can be done at this time.

The proposal to increase the capital under this act will enable a continuing use of these funds in future years. I believe also that the father-son partnership provision is good. It will enable such a partnership to borrow more money than might otherwise be available.

I welcome also the provision which makes credit available to farm co-operatives and farm corporations under the Farm Credit Corporation. I think it is a good idea that the people living on Indian reserves, either in bands or as individuals, will now be allowed, once this resolution becomes law, to borrow money from the Farm Credit Corporation.

There is one reservation I have in respect of this resolution regarding the Farm Credit Corporation act. I sympathize with many of the members who have expressed their concern, particularly those members on the opposition benches. I made a similar statement during the debate in reply to the speech from the throne that I should like to see interest rates remain the same as they are at present under the Farm Credit Corporation act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

I am not sure that I will be successful in persuading my colleagues on this side of the house to support my stand in this matter, but if anyone can do this it is not likely to be someone on the opposition side. The best thing we can do in this committee is to expedite the passage of these resolutions, and get on with the job of providing these additional credit facilities to the farmers of Canada.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, my only reason for speaking on this resolution this evening is my concern about its implications. I am of a different opinion from the hon. member for Assiniboia, who suggested there was nothing to worry about. The resolution we have before us should be considered seriously.

I agree with another hon. member who suggested that interest rates on these loans should be pegged. I am particularly concerned with interest rates because of what happened many years ago. I remember the hardships that my family suffered when trying to keep up the payments on loans, due to interest rates. They had to obtain a mortgage in order to stay in business. In 1937 the bank which held the mortgage on the land my father owned in Alberta required him to sell the cattle he had to stay in business. I remember their taking the machinery and the land, and everything else it was possible to remove in order to pay up the mortgage. These people were not interested in my father keeping his farm lands. It is my suggestion tonight that if we permit this resolution to pass in its present form, without pegging the interest rate, we can expect the same thing to happen again.

Surely no one questions the fact that the Farm Improvement Loans Act should be reinstated; but these changes, whether acceptable or not, should not be shoved down our throats. We must seriously consider the interest rates which are spelled out in respect of guaranteed farm improvement loans prescribed by the governor in council. We are all aware of the fact that the N.H.A. rates are those prescribed by the governor in council.

When we look at the situation which exists throughout Canada we realize that only those people who earn $8,000 a year can qualify for these loans. If this measure is passed in its present form, the farmers who are not earning that amount of money could be in the same position as 80 per cent of the people in this country who cannot qualify for an N.H.A. loan. I hope the minister will realize that the young people and the elderly people who must obtain loans under the act are the people who are most important to this industry. Having regard to the analogy I have made, we are making provisions to allow the governor in council to practise discrimination against the farming people of this country.

The Minister of Agriculture said, on September 30, that the Minister of Finance advised that when the legislation was introduced in the house the new lending period would be made retroactive from July 1, having regard to loans made after June 30, and that these would be guaranteed by the government. I ask members of the house what better lending institution could possibly be found than the government of this country. I am sure anyone who wanted to establish a lending institution would be pleased to know that the loans he was making were backed by the people of Canada. The Minister of Agriculture suggested it was important to keep in mind that the object of this legislation is to facilitate guaranteed loans to farmers, but the ultimate decision of whether such loans are made rests with the lender.

[Mr. Skoberg.]

These facts will help to throw some light on what has been taking place in this country ever since the war. The defenders of the profit, or free enterprise system, have been taking their prosperity in cash, while the ordinary John Doe has been encouraged to take his prosperity on credit. I suggest this is exactly what is happening today. This was offered as a remedy for his own tight money problem, resulting from too much money being drained out of the economy in profits. This stimulant could have only temporary benefits and the sources were limited.

As the economy has slowed down, the government has been unable or unwilling to diagnose the case or come to grips with realities. Instead they are experimenting with various kinds of free enterprise nostrums. They have cut taxes for the rich. When this did not produce the desired results, they increased taxes but provided refunds to corporations, which simply means that the corporations were not taxed at all.

Those who have taken $5 billion out of the economy in 12 short months are the people who receive special consideration at the hands of the old line parties. Having drained the public purse, they now favour high interest rates for money. I include both the Liberals and the Conservatives in these remarks. I do not think there is any question whatsoever that there is not one iota of difference between the Liberals and the Conservatives, with regard to protecting the private corporate interest in this country. I appreciate the position the Conservatives have taken in this particular situation, but I wonder what they would do if they were now in office.

There is one more analogy I should like to make, Mr. Chairman. It is that many, many people are very critical of the hippies that we have in Canada today. So far as the hippies are concerned, I believe they are fed up to the teeth with the absolute inactivity of the government of Canada. I am sure they are fed up to the teeth with the absolute lack of responsibility on the part of members of parliament, when they fail to meet the issues head on. In this regard I refer to the resolution now before us. Here we are giving the right to raise the interest rate on farm improvement loans to the economic hippies—and I am sure this country is full of economic hippies. We do not have to look very far to realize this and to realize they do not care what really happens to the farmer today.

The most important fact we have to face today is that farm people very much need the money that is available to them by way of a farm improvement loan. I assure the committee that the people to whom I have spoken are most desirous of being able to avail themselves of farm improvement loans, but they are not desirous of availing themselves of such loans if there is an increase in the interest rate. These remarks apply to the people with whom I have spoken within the last week, and before that. They suggested that, because of the present interest rate they are unable at this time to take advantage of the loans available to them. I am sure that when the bill following this resolution is passed there will be absolutely no way of pegging the interest rate.

I was very surprised when the other day the Minister of Agriculture suggested that the majority of his party really is not very much interested in what the opposition have to say in this respect. I think it is high time that, regardless of the majority of any party in this house, the government realized that the minority has a right to be heard and to be told exactly what is going on.

I think what happened this afternoon is a perfect example of what happens with this government. The minister neglected to give us information on the measures proposed in the order paper, but the information was given to the press ahead of time. I realize that resolution No. 5 contains many necessary provisions. We all realize that we are not going to hold up its passage indefinitely, but we ask that this matter be referred to a committee that will be able to consider it and decide in what way it could be improved.

It has always been my opinion that the government should recognize there are experts in every field with which they deal. These experts are not necessarily in the ranks of the government. I believe that every government should at least recognize the fact that there must be consultation with those people most directly affected by the legislation proposed, and I suggest the people in the agricultural field should be consulted about these matters. People representing farm organizations should be given the opportunity to discuss the matters with which we are now dealing.

One hon. member suggested that a royal commission be appointed to study this whole question. I have absolutely no confidence in royal commissions. I suggest that the only way to enact the best kind of legislation to solve these problems is to consult the people concerned. They should be brought before the agriculture committee and allowed to express their views as to what is best for their industry and our society.

I agree that this discussion must come to an end. Many of the things that have been said are being repeated. I urge the government, and particularly the Minister of Agriculture, to pay great attention to setting an interest rate in respect of farm improvement loans that will be equitable to all. I have no hesitation in opposing this resolution in its present form. I shall have no hesitation in going back to the constituency from which I come and telling my people why I opposed it. I believe that because of the method used in setting the interest rate under this legislation we can expect the worst for the farmers of this country. I do not mean just the western farmers, but the farmers in this whole nation. I urge the Minister of Agriculture to give serious attention to the rate of interest, and the one clause of the resolution to which I have referred.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I shall be brief in my remarks. I have only a few things to say about the speeches that I have heard in the house, and I shall add some comments of my own. First of all I want to congratulate the last speaker upon some of the cogent remarks he made on the matter of increasing the interest rate. One of the things we must keep in mind is that the field of agriculture has changed a great deal in the last 70 years. It has changed from a farmer providing food for himself and another person in 1900, to today providing food for upwards of 35 people. This shows the great scientific developments that have been made in farming. As a matter of fact, I do not think any industry in Canada has produced, per capita, the increased rate of production of the farm operator.

This proves that the farm operator has the necessary skill, the necessary education and the know-how to run his farm, given the opportunity to obtain capital. Another fact we must keep in mind is that farming is a costly business. You can start an operation with a dairy farm and buy 25 or 30 cows, and you will pay upwards of $300 to $500 per cow. Then you have to buy coolers and all the other things that go with operating a dairy farm. You also have to pay high wages for any help you employ. Particularly in dairying. This can be multiplied many times over, on bigger operations but it shows the capital that is necessary to run a farm, increasing with the size.

If there is to be such a high rate of interest, then it would not pay the man to start farming because it would be very difficult nowadays to start a dairy farm of 100 acres fully equipped for under $80,000. At 7 or 8 per cent the interest on that would be about $6,000 a year, before there was any income whatsoever. This is one thing we have to keep in mind. On the one hand there is the high value of investment in this industry, and on the other hand we subsidize the automobile manufacturers up to $50 million a year, and with no qualms at all. The Canadian people have the right to subsidize farming operations because when we look at the facts and figures we find that there are no other people in the world who are as cheaply fed, with the possible exception of those in the country to the south, the U.S.A. as are the Canadian people. We also find that in relation to their income, the money which Canadians spend on food is less per capita, according to their earning power—with one exception, the United States—than anywhere else in the world.

So we do not need to apologize for subsidizing this industry. As a matter of fact, if we do not make it possible for the young fellow to start a farming operation, we may have to pay the penalty of paying through the nose because we will not have his products to sell or the food to buy to eat. Last year we imported into this country some $300 million worth of goods which we could produce right here in Canada, and our total imports of agricultural products ran upwards of $900 million. These are facts which we should consider very seriously in this house. Here we have an industry producing cheaper than anywhere in the world, with one exception, but we quibble with them and say they have to pay an interest rate which is sometimes as high as 8 to 10 per cent. This does not make common sense. This is one industry which it would pay to subsidize, because food is a necessity. We have to have it. I do not see why any apology should be made for keeping the rate at a level which the farmer can afford.

As I said before, we have to consider the farmer's high cost of investment. Who can start a farm of 100 acres and invest $80,000 in a dairy herd, and at the same time borrow a sufficient amount of money to purchase the equipment necessary to run it at the proposed rate, and make it a paying proposition.

The second point I wish to make is that the farmer is not only a producer but also a purchaser. He purchases the farm equipment that is manufactured in some city which employs labour. If this factory is not selling its products, it does not employ labour, the result is unemployment and the unemployed will have to be given assistance. We have here a two edged sword. The farmer of today is a specialist in his own right. If he is in the dairy business, he produces milk. If he is in the hog business, he produces hogs. However, that farmer does not generally produce more than one product. Many of them do not even have their own garden produce. They go to the store to buy it, just like the fellow in town. However, let us compare the farmer with the city dweller who purchases his food and shelter. He does the same as the farmer, but the farmer is also producing goods and he needs equipment which is manufactured in that town or city.

So let us not apologize. Anyone here who will stand up and apologize for helping the farmer is not thinking in the right way, or has not looked at the other side of the picture. He has not considered what the farmers are doing for this country. As a matter of fact, I think the hon. member for Timiskaming stated that the total administration cost amounted to only $3 million out of $263 million. That is proof of how good a risk the farmer is, in any investment that is made in him.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to take the opportunity now to compliment the minister on his appointment. The first thing he can do to pave the road with good intentions and to follow it through to a logical conclusion is to refer the annual report of the Farm Credit Corporation to a committee of the house, for further study, and to assure the house that he will do so. If he does so, I will sit down and let it go at that.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, as the only member from British Columbia to have spoken on this bill, and one who comes from a riding that has a large number of farms and rural areas, may I say I feel that although, as many hon. members have mentioned, the debate has dragged on for a long time and now appears to become repetitive, it is important that I take part in it because, as I said earlier, the province of British Columbia, to my knowledge, has not yet been heard from. My riding of Fraser Valley West is of course famous for berries, dairies and poultry. It is a riding that will most probably be very interested in the kind of assistance which will become available under this legislation.

I should like to compliment the minister on much of what he has had to say in this regard. I am certain that much in these resolutions and the bills which will follow will be most helpful. I would be very interested to hear from other hon. members representing rural ridings, particularly on the government side, and especially to hear from the hon. member for Fraser Valley East who represents the neighbouring riding, because I know he has been in the poultry business for years and will have something to add to this debate.

We wonder about the economic pattern of this government, but apparently the clouds are being blown away and a distinct pattern is now emerging. On five separate items, the Canada student loans, the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act, and, if you look down a little further, the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, the government has now revealed what we may come to expect as government policy in regard to various federal assistance programs.

Two tendencies appear clear: First, that at this time the government is no longer prepared to keep the interest rates stable and to keep them down to the previous lending levels and, second, that private lending agencies such as trusts, banks and mortgage companies as well as credit unions and caisses populaires, will be the major suppliers of assistance funds, but at increased rates, which will encourage them to open their purses once more to help the country—banks, trusts and mortgage companies being the loyal corporate citizens that they are.

Of course there are ironclad guarantees of government backing, even though, as has been mentioned by two or three speakers, the failure rate on this kind of economic transaction is very small. All of us know what happened to the National Housing Act rates during recent months. Skyrocketting interest rates put the purchase of a new home hopelessly beyond the reach of the average Canadian. Similar flexibility is being planned for at least five other assistance programs which I have mentioned.

The first inkling of what was to come was the announcement on August 16 made by the Minister of Finance that henceforth the Canada student loan rate will no longer be five and three quarters per cent but will be pegged at 1 per cent above the bond yield on August 16 of every year. This effectively put the summer work-short college students further in hock than ever. What I am asking the minister through you, Mr. Chairman, is this: What will the situation be as a result of this proposed legislation when we come to consider the farmers?

We will soon have before us for amendment and renewal three agricultural assistance bills. We have the Farm Improvement Loans Act, which is an intermediate term program of five to ten years for the purchase of equipment and machinery. This will allow money to be made available through banks at 5 per cent interest rates. We also have the Farm Credit Act which was for land purchases mainly and is now to be broadened. Of course, this is going to fill the demand for longer term loans, that is between 25 and 29 years.

Finally, there is the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act, which is probably the least used measure. It permits three or more private farmers to buy machinery in common, for its most efficient use. Whether or not this idea works out in practice is another point upon which I would not care to dwell tonight.

Now, Mr. Chairman, probably the most important amendment proposed is the one which, instead of fixing interest rates on these loans, would permit the rate henceforth to be set by the governor in council. By that, of course, we mean the cabinet through order in council. The matter will not come before parliament at all. If the cost of money continues to rise, as we can appreciate, so will the cost of loan capital to farmers and others. As we have heard, the farmers are a very hard pressed segment of Canadian society, and one wonders whether or not they can really afford this kind of help. It is my guess they cannot.

The other night we heard that 20,000 farms had been abandoned since 1961 and that the farmers' share of the consumer dollar had dropped from 56 cents in 1949 to 41 cents in 1964. We have heard, too, how the rural dispossessed migrate to the cities and cause problems there. These farmers, and rather inadequately prepared people fom the rural areas, are forced to compete in the cities as a result of being dispossessed.

Now, the same kind of future is in store for the Fisheries Improvement Loans Corporation. Government guaranteed loans to fishermen will no longer have the 5 per cent interest ceiling, and the interest rate will be allowed to fluctuate. Thus the fishermen, like the farmer, will henceforth be victims and charged at the prevailing rate or whatever the traffic will bear. My constituents will want me to speak out on this matter of interest rates because they feel that interest rates are not subject to natural economic laws at all, but instead are manipulated to the benefit of various financial interests.

So perhaps the picture of the government's intention is emerging now with greater clarity, almost frightening clarity, sir. Certainly, more money will be suitable for these plans; but at what cost? We would like to know at what cost. It seems unfortunate, even unjust to me that individuals in this country who are studying, farming or fishing, in other words those who are vital to our country's future, are asked to pay more when they can afford it least.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am a newcomer to Ottawa. As a newcomer, I am very interested in the local livestock and wildlife. According to my observations, sir, there are more black squirrels on parliament hill than I have seen in any other place in Ottawa. I have often wondered why. If these measures pass, sir, I will know why.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few remarks in reply to the many comments—

The Chairman: Order, please. I think the hon. member for Saint Hyacinthe would like to speak. Perhaps the Minister of Agriculture would prefer to allow him to speak, and then make his remarks.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few comments on the subject of agriculture, since I represent a riding well known for its wonderful farmers. I should like to take this opportunity to echo some of the recommendations made to the federal authorities by the Catholic Farmers Union.

[Mr. Rose.]

I have here a brief sent to me by Mr. Réal Montcalm, who is in charge of the information service of the Catholic Farmers Union. This brief contains some extremely useful information which I should like to bring to the attention of the minister, so that he might better understand the farmers' needs.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to speak at length, but I cannot let this opportunity go by without making a few comments.

In the brief it is said that:

—the goods and services used by the farmers increased by 60 per cent between 1951 and 1967, whereas the prices of farm products—sold by the farmers during the same period...

—increased by only 17 per cent—

There is no need to have studied mathematics long to know that there is a lack of balance there. The minister should in fact avail himself of every opportunity to make up the discrepancy between the cost of production and the market prices of farm products.

Further in the same brief, Mr. Chairman, there is something about international negotiations, and here are the recommendations of the Catholic Farmers Union in that respect. I now quote from page 5 of that brief:

The C.F.U. is asking that the federal government, through international negotiations such as GATT, the Kennedy Round, etc., (a) to protect the eastern farmer against having his markets invaded by European or North American surplus farm products sold at dumping prices;

This afternoon, my colleague from Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) gave examples of products which invade our markets at ridiculously low prices, thus forcing our farmers to get rid of their produce at prices which do not allow them to meet their obligations. I continue:

(b) to protect eastern Canada against imports of agricultural products which are not competitive on world markets nor on the Canadian market because the labour used in their production is paid at starvation rates;

We know, Mr. Chairman, that because of the very low wages paid workers in those underdeveloped countries, the latter can compete with the products of our farmers, who are forced to toe the line and pay salaries by far superior to those which workers receive in those underdeveloped countries.

The brief continues:

(c) to cease sacrificing the farming economy of eastern Canada to other areas in Canada.

Mr. Chairman, those are recommendations made by the Catholic Farmers Union representing 58,000 members in Quebec. Surely these people did not make those recommendations without having thoroughly studied the farming problems. While everybody agrees that agriculture is the corner-stone of our economy and that family farming is disappearing, it seems that government circles are persistingly refusing to take the necessary steps to right this sad state of affairs which will certainly lead the economy and agriculture straight to bankruptcy.

The dairy problem is also discussed. We know that farmers, especially in the province of Quebec, draw about half of their income from the dairy industry.

The young farmer who wants to establish his own farm is unable to obtain the quotas which he needs. He must sometimes wait for a year to obtain a quota. It seems to me that there is a more human way of solving this problem and that the minister should give it special attention before it is too late.

There are many farmers in my area and in other areas also who, on account of the difficulties which they experience in selling their products or the prices they get for their dairy products, have disposed of their herds of milch-cows, and this is detrimental not only to farmers but to the whole population.

Therefore, I suggest to the minister to make it easier for the young people, the young farmers in particular who want to take up farming, to get the quotas they need, so as to make sure that their farm is run in a normal way.

Finally, there are many other subjects about which we could talk at length and make suggestions, but I think that other honourable members have raised some points which I would like to discuss. Therefore, tonight I will restrict myself to those few brief remarks.

[English]

• (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, first I should like to thank hon. members on both sides for many of the constructive remarks they have made for the purpose of improving the farm credit facilities available to the farmers of Canada. I intend in a moment or two to reply briefly to some of the specific questions that have been put and representations that have been made, but I think one common thread runs through almost all of the speeches that have been made on this resolution today.

The hon. member who has just taken his seat, the hon. member for Wellington-Grey, the hon. member for Assiniboia, the hon. member for Dauphin, the hon. member for Mackenzie, the hon. member for Bellechasse, the hon. member for Cardigan, the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre, the hon. member for Selkirk, the hon. member for Joliette, the hon. member for Simcoe North as well as the very interesting member from Timiskaming referred to the change in the interest rate and objected to an increased interest rate under the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

It is no secret, Mr. Chairman; I do not like high interest rates any more than any other member of this house. But the fact is that under the old statutory limit of 5 per cent for all practical purposes the banks discontinued, their operations under this act long before it expired. Hon. gentlemen, who are familiar with the act, know that bank managers and banking institutions decide to whom they will lend money. The government guarantee was tied in with a 5 per cent interest rate on such loans. The bankers discontinued making loans under the act because interest rates throughout the economy generally rose above 5 per cent. Indeed, in many cases the banks are paying more than 5 per cent to their depositors.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, the main purpose behind changing the rate from the statutory 5 per cent to some other figure is to make the rate high enough that the bankers will use the legislation to extend loans to the farmers, yet the rate will be below the regular commercial or competitive rate because of the government guarantee.

As one or two speakers today have mentioned, Mr. Chairman, the fact is that some of the larger farmers who are better off can borrow money from the banks right now to purchase farm equipment, though perhaps not on such a long term basis as money borrowed under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. If the credit rating of these farmers is good enough they can borrow money at the going commercial rate or at the best rate offered by the banks. Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, a farmer who is not considered such a good credit risk is now paying to banks and financial institutions who make loans for the purchase of farm equipment interest rates of 9, 10 and even as much as 12 per cent.

Negotiations are going on with the banks to fix a reasonable maximum rate. As I have said, Mr. Chairman, it will be high enough to make lending under the act attractive, but still below the regular competitive rate because of the government guarantee. Thus small farmers with not such a good credit rating as some other more prosperous farmers will be able to take advantage of this legislation because of the attractive interest rate, compared with what they are obliged to pay now.

Mr. Horner: Would the minister permit a question on this very point. He speaks of a very attractive rate and of its being below the regular rate. Can he give us some idea what the government guarantee is worth to the farmer? Is it one half of one per cent, one quarter of one per cent or one per cent? Can he give us an idea what formula he will use and what good the government guarantee will be? That is the point we are really worried about.

Mr. Olson: The guarantee is this good, Mr. Chairman. Ten per cent of the aggregate loans under the old act were guaranteed by the government. That was a high enough percentage to give an iron clad guarantee to the chartered banks, who were making loans on a pretty extensive basis, that they would not lose. As far as the larger financial institutions are concerned it is almost a 100 per cent guarantee, but—

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, the minister has misunderstood my question. I want to know how good the guarantee is for the farmers, not the banks. I am well aware how good it is for the banks; it guarantees 10 per cent of the maximum amount lent. But how great a reduction in the interest rate to the farmer does this guarantee bring about? Will the minister concede that it brings about 1 per cent, one half of one per cent, or some other figure?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the precise rate will be. The banks are lending their own money and they want the rate to be high enough. However I can say this, that for those farmers who are now obliged to pay some finance company or even banks rates of 11 or 12 per cent interest, the government guarantee will be of very substantial benefit.

Mr. Horner: Just one more question, Mr. Chairman. Under the old financial system the usual credit rate from banks was 6 per cent; that was the ceiling on loans to farmers. Under the Farm Improvement Loans Act the rate was 5 per cent. Can the minister assure both this house and the country that under the new system the guarantee to the bank will mean that the rate will be 1 per cent lower than the prime borrowing rate offered by banks without a guarantee?

Mr. Olson: As I was saying, Mr. Chairman, negotiations between the Minister of Finance and the banks are not yet complete, so I cannot say precisely what they will agree is the maximum rate with a government guarantee. But I can say that it will not be 1 per cent or one quarter of one per cent lower, but several percentage points below what some farmers are forced to pay now.

Mr. Horner: I am not talking about machine companies or finance houses but about banks, Mr. Chairman. I am talking about borrowing from banks.

Mr. Olson: I am too. I am convinced the guarantee will be of great advantage to the farmers, and in some cases the rate will be several percentage points below what it is today.

This is the reason, Mr. Chairman, we want to bring back into operation the Farm Improvement Loans Act. It was a highly successful act until general interest rates in the country rose above the statutory limit. I am sure hon. gentlemen opposite know that just as well as I do.

If I may now turn to one or two other matters, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Témiscamingue made some very interesting remarks yesterday. He quoted some speeches that I had made in the house in earlier years. However, Mr. Chairman, I can now no longer indulge in the luxury of making positive assertions without responsibility, such as my hon. friends of the opposition.

Mr. Ricard: You did a lot of that in the past.

Mr. Olson: I admit I used to be able to do so, Mr. Chairman, but one of the sacrifices that one has to make on joining the Liberal party is that one can no longer enjoy the carefree days of being in opposition.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner: Listen to the minister.

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Danforth: Will the minister accept a question?

The Chairman: Order, please. It is obvious that the minister is free to entertain a question if he wishes to.

An hon. Member: Free to entertain?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Chairman: But he need not.

Mr. Danforth: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Olson: Yes.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the minister's statements are of interest to every member of the house. Is he trying to say that he is establishing his credibility as a member of the government by destroying his credibility as a member of the opposition?

Mr. Olson: Oh, certainly not, Mr. Chairman.

An hon. Member: That is what you are doing.

Mr. Olson: Exactly the opposite is true. I can no longer indulge in the luxury hon. gentlemen opposite indulge in. Hon. gentlemen may make positive assertions and they know they will not be taken up on their statements. I am in a different position.

Mr. Korchinski: The minister should read his speeches. I quoted from those speeches.

Mr. Olson: I must now reply to some hon. gentlemen who asked me legitimate questions. Perhaps I might reply to others, if there is time.

An hon. Member: You bring on the questions.

Mr. Olson: The hon. member for Wellington-Grey invited me to attend the international plowing match on the 16th, 17th and 18th October, and I thank him kindly. Unfortunately the grains council meeting will be held in Winnipeg on the 16th and may continue into the 17th; then we are to open the new terminal elevator at Prince Rupert on the 18th. As a result I am unable to accept the invitation.

Mr. Horner: Why does the minister not reply publicly to the corn farmers?

Mr. Olson: I shall be doing that at ten o'clock tomorrow morning, and I shall ask the hon. member to be there.

Mr. Horner: Why does the minister not reply to them in this house?

Mr. Olson: The hon. member for Selkirk raised the matter of the contents of chapter 5 in the report of the Economic Council. I say to him that I have made two or three public pronouncements in the press to the effect that I do not agree with all assertions and recommendations in the report of the Economic Council. On the other hand I must say that, on balance, I agree with much of the report. I do not accept assertions that seek to question the relative increase in productivity of our farmers. I think our farmers have done a marvelous job in increasing their productivity, especially when one compares that increase with the productivity enjoyed by other industries in the past few years.

The hon. member for Joliette made interesting comments about agriculture in general, and I shall take those into consideration. I must say that some of his remarks were not specifically related to the subject matter of the resolution before us.

The hon. member for Cardigan suggested that land values are rising and that small loans are not being made in proportion to those rising values. I suggest the record indicates that the sizes of loans granted by the Farm Credit Corporation have increased. The sizes of those loans have not increased more rapidly than land values have increased, and that must be taken into account. It must be remembered that the entire purpose of the Farm Credit Corporation is to create economic farm units. If land values were not keeping pace with inflation and if we were not increasing the sizes of loans, the corporation would not be providing the service it was designed to provide.

The hon. member for Mackenzie quoted to me some of my earlier speeches.

An hon. Member: May I ask a question?

Mr. Olson: Could we save further questions until the end, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member for Mackenzie enjoyed quoting my speeches of several years ago. I thank him for his courtesy, but I must tell him that my answer to him is the same as the answer I gave to other hon. gentlemen some minutes ago.

Mr. Korchinski: The minister spoke differently then.

Mr. Olson: The hon. member asserted that the government is trying deliberately to hurt somebody by amending this act. I say to him with all sincerity that the government is deliberately trying to help the small farmer by passing this legislation.

Mr. Korchinski: The government is helping corporations, and not small farmers. You are hurting the small farmer; that's what you are doing.

Mr. Olson: The hon. member for Dauphin made some constructive remarks and I appreciate the tone in which he made them. When the hon. member for Bellechasse spoke, the main theme of his speech was interest rates. I think I answered his argument a few moments ago.

The hon. member for Simcoe North tried to impress on the house that the efficiency of the agricultural sector generally in Canada had gone up. That was his argument. If he was trying to convince me, I must tell him he was preaching to the converted. I am convinced that in the field of agriculture we have a proud record of increased productivity, especially when that increase in productivity is compared with increase in other industries.

I must inform the hon. member that the subsidy paid to farmers through the Farm Credit Corporation is to continue for many, many years, whether interest rates change or not. That is, all the contracts that have been let have to be subsidized. The subsidy will be the difference between what the corporation paid for the money and what it was lent at for the duration of the contract.

The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings asked for an undertaking that I meet with the members of the Ontario Farmers Union, who are here. I tell him and the house that I intend to meet with them at ten o'clock tomorrow morning. The hon. member ought to know that in slightly over one month I have already met twice with members of the Ontario Farmers Union. He need not try to convince me that a problem exists in the field of corn marketing; I am convinced that there is a problem, and I am trying to find some solutions for it. My proposals are not complete answers; nevertheless I want to take step toward a solution for this serious problem.

The hon. member asked me to stay in Ottawa all day tomorrow. I am prepared to spend one or two hours, or more perhaps, with members of the Ontario Farmers Union tomorrow. Tomorrow night I am to meet the Minister of Agriculture for Alberta in Edmonton, and I can inform the hon. member that the harvesting and marketing problems out there are as severe as any problems we have in this part of the country.

Mr. Horner: I am sure the farmers will appreciate two hours of the minister's time.

Mr. Olson: We shall discuss in Edmonton various matters that are of primary importance to agriculture.

Mr. Horner: The minister is giving the Ontario farmers two hours. He is breaking my heart.

Mr. Korchinski: The minister might ruin his week end, if he gave them more.

Mr. Olson: The meeting in Edmonton was set up before I knew that members of the Ontario Farmers Union were to be here on Friday, October 4.

The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings said that we ought to have introduced improvements to the legislation sooner. Well, Mr. Chairman, we could go on and on talking about the sins of omission and what was not done yesterday. We could go back one month, one year, five years and so on, and spend much time talking about what was not done. You cannot turn the clock back a minute, let alone half a year. It is a complete waste of time to argue and make assertions about what should have been done in the past. Let us turn our attention to what we can do now, and in the future.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner: Give us an answer—

Mr. Olson: I know that members on this side were anxious to bring in amendments to the Farm Improvement Loans Act away back in February but at that time the hon. gentlemen wanted an election or something.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the statement just made by the minister is absolutely—

Mr. McIlraith: Absolutely true.

Mr. Horner: —incorrect. At no time was it announced in this house back in February that the government wished to proceed with farm improvement loan legislation. Let him refer to the official record, to Hansard or anywhere else, and he cannot prove that this party or the party to my left held up that piece of legislation at any time.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

The Chairman: Order. The time allotted to the Minister of Agriculture has expired.

Mr. Olson: Perhaps I could have one minute in which to reply.

The Chairman: There was no point of order.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Olson: I really do not wish to irritate the opposition. I wish to close by saying in the most kindly and constructive way that the most beneficial thing we could do at this point in time, regardless of what went on in the past, is to get on with passing these resolutions; to pass resolution No. 7 so that we can bring on the bills right away.

Many hon. members have asked whether we would refer the annual report of the F.C.C. to the standing committee on agriculture. I am willing to do that, provided hon. members will accept as their first responsibility in that committee the examination of the estimates which will also be referred to them. They could then proceed to an examination of the report, which would provide exactly the same opportunity for investigation or study as referral of the bill would have done, except that we would have the bill, and the capitalization of the corporation increased in order to continue the good service it is providing to Canadian farmers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Schreyer: I wish simply to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. He has a disarming way of making a pretence of answering certain arguments, but he continually ignores—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Schreyer: Hon. members can forget about calling for order, because I have the floor.

Mr. McIlraith: You have violated the rules.

Mr. Schreyer: I can take as much time as members opposite are taking to interrupt.

The Chairman: I would ask the hon. member to put his question.

Mr. Schreyer: I was simply trying to lay the foundation for my question. It is members over there who are stalling. I will ask it when I am good and ready.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Schreyer: My question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Does he or does he not accept the main thesis of chapter 5 of the report of the Economic Council to the effect that agricultural productivity in Canada has grown at a rate less than half of that in the United States?

Mr. Olson: No; it depends on what space of time one is talking about. I wish I had the figures with me. I have looked at them, though, and I believe that since 1946 the rate of increase in the agricultural sector in Canada has been something like 2.6 per cent whereas in the United States it was 1.4 per cent. So we are gaining. But of course we were farther behind them to start with, so there is still a gap.

Mr. Schreyer: The minister would admit, though, that there is still a great deal of room for improvement in the growth of efficiency in the agricultural industry?

Mr. Olson: Certainly.

Mr. Schreyer: That being so, is it not strange that the hon. gentleman should be asking us to approve a measure which will increase the cost of capital input to farmers, thereby making it more difficult to increase the efficiency of Canadian farms?

Mr. Olson: No. What we are talking about now is resolution No. 5 and I sincerely believe that, however one looks at it, it will lead to an overall reduction in capital cost because of a reduction in interest rates following the reinstatement of the government guarantee.

Mr. McCutcheon: I should like a word of explanation from the minister, if he would be so kind. I think I heard him say there was a subsidy being enjoyed by farmers who had taken out loans from the corporation. My first thought is that money is presently being repaid, and probably going back to the government, which did not cost 5 per cent. Does the minister say there is a large subsidy, or is it small? Or did he not mean that when he spoke about a subsidy?

Mr. Olson: The Minister of Finance, who borrows money for the Farm Credit Corporation to lend it to the farmers, has for several months now been paying more than 5 per cent, the statutory limit. The extent of the difference between whatever he pays and the 5 per cent rate, has to be considered as a subsidy because this difference is paid out of the national treasury. That is what I mean.

Mr. McCutcheon: Did I understand the minister to say "during the past several months"?

Mr. Olson: From whatever date on which the government paid more than 5 per cent for the money.

Mr. Nystrom: The minister was talking about helping young farmers. This question concerns a great many people in my riding and in western Canada. Does the government intend to provide interest-free loans to help young farmers who are trying to become established in the farm industry? If so, when, and if not, why not?

Mr. Olson: No, Mr. Chairman, no consideration is being given to interest-free loans at this time.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I should like also to put a question to the honourable Minister of Agriculture.

Earlier the honourable minister referred to the fact that banks were reluctant to lend money to farmers at the interest rate allowed up to now.

Would the minister not know of another place or another program by which the government could get loans for the farmers at a lower interest rate than that which the banks, at the present time, are able or willing to accept?

[English]

Mr. Olson: No, Mr. Chairman, I know of no better place to obtain the money than in the marketplace and the portion which is supplied to the Minister of Finance by the Bank of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture whether in his opinion the Bank of Canada still exists?

[English]

Mr. Olson: Yes. The hon. member can look at almost every advertisement the government puts out for new loans and he will find that the Bank of Canada is taking up a substantial portion of them.

[Mr. Olson.]

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Yewchuk: I should like to make a comment and ask a question in this regard. As I see this measure which is being introduced by the hon. Minister of Agriculture, it really is a two-edged sword. I would liken it to the example of a farmer being given a swig from a jug and then being given a whack on his bottom, which knocks the jug out of his mouth. We are giving him credit and then kicking him by raising the interest rate. I wonder whether this really is a solution at all. If he is not to have increased markets for his products, what is the point in his buying more machinery or increasing the size of the plant he runs. I do not believe this is a real solution to the farming problem as a whole. I wonder whether the Minister of Agriculture really thinks this will solve the farming problems.

Mr. Olson: I do not believe the passage of this resolution or all three resolutions and the bills which are to follow will be anywhere near a complete solution to all the problems we have in agriculture in Canada. I should like to remind the hon. member that if he looks around the world he will find that in the United States, in France, in Denmark, in Holland or in almost any place where they have a fairly advanced agricultural economy they have the same kind of marketing problems we have here. I am convinced that our problems are no worse than tnose in these other countries, although some of those countries may have a higher level of subsidy than we have in Canada.

I certainly would not want to mislead the hon. member or any other hon. member into thinking that these measures constitute a complete solution. I do believe however that the Farm Improvement Loans Act is an improvement. I know that there are farmers now who are paying 7 per cent to 12 per cent to the banks for this kind of credit, and if they go to some of the other lending institutions, such as the finance companies, they pay an even higher rate. It is our sincere hope that we will be able to reduce this rate several percentage points below that, with a government guarantee.

Mr. Korchinski: Did I understand the minister to say that the Minister of Finance is presently discussing with the banking fraternity what rate they would accept at the present time; is that the correct interpretation?

Mr. Olson: Not necessarily what rate they would accept, but I think we should have some discussion with the people who will be lending the money. This includes not only the banks but also the other financial institutions mentioned in the act. After all, it is their money. We do not intend to confiscate anybody's money and say to them that they must lend it at a certain rate. We wish to find a level sufficiently high that they will in fact make loans, but at a rate sufficiently low that the government guarantee is effective. As I have said at least ten times this evening already, I believe that because of the guarantee there is a rate that will be substantially below the present rate that will be arrived at through these negotiations.

Mr. Korchinski: Would the minister not consider amending the bill before he even introduces it in the house, so that it neither suggests the rate be set by order in council nor that it be set by the bankers association?

Mr. Olson: I think perhaps the hon. gentleman is confusing this act with the Farm Credit Corporation act. I believe I am correct in saying that there will be a maximum rate fixed under which the government would make the guarantee under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. So the representatives of the people in the government will have a great deal to say in respect of what the maximum will be.

Mr. Korchinski: That is in respect of the Farm Credit Corporation. What about farm improvement loans? Is that a different situation again?

Mr. Olson: I am talking about farm improvement loans now.

Mr. Schreyer: I do not wish to appear to be vindictive, but I should like to take a couple of minutes to make a few comments concerning the response of the minister. I believe some of us are prepared to concede that the government is somewhat limited in the extent to which it can influence interest rates under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, if that act is to be reasonably effective. Surely however, the minister would agree that there are no similar restrictions on the government in respect of its ability to influence interest rates charged by the Farm Credit Corporation. I should like to ask him whether it is likely that there will be a differential in interest rates under the Farm Improvement Loans Act and those charged under the Farm Credit Corporation act. I think this is a significant point and I believe the minister should indicate to us the intention of the government. Is it feasible, or is it intended, to maintain a differential of some degree?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I do not know exactly to what the hon. member is referring. If he is asking whether there will be a different interest rate at which the government would give a guarantee under the Farm Improvement Loans Act and the amount prescribed by the governor in council in respect of the Farm Credit Corporation act, there could very easily be. As I attempted to explain to hon. members two or three days ago, the prescribed rate is somewhat more flexible than an economic rate, because in practice the economic rate has been 1 per cent above what the government expects to pay for money, and the prescribed rate could be exactly the same amount, or lower, depending upon the priorities on the treasury.

I believe this debate could probably better take place so far as the Farm Credit Corporation is concerned when we have Bill C-110 before us. I believe we are now considering resolution No. 5 which concerns the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

Mr. Korchinski: Is there a definite formula the government will be following or will the rate which is to be established by order in council be subject to pressure from without?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, there may be a definite formula, but as conditions in the country change of course the formula could change. I do not like the connotation the hon. gentleman puts on the word "pressure". This government intends to act responsibly taking into account all the priorities that make calls upon the national treasury and keep the rate within the context of that kind of attitude.

Mr. Skoberg: I should like to ask the minister a question for clarification purposes. In respect of resolution No. 5 it is noted that loans may be increased from $15,000 to $25,000. Would an existing farm improvement loan which now is at the rate of 5 per cent be incorporated in a new loan at the existing rate or at the new rate?

Mr. Olson: I can assure my hon. friend that those are firm and binding contracts. It is supported by the law that 5 per cent was the interest rate at that time and cannot be changed.

Mr. Skoberg: There may be a provision in the law, but have you had any assurance from the banking institutions? I have seen the interest rates change.

Mr. Olson: I think the hon. gentleman should distinguish between demand notes—which is a term used rather extensively now in banking—and term notes. I believe all the previous farm improvement loans were written on term notes. It is a matter of law that the interest rate shall be no more.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Chairman, realizing that Quebec families need the underground drainage I mentioned this week, I wonder if the minister could tell us whether he intends to give particular consideration to this vital matter for the families in Quebec and to allocate funds for this project?

• (9:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I think this is essentially a provincial problem, and I am not sure what the details of their extension is for this particular purpose. I think the F.C.C. has made some loans for land improvements of that nature.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: The hon. minister gives me the impression of being worried. He tells me that this is a provincial matter. I would like to set his mind at ease by telling him that, in my opinion, Quebec would nevertheless accept a certain sum under a cost sharing agreement.

[English]

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, I feel that what I have to say is relevant in view of the fact the minister dealt with this subject. He was good enough to indicate that he was prepared to meet with the group of farmers coming to see him tomorrow. He also indicated in a press release today, which I have had the opportunity of reading, thanks to the courtesy of the minister, that he will have nothing new to add in respect of the government's policy on this corn marketing situation which exists in—

The Chairman: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member because I know the subject matter of his remarks is important, but at the present time we are dealing with resolution No. 5 on the order paper. I would request the hon. member to restrict his remarks to that subject. We have been wandering to a certain degree in the course of this debate, but I do not think we should stray that far.

[Mr. Skoberg.]

Mr. Danforth: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. Is the opposition to be restricted to a narrow interpretation of relevancy when the minister has already been permitted to deal with any subject he has chosen? I think this is very unjust treatment afforded to opposition members in the house. We will have to take recourse to other action if we are not allowed the privileges granted to members on the government side.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Chairman, it is not surprising tonight that we have heard some suggestions during this debate that we should not hold up this legislation. We have been asked why we should not let this resolution go through. It has been suggested that we should have the bill presented in order that we can enact this so-called great legislation. It has been suggested that present legislation is accepted. It seems there are quite a number of members who say that we should not argue about what is involved in this legislation, because if this resolution is passed the results will be beneficial. But I suggest that because of what is implied in this resolution we will not have the same measure. The fact is that we will have, as pointed out by some hon. members, an act in force in this country which will not be of great benefit to the agricultural industry. If the proposed measures are brought forward and passed we will no longer be dealing with the same legislation.

I was not sent to Ottawa to sit idly by while some of these provisions were made into law, without speaking on behalf of my constituents and the other people of this country. I see in this resolution the wording:

> —to substitute for the 5 per cent rate of interest on guaranteed farm improvement loans made under the act such rate or rates of interest as may be prescribed by the governor in council;—

I do not intend to stand by idly. If any member here in the house had said at the time of the recent election campaign that a measure such as this, in respect of the Farm Credit Act and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act was to be passed with provisions for these high rates of interest, that member would not be sitting here now.

The minister referred to the fact that banks had stopped lending after the ceiling was taken off bank interest rates. That is true, and I suggest that the minister and the government must take responsibility for the present high interest rates. It is no wonder that the banks would like to lend less money to farmers as a result of the increase allowed in bank interest rates before this parliament was convened. The government must accept the responsibility for this situation, but what is it doing? The government is now looking to the farmer, the fishermen, the home owners and the students of this country to pay the whole shot. The government must pay for the irresponsible policies which have been adopted.

The hon. member for Selkirk referred to the Economic Council report. He asked a number of questions when he took part earlier in this debate. The minister has suggested that he did not really accept the report of the Economic Council. This is a very queer statement. If the minister questions the statement made by the Economic Council regarding agricultural productivity he should be prepared to bring forward the facts to refute the claims drawn by that respected body appointed by the government to give advice to the government about the economic conditions we face at this time.

We could argue that perhaps some of the facts suggested by the Economic Council should be modified, but there is one conclusion that cannot be doubted. The productivity of the agricultural industry must be increased. That industry needs more capital. It would be a sound policy on the part of the government to peg the interest rates that the farmers of this country must pay.

The fact is well known that if the farmers have to pay high interest rates, and if there is no reduction in that rate as a result of this legislation, their production costs will be much higher than they can afford. The returns the farmer receives from his production are too low as compared with the interest rate he must pay. The minister has suggested that by this proposed legislation the government is helping the agricultural industry. This is not a measure which will help. If the government wants to help assure a sound and stable agricultural economy, it should reconsider this plan and introduce a fixed reasonable interest rate, such as the 5 per cent interest rate which has been in existence up to this time.

Mr. Danforth: A few moments ago I attempted to ask the minister a question pertaining to some remarks he made about the current corn marketing situation. In your wisdom, sir, you ruled me out of order on the basis that my questions were not relevant. I abide by your ruling, but for the next few minutes I intend to talk about farm improvement loans in relation to the Ontario corn marketing situation. I will show you how this relates to farm improvement loans.

One of the greatest problems facing the Ontario farmers in my area today is the inability to obtain sufficient funds to purchase the necessary equipment required for the successful production and harvesting of corn. One of the problems is caused by the deterioration in the marketing of corn, which is of such an extent that farmers are turning to other sources of income with which to buy machinery. The cost of machinery used in the growing and harvesting of corn is very great because the machinery is of a very specialized nature. The cost of this machinery is somewhat higher than that used in the production and harvesting of other grain crops.

I speak of combines that have special heads. Normally one would expect to pay from $12,000 to $15,000 for a combine, but these special combines cost from $20,000 to $23,000. With expenditures of this kind for the harvesting of corn, there is only one place to which the farmer can turn at the present time for a loan, and that is to the machinery company itself. The machinery companies are taking full advantage of this as businessmen, which they are, but they seem to be charging exorbitant interest rates compared with those formerly applicable in respect of a farm syndicate or a farm improvement loan.

So the farmer of today is faced with the situation that the money must come from somewhere. The policy of the government will not provide him with the money through the sale of his corn crop. The return from this crop is insufficient. Therefore the farmers are forced to march to Ottawa to try to force the government into making a policy statement. These people are unable to obtain the money in the way of a farm improvement loan. When they stand around on the hill and wonder what the government is going to say, through the Minister of Agriculture, they will be very impatient if they find they will have to pay a higher rate of interest because the minister in his wisdom will not add anything to his press release of today. Mr. Chairman, I am sure you can appreciate how this question is directly connected to the matter we are discussing tonight.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner: His cabinet colleagues have hamstrung him.

Mr. Danforth: I have dealt with the high cost of harvesting equipment. Another piece of equipment that is used very extensively in the production of high quality corn is the dryer. These dryers take the moisture out of the corn after it has been harvested and then the corn can be stored in common storage. Dryers are very expensive indeed, costing many thousands of dollars.

I believe that farmers will more and more betaking advantage of a farm syndicate loan whereby a group of farmers band together in order to obtain the necessary funds with which to buy equipment, which is most specialized in nature. This type of equipment requires a great deal of financing and the farmers, because of their low returns last year and this year, are finding it even more necessary to turn to government agencies for money.

I hope that in his address tomorrow the Minister of Agriculture will indicate to the farmers that they will not be needing this extra money in the form of loans, that they need not be concerned about an increase in interest rates, that the policy of the government will be flexible enough to stabilize the market, thus putting the farmer in a position to finance his own equipment. This is all the farmers of this country are asking for. This is all they are asking for in connection with farm improvement and farm syndicate loans. They consider these loans as an emergency measure to tide them over this very critical period in corn growing and marketing in southwestern Ontario. This money is required because their costs are increasing month by month and year by year.

I hope the minister and his colleagues on that side of the house are not in a position to understand that the matter is of a critical nature, that there is great concern for the harvest this year, that what the farmers receive from that harvest will in great measure influence the amount of money they will need by way of a farm improvement or farm syndicate loan. It will indeed influence how much money farmers will be seeking from the Farm Credit Corporation to increase their holdings.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that because of these few remarks you have appreciated that corn has a definite bearing on the resolutions with which we are dealing tonight. I trust Your Honour appreciates that there is a close connection between the two. The matter is in the minister's hands and I am sure he will deal with it in detail tomorrow.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

[Mr. Danforth.]

Mr. Olson (for The Minister of Finance) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-111, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FARM MACHINERY SYNDICATES CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENTS TO BROADEN PURPOSES OF LOANS, ENABLE CO-OPERATIVE ASSOCIATIONS TO OBTAIN LOANS, ETC.

The house resumed, from Wednesday, October 2, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Olson—Mr. Faulkner in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure amending the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act to broaden the purposes for which loans may be made under that act; to enable co-operative farm associations and certain farming corporations and other associations to obtain loans under that act without the members or shareholders thereof being required to enter into any other formal agreement; and to provide for other consequential and related subjects.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of the whole on a certain proposed resolution amending the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act. Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, before the resolution carries I would like to say a few words about it. This is the third measure introduced in the house leading us to believe that the interest rate will again be increased. I ask the minister to state clearly whether that is the case. Will the interest rate be increased with respect to farm syndicate loans, too? If so, by how much? What will be the new formula in respect of this measure?

Under the proposed farm credit bill it will be possible for two or more farmers to borrow $100,000. Under the farm syndicate legislation which the Farm Credit Corporation administered seven farmers had to group together to borrow $100,000 and each farmer had to sign a guarantee for the total amount. An individual farmer could borrow up to $15,000 and a group of seven or more farmers could borrow as much as $100,000.

Can the minister give the house some idea of what he thinks the limit should be under the farm syndicate legislation? How large does he think the individual guarantees should be behind which a syndicate must be prepared to stand before a loan is made? We know that when the syndicate legislation was first introduced into the house it applied to machinery only. Now we notice that it is making loans for buildings. What kind of guarantees does the corporation require for loans for buildings, for example? Chattel mortgages are not necessarily acceptable in some parts of Canada. What is the standard pattern in that regard and what are the proposed changes?

With regard to the matter of buildings, there is one other point which I should like to mention. I read the minister's speech on this whole subject. Would the legislation include feed lot operations, as well as a number of other things in which we see greater development in the agricultural industry, and which will develop still further in the years ahead? What advantage has the syndicates legislation over the Farm Credit Corporation legislation, which is now before the house, in view of the fact that the total amounts are the same in both cases? I would be grateful if the minister could give us a brief run-down on this particular aspect of the resolution.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I can understand the hon. member's desire to receive answers to all these questions, and I will answer as many of them as I can. First of all, the rates under the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act are not limited by statute now. They are what are called economic rates, that is a rate which is 1 per cent above what the farm credit corporation pays for the money. There is no intention to change the rates now in existence.

So far as the limits are concerned, it would be far easier if I could deal with this matter when the bill is before the house, and I certainly will. It is not intended to raise the limits appreciably. However, what we are more concerned about, with the limited experience we have now with the farm machinery syndicates bill, is that we would like to change the structure of the entity. Up to now a group of farmers had to form a separate entity or a syndicate, and had to have an agreement. If they were in some kind of a corporation or co-operative, previously this did not satisfy the terms of the act; but now we see no reason, on the basis of our experience, to require them to set up a separate agreement if they already have one.

Second, we believe that buildings which can be used by more than one farmer should come within the scope of the act. This includes the site for the buildings, and other things that can be used by more than one farmer. This was the purpose of the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act in the first place. Now we find there are some rules, regulations and statutory limitations which should really be changed in view of the experience which was gained. However, I would ask hon. members to allow me to deal with these specific questions when the bill comes up for discussion. We have it ready and we will bring it in as soon as the resolution is passed. I wish to say sincerely to hon. members that I will be able to deal with these questions much more effectively at that stage.

Mr. Horner: I am quite agreeable to that, Mr. Chairman, and will let it go at that. However, there is one brief question which I would like to put to the minister. He suggested that 1 per cent above the government borrowing rate is the rate now in operation under the syndicates legislation, and that he does not intend to change this. Can we then assume that this will be the pattern followed by the Farm Credit Corporation?

Mr. Olson: This can only be taken as an assumption, and an assumption is not a positive statement. It may be similar, but I am not prepared to say at this point what the governor in council may do.

Mr. Horner: The two loans are made to similar groups. I assume the minister would not want to charge a different rate of interest in each case.

Mr. Olson: We certainly would not want to charge them any more.

Mr. Horner: In other words the house can assume it will be less than 1 per cent higher than the rate at which the government borrows the money.

Mr. Olson: The house can assume it will be not more than 1 per cent higher than the rate at which the government borrows the money.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Olson thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-112, to amend the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

AUTHORITY FOR CONSTRUCTION OF ALBERTA BRANCH LINE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (for the Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-109 respecting the construction of a line of railway in the province of Alberta by Canadian National Railway Company from the vicinity of Windfall on the Windfall extension to the Sangudo subdivision of the Canadian National Railway in a westerly direction for a distance of approximately 51 miles to the Bigstone property of Pan American Petroleum Corporation and of a connecting spur extending in a northerly direction for a distance of approximately nine miles to the South Kaybob property of Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited and its associates.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, may we have the assurance from the government and from the minister responsible that the bill will be referred to the committee, as is customary with such a bill?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): My understanding is that while it has been the custom to refer C.P.R. bills to a committee, it has not been the general custom to do so with C.N.R. bills. There were some discussions on the other side, particularly comments by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), that it would not be necessary to make the reference to the standing Committee.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I can speak again, but may I say that I do not believe this was the understanding. In view of this fact, perhaps we should call it ten o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS—DANGER ARISING FROM DISPOSABLE BOTTLES

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in raising the question I did the other day concerning disposable bottles and the responsibility of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to the public in this regard, I believe I am raising an important question with considerable implication to our society. I am pleased to see that the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz), the parliamentary secretary to the minister, is in the house tonight and will be able to convey to the minister some of the arguments I put forward. I urge the minister in this particular case, as he will be urged in other cases, to be the ombudsman for the people and to represent the interests of the public against particular interests in our society.

If there is to be any meaning in the euphonic passage in the speech from the throne, the government can prove it at this point. I may just recall to the house that passage which said that—> —facilities for the repose of the mind and restoration of the spirit, for sport, and for physical relaxation are and will be of increasing importance to our social environment.

I suggest that unless some action is taken with regard to disposable bottles, which are becoming a curse in our society, there will be very little repose of the mind or of the spirit in our society. These words in the speech from the throne will be hollow and mocking.

• (10:00 p.m.)

The two newspapers in the Waterloo riding have reported on the situation. I should like to quote from the Evening Reporter of July 25 in which there is an article which reads:

> If some type of action isn't taken soon, it could not longer be safe to walk barefoot in the park or on the beaches along Puslinch Lake because of broken glass and discarded tin cans.
> And each morning, patrols of Hespeler's board of works visit town playgrounds and parks to pick up the shards and slivers of glass.

In the Kitchener-Waterloo Record there is an article which reads:

> The program is acute in city recreation areas. It will become acute in rural areas. The bottles are finding their way into pasturefields from roadside. They shatter on contact producing slivers and shards of glass.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, these bottles are becoming a menace to man and beasts alike. The idea of the barefoot boy, so revered in our history and ideology, may very well be a thing of the past. Many public bodies have condemned the use of disposable bottles and I should like particularly to congratulate the city of Kitchener which passed a resolution calling on other municipalities to outlaw their use. This resolution has received a great deal of support from such organizations as the Canadian School Trustees Association, which met in Ottawa; the Ontario Parks Association, which met at Brantford and the Ontario Mayors and Reeves Association. The last named organization has supported this position for several years.

In fairness I might point out that, to my knowledge, only one municipality, Etobicoke, has opposed this resolution. It should not come as any surprise that the largest manufacturer of disposable bottles is located in that area. The companies making these bottles will argue that they are not the only ones creating problems of pollution or danger to the public. This is probably true. They are not the only ones, but they are one of the significant ones. If it is any satisfaction to them, I think they should be aware that in the battle to clean up our environment and make it more safe, they will not be the only ones on whom attention will be focused.

It is often said—and the disposable bottle people have said it—that, after all, they only produce these things to meet customer demands. I cannot recall staying up nights hoping and wishing that somebody would invent a disposable bottle I could use, nor can I recall many consumers who have. I feel this is one further example of corporate groups in our society promoting and marketing products, not so much because they benefit the public but because they happen to benefit the particular interests concerned.

In this case, I feel we have to distinguish clearly between the interests of the consumer and the interests of private corporations. I believe that those who have foisted this disposable bottle upon the public have done the public a great disservice. I think it is an example of commercial irresponsibility and a piece of arrogance, especially when they say they are producing them to meet consumer demand. To the profit oriented or the lazy in our society, these bottles may be a blessing; but to others who want to clean up our environment, who feel there are higher social priorities, disposable bottles are becoming a curse. It is the classic struggle between private good and public benefit and I hope the consumer department will look after the interests of the public.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in so far as the non-returnable bottles are concerned, and especially the problem that they create in our communities, I join with the hon. member in deploring the situation. The minister's office has informed me that some time ago they received a resolution passed by the legislature of Alberta asking the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to study and consider the problem created by non-returnable bottles. Since my minister assumed office he has had a number of meetings with his officials on this question, and there appears to be some difficulty in determining the jurisdiction of the department with regard to this problem.

While already there is legislation and some regulations in force dealing with the packaging of food and medicines to ensure purity, and while we in the department are contemplating legislation to deal with the prohibition or regulation of the sale of hazardous products, non-returnable bottles would not appear to fall within either category.

However, Mr. Speaker, in line with the minister's duty to promote and encourage the institution of practices tending to improve protection of the Canadian consumer and to co-operate with provincial governments or their agencies, or with private groups, the minister will be having further talks with his officials and will consider the question of non-returnable bottles, with a view to formulating some type of regulation.

After these departmental talks, it is intended to invite representatives of the manufacturers, the users and the retail distributors of these bottles to Ottawa to discuss the problems and all proposals, as well as to ascertain from these people what they intend to do relative to the problem mentioned by the hon. member.

EDUCATION—AGREEMENT ON GRADE AND SUBJECT STANDARDS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I hope that I can survive these few moments on my feet without being ruled out of order. This will be a rare if not unique experience for me.

About a week ago, Mr. Speaker, I asked the following question which I directed at the time to the Secretary of State, as reported at page 469 of Hansard:

> In view of the Canadian School Trustees' recent resolution calling for more uniform education standards across Canada, will the minister give consideration to establishing a national office of education to provide leadership for greater interprovincial agreement on grade and subject standards for Canadian schools?

Now, Mr. Speaker, in asking this question I am bound to go beyond the immediate terms of the question before us; for while greater interprovincial agreement on grade and subject standards might occur, and possibly already has occurred, without the establishment of a national office of education, perhaps progress toward this end will surely be more rapid under the auspices of such an office.

Certainly there are many education professionals who would disagree with the need for uniformity—and indeed, fear the effects of it—if the term uniformity is taken to mean complete congruency of grade, subject and textbook adoption from one end of the land to the other. I would include myself among those who would be against the establishment of a national office of education if I felt that its inauguration would hobble any imaginative or innovative approach to publicly supported learning.

Uniformity, you see, can only go so far, because an overdose can be stifling and deadly, whether it is within one school, within one province or across a whole nation. Public education historically has been preoccupied with group learning and the supposed efficiency intended to result from improved class or mass methods and techniques. But the results of such preoccupation has been almost uniformly disappointing. That groups learn anything is a misconception, and within this misconception lies the root of the problem. Groups learn nothing. Only individuals are capable of learning, and he, the individual, has often been overlooked by the education industry.

In the long run, Mr. Speaker, what we need is not greater uniformity in our curricular offerings to young people, but more, much more, provision for the multiplicity of talents, interests and needs of each individual student. Just as a hungry man does not want a meal in the long run but immediately, so does the need for more interprovincial agreement on educational standards become, in the short run, an extremely desirable objective. I have little doubt that a national office of education could assist us here.

Certainly, it seems that since our people move about the country from province to province a great deal now, grade 7 in British Columbia should be similar to grade 7 in Ontario. Where does this paucity of educational consensus leave the migrant's child? Course offerings differ widely from grade to grade, and from province to province, with richer provinces and regions in Canada providing enriching optional subjects, and better qualified teachers and the disadvantaged regions tending to be as impoverished in educational opportunities as they are in other ways.

The 13 years of secondary school required by Ontario, for instance, in contrast to the 12 years required in British Columbia, discouraged me from bringing my family to Ottawa this session, since one of my children would face an extra year's schooling here before graduation and the beginning of professional training. Wide provincial variations in university entrance requirements also exist and could benefit from rationalization. I think I have said enough to highlight the educational hodgepodge that already exists in Canada.

A standing committee of ministers of education was established in 1966; there was hope of forming a secretariat in Ottawa; but plans for that seem to have been curtailed. One official of a national educational association commented that it seems to take the council of ministers six months to make one breast stroke. Indeed, a breast stroke, however leisurely, is progress of a sort for provincial representatives who hitherto disdained to get their feet wet in national problems. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the establishment of a national office of education under the Secretary of State is necessary in order to bring into focus possible solutions to national educational problems which might otherwise languish for years before ad hoc committees of ministers or Canadian education association officials.

I see a national office of education primarily as a co-ordinating body to provide leadership, or a centre, if you like, which would say to the rest of Canada and the world that our national government regards education as one of the most important functions of national endeavour. A national office must be more than a symbol, because federal support for education is a major budget item each year. I have seen in Hansard for 1966 that amounts ranging from $250 million to $500 million per year were spent as the federal contribution. Yet the federal government's position in its relations with provinces on educational matters is all pay and no say.

The issue is not whether the federal or provincial governments have the say in education or, according to Professor J. Katz of the University of British Columbia, one as to which governments have the right to represent Canada at international conferences on education, but whether Canadians can afford anything but full co-operation between federal and provincial governments on all educational matters at home and abroad.

In the United States, where 50 independent, but similar educational systems exist, as opposed to ten in this country, they found it expedient to establish 101 years ago a national office of education. Can we therefore afford to persist in our leisurely approach?

I close, Mr. Speaker, with a plea that we reform the way we handle educational problems at the national level. To support my plea I quote the words of the Prime Minister, in August of last year who, when he referred to his 1956 writings on Quebec education, wrote:

> The consequence was that we had to wait twenty years for the only reform that really counts: education. I agree that reform in education is the only reform that really counts.

It may not be too extravagant to suggest that the structure of education at the national level is roughly equivalent to the irrelevant and unrealistic structure that existed in Quebec 20 years ago in order to prepare the citizens of the province to meet the challenges of the day and the days ahead. The time therefore to establish a national office of education is now.

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is aware that the Canadian council of ministers of education was created in September 1967. Its purpose is, and I quote:

> —to allow the ministers to have consultation on matters of common interest and to allow full co-operation between provincial governments in common fields of interest in education. The council will co-operate with other educational organizations to promote education in Canada.

The permanent structure of the secretariat and the scope of its field of action are not yet known. Still, the secretariat should serve not only as an instrument for consultation and as the framework for common activity but it should also facilitate agreement on the main points of general policy.

The member may rest assured that the federal government is at the complete disposal of the provincial governments to achieve their objectives in that field.

HARBOURS—ROBERTS BANK, B.C.—REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING RAIL LINE

Mr. Douglas A. Hogarth (New Westminster): During the sitting of the house this afternoon I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) what action the government had taken in view of the representations made with regard to the re-routing of the Roberts Bank rail connection. This matter, you will note, Mr. Speaker, has received almost daily attention in this house by way of questions, as well as in our debates, and it is of the utmost concern to those who represent the people of the lower mainland of British Columbia.

The available facts are somewhat meager but it would appear that in 1966 a United States corporation entered into a contract with Japanese interests for the purpose of shipping a substantial quantity of bulk coal from Natal, British Columbia, to Japan. Apparently as a result of negotiations it was agreed that the Canadian Pacific Railway would deliver the coal to a port which the provincial government proposed to construct at Roberts Bank. This arrangement involved the construction of a connecting link between the C.P.R. and the port, and this port was to be constructed by B.C. Hydro, a provincial government authority, financed by the C.P.R.

Early this year the federal government became somewhat apprehensive of the intention of the B.C. government to compete in port facilities on the west coast, and proceeded to construct the port itself under the auspices of the National Harbours Board. About this time concern began to emerge as to the location of the connecting rail link, since it was bound to pass through the lower mainland of British Columbia affecting farm, recreational and urban areas. The chairman of the National Harbours Board is reported in the Vancouver Sun to have stated, quite early on, that all the transport facilities in and out of the port would be channelled in one corridor, and went on to say that the lower mainland regional planning board would be consulted. This board is comprised of representatives of 28 member municipalities and is the principal agency involved in the planning of land use in the lower mainland. This planning has extended to the compilation of a short-range and long-range plan for the whole area.

Oblivious of all planning and totally devoid of any contact with the board, the railway chose a route which was completely unacceptable to any of the member municipalities, effectively destroying much of the farmland involved and certainly adversely affecting the recreational areas of that part of the province.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

• (10:20 p.m.)

This route could easily have been accommodated immediately to the north, where this devastating situation would not have taken place. The inference remains to this date that the decision was made entirely on the basis of what is good for the C.P.R. is good for the nation. As a result of a multiplicity of complaints, the north mainland planning board held a meeting to which all parties were invited, including the officials of the railways, but no one from the railways even condescended to appear to offer any explanation whatsoever concerning the reason for this route. An overwhelming number of briefs was presented at this meeting totally condemning the chosen route.

The question having been raised in the house, the minister has now taken the regrettable position that the federal government seemingly cannot control the actions of even the federal railway that is involved in this ridiculous mistake. It comes as a surprising shock that this link is not to be declared a work for the general benefit of Canada, in that eventually bulk shipments will proceed over this line from the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. It would appear that the ultimate control of that connecting link will come under the aegis of the provincial authorities and not under the aegis of the federal government, where it should be.

It is equally surprising that the C.P.R. cannot be legislated against in order to prohibit actions of this kind that are so deplorably detrimental to the public interest, and to the interest of the people of British Columbia. It is my respectful suggestion that every available resource of the federal government should be brought to bear to prevent this gross travesty that will go down in history as a classic mistake in urban planning. We are paying dearly for some that have been made many years ago in our province as well as in many other provinces of Canada.

The urgency of this matter arises out of the fact that the commencement date for the construction of this railway is obviously imminent, if the coal delivery dates as published in the press are to be relied upon. My question simply is, what action has been taken to give effect to the representations that have been made concerning the rerouting of this line in a more acceptable and viable location.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am of course interested in the intervention that has just been made by the hon. member. He has, I think quite rightly, said in summary that the problem here is primarily one of land use and urban planning. As a learned lawyer he is well aware that this is a matter which under our constitution comes solely within the competence of the government of British Columbia, as does the railway which is being built to connect to the port.

Following the representations from members, including those of the hon. members for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Goode) and Fraser Valley East (Mr. Pringle), as well as from the lower mainland regional planning board, and based upon their request for information on the reasons for the decisions of the railways to locate the line on the proposed route, I have written to the railways involved in servicing Roberts Bank, and to the premier of British Columbia, to ask that the railways meet with the executive of the planning board to make known the economic and other considerations which dictated the selection of this railway route. Because of the urgency of the situation, I have asked that this meeting be convened at the earliest possible date.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

IMPORTATION OF U.S. CORN—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. McCutcheon), the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, namely the failure of the government to take appropriate measures to protect the Canadian farmers by preventing the dumping of American corn in Canada at fire sale prices, as well as the government's failure to take action to stabilize prices for Canadian corn producers, resulting in the disastrous collapse of the Canadian corn market.

If Your Honour finds some difficulty in determining the urgency of the matter, I am prepared to debate it at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As the hon. member realizes, it is not the urgency of the matter that most concerns the Chair at the moment but the urgency of debate on the matter. I would invite the hon. member to address the house on this limited aspect of the matter.

Mr. Danforth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The urgency of debate arises from the subject matter of the motion, which relates to anti-dumping provisions. I am firmly convinced there is no way in which the question of anti-dumping provisions can be debated at this time. It is urgent that the debate take place now because measures would have to be implemented immediately in order to save for the farmers any substantial part of the 1968 market.

A further factor relating to urgency of debate is the fact that only this morning was it fully apparent that the government had absolutely nothing to offer to relieve the disastrous situation in which the corn producers find themselves. Up until yesterday the minister had left the impression that some kind of action would be taken by the government.

That suggestion was completely dissipated today. Now that we know nothing is being done to deal in a practical way with the situation resulting from the dumping of cheap United States corn at fire sale prices, it is up to this parliament to act. That is why the farmers have arrived here today to bring their case to parliament, and I submit, Mr. Speaker, they have a right to have their case heard. On another similar occasion last spring the farmers found the doors of parliament locked in their faces, the only time in the history of this nation that this has happened. I maintain that this is an urgent and an important case nationally, and if parliament is to be once again closed off to the farmers, where are they to turn?

A great principle is involved here, and surely it must be admitted that it is not every day that the deliberations of this chamber are interrupted by the primary producers of this country seeking justice from this house; because that is all the farmers are asking. There is no other way in which this matter can be dealt with, no other way in which the farmers of this country can find justice other than to ask this house to interrupt its deliberations at this time to deal with the question of according them the opportunity to sell their products without interference.

For my part I do not feel the least embarrassment in asking this house to deal with this question now, because it is a question basic to our institutions and to the survival in this nation of the important producing industries which are at the very base and foundation of our economy. I am proud to make this request on behalf of the farmers of Canada. I wish the Minister of Agriculture would join me in my view that parliament would be fulfilling its functions nobly if it interrupted its proceedings now to deal with this very real, urgent and pressing grievance of the farmers of Canada at this time.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in support of the request that this motion be allowed, and I do so in terms of its procedural aspects. The citations regarding the use of standing order 26 are many and lengthy and they have often been put on the pages of Hansard, so I shall make only two brief quotations. The first is the first sentence of citation 100(1) in Beauchesne's fourth edition. It reads:

> The definite matter of urgent public importance for the discussion of which a member may ask leave to move adjournment of the house under Standing Order 26 must involve the administrative responsibility of the government.

The motion placed before you by the hon. member for Kent-Essex refers to the dumping of corn in Canada at fire sale prices. When one is asking for something to be done against dumping, this clearly involves a matter that comes within the responsibility of the federal government. The urgency of the matter itself has been demonstrated by the number of times that questions have been asked in the last few days. It is also demonstrated by the presence of the farmers who are affected on parliament hill this morning. But of course Your Honour will bring us back to the point that urgency must apply to urgency of debate. Therefore let me read citation 100 (3), which is as follows:

> "Urgency" within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but it means "urgency of debate", when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the house do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.

I draw Your Honour's attention to the fact that two or three efforts were made yesterday to have a discussion of this matter. In the first place an attempt was made to get the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) to agree to revert to motions so that his statement could be read and the matter could be discussed on the floor of the house in that way. There was not unanimous agreement to this procedure. Later in the day serious effort was made to get the committee to agree to discuss this question of the plight of the corn growers during discussion of the legislation that was then before us.

There was not unanimous consent that this be done, so the chairman of the committee of the whole had no option but to apply the rule of relevancy.

The business for today has been announced. It relates to advance payments for grain, which affect the grain producers in the western provinces. The business for next week has been announced, in accordance with a practice recently instituted. If one looks over the items scheduled for next week one does not find an item under which this problem could be discussed. Frequently Your Honour is in a position where there is a supply motion coming or estimates or something of that nature to which Your Honour can draw our attention. There is nothing of that sort at this juncture. We are therefore faced with the fact that it was not possible to discuss the matter yesterday, it is not possible to do so today and there will be no opportunity to discuss it next week. I feel, therefore, that the motion by the hon. member for Kent-Essex comes within the purview of citation 100, subparagraph (3), and I hope Your Honour will see fit to allow it.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that the motion of the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth) is of major interest, not only to the Ontario corn producers but also to the population as a whole.

We are in favour of the adjournment proposed by the motion, and our attitude is justified by the presence on parliament hill of the corn producers delegation who have come to ask some measure of justice in regard to their work.

As a representative of agriculture, I must, with my colleagues, support the motion of the member, and I am happy to do so.

[English]

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, many of the points I wish to make in support of the motion have already been covered by the hon. member for Kent-Essex and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. However, there are one or two matters which have not been brought to your attention.

One relates to this question of urgency. Your Honour may assume that while there is no immediate supply motion planned nor are there any estimates to be considered shortly, this question may well be discussed within the next three or four weeks. However, I am afraid that would not be satisfactory because of the United States corn which has been dumped on the markets of the United States and this country by the United States government. This corn is having a depressing effect on the Canadian market. I am reliably informed that corn prices yesterday in Chatham, which is the centre for much of this product in southern Ontario, were $1.05 per bushel, and the price is still falling as it has been falling all week.

It has been pointed out already in this house that the cost of the production of this item is about $1.22 per bushel. If the price continues to fall at this rate, and if the debate takes place only in three or four weeks, then the farmers will be ruined. There is therefore urgency of debate in connection with this matter now.

There is one other point I should like to mention. Your Honour might very well say there is agricultural legislation before the house. Second reading of some bills will be called shortly, and there will then be a rather broad latitude in debate to discuss agricultural matters. If Your Honour refers back to decisions of your deputy and the deputy chairman of committees, even during the resolution stage when very broad latitude is normally permitted, Your Honour's juniors in office would not permit discussion of this subject.

• (11:20 a.m.)

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, there will be no opportunity to debate this matter at an early stage. If this state of affairs continues for several weeks it will be too late to take any action. Therefore I respectfully submit that there is urgency of debate and that we should deal with this matter today.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I agree that a very serious problem is involved here in view of citation 100, to be found at page 89 of Beauchesne's fourth edition. That citation says that a motion to adjourn the house under standing order 26 must involve the administrative responsibility of the government.

I agree, Mr. Speaker, that import and export control does in fact involve the administrative responsibility of this government. However, I think it would be stretching it a long way to argue that changes in the price of corn in the market place involve the administrative responsibility of this government, notwithstanding the fact that we do recognize that there is a serious problem here.

Paragraph 2 of citation 100 says the matter must be so pressing that the public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention. I agree that the matter needs immediate attention, but I suggest to Your Honour that immediate attention has been given and that action has already been taken. The decision was announced yesterday that negotiations would be initiated at once with the United States government to find ways and means of dealing with the problem created by United States corn coming into Canada at distress prices. I am sure all hon. members of the house realize that under our international agreements this is the first essential step to be taken in seeking such a solution.

Paragraph 3 of citation 100 deals with urgency, and this means not urgency of the matter but urgency of debate. Debate should only be had when the public interest demands that discussion take place immediately. I suggest that the action that is essential in seeking a solution to this problem has already been taken, and that any discussion in this house would not immediately add anything to the action already initiated.

However, Mr. Speaker, there is a prohibition in paragraph 5 which reads:

> The adjournment of the house cannot be moved with reference to critical conditions generally prevailing in certain parts of the country.

I should like to couple that with part of paragraph 8 of citation 100, which quotes the Speaker of the British House of Commons as saying in part:

> What I think was contemplated, was an occurrence of some sudden emergency, either in home or in foreign affairs. But I do not think it was contemplated—if the house will allow me to state my views—that a question of very wide scope, which would demand legislation to deal with it in any effective manner, should be the subject of discussion on a motion for the adjournment of the house, because, if that was so, we might have repeated motions made by the opposition of the day, not so much in the direction of censuring the government for action which had been taken or not taken, for bringing to notice some grievance demanding instant remedy, as in the direction of wishing to introduce legislation on some particular subject.

The citation closes by saying:

> That is not the purpose of the standing order—

That has reference to standing order 26.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Olson: I suggest that—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Olson: After a while—all the action that ought to be taken and that has been taken meets the provisions of standing order 26, and that the government already has moved to take appropriate action to try to deal with this matter. In conclusion I say there is no evidence of the dumping of corn by United States growers in Canada when one considers the usual definition of dumping.

Mr. Horner: The minister has invented a new definition.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the minister, but I must remind him that we are discussing at the moment the question of urgency of debate, and perhaps at this point the minister is going beyond that limit.

Mr. Horner: He is entering into debate.

Mr. Olson: There is one more point I must mention. Hon. members of the opposition have based their argument on the premise that there has been dumping in Canada of United States corn. We have investigated, and we do not believe there is any evidence of corn coming in here and being dumped or sold at prices below the price offered in the United States. If one applies the usual definition of dumping one must concede that corn is not coming into this country at prices low enough to constitute dumping.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Olson: Certainly.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In view of the minister's explanation, if there is no dumping why did the government belatedly, after knowing for a week that the farmers were on their way, decide officially yesterday that they were going to get in touch with the United States authorities to stop the dumping?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Olson: I have a full, complete and comprehensive reply to that question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: It is about as good as the rest of the minister's statements.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre rising to ask a question of the minister?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member ascertained whether the minister wishes to reply to his question?

Mr. Olson: Yes, I shall reply.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Since the minister read only part of paragraph 8 of citation 100, would he tell us, since it is right in the citation, in what year the decision he relies on was given? Does he not think there may have been some changes since 1894?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Olson: I can do that—

Mr. Hees: That is about as up to date as the minister is.

Mr. Olson: I can do that, but I must also remind the hon. member—

Mr. Ricard: You couldn't do anything.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Olson: I could do that, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member's question was argumentative. I think we might move on and have a contribution by another hon. member.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): I wish to address myself briefly to the question of urgency of debate. This morning the question of whether there has been dumping of United States corn in Canada was raised. The minister said to the farmers not long ago, in front of this house, that there was dumping and that he was prepared to take action. Now he says there is no dumping. I say that shows all the more reason for debating this matter fully today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner: First, there is evidence in the country today that past policies have failed. Yesterday, when an attempt was made to debate this question in this house we on this side of the chamber were ruled out of order. The minister promised the farmers that he would get in touch with the United States authorities and talk with them about the question of corn coming into Canada. If the government's present policy has failed, and if the minister is to attempt to enunciate new policy to the United States, then surely he ought to be sent to the United States armed with the correct facts and a full knowledge of the problems confronting the farmers of this country.

Today we saw a mass demonstration before this house, and it is sad that our primary producers have to go to such lengths to have their grievance heard. Surely parliament has the right to have its say on this urgent question; surely, Mr. Speaker, this is an urgent question that ought to be debated.

• (11:30 a.m.)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): I shall not refer again at this point to the rules or to the relevant citations in Beauchesne; I intend to confine my remarks to the question of urgency of debate, and point out that there are in fact several opportunities for this important question to be discussed by the house.

Hon. members opposite have debated whether or not this involves dumping. I call attention to the fact that there is presently on the notice paper a motion to refer the anti-dumping white paper, which could come forward for discussion next Monday. There will be full opportunity then to discuss this subject. If hon. members opposite wish, I am prepared to call the motion next Monday to allow this particular subject to be discussed.

Mr. Horner: Call it today.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would point out to the hon. member for Crowfoot that it was placed on the order paper only last night, and I think we should abide by the rules.

Mr. Horner: By unanimous consent it could be called.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre referred to the fact that yesterday I set out the business to be dealt with during the coming week. I do not like to mention discussions outside this chamber with other hon. members, but I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will agree that there is a supply motion available under the arrangements we have established for dealing with supply this fall. Whether the supply motion should come forward at an early date, that is in the coming week, is a question which was left to hon. members opposite. I repeat that if hon. members opposite wish to have a supply motion called on Monday I would be pleased to change the order of business which I set out yesterday in order to make possible the debate on supply to which the opposition has a right under the procedure we have established.

Apart altogether from the opportunities for debate available in the house as a whole, the government has stated its intention to refer the estimates of the departments generally to the standing committees. As I have already indicated to members of the opposition, if they choose to use the supply days in the house to discuss the estimates of any department the government is prepared to agree, and we can call the estimates of the Department of Agriculture in the near future. In fact, not only do we have the three opportunities for debate in the house which I have mentioned, but if the house chooses to refer the estimates of the Department of Agriculture to the standing committee on agriculture there will be an early opportunity to consider the estimates in that committee and deal with this subject, as soon as I receive from parties opposite the list of those they wish to be appointed to the standing committees, enabling the committees to be set up.

I therefore submit there will be plenty of opportunity in the near future for this question to be dealt with both in committee of supply and in the standing committee. If the opposition wishes I am prepared to call the supply motion for Monday, when hon. members will have full opportunity to discuss this question they would like to deal with, and have it debated fully.

Mr. Baldwin: That is an admission it is urgent.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): The Minister of Agriculture advanced two arguments by means of which he attempted to show that there is no urgency of debate as far as this subject is concerned. I submit that both arguments are fallacious.

The first and most important point he made was that any action which could be taken had already been taken. This is simply not the case. There are several other forms of action which could be taken to relieve this acute situation faced not only by corn growers but by other producers.

First, an embargo could be imposed. This is a form of action which might well be discussed in this chamber today. Second, the government could enforce measures of import control, another form of action which might be discussed here today. A third form of action which could be taken would be to place corn under the provisions of the stabilization act and announce a stabilization payment. This approach too could be discussed. These are three measures by which this urgent situation could be met. They all require discussion, yet the minister has insisted that all the action which could be taken has already been taken. His argument falls to the ground.

The second argument advanced by the minister, as I understand it, was that this is more or less a local matter. In fact the importation of corn in large quantities will have a serious effect on all grain producers not only in eastern Canada but in western Canada. It will also have serious effects upon livestock production and marketing.

The President of the Privy Council said a supply motion could be called on Monday. What he is attempting to do is this. He is attempting to dictate to the opposition the form of supply motion they should introduce. He is saying in effect "This is the form of supply motion you must use if you wish to discuss this matter at all".

Mr. Baldwin: There will be half a dozen more emergencies by Monday.

Mr. Harkness: I contend that the time to discuss this subject is now, and that there is no other opportunity available in the immediate future unless we find ourselves in the position that we must use our supply motion for the purpose, and we only have one this session.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am prepared to give a ruling now, if hon. members will allow me. I gather the hon. member for Edmonton West is seeking the floor.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I wish to deal specifically with the arguments put forward by the President of the Privy Council. I suggest to Your Honour that those arguments are an attempt to frustrate the purpose of standing order No. 26. If we accept the proposition he advanced, the remedy available to this house under that standing order can be neutralized simply by the existence within the rules of the possibility of calling the estimates of a particular department or of utilizing a supply motion.

This has never been contemplated. If we follow the argument of the President of the Privy Council we might as well wipe out standing order 26. Opportunities for discussion on estimates and supply motions do exist, but it was never in the contemplation of this house that they should be utilized as a substitute for what may be done under standing order 26. This is the point I would direct to Your Honour's attention.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to comment briefly on the debate in progress.

Like many other members, I believe that a good government must, above all, show foresight. Therefore, I feel that the demonstration going on this morning on parliament hill is due to the fact that the government did not foresee the present agricultural crisis. The leader of the house suggests that we wait till next Monday to discuss the matter. I wonder why we could not do it now, seeing the farmers are here—I expect they will not be here on Monday and, therefore, they will be unable to witness the debate.

That is one of the reasons why I feel that we should start the debate immediately on the present crisis.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members know it is always extremely difficult for the Chair to reach a decision in the case of a motion under standing order 26. Very strong arguments are normally put forward, as they have been today, for the granting of the motion; and strong arguments are advanced—as is also the case this morning, I suggest—against the granting of such a motion. The Chair has the responsibility to weigh one against the other in the light of the precedents and the citations. In my view citation 100(3) is very much to the point:

• (11:40 a.m.)

"Urgency" within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but it means "urgency of debate," when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the house do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.

I have the impression, in spite of the interpretation placed on the rules by the hon. member for Edmonton West, that when there is an opportunity provided, then the rule should not be applied. The President of the Privy Council has referred to opportunities during the coming days, such as the supply motion. I know there is some difficulty, and I recognize the objection which has been advanced by the hon. member for Edmonton West. I gather there is also a possible vehicle for discussion under the item of business standing in the name of the President of the Privy Council to which the minister has referred.

I would think that because of these opportunities in the very near future it would be very difficult for the Chair to allow the motion, although the matter might be reviewed later on; but for this morning, and in view of the statement of the President of the Privy Council, I cannot see my way clear to accepting the motion of the hon. member.

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MEETINGS WITH ONTARIO FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Will the minister give a report to the house on his meetings with the delegation of Ontario farmers this morning; and will he state what undertakings, if any, he gave to those farmers on action with respect to the grave problems faced by the Ontario corn growers?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker, but under the rules I will not be able to make as long a reply as I would like. Just a few minutes ago we had a very satisfactory meeting with the Ontario corn producers who are here protesting against the decline in the prices received for their corn in Ontario. I think it was an exchange of views that was useful both to me, as the representative of the government and to the members of the union.

I gave an undertaking that we had initiated action, and that we were going to pursue it immediately, to make sure there was no corn coming into Canada below the United States support level. At what price that level is, is something we intend to argue. It is not all that clear because of the very complex way in which the United States pays subsidies to its corn producers. But without transgressing the rules of this house, Mr. Speaker, I think it was a useful meeting.

There were suggestions made in other areas to which we made a tentative reply, and they will be under investigation and future study. There will be an additional response later.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, arising from the minister's statement that he intends to meet with United States officials on this matter, will he say whether the government will impose a temporary embargo on some classes of corn coming into the country to prevent a further fall in the market price?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Oxford knows probably better than most members of this house what our obligations are under our international agreements, and I am sure he will be the first to recognize that we have taken the most useful appropriate action within the bounds of the agreements Canada has signed.

Mr. Nesbitt: Will the minister not agree that this same kind of action was taken with respect to the importation of turkeys a few years ago?

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether in addition to the undertaking to discuss this problem with the United States department of agriculture the government intends to take any concrete action besides discussions?

Mr. Olson: The first step, Mr. Speaker, is to discuss.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—U.S. REQUEST FOR MAINTENANCE OF CANADIAN FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs but in his absence I will address it to the Prime Minister. Has the government received a note from United States Secretary of State Dean Rusk calling on the Canadian government in rather blunt terms to maintain its present troop strength and nuclear capability in Europe; and will the Prime Minister say whether the note from the Secretary of State will receive a formal reply from the government of Canada?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think this same question was answered a few days ago by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. MacLean: I do not recall that it was, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to address a supplementary question to the Prime Minister and ask whether he can confirm that he discussed the role of NATO in Europe during his talks with the Prime Minister of France earlier this week, and would he indicate to the house the nature of those discussions?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In our review of international affairs we did discuss the problem of NATO, France's relation to it, and the view of the French government on the happenings in Europe which have some bearing on NATO.

Mr. MacLean: As a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, does the Prime Minister contemplate having similar discussions at an early date with the governments of some of our other NATO allies, such as the United States, on this same subject?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is in New York, and I am quite sure it is contemplated that there will be informal meetings there of NATO member countries to discuss these problems. I am not quite sure of the agenda, but I have heard the Secretary of State for External Affairs say that he intended discussing NATO problems with them.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a further brief supplementary question on this important subject to the Minister of National Defence. Would the minister say whether reconsideration is being given to the government's announced policy of closing the Canadian forces base at Zweibrucken in Germany, which closing is to take place next summer?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, this problem, like most of the problems concerning national defence, is under review.

AGRICULTURE

MILK—REQUEST FOR MORE EFFICIENT METHOD OF SUBSIDY PAYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

In view of the numerous complaints we have received concerning the payment of subsidies to industrial milk producers, does the Minister of Agriculture intend to contact the data centre with a view to finding a more efficient way of distributing subsidies to the parties concerned?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, my attention was diverted for a moment. I wonder whether the hon. member would mind repeating his question.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture whether, following the numerous complaints we receive from our constituents, he intends to make representations to the data centre in order to find an efficient way of paying subsidies to the producers of industrial milk.

[Mr. MacLean.]

[English]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, we already have a reasonably satisfactory means of distributing quotas to industrial milk producers. This is under review, but by and large it is generally accepted by the dairy producers of Canada as reasonably satisfactory.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

In his opinion, can a delay of three months in the payment of subsidies be considered an efficient system?

[English]

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF INTENTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question concerning the Prince Edward Island-New Brunswick causeway. In view of the great concern in Prince Edward Island, obviously shared by Premier Campbell, regarding this project, will the Prime Minister or the Minister of Public Works make an early and full statement to the house about this very important matter so the people of the area can realistically plan their future economy rather than leave any uncertainty?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing to add to what the Minister of Transport stated to the house yesterday.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether this very important project is being considered purely on its merits, or is the announcement of an unfavourable decision being delayed pending the preparation of a suitable booby prize for Prince Edward Island?

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

REPORTED STATEMENT RESPECTING CONTINUATION OF SHARED PROGRAMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the speech he made at Calgary the night before last, in which he said the government was looking for programs which have served their purpose and might be discontinued, can he indicate to the house which programs the government has in mind either for discontinuance or for cutting down so far as the amount of money involved is concerned?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was stating a general principle that I am sure the members of the opposition would agree with; that we have to discontinue programs which we do not find up to standard. We gave an example of such programs when we discontinued the winter works program.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As a supplementary question, since the Prime Minister referred in his speech to the Canada Assistance Plan and programs like that, are they due for discontinuance?

Mr. Trudeau: I think the hon. member is in error, Mr. Speaker. I do not believe I referred to the Canada Assistance Plan. I did refer to all the social security, health and post-secondary education programs in general, and I did indicate that we were trying to find means of promoting greater economy in the application of all plans.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I just remind the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, that on page 4 of the text which was issued from his office there is a reference to the Canada Assistance Plan.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Do I gather from his remarks that it is not the intention of his government to increase old age pensions for those people in need, and pensions for veterans and other such people in need?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Abitibi.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister wanted to answer that question according to the just society, and these people are certainly just in need.

[Later:]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister of Finance I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he can advise the house whether the government received a formal warning from officials of the Ontario government earlier this year that federal forecasts were gravely underestimating the total cost of the post-secondary education and hospitalization programs?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance will be here on Monday.

An hon. Member: This is his day off.

Mr. Trudeau: These matters are dealt with by the Treasury Board. Perhaps the President of the Treasury Board has a statement to make.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, is the President of the Treasury Board in a position to advise the house whether such a warning was received?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have seen the newspaper article which I think gave rise to this question. It is a long and complicated one. I was assured some time ago that we were not in receipt of any formal communication, but I am having another check made.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In the event that formal representations were received is the minister prepared to table them prior to the budget debate?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, formal communications between governments are, of course, subject to privilege. If indeed there were any I will look at them to determine whether they are privileged.

Mr. Robert Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is related to the questions regarding shared programs, and I address it to the Prime Minister. In view of his statement to the annual conference of Chamber of Commerce of Calgary the other day regarding cutbacks in government spending, can the Prime Minister inform the house whether he intends to go ahead with the medicare program which is expected to cost half a billion dollars in its initial year?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, as I have said before and now repeat, we are endeavouring to have federal-provincial meetings of ministers of finance and ministers in other areas of administration such as health and welfare to discuss all open ended programs. I refer to programs which are determined by statute and the spending on which cannot be controlled or perhaps even foreseen with accuracy. This proposition for federal-provincial meetings is now being forwarded.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in connection with this careful review of the scope of a just society and the paring down of expenditures, what has the Prime Minister to say about the galloping increase month by month of the cost of the arts centre in Ottawa? Is this being looked into, and can the Prime Minister explain how the initial expenditure of about $15 million will now amount to an expected $54 million?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the right hon. gentleman would expect us to discontinue this particular project in the name of a just society.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If that is so, why will the Prime Minister not give assurances in respect of social programs which affect the average Canadian by saying those programs should not be reduced?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I can not for the life of me see how it would help these poor people by knocking down this arts centre or terminating this project at this stage.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We are not trying to knock down the arts centre; we are trying to knock down the Prime Minister to give us some information.

[Later:]

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would like to address to the Prime Minister related to his address to the Canadian Chamber of Commerce in Calgary yesterday. Can he say whether his announcement of government policy to cut back on certain programs for economic reasons included the present very stringent criteria applying to student loans? What was his reply to student demands at Regina on Wednesday?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, my reply was that students were not the most unfavoured class of our society and that all the amounts that had been set aside for loans by the federal government had not been taken up in past years. I said there was a greater supply of money for loans than had been demanded.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): May I ask a supplementary question of the Prime Minister related to his address in Calgary in which he referred to the extra attention being given to research in the business field? Will the Prime Minister assure the house that this extra attention to research will include the agricultural sector of the economy?

Mr. Trudeau: The Department of Agriculture is spending a great deal of money on research.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Not enough.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): May I ask a supplementary question? Has the government received a request from the government of Saskatchewan for increased assistance for university student loans? If so, what action has been taken on this request?

Mr. Trudeau: Last summer, Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister of Finance received a letter concerning this matter. The Minister of Finance replied that he would make sure that adequate funds were available in view of the increased demands by students in Saskatchewan for loans. These amounts were forthcoming. The house should know that over $6 million, I believe, was lent to students last year at the University of Saskatchewan and that to something like 7,200 students.

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): May I ask a further supplementary question? In order to meet increasing costs, both in the area of student loans and other welfare measures which so obviously concern the Prime Minister, is he giving consideration to the early introduction of a capital gains tax to defray some of these costs?

Mr. Trudeau: The Minister of Finance will deal with all the forms of taxation which we contemplate in his budget speech.

PENITENTIARIES

SUGGESTED CONSIDERATION BY HOUSE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister in view of the absence of the Solicitor General who, as a result of his crystal ball, left the chamber five minutes before I could ask my question. Will the Prime Minister indicate whether, in view of the government's decision not to re-establish the all-party joint Senate and House of Commons committee on penitentiary construction and policy, consideration will be given to referring the matter to a standing committee in order that this committee work can proceed? This is of great interest to the members of this house and of the other place.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to ask the Solicitor General to take this question as notice. It seems a reasonable suggestion.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO ORGANIZED AND SYNDICATED CRIME IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Calgary North asked me whether I had received any request from the attorney general of the province of Quebec to set up a royal commission to examine the spreading of crime across the nation.

The answer to that question is no, the minister has not received any request from the province of Quebec to set up a royal commission. The hon. member will perhaps recall, as will the house, that on January 6 and 7, 1966, a federal-provincial conference of attorneys general on organized crime was held in Ottawa. As a result a committee was established of members from the attorney general departments of Ontario and Quebec to study this question of organized crime.

I think the hon. member will also recall that this committee published a report in August of 1967 recommending the establishment of a new central intelligence mechanism called the Canadian criminal intelligence system with headquarters in Ottawa. That system has been established with offices in all the provincial capitals except in Quebec. I understand they are still working on this problem.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, has the minister suggested or asked that the R.C.M.P. work in co-operation with the police forces of the urban centres in Canada in relation to organized crime which is now rampant across the country?

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General speaks on behalf of the mounted police, but I can say from experience that the R.C.M.P. are in constant co-operation with provincial and municipal police forces in this country.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORTED STATEMENT ON REGULATION OF MULTI-NATIONAL CORPORATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Will he tell the house whether the Minister of Justice was stating government policy when in a speech to the American real estate counsellors he said that nations should surrender some of their sovereignty and jurisdictional control to an international commission which would regulate multi-national corporations?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no definite government policy to surrender sovereignty. But I should say that personally I think—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Trudeau: —this government is inclined more to institutions which are broadly international rather than toward nationalistic approaches.

Mr. Baldwin: Like NATO.

Mr. Harkness: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the Minister of Justice stated that the place to begin is in Canada-United States economic relations, will the Prime Minister say whether any discussions have been held with United States officials on this subject?

Mr. Trudeau: I know of no such discussions, Mr. Speaker, but I must say it sounds like a very good idea.

AIR CANADA

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is it the intention of the government to proceed with the plan of the Minister of Transport to appoint as president of Air Canada a man whose only qualification for the job is service to the Liberal party?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I recommended you, George, but they wouldn't do it.

[Later:]

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport with respect to Air Canada. Has the government received the report from the investment experts on the reorganization of Air Canada, which was referred to twice last year?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure exactly to which report my hon. friend is referring. A considerable number of studies have been made regarding the problem of financing the national air carrier, and these are under review at present to decide how best to finance the requirements of Air Canada both in the short and the long range.

Mr. Bell: As a supplementary question to the Prime Minister may I ask him if he would hold up any major changes in the executive structure of Air Canada until these reports are received?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Fundy Royal.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I will rephrase my question because I think it is extremely important.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport just said he was not quite sure which report was referred to by the hon. member. I cannot promise to hold up decisions for which the opposition is pressing until these hypothetical reports which we cannot identify have been received.

Mr. Bell: Does the Prime Minister not feel that any new appointments of political hacks to Air Canada would greatly prejudice its rights as a public body?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

CHURCHILL, MAN.—NEGOTIATIONS ON DEVELOPMENT OF TOWN SITE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, has the Prime Minister taken any steps to meet with the premier of Manitoba in relation to the pressing problems of the development of the townsite of Churchill, Manitoba?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I did have a meeting with the premier of Manitoba some weeks ago. It was followed up by some letters, and action is being prepared in our government departments.

Mr. Simpson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that I understand this meeting took place prior to September 12, has the Prime Minister yet replied to the letter of the premier of Manitoba dated September 12 asking for a meeting so this matter could be expedited?

Mr. Trudeau: I believe I have, Mr. Speaker, but I will check and confirm it.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

BROADCASTING

ACTION BY COMMISSION RESPECTING PRIVATE STATION PROGRAMMING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I have quite a pleasant question to address to the Secretary of State. Would he express appreciation to the C.R.T.C. for its very firm action, as reported today, in encouraging private stations in Canada to live up to a reasonable standard of programming?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am willing to give this message to the C.R.T.C., just as I am ready to communicate the views expressed by all hon. members.

TRADE

PLUTONIUM—INQUIRY AS TO PRICE PAID BY FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Could he tell us what price per gram we obtained for the plutonium sold to France?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this question should be directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who is not here at the moment. Out of curiosity I inquired about this. The sale was made under an agreement of a confidential nature between Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and the Commissariat de l'Énergie atomique de France.

[English]

[Later:]

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Does the recent sale of plutonium to France indicate an improved atmosphere for sales of uranium to that country?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the question as asked is perhaps a little too general.

HOUSING

STATEMENT ON 1968 BUILDING PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might have leave of the house to revert to motions in order to make a brief statement on housing.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, hon. members already know that 1968 will be a record year for housing in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hellyer: The original estimate of 175,000 new housing starts in all areas in Canada is now virtually assured, and there is every prospect that the final figure will be close to 185,000. However, distribution of new housing starts as between rental accommodation and single family dwellings for home ownership continues to cause concern. Multiple dwelling starts for the first nine months are 26 per cent higher than the comparable total for 1967, whereas the rate for single family dwellings is 8.4 per cent less than 1967.

The original estimate of housing starts for this year was based on the expectation that 100,000 multiple housing units for rental purposes and 75,000 single family dwellings for home ownership would be started in 1968. There would appear to be a very real possibility that single family dwellings started will fall short of 75,000 units and that multiple housing for rental purposes may exceed 100,000 housing units.

In order to alleviate the shortage of family accommodation, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has been authorized to make, from within its capital budget, $170 million available for commitments for home ownership dwellings during the balance of the year. This represents 9,000 units of new construction in the form of single family dwellings and condominium together with 2,000 loans on existing dwellings. It is estimated that of the 9,000 proposed commitments for single family dwellings approximately 3,000 will be for individual home owners. The remaining 6,000 units will be available for merchant builders.

Effective October 7, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will accept applications for loans from merchant builders, without a presale requirement. These loans will be distributed across the country on an equitable basis with emphasis on houses of moderate cost.

In addition to the favourable employment results, this program together with the increased activity of institutional lenders will go some way to restoring the balance between rental and home ownership homes.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in so far as the first page of the minister's statement is concerned, it is a Tweedledum and Tweedledee proposition because he has quoted statistics which show a shortfall on the estimate for single family dwellings and an excess in respect of apartments. I am sure there are good and valid reasons for this. One reason is that mortgage institutions are preferring to obtain a higher return from apartment buildings as against single family dwellings. With regard to the 9,000 units that are now to be the subject of, shall we say, direct loans from the corporation, I do not see why this program could not have been started much earlier.

This statement will afford poor satisfaction to the many people who are seeking homes at moderate cost. Of course, the minister did not speak about the interest rate, but we have a pretty good idea what it is. If these homes are to be available some time in the spring, this of course does not mean anything until we study the availability of land services. This government has cancelled the winter works program and work which would have been carried out under the program is not going forward. This will cause the municipalities great difficulty. Naturally we welcome an increase in the availability of homes, but I wonder whether this is part of the minister's program which he calls "housing is living".

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, the minister said that this will be the peak year for housing starts in Canada. When he said that I thought he would also say that this is the peak year for interest rates on homes in Canada. The action of the government is too little and too late and I think it is a cover-up for the bad publicity the task force has been receiving of late.

The minister says that the estimate is 185,000 housing starts this year. He must remember that the Economic Council of Canada said that 200,000 units should be completed in one year, 190,000 new units and 10,000 units to replace older homes. One has to consider the shortfall in housing in the last few years, and the objective of the government should be at least 250,000 units to take care of the shortage in those years. In 1965 we had 165,000 units, in 1966, 134,000, in 1967, 160,000. This indicates a shortage of 140,000 homes in three years, and the target that has been set of 185,000 falls short of the estimated 250,000 required to take care of the slack in those years.

The direct reason for the slack in housing has been the philosophy of the government which has depended on private builders to take care of the single dwelling homes while the government took the initiative with regard to the public and low cost housing. This deliberate policy of the government has failed. The reason it has failed is apparent in the statements of the minister with regard to consultations with the insurance companies and banks in the latter part of the summer and the statements of the builders that they have not been able to obtain loans for housing.

The lack of action by the government with regard to high interest rates and the removal of the sales tax, its lack of action with regard to the imposition of rental controls even though the city of Ottawa requested them to meet exorbitant rents, and the lack of action by the government with regard to the establishment of a ministry of urban development indicates—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member in order to remind him that according to the standing order comments made on ministerial statements should be brief.

Mr. Gilbert: I am about to complete my statement, Mr. Speaker. As I have been saying, the lack of action by the government with regard to the establishment of a separate ministry of housing and urban development and its lack of action in all the other fields I have mentioned indicate the reason that we are having a serious housing crisis in Canada today and will continue to have in the future.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, at first sight, the statement which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) has just made about the problem of housing and the possibility of 187,000 new housing starts, compared to an expected high of 175,000, makes me happy.

However, we sincerely feel that this measure comes a little late. We also feel that it will not solve the problem of ordinary people, and in particular of low income families, the unemployed, the pensioners, the widows, people without a trade, newcomers to this country, those who get social assistance payments, the Indians and the half-breeds.

While prices are increasing, Mr. Speaker, the purchasing power of those families is decreasing. Since rents are inevitably high, families get along by spending less for food, clothing and education, or they cut down housing costs by living with friends or relatives, or in houses divided into small units unfit to live in.

That is why I am quite upset by this part of the minister's statement:

> However, distribution of new housing starts as between rental accommodation and single family dwellings for home ownership continues to cause concern.

Mr. Speaker, that causes concern to us also, the more so because immediate steps are not taken to help low income groups, the most severely affected by the rise in the cost of living.

At this point, I would like to remind the minister of a statement which appears on page 216 of the third annual review of the Economic Council of Canada, and I quote:

> In the absence of an early upturn—and the minister's statement is surely not an upturn—

> —in new residential construction, a severe housing shortage could emerge very quickly in Canada; and rent increases could become a powerful new factor accentuating the rise in living costs and in wage demands.

Therefore, I am asking the minister to consider introducing immediate legislation in order to help low income and large families as regards housing.

SHIPBUILDING

INQUIRY AS TO RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question at this time to the Minister of Fisheries, but in his absence I will direct it to the Prime Minister. The federal-provincial Atlantic fisheries committee ended its conference in Montreal yesterday on fishing vessel construction materials. Is it the intention of the government to submit a report to the house on the conclusions reached by this conference, and will the facts be used as the basis for re-establishing assistance to the shipbuliding industry?

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, as parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Fisheries I should like to take the questions as notice.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR CESSATION OF ARMS SALES TO NIGERIA-BIAFRA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Will the government of Canada take diplomatic initiatives in an attempt to persuade the governments of the U.S.S.R., Britain and France to stop providing arms to Biafra and Nigeria?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Secretary of State for External Affairs has dealt with the problem of diplomatic representations previously.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

LEGISLATIVE PROVISION FOR LEGAL DEFINITION OF DEATH

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. In view of the increasing frequency of heart transplants and in view of Dr. Christiaan Barnard's statement yesterday that the conventional definition of death is outdated, is the government considering legislation to provide a legal definition of death which will be a suitable guide to surgeons?

Mr. Baldwin: The best example is the Liberal government.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I do not like thinking about the subject, but I will certainly consider it.

INDUSTRY

CAPE BRETON—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DEVCO REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. In view of the fact that the minister is absent, whether or not his absence is authorized, I will direct it to the Prime Minister. Since the great urgency of this matter is supported by requests from Cape Breton, and is also implied in the legislation, will the government not make available the Devco report?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, I will bring the hon. member's representation to the notice of the minister, who is temporarily absent.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In view of his great concern for the just society, does he not think that an urgent question which has been put to his government for the past week or so should have been answered by now, especially since the legislation implies it is an urgent matter? Why is it we cannot receive this report on Devco?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The minister was here a few moments ago but he had to leave the house.

An hon. Member: Where is he? Get him back.

Mr. Trudeau: It is now 20 minutes past 12 and he had a meeting at 12.15. I suppose he did not think that members of the opposition would be so loquacious this morning.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. A ruling has been made time and again in this house that I and other members of the opposition are not allowed to put questions to ministers unless those questions concern their departments. This is the ruling, and I could turn up any number of precedents. I ask the Prime Minister again: why is it written into legislation that we cannot attend to this emergency? Why is it that as early as this week the Prime Minister himself designated the wrong minister to answer the question? Where is the just society? When and where are we going to get this report?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

HARBOURS

ROBERTS BANK, B.C.—REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING RAIL LINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and refers to the late show last night. When was the letter which he mentioned in the debate last night written to the premier of British Columbia and the railways involved? Has any reply been received? If so, has there been a date set for the meeting mentioned in that letter? Does the minister plan to be at that meeting?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the letters were written yesterday. Obviously there has not been time yet for a reply. I do not contemplate being at the meeting because the matter primarily concerns the railways, the government of British Columbia and the lower mainland planning board. However, I took the liberty of advising the premier of British Columbia and the railways by telephone that the letters were on their way so that they would be aware of them and could facilitate their plans more expeditiously.

Mr. Nowlan: May I ask a supplementary question? Has the minister had an opportunity of checking out what the Minister of Public Works said about the Roberts Bank development so we can find out who is expressing government policy?

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): In view of the fact the minister got the letters away so expeditiously yesterday, has he been able yet to get a definitive legal opinion avout the constitutional jurisdiction involved in the British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority rail line question?

Mr. Hellyer: It is in train, Mr. Speaker.

SHIPPING

CHURCHILL—INQUIRY INTO EXTENSION OF SEASON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether the report on the study which is being conducted into the extension of the shipping season at Churchill will be an interdepartmental or a public document?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure to which of the numerous studies that have been made in respect of the matter my hon. friend is referring, so perhaps I had better take the question as notice or he could put it on the order paper.

Mr. Korchinski: May I ask a supplementary question of the Prime Minister? In the interests of economy would he not consider cancelling these studies and appointing a public inquiry commission so that representations could be made by interested bodies with a view to recommending what action should be taken?

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is making representations. This is not really a question.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ATTENDANCE OF MINISTERS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, may I address what I consider a most interesting question to the Prime Minister? I understand that today all members received a communication about a new experiment in connection with the attendance of cabinet ministers in the house. This communication states the Prime Minister will be here during question period five days a week and the cabinet members will all be here on Wednesdays. On Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Fridays, 13 of the 28 will be here. May I ask the Prime Minister when this experiment will be put into effect?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. member finds this question very interesting. I hope he finds the answer interesting too. We thought that this plan might begin on Monday. We hope the house will see the advantages in it.

An hon. Member: You have been experimenting already.

Mr. Trudeau: A member says that perhaps there has been an unwilling rehearsal for the past couple of weeks. The remark which has just been made is an indication that the opposition might stand to gain if this plan works. We hope that the result will be that, rather than ministers being away on business as they have to be during the session at unforeseen times, with the consequence that a full cabinet is rarely present in the house since its members have to be occupied with other aspects of business across the country, the plan will permit members of the opposition to ask questions within stated departmental fields on days which will be foreseen, not only by them but by the ministers. We hope that in this way ministers will be able to plan their attendance, and the opposition will be able to plan questions, in a way which will give more information, not less information, to the opposition.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I want to comment on the Prime Minister's statement. The statement he has made is an indication of the government's intention to carry this plan into effect. I believe that the statement and the plan constitute a calculated contempt and an infringement of the privileges of this house, of all members of this house, including all the members of the opposition and government backbenchers', in so far as both tradition and the standing orders of the house are concerned.

I want to commend to the Prime Minister a sentence which appears on page 149 of Beauchesne dealing with the practice of questions being asked on orders of the day:

> The practice has been so long and so regularly in the House that, if not impossible, in my opinion, it would be inadvisable to stop it.

It appears that the right hon. gentleman does not mind rushing in where Mr. Beauchesne feared to tread.

I would also point out that standing order 39(5) of the rules of this house provides that:

> Before the orders of the day are proceeded with, questions on matters of urgency may be addressed orally to ministers of the crown—

This statement was included in a recommendation of the procedure committee which was adopted by the house unanimously, I believe. There is no suggestion that questions should be asked only of some ministers of the crown. There is no suggestion that they be limited to such ministers of the crown as the government or the right hon. gentleman see fit to designate to be in the house. The recommendation covered all ministers of the crown.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I submit in as strong terms as I can that this action of the government, all the more flagrant because it goes in the face of the very reasonable and moderate criticism of this proposal when it was first broached, and in view of the fact that a standing committee has now been established with terms of reference requiring the committee to pay attention to this matter, is a very contrived contempt of the House of Commons.

The rights of the members of this house under standing order 39 go a step further. They have now been given the right, when Your Honour for reasons that you think are proper rules that a question is not urgent or when hon. members are not satisfied with the answer, to give appropriate notice and debate the matter, and this plan cuts down that right.

While I base my submission on the statement of the Prime Minister and on the absence from the house of ministers who should be here to answer these questions, I also base it on a letter that was sent to all members of the House of Commons, and which I assume is public property, by the President of the Privy Council. Dated yesterday it says:

> On Wednesday, September 25, the Prime Minister asked the house for co-operation in an experiment in relation to the attendance by ministers during the daily question period. I am enclosing a copy of the roster.

On examining the roster, Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note that this is the day the Minister of Agriculture will not be in the house. The whole farcical nature of this experiment is shown by the fact that the minister is not so obviously engaged on business, because when the application under standing order 26 was made he came into the chamber. This arrangement is contrived and continues to be contrived, I say, in complete contempt of the house and parliament.

Briefly, Mr. Speaker, the second paragraph reads as follows:

> This roster is based chiefly on the cabinet obligations of the ministers. Naturally, from time to time ministers will have to be away because of other public responsibilities or illness. It is not suggested that questions should be delayed in such instances; rather, they could be addressed to the Acting Minister or the Parliamentary Secretary.

The only inference that hon. members can derive from that letter is that when, in response to the dictates of the Prime Minister, ministers are not in the house, questions asked of them by hon. members will not be answered but will be disregarded. No attention will be paid to them at all. I think that is quite plain, sir. What the President of the Privy Council is saying in this second paragraph of the letter is that where the minister is away on legitimate business questions can be directed to parliamentary secretaries or the acting minister. He is saying: When a minister is away because the Prime Minister has said he is not to be here, no attention will be paid to questions.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that those of us who have had the opportunity of seeing the extent to which the question period in the United Kingdom has deteriorated to the point that it is useless see in this practice a very serious and retrograde step. I suggest to the government, to the right hon. gentleman and to the President of the Privy Council that if they are seriously interested in saving time and in the expeditious handling of the business of the house, then the one minute or so spent in asking a question and giving an answer could well save a great deal of time later when a member, frustrated in his desire to obtain legitimate information, is driven to the course of making a speech on the matter when such opportunity is given to him.

I suggest that the government seriously review this practice. It is a contempt of parliament and a restriction on the privileges of hon. members. I suggest that the right hon. gentleman review this practice right away and not let this period continue to degenerate. I make this plea sincerely. If not, Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that this house is in for a very difficult time.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I shall take only a brief moment because the case has been extremely well stated by my hon. friend the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). I support his protest and his plea.

I suggest that though there may be many things about our procedure that need to be improved or which are wrong, the question period is not one of our trouble spots. The question period is an occasion when the government is kept on its toes by members of the house generally. I contend that this proposal to have a number of the ministers out of the house every day is an attempt to cool the question period and, in my view, this is not good for parliament.

There was one standing order that the hon. member for Peace River did not quote and to which I should like to refer. Standing order 5 reads as follows:

> Every member is bound to attend the service of the House, unless leave of absence has been given him by the House.

I know that this rule is violated every hour of every day by individual members who are not here and who pay no attention to standing order 5, Mr. Speaker. But for the Prime Minister to stand up and deliberately say that certain of the most important members of this house, namely, members of the cabinet, are not going to be here is, I suggest, in defiance not only of the rights and privileges of the members of the house and in contempt of the importance of the question period, but is in defiance of standing order 5. The government has no right to foist such a practice on this house.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I understand the seriousness of the plea that has been made by members of the opposition but I wish to assure them that there was no intention in our proposition to do something that is in contempt of the house. This is an experiment. It was presented in that light and I think it would be more progressive to try it before discontinuing it, as members of the opposition suggest.

I think the experiment is worth while because not only the opposition but parliament will stand to gain if there can be a little more order on days when we ask our questions. Members of the administration do have to be away on occasion, Mr. Speaker, as is the Secretary of State for External Affairs who is at the United Nations, and the Minister of Finance who has been absent for the commonwealth finance ministers meetings and lately for the World Bank meetings. I myself had to be away yesterday to attend a function in Calgary. It is inevitable that members of the administration have to be away.

In the past, Mr. Speaker, when one minister was away for a period, say at the United Nations, it was possible that the opposition could be stonewalled. A government could say that it would not answer a certain question until the minister returned and that he would answer the question in ten days' or a fortnight's time. We believe that this present arrangement will put the government under an obligation to have somebody here to answer questions in specific departmental areas. If the minister himself cannot be here on a day when he is supposed to be here, then he will be replaced by the acting minister or the second acting minister, by his parliamentary secretary or by the Prime Minister. Someone will have to attempt to answer, and the departments of the absent ministers will be able to brief the acting minister. We hope that this will be to the advantage of the opposition. If it is not to the advantage of parliament we shall discontinue the system.

The house no doubt realizes that members on the front benches have always been here. I see that on the front bench opposite only four members out of 14 are present.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): They were here.

Mr. Baldwin: We are asking the questions. You answer them.

Mr. Trudeau: Certainly, after one hour and 45 minutes of sitting, the percentage of members of this administration present is greater than the percentage of like members in the opposition parties.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: The front benches of the N.D.P. are not doing too badly. Their attendance averages 50 per cent, although a moment ago it was only 25 per cent.

Everyone in this house realizes that members have to be away. That does not mean they are not working as hard as they can for the common weal, or as hard as if they were sitting in the house. They may have business to attend to in various departments or out on the front lawn.

Mr. Horner: Or they may be golfing.

Mr. Trudeau: Hon. members may be in their offices, or in other parts of the country or elsewhere in the world attending to government business.

Mr. Baldwin: Just as the Minister of Agriculture was today. He was not very far away.

Mr. Trudeau: The Minister of Agriculture was on the front lawn talking to the corn growers. If he had not been there you would have complained. We brought him back into the house to deal with the motion under standing order 26, and he was here.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): You brought him back? Would he not come back on his own?

Mr. Trudeau: If he had not come back someone in the opposition would have raised a question based on standing order 26. That is why the minister had to be brought back.

I do not think that many cases of national disaster have arisen from the fact that a question which was asked was so urgent that it had to be answered on the day it was asked and not on the day following. An hon. member referred to what is happening in the United Kingdom. In some instances one minister is present only every three weeks to answer questions. The parliamentary system has not broken down there.

Mr. Baldwin: It has, pretty nearly.

Mr. Trudeau: We are not attempting to go that far. We think this system may be the best proposition for the opposition. They will have the opportunity under it to ask questions, perhaps not of all ministers at one time, which are related to departmental areas. They may ask their questions on given days and we think this policy is to their advantage. If it is not, we can change the system.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it has always been the story of history that when rights were interfered with those who interfered with them found the most philanthropic reasons for what they did.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That has been characteristic. As the Prime Minister spoke I thought he was going to make a good case for the absence of some ministers because, naturally, they have work to do and everyone recognizes that. But for the Prime Minister to introduce this system arbitrarily and gloss it over by the suggestion that what he is doing is for our benefit is, indeed, the very height of political hypocrisy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We did not ask for this. We recognize, as do all who have had positions of responsibility, that ministers at some time must be away. But when the Prime Minister says, "I have decided to assist the opposition"—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: He is worried about the opposition.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —that causes me, free from suspicion as I am—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —to look with some care. I recall so well, sir, the occasion last February when the prime minister, who was then a member of a minority government, in effect said, "We are your masters." This is an obvious application of the philosophy, "We are your masters."

I say to the Prime Minister: When you are making experiments do you not think you should take parliament into your confidence and give your reasons? Should change not be brought about through the instrumentality of discussion? I say, sir, that the rule the Prime Minister is endeavouring to foist on the House of Commons is beyond the rights of the Prime Minister of this country. He cannot tell members of the opposition in parliament how they shall act. He can tell those ministers surrounding him that their mouths must be shut.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He can say that his ministers must be silent and that leaks in the cabinet, described by a former minister—

Mr. Trudeau: A former prime minister.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —as similar to leaks in a sieve, shall be stopped. On reconsideration I think the Prime Minister will decide that he has gone just a little beyond parliamentary practice when he tells this house that from now on it must keep a record of ministerial attendance. Now it is like school.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister is to be here at all times; of course, there will be times when he will be absent, as he must be and as he was in the last couple of days, no doubt in pursuance of responsibilities to the nation. The Minister of Transport is to be absent on Thursday and Friday and present on Monday and Tuesday.

Mr. Trudeau: And on Wednesday.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Secretary of State for External Affairs, who will be away a good deal of the time now while the United Nations is sitting, has the opportunity to be absent on Monday and Friday. The Minister of Public Works is to be absent on Thursday and Friday and the Solicitor General of Canada is to be absent on Thursday and Friday. They have changed around the attendance of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I believe he is to be absent on Tuesday and Friday. The President of the Treasury Board will not be here on Monday and Thursday.

Why, Mr. Speaker, this is conglomerate nonsense. That is all it is. I should like to have been present when they played the ouija game of picking out which ministers would be present in the house and charged with national responsibilities on various days of the week.

Let the Prime Minister once and for all realize this fact. While we want to co-operate with the government, I say to the government, do not apply a throttle to parliament, a throttle put on by the Prime Minister and glossed over by the specious suggestion that "what we are doing is for your benefit". We do not want any of this gratuitous assistance from the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am much indebted to the gratuitous assistance of the right hon. member for Prince Albert in coining one of his classic phrases, "conglomerate nonsense", which so aptly and effectively describes the arguments which have been put forward by hon. members on the opposition side with respect to this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Perhaps I might confine myself to the remarks of the hon. member for Peace River and point out that this proposal is neither in contempt of parliament, a restriction of privileges, nor a violation of standing order 39. The hon. member sought to read into the standing order a wording saying that all ministers must be present. I point out that the standing order provides for the opportunity for hon. members to ask questions but it does not impose the obligation enunciated by the hon. member.

In the same way, Mr. Speaker, I think you will recognize that this is not a question of a breach of the privileges of the house. The hon. member referred to the matter of debate on the adjournment motion. I point out to him that if a question is asked and no answer is given, there is a right to debate on the adjournment motion.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre made an observation which I believe is entirely correct when referring to standing order 5, the requirement for hon. members to be present at the service of the house. From the start of the sitting the Leader of the Opposition and the leader of the New Democratic party were absent, for a very good reason, I know. The hon. member did not say that his leader had leave to be absent, as the standing order requires. Also, the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste was not present.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I do not question the validity of the reasons hon. members have for not being here.

Mr. Baldwin: That is the difference between us. We question the validity of your reasons.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I point out to the hon. member that standing order 5 has not been complied with generally and has not been complied with in the case of the three hon. gentlemen I have referred to.

From the standpoint of public policy there are sound reasons for doing what we propose ought to be done. With the increase in government business, particularly at the executive level, it is desirable that cabinet should have the opportunity of meeting in committee to deal with the various decisions to be made.

Mr. Horner: No.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member for Crowfoot says no, but it seems to me a necessary part of our parliamentary form of government in which the executive is made up of members of this House of Commons. I therefore suggest it is entirely proper that we should adopt this arrangement.

The hon. member for Peace River appeared to look with disdain at the practice of Westminster. I would only repeat that the opportunity to ask questions in this house on a spontaneous basis is not being taken away. Ministers will be here and the opportunity to ask questions will remain. I hope there will be some co-operation from hon. members in terms of posing questions and giving the courtesy of advance notice, in which case I think we will find ourselves with a more effective rather than a less effective question period.

Mr. Speaker: I certainly do not wish to interrupt this discussion but I should bring it to the attention of hon. members that this subject was raised originally as a question of privilege. There is no motion before the chair, and it seems that the hon. member for Peace River was raising a point of order, more or less. I wonder whether we should not use the few minutes which are left to terminate the question period.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): With the greatest respect, Mr. Speaker, I think this is the most important subject which has come before parliament for a long time. The President of the Privy Council has once again confused the functions of parliament with those of the executive. I think the subject deserves some consideration on our part because the rights of parliament and the right of the opposition to get information from the executive are at stake. Perhaps in the past, like all parliaments, we have failed to use our time to best advantage. But today we are on solid ground and I hope that along with other hon. members I shall have the opportunity to be heard.

With the greatest of respect to the statements made by the Prime Minister and the President of the Privy Council, may I say I consider they are trying to put something over on parliament and the Canadian people. I wish to come to grips with the argument advanced by the President of the Privy Council. Let me read the standing order. It says:

> Before orders of the day are proceeded with, questions on matters of urgency may be addressed orally to ministers of the crown—

Nowhere do we find that only some ministers can be questioned on any day. The word "all" is not there, but nowhere does it say that only some ministers may be questioned. The idea is that members of the opposition can question the executive of this country whose function it is to govern, and I think this is where the President of the Privy Council confuses the functions of government with those of parliament.

Let us take a look at the history which led up to this occasion. The government asked members of the opposition to acquiesce in the setting up of a committee to inquire into the various rules which govern the procedures of this house. The opposition worked together with the government in a co-operative manner and a committee was set up to look into the very procedures we are now discussing. The next day the Prime Minister came into the house and unilaterally, without taking parliament into his confidence or placing the question before the committee, made a decision by saying in effect: We are the masters of this house and we intend to implement a rule whether you like it or not.

The Prime Minister put forward a foolish argument when he referred to the absence of some members of the opposition from this chamber. The fact is that it is the function of the government to govern, and it is the duty of ministers to be here and ready to answer questions so that facts may be obtained by members of the opposition. It seems to me he is confusing the roles of the government and of the opposition.

Mr. Trudeau: How can you govern if you are not the master?

Mr. Woolliams: I would say that in the short time he has been Prime Minister of this country the right hon. gentleman has shown that he is going to set himself up as a little tin god, a little dictator. There is no doubt about that. As my right hon. friend from Prince Albert has said, the reason the Prime Minister has brought forward this suggestion is not so as to assist the opposition but in order to assist him in becoming master of this house. He agrees with me that he wants to be master. He silences his ministers. Now he wants to silence the opposition. I say to him, that he is now treading on the very rights of parliament and on the freedom and liberty of the subjects of this country who speak through their representatives here. I plead with the right hon. gentleman to reconsider his position in light of the fact that he has set up a committee to study this very question. I urge him not to make a unilateral decision affecting the most serious matter to have come before parliament in many a day.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to echo some of the remarks made by my right hon. friend from Prince Albert, my hon. friend from Calgary North and others and speak from the point of view of a backbencher. I remind supporters of the government who happen to be sitting on my right that they may find themselves over here permanently after another election, perhaps fighting on the same type of issue as we are concerned with today, one which strikes at the fundamental practices and privileges of this house.

I listened to the Prime Minister today, as I listened to many of his speeches during the campaign, and I still have a smouldering belief that he is sincerely interested in trying to reform some of the practices and procedures of this house to bring them into the mainstream of the second century of our nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nowlan: I believe, too, that the President of the Privy Council, working with the other house leaders, also has a desire to renovate and reform where necessary, and I share his views on renovation and reform to bring our practices and rules into the mainstream of the second century.

Nevertheless, when the President of the Privy Council, let alone the Prime Minister, having agreed to set up a committee to consider these changes, unilaterally imposes a fundamental change in the practices of this house even on an experimental basis, I become most suspicious. I only hope that the government will refer this question to the committee which has been set up to do what we all want to see done, that is, reform the rules.

On another point, I was surprised and disappointed by the specious and fallacious nature of the argument the Prime Minister used, especially coming from a man credited with taking an intellectual and logical approach to matters under discussion. I was disappointed to see him point to his front benches and then to ours and comment that there were X members absent. Clearly, the point is not the number of members present today, or on any particular day, but the principle which is at stake. I am afraid his use of such a specious argument indicates his lack of appreciation of the functions of parliament, and I echo the words of my hon. friend from Calgary North: there is a difference between parliament and the executive.

Before you rise, Mr. Speaker, perhaps you will allow me to make a fundamental point, one which those sitting on the back benches opposite should heed. There are two occasions when a backbencher can stand up in this house and confront a minister. One is during the question period, the other is when the estimates of a department are before the house in committee and it is possible to comment on particular points affecting a constituency in the expectation of a reply. I only wish backbenchers across the way would appreciate the fundamental principle involved here. It does not affect the opposition alone.

So far as the efficiency of this house is concerned, how efficient will the house be when I stand up as a backbencher and direct a question to the Minister of Transport which, it turns out, falls within the responsibility of one of his colleagues? We had an instance today. A question was asked of one minister and he replied "No, that is the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources." Every day, because of the interlocking of departments, one minister hands over questions to another. The Postmaster General, I suppose, is going to be the minister of communications, of the post office, and perhaps of satellites, but there will be conflict with the Department of Transport.

Instead of an efficient house and a shorter question period this proposal will complicate the problem. The question period has not been the problem in this house during my experience, which is the same in time as that of the Leader of the Opposition, two and a half years. In passing may I say that the class of '65 on the government side has gone ahead a heck of a lot faster than the class of '65 on this side.

So far as efficiency is concerned there are two fundamental points involved. First the question period is one of the few times when a backbencher can confront a minister. The second point concerns efficiency. Under the new system, when a backbencher asks a question we are going to have a parliamentary secretary or the Prime Minister say, "I will take notice of it," and the whole thing will have to be regurgitated next day. The functions of one minister are so interrelated with those of another minister that the whole thing bogs down.

We all understand that on occasion ministers have to be away from the house. We understand that the Prime Minister has to be away. I know, Mr. Speaker, that I am speaking past the lunch hour adjournment time, but in conclusion I point out to the Prime Minister that the principle involved in having only five ministers in the house would be equally valid if there were only one minister in the house, and his argument about efficiency leaves me cold.

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: It is after one o'clock and there can be no further debate.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, at one o'clock I was about to add to the arguments put forward by hon. members on this side of the house as to why this arbitrary move on the part of the Prime Minister should not be imposed on this house. The Prime Minister has overlooked one very important fact. It is well known that questions asked on orders of the day can only qualify if they are urgent or of national importance.

As I understand the attendance schedule for ministers, the Minister of Transport, for example, might be absent from Thursday until Tuesday. It is well known that acting ministers do nothing more than take questions as notice. Should an urgent question arise on a Thursday that I wish to ask that minister I will not be in a position to do so until he returns to the house, a period of some five days. As a result of this delay the question might no longer be considered and be ruled out of order. Following the five day delay the question might not be regarded as acceptable.

The Prime Minister has overlooked a lot of factors in regard to this change in the procedures of the house. It is a well established precedent that I am not allowed to direct a question to a minister about any department other than the department for which he is responsible. It follows that no minister should be allowed to answer questions posed by hon. members unless those questions relate to the department of the minister. If this works one way it must work the other way. If I direct a question to the minister of energy or the minister of health, no other minister should be allowed to answer that question because it does not pertain to his department.

The Prime Minister has referred to the responsibilities of his ministers and has said that they will be absent on certain days. During his remarks this morning he said that ministers may be absent on occasions because of government business. I suggest what this means is that cabinet members will have a three day work week. This is clear from what the Prime Minister has said. He is now trying to arrange a three day work week for his cabinet members.

It would be very enlightening to members of this house to know what the Prime Minister thinks about our rules of procedure. Far be it from me to lecture hon. members about these rules, because everyone knows what I do to them. I am in a position, however, to call to the attention of the Prime Minister the fact that he might do a lot of good for himself, the government and this house if he would familiarize himself with the responsibilities of his cabinet members.

This week I posed a question and the Prime Minister stood up and said that the minister of mines would provide an answer. The minister of mines has no jurisdiction whatever in respect of the matter to which I referred. Surely the Prime Minister should ascertain the responsibilities of his various ministers.

Mr. Trudeau: I am just new. Give me a chance.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): After stumbling and fumbling around trying to answer a question I posed, the Prime Minister suggested that another minister would answer the question, although its subject matter did not fall within the purview of responsibility of that minister. I think the Prime Minister should familiarize himself with the rules of procedure and the duties of his cabinet ministers before he attempts to impose changes in our long standing procedures.

Mr. Trudeau: I will take a day per week to do so.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): At the rate the Prime Minister is going a day per week will not be enough.

Mr. Trudeau: Then I will take two.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Let me also point out to the Prime Minister that there are other rules with which he should familiarize himself before making changes. On several occasions last week the Prime Minister broke the rules of this house; yet new members are called to task. When the Prime Minister was on his feet earlier today he broke the rules. These rules are not made for the Prime Minister to twist and change to the satisfaction of his cabinet.

The least the Prime Minister can do is familiarize himself with the duties of his colleagues so that when he is asked a question in the absence of any minister he will know which minister to designate to take notice of the question. During the last week I asked two questions of urgency concerning problems in my constituency. The Prime Minister referred me to two different ministers, neither of whom had any responsibility in respect of the problems. I had reference to a specific report and I suppose the ministers responsible were not aware of their responsibility.

This government wants to complete parliamentary business as quickly as possible. The government initiated a study in respect of this Cape Breton problem which was completed on June 25. The report suggested certain legislative measures and the responsible minister has had this report for some days but has not released it. Is there something in the report that the people of Cape Breton should not know?

Mr. Trudeau: Are you obeying the rules of relevancy now?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I hardly think that an interjection by the Prime Minister from his seat is in accordance with the rules. Let me say again that the Prime Minister should learn the rules of this house and familiarize himself with our procedures before imposing changes. He should study these long-standing rules before arbitrarily imposing new rules.

[Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond).]

If I want to ask the Minister of Transport a question of urgency on a Thursday I will have to wait until perhaps the following Monday to get an answer. As a result of this delay the question, as I have suggested, would no longer be urgent and would be ruled out of order. Any question put to a member of cabinet on a given day must meet the qualifications imposed by Mr. Speaker. Having met those qualifications, we can only get the proper answer if the question is answered on that particular day. This waiting is no good. I think the Prime Minister had better smarten up to the extent of realizing that opposition members are entitled to an answer when a question is asked. The government should not be allowed to sit on questions for four or five days simply because certain ministers do not realize that a particular report is their responsibility.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, if I might have less than three minutes I would like to speak to the question privilege raised by the hon. member for Peace River. The Prime Minister, with his impressive background, should realize more than most members that it is often said these days that the executive is exercising more and more power and control over parliament and private members than was the case decades ago, and that relative to other forms of government such as the congressional the power of the executive in our system is perhaps growing too much.

There is one argument which shows there is a redeeming feature about the parliamentary system and affects the relative power of the executive and private members, under our system, unlike any other, there is provision for members of the executive being held to daily account. This is done through the question period, at which time the tradition and practice have been that members of the cabinet present themselves for interrogation and to supply information. It is not just that they are expected to do so; this is an old practice that goes back over the centuries. Just as the right hon. member for Prince Albert indicated earlier today, I think the indication the Prime Minister has given that this practice will be impinged upon simply for the convenience of the executive will be very much to the detriment of parliament as a whole.

The only other point I want to make is that in all this matter a very disappointing role has been played by the President of the Privy Council. He has been holding talks, discussions and negotiations with the house leaders of the other parties and has been soliciting their views and ideas with regard to likely ways in which the rules and procedures of this house could be reformed so as to expedite the passage of the necessary business of the house. But all along he knew that the Prime Minister had in mind making a rather drastic change with respect to cabinet members' attendance in this house.

I suggest that this point bears directly on the whole question of rules of procedure, the function of the opposition, etc. Therefore I think it was certainly unkind of the President of the Privy Council not to let us know that the Prime Minister had this in mind. I suggest that he was bargaining and negotiating in something less than good faith when he did not mention it to the house.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Schreyer: Yes.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Has the hon. member inquired from his house leader whether a suggestion of this kind with respect to the question period was in the documents that he saw earlier in the summer?

Mr. Schreyer: I will let my colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre answer for himself.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We objected to it at that time.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As I recall it, you said nothing about it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is not correct.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Speaker, I indicated at the outset that I wished to take only two or three minutes. I believe I have made the two points of my argument, which is what I set out to do.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, one point only comes to my mind in looking over this so-called roster. First, I certainly do not accept the idea, for the reasons that have been put forward by other speakers on this side of the house, that we have to live with this crazy notion for awhile—for how long we do not know.

I should like to ask whether the President of the Privy Council would consider changing Wednesday, the day when all the ministers are supposed to be here, to another day of the week when the question period is longer. In other words, if the government is sincere in its desire to assist opposition members, as has been put forward, why is it that the only day of the week all the ministers are to be here is the day on which we have the shortest question period? If we have to live with this plan I suggest that either the question period be lengthened on Wednesday, so we will have a chance to examine all the ministers, or another day of the week should be chosen when the question period is longer.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): With the indulgence of the house, Mr. Speaker, in answer to this question I would be prepared to make it Wednesday and to—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister has already taken part in this debate, but with the unanimous consent of the house he may be allowed to speak to the question a second time. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I accept the offer of the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster and would be quite agreeable to extending the question period on Wednesday to the full one hour limit, with the question period on Monday, of course, being reduced to 40 minutes.

Mr. Nesbitt: How about having all the cabinet members here on the other days?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Will you attend yourself?

Mr. Nesbitt: That does not make any difference.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It does not make any difference in your case.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, will you grant me the privilege of asking a question? I did not expect that my simple question on the matter would lead to this debate. In view of the informative discussion that has taken place, which has been noted by the Prime Minister, could I ask the Prime Minister whether he would be prepared to reconsider having this system come into effect on Monday? Would the Prime Minister hold it in abeyance for further consideration? In view of the discussion that has taken place, and perhaps in order to bring it to a halt, I ask the Prime Minister to hold in abeyance putting this system into effect on Monday.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Moose Jaw.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister whether he will give me an answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We should proceed in an orderly fashion. We will be returning to the question period in a short while. The hon. member may wish to ask his question at that time.

Mr. Skoberg: I apologize, Mr. Speaker. I thought we had possibly returned to the question period at this time. If we have not returned to the question period and are still in the bulrushes with regard to this question, I should like the privilege of asking a question later.

Mr. Speaker: As the house knows, we are still on the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. Skoberg: Am I permitted to ask a question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: There seems to be a disposition to return to the question period.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

REQUEST FOR DELAY IN IMPLEMENTATION OF PROPOSED CHANGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister, in view of the importance of the preceding discussion, not have the system go into effect on Monday next? Would he consult all those who are so interested in this matter and hold it in abeyance? I ask the Prime Minister whether he will agree to this now.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the first time I spoke about this matter was last April. I spoke of it again many times during the election campaign. The President of the Privy Council spoke about it in his discussions with the leaders of the other parties. It should not come as a surprise to hon. members if they followed the election campaign. It is an idea for which I thought we had a mandate from the people. Perhaps we did not. But this is one of our election promises that we feel we should carry out.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: We all want to make parliament more efficient. I explained to hon. members this morning that we are not trying to be doctrinaire about this. We want to be experimental. We beseech the members of the opposition to take a little chance with novelty to see how it works. If it does not work to the greater advantage of parliament, we will go back to our old conservative ways.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman if he does not think the people of Canada have taken enough chance with novelty already.

Mr. Winch: I have a supplementary question which I should like to address directly to the Prime Minister because it is of concern to members of parliament. Will the Prime Minister not be dictatorial but give us an opportunity—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is simply restating the same question with only a slight variation.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

NEWFOUNDLAND—COMPLAINTS RESPECTING EARNINGS IN RURAL COMMUNITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I take it we have reverted to questions. I have been trying to ask this question since September 19 and I would like to have an answer now because I feel it is urgent. It is directed to the Postmaster General. In view of the many complaints made to me by postmasters and postmistresses in rural communities in Newfoundland regarding discriminatory low wages paid to them, some as low as $13 a week for rent and salary, would the minister investigate this serious situation and report his findings to the house as soon as possible?

Hon. Eric Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I have to investigate the situation. I can report to the house right now in reply to the hon. member's question. As the hon. member knows, we have a number of post offices, to be exact 2,437, which have an annual revenue of less than $445 a year. We place sub-post offices in general stores and pharmacies right across the country.

The salary is related to the number of stamps that are sold or sales that are made. We are actually going through a process of closing a number of these post offices because they are not profitable, as the hon. member has just suggested, either to the person who works there only part time or to the post office which at a cost of $1,100 or $1,200 in some cases may have a revenue from the sale of stamps and unemployment insurance stamps of about $82 to $115. This is the problem. That is about as full a report as I can give. Those people who are getting $13 a week are not full time employees. They are working in a store in some other occupation.

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS RETURNS ACT

ALLEGED DELAY IN SUBMISSION OF RETURNS BY CORPORATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that the provisions of the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act passed in 1962 commit the minister to present an annual report on the operations of business firms and unions in Canada, can the minister explain why the returns from the trade union section have been submitted on schedule while the last annual returns from the corporations section were for the year 1963?

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member might put that question on the order paper with profit. This might be a good time to call orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROVISION OF PRIVATE MEMBERS HOUR THIS DAY

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of order. Before we go on to the orders of the day I wonder whether we could revert to motions for the purpose of making an arrangement for the private members' hour this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, many hon. members have pointed out the fact that since the first item of business today will be a resolution there will be no private members hour this afternoon, as indeed there was none yesterday. I believe, after discussion, that there would be agreement to an order along the following lines. I move:

That if the resolution called as the first order of business be not passed before 5 p.m. today and notwithstanding the provisions of standing order 61A, the hour between 5 p.m. and 6 p.m. this afternoon be given over to private members business, and that for the purpose of standing order 61A today be considered to be one sitting day under that standing order.

Mr. Speaker: Is there agreement to the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE AMOUNT, RATE OF CALCULATION, ETC.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act to increase to six thousand dollars the maximum amount of advance payment that may be obtained by a producer under that act during a crop year; to increase to twice the present rate the rate at which advance payments are calculated; to permit the calculation of advance payments on grain deliverable under unit quotas, and for other related purposes.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Béchard in the chair.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Chairman, it is a great pleasure for me to rise in this house today to speak on a resolution which is of such importance to prairie farmers in particular. The amendments which this resolution proposes are very important at the present time, and I hope that everyone in the house will agree fairly quickly that this is indeed the case.

Perhaps it would be appropriate for me at this stage to touch briefly upon some of the history of the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act and to describe some of its uses in the past. This act was proclaimed on November 25, 1957 and through it cash has been advanced interest free to grain producers in western Canada against the security of threshed farm-stored grain. This has meant that producers have been able to receive cash for their products when there has been a delay in delivering to country elevators. From the time the program began, approximately 21 per cent of the eligible farmers have each year taken advantage of this act. The total cash advances over the nearly 11 year period have amounted to about $450 million. Each year on an average approximately $40 million has been advanced in this fashion.

In the 1967-68 crop year the total exceeded $47 million in advances to 45,811 producers. The recovery rate has been particularly good over the period this scheme has been in effect. Something in excess of 99.5 per cent of all advances has been recovered. In this scheme the government has borne the interest charges involved, and the total interest to the end of July of 1968 has amounted to $7.5 million. The government's share of default has come to a total of $49,845. Both figures cover the 11 year period during which the act has been in effect.

It is interesting to note that it has been generally the smaller producer who has benefited from the act. In only one year, the last year, has the average advance for all producers exceeded $1,000. In this last year the figure was $1,032.

I would now like to touch briefly on the main features of the proposed amendments to the act. The maximum advance under the act will be increased from $3,000 to $6,000. Comparatively few producers have sufficient acreage to allow them to benefit from this increase alone, and to ensure that the smaller producers will benefit from the act the rate of advance per bushel is to be dealt with. This will change the present rates so that in place of 50 cents per bushel for wheat an advance of $1 per bushel will be available. For oats, the figure of 20 cents will be changed to 40 cents per bushel, and for barley 35 cents will become 70 cents. With these new rates, these producers will be able to obtain double the amount they could have obtained under the existing act.

In a subsidiary change, exceptions relating to the unit quota or the initial quota will be removed from the act. The unit quota, of course, allows each producer, regardless of his acreage, to make a specific initial delivery of grain. In the existing act, grain which a farmer has on hand to fill his unit quota is not counted in determining his eligibility for an advance. In the new act, the distinction between unit and regular quotas will be removed. Because no change is contemplated in the schedule for repayment of advances, the burden of repayment relative to the advance will be lessened. For various reasons, the unit delivery will also then be counted for repayment purposes, as it is for eligibility. I think this is a most important point, that there is no change in the schedule for repayment, and I emphasize it even though it is clearly not an amendment to the act. Because of the increase in advances, the lack of any change in the repayment schedule will be of distinct advantage to the producer.

I want to assure hon. members that in the proposed amendments there will be provision for those producers who may already have applied for an advance in this crop year. These producers will be able to apply for additional advances which will put them in the same position as a fellow producer who has not yet made use of the act. Other amendments of a more routine nature will not be enlarged upon by me here. Of course, there will be opportunities to discuss them at a later stage. They are generally designed to facilitate administration of the act in the circumstances of the larger advances which I have described.

The Canadian Wheat Board administers this act on behalf of the government and the elevator companies and their agents extend the advances to the individual producers on application. The act has functioned very well these past years. I want to express the appreciation of the government to the Canadian Wheat Board and to the various elevator companies for the effective manner in which this act has been administered.

The grain producers, too, deserve credit for their co-operation and a particular word of praise for their repayment record. This does not surprise those of us who know the character of the Canadian farmer, but I draw it to the attention of less fortunate members. I look forward, Mr. Chairman, to the approval of these amendments so that this act, so important to the farmers, can be brought more into line with present conditions.

Mr. Thompson (Battleford-Kindersley): I have a question for the minister. I did not quite understand the implication of his reference to the initial delivery quota and repayment. Would he clarify that a little? I am referring to the units.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): In the existing act, as the hon. member no doubt knows, the unit quota is not taken into consideration in deciding the eligibility of a farmer, nor is it taken into consideration at the time of repayment. Under the proposed amendments, any grain which a farmer may have on hand at the beginning of the crop year, or any grain he may have on hand, is counted in determining his eligibility. The amount which he may deliver on his unit quota will not be subtracted in the future from the amount of grain he has on hand, as is the case at the moment.

Hon. members will appreciate that this may be particularly useful to farmers if delivery is indeed very slow at the beginning of the crop year. Once the unit has been treated in this way for this purpose, then according to the same logic it is treated in the same way later in the year for repayment of the advance. So it is taken into account at that time.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, in rising to say a few words at the resolution stage of this cash advance legislation, I cannot help but note the minister's closing words. He said that these amendments would update the legislation and keep it in step with conditions. It is sad that western farmers have to have this legislation to double the advances that may be made. It is known, of course, that their costs have doubled. It is a sad thing, really, that very little has been done about this, but the farmer will be given a larger cash advance on his grain. It is a sad thing that something more has not been done to help reduce the costs or alleviate the load these costs impose on the farmer.

I cannot help but think back to the introduction of this act in 1957. We western farmers argued for something like this as far back as the fifties. The former deputy minister of trade and commerce said it could not be done; it would be impossible to administer. The statement of the deputy minister of that day is in line with the statement the Minister of Agriculture made today when he told the corn farmers of southern Ontario it was impossible to bring their product under the stabilization measure. As I say, the deputy minister of trade and commerce said at that time it was impossible to administer legislation of this type, but 11 years later the measure has been proven to be feasible.

I am glad that the present minister of external affairs, who at that time was deputy minister of trade and commerce, does not have to come before parliament as the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is doing now and ask that this measure be approved. I am sure that would be a little too embarrassing for him.

There are some aspects of this measure which have not worked too smoothly. The minister did not refer to them, so I should like to bring them to his attention so that consideration can be given to them before the bill is introduced.

First, I should like to ask him if the elevator companies have been consulted with regard to the higher cash advances that will be paid? Are they in agreement with this idea? Second, it has become standard practice that a farmer can only have a cash advance once during a crop year. If a farmer has grain in storage, takes a cash advance on farm stored grain and then delivers grain to pay off that cash advance, even though he may have more grain on his farm he is prevented, for some reason or other, from taking another cash advance. I see no reason for this. If a farmer has paid off one cash advance why can he not take another? I should like the minister to consider this question because I think that provision has handicapped a number of farmers.

Another problem is related to the taking of cash advances on grain grown on rented or leased land. This has caused a great deal of trouble because in many cases the owner of the land is many miles away from the farm and it is very difficult to get his signature to a document granting permission for the farmer to sell the grain or take a cash advance on it. In my opinion the wheat board, the elevator companies and the government could work out a system whereby cash advances could be made on the farmer's share of the grain grown on rented land. I should like the minister to get together with representatives of the elevator companies to try to work out something along this line.

I should also like to say a few words about the farmers' ability to repay. If this resolution is accepted in its present form and the farmer may borrow up to $1 per bushel on his stored grain, then the very minute he delivers his wheat to the elevator company he has to pay back the advance he has received. If he is receiving at the delivery point only $1.50 a bushel, or $1.37 for No. 3 or $1.40, depending on where the delivery is made, and he has to deduct $1 a bushel for his cash advance, he will become more and more hesitant to deliver any grain. Therefore the payment will not necessarily be any great boost to the agricultural community.

I suggest that basically what the government should do is to allow the farmers to deliver their wheat as soon as possible, ensuring that there is a greater degree of even distribution throughout the prairie provinces. In the past couple of years there has been a great deal of difficulty in marketing grain, on one occasion because the railroads were reluctant to handle grain and wanted to haul potash instead. We have also seen in the past great interest on the part of the grain companies in storing low grades of wheat at the Lakehead, which has caused some points to have more storage space at the end of the year than others.

I want to leave this point with the minister. This legislation is not necessarily going to solve all our marketing problems. The government is going to advance to farmers another 50 cents per bushel on their own wheat, but this does not free the government from the responsibility of marketing wheat. I urge the Minister without Portfolio and the Minister of Trade and Commerce to get together and establish an objective for this year as to the amount of wheat they are going to sell abroad. This will instil greater confidence in the agricultural industry on the prairies in the ability of the government to market wheat.

Last year the farmers had a very poor delivery quota, the maximum being something like six bushels an acre. Let me tell hon. gentlemen opposite that you cannot make a living growing wheat when you are allowed to sell only six bushels an acre, because it may cost as much as $2 an acre to spray for wild oats. It may also cost $1 an acre for fertilizer. Then there are all the other expenses, such as seeding and combining the grain. It costs over $3 an acre to combine grain, so how can a farmer operate with a six bushel quota?

The cash advance that is given to the farmer on his grain he has to repay eventually. The only way he can do this is to deliver his wheat, and he cannot deliver his wheat unless he has a sufficient quota and there is storage space at the elevator. If you follow the chain of reasoning, Mr. Chairman, it all goes back to the question of export sales.

It is interesting to note that about three weeks ago the United States government told U.S. farmers that they plan to export this year 750 million bushels. That is to be their target. Last year that was their target and in fact they exceeded it. This government has not got the intestinal fortitude, the confidence in itself or the initiative to say to the western farmers: We are with you; we will do our utmost to sell 450 million bushels of wheat this year. That is what the government should say. It is the duty of the government to give the farmers some hope of paying back the cash advances they will receive under this piece of legislation, instead of sitting on their hands with their mouths closed and saying that in three or even ten years perhaps they can sell a lot of grain.

[Mr. Horner.]

Under the cash advance legislation these loans have to be repaid in the year that the grain is delivered. Therefore I urge the Minister without Portfolio and the Minister of Trade and Commerce not to rest on their laurels because they are giving the farmers 50 cents more a bushel cash by way of advance. As I say, the farmer has to repay this sum when he delivers his grain. I urge these two ministers to go out and sell wheat and thus restore the confidence of the wheat growing industry of western Canada. This very industry has in the last five or six years bailed out the Canadian government from a lot of financial problems. Particularly during the last three or four years, our balance of payments problem was greatly relieved when Canadian exports of grain, mainly wheat, were stepped up to quite a large extent.

Therefore I leave with the minister this urgent plea. Let the government not be satisfied with a six bushel quota, as it was last year when the grain marketing year closed on July 31 last. Let the government tell the farmers that it will do its utmost to see that the quota is increased to at least eight, nine or possibly ten bushels. This is what the farmers want to hear and it will restore the confidence and way of life of this industry. I urge both ministers to restore that confidence because it is badly needed in this very important segment of our economy today.

Mr. Pepin: We will work at it seven days a week.

Mr. Horner: The farmer has to work 16 hours a day, seven days a week, so why not?

Mr. Pepin: That is what we are doing.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, I have been long enough acquainted with the irrepressible member for Crowfoot to know that he has to have the last word. I certainly agree with the Minister without Portfolio that the proposal to increase the cash advance this year is in line with existing conditions under which grain is piling up on the prairies. Our farmers were short of cash before they went into this harvest season, let alone what their circumstances will be afterwards. Their situation has been complicated, of course, by bad weather. However, farmers have learned to live with different kinds of weather. If one were not prepared to suffer the consequences of weather, one would very soon cease to farm. The fact is that it is not so much the weather as the economic situation brought about by the present government and its administrative policies which has caused the real difficulty for the farmers at this time.

• (3:20 p.m.)

The availability of farm credit should help to solve the farmers' difficulties, and the government has made a fair start in this legislation. Practically all the farm legislation we are considering at the moment is legislation having to do with credit, and the current piece of legislation we are now considering will be of advantage to our farmers. The money to be paid under this legislation does not bear interest and will not increase the cost of carrying a debt load. The farmer will still have that load but the cost of carrying it will not be increased.

All the same, this measure is strictly a temporary one. Any money the farmer borrows he must pay back as he delivers wheat and this, of course, brings us to the central question of our ability to market and sell his product. The wheat carryover this year is the highest since 1957, the year in which cash advances were initiated. It now stands at 733 million bushels of wheat.

The situation was aggravated to a considerable extent by the grain handlers' strike which tied up deliveries. The strike was allowed to go on far too long; fortunately it was settled eventually. The strike aggravated the problems inherent in slow marketing. At the same time, despite suggestions and requests made to the government the farmers will not be assisted in the building of grain storage facilities to handle the present crop. Instead, farmers will be forced to spend their own money or to borrow additional money in order to store grain. One may be sure that with a 733 million bushel carryover, a great deal of grain remains on farms.

If you go to my area of Saskatchewan and down the road to the east from my farm you will find a man who farms a section of 640 acres. This crop year all his granaries, with the exception of one small one, were filled with wheat. At another place farther down the road is another man who farms a section and a half, 960 acres. That man has grain from the previous year sitting in temporary storage. There is not point in mentioning names, but if you travel about the district you will find, a similar situation prevailing generally. These farmers are not large farmers when one compares them with others in western and central Saskatchewan but they must go out and buy granaries to store their grain, as I must. Out of our resources, out of our savings, we must draw money to build storage facilities. This money is dead money; it is lost money because the storage bins are of value only for the storage of grain which cannot be sold. If anyone on the government side has the idea that the wheat economy of Saskatchewan can or will operate on a six bushel quota, he had better disabuse himself of this idea because it will not.

The corn growers came to stand in front of the parliament buildings in Ottawa. I tell you, sir, that if it were not for all the rock, bush, and water in the pre-Cambrian shield between here and Winnipeg, you would see just as many farmers from Saskatchewan driving their tractors here and standing on the front lawn.

I wish to impress on the house that this is a temporary piece of legislation; it solves the problem temporarily. I hope no one is lulled into the idea that our problems have been met and resolved. I do not blame the government for our slow wheat trade on the international market. Anyone can read the figures. I do, however, criticize the government for restricting some imports, and in this connection I shall mention an example. We restrict imports from Singapore. I read a press report saying that customs officials had put pressure on Singapore traders to force them to put "voluntary quotas on exports of cotton shirts and trousers," no doubt to protect the textile industry in Canada. That was the sort of method we used with the Japanese for years. The restrictions are not really voluntary. The quota on Japanese colour television sets has been cut back recently in order to allow the industry in Canada to compete effectively.

Sir, Japan is just behind England in being one of the largest buyers of Canadian wheat. Is this our way of increasing wheat sales? Is this how we want to encourage our wheat to move into the markets of the world? That sort of thing violates the spirit and the intention of some of our trade agreements. Is this the new look of the new society or is it simply the old protectionism of the thirties being updated and made to fit conditions in the 1960's. If we want to sell grain or other products we must make progress in the trade negotiations which have been going on.

Western farmers viewed with uneasiness the end of the international wheat agreement. The new international grains agreement still has to prove itself as being a workable instrument. Before the agreement came fully into force we saw what happened last year. The United States and two or three other competitors slashed prices, and it fell to us in Canada to bear the brunt of maintaining the existing price structure until the grains agreement could be signed. The western farmer paid the shot.

From my observation, I do not think any great progress was made in the GATT negotiations in breaking down barriers for agricultural products. I base my opinion on the observation that the restrictions on agricultural products entering the European Common Market remained practically the same as they were before. In the European Common Market agricultural products are subsidized and the market is protected against Canadian farm products. Our best chance at the moment appears to be in the Asian markets. I notice that the Australians have developed a brand new product for sale to the Indonesian market; they call it Rycena. Perhaps we should be doing more along these lines. I doubt whether we are moving fast enough at present.

During the election campaign we heard about a proposal to recognize the People's Republic of China—I think that is the proper designation. This is what the grain growers out west, where I live, were told. However, now that the government is in office, I do not read in the press these days of any great haste about doing this. If anything is being done I shall be pleased to hear so. It is to this area we must look for the increased markets we need.

We are told by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce that we are to have a new national grains council, whatever that may be. I have seen press releases about it. The other day I asked the minister whether he would table the terms of reference and explain the purpose of the council, as well as give us the names of those who were to become members. As I read his reply in Hansard I understand he is ready to table the names of the members after they have been appointed. There is no mention of his attitude toward making known the terms of reference. I think it is important we should know the purpose of this proposed council and its terms of reference. In short, we should be told what it is for.

Over the years, indeed, practically speaking, during my lifetime, we have built up grain marketing machinery in western Canada largely as the result of the efforts of the farmers who live there and produce the grain. We have built the kind of marketing machinery which we thought was best suited to do the job. We had a fair amount of trouble while doing so and we encountered some rough experiences. But out of it all we emerged with the Canadian Wheat Board, a staff who knew how to run it, the Board of Grain Commissioners, capable of controlling and overseeing the grain trade, and under them a staff of technical people well versed in the technical aspects of wheat marketing. More to the point, they are capable of handling wheat and grading it. Over the years we built up this system.

Within the Canadian Wheat Board we developed a staff with the knowledge and ability to sell wheat—and I know whereof I speak because I have sat with them overseas during two international negotiations. Certainly you cannot find more able men. We have people in the experimental service who know how to breed wheat and develop it. I wish we had more. I wish governments in the past had seen fit to provide money so that we did have more. No new variety of grain is approved unless these experimental people approve it and unless the Board of Grain Commissioners and the western grains standards committee give it approval. So if the sale of wheat is to be an imaginative, onward going process, there are already people with the brains and skill to do the job.

Now we are to have a national grains council. According to the last report I read, they are to meet in Winnipeg and consider their terms of reference. These could be wide. If those terms of reference include wheat selling, pricing and so on, does the government intend to listen to the advice of the proposed national grains council or of the Canadian Wheat Board? Surely the time has come when the Minister of Trade and Commerce should answer fully the question I put to him in this house and tell us what the purpose of this grains council is to be. Like the trade policy of the government, like the foreign policy of the government, this will affect our well-being as wheat growers. Unless we do better than we have been doing, next year perhaps the Minister without Portfolio will be offering us loans of twice $6,000, that is $12,000. They have already gone up from three to six. Unless a better job is done he will be back with a worse problem next year, no doubt about it.

The farmers offered at one time to put up their own money for wheat utilization. The offer was not accepted, and I do not know why. In my experience in farm organization I do not recall many occasions when all the unions and federations of agriculture in western Canada were completely agreed on one thing. On that occasion they were, but the offer was not accepted. What we really need are trained, expert people, men who are trained in our experimental and research systems, trained in the Wheat Board's selling techniques, equipped with the technical know-how which lies at the core of the Board of Grain Commissioners operations and which has always been available to government. If we marshal this skill and experience we will make progress. We do not need a lot more opinions. What we do need now is a fair bit of action.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words on this occasion. First of all I want to congratulate my neighbour from the constituency to the west of my own upon having been appointed Minister without Portfolio, and upon having the opportunity to introduce legislation of this type. During the ten years that I have represented the people of my constituency I have recommended to them that they make the maximum use of this legislation. I have told them they should take advantage of the fact that the government of this country had faith in them and believed their grain would eventually be sold. This was primarily the thinking of the government in 1957 when it introduced the cash advance legislation. Up until the time that the Conservative government took office the attitude of the preceding government had been that it had no faith in the farmers' ability to sell their grain, and it did not believe cash advances should be paid to farmers for grain stored on their farms.

It is interesting to see the transformation over the years. I know the minister was quite sincere in his pleasure when introducing this legislation at this time. I note that over the last 11 years it has cost the treasury something like $7½ million in order that farmers may derive benefit from this legislation, and not only the farmers but all business enterprises right down the line. Up until the time cash advance legislation was introduced, business was at a virtual standstill until some grain was moved. It came to the point that grain could not be moved off the farms until January, by which time the roads were blocked. It was impossible for farmers to get to the bins without a vast expenditure on snow plowing. The result was that many farmers were practically on a starvation diet all winter. All that changed following the introduction of cash advance legislation.

I can remember the days when long lines of trucks were hauled by horses, carrying heavy loads that made the horses almost double up by the time they reached an elevator. Sweating horses stood for three quarters of a day waiting for the trucks to be discharged at an elevator. Those days are gone, and it is a good thing that they are.

I have taken advantage of the cash advance legislation in the years that I have farmed. In my own farming operation I know that property taxes have increased again this year. Fertilizers are more expensive. Labour costs are greater. Now the government is introducing legislation that will raise interest charges. Inflated land prices have resulted in greater costs every year. Machinery costs have gone up, and each year the annual trek to the bank has become a little harder.

Losses on sales of grain have played havoc with the farmers' income. This year we have poor quality grain. I understand that the crop in the southern part of my area was frozen this year, and that, as a result, returns on it will not be too high. In fact I know that a lot of the grain will be sold as feed. The amount of money a farmer will receive for a bushel of wheat will be just slightly over $1.

As a result, and even though cash advances will be available, the farmer will be somewhat reluctant to take advantage of this legislation because he knows that when he delivers his wheat to an elevator he will not receive a very big cheque for it. The farmer always worries what he will do when the time comes that he has no grain to sell and he has no further source of income.

According to the statistics that I have before me, grain sales last year were 180 million bushels lower than the previous year. It is interesting to recall that when cash advance legislation was being advocated the suggestion was made that the Wheat Board would resign. But experience over the years since then has shown that this legislation, instead of making things more difficult for the Wheat Board, has enhanced its position. It has not been subjected to the same type of pressure from farm groups, and people interested in the marketing business, to move all the grain immediately. As a result the Wheat Board has gone about its business of obtaining markets as efficiently as possible. In fact cash advance legislation has left the road clear for the board to operate as efficiently as it sees fit.

I see that one of the amendments the minister has indicated he will introduce will raise the advance to $1. This was one of the suggestions my party advocated during the last election campaign. The Liberal party was somewhat reluctant to accept it, but now I am glad to see that party has adopted it. Next year we hope that our crops will not be as inferior as they are this year, with the result that once more the situation will improve.

The hon. member for Crowfoot has suggested that when a farmer takes a partial advance and has repaid it he should be able to obtain a second advance. This would be in the case of a farmer not taking the maximum amount of $6,000, and having the necessary grain. In such event he should not be restricted to one loan.

There may be good reasons why a farmer will be hesitant to take the maximum loan. First of all, farmers want to be able to repay everything they owe. They do not want to be so close to the line that they will be in default. Second, a farmer may be reluctant to obtain the maximum amount, because when he delivers a load of grain to an elevator he does not want half of his cheque sliced immediately to repay his loan. A farmer may require just enough to tide him over until January 1. Then comes another year for income tax purposes, and he may need money immediately after January 1.

Further, if a farmer were allowed to obtain a partial advance initially, the amount that would be charged to the treasury by way of payment on interest would be lighter. Then the farmer could obtain a second advance at a later date. For these reasons I suggest that the minister should consider the possibility of making provision for at least two, or if necessary three partial advances. Such a step might be cheaper in cost to the treasury.

Another matter I wish to mention is that of absentee landlords. In some cases these landlords are even out of the country, while in others they are far away from the area in which they own land. I know the difficulty involved here. In conjunction with the rest of my operation I work my brother's land. Sometimes it is impossible to contact him, yet on occasion we may require a cash advance. If for example the total cash advance allotment were $6,000, and if the landlord's share were $1,000, then I should be granted $5,000 provided I sign a statement. Second, the permit book should be arranged so that in a year that land is being summerfallowed a statement could be signed by the landlord or renter to the effect that there would be no share coming due to the landlord.

These questions have been asked many times over the years. Many farmers find themselves in the position that they would forget about a cash advance rather than go to the trouble of finding the landlord. We should make it possible for as many farmers as possible to get cash advances if they require them.

I should like to refer to one other aspect regarding the need for cash advances. There has been a tremendous drop in grain sales. As I pointed out the other day in this house, we have been told that one of the reasons grain sales had decreased was related to our high quality grain. We know this year that we will have sufficient quantities of low quality grain. Why have we not had an announcement of an increase in sales? What excuse does this government intend to give for failing to make such an announcement. We certainly have no shortage of low quality grain, so why is there a delay in finding markets?

We are always very conscious about creating savings for our farm community. It seems to me that a savings could be created by extending the use of Churchill for the shipment of grain. The minister is a strong advocate of the use of this port, and I am sure the farmers would be able to save money in this way.

I was interested the other day to hear the minister say, in replying to the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, that a study was being conducted regarding the possible extension of the use of the port at Churchill. I asked today whether this was an interdepartmental study. Very often such studies are secret and one is never aware of the results. What has happened in the past is that interdepartmental studies are used to maintain the status quo and support what the government has been doing. What I am attempting to suggest now is that a commission should be set up to which all interested parties could make representation. It should hold public hearings to discuss why greater use is not being made of this port. Perhaps the reason relates to high interest rates, and if this could be determined perhaps a solution could be found. In any event the results of these studies should be brought out in the open so that we may all know what the trouble is. Surely there must be a solution, and various organizations such as the Hudson Bay Route Association have been hammering at this idea for a long time.

I am sure these organizations will be reasonable if a proper explanation is given, but they are not satisfied with this under-the-table and behind-the-curtain action.

I asked the Minister of Transport today whether there was going to be a report released on the study that has taken place, but he did not know. Not long ago he said, with a swelled chest, that this was one of the fine things this government was doing. Today he said he was not sure the results would be made public. Perhaps he has read the results and does not want to make them known.

During the election campaign the Prime Minister said that one of the objects of his government was to sell wheat. He referred to an estimate that over a period of three years we would sell 1,300,000,000 bushels of wheat. I hope the government will show some leadership in this regard. Whether things will change as a result of the establishment of a grain council, I do not know. I am not sure that this council will do any more than has been done by the Wheat Board or the Department of Trade and Commerce. Perhaps we will see some results, but what can the grain council do that is not being done by the Wheat Board? What authority, power and management will that council have? I suspect it is a haven for has-beens. I suspect that this grain council has been established for the benefit of unsuccessful Liberal candidates and defeated Liberal members of parliament. If this is all window dressing, then we should know.

There has been a decrease in the total cash receipts, and according to the D.B.S. figures the decrease was due to a decrease in the sale of wheat on credit. On the other hand we read headlines in Canadian newspapers that Canada bread has hit an all time high. It is not easy to understand why bread has gone up two cents a loaf. There has been a suggestion made that the price of bread increase by two cents a loaf and that the domestic price for wheat should increase by $1. Perhaps it is time to put a task force to work to study this question.

Often we have heard the statement that the price of wheat should not be increased because the poor people who have children will suffer. This is a typical excuse. Let me make an alternative suggestion. If we are concerned about the situation, we can help these people with children by increasing the family allowance. Perhaps this would solve both problems. They would welcome the increase and they would be in a position to purchase more.

Let me conclude by congratulating the minister. I hope there will be more farm legislation introduced in this house to the benefit of the farm community. We do not want more demonstrations like the one we witnessed this morning, but perhaps this is a time of protest and demonstration. I hope the government will introduce other legislation of the type we have before us today. I strongly recommend the adoption of this measure and I am happy the minister has had this opportunity to introduce it.

Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak for a moment or two about this measure. If I were the new Minister of Agriculture introducing my first bill in this house I would introduce a bill similar to this, because it really does not encourage a great deal of controversy. Let me say about this measure what I said about a similar one the other day, that by increasing the amount of loans to $6,000 the government seems to be emphasizing that the agriculture industry, particularly in western Canada, is now a commercial as opposed to a subsistence operation. This seems to be the view the government now takes: It is considering agriculture as a commercial operation.

If this is the case, the government should recognize some other factors. They should recognize that this is a very competitive business, if we are now considering it in the business sense; that margins are narrow, good management is necessary, and volume is essential. Naturally, to have volume we must have sales. I would like to make a suggestion about a change in the act. I understand that in the old act there is a limit on borrowing. You can borrow only up to a six bushel quota. I wonder whether this might not be raised to an eight bushel quota. I believe this would be more realistic, in view of the costs involved in prairie agriculture today.

The government may very well say we will have trouble getting rid of six bushels, and this may be true. But if government money is invested in wheat it would take a load off the shoulders of the farmer and improve farm economy. It would assist the farmer and those depending on him, and it would tie up some government money in wheat, which would give the government a more direct interest in selling wheat. It would perhaps encourage them to hurry sales along.

The hon. member for Mackenzie, and I believe also the hon. member for Crowfoot, suggested that the loans might be split into two. I do not know that I am particularly opposed to this suggestion, but I wonder whether we should arrange our legislation so that farmers can avoid paying income tax.

I point out that those who take the advance, and particularly those who take it all in one lump sum this year, need to be careful. If they had a large grain payment last spring, have sold their six bushels and now get a $6,000 advance, it may present them with quite a problem in that next spring there will be no payment, or a small payment, on the grain. They will have 50 cents a bushel less on grain delivered next year, and they may have to pay some income tax. Taking this amount of money in one lump sum would present problems next spring. Farmers must take care and manage their businesses with a good deal of consideration. In the long run I think this program will work itself out, but to start with I would recommend that farmers be careful.

I would like to emphasize the short term nature of such an advance. If I as a farmer borrow money today, I have to pay it back by July of next year and perhaps I have sold no wheat in the meantime. It is a short term type of thing. It is a good thing as far as it goes, but it does not really do anything to solve the over-all problem. I noticed when checking the figures that the cash advanced in the past has gone from a high of 76,000 farmers one year to a low of 22,000 farmers in another year, and approximately 25 per cent of the farmers have taken advantage of the program.

I suggest that if sales had been larger there would have been less need for this change in the act. If markets had not been lost last year, this problem would not have arisen. However, due to the lack of activity of the government, or their turtle motion, last year we lost markets that should have been ours. The Canadian government should pay attention to what the United States and France are doing, to what the big kids are doing. We were left out in the cold when we woke up to the fact that these people were taking our markets away again. It might be said that this is in the past, but I suggest that we still have the wheat and the problems are still with our farmers.

In this connection I think of an advertisement put out by one of the car companies, "We have to try harder because we are only No. 2." I suggest to the government, and in particular to the Department of Trade and Commerce, that we are less than No. 2; we are down to about No. 3 or No. 4 and it is high time they woke up and paid attention to what is happening in this area.

I should like to suggest that the government pay serious attention to these problems. We have all this wheat and the problems are with us. The government should consider the problem as being here. We might start, for example, by offering long term credit to countries who need grain or flour. When I say long term, I mean at least five years. It could be more for some countries. We might consider taking soft currency, which is of course in the form of a loan. We might consider changing our trade policies even if we have to accept some element of bartering. This question has been discussed in the prairies for a considerable length of time. It was mentioned in part by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, but I should like to deal with it by giving this illustration.

Since coming to Ottawa I have been renting a television set. Looking at colour television sets, I went into a store which was having a sale, and the fellow in the store was anxious to sell me a set. I asked him, "Where was this television set made?" and he replied "This was made in Chicago." I have nothing against the people of Chicago, and nothing against television sets, but I do object to mortgaging a piece of the country by buying an American TV set when I have wheat which I cannot sell on my farm because Japan cannot export their television sets. This does not seem reasonable to me and I think it is high time we took a different look at our trade policies. We might invite other countries, Japan in particular, to carry out some industrial construction here. With their brains and ingenuity they could do this and it might pay for some of the things they purchase from us, particularly grain.

I should like to make a brief comment about the grains council, although I am not yet sure of its intent, its construction or what it is to do. I suggest, however, that if it is another idea group—and I have nothing against ideas—an intellectual group solving a problem is no good unless you have a man of action. I suggest to the Minister without Portfolio that it is high time he and the government were prepared to take some action with respect to whatever ideas might be put forward.

There is a story told about an old farmer who was informed by an agricultural representative that he should take an extension course to improve his method of farming. The old farmer replied, "There is no point in my taking this course because I am not farming as well as I know how now." This is my opinion with regard to the trade policies of the government and their selling of wheat; I do not think they are doing as well as they know how now.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank hon. members for their comments and questions in connection with the resolution before us. I see that there is, as I had expected, general agreement about the purport of the resolution, but I should like to deal with several of the questions which have been raised. In a general way I say first of all that I would like to assure the hon. member for Crowfoot and other hon. members about the conscientious nature of the minister with whom I have the honour to be associated in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I pledge on my own behalf a bit of conscience, and indicate to hon. members that we recognize that today's changes are by no means the whole solution, nor do we put them forward in any way as the whole solution to our agriculture problems.

Let me say to hon. members that we are determined to put forth every effort in connection with sales, and that we quite appreciate how important this is in terms of the present prairie conditions. We will look at every avenue to obtain this objective, and I appreciate the advice of the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley in this regard. It was stated by the present government during the course of the recent election campaign that greater use of credit would be one of the means used to assure better sales of wheat. We are legislating on one today. I think every suggestion put forward is worth examining closely.

With regard to some specific points raised, I would like to say first that I am not sure the hon. member for Crowfoot understood my comment about repayment, and that the repayment schedule will in fact remain unchanged in the new legislation. This means that it will continue to be 50 per cent of the initial price, rather than the one dollar which I thought he referred to.

Some hon. members have commented on the advantage to the farmer of being able to make more than one application. Serious thought was given to this whole question. It would be much more difficult administratively to adopt this procedure. I think here the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley put the matter quite well. The hon. member for Mackenzie suggested it was obvious that having only one application was apt to be a greater charge on the treasury than having two. The truth is that, even though that is true, it will be considered more economical to have the larger advances on the basis of one application than to have two applications and the administrative difficulties that are involved. We must be particularly careful that people who are not most in need of advances might conceivably use it for objectives which are not envisaged by the legislation if two applications are involved. This is what I think the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley has referred to in discussing the income tax position and the difficulties that might be involved there.

We also took a hard look at the difficulties producers have when they are renting land, because of the requirement that the landlord's signature be a part of the application. There seemed to be no legal way out of this dilemma, in view of the provincial law which applies in most cases and which in most cases makes the grain a part of the property of the landlord jointly with the tenant. It would really require a change in that provincial law before a change in the present federal legislation could be made. I do not want to give offhand legal advice in this respect, but it may well be possible for tenants to obtain appropriate consents in leases to deal with this matter in the future if they were so advised.

I think those were the main matters which were germane to the resolution before us. A number of references were made to the grains council and its implications for the future. I may simply say, because these matters were raised, that it seems to me there is adequate room for a grains council, even for some of the purposes to which hon. members opposite referred, such as the whole question of research, and the question of making the best use of the best means of transportation, which are matters related to the sale of grain but are not entirely within the scope of the Wheat Board as presently constituted.

Finally, what has been said frequently before, may I emphasize again, that nothing that is done in favour of a grains council is intended to interfere with or impair in any way the operation of the Canadian Wheat Board, which has had such a successful history.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I have two or three points which I should like to make with regard to this resolution, one of which I do not believe has been put forward. First, however, I wish to add my congratulations to those expressed by the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley to the Minister without Portfolio upon bringing in such a good measure. It certainly merits support from all sides of this house.

I should like to say, in recalling the history of the great battle for cash advances which began in 1949 and took until 1957, that it is rewarding and satisfying to a number of hon. members to welcome the conversion of many people on the other side of the house. I would also like to say that I hope this will destroy the myth which was perpetrated in those days, and for the first year or two after cash advances were put into effect, that you could not trust the farmers, that if you paid them for some of the wheat which was in their granaries there was danger they might default on hauling to the grain elevators. The fact is that out of $450 million advanced in 11 years something in the neighbourhood of $45,-000 was all that was short in terms of repayment. I submit that this record is unequalled in any section of our economy in the dealings of the people with their own government. People in the farm industry have always enjoyed a good reputation, and now they have established this good record which I think probably some other segments of our society could emulate.

One thing which I would hope all hon. members in all parties from areas other than the prairie provinces would tell the people in their respective constituencies is that cash advances on farmers' grain is not a subsidy or a gift. In too many urban centres, even in the odd place in the prairies and certainly in other parts of Canada, some people believe or have been given to understand that this is some sort of gift or subsidy to the agricultural industry. It most certainly is not. All it represents is an advance on the farmers' wages and earnings. No one in any other occupation would agree to receiving his pay once, twice or three times a year. I am sure that if members of this house were to get their indemnity cheques at Christmastime, next spring and when the house adjourned for the summer holidays, they would object loudly and would not stand for it.

Prior to the time of cash advances farmers had to put up with a lack of funds. This is not a subsidy, they are just getting what is rightly their due for their production. This provides them with an opportunity to get an advance, and when they finally deliver the wheat they receive the balance of the money that is due them after the cash advance has been deducted. As long as export grain sales are inadequate, as long as storage facilities both in the country and at the terminals are congested, and as long as railroads do not provide adequate rolling stock when there is space for grain movement, cash advances will be necessary under the law.

May I add to the remarks of the hon. member for Mackenzie in support of the greater use of the Hudson Bay route to the port of Churchill, that although his party had the unique opportunity of being the government of this country for six years and had the chance to implement the vision and use its imagination to really do something there, it passed up that chance. I do not think there is anyone in any political party in the three prairie provinces who does not favour and support the greater use of the Hudson Bay route.

It seems to me that here again is a matter which requires from a government, vision, imagination and courage the like of which no national government has yet shown. It will require a new roadbed, double tracking, centralized traffic control systems, new terminal elevators, one or two atomic powered ice-breakers, and a huge increase in the capacity of the terminal space at Churchill. It may also mean that the federal government will have to get into the marine insurance field, if that is the only thing that is holding us up from getting larger exports out of the port of Churchill. It will mean building a city and putting the city under a roof, if necessary. This is the kind of imagination and effort that is going to be required if we are going to make use of the northern resource facilities that are there.

• (4:20 p.m.)

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that in its drive for justice and in its expressed agreement with the new politics, however that is interpreted, the government will give consideration to these things. They may sound like dreams or visions, but it seems to me these are the kinds of things that lead to great achievements. I hope that all members here will give consideration to this kind of imaginative proposal. I hope members on the government side will put pressure on the government to help support these measures. I know that I, personally, and the members of my party wholeheartedly support this resolution. I want to compliment the minister on being the one who introduced it, and let us hope that before too many years have passed the export of grain has so improved that cash advances will no longer be needed.

Mr. Horner: I should like to direct a question to the minister. Did I hear him correctly that repayments would be at the rate of 50 per cent of the price of the grain? Supposing a farmer is selling his grain at $1.37, say it is No. 3 at the delivery point, he would only have 50 per cent deducted to pay back the cash advance? Am I clear about that?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): That is right; there is no change in the act in this regard at all.

Mr. Horner: If he borrows on grain at a dollar a bushel, he is going to have to have a surplus in order to make up the difference. If he sells grain at $1.37 a bushel and the rate of repayment is 70 cents per bushel or less, then he is not going to be able to take full advantage of the dollar per bushel cash advance because he would have to have a surplus in order to qualify at that rate of repayment. Either that, or the government or the elevator company will be out money.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): I think the hon. member has put his finger on a point of real advantage to the farmer under the new proposal. In any year in which deliveries were low, there would not be repayment but he would be carrying it all over for the new year. I think this is an advantage under the new act, but I think that advantage will become clearer when the bill is before the hon. member. However, I will be glad to discuss the point during the clause by clause discussion.

Mr. Southam: I would be remiss in my duty this afternoon if I did not add a few comments in this debate on the resolution amending the legislation to provide interest free cash advances on farm stored grain. This is, in fact, emergency legislation and has been a very important factor in improving economic conditions of farmers. It will be recalled that ten years ago we had a very great pile-up of grain in our terminals, in elevators, in farmers' bins and even in skating rinks in western Canada. At that time we thought it was necessary to introduce legislation to relieve the cash shortage. I can remember, too, that some hon. member sitting opposite felt it was not possible to have such a measure, but it has turned out to be one of the most effective pieces of emergency legislation ever brought into this house.

Interestingly enough, and it has been emphasized here many times, the record of repayment in connection with these advances has been excellent. I do not believe, therefore, hon. members will have any qualms about supporting this measure. As a matter of interest, too, the situation which existed ten years ago exists today in even more exaggerated form. At that time we had over 700 million bushels of grain piled up in storage. We find the same situation existing today, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Crowfoot in this remarks this afternoon. This condition has resulted from the lapsing of the international wheat agreement. Again, I believe, the present government and hon. members opposite can be taken to task for allowing this situation to arise. Debates on this subject have taken place before, and there will be more heard about it when the Kennedy round agreements are debated because western agriculture in particular was sold down the river when the international wheat agreement was allowed to lapse for 11 months. This fact brought about the present emergency conditions in western Canada. As hon. members know, this international wheat agreement was the farmers' Magna Charta or Bill or Rights. This international wheat agreement was of benefit not only to exporters in Canada, Australia and New Zealand but to many importers as well.

The farmers of Canada have been asking why something which worked so effectively for 18 years was allowed to lapse for 11 months, and create this emergency situation in so far as Canadian grain exports are concerned. We are now in a situation where we have to reinstate this legislation to help us out of the emergency which has developed in our agricultural economy. It is only right that we should be asking for an increase in the amount of money available because, in the intervening ten years, production costs have gone up. Taxes are higher, machinery prices have doubled, repair bills have doubled and, in some cases, the cost of living has almost doubled. The result is that the $3,000 which was made available under this legislation ten years ago is inadequate today.

I am very happy to support this proposal, Mr. Chairman. I must congratulate the Minister without Portfolio, who has had the honour of introducing these amendments. He comes from the same province as I do, and therefore fully realizes the emergency conditions which exist there. I want to assure him that I am wholeheartedly behind the principles involved. I believe the records of the house will indicate that when it became evident last September the farmers of western Canada would be short of cash, I urged consideration of this measure.

I can recall one night on the "late show" having Hon. Robert Winters, then minister of trade and commerce, listening to my case. I was not too happy with an answer he had given earlier concerning this legislation. At that time I was advocating that we should bring this legislation back into the house in order to double the cash advances available to meet this emergency with which the farmers were faced. As I say, Mr. Chairman, I am very happy to support this measure. I am glad the government has seen fit to take the advice of the opposition, and to give this measure priority. When the session first opened, I mentioned this measure should have priority. The agricultural industry in my area is in dire need of cash at the moment because farmers have to pay their taxes and the penalty for late payment varies anywhere from 5 per cent to 10 per cent. They have machinery bills and repair bills to pay, as well as other overhead expenses. A number of things have hindered the movement of grain, such as the lapse of the international wheat agreement, the St. Lawrence seaway strike and the strike of terminal elevator employees which was settled a few weeks ago. This will be one step forward in helping to alleviate this problem. As I said a few moments ago, Mr. Chairman, I support this legislation wholeheartedly and hope to see it on the books as soon as possible.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question. I know he indicated that this was a legal matter, but has he looked at the possibility of providing several permit books for the landlords and tenants? Could there be one book for the landlord and one for the tenant?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): The difficulty here, Mr. Chairman, lies in the ownership of the wheat. If the wheat is owned by both jointly, then without the consent of the owner of part of the wheat it is difficult to do anything.

Mr. Horner: I wonder whether I could ask the minister a question. Is the government not changing the amount available on a quota basis? I understand that cash advances are now made on the basis of a six bushel quota. If the government is increasing the total amount available from $3,000 to $6,000, and is not changing the quota, then is the government not just helping the big farmers with a big acreage? In other words, you would have to farm 1,000 acres and have 6,000 bushels of wheat in storage in order to take full advantage of this $6,000.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Chairman, it is clear that raising the maximum is only relevant to those who are close to the maximum now in terms of their deliveries. Since the amount which may be advanced per bushel is doubled, then even the farmer with very few bushels may receive $1 a bushel on his wheat, whereas now he receives 50 cents a bushel. This is of crucial help to him.

Mr. Horner: I realize that, Mr. Chairman; but take, for example, the irrigated area in my constituency where there is not a huge acreage but there is high yield. Some area farmers are straight grain farmers and this legislation will not be a big help to them, really, because they will not have the delivery quota base that the government requires them to have.

I wholeheartedly agree, Mr. Chairman, that the delivery quota should be increased from six to possibly eight or nine bushels so as to give some benefit to the small farmer who is intensifying his yield by means of fertilization, water irrigation and so on. We have to provide for these people too. We must also recognize and encourage technological advance. Some farmers make better use of the up to date advances that are becoming available. However, in drafting the bill I think the government should consider very seriously moving these farmers from a six bushel quota to possibly eight or nine bushels in any case.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, the point that has been raised is one that has certainly had cogent arguments advanced by the hon. member for Crowfoot. What would be the objection to increasing the quota for the purpose of determining the amount that might be advanced to any one farmer from six to nine bushels? If that were done, Mr. Chairman, then the small farmer would be in a position to receive a reasonable amount.

As far as the general plan is concerned, Mr. Chairman, I remember the circumstances under which it came into being. As soon as I became prime minister I asked forthwith that action be taken in this regard and that advances be made on farm stored wheat. We had asked for that for several years prior to 1957, and the answer in every case was that those who had an understanding of the operation had come to the conclusion that there would be very large losses in connection with giving loans on farm stored wheat. However, I asked that it be done, and the civil servants went to work and produced a plan.

I ask this for information purposes, Mr. Chairman, because the argument that has been advanced is most appealing and, on the face of it, worthy of serious consideration. The wheat will be there whether the quota is three bushels, six bushels or nine bushels; it is in storage. What we are trying to do is to provide an extra amount over and above that now provided for, so that the average farmer will have the necessary funds available to meet his expenses because he is unable to sell his wheat. Would the minister not give reconsideration to this, what I think is a very thoughtful suggestion, one that could not by any chance cause losses to the treasury, while at the same time increasing the value of the legislation?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Chairman, it is particularly delightful for me to rise after the question asked by the right hon. member for Prince Albert, with whom I feel closely associated, if he allows me to say so. He is a very distinguished graduate of the law school with which I had some connection. He also gained a great deal of affection in years gone by in my own province, among others, for speaking about a proposal similar to the one we are talking about today.

At the same time, Mr. Chairman, I really did not mean to ignore a similar comment from the hon. member for Crowfoot, but in the discussion we had a moment before I was trying to explain that the truth of the matter was that, in terms of the repayment schedule under the new legislation, effectively the small farmer is in the position of having a nine bushel quota, or rather an 8-point-something bushel quota.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, an examination of the situation in Saskatchewan, with which I am most familiar, would reveal that the smaller farmers do not frequently have on hand grain in excess of the amount envisaged in the new act. It then becomes a matter of delicate judgment whether any additional help we might give should be given more in this fashion or in some other fashion.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Chairman, may I follow up something that I raised earlier. Would the minister explain for my benefit where this additional cost might be? Where would the additional cost arise in perhaps giving the farmer two advances?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): It would be in administering the scheme, in dealing with two applications per farmer rather than one application per farmer.

Mr. Korchinski: I understand the Wheat Board uses a computer, and I should not think there is anything to putting another card into the I.B.M. machine.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): If these machines ran free, or even on flour, I think that would be true.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, I should like to pursue the discussion about the small farmer. An I correct that the minister said that in the bill provision will be made for the small farmer to pay back faster than the large farmer? If so, will there be an acreage differential, or did I misunderstand the minister when he said provision will be made in the bill for the small farmer to pay back on the basis of a nine bushel quota? I did not understand what the minister meant by that. I do not see why the quote basis in the bill could not be moved up to eight or nine bushels, because this would certainly be of more benefit to the small farmer. Would the minister clarify that point?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): It is in the bill as amended, Mr. Chairman, in the sense that it is in the mathematics. Eligibility is still tied to six bushels in determining the maximum amount available. However, since the repayment schedule is in fact slower than the lending schedule, the quota works out to more than six bushels.

Mr. Horner: The minister is referring to the 50 per cent repayment, and wheat is not worth $2 a bushel. As I tried to point out, we are going to lend the farmers $6,000 based on $1 per bushel. I contend that increasing the total amount available helps only those who farm 1,000 acres of land. It does not particularly help the small farmer.

Many farmers in my area are irrigating their land and cultivating their land extensively, and in the next 20 years you will see an increasing use of irrigation. It seems to me that this legislation will not be of too much benefit to the farmer with a smaller holding who cultivates that holding, using all the technical know-how, fertilizer, and so on that is available; it will be of greater benefit to the farmer who farms a larger unit. The farmer who operates a small, high yield farm will be penalized, it seems to me. A farmer farming a small acreage from which he obtains a high yield will have a greater amount of grain to store than one who operates a similar sized farm which is not intensively cultivated, and this factor ought to be taken into consideration when drafting the bill. I submit that the initial advance ought to be based on a nine bushel quota so that the small farmer who utilizes all the latest technical know-how in his operation is not penalized.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): I think the difficulty between the hon. member and myself is one of language. When the term "small farmer" is used I think of the farmer whose production and income are low. The hon. member obviously is speaking of a farmer whose acreage, regardless of his production and income, is small.

Mr. Horner: This resolution deals with acreage.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): The hon. member, then, is raising the entire question of the quota available to that small acreage, high yield farm. That does not have application to the present matter; the quota system, itself, would have to be changed.

Mr. Horner: I agree, to a certain extent, but the minister is not completely right. I am not completely right either, and the minister should not ignore my argument entirely. Nothing is ever totally white or totally black; most arguments are in a gray area. This legislation, on the face of it, will be of greater benefit to one who farms, say, 1,000 acres than one who farms 300 acres, and that is the point of my argument. One farmer may farm 300 acres intensively whereas another farmer who owns 1,000 acres may only farm 500, allowing the other 500 to lie fallow.

The point is that the man who cultivates his 200 or 300 acres intensively has not as large a quota base as the man with the larger farm. This ought to be taken into consideration when considering the concept of cash advances. If you want to reward the small farmer for using all the technological aids available to him you ought to increase his initial quota to eight, nine or ten bushels. Perhaps there should be one quota for farms of under 500 acres and another for farms of over 1,000 acres.

I think the minister ought to give consideration to these ideas, because if he does not the farmers who are making the greatest strides in the use of technological advances will not be rewarded properly. I should regret to think that a minister coming from Saskatchewan, a minister who is reputed to have some knowledge of agriculture, should be instrumental in having a piece of legislation enacted in this house that would fail to reward those who are making the greatest technical strides in our agricultural sector, those who try to obtain the greatest yield from a small acreage.

Mr. Gleave: May I ask the minister how this will work out in practice? Freight rates in any given area vary, depending on how close one is to Winnipeg or to the Rockies. For the sake of argument let us assume that the rate runs at $1.40. This rate, of course, depends on the grade of grain. This year our grain will be down to grades 4 and 5; I hope it is no worse. The point is this: The farmer who has taken an advance against his crop has to pay money back. I do not think I am exaggerating when I say that he may be receiving from 25 cents to 35 cents per bushel. That farmer will be in a tight spot because one may assume that he has already spent his advance to pay for taxes and other obligations. Is the minister contemplating, by any chance, raising the quota to eight or nine bushels? Raising the quota would help a great many farmers carry their financial loads. It would be a good idea if the minister could guarantee that the quotas be set at a minimum of eight bushels; probably the figure ought to be nine. I say this because our farmers will have to make large repayments.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Mr. Chairman, the changes in the proposed resolution do not include in themselves any such guarantee. So far as the complicated mathematics of the receipts and returns are concerned, it would be better, as I said before, if that were dealt with at a later stage when the bill is in the hands of hon. members.

Mr. Gleave: Did I hear the minister say just now that the mathematics would not be complicated? If the farmer borrows $1 and then pays back $1 per bushel, surely there is nothing complicated in the mathematics. Was the minister thinking of advances as related to the value of a bushel of wheat or as related to the actual value of a farmer's acreage? The difficulty, as I see it, is that farmers will not be able to sell enough wheat to pay off the money they have borrowed. That is the complication.

Mr. Horner: Referring to the point the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar raised—and we still have about ten minutes remaining—may I ask the minister whether it will be possible for a person to carry a debt from one year into another and then, in a subsequent year, pay back an advance on his quota. Is that contemplated?

Mr. Gleave: That is a sort of perpetual mortgage.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Yes, that would be possible under the present situation. He can either carry his debt into the new year and have his subsequent deliveries count against it, or he can take a larger advance against his existing grain.

Mr. Horner: It is logical to assume, then, that over a period of years the farmer will be increasing his cash advances until he reaches the maximum of $6,000, at which time the act will be no good to him. He will have absorbed all the benefits of the act.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): Not quite. The farmer's first duty is the repayment of outstanding advances. So the maximum amount of the advance is $6,000, the actual amount varying according to wheat on hand. It does mean there will be a carry-forward, if he is to take the maximum in years when the quota does not go above six.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Horner: Let us suppose you are going to lend at $1 a bushel and he is going to pay back at approximately 75 cents a bushel. If he can carry one debt over into the next year, will not the debt pile up until it is above $6,000? I do not see how it will ever be repaid completely.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): If he still owes $1,000 from the preceding year he will only get $5,000. The next year, if he still owes $1,000, he would only get $5,000.

Mr. Horner: If you carry $1,000 from last year and borrow an additional $5,000 he may carry over $2,000 or $3,000 and still maintain the maximum of $6,000, each year borrowing a little less and carrying over a little more.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): I will undertake to deliver a sheet of complicated calculations to the hon. member for Crowfoot. I might say for the time being that the amount carried over is absorbed in the new year so that it is dealt with immediately at the beginning of the new year. Whatever position a farmer is in, in the first year of the plan, is the position in which he will remain forever—he could never carry any more than that portion which would have been required to pay the advance which he was not able to deliver.

Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): So that in effect he could never be in default.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): He could be in default if he failed to deliver when the quota opened. That is true now and will be true then. He will not be in default any more than he is now by carrying a cash advance into the new year if he has not failed to live up to his obligation about delivery. If he takes a new cash advance the amount still owing on a previous cash advance is taken into consideration in calculating the advance at that point.

An hon. Member: Would that not jam up the I.B.M. machine quite a bit more?

Mr. Woolliams: I shall only take a minute, so the hon. gentleman need not be nervous. I hope the minister will give serious thought to one suggestion, which I think is a good one. I have some knowledge of the way in which this system works in practice. Where there are smaller holdings, where there is diversification making for greater concentration and a higher yield, special consideration should be shown to the farmers concerned. I hope the minister will carry this suggestion back to the government, and think about it. Obviously where there is diversification and a concentration of yield one can expect a greater return per acre.

There is a trend in Saskatchewan and Alberta for farms to get larger and larger as the smaller farmers sell out and older people leave their holdings. In some parts of the prairie provinces farms are becoming big wheat mines. If special consideration were given in the circumstances I have mentioned the minister would, I think, be following the formula suggested by some of the farm unions themselves. This is the point which my hon. friend from Crowfoot was making, and I think it is an excellent one. I hope the minister will try to sell this idea to the cabinet. Its adoption would not mean a great deal, financially, to the treasury, but it would be an expression of a good philosophy on the part of the government, and I should like to see such a formula perfected. That is all I wish to say at this point.

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): I did not mean to suggest that the suggestion put forward by the hon. member for Crowfoot was not deserving of consideration, but this is a matter which is related to the whole quota system, rather than to this particular resolution, and it is in the general context that it would have to be considered.

Mr. Gleave: Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that changes in the quota system were being considered?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): No, you did not.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Pepin thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-113, to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, pursuant to special order made this day the house will now proceed to business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills.

BRITISH COLUMBIA INDIAN RESERVES MINERAL RESOURCES ACT

REPEAL OF MEASURE RESPECTING SURRENDER OF ENTITLEMENT

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved the second reading of Bill C-7, to repeal the British Columbia Indian Reserves Mineral Resources Act.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps before continuing with this bill I should say this: I believe the hon. member for Skeena is aware that there are some possible procedural difficulties here. The suggestion has been made that this is, perhaps, a money bill, and for two reasons, first that it seeks to dispose of the public revenue of the Crown—on this point I realize there is some doubt, because the hon. member for Skeena would argue that we are not disposing of the revenues of the Crown but of those of the Indian people. The second objection is that the measure affects the property interests of the Crown, requiring that consent of the Crown be obtained. However, consent cannot be obtained by a private member of the House of Commons.

Even with these limitations, however, I feel there is a considerable measure of doubt as to whether the objections are valid and I think hon. members might agree that it would serve a better purpose to allow the hon. member for Skeena to proceed, and have the house consider this bill during the present private members hour.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Howard (Skeena): That is extremely kind, Mr. Speaker. I wonder with respect if, apropos of your remarks, I might argue with you that we are not dealing with revenues of the Crown or with lands of the Crown, because both the revenues and the lands referred to in the particular statute which I seek to repeal are held in trust, and I put those in a different class than being held directly. In any event, I am quite sure that even if the bill were one of those which fell within the class of being a money bill the government, with its tremendous concern for the rights and welfare of peoples, would have immediately come to my rescue, adopted it, and preceded it with the appropriate resolution.

However, I think that is all unnecessary, because if I remember the reading I did earlier about the history of the British Columbia Indian Reserves Mineral Resources Act itself, the original bill in 1943 was not preceded by a resolution that dealt directly with the bill. In any event the house has been gracious enough to go along with your suggestion that we proceed without any argument about the formalities.

The year 1943, as I said earlier, was the year in which the parliament of Canada passed this law, and I suggest it was done in a relatively secret way and by collusion. I mean collusion in its worst sense, collusion between the then Liberal government here in Ottawa and the Liberal dominated coalition government in the province of British Columbia, because both governments were involved in working out an agreement which brought about the British Columbia Indian Reserves Mineral Resources Act, which effectively removed from the native Indian people in B.C. the control that they might and would have otherwise have had of mineral resources whether upon or beneath Indian reserve land. This was done without any consultation with the native people, and done without their knowledge. I have asked many of the older people on reserves about this and none of them recall hearing anything at all, even about the passage of the law itself in 1943.

The origin of this question, I think, comes from the time when British Columbia entered confederation. One of the terms of the entering of my province was the building of a railroad, the C.P.R., and that railroad obtained a right of way some 40 miles in width. There can be great controversy and conversation about the propriety of having done that, and about some of the subsequent changes, but nevertheless as a result of the C.P.R. obtaining a 40 mile swath of land along the length of the railway, as one of the considerations for its building the railroad, when gold was discovered in 1884 there came with it the question of the legislative or political control over the gold itself. In other words, was the proprietary ownership over the gold in the hands of the provincial government or in the hands of the then dominion government? As a consequence of this disagreement the matter went to litigation and subsequently ended up in the hands of the Privy Council who, in 1889, made a decision in effect that the precious metals on that particular land, which was railway right of way land, were declared to belong beneficially to the province.

In 1943 the then minister of mines and resources, hon. Mr. Crerar, introduced into parliament the British Columbia Indian Reserves Mineral Resources Act, and I submit that he, for what reason I do not know, either misunderstood the decision of the Privy Council or misinterpreted it, and in effect made a court decision of the Privy Council, which was originally applied to land which had been given to a railway, apply to Indian reserve land. He added that because the Privy Council had made this decision with respect to the C.P.R. land, therefore we, the parliament of Canada, should have to pass a law endorsing in a legislative way the agreement between the British Columbia government and the Canadian government about mineral resources on Indian reserves.

I submit that there are two different questions involved here. I say that Mr. Crerar misapplied the finding of the Privy Council, and in effect by misapplying it, by misinterpreting it, in concert with the provincial government effectively took away—as has been the case in so many instances in the past—something more from the native Indian people of the province of British Columbia, namely the control over the mineral resources that might be on their lands.

Perhaps in this regard I might be permitted to quote from part of the decision of the Privy Council, which is to be found at page 306 of the Law Reports, Appeal Cases, 1889:

> Their Lordships are for these reasons of the opinion that the judgment appealed from—

I might point out that the courts in Canada had made a decision in favour of the federal government or federal parliament.

> —must be reversed, and that it ought to be declared that the precious metals within the railway belt are vested in the crown, subject to the control and disposal of the government of British Columbia, and they will humbly advise Her Majesty to that effect.

The key words were "the precious metals within the railway belt." This is what the Privy Council was dealing with. They were not dealing with precious metals on Indian reserves, and I submit that this should clearly show that, to be gracious about it, at the very least there was great misunderstanding or lack of knowledge about the full effect of that decision, and that it should not have been applied to the precious metals on Indian reserves. This injustice has remained there ever since 1943, for the last 25 years, without any great or in any event successful attempt being made to correct the situation.

In 1966, Mr. Speaker, I introduced a bill with respect to this matter identical with that which is now before the house. In passing I might add that I think Your Honour was our presiding officer at that time, and no thoughts were expressed about the bill's being in order at that time. In any event, for 25 years now there has been this statutory injustice resting on the law books of Canada and on the books of the legislature in the province of British Columbia. This was done without consultation, without advice from or without considering any of the native people—in other words just a complete disregard for what we all fervently in our hearts believe to be a fundamental right of people, the right to be advised of what is taking place with regard to their respective rights.

I submit that in three instances the schedule to the act contains misleading information. Again, to substantiate what I say, that the government in 1943 consciously took action of a misleading nature to remove some of the fundamental rights of the Indian people, I point out that in a preliminary part the schedule reads as follows:

> Whereas from time to time treaties have been made with the Indians for the surrender for various considerations of their personal and usufructury rights to territories now included in the province of British Columbia, such considerations including the setting apart for the exclusive use of the Indians of certain definite areas of land known as Indian reserves;

I submit that this was misleading because it contains within it the reference that "from time to time treaties have been made—"

• (5:10 p.m.)

I submit this is misleading because it has reference to treaties that had been made from time to time. With one or two minor exceptions, notably in the Peace River district of British Columbia and in respect of a few treaties before confederation, in British Columbia there are no treaties with the Indian people of that province. That is the crux of the British Columbia land question. This was something that hon. Mr. Crerar knew about in 1943, and it was something that the government of that day knew about, because this B.C. land question has been before the parliament of Canada in one way or another as far back as the turn of the century. This was not new to the government.

I submit that parts of the preamble indicate that the government knew this was misleading. Another part of the preamble states:

> And whereas the said Indian reserves were conveyed to the dominion government as trustee for the Indians under the terms and conditions set forth in an agreement dated the 24th day of September, 1912, between the dominion government and the province of British Columbia;—

It is a well known fact, certainly to the Indian people and the government of that day, and the government of this day, that the native Indian people never at any time accepted the agreement of 1912 as a solution to the land problem. Nobody at that time accepted the finding of the McKenna-McBride royal commission which considered this question, and no one at any time accepted the decision of the Indian Land Settlement Acts that were passed by the legislature of British Columbia; and the native peoples have never signed any treaty. This in itself leaves the impression that the Indian people have agreed with this when in fact they have not. The third "whereas" which is misleading reads:

> And whereas the precious metals in, upon, or under the lands comprising such reserves are not incidents of such lands but belong beneficially to the Crown in the right of the province of British Columbia with the result that the development of all the minerals in, upon or under such lands is at present impractical since the precious and base metals are closely associated and cannot be mined separately.

As I pointed out earlier, this is misleading because the decision of the Privy Council on this matter of precious metals had nothing whatever to do with the Indian lands in British Columbia, but dealt with lands ceded to the C.P.R. It should have been confined to that and not extended to take away the rights of our native people.

In 1965, three years ago, the Indian affairs branch submitted a directive which dealt with the matter of developing mineral resources, which said that the only minerals that could be developed on reserves were those minerals that had been surrendered. It indicated that the minerals must be surrendered, and there is no equivocation about that. There is no maybe: They must be surrendered by the Indian people. In other words, the native Indian people, because of this British Columbia Indian Reserves Mineral Resources Act and the Indian Act, cannot participate in the development of resources on a reserve unless they first give them away, surrender them and relinquish all their rights and interests in them, in this instance to the Crown or the federal government.

In the first place this bill was an imposition as a result of some collusive agreement based upon a misinterpretation of the court decision. It was an imposition, and is a denial of fundamental rights of our Canadian native people to direct their own affairs and destinies. It is a denial of their right to local government in respect of their land and well being, and I suggest this should not be permitted to remain on the statute books of this nation. That is why I seek to repeal it.

Apart from the fundamentals, the directive to which I made reference earlier contained the reference that there has been increasing interest in mineral development in recent years, and certainly increasing interest in mineral development that might take place on Indian reserves. This British Columbia Indian Mineral Reserves Resources Act holds back or deters any such potential development because the native people are fed up to the teeth with having to give up their rights every time they want to obtain something. They are fed up with the concept of surrendering things. They are fed up with having to relinquish their authority and the control over reserve lands before anything can be developed. As a consequence they are not surrendering anything more, even though it might mean more income as a result of mineral development.

As I understand it, there are some agreements in the prairie provinces, the Maritime provinces and in Ontario which give to the native Indian people in those areas 100 per cent of the benefits resulting from any development of mineral resources on reserve land. With the concept of equality we should be moving toward this position and providing agreements of this type to the Canadian native Indians of British Columbia.

I do not know what the potential is in that province, or if anyone is able to determine that, but if we look at the mineral production in British Columbia in the last two years and try to relate what this amounts to in terms of dollars we come up with a fairly close figure. If the full potential mineral resource was developed in British Columbia, taking the relationship of the mineral resources developed in the province, this results in terms of $1 or more per acre of land. There are some 750,000 or 800,000 acres of reserve land in British Columbia. On this ratio that would mean $750,000 for mineral production.

This is not the total amount that would accrue to the reserves, but is the production value. A great deal of this would accrue to the Indian people and we should keep that in mind. I know there are some who might argue at this juncture that the repeal of the British Columbia Indian Reserves Mineral Resources Act may not be the right way to correct this situation, but my purpose at this time is to keep this matter alive and to foster a greater understanding of the injustice that was perpetrated and has remained uncorrected. In view of the government's desire to make our committees function to a greater extent I hope that the appropriate minister, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) or the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Andras), will concern themselves with this matter and refer it to a committee for study. Neither of those hon. gentlemen are here, so perhaps the house leader would give this idea his blessing so that this bill or the subject matter might be referred to a committee for discussion. In this way the Canadian native Indian people could be given the opportunity to present their ideas. They could be consulted and their feelings could be ascertained in respect of this particular act.

Many consultations are taking place in this country with the native Indian people about the Indian Act. I do not think these consultations can be extended to cover this situation because the guide lines for the consultations now taking place, contained in a booklet entitled "Choosing the Path", have reference to a series of questions other than this relating to the Indian Act itself. This is a special subject.

Let me say to the house leader, in closing, that this matter is serious and of extreme importance to our native people. We are now in an era in which even the most reluctant of our house leaders agrees that consultation is the order of the day. This is true in respect of the Indian people and their problems. I suggest to him that perhaps he may assist our native people to find a way out of this difficulty in which they are, and may assist us as well in correcting this long-standing injustice by referring the subject matter of this bill to a house committee for an appropriate examination and a report. I suggest to him that he may assist the Indian people in finding a way out of the difficulty in which they are at the moment. He may be able to assist us in finding a solution and correcting this long standing injustice, by agreeing to refer the subject matter to a house committee for appropriate examination and to report upon it later.

I know what will occur with the bill if this is not done. We will reach six o'clock, we will still be debating it at that time, it will go to the bottom of the list of I do not know how many public bills on the order paper, and we will see neither hide nor hair of it again this session. I think to use the talking out process in respect of this bill, to hide it in that way would be an extreme disservice to the rights of the Indian people and the possibilities regarding mineral resources on their reserves.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to go into the merits of the hon. gentleman's suggestion. Because I am not in a position to go into the merits I cannot act at once on his suggestion. I will, however, undertake to discuss with my colleague responsible directly with this question the merits of the measure put forward and the hon. gentleman's remarks of today, and be prepared to talk about it on another occasion.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I hope that this matter will be taken to the level of immediately active advisement rather than just the immediate advisement stage. We are beginning to learn that there are differentiations in the government's approach to problems. We hope this bill will receive the urgent treatment which it deserves.

I certainly support the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) in his proposals. I was a member of the Indian affairs committee some years ago when this matter, amongst others, was raised. I have some recollection of it and I have here the act which the hon. member seeks to have repealed. I might say in passing that the hon. member for Skeena referred to the fact that this was a case where there was no consultation with the Indians. It is a sad commentary on the government of this country that for a period of 25 years we see the same course of action pursued.

This house was agitated, as it properly should have been, last week, and to some extent it has been this week, by charges made, and never refuted, that the Indian people of this country were not consulted on a very, very important reorganization of the Indian affairs department with regard to a matter in which the Indians were involved and definitely concerned. The only occasion I can recall when there was a real measure of consultation was during the course of the administration of the Conservative government from 1957 to 1963.

The Indian affairs committee was set up. One hundred witnesses were called, including a very large number of representatives of the Indian people from all over Canada. These people were brought here and gave evidence which was uninhibited in any respect. We received a great deal of very useful information. The committee made recommendations. Some of them were initiated before the Conservative government fell, but have not been dealt with since. I must say in passing that here we are, 25 years later, and the same charges are still being made against the government by the same people. These charges are of the same political nature, namely that they are not being consulted when they should be.

I shall be very brief, Mr. Speaker. Reading the act, I agree with the hon. member that there are three assumptions drawn in the preamble which I think are incorrect. It is in fact a creation of a statutory image, a statutory illusion, not based on truth and not based on the facts. I shall deal with only the first of these assumptions. The following words are to be found in the preamble:

> —from time to time treaties have been made with the Indians for the surrender for various considerations of their personal and usufructury rights—

This has been repeated over and over again. A number of treaties were entered into with Indian people and Indian bands by which it was sought to acquire the title of the Indian people to practically all the lands between the Great Lakes and the Rocky mountains and extending into the Northwest Territories. These treaties were similar to the one to which the hon. member for Skeena has referred. They were based on certain considerations. Letters were executed by the commissioners who drew up these treaties. The letters detailed the circumstances under which the treaties were made. There is no question at all that, as in this case, the Indian people were led to believe that in surrendering their rights—the complete extent of which was probably not known to them—they would be given certain other considerations. Some very definite considerations were put forward to the Indian people as being given to them in exchange for their giving away these rights.

We all know the famous case which went before the Supreme Court of Canada. I refer to the lame duck case. In that case the Supreme Court of Canada held that because of the Migratory Birds Convention Act certain rights to which the Indian people felt they were entitled with regard to hunting, trapping and fishing, were not to be given to them because the federal government, one of the parties to the treaties with the Indians, was in direct violation of the undertaking in that the treaty entered into internationally imposed obligations upon the federal government which the Supreme Court of Canada held to have precedence over the treaties with the Indians.

There are a number of other cases of this type. There was the so-called medicine chest case. In a number of these treaties there was a provision that the government would provide certain medical and other services within the meaning of the words medicine chest, which to the Indian people at that time had a very specific and special connotation. This was another case where the federal government, through its counsel, intervened. But I do not think any real, conscious effort has been made by this government to in any way right the wrong that has been done to the Indian people by the violation of their treaty rights.

For these general reasons, in addition to the specific reasons to which the hon. member for Skeena has referred, I hope that this matter will be referred to a committee. I certainly hope that when the Indian claims commission legislation is introduced, this issue will be given the most serious thought.

We have done injustices to the Indian people. There is no use cataloguing the litany of evils, wrongs and misdemeanours which have been committed. This is now a matter of history. But there is now probably the last opportunity, through the medium of legislative proposals which I suppose this government will introduce, to widen the extent of those proposals to include the kind of compensation to which the Indian people are entitled. This we must do if we are to hold up our heads and say we have kept the sacred obligations which previous governments entered into on behalf of the people of Canada.

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) upon raising this subject, and I have listened with great interest to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). I do not suppose anybody in this house is not in sympathy with the spirit behind the words of both hon. gentlemen. I hope no members of the house will be out of sympathy with the words I shall be using. I might as well state at the outset that I do not feel this bill should be dealt with as a separate and individual item. I think it is an excellent idea that it be referred to the committee, as a specific item to be looked at in the context of the whole question.

To arrive at that conclusion I think one has to realize that we are, in a sense, at the apex of 300 years of injustice which we and our forefathers have perpetrated on the Indians. We are just arriving at a time when a fundamental change can probably be made, and the Indians are just getting back their self confidence to a sufficient degree to be able to help themselves. When the white man first came to Canada he was prone to think of the Indians as mysterious creatures flitting around among the trees and in the distance, people whom no one understood. It has become more and more apparent, thanks to studies of historians such as McInnes and others, that the Indians had a viable, sensible and economic way of life supported by a good system of trade. If you look back at the efforts of the French pioneers, you will find that they did not do what later generations did, but that they tried to establish trading and leave the Indians basically undisturbed. Unfortunately their idea of trade included brandy, which did harm to many Indians, but that was not a deliberate policy.

The Indians still staked off their own territory, the Algonquins in one place and the Iroquois in another. Some were farmers, some were traders and some were middlemen. All this change started taking place in Canada only a little more than 100 years ago. In the United States this was started a little earlier when people, actually, physically took possession of the land. I suggest this is where the trouble started which led to the situation of the Indian today. Louis Riel saw this, and in drawing up and passing the Manitoba act he attempted to stop this from happening in Manitoba and in the west. However, the white people reneged on the deal they made with the natives in my province, and as a result the Indians and Métis were the ones to suffer. I am glad to see that the position of the Indians is now being seen in better perspective and that it is recognized that Louis Riel was trying to achieve something serious.

It was at that time that reserves were set aside to be administered by the Crown on behalf of the Indians, and 1,400,000 acres was made available to the Métis. But the Indians were unable to make a living off the reserve and the Métis lands were soon in the hands of speculators. So the Métis are in as much trouble as are the Indians, and I hope they will not be forgotten when the time comes.

Between 1871 and 1877, seven treaties were negotiated between Canada and the Indians of the new Northwest. It is quite obvious that the Indians thought, as the hon. member intimated, that they were making a perfectly genuine deal with a trustworthy partner. To prove this I would like to quote the words of the Lac Seul chief in connection with the signing of treaty No. 3. This is what he said:

> We are the first that were planted here. We would ask you to assist us with every kind of implement to use for our benefit . . . a little of everything, and money. We would borrow your cattle; . . . the waters out of which you sometimes take food for yourselves, we wil lend you in return . . . The time may come when I will ask you to lend me one of your daughters and one of your sons to live with us; and in return I will lend you one of my daughters and one of my sons for you to teach what is good, and after they have learned, to teach us.

The key words there are obviously share, exchange and lend. That is what treaty No. 3 was all about so far as the Lac Seul chief knew. He found out differently later. I suggest that all the treaties were like this one. The last time that the Indians tried seriously to improve their lot was when they threw in their weight behind Louis Riel in 1885. This became a rebellion which was put down, and that was the end of that.

I suggest that the treaty to which the hon. member for Skeena referred was a little different. The spirit behind it, so far as the dominion government was concerned, was the same, and it proved to be just as much of a failure, but the mechanics were a little different because British Columbia came in as a separate colony.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I wonder if my friend would permit me to ask him a question. It arises out of a misunderstanding because my friend must realize that in British Columbia there were no treaties made with the native people. I was not referring to a treaty.

Mr. Osler: This is what I was about to say. I thank the hon. member for making it clear that I am not being clear. British Columbia was a separate Crown colony. No treaties were made but there was a general indication that the same spirit prevailed because when British Columbia joined confederation it negotiated its own terms. Although the dominion took charge of Indian affairs, the province would have to give it whatever lands it required for reservations. That was part of the act under which that province came in.

It is clear from the terms of union that the federal authorities thought they were following through with the same pattern they had established toward Indians in the rest of western Canada. Land would be given to them to be held in trust, for the use and benefit of Indians in British Columbia. But when the time came to actually select this land, trouble occurred. Commissions had to be set up, either jointly or unilaterally, by the two governments involved. It was not until 1938 that by provincial order in council reserves were conveyed to the dominion, and a time span of 67 years had elapsed. So I think there is a very good indication that the spirit of the law was not lived up to.

Meanwhile, in 1889, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council to which the hon. member referred ruled that precious metals were vested in the province. Later the province made claim for the administration of base metals. So they tried to get the whole lot. The British Columbia Indian Reserves Mineral Resources Act passed in 1943 was an attempt to regularize the situation. The administration, control and disposal of all minerals and mineral claims on Indian reserves in British Columbia was made subject to the laws of the province, and all revenues arising out of the sale or royalty agreements would be split henceforth between the federal and the provincial governments on a 50-50 basis. This settled nothing so far as the Indians were concerned, except to place the administration respecting precious and non-precious metals, under one roof. This might have been a good thing if there had been any will to do so for the benefit of the Indians.

[Mr. Osler.]

Notwithstanding the foregoing arrangement, under the present act when a band approves a mineral surrender, which it still has to approve, the administrative responsibility is immediately split. The band has jurisdiction over the surface rights, the province has jurisdiction over the mineral rights, and no one has yet discovered how the devil one can get close to the minerals without disturbing the land rights. The jurisdiction is divided and diffuse. I suggest that this is a very good reason that there has been no significant development of the potential mines on British Columbia Indian land. Who would ever make a deal with anyone when they do not know how to get to the minerals, how to mine them and whom to negotiate the terms with?

Both the federal and the provincial authorities realize this is a poor arrangement. Through the years there have been discussions between the province and the federal government is respect of the interpretation of this act. These discussions have altered the conditions slightly in favour of the Indians, but have not resulted in serious exploration or development. As of this date the province has advised the federal government that changes in the act could not be considered.

So the Indians sit and wait for the white man to unscramble the mess. How is it possible to get at the treasures underground without disturbing the land above? How is it possible to find a sensible method of exploiting the riches of nature for the benefit of the Indians without setting the province and the federal authorities at loggerheads one with another? To the Indians, who so desperately need all the revenue they can lay their hands on, this must seem like a very sorry state of affairs. It would be funny if it were not so sad.

Now, having said this, I should like to submit that I have not cited an isolated case. This is an example of the shocking way in which we, as white men, have treated the Indians. I do believe that the climate is such this government is going to be forced to take a serious look at the situation and really open the way for the Indian to help himself. If this is the case, then I submit we should not consider this bill in isolation, but it should be referred to the committee and considered in the context of the whole problem.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I am going to be brief, Mr. Speaker, but there are a couple of things I should like to mention. First of all, I should like to congratulate the member who moved this bill. I agree with everything he has said and I want to incorporate it in my own argument. However, there are a couple of things I should like to mention. First of all, the treaties that were signed with the Indians in the early days have been largely ignored by parliament and legislatures, particularly in so far as the mineral rights were concerned. The Indians have not been consulted. The area of mineral rights is one from which much contentious litigation has arisen.

This brings me to the point I am going to make. No government has done anything for the Indians so far as their property rights are concerned. I should like to make the most non-partisan speech on this matter that I have ever made in my life. The only remedy the Indians have today, in so far as their property or mineral rights are concerned, is to go to the Exchequer Court of Canada. I have dealt with this court on other occasions when I was dealing with other problems.

In so far as the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court of Canada is concerned, it is limited to matters concerning the Crown. So far as I am concerned, an Indian or the average citizen of Canada cannot afford to litigate in the Exchequer Court. First of all, in order to get into the court he has to go to Ottawa, so he has to hire a lawyer in Ottawa, who is generally an agent of the legal firm of the place in which the person resides. For example, the Indians on the Blackfoot reserve have a claim in connection with their oil rights. They go to a lawyer in Calgary, and the Calgary lawyer communicates with a legal firm in Ottawa which, in turn, goes to the Exchequer Court. A poor man or an Indian cannot afford to do this. The state is all powerful; the state has all the money; the state has all the experts. The Crown says, no—and it does not matter which government is in power. I do not know how many years the claim of the Blackfoot reserve has been before the Exchequer Court, but I have those facts in my office. However, Chief Crowfoot and others have advised me that the documents pertaining to their treaty were handed to the department of Indian affairs and have been destroyed or lost—at least, they cannot be found.

These Indians do not have the money necessary to make the proper motion before the Exchequer Court to demand these documents. As a result, the claims of the Indians on the Blackfoot reserve before the Exchequer Court of Canada in connection with their mineral rights have been long dormant. In my opinion, it is high time we stopped talking about setting up Indian claims commissions and had a commission that was not weighted in favour of the Crown. It is useless to set up a board that is weighted in favour of the Crown, because the people behind the executive of this or any other government will be people who will usurp, unintentionally of course, the rights of the Indian or the average man. They narrowly interpret the law; they narrowly interpret the procedure. After all, it is human nature when you are always representing one side of the fence to think as the people do on that side of the fence.

I should like now to talk about the streamlining of the procedures of the Exchequer Court of Canada. If the Exchequer Court is not prepared to streamline its procedures so the average man can afford to litigate, then I would hope this government would immediately take steps to set up a claims commission so that the rights of Indians can be protected. At the same time the federal administration should decide to pay for counsel, so the Indians can be properly represented before any tribunal, whether it be the Exchequer Court or a claims commission set up to deal with this particular subject. There is no point in setting up an institution in which litigation can take place if the Indians do not have the tools to go to the Exchequer Court or to a board. If one goes before such a body without properly trained counsel, it is like going to hospital to take out your own appendix. It is just as effective, because a man who is not trained does not know the procedures, does not know the technical points, and as a result he does not get justice. This is an example of what I have always maintained, that there is a law for the rich and a law for the poor.

I say that the people who are in the house now must be interested in the affairs of the Indian people of Canada. There are not too many of them. At one point, Mr. Speaker, I counted and we were in a very precarious position. Let us decide unanimously now to send this bill, which has been brought forward by a member of parliament who has dedicated himself over the years since I have been here to the rights of Indians, to a committee, so that the matters which I mentioned and the matters which other members have mentioned can be discussed fully. Then let us get on with the job. We have ten minutes left, so I will sit down and we can unanimously send this bill to a committee.

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by complimenting the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) upon his very eloquent plea on behalf of the Indian people of Canada. In this one aspect at least, this hon. member and I share a great concern. It may be somewhat unusual for the member for Thunder Bay to rise to speak on a matter that concerns the Indian people of British Columbia; however, a great many of the constituents of Thunder Bay are native citizens of Canada. My interest in them and my concern for them leads me to be sympathetic toward Indian people, regardless of the corner of this land in which they happen to dwell.

It has been my privilege, Mr. Speaker, on at least one occasion to be present during the consultations the government has been having with the Indian people of Canada. I wish to testify to this house and to the people of Canada that these consultations with the Indian people were open, forthright confrontations. I should like to make it clear also that if any member of this house in any way casts suspicion upon the motives behind these consultations, he is doing a great disservice to the government and to the Indian people of Canada. The people attending these consultations have expressed their grievances well. It is the intention of the government, when all the data is available, to take the appropriate action, having listened carefully to what the Indian people have had to say.

With reference to the situation in British Columbia, for many decades now there has been a great deal of concern as to who owns the minerals which reside under Indian reserves, and as to how they may best be developed. The real problem here is that there has been so little development and exploration of the minerals in these Indian reserves that it is to fog the issue for us to say that this act ought to be repealed. The real point is that the Indian people living on reserves in British Columbia have not profited economically from the resources which lie beneath the land on which they live.

It has been recommended, Mr. Speaker, that reference be made to the courts to determine ownership of these Indian resources. I suppose there are some pretty good legal arguments to suport the beneficial Indian right to precious metals, although a court judgment gives the ownership to the province. There is no justification for the provincial claim to ownership of base metals on Indian reserves.

Reference to the courts to determine ownership of British Columbia Indian resources will not contribute toward reaching an effective agreement on the development of minerals on Indian reserves. In the last analysis, we want some benefit to accrue to the Indian people. We do not want the matter to become bogged down in long legal haggles in the courts of Canada. There are some good legal arguments which can certainly be helpful in demonstrating to the province of British Columbia that there is a strong case for Indian ownership. The act of 1943 implies that the province acquires administration of the minerals on Indian lands, and 50 per cent of the revenues, on the basis of the provincial right to the gold and silver. This basis is no longer a valid one. Although in 1940 the value of gold and silver amounted to 43 per cent of the value of all metals produced in the province, by 1966 gold and silver had declined to only 6 per cent of the metal production. By giving up administrative control of the minerals on Indian reserves, loss in revenue to the province from fees for recording claims and assessment work would be negligible, and may be more than offset by reduced administrative costs.

Indians in British Columbia should have the very same benefits from the development of their minerals as those enjoyed by Indians in other provinces. Agreements in effect in the prairie provinces and the maritime provinces, and one now being concluded in Ontario, provide full benefit for the Indian bands from development under federal administration of the minerals on their reserves. Indian affairs policy now provides for the Indian band councils to retain a large measure of control over the development of their mineral resources and to participate in the management functions. Under present provincial administration and legislation in British Columbia, Indian band council control over the minerals is both indirect and ineffective. I recommend, Mr. Speaker, that strong representations be made by the federal government, with of course support from the Indians of British Columbia, to the government of British Columbia for a new agreement for development of mineral resources on Indian reserves. This new agreement, moreover, should be patterned after the agreement now being concluded with Ontario and should contain the following provisions:

First, that British Columbia transfer to Canada control and administration of all mineral resources in Indian reserve lands or surrendered Indian lands, and the proceeds of the leases or other dispositions of the mineral resources be applied for the benefit of the Indians for whose use and benefit the said lands were set apart;

Second, that royalties paid for the benefit of Indians from minerals produced on the Indian lands shall, for the purposes of any provincial mining tax, be deductible from the income of the producer of the minerals;

Third, that the province agree to provide for technical surveys, safety measures and other similar services related to the exploitation of minerals on Indian lands that are normally provided for other lands in the province.

There would be a great deal of potential for the economic well-being of the Indian people of British Columbia if this policy were to be adopted, Mr. Speaker. For example, we know that there is an area of about 800,000 acres which is divided into 1,600 separate reserves spread over the province. The value of the minerals in this area is very difficult to assess, owing to their nature; the resources are hidden below the earth's surface.

Assuming for a moment that the average acre of Indian land has the same potential as the average acre of land within the province, the potential value of mineral production from these lands may be estimated from the total mineral production of the province. The value of the metal production alone was worth over $200 million in 1966, or about $1 per acre. Applying this average to the 800,000 acres of Indian land, an annual production from the Indian lands of $800,000 may be expected. At the present time no metals are produced. The point, Mr. Speaker, is that economic benefits must accrue to the Indian people so that with their own resources they can develop a way of life suitable to them and that is designed particularly by them.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, we admit that there are a great many difficulties in the present situation. Since the effective date of the act in 1943, mineral surrenders to only eight reserves out of a total of 1,600 reserves in British Columbia have been approved by Indian bands. Administrative responsibility for the use of the land resources is divided between the two governments, once a band has approved a mineral surrender. The mining or subsurface rights is administered by the British Columbia government, whereas the rights to use land surface for mining purposes are administered by the federal government, in consultation with the band council.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret I must interrupt the hon. member, as the hour assigned for the consideration of private membres business has now expired.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, October 7, 1968

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

FINANCE

REPORT BY MINISTER ON INTERNATIONAL MEETINGS

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker I would like to take this opportunity to report to the house very briefly on the international meetings which I attended recently.

The first of these was the annual meeting of commonwealth finance ministers held in London on September 25 and 26. It provided an occasion for an exchange of views within the Commonwealth on financial and economic questions of general interest. There was a general exchange of views on the world economic situation, including in particular matters of special interest to members of the sterling area and to the less developed Commonwealth countries.

The meeting was encouraged by the favourable prospects reported by the chancellor of the exchequer for a strengthening of the British balance of payments in the months ahead. The meeting also noted with satisfaction the arrangements concluded between overseas sterling area countries and Britain in connection with the facilities recently announced by the Bank for International Settlements. Under these arrangements $2 billion will be made available to Britain by the central banks of 12 countries, including Canada, to enhance the stability of sterling and of the international monetary situation. We also reviewed trends in development assistance. In this connection the meeting recognized the urgency and importance of the proposed replenishment of the resources of the International Development Association.

The matter of I.D.A. replenishment was also of special concern at the annual meetings of the boards of governors of the World Bank and the monetary fund which I attended last week in Washington. The I.D.A. is of great importance to developing countries which for balance of payments reasons are unable to finance all their capital requirements on terms provided by the World Bank. The Canadian government has in the past actively supported early replenishment at a substantially higher level. At the recent meeting I reiterated that prompt completion of the necessary agreement for replenishment is essential if the World Bank group is to continue to play its full role in all parts of the underdeveloped world. As hon. members will be aware, the government has placed an estimates item before the house which would authorize the Canadian contribution to the proposed replenishment exercise.

This was the first annual meeting which Mr. McNamara attended in his new role as president of the World Bank. There is no doubt in my mind that he will provide the bank with vigorous and imaginative leadership. This is already reflected in the action he has taken with a view to expanding the resources and the scope of activities of the World Bank.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to use this opportunity to reply to the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition on October 1 in connection with my statement at the annual meeting of the I.M.F./I.B.R.D. board of governors.

I should make it clear first of all that this statement did not enunciate any new policies for the Canadian aid program. Speaking on behalf of the government of Canada I endorsed Mr. McNamara's plans and intentions for the World Bank which among other matters included three specific suggestions to deal with the problem of population growth in underdeveloped countries. These were as follows:

First: To let the developing nations know the extent to which rapid population growth slows down their potential development, and that, in consequence, the optimum employment of the world's scarce development funds requires attention to this problem.

Second: To seek opportunities to finance facilities required by our member countries to carry out family planning programs.

Third: To join with others in programs of research to determine the most effective methods of family planning and of national administration of population control programs.

With these three proposals for immediate action, I hope we may contribute to the success of the U.N. system which is already working in this field, and to the well-being of the developing nations.

Report on International Meetings

• (2:40 p.m.)

This quotation from Mr. McNamara's speech at the annual meeting describes in full the proposed program of the bank in the field of population control. It should therefore be apparent that he did not envisage giving first preference for World Bank loans to countries which are willing to institute programs of population control. Further, in endorsing the course of action proposed by Mr. McNamara I was addressing myself exclusively to the activities of the World Bank and not those coming under Canada's bilateral aid program.

In contrast with last year's annual meeting in Rio de Janeiro, which focused heavily on developments in the I.M.F., this year's annual meeting was more directed to the World Bank group. The three outstanding issues in the I.M.F. on which most attention was focused were the status of the special drawing rights proposal, the progress made on last year's resolution calling for a possible I.M.F. and I.B.R.D. role in the stabilization of primary commodity prices, and gold.

On the first of these, the S.D.R. proposal, progress has been made since last year. It is now hoped that the I.M.F. will be in a position, if this is deemed desirable, to make an initial distribution of special drawing rights some time in 1969. To enable Canada to play its role in the I.M.F. this house will be asked at an early date to give its attention to a rather complex bill to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act.

On the commodity pricing question, the governors had before them the first part of a joint I.M.F./I.B.R.D. study providing a useful analysis of the problem. It was agreed that this study would be completed and that specific policy recommendations would be put forward by June 30 of next year.

As to gold, representatives of the countries most directly concerned, including Canada, met during the week. At the conclusion of the meetings an agreed statement was issued. The relevant parts of the statement are as follows:

> The governors unanimously agreed on a common position based on the Washington declaration of March 17, 1968, regarding the disposal of newly mined gold. It has, however, not proved possible to reach agreement with South Africa at this meeting.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to make one or two brief comments on the statement by the Minister of Finance, whom we are happy to see back in the house after an absence on official business. I cannot express quite as much satisfaction as he seems to feel with regard to some of the arrangements made. I hope that the arrangement made with regard to the pound and the other transitional arrangements will in fact be carried out. But I suggest that while these may be the best arrangements which were possible in the circumstances, they still place a heavy burden on Britain in addition to the other burdens relating to the recovery of her economy.

I was disappointed, too, that more progress has not been made in the field of strengthening international currency arrangements. I am sure we are all delighted at the way in which the crisis of last winter has settled down. This is the proper time for an arrangement to be made, but progress has been very slow with regard to strengthening international currency arrangements.

So far as the arrangements regarding the World Bank and international aid generally are concerned, constructive proposals supported by this government certainly would have the support of this party. We believe the government of Canada ought to play an active role in supporting the World Bank and other international agencies interested in development. Certainly we would support any constructive measures in this regard.

But regard to the statement attributed to the minister concerning what Mr. McNamara may have said regarding priority being given to countries that adopt measures to control population, I may say that despite what the minister has said the situation is still a little confusing to me. It may very well be that this results from the necessary brevity of the minister's statement, and perhaps further discussion will clarify this matter.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to express my satisfaction with some of the things the minister has said, particularly the degree of co-operation that has taken place among the countries involved. I am glad to hear that he is working for the continuance of that co-operation, particularly in the area of making credit available to countries that need underpinning of their currency. We in Canada have every reason to realize how effective some of those measures can be, since we had to call on this type of assitance in the earlier part of the year. The very fact that nations can call upon each other for this type of help will have a tendancy to provide greater stability in international monetary circles.

I am, however, concerned about one thing, and in his statement the minister did not clear this up. This is the question of what attitude Canada is going to take to the purchase of commodities from some of the underdeveloped nations, particularly Commonwealth nations. I must say that our record in this regard has not been particularly good. We have refused to make an agreement regarding sugar, which would have been most helpful to some of our neighbours and friends in the Commonwealth. While it has perhaps enriched some Canadians in a very minute way, it has gone a long way toward retarding the development and growth of nations that we seek to help.

In the long run, Mr. Speaker, gifts to underdeveloped nations, valuable as they may be, are not the real answer to solving the problems of the underdeveloped sections of the world. The real answer must be that we are prepared to trade with them and to buy those commodities they have available for export at fair prices. I am sure this is what they would want, and I am equally sure it is what Canada should do. Canada should take the lead in indicating its willingness to buy these commodities at fair prices so as to enable some of our friends in other parts of the world to improve their own conditions. We should not be impoverishing our friends in order to benefit ourselves.

I welcome the minister back, and I hope he will have something further to say to the house once the study on commodities has been completed.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the minister's statement deals mainly with the participation of Canada in the World Bank so that it may help further the development of countries in the whole world, mainly in Asia and Africa. The objectives of the Canadian government when participating in the activities of the World Bank are certainly commandable and the minister will recognize that the delegates have made a serious effort to adapt the financial situation to the needs of the those poverty stricken nations. As was was just mentioned by the hon. member who spoke before me, the question is not for Canada to provide almost unlimited funds in order to send them food, clothing, and so on; I think that the major part of Canada's participation should be to encourage those nations to produce certain commodities and to offer them for sale, in order to make their citizens responsible, because gifts alone are not the real answer to the problem.

Now, it is a little strange that the hon. minister should take part in the financial discussions of the World Bank and negotiate, for instance, the price of gold without reaching a conclusion which might help Canada to produce more gold at a reasonable price, in short at a better price than the one we receive at this time.

And while the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) is talking about helping poor countries, developing countries, our Canadian Prime Minister is on a trip out west where he preaches restraint and self-sacrifice or something like that.

We forget about education and the development of our natural resources but we are ready to share with other countries in the financing of the needs of developing countries. That is nonsense, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, it would be advisable for the government to take its responsibilities, to act, not against the other countries, but first for our country, Canada, and then it can help developing countries.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order.

Mr. Baldwin: The sound system has gone dead.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, by leave of the house I should like to table a copy of my remarks made at the World Bank meeting, so that hon. members who wish to do so may have an opportunity to look at them.

An hon. Member: What are you tabling?

Mr. Benson: A copy of my statement.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. No doubt hon. members have noticed that the sound system is out of commission.

Mr. Greene: Everthing sounds much better now.

Mr. Speaker: I therefore ask hon. members to co-operate by being as quiet as possible in order that we may proceed with the business of the house. The Minister of Finance seeks leave of the house to table the document to which he has referred. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion to Consider Nigerian Situation

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—MOTION FOR CONSIDERATION BY HOUSE COMMITTEE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to standing order 42 I seek the unanimous consent of the house to permit me to move a motion which, because of its urgent and pressing necessity, should not be delayed by the 48 hour notice rule. I recognize that standing order 42 has not often been invoked in this house, but I think the house will agree that the standing order was framed to cover just the sort of emergency which faces us today.

Standing order 42 reads as follows:

A motion may, in case of urgent and pressing necessity previously explained by the mover, be made by unanimous consent of the house without notice having been given under standing order 41.

That is the rule. Under standing order 42 I am entitled to explain the urgent and pressing necessity of this motion, and I simply wish to take a few moments to do so. My motion seeks to have the house order the standing committee on external affairs and national defence the members of which will be named later today, to meet not later than tomorrow morning in order to discuss and hear evidence on the tragedy in Biafra and, hopefully, to make recommendations which will enable Canada to take the most effective part possible in meeting both a humanitarian and political challenge.

The motion I seek to move sets out terms of reference sufficiently broad which I believe will commend themselves to members of this house. I am sure there is no doubt in the mind of any hon. member as to the urgent and pressing necessity of obtaining further information on this tragedy. It has been estimated that at least 6,000 civilians are dying of starvation every day in Biafra.

Although we have not officially received the report of the official observer group, we have read in the press that that group asserts there is no evidence of genocide and that food supplies for civilians are adequate in Biafra. We must find out what parts of Nigeria this observer group visited and under what conditions. The house is already aware that two of its hon. members, the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) and the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), have just returned from visiting those lands which are still in Biafran hands. I doubt whether in the history of Canada there has ever been a human tragedy so far from our shores which has had such a powerful effect on the consciences of Canadians. The Prime Minister is well aware of the interest many Canadians take in this matter and of the depth of feeling that exists.

I am therefore asking the house to proceed under standing order 42, and we wish to emphasize that our primary concern is not to engage in debate at this point but rather to obtain as much factual information as possible. To that end the committee on external affairs and national defence ought to hear evidence and bring in recommendations which will enable the government and this house to take effective and immediate action.

It will be seen from the motion that while the hon. member for Greenwood and the hon. member for Egmont are to be invited to report their observations to the committee, it will be open to the committee to hear evidence from other sources in a position to give evidence on the situation in Biafra.

I therefore seek the unanimous consent of the house to move the following motion, seconded by my hon. friend from Peace River:

That it be resolved by the House of Commons that it is urgent and expedient that it order the standing committee on external affairs and national defence, to be named later this day, to convene not later than 11:00 a.m. Tuesday, October 8 to hear evidence on (1) the report of the official observer group on which Canada has a member, of the conduct of federal troops in the prosecution of the war in Nigeria, (2) the reported famine conditions in that country, and to invite Andrew Brewin, M.P. (Greenwood) and David MacDonald, M.P. (Egmont) to report their observations on the conditions of the civilian population in Nigeria, and to report its findings to this house with all convenient speed.

I have not in the motion set a time limit for the committee but I would be disappointed, should the house adopt this resolution, if the committee did not report back to the house within one week.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: The house has heard the motion which the Leader of the Opposition proposes to put forward, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River. As the hon. gentleman has indicated, standing order 42 requires the unanimous consent of the house. According to the rules all substantive motions require 48 hours notice but the house can, of course, take a decision in exceptional circumstances to allow such motions to be made by unanimous consent. Before putting the motion I have to ascertain whether there is such unanimous consent on the part of the house.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I should add that the motion becomes debatable once it is put to the house.

Mr. Stanfield: May I express my appreciation to the House of Commons for giving unanimous consent. Perhaps I should add one further word in requesting the house to adopt this resolution, now that consent has been obtained. There has, I think, been a considerable lack of hard information concerning the suffering and strife in Nigeria and Biafra, but it does not seem to be disputed that large numbers of persons are dying each day. There are apparently conflicting reports from our observers in Nigeria and from reporters and members of this house who have visited Biafra. The committee which it is proposed to establish will be able to hold hearings and judge, with respect to General Milroy's travels in Nigeria for instance, how much freedom of movement was accorded to him, and how realistic are the charges that he was able to see only model villages. In effect the committee will be able to judge what weight should be given to the evidence of the observers.

It is to be hoped that a similar close scrutiny will be given to the reports of other witnesses the committee will hear. In establishing this committee the house will learn where it is that people are starving if not in the areas visited by General Milroy. Through this committee we will be able to establish what form our relief ought to take; should we continue to concentrate on sending food, or should we be sending planes and medicines as well?

This committee should also be able to establish which relief agencies are best able to get the food to the starving. And by establishing the committee the government and this house will be able in short order to have the facts at its and our disposal, facts needed to make decisions which will lead to effective relief efforts by our country.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we on the government side will be very happy to give unanimous consent to this motion, because we are interested in the obtaining of as much information on this situation as is possible, not only from members of the House of Commons but also from the Canadian public. We feel it is important not only to have information, but to understand also all the difficulties in international law and usage, in bringing about a proper solution to this problem.

I do not want to make this a long debate. I am prepared to say now that if this is the best way of doing it then we give unanimous consent to the introduction of the motion. I should like to say, however, that it was our intention to set up the committees of the house as soon as we had the names for the various committees from the opposition parties. There has been a bit of delay, though not on this committee. This committee can be set up now. Nevertheless, we do want to set up all the committees as soon as possible.

Our opinion is that if this standing committee of the house could be set up this afternoon we would be prepared to refer the estimates to it this afternoon or tomorrow, sir, and of course all aspects of this matter could be brought out before that committee. We are a little afraid, however, that the terms of the present motion, although certainly valuable and acceptable to our side, may perhaps be a bit too restrictive.

There is the question of the reported famine, but we feel it might be important to have any evidence available on the accusation of genocide as well. We feel that that is a very relevant part of the whole discussion because obviously the beleaguered parts of Nigeria are being pressured into some kind of submission either by force of arms or by force of hunger. The relevant question of whether this is going to be followed by genocide is something I think the committee would be interested in hearing about. The observers sent by our country and other countries have no evidence of that, but it would be interesting to learn if they are allowed to travel to other parts of Nigeria.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs is at present trying to ensure that the Canadian observer will be allowed to travel as widely as possible and to report as usefully as possible. The government did make the point earlier, when it was invited to send an observer to Nigeria, that it would not accept the invitation right away because we wanted some guarantee that our observer would not merely be in a position to whitewash the Nigerian government. We wanted to make sure that he would be there to obtain an impartial opinion and make impartial observations, and it was after getting a beginning to some guarantee on that point that we named our observer.

I make the point that we will accept this motion, but we feel the proper approach would be not only to hear these gentlemen but also to hear other people the committee might want to listen to, including the Secretary of State for External Affairs when he comes back from New York. He has been down there holding a great number of discussions on the Biafran question. He is trying to advance the cause of humanity as much as he can, and it would be an advantage to have the committee hear him as soon as he comes back from the United Nations.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, we feel the alternative would be not to accept this motion but to have the standing committee seized right away, tomorrow, with the estimates of the Department of External Affairs and then be free to deal with all aspects of this question. I do not want to press this point, though other members of the house and of our party may want to follow up that suggestion.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleagues and myself I welcome the motion, and as I informed the Leader of the Opposition we are very pleased that he is putting it forward. May I say to the right hon. Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, on the last point he put forward, that he can accomplish both the objectives he has stated.

I suggest that the value of the motion is that it gives the subject matter of the motion priority when the committee assembles tomorrow, and I point out that the motion asks that the committee assemble tomorrow to deal with this matter. If the government will carry out the Prime Minister's suggestion, as I hope it will today, and (a) appoint the committee of external affairs and national defence and (b) refer the estimates to that committee, then, of course, the committee will be able to make any other inquiry relating to the situation in Biafra or any other situation. It will then have the authority not only of the terms of reference of this motion but also the general authority under the estimates to make the fullest possible inquiry.

Therefore on our behalf, and I am sure on behalf of other members of the opposition, I would agree that if the Prime Minister accepts the motion, as he has suggested he will despite his doubts, and in order to deal with the matter that concerns him at the same time the committee is appointed by the house have the estimates referred to that committee, then the widest possible inquiry will be available to it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to make this point also, and I want to make it as strongly as I can. I am in favour of this subject going to the committee, but it is obvious that no matter how expeditiously the committee may handle the matter there will necessarily be some time consumed, maybe a week, maybe two weeks, and maybe as long as three weeks, before the committee is able to bring any recommendations to the house. I think it would be a dereliction of our duty as a parliament, a dereliction of the government's duty and of the duty of the people of Canada, if we waited until that committee reported before taking any action. I urge the government and the house not to permit the reference to the committee to be an excuse for inaction for the next one, two or three weeks.

I know, as all hon. members of the house know, that our colleagues the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) and the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald), had an audience with the Prime Minister today, and that they are pursuing certain suggestions that were discussed with him. I see no reason why some of the actions that are urgently needed, such as the lending of Hercules aircraft and similar actions, should be delayed pending the results of the inquiry and report of the committee. I think it is important to emphasize this because it is all too easy to appoint a committee to make inquiries and then sit back until the committee reports. This situation is too urgent for that.

May I also point out that events in Nigeria-Biafra are moving rapidly. At one point it looked as if federal forces were going to capture all of Biafra. At the moment it looks as if the Biafran forces have been able to set back the advance of the Nigerian forces, but one never knows what will happen in the next few days and the problem of relief, of additional transport planes, is too urgent to wait upon the deliberations of the committee.

I think I also agree with the right hon. Prime Minister that the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the responsible officials of his department ought to be heard by the committee to explain more fully than he has been able to explain to this house the reason for certain attitudes of the government during the last few weeks, the details of which I need not go into. I think we ought to know more than we do now as to why the government has taken a position against certain actions that might have been taken before now.

• (3:10 p.m.)

I certainly agree that the whole problem, and whether the fear of the Biafrans that the federal government is out to annihilate many of the Biafran people has any validity should be considered. Therefore in summary I support wholeheartedly on behalf of my colleagues the motion before this house, with the reservation that neither the government nor this house ought to permit the appointment of the committee to delay any action which can and should be taken as soon as possible to assist this desperate situation of the Biafran people.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I also agree with the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) that it is urgent and expedient that the standing committee on external affairs and national defence convene as soon as possible to discuss the situation in Nigeria.

I think that all members should commend the hon. members for Greenwood and Egmont (Messrs. Brewin and MacDonald) for their initiative in going there and observing what was going on, so that the Canadian government might be better informed on the situation now existing in Nigeria. According to the news published in newspapers, or broadcast on radio and television, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) tells us over and over again that Nigeria is a friendly nation and that we must avoid taking initiatives that could be prejudicial to this friendship between Nigeria and Canada. However, perhaps there is a difference between that and knowing and saying exactly what is happening in Nigeria. Anyone can have a perfectly proper person for a friend who, for some reason or other, suddenly becomes a gangster of sorts, he is then no longer your friend.

For example, when we learn that Red Cross people are shot like dogs by Nigerian troops or people attached to them, in my opinion we have a duty to take a stand, not two or three weeks hence but immediately. When we read in the press that civilians, children and mothers of families are starving, that they are worse off than animals, I say that there is a limit to abuse, even though Nigeria is a friend of Canada. It is important, therefore, that the committee should meet to hear especially the two members who have come back from Nigeria, and to know exactly what the living conditions of the civilian populations are in Nigeria.

We, therefore, support with enthusiasm the motion of the Leader of the Official Opposition to the effect that the standing committee should meet as soon as possible. However, as the honourable member for York South (Mr. Lewis) said a while ago, let us not wait two or three weeks or even a month before getting a report and knowing what position to adopt, and what action to take in order to help and protect the unfortunate peoples of Nigeria.

[English]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister has already pointed out to the house the terms of the motion are rather restricted in the sense that they confine themselves to the report in which General Milroy participated, and the expedition of the hon. member for Greenwood and the hon. member for Egmont. As the Prime Minister indicated, it would be desirable that not only the reports of these two different groups but events in Nigeria generally should be considered by the standing committee on external affairs and national defence.

Therefore I should like to indicate it is my intention after this motion is adopted to move under the standing orders that the estimates of the Department of External Affairs for 1968-69 be referred to the standing committee later this day, when I receive the nominations of all hon. gentlemen opposite to that committee. In that way I hope the estimates and this particular resolution can be considered together so that all the events taking place in Nigeria and particularly in that part called Biafra can be looked into by the committee at an early date.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion (Mr. Stanfield) agreed to.

REFERENCE OF ESTIMATES TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to standing order 57 I move:

That the estimates of the Department of External Affairs for the year 1968-69 be referred to the standing committee on external affairs and national defence to be named later this day.

Motion agreed to.

In a number of cases the amounts of pensions paid by Canadian National Railways do not represent the total pensions payable to employees for railway service. Pensions payable by the C.N.R. to international employees (service in both Canada and the United States) relate to their service in Canada only. Such employees also receive annuities payable under the U.S. railroad retirement act or the social security act for service performed in the United States. For example, in the group receiving pensions of under $25 from the C.N.R., there are 63 former international employees who also receive U.S. railroad retirement or social security annuities in respect of C.N.R. service rendered in the United States. The balance of this group consists of employees who elected early retirement (before age 65) with reduced basic ($25) pensions, and employees who had very short service and small contributions.

USE OF HOVERCRAFT IN MARITIMES FERRY SERVICES

Question No. 131—Mr. MacLean:

1. Has the government made any study of the possible feasibility of augmenting the Borden-Cape Tormentine ferry service and/or the Wood Islands-Caribou ferry service with the SRN 4-type Hovercraft, which will carry over 30 automobiles and 250 passengers at speeds up to 35 m.p.h., and which was to go into use on the Dover-Boulogne cross-channel route on August 1, 1968?

2. If such a study has been made, what were the conclusions arrived at?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): 1. Yes.

2. The government, as part of its policy to assess and monitor the applicability of air cushion vehicles in Canada, has in co-operation with industry conducted a series of studies to enhance the area of knowledge relating to this new form of transport. This process has involved the conduct of operational tests in the north to assess the problems associated with operations under severe winter conditions, the employment of consultants to investigate and report on the market potential for air cushion vehicles in Canada and to prepare recommendations on the suitable future development of vehicles, and a study within the Department of Transport to assess the operational and economic characteristics of existing craft and to test their applicability to specific routes in Canada.

As part of this activity, studies have been conducted jointly by the staff of the Department of Transport and of British Hovercraft Corporation to investigate the problems associated with the operation of either the existing or specially developed SRN-4 Hovercraft for the Prince Edward Island ferry system. These studies are being actively continued and consideration is being given to the possibility of conducting trials in the Northumberland strait. I shall inform the house if and when an acceptable proposal has been worked out.

The results of studies conducted so far indicate that the cost of transporting cars between Borden and Tormentine by an SRN-4 is considerably more expensive than by the use of modern ferries. On the other hand, the amphibious quality of the SRN-4 may make it possible to conduct fast and regular services in the strait during the winter season when existing ferry services are hampered. The tests which are under study, will give better information on the general suitability of the SRN-4 for service not only in the Northumberland strait but also on other routes in eastern Canada.

9. Territorial Prefab Limited is completely owned by 45 residents of Fort Smith.

10. A contract for the supply of pre-cut material for 30 houses was negotiated with Territorial Prefab in 1967. This company had been formed by local residents in an attempt to bolster the economy of Fort Smith following the announcement of Yellowknife as the capital of the Northwest Territories. Prices negotiated were comparable with those obtained by public tender on other contracts, therefore in order to assist the town and reduce federal welfare payments the contract was awarded to this local company.

IMPORTATION OF RUSSIAN CONSTRUCTION EQUIPMENT

Question No. 188—Mr. Hales:

1. Is it the intention of the government to continue to allow the importation into Canada of Russian construction equipment similar to that recently imported by Znider Bros. Construction Equipment Ltd. of Etobicoke?

2. What was the basis of evaluation and the rate of duty applied to the above equipment?

3. How does this compare to the method of evaluation and application of duty in the case of "Most Favoured Nations"?

4. Did the Russian Government subsidize in any way the manufacture of the equipment, the application of the equipment in Canada and/or the rental being paid to Znider Bros. who are alleged to be the importers and owners of the Halegate Equipment Co. of Britain?

5. If subsidization by the Russian Government did occur, is this not a form of dumping and as such unfair to Canadian companies who have made large capital investment in Canadian manufacturing facilities?

6. Has the government considered the loss of tax dollars through personal and corporate taxes, by endorsing the importation of such equipment?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): 1. The Canadian-Soviet trade agreement provides that goods of U.S.S.R. origin are entitled to most favoured nation tariff treatment. The trade agreement was extended in 1966 for a period of three years and governs the tariff treatment accorded to construction equipment.

2. The values declared on the customs invoices were used in determining the value for duty. Under the most favoured nation tariff agreement, the bulldozers, tractors and combines, which have been imported, are entitled to entry free of duty, the excavators were entered at the 15 per cent rate of duty. Off-highway trucks, which have not at this time been entered for consumption, are subject to a 10 per cent duty rate.

3. The valuation for customs purposes of goods imported into Canada is not dependent upon the tariff treatment accorded the country of export. Under the valuation provisions of the Customs Act, goods are normally valued at the higher of the fair market value or the selling price to the purchaser in Canada. This procedure was followed in this case.

4. There is no information available on these points.

5. See answer to question 4.

6. The government is continually reassessing the impact of imported goods on the Canadian economy.

1. What are the names of the Governors of the Bank of Canada since 1944 and on what dates did they take office?

PAYMENT OF AIR FARE FOR NEW YORK ARTIST

Question No. 217—Mr. Osler:

Did the Canada Council pay the air fare for Ralph Ortiz, the axe-wielding artist from New York, in order that he might participate in a show "Mission Destruction" held in a Vancouver warehouse on August 27th, 1968 and, if so (a) what was the amount of such payment (b) what was the criterion observed by the Council in subsidizing this performance, and (c) how many people attended that show?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): The Canada Council has provided the following answer: (a) It paid the air fare for Ralph Ortiz to enable him to present this event in Vancouver and to have discussions with artists in the community. The amount paid was $284. (b) The council makes modest allotments from time to time in experimental and sometimes controversial aspects of the arts. Its small grant to the Douglas Gallery of Vancouver to bring Ralph Ortiz from New York to the west coast was given only after professional advice obtained here in Canada indicated that a small travel grant was justified. Mr. Ortiz, who is a New York artist with an international reputation, had already taken a major part in a symposium held in London, England, in 1966 and in similar manifestations elsewhere. (c) The council is informed that 80 people were present at the event and that in addition Mr. Ortiz met the leading painters of Vancouver.

SECOND NATIONAL PARK, P.E.I.

Question No. 291—Mr. McQuaid:

1. Has the government arrived at a decision for the establishment of a second National Park in Prince Edward Island?

2. If so, what is the area selected?

3. On what date is it planned to make a start on this project?

4. What is the estimated amount of money to be spent on this project?

5. If no decision for the establishment of this park has as yet been made, what is the reason for the delay and how soon may a decision be expected?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. The government has recommended the establishment of a second national park in Prince Edward Island. However, the decision for its establishment rests with the province which must necessarily provide the lands for park purposes, free from all encumbrances.

2. The matter of boundary definition remains to be agreed upon by the government and province of Prince Edward Island.

3. It is not possible to state, at this time, when a second national park will be established. Generally speaking, a period of 1½ to 2 years of planning, engineering and design work is required prior to commencing any physical work.

4. If a national park is established it is estimated that approximately $665,000 would be expended on capital development in the initial five years following establishment. Ultimate expenditures cannot be estimated at this time.

5. The decision to establish a national park rests with the province. The establishing of an area as a national park requires that it be determined that this is the best and most appropriate use of land and resources. Before making this decision other uses, present and potential, have to be assessed.

SCIENCE COUNCIL OF CANADA

Question No. 292—Mr. MacLean:

1. What is the total membership of the Science Council of Canada?

2. What is the number of associate members?

3. What is the representation from the Atlantic Provinces?

4. Is the government taking steps to increase the membership on this Council from the four Atlantic Provinces?

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): 1 and 2. Total membership of the Science Council of Canada is 29, of which 4 are associate members.

3. Representation from the Atlantic provinces is one.

4. On September 24, the Prime Minister announced the reappointment of two members and the appointment of six new members for terms of three years. One of these six new appointments is from the Atlantic provinces. In making such appointments an attempt is made to satisfy not only regional representation but the need for a reasonable cross-section of scientific disciplines as well as the three major sectors—universities, industry and government.

3. 996—800 are prevailing hourly rate employees and 196 are technical and clerical support staff to the ship repair activity.

MILK SUBSIDIES

Question No. 298—Mr. Beaudoin:

1. Does the government intend, in view of the rising cost of living as well as the cost of farm machinery, taxes and administrative services on Canadian farms, during this session, to increase subsidies for the processing and production of fluid milk?

2. Does the government plan to send subsidies for processed milk directly to the processing plants, so that farmers will receive their share of subsidies at the same time as the payments they receive from the processing plants and for the same period?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): 1. The government does not pay subsidy on milk used in the fluid trade. The subsidy is paid only on milk and cream used for manufactured dairy products. The rate of subsidy was increased for this year to $1.31 per hundredweight of milk testing 3.5 per cent butterfat, as compared to $1.21 last year.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

PAYMENTS UNDER OLD AGE ASSISTANCE ACT

Question No. 164—Mr. Fortin:

1. How many persons, by province, and also in the federal constituency of Lotbinière, received benefits under the Old Age Assistance Act in 1965-66-67-68?

2. What is the average amount paid under the above Act (a) by province (b) for the federal constituency of Lotbinière?

3. How many persons are there between the ages of 65 and 70, in each province, and in the federal constituency of Lotbinière?

Return tabled.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of order. The object of starred question is to secure the answer at the earliest possible date. The normal period should not exceed two or three days. I refer Your Honour to question No. 49, to which the usual explanation of administrative difficulty and complexity can scarcely apply. My question No. 49 is:

1. Has the president of Air Canada been appointed?

2. At what date did the position become vacant?

That question went on the order paper 25 days ago. There is a further question, No. 311, regarding the detrimental effects on the city of Moose Jaw of the removal of some large industries, and the necessity of declaring the city a designated area. I hope that with this fine spirit of co-operation of which the President of the Privy Council speaks in such grandiloquent terms we will get answers to these questions.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the intervention of the right hon. member for Prince Albert. This will be of assistance to me in lashing my colleagues to get answers ready.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be a participant in action like that.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF CANADIAN OBSERVER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government has received a report from Canada's observer in Nigeria, or only from the government of Nigeria.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not read any report beyond that which has been published in the newspapers, but I think I may assume that the department has also received the report.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister table the report in the House of Commons so it will be available to all members of the house as well as to the members of the committee on external affairs and defence?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, not having read the report except, as I say, through the newspapers, I cannot give a clear commitment. But I do commit myself to reading it, and if there is nothing in it of a secret or confidential nature or of a nature which might impinge upon our good relations with other countries, this can be done. I would not publish it without their permission. I do not think any of these "ifs" should materialize. I undertake to report as soon as I have read it.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, relating to the same subject, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has received a cable from the Biafran head of state, sent to the president of the general assembly of the United Nations, pleading that appropriate action be taken at the United Nations to deal with what are alleged to be acts of genocide against the people of Biafra. If so, what reply has the Prime Minister made to the cable, and what action is the Canadian government proposing to take in respect of it?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have not yet seen the cable; therefore I have not replied to it. With regard to action, I repeat that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is in the process, and has been for several days now, of consulting with members of the United Nations and with the Secretary General to see whether any such action can be initiated in the United Nations.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. With Your Honour's permission I will preface it by saying that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has on numerous occasions in this house emphasized the fact that he was concerned, at the United Nations, with the question of the humanitarian aspects of the starvation of people. May I therefore ask the Prime Minister whether his answer means that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is also discussing with other members of the United Nations the particular question of the allegation or accusation of genocide as a subject matter for the agenda of the United Nations general assembly.

Mr. Trudeau: Not that particular subject, Mr. Speaker, but he is discussing any way in which we can get this whole subject in front of any audience at the United Nations.

Mr. Lewis: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I then ask the right hon. gentleman whether he would undertake—and I am sure he would—to ascertain whether the cable has reached his office and to study it and inform the house tomorrow as to whether any action is being contemplated as a result of that cable.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is one of the questions being taken up at the United Nations by the Secretary of State for External Affairs the supplying of arms by Britain, the U.S.S.R. and France to the participants in this fratricidal war?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that is the object of direct representations. The position of this government, of course, is that we are not supplying arms to either side and we think this should be the position of other friendly powers. I am prepared to say that publicly. But I do not think we should believe our consciences will be eased by telling other people what they should do. I believe the government of the United Kingdom is under pressure from its own people to reconsider these policies, and I regard that that is the proper point of pressure to be brought to bear.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister take the house into his confidence and tell this country how many countries members of the United Nations have been approached to join in a resolution, humanitarian in its purpose and objective, and how many have consented? What is the latest information the Prime Minister has? The Secretary of State for External Affairs told the house, as I recall it, ten days ago that a kind of poll was being held to ascertain which nations would join. It would also be of interest to know which nations would oppose such a humanitarian resolution being brought before the United Nations.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I will of course ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to report to me on this matter. I know the house would want to put the question to him directly in a few days when he comes back from the United Nations. I myself am meeting tomorrow the Secretary General of the Commonwealth, and I expect to have conversations with him to see whether we cannot perhaps get some of the African members of the Commonwealth to consider taking an initiative in this direction. However, our position has been and still is that the humanitarian aspects, which are the most important ones, must be set in the context of international law and of good relations amongst the African peoples, who are as good a judge of these matters often as are the members of this house.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a further supplementary question. Having in mind the deep concern of the country about this whole subject, would the government give consideration, I hope favourable, to allowing the television cameras in the committee room where hearings on Biafra and Nigeria are taking place?

Mr. Trudeau: I believe the jurisdiction over this matter rests with you, Mr. Speaker, rather than with the government.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

OTTAWA—COST OF NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right honourable Prime Minister.

Leaving Biafra to come back to Canada, everyone knows that an arts centre is now under construction in Ottawa. As the initial cost of that arts centre was to have been $15 million according to the original tenders, and as it now seems that the cost has swelled to $56 million, can the right honourable Prime Minister tell us how a contractor who tendered for $15 million can get the approval of the government and spend up to $56 million for the same work?

Mr. Speaker: Order. In my opinion, that question could be placed on the order paper. If the hon. member considers that there is some urgency, he could advise me of the subject which could be raised at the time of adjournment this evening.

Mr. Caouette: I thank you for your suggestion, Mr. Speaker. It is not as important as Biafra, but I will bring it up again at ten o'clock.

THE BUDGET

INQUIRY AS TO PROBABLE DATE OF PRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Like other hon. members, I welcome him back to the house after his arduous trip, and I am sure that he is glad to get back also. My question is: Has the minister decided on the date of the budget?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would not like to tie myself down to an exact date. I am hoping it will be either next week or the following week.

Mr. Hees: As a supplementary question may I ask whether it is the intention of the government to balance the budget?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the government's intention with respect to the budget will be made known when the budget is delivered.

AGRICULTURE

CORN—DISCUSSIONS WITH U.S. RESPECTING DUMPING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I should like to direct to the Minister of Agriculture. Since this is his day not to be here I would direct it to his parliamentary secretary if he were here but he also is not here. Perhaps I can direct it to the acting minister. When does the Minister of Agriculture intend to go to Washington to discuss with the secretary of agriculture ways and means of preventing the further dumping of U.S. corn on the Canadian market? I ask this question because of the minister's announcement last Friday that he would go to Washington and institute discussions on this subject.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): He will be here on Wednesday.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Will he not be here later this afternoon to introduce second reading of the Farm Credit Act bill?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, but this is not his duty day for the question period.

Mr. Nowlan: It is not the finance minister's either.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REPORTED REVISION OF BOOKLET ON REORGANIZATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the fact that this is one of his days off this week I should like to direct it to the Prime Minister. Has the booklet on the reorganization of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development been withdrawn so that a revision can be made?

[Mr. Hees.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the question should be placed on the order paper.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): May I suggest with all due respect, Mr. Speaker, that the question of the organization of the department is one of very current interest and one of urgency.

Mr. Speaker: The rules are very clear. If the hon. member feels that this is a matter of urgency, he can give notice of debate for tonight. That is just a few hours away.

MANPOWER

REQUEST FOR RESULTS OF JOB VACANCY SURVEY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that his department has established a job vacancy survey and the present decision of the department is that the information obtained shall be restricted to immigration counsellors and departmental officers, will the minister also make this most important information available to members of the House of Commons?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to look into this question and report to the hon. member.

REPORTED CANCELLATION OF RETRAINING COURSES IN FRENCH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is it true that his department has recently cancelled a program of free retraining courses in French during work hours after some 360 candidates had been accepted and 24 employers had agreed to support the program?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows he has to ask the question directly. He cannot ask the minister to confirm or deny a statement.

Mr. Brewin: May I rephrase my question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister cancelled this program?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker.

COMMUNICATIONS

CO-OPERATION WITH FRANCE IN SPACE AND SATELLITE RESEARCH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is he able to advise us as to what specific proposals were made on Friday by the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the foreign minister of France regarding special measures of co-operation in the field of space research and satellite telecommunications technology?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question now asked by the hon. member is of a very general nature and the information he is seeking should in my view be given to the house by way of a statement on motions.

Mr. Macquarrie: May I ask a supplementary question. Would the acting minister ask one of the ministers to prepare a statement and present it to the house on these matters on which he has been receiving a few signals?

FINANCE

GOLD—POSSIBILITY OF INCREASE IN PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Oza Tétrault (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General.

Does the hon. minister expect any increase in the price of gold in the near future, in order to help the development of our area?

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

INDUSTRY

CAPE BRETON—STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR DEVCO REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond asked on October 3 for the tabling by the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development of a report on the Dosco corporation. I understand he was really referring to the over-all plan for the conduct of coal mining operations by the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

This is a plan to be submitted to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development for the consideration and approval of the governor in council. The minister received it on exactly the day required by the legislation, that is, on October 1. It was sent to the premier of Nova Scotia at the same time. It must be considered from the viewpoints of both governments. That will be done as quickly as is consistent with the care that is required on a matter so important to the people of Cape Breton. As soon as a statement of policy is possible, the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development will be happy also to table the plan as submitted by the corporation.

SPORTS

HOCKEY—INQUIRY AS TO PROPOSED TASK FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister a question arising out of a statement he made during the election campaign, that before the beginning of the next National Hockey League schedule he had in mind the setting up of a task force for the purpose of looking into the question of whether control over the lives and future of young Canadians was being exerted by the league officials, and also what further action should be taken to guard against actions by the officials of the National Hockey League which have all the appearances of being monopolistic in their effect.

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare will be on duty tomorrow and I hope he will have an answer to this question at that time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that school has been convened and the absence of the minister has been excused, but I am directing my question to the Prime Minister who made the undertaking. It was not the Minister of National Health and Welfare or any other absentee minister; it was the Prime Minister. I am simply asking the Prime Minister, did he or did he not set up a task force as he promised he would?

Mr. Trudeau: As the right hon. gentleman knows, both he and I talked about a lot of things during the election. The difference is that our side appears to be in power. We have formed the government. We have divided the several tasks amongst the various ministers. I know the Minister of National Health and Welfare has this particular authority, and has done something about setting up a task force. I will have to ask him to report to the house about it. It is the position of the government that we divide responsibility among ministers as much as possible.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I ask the Prime Minister whether the Minister of National Health and Welfare will be here when his next duty day arrives or will he be absent? Is there any possibility he may be absent?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

NANAIMO-COWICHAN-THE ISLANDS—INQUIRY AS TO BY-ELECTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Has the government yet decided upon a date for the holding of a by-election in Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hees: May I ask a supplementary question. Is it the intention to put off indefinitely this test of the popularity of the government?

ABSENCE FROM HOUSE OF TRANSPORT MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Will he personally investigate the absence from the house today of the Minister of Transport, when according to the roster he is supposed to be here?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have, Mr. Speaker, and he is off on government business. However, I should like to make the house aware of the fact that the acting minister of transport is here and he will answer any question addressed to him.

Mr. Bell: May I ask a supplementary question. Will the Prime Minister give assurance that the Minister of Transport will make up this day later in the week?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I feel the opposition has missed the point. The most important thing is that questions may be asked in departmental areas. If the minister is not here, the area will be dealt with by the acting minister or by the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Hees: They just take questions as notice and do not give answers.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): I should like to direct my question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Justice. Have you been officially notified of the appointment of Judge Parker as chairman of the mediation commission in British Columbia?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt that the question is in order. In any event I have to remind the hon. member that questions should be directed to the chair.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to rise to ask a question of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who was here a few minutes ago, but I see he is not in his seat now. He is not supposed to be here today, so I suppose he left. Perhaps I should ask the question of someone else.

Mr. Speaker: While the hon. member ponders the problem, I will recognize the hon. member for Champlain.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Justice.

Has the minister been made aware of a Canadian rehabilitation centre project at Parent, in the northern area of Champlain district?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that the question should be put on the order paper.

[English]

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Because of the reduction in train inspection and the elimination of railway car men on Canadian railways, will the minister initiate an investigation to consider the seriousness of the lack of safety measures for railway personnel and the travelling public resulting from insufficient train inspection?

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, now that the Minister of Finance is back in the house, will he give attention to the promise he made that the pensions of retired civil servants will be increased?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that the hon. member came back to his seat to show people that he was not leaving the house after the question period. I can assure him I will give attention to all promises I have made in the past. I should like to say to hon. members that my reason for being in the house today, rather than my duty days, Wednesday and Thursday, is that having been away for two weeks I could not put off meeting hon. members of the opposition immediately on my return.

FINANCE

REPORTED WARNING RESPECTING COST OF JOINT PROGRAMS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I preface my question by saying that surely things have not come to the point where a minister has to apologize for being here.

Mr. Trudeau: I told him not to create that precedent.

Mr. Stanfield: May I ask the Prime Minister whether he has personally investigated the allegation that officials of the Ontario government earlier in the year warned the federal government that in its forecasts and estimates it was underestimating the total cost of certain joint programs?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the other day the President of the Treasury Board said he had seen this allegation in a newspaper and was investigating the truth thereof.

FISHERIES

ESTABLISHMENT BY RUSSIA OF RIGHTS OFF PACIFIC COAST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to one of the absent ministers, the Minister of Fisheries, or somebody else—anybody else. What action is being taken by the government to ensure that the Soviet Union does not establish historic fishing rights in the waters along the Pacific coast?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking a question of a very general nature. I do not think it is the type of question that should be asked at this time.

Mr. Howard: With respect, sir, it is an urgent matter and I saved the question for today because the Minister of Fisheries is supposed to be here today.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Speaker is here and has given a ruling.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—REPORTED STATEMENT AS TO ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. Was the minister expressing government poicy when, according to press reports, he stated in Penticton last Friday that the strengthening of the economy of Prince Edward Island must be a choice between the causeway project and a comprehensive development program? In other words, we cannot have both?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Well, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. My understanding of such questions is that normally they should be asked of the Prime Minister. According to the rules, if the hon. member is asking whether something is government policy he should direct his question to the Prime Minister.

Mr. McQuaid: May I direct the question to the Prime Minister, then, and ask him whether this represents government policy?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Would the hon. member ask the question again, please?

Mr. McQuaid: I will repeat it. Was the Minister of Public Works expressing government policy when he was reported to have said in Penticton last Friday that the strengthening of the economy of Prince Edward Island must be a choice between the causeway project and a comprehensive development program?

Mr. Trudeau: I understand that if such a report exists, which is doubtful, it is a false report, Mr. Speaker.

WINTER WORKS

QUEBEC—FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN PROVINCIAL PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the statement made by the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs of the province of Quebec to the effect that the province will subsidize 50 per cent of winter works, does the right hon. Prime Minister anticipate any assistance in this regard?

Right Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Would the hon. member kindly repeat his question please?

Mr. La Salle: Since the Minister of Municipal Affairs of the province of Quebec stated his department would subsidize 50 per cent of winter works, does the right hon. Prime Minister anticipate a form of assistance different from that of last year as regards winter works to be undertaken in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the winter works policy has already been announced and it has not changed. As regards unemployment in certain areas, the government will take care of that as already indicated when referring to other programs.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

AUTHORITY FOR CONSTRUCTION OF ALBERTA BRANCH LINE

The house resumed, from Thursday, October 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale, for Mr. Hellyer) for the second reading of Bill No. C-109, respecting the construction of a line of railway in the province of Alberta by Canadian National Railway Company from the vicinity of Windfall on the Windfall extension to the Sangudo subdivision of the Canadian National Railway in a westerly direction for a distance of approximately 51 miles to the Bigstone property of Pan American Petroleum Corporation and of a connecting spur extending in a northerly direction for a distance of approximately nine miles to the South Kaybob property of Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited and its associates.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I notice that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) is not here so I assume that the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Richardson) will be dealing with this bill. There has been some question whether this matter should be referred to a standing committee. I for one am not urging that this be done, but if it is not done there are a number of questions that the minister on behalf of the government must be prepared to answer before the bill is put through all stages.

From what I know of this project and from what the minister has said, it appears at first blush to be a program which will have beneficial effects for the country. It will probably add substantially to the gross national product and will result in the employment of a number of people and the production of a commodity desired in the world and for which Canada has the opportunity of establishing an export market. Nevertheless, the legislation involves the expenditure of $10 million of the taxpayers' money.

One advantage of sending a bill of this kind to a standing committee, as was done by the Conservative government in 1960 and 1961 with two major construction programs, one involving the Mattagami railway in the province of Quebec and the other the Great Slave Lake railway, is that it provides an opportunity for members of the standing committee to ask a series of questions with regard to the cost, traffic guarantees, the amount of traffic that will be generated, and whether the freight changes will be agreed rates. All of these questions are very pertinent. In authorizing this measure we are acting for the taxpayers of Canada, because this $10 million will come from the consolidated revenue fund. Therefore I will put these questions to the minister now. He may not be able to answer them specifically, but I suggest that he at least give us a guarantee that when the bill is considered by the committee of the whole house, if that is the way the house decides to proceed, the minister will have available to him his officials armed with the facts.

We want to know what will be the cost per mile of this railway. We have been told in general what traffic will be generated, but we should like to know the gross amount of the traffic and what guarantees there are. We also want to know over what period of years this traffic will be maintained. We should like to know what guarantees there will be as to quantity and yearly shipment. We should like to know about the freight rate and compare it with the rates in other comparable operations. Will it in fact be an agreed rate?

We should also like to know whether there is any overriding guarantee as to the total minimum traffic, and over what period of years. We should like some information as to the amount of employment generated both at the plants involved and also on the railway itself. We should like to know what will be the value of the production planned and to what extent it will result in an increase in the gross national product.

In his speech at the resolution stage the minister said, as reported on page 638 of Hansard:

> The management of the C.N.R. has informed me that by means of traffic guarantee contracts made with the two companies whose names I have mentioned, the C.N.R. is assured that the products of these plants will be shipped over the new lines and over the other lines of the C.N.R. in such volumes that the revenue therefrom will support all the costs of the lines—

I do not doubt that, Mr. Speaker, but I think hon. members are entitled to have a look at these agreements and know what is involved in them. There have been cases in the past where railroads have indicated what in their view would be the means of raising revenue from freight to cover the cost of building a new line and subsequently they have been disappointed.

I suggest these are facts to which we are entitled. Certainly in the case of both railway projects to which I referred the standing committee made a careful and detailed study. Questions were asked of the C.N.R. officials and of the minister. When the time came that the committee was ready to make its recommendations to the house the committee was satisfied, after a full and searching inquiry, that the project was in fact one which deserved the support of the house and all the facts were before the house.

I do not doubt that this will be the case now, and I appreciate, of course, the need for haste. I understand that time is of the essence and that there is a need to get the project launched and construction started as early as possible this fall. Although the time spent in sending the matter to the standing committee and then waiting for it to come back here may seriously retard the commencement of the construction and completion of the railway, nevertheless I think we are entitled to the information to which I have referred.

Therefore I ask the minister, who I think has not spoken yet, whether he would indicate to the house in closing the debate—I hope it will not be long—that we have his assurance and guarantee that these facts will be made available during the committee stage and perhaps also the agreements in question to which I referred. I do not think there is anything secret in them. Certainly the contracts involving the construction of the Pine Point railway and the agreements between Pine Point Mines, the C.N.R. and the government were all made available and examined in some detail by the members of the committee, who were quite well satisfied. I make this request for information so that when we get into committee hon. members house will have some idea of the pertinent facts.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question. He said that documents relating to the construction of the Great Slave Lake railway were made available to members of a committee. To which committee was he referring?

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I think at that time it was called the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, which has since yielded place to the committee on transportation and communications.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Schreyer: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I think the minister should answer the questions that have been asked by the hon. member for Peace River. If he does not know the facts then we should have the No. 1 transport minister here instead of the No. 2 transport minister. Some of the clauses need explaining. One clause suggests that there should not be—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have to remind the hon. member that the bill is now before us for second reading and it would not be in order to refer to clauses individually.

Mr. Horner: I accept your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I did not want to rise to close the debate till all hon. members who wished to had spoken.

Canadian National Railways

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I realize that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate. While we are dealing with Bill No. C-109 I feel I have the opportunity to bring to the attention of the house and the minister a matter which has been before us for quite some time now.

In Bill No. C-109 we are being asked to authorize the Canadian National Railways to expend a certain amount of money to construct a line of railway in northern Alberta. No one is objecting to this provision. Some years ago a bill similar in intent and purpose to the one now before the house was introduced and passed, and as a result the Canadian National called for tenders for the building of the Great Slave Lake railway. For the past two and a half to three years hon. members on this side and on the government side of the house have asked the Minister of Transport to look into the matter of improper tendering with respect to that railway. Allegations have been made that serious errors in the enforcement of the terms of contract were made by the Canadian National, as a result of which some contracting firms engaged in building that railway for the C.N.R. went into bankruptcy.

I realize that under the rules there are limitations on how deeply I can go into the construction of the Great Slave Lake railway by the Canadian National. To keep the matter brief and to the point, I and other hon. members of this house do not feel under any obligation at this time to vote additional sums of money under this bill for a new line to be built by the Canadian National until we receive some answers from the Minister of Transport on a matter which he says he has been studying for some time.

About March 20 last I asked the Minister of Transport whether he had received any claims accompanied by briefs from those construction firms that had been engaged in the construction of the Great Slave Lake railway. The minister said he had received claims and briefs, that they were complex and voluminous and that he needed time to study them. Several months have passed since then and in the meantime some firms have been forced into receivership and bankruptcy. Some were forced into bankruptcy before the matter was brought to the minister's attention by members of this house. Since that time I understand one or two other firms engaged in the construction have also been forced into receivership.

[Mr. Richardson.]

Lest the Acting Minister of Transport tries to say that those contractors who worked for the Canadian National ought to have exercised their rights and brought their claims before the courts, I wish to say that all possible legal avenues have been exhausted. The situation is very like the one that existed in the early 1960's when the northern Ontario pipe line was constructed. At that time five or six construction firms were placed in a precarious and untenable financial position, not through their own fault but as a result of sloppy specifications which were given for job tenders by the crown corporation involved. As a consequence a number of firms which lost heavily in the construction of the pipe line made claims for compensation. I do not care whether one considers an extra payment an ex gratia payment from the crown. The fact is that the contracting firms I have just referred to had no alternative but to make a special claim for payment. The matter was brought before the Treasury Board in 1961, I believe.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must interrupt the hon. member for a moment. He himself had reservations about whether his remarks on the Great Slave Lake railway had any bearing on the matter now before the house. It is always difficult for the Chair to determine at what point we stray beyond the four corners of a motion, but in my view a discussion of the construction of another railway line, the Great Slave Lake line to which the hon. member has referred, is somewhat beyond the terms of this bill. The discussion on the bill need not be entirely relevant but the hon. member may wish to bring his contribution closer perhaps to the principle of the bill now under consideration.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Speaker, I was actually supporting the contention of the hon. member for Peace River who said that the subject matter of this bill ought to be placed before a committee so that we could look in detail at the operations of the Canadian National relative to the construction of a railway line similar to that envisaged in this bill.

During the past year Your Honour will no doubt recall that I tried repeatedly to obtain from the Minister of Transport some indication as to what he and his department were doing with respect to the outstanding claims which have been entered by contractors who, I repeat, were forced into bankruptcy as a result of the manner in which the Canadian National enforced the conditions of contract when the Great Slave Lake railway was being constructed.

That matter, I know, has no direct relevance to the substance of Bill C-109, except in one connection.

We are now being asked to vote a sum of money to the Canadian National in order to enable it to construct a railway. I suggest, and I think many hon. members agree with me, that we should not be in a hurry to do so until we are satisfied that the Canadian National is prepared to settle satisfactorily and conscionably the claims of those contractors who were forced into bankruptcy some six or seven years ago. I think there is a direct connection between what happened in the past and what we are now asked to do. Unless we obtain from the Minister of Transport some indication of action, the contractors to whom I have referred will all be forced into personal and corporate bankruptcy.

I make one final plea to the Acting Minister of Transport to communicate with his colleague and persuade him to appear before this house when we are dealing with Bill C-109 in committee of the whole so that he may explain what has been done in the past several months to deal with the urgent petitions, pleas and requests not only of the owners or heads of the contracting firms involved but of hon. members of this house. I could name names although I hesitate to do so, not having asked hon. members if they wish to have their names mentioned in connection with this matter. Many hon. members have made representations to the Minister of Transport and a Senator in the other place has also made representations in order to—and here I use a colloquialism—to clean up this mess of the past several years.

• (4:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words regarding Bill No. C-109 respecting, and I quote:

—the construction of a line of railway in the Province of Alberta by Canadian National Railway Company from the vicinity of Windfall on the Windfall Extension to the Sangudo Subdivision of the Canadian National Railway in a westerly direction—

This deals with the construction of a 60 mile line at an average cost of $174,000 per mile or at an estimated cost of $10,435,000 according to the schedule. I hope that the government, the Minister of Transport and the officials of the department have carefully studied the margin of profit which can be expected from a construction which is going to cost $10 or 12 millions.

The bill mentions that the Minister of Finance will have authority to advance money, to make loans available, not in excess of $12 million. In addition, the contract will be awarded by tenders. This is still no guarantee that the contract will go to the lowest bidder. The contractor's solvency will probably be considered. Should a tender be a little higher than the lowest one and should the contractor be more solvent, the government reserves the right to choose the tenderer it pleases.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the minister's attention to this point. At a time when the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. are forced to abandon some railway lines, as is now the case with the Ontario Northland Railway in northwestern Quebec and northeastern Ontario, has the government studied closely whether it would be economic to build a railway line in Alberta? Will it still be used in five or ten years, in view of the fact that the trucking industry could undoubtedly meet the needs of the area which will be served by the C.N.R.?

If the operation of this railway line becomes less economic year after year, I wonder whether, at a time when credit is so hard to get, at a time when it is so difficult to undertake constructions that would be useful to our people, the government would not be well-advised to consider thoroughly that matter and the situation in that area of Alberta. The fact is not that we object to the construction of a railway line, far from it. However, if the trucking industry should meet the requirements in that area of Alberta, I cannot see why the government would assume the responsibility of constructing such a line which would finally cost $10 to $12 million.

If we follow the example of the National Arts Centre in Ottawa, the construction of that railroad could well cost $35 million. We should, therefore, examine very carefully that proposal for the construction of a railroad in Alberta. We should ascertain whether that project will be profitable. Will the Canadian National make a profit by operating that railroad? If it is proved that it will, then we will not oppose it. On the other hand, if it is doubtful, in view of the fact that people turn more and more to trucking instead of railroads, then I feel that the Canadian government is not authorized to spend from $10 to $12 million for the construction of a railroad that will be abandoned within a few years.

These then, Mr. Speaker, are a few of the impressions I had on reading Bill No. C-109. I say again that we have no objection to the construction of that railroad as long as it is profitable. But, if there is any doubt about that, then I feel the government should give the bill a six months hoist and prepare other bills likely to help the citizens of the area which Bill No. C-109 is intended to assist.

[English]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I have been very interested lately in the subject of government contracts and I was particularly interested in what was said by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Schreyer) regarding the contracts which will be let following the passage of this legislation. The conditions and guarantees for which provision is made when such contracts are entered into are diverse in nature, as I have found from recent experience.

I should like to refer to two provisions which in my opinion the bill before us should contain. One relates to the point made by the hon. member for Selkirk. In providing a guarantee of financial assistance to the railway company the government should retain a certain amount of power to prescribe the conditions of contracts to be let under this arrangement. The situation which developed in connection with the Great Slave Lake railway could easily develop in the case of the line we are now considering. The point raised by the hon. member for Temiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) was that the present arrangement might result in expenditures much greater than those anticipated in the bill we are now considering.

The failure in the past of the government and of crown corporations to make adequate provisions for the protection of those engaged in the construction of public works is much to be regretted. The powers of the federal government are rarely sufficient to make sure that tendering procedures are effective. I might refer to a case of which you, Mr. Speaker, have intimate knowledge. In the reconstruction of the west block, for instance, there turned out to be no relationship between the original tenders and the final amount paid in connection with every aspect of the contract. This is true in respect of many government contracts, if not of most of them. Yet this bill seems to contain no means of protection against the type of possibility which is bothering the hon. member for Temiscamingue in relation to the national arts centre.

In my own area we have encountered a great deal of difficulty this year in connection with a government contract. In this case people in one province are employed as prime contractors to carry out public works in another province. I realize that the employment picture of Ontario Hydro has no relation to the present bill except in the sense that employment is affected, but it is relevant to point out that when the Quebec provincial government lets a contract it specifies that the people employed must come from that province. Not only the contractors but the workmen employed must come from that province. This affects Ontario workers. People living near the border, unable to obtain employment in connection with Quebec Hydro projects, have even found themselves denied employment in Ontario because they lack the experience which Quebec workers have gained while employed in both provinces.

I raise this point because I think it is time we took advantage of experience gained in letting contracts in northern areas where local inhabitants must be given preference in terms of employment. I believe a similar provision should be written into the bill before us because I see no other way in which this result can be achieved in the absence of general or overriding legislation on this point. I recall legislation brought in by a former minister of northern affairs in which there was a clause to the effect that the native population should be given preference in terms of employment whenever they were available and suitable. If we cannot have over-all legislation providing for this type of employment then it should be a factor in this bill. I recommend to the minister sponsoring the bill that a clause be written into it providing for a 10 per cent local employment factor, which in turn will be inserted in the tenders issued to the contractors.

We are going into a totally new development area. People living in that area have no alternative form of employment. Contractors should be made aware of the need to provide local employment, and it is our responsibility to see that this is done. It would obviate some of the problems that plagued contractors in the Great Slave Lake area with regard to local employment.

This bill takes the form of many such pieces of legislation that come before us. It does not take into account the aspirations of the federal government and of others with respect to native populations. Unless consideration is given to this matter now, difficulties will arise. Those difficulties could be forestalled if the government inserted in the bill the two clauses I have suggested.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

On clause 1—Construction and completion.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, what is the position of the minister with regard to the series of questions I posed? I recognize that all of the facts may not be available at this time. If so, may I suggest we stand clause 1 if the minister is not able to answer the questions and provide us with copies of the agreements, or at least tell us the essence of the agreements. We could then proceed with the other clauses in the expectation that before the committee stage is finished he will provide us with the facts. However, if he is able to provide us with all the answers I would be happy to hear him now.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Chairman, I would be pleased to reply to the questions that have been raised. First of all, may I say that in considering this bill it may be reassuring to hon. members for me to point out that except for necessary changes pertaining to geographical location and dollar amounts the form and provisions of the bill are in all other respects similar to legislation passed by the house from time to time authorizing the construction of C.N.R. branch lines.

The question of the traffic agreements has been raised. Such agreements have been negotiated between the C.N.R., the Pan American Petroleum Corporation and the Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company, and they guarantee annual shipments over the C.N.R. line of 75 per cent of all production of sulphur and liquid petroleum gas from both plants, with a minimum of 223,000 long tons of sulphur. I think it will be evident to all hon. members that the guaranteed shipment of this large tonnage of sulphur makes the branch line an attractive addition to the C.N.R. system.

I would like to elaborate further although I must in fairness point out that the competitive position of the C.N.R., both in relation to other railways and other methods of transportation, as well as the C.N.R.'s negotiating position with the companies concerned, indicate that it is not appropriate to discuss the anticipated earnings of the railway, but I have been assured by officials of the railway, as I stated earlier, that the operation of this branch line will provide a satisfactory earning for the railroad.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to go back to other legislation except for purposes of comparison, but I would point out to the minister that in the Great Slave Lake railway bill reference was made to certain agreements and clause 6(b) stated there would be a guarantee to the company by Pine Point Mines Limited:

> —of such traffic volume over the railway line as will, in the opinion of the company, be sufficient to ensure recovery of the cost of operating and maintaining the railway line based on such freight rates and for such period of time as may be set out in the agreement;

In other words, a statutory obligation was placed on the government to make sure an agreement of this kind had been entered into, and it was this undertaking of the government, followed up by members of the standing committee, that provided the basis for the passage of the statute. Of course a much larger amount was involved in that case, $86 million.

I understand the position with regard to the competitive situation of the railway. Personally I am not going to intervene in this regard, but from the agreements could the minister, paraphrasing as well as he can, indicate the number of years involved and the gross and net income to the company in that period? I think a combination of that information plus the information that the minister has given might well indicate to the committee that there is an undertaking by the railway company, pursuant to these traffic agreements, to obtain from the people principally concerned net revenue that will cover the cost of construction of this rail line.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Chairman, I believe that this statement will be satisfactory to the hon. member. The officials of the C.N.R. have confirmed that gross railway earnings generated from the operations of these two sulphur recovery plants will meet all expenses of operation and maintenance of the branch line, the cost of transporting the industry's traffic on other lines of the C.N.R. system, plus interest and amortizing of the cost of the branch line, and produce a satisfactory surplus for the railway.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, the acting minister suggested there were guaranteed shipments amounting to 75 per cent of the sulphur. How long is this guaranteed? He gave the amount of the return, but is there a specified period of time?

Mr. Richardson: The period of time is 15 years.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I should like to know whether the minister is in a position to tell us more about the conditions of this area. It is in a fairly undeveloped part of the country where there is a large though generally sparse, Indian population.

I am sure the people in this area are interested in the employment factor. When this type of proposition came up in respect of the Panarctic Oil company the former minister of northern affairs made a declaration which eventually became part of the contract between the oil company and those doing the work, and there had to be a certain amount of local employment. I see no reason that this cannot continue in this case in order that a percentage of the people employed must be people in the local area. I should like to know whether the minister has considered this and, if so, what the intention is.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Chairman, when the hon. member was speaking during second reading I made a note of his observations regarding local employment. I will certainly pass his concern on to the officials of the C.N.R.

Mr. Peters: The minister will have to do something more than pass on those observations. The C.N.R. will have been granted a concession when this bill has been passed. We have been informed that the cost of this operation will be amortized and recovered over a period of 15 years through the sales of sulphur. We are giving this concession to the C.N.R. and in return we should have some definite commitment from the company about the advantages the area will have.

I was very pleased with the former minister of northern affairs, now the Minister of Public Works, as a result of the declaration he made. It was very positive and definite. The company was not to be assisted unless certain conditions were met. There was an increase in local employment. It is my belief there are a number of people in this area who are skilled and could be employed on this construction.

I remember an occasion when a $40 million contract was awarded in my own area and it appeared that one company from Montreal intended to bring in its own people to work in that area. That company intended to exploit our water resources and it was not even going to employ local workers. A great fuss was made, in which I was involved, and we were able to change the situation. I suggest there will be great resentment on the part of the people in the area of this line if the company does not employ local people on heavy construction of this nature.

The Canadian National is not a benevolent organization and it has never been. It has always tried to make the biggest profit possible for its owners, namely, the crown and the shareholders of the old Grand Trunk. If we write in these conditions I think there will be support for the project in the area. Surely this is an obligation we should accept. These conditions should be made in a formal way.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Chairman, at least part of the work will be contracted out to others and will be beyond the control of the C.N.R., particularly having regard to employment. However, to the extent that this work is done by the C.N.R. the hon. member's suggestion will be borne in mind. I think it is a very good one.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the acting minister could tell us whether the C.N.R. is now ready to call for tenders and when it will be ready to start construction after the awarding of contracts.

Mr. Richardson: The company would like to start construction at the earliest possible moment so as to get going before the winter season in Alberta. The company will be calling for tenders as soon as this legislation has been passed. It is anticipated that construction will take about a year.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Chairman, I was very interested in the exchange between the hon. member for Timiskaming and the minister about the value of the suggestion made by that hon. member regarding local employment. I was pleased to hear the minister's response in that he said it was a good idea which he supported wholeheartedly and would communicate to the C.N.R. Perhaps this is not very kind to the Minister of Transport, but if this is such a good idea why did he not think of it before? That minister has been in the government for a number of years, as has the former minister of northern development who had great concern for native peoples, particularly in respect of employment. We should have some communication from the Minister of Transport who is responsible for this bill as to why this idea was not incorporated in the bill in the first place. The acting minister apparently endorses it as a good idea, but we are concerned about the Minister of Transport who obviously has not endorsed it. Otherwise it would be in the bill.

Mr. Richardson: I hardly think it is right to say that the minister would not endorse it. Surely he would assume, as I would, that the C.N.R. and other companies who will be given the contracts will try to use all the local labour they can. This would be the natural thing for them to do.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): The history of the C.N.R. and those contractors who do work of this kind does not indicate that to be the case. It only occurs when there is a directive written into the contract. It only happens when there is an obligation on the company to do so. It then follows this course because it is required to do so, not as a result of generosity. This is something the Minister of Transport will have to account for somewhere along the line, perhaps even tomorrow.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—Competitive bids or tenders.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, I should like sincerely to urge the acting minister to give consideration to the fact that the company should adopt the principle of competitive bids or tenders for such work or any part thereof that it does with its own forces prior to calling for bids or tenders from outside sources. We all know there has been a great deal of contracting out by the Canadian National. All companies concerned with railway operation and construction should have an opportunity to bid in respect of the laying of this trackage and the construction of the roadbed needed for the trackage.

• (4:40 p.m.)

I think this would only be appropriate in view of the fact that the acting minister has already said that he believes the people in the area should be given preference. Under the circumstances the company should adopt the principle of giving these people the preference of employment before calling for competitive bids. I appreciate that bids may have to be called for in order to come up with a competitive proposal and price vis-à-vis what the railway's own operating people can do and what a contractor can do. This is only to get things in line so far as bookkeeping is concerned. I am certain we should adopt the idea that the employees should have first chance at this project. I ask the acting minister to look seriously at this question in order to give the railway's own forces prior consideration. This would be most advantageous to those people in the area.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I suppose this matter would come under clause 2. My question concerns facilities available to railway employees while the construction is in progress. From what I have seen of railroad construction, those doing the work are continually on the move a few miles a day. In this part of the country I suspect there are very few and probably no facilities in terms of places in which to eat and sleep. I refer to accommodation and facilities for those working on the job who move with the track-laying equipment.

Undoubtedly when railway workers are doing the work the railway will supply boarding cars. Does the minister know whether there is any requirement in the tenders and subsequent contracts signed by contractors calling for a minimum standard of eating, sleeping and recreational facilities to be provided by the contractor? If this is not the case, will the minister take up this matter with Canadian National?

We run into situations where there are a large number of wildcat strikes. Some are very close to the minister's area and some are very close to the area of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt. This is quite general during the construction stage in such large operations. I think there should be some requirement in the contracts whereby contractors must provide a good standard of eating, sleeping and recreational facilities because in this part of Canada—the hon. member for Peace River could tell us better—I suspect there are absolutely no such facilities available off the scene of construction.

I hope the minister will remind Canadian National that certainly in some cases the calibre and quality of the facilities provided for their employees are most inadequate. Some of the old boarding cars that have been used for extra gangs you and I, Mr. Chairman, would not keep cattle in. If these people are to be 200, 300 or 400 miles away from any large settlement or centre, they must have decent living, eating and sleeping facilities. I hope the acting minister will pass this on to Canadian National and assure them that this matter will be watched.

Canadian National Railways

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I realize full well that the Acting Minister of Transport said the C.N.R. would like to get going on the construction of this line of railway in northern Alberta just as quickly as possible. Like other hon. members, I would like to see this public work completed. It would contribute greatly to the economic development of this part of the country. But it is not as simple as that. The Canadian National may be in a hurry now but it apparently is not always in a hurry when it comes to dealing with problems which come before it.

I say again to the Acting Minister of Transport that since he has become involved in this department and is helping the minister to deal with the problems in this portfolio, he should ask for the files of the C.N.R. regarding the construction of the Great Slave Lake, Pine Point railway. Some construction firms, Hatch Construction, Pete Rohl Construction, Ginter Construction, Krywa Brothers Construction, Lucas Construction and others, have been put into bankruptcy because of clause 16 of the form of contract.

This form of contract has been used by the C.N.R. in reaching agreement with construction firms which undertake to build roadbeds for them. I do not know how long clause 16 has been a normal part of the form of contract used by the C.N.R. Rumour has it that after many years and in fact decades this clause has been dropped. I wish I knew for sure. I would certainly hesitate to vote sums of money to be provided to the C.N.R., which will be used to pay contractors for the building of this new railway, if I felt there was a chance that clause 16 was still in the form of contract.

Clause 16 was in the form of contract in the case of the construction of Great Slave Lake railway. This clause was enforced in such an unconscionable way that it contributed directly to the bankruptcy of four or five road construction companies. The acting minister must, and I am sure he will, avail himself of all the briefs, printed documents and material which have accumulated in the office of the Minister of Transport. I am sure the acting minister will want to look at this material in detail to see what course of action can now be followed in order to redress the grievances of these people. There is no use talking about their right of access to the courts. In some cases justice, unfortunately, still is not obtainable without money with which to hire legal counsel, etc.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

Most of these construction companies were bonded. In one, two or three instances the bonding companies exerted such pressure on the contractors that they forced them to sign off. The harshness of it is that the contractors simply had no legal recourse but morally, in terms of what was right and ethical, I am satisfied they have an iron-clad case. I am just about sick of the Minister of Transport taking seven months to make up his mind whether he thinks they have a case.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words before we proceed past clause 2. After reading the clause I think perhaps the appropriate time to deal with this matter was in the earlier discussion. However, that is immaterial.

This is the clause that refers to Canadian National, the company, adopting the principle of bids and tenders and thus negotiating better prices. The clause provides that the company does not necessarily have to accept the lowest or any bid, etc. This clause embodies the authority to enter into a contractual relationship for the carrying out of the construction work.

Regardless of whether the suggestion of my colleague, the hon. member for Timiskaming, is considered a good one by the minister and will be passed on to Canadian National, in the absence of anything written into the law that we are now considering that would make it a requirement for Canadian National to do something I think that in view of the activities of Canadian National its attitude toward contractors it may hire from to time will preclude any generosity on its part.

I have some fairly harsh thoughts about Canadian National in another context and in relationship to some other forms of activity. For a publicly owned company I do not believe it to be the least bit progressive, desirous of advancing the interests of the economy, or anything of that sort. It is, rather, a sort of ultraconservative, status quo type of corporate structure that can become pretty callous and have a great deal of disregard for the well-being of people.

Apart from that, there is a factor in our economic life I do not particularly like, which I am sure many other hon. members do not like either, that may well come into play with respect to any of the contractors the C.N. engages to do any of its work. The situation to which I refer would arise from the type of collective agreement between any one union and the company containing the so-called closed shop principle. Incidentally, this is a principle with which I do not agree, particularly because it militates against the employment of people within the locale where the work is taking place. This is a supposition in regard to this proposed construction, but it is an actual situation in many cases.

It has been my experience in the past that the situation can arise where a union having its local headquarters in one of the major cities within a province will have a collective agreement with an employer who has a contract to perform construction work 500, 800 or 1,000 miles distant from the headquarters of the union and in some cases from the headquarters of the construction company itself. Because of the closed shop principle contained in such collective agreements under which a person wishing to be employed on the job must first be a member of the union, we find that construction crews from the cities go out into the hinterland or into rural areas to perform the construction work. People in the local area, regardless of the fact that they may be perfectly qualified tradesmen in the particular occupation that is involved, are precluded from having any opportunity to become gainfully employed on that construction project because there is a collective agreement which works against them.

As a further extension of the concept advanced by the hon. member for Timiskaming, in the initial instance this situation would apply to the people indigenous to the area, particularly to the native Indian people, but it might equally well apply to anyone else in the area. Unless we can write in the bill some requirement that Canadian National Railways, which in any event does not have a good history in this regard, must provide employment to the local people, it will not be done for a number of reasons which I have just advanced.

I have just been consulting with some of my colleagues and we find we do not have at hand what we would consider appropriate wording by way of an amendment to guarantee the opportunity of employment to people in the area where the construction will take place. However, surely the Minister of Public Works, because he was the minister of Indian affairs and northern development when a conscious effort was made to ensure in legal terms that people indigenous to an area were given employment opportunities, will find in the files of his department or the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development an appropriate wording which could be applied here. In this way the good point supported by the minister will become an actual fact. Perhaps consultation could take place between the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to see whether or not such wording exists. Since this matter has been dealt with before, surely there is appropriate wording which was used successfully in the past and which we could perhaps incorporate into this clause.

I should like to ask the minister in a informal way if he could indicate whether he would be in favour of holding this clause over until the appropriate wording is found to give the protection which we all want to give. If the wording is not immediately available, we could hold it over until tomorrow or even until later today.

Mr. Fairweather: Would the hon. member permit a question? I listened with great interest to his accusation of reaction against the C.N.R. I make no comment on this, but may I ask whether the hon. member is trying to prevent reaction in employment practices within the unions? In other words, who is being reactionary, or are we both? I commend him for his honesty in his answer.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I am sure the hon. member need not have asked his question because he heard what I said and I was quite clear about the closed shop principle. I do not believe in it. I do not think a union should have the right to determine whether or not a person should get employment in the first instance.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Chairman, the point has been very well made and I have accepted its validity. May I say that I will convey it to officials of the C.N.R. I really do not think it would be appropriate to bind the company with legislation on this point. I really do not believe we should entertain any alteration to the bill as drafted.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, could the acting minister tell us whether the C.N.R. has as yet acquired any right of way? I do not expect him to know how much right of way they have, but does it go through crown land? If it does, has it been purchased or is it leased from the crown, and what kind of a lease is it? Is it for 99 years or for 33? Does any part of this right of way pass through Indian land or Indian reserve holdings, and what kind of arrangements were made to compensate them?

Mr. Richardson: I do not have information at the present time about the ownership of the land but I do believe a right of way has been acquired.

Mr. Benjamin: Could the acting minister also tell us whether the railway has started any construction of the roadbed, of the right of way fences or any construction with their own crews up to this time?

Mr. Richardson: No, the main work on this line awaits this legislation.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time? At the next sitting of the house?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): By leave, now.

Mr. Schreyer: I just want to say, sir, that I am not prepared to give unanimous consent unless the minister can report in detail on the decisions that have been taken by the department concerning the validity of the claims in connection with the contracts involved in the construction of the Great Slave Lake railway.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Next sitting of the house.

JUDGES ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE ADDITIONAL JUDGES FOR ONTARIO AND QUEBEC

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (for the Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Judges Act to provide salaries for three additional Ontario County Court judges and eleven additional Quebec Superior Court judges.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As hon. members will note, Mr. Chairman, the resolution provides for three additional Ontario County Court judges and 11 additional Quebec Superior Court judges. Perhaps I might address a few remarks to the second of the two basic proposals involved in the resolution. I point out that the necessity for the 11 additional Quebec Superior Court judges, which hon. members will at once recognize as an important addition to the judicial force of that particular province, has been the direct result of the decision by the province of Quebec to take advantage of legislation passed at the last session to amend the divorce law.

If hon. members will recall, at the time that bill was before the house it was not anticipated that Quebec would, at least in the current year, take advantage of the opportunity to assume jurisdiction over divorce. It was assumed that the province would continue to use proceedings which had been established over the years for the granting of divorce by parliament. However, late in the month of June the Quebec government made a decision to take advantage of the provisions in that divorce measure which made it possibel for that province, as well as the province of Newfoundland, to assume jurisdiction over divorce. The necessity arises, therefore, to provide for additional judges so that the courts may exercise jurisdiction in this area. This is the reason for seeking these additions to the Quebec bench at this particular time.

It is my understanding that the three additional positions for the Ontario County Court really result from the normal increase in litigious business resulting from the growth of the province.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I am glad to see the Minister of Justice here because I wanted to say something very complimentary to him. First of all, I want to congratulate him on his recent appointment of Chief Justice Val Milvain of the trial division of Alberta. I feel he is the type and calibre of man, and I am sure the bar association of Alberta as well as the Canadian Bar Association will agree with me, that we need in this position in Alberta. He will add dignity to the judiciary and will do a fine job as one of the judges of the trial division. I believe, too, he will supply the necessary administrative skill to take care of the backlog that may exist in many of our courts. I should also like to say that we have had very good appointments to the bench. I can speak for the two provinces in which I have practiced, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Mr. Orlikow: Was he a Tory?

Mr. Woolliams: Certainly there have been members of parliament appointed. I have always taken the view that experience gained in parliament is helpful to a judge in coming to a conclusion when certain important cases come before him. On the whole, I would say that appointments to the judiciary have been very good. My friend asked if I want an appointment, but I would tell him that I am quite happy with the position I now hold.

This resolution contains two very simple propositions. As the President of the Privy Council said, on behalf of the Minister of Justice who was absent for a moment, provision is made for increasing the number of County Court judges in Ontario and adding 11 additional judges to the Quebec Superior Court. It goes without saying, and even without mentioning the additional jurisdiction in connection with divorce, that the growth of urban centres in Canada, as in other countries, has increased the work load of the courts of our various provinces. There is a backlog of cases, both civil and criminal. I do not know but perhaps the minister will tell me how many judges of the Quebec Superior Court there are now. In view of the additional jurisdiction in connection with divorce, I would say this resolution results from a recommendation by the Attorney General of Quebec.

When we are talking about the appointment of judges there is one thing I should like to mention to the Minister of Justice. This is no criticism of the present minister. I am referring to cases that come before the superior courts of the provinces in which judgments are reserved. Frequently in this country judgments are reserved for months on end. I know in my own province that at one time some cases had been reserved for two or three years during which time citizens of that province were denied a judgment. The United States system may seem harsh, but after a certain number of cases have piled up on a judge's desk for a certain length of time his salary stops until he catches up. It seems to me these people sometimes procrastinate far too long.

I think it may be well to underline the fact that amendments to the Criminal Code are coming before the house soon. There is not much change, I understand, between the former bill and the new bill in so far as the jurisdiction of the various courts in criminal matters is concerned. There is no doubt that there has been an acceleration in crime, and this was mentioned during the question period. I do not have the statistics before me, but I have a newspaper article with the heading, "Underworld Toll At 15 In Montreal". The article reads:

> The count of "underworld killings" in the Montreal area stood at 14 dead since last February after police discovered the bodies of a young couple in the trunk of a car Saturday.
> But by Sunday the toll appeared to have mounted to 15 with the discovery of a young man's body in a car cemetery near Huntingdon, 20 miles southeast of here.
> He had been shot and had apparently died of bullet wounds in the head and neck—

• (5:10 p.m.)

It seems to me that one of the things we must have is a strong police force in order to solve crimes. Then, when criminals are brought before the courts, we need an expedient administration to bring them to trial and, if they are found guilty, to hand out a proper penalty.

There are two kinds of crime, Mr. Chairman. The notion that crime can be described in a single category is erroneous. Violent crime creates a climate of fear in the streets of our growing cities. White collar crime, in economic terms, is much less visible than violent crime. The material cost of crime, such as petty theft, consumer fraud, violations of the Combines Act and embezzlement, dwarfs all crimes of violence, even in Canada. However, to control violent crime and white collar crime, we must have laws that are practical and acceptable to modern and new interpretations of life and human behaviour. One move in the right direction, of course, is to increase the capacity of the courts to handle the cases that come before them.

I might say that I read the recent article in Maclean's magazine, and the minister is a great reporter. I thought that in this regard he was wearing the new jacket of the Prime Minister, whether or not the reforms came from him or from the Prime Minister. However, I recommend to him that he make some real changes in the Criminal Code so as to make our courts expedient. Justice must flow so that everyone has an equal chance, those with money and those without.

Proper laws and proper law enforcement cannot be underestimated in the control of crime, but I have felt for years that we must get at the breeding grounds of crime. Crime breeds in the cesspools of injustice and poverty in the urban slums of our fast growing cities. Urban poverty makes the people who dwell there the victims, not the masters, of their environment. The bad environment becomes the hereditary legacy of the next generation. In order to launch a major assault on crime we must make an attack on the conditions of despair and the denial of human opportunity in which crime can grow. However, crime still thrives under conditions of affluence, and it is the white collar, economic crime which is eroding the capitalistic system and promoting more controls and less freedom.

In brief then, police, courts and prisons cannot alone control crime. We must also deal with the underlying cause of crime—the immense and stubborn forces pervading our environment, measuring our character and determining the quality of our lives.

Through long range effort in a new land of bountiful resources we can conquer poverty, ignorance, disease, discrimination, family breakdown, injustice, social tension and despair. But while we must strive to uproot the causes of crime we must put our practical mind to work to amend the various sections of the Criminal Code to guarantee that the law is respected, that it is not shaped and planned so that it protects the rich and creates injustice against the poor. Crime is a national problem by our constitution, while law enforcement is a provincial and local responsibility. This parliament must direct its processes to ensuring criminal justice. It is for us to bring excellence to every aspect of the administration of criminal justice. That is why I congratulate the Minister of Justice on the calibre of men he has appointed to the bench during his short time in office.

I have dealt with reserved decisions, Mr. Chairman, and I do not quite know what is the answer. Perhaps a letter from the minister to the chief justices of the various provinces would help. We have to cure the problem created by judgments that are reserved for a long time, because this prevents the wheels of justice from turning.

I am also concerned about something I read recently. There is now a bill before the other place, no doubt promoted by the government and which will be here soon, in connection with amending the legislation that deals with the Supreme Court of Canada. We have increased the number of judges of the Superior Court trial division of one province and of the County Court of another, and since this resolution is now before the committee it might be appropriate to consider what will happen under those amendments to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Canada. That bill seeks to put justice on a strictly materialistic basis whereby civil cases will not come before that court, if the bill becomes law, unless the amount involved is at least $10,000 and unless there is a question of law at stake.

First of all, let me deal with the question of law. I think the Supreme Court of Canada is overworked; there is no question of that. Perhaps the Minister of Justice or the appropriate officials of the crown would consider the possibility of enlarging the court. However, I suggest that before we cut down on the number of cases that come before that court we should be very careful in our approach.

We must remember that if we take away the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada and declare that in civil matters where property or human rights are concerned no one shall come before the court unless the amount involved is at least $10,000 or there is a point of law to be decided, we are shutting the door of justice. People in Canada and also small corporations would be deprived of the right to appeal their cases to the Supreme Court of Canada, the highest court in the land.

The Minister of Justice has been a trial lawyer, like many of us in this house, and he appreciates one of the great responsibilities of a trial judge in the superior court, of whom we shall be shortly naming a number in the province of Quebec. I have often wondered about the kind of power such a judge has but I do not know how to alter this power in our field of jurisprudence. I refer to the power of a trial judge to find the facts of a case.

What do I mean by that? Let me explain it for the benefit of those who do not practise before the bar. For example, ten witnesses on one side of a case may say one thing and one witness on the other side may say another thing about what may be a very simple matter. The trial judge has the power to come to the conclusion that he believes the one witness and to discard the evidence of the ten witnesses. Once he finds this as a fact, Mr. Chairman, you are stuck with that fact in the court of appeal and in the Supreme Court of Canada. This becomes a fact in the case unless you can prove that the judge arrived at a certain set of facts on non-existent evidence. That pretty well puts the formula simply.

When you take away from the Supreme Court of Canada, in spite of the rule of jurisprudence that is a rule of common law and not statute law, the right to be able to review the facts of a case, then I submit that once more you are closing the door of justice. I fully realize that there may be a question of mixed law and fact, and whether a trial judge has improperly found a fact based on non-existent evidence may itself be a point of law.

I am against such a step on two grounds. Over the week end Senator Roebuck said—and I agree with him—that we are really shutting the door of justice in the Supreme Court of Canada to citizens of the country if we enact a provision stipulating that cases before that court must involve $10,000 or a question of law. The average citizen of Canada will be denied the right to go before the highest court of the land, which to me is a very dangerous approach to justice.

• (5:20 p.m.)

In defence of the Supreme Court of Canada may I say that I think its judges are overworked. The judges of that court do not receive the assistance given to judges of the supreme court of the United States, who have many lawyers behind them to help them in research. In this country our judges have no such facilities and that is why they are overworked, no doubt. I say that the answer to that problem is not to cut down the number of cases that come before the Supreme Court but to enlarge the membership of that court, if it needs to be enlarged, just as we are enlarging the membership of the Superior Court of Quebec and the County Courts of Ontario.

Before the Minister of Justice seeks to diminish the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Canada he ought to read the speech Senator Roebuck made in the other place last week. He ought to study it well and think about it before taking away the rights of the average people of Canada. I say that even at present our system of justice falls below the level it ought to achieve in any just society. Here I adopt the words of an hon. member to my left who said there is one law for the rich and another law for the poor. That is so. The quality of justice a litigant obtains from the courts all too often is determined by the intelligence and ability of the man who represents him before the bar of justice, whether the action is of a civil or criminal nature. We must be careful before we curtail the jurisdiction of courts.

The President of the Privy Council said that one reason for increasing the number of Quebec judges was that the new divorce law entailed much more work for the courts. It seems to me from what I have learned that the rules and regulations under the new divorce legislation are so cumbersome that those who seek a remedy under the law meet with two difficulties at the present time. First, since the new procedure is so cumbersome, it has become almost too costly to litigate. I do not know what lawyers are now charging for divorce cases. I have not discussed the matter with members of my firm or with members of the Alberta bar, but I am told that under the new rules lawyers must do a great deal more work than they had to do under the old rules. Therefore citizens must pay a great deal more for a divorce than they paid under the old system.

The second problem also has to do with procedure. Here I refer to an example taken from Ontario. Perhaps the Ontario rules ought to be changed in cases where substitutional service is required. At present a spouse who has been deserted must publish a notice in a newspaper. However, in order to obtain an order to publish the notice the litigant must swear to an affidavit that his spouse will probably read the newspaper in which the notice is to be published. I ask you, Mr. Chairman, how can anyone swear to such an affidavit, especially if he has not seen his partner for four or five years or if his partner has gone to Timbuktu or somewhere else? That is making an ass of the law, as Charles Dickens would have said.

The Minister of Justice ought to see that the rules, which are far too cumbersome, are changed. The present requirement for the filing of material should also be changed. I do not think that all the material at present required is necessary. Let us streamline the procedure and make it easy for the average citizen to go to court without incurring too great an expense. That way the litigation time will be cut down and the amount of work judges must do will also be reduced.

On the other hand, I have always taken the view that the price we pay for defending the liberty of the subject can never be too great, and that is why I speak on behalf of this resolution. If the provincial governments have made their recommendation then, naturally, I think it ought to be accepted.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I must advise the hon. member that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Woolliams: I also think that the Department of Justice ought to look into the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court of Canada. First of all, that court leans towards the crown. Whether one brings an action having to do with an expropriation or with any other wrong, that court is a little pro-crown. Second, even under the new rules the procedure of the court is so cumbersome that it is far too costly for the average citizen to litigate in that court.

In my hand I have a newspaper report concerning a case before the Exchequer Court. I should hate to guess how much this matter cost the litigants. The article was printed on October 3, 1968, and is headed, "No Recourse For Japanese, Lawyer Says". I see that an hon. member from British Columbia has looked up. The report reads:

> When the government confiscated properties from Japanese-Canadians during the second world war it was forever and without recourse, a federal government lawyer said yesterday.
> Norman Mullins—
>
> He is counsel for the Department of Justice.
> —was arguing the government's case in a $1,450,000 claim for compensation by Torazo Iwasaki, 89.
> Mr. Mullins said the arguments put forward by counsel for Mr. Iwasaki were rejected 21 years ago by a judgment of a similar claim by Eikichi Nakashima.

The article goes on to say that this property was taken from the Japanese owner during the war and that compensation of $5,000 was paid. Mr. Macleod, counsel for Iwasaki, told the Exchequer Court that Gavin C. Mauat—I am not sure how to pronounce that name—an agent of the Secretary of State, was the custodian of enemy property. Now Mauat is one of the leading members of a syndicate that stands to make $1,450,000 out of the property.

Mr. Perrault: The matter is before the courts.

Mr. Woolliams: I know, and the court will make its decision.

Mr. Perrault: It is still before the courts.

Mr. Woolliams: If my hon. friend wants to make a speech he should do so at the proper time. I do not wish to enter into an argument with a member on the front bench rump.

I should like to see the Minister of Justice examine the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court of Canada as it relates to property rights of citizens and arrange for matters involving property rights to be taken out of the Exchequer Court and placed in the Superior Courts and Supreme Courts of the provinces. In that way litigants could afford to have their cases tried. In that way we could go a long way to remedying the old concept that there is one law for the rich and another for the poor in the Exchequer Court.

At present actions involving expropriations are far too costly for the average citizen. Recently a case involving the green belt had cost the litigant $29,000. He tried to come before the court but could not and gave up the ghost and let the matter go. I say that when we talk about appointing judges to Supreme Courts, Superior Courts, the Queen's Bench division or what have you in the various provinces, our first duty, before enlarging or diminishing any jurisdiction, ought to be to make certain there is not one law for the rich man and another law for the poor man.

There is one other point I should like to make and it has to do with the calibre of judges to be appointed. I refer to a case with which we are all familiar, the case of Whitfield v. Canadian Marconi Company and the decision of the Quebec Court of Appeal, later upheld by the Supreme Court of Canada, with respect to a contract into which the following clause had been written:

> Indian and Eskimo villages are considered out of bounds and personnel are prohibited from fraternizing or associating with the native population except in special circumstances. Infringement of these orders is cause for discharge.

One man fraternized with an Eskimo girl. He was fired. He sued his employer for $25,000. The Quebec court in its ruling had this to say:

> In view of my conclusion that the clause complained of is not contrary to the Canadian Bill of Rights, I do not propose to discuss whether the Canadian Bill of Rights applies either directly or indirectly to the contract of employment passed in the province of Quebec between Whitfield and Canadian Marconi Company.

The court upheld that clause as being a proper one. If ever there was a case of discrimination being applied, this was one. If a clause like that in a commercial contract can be made to stand up, it means acceptance of the very essence of discrimination. Incidentally, the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada was a brief one simply upholding the judgment of the Superior Court of Quebec; it was not a written judgment, recorded in the books.

It does seem to me that a case like this emphasizes once again the importance of appointing to our courts men with feeling, vision and a knowledge of humanity, men who understand that the law can never stagnate, can never be regarded as something which is unchangeable. Law, as it is interpreted, must be like a growing tree, growing as circumstances change and as society changes. This is the key to the kind of imagination and influence required of those who are appointed to our courts. For example, the word "banking" meant one thing in 1906, another in 1935 and something entirely different again in 1968. I give this as an example because I recall a case in Alberta which turned on the definition of banking when the Social Credit government came to power and passed some legislation in this field. As I say, the law must be like a growing tree, able to interpret language so as to fit new circumstances, new facets of society. In this way, of course, the courts legislate.

Naturally, we on this side support the resolution. It comes before parliament, I repeat, as a result of meetings and recommendations of the Attorneys General of various provinces. I thank the house for its indulgence in allowing me to take a few extra moments this afternoon to illustrate why I feel the calibre of the men who are appointed to the various courts of our country is so important to the welfare and good of our nation.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, it takes a brave man to follow the eloquence we have listened to in connection with such a small resolution. I rise to speak because the minister, when explaining the need for these additional Superior Court judges, said it resulted from legislation we had passed in this house. Commenting on this I express surprise that it would take 11 men from Quebec to replace Judge Walsh and Judge Cameron of the Federal Exchequer Court. The minister expressed surprise that Quebec should have set up its divorce courts so soon. I think this surprise is shared by everyone who took part in bringing about the change in our divorce legislation. Many held the opinion that Quebec would not even consider this question for a number of years to come. It is interesting to note that no resentment whatsoever has been expressed, at least in the English language newspapers, because the Quebec Superior Court is now seized of this matter. This leads many of us to the conclusion that if we had had the courage to take the bull by the tail we would have been surprised at the number of people who were expecting us to do so and who would have let go of the horns.

An hon. Member: Taking it by the horns would be easier.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The horns presented them with a dilemma.

Mr. Peters: I should like to say a word about the calibre of the work which was done by Judge Walsh in particular and by Judge Cameron who, I understand, handled the contested cases. Both these gentlemen will now be very pleased to go on to other duties. I think parliament owes them a debt of gratitude for the way in which they handled these cases. We all recall the reluctance on the part of the government to proceed to the stage at which a commissioner for the dissolution of marriages was appointed. But in all those divorce cases there was no comment from anyone concerned to the effect that their petitions had not been handled in the best possible manner. This experience has no doubt led to the extension of jurisdiction of the Quebec Superior Court and to the request for the appointment of these judges so that the province can handle its own business.

I know that the members of this house who were originally involved in the legislation setting up this new form of hearing are all proud of the way in which it has been handled. A former minister of justice, the late hon. Mr. Favreau, suggested that this matter could be settled in a period of five years. It seems now that he was being pessimistic, though I was inclined to share his view. I therefore congratulate the present Minister of Justice, bearing in mind that an arrangement of this kind calls for negotiation between the Attorneys General of the provinces before it can be put into effect. I also congratulate a number of former ministers of justice who had very limited time in office but who each pushed forward this matter. The result has relieved parliament of a burden which in my opinion it should never have had to carry, which was neglected for many years, and which will now be returned to the jurisdiction of the Superior Courts and the Supreme Courts of the provinces.

I know this will cost some money. I know the federal government picks up the tab, but I think the two gentlemen who have been conducting this business for some time will feel better when they receive their cheques and they realize it took so many to replace so few in such a large office.

Mr. Fairweather: Could the minister find out how many County Court judges in Ontario now occupy dual positions such as the chairmanships of milk boards, liquor boards and other offices of that nature, and does the minister contemplate a conference, or some other way, to bring this practice to an end?

Second, what does the minister think of the ethics of retired judges returning to practice law in the courts and in some instances, I regret to say, appearing before the very courts of which they were once members? Is there any departmental policy on this most extraordinary practice?

Third, my hon. friend from Calgary North mentioned the point of reserved judgments. I think all citizens who are affected by this difficulty would hope the minister might see fit to ask each of the Attorneys General to correspond on occasion with the respective chief justices—I think that would be the way considering the constitutional problem—seeking a return on a semi-annual, or perhaps monthly basis, of judgments unrendered. This was done on other occasions with other courts and it worked rather well.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, this is a very short resolution asking for three more Ontario County Court judges and 11 additional Quebec Superior Court judges. I was wondering if there are only 11 defeated Liberal candidates in Quebec and three in Ontario who have still to get jobs?

I noted that the hon. member for Calgary North wandered far afield in his observations. They were quite good but I thought he would reserve them to a later date and direct himself to this resolution.

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I directed my remarks to the resolution. This is not a slight on me, it is a slight on the Chairman because if I was out of order I know the Chair would have brought me to order. If what I said, when I pointed out that there was a law for the rich and a law for the poor, offended the niceties of one who is now trying to be very verbose about nothing, then I would be very surprised.

Mr. Gilbert: I can see my hon. friend is a little sensitive today. First of all he gave us credit for stating that there is a law for the rich and a law for the poor and now he is trying to take away that credit. Be that as it may, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice with regard to the general criteria that he uses in the selection of judges. He will recall that during the last parliament the former minister of justice, now the leader of the Liberal party and Prime Minister of Canada, bypassed party lines in his selection of judges. This was something new. He set a precedent and I would like to know whether the present minister is going to follow that pattern in his selection of judges.

I would also like the minister to comment on the training of judges. Men who are selected for a judgeship are often men who have not had court experience, have not had a refresher course in law and are not up to date. When we ask a man to be a judge a duty is imposed on us to train him to be a judge. Past experience has shown that men who have been selected for judgeships have had good intentions and good motives but lacked a great deal when it came to knowledge of the law and applying the law.

I would like the minister, who is among the avant-garde in the Liberal party, to tell us what his criteria are in the selection of judges, and I would like to hear his comments on the training of the men he chooses.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Some very good questions have been asked, Mr. Chairman, but as I understand that the house would prefer to see the bill before proceeding with second reading I wonder whether at that stage I could provide answers to the questions raised today?

Mr. Woolliams: We are in agreement with that. In fact we are in agreement with proceeding to second reading this afternoon, if you want.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I understand there is not a general disposition to do so.

Mr. Woolliams: So far as the Conservative party is concerned if the minister wants to go on with second reading we are prepared to accept that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, we think it is a wise rule that we should see the bill before we go that far.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That being the case, could I have the consent of the committee to deal with these questions when I address the house on second reading?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-114, to amend the Judges Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

AMENDMENTS EXTENDING PERIOD, RESPECTING INTEREST RATES, ETC.

Hon. H. A. Olson (for the Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-111, to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I believe there was an understanding between the government house leader and members on this side that the debate at the second reading stage of this bill would not take place until eight o'clock. We do not mind the minister proceeding at this time, but we want this bill to be debated.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Perhaps I could respond. As I understood it, the hon member's colleague was reluctant to be called to speak before the dinner hour. I explained that with the time the minister would require to make his presentation and to hear the eloquent words of the hon. member for Crowfoot I doubted that in the remaining seven minutes they could be completed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): All I am asking is that the minister make his speech before we give second reading.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I was so anxious to have this bill passed I thought I should not interrupt the proceedings which seemed to be going so well.

I should like to refer hon. members to page 601, the right hand column starting with the second paragraph. There they will find an explanation of the purpose of this bill contained in a speech I made on that day, September 30. I do not have very much more to add by way of explanation except to say that during the course of the debate there seemed to be some misunderstanding, if I may call it that. There was a common complaint or representation made by hon. members in many parts of the house regarding the rate of interest that would be set down when this measure becomes operative.

Hon. gentlemen will realize that the funds lent to farmers for the purchase of equipment and for other purposes under the Farm Improvement Loans Act are funds that belong to the banks. We are suggesting in Bill C-111 that this be extended to include some other financial institutions such as credit unions, caisses populaires and others. However, these institutions will also be using their own funds.

An advantage of the Farm Improvement Loans Act is the guarantee of a portion of these loans which largely removes the risk of repayment to the institutions which make the loans to the farmers. Many members have suggested this is not the time to increase interest rates because the farmers' costs are very high and going up and because of the cost-price squeeze in relation to their receipts and the market value of their sales.

In this case we are not withdrawing any assistance to the farmer so far as the treasury is concerned. The simple fact of the matter is that several months ago, long before the Farm Improvement Loans Act expired on June 30 of this year, the banks stopped making loans under the act because the statutory limit was too low. They argued that in many cases the cost of these funds and the amount of interest they were paying to their depositors were higher than the statutory limit under which the government guaranteed the loans.

What has happened is that there are loans being made, perhaps not as many for farm machinery purchases as there were when the Farm Improvement Loans Act was operational and active, depending on the credit risk of an individual farmer, at rates up to 7 and some fraction, 8 or 9 per cent, and I have heard of some as high as 10 per cent. These rates can be related to the credit risk of a particular farmer.

All we hope to do is to reinstate most of the provisions and indeed extend them. We intend to extend the purposes under the act for which farmers can use these loans and to set the maximum interest rate which should be charged for loans that we will guarantee. This interest rate would be substantially below what many farmers have to pay today.

Again we have to bear in mind the fact that the banks carry on the administration of this act and it is their money. If this proposal is accepted other institutions will be included, but the same thing applies. It is their managers who administer this act and decide what applications will be accepted. I should like to remove any confusion that may have been in the minds of hon. members as to the situation regarding the method of arriving at an appropriate maximum.

With those brief remarks arising out of the debate that took place at the resolution stage and the explanations I made at pages 601, 602 and 603 of Hansard, I think that is all I should say at this stage until we get into committee where we will have a detailed explanation of the bill during our clause by clause study.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a few words about this farm improvement loans legislation and its success in the past. Perhaps I should outline some of the hopes and aspirations of the farmers I represent who are concerned with legislation of this type.

We in Canada are perhaps entering a new era of high interest rates as a result of the removal of the 6 per cent ceiling. I well remember when the ceiling was removed. At that time the then minister of finance was asked what would happen to the interest rate on farm improvement loans. It was suggested that if we allowed interest rates to go higher than 6 per cent, surely the 5 per cent maximum would no longer be of any value. The Minister of Finance agreed that we might run into difficulty but that a formula which would allow a 5 per cent rate on farm improvement loans would have to be worked out. I hope the minister in his remarks will give us some idea as to what this formula will be. Surely we do not want the interest rates that farmers will have to pay to be sky high.

We all know there is a great demand for money. We were told some years ago by witnesses that the banks tried to keep 30 per cent of available lending money for the small loans field, but there is less and less money available through banks to this field. May I call it six o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It is my duty, pursuant to the provisions of provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the matters to be discussed at the time of the adjournment period are the following: the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), Labour Conditions; the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Whiting), Drugs; and the hon. member for Temiscamingue (Mr. Caouette), Public Works.

[Mr. Olson.]

It being six o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business, namely, notices of motions.

• (6:00 p.m.)

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

SUGGESTED INCREASE OF BASIC OLD AGE PENSION TO $125 PER MONTH

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give immediate consideration to amending the Old Age Security Act to provide for the full amount of the income supplement provided thereunder to be incorporated into the basic pension, for the amount of the basic pension to be increased to $125 per month, for the increase granted each year on account of an increase in the cost of living to reflect the full extent of that increase, and for the eligible age to be lowered immediately to 65, so that all persons in Canada 65 years of age or over who meet the residence requirements will receive a full pension of $125 per month, plus the cost of living increase, without any means test, the full amount of the old age security pension thus being recognized as a matter of right.

He said: Mr. Speaker, there are a great many matters which come before parliament in which I am interested, but this motion relates to the one which has probably had the greatest amount of my attention during the years since I first came here, now nearly 26 years ago. I am reminded that the first time I rose in this House of Commons to speak on the subject of old age pensions I very boldly and courageously urged that the pension be raised from $20 to $25 per month. I had to sit and listen to Mr. Ilsley tell me that this could not be afforded. However, that same Mr. Ilsley before very long did agree to increase that pension to $25 a month, only at that time there was a means test on it and the provinces were required to pay 25 per cent of the pension.

We have come a bit of distance since then, and I now urge that the old age security pension be raised to $125 a month. I also urge that the income test attached to a portion of it, that portion known as the guaranteed income supplement, be wiped out and that the full $125 a month be granted as a pension to all those who meet the age and residence requirements, without any means or income test of any kind. I also suggest that the formula in the legislation for providing a cost of living increase should be altered so that the increase given to our pensioners will reflect the full amount of any increase in the cost of living, not just that portion up to 2 per cent in any one year.

As hon. members are aware, I would not stop there so far as the adjusting of pensions is concerned. When one talks about increasing pensions to reflect an increase in the cost of living one is talking about a minimum requirement, namely, that our pensioners should be enabled at least to keep up with the cost of living during their years of retirement. But as I hope I have made clear times without number, I believe we have to go further than this with respect to all our pensions. I think we have to make it possible for people in their years of retirement to enjoy the increased standard of living that our economy makes possible from year to year and from decade to decade. It is not good enough for just the other sections of society, particularly those in their working years, to be in a position to get increases, to share in our increased productivity. That right must also be extended and guaranteed to our retired persons.

Let me come back to the fundamental part of this resolution, which is its request that there be an increase in the amount of the old age pension itself. The statistics that the Department of National Health and Welfare has produced—some of them are to be found by way of answers to questions of mine that have appeared on the order paper—make it clear that our older people definitely need more than the amount of pension they are now getting.

If the guaranteed income supplement, for all its faults, has done anything, it has proven this point. The statistics show that about 60 per cent of our people who receive the old age security pension have been able to qualify for all or part of the guaranteed income supplement. Sixty per cent of that 60 per cent, or a little more in fact—it is about 40 per cent of the total—have been able to qualify for the full amount of the guaranteed income supplement. These statistics illustrate in a very striking way the fact that for most of our people in their retirement years there is little else but their old age security pension. There are people with other sources of income, but those who have enough other income to live as befits life in this day and age are very few.

I say that a society which does not show greater respect and greater regard for its older people is not a just society and does not deserve some of the accolades that are given to it at the present time. I like and enjoy the emphasis on youth in this day and age. I enjoy and support the emphasis being placed on the proposition that our youth should be given opportunities in education, employment, culture, and all the things that make for a richer and fuller life. I welcome the efforts that are being made, and successfully in many areas, to involve people at younger ages in the processes of democracy, in all of the life of our society. That is good. I support it wholeheartedly. But I submit that our society must not, because of its concern for youth, forget old age. Far too many of our older people in this country are suffering privation, suffering poverty, suffering want in the midst of all the affluence that we have, because we have not provided them with a sufficient pension.

I recognize that pensions are not the only answer, that we have to do more in the field of housing, in the area of health, and in providing recreational, cultural and other opportunities, including the opportunity to be useful. But to make speeches about these other things that we must do does not take the place of doing this basic, essential thing, namely, increasing the amount of money that we make available to our people. When one looks at the total production in our country today, the money that we are able to find for other things, it just does not make sense that arguments are put up against increasing the amount of the old age pension.

Therefore I urge that this figure of $125 a month be taken very seriously. I urge that the house must not permit the government to try to slough it off, to try to tell us that enough has been done for pensioners and that we must leave the pension where it is. Our old people need the increase, they deserve it, they have the right to it, and we can afford it. If we are going to talk about a just society, these people are entitled to it as much as anyone else.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one of the main elements of this resolution is its point blank call for the abolition of the guranteed income supplement as such, for its incorporation into the basic pension, and for the discontinuance of the idea that a portion of the pension is to be paid on the basis of an income test. I need not remind this house how strenuously I argued against the income or means test, and for the acceptance of the principle of universality and for maintaining that principle in our old age pension legislation. I feel that the return of a portion of the old age pension to an income or means test was a backward step which has done immeasurable harm, and it is a step that we must reverse at the earliest possible time. However, instead of repeating my own arguments, which are to be found on many of the pages of Hansard, I thought I would like to refer again today to an interesting and valuable address that was made in Winnipeg on September 19, 1968, by Dr. Reuben C. Baetz, executive director of the Canadian Welfare Council. Dr. Baetz was addressing the audit workshop of the social service audit at Winnipeg on that date.

What Dr. Baetz had to say is very telling, and I urge the government to pay attention to it. I will read parts of his address. This is what he said:

> In our income maintenance programs, especially, we tend unwittingly to disregard the concept of solidarity. In recent months universal income programs, such as flat rate allowances for the aged and family allowances, have been severely criticized. It is argued that we should develop a selective policy in our income maintenance programs, and concentrate our efforts on the poorest sector of the population.

I interrupt to suggest that that is an accurate description of the position being taken by the government today. It is a description of the popular and plausible notion that instead of paying larger pensions to everyone and letting the income tax take care of those who get too much, we should pay pensions on a selective basis. Here is a specialist in the field saying that this idea has to be looked at very closely. Dr. Baetz admits there are arguments on that side, but then he goes on to say:

> Nevertheless, a selective policy—

This is the kind that implies an income test so that the pension will be given to those who need it, not to everyone.

> —in income maintenance creates artificially, or at least emphasizes by official fiat, an inequality between two social groups, between the one that aids and the one that is aided and is dependent.

Let us pay special attention to the following:

> The social segregation which results is, in itself, an affront to the dignity of the whole section of the population.

That is what I said time and time again when the government was bringing in the guaranteed income supplement and putting back an income test—I called it a means test—on a portion of the old age pension. Some people said it is not an insult to have to fill out a form of that kind to get the pension. But here is a specialist in the field saying it after it has been in effect for a period of time. Dr. Baetz went on to say:

> For example, through our stubborn insistence—

That is the government for you.

> —at being selective in our income maintenance programs for the aged, we have in fact divided our aged population into two groups—the "haves" and the "have-nots".

Let us listen to this as it describes the tremendous forward step we took back in 1950 when we took the means test off the old age pension. This is what Dr. Baetz said:

> For quite a number of years we have provided a flat rate allowance to all regardless of need. The feeling of solidarity among the aged was maintained.

Not only was a feeling of solidarity maintained but one of pride in being retired people and being on the old age pension. It was there. Any of us who lived through the earlier years when the means test was at its worst and then lived through the period when the pension was universal can confirm that the feeling of solidarity among the aged was maintained, and not only solidarity but pride. However, let me quote Dr. Baetz again. He said:

> However, two years ago, we introduced a guaranteed income supplement for those aged who can prove their income is low enough to warrant it. One half of the aged population did prove themselves to be eligible for supplementary assistance—

Actually it is 60 per cent.

> —through massive paper work. In effect, we have split our aged into two almost evenly divided groups—the "haves" and the "have-nots". Those who need supplementary financial assistance—which is "welfare" in their minds and others—and those who are independent. We have forced thousands of our aged, who struggled all their lives to "stay off relief", to accept this status in their declining years. By increasing the flat rate allowance to $107, and adjusting the income tax rates for higher income groups among the aged, we could have provided the same financial assistance to the aged whose other income was too low, and still maintained the concept of solidarity among the aged.

I could go on quoting other interesting sections from Dr. Baetz' address, but having quoted from it last week I hope hon. members will become interested in it and will get copies of it. I will therefore content myself with just one or two more sentences from his address. He said:

> In recent months the concept of universal programs has fallen into disrepute, and selectivity seems now to be the ascendant theme.

How true that is. People are saying, "let us use the money to give it to those who need it". This sounds plausible, and very compassionate, but Dr. Baetz says:

> I would hope that before we throw out our universal programs we should more thoroughly examine their weaknesses and strengths, one of which is the maintenance of the feeling of solidarity among all Canadians.

I come back again to the theme on which I have rung the changes so often. I have been interested in the subject of old age pensions and in old age pensioners long enough to have seen three distinct periods in its administration. First, there was the period when the first old age pension with its means test was in effect, when it was a disgrace to be on it and when people had to submit to the indignity of a vicious means test to get it. It was a period to which we do not want to go back at all. Second, there was the period from about 1951 to 1966 or so when the old age pension of various amounts, $40, $46, $55, $65 or $75 a month, was universal and everyone who was at the right age received it. At that time it became a matter of pride to be a pensioner. Now we are in a period when we have divided our old age people into two groups: Those who get the pension and have enough so that they do not get the supplement, and those whose condition is such that they have to go through the test, and their pride of being on the pension is already diminishing.

My arguments are well known, but I hope it makes some impression on this house that I am relying so heavily today on a specialist in the field, Dr. Reuben Baetz, executive director of the Canadian Welfare Council. He says very briefly what we in this corner said when this matter was under debate. We could have achieved the same purpose, we could have got the money through to the people who needed it, by making a universal payment, doing away with all this massive paper work that was unnecessary, but leaving it to the income tax to take back from those—and they are few—who do not need any surplus that it was inappropriate for them to receive.

I hope that we have not gone too far down this road of selectivity and too far away from the principle of universality. It is still in my view one of the finest moments in the history of this parliament when we took the means test off in 1950 or 1951, and I still think the way to establish not only an adequate level of income for our senior citizens but to give them pride in being part of that way of life which is old age is by giving the full old age pension as a matter of right.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, we will not be faced with the argument that because the means test supplement was enacted only a couple of years ago we must stick with it. One of the arguments then was that we should give it a trial. All right, we have given it a trial and it is not working. There is far too much paper work involved in it. About 60 per cent of the people are getting it anyway. It would be far better to pay this amount to everyone and let the income tax take care of those who get more than would otherwise be appropriate.

I urge that the various parts of my motion be considered. As I say, the allowance for the increase in the cost of living should reflect the full increase and not just 2 per cent in a year when the increase has been more than that. The eligible age might as well be brought down to 65 right away instead of going through this procedure of reducing the eligible age a bit at a time. I feel that the income test should be wiped out and the guaranteed income supplement should be incorporated into the basic amount, and that that basic amount should now be $125 per month.

I urge very strongly that in this year of 1968, when our nation's coffers are ever so much more full than they were when we set the figures now in effect, in this age of affluence, in the midst of all our talk about the just society, the least we should do for our old age pensioners is to provide them with $125 per month without any means or income test, the full pension being theirs as a matter of right.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): It is with pleasure, Mr. Speaker, that I take advantage of this opportunity to address myself to the house in respect of the question raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I sympathize, like everyone in this house, with the problems of our senior citizens. I can say honestly that I share with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre his concern for these people. We would like them to have sufficient income to enable them to live with integrity, to live on a proper standard, during those later years of their lives.

The points the hon. member made in the resolution are simple. The first is that this problem deserves immediate attention. I think that is true. I think that the whole problem of social security in this country deserves immediate attention. In addition, the problem of unemployment deserves immediate attention. I could stand here for 20 minutes and sound off about all the things with which we have to deal that deserve immediate attention. It is a matter of priority. I, for one, do not feel competent to say where this particular subject should be placed in the order of priorities.

I believe it is true that there are many people—I know there are in my riding—who are older and who suffer from the problems of inflation. They have fixed incomes and have great difficulty in establishing a satisfactory standard of living. This does not mean, however, that I feel the real solution would be to give them an income of $125 a month, which is not much more than they are getting at present. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre seemed to think that we should do away with the guaranteed income supplement and incorporate it into the old age security pension. This statement is a surprise to me because I would have thought the members of the New Democratic party would have welcomed some approach toward achieving a guaranteed income. I would have thought the principle of the guaranteed income supplement would have been more important than the other principle. However, it seems they want to do away with the income supplement itself. Perhaps in the guaranteed income we would find a solution to the whole social problem.

We have a mass of social welfare programs. I believe they cost this government well over $1 billion a year. Perhaps the real solution is to marry all these social programs into a master program. Perhaps it could take the form of a guaranteed income supplement so that we could look after the needs of all the people of this country who really try to look after themselves but, because of the position in which they find themselves, are not capable of doing so. The proposal to increase the income to $125 a month and to tie it to the increase in the cost of living is not really much different from what we have now. Mind you, the difference is important to those people in that age category. At the present moment, and I believe I am correct, the payment per month to these people is over $107. I admit this is less than $125, but with the escalator clause and the way things are going we will soon achieve that level.

Another point the hon. member made was that we should lower the eligible age to 65. At the moment the eligible age is 67. In 1969 it will drop to 66 and in 1970 it will drop to 65. I do not see, therefore, that there is that much difference at the moment. So far as the means test is concerned, to which the hon. member referred, I would agree with him it should be eliminated if it were a means test. I do not think it is. It is one thing to say we are going to give a benefit to those who have an income of less than a certain figure, but it is something else again to make people sell their homes and find out how much money they have in the bank before they can qualify for a pension. I may be wrong, but I believe the only qualification is that people cannot earn more than a certain amount. I believe the government will supplement incomes to enable people to earn up to $1,260 each year. This is quite a different thing from a means test. I, for one, do not really think it is embarrassing. I think the whole problem of social security, or part of it at least, is to make sure we help those who are genuinely in need. I think everyone would agree with that.

I believe we must find an approach to this problem and to all social security problems that will eliminate to some extent aid which is given to those who do not need it. We should have a master program so that we can eliminate many of the abuses that exist in our social assistance and welfare programs. While this may not be apropos to the question of old age pensions and old age security, I think it is important that whatever welfare programs we implement we recognize that we must never create an atmosphere in which people believe the world owes them a living, that there is no point in saving or that there is no point in trying to provide for yourself because the government will look after you. We want to look after those who are in need. I feel we have a distinct obligation to pay great respect and show great concern for the interests of our elderly people. I, for one, will take no back seat in that connection to anyone in this house. I believe all of us share that concern.

I believe there is a need here. I know that many people within the existing programs need help. I will do anything I can to support any measure to help them. I know that I need more information on the subject before I can make a basic decision. I suggest that this problem should be considered by a parliamentary committee, and considered most carefully. In this way we would make sure that whatever we decide will be in the best interests of both our country and our senior citizens.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on this notice of motion that has been moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). It is really in four parts, the first of which suggests that the house should give immediate consideration to amending the Old Age Security Act to provide for the full amount of the income supplement provided thereunder to be incorporated into the basic pension.

I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that the present guaranteed income supplement has had the effect that I said it would have when it first came into being, and that is to cause an awful lot of hardship and headache to many recipients. I made the prediction, Mr. Speaker, that if we went back to a means test—which is really what it is—many elderly people, not because of any ill intent or that sort of thing, but purely inadvertently, would report their income wrongly. I am sure the huge majority of our elderly citizens were convinced that they had reported their incomes correctly; but correct or not, I know of literally dozens of instances in my constituency—and I am sure this number is multiplied 264 times across Canada—who applied for additional assistance under the guaranteed income supplement, made an error in their application, and subsequently had their cheques reduced because the government felt obliged to recover the overpayment.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, this has caused tremendous hardship to many people. I have seen many cases where not only the guaranteed income supplement which had been paid in error was cut off, but where the basic pension cheque during this year, 1968, was cut below $76.50 which, due to the increase in the cost of living, about which I shall say a word or two presently, is now the basic amount of the pension. I predicted that going back to a means test would not mean that everything would run smoothly. I claimed, as did others, that hardship would be caused to many people.

As minister of the Department of National Health and Welfare for almost six years, I had experience in the fact that, under the old age assistance scheme people between 65 and 70 could claim assistance after meeting a means test. They would then find out subsequently that they had made an error in reporting their income—again inadvertently. However, according to the law the government had to claim a portion of their old age security cheque after they became eligible for old age security at 70 years of age. I have known cases, Mr. Speaker, where people in receipt of old age security and the guaranteed income supplement have had for several months to suffer a cut to less than $76.50 a month, and this has caused untold hardship.

Another thing that bothers me is this. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre quoted Dr. Reuben Baetz and referred to the affront to dignity that is faced by people who have applied for the guaranteed income supplement. I feel that this affront is wrong, Mr. Speaker.

I should like to remind the house of the report of a committee made in 1950. This was a joint committee of the House of Commons and Senate and was composed of members from all parties of this house. Although I did not enter the house until two or three years after that report, if I am not mistaken the committee's report was unanimous. This was the first time there had been a unanimous report of a joint committee of this house and the other place, Mr. Speaker. This committee had studied the problem for months and months, and had finally arrived at a plan to give people a basic old age pension without a means test, which it felt was the correct thing to do. I feel that it is still the right decision to make today. It is all very well to say that we want to help those who need it most; I agree with that. But at the same time, Mr. Speaker, people are suffering today as a result of the present system of paying the guaranteed income supplement.

I do not propose to speak further, except to point out that undoubtedly a new bureaucracy is growing up to look after this sort of thing. We suggested that this would happen as well under the Canada Pension Plan. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre pointed out, 60 per cent of our old age security recipients also receive the guaranteeed income supplement, and 40 per cent are receiving the maximum of $30 a month. I just point out that this government is putting the recipients of either the old age security payment, or the old age security payment and the guaranteed income supplement further and further in a hole every year.

These two programs, Mr. Speaker, are geared to the increase in the cost of living to a maximum of 2 per cent. We all know what has happened to the cost of living during the last two or three years. As a consequence, Mr. Speaker, it does not matter whether or not the recipient of old age security receives some other income on the side: his net return suffers. It is the same old story, Mr. Speaker; it is the elderly people of this country who suffer, and I am heartily in favour of seeing some relief given to them.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take a few minutes to speak on this resolution, and to congratulate the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for having brought the question before the house, as I think it is very important.

First, I think that this notice of motion contains four main ideas, one of which is to increase the present pensions about which, Mr. Speaker, I will say only a few words. I think that, in view of the present cost of living, pensions could easily be increased, especially when an old person lives alone. When two people live together, even with the present pension, they can manage up to a certain point, because they have some common expenses, for example rent or housing, electricity and certain other related expenses.

However, an old person living alone finds it difficult to live adequately on the pension he now gets. I therefore feel that the house should study the possibility of increasing that pension to enable those who get only that pension to live more comfortably, more adequately and to feel less closely watched, especially by government inspectors whom some of them call hunting dogs.
