DEBATES

OF

THE SENATE

OF THE

DOMINION OF CANADA

1903

REPORTED AND EDITED BY

HOLLAND BROS.

Official reporters of the Senate of Canada.

THIRD SESSION—NINTH PARLIAMENT.

OTTAWA
PRINTED BY S. E. DAWSON, PRINTER TO THE KING'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY 1903

SENATORS OF CANADA

ALPHABETICAL LIST

3RD SESSION, 9TH PARLIAMENT, 3 EDWARD VII

1903

SENATORS.	DESIGNATION.	POST OFFICE ADDRESS.
The Honourable
AIKINS, JAMES COX	Home	Toronto.
BAIRD, GEORGE T	Victoria	Perth Centre, N.B.
BAKER, GEORGE B	Bedford	Sweetsburg, Que.
BÉIQUE, F. L	DeSalaberry	Montreal.
BERNIER, THOMAS ALFRED	St. Boniface	St. Boniface, Manitoba.
BOLDUC, JOSEPH	Lauzon	St. Victor de Tring, Que.
BOUCHERVILLE, BOUCHER DE C. E., C.M.G.	Montarville	Boucherville, Que.
BOWELL, SIR MACKENZIE K.C.M.G	Hastings	Belleville, Ont.
CARLING, SIR JOHN, K.C.M.G	London	London, Ont.
CASGRAIN, JOSEPH P. B	DeLanaudière	Montreal.
CASGRAIN, CHARLES EUSÈBE	Windsor	Windsor, Ont.
CHURCH, C. E	Lunenburg	Halifax, N.S.
CLORAN, H. J	Victoria	Montreal.
COFFEY, T	London	London, Ont.
COX, GEORGE A	Toronto	Toronto, Ont.
DANDURAND, RAOUL	De Lorimier	Montreal.
DAVID, L. O	Mille Isle	Montreal.
DEVER, JAMES	St. John	St. John, N.B.
DOBSON, JOHN	Lindsay	Lindsay, Ont.
DOMVILLE, J	Rothesay	Rothesay, N.B.
DRUMMOND, GEORGE A	Kennebec	Montreal.
EDWARDS, W. C	Russell	Ottawa.
ELLIS, J. V	St. John	St. John, N.B.
FERGUSON, DONALD	Queen's	Charlottetown, P.E.I.
FISET, JEAN BAPTISTE ROMUALD	Gulf	Rimouski, Que.
FORGET, LOUIS J	Sorel	Montreal.
FROST, F. T	Leeds and Grenville	Smith's Falls.
FULFORD, GEORGE TAYLOR	Brockville	Brockville, Ont.
GIBSON, W	Lincoln	Beamsville, Ont.
GODBOUT, J	La Salle	St. François, Beauce, Que.
GOWAN, JAMES ROBERT, C.M.G	Barrie	Barrie, Ont.
HINGSTON, SIR WILLIAM H., Kt	Rougemont	Montreal.
JONES, L. MELVIN	Toronto	Toronto, Ont.
KERR, WILLIAM	Northumberland, O.	Cobourg, Ont.
KERR, J. K	Toronto	Toronto, Ont.
KING, GEORGE GERALD	Queen's	Chipman, N.B.
KIRCHHOFFER, JOHN NESBITT	Selkirk	Brandon, Manitoba.
LANDRY, A. C. P	Stadacona	Notre Dame de Quebec, Que.
LEGRIS, J. H	Repentigny	Louiseville, Que.
LOUGHEED, JAMES ALEXANDER	Calgary	Calgary, N.W.T.
LOVITT, JOHN	Yarmouth	Yarmouth, N.S.
MACDONALD, ANDREW A	Charlottetown	Charlottetown, P.E.I.
MACDONALD, WILLIAM JOHN	Victoria	Victoria, B.C.
MCKEEN, DAVID	Cape Breton	Halifax, N.S.

SENATORS.	DESIGNATION.	POST OFFICE ADDRESS.
The Honourable
McDONALD, WILLIAM	Cape Breton	Little Glace Bay, N.S.
McGREGOR, J. D.	New Glasgow	New Glasgow, N.S.
McHUGH, G	Victoria, O	Lindsay, Ont.
McKAY, THOMAS	Truro	Truro, N.S.
MACKAY, R.	Alma	Montreal.
McLAREN, PETER	Perth	Perth, Ont.
McMILLAN, DONALD.	Alexandria	Alexandria, Ont.
McMULLEN, J	N. Wellington	Mount Forest, Ont.
McSWEENEY, PETER	Northumberland	Moncton, N.B.
MERNER, SAMUEL	New Hamburg	Berlin, Ont.
MILLER, WILLIAM.	Richmond	Arichat, N.S.
MONTPLAISIR, HIPPOLYTE	Shawinegan	Three Rivers, Que.
OWENS WILLIAM	Inkerman	Montreal.
PELLETIER, SIR ALPHONSE K.C.M.G	Grandville	Quebec.
PERLEY, WILLIAM DELL	Wolseley	Wolseley, N.W.T.
POIRIER, PASCAL	Acadie	Shediac, N.B.
POWER, LAURENCE GEOFFREY (Speaker)	Halifax	Halifax, N.S.
ROBERTSON, J. E.	P. E. Island	Montague, P.E.I.
REID, JAMES	Cariboo	Quesnelle, B.C.
SCOTT, RICHARD WILLIAM	Ottawa	Ottawa.
SHEHYN, JOSEPH	Laurentides	Quebec.
SULLIVAN, MICHAEL	Kingston	Kingston, Ont.
TEMPLEMAN, WILLIAM	New Westminster	Victoria, B.C.
TESSIER, JULES.	De la Durantaye	Quebec.
THIBAUDEAU, ALFRED A	De la Vallière	Montreal.
THIBAUDEAU JOSEPH ROSAIRE	Rigaud	Montreal.
THOMPSON, F. P	Fredericton	Fredericton, N.B.
VIDAL, ALEXANDER.	Sarnia	Sarnia, Ont.
WARK, DAVID	Fredericton	Fredericton, N.B.
WATSON, ROBERT	Portage la Prairie	Portage la Prairie, Man.
WOOD, JOSIAH	Westmoreland	Sackville, N.B.
YEO, JOHN	East Prince	Port Hill, P.E.I.
YOUNG, FINDLAY M	Killarney	Killarney, Man.

THE DEBATES

OF THE

SENATE OF CANADA

IN THE

THIRD SESSION OF THE NINTH PARLIAMENT OF CANADA, APPOINTED TO MEET FOR THE DESPATCH OF BUSINESS ON THURSDAY, THE TWELFTH DAY OF MARCH, IN THE THIRD YEAR OF THE REIGN OF

HIS MAJESTY KING EDWARD VII.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Tuesday, September 1, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

A PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY moved :

MOTION.

That when the Senate adjourns to-day, it do stand adjourned until Wednesday, at eight o'clock in the envening.

He said : I make this motion on account of an invitation which has been extended to all the members of this House by the Hon. Mr. Edwards to go to Rockland to-morrow afternoon to attend an important meeting there. He wished me to say to any hon. gentleman whom he had not seen, that the invitation was extended to all. Important legislation is now before the Senate, but it would not interfere with the business of the country if we met in the evening instead of in the afternoon.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I am not in accord with the motion. It is very nice and pleasant for us to take a jaunt, such as is proposed by the hon. senator, but it is very much better for us to dispose of the work before us. The country does not expect us to go away on a trip of this kind to enjoy the hospitality so kindly tended to us when we should be here attending to our duties.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I hope the hon. gentleman will not press his motion. If he does, I hope the House will not accept it. When we are in the midst of important legislation, it would be inopportune and unseemingly to go away on a day of amusement. Of course any hon. gentleman who desires to go can do so.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—The House would meet in the evening.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—I suggest to the hon. mover that he withdraw the motion in deference to the expressed wish of the hon. Secretary of State. But I dissent entirely from the view which has been expressed to the Senate that it is merely a pleasure jaunt that is proposed. The occasion is the meeting of the Veterinary Associations of the United States and Canada combined. and the questions to be discused by that assembly and by persons skilled in the matters that will come before them are of the very first importance to the agricultural interest of the Dominion. It may be observed, however, that the proceedings will probably be printed, and we will all have an opportunity of deriving advantage from the discussion of those matters. I did not know that my name was to be coupled with the motion, but as it has been, I take the full responsibility of having seconded the motion. However, I think it would be wise and prudent that it should be withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I did not wish to interfere in any way with the business of parliament. I only asked that we should have an evening's session in place of one in the afternoon. The request is not unreasonable, because we have done it before. As regards the seconding of the motion by the hon. gentleman, I disclaim doing anything that would be dishonourable.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, no, no.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I spoke to the hon. gentleman to-day, and he favoured it. I thought I was not doing anything wrong when I mentioned his name as seconder. If he insists I will withdraw the motion.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—I must have expressed myself most clumsily if I conveyed the impression that I blame my hon. friend. He spoke to me and I sympathized with the project. I went further and expressed a determination to go down to Rockland myself. I thought it desirable that every senator should have an opportunity of participating in the trip, and I am exceedingly sorry my hon. friend should have been under the impression for a moment that I intended to criticise what he had done.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Of course the withdrawal of the motion will not preclude any hon. gentleman who feels that he can absent himself from the House doing so, and it is to be hoped the Senate will be well represented on this occasion.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—In justice to the hon. gentleman who made the motion, I wish to say that he does not propose a jaunt or a pleasure trip. The meeting is of a purely scientific character and of the utmost importance to farmers, to professional men and to the whole public. The question of diseases of animals and their communicability to men will be the principal feature. The only thing that might be considered as a pleasure would be viewing the stock which the hon. gentleman has there, and that is as much a utility and a lesson as anything else. Hon. Senator Edwards is President of the Tuberculosis Society of Canada. That important question, which is a vexed question in the scientific world to-day, will be discussed by prominent men and therefore the meeting would be of great utility, first to the farmer, second to the professional man—I do not know but the lawyers might come into it in some way. I thought the Senate had agreed to it, and the leader of the House particularly, because of his desire to give members of the House an opportunity of attending this interesting meeting.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—When I addressed the few observations which I did, I was not aware of the object of this meeting, but as has been properly observed, any hon. senator may attend who wishes to do so, and still take part in the business of the Senate. We are almost certain to sit to-morrow evening, and while attending to this very important, and I have no doubt very pleasant function, they will also feel that they have not robbed the country of their services by attending the evening session to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—My object in proposing the adjournment was to avoid the possibility of important legislation being proceeded with to-morrow afternoon when senators were away.

The motion was withdrawn.

MINING COMPANIES INCORPORATION BILL.

THIRD READING.

The Order of the Day being called for the third reading of Bill (Y) An Act respecting the incorporation of Mining Companies.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE said: I beg to call attention to clause 7 of this Bill, which was inserted at the suggestion of the hon. Speaker. It is in the following words:

> This Act shall apply only to companies owning or operating mining properties in more than one province of the Dominion.

I have called his attention to the fact that this clause, as worded, would be liable to be so construed as to defeat entirely the object of the Bill—as permitting a company to operate under the Bill only after it had owned and been operating properties in more than one province. I would therefore substitute this clause :

This Act shall apply only to companies having for their object to own and operate mining properties in more than one province.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman from de Salaberry is quite right. The amendment which he proposes now to substitute for the one made in committee, really carries out the intention which I had better than the amendment which was actually adopted. With the permission of the House, the hon. gentleman might move that this Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be amended by striking out clause 7 and substituting the clause he has suggested.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière) moved :

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be amended by striking out the seventh clause, and inserting in lieu thereof, the amendment suggested by the Hon. Mr. Béique.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill as amended, was read the third time, and passed.

RAILWAY LAW CONSOLIDATION BILL.

AGAIN IN COMMITTEE.

The House resumed in committee of the Whole, consideration of Bill (21) An Act to amend and consolidate the law respecting Railways.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I regret that I was not present yesterday when the committee dealt with clauses 10 and 11 of this Bill. I had given notice of an additional subsection for the purpose of preventing the commissioners from being subject to influences, or being asked to exercise their influence to procure positions, or favours for any of their families or friends. It is a very important provision, in view of the influence that is exercised in some states. It is quite clear that it would be prudent on our part to very carefully guard the duties and the position that these men will be called upon to fill, in providing that they should be absolutely free from any influence on the part of any railway company, in the discharge of their duties as a board. I therefore move a reconsideration of clauses 11 and 12, with a view to dealing with the amendment of which I have given notice.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is one observation which I wish to make with regard to the wording of this amendment. The proposed clause says 'any member of the board accepting any gift or favour for himself, or any relation or friend not provided for in this Act.' That might be construed to mean that it applies only to those friends or relations who are not provided for in this Bill.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I am quite willing that the amendment should be carefully criticised, and if any hon. gentleman suggests an improvement, I should be glad to accept it. If the amendment can be put in better shape I should be very glad.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I would suggest that the hon. gentleman change that from 'relations and friends' to 'his family.'

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN moved :

That section 11 be amended by adding the following as subsection 3 :

3. Any member of the board accepting any gift or favour for himself or any relation or friend not provided for in this Act, or exercising his influence on behalf of any relative or friend with any railway company or officer for any position or favour, shall thereby forfeit his seat as a member of the board.

The reason I put in the provision to which the Speaker has called attention is this : the Bill provides that a railway shall carry the members of the board free. That is one favour that is provided for. There is another favour, that if the board have a private car of their own, the railway shall haul that car free of charge. The reason I put in the words 'not provided for in this Act,' is because the Bill does provide for certain favours, and I considered it was necessary to make some provision of this kind.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I was not objecting to the words. I was simply indicating they were not put in the right place, because in the place where they are they might mean that possibly all the other relations and friends were provided for. I move, if the hon. gentleman has no objection, to alter the position of these words 'not provided for in this Act,' and insert them after the word 'favour.'

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I would suggest a more radical amendment. I think these words 'not provided for in this Act' might be left out. What my hon. friend has referred to would not be a gift or favour. It would be a right if it is included in this Act. Hauling the private car for the board would not be a favour or gift, nor would a pass be a favour or gift; both are provided for in the Act. Therefore, I think the words 'not provided for in this Act' might be left out.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think so, too.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I submit the word 'friend' is altogether too vague. Who is to determine who is a friend and who is not? Any one for whom a favour would be obtained might be regarded as a friend. If we are to have the word 'friend,' it should be defined in the interpretation clause.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It seems to me that the object of this clause is to prevent the board from exercising any power or authority that they may have on behalf of any person. Therefore, the word 'friend' would cover everybody. It would leave it open to this interpretation: if the board had an enemy they wanted to punish by extending to him favours, this would cover it. I do not think the word 'friend' is open to the objection that my hon. friends have advanced. The best way is to prevent them using any influence of the kind at all. I disagree with my hon. friend from Marshfield. In this case it is just possible these words compelling the railways to grant passes may not be in the Bill when it passes. I would leave it optional with the railway company to grant passes or not.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I am sorry to differ from my leader, but I would rather substitute 'any person' for 'friend.' If you leave 'friend' here, this is what may happen: the commissioners are subject to a heavy penalty if they favour any person. Supposing they did, all they would have to do to clear themselves, would be to show that the person whom they favoured was not their friend according to the strict meaning of the word 'friend,' and it certainly would leave a good deal of doubt. If the words 'any person' be substituted I can see no objection to it.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I am quite willing to agree to the proposed change if it is considered best.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Supposing the clause read 'any person,' would not that cover it?

Any member of the board accepting any gift or favour for himself or for any other person, or exercising his influence on behalf of any person or any railway company or officer for any position or favour shall thereby forfeit his seat as a member of the board.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I should like to ask how far that would go? We might suppose this railway commission happens to be stuck in a snowdrift, and they are invited to take a meal at the house of a friend; that would be a favour.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, that would be a charitable act.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—We might also extend that clause to the judges and to the members of this Senate. They too should come under the very same clause, so far as relations and friends are concerned. If the medicine is good in one case, we should administer it to all who deal in public matters. If it is necessary and effective in this case, I can see no logic in not placing it in other Acts as well; I think it is a very narrow clause.

The amendment was agreed to, and the clause as amended was adopted.

On clause 195, subclause (g),

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I would suggest that this paragraph be struck out and be replaced by a fourth subsection which would read as follows:

Provided further that whenever any city, town or incorporated village is desirous of having lines of telegraph, telephones, or for the conveyance of light, heat, power or electricity placed underground, the board may, on the application of such city, town or incorporated village, require the company to thus place its lines or wires underground and abrogate the right given by this section or by special Act to carry lines on poles, in such city, town or incorporated village, the whole on such terms and conditions as the board may prescribe.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Is that to apply only in the future, or to apply to conditions in the past?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Both in the future and in the past.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We are disturbing conditions of which we know nothing whatever. Arrangements no doubt have been made by municipalities, and companies have got concessions under Acts of local legislatures, and it is an arbitrary act on our part to interfere. The important companies are the Great North-western Company—doing the largest amount of business, I presume—and the Montreal Company which is merged in the Great North-western.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Surely this does not apply to telegraph companies ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It only applies to railway companies.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The section seemed to me to apply to all telegraph companies. We have nothing to do with light, heat and power wires. We do not give railway companies the right to supply heat, light and power.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Nearly all the special Acts we are putting through now give that power to railway companies.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I would certainly object that all the cities, towns and incorporated villages of Canada should be subject to the board. There is no sense in that. Every city or town, and every incorporated village, are to be subject to the wants and desires of that board. I say it is a most wild proposal. These towns and villages are subject to municipal and provincial laws, and subject to the parliamentary law of this Dominion, and why they should be subject to the will and wishes of this board I cannot understand. It is not fair to subject all our towns, cities and villages to their control.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière)—I am afraid my hon. friend on my left has not exactly grasped the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry. As I understand it, the amendment simply provides that upon the application of a corporation or municipality, the board may order the railway company to do certain things.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Exactly, and it may not.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—So the municipality in going to the board, go there of their own free will and apply for certain things from the board. I do not see anything objectionable in the clause. It is a protection to the municipality. If we have any confidence in the board at all, we must acknowledge that it will do what is right, and if they consider the municipality has a right to ask the railway company to put wires underground, the board will then make an order and that railway company will carry on the work as required by the board, and the municipality will have obtained what they were seeking. I do not think it is taking any advantage of municipalities; on the contrary, it is giving them an advantage in applying to the board.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have had experience in municipalities and I would decidedly object to any town council coming to a board in matters which should be governed by the council alone. Why should you make village mayors come to Ottawa from all sections of the Dominion to seek rights which they have themselves ? Why submit the welfare of a municipality to the will or whim of anybody else ? They have councils to govern their own local affairs, and it is enough for the ratepayers of a municipality to have to seek redress at the hands of their representatives without forcing them to come to such a body as this railway commission. I say it is not right, and it is giving this board too much power. It is giving them not only control of parliamentary law, but control of municipal regulations and municipal wants and desires, and I say it is not right to put the destinies of each of these municipalities in the hands of this board.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman from Hawkesbury misapprehends the effect of this amendment. At the present time the railway company—that is the case dealt with here—has the right, either under this or under a special Act, to erect poles and string wires on them in the municipality.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Where the municipality desires it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No, at the present time these companies have the right to erect poles under certain conditions, and the proposed amendment provides that that right may be abrogated on the application of the municipality to the commission. If the commission think it is in the public interest that the right of a company to erect poles and string wires should be abrogated, they have the power to do it; and it is a step in the right direction. It is not as radical nor as drastic as the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry. But there is no question about our having the right to make this enactment; and there was some question as to whether we had the right to make the enactment proposed yesterday.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Although the amendment presented by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry does not go so far as I wish, and as far as my amendment went, I think that when we cannot have the whole loaf we must accept the half loaf. The present amendment is an improvement on subsection (d). I therefore withdraw my amendment and accept the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry. If there had been no acquired rights on behalf of certain companies which had been incorporated by the parliament of Canada years ago, and who enjoyed those rights conferred upon them by parliament, I would not accept the amendment of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry, but when we have to do with those acquired rights, I think this amendment goes as far as it can go under the present circumstances.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—As I understand the amendment proposed, there is a material difference; it provides that if a request is made by a municipality the board may do so and so, and upon such conditions as seem proper. The great difference between that and the clause in the Bill is that under the amendment the board might decree that the municipality should pay the whole of the expense or part of the expense attending it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is it.

Hon. Sir. MACKENZIE BOWELL—Under the provisions of the Bill the government must be the judge as to whether efficient means have been devised for the purpose of placing the wires underground, and then the most important point is that the railway, which is compelled under the clause in the Bill to place their wires underground, would have to pay the expenses and have no claim for damages. There is this difference. The difference to my mind is somewhat important. Railways affected would have to do it at their own expense in one case, and in the other the board might decree that the railways or companies should perform their work at their own expense, or they might decree that the municipality would pay half.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—To my non-legal mind it would be better not to interfere with this clause. The Act is carefully drawn, and this clause is self-contained. Subsection (g) refers simply to the powers given by the first clause and the section itself, and to travel beyond that would seem to me to be entering upon an unknown field which it is not well for us to explore. Subsection (g) reads as follows :—

(g.) In case efficient means are devised for carrying any such lines or wires underground, no Act of parliament requiring the company to adopt such means, and abrogating the right given by this section to carry lines on poles, shall be deemed an infringement of the privileges granted by this Act, nor shall the company be entitled to damages in respect thereof.

I think it would not be wise to go beyond that. We should confine ourselves to subclause (g).

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I call attention to the declaration made by the hon. leader of the Senate. This amendment is a wild one. It reads 'the whole on such terms and conditions as the board may prescribe.' To-day by our municipal law and by our provincial law, municipal corporations can force companies of telephone, telegraph, light, heat, power or any other electric means to put their wires underground without any recource for damages against that corporation. That is our inherent right under municipal law. The hon. senator comes before this House and asks us to allow this board to dictate terms and conditions to the municipality who will make that demand upon telephone, telegraph and other companies. That board may be composed of men who are unfamiliar with municipal institutions, who do not understand the want, the misery and poverty of municipal corporations, and that board may dictate terms and conditions, as the hon. leader of the Senate has declared, and give them the right to force companies to put these wires underground on the condition that the corporation will pay the whole or part of the cost. I quite agree with the hon. leader of the opposition that it is not a clause which should go into the statute-book.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Let it stand.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. Secretary of State suggests that this clause be allowed to stand, but I think it but proper that I should say a word in explanation of the clause. I am quite sure the hon. gentleman from Victoria does not understand the first word about it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I know too much about it.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—And it is the only reason we can account for his wild way of talking. I have noticed the hon. gentleman cannot rise to criticise any suggestion made by any hon. member of this House without speaking of it as being a wild suggestion and using extreme terms. The hon. gentleman deals with this clause as if it were to affect telegraph and telephone companies and companies for the sale of light, heat and power. There is nothing of the kind, and it is easy to see that he does not understand the first word about the clause or about the suggestion. We are dealing, not with telegraph companies, not with lighting companies, we are dealing exclusively with railway companies, and under the first paragraph of clause 195 what is provided? It is provided that railway companies may place poles and wires in streets of cities, towns and villages with the consent of the municipality, and subsection 2 of the same clause provides that if the municipality does not give its consent, then it shall be open to the board to grant the permission. Now we have so far accepted the principle as embodied in the clause. What is the object of the clause? The object is to provide that when that consent has been given by the municipal corporation, or in the absence of the municipal corporation, when the poles and wires have been placed in the streets with the authorization of the board, whenever a municipal council of any city or town or incorporated village deem it advisable to have the wires placed underground that they may have their desire carried into effect, and it will be then for the same tribunal which grants them the permission to determine upon what terms it shall be done. I have drafted the clause in that way because we are dealing with vested rights, and the clause should affect not only the future, but all railway companies which are in possession of streets for that purpose. Dealing with vested rights, I think it is but proper to let the conditions be determined by an independent body. If we leave it entirely to the municipality, then there would be a danger that the municipality would commit an injustice in dealing with vested rights. The hon. gentleman thinks that the municipalities would be much better as they are. What is the meaning of subsection (g) as it stands? It says:

> In case efficient means are devised for carrying any such lines or wires underground.

Is it not perfectly well known that the means exist and have existed for years? The wires are placed underground in New York, Paris and London. They are placed in Toronto to a large extent, and also in Montreal to a considerable extent. It supposes a new condition of things. It supposes that with the means that are now known the Act should take effect. And then what does it provide? It contemplates an Act of parliament requiring the wires to be placed underground. As I stated yesterday, is it reasonable to say that any Act of parliament of that kind shall be passed? No. It is an initiative which can only, in the nature of things, be taken by a municipal body, because it will apply only to large cities and not to the whole country, and for fifty years or one hundred years there is no doubt we will see poles and wires strung overhead instead of being underground. Therefore it seems to me that the suggestion is not as wild as the hon. member suggests, but that it should command the attention of this honourable House.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I regret that my hon. friend seems to think I have very poor powers of comprehension. I stated last night that this clause is equal to all purposes. If they had left the clause alone, it would have been perfectly safe for all concerned. With the amendments brought in, I certainly was obliged to find fault. The clause as it stands here printed and ready for our adoption is perfectly safe—guaranteed safety for all concerned. It retains the power of parliament; it does not violate the powers of municipal or provincial bodies, and with this clause I am perfectly satisfied; but with the amendments which have been brought forward, I am prepared to disagree, and I say the amendment submitted by the hon. gentleman cannot commend itself to anybody who has knowledge of municipal administration. The sting is in the tail of this amendment. The whole of the hon. gentleman's amendment subjects the matter to the good-will and consideration of the board, and such terms and conditions as the board may dictate. I want him to know, and I tell him in spite of my lack of power to comprehend, it is not fair to force the municipalities of Canada to be subject to the will, or whim, of any board constituted by this parliament. I should like to see the clause pass as it appears in the Bill. It has been wisely drafted, and the amendments which have been proposed do not meet with my approval; but that is no reason why I have no power of comprehension, and no reason why I am not entitled to say, when an amendment is wild, that it is wild.

The subsection was allowed to stand.

On subsection 2,

2. Provided that where the company cannot obtain such consent from such municipal council or other authority, the company may apply to the board for leave to exercise such powers, and upon such application shall submit to the board a plan of such highway, square, or other public place, showing the proposed location of such lines, wires and poles, and the board may grant such application, in whole or in part, and may change or fix the route of such lines, wires or poles, and may by order impose any terms, conditions or limitations in respect thereof that it deems expedient, having due regard to all proper interests; and upon such order being made the company may exercise such powers in accordance with such order, and shall in the performance and execution thereof, or in the repairing, renewing or maintaining of such lines, wires or poles, conform to and be subject to the provisions of subsection 1 of this section, as if consent had been obtained from such municipal council or other authority, except in so far as the said provisions are expressly varied by order of the board. 62-63 V., c. 37, s. 1 Am.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Hon. gentlemen will observe that in the first place the municipal council has to decline to grant the application. Then there is an ex parte application made by the company to the board. There is no provision that the board shall give the municipal council any notice to enable them to be heard. Hon. gentlemen must see that that is contrary to our ideas of fair-play, and I propose to move to amend this clause in this way: at line 4 on page 60, to strike out the words 'may grant such application,' and insert the following words instead: 'having given such municipal council, or authority, an opportunity to be heard in opposition to such application may in their discretion grant the same.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no objection to the amendment.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I consulted one counsel representing the railway, and he said he thought that was a fair and reasonable proposition.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think the board would in any case consult them.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is no provision made in the terms of this Bill, so far as I have looked at it, for giving notice. We presume that the court will make regulations, will establish a procedure, by which all parties concerned will be brought before the board, and if a distinction is made in this particular case, as is suggested, then, by implication, other applications may be treated ex parte.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I can find no provision that notice shall be given in this case.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Certainly not, nor in any other case.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The legal gentleman whom I consulted about the matter said he did not see any objection to such a provision.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Where there are two interests they must necessarily consult both.

Hon. Mr. POWER—What harm would it do to insert the amendment I have suggested ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If you draw an invidious distinction in this case, the implication will be drawn in other cases that notice need not be given. In clause 194, respecting lines of wires, there is no provision made for bringing one of the parties before the board, but the board would do as any court would do, and bring all the parties before them. If you introduce the amendment here, I think you will have to introduce it in analogous cases elsewhere.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I entirely agree with the hon. gentleman from Calgary, and call attention to this fact, that this board is made, under section 8, a Court of Record, and it is a well-known doctrine, and has been applied in arbitration cases that I know of, that it is necessary for any board of that kind, and more necessary for a court, in order to give jurisdiction that both parties be given an opportunity to be heard. If any judgment or order is passed without their being heard, it is done without jurisdiction, and vitiates the order, and therefore there is no necessity to provide for a notice, and if there was, it should be done in a general way, and not merely with one clause.

The amendment was declared lost.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I proposed, on a former occasion, a third subsection which I understood was carried, and I have just re-drafted it, because I do not see it annexed to the Bill. It is to this effect :

Nothing contained in this section shall be deemed to authorize the company exercising the power therein mentioned for the purpose of selling or distributing light, heat, power or electricity, in cities, towns or villages, without the company having first obtained the consent therefor, by a by-law of the municipality.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Read the first part of the clause.

195. When the company is empowered by the special Act of the parliament of Canada to construct, operate and maintain lines of telegraph, telephone, or for the conveyance of light, heat, power or electricity.

Does not that cover it sufficiently ? Does not that require the consent of the municipality ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The first paragraph is general. Therefore, it would be not only for the purpose of the railway company, but they might, in virtue of that wording, constitute themselves as vendors of electric light or power in cities, where the poles and wires are placed, and it is provided by subclause 2, as I have already shown, that in the absence of the consent of the municipality, the board may grant the power, and my proposed subclause is intended to check the action of the board, so that it will limit its power to granting that permission for their own use, and not for the purpose of selling electricity.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it is a very wise precaution. While they should have the power to do all this for their own use, still it does not seem right they should traffic in it without the consent of the municipality.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We are giving power to the railway companies to erect saw-mills and sell lumber, and that is much more objectionable than to sell electrical power, for this reason : when they build saw-mills, and sell lumber they provide a product which will probably be carried on their own railroad, and they will have an advantage in competition with those who sell lumber as a business; but there is no such advantage given in the sale of electricity? It would be nothing more or less than wholesome competition, and if they have more electricity than they require for their own purposes, why not let them sell it ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It only applies to selling in cities, towns and incorporated villages, and they surely should not have that privilege without the consent of the municipality.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—The clause says they must first be authorized by a special

Act of parliament to do all these things, and to do it with the consent of the municipal authorities. They cannot do anything without a special Act, and in that Act no doubt those provisions would occur.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—There is no power in this Act to authorize the railway company to enter into a business of conveying heat, light or electricity, so as to enter into a trade. It only says when they are, by a special Act of parliament, authorized to convey that electricity, then, even that will not be granted unless the company has the consent of the municipality. This Bill does not authorize traffic in electricity, and therefore I think the proposed amendment is out of place, and may I add, directly to a contrary effect to what the hon. gentleman suggests. It seems to me that to adopt it would be to make a suggestion that there is something in this Bill which authorizes it in a qualified way, and I do not think there is.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It is within the knowledge of every member of this honourable House, that a number of railway Bills have been passed in this shape, that the railway companies have been authorized to sell the surplus power which they may develop, and we would have this condition of things, that the municipality would refuse to consent, for instance, because they would have their own electrical plant in the municipality, and the railway company would, under the authority of this railway board, override the action of the municipality, and grant the railway company the right to sell power in competition with the plant of the municipality. If it is the interest of the municipal ratepayers, it is to be supposed that the municipal body will grant the right; but it seems to me that we should close the door to the municipalities being overridden by this railway company to use the power for its own purposes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am quite satisfied with my hon. friend's explanation. It would stand as a block in the way of the municipality giving the right to convey the power, if they gave the right to sell, for the municipality might own its own power, and it would be giving competition which they did not desire.

The amendment was agreed to.

On subsection 3 of clause 174,

3. Where the lands are situated in the province of Quebec, upon such delivery and payment into court, proceedings shall be had for the confirmation of the title of the company, in like manner as in other cases of confirmation of title, except that, in addition to the usual contents of the notice, the prothonotary shall state that the title of the company (that is, the conveyance, agreement, or award) is under this Act, and shall call upon all persons claiming an interest in or entitled to the lands, or any part thereof, or representing or being the husband of any person so entitled, to file, their claims to the compensation or any part thereof. 51 V., c. 29, s. 170, Am.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—There was quite a difference of opinion expressed last night on this clause. I would suggest, with a view of meeting the objection which was raised, that the following subsection be substituted for it :

Where the lands are situated in the province of Quebec, the notice shall be published as is required in cases of confirmation of titles, and the registrar's certificate shall be procured and filed as in such cases.

It would avoid the necessity of referring to any specific articles of the code.

The amendment was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It will be necessary to remove from subsection 4 'the judgment of confirmation.' I move that these words be struck out.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON moved to reconsider clauses 266 and 267.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Last evening, in considering the amendment of the hon. gentleman from Westmoreland to place the government railways under the control of the board, I pointed out to the committee that there was a serious difficulty in connection with the working out of through rates, under section 266 and 267, with the Intercolonial Railway interposing—that it would impose a serious check in the way of making through rates with company roads in the east. I pointed out an instance of traffic originating on the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway, passing over the Intercolonial Railway and a railway in Nova Scotia, that the Intercolonial Railway, not being under control of the board, it would not be possible for the board to arrange through rates in the event of those railroads not agreeing among themselves. The provisions of this clause are that where the owners of two or more railways will not arrange for a through rate, the board can come in and make an equitable division. The government railway should be included. It would only go just as far as this practical difficulty which every hon. gentleman will see arises, and it may be a very serious difficulty in the lower provinces. Of course, as the hon. Speaker pointed out, it might be possible to get over that, but the best way to get over it is to arrange it in the Bill. I propose to insert as subsection 5 of clause 267, the following :

Notwithstanding anything in section three of the Act, this section and the next preceding section shall apply to government railroads and vessels connected therewith.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman had better give it as a notice, and we will consider it. We will want to make a slight change then in clause 3 of the Act itself.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Then I give it as a notice.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have specially excluded the government railways in clause 3, and we will perhaps have to modify that and allow those provisions to come in.

The amendment was allowed to stand as a notice.

On clause 202,

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I desire to suggest an amendment to this clause. No provision is made in this clause for any time within which the railways shall reconstruct or alter the bridges or tunnels, as directed by this clause, and this is to provide that they may have a reasonable time to do so under the direction of the board. Under the old clause provision was made for large alterations ; they reconstructed a bridge or tunnel, as the case may be, in accordance with the requirements of the Railway Act. In this clause that was left out, and it is only reasonable to amend is as proposed.

The amendment was agreed to.

On subclause 2,

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Subclause 2 reads as follows :—

2. If, in any case, it is necessary to raise, reconstruct or alter any bridge, tunnel, erection or structure not owned by the company, and the owner of the same refuses to consent to such necessary changes, it shall be the duty of the company to apply to the board, and upon notice to all parties interested, the board shall hear the matter, and may make such order, allowing such raising, reconstruction or alteration, upon such terms and conditions as to the board shall appear just and proper and in the public interest.

Supposing a municipality has built a bridge or tunnel and the railway has been using it up to the time of the passing of this Act, under the provision of this Bill if that bridge must be enlarged, raised or lowered, this clause gives to the board power to say to that municipality or corporation 'you shall do that on your own responsibility.' Why should that be allowed ? If it is necessary for the company to have a wider or higher tunnel, let the company build it and do not give the board the power to charge the municipality with the extra expense. That is what this clause does. Here is a municipality which has built a bridge over a railway. It is not sufficient exactly. Take Notre Dame street, Montreal: there is a bridge on the Grand Trunk Railway there. I do not suppose between the top of the car and that bridge there is a space of three or four feet. This clause exacts a height of seven feet. That bridge was built partly by the corporation. If the interests of the railway demand a higher bridge, why force the citizens to undergo the expense ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—They would not do it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—But you give them the power to do it, and I say you should not place in the board that discretionary power. You should not force that municipality to go before the board and plead in the matter. We should not involve them in additional expense like that.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—The hon. gentleman must not lose sight of the fact that he is offering a bid to the owner of the bridge to refuse. The public is in danger and you are not going to stop an enterprise of that kind by offering an inducement to the owner of the bridge to refuse.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I would allow the members of the board to force the owner to allow the company to construct it, but not to make him do it.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—What better authority can you refer to than the board ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I want to know the authority to tell me I should be bound to build a bridge twice.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We have already discussed this at length. There was no amendment and the clause was declared carried.

The CHAIRMAN—The clause has been carried.

On subclause 4.

4. Every company shall incur a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars for each day of wilful neglect, omission or refusal to obey the provisions of this section. 51 V., c. 29, s. 192, Am.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The question was whether the words 'or owner' should be inserted after 'company.'

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It is not necessary.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Excuse me, it is necessary. Should not the owner be liable to a penalty if he does not construct his bridge as well as the company ? I move that the words 'or owner' be inserted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is there anything in this clause which gives power to the board to compel the owner to build that bridge?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—On such terms and conditions as they may direct. The clause provides that in case they require to rebuild, or build a bridge and the owner refuses to do it, then the board may order its construction. In doing that, the board must exercise that power in the interest of the travelling public, and if the board desires a reconstruction or restrengthening of that bridge, though it does not belong to them, in order to enable the public to pass over it with safety, surely the owner should not be asked to rebuild that bridge.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—We must consider that this provision is not in the interest of the railway company alone, but in the public interest. The railway would go on using a bridge lower than provided for in this Act if it were not a case of risk to the employees, and therefore in the public interest, so that it must be looked upon as in the public interest and not in the interests of the company.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman from Victoria did not see how the municipality could be forced to reconstruct a bridge or pay a share of the reconstruction. There are very many cases where the municipality may be about to construct a bridge, or to rebuild an old bridge, and should not the commission be seized with the question of the height, and force the municipality to bring its bridge to a certain level or height, and then the municipality would pay? These are all questions which will be left to the discretion of the board.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Is not that penalty for not complying ? If they refuse to consent to such changes it shall be the duty of the company to apply to the board.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is not what it means. The clause says :

4. Every company shall incur a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars for each day of wilful neglect, omission or refusal to obey the provisions of this section. 51 V., c. 29, s. 192, Am.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—That is that they must apply to the board, and if they fail to do that, they are fined ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It does not provide in the first three lines that the owner is to reconstruct the bridge. It simply says that if the owner refuses to do it, or to allow the company to do it, then they apply to the board and the board orders its reconstruction, and if the company will not reconstruct, though it may be dangerous in travelling over it, they are subject to a penalty.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—Not the company.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It says 'every company shall incur a penalty'—not the owner. The Speaker's amendment is that the owner shall be subject to a penalty. There may be cases—I do not know of any—which suggested this change. Are there any bridges belonging to private parties or to municipalities which are used by the railways, and if so have the owners or the municipalities conceded the rights or sold these bridges to the railways, and if so upon what conditions, and if these conditions are that they were to be kept in proper order fit for the purposes of the railway and for the safety of the travelling public, then it becomes the duty of the company to reconstruct or so strengthen it as to make it safe, that is the object of this provision—to compel them to do it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend is overlooking the fact that the penalty is to be attached only in the event of the refusal of the owner to carry out the order of the board, and consequently it can do no harm, but if the board does make an order which applies to the owner, there must be some penalty, but the board will not make an order against the owner unless they have jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman from Belleville speaks of bridges over which the railway passes, but clause 202 speaks of Every bridge, tunnel or other erection or structure over, through or under which any railway now or hereafter passes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is the same thing.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I want to say that I know of a case where on an overhead bridge a farmer, for his own convenience, put a gate at the end of the bridge. The result was his man let out a lot of fat steers and cows and down went the bridge, and very serious injury was done. There was quite a dispute as to whether the company had to erect the bridge, but they were compelled to finally. It was supposed to be of insufficient strength. I think the board should have power to order that no farmer should be permitted to put a gate or bar across the end of an overhead bridge. It is a dangerous thing to do. Cattle coming home in the evening, and a gate there which may be opened and 20 or 30 head of cattle rushing on a bridge, seriously endangers the safety, of the bridge. I do not think there should be a gate on the end of an overhead bridge.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The gate would not be across the overhead bridge; if that were so you will stop the highway.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—It was a private bridge across a cut on a farm and the bridge was close to the farmer's barn, and for his own convenience he put a gate across the end in order to stop his cattle. The result was that when they drove the cattle in the other direction, the whole of them made a rush on to the bridge and the bridge went down.

The amendment was adopted.

On clause 224,

224. When any train is approaching a highway crossing at rail-level (except within the limits of cities or towns where the municipal authority may pass by-laws prohibiting the same), the engine whistle shall be sounded and the bell rung at least eighty rods before reaching such crossing, and at short intervals, until the engine has crossed such highway; and the company shall, for each neglect to comply with the provisions of this section, incur a penalty of eight dollars, and shall also be liable for all such neglect; and every employee of the company who neglects to comply with this section shall for each offence be subject to a like penalty. 51 V., c. 29, s. 256, Am.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I move that the word 'or' be substituted for 'and' in the 11th line.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—We agreed at the conference upstairs that the word 'then' should be inserted after the word 'bell.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That was the understanding.

The clause was amended and adopted.

On clause 230,

230. In this section the expression 'packing' means packing of wood or metal, or some equally substantial and solid material, of not less than two inches in thickness, and which, where by this section any space is required to be filled in, shall extend to within one and a half inches of the crown of the rails in use on any such railway, shall be neatly fitted so as to come against the web of such rails, and shall be well and solidly fastened to the ties on which such rails are laid.

2. The spaces behind and in front of every railway frog or crossing, and between the fixed rails of every switch where such spaces are less than four inches in width, shall be filled with packing up to the under side of the head of the rail.

3. The spaces between any wing rail and any railway frog, and between any guard rail and the track rail alongside of it, shall be filled with packing at their splayed ends, so that the whole splay shall be so filled where the width of the space between the rails is less than four inches; such packing not to reach higher than to the under side of the head of the rail; provided however, that the board may allow such filling and packing to be left out, from the month of December to the month of April in each year, both months included, or between any such dates as the board by regulation, or in any particular case, determines.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is this to be said with respect to this clause; that an amendment was suggested, and I think it was accepted by all parties, to insert after the word 'allow' in the fourth line 'the filling and packing mentioned in subsection 3 of this section.'

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It appears to me matters of this kind could be very well left to the board. We expect there will be some practical men on the board, and we fix certain dates at which the packing may be left out. In a portion of Canada where there is very little snow, there is no reason why the packing should be left out. Why not retain it all the year round? It is put there for the safety of railway employees, and it might be left there all the time.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This only authorizes the board to do that.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—You provide it shall be the duty of the board to determine the dates.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The last line provides that the board may, by regulations, determine the dates.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The reason for the amendment was this: the word 'such,' it has been contended, would be held only to apply to this clause, and it was clearly the intention of everybody that these words should apply, not only to subsection 3, but to 2 which precedes it.

The amendment was agreed to, and the clause was adopted.

On clause 275, subsection 4,

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I have an amendment to move to this subsection:

Or to members of such other public bodies, or organizations, or to such persons, &c.

The object is this: under this provision if, for instance, the railway company would like to take a deputation of farmers, or others and show the country, they could not give them free transportation; and the object is simply to give them power, subject to the approval of the board, to give transportation free.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman had better give notice of his amendment.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière)—By adding in the 9th line after the word 'regulation,' the words to 'be extended or restricted,' it would cover the whole ground, and be more simple. One of the representatives of the railways here, I think a representative of the Canadian Pacific Railway, said if the words 'be extended' were added it would do.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—That was discussed. The hon. gentleman will see that would affect freight as well as passengers.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I had the intention of offering an amendment somewhat similar to that proposed by the hon. gentleman. I think the railway companies have treated members of parliament, and many other people, generously in giving passes, and it is rather imposing on railway companies to require them by law to grant free transportation on all trains to members of parliament as well as members of the legislatures, and others.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is not in this section.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—This clause refers to the same subject more or less directly. I would propose an amendment to the general provision respecting free carriage. Now, I would not do that with the object of preventing the railway corporations from granting passes but I desire to make the provision more general, and leave it optional with the railways, as at present, to grant passes to members of parliament or others, as they desire to do, a liberty which I cannot find that they have under the Bill as it stands. Let us put in another clause at the end of subsection 5, which requires the railway company to grant free transportation on its trains to members of the Senate, and House of Commons of Canada, and for members of the board, &c,. Now, I presume the members of the board will have free transportation on the railways whether that is there or not, and it is imposing on the generosity of railway companies in general to put in this clause. We impose a good many duties on them under this Bill, but that I think, is extending them a little too far. It is doing something for ourselves, which the public would not expect us to do, and I would suggest striking out all that part of the 5th subsection which compels them to grant free transportation to members of the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—What would the hon. gentleman put in its place ?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I would leave it to the railways of Canada to grant free passes to the members of parliament. They have been doing so, and they should be left to treat members of parliament as they have been doing heretofore. Some hon. gentlemen have said that a pass is something in the nature of a bribe to a member of parliament. That is an absurdity. No man can consider anything of that kind with respect to passes. I have got passes, I would not like to say over how many railways, and I have only used those passes on two or three railroads that connect with my own residence in coming to parliament. Others have been sent to me. I might make free use of them, just as I have done with those I received from other railways, but I never required to do so. It must be a pretty serious tax on a railway company to grant free passes to members of parliament attending their duties, many of them might spend the greater part of their time in travelling during the year, and they can do so with those passes without any expense to themselves. I would leave that matter entirely with the railway companies, and would not include anything in the Bill which makes it compulsory for them to grant free transportation to members of parliament.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—We had an evidence in the admission by a member of the House, when this matter was discussed a few days ago, that these passes did affect a man's vote in this Chamber. In the three or four hours when the railway representatives addressed the Senate on matters pertaining to this Bill, they took no exception to the provisions of this clause, admitting, as a matter of fact, that members of parliament did receive passes, and they had no objection to concede it by law. There is no doubt the railway companies have been generous to members of parliament, and they did not take any exception to it being provided in the Act, that these passes should be given. If there is any suspicion in the country that members of parliament are influenced—and we know there is such a suspicion—we see views expressed in the press of the country that members are influenced by receiving passes—if we provide by law that members are entitled to free transportation, we remove any idea on the part of the electorate that members are influenced by receiving passes from railway corporations. Inasmuch as this is in the Bill, and has not been objected to by the railway companies, we should retain it, and have members of both Houses receive, as a matter of right, free transportation, which they do as a matter of fact receive by grace from the companies now. I expressed myself in the same way before, and I retain my opinion. In the past we know transportation has been withheld because certain members did not support certain legislation. I know that as a fact, because I was for some years deprived of free transportation, while nearly every member of the House of Commons received a pass, simply because I did not support certain legislation. It is unfair that any member should be placed in that position; and inasmuch as the railway companies do not object to the clause, and now grant free transportation to members of parliament, I say it should be made a matter of right, rather than of grace on the part of the companies.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the hon. gentleman's argument amounts to anything, we should prevent them giving passes to anybody. If there is a member of parliament who would be influenced by the receipt of a pass, and it were known, the best thing to do would be to expel him, or prevent the issuing of passes altogether. I do not think the hon. gentleman has given the correct reason, in fact, I know he has not, for the position taken by the representatives of the railways, in the meeting held the other day. The reason given to me personally why they did not discuss it, was because it was a delicate matter affecting each member of the Senate and they thought it was better to leave it to themselves to deal with it, than to discuss it at the meeting. The railways are decidedly opposed, not to granting passes particularly, but to being compelled to grant passes; or to make it part of the law of the country that they shall grant passes. That is what they object to. I cannot understand how the hon. gentleman has come to the conclusion that they do not object to it.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Mr. Wainwright told me himself personally that he did not object to this clause. As a matter of fact, he said they gave passes, and they would as soon give them by law as not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not know what Mr. Wainwright told the hon. gentleman; I know in my conversation with the railway people the view they expressed to me was quite to the contrary, and I have no less than three or four pages furnished by the representatives of the railway people, protesting against the clause as an infringement of their rights. They go so far as to say you might just as well compel them to give a member his breakfast in the morning. I do not understand the position taken by the hon. gentleman, but I am speaking of what I know myself personally.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—So am I.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—More than that, I am opposed to the principle completely, of compelling any corporation to give free transportation to any one. It is mentioned by many hon. gentlemen who are advocating this, that because the railways get subsidies they should grant to members of the two Houses of parliament free transportation. They get the subsidy from the representatives of the people. It is a free gift by the people through their representatives, and if the people do not approve of it, they can easily reject the member who has voted for it. The money voted is not the money of the individual. It is the money of the public. Some members here have argued in this way: that because they are put to trouble and expense in attending parliament in order to give these subsidies, therefore they should have free passes. I am rather inclined to think that that is a point not considered very seriously when members seek positions in parliament. Men will give their time and attention for months and months in the constituencies in order to induce the people to elect them. They do not suppose, when they are asking the suffrages of the people, that they do it because they are going to get free passes on the railways. I fully concur in the remarks made by the hon. gentleman opposite, that if there is any logic in the argument, we should extend free passes to every taxpayer who has paid a portion of the subsidy. I do not know why we should discuss this matter any more, but I would suggest a much simpler mode of reaching it than my hon. friend has proposed. The Bill which is before us, provides that the companies may grant passes to members of the provincial legislatures and of the press. Of course, the Senate and the House of Commons are not included in that, for the reason that the company are compelled by the 5th subsection to grant passes to members of parliament. If you would add 'to their goods and effects, or members of the Senate and House of Commons and of the provincial legislature, and of the press,' that would leave the companies——

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Just where we do not want them to be.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman's interruptions are unseemly and disarrange one's idea, but prolong the discussion. Strike out the words in the 5th section, 'members of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada.' That leaves them permission to do what they please, just as the law does now. The clause reads that the company shall have the private car for the board on any train. I am not objecting to that portion of the clause which compels them to carry the board and their apparatus, whatever they may have, and to give them a car; but what I wish to point out is this: when it says free transportation on any of the trains, we know that in the Imperial Limited of one railway and the International of the other, they require those trains as light as possible, so as to enable them to make rapid time between large centres, and I do not think they ought to be compelled to take the car of the board on these trains. But under this clause you compel them to take it on any train the board may demand. I do not think there is any use in making the motion here, but I shall give notice of a motion and we can either test it now or when the committee rises.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is desirable that there should be a few words said on this fifth subclause from a business point of view. At the present time every member of this honourable House has passes from all the great railway companies of Canada. Every member of both Houses travels free. This clause simply proposes that the members shall enjoy that privilege as a right. As it is now every member, when he accepts a pass from a company, must naturally feel under a certain obligation to the company. Those companies are continually coming before parliament for legislation. The interests of the companies are not always identical with the interests of the public, and it is the duty of members of parliament to legislate at any rate with as keen an eye to the interests of the public as to the interests of the companies. And I think it is most desirable that this privilege which we now have of travelling free should be enjoyed as a right, and there should be no sense of obligation on the part of members to the companies. I can readily understand the opposition of the railway companies to this proposal, as some of them are opposed to it. The companies naturally feel that they have a certain leverage on the members of both Houses when they have the right to grant or withhold passes. I do not think that is a right condition of things. There are gentlemen who talk in a very patriotic way who, I suppose, have not paid railway fares in Canada for themselves for the last quarter of a century. I do not think hon. members who are in that position are at the same time in a position to preach sermons against those who are willing to adopt this clause. If we are not to have this clause, then the better way would be to put an end to the granting of passes altogether. Either position is right and proper. Ether have no free travelling on railways, or have it free by law. That is a position which should commend itself to the common sense of every hon. gentleman here, and I am satisfied it would commend itsef to the common sense of the people through the country. The people do not wish that their representatives should be under obligations to the companies. If the representatives are to travel free, the people think it better they should travel free as a right and not by way of compliment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman has no right to attribute to those who differ from him dishonest motives in the course they pursue.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I did not attribute any motives.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But are we to understand, because members of this House have received passes in the past, that therefore the legislation in this House has always been in the interests of the railways? I think I can appeal to the records of the House to show that those gentlemen who received passes, whether for twenty-five years or less time, have exercised the powers vested in them as members of the Senate to do that which the hon. gentleman thinks they cannot do or have not done.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No, excuse me.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, that is the insinuation. There is no use mincing the matter. The insinuation is that because senators have received passes in the past, they have not done their duty to the country.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No, nothing of the kind.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, that is the only inference which can be drawn from the remarks which he has made.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Nothing of the sort.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I appeal to the records of the House and to hon. members present as to whether statements of that kind, either by inference or in any other way, are justified. This House has set at defiance the actions of the other House upon very important points when they have come before them, though they may have had passes in their pockets. I do not believe it is a good policy, nor do I believe it is consistent with the dignity of the parliament, to compel railways to grant passes. That is my view of it. I object to the hon. Speaker reading me a lecture as to my honesty or playing to the gallery because I differ from him upon a question of this kind. I think it is degrading to parliament to say that companies shall grant them passes or anything else.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I spoke the last time this subject was before the Senate, not with the intention of evoking any feeling, and I would regret very much that any feeling should be evoked on this occasion, but my main object in rising now is to ask the hon. gentleman from Montreal, who I am glad to see is present, to retract the words which he used. If I choose to take a certain line of action on this measure and on this clause, and justify it, I have a perfect right to do so, and I have no right to have my conduct characterized as infamous and to have it said that it is disgraceful. That is what the hon. gentleman did on that occasion, and I say that he is bound, by all the courtesy of a gentleman, by all the laws of honour, apart from any rules of the Senate, to retract these words or justify them. I come here and give expression to my views, and no man in this Senate has any higher opinion of his duty than I have. No devotee going to his shrine cherishes or thinks more of the high honour of this Chamber than I do, and on every occasion, inside and outside of it, I have endeavoured to so shape my conduct that I would not reflect in any way on the body to which I belong. As to these other matters of the passes, I said that it was the better way to do what we were doing than to accept these passes in what is called the fly way, in a way that was not open and manly. Talk about committing any wrong to these companies, who are the companies? Are Mr. Wainwright, or Mr. Van Horne the companies? Not a bit of it. You cannot hurt the companies. There is no company to be hurt as a distinct body. I or anybody else may have shares in these companies. If any hon. gentleman has shares in the company—and I hope a great many of them have a great many shares—if they vote for this clause what are they doing? They are voting that they themselves shall pay a part of it. Therefore it is perfectly plain and legitimate to do so. I do not think there should be anything very compulsory about it. I think that they should take the ordinary passenger train, but that ought to suffice for them. Then as to the past, it is a well known fact that every hon. gentleman who was a member of this Senate received these passes, and I would not think when he got them from every company that it could be considered as a bribe from any individual company. The country does a great deal for those railways in every respect. We are the servants of the people of this country, and I cannot see that we are doing the slightest thing towards them that is not fair. I go further and say that if it is the wish of this House that the granting of these passes should be abolished altogether—because that is the true way to do it—insert a clause that no passes shall be issued, and I have no objection to it. Every member of this Senate should be informed on this question and asked to vote, because I would not wonder if next year hon. gentlemen would come here who had not been present at the discussion, and say 'If I had been here I would have voted against it' and bolster up dignity in that way. Some people may consider that it is undignified. It may look that way, though on an internal examination I do not think it is so, when you look at the company, who they are, and when you look at their relations to this Senate and the service that the Senate and Commons do you are bound to say that there is nothing that can be called appropriating other people's property. I will mention one thing further, and that is with reference to the House of Commons. If the House of Commons had passed this clause in good faith unanimously, without a word of objection, as I have been told, why should we try to reflect on their dignity? Why should we say, by our action, that their conduct was not dignified, honourable and fair? What is the inevitable conclusion? If we think this is wrong and a sin, we must say that they are wrong, and I say along with this the mileage should be taken away.

I have only a word to say with reference to that. I am perfectly satisfied, because I would not have any credit for doing it, the amount is so small; but those gentlemen who live in British Columbia and in the maritime provinces receive considerable mileage, and the sacrifice of personal comfort which they make in coming here amply justifies the small pittance which is given to them. I would wish that in this country men should receive neither indemnity nor mileage, and then we would see how many honourable and fair men there would be who would come here and give their services free. I do not think the amount is any great consideration. Any man who comes here and gives his time should do so if he is an honourable and conscientious man. I am bound to say that some of these men would make a fuss afterwards who scarcely give us the benefit and advantage of their presence, but I think that these men who come and give all their time to business certainly deserve the small amount coming to them. I do not know any other parliament where there is an allowance of this kind given where it is looked upon as any other than a gift. You could have the same objection to the indemnity as to the mileage in a sense, because if you do not wish to take the one you might go further and be more virtuous and reject the other. I hope some of the senators will unite and send a circular to every hon. senator in this House and ask him to give us his honest opinion on it, and if a majority are in favour of rejecting these passes, I shall, on my sacred honour, also refuse.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—The question resolves itself into whether we shall travel by right or by favour. As matters stand now, we travel on free passes. It is useless to try and throw dust in one another's eyes and speak of high honour, or disgrace. I grant no one of my colleagues that privilege unless he can show that he travels and pays his fare. If he does, I will grant him the privilege of casting a reflection, but to try and pose for higher honour when in fact the mode of his travel is possibly of a lower character than the one proposed by law, I look upon as not absolutely in the best of form. I readily understand why some of these railway companies object to this legislation: and why? Because we are under obligation to them, because they hold those passes, if not as bribes, as semi-bribes. I know of cases, hon. gentlemen, where companies have withdrawn their passes because in committee members voted against their Bills. If that has been done once—and members have told me it has been done to them—I say that we should not be put in that position. If the companies are in a position to punish us, to lash us every time we don't vote at their bidding, then, it is clear, the granting of a pass is a semi-bribe. We should, in my humble estimation, either travel by right or abolish all passes. I am prepared to support either course, but I object to that sense of honour which consists in receiving favours and posing as men of higher honour than those who do not care to be under obligations to companies. What do we find? We find that those who oppose this clause are all recipients of passes. My hon. friend from Wellington did not deny that he was travelling on a free pass. The hon. leader of the opposition, whom we all respect, did not tell us that he did not travel on a free pass. The hon. gentleman from Kennebec (Hon. Mr. Drummond), who was so hard on his other colleagues and who, possibly, can afford to pay his fare, did not tell us that he was not travelling on free passes—he and his family and friends. Even my facetious and irrepressible friend from Kingston, who paid his compliments, his obeisance to his chief, who posed here as a paragon of virtue, conscientiousness and that sort of thing, who tried to be witty at my expense, and succeeded in being farcical—as in all cases he does,—he himself had to admit that he was travelling on a free pass, and he told us all he would vote for the Bill like a little man, and watch him. hon. gentlemen, when the vote comes on, and he will do the trick. He will vote for it.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon—I did not oppose the clause.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I said the hon. gentleman would vote for it like a little man.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I did not use any offensive expression such as that in my remarks.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Well then, like a big man. The matter stands in this way: we all travel on passes now. It makes no difference with the company, whilst they give us free transportation, what way they do it, except that we are under obligation in one case and in the other case we are not. I looked into the question about the way things are done in Europe, and I think hon. gentlemen will admit that legislators in Europe know and feel as keenly the sense of honour as we do. In France legislators travel free by law; in Italy, Belgium and Switzerland, they travel free by law, and I believe it is the same in Germany and Austria; and who in this House would throw the slur on those people that they have not a high sense of honour? They have, hon. gentlemen, and their sense of honour is not under obligation to railway companies. That is, in my estimation, and in theirs, the true sense of honour. Therefore, I shall vote for the clause, or vote to have it a misdemeanour for any company to give a free pass to any member of parliament. That is what I understand to be the right sense of honour.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—As I was not present when the debate was commenced on the clause relating to free passes, and as I would not like to give a silent vote on a clause of this importance, I crave the indulgence of this honourable House to say just a few words. I must confess that I was a little puzzled when I read the clause granting, as a matter of right, passage to members of parliament, but, on reflection, I thought that there was a good deal in favour of it. What struck me at the outset was that the clause was rather sweeping in its terms, and if the railway companies had not been for years granting passes as a general rule, at least to members of both Houses of parliament, the clause might have been somewhat exacting in its nature. But, they have not adopted that practice for nothing. They must have adopted it, either because they considered it as due in justice to members of parliament, or for the purpose of placing themselves in a better light before members of parliament. It seems to me that it is undignified for members to remain in that position, and we should have no alternative than either to make it compulsory on the railway companies to grant passes as a matter of right, or to enact such a law as would prohibit them from granting any passes at all. It has been suggested by some railway companies, in the memorandum which has been distributed to members of this House, that if the government deem it proper that the members of parliament should have free passes on railways, the government should pay for these passes. The government might well afford to take that position. But, on the other hand, the government might well afford to take this position with the railway company, that this machinery is created for their own benefit, and I may say for their exclusive benefit. It is machinery which is going to entail an expenditure of at least $100,000 a year to begin with, a large expenditure which the government would be justified in calling on the railway companies to bear their share of, and the railway companies can better afford to let the public bear the expense of this railway commission and to submit to the granting of passes as is suggested. I have not had time to refer to the Revised Statutes for the purpose of ascertaining if the principle is recognized of charging companies in such cases as this with bearing the expenditure occasioned by the measure, but I know it obtains anyway in the province of Quebec and in the province of Ontario. In the province of Quebec I know that this practice obtains as far as gas inspectors and other inspectors are concerned. Their salaries are collected from the companies interested, because the inspector is appointed in the interest of the public; but as certain companies are the occasion of the appointment, and as it is for the purpose of controlling their action in the interests of the public, the companies are made to bear the expense. It has been suggested to me by hon. members near me that this principle obtains in the insurance department. I know it does, and in a number of other instances. It seems to me one might very readily compensate the other, and the railway companies might submit to that with good grace, and they would not be the losers by it. I would have no objection to adopt one course or the other, but there is only the one alternative: we must either close the door to this practice which has obtained for a great many years of granting passes to members of parliament as a favour, or declare that members of parliament shall have those passes as a matter of right.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have no desire to continue this discussion, but I should like to call the attention of my hon. friend to the clause as it reads, and which we are asked to adopt, and ask him and other lawyers, who are in the habit of giving opinions upon the construction of statutes, whether this clause does not go much beyond what even those who are advocating compulsory free passes, ever intended. From the discussion, it is quite evident to my mind how the vote will be, and for that reason I do not propose to continue the discussion further at the present moment; but notice will be given so that at the third reading of the Bill we may have an opportunity of recording our votes upon this compulsory principle. I would ask my hon. friend who has just spoken, and appears to be as keen a critic and interpreter of the wording of a clause as any member of the Senate—I do not wish to be understood when I say that I am drawing any invidious distinction between lawyers—does not this clause go much beyond what even parliament intended it to go? In the first place it provides that the transportation shall be upon any train of the company, and then in the latter portion of the clause, it provides not only that they shall have free transportation for themselves, but also for the staff of the board and for the baggage and equipment, and for the official car. Will not that be interpreted to apply to members of parliament as well as to the members of the board ? I know that opinions have been expressed already by legal gentlemen that it does, because the clause says :

5. The company shall furnish free transportation upon any of its trains, for members of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada and for any of the members of the board, and for such officers and staff of the board as the board may determine, with their baggage and equipment.

Do the words 'baggage and equipment' apply exclusively to members of the board, or to both classes to whom this clause compels the companies to give free transportation ? And it adds :

And shall also, when required, haul free of charge any car provided for the use of the board.

From the wording of the clause, it is contended by some that the passes and the free transportation of the baggage and equipment and the car applies to both classes to whom the passes are to be granted. Now, that is a question for the lawyers to decide. I am only repeating that the interpretation that I have intimated might be given to the clause has already been given by legal gentlemen. My hon. friends who are supporting the free transportation of members of parliament over the country not only to attend to their parliamentary duties, but throughout the whole year, and to any portion of the Dominion, can say whether that clause will bear the interpretation which I have intimated some lawyers have given to it, and if it does, surely parliament never intended that, and would not be a party to enacting such legislation. Bad enough, in my opinion, is the compelling the companies to grant passes, but to go to the extent which some legal gentlemen who have interpreted this clause say it goes, would be altogether beyond what is right and proper. It would be an imposition upon the railway companies that should not be forced upon them by any legislative body, nor should any member of either House, or any public man, ask them to do it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is very easy to make this clause read as it was intended.

Hon. Sir MACKENZZIE BOWELL.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I express my individual opinion, because it is asked by the hon. member.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—There is no doubt that the words 'with their baggage and equipment' refer only to the members of the board and their staff, because of the use of the word 'and' after 'of Canada' in the third line of this subsection. If instead of the word 'and' there was a comma, then it would be different. But with the use of the word 'and,' it seems to me the words 'with their baggage and equipment' refer only to the members of the board and their staff. However, if there is any doubt as to that, it would be easy to make it perfectly clear by providing first for the members of the board and their staff, with their baggage and equipment, and at the end of the clause to provide for the passes of the members of the Senate and the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not worth while discussing the verbiage : it can be easily changed.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I do not think it can be made plainer than it is. There can be no question that the car is only to be provided for the board. The statute says so. Tracing it backward, the baggage and equipment, I would answer that by asking the hon. gentleman what the equipment of a senator is ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would not like to state publicly in the Senate what my opinion is.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It is quite clear that equipment has no reference whatever to the equipment of a member of the House of Commons, because it would be something which, if you wanted to put in the phraseology, it would be very difficult to explain.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What about the word 'baggage' ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Then the word 'baggage' is coupled with the word 'equipment,' and if equipment does not apply to a senator or members of the House of Commons, the word 'baggage' would not apply. It is 'with their baggage and equipment' coupled together, so it seems to me that excludes it entirely from consideration. It comes to this, that members of the Senate and House of Commons are to be supplied with free transportation. That is the full complement of it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If that be the interpretation, a member would have to pay for his trunk, because it would be his baggage. His baggage would be weighed as in Europe, and he would have to pay for it. If the hon. gentleman's interpretation is correct, he would get a free pass, and have to pay for his trunk. They could charge what they liked for the trunk, which would be all right.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—There is an amendment which should be made. You should put the word 'passenger' before 'trains.' If a gentleman who is a physician, and a senator too, wishes to go in a hurry, he might insist on going on a freight train. Railway companies dislike exceedingly any such practice as that, and one would have to get special permission. I think 'passenger' ought to be put before 'train.' I have had some experience in that way. It is very difficult to get a superintendent or manager of a road to give one passage on a freight train.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière)—I do not know that it is understood that this clause, giving free transportation, is going to pass. If that clause is going to be adopted, I would provide for such a contingency as has been raised by the hon. member for Kingston, but I am not sure that the clause will be adopted.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—When we adopt it we cannot amend it.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière)—I am not prepared to say that I am in favour of this parliament declaring that members of both Houses shall be carried free over railways belonging to other people, but if this clause is to be adopted, then I would move that the company shall, on presentation of a card of identification issued by the secretary of the board on the first day of January of each year, furnish free transportation on its trains for members of the Senate and House of Commons. In that way we would get the right to travel in the trains and over the various lines by authority issued by the secretary, or by the board itself. I may say that in other countries where members of parliament are carried free—in France for instance——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Are they not government railways?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Not all, but in France, and I am told also in some other European countries, members of parliament are carried by all these railways free, but on presentation of a card of identification.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—They have a sort of medal.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—If we are going to make it the law that railways shall carry members of parliament free, it is going a little too far to ask the railways also to have these cards printed and issued to members. The least we can do, since we are taking the power in our hands, is that we shall go to the expense of providing the card of identification. It would remove a great deal of the inconvenience, because one single card would carry the members of this House over any railway in Canada. I have suggested this amendment in case the clause carried, but as far as my idea of right goes, I do not think it is just to declare that outsiders shall do work for this parliament and get no remuneration. I thought a good deal of the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry, that the government should compensate the railway companies for the transportation. That is beyond the jurisdiction of this House, but it could be done in this way: the secretary of the board on the first of January, each year—that is the time passes are issued by all companies—would provide a card of identification, so that when any member of parliament would board a train he would be immediately identified on the presentation of this card. On the other hand, this card would be an official recognition by the government of this country that the holder of the card is entitled to free transportation.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Does not the hon. gentleman think that this card of identification or certificate, would come more properly from the clerks of the respective Houses?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière)—I would not object to that, but as we are constituting a board, the secretary of the board would be the proper authority.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—As there seems to be a disagreement among the lawyers as to meaning of this clause, and as the subsection of the clause seems to be drawn in a crude and doubtful form, would it not be well to let it stand, and call the attention of the railway officials to it, and get some suggestion to make it intelligible?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have suggested a change in it that would make it perfectly clear as far as the phraseology is concerned—the company shall furnish free transportation for members with their baggage and for the board and their staff.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—That would be all right.

The clause was amended and adopted.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—As the principle is adopted, it will be remembered that I gave notice that I would move:

That subsection 5 of section 275 be amended by adding the following words, after the word 'Canada,' in line 24:—'provided, however, that the company shall not be liable for any injury that the person so travelling may sustain while travelling on said railway.'

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is against the law of the country.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—No.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Yes, when you travel on a pass, and damage occurs to you through the company's own negligence, the company is liable. Our deputy sheriff, Mr. Arthur Franchère, was killed on the 29th of January last travelling on a free pass. He was out of his place, standing in the baggage car, where he had no right to be. The car detached itself from the train, ran down a grade and bumped into a standing train further down, with the result that the deputy sheriff was knocked against a stove and killed. The case was brought before the court and judgment was rendered in favour of the family for $5,000 damages.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It was an outrage.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It would have been an outrage if they had not granted damages. It was the fault of the company that the car detached itself. 'Provided the party travelling on a pass shall not claim damages from the company,' is an outrage on justice. The courts properly granted the family $5,000 damages, notwithstanding that on the back of the pass was inscribed the very words suggested by the hon. senator. Remember, the victim was out of his place, and not in his seat where he should have been, but happened to be in the baggage car talking to the baggageman.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—It was the family that asked for damages: the family did not sign the contract.

Hon. Mr. POWER—When you consider the infinite loss this country would suffer if any considerable number of senators or members of the House of Commons were killed, I think one would hesitate before adopting this amendment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I question that very much in the case of those who are standing ready to fill the seats of those who would be killed.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Supposing a conductor or some official should act rudely and assault one of us travelling. If this were to pass there would be no recourse against the company. I think we should guard against such an emergency. I would like to give the company every proper protection, but I should not like to be at the mercy of the officials of the company.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—If we are passing a law forcing the railway companies to carry us free, and we are also sustaining the law to compel them to pay damages if we suffer through an accident on their road, it is going too far. I do not think we should attempt to hold the railways responsible if they give us free passes and we should happen to lose our lives. Our families should not be placed in a position to bring action for damages against the company. If the adoption of this amendment will prevent that, I certainly shall vote for it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If the accident is the fault of the victim, he should get no damages, but if the accident is caused by the fault of the company, the company is reponsible, and the courts will not uphold any other principle, even when we sign a contract. A man has no right to sign the rights of his heirs away under our laws, and our courts have upheld that principle in the case I have stated. There were many lawyers in Montreal who held that the deputy sheriff's family had not ground for action against the company, and some lawyers took it up and fought it and it was upheld, and it should be upheld.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The same principle was upheld by the Privy Council in another case.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would it not be well to go further, and compel the railway companies to pension the wives and families of members ?

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—We will stand in the same position as all ordinary travellers. If any accident occurs, and no negligence is attributable to the company, there is no recourse against the company, but we will stand in the same position as ordinary travellers if it is the fault of the company or its servants. Otherwise there would be no security for us travelling under such conditions.

The committee divided on the amendment, which was rejected.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would suggest to the hon. gentlemen who are in favour of this that the words should be added 'first class trains,' or perhaps they might send us by freight trains or cattle trains.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I object to that. If a first class train is broken down on a road and I have to be here for a vote in the House, and the first train that comes along is a cattle or any other train, I should be entitled to take that train. The clause is properly drafted. The member shall be the judge of what he ought to do, whether senator or member of the House of Commons, and I think the clause is perfectly well drafted and should be left as it is.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 275, subclause 3,

3. Nothing in this Act shall be construed to prevent the carriage, storage or handling of traffic free or at reduced rates for the Dominion, or any provincial or municipal government, or for charitable purposes, or to or from fairs and expositions for exhibition thereat, or the carriage, free or at reduced rates, of destitute or homeless persons, transported by charitable societies, and the necessary agencies employed in such transportation ; nor to prevent the issuance of mileage, excursion or commutation passenger tickets, or the carriage at reduced rates, of immigrants or settlers and their goods or effects, when coming from foreign countries, or any member of any organized association of commercial travellers with his baggage ; nor to prevent railways from giving free carriage or reduced rates to their own officers and employees, or their families, or for their goods and effects, or to members of the provincial legislatures or of the press ; nor to prevent the principal officers of any railway, or any railway or transportation company, from exchanging passes, or free tickets with other railways, or railway or transportation companies, for their officers and employees and their families, or their goods and effects ; provided that the carriage of traffic by the company under this subsection may, in any particular case or by general regulation, be restricted, limited or qualified by the board.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie moved an amendment to this clause this afternoon and perhaps the clause had better stand.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If this clause is to be taken up now, I wish to call the attention of the committee to what I think is an objectionable provision. It says that nothing in this Act shall prevent the issuance of mileage, excursion or commutation tickets, or the carriage at reduced rates of immigrants or settlers when coming from foreign countries. When we were in committee the first time on this Bill, I said that foreign countries might be understood not to include the United Kingdom. The hon. gentleman from Calgary suggested this afternoon in conversation that these words, 'When coming from foreign countries' should be left out ; so that there would be nothing to hinder the company from giving reduced rates to persons who were coming from the eastern portion of the Dominion to settle in the western portion ; and certainly persons coming from the United Kingdom to settle in Canada should have the same privileges as those coming from foreign countries. I move to strike out the words 'when coming from foreign countries.'

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I thoroughly concur with what the Speaker has said in regard to this clause. It would certainly prevent the company from making special rates for immigrants coming from any part of the empire.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I quite agree in the proposed amendment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Settlers going from Ontario to the west would be placed in the same position as to reduced passenger rates as immigrants or people coming from foreign countries. I think that is the practice now of the different railways. They have immigrant trains, and if there is a carload of freight belonging to people who are living in any portion of Canada to the western portion section, they give them, not free transportation, but lesser rates than the ordinary rates.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I think it is very proper it should be so.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I do not understand that this clause is prohibitive. It is one which permits the railway company to issue these passes in a definite way, but there is not anything prohibitive about it. I wish to point out that there is a class of persons prohibited that probably it is not intended to prohibit. During the time of harvest a large number of harvesters go to the North-west to assist in saving the crops. They obtain special rates for going and returning. They would not come within the class of persons called immigrants or settlers, and it seems to me that this whole clause might be much more liberalized. I do not see why we should prevent them issuing free passes or reduced tickets according as they find they have business to justify it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I direct attention to clause 265, which is the clause providing against any discrimination as to rates. The opinion does prevail that under clause 265 the power is taken away from railway companies to adopt reduced rates other than those allowed by the board, or to issue passes. It seems to me 265 should be modified to provide that it does not extend to either the issuance of passes or reduced passenger rates. If that were done, we could strike out subclause 3 of clause 275 altogether and do away with what seems to me to be a very embarrassing subsection.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think it is better as it is.

Hon. Mr. KERR—They call these 'harvesters' excursions,' or something of that kind, and they have here a provision for an excursion or commutation passenger ticket. I doubt whether that is really applicable to a harvester. He is not going on an excursion. He is going out, to return after he has done certain work. It seems to me it would be a great improvement to strike out this clause and give them power to issue passenger tickets as they please.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This clause 265 precludes them from doing what they are doing. Hence the necessity for clause 275.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Clause 265 is intended to prevent favours being shown, or discrimination made between different classes of passengers, and we are simply excepting in this subclause before us these particular cases from the operations of clause 265.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It does not go far enough.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I move that the words 'when coming from foreign countries' be struck out.

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. WATSON renewed his amendment to subsection 4 of clause 275.

Hon Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I object to the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from Marquette. You might as well legislate that every member of the community over a certain age should be carried free. There is scarcely a person who does not belong to some society, and are we to legislate that all these people are to be transported free on the railways? I think that is going too far—further than parliament would be justified in going—that members of parliament and members of the legislature are to be carried free, and also members of any other association in the country are to be carried free by the railways, is imposing on the railway companies. We are endeavouring to put those companies in such a position that they would be under control of a board that is supposed to do justice between the railway companies and the people, but I would rather leave it to the good sense of the members of that board to decide any point of this kind than to put it in an Act of parliament that compels them to give free transportation.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman is mistaken as to the scope of the clause. The amendment is in the direction of a demand made by the railway companies themselves, who do not want to be precluded from giving reduced rates to associations. This is in the line of the demand made by the railway companies.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would suggest that subclause 3 of 275 should stand. An amendment should be prepared practically striking this clause out and permitting the company to issue free transportation to whomsoever they please. It seems to me to be an extraordinary restriction that is forced upon railway companies to say that they are not at liberty to issue free transportation to persons to travel over their line of railway or steamships, it is certainly unique and I do not think it should be forced upon the company.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—The railways are often very liberal to associations which are a benefit to them, such as bridge companies, for instance, and a liberal policy on the part of railways in those cases has been a great advantage to the public at large. This is a permissive clause, and the wider we can make it the better. It takes the sting out of the rest of the Bill, and I think probably the substitution of something giving them general power to carry free whom they please would be better.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This clause with the amendment is about as wide as it should be.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—A railway company cannot always go before the board when they wish to issue free transportation to a person in a distant point. I might instance the case of many delegations going from the eastern portions of Canada to the North-west. Delegates from all quarters are going there nearly every day, and we find a preclusion embodied in this section by which the railway company, without going before the board, cannot issue free transportation to those people. No provision is made for that class of transportation. It would be utterly impossible to include in this clause every class of transportation that might arise. Surely it should be left to the discretion of the company to say to whom they shall issue transportation. It seems to me it is not in the public interest that it should be so entirely divorced from the discretion of the company.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—In drafting the clause I consulted the railway solicitors. It has always been recognized that the board is to have control of freight rates. There is no discrimination, and it is quite easily understood that railway companies might discriminate in the matter of getting freight over their road by giving passes, and if the board is to prevent discrimination in freights, you must give them some control over it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it would be far better to leave it to the discretion of the company itself. I therefore move that the company be substituted for the board.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It nullifies clause 265 altogether.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I draw the attention of the Secretary of State to the fact that it will nullify more than one section of the Bill. The word 'traffic' is defined in the interpretation part of the Bill, and then not only in 265, but in other sections; the economy of the Bill is to have a uniformity of rate in reference to passenger as well as freight, and unless you revise all those clauses you canont wipe out this clause. I approve of the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from Calgary to this extent: it is not easy to provide for all cases, but it seems to me the proviso in subclause 3 covers the point giving to the board a right by regulation from time to time to extend or limit the classes of persons to whom the railway company may be allowed to issue free passes, or commutation tickets, or anything of that kind, and it seems to me it is covered by these words:

> Provided the carriage of the traffic by the company under this subsection may in any particular case, or by the general regulation, be restricted, limited or qualified by the board.

Now the carriage of traffic at first sight might be deemed to exclude passengers, but if we turn to the interpretation clause we will find that traffic is stated to include passengers, goods and rolling stock: therefore it is equivalent to this: provided the carriage of passengers by the company under this subsection may be regulated, etc.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière)—I had the honour of moving this afternoon, that the words 'extended or restricted' be added to the clause. That covers the whole thing, and meets every case within the discretion of the board.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie will probably accept that.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I might say my object is to make it as wide as possible, so long as you do not interfere with the rights of the board to control the things specified in the Act.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If it is open for consideration, I would move an amendment to the clause as adopted. I ask for a reconsideration of subsection 3 and I move that the word 'board' be striken out and the word 'company' inserted.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It seems to me it would be quite impracticable in a wide country like Canada, when the management decide upon granting passes to an excursion party, to obtain permission of the board. It often has to be settled in half an hour, and if they have to find out where the board are and get their permission, it embarrasses matters very much. I think the company can be trusted.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That kills the whole Bill.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Let us understand the effect of it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It would leave it in the discretion of the companies.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—We must proceed knowingly, and I repeat that if this principle is to be adopted, we should reconsider several clauses of the Bill which are in direct contradiction of this: therefore we must try to make sure that we frame a Bill which has some sense on the face of it, and the Bill would have no sense whatever, as far as several clauses are concerned. If it is the sense of the House to agree with the suggestion made, the suggestion should go to this extent, that the clause should stand for the purpose of revising the other clauses and make them conform with this one.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I was going to say to the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry that if this amendment were carried, and it was contradictory to clause 265 which seems to be the troublesome clause, an amendment might be moved to that clause, or the other one to which he refers, so as to bring the three clauses into harmony.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—I suggest that subclause 3 stand until time be given to deliberate and frame an amendment, if an amendment should be found necessary to meet the case. For my own part, I confess that the more I hear it argued the more I am convinced that it will be wisdom to leave it as printed.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Let it stand as a notice of motion.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—It seems to me it is a mischievous amendment in the company's interest. It is incongruous that this committee should seek to restrict the power of the company in reference to its own rights in the management of its business. I think a night's consideration will convince those who have been most eager to submit amendments that it would be wise to let the company manage, to a certain extent, its own affairs.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—That is the effect of clause 3. It is a permissive clause, enlarging the powers of the company.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—It is not permissive when it strikes out a large class of passengers that the company was allowed to carry.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The hon. gentleman misapprehends the amendment. Subclause 3 of clause 275 is peculiarly restrictive and intended to abridge the powers of the company, and the proposal is to enlarge those powers so that the company may exercise its own jurisdiction in reference to transportation.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman from Bedford (Mr. Baker) must bear in mind that the whole object of the Bill is to restrict the operations of the company.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—You must be careful not to do too much by legislation. You must take into consideration the position of the various railway companies in the North-west. They have lands, and in some instances they may find it to their own interest and benefit to issue free passes to delegates representing prospective purchasers of their lands, and if you restrict them in the issue of these passes, it may interfere very much with their interests.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If the amendment proposed is adopted it will simply nullify and destroy clauses 264 and 265 which have been adopted by the House. The board is given under these clauses complete control of passenger and freight rates. The board can dictate what it wants in regard to these two points of passenger and freight rates. This Bill gives the company the right to issue rates as they please, irrespective of the control of the board. This clause 275 is no restriction. Clauses 264 and 265 take all control out of the hands of the company and place it in the hands of the board ; 275 takes a part of the control and says to the company : You can issue reduced rates to certain associations ; you can issue free passes to certain parties and bodies.' So that 275 is not a restriction. It is giving the company freer action, and when the hon. gentleman from Calgary proposed that subclause 3 shall be amended by substituting the word 'company' for the word 'board,' it is a perfidious amendment. It kills the Bill as far as these two clauses are concerned. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman is a lawyer or not, but he is cute and he is clever and ought to be a lawyer.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I disclaim being a lawyer if my hon. friend is one.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If he is not an attorney, he deserves to be one. His amendment certainly kills the Bill, as far as these two clauses are concerned.

The clause was allowed to stand.

On clause 284.

284. The directors may, at any time, make and enter into any agreement or arrangement, not inconsistent with the provisions of this or the Special Act, with any other company, either in Canada or elsewhere, for the regulation and interchange of traffic passing to and from the company's railways, and for the working of the traffic over the said railways respectively, or for either of those objects separately, and for the running of the trains of one company over the tracks of another company, and for the division and apportionment of tolls in respect of such traffic, and generally in relation to the management and working of the railways, or any of them, or any part thereof, and of any railway or railways in connection therewith, for any term not exceeding twenty-one years, and to provide, either by proxy or otherwise, for the appointment of a joint committee for the better carrying into effect any such agreement or arrangement, with such powers and functions as are considered necessary or expedient,—subject to the like consent of the shareholders, the sanction of the Governor in Council upon the recommendation of the board, application, notices and filing, as provided in section 281 with respect to amalgamation agreements, except that publication of notices in the 'Canada Gazette' shall be sufficient, and that the duplicate original of such agreement or arrangement shall upon being sanctioned be filed with the board provided that the board may, by order or regulation, exempt the company from complying with any of the foregoing conditions with respect to any such agreement or arrangement made or entered into by the company for the transaction of the usual and ordinary business of the company, and where such consent of the shareholders is deemed by the board to be unnecessary. 51 V., c. 29, ss. 238, 239, Am.

2. Neither the making of any such arrangement or agreement, nor anything therein contained, nor any approval thereof, shall restrict, limit, or affect any power by this Act vested in the board, or relieve the companies from complying with the provisions of this Act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think the amendment submitted was a very proper and reasonable one. The objection was that in making traffic agreements there were two classes ; there were agreements that were made for a considerable time, and important ones extending over a year or two, but it was pointed out with very great clearness that the traffic managers were making traffic arrangements from day to day that were running for perhaps only a day or a week, and it was impossible that those arrangements should be submitted to the shareholders for approval, and there was a suggestion which I thought was a very proper one. It drew a distinction between the two classes. One class it extended over a period of one year and required the approval of the shareholders ; but for traffic ararngements made from day to day, and only temporary, it was perfectly impossible to get the approval of the shareholders. If any hon. gentleman has the amendment which was submitted at that meeting he should produce it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I have the amendment. It is to substitute this for 284 :

The directors may at any time make and enter into any agreement or arrangement with any other company, either in Canada or elsewhere, for the regulation and interchange of traffic over the said railways respectively, or for either of those objects separately, and for the divisions and apportionment of tariffs in respect to such traffic. Subclause 2: The directors may also make and enter into any agreement for the running of——

The only question was as to the ten years.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It would be better to let the clause stand, and the proposed amendments can be printed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. gentleman propose to omit the proviso altogether?

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is what they did. I submit it as a notice of amendment.

The clause was allowed to stand.

On clause 310,

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—When this clause was up for consideration before, I suggested that no repealed portion of those two Acts should be embodied in this Act, so as to make this Act complete. In the repealing clause, there are only two exceptions made—section 306 of chapter 29 of 51 Victoria, and section 2 of chapter 9 of 59 Victoria are retained.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I just point out what section 2 of chapter 9 of 59 Victoria is:

All resolutions heretofore passed instead of by-laws, for the purpose mentioned in section 58, of the Railway Act, as substituted by this Act, are hereby confirmed.

It does not seem to me that a repeal of this Act would at all affect the resolutions passed before this Act came into operation, and I do not think there is any necessity for reserving this clause. I should like to have the opinion of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I agree with the hon. member for Calgary that what is necessary should be an additional clause and then repeal the whole Act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It might be placed among the general clauses. These two cases might be provided for in a section of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It would be well to call the attention of the Secretary of State to the fact that the heading of schedule one is not in the form in which it should be. He might get the law clerk to put it in proper shape.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is simply transferring the clause from the existing Act to this. We are retaining, apparently, under clause 310, section 306 of the General Railway Act, which simply declares certain railways to be for the general advantage of Canada. It could be as well introduced in this Bill as retained in the old Act.

Hon. Mr. POWER—My hon. friend has not looked closely at the latter end of section 306 of the present Railway Act.

Now or hereafter connected with or crossing the said lines of railway.

I think we had rather decided to adopt a different policy to that—that a mere crossing of a Dominion road by another road did not make that other road a work for the general advantage of Canada, and the drawing of this clause would require some consideration.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That involves another consideration entirely. The present Bill contemplates the continuance of the law of 1888 as to section 306. The principle which the Speaker has mentioned is something which is entirely contradictory to this and to the object of the Bill as it stands. I am not discussing the merits of it at all.

The clause was allowed to stand.

On clause 5,

5. All the provisions of this Act relating to any subject or matter within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, and for greater certainty, but not so as to restrict the generality of the foregoing terms, all provisions relating to railway crossings and junctions, highway crossings, through traffic, offences, penalties and statistics, shall apply to all persons, companies and railways, whether otherwise within the legislative authority of parliament or not. 51 V., c. 29, s. 4, Am.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have given notice of an amendment whereby clauses 5 and 7 would be struck out and clause 6 replaced by the amendment of which I have given notice, and which is in the following terms:

5. Every railway, steam or electric street railway or tramway, the construction or operation of which is authorized by a special Act passed by the legislature of any province, now or hereafter connecting with or crossing a railway which, at the time of such connection or crossing, is subject to the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, is hereby declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada in respect only to such connection or crossing or to through traffic thereon or anything appertaining thereto, and this Act shall apply.

To fully comprehend the object of my suggestion it is necessary that I should call attention first to clause 3 of the Bill, which says:

3. This Act shall apply to all persons, companies and railways (other than government railways) within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, and shall be incorporated and construed, as one Act, with the Special Act, subject as herein provided. 51 V., c. 29, s. 3, Am.

This is a sweeping declaration that the Act will apply to all companies within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada. Then we have clause 4, which says that:

4. Where any railway, the construction or operation of which is authorized by a special Act passed by the legislature of any province, is declared, by any special Act of the parliament of Canada, to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, this Act shall apply to such railway, and to the company constructing or operating the same, to the exclusion of such of the provisions of the special Act of the provincial legislature as are inconsistent with this Act, and in lieu of any general railway Act of the province.

So far I am in accord with the principle embodied in these two clauses, to wit: that the Act should apply first to all railways which are within the legislative authority of this parliament, and therefore which comprise all railways not local railways—all railways extending to more than one province—and, second, to all railways, although confined to one province, which are declared by the parliament of Canada to be worked for the general advantage of Canada. But I am against the principle embodied in section 306 of the Railway Act of 1888, which declared that all railways crossing or connecting with the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Intercolonial Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway and other railways mentioned, were ipso facto declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada. That declaration had this consequence, of bringing practically all railways under the exclusive jurisdiction of this parliament. A question arose in the province of Manitoba on the occasion of the building of the Red River Valley Railway. Sir John Thompson expressed the opinion in 1888, which is to be found in Hodgins, page 912. It was a report of the hon. Minister of Justice approved of by His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on May 22, 1888:

The undersigned has the honour to report on the following Acts passed by the legislature of the province of Manitoba at its first and second sessions, 7th legislature, held in the 52nd year of Her Majesty's reign (1888-89) a certified copy of which statutes was received by the Secretary of State on the 11th of March, 1889.

Chap. 2. An Act respecting the Northern Pacific and Manitoba Railway Company.

The principal object of this Act is to confirm an agreement, purported to be executed between Her Majesty, acting through and represented by the Railway Commissioner for the province, and the Northern Pacific and Manitoba Railway Company, and to confer certain powers upon such company.

Clause 4 of the Act purports to authorize the company to construct, maintain and operate certain railways in the province of Manitoba, and among other things the railway known as the Red River Valley Railway, located between the international boundary line and the city of Winnipeg.

The agreement which the Act purports to ratify provides that the Railway Commissioner for the province shall construct the Red River Valley Railway from the international boundary line at the northern terminus of the Duluth and Manitoba Railway (a railway within the territory of the United States) to the city of Winnipeg.

Having in view the provisions of section 92 of the British North America Act, article 10, which permits a province to enact laws in respect to local works and undertakings, except lines of railway connecting the province with any other or others of the provinces, or extend beyond the limits of the province, it is questionable whether a provincial legislature may incorporate a company to build a railway such as the Red River Valley Railway appears to be. The Act, however, gives the company power to build other lines of railway, which are clearly provincial or local undertakings, and the undersigned is of the opinion that the Act should be left to its operation.

Chap. 19. An Act to provide for the crossing of one railway by another.

Section one of this Act provides that 'no railway company, whether incorporated by the parliament of Canada or otherwise, shall cross, intersect, join or unite its railway with any railway subject to the legislative authority of the legislature of Manitoba, without first obtaining the approval of the Railway Committee of the Executive Council of the province of Manitoba, as to the place and mode of crossing, intersection, junction or union proposed. Ten days notice in writing of the application to such committee, shall be given by the company to any such company affected by the sending the same by mail or otherwise to the address of the president, superintendent, general manager, managing director, or secretary of such company.

The undersigned entertains doubts as to whether a provincial legislature may, by legislation of this character interfere with the construction of a railway which is authorized to be built by the parliament of Canada. The question, however, is a purely legal one, and it does not appear to the undersigned in view of the fact, that it may be without serious inconvenience settled by the courts proper, that the right of disallowance should be exercised.

It went to this extent: it was an expression of opinion, and a very serious doubt as to whether this provincial Act of Manitoba was within the powers of the province. The questions was referred to the Supreme Court and I find a reference in Cassell's Digest, page 487:

Opinion: Under chap. 5 of the Statutes of Manitoba (passed on the 30th day of April, 1888), the Railway Commissioner of that province is constructing a railway known as the Portage Extension of the Red River Valley Railway, from Winnipeg to Portage la Prairie, both places being within the province of Manitoba, and he has made application to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council of Canada, under section 173 of the Railway Act of 1888 (Canada) for the approval of the place at which and the mode by which it is proposed that the said Portage Extension shall cross the Pembina mountain branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway (the said branch being part of the Canadian Pacific Railway) at a point within the said province, whereupon the following question is submitted:—

Is the said statute of Manitoba, in view of the provision of Cap. 109, R.S.C., particularly S. 121 thereof, and in view of the Railway Act of 1888, particularly ss. 306 and 307, valid and effectual, so as to confer authority on the Railway Commissioner in said statute of Manitoba mentioned, to construct such a railway as the said Portage Extension of the Red River Valley Railway crossing the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Railway Committee first approving of the mode and place of crossing, and first giving their directions as to the matters mentioned in sections 174, 175 and 176 of the said Railway Act?

In answer to the said question, this court having heard counsel for the province of Manitoba and also for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, is unanimously of opinion that the said statute of Manitoba is valid and effectual so as to confer authority on the railway commissioners in the said statute of Manitoba mentioned, to construct such a railway as the Portage Extension of the Red River Valley Railway crossing the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Railway Committee first approving of the mode and place of crossing, and first giving their directions as to the matters mentioned in sections 174, 175 and 176 of the said Railway Act.

Therefore we have the unanimous opinion of the members of the Supreme Court regarding the effect of this section 306, maintaining that it was within the power of the province to authorize the local legislature to deal with a local railway as a local railway, notwithstanding it crossed or connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway or any other railway under the legislative authority of this parliament of Canada, or a railway mentioned in section 306 of the Railway Act of 1888. What would be the consequence if a principle of that kind was applied and given full effect to? It means this? For instance, the province of Ontario is now building a railway extending to Lake Timiskaming. It surely has to cross or connect with some of the railways mentioned in section 306, and it would be seriously affected, by removing it from the jurisdiction of the local legislature, if the wording of section 306 was to be strictly applied. This shows, it seems to me, that there was a very considerable abuse of power in this enactment of clause 306. For my part, I am pleased to say that the attention which this hon. House has given, I believe to its credit, to this very important question, has been followed by the House of Commons. The hon. members of this House will recollect that the Railway Committee of this House commenced to inquire about this very important question as early as the 24th of June last, when a subcommittee was appointed by the Railway Committee, with instructions to study the question, and advise and suggest what were the best means of dealing with that important subject. Now, I desire to refer to a few remarks which have been lately made by both the Hon. Postmater General and the hon. leader of the opposition in the House of Commons, bearing on that very question. It was on the occasion of the Third Reading of the Toronto and Hamilton Railway Bill. It will be found at page 9728 of Hansard.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I well remember, as far back as twenty years, when this abuse of the British North America Act began; and year after year since then, measures have been passed through the Dominion parliament which should have been dealt with by a provincial legislature. This was done by declaring such measures to be for the general advantage of Canada when they really were not. On many an occasion, in days gone by, I have protested against this practice. I raised the same protest which has been raised in this case by the hon. member for Hamilton and others. It is well that parliament has been brought face to face with the situation resulting from this lax system of legislation. It is well that this measure has been thoroughly discussed in the Railway Committee, as we have thereby arrived at a clear idea as to how similar applications should be treated in the future. I would not venture to lay down a rule, but it seems to me that if I had to determine the policy and practice of the Railway Committee in a question of this kind, I would think it proper, if we are to give a fair interpretation to the British North America Act, that we should, in the first place, assume that every work which is within the confines of a province is prima facie subject to the jurisdiction of that province only, and let the onus rest on those who seek to obtain legislation here to prove that the work is properly the subject of Dominion legislation. Unless they can establish that point clearly, the committee should not proceed to deliver judgment and give a federal charter to a work which it does not possess. This debate will not prove unprofitable if it results in educating members to the consequences of continuing the practice which has so long prevailed. As has been remarked, where are you to stop, if you are to declare, without inquiry or reflection, that any work that may be in existence in any nook or corner, municipality or parish, of this broad Dominion, is a work for the general advantage of Canada, and thus remove it from the jurisdiction of the local legislature, which may become law, I venture to say that it will be many a year before parliament will be asked to pass legislation of a similar character.

Then Mr. Borden, leader of the opposition said :

No doubt whatever the clause of the British North America Act has been given a scope it was never intended to have. It has been used over and over again, by virtue of a declaration made more as a matter of form than anything else, and I am inclined to think that probably it will be good policy for this parliament in the future to insist that any measure of this kind, by which it is intended to bring within the jurisdiction of this parliament an undertaking which is prima facie within the scope of provincial jurisdiction, should be either referred to a select committee of the House, in order that the question of a fact may be absolutely proved, or be submitted to the determination of some judicial authority. There are many cases in which parliament itself would be the best judge. The Railway Committee or the Committee on Private Bills possibly might be the best possible judge. Those promoting the undertaking should be put into the position in which the promoters of private Bills in England are placed. If I understand the practice there it is practically a judicial inquiry and a judicial determination upon important questions of fact involved in the preamble of the Bill. They are very much more strict than we, and so far as this particular question is concerned, it would be very desirable that in the future we should adopt some such principle with regard to measures of this kind.

I have deemed it advisable, and I believe hon. members of this House will agree with me, to quote those remarks on both sides of the House, representing, I may say, almost the unanimous view of the House of Commons, in order that they should be placed prominently before this hon. House and before the country. It shows that the House of Commons, as well as this hon. body, have realized what abuses there have been in the past in connection with this section 306, which was embodied as part of the Railway Act of 1888. All parties seemed to be agreed in the House of Commons,—I could have quoted a great number of other speakers who all took the same position—that a stop should be made to that practice. If a stop is to be made, now is the time to do it, and not adopt clauses 5, 6 and 7 as they stand, because what would be the effect of those clauses ? First, let us take clause 5, which I have already read.

And for greater certainty, but not so as to restrict the generality of the foregoing terms, all provisions relating to railway crossings and junctions, highway crossings, through traffic, offences, penalties and statistics, shall apply to all persons, companies and railways, whether otherwise within the legislative authority of parliament or not.

Therefore this clause assumes to deal with all questions of railway crossings, all questions of junctions, all questions of highway crossings, all question of through traffic, offences, penalties and statistics, as being within its jurisdiction, whether they are under its jurisdiction or not by virtue of the British North America Act. Surely it is an assumption of power made in such a way that it could not be seriously sustained. I admit when this parliament declares a work to be for the general advantage of Canada, that then the declaration is conclusive, but it is necessary that the declaration be made, and until that declaration is made, anything that comes within the exclusive jurisdiction of the local legislature cannot be made to form part of the powers of this parliament. Then we have in clause 6 the following provision :

6. Subject to the provisions of section seven of this Act, every railway, the construction or operation of which is authorized by a Special Act passed by the legislature of any province, now or hereafter connecting with or crossing a railway which, at the time of such connection or crossing, is subject to the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, is hereby declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada.

The draughtsman of this clause evidently saw that the assumption of power, as contained in clause 5 of the Bill, could not stand, and that to give jurisdiction to this parliament it was necessary to go to the extent of declaring that these crossings and junctions were works for the general advantage of Canada, and he did so in drafting clause 6. Then, we have in clause 7 this declaration which I am adopting by the draft which I have submitted to this hon. House, which is this :

7. Street railways and tramways, while hereby expressly declared to be subject to such of the provisions of this Act as are referred to in section five——

That is, the crossings and junctions.

—shall not by reason only of the fact of crossing or connecting with any such railway as mentioned in section six, be taken or considered to be works for the general advantage of Canada, nor to be subject to any other of the provisions of the Act, unless such railways or tramways carry freight traffic and charge tolls therefor.

In other words the draughtsman of this Bill commenced by making the sweeping declaration contained in section 306 of the Railway Act of 1888, that any railway crossing a railway under the jurisdiction of Canada was declared a work for the general advantage of Canada, and by clause 7 he went out to exclude street railways and tramways, except the part of the work constituting the crossing or the connection. It seems to me that it would be proper to adopt the principle as contained in clause 7, and to apply it not only to street railways and tramways, but to all railways, whether local or otherwise. These questions of crossings and connections and through traffic cannot be regulated by two different bodies, and we have to choose in favour of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, which is to be superseded by the board under this Bill, or in favour of the Railway Committees of the several provinces. It seems to me that the power should be recognized as being vested in the Dominion parliament and should be properly exercised by the Dominion parliament, and that therefore it would be advisable to make the necessary declaration vesting it beyond any question with this parliament, and that is the object that I have in view in suggesting that clauses 5, 6 and 7 be struck out and that they be replaced by the amendment of which I have given notice, and which I have read to the House. In this way it would make it beyond question that the jurisdiction of the board under this Bill would be extended to all such crossings, all connections and to all questions of through traffic or to anything pertaining thereto, and it is all that is necessary. It is unnecessary to go to the extent of declaring that those local railways, because they thus connect, become ipso facto railways under the jurisdiction of this parliament. As far as penalties and statistics are concerned the matter is dealt with in separate clauses in the Bill, and therefore there is no necessity to include them in this clause, as the subjects are sufficiently covered by special clauses. My excuse for speaking to this extent is the importance of the question and the new departure that we are invited to take in adopting the suggestion as made.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière)—I am sure we are all very much indebted to the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry for giving so much care and study to the question. There is just one exception I think, off-hand, that might be taken to his amendment—the words 'through traffic thereon'—and he cited the case of the railway being built from North Bay on the west side of Lake Timiskaming by the Ontario government with their own money. The through traffic thereon would be under the control of the board, and therefore, if the Ontario government, in order to settle that country, wish to send settlers up there and carry their effects for nothing, they could not do it without the consent of the board. Would that apply? The traffic would have to go as far as North Bay by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and then proceed on to the Timiskaming and be on two railways and in that case the board would fix the rate and the Ontario government would fix their own rate on their own road.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—They might go over the Grand Trunk Railway from Toronto.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—But the board would have the regulating of the rates on a road built by the Ontario government.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It seems to me that the through traffic is a question which is not at all provincial. It is a question of general interest, and if so, it falls within the power of the Dominion parliament; but whether it does or not, for my part I think it would be advisable that it should be declared such. It is a question of considerable importance. It involves large interests, not only in one province, but to the whole Dominion, and whether local railways cross Dominion railways or not all questions of through traffic should belong to and be exercised by the board. Otherwise, where would we draw the line? Any number of railways may be Dominion railways, or railways under the jurisdiction of this parliament, and connect with the local railways, and it is only when they connect that the question of through traffic can come up. The railway commission which we are organizing would be powerless to regulate through traffic ; there can be no through traffic unless there is a connection, and if the local railway was connected with a railway under the jurisdiction of the Dominion parliament, and gave rise therefore to through traffic, that through traffic should be regulated by the Dominion parliament, or a commission organized under this parliament, and not by the local bodies or authorities.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Strictly speaking, I presume if we were not going to interfere with the legislative authority of the provinces, we could limit the power of the board to the mode in which the connection was made, and to the mode of crossing, and as the traffic would be over a road belonging to one province over which we should not have any jurisdiction, I would see no impropriety in omitting 'traffic' altogether, and limiting the power of the board to the mode of connecting and to the mode of crossing. There can be no hesitation in our exercising the prerogative to that extent. It may be questionable whether we ought to go any further, and in the instance stated that of the Timiskamang Railway, which belongs to the Ontario government, it does seem rather arbitrary that we should dictate to that province what its proportion of the freight carried over the Grand Trunk Railway and that line, or the Canadian Pacific Railway and that line, and of the passenger travel should be. There is no doubt it is an intrusion to that extent, and I do not see that any serious harm would arise if, after all, the power of the board was simply limited to the connection and crossing, leaving the question of traffic independent of that. It could not be any serious matter, but to that extent it is an intrusion on the powers of the provincial legislature.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would point out to my hon. friend, without discussing this at length—because I certainly have not given the same consideration to it as he has done—that it is very questionable in my mind whether there can be a division of authority, as has been pointed out, under the British North America Act. The only way this parliament can exercise authority over a provincial railway, as distinguished from one running in two provinces, is by declaring it to be a work for the general advantage of Canada. Parliament has to do that in the first instance in order to exercise authority over it. Having done that, it certainly cannot leave part of the powers to be administered by the province, the parliament of Canada reserving to itself certain other powers. There cannot be any divided authority, and in my judgment, immediately a railway is declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, it must, under the British North America Act, come exclusively under the authority of this parliament, and certainly this parliament cannot delegate to any of the provinces the powers which, under the British North America Act, are vested in this parliament by reason of that Act. The argument of my hon. friend is that this parliament, after declaring that a work shall be for the general advantage of Canala, shall at the same time say to the province 'We grant to you the right, notwithstanding it be vested in us to exercise authority to a limited extent over that particular railway.' It cannot be otherwise, because if my hon. friend says that only to a limited extent shall this parliament exercise authority over that class of matters, namely as to crossings, as to connections and as to through traffic, it impliedly says to the province 'We permit you to exercise authority as to the other powers which, under the British North America Act, are vested in this parliament.' I say there cannot be a delegation of that authority or a division of it.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Clause 5, which is being repealed, does contain that provision. It reads as follows :

5. All the provisions of this Act relating to any subject or matter within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, and for greater certainty but not so as to resist the generality of the foregoing terms, all provisions relating to railway crossings and junctions, highway crossings, through traffic, offences, penalties and statistics, shall apply to all persons, companies and railways, whether otherwise within the legislative authority of parliament or not. 51 V., c. 29, s. 4, Am.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Clause 7 divides the jurisdiction as well, in this Bill, over street railways and tramways. It reads as follows :

7. Street railways and tramways, while hereby expressly declared to be subject to such of the provisions of this Act as are referred to in section five, shall not by reason only of the fact of crossing or connecting with any such railway as mentioned in section six, be taken or considered to be works for the general advantage of Canada, nor to be subject to any other of the provisions of the Act, unless such railways or tramways carry freight traffic and charge tolls therefor.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then they become works for the general advantage of Canada. The first class of cases mentioned in clause 7 are peculiarly provincial works.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—But by the amendment of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry, the jurisdiction assumed by the federal parliament is exclusively one that the federal parliament in the public interest should control, the crossing itself and the connection and the through traffic, and leaves the whole administration and control of the railway to the province.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—How could parliament divest itself of that right which, of necessity, vests itself in it under the British North America Act, immediately it becomes a work for the general advantage of Canada?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—But this parliament does not declare that it is for the general advantage of Canada. It simply says that when that provincial road comes in contact with the federal road, then, as there must be but one jurisdiction and one authority as to the control of that crossing, or connection, or through traffic, the sole power and the sole jurisdiction will be vested with the Dominion government. It does not declare that the road itself is for the general advantage of Canada, but the simple fact of the crossing where a federal road and a provincial road come in contact, gives the federal government exclusive jurisdiction as to the question of through crossing and traffic, but it seems to me this division of authority over one and the same road can well be made and will be found to work harmoniously.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend will pardon me if I point out to him that this parliament cannot say, because a road crosses a Dominion work, that this parliament therefore exercises authority over that road. It is by reason of subsection 10 (C) of section 92 of the British North America Act that this parliament has authority to declare a work to be for the general advantage of Canada, and it is only under that clause that it has authority to legislate as it has done under section 306 of the Act of 1888. It is in pursuance of that power, and once having accepted that responsibility, parliament must assume the whole responsibility.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I call the attention of the hon. gentleman from Calgary to the fact that section 306 of the Railway Act of 1888 declares, as the hon. gentleman has just stated, that not only the crossing, the work forming part of the crossing was a work for the general advantage of Canada, but declared that those railways were to be considered ipso facto railways for the general advantage of Canada. The occasion of the declaration was the crossing, or the connection, it is quite evident. The hon. gentleman said, 'You cannot divide that way, because you are delegating a power.' Well, I fail to see where the hon. gentleman finds that there is any delegation of power. We have a railway under the jurisdiction of this parliament. We have another railway crossing it. This second railway is a corporation organized by the local legislature, and what we are declaring is, not that this railway organized by the local legislature is a work for the general advantage of Canada, but we are declaring merely that the crossing and the work pertaining to the crossing, or the connection, are works for the general advantage of Canada, and where can there be any objection to doing that? It is not a delegation of power. If this parliament can declare the whole thing a work for the general advantage of Canada, it seems to me this parliament may declare that part of that work is a work for the general advantage of Canada. Take the province of British Columbia. That province extends to the Pacific ocean, and suppose that a railway organized under the laws of British Columbia, extending from the boundary between British Columbia and the North-west Territories, was in operation, and suppose that this parliament considered that part of the railway having two lines, one going to Vancouver and another one going to Port Simpson, would it not be in the power of this parliament to declare that that portion extending from the North-west Territories and going to Port Simpson a work for the general advantage of Canada without interfering with the other part. It seems to me it would be within the power. One might not be a work for the general advantage of Canada, and the other might be. I am however putting an extreme case, which, I confess may involve some doubts. There is another principle also. I do not quite agree with the hon. gentleman from Calgary that the power of this parliament is limited under the section of the British North America Act, to which he has just referred, section 92, subsection 10. It has been held repeatedly that this parliament has a good many incidental powers. For instance, the question arose and was decided by the Privy Council under the Insolvent Act, when it was contended that the Insolvent Act was an encroachment upon the jurisdiction of the provinces upon real property, and that the Act was ultra vires to that extent, because the local parliaments were vested with exclusive powers over real estate, but the Privy Council held, and very properly so, that this parliament had the necessary incidental powers to give affect to the main powers that were given to the parliament; and here it seems to me that the crossing, the through traffic, and the connection would be properly covered by the same principle, and could be treated as an incidental power to this parliament in connection with its own railways, or the railways under its jurisdiction. Then I would call the attention of the hon. gentleman from Calgary to the fact that I am in accord with the position taken by the Supreme Court in the decision to which I have referred. The Supreme Court plainly held that it was not because a local railway happened to cross a railway under the jurisdiction of the Dominion parliament that it was to be taken out of the jurisdiction of the local parliament altogether, but that the crossing would be affected subject to the sections of the Railway Act of 1888—section 174 and 175—and which refer exactly to that subject. Section 174 says:

> The Railway Committee may make such orders and give such directions respecting the proposed crossing, intersection, junction or union and the works to be executed and the measures to be taken by the respective companies as to make it appear necessary or expedient to secure the public safety.

And 176 is on the same line. Therefore, the Supreme Court maintained that the railway remained the creature of the province, but as far as the crossing was concerned, the Federal Act would take effect.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It did not take it out of the authority of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not hear the argument of the hon. gentleman. I want to know whether the effect of the amendment which he has proposed would remove from the Board of Commissioners the power to control the through rates when it would connect with the Ontario government road to which he has referred. The reason for my asking that is from the remarks made by the hon. Secretary of State. I understood him to say that he would have no objections to confine the powers of the Board of Commissioners to questions of connection and crossing, and that it would be unfair to interfere in any way with the through or local rates that would be charged upon a provincial railway. It seems to me that if you were to adopt that principle you would destroy one of the fundamental principles of this Act, that is, that the board shall regulate the through traffic upon all railways. That is one of the reasons why my hon. friend to my right, the senator from Marshfield, gave notice of a motion to place in the Board of Commissioners the power to control the through rates that have to pass over the Intercolonial Railway as well as over any other road. For my part I cannot see why a provincial road such as that to which reference has been made should be entitled to any more power, or have any greater authority, particularly in the through traffic, than if it belonged to a private company. The province has taken the responsibility upon itself of constructing a road for colonization purposes, and that road stands to the country and to this law—at least it should be so—in precisely the some position as if it had been built by an independent company. I do not argue that the Board of Commissioners should control and interfere with the local traffic, but so far as the through traffic is concerned, I hope my hon. friend's motion does not go to that extent, but that the power should be left in the hands of the board to regulate the through traffic as well as to regulate the connections and the crossings.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The interpretation I put upon it was quite in accordance with the view expressed by the hon. gentleman from Calgary, that you cannot obtain control in any way over a provincial road unless you declare it to be for the general advantage of Canada. It is beyond our jurisdiction entirely, and we have either to bring it within our jurisdiction and control, or it is outside altogether. So far as the connecting or the crossing is concerned, we could not say to a provincial road : 'We won't allow you to cross unless you do so under the control and management of the board we have named', but the moment you go beyond that, you must recognize it as a road for the general advantage of Canada in order to give you any jurisdiction. There is no other way you can get jurisdiction, because the British North America Acts points out very clearly that in order to get the jurisdiction you must declare it to be for the general advantage of Canada. As I said before, I do not regard it as a very important matter. The great provincial roads which make connection are really under the control of the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway. There are very few independent provincial roads. They are very small in mileage and not at all important, and it would not seem to me to weaken the Bill itself by our excluding the joint traffic between the provincial roads and one of our main lines. I do not think the point is so well taken in regard to the Intercolonial Railway. That is a very important road, and in the future I hope will exchange traffic with the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway and the new Trans-Canadian line, and therefore it would seem proper that we should place the joint traffic of the Intercolonial Railway under the control of the board. That seems a very fair proposition, but the joint traffic over the smaller provincial roads is so infinitesimal that I do not think we ought to jeopardize our jurisdiction in the way we are doing by bringing them under the control of the board, as far as the joint traffic is concerned. I would rather leave them independent, because if my hon. friend wants to bring them under the control, he has to do it by invoking that clause of the British North American Act which enables us to bring a provincial road under our jurisdiction.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Has the hon. Secretary of State forgotten that the law on the statute-book at present declares that the moment you make a connection with a road, or cross it, that is a declaration of its being for the general advantage of Canada ? If that be the case, if the connection with the road, or the crossing of a road makes it in the general interest of Canada, then there can be no necessity for making that special declaration, because it becomes de facto a Dominion road under the Act, and therefore should be subject to the board so far as the through traffic is concerned.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But I understood the general consensus was that we should negative that part of the existing law—that the mere joining of a provincial road with one of our main lines would not bring it under the jurisdiction of this parliament, and ergo we would not thereby be declaring it for the general advantage of Canada.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I notice the point made by the hon. Secretary of State, that in his opinion we cannot bring a provincial road under the jurisdiction of this parliament except by this declaration. If that is correct, can we make this declaration in part without making it in the whole ? Can we declare that a certain railway should be for the general advantage of Canada in the matter of crossings and through traffic, and not within the complete jurisdiction of parliament ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We can, I am quite satisfied, as far as the crossings and junctions are concerned, because we can say we will allow you to connect without the control of the board.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We may refuse to let them connect ; in that way we can force them to agree. But apart from that, would a partial declaration bring them within our jurisdiction, apart from the fact that we might hold them up in that way ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have already answered the question. My argument may not have been convincing, but I have tried to argue that what can be done as a whole can be done in part, and I have referred to that supposed road in British Columbia—two main lines, one extending to one port and another to another port.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman has cited a Supreme Court judgment.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have cited the Supreme Court judgment for the purpose of showing that they recognize this, that the crossing in itself—and notwithstanding section 306 of the Railway Act of 1888—did not bring the whole of the road under the jurisdiction of the Dominion parliament, but brought that part of the works under the jurisdiction of the Dominion parliament, because the holding of the Supreme Court was that sections 174, 175 and 176 would have to be respected. With reference to the position taken by the hon. Secretary of State, for my part—my opinion may be worth very little, I must confess,and it is rather with diffidence I express an opinion on that point—I am satisfied it is within the jurisdiction of this parliament, and I am inclined to think that it is advisable also that the power of this parliament should extend to through traffic, and that it would be a mistake to make any distinction as between a road belonging to a local government and a road owned by a private company. I must take occasion to say that I am considerably in accord with the hon. gentleman from Marshfield in the suggestion he made, that so far as through traffic is concerned, there should be introduced in this Bill a clause—providing the government consent, because it is a matter of policy for the government—making those sections relating to through traffic applicable to government railways as well as to other railways, and for the reason which has been stated so well by the hon. gentleman, that it would be destroying the jurisdiction of the board in certain cases. Suppose the board is called upon to regulate through traffic passing over three railways, two of them being railways under the jurisdiction of the board and the intermediate railway being a government railway; there would be a very serious question as to whether the board would have jurisdiction at all, even with the consent of the government, to deal in any shape or form with the through traffic, because the through traffic would have to extend over a road which is not within their jurisdiction, and for my part I am inclined to the opinion that the board would have no jurisdiction at all. For that reason, and also because it is a question of general interest, I think the government railways ought to be brought within the four corners of this provision having reference to through traffic. Now, where would be the necessity of making any exception for a government road? If it is advisable as a matter of policy to provide that the powers of this commission shall extend over the through traffic in a general way, whether that through traffic is entirely on roads which are under the jurisdiction of this parliament or not—whether the road is owned by the local government or not, it seems to me, should make no difference. I would call the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to this—it is a repetition of what I have stated, but it may have escaped his attention—as to whether the principle which was applied by the Privy Council under the Insolvent Act, would not apply here, and enable parliament to deal with the question independent of the provision in the British North America Act, section 92, subsection 10.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I have listened with a great deal of pleasure to the remarks made by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry. I have myself prepared an amendment, which reads as follows: It is short, but it is in the line of the opinion just expressed by the hon. Secretary of State:—

That clause 6 be amended by striking out all the words from the word 'Canada' in the sixth line, and replacing them by the following words: 'shall be subject to the rules and orders of the Railway Commission as regards such connections or crossings.

My intention was not to go as far as the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry and give the control of through traffic to the Railway Commission. I will vote for the amendment of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry if I cannot get anything better, but if it was possible to put in an amendment in line with the opinion expressed by the hon. Secretary of State, I would rather vote for that amendment. It would be, perhaps, possible to reconcile the opinions expressed by the hon. Secretary of State with the amendment of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry. At least, it would be possible for us to declare, or enact, that the Railway Commission shall not have control of the through traffic when a provincial railway crosses the federal railway, but that a notice shall be given to the provincial government in order that the Railway Commission shall be allowed to decide as to through traffic, because the provincial government, or the company organized under a provincial statute, may be in a position to prove that the rates which may be established by the Railway Commission should have been in a certain way, that they may make a report which would have an effect on the Railway Commission. The least we could do would be to give to the provincial government, or the company chartered by the provincial government, a chance to be represented before the commission. So, if the question were postponed, I think that we might come to a conclusion which would reconcile the statement of the hon. Secretary of State with the opinions of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry, and perhaps introduce an amendment regarding through traffic and giving certain control to the provincial governments and local companies. I would add the words that notice shall be given the provincial government and the provincial company.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The Railway Commission will not undertake to fix rates for through traffic over a provincial line without letting the owners of the road know.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—There is nothing to oblige them.

Hon. Mr. POWER—They will, as a matter of course.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I shall press the amendment.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman deals only with clause 6 of the Bill and it leaves clauses 5 and 7, which are open to the same objection as clause 6, in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—No, it strikes them out.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from Mille Iles, does not touch clauses 5 and 7. The amendment of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry strikes out the whole three clauses, and substitutes a new clause for 6. The amendment of the hon. gentleman from Mille Iles, is not an amendment which he can adopt just now. If the amendment of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry is rejected, we might be in a position to deal with the other amendment.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It is but proper that I should answer the argument made by the hon. gentleman from Mille Iles. I know that he is altogether provincial, and I am in considerable accord with him in that respect, and I think that he is satisfied of that; but let us be practical, and not go to an extent which will not be permanent, let us take a stand which will be lasting. I am afraid that if we encumber this legislation with too many amendments we shall defeat what I took to be a very good object, that of preserving in a proper measure the rights of the provinces. We have had the experience of the past. We have gone a very long way towards destroying the rights of the provinces, and now let us take a broad position which will enable us to maintain it. I call the attention of the hon. gentleman from Mille Iles to this fact: as was very well stated by the Speaker, it is not likely that the commission would deal with a local railway without negotiating with the province, if the road was owned by the province, and even if it did, it would be open to the province the next day to make representations if they were not satisfied with the rates, and it would be open to the board to agree with these representations and modify the regulations, if it was deemed advisable; but if we provide for exceptional machinery in case the road belongs to the province, I fail to see that it would be conducive to a good object.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—Not being a lawyer, I do not catch on to all the intricacies of this question, but I intend to vote against the amendment. The hon. gentleman who introduced the amendment quoted from two prominent members of the House of Commons, the Postmaster General and the leader of the Opposition. It appears to me that these two gentlemen, having laid down a principle in support of which he quoted, and this measure having come to this House after those views were stated, if the government have not put that into the Bill, and if the Bill does not cover the ground which the hon. gentleman approves, the government must have had some motive in so framing its legislation. I am at sea to know just where it is—whether the views on which the government bases this Bill is correct, or the view which the hon. gentleman presents. In all the circumstances of the case, I do not quite feel that I would like to take the liberty with the Bill which the hon. gentleman thinks should be taken. I would observe further, that the two gentlemen who are assailing this fundamental principle of the Bill are themselves not agreed. One of them is desirous of going much further than the other. I think on the whole it would be better to let the Bill stand as it is.

Hon. Mr. POWER—With respect to the view of the government on the subject, we might bear this in mind, that the government have a large majority in the other House, and our action is not final, and if the action of this House does not meet with the approval of the government they will not accept our amendment. I cordially concur with the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry in his view of the constitutional question, and if the feeling of this committee is in favour of adopting his view I do not think we should be hindered from doing so by any doubt as to what the intention of the government is, because I say the government have the matter in their own hands when the Bill goes back to the House of Commons.

The committee divided on the amendment which was rejected, contents 9, non-contents 12.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière)—The whole difficulty seems to be on the through traffic. If those words were left out, would not the amendments be acceptable ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I voted the way I did, because I think in an important matter of this kind, in a thin house, it is not a fair expression of the opinion of this Chamber.

Hon. Mr. FULFORD, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill and asked leave to sit again.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (232) An Act to amend the Manitoba Grain Act, 1900.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the third reading of Bill (K) An Act to incorporate the Grand Trunc Pacific Railway Co., as amended.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved

That it be further amended by inserting the words 'approved by the Governor in Council' after the words 'Lake Superior' in the amendment made by the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, and also, that the words 'in addition to the powers hereinbefore contained' be inserted after the word 'may' in the first line of clause 32, on page 12 of the Bill.

He said : The object is that the railway company did not want to be bound to Fort William or Port Arthur and wished to go to any other Canadian port on Lake Superiour. I wish to have that under the control of the Governor in Council, because they might go to some port much farther away from the wheat fields of the west, and deprive us of the short haul to the lakes. I should like also to have inserted in section 32 that the copmany may, in addition to the powers hereinbefore contained, acquire and hold bonds, etc. I understand this clause gives the company power to acquire bonds, stocks, etc., in any other company other than a railway company. It might be understood they would not have power excepting as provided for in the previous clauses of this Bill to hold, guarantee, and pledge stock.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know. Is that asked for by the company ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON— Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would suggest that my hon. friend give notice of those amendments.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The notice for the last one is in the Order paper, although I did not give it last night.

The SPEAKER—I should like to ask the hon. gentleman if the amendment as set out in the Order paper is the amendment he is moving now ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Yes.

The SPEAKER—Then it is in order.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved that the Bill be read the third time.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Wednesday, September 2, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (Z) 'An Act respecting the Ottawa Valley Railway Company.'—(Hon. Mr. Domville.)

FAST ATLANTIC STEAMSHIP LINE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

Has the government lately been or is it in negotiation with any one whomsoever for the establishment of a fast line of transatlantic mail boats ?

If the answer is in the affirmative, with whom has it been or is it in negotiation ?

In the negotiations, past, present or future, what speed has been demanded or will be demanded by the government from the mail boats of the fast line ?

Between what ports is this oceanic service to be made ?

When is it to be inaugurated, approximately?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The government have not at present any offers under consideration, nor have they had any very recently that they could consider.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—But the government have not answered the second part of the question—in the negotiations past, present or future, what speed has been demanded or will be demanded by the government?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That I cannot tell, because of changes as time goes on.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Changes each century.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Whatever may be suitable for the country.

REPRESENTATION OF QUEBEC IN THE SENATE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY rose to call the attention of the House to the following facts :

1. The Senate debates of Monday, the 22nd day of June last, contain the following :—

Representation of Quebec in the Senate.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. Landry inquired :

Whether, taking into consideration—

1. The fact that the province of Quebec, which, according to the last census, has a population of 1,648,898 out of the total population of 5,371,316, has the right to a representation of twenty-four members in the Senate ;

2. The fact that the French population of the whole Dominion is very nearly in the same proportion, compared with that of Canada, that is to say, 1,649,371, compared to the total population of 5,371,316 ;

3. The fact that the French representation of the Dominion in the Senate contains the following names, taken alphabetically :—The Honourable Messieurs : Béique, Bernier, Bolduc, de Boucherville, Casgrain (Windsor), Casgrain (de Lanaudière), Dandurand, Fiset, Forget, Godbout, Landry, Légris, Montplaisir, Pelletier, Poirier, Shehyn, Tessier, Thibaudeau (Rigaud), and Thibaudeau (Vallière), that is to say, nineteen members altogether ;

4. Is it the intention of the government, in making the appointments to fill the seats now vacant, or those which may become so, to take into account the rights of the French population and to increase its actual proportion, so that that proportion may be twenty-four senators out of the eighty-one that the Senate numbers ;

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It may be advisable to revise the policy followed in this respect by the administrations which were in office previous to the present one ; but no opportunity has arisen to consider any such question.

2. On the 13th day of August, the honourable the leader of this House announced to its members the death, occurred the day previous, of the late Senator Cochrane.

3. The division of Wellington, which the late senator represented in this House, is described as follows in chapter second of title I, of the Revised Statutes of the province of Quebec, clause 69 :—

24. Wellington comprises the townships of Durham, Wickham, Simpson and Kingsey, less that part of the township of Simpson included in the parish of Ste. Clothilde de Horton, in the county of Drummond, the county of Richmond, the city of Sherbroke, and the counties of Wolfe, Compton and Stanstead.

4. The returns of the last census indicate that the population of this division stand as follows :—

—	Total Population.	French Origin.	Not French Origin.
150 Compton	26,460	14,460	12,000
153*b* Durham, South	1,308	671	637
153*c* Durham	454	59	395
153*e* Kingsey	1,521	1,089	432
153*f* Kingsey Falls	866	517	349
153*n* Simpson	2,247	2,195	52
153*o* Wickam	468	405	63
153*p* Wickam, West	1,119	1,038	81
187 Richmond and Wolfe	34,137	25,697	8,440
193 Sherbrooke	18,426	10,645	7,781
195 Stanstead	18,998	8,744	10,254
	106,004	65,520	40,484

And inquired—

In face of all those facts, is it the intention of the government to profit by the opportunity which has arisen, to take into account the rights of the French population to a larger proportion of its representation in the Senate of Canada, and to increase accordingly such representation ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The government is not prepared to announce any policy or principle on the subject. The seat occupied by Senator Cochrane was occupied by the late Senator Sanborne, who was one of the Senators named in the original proclamation.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the answer he has given me on a former occasion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—All I can say is that it had no reference whatever to the possibility of that vacancy arising—no reference whatever to it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I want to call the attention of the hon. minister to this matter—he did not let me finish—he told me about the Atlantic service, that the time has changed, and that new speed might replace the old speed. I think the French population of Wellington has so increased as to become the two thirds of the total population and that such a fact should impress itself on and call for the consideration of the government in the choice to be made of a successor to the late Mr. Cochrane.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman makes a statement that is true to a certain extent. The English speaking population of the province of Quebec has more than its share of the representation in this chamber, but I think it would be hardly good politics to withdraw the seat that the English speaking minority from Quebec has had, which was held by the late Senator Cochrane. The English speaking minority is distributed in quite a number of counties and senatorial divisions, but that minority is more especially grouped in the Eastern Townships, and I think it should be one of the last seats the government would think of taking from the minority in order to bring their representation to a fair basis. There are other seats which are mostly—I should say exclusively—French in the province of Quebec, represented by English speaking members of this body, and the remarks of the hon. gentleman would perhaps apply to such districts when the occasion would offer.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I thank the hon. member very much for giving me the views of the government on the subject. I hope that when the government arrives at a decision they will not forget what the hon. member has just stated to the House.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I can promise the hon. gentleman I shall not forget the fact myself either.

RAILWAYS LAW CONSOLIDATION BILL.

AGAIN IN COMMITTEE.

In the committee on clauses 5, 6 and 7,

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—With a view to reconciling conflicting opinions, especially those of the Secretary of State, I beg to move that clauses 5, 6 and 7 be struck out, and replaced by the clause of which I gave notice, with the following words added :

This section shall not, however, operate as regards through-traffic on railways owned by any provincial government without the consent of such government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As the clause stood originally, it seemed to me that we were really over-riding the sovereignty of the local government. Take the case mentioned yesterday of the Timiskaming Railway. If that road were taking traffic from one of our main lines, and the traffic over the Timiskaming Railway might be only ten miles, of course the portion of compensation they would get would be so trifling, it would not be worth accepting. We must remember that on all those subsidiary lines, they have less business than the main line. As a matter of fact, they are constantly falling into the power and becoming part of the main lines of the country. The Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway are now largely made up of branch lines which were originally independent. They could not survive ; the traffic on a short line was found not to be paying. If we pass the clause as it stood in the original Bill, the traffic they would receive would not enable them to live. For that reason I think the proposition is a very wise one. No rights are interfered with, and it is for the province to say whether they will agree to it or not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That argument applies to every local road owned by an independent company, and if the pro-yincial governments, and their roads are to be exempt from the operation of these clauses, then all private companies similarly situated should be exempt. I cannot understand why a government road should be exempt, and the difficulties which have been pointed out by the Secretary of State applied to a local road similarly situated. Now, it is well known to people, in Ontario at least—whether the Secretary of State has read the debates in the local House or not I do not know—that while the government advanced the money on its credit for the construction of the road alluded to by the Secretary of State, they never intend to run that road themselves. The declaration of the government is, that the road shall be leased to some parties who would be able to operate it in connection with their other roads, and the chances are 99 to one that it will fall into the hands of the Grand Trunk Railway, because if the Grand Trunk Railway or Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, carry out their intentions, that road will form a part of the connecting link between the Grand Trunk Railway in Ontario joining it at North Bay over that portion of the Grand Trunk Railway to Toronto, and down through Ontario. For my part, I cannot understand the force of the reasoning of the hon. gentleman, unless he goes further and exempts all the independent lines situated as the Ontario government line is situated. I admit it will not apply to many. I know very few independent lines in the province of Ontario. They have been absorbed either by the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway, and to make this exception in favour of the provincial government road in Ontario, would be partiality towards a government of which a private company would be deprived, and I do not think the Senate ought to accept it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Do I understand from my hon. friend the Secretary of State that the government, having embodied this principle in the Bill, are now prepared to recede from the position they have taken with reference to the authority of this parliament over that class of roads mentioned in the Bill, because it amounts to that. My hon. friend must certainly have undergone a radical change of opinion since he voted last night, when he voted against the motion of my hon. friend from DeSalaberry.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Although I am representing the government in this House, hon. gentlemen cannot suppose I am in communion with the government in all the changes that have taken place in this Bill. When it goes back to the House of Commons, they may differ entirely from the position I take here. Of course, the House had the power to make changes in the Bill. I necessarily have to comment on that, and to act on the spur of the moment on my own judgment. I quite admit the force of the observation made by the leader of the opposition, and I must confess, when I first heard the amendment read, I did suppose it applied to all provincial roads. I had mentioned particularly, as a good illustration, the Timiskaming Railway, but I had in my mind all provincial roads, because those roads have very small revenues, and the proportion of the freight rate that they would receive from the haulage of freight coming over perhaps a thousand miles of another road, and running over ten or twelve miles of the short line, would be so insignificant that the local road could not live on it, and the proprietors of that road should have the opportunity to say whether they acquiesce in the proposal to place their line under this general traffic clause. I am only speaking my own individual views. I am willing to accept that amendment as a compromise. As hon. gentlemen know, my first proposition was that the provincial roads should only be brought in so far as crossings and connections were concerned. Then I was willing to go further, and this is the further concession I am willing to accept. Of course, the whole subject is in the hands of the House.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend, I understand, objects to bringing railways operating under provincial charters within the operation of this Bill as far as through rates are concerned. Did I understand my hon. friend to make that objection?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The amendment which my hon. friend is willing the House should accept distinctly contains the provision that, as far as through rates are concerned, these roads shall be under the operation of this Bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman from Marshfield has not probably seen the alteration which the hon. gentleman from De Salaberry has made in his amendment. He makes it an optional matter with the provincial government whether the road shall come under the board or not.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—With a view to saving time, I have no desire to add anything to what I stated yesterday in support of the general proposition, but I might be allowed to make a few remarks in connection with the addition. Is it seriously contended that through-traffic in this country shall not exist, because if it is contended that through-traffic will be limited only to certain classes of railways, surely it is the destruction of through-traffic. Through-traffic is essentially a matter of commerce and a great matter of commerce, one of the most important branches of commerce, and it seems to me that it is assigned to the Dominion parliament, and because a railway under the jurisdiction of this parliament happens to connect with a provincial railway, is it to be taken for granted that is to be through traffic or any regulation thereof? I address myself especially to the hon. gentleman from Belleville and the hon. gentlemen from Marshfield and Calgary—are they really of opinion that through-traffic should be confined to railways under the authority of this parliament? If I understand properly the views expressed by the hon. gentleman from Calgary, he is of opinion that a much more sweeping law than that should be enacted and to adopt the principle embodied in clauses five, six and seven which go far beyond that. These clauses are putting under the exclusive jurisdiction of this parliament all railways in the country, because if you declare, as is declared in those sections, that any railway crossing a railway under the jurisdiction of this parliament is a work for the general advantage of Canada, then you declare, ipso facto, that all railways of the country really fall under the jurisdiction of the parliament, and you declare those railways works for the general advantage of Canada. Now, I call the special attention of the hon. gentleman to a very important point. The principle involved in this is not merely a question of railways, it is a much larger question. It is a question of divesting the provincial legislatures of their autonomy and of their powers, and thereby interfering most seriously with municipal control. We are proud of our municipal institutions in this country. Municipal institutions are our own home rule, and if we take from the local provinces their jurisdiction over all railways of their own creation, we ipso facto remove them from all municipal control, because the municipal authority possesses only powers delegated to them by the local legislatures. They do not possess any powers derived from this parliament. They derive their powers exclusively from the legislature of the province. And what will be the consequence? That municipal affairs in very important matters will be, in effect, controlled, not by the municipal electors, not by municipal councils and not by the local representatives in the local councils, but by members of parliament; that is, municipal affairs of the city of Toronto will be controlled by men like myself, who do not know the first thing of the requirements and wants and local conditions of the city of Toronto, and what I say of the city of Toronto can be said of all cities throughout the Dominion. We should be jealous of our municipal institutions, and I say without hesitation that it is making away, in a great measure, with those institutions if we go to the extent of adopting the principle embodied in the clauses as they are drafted, and I hope that on serious consideration we shall be unanimous in giving this parliament as extensive powers as can reasonably be given, but preserve as far as possible our municipal institutions and the powers of the local legislature. I repeat it, as far as through-traffic is concerned, it is essentially a commercial matter of very large importance, and it cannot be confined to half a dozen different bodies. You have to leave it either to one body or to another, or destroy ipso facto through-traffic. The through-traffic means what? It means a traffic extending over a large extent of country, extending, as of necessity in most cases, over several railways, and what difference does it make whether those railways are under the jurisdiction of one body or another ? It should be governed by the one authority and that alone. Now, I have made a concession which is indicated in the addition which I have made to my motion of yesterday, because there is a certain reason which appeals to my mind and which no doubt will appeal to the mind of a number of hon. members of this House. It is this : When we are dealing with railways owned by a local government—there are few railways that are in that position —and then as we are dealing with a body of very high standing, a body whose standing is on a par, so to speak, with that of the Dominion parliament, it is to be supposed that it will be easy to get the consent.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I have now the amendment moved by my hon. friend in my hand, and I find the difference between that amendment and the one that was rejected by the committee last evening is contained in the words added—to that extent only. It reads :

This section shall not, however, operate as to through-traffic on railways owned by a provincial government without the consent of such government.

I understand the Secretary of State accepts this added provision on the ground that this provincial owned railway, being a short railway, could not be run on the moiety of the through rate that might be charged proportionate to the length of the road, and that it should be free to receive a local rate out of any through rate that might be arranged. All I have to say in regard to that is that I think this amendment is not of very much importance. The consent of the provincial government will be obtained—in fact, it cannot be withheld, because the people served by this branch line will not long endure such a state of things as being obliged to pay a local rate upon every bit of their traffic that passes over their road, and that being the case, I do not think the amendment will have very much effect one way or the other. It does not, however, remove my objection, although it appears to have removed the objection the hon. Secretary of State has to the amendment as a whole. It does not remove the objection that I feel to this amendment, changing the Bill as presented to us and introducing this clause in place of clauses 5, 6, and 7. The principle of this amendment is that this parliament will be able to make a partial declaration with regard to railways, as to what extent they are under the jurisdiction of this parliament. We are able to make a partial declaration; that is, that they are under the jurisdiction of the federal parliament in the matter of through rates, and in the matter of crossings, and leave them as they were with regard to other matters. I am told, I think on very good authority, that this view is not the view taken by very able railway lawyers in the country ; that they do not believe that they can do that. The British North America Act provides a way by which we can bring under our jurisdiction a railway or any other work lying within the territory of one province by declaring that it is a work for the general advantage of Canada, but it has been held by eminent and experienced railway lawyers that we cannot make a partial declaration, that is, that this work shall be under our jurisdiction for one or two purposes and shall not be under our jurisdiction as a whole. It was to that extent that we had not power and that we are introducing a divided jurisdiction in this case that is not desirable, and for my own part, I prefer the principle in clauses 5, 6, and 7, which I understand to be, as far as through traffic is concerned, that our jurisdiction would extend to all railways. As far as I am able to understand the principle underlying these objections, that would be the effect. It certainly would carry our jurisdiction to through traffic which this amendment still leaves with us, and to railway crossings, but it would extend our jurisdiction in other matters also beyond these two subjects. I do not think, for my own part, that this change removes my objection to the amendment on which the opinion of the committee was tested last evening. It introduces another element exempting a provincial owned road from the operation of this section without its consent, which I think it would be just as well to leave out ; but still I do not know that it can do any harm. However, I cannot agree with the amendment proposed to the government Bill. I was just going to say that the government seem disposed to abandon their own Bill in one of its most important features. The most important features of the Bill are contained in clauses 5, 6, and 7—I think it is the question that was made almost the crucial point in the discussion of this question in the committee of the House of Commons under the late Minister of Railways and Canals. However, if the government abandon that and adopt a different principle as contained in this provision, I do not know that the members of the opposition have any particular duty cast upon them to protect the government Bill as introduced in the House.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I simply desire to say that I am not interested in a practical way in the determination of this question, but I dissent entirely from the principle of law or practice laid down by my hon. friend from de Salaberry in his amendment, and I simply desire to be placed upon record in that regard. It seems to me to be self evident that this parliament cannot exercise authority in any sense, either as to a crossing or a connection, or so far as traffic is concerned, except under the power which is given them in the British North America Act, and immediately this parliament assumes to itself authority to act with reference to any of those classes of subjects, namely crossings, connections or through-traffic, it must at once assume the entire responsibility of bringing the provincial work within the jurisdiction or within the authority of the parliament of Canada. I submit with every confidence that parliament cannot divest itself of a portion of that responsibility which pertains to it by reason of the assumption of authority with reference to the classes of subjects which are dealt with in this amendment. I might say with reference to that subject, that the public of an adjoining province are as much interested as the public of the province in which the work is. Immediately such a work is brought within the purview of the Act parliament assumes to itself authority to deal with crossings, or with connections or with through-traffic, and shippers of goods at once become interested in the transit of their goods from one province to the other, and it seems to be folly for one moment to consider that this Act can be successfully administered or carried out according to the intentions of the government if there is to be a division of administration with reference to those works. It seems to me to be a paramount idea which runs through the whole Bill, that there should be one administration of all railways which come within the Bill, and there cannot certainly be a successful administration of the railways of the Dominion if the Dominion parliament is to legislate as to one portion of the work and the provinces are to legislate with reference to another portion of their administration. The railways of this Dominion are too large a subject to permit of any parish or local feeling to be introduced as to their administration. There is no provincial railway that may be connected with a Dominion work but at once becomes equally of interest to the people of the entire Dominion. I hold that, on the broad principle, once parliament assume to deal with local undertakings, such as are contemplated under the British North America Act and by my hon. friend's amendment, they cannot divest themselves of their responsibility by leaving vested in the province a certain share of that responsibility. They must assume the whole responsibility or nothing, and immediately they assume authority to act, either in dealing with crossings or connections or through traffic of a local line, it certainly, in the language of the British North America Act, becomes a work for the general advantage of Canada, and this parliament assumes the responsibility, and on that broad ground, I am opposed to the amendment.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman is at variance on two of the three questions treated in this amendment, with the Supreme Court of Canada. In the Red River Valley Railway judgment, the Supreme Court declared that the fact of a provincial railway crossing a federal railway did not necessarily bring that provincial railway under the jurisdiction of the federal government.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Except for the crossing.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Except for the purpose of crossing and the connection. The amendment simply affirms the same principle, that the crossing itself, and the connection will be under the jurisdiction of the federal authority and the Railway Commission created by this Bill. There remains but the question of through-traffic. The hon. gentleman thinks the federal government cannot take partial jurisdiction over a provincial railway. We have had clause 306 of the revised statutes of 1888, which brought under the federal jurisdiction all provincial railways from the moment they intersected or connected with the federal railways. The Supreme Court of Canada did not hold the same views as to the right of the federal power to monopolize or lay its hand on provincial railways by the simple fact of the crossing or junction. As to the question of through-traffic, the hon. gentleman from Marshfield says that high legal opinion is to the effect that we cannot take a partial jurisdiction over provincial railways, I would rather hold to the lines and the principles laid down by the amendment which is before us under discussion at present, and lean towards provincial autonomy, and all its consequences, than revert to and maintain the principle contained in article 306 of the revised statutes of 1888.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—It has been my privilege and pleasure for some time to listen to extended discussions on this exceedingly important point in both houses, and I must confess, in my humble opinion it is full time that some of the best legal talent we have in this country should put their heads together and submit for the consideration and decision of the Supreme Court the whole question as regards the powers vested in this parliament so far as railways are concerned, and the powers reserved by the provinces at the time of confederation. There appears to be a misunderstanding. It is generally supposed that the central authority is the source and centre of all power. If my idea is correct—perhaps I am mistaken—the provinces were the centre and source of all power at the time of confederation, and they delegated to the central authority certain powers within the limits of which we were to legislate in the interests of the people of this Dominion, and amongst other things we have the right which they delegated to us, to grant charters ; but there was a provision which they reserved to themselves, that the provinces have the right to charter local railways, which are of local interest and for local purposes. I think we shall make a serious mistake if we continue from year to year and session to session in encroaching upon the rights of the provinces, their municipal institutions, their control over highways and in giving effect to legislation in this House, making encroachments upon their rights, that they supposed they had reserved for themselves. If our legal talent cannot come to an arrangement of this kind, I would suggest that the government of the day notify each province, the attorney general of which would prepare an argument from the provincial standpoint, of the claims of each province, and its rights under confederation to charter railways for local purposes, and retain power over them, insofar as municipal rights are concerned—the rights over highways and other rights which absolutely and entirely should belong to the province. It would be easy to prepare a case of that kind, submit it to the Supreme Court and let us have a decision and a clear and distinct outline of what was, in their opinion, intended to be reserved to the provinces, and what power was intended to be conferred on the central authority represented by this House and the House of Commons. For my part, I am very strongly inclined to cling to the view expressed by the hon. member from De Salaberry. The idea he has expressed with regard to the rights of provinces and municipalities, is one that should meet with general approval. We are here to discharge duties devolving upon us, and we should do our duty with honour and regard and respect for the local authorities that are in their sphere and within the exercise of their own powers entitled to the same rights as we enjoy in the larger sphere and we should not keep continually encroaching upon what was looked upon at confederation, and what I believe in my own mind to be, matters properly belonging to their jurisdiction. I must say I have taken a stand on two or three Bills already. We have gone too far. We have undertaken in this House to give effect to charters which are absolutely and entirely provincial matters, which should have been passed upon by the local legislatures, hanging it on a single thread that a railway was declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada because it formed connection with some trunk lines. It is a flimsy pretext on which to attempt to charter a local company in this parliament to build a road, because when it is constructed its rails are going to cross the rails of the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the simple fact of that brings it under the control of this parliament, and makes it a road for the general advantage of Canada. If that was the intention of the promoters of the British North America Act, I must say it was no credit to them. I do not think or believe it was their intention, and I should like to see the Supreme Court, or the Privy Council, give a clear and distinct decision with regard to this matter, and let us be guided by that opinion in the future. In the meantime, as far as I am concerned, I shall adhere strictly to provincial rights. I would rather err in the direction of recognizing the rights of the provinces, than trample on the rights they should enjoy.

The amendment was agreed to.

On clause 43,

43. The board may, upon the application of any party, and upon such security being given as it directs, state a case, in writing, for the opinion of the Supreme Count of Canada upon any question which in the opinion of the board is a question of law. 51 V., c. 29, s. 19, Am.

2. The Supreme Court of Canada shall hear and determine the question or questions of law arising thereon, and remit the matter to the board with the opinion of the court thereon. 51 V., c. 29, s. 20, Am.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It has been suggested that it would be well to insert 'or the Governor in Council' after the words 'the board.'

Hon. Mr. POWER—One of the principal objects of the Bill is to get the government out of this. The clause says that the power which has to deal with parties may state a case. Why go beyond that and say the Governor in Council, who have nothing to do with the matter, should state a case? It does not seem proper that the government in any event should state a case with respect to a matter which does not come properly within their jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—The board is not supposed to be a board of lawyers, and I think the Governor in Council should have the opportunity of stating a case.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The Governor in Council should take up questions of public policy—questions affecting the entire public, and as this may possibly be a board of laymen, we very well know the objection which exists in the mind of a layman to any appeal from the exercise of his judgment. I think, certainly, there should be an appeal from the board to the Governor in Council, or that the Governor in Council should be able to exercise their discretion so far as stating a case for the decision of the Supreme Court.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Suppose you put it 'the board may of its own motion' do so. The board may desire to have a question of general interest submitted to the Supreme Court, and it should have the power to do it of its own motion.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That can be done as the Bill is drafted.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—That can only be done on the application of the party.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The difficulty is, there is finality now about the board refusing to state a case for the Supreme Court of Canada. If the board refuses, surely the Governor in Council should be able to say, 'this is a matter of sufficient public interest to warrant a case being stated.'

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Power is given to the board by the statute as it is, on the application of any party, to state a case. The amendment is surely an improvement, that they may do it of their own motion as well.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—There is no question the board has the power under this clause, and all I desired to do was to make some provision in case the board should refuse to act on the application of parties.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Then the Governor in Council may, under the next clause, review that decision refusing an appeal.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—Who will pay the expense in that case, should they lose their case? The government I suppose?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The party who loses.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The board may do it of its own motion; then if the board refuses it, the Governor in Council, may, on application, overrule the board.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the hon. gentleman will read clause 44, he will find it does not in any way refer to the provisions of clause 43. It simply gives power to the Governor in Council to revise.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—If the party, under clause 43, makes an application to the board to state a case, and the board decide they will not, that is a decision of the board. That may be revised by the Governor in Council, who may change or rescind it, or order the reverse; that is, rather, that the decision should be the other way, and then on that finding a case would be stated.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. gentleman think that applies to a decision of the board on a question of law?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It says so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The 44th clause says may:

Vary, change or rescind any order, decision, rule or regulation of the board, whether such order or decision be made inter parties or otherwise.

The other refers to a question of law entirely. As lawyers differ as to the interpretation of certain sections of the Act, it is not a stretch of the imagination to suppose that this board might differ on a question of law, and in case they do differ and come to a decision which other lawyers, as eminent as those who may form the commission, are of the opinion that is a wrong decision, then the proposition is to give the Governor in Council authority to state a case for the decision of the Supreme Court. I cannot, for the life of me, see why that should not be given, unless we are to understand that the gentlemen composing the board are infallible—that they could not make a mistake in the interpretation of the law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I suggest that the following words be added at the end of the first paragraph:

A like reference may also be made at the request of the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I cannot help thinking that subsection 2, of clause 44 covers the ground:

2. The Governor in Council may, at any time, in his discretion, either upon petition of any party, person or company interested, or of his own motion and without any petition or application therefor, vary, change or rescind any order, decision, rule or regulation of the board, whether such order or decision be made inter parts or otherwise, and whether such regulation be general or limited in its scope and application; and any order which the Governor in Council may make with respect thereto shall be binding on the board and all parties.

If, therefore, the board refuses to state a case, the Governor in Council may reverse that and make an order which would be binding on the board, who would be bound to submit a case.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This will make it much plainer.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That would leave the Act silent on an appeal at all.

The amendment was agreed to and the clause, as amended was adopted.

On sub-clause (g) of clause 195,

(g.) In case efficient means are devised for carrying any such lines or wires under ground, no Act of parliament requiring the company to adopt such means, and abrogating the right given by this section to carry lines on poles, shall be deemed an infringement of the privileges grantd by this Act, nor shall the company be entitled to damages in respect thereof.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE moved that this subclause be struck out and the following added as subsection 4:

Provided further, that whenever any city, town or incorporated village is desirous of having lines of telegraph, telephone, or for the conveyance of light, heat, power or electricity, placed under ground, the board may, on the application of such city, town or incorporated village, require the company to thus place its lines or wires under ground, and abrogate the right given by this section or by the special Act to carry lines on poles, in such city, town or incorporated village, the whole on such terms and conditions as the board may prescribe.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am prepared to support the amendment, but I do not think that it is at all necessary to strike out paragraph (g). The two are quite consistent with each other. It is not absolutely necessary, but it is better to have it there, and it is not inconsistent with the hon. gentleman's amendment.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Does this mean any company?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE. The discussion on this point took place yesterday. This Bill is confined to railway companies. It does not affect any other companies. The first part of this clause gives the power to the railway company to place poles and stretch wires for this purpose, but this Bill does not deal at all with any but railway companies, so that it cannot affect any other companies.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—You simply say a railway company having power to use electricity shall not sell light or heat.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—This Bill gives them the power to use poles and wires for the purpose.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Only when the special Act allows it.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In reading this subclause (g) and the amendment which has been made by the hon. gentleman, while there may not be a direct conflict they are certainly somewhat inconsistent with each other. The provision in the amendment, as I understand it from hearing it read, is to give power to the municipalities to require these wires to be put underground, and then this important proviso is added to it:

Upon such terms and conditions as the board may direct.

They may direct that the company affected should pay the whole expense or they may direct, if it is particularly in the interests of the municipality, that the municipality should pay a portion or the whole. Clause (g) leaves it with the government to say whether efficient means have been devised to place these wires underground, and then it makes a provision that no claim for damages shall be made by the company which has to change its mode of communication by telegraph wire. It says that no company shall have a claim for damages; would not that throw the whole responsibility upon the municipality that required it to be placed there. So that if the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry is carried, this certainly should be struck out and leave the whole authority with the board to deal with a question of this kind, particularly as he makes a provision to have it done upon such terms as they may deem equitable and in the interests of the municipality. My own impression, from hearing it read, is that the amendment is better than the original clause.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I hope the hon. Speaker will not insist on retaining clause g. It is badly worded, and unnecessary, as it is covered by the statutes. It is already affirmed.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—Is it not conceivable that a municipality might invite the railway to put up a telephone service for the conveyance of electricity with poles, and immediately after they got it, call upon the company to place the wires all underground? The company might find itself in this position: that while it was worth their while to put up the poles, which were cheap, it was not worth their while to go to the expense of placing the wires underground. How would you meet that case?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The board would have to decide the whole thing.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—But if the company found that the business of the village of the municipality did not pay for the cost of putting the wires underground, they should have a right to withdraw the service.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Subclause (g) would not be of any avail in such a case, because that merely provides that no Act of parliament requiring the company to adopt such means——

And abrogating the right given by this section to carry lines on poles, shall be deemed an infringement of the privileges granted by this Act, nor shall the company be entitled to damages in respect thereof.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I see that, but it does not bear on the point at all. The company might find themselves in the position that after having, with the consent of the municipality, put the wires on poles, it might be called upon by a further action to put them underground, and it would not be worth their while to do it. I think they should not be compelled by law, or by the board, or by anybody else, to do a thing in which there was no profit. This is a trading clause: they are entitled by the clause to sell electricity for various purposes to a municipality. Are you going to compel them to put down an expensive plant—to do that without their consent?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—This does not require that.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—It is no part of the company's business to do it. They are permitted to do it for their own profit.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman did not follow the discussion on this point yesterday. The subclause prevents railway companies using electric power of that kind for the purpose of selling the same in the municipality without the consent of the municipality given by by-law. If the consent is given by by-law, the terms would be agreed upon and the municipality would be bound by its by-law and the board would have had no occasion to interfere, and the board would have to take that into consideration—to respect the agreement. We are merely providing for general cases as it may become advisable in large cities to provide for, at the expense of the city or otherwise, means to put the wires underground. If it is done for other companies, there should be machinery under this Act whereby railway companies would be compelled to likewise put their wires underground on such terms as the board would prescribe, having regard to the rights and interests of all parties.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is an element I desire to point out in the amendment which, I submit, is extremely uncertain. Under clause (g), as contained in the Bill, there at least would be uniformity; that is to say, it would involve the passage of an Act of parliament prescribing the conditions under which wires would be placed underground. In that way railway companies and telegraph companies that come under this Bill would know exactly the responsibilities which they had to undertake; but now you will have them subject to the hysterical and spasmodic attacks which from time to time are made by municipalities for the purpose of carrying out what some agitator may submit to be desirable. That happens periodically. There are times when there is a cessation, so to speak, of those municipal demands which are so frequently made upon parliament. By and by some imaginary grievance arises, and you find the whole of the municipalities combining together. They become hysterical at the alleged encroachment on their rights and the monopolies of private corporations, and so on. You submit the board to the demands which may be made from time to time, not only by cities, but by every village municipality throughout the Dominion of Canada that railway companies be compelled to bury their wires. The hon. gentleman from de Salaberry was content the other day to limit it to cities, but I find it has grown so that municipalities and incorporated villages and other rural bodies may ask that the wires be buried. That would permit a township council to ask that throughout the length and breadth of the boundaries of its township the telegraph lines of the railway be buried. True, you say the discretion is left with the board, but it seems to me, when we are investing the board with authority, we should not vest it with unreasonable authority.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—The board having to find none of the money with which to do it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No. It is a temptation for that class of organization to make a demand upon the board to do unreasonable things, and I think it is an unwise discretion to extend it as far as the amendment.

Hon. Mr. POWER—With respect to the proposal to strike out subclause (g): the amendment which the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry proposes is one which deals with the railway company vis-a-vis of the municipal corporation, and it does not deal with the railway company face to face with the parliament of Canada. Paragraph (g) does. It deals with the railway companies in their relations to the parliament of Canada; and if accidents from electric light wires and other electric wires were of such frequent occurrence in other cities as they are in Ottawa, I think it would very soon become the duty of parliament to provide that all such wires should be placed under-ground. Paragraph (g) provides that if the parliament of Canada decide that these wires shall be placed underground, there shall be no grounds for damages on the part of the company, and I think that we had better retain that provision. The amendment of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry does not provide for that case, and I quite agree with him that paragraph (g) is not worded just as it ought to be, because it begins with what is a mistake. It says: 'In case efficient means are devised for carrying any such lines or wires underground.' We know that they have been devised, and I would suggest that paragraph (g) remain in the Bill, but in this form:

No Act of parliament requiring the company to adopt efficient means for carrying such wires underground, and abrogating the right given by this section to carry lines on poles shall be deemed an infringement of the privileges granted by this Act.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I cannot agree with the hon. Speaker about that. I think if you retain this clause it will nullify the closing part of the amendment, that is, that the board shall have power to say upon what terms it shall be done, because we are declaring that the company will have to put them underground and have no compensation for it, but under the amendment, which is more equitable, the board will have the power to say upon what terms and conditions.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The Speaker knows better than myself that parliament is known to be supreme and its actions do not give rise to any compensation. The moment parliament prescribes that such a thing shall be done, unless the parliament of Canada says it shall be done at the expense of other parties, then the parties directed to do it have to do it at their own expense. Therefore, it is a clause which is altogether unnecessary, and we have it in the Revised Statutes that the repealing of a statute is within the exercise of the rights of parliament and that it gives rise to no indemnity whatever.

Hon.Mr.POWER—The hon. gentleman was not present in parliament when this particular clause was inserted in the railway law and the object of doing so was explainel. I quite admit it is not absolutely necessary, because parliament has power to enact almost anything without notice. The object of putting this paragraph into the law was to give notice to companies that they were to look forward to the probability that some such Act of parliament might be passed, and that they should not have any reason to feel aggrieved if an Act of parliament was passed compelling them to put their wires underground. It was simply intended as a notice to the company that they should be prepared for that contingency. I think it is right it should be there. What harm does it do?

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I think a company should hesitate a long time before they agree to put wires in any village or municipality on poles, if they may be obliged, on the application of the municipality, by the board which has nothing to do with finding the money, to put the wires underground, multiplying the cost of the original plan. There should be some provision by which the company which put up the telephone service in that village should have the right to withdraw if they did not think the business worth putting the wires underground.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman seems to be labouring under the impression that telephone companies are affected by this. They are not affected.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I know it; I am speaking of railway companies.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman will not deny that this is equitable for all parties concerned. It is open to the railway companies, when they put up poles and wires for the purpose of their business in streets of cities, to do it with the sanction of the municipality. They should do it with the sanction of the municipality and therefore agree upon a term within which they shall not be removed, or that if they should be compelled to move the poles, it shall be done at the expense of the municipality.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—That covers the whole ground if that is the case.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—That is the first thing that a railway company should do in approaching the municipality. We provide for cases of this kind, that when the companies cannot get the consent of the municipality to their placing poles and wires in streets of cities, then the board may grant that power. Therefore, we open the door to this condition of things, that the railway company places poles and wires in the city of Montreal or in the city of Toronto, or half a dozen railway companies do the same thing, and in ten years hence the city of Toronto or the city of Montreal may pass a by-law requiring that all wires be placed underground. Would it be fair that all the telephone and telegraph companies would be compelled to place their wires underground and that there would be no machinery whereby the railway companies would be compelled to do likewise; and this is merely the necessary machinery to provide for cases of that kind and what is to be done in that case? As the poles and wires were very likely placed there without the consent of the municipality, by order of the Board, we go back to the very same authority and call upon that authority to prescribe under what conditions, and say whether the city should bear the whole of the expense or whether the railways should bear part of the expense.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But the hon. gentleman's resolution applies to the present condition, and is retroactive in its character. I think it is very much better to leave it as it is, and leave it to parliament to decide, when the time arrives for interfering with the present arrangement, because in most cases the poles have been placed there by municipal resolution, and there has been some authority for doing it, and it would be disturbing agreements which have been made, and therefore I would prefer it should be left as it is.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I called attention yesterday to the fact that it is a question which cannot be dealt with by parliament or the local legislature. Parliament is not going to pass a law that wires be placed underground in the city of Montreal.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As far as the railways are concerned, they are under the jurisdiction of parliament.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that it would be quite absurd to ask for a sweeping clause of that kind. It would have to be all over the country. It is a matter which necessarily has to be dealt with by the municipalities; it is a local matter to be dealt with by municipal bodies and not by Acts of parliament. The hon. gentleman seems to be afraid it might be a cause of disturbance. The hon. gentleman knows that if the railway company has obtained the power to place its poles and wires underground the board is not to disregard that agreement, and then there is this further guarantee under clause 44, that the decision of the board may be overridden by the Governor in Council, so that surely railway companies have all reasonable protection, and it seems to be very important that municipalities be given the power at their own expense, if it appertains, to provide for means to place wires underground, it shall be deemed advisable.

The committee divided on the amendment, which was agreed to.

On clause 43,

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I shall read the clause from the Railway Act of England:

No appeal shall lie from the commissioners upon a question of fact or upon any question regarding the standing of the complainant. Save as otherwise provided by this Act, an appeal shall lie from the commissioners to the Supreme Court.

On the hearing of the appeal, the Court of Appeal may draw all such inferences as are not inconsistent with the facts expressly found and are necessary for determining the question of law, and shall have all such powers for that purpose, as if the appeal were an appeal from the judgment of a superior court, and may make any order which the commissioner could have made, and also any further order which may be just.

The difference between this and the clause as it stands is this: Although the appeal is limited to questions of law, on a question of law, for the purpose of dealing with a question of law the court should infer from the facts.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—That is already here. Subsection 5, of clause 44 provides:

On the hearing of any such appeal, the Supreme Court of Canada may draw all such inferences as are not inconsistent with the fact expressly found by the board.

It is exactly the same in spirit with the clause which has been cited from the English Railway Act.

The clause was adopted.

On subsection 3, of clause 42,

3. The finding or determination of the board upon any question of fact within its jurisdiction shall be binding and conclusive on all courts.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is no reason why there should not be an appeal from this board. This could not possibly affect any of the courts of this Dominion. They have certain powers and jurisdiction entirely irrespective of this board, and it in no way invades their jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—That is a misapprehension. This board is constituted a court of record. It has power to deal with certain questions. Its decisions are final, subject to appeal in the cases that are provided for. The decisions, therefore, of this court, should not be reviewed by another court any more than the decisions of another court should be reviewed by this court; but the finding of another court would be accepted if it happened to be on the same question as this, and the finding of this court should be accepted by the other courts. It would be a curious state of affairs to say that the parties to litigation here should be bound by this, and no other court might absolutely disregard the decision and finding of this court of concurrent jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This may be an extraneous matter coming before another court. It does not deal with an appeal; it simply makes the broad, general statement, and you expect that to be binding on other courts, even though it be extraneous to the matter under consideration.

Hon. Mr. POWER—One of the objects of constituting this court is to make it a little easier for a comparatively poor man to carry on a contest with a railway company; and if the railway company, after this board have found the facts, are in a position to have some court review the decision of this board as to facts, it puts the poor suitor at a very considerable disadvantage. I think it is wiser to leave this clause as it is, and to provide that if this court has made an inquiry and found certain facts, other courts should be obliged to respect the finding of this court.

The subclause was adopted.

On clause 197,

197. Whenever by virtue of any Act of any province through which the railway runs, proceedings may be had or taken by any municipality or landowner for any drainage, or drainage works, upon and across the property of any other landowner in such province, the like proceedings may be had or taken by such municipality or landowner for drainage or drainage works upon and across the railway and lands of the company, at the option of such municipality or landowner, in the place of the proceedings before the board as in the next preceding section provided, and thereupon the drainage laws of the province shall apply to the lands of the company upon or across which such drainage is required, to the same extent as to the lands of any landowner of such province; subject, however, to any previous order or direction of the board made or given with respect to drainage of the same lands, and provided that the company shall have the option of constructing the portion of any drain or drainage work required to be constructed upon, along, under or across its railway or lands, and in the event of the company not exercising such option, and completing such work within a reasonable time, without any unnecessary delay, such work may be constructed or completed in the same manner as any other portions of such work are provided under the laws of such province to be constructed; provided always that no drainage works shall be constructed or reconstructed upon, along, under or across the railway or lands of the company until the character of such works or the specifications or plans thereof have been first submitted to and approved of by the board. 63-64 V., c. 23, s. 2, Am.

2. The proportion of the cost of the drain or drainage works across or upon the railway to be borne by the company shall in all such cases be based upon the increase of cost of such work caused by the construction and operation of the railway.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—This clause is open to very grave objection. In the first place, it introduces the provincial law, and makes it govern in the matter of drainage across railways.

Hon. Mr. POWER—So it should.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think the law of this parliament should govern, and that we should not place railway companies or anybody else in the hands of provincial legislatures with regard to questions of this kind. We should declare what the law shall be with regard to drainage across these properties. The principle involved in the clause as it stands is this: the landowner who thinks there is not sufficient drainage provided for his land through which the railroad passes may make application to the municipality that a drain shall be put through, and that the railway shall be compelled to pay the cost of the drain. We should treat railway companies, who are the owners of property, as we treat other owners. When railways are run through the country the question of compensation for the land that is taken deals with this question of drainage, as it does with every other question. I have had a little experience in that regard. Nearly thirty years ago, I assisted in appraising the lands taken for the Prince Edward Island Railway, and I was then very familiar with this question of drainage, although I admit that circumstances would be very different in some very flat country as compared with undulating, rolling lands, such as we have in Prince Edward Island ; but that is not touching the principle involved in this legislation. When land is taken for railway purposes, it is subject to be appraised ; arbitrators are called in, and the owners of the land and their representatives press for every kind of damage they sustain, and amongst the rest the question of drainage is not likely to be overlooked, and the compensation that is awarded to the owner of the land covers all the damages he has sustained in consequence of that railroad running through his land. At some future period this landowner believes that his property would be the better of a drain running across that railroad. He is led to believe that it would be an advantage, and it may be an advantage, and he says this drainage should be done at the expense of the railway company. I cannot see the justice of that. The principle that underlies the operating of drains under the public law, is that the cost of the drain shall bear a proportion to the benefit to be derived by the person owning the adjoining property, and the same principle ought to apply to railway companies as to every other owner of land. There should be some power or authority to decide what benefit is derived from the drain, and the owners of the property should pay in proportion for that benefit and for nothing else. But this clause provides two things : that it shall put the railway company under the law of the province with regard to drainage, which, I think is a wrong principle. Under this provision the owner of land at any moment, notwithstanding he may have been paid for all damage that the railroad could possibly inflict on his land, may reopen the question and force the drain, at the expense of the railway, across the railway tracks. That is a wrong and vicious principle, and one which I do not believe this House will sanction.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This provision in clause 197, as the hon. gentleman has stated, puts the railway company in the same position as any other owner of land. On the face of it, that seems a reasonable and proper provision, and I may refer here to the fact, which is known to some older members of this House, that away back in 1888, this Senate, on a motion of the hon. gentleman from Monck, whom we lost a year or so ago, passed a Bill very much on the lines of this clause. On two occasions a measure of that kind passed this House, but failed to pass the House of Commons ; and the Senate at that time was quite clear that the rights of the landowners in the neighbourhood of the railway preponderated and should predominate over those of the railway company. Why should the railway company be treated differently from any other landowner ? I do not think any hon. gentleman can give any good and sufficient reason why.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Because they have already paid for any damage the railroad could do the adjoining land.

Hon. Mr. POWER—They pay for the damage at the time, but if the country has been opened up since and cultivated, and the drains have become necessary, why should the railroad not pay its share, as well as other landowners ? The truth is this, that while the railway itself is a person created by this parliament, there is no reason why that person should not with respect to drainage or other matters which come within the local jurisdiction, be subject to the laws of the local legislature. I do not see any reason why we should say that the railway should be exempt from the laws of the local legislature which apply to it. There is this other fact : this particular question of drainage, in addition to having been discussed by this House long ago, and decided in favour of the ordinary land-owners, was discussed at great length in the House of Commons in connection with this Bill, and I am given to understand that this clause was adopted with very remarkable unanimity, the majority of the members of both parties voting for it. If we should undertake to amend this clause now, our amendment would not be accepted ; and I think that this is peculiarly a subject where the popular sentiment should count for a great deal.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I would say in answer to the hon. senator from Marshfield, it does not follow at all that the railway company has paid for something which they have got to pay again. The lands which are requiring drainage may not be the lands on which the railway runs. The railway company may not have taken any lands from the persons who are benefited by the drainage. They only pay for damages sustained by the person whose land they take some part of.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is the lands contiguous to the railway.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The lands may not be contiguous to the railway, but may be above it and require the drainage. The lands may be within a hundred yards of the line of railway—that is to say, the limit of the land of the owner who may be really wanting the drainage. They may extend for miles, as they do in many cases, and these persons whose lands extend for miles would never have received any compensation. The only person who could have received any compensation would be the owner of the lands where the right of way was taken, and as to the owner, if the company have paid that compensation, the arbitrators would take that into account as between that one man and the railway company, so there is no injustice to be done. The drainage laws in the province of Ontario have been administered with great equity and great satisfaction. There has been no complaint as to the manner in which they have been administered. It seems to me where you have a complete machinery like that, it would be a great mistake to constitute a new board to deal with matters of that kind when there is a drainage commission dealing with the whole of the land. Suppose, for the sake of argument, that there should be a conflict as to the manner of administering it, see what injustice would be done somewhere, and see what an outcry of dissatisfaction there would be. We can safely leave this matter as the House of Commons sent it to us, a fair drainage law, administered fairly to the satisfaction of the community, and with no provision such as there might have been introduced into this Bill bearing hardly on the railway company.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The case the hon. gentleman assumes is one that might arise, but would arise in very few instances indeed, while the Act is made to apply to every case. I know enough about farm lands, and the size and extent of the farms in Canada, to know that lands held by owners not contiguous to the railway, and that were not dealt with in connection with this question of drainage, and that would come in under this clause as my hon. friend says, are not remote lands. I know such cases must necessarily be few, because water gravitates toward a given place, and that process of gravitation was evident when the railway was built, and if there is water which naturally flows in the direction of the railway, it would be quite apparent that that flow existed then as it exists now. Otherwise, my hon. friend assumes a case where water may be diverted from what was its original channel and brought to the railway in that way. I think that is really about the only circumstance that could arise that was not disposed of when the question of compensation was settled. Where water follows its proper channels, these channels would be as apparent then as they are now, and the question of compensation would cover it. When I was speaking a moment ago I did not altogether notice the manner in which the expense of this drain was provided for. It is provided for in the Bill as follows, in subsection 2:

> 2. The proportion of the cost of the drain or drainage works across or upon the railway to be borne by the company shall in all such cases be based upon the increase of cost of such work caused by the construction and operation of the railway.

Now, every hon. gentleman must see that that is just what must have been before the appraisers when the compensation was paid for that land. The land was taken, a railway embankment was to be put up there, and certain drains would, no doubt, be indicated at the time the land was appraised. That was the case, I know, in the experience I had, and if there was not sufficient drainage, the owners would at once call the attention of the appraisers to it, and bring in evidence on the subject. The whole question is a proposal as if there had never been any compensation paid with regard to this question of drainage, and the owners of the lands may force a drain under the railway land, and cross the railway land, the cost to be distributed according to the expense of carrying the drain through, and, of course, crossing the railway would involve greater expense than drainage on the ordinary surface of the land. But the railway would be mulct the heavier part of the compensation, although they are to receive no benefit from the drain and the cost is not to be in proportion to the benefit they receive, but according to the expense of getting the drain under the railway. I can conceive of no justice whatever in such a policy. I speak as a farmer myself, and I have had a further experience of having to do with the appraisement of lands. It would be very wrong indeed to force the railway companies practically to pay over again the cost of drainage which was dealt with and must have been dealt with at the time the compensation was paid. I know it was stated in the committee the other day, by a gentleman who sustains the clause as it stands in the Bill, and who was greatly the means of having it inserted, that a great deal of the land was in a state of nature when the railways were built. I understand this clause was inserted in the Bill against the wish of the late Minister of Railways, who had charge of it, and who strongly opposed the clause. It was put in against his will and vote. The gentleman who was sustaining this legislation before us the other day, took the ground that when the compensation was dealt with, much of the land was wilderness land—wooded land, and that the question of drainage was not considered. I did not understand him to say that the land was Crown land at the time, although some of it might have been, but he claimed some of it was wood land, and some of it was Crown land at the time the compensation was paid and the railway was built. However, whatever may have been the state in which it was found, I think there is an injustice in forcing the railway company to be at the expense and cost of drainage of that land now. If the land was Crown land at the time, the present owner acquired it subject to whatever disability or disadvantage existed in consequence of the railroad running across the land. He took it with that handicap on it, and he has no right to come back and say that it shall be remedied at the expense of the railway. If it was wood land, and held by a private owner, he would no doubt have expressed the view that I have been submitting to the committee, and the damage that any lack of drainage was likely to give rise to, would have been considered by the appraisers and paid for at the time, and of course if it was improved land, every owner of improved land would be ready to urge that view, and any board of appraisers would be likely to take it into consideration, even if it had not been presented to them at all. On this account I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman who has spoken, or the hon. Speaker, that this clause should stand. I think it is extremly socialistic legislation, and is simply a popular cry in some places to do what is unfair and unjust towards railway companies merely because they have deep pockets and are supposed not to have bodies to be kicked or injured. On that account there is a popular demand to enact this legislation against them. In order to test the opinion of the House upon this question, I move that in the first subclause of clause 197, that all after the words 'railroad company,' in the third line down to the word 'province' in the eighth line be struck out and that the following words be added :

And the proportion of the cost of such works to be borne by the company shall be determined by the board.

And subsection 2 will also be struck out. My amendment will be to strike out the words which bring into force the laws of the province as dealing with this question and striking out subsection 2.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—This clause has received a great deal of consideration in the Commons and I think it is a very good provision. There seems to be a little inconsistency amongst hon. gentlemen in this House. Any person listening to the debate would hear them discussing in favour of provincial rights and claiming that the laws of the province ought to prevail, and the next moment they ask every farmer who wants a little drain across his farm to go to the board and ask permission and it shall be authorized and directed by the board. This clause was accepted as a compromise. I know a number of hon. gentlemen in this House have for years had Bills before them for the purpose of compelling railways to construct drains at the request of land owners without any expense on the individual. I remember the late member for Monck (Hon. Mr. McCallum) introduced a Bill in the House of Commons and introduced a Bill in this House, which was passed as I understand.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The last time the Bill came before the House on that subject I was here, and I know that it was given a six months hoist.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The Bill passed in 1888.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It has been a matter of discussion in legislative bodies for a number of years, as to whether a railway company has a right to run a dam across the country, practically, and block the water and that the people have no recourse. It has been argued that making these openings is dangerous to railways. It is just as dangerous not to make them in a great many ways, because you remove the danger of a washout by providing drainage. I have often seen very serious damage done, particularly on the prairie section of the country, on account of insufficient openings to allow the water to flow in its natural course. I remember three or four years ago miles of country were flooded with water simply because a railway ran across the country on a level and dammed up the water three or four feet for three or four miles back, and for seven or eight miles in length, simply because there were not sufficient openings in that railway belt to allow the water to flow. This is a very fair provision as to the cost. You are not asking the railway to bear all the cost, but simply their fair share, the additional cost caused by the construction of the railway. The landowener has to provide for the cost as if the road was not there, and he will not burden himself unnecessarily with the cost to inconvenience the railway companies and ask them to make a water-way. The drainage laws are not the same in all the provinces of the Dominion. The law is generally fitted into the needs and requirements of the particular provinces. You find one province where the land is hilly and rolling, and another where it is level, and the Acts are framed to suit the conditions of the provinces, and it is but fair to say that a railway company shall be subject to the same laws and regulations as any other land owners. No good argument has been advanced, to my mind, by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield to show that railways should not be subject to the same conditions and regulations that affect any other land owners. From the argument advanced by the hon. gentleman, one would suppose that there was no change in the country. Take a new country where a railroad is constructed; the landowner is not particular about the drainage. He is not cultivating the land, and it does not make any difference where the drainage is blocked up, but after a time he wants to clear up the land and have drainage; he has to have an opening in the railway to do that, and he has to come to Ottawa to find out whether he can drain the water in order to cultivate that land. Changes take place by cultivation. By clearing also you have a freshet in the spring and require an opening. When you have a wooded country, you do not require the same opening. When the land is cleared up and when you have a freshet in the spring, you require larger openings to let the water through, and if you do not have them, you will have a flood and farmers are prevented from putting in their crops. It seems to me the House of Commons in their wisdom in drafting this Bill with care have provided for openings in the railway tracks. and the cost is very fairly distributed. It cannot be argued that simply because a man has received a consideration of a few dollars per acre for right of way over his land, for all time he is debarred from asking anything of the corporation crossing the land. I think it is a very unreasonable proposition to lay before the House. The land has increased in value, and so long as the railway company is not asked to do anything more than bear the extra cost caused by the construction of the work by the railway, and the farmer has to pay his share, it seems to me a fair provision and the clause should pass without any amendment.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I scarcely think the last speaker has properly put the case to the House. He used words to the effect that a railway could run a road across the country and the farmers had no redress if they wished to get drainage across it. Clause 196 provides ample facilities for obtaining drainage across any railways in the country. The first subsection of that clause provides that all the watercourses existing at the time the railway is built shall be preserved. Clause 2 provides for the cost to a municipality or a farmer who may wish to procure some additional drainage after the railway is built, where the drainage afforded by perhaps the ordinary watercourse is not sufficient. This provides for the very case the hon. gentleman from Toronto referred to. Perhaps a gentleman living ten miles from a railroad might, in the course of time, require drainage not anticipated when the railway was built. You will observe by subsection 2 of 196 that any municipality or landowner who desires any additional means of drainage, or any right to lay water-pipes or other pipes temporarily or permanently through, along or across a railway, and so on, can do so by making application to the board and the board will consider the matter. It can if necessary employ experts, or engineers, to examine the locality and decide upon what should be done and finally decide whether the drain is necessary. If it is, they decide upon what terms and conditions it shall be made or the pipes laid, how it shall be constructed and so on, having due regard to all proper interests, which I presume means that they will apportion the costs according as they consider what is equitable between all parties. In my judgment clause 197 should not be inserted in the Bill. I think it is regrettable that it is put here, because clause 196 makes ample provision for every possible contingency that can arise in the way of drainage. I agree with the view that has been expressed that this parliament should legislate so far as these matters are concerned, and we are now creating what we never had before. We are creating a board, and it appears to me there is no more appropriate duty that should be assigned to the board than this very duty of considering what is necessary with regard to drains across a railway, considering how they should be made, where there is a difference of opinion between the owners and the railway companies, and apportioning the cost and settling the whole matter. Clause 197 provides an additional means of securing these drains, besides applying to the board. It attempts to put in force the laws of the province in which the drainage is required. I do not think, as I said before, that that is a wise provision. I do not think the railways should be subject to the laws of the province, but if they are subject to them, I certainly agree that the words which the hon. gentleman from Marshfield desires to erase should be stricken out of this clause. I do not agree with the hon. Speaker that railways should be subject to the same regulations with regard to drainage as farmers. I am not familiar with conditions in the west, where the main trouble seems to have arisen, and where the demand for this legislation comes from, but in the locality in which I live we have large tracts of very level land, the marsh land in the counties of Westmoreland and Cumberland at the head of the Bay of Fundy, and the drainage is administered by a board of commissioners. They decide all matters between farmers and make drains which in their opinion are necessary. They are the judges first, whether the drains are necessary. They then construct the drains and apportion the costs on the different land owners according as they are benefited, and if one land owner is injured by the construction of a drain which is necessary for his neighbours, he is compensated for any damage he sustains. The whole thing is apportioned by the commissioners and assessed by the different land owners. I assume that drains in the west may be made in a somewhat similar way, but it will readily be seen—it is apparent at all events to me—that the system which we adopt as between farmers, of making drains across each other's land, could not be applied to a railway. It would enable every farmer along the railway, if he so demanded it, to have a drain cut through the railway opposite his own farm if it suited his own convenience. Now, that is not in the interests of the railway; it is not in the interests of the country. It interferes with the safety of the track, and I think it will be generally conceded by those who have any knowledge of the system of drainage across railways, that the principle universally adopted is to make culverts where they are needed, and a number of farms in the vicinity of that culvert will be drained to that same culvert. Suitable drains will be made, so that the one culvert will answer for several farmers. That is a matter which, it appears to me, should be left in the hands of the board, and the board will be the proper authority to decide where these culverts should be, how many there should be, the character of drainage required to enable all the farmers in that neighbourhood to obtain the advantage of the use of these culverts. There is another objection, I think, to this clause. So far as I have heard, this is a purely local matter. The application comes from a certain section of Ontario where the land is flat and where exceptional conditions exist. I think it is unfortunate if we introduce anything into our general legislation to meet exceptional cases of the kind. The board have power to make regulations which can apply either to the whole railways of the Dominion, or which can apply to particular districts, and that is another reason why the regulation of this matter should be left with the board, for, so far as I am aware, there is no other district where there is this trouble with regard to drainage and where this application for additional facilities for drainage comes. I therefore would like to see the whole clause struck out of the Bill, but if it is to be retained, I certainly must support the amendment moved by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The question of drainage is undoubtedly a very serious one. There has been a great deal of trouble in Ontario over it. I do not wish to load down the railways with unreasonable provisions in this Bill, which would subject them to a very great amount of increased expense, keeping up their lines and complying with arbitrary orders, but at the same time we must not forget that the present drainage law of Ontario is a production of many years, amended from time to time, and I believe on the whole is as perfect and as applicable to the conditions in Ontario as it can possibly be made. For my part, I have had some little difficulty—at least a case in which it has been necessary for me to apply to the railway company to get relief where it had not been granted. I know of one case where a municipality had made application for a number of years; quite a large district in that municipality was injured by being inundated and the farmers suffered very considerably. First the railway company put up a wooden bridge, and afterwards built stone piers and made a very substantial structure, but unfortunately in doing it the abutments of those piers, which were stone, had not been sufficiently put down in the ground to allow the removal of any obstruction in the centre of the stream to take away the water. The company got afraid that, owing to the very heavy washout that took place in the spring, the abutments of that bridge might suffer if they were left without some protection, and they took along train loads of stone and put it there to preserve the abutments. This formed a kind of dam and the farmers on the north side of the track suffered very considerably. They made application, and the engineer of the railway and the municipality could not come to any understanding. At last I made an application to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, and we had the matter adjusted after some little delay. I must say the railway company sent their engineer. We met the engineer of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council and they decided upon a method whereby the difficulty could be adjusted, and it was so adjusted, and the people got relief and are to-day free from the unfortunate conditions to which they were subjected by the building of that bridge and putting in an amount of stone to preserve the abutments. I could not, for my own part, endorse the course proposed by the hon. gentleman from Westmoreland. I think it is rather sweeping in its character.

I would be willing to leave the question of the construction of drains, their cost and everything to the board. The board would be the proper party to hold the balance fairly between the farmer and the railway company, or between any persons asking for relief; but I decline to say that I would absolutely refuse to recognize the Ontario Drainage Act as a part of the system of drainage, and exclude it altogether and give the board absolute control. I would not be willing to do that. The farms increase in value by the construction of railways. Railways are public improvements and institutions. If they are, is it not right, after they are built and doing very valuable work in the interest of the section through which they run, to turn round and load them with all the responsibility of any necessary change which takes place in the way of drainage or anything else? That is not proper. We should at least leave the whole question subject to the decision of the board, and let the board decide what should be done; and if they alter it and decide that the railway shall bear the whole expense of putting the drain through their embankment, all right. But take a farmer who has received a large price for the land he sold, perhaps the question of drainage may have been partly taken into consideration when he sold the right of way. The farmer knew what he was selling the land for—that it was taken for railway purposes; that embankments would be placed there, and when he made this bargain in the first place, he should have stipulated for a certain amount of drainage that he would require. If he forgot, or neglected to do it, and made an absolute conveyance without any reservation with regard to drainage he should not be allowed to come in after the road has been built 15 or 20 years, and say to the railway company. 'You have put an immense embankment across my farm; it is an inconvenience to me, and I do not care what the expense. you must put a drain through it.'

Hon. Mr. POWER—Would the law of Ontario allow a transaction of that kind ?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Under the present conditions, the law of Ontario cannot control railways. The drainage law of Ontario can carry a drain up to a railway embankment. or to railway land, but the moment it strikes an inch inside of the railway land, the Drainage Act of Ontario has no force, because the railways are under the jurisdiction of this parliament, and the Ontario Drainage Act does not apply. That is why application must be made to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council in order to get relief. I think we should leave to the railway board the very same power and let them deal with the whole question—as to the cost and where the drain is to be—the extent of the drain, and everything else.

At six o'clock the committee rose for recess.

After Recess.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I listened very carefully to the speech of the hon. gentleman on my left, and I agreed with every word of it. There might be cases in which the lack of drainage was a very serious thing for the adjacent owners, but everything he mentioned in the course of his address is provided for in clause 196. He will see there :

> Whenever any lands are injuriously affected by the drainage, the board may order and lay such pipes, &c.

That of itself disposes of everything he would wish for in that connection. Reverting to the clause under discussion (197), the amendment proposed by the hon. senator from Marshfield is a reasonable and fair one, that the proportion of the cost of such works to be borne by the company shall be determined by the board. That, in fact, transfers to the board the power to determine whether the works required are reasonable to be exacted from the company or not, and in my opinion this honourable House should adopt some such arrangement. While upon this subject, I should like to point out that in clause 196, subsection 2, in line 29, there is provision made not only for drainage, but for a right to lay 'water or other pipes permanently or temporarily, through. along, upon, across, or under the railway or other works of the company.' Now, such a right as that, if it were not controlled, as I suppose it is by the latter part of the clause which gives the board the power of determining the nature of the works to be carried on, would be an extremely dangerous one. I have seen a case, in my own experience, where the supply of water to a considerable town was seriously proposed to be brought along the line of railway underneath the embankment, and this in effect gives that right, that is subject, as I have already stated, to the board's supervision. Now, no person of practical experience but knows that to take a water-pipe under pressure, under, through, across or along the works of a railway, is a most dangerous proceeding. No one who lives in a big city but knows if a pipe bursts, that the effect is to wash out the whole substratum of the street, and consequently a very serious danger arises to the public in that connection if it were availed of in the sense which this clause would seem to sanction. While I do not deny, as I have already said, that the board having the supervision and aid of the inspecting engineer, might probably countervail any attempt on the part of the municipality to exercise this right, still, I think it is our business to make a consistent and reasonable provision of the law, and I would suggest that the words

'water-pipes or other pipes' be struck out of this clause. It would then read as follows :

Or the right to lay pipes for drainage temporarily or permanently across the street.

At the proper time I shall propose this amendment.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—With the leave of the committee, I withdraw my amendment striking out the words after 'company' in the third line, and down to the eighth line, leaving it as it stands in the Bill, and move that the following words be added :

And the proportion of the cost of such works to be borne by the company shall be determined by the board.

I might say I still think it would be very much better for this parliament to decide its own procedure in dealing with this question, and not leave it to the procedure under the laws of the province, for the reason I fear many provinces have not legislation on this subject. I understand the province of Ontario has very complete legislation on this subject, but I doubt if there is any other province. I know in my own province it is not a burning question, and I have no objection, therefore, to withdraw my amendment and offer this amendment which I desire now to put through the committee.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman, I suppose, proposes to strike out subclause 2.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That will follow as a matter of fact. With regard to subclause 2, the principle of the apportionment of the cost, as hon. gentlemen no doubt have observed, is that it shall be based on the proportion of the cost of the work. I propose to leave the board free to follow that principle. The provision that will be struck out is not in accordance with the law of Ontario, for the law of Ontario is this :

The railway company shall not be liable for the cost of any work performed on the lands or under the roadbed of the railway under the provisions of this Act.

The province of Ontario in its legislation has recognized the ground I have put to the House, that all this is settled in the compensation for the land, and the principle is clearly recognized that the railway is not liable to pay anything. However, there might be cases in which that has not been settled, and it is quite safe to leave it to the board ; therefore, I submit this amendment.

Hon. Mr. LANDERKIN—In what year was that legislation ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is in the consolidated statutes.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I would call the attention of the committee to the effect of the amendment which the hon. gentleman proposes. One of the great objections entertained by those who support the clause in the Bill to the proposal that the board shall settle everything is that it would involve expense, delay and trouble, and would place the average farmer at a great disadvantage. The hon. gentleman has, I think, shown good judgment in abandoning the early part of his amendment, but the portion which he retains will have the effect of compelling the farmer, or the municipal officers, still to come to Ottawa to have the proportion of the cost of this drainage which the railway company is to bear, settled by the Railway Board. I think it is a great deal better that the matter should be settled on the spot. The effect of adopting this proposed amendment will be nearly as bad as if we had adopted the earlier portion of the amendment.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The hon. the Speaker is under a misapprehension.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Not at all.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I have had two cases, both with the Canadian Pacific Railway, in which a dispute arose with regard to drainage. One case came before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, and neither appeared by lawyer, nor did they come to Ottawa personally. They made out a clear and distinct statement of the facts, and attached thereto a statutory declaration, setting out clearly and distinctly what the complaints were. They were taken up by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council and dealt with, and they ordered that the Canadian Pacific Railway should send their engineer on a certain day at a certain fixed hour, and that their engineer should be there. They met on the ground, and notified the municipality they could have their engineer if they chose. The three engineers met and settled the dispute and the terms on which the watercourse was opened up. It was all settled on the spot. Nobody came to Ottawa. No lawyer appeared on behalf of the municipality. A simple statement forwarded to the Chairman of the Railway Committee accomplished the whole object.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The whole object may have been easily accomplished in that way, but I am quite certain that way of doing business will never answer before this board, and people will soon understand, when this board is in operation, that those who are going to be represented will have a great advantage over those who are not, and that business ought not to be allowed to go by default. You might as well say if you have a suit in court, that you can send a memo. of your case to the court to be read to the jury, and that you would have all the advantage and protection of having a judgment upon that. The objection that there is to this, is the expense which is involved in the multitude of cases that will arise. We have evidence of this before us. Mr. Cowan, who made the statement before us—and his statement has not been challenged, and cannot be challenged—said that the regular cost of a drain across the railway when be drained sections of land seldom exceeded $25. Now, the drainage commissioners will determine that under the Ontario law, and when that is determined, what is the sense of coming down here to a board of commissioners to have it awarded, and if they do not come and look after it, the whole subject will be reviewed by those who will be here. It seems to me a mixture of two matters to say first the matter is to be settled in accordance with the drainage laws of the province, which would mean the cost of the drainage would be determined, and the railway would be assessed in respect of their portion ; and then to say, after all that being done, that the board are to determine the proportion of the cost, creating two tribunals on the same evidence to deal with the same matter. It seems to me it is a complication which is certainly likely to end in trouble and expense and annoyance. I do not see any reason why, once the drainage commissioners having been vested with the matter to be investigated, have had the whole matter before them, they cannot determine everything about it. The only thing wanting in order to determine that would be that where it is necessary to cross under a railway, the provisions we have here in subsection 2 should be added as a cast-iron rule. That was all threshed out—the whole subject of this clause was a subject of agreement and compromise between the parties representing both interests in the House of Commons, and they having determined that and having agreed on it, I certainly think we would require a very good reason before disturbing it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The hon. gentleman, in pointing out the undesirability of having recourse to two tribunals to settle the portion of cost, entirely overlooks the fact that that principle has been introduced into the Bill at the instance of the government, and is, I submit, the weakness of the Bill. The municipality or the owner, as the case may be, will have recourse to one of two tribunals. They may elect either to go before the board, or in the event of not going before the board themselves, to invoke the authority of the province in that behalf. This creates a division of authority, We would have two tribunals empowered, on the request of the municipal authority or the owner, to carry out this particular duty. What I say is this : that if the laws of the province are to be invoked on behalf of the municipality or owner, it surely is logical, it surely is common sense, that the statute in that behalf which makes provision for the carrying out of this drainage, should regulate the apportionment of the cost. Take, for instance, the Ontario Act, which is the Act cited in favour of this particular legislation, it makes provision for the apportionment of the cost—at least contemplates dealing with the cost. If a municipality or owner should invoke the laws of the province, why should not the laws of that province govern the apportionment of cost, and why adopt a cast-iron rule which does not admit of elasticity to be applied to the peculiar condition of affairs. It seems to me if we made provision, that the apportionment of cost should be determined by the authority under whom the work is carried out, that the difficulty would be overcome. That is to say, if the authority of the board is invoked, the board is to settle the apportionment of the cost, if the law of the province is invoked, then whatever provision there is under the law should determine what the apportionment of cost should be. The cost of the work should be determined by the authority under which the work was carried out. That would reach the difficulty under discussion.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The hon. senator from Calgary is under a misapprehension about there being two tribunals in all cases, because that is not the case. It is perfectly true there is an opportunity to elect a tribunal, whether the municipality will go to the board, or whether they will go under the local Drainage Act, but once they do that, there is one tribunal, whichever way they go.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is no question about that.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Then it is a mistake to say that when you apply under the Drainage Act you have two tribunals unless you adopt this amendment. I do not think it is a reasonable thing to say that where we find the average cost of taking a drain through the railway lands exceeded $25, we should here solemnly declare, after the whole thing is done—after the apportionment of the territory of the drain was effected under the drainage law, then you should subject the parties to the expense of the whole proceedings being submitted to the board here, argument taking place here, counsel representing the parties here, and all the expense and delay involved in that. It is just adding that which is going to make the law odious to everybody.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—How does my hon. friend conclude there is an arbitrary amount named—$25? We know nothing about that.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I say that the evidence before us now is—the statement which Mr. Cowan made, which no one has challenged—that that will be a high sum for an average cost of a drain through the railway, dealing with the section in which drainage would be demanded.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If you construct a culvert under a right of way, particularly where there are high embankments, it seems absurd to say the work could be done for $25.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto—I do not think so. It is done by iron pipes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That would depend entirely on the volume of water that would pass through it; many culverts, lately laid under the Grand Trunk Railway, are of cut stone and are very expensive; it is nonsensical to say that you can place a drain of the character that many of them are, to carry off the water under a railway track that would cost only $25.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think Mr. Cowan and the rest of the representatives were referring to the section of the country where he lives—the county of Essex, where there are no high banks.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But this law is not to be confined to the county of Essex alone; it is for the whole Dominion.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—That is where Mr. Cowan refers to the $25 cost.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the hon. gentleman is right, and it might do in a country where there is very little excavation required. It might be done for less, or require three times as large an expenditure.

The committee divided on the amendment, which was rejected: contents 16, non-contents 25, and the clause was adopted.

On clause 198,

198. Every company shall make crossings for persons across whose lands the railway is carried, convenient and proper for the crossing of the railway for farm purposes. In crossing with live stock, the same shall be in charge of some competent person, who shall use all reasonable care and precaution to avoid accidents. 51 V., c. 29, s. 191, Am.

2. The board may, upon the application of any landowner, order the company to provide and construct a suitable farm crossing across the railway, wherever in any case the board deems is necessary for the proper enjoyment of his land, on either side of the railway, and safe in the public interest; and may order, and direct how, when, where, by whom, and upon what terms and conditions, such farm crossing shall be constructed and maintained.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—This clause is open to the same objection in part as the one we have just been discussing. I think subclause 2 of the clause should be amended in this way:

Provided that nothing in this subsection contained shall be construed to apply to lands in respect of which the company has paid compensation for having omitted to provide such farm crossing prior to the passing of this Act, nor shall it apply to or affect any line of railway constructed before the 22nd day of May, 1888.

Where the compensation covers the question of farm crossings, it is nothing short of confiscation to compel the railway company to provide further crossings without compensation. It is a very troublesome question for the railways, as was clearly put before us—a dangerous thing, the multiplication of farm crossings, and where the lack of crossing was settled by compensation it seems strange we should legislate that the company must make a crossing.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—In the province of Quebec, every farm has the right of crossing, as I happen to know. On my own farm, I have four crossings, and the railway company some time ago offered me a consideration for shutting up two of them, which I did not accept ; but if I had agreed, I certainly would have felt it my duty, and in honour bound, to accept just the suggestion which has been made by way of amendment. If, for example, I had, for due consideration, agreed to shut up two of these crossings and could fall back on a peremptory order of the board to reopen them, it might be a hard thing for a railway company to agree to. I therefore favour the amendment.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have prepared an amendment to cover the same point, and it may be the hon. member for Marshfield would prefer this added to the end of subsection 2 :

Having regard as to whether the right to one or more crossing or to take away or withhold the right of crossings formed part of the consideration paid by the company to the landowner, or of the bargain by which the company acquired the land.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is the same point.

The amendment was agreed to.

On clause 211, subclause 2, paragraph (a),

(a) Outside ladders, on two of the diagonally opposite ends and sides of each car, projecting below the frame of the car, with one step or rung of the ladder below the frame, the ladder being placed close to the ends and sides to which they are attached.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I think we might with propriety let the board determine about side ladders. It is peculiarly a matter within the scope and jurisdiction of the board to determine what is to be the nature of the equipment used by a railway company, and therefore I move that subsection (a) be amended by inserting after the words 'outside ladders' the words 'when required by the board.'

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I think we should pass this clause. I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in 1898 this measure was agitated considerably. A select committee of the House of Commons was appointed and the whole matter was inquired into. A great deal of evidence was taken. Mr. Casey was chairman of the committee and Mr. Powell, a very eminent lawyer in New Brunswick, was present. Judge Choquette and Mr. McGregor, now dead, was a member. The committee, after a great deal of consideration and hearing a great deal of evidence upon the whole question, as well as upon other questions, came to the conclusion to report to the House a Bill for both side and end ladders. I was a member of that committee. All the evidence taken from the persons who are interested really in the work and doing the work was strongly in favour of having both end and side ladders. They are the persons who are most interested. It is all very well for the railway companies to offer objections, and I presume, as they do not desire to undergo the expense of providing these two classes of ladders, their objection is not an unreasonable one from their point of view ; but on the whole question there can be no doubt whatever that the safety of the life of the men is better preserved by having these ladders. This was the conclusion to which the committee came. I am not quite sure whether the Bill recommended by the committee passed the lower House, but at any rate it never became law wherever it went to.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It never came to this House.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—It did not. I know there was a long discussion about it. There is no doubt there is a difference of opinion as to which is the better class of ladder. I call the attention of the House to what is undoubtedly a divergence of opinion upon the question. I propose to read from the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the year 1902, the reports of the special superintendents or inspectors of different divisions within the jurisdiction of the United States commission. Mr. Geo. B. Martin, who was apparently an inspector, reported to the secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission with headquarters at Washington. His report is dated at Salt Lake City. He says:

At night a trainman groping his way over a fast running train, perhaps with his light extinguished, comes to the end of a box car, down which he is obliged to climb to a flat car. He finds by feeling, it being too dark to see, and perhaps smoke and cinders beating into his face, a roof hand hold set lengthwise of the car. The position of that hand hold leads him to believe that the car is equipped with a side ladder, when in reality it is equipped with an end ladder. The result is that he goes over the side of the car to the ground, receiving serious injuries or possibly being killed. The same is true of hand holds set crosswise of the cars that are equipped with side ladders.

More defective end ladders are found than side ladders. This is due to the shifting of lumber or other long material on flat cars or steel structural material loaded in gondolas and extending out from 2 to 3 feet over the end of the car.

I am simply trying to show the difference of opinion which exists on the subject, and that to be logical we should have both. Then Mr. Cullinane reports from Nashville, Tenn., as follows:

I am convinced now more than ever that all box cars should have side ladders instead of end ladders, unless they are fixed, as are the Pennsylvania's cars, with side sill step, three hand grabs, and a protecting end sill, and the ladder near the centre of the car, so that if a man is ascending or descending the ladder rounding a short curve, he will not be crushed to death. Besides this, where cars have the projecting end sill they do not get so close together at the corners in rounding curves. I have canvassed yardmen, freight brakemen, and all that I have come in contact with that are really interested in the matter, and have found only two men out of three or four hundred that favoured the end ladders.

I call attention to that particularly. This man found only two men out of three or four hundred who favoured end ladders, and they favoured them because the conditions required them. Mr. Swasey dates his report from Boston, and says:

It often occurs that platform cars loaded with material which projects beyond the end of the car, coming in contact with box cars in front or in the rear, strike the rounds of the ladder of these cars and bend them, unfitting them for use and rendering them unsafe, especially at night. I have watched inspectors engaged in straightening out these defective ladder rounds, and have seen them use a common iron bar by placing the bar under the round, using the end of the car for a brace. They accomplished their purpose, but in so doing weakened the round, and after a few times defeating this they were rendered unsafe at the point where it was bent. Regarding the location of ladders, I have made it a practice during the last three months, to ask practical railroad men their opinion in regard to the location or proper place for the ladder, and I have yet to find anyone in this part of the country (New England) who does not readily say the end of a car rather than a side; but I think that in the south and west the idea of placing the ladders is quite the contrary, the side ladder being in favour.

Then Mr. Sears reports as follows:

I have heretofore been in favour of side ladders for box cars, but having seen the closeness with which tracks are put in in the east, I am of the opinion that end ladders are preferable, at least where so little clearance is left between tracks that a man's body is exposed to the danger of being brushed off a side ladder. I should, if recommending any practice, be in favour of supplying both side and end ladders. During the past year I have asked several hundred men as to their preference in regard to the placing of ladders, and find that they differ greatly. Men in the east wish for end ladders, while men in the west prefer side ladders, undoubtedly for the reason I have mentioned above.

He goes on to say how end ladders should be fixed if they are used. Then Mr. Jones, the Chicago inspector, states as follows:

I think it is a dangerous practice to put the ladder on the end of the car and the roof hand hold lengthwise of the car near the edge of the roof. It is very deceptive and misleading.

I merely read these reports to show that among the experts there is quite a difference of opinion. The man who spoke to three or four hundred men found only two in favour of end ladders, and in consequence of the difference of opinion that exists on this question, the balance should be in favour of having both ladders. The argument presented the other day was that it would cost something to put in the additional ladders. I quite agree that there would be an expense, but I do not think the expense is worth thinking about—fifty thousand dollars on one railway—if it would have the effect of saving the life of one single man. I asked the question directly whether it would add much to the cost of new cars to put them in when building, and the builder told me that it would cost scarcely anything. Having looked into the matter myself, and having served on the committee of the House of Commons, I am prepared to stand by the clause as it comes to us, and to enact as a matter of law that cars shall have both ladders.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is a wide diversity of opinion as to which is the preferable. It appears now some cars are fitted up with the end ladders and side ladders, and in the constant interchange that takes place between the United States and Canada, it must be dangerous for a man accustomed to end ladders to find the car he is on fitted only with a side ladder. It seems to me the Canada Southern adopted the proper method to have end and side ladders. If it is going to save human life the extra cost of equipping cars with end and side ladders ought not to interfere with the proposal laid down here. The company have two years and a half within which to comply with the law, and there is also a discretion on the part of the board to extend that time. Under the circumstances, there should be no hesitation in having both the side and end ladders.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I suppose almost every member of the House has had more or less experience by observing accidents and meeting railway men. The great thing, as far as ladders or any other conveniences of that kind for the safety of railway employees are concerned, should be uniformity. It is a great mistake to have cars some places with side ladders, and other places with only end ladders and some with both, because these cars are transferred from the east to the west, from Canada to the United States and from the United States to Canada, and there is a constant interchange of cars, and the brakesmen on these different railways have to accustom themselves to the appliances they find on the cars. It seems to me that uniformity would be a good thing. I quite understand that a brakesman who had been accustomed only to end ladders going on a box car on a dark night, and making an attempt to get over the side, and finding no steps there, might meet with an accident. A number of cars now built, large furniture cars and stock cars, are about the same width as a passenger coach. I have no doubt passengers in going through tunnels and under bridges with the semaphore switch along the side of the track can quite easily see, looking out of the car, that it would not be possible for a man to be on the side of a car and escape death. When a brakesman is on the end ladder, all he has to do is to take care and see that he hangs on. In the west I have noticed where they are constructing railways, trainloads of ties which are piled crossways on a flat car. Very often when these trains are hauled for two or three hundred miles those ties work out two or three feet on the side of the car. A train of that description in a yard, and a man switching—because it is really in the yards where the switching is done—there is not much going up and down on the road—there would be a danger of accident to a man if he was on the side of a car. I have often observed in going through a yard where damaged cars are stored a great number of the cars are rubbed on the sides. If that is the case, it is a mistake to require ladders to be put on the side as well as on the end. It appears to me the board will be the best judges, in their experience, as to whether these ladders shall be on the sides and ends, or whether they should be only on the ends. I think it would be a mistake to make it compulsory. I fully agree with the hon. gentleman from St. John that so far as the cost is concerned, we should not consider that objection. If it should cost $100,000 to each railway to put on these ladders for the safety of life, we should require them to do so, but we have no evidence that there would be any additional safety, and I think it would be well to leave it to the board to decide from time to time, not only about these ladders, but any other convenience that might be necessary to ensure the safety of railway employees, conductors and brakemen. I should prefer, for these reasons, to see the matter left optional with the board.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—I can give the last speaker a lot of evidence from the men themselves, and they are better judges of what they want than any one else. I have here a number of telegrams sent from all over the country, Revelstoke, Winnipeg, Montreal, Toronto, and as far east as Halifax, and representing some thousands of men, and they are certainly much better judges than we are of what they want. They say in those telegrams and letters that they want both the side ladders and the end ladders. I was walking round the buildings the other night, discussing with an hon senator who has something to do with a railway the difference between side and end ladders. He was strongly in favour of end ladders. We met a gentleman in the other House who has worked up from a brakeman, Mr. Ingram, and I said: 'You are a practical man; you have been on the Michigan Central and you know all about the difference between the end ladders and side ladders, and what is best for the safety of the men.' He said: 'The proper thing is to get them both.' There is the practical evidence. I know that the railway people's great objection is the cost.

Some hon. MEMBERS—No.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—The men themselves are asking for these ladders. They know better than we do what is required for their safety, and they say 'use both.'

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I should like to say in reply—referring to Mr. Ingram—I have no objection to take him as an authority. But we had Mr. Singleton, who worked himself up from brakesman to divisional superintendent, and he gave his own personal opinion that the end ladder was much safer than the side ladder. Further, I may say that I was discussing this matter with the late Minister of Railways, Mr. Blair, a few days ago, and he told me that they did not have a side ladder on the Intercolonial Railway, yet from 1896 down to the present time he had never received a request to have side ladders on the cars. I can quite understand that if you want to get representations from a certain portion of men for any particular purpose you will get them.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—Look at the number of deaths on the Intercolonial Railway—more deaths than on any other road in Canada for its mileage.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The evidence is to the contrary.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—No.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I am not objecting and insisting that you shall not have side ladders, but I say on account of the difference of opinion, the conflicting evidence we have had laid before us, I will leave it with the board, and if the board decides they are a protection, the cars should have them, but I should not say it would be absolutely compulsory to have side ladders put on.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I cordially agree with what has been said that the cost of doing this is a mere bagatelle as compared with the safety of the employee. That being granted, I think there is a great deal in the suggestion which has fallen from the other side—and I am glad it has come from the other side and that I can agree with it, because if it came from this side there would be no chance to pass it. But I say the true policy would be to leave the matter in the hands of the board, with instructions to them in the Bill that they shall provide the best and safest appliances for the purpose. It is a fact, I believe, that the state of Vermont will not permit cars with side ladders to enter the state, and that is a difficulty. I use it only as a proof that there is a difference of opinion, and a serious difference of opinion, as to which is the safest and best. I have heard an expert say, in my hearing, that the side ladders were decidedly dangerous, that a man in climbing or swinging from a side ladder ran a great risk in passing bridges or projections on a passing train. If that be so, I think it is the business of a board, constituted as this one is, to decide on that question after proper expert evidence, and for my part I would say once more that the cost is not to be considered for a moment, but that it be an instruction to the board to provide the best and safest appliances for this purpose that can be secured.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I said before that the equipment generally was left in the hands of the board, and I would call attention to the clause we have already passed, clause 25. It reads:

The board may make orders and regulations—

And it provides for the speed of trains, the safety of passengers passing from one car to another, shelter for employees, devices to prevent fire, devices to be used upon the railway so as to provide for the due protection of the employees and the safety of the public: so that I quite agree with all that has been said on the question, that the expense should not enter into the matter at all, and I do not believe it does with the railway companies. The hon. gentleman who spoke with reference to the correspondence produced was not present at the meeting the other day and did not hear that the railway on which Mr. Ingram was accustomed to work is a railway which does employ both side and end ladders, but its business is chiefly a through business, and the letter of the president of that company was read to those present, in which he pointed out that the reason of it was, not because they thought it better, but their business carried them into the States, where the law required that that should be. In some cases it was the side ladder that was required, and in some cases the end ladder, and in some cases both: so that in order to comply with the different requirements they had them all on. Their business being a through business, I can quite understand that Mr. Ingram would be educated that that was the best way to have them. But, on the other hand, we have had evidence of those who had used both, and it is quite plain that the question is one involved with difficulty and differences of opinion. I think, under the circumstances, the true plan is to leave this as one of the matters to be dealt with by the board under the heading that I have already read, subsection (f), or by inserting the words 'outside ladders.' -There would be then, in that same section, the direction the hon. senator from Montreal suggested, to provide means for the due protection of property, and the lives of the employees and the public. I therefore move to strike out subsection (a) of subsection 2, of clause 211, and will afterwards move the insertion of it in another place.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I hope this honourable House will not accede to the request of the hon. gentleman. I am in favour—and I think the majority of the House are in favour—of retaining the clause as it is. It was put in the Bill after a very long and exhaustive examination of the question. As the hon. senator from St. John has stated, the House of Commons, with a large number of men who have taken an interest in this matter, have had the matter under consideration, and evidence was taken and discussed five or six years ago. The result of their deliberations is embodied in this clause, and why should we undertake to retard this amelioration in the construction of cars, and hand over the decision whether it should be done or not to a body of men who will have less experience in these matters than the people who are asking for it. Why not grant it to the men who carry their lives in their hands on these trains? They are the men that are asking for this. They would never want or ask for a law that would bring death to them. Why do senators come to this House and state that side ladders will swing them to death? Does not the honourable House know that at present side ladders are partially in existence on every car? It is absolutely necessary to have a side ladder to enable the men to swing themselves on to the end ladder when the train is in motion. All they want is three other rungs added to the present incomplete side ladder so that they can go to the top of the car either by the side or end. When a train is in motion, a trainman or brakeman cannot go between two cars and climb to the top. How often have I seen trainmen in the yards when the train is moving swing themselves on the rung on the side of the car, and then swing themselves round to the rear of the car; so that practically all the men are asking is for this House to say that three more rungs shall be put on the side to bring them to the top of the car, and I see no reason or necessity to leave this matter in abeyance. The men who are interested, the men who carry their lives in their hands in the discharge of their work, are the men whose prayer we should listen to, and they certainly do not come to this House to have a law passed which will endanger their lives. I am prepared to affirm, as the hon. Secretary of State and the hon. member for St. John, that this measure of relief should be granted at their request, and that the clause compelling the railroad companies to construct box-cars with side and end ladders be adopted as printed in this Act.

The paragraph, as printed, was adopted.

On clause 237, subclause 4,

4. When any cattle or other animals at large upon the highway or otherwise, get upon the property of the company and are killed or injured by a train, the owner of any such animal so killed or injured shall be entitled to recover the amount of such loss or injury against the company in any action in any court of competent jurisdiction, unless the company, in the opinion of the court or jury trying the case, establishes that such animal got at large through the negligence or wilful act or omission of the owner or his agent, or of the custodian of such animal or his agent; but the fact that such animal was not in charge of some competent person or persons shall not, for the purposes of this subsection, deprive the owner of his right to recover. Sub. for 53 V., c. 28, s. 2.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Up to the present time it has been my painful duty to vote against the interests of the railway companies, but in this case the interests of the railway companies are identical with the interests of the public. This clause is objectionable on various grounds. In the first place, it is quite inconsistent with the 1st and 2nd subsections of this same clause, 237. In the next place, it does not matter how the cattle get on the road, the owner is entitled to recover, unless the company are able to establish that the animals got at large through the wilful neglect of the owner. In nine cases out of ten it would be utterly impossible for the railway company to establish this fact as respects the owner of the cattle. One can readily understand that if this clause in its present form were to become law, we should have a great many cattle sold to the railway company in that way. Cattle would, in the most mysterious way, get on the track, and the owner would know nothing about it. The cattle would be killed and the railway company be obliged to pay for them. That is an unsatisfactory condition of things, but what is still more unsatisfactory is that the risk to the travelling public would be very much increased indeed. If every owner of cattle finds that should his cattle get on the railway track and be killed, he can recover handsome damages from the company, I am afraid that people who travel on the railway will need to hold accident policies to a much greater extent than they do now. The question involved in this clause has been considered in the past. We discussed it at some length, I know, in the Senate on two occasions, in 1888 when the General Railway Act was passed, and again in 1890; and I propose to move that we strike out the 4th subclause and insert subsection 3 of section 2 of the Act of 1890, which is as follows:—

3. If the company omits to erect and complete as aforesaid any fence or cattle guard, or if, after it is completed, the company neglects to maintain the same as aforesaid, and if, in consequence of such omission or neglect, any animal gets upon the railway from an adjoining place where, under the circumstances, it might properly be, then the company shall be liable to the owner of every such animal for all damages in respect of it caused by any of the company's trains or engines; and no animal allowed by law to run at large shall be held to be improperly on a place adjoining the railway, merely for the reason that the owner or occupant of such place has not permitted it to be there.

Now these last words may seem rather remarkable, but they are intended to provide for this case: in the maritime provinces, and I suppose the same is true to a certain extent in other parts of the country, neighbours' cattle are allowed very often to mix up with one another, and are sometimes on the land of one owner and sometimes on the land of another. Strictly speaking, under the Act of 1888, if the cattle got on the track from the land of some person other than their owner, the owner could not recover, and these last words were put in to provide for such a case, that any animal allowed by law to run at large should not be held to be improperly on a place adjoining the railway, &c. This is a reasonable clause, which was carefully considered and which protects the interest of the cattle owner, and does not do gross injustice to the railway company. I therefore move that subclause 4 of this clause be struck out, and the clause which I have read be substituted for it.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I beg to support the motion of the hon. the Speaker, and to say that my interests lie entirely in the direction of getting paid for any animals killed by the railway. I have a much larger interest in stock than I have in railways, and I am bound to say that there is great force in what has been said by the Speaker as to the risk to the travelling public if animals get on the road. I can give one or two experiences of my own. I was travelling once in Cuba when the train on which I was, ran over a large pair of working oxen, and the dead animals ridden over by the engine, which kept the track, caught the front truck of the car immediately in front of me and ripped the whole bottom out of it. It so happened there was not a soul in that car; but if there had been a single individual in it, he would have been killed. I was once in a city in Illinois, and was riding with the manager of a railway. We twice, during the course of a short trip, bowled some fat hogs off the line into the ditch, and he told me—this is proof of another remark made by the Speaker—to the effect that if compensation were readily granted, it would be an inducement to let cattle trespass on a railway and get killed.

Now, I was told as a fact that that railway, a line about 100 miles long, paid $30,000 a year for cattle killed on the track—that innumerable cases had been found of persons putting salt between the tracks to attract the cattle to go on the track, in order to get old or useless stock killed. Now, that cannot be done without a serious risk to travellers on railways, and I hope we will take care, while doing justice to everybody, that we do not offer inducements by any act of ours to have cattle either less carefully attended to, or deliberately brought to destruction upon the line. There is another reason why this clause should be struck out, the fact that it is entirely inconsistent with the earlier parts of the clause. The clause provides for cases where animals are trespassing within a certain distance of a crossing or doing so illegally. Another clause says that under such circumstances there shall be no right of compensation or action, and then comes in this last subclause which upsets what was previously stated.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I earnestly hope that the amendment of the Speaker will be adopted. I have been endeavouring to study this clause, and I must confess that it would be exceedingly unfair to railway companies to pass a clause of this kind. It provides, no matter how perfect the company's fence may be, complying with the arrangement as to height and everything else, and although they have the very best kind of trestle crossings to prevent cattle getting on the line, if cattle which are at large illegally jump the crossing and get on the track and are killed, the railway company has to pay for it. I think it is extremely hard legislation. I agree with the hon. gentleman from Montreal. I am willing to see that the railway companies pay for cattle that are killed through their fences or their cattle-guards not being sufficient, but this makes provision where cattle are at large—where they are running in contravention of the law—that if while they are so running at large they break the fence or jump the guard and get on the railway track and are killed, the company has to pay for it. I think it is extreme legislation, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I intended drawing the attention of the Senate to an amendment which was suggested by the ex-Minister of Railways, and which commends itself to my judgment as superior to the one which was adopted by the House of Commons, and which is now incorporated as subsection 4 of this clause. I cannot admit the principle underlying the whole of that clause, which throws the responsibility on the railway of establishing that the farmer or owner of the cattle was negligent in allowing his cattle to be at large in order to escape the responsibility. It seems to me that it is asking the railways to do a thing which they will never be in a position to do. Cattle will be killed a few acres or half a mile from a public road, and how is the company to know how long they have been astray, or where they come from. The animal killed will not have the name of its owner attached to its neck, the company will not be in a position to trace back the ownership of that animal, to find if it was the negligent act of the owner that brought it on the track. The company will generally know the name of the owner when a claim is made against it. It seems to me we should leave the responsibility where it lies, and accept the amendment which was moved by the ex-Minister of Railways. I have not under my eye the section cited by the hon. Speaker, which he has suggested as a substitute for subsection 4, and I am not ready to say that it is superior to the one which I have. The one that I will now read seems to be very fair and liberal for the owner of cattle killed :

4. Whenever any cattle, at large upon the highway or otherwise, get upon the property of the company and are killed or injured by a train, the owner of such cattle so killed or injured, shall be entitled to recover the amount of such loss or injury against the company in an action in any court of competent jurisdiction, if in the opinion of the judge who tries the action, such cattle got at large without any negligent or wilful act or omission of the owner or his agent, or of the custodian of such cattle or his agent, and got upon the railway by reason of fences, gates and cattle-guards not being erected and maintained by the company as required by this Act.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—That is reasonable.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I do not know if it would not be better to let these amendments stand until to-morrow in order that we might compare them.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—Decide it now.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I move that subclause 4 be replaced by the one I have just read.

Hon. Mr. POWER—As long as the end is reached, I do not care which amendment is adopted.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The wording of that is not altogether correct. The hon. gentleman uses the word 'cattle.' What about horses ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Under the interpretation clause horses are included.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Supposing I had a dog worth a thousand dollars, and it got on the road and got killed, I think there should be some compensation.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It would be well to use the word 'animals.' The wording of the old section was 'cattle or other animals.' With the change I think it is a very good section.

The amendment was agreed to.

On clause 239,

239. The company shall at all times maintain and keep its right of way free and clear of all inflammable matter.

2. Whenever damage is caused to crops, lands, fences, plantations, or buildings and their contents, by fire started by a railway locomotive, the company making use of such locomotive shall be liable for such damage and may be sued for the recovery of the amount of such damage in any court of competent jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I think it is a rather difficult thing for railway companies to keep their right of way clear of inflammable matter. We are imposing, in some cases, almost an impossibility on the railway company. If it said 'as much as possible' I would not object, but these two first lines are really unnecessary.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What constitutes 'inflammable matter' ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—All their buildings would be inflammable matter.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I know that during the grain season, with elevators along the track and cleaners working, and the wind blowing in different directions on different days, the track very often becomes covered in places with very inflammable matter in the shape of chaff, and light stuff blown from the grain. They would have to keep a broom sweeping all the time in our section to keep the track clear under this clause. I do not think the words are of any use

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—It would include sheds, stations, platforms, piles of ties,—in fact everything which is accustomed to be kept on the right of way and has to be.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It has been suggested to me that the following words be substituted :

The company shall at all times maintain and keep its right of way free from dead grass, weeds and other unnecessary inflammable rubbish.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Leave out 'inflammable.' To leave it clear means everything —keep the way free and clear.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—The preceding section covers weeds.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—That applies to noxious weeds. We know railways are a very fruitful source of spreading noxious weeds over the country, on account of freight cars being loaded where noxious weeds prevail.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—The term which should be used is 'combustible,' not 'inflammable.'

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Does the hon. gentleman mean to apply this clause to chaff that is blown out of a threshing machine ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—How are you to define the word 'rubbish' ? Matter is a better word.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I understood the hon. gentleman from Killarney to say that chaff is sometimes blown on the track. Does the amendment require the railway company to keep the tracks clear of chaff ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, it would.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It is for the House to determine the meaning of the amendment.

I referred to chaff blown from the elevators to show how difficult it was for the railway companies to keep their track at all time free from inflammable matter.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why not permit the law to stand as it is to-day for redress in the event of the company causing damage through negligence? If by reason of their carelessness they permit accumulations of any inflammable matter which should be removed, they are responsible. It is a matter for the court and jury to decide. We cannot describe the class of matter which they must remove. The rights of the public are much better protected by letting the law stand as it is, because if you attempt to describe the sort of matter which should be removed, you by implication permit any not mentioned to remain.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—How would this phrase do: 'to keep away any matter liable to be easily ignited'?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—How would this do:

The company shall at all times maintain and keep its right of way free and clear of all matter dangerous to the public interest.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That would include, I suppose, a locomotive?

The clause was amended and adopted.

On subclause 2,

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Fires arise from many other causes than through the negligence of the company, and would not this clause hold the company responsible in all cases? The least we could do would be to throw the responsibility on the company if such fires occur through the negligence of the company, either by not providing proper protection on their locomotive stacks, or from any other cause.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The suggestion would defeat entirely the object of this subclause. This was inserted because it has been maintained for a great number of years that a railway company, being a statutory corporation, and being authorized to operate railways, are not responsible for acts of that kind. Provided they used the ordinary means and precautions, if fire is caused by sparks from the engine, they are not responsible. It is not treated as a case of negligence, but this clause is intended to subject the company to the English Common Law. They are authorized by statute to operate a railway and are responsible if they cause damage by negligence or otherwise, even if it is not through defective or improper apparatus used by the company. It is quite unnecessary to spend a great deal of time on this clause, because it caused a great deal of discussion in the other House, and if this clause is removed they will not accept the amendment. I think it is a fair clause. If a railway company by sparks from their engine cause my building to be destroyed, it seems to me the railway company should be responsible. There are means now of providing protection against things of that kind, and the railway companies should adopt them, and if they do not, they should bear the consequences.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do I understand the object of this clause to be to provide for cases of fire, which may occur, though the company may have complied with all the provisions of the law?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes,

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the effect, whether it is the object or not. There are certain provisions of the law which the companies are compelled to carry out for the prevention of fire. This clause, if I understand it, goes this far, that though the company may have provided all the protection that is required by law, if a fire occurs, they would be held responsible.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Certainly.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The law of England and the law of Canada to-day is, and the law of most countries has been the same, that where a company is authorized by statute to use steam generated by fire, provided they use all the most modern and improved appliances to prevent any accident occurring, the company are not liable. If, for instance, the mesh of the smokestack screen was so large that it allowed sparks to escape, there is a clear case of negligence and the company were liable. If, on the contrary, the mesh was so fine that sparks of any magnitude that could cause danger could not escape, the company were not liable. If, however, the engineer raised the hood of his engine, and sparks escaped, and caused fire, the company would be liable. In the province of Quebec, under the civil law, it was the same as in the other provinces, and a case which went recently to the Privy Council—a case in appeal, in which that point arose—the Privy Council decided under the law in England, and as it has been in Canada. This caused a good deal of feeling in the province of Quebec, and the theory stated is this, that where fire occurs and neither party is the primary or immediate cause of the accident, the one that caused the accident is the one that ought to stand the damage, even though the best appliances were used to prevent the fire. Now, this clause makes the company liable in all cases.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—As has been explained by the hon. the Secretary of State, the case of Roy and the Canadian Pacific Railway has created a good deal of discussion, and unnecessary discussion. The common law of the province of Quebec is similar in that respect to the common law of England. As I stated a moment ago, under the common law of England, any party who is the occasion of damage to his neighbour, is responsible for it, the same as in the province of Quebec. You are responsible for your own acts, for the acts of your servant, and for the acts of your animals if any damage is caused to me by yourself, your servants or your animals. But it has been held by the Privy Council—it was no new doctrine, it was held 50 years ago in a great number of cases—that when a company is operating under a statutory provision, they are protected by that statutory provision to this extent: that their liability is limited. Their liability is involved only when they fail to use the ordinary means for carrying on their business, but if they use the ordinary means for carrying on their business, if they use the ordinary means and precaution in carrying on their business they are not responsible. This doctrine has been held by the Privy Council and the House of Lords for a number of years in cases of railways and other establishments which are obnoxious in their nature and cause damage to adjoining property, and the object of this clause is to deal with railway companies as if they were not protected by statute, as any other person.

The subclause was adopted.

On clause 267,

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—This is the clause in reference to which I have given notice of an amendment to include government railways, bringing them under the jurisdiction of the board as far as through traffic is concerned. I beg to move that the:

5. Notwithstanding anything in section three of this Act, this section and the next preceding section shall apply to the traffic on government railways and vessels connected therewith.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I suggest that we add the words 'Dominion government railways.'

Hon. Mr. POWER—Why not make it apply to provincial railways?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. POWER—My hon. friend argued in a convincing manner for an hour that these clauses should apply to provincial government railways.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman will not find me as inconsistent as that. My mind was directed merely to the fact that a government railway was not defined. If it is suggested that a provincial railway be included let us say so, and for my part I will support it. Of course, I am not bearing all these clauses in my mind, I am not quite sure whether they refer to through traffic. If they refer to through traffic, I am of opinion that provincial government railways should be comprised, but let us say so.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I have no objection to the word 'Dominion.' I do not think it will do any harm, but it is not used in subsection 3, where we are referring to precisely the same words.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The word 'traffic' under the interpretation clause includes passengers, goods and rolling stock. I understand this matter was discussed in the House of Commons and opposed strongly by the Railway Department.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it should be limited to the freight traffic.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—These through rates may have the effect of increasing the rates on the government railway. The effect of a through rate will be to raise the proportion payable in respect of the government railways.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That the government railway would receive a larger moiety out of the through rate than they get now ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think that would not be a bad thing.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The question is whether that is what members from the lower provinces are anxious to get ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it should be restricted to freights. I have in my mind freight traffic—not passenger traffic. Leave that to be adjusted by the managers themselves.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think it should include passengers as well as freight. The through traffic referred to in clauses 66 and 67 is the through traffic including passengers and freight, and I think it should include both.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no necessity. A passenger can buy a ticket through on the Intercolonial and pay his fare on the Intercolonial, but it is different with freight. If the freight is going from one road to another, somebody must adjust the freight rate.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The board do it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If the hon. gentleman insists, I shall call for a vote on the question. There is a difference between passengers and freight. In the case of freight a consignment goes forward and there is no one in advance to adjust the proportion to each railway. I presume in the past that the Minister of Railways had his officers to look after that, but now when it is placed under a commission the commission will supersede the Minister of Railways, as far as the traffic is concerned passing from one road to another, and it is only reasonable and proper that we should make some provision for the portion each road is entitled to receive, but it should not apply to passengers.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Is it the intention to bring the government railways within the scope of this Act ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto).

Hon. Mr. KERR—If it is not, I want to point out that this is the clause which is practically going to do so, and I think it is a question to be determined. I understand that question was presented in the Commons. I have not had time to look it up. I understand there was a definite policy with reference to it, and the government railways were excluded altogether, and on this ground, that if it is a necessary thing to do, the government have the power of dealing with the board without its being in the statute at all. If the government of the day do not determine to do it, they do not want the clause in. If they do intend to accede to a through rate fixed by the board, it is open to them to do it without its being compulsory. We are dealing with companies who are acting now and controlled now independently of any government control, and therefore, it is necessary to make obligatory all provisions with reference to them. In the case of government roads, as I understand it, there is no necessity to do that, because the government are here to meet the board at any time where it is proper and reasonable that they should do so.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There could possibly be some way of getting over the difficulty by the government acting with the board, but the difficulty still exists, and the simple process provided in clauses 266 and 267 is that when any company—that would mean any of these railways that would be interested in a joint or a through rate down to the eastern provinces—would make an application to the board, the board could then proceed and deal with it without referring to anybody. They would have to get the consent of the government, and as the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry pointed out last evening, in his opinion, even if they got that consent, it would not be operative, that he could not operate it. In my humble opinion, if the government railways are not included in the way of making a joint tariff, it would just simply block the making of a joint tariff altogether and there are, if I am right, some six or seven railway companies in the lower provinces that could not be reached by a joint tariff, or could only be reached with a great deal of difficulty. My hon. friend from Toronto seems to fear that the effect of it might be to increase the rate on the Intercolonial Railway. If that would be the effect of it, I would not be making such a proposition, for we are interested in as low rates as we can get in the maritime provinces, but I know this proposition has nothing to do with increasing this rate and nothing to do with other rates. It only provides that if the railways cannot agree among themselves as to the pro rata distribution of a through rate, then the commision may come in and fix the distribution and give each road its moiety. It is not at all improbable, if the statement is correct—and I dare say it is—that there is a lower tariff of charges upon the Intercolonial Railway than upon other routes, that the effect of this might be that the Intercolonial Railway might get a little better out of the through rate than they have been getting in the past. It would enable the Intercolonial to get a little better than they have been getting in the past, but it could not possibly have the effect of making the rates higher. Certainly I will not insist on my view if that is all my hon. friend will agree to. I hope he will not hastily decide that. Why should there be any difficulty in people in the maritime provinces getting a through rate to any place in Canada. We have had such difficulties before, and I do not see why a through rate for passengers and freight should not be arranged, and the easy way to have it arranged is to put it under the board. If there is anything in the point my hon. friend from Toronto raised about locomotives, there could be an arrangement that it would apply except as to locomotives. If there is anything in that it can be amended.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We exclude the Intercolonial Railway from the operation of the Act by clause three, and I understand that this point was discussed in the House of Commons, though I was not aware of that before.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I never heard of it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did not either. In view of that, I should not desire to depart from any conclusions reached in reference to this question, because the Intercolonial Railway was excepted from the Bill to begin with ; whether it was wise or prudent to do so is not a matter open to consideration.

The clause was amended and adopted.

On clause 275, subclause 3,

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I gave notice of an amendment to this clause. I beg to move that the following words be inserted after the word 'press':

Or to such other persons as the board may, by general order, approve of or permit.

There is a little change in one word suggested to me.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I made a motion in amendment to that same clause when it was up yesterday, and I desire now to give notice that I will submit it when the motion for the third reading of the Bill is moved. That matter was voted on yesterday and I desire to give this notice now.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—I move that the word 'company' be substituted for 'board.' If a special deputation or visit by strangers took place, is the company, which perhaps would have only an hour's notice, to have to go to the board, and ask their permission before giving free passage to them ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The board may make regulations covering such cases.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—The whole of the clause gives permission to the company to do certain things.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—If it does not interfere with the operation of the Act, I have no objection.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I suggested to add to the last line of the subsection the words 'extended or.' That would enable the board to make regulations and deal with all these matters.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—As I read it, this clause puts it in the power of the company to permit certain things. Why should an exception be made when the meaning of it is to extend privileges and hospitality under certain conditions ? Should they be compelled to carry it out or not ? The same principle which goes through the whole of this clause should be extended to this particular subclause, and it could be attained by the use of the word 'companies.'

The clause was amended and adopted.

On clause 276,

276. When the company, owns, charters, uses, maintains or works, or is a party to any arrangement for using, maintaining or working vessels for carrying traffic, by sea or by water, between any places or ports in Canada, the provisions of this Act in respect of tolls shall, so far as they are applicable, extend to such vessels and to the traffic carried thereby.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I move that the words in the last line of this clause 'to such vessels and,' be struck out. It is not necessary that the tolls should be extended to the vessel.

Hon. Mr. POWER—We heard the representatives of the railway companies, but I did not understand that they came to any conclusion on this subject. Take the case of steamers which ply between Thunder bay and Georgian bay. The whole journey from the interior of the country, through to Montreal is one voyage or journey, and it is right and proper that this board should have control over the portion of the journey which is by water as well as over that which is by land. The provisions of this Bill in respect to tolls and particularly where there is so much wheat carried, should, so far as they are applicable, extend to the vessels and the traffic carried thereby. Considering that the greater part of the wheat is carried by water, it is a very important thing that the provisions of this Bill should apply so far as they are applicable.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I do not deny they should apply so far as the tolls are concerned, but why should they apply to the vessels which are a separate thing altogether ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—The provisions of the Bill are to apply only so far as they are applicable to vessels and the traffic carried thereby. That is all in the interest of the public, and we had better retain it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Will my hon. friend point out wherein this board has any jurisdiction or authority over vessels ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is given here.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is only intended to apply to tolls. Why not express it so ?

Hon. Mr. BAKER—The object would be attained by striking out the words 'to such vessels and.'

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—The clause is expressly restricted to the tolls, and how is that to be applicable to the vessels ? The clause is applicable to freight alone, and I cannot imagine how the vessels come in at all, and I cannot see how the board could interfere with them.

The committee divided on the amendment which was adopted. Contents 16, non-contents 13.

The clause as amended was adopted.

On clause 284,

Hon. Mr. POWER—If the House will permit me I shall move an amendment to substitute the following for clause 284 :

284. The directors may at any time make and enter into any agreement or arrangement with any other company either in Canada or elsewhere for the regulation and interchange of traffic over the said railways respectively, or for either of those objects separately, and for the division and apportionment of tolls in respect of such traffic.

2. The directors may also make and enter into any agreement or arrangement for the running of the trains of one company over the tracks of another company not inconsistent with the provisions of this or the special Act, and generally in relation to the management and working of the railways or any of them or any part thereof, and of any railway or railways in connection therewith, for any term not exceeding twenty-one years, and for providing, either of proxy or otherwise, for the appointment of a joint committee for the better carrying into effect any such agreement or arrangement, with such powers and functions as are considered necessary and expedient.

Provided that any agreement for a period greater than one year shall be subject to the like consent of the shareholders, the sanction of the Governor in Council upon the recommendation of the board, application, notices and filing as provided in section 281 with respect to amalgamation, agreements, except that publication of notices in the 'Canada Gazette' shall be sufficient, and that the duplicate original of such agreement or arrangement shall, upon being sanctioned, be filed with the board.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Would the hon. gentleman kindly explain the difference between the amendment and the clause in the Bill as it stands ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the original law it involves this ; if a temporary arrangement was made for a week or a month, you had to give the notice in the Canada 'Gazette,' and it was thought where the arrangement did not extend beyond one year, it would not be necessary to call the shareholders together to approve of it, but where it was for a longer term than one year, the shareholders should give their approval.

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. FULFORD, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill, and asked leave to sit again.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Thursday, September 3, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

CANADIAN TRANSPORTATION AND STORAGE COMPANY BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND, from the Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported Bill (176) 'An Act to incorporate the Canadian Transportation and Storage Company,' with amendments. He said: The report sets forth the narrative of the progress of the Bill sufficiently to obviate the necessity of any remarks of mine. I have only to add that the amendments were merely a change of two words, from Canada to Ontario, and the effect was to restrict the operations of this company to the province of Ontario and foreign countries. The members of the committee are sufficiently seized of the circumstances to enable them to deal with the question now. I move the adoption of the report.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I move that the consideration of this report be taken up to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I should like to ask the hon. gentleman who is making this motion to put it off till after the adjournment. We have other business to do and members will be away to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—From what I know of this Bill, I think it is an exceedingly important one, and we should endeavour to deal with it at as early an hour as possible. It is very important that we should encourage and facilitate the organization of transportation companies on our great lakes, and in my humble opinion it is very much wanted. We should endeavour to meet the request of the promoter of this Bill at the earliest hour possible.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I want the hon. gentleman to understand that I am not opposed to the Bill, but before it is discussed I should like to have some explanations about it and I should prefer to have it discussed after the adjournment.

The SPEAKER—Will the hon. gentleman from Toronto agree to the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman from Sorel?

Hon. Mr. KERR—I would be very glad to do that or to meet the convenience of any member of the Senate, but what I am afraid of is that unless we get in a position to be able to go on with the Bill, we may be put in a difficulty. It is not a Bill I am responsible for. I was only asked yesterday to look after it, and I am anxious on that account that there should be no delay in the consideration of this report. I do not intend to move an amendment to this report. The only amendment is the one which was effected on the motion of the hon. senator and that might be taken up to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Does the hon. gentleman intend to pass the Bill as amended?

Hon. Mr. KERR—I do not intend, as far as I am concerned, to move anything in amendment to what is reported from committee. Whether those interested in the Bill, who really should be here to take charge of it, will offer any amendment, is a matter about which I do not want to commit myself. I am not in a position to speak.

The motion was agreed to.

THE MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER:

In view of the many declarations made by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Premier of Canada, and his colleagues in the cabinet, that the Manitoba school question had been amicably and finally settled, calls the attention of the government, first, to the following resolutions passed at a 'mass meeting' of 'the Catholics of Winnipeg, held in Catholic Club room' of that city, on the 21st day of June, 1903, as follows:—

'Whereas the Lords of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council of the British government, in a judgment delivered on the 29th January, 1895, declared that the right or privilege which the Roman Catholic minority previously enjoyed had been affected by the Manitoba legislature of 1890.

'Whereas, acting on that decision of the Privy Council, the government of the Dominion of Canada and of the province of Mantoba have, by arrangement, enacted certain amendments to the School Act of 1890 (generally known as the Laurier-Greenway Manitoba school settlement), purporting to redress the grievance of the said Roman Catholic minority of Manitoba.

'Whereas, the said agreement effected betwen the federal and the provincial governments has been proven defective, imperfect and insufficient, some few only of the school districts where the Catholics practically form the total of the ratepayers, having been able to take some slight advantage of it, and that only by the good-will of the local government; whilst in those of mixed population, where the Protestants are in a majority, no benefit whatever can be derived from the so-called school settlement.

'Whereas, the Catholics of Winnipeg in particular have seen their repeated efforts to obtain redress frustrated by the persistent refusal of the City School Board to entertain their just demands.

'And whereas, they have had now for more than twelve years to pay double taxes, one for the building up and support of the public schools of Winnipeg, the other for the maintenance of their own schools.

'Be it resolved, that we, Catholics of Winnipeg, in public meeting assembled, consider it our duty to put it on record that our grievance in school matters has so far in no way been redressed.

'Be it further resolved, that Messrs. J. G. Carroll, T. D. Deegan, P. Marrin, N. Bawlf, F. W. Russell and M. McManus, be a committee, with power to add to their number, to approach the local government and lay before the hon. the Premier of Manitoba our grievances, with the prayer for redress, and that in the event of the said local government refusing or showing unwillingness to grant our just demands, two of the members of said committee be instructed to proceed at once to Ottawa with a view to laying the matter before the federal government and to pray the Governor General in Council not to permit the aggrieved minority of Manitoba to suffer any longer unjust treatment, under which they have now laboured for more than twelve years.

'P. Marrin seconded, and the motion was unanimously carried.

'It is understood the committee will immediately proceed to carry out their instructions.'

2. To an interview between the gentlemen composing the deputation referred to in the foregoing resolutions and the Hon. Mr. Roblin, Premier of Manitoba, at which the said Premier of Manitoba, after listening to a statement of their case and their demand for relief, replied:

'Gentlemen,—I regret that you have felt it necessary to make the request you have just made. I would very much have preferred that some satisfactory arrangement had been reached between the school board of Winnipeg and yourselves. I say this because I have before me the recommendation to Council by the then Attorney General, Mr. Cameron, under date November 25, 1896, signed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, representing the Dominion, on the one side, and Hon. Clifford Sifton, representing the province, on the other. You will notice that it reads: "A final settlement," which leaves the province no option in the matter. I am, therefore, unable to make you any promise. I don't think it is necessary for me to say anything more, but in courtesy, and also as, I presume, a matter of right, to give you this data I have before me.'

3. To the following report of an interview between the Premier and the Minister of Justice and Messrs. Deegan and Russell:—

'Ottawa, August 4.—Messrs. Deegan and Russell, representatives of the Roman Catholic minority in Winnipeg, had a meeting with Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Fitzpatrick to-day, at which all the grievances of the separate school supporters in that city were threshed out. The Prime Minister deferred his answer till Thursday, when he will reply in writing to the memorial of the delegates.'

4. And to the following editorial article which appeared in 'Le Temps,' a ministerial journal published in Ottawa, on the 11th of August, 1903:—

(Translation.)

'THE CATHOLIC DELEGATION.

'Messrs. Deegan and Russell, delegates from the Catholics of Winnipeg to the federal gvernment, have left Ottawa within the last few days after several interviews with Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

'They carry with them the written answer of the Prime Minister, an answer which they have not communicated to the press.

'It is not difficult, however, to form an idea of the general sense of this answer, for the federal government can only declare itself powerless to interfere henceforth in the solution of a question which depends solely upon the provincial government of Manitoba. And it seems, as well, that the delegates from the Catholics of Winnipeg perfectly understood the situation.'

The declarations of Mr. Deegan to a Toronto journalist are instructive in this respect.

These are the terms in which Mr. T. D. Deegan expressed himself:

'The object of the delegation was to ask the federal government to come to an understanding with the Manitoba government as to the legal condition in which the Catholic minority of Manitoba finds itself under the rule of the school law. We do not propose to ourselves to reopen the old school question. That is settled and past, and we do not seek to bring the government to do anything whatsoever in the sense of a remedial law. We have simply asked the government to use its authority to make the government of Manitoba recognize our legal condition with regard to the existing legislation.'

And moved:

That His Excellency the Governor General in Council be respectfully requested to cause to be laid upon the Table of the Senate a copy of the agreement referred to by the Hon. Mr. Roblin, in his interview with the gentlemen who composed the Catholic deputation, as having been entered into and signed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, representing the Dominion government, on one side, and Hon. Mr. Clifford Sifton, representing the province of Manitoba, on the other side, together with a copy of the 'reply given in writing to the memorial of the delegates, by the Premier, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and the Minister of Justice, the Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick,' and that, if no written reply was given by the Premier, the Senate be informed of the character of the demands made by said deputation, and of the answer given, or of the action taken thereon, by the Premier and the Minister of Justice.

He said: My object in placing this motion upon the Order paper was to get information on a matter in which the public interest is involved, and also to express my views upon certain statements quoted in that motion.

We have very often been told that the school question was settled. When the transaction which is continually presented to us as a settlement, was effected, the minority lost no time in protesting against that transaction, which has settled nothing. Since then we have persistently protested and suffered. Nevertheless we have been again and again told that the minority should be satisfied. Now we have an important body of men emphatically declaring that this so-called settlement has entirely failed to give any redress to their well-founded grievances. Even in the localities where some slight advantages have been taken of it by the minority, these advantages are due only to the good-will of the provincial authorities, and not to the so-called settlement itself. Here is what they say:

'The said agreement effected between the federal and provincial governments has been proven defective, imperfect and insufficient; some few only of the school districts where the Catholics practically form the total of the ratepayers, having been able to take some slight advantage of it, and that only by the good-will of the local government; whilst in those of mixed population where the Protestants are in a majority, no benefit whatever can be derived from the so-called school settlement.

'The Catholics of Winnipeg in particular have seen their repeated efforts to obtain redress frustrated by the persistent refusal of the city school board to entertain their just demands.

'They have had now for more than twelve years to pay double taxes, one for the building up and support of the public schools of Winnipeg, the other for the maintenance of their own schools.'

No wonder then that the Catholics of Winnipeg have considered it to be their 'duty to put it on record that their grievances in school matters have so far in no way been redressed.'

After having so expressed themselves, the Catholics of Winnipeg went to the local authorities with the view of getting some relief. They were met by this answer from the provincial Premier, Mr. Roblin:

Gentlemen,—I regret that you have felt it necessary to make the request you have just made. I would very much have preferred that some satisfactory arangement had been reached between the school board of Winnipeg and yourselves. I say this because I have before me the recommendation to Council by the then Attorney General, Mr. Cameron, under date November 25, 1896, signed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, representing the Dominion on the one side, and Hon. Clifford Sifton, representing the province, on the other. You will notice that it reads: 'A final settlement' which leaves the province no option in the matter. I am, therefore, unable to make you any promise. I don't think it is necessary for me to say anything more, but in courtesy, and also as, I presume, a matter of right, to give you this data I have before me.

With respect to these statements, I wish to remark in the first place that it is somewhat strange that up to the present the document referred to has never been produced before this parliament, although repeatedly asked for. The results of the conference between the two governments have been published, and even enacted in some legislation. But the original document itself, signed by the Premier of Canada and Hon. Clifford Sifton, has never been laid before parliament. It should be produced together with the Orders of Council of both governments; for an exchange of such Orders in Council must have taken place between the two governments, and consequently this government is in a position to produce them all.

Now, as to the respective jurisdiction of the federal and of the provincial authorities, I must, with all deference to the opinions of others, place on record my own views.

In my opinion, the provincial legislature has still complete jurisdiction upon that subject. No settlement or legislation falling short of the requirements of the remedial order can put an end to the jurisdiction of either legislative body. And no one can assert that the so-called settlement is a compliance with the remedial order. Moreover, so long as this parliament has passed no remedial legislation, the jurisdiction of the province remains untouched.

It may be said that Mr. Roblin does not, in his answer, express anything to the contrary. But some one might infer from that answer that he does, and it is on account of this possibility that I feel bound to place on record my own views, in order that there may be no misconception of the true position in which the rights of the minority stand.

But having said so much as to the provincial jurisdiction, I must also maintain that this parliament has also full jurisdiction. There has been a remedial order passed. That remedial order is a final judgment, defining our rights. That judgment is the judgment in the case. It is final and binding upon all parties. It cannot be altered or rescinded by the Governor General in Council. Now, the local authorities having failed to comply with the requirements of the remedial order, their refusal has given jurisdiction to this parliament. So long as this refusal subsists, the jurisdiction continues. The last answer given by the Premier of Manitoba must itself be construed as being at least a neglect to give the proper redress to that long-standing grievance. And I must add, that the federal interference, with regard to the best interest of the minority and of the peace of the country at large, is the best way of settling that school question. The action of the federal authorities would be final, whilst the action of the provincial legislature would not, of its nature, be final. What a legislature would do, another legislature could undo.

Now, with respect to the statement of one of the delegates—Mr. Deegan—purporting to say that the school question is settled and past, I doubt very much that this gentleman has so expressed himself. I am sure that his words must have been inaccurately reported; because the minority in Manitoba does not regard the school question as settled.

Now, my motion is for the production of certain documents. I hope that the government will consent to lay those documents upon the Table of the Senate. They are important, and the public, as well as the minority, are entitled to have them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There was but one memo of the settlement made between the parties to whom the hon. gentleman refers, either in the end of 1896 or the beginning of 1897, which, as the hon. gentleman knows very well, was incorporated afterwards in a statute of the provincial legislature of Manitoba. The agreement my hon. friend has asked for several times, and it has always been produced. It is to be found in the appendices of the journals—I do not know whether it appears in the journals of this House, but certainly it does in the journals of the House of Commons, and I think my hon. friend is in possession of that agreement. I sympathize very much with him in the unfortunate position of the minority in Manitoba, but the federal government has used all its influences to make the terms of the settlement as fair, as reasonable and as just to the minority as possible. More could not be done. It was hoped that as time went on a more tolerant spirit would prevail, and that the majority would recognize that the minority had been guaranteed certain rights in the agreement under which Manitoba came into the union. We have been disappointed in that. No more pressure can be brought beyond the influence which one government can exercise with another in reference to the unfair treatment the minority have received, and that has been exercised. The hon. gentleman says the subject is entirely under the control of the province, and it is open to the province to make any change they please.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I did not say it was entirely under the control of the local government. I said the province has jurisdiction, but I did not say it was entirely under their control.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I take issue with my hon. friend there, I say it is absolutely and exclusively under the control of the provincial legislature. We know the subject of education at the time of confederation was remitted to the provincial governments.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—With a limitation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Unfortunately, the Privy Council, in my judgment—I have often expressed it before, and I do not hesitate to express it again—did not correctly interpret the constitution as we ourselves understood it, and as we had worked under it some thirty years. That was a great misfortune, and subsequently an effort was made to redress the unfortunate action that had been taken, but it was a failure. I am not going to discuss broadly the condition, but the remedy lies entirely with the legislature of the province of Manitoba. Now, so far as the last interview between the Premier and the delegates from Winnipeg is concerned, no written reply was given. I was not present at the interview; it was entirely confidential, and I am not aware of what passed. I asked the Premier if he would put me in possession of the facts so that I could give an answer to the hon. gentleman, but he said the interview was a confidential one, and what had occurred had not transpired from the delegates themselves, and he would not make it public, as it was understood it would not be made public. I lay a copy of the settlement on the Table. My hon. friend has had it.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It is hard for me to understand the object of the hon. gentleman in reviving, at this late day, the question of the settlement of the school difficulty in Manitoba, and trying if possible to make it an issue, I suppose, in politics, because during a very recent election in Manitoba this question was thoroughly discussed in the constituencies that were supposed to be almost exclusively Catholic. Of course, I am not a lawyer, and do not pretend to discuss this from a legal standpoint, but having been a member of the Manitoba Government at that time, I have some knowledge of the negotiation, and it was considered a satisfactory solution of the difficulty as far as the Manitoba people were concerned when the government at Ottawa agreed not to carry out the remedial order made by the late Conservative government on the province of Manitoba, providing they would agree to give certain concessions to the Catholic minority in Manitoba. These concessions consisted of allowing a Catholic teacher where there were a certain number of Catholic children, and I may say that the best evidence that that agreement was satisfactory is the fact that almost every district outside of the city of Winnipeg has been working under the provisions of the Act, and it has been very satisfactory, very little complaint being heard outside of Winnipeg. I think there are some eighty odd schools working under the provisions of the Act. I should be very sorry to suppose that the Manitoba government were so far forgetting their duties as a government as to allow any schools to be conducted contrary to the law of the land. Yet that is exactly what the hon. gentleman stated here to-day. He said that by the grace and leniency of the Manitoba government, these schools were able to exist to-day. I know that was not the case when the late Greenway government were in power. This law was then in force, before they retired from office, and has been in force since, and I trust it has been observed. I can see no other reason for bringing this matter before parliament except as an excuse for bringing up the answer given by the Premier of the province of Manitoba, because it must be apparent to every member of this House, when the Premier made the answer to the delegation, that this matter was out of his hands. He found the agreement signed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier on one hand and the Hon. Clifford Sifton on the other hand, which took the matter entirely out of his hands. A more absurd statement or answer to give to a delegation would be hard to understand, because we all know that these matters are entirely under the control of the Manitoba legislature. They can repeal or can do anything they like with the School Act. The arrangement arrived at between Sir Wilfrid Laurier as Premier of the Dominion government and the Hon. Mr. Sifton, representing the Manitoba government at that time, on the other hand, was an understanding between the government of that day and the government of Manitoba that so far as they were concerned, if these concessions were made, there would be no remedial legislation; because it must be admitted that the federal authority have power to pass such legislation. I can assure the hon. gentleman that the province of Manitoba would not submit to have the federal authority interfering with local matters of that description. So far as the school law is concerned, that is clearly within the jurisdiction of the province, and the people of Manitoba would never submit to any interference on the part of the federal authorities in a matter of local concern. During the recent election which I have spoken of, this matter was discussed, and in no place was it discussed more fully than in the constituency in which the senator who brought up this matter lives, St. Boniface, which is almost exclusively Catholic.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Oh, beg pardon.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—If there is a constituency in the province of Manitoba that is strongly Catholic, it is St. Boniface. It is the head of the church in Manitoba. The hon. gentleman's own son was a candidate there. I have no doubt he held the same views on this question as the hon. gentleman does, and as the hon. gentleman's views have been expressed on several occasions in this House, there is no uncertainty as to his position on this question, as evidenced by the resolution on the Order paper to-day. Notwithstanding that fact, the gentleman who opposed him, who was running as a supporter of the Greenway government, which effected this settlement, the Liberal candidate in that constituency, was elected against the hon. gentleman's own son.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—We will see about that.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I will not confine the opinions expressed by the people of Manitoba to one constituency; every constituency in the province of Manitoba, with the exception of one, where the Catholics were in a majority, returned the Liberal candidate. That is evidence that there is no far-reaching complaint on the part of the province of Manitoba against the settlement, and that it is confined to the city of Winnipeg. The City of Winnipeg School Board have had negotiations with the Catholic representatives in Winnipeg. There is no doubt the Catholics of Winnipeg, from choice, are paying a heavy tax, because, in addition to maintaining their own schools, they have to pay the regular school tax which goes to the maintenance of the public schools, because in Manitoba we have only one school law. A great majority of the Catholics of Winnipeg have seen fit—because I understand a large number of Catholics in Winnipeg go to public schools—to maintain separate schools. They have a choice. Any other denomination that wishes to do the same would have the same privilege. They could have their separate schools, but they must pay their taxes to the public schools. Now, in the city of Winnipeg the school board have offered to treat the Catholic minority very liberally, because the Catholics in Winnipeg have a certain number of schools belonging to the church, and I understand the School Board of Winnipeg offered to take over the Catholic children—I think there are some eight hundred of them—and educate them, and to take over any school property belonging to the Catholics in the city of Winnipeg which is suitable for school purposes. The school law provides that where there is a majority of Catholic children they can have a teacher. I understand the agreement was they were to take over any qualified teachers that were employed in the separate schools, required for the purpose of teaching the children, but the offer was refused when it came down to the fine point. I believe there is more politics in this than anything else. Some of these gentlemen would be out of a job in Winnipeg if it were not for the agitation in this matter. These gentlemen say: 'We have another objection; we insist that you not only take over our qualified teachers, but that they shall be allowed, when taken over, to wear the religious garb.' The trustees of Winnipeg would not agree to that. After what has taken place, I venture to say that the school board of the city of Winnipeg are bound to recognize the system of public schools, which are public schools in every sense of the word, and that they are not going to agree that a religious garb shall be allowed in any school. They could not do it, and if they did, I venture to say not one of them would be re-elected. It would be a mistake to do anything of the kind.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That has nothing to do with the motion.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Nothing to do with the motion.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think it has all to do with the motion, because with that one exception, I think everything the Catholics asked was conceded, and if that was granted, the Catholics of the city of Winnipeg to-day would not be in a position to require a delegation to come to Ottawa, or the hon. gentleman to make this motion before the senate. I do not wish to take up further time, but I do not think, from the experience of the past years, and the working of the school law as it exists to-day in Manitoba, that any gentleman would be able to revive it, and it will never be an issue in the House of Commons at Ottawa. The matter is settled, and the only reason the hon. gentleman can have for bringing it up to-day is for the purpose of making some showing of an excuse for the Premier of the province of Manitoba when he told the delegation that this matter was settled, and he had nothing to do with it, when everybody in this House, and in the House of Commons, and everybody in the legislative councils in the Dominion knows, that so far as the school laws are concerned, it is entirely under the control and jurisdiction of the local legislature. Mr. Roblin can repeal that whole school law; he can make any regulation he likes; he can provide that every school in the province shall be a separate school if he sees fit.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is one thing certainly that the hon. gentleman does not know.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—A good many things.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—And that is that he ignores completely the judgment rendered by the highest tribunal of the empire.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No, I do not.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—He wilfully ignores it. When the hon. gentleman comes here and says the Catholics of Manitoba have all they want he makes a statement which is not founded in fact. What did the Catholics of Manitoba ask for? They asked three things. They asked for separate schools; they asked for a grant to sustain them, and they asked for exemption from taxes for the maintenance of Protestant schools. Have they any one of those three things? Not at all. Have they separate schools? No, they have not. Have they the means to sustain their schools? They have not. Are they exempted from contributing to the maintenance of the Protestant schools? No, they are not. They have nothing at all.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—There are no Protestant schools in Manitoba. They are public schools.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—They are neutral schools—schools that are worse than Protestant schools for the Catholics, because nothing of God is taught in them. They are worse than schools that would be against their religion.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Provision is made for religious teaching.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The Catholics to-day have nothing of the things they asked for. They went to the Privy Council twice, and had two judgments. Up to this date the hon. Secretary of State fails to see that the two judgments are not contradictory, and in a memorandum addressed by the Premier of this country, Sir Wilfrid Laurier himself, to the late Pope, it is asserted that the last judgment of the Privy Council contradicts the former one. The honourable premier affirmed in that memorandum that the members of the Privy Council did not understand the question, though it is very easy to understand. It is the Premier himself who never understood those two judgments given on two different points. When a regulation was passed by the city of Winnipeg, according to the law of 1890, what happened? The Catholics refused to pay. They went from court to court, up to the Privy Council, claiming that the law was ultra vires. What did the Privy Council decide? They decided that the law was not ultra vires. It was a law that was within the scope or under the jurisdiction of the local legislature, because the local legislature had a right to establish those neutral schools. When Manitoba went into confederation, Manitoba had a right to enjoy the system which was existing at the time, and that system was not a system of separate schools. It was schools as they existed at the time, and the Privy Council decided that the law was intra vires. Such was the meaning of the first judgment, but in 1870 the legislature of Manitoba passed a law and a change took place. Separate schools were accorded to the Catholics of Manitoba, and what was the contention of the Privy Council as embodied in the last judgment? It was this, that in losing what they had acquired since they entered into confederation, the Catholics of Manitoba had a grievance and that grievance could only be settled by the Governor General in Council. What did the minority do? They applied to this last tribunal. But before coming and laying their grievance before the parliament of Canada, the law question was settled and a case was submitted to and decided by the Supreme Court; then an appeal was taken to England, and what was the judgment rendered by the Privy Council in England? Here is the judgment of January 29, 1885:

It is decreed that the Catholic minority of Manitoba has just grievances, the redress of which, as a question of appeal to be decided, falls within the jurisdiction of the Governor General in Council.

The Governor General in Council heard the appeal and rendered a judgment, and what is the judgment ? It is what is known as the Remedial Order, under which the local legislature of Manitoba was ordered to modify its school legislation in such way as to give to the Catholic minority of Manitoba——

(a.) The right to construct, maintain, furnish, manage, conduct and sustain Roman Catholic schools in the manner provided for by the Acts which the statutes of 1890 have repealed ;
(b.) The right to share in any subsidy made out of the public funds for the needs of public instruction ;
(c.) The right of the Roman Catholics who shall contribute to sustain the Roman Catholic schools to be exempt from all payments or contributions destined for the maintenance of other schools.

Has the legislature of Manitoba complied with this Remedial Order ? No. On different occasions they have refused, and it was on the refusal of Manitoba to do justice to the Roman Catholics of that province, that it became the duty of the parliament of Canada, under the constitution, to take the place of the legislature of Manitoba, and to enact legislation to redress the grievances of the Roman Catholics of that province. Parliament has never assumed to take the place of the legislature of Manitoba, except after Manitoba refused to comply with the Remedial Order. The hon. gentleman spoke of a compromise. By whom was that compromise made ? Was it by the two litigating parties—the minority on one side, and the Manitoba government on the other ? No, but the settlement was made by the judge on one side with one of the parties, and the other party was ignored. Nothing could be shown to-day that would prove that the Roman Catholic minority was a party to that compromise. It was never a party to the compromise. It was a compromise between the government of Manitoba, and the government here—that is to say, between the judge and one of the litigating parties. That is how justice was rendered to the Catholic minority of Manitoba. What do we ask ? Nothing but what the constitution gives us and what the judgment of the Privy Council granted to the Roman Catholic minority of Manitoba. The hon. gentleman wants to impute motives and say that this question is brought up for political purposes Facts assert the contrary, and to-day, though it is a Conservative government that is in power in Manitoba, we are ready to ask parliament to do to that Conservative government what we previously asked parliament to do to the Liberal government in Manitoba ? We do not want politics; we want justice. We do not ask for favours ; we are only claiming our rights, and I hope the people of Manitoba will see at last that they are committing and continuing an injustice towards the minority of that province, when they compel that minority to take out of their pockets money to maintain schools to which they cannot send their children. These are the few remarks I want to put on record as a protest against the insinuations of the hon. gentleman, and against the answer given by the hon. Secretary of State that this question was one not within the competence of this parliament. The judgment has been rendered ; it has not been executed yet, and until it has been executed, the question rests solely upon the shoulders of this parliament.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—In the opinion of the hon. gentleman, has not the Manitoba government full power to give all the redress required ?

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Until the Manitoba government has refused; but when the Manitoba government refuses to do justice, the law says that it is the parliament of Canada—the Governor General in Council, that is obliged to give that justice which the legislature of Manitoba refuses to give.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The government of Manitoba has to refuse, apparently.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—They have refused, and the jurisdiction now remains here.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I do not admit that Manitoba has refused to cure the evil which the hon. gentleman points out. I think it is pretty well agreed that outside of the city of Winnipeg the 'modus vivendi' is satisfactory to the Catholics of Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—It is not.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I have heard important Roman Catholic authorities make statements to that effect. We know that outside of Winnipeg there is a state of things which is satisfactory to the local Catholic authorities in each municipality and township, so that there is but the city of Winnipeg where the Catholic minority has a real grievance. I wonder why the local authorities are not assailed, and are not pressed more seriously than they have been. We have here a statement of the Hon. Mr. Roblin, Premier of Manitoba, who seems to say if he had authority to act he would gladly come to the rescue of the Catholic minority. He says :

> I would very much have preferred that some satisfactory arangement had been reached between the School Board of Winnipeg and yourselves. I say this because I have before me the recommendation to Council by the then Attorney General, Mr. Cameron, under date November 25, 1896, signed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, representing the Dominion on the one side, and Hon. Clifford Sifton, representing the province, on the other. You will notice that it reads : 'a final settlement,' which leaves the province no option in the matter.

So that the inference which was intended should be drawn by the electors in Manitoba was that Mr. Roblin, if his hands had not been tied by that settlement, would have come to the rescue of the minority in Winnipeg. We have heard the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface challenge the statement made by Mr. Roblin, that the province of Manitoba was divested of all authority in the matter. I was glad to hear the hon. gentleman give a complete denial to the affirmation of Mr. Roblin, that the province of Manitoba had no more right in the matter. But he did so with all due regard to the bonds that attach the hon. gentleman to his political leader, Mr. Roblin. What he did not emphasize I shall do in his stead. Hon. gentlemen will notice the conclusion arrived at by Mr. Roblin :

> I am, therefore, unable to make you any promise. I don't think it is necessary for me to say anything more, but in courtesy, and also as, I presume, a matter of right, to give you this data I have before me.

I would credit the Hon. Mr. Roblin with very little common sense and intelligence if I thought that this answer was in good faith. There was no vestige of good faith in that answer of Mr. Roblin. It was a political game he was playing, an electoral scheme to try and blind the Catholic electors of Manitoba into voting for him, their best friend, but whose hands were tied by that settlement. I am happy to find that the Catholic minority of Manitoba was not deluded by this answer of Mr. Roblin. They took it for what it was worth —a delusion and a fraud practised on them, and as a result, four of the five Catholic constituencies in Manitoba slapped Mr. Roblin's face as they should have, for this gross fraud he attempted to practise on them, and elected four Liberals to the local House. I am not going back over the whole question, but if the Roman Catholic minority of Manitoba and their champions had exercised during the year 1890 as much pressure as they did in the following years on other governments—if they had exerted the legitimate influence they had to have this law of 1890 disallowed, I think they would have succeeded in obtaining it from Sir John Macdonald; but they did not want to embarrass Sir John Macdonald's government—they allowed the golden opportunity to pass by, and when the year was over they found themselves in a very bad mess indeed. There remains but one point where the shoe pinches. It is Winnipeg. The Hon. Mr. Roblin has declared that he has sympathy for the minority. We do not know yet but he will come to the rescue of that minority in the city of Winnipeg and do the right thing by them, when he is informed by the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface, who has a legal training, and other legal gentlemen that he completely erred, if he was in good faith, which I do not give him credit for, when he said he was divested of all authority. Let us hope his sympathy for the Catholic minority, which flowed when the election was on, will continue to flow in the same direction, and that he will remedy the just grievances brought before him.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The discussion of the motion has drifted altogether from the point raised by the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface. The motion, as I understand it, was simply asking for information, as to what had been done in the past ; first, that the resolution to which Mr. Roblin, now Premier, referred, should be laid before the Senate, and second, the agreement or understanding entered into between the Premier and the delegates who came from Winnipeg should also be laid before the House. We know that the statement was made, and has never been contradicted, that Sir Wilfrid Laurier, after the first interview, stated that he would give them an answer to their request in writing. What my hon. friend has asked for is that whatever agreement was entered into should be laid before the Senate, and if no agreement were entered into in writing, nor any pledge or statement made in writing, then the verbal understanding reached between these negotiating parties should be laid before the public, in order that the public might know the exact position in which the affair stands to-day, and as to whether the Premier of the Dominion had informed the gentlemen who composed that delegation, that the question rested entirely and solely with the province of Manitoba, and that they must seek redress from the government of Manitoba, or that they would as a Dominion government, come to their rescue in case of a refusal by the government of Manitoba to accede to the request of the minority. Now, that is what the hon. gentleman asked for, and what I think this House is entitled to receive. I shall not be dragged into a discussion of the merits of this question, as has been indulged in by hon. gentlemen who preceded me, nor reply to the speech of the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie. I have simply to say this in reference to the question itself; as I understand the question, it is very simple. Matters affecting education in any province are within the jurisdiction of the province itself, within the conditions of the constitution under which Manitoba and the North-west Territories came into the Dominion. The rights of the minority were guaranteed in the Act which admitted Manitoba into the Dominion. If that Act furnishes the same protection for the minority of Manitoba that is given to the Protestant minority in Quebec, and the Roman Catholic minority in Ontario, then the minority of Manitoba has a right to seek redress here if those rights be infringed. It is not necessary for me to discuss that question. I think it is generally admitted. The only point is how far Manitoba transgressed the provisions of that section which provides for the protection of the minority in the Act which brought them into confederation. There is one point raised by my hon. friend from de Lorimier as to which he will pardon me if I say he rather begged the question, that is, when he spoke of disallowance. Has he forgotten that when the question of misunderstandings upon questions of this character was under consideration in the House of Commons, long after the law establishing separate schools had been enacted by Mr. Norquay, the then Conservative Premier of Manitoba, when questions arose as to the condition and state of the schools in that country, Mr. Blake, on a motion to go into supply, offered an amendment, declaring that all questions of dispute arising out of the non-enforcement of the school laws in any province, should be referred to the Supreme Court for adjudication. Sir John Macdonald at that time declined to accept the amendment and asked to have it stand. The next day, when the House opened and the question of supply again arose, he accepted the motion of Mr. Blake, and at the following session of parliament crystalized it into law, and it stands on the statute-books to-day. Now the hon. gentleman says, in the face of that very suggestion made by his then leader and the leader of the Liberal party in the House of Commons and in Ontario, and accepted by the leader of the Conservative party and Premier of the Dominion—and in the face of that law, the government should have disallowed the local Act.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Was the Catholic minority of Manitoba a party to the agreement between Sir John Macdonald and Mr. Blake ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No. It was the act of the parliament of Canada.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It was before this question arose.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Long before this dispute arose the parliament of Canada adopted that resolution of Mr. Blake for the purpose of removing all disputes of that kind from the political arena, and placing them before the judges of that country. That was the reason why it was accepted by Sir John Macdonald. They foresaw—both Mr. Blake and Sir John Macdonald—the difficulties which might arise out of such issues, and they both thought it was in the interests of peace and harmony in this country that these questions affecting prejudices arising from race, religion or the teaching of religion in the schools, should be removed from the political arena, and for that purpose, and for that purpose alone, the leaders of the two great political parties crystallized that resolution into the law of the Dominion. My hon. friend opposite from Wellington, I am quite sure, remembers the circumstances, that all parties at that time were anxious, as they would be to-day, that these questions should be removed from the political arena. We have heard enough of it. I have expressed my opinion upon this question fully in the past. I have my opinion of separate schools. It is not necessary for me to repeat it. I have taken one stand throughout in maintaining what I believe to be the rights guaranteed to the minority by the constitution of the country, and by the law which brought Manitoba into the confederation, and on that principle, as a public man, I have stood in the past and am quite willing to remain in the future. I apologize for going beyond the object of the motion. I would not have done so had it not been for the remarks of my hon. friend opposite. I have heard them so often—in fact I have heard the Secretary of State say that we should have disallowed that law. I need not tell hon. gentlemen—if I did it would be verified by my hon. friend from Manitoba—that had the Dominion government at that time disallowed the Act of Manitoba it would have been re-enacted over and over again.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And it would have led to greater trouble, almost led to rebellion.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The government at that time—I must be excused for referring to it, but I am as responsible for it as anybody—thought it better to enter into friendly relations with that government in order to ascertain what should be done.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I think the same argument would apply to the remedial order.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not going to argue that question of the remedial order. We carried it as far as we could, and the charge that we tried to bulldoze or coerce the Manitoba government is not sustained by the documents of record. That much I say in defence of the government of which I was a member. Let me go back again to the subject of the motion before the House. I fully approve of the motion made by my hon. friend for the prodcution of these papers. The Secretary of State tells us that they have been laid before parliament over and over again. If they have, I have never seen them, and I think I have paid as much attention to this question as most members. All I have ever seen was the law passed in Manitoba, based on the agreement for which the gentleman asks. What we complain of, and we think we have just cause to complain, is that negotiations of a most important character should be withheld. Is it not as much the interest of the Senate and of the people of this country that we should know what position our government takes upon a question which is agitating the public mind, not only in Manitoba, but here, as it is that they should keep it within their own breasts? I have moved in the past over and over again in this House for the production of correspondence, papers and documents which led to what they term the final settlement of this question. I have been told over and over again by the Secretary of State that no such documents exist—that there was no correspondence, and that there was no such agreement—but now we are told in this case that no written statement was made by the Premier and the Minister of Justice, that the interview was of a private character, and that therefore they decline to divulge it. Whether agitation exists in Manitoba or not I am not going to discuss. I contend that on a question of this vast importance and which has agitated the Dominion from one end to the other, and which, if the statements made by those who came here from Winnipeg are true, is agitating Manitoba still, the public should be informed. I am not going to dispute the statements made by the hon. gentleman opposite, nor the rebuttal of the statement by hon. gentlemen on this side, but that there is an agitation is beyond peradventure, and if that continues it will keep disturbing not only the political but the social elements of the country for a long time to come. What I do complain of—and the Secretary of State will excuse me for having so complained—is that we are told that on a question of this importance there is no correspondence and no agreement other than that embodied in the resolution, and that now, while the agitation is being continued, the interviews with the government are private and cannot be divulged.

Whether that is justice to the community I leave for those who listen to me and those who in the future read the statements, to judge. It is not satisfactory to me. It should not be satisfactory to any legislative body, and I question very much whether it will be satisfactory to anyone—either those who support the public school system in the west or those who oppose it. The statement of the hon. gentleman opposite as to the motives of Mr. Roblin and my hon. friend, I let pass for what it is worth. There is room for half an hour's discussion on that point, but I am sure the House does not wish to hear anything more that I have to say on the subject. I repeat that we ought to have all the information requisite to form a correct judgment on this question and to justify the Dominion government if their position is such as to warrant justification, or to condemn them if it is not.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have on every occasion given this House a full and frank and complete statement of this question. I said in the beginning that there is no correspondence. It is not a subject that would be carried on by correspondence. I laid on the Table of the House some years ago, and I think periodically since, the only agreement ever entered into, and it was embodied in a statute. When the delegates came down recently to Ottawa, the Premier and Mr. Fitzpatrick met them and said they could do nothing more than to express their sympathy and bring what influence they could to bear on the Manitoba government. There was no written statement of the interview. The delegates have given nothing to the public, and therefore they felt it would be unwise to make public the details of the interview. It would only perhaps defeat or postpone opportunities that might occur at some time or other in the future for interference to influence the government of Manitoba. It is only through that channel that anything can be accomplished. It is not by diplomatic correspondence or by written letters—it is by using those personal influences which people exercise when they come in contact with one another and represent the feelings they hold on a particular subject. The House has had the fullest information on the question. Nothing came of the interview with Mr. Fitzpatrick and Sir Wilfrid Laurier. If any result had followed, the delegates would have stated so, but it would not be in the interest of the parties themselves to detail all the conversation that passed to and fro during that hour of the interview or whatever period of time occupied. It would not help the case ; it would rather retard a settlement.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—Has the agreement signed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Sifton been put before the House ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, time and again.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—Will the hon. gentleman tell me when ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This question has been brought up several times.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I have never seen the agreement.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know whether it is printed in our journals, but it is printed in the appendices of the House of Commons for the year 1897, and it is in the Manitoba statutes. I can have a typewritten copy made for my hon. friend at any time. The printed copies are all exhausted. They were distributed at the time. I tried to find a printed copy and could not get one the other day.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—The Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier stated that he would give in writing his opinion on this conference with the delegates. The hon. gentleman from St. Boniface wants to know if that can be had for the Senate.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, Sir Wilfrid Laurier made no statement. I asked Sir Wilfrid Laurier myself whether there was anything that could be given to the Senate and he said no. I saw Sir Wilfrid Laurier after my hon. friend put his notice on the paper, and I showed it to the Premier. He said there was really nothing evolved from it. He said they had a conversation, but there was nothing of a public character.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—He did not say anything in the House of Commons either.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—In placing my notice on the Order paper and making my speech, I had no intention of originating such a debate as has occurred. Many of the speeches have been entirely irrelevant to the question, but since it has taken that shape, I think I should say something in reply. In the first place, I should rebut the assertion that the local legislature has sole jurisdiction over this matter. It is very regrettable that the hon. Secretary of State should ignore the law and the judgment in the case. It is plainly stated in the statute that the jurisdiction of the local legislature in the matter of education is limited. It is plainly limited in the British North America Act of 1867, and also in the Manitoba Act. It says:

22. In and for the province of Manitoba, the said legislature of the province may exclusively make laws in relation to education, subject and according to the following provisions:

(1) Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any class of persons have by law or practice in the province at the union.

(2) An appeal shall lie to the Governor General in Council from any Act or decision of the legislature of the province, or of any provincial authority affecting any right or privilege of the Protestant or Roman Catholic minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to education.

Surely this is a very important exception which should not be ignored by the members at least of the government. It then goes on in a subsection to say what parliament should do:

(3) In case any such provincial law as from time to time seems to the Governor General in Council requisite for the due execution of the provisions of this section is not duly executed by the proper provincial authority in that behalf, then and in every such case, and as far only as the circumstances of each case require the parliament of Canada may make remedial laws for the due execution of the provisions of this section and of any decision of the Governor General in Council under this section.

The hon. gentleman also ignores the finding of the Privy Council. He said that they had given judgment against us. This is not accurate. Here is the finding of the Privy Council:

The decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Barrett vs. Winnipeg and Logan and the city of Winnipeg does not dispose or conclude the applications for redress based on the contention that the rights of the Roman Catholic minority which accrued to them after the union under the statutes of the province, have been interfered with by the two statutes of 1890 complained of in the said petitions and memorials.

In answer to the 5th question:—That the Governor General in Council has jurisdiction and the appeal is well founded but that the particular course to be pursued must be determined by the authorities to whom it has been committed by the statute; that the general character of the steps to be taken is sufficiently defined by subsection 3 of section 22 of the Manitoba Act, 1870.

6. In answer to the 6th question:—That the Acts of Manitoba relating to education passed prior to the session of 1890 did confer on the minority a right or privilege in relation to education within the meaning of subsection 2 of section 22 of the Manitoba Act which alone applies: that the two Acts of 1890 complained of did affect a right or privilege of the minority in such a manner that an appeal will lie thereunder to the Governor General in Council.

In face of that, how can it be contended that the local legislature has the sole jurisdiction in the matter, when it confers upon the Governor General in Council and this parliament complete jurisdiction in the matter upon which we are dealing? In reference to the remarks of the hon. Secretary of State, I must also regret that all those negotiations were conducted secretly. It seems to me the minority of Manitoba is sufficiently interested in those matters to know what is going on, and it is a matter of deep regret to us that the government does not take us into its confidence more than it does. As to the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie, he makes a great deal of the vote of the people of Manitoba. In the first place, I think that the people of Manitoba, or the people at large, have nothing to do with it. The constitution has placed this matter outside of the reach of the people. It has placed it in the hands of the Governor General in Council, that is, in a special tribunal constituted expressly for that purpose, and even if the whole of the people of Canada would vote against any redress of our grievances, that would not amount to an estoppel. The hon. gentleman from Hastings (Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell) said once, that if he were to vote alone for the redress he would do it. That is the position to take. But the hon. gentleman from Brandon spoke of the Catholic minority having sustained the Liberal party. I may say to you that on examination the majority of the Catholics in Manitoba voted against the men who were responsible for this legislation. The hon. gentleman had also the good grace to speak of St. Boniface. I will not say much with regard to that election. It is a delicate matter with me ; for a son of mine was a candidate, but another tribunal will speak on the matter, by and by and we will see what they will say. About the working of the schools in the rural parts, it is true our schools are conducted under a new law. That is to say, we have been obliged, in time of depression, to take whatever advantage we could. That is the condition. It is by sufferance and no more, and the people are not satisfied with this state of things, and even if they were, they have no right to be satisfied with a condition of things which is against the constitution, because in this matter we must have regard not only to the convenience of the present, but we have to uphold the constitution and to maintain for future generations the rights of the people. It was said the people will never submit. I have more faith in the people than that. I think that the people of Manitoba would submit to fairness and to justice. To allege that the people would rebel against any act of redress would be equivalent to saying that the people of Manitoba would have no regard for the constitution. I have more faith in the people than that. As to the city of Winnipeg, the hon. gentleman seems to think, or he has conveyed the idea, that the school trustees of Winnipeg would have done anything for the Catholics. Well, the people of Winnipeg said 'If you want us to support your schools, let them be public schools, nothing less and nothing more ; and about the teachers, they would not let them remain in the schools. They were so strict as to the conditions the trustees made that they required that our teachers should divest themselves of their religious garments, and that meant a dismissal of our teachers. These conditions would not be accepted, and, in fact, they were not accepted, and the Catholics of Winnipeg are still endeavouring to maintain their schools, after having paid for the maintenance of the public schools. As to the good-will of the government, the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Watson) seems to take credit for the good-will of the government of which he was a member, but he has no right to take that credit to himself or to the late government. We were subjected, during all the time his party was in power, to the most rigid investigation, and money grants were refused to certain schools which were not up to the regulation made by the government of which the hon. gentleman was a member. The hon. gentleman from de Lorimier asks why the Conservatives have not disallowed the Act. There was one reason given by the hon. gentleman from Hastings, but I may venture to give another. They may have been influenced by this consideration : they thought that the party to which the hon. gentleman belongs would live up to their pledges and promises. They gave their pledges in the House of Commons, and it was suggested even by them that this matter should be relegated to the tribunal and they pledged themselves to carry out the findings of the tribunal, but they have not done so. The Conservatives have done their duty and particularly the hon. gentleman from Hastings. I am glad to pay him the tribute that we owe to him. If the Liberals had done the same thing, this question would have been settled. The hon. gentleman (Sir Mackenzie Bowell), for the sake of justice, sacrificed power, but for the sake of power the hon. gentleman opposite (Hon. Mr. Watson) sacrificed justice. The Catholics have pressed their claim here and elsewhere. They pressed it on the local government, and there is no better evidence of that fact than the action of the people of Winnipeg going to the Honourable Premier of Manitoba for redress. As to the rebellion that was spoken of, there was never a suspicion of rebellion in this matter. I have good reason to believe that if the remedial legislation had been passed, the people of Manitoba would have been glad to put an end to the agitation, and would have accepted gracefully the situation.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILWAYS LAW CONSOLIDATION BILL

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole consideration of Bill (21) 'An Act to amend and consolidate the laws respecting railways.'

On clause 44,

Hon. Mr LOUGHEED—I beg to move the following :—

To amend section 44 by striking out the second paragraph of subsection three and substituting the following :—

'An appeal shall also lie from the board to such court, upon any question of law, upon leave therefor having been first obtained from the board or from a judge of such court.'

Hon. gentlemen will observe that the principle embodied is not departed from. The only difference it makes is this : that upon the board refusing to give leave to appeal, the applicant shall have a right to make an application to a judge of the Supreme Court for leave to appeal. I have only to point out to the committee the fact that there is no provision in this Bill for the appointment of a lawyer upon the board ; consequently as to what shall constitute a question of law, assuming that the board be made up of laymen, would be a question certainly for which provision should be made as indicated in this amendment. The applicants will not have the right of appeal. They will have to apply to the Supreme Court, and it appears to me the public interests will be sufficiently safeguarded in that way.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—If possible we should leave all the powers we can with this board, and their decision should be final. The benefit we should expect to derive from this board is that they shall be able to decide, and that their decisions shall be final. The great trouble is that in case of a small loss, perhaps fifty or a hundred dollars, one party may try to appeal. We want a finding of the courts without expense to the party injured, and I think it is a great mistake to make provision for an appeal. Take, for instance, in the west, the case of loss by fire, or by killing an animal——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This has nothing to do with that.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I wish it had to do with it. Large corporations can appeal to a higher court and an individual has to stop. We cannot follow them to a higher court, and I should prefer this matter to stand as it is, and the decision of the board to be final.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then limit the amount —say $200.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Five hundred.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is rather high.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Then $400.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The finding of the board is final on all questions of fact. This simply permits an appeal on a question of law, and I do not think my hon. friend himself would feel perfectly comfortable in submitting a very important question of law, in which he might be interested, to a board that may not have a lawyer upon it, or a lawyer that may have no professional standing from a legal standpoint. It seems to do violence to all well established precedent to say that you should not, upon a most important question, have a right of appeal, because the administration of railways involves the most important questions that come before the public, and to say that this board should be able to declare positively that you should not have an appeal from its finding, on a question of law, to the Supreme Court of Canada, I think is a mistake. Why have we the Supreme Court of Canada or the Courts of Appeal ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman says there might not be a lawyer on the board. The board have power to employ counsel, or engineers, or to obtain any assistance they want of a professional character. They have the power to get legal opinions.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I think there will be a lawyer on the board.

Hon. Mr. POWER—With the limitation suggested by the hon. Secretary of State, which I hope the hon. mover will be willing to accept, the amendment is a desirable one. No doubt the intention of the present government is to appoint a lawyer. Then the question is how to get a lawyer who is going to be satisfactory. I suppose he will be a good lawyer, but a less virtuous government might come in and they might not put a lawyer on the board. The better way is to provide that there shall be no appeal unless a certain amount is at stake.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am considerably in accord with the principle embodied in the amendment, but it should cover appeals only in important cases, or cases of general interest. The amount may be very small, but it may cover a large class of like cases, and therefore the appeal should lie. in that case, as well as if a large amount was involved. I would suggest that instead of having the appeal allowed by one judge only, to have the appeal allowed by two judges of the Supreme Court. It will give an absolute guarantee that it will be done only on serious grounds. We have a division in the province of Quebec ; for instance, interlocutory motions are not appealable except with leave of two judges of the Court of Appeals. We had it with the leave of one judge, but several years ago we made it two, and it has worked very well.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The only difficulty I see in the suggestion is that it would involve an application being made to the court instead of to a single judge.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It could be done in chambers.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not think two judges sit in chambers.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—But it is done informally.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—At no time under the practice of the Supreme Court will you find two judges sitting in chambers.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—We have the same provision for the Court of Appeals. We have no provision in our Court of Appeals whereby two judges sit in chambers, but we make the petition in chambers and direct the petition to two judges, and we have to satisfy two judges that leave should be granted. One may grant the order after the other, because they may not sit at the same time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would accept that, but it might be provided that it would not be necessary that a petition be heard by the two judges at the same time.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I would draw the attention of hon. members to a safeguard that we could include in the amendment. Instead of saying that an appeal will lie upon the leave of the board, or two judges, I would say 'upon an appeal from the board, and in case of refusal, from the board to two judges ; because there may be vexatious appeals that would not be entertained by one or two judges, if on the application made to the board for leave to appeal the board has a right to refuse and to give its reasons why it refuses. There may be cases in which the question of time is an important one in the execution of the order of the board, and if the board draws the attention of the Supreme Court judges to the reasons why they refused the appeal, I think there would be a greater safeguard against delays.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Will the hon. senator state what will happen if the judges disagree ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Then there would not be leave from two judges.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Then the man that refused would be a wiser man than the man who grants the application.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—He would simply be confirming the opinion of the board.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I accept the suggestion and make it one.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was putting in a limitation—$500 and upwards.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—As I have already said, the amount involved may not be so important as the principle.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I want to meet the objection urged by so many senators who said appeals might be taken up capriciously.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am disposed to think the suggestion of the hon. Secretary of State is the wiser one. It is not advisable to have appeals for small amounts. If the question is between the railway company and the farmer, I think if the amount is not in excess of $500, the decision of the board ought to be sufficient.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The board will have to deal with classes of cases and the decision which will be rendered in one case will no doubt apply to those of like cases. If not at the same time, in succeeding years, and therefore, if the principle is wrong it seems to me that it is not because only $25 will be the amount involved in a case that no appeal should be made. A principle once established may be applied to thousands and thousands of cases. It seems to me it is much better to be conservative and leave the right of appeal granted by two judges, as it will indicate that the idea of parliament was to be on the conservative side and to have appeals granted only on mature consideration.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The hon. gentleman forgets that one of the litigants may be a very poor man; he may perhaps lose two or three cows. He certainly will not go to law at all if the chances are that more than the value of the cows will be spent in litigation.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is this to be considered too. I have the greatest respect for the opinion of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry; but if you look at the preceding portion of this subsection, the question of jurisdiction is one of the most important constitutional questions likely to arise. That is provided for in this part of the subsection. The House of Commons decided that there should be no appeal from the board. If we decide in a case where there is a considerable amount at issue there shall be an appeal; that I think is a reasonable concession, and one which would probably be accepted by the other House, and it is as much as the companies have any right to expect. If a very small amount is at issue, I do not see why the company should be at liberty to carry a poor litigant up to the Supreme Court.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The amount is not to be considered at all. It is insignificant compared with the principle of the law involved. We all know of a famous case which went to the Privy Council from Montreal in which the amount involved was two cents. It was a question of a toll on a bridge, and the whole question of the right to collect the toll was involved. The amount cut no figure. We know of most important cases that are under $100 where the legal aspect of the case is much more important than a suit on a note for $100,000.

Hon. Mr. POWER—In appeals to the Supreme Court, there is the very same limitation. You cannot appeal from the Superior Court of the province unless the amount at stake is $500 and upwards, and I do not see why you should not apply the same principle to this board.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman forgets that there are provisions for future rights, and the appeal may be made to the Supreme Court in cases, when future rights are concerned, where the amount involved is less than $500. Attention should be called to this fact, that the board would deal with such cases as the hon. gentleman from Glengarry has in his mind. The court is not vested with the adjudication of damages against the company, or for killing cattle, or anything of that kind. The court is confined to regulations, so to speak, to see that the railway companies do what is necessary to protect the public, and it will, as a necessity, be in matters of considerable importance—matters of principle, although in several cases the amount may be very small.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Many of my hon friends seem to think that this appeal will affect that class of cases referred to by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry and the hon. gentleman from Glengarry, but hon. gentlemen must recollect that the cases to be decided by the board are, for instance, questions arising on tariffs, tolls, equipment and that class of cases in which individuals are not interested. Take, for instance, the question of tolls; a dispute may involve only a few dollars, and yet it may be a matter involving hundreds of thousands of dollars to the railway companies, and if you do not allow an appeal from this court to the Supreme Court of Canada, it seems to me it would be a gross injustice. Furthermore, I would point out to the Speaker that there is no limitation placed on appeals in the first instance. The committee must keep in view that the railway companies have only one court of appeal, the Supreme Court of Canada, whereas in the ordinary cases which arise in every-day litigation you appeal to a bench of judges sitting in turn entirely irrespective of the amount. You have your remedy in that way, and it seems to me extraordinary to refuse the right of appeal on a question of law, and an appeal from a board constituted of three men who may know nothing about a question of law.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman says they want an appeal to the Supreme Court where they could have an elaborate discussion of these matters. It is the elaborate discussion we want to avoid. The object in passing this Bill giving certain power to the board, is to avoid law and give more justice than people have had in the past. I want to give this board all the power possible. I cannot understand that any person feeling aggrieved will receive more justice at the hands of the Supreme Court judges than he will at the hands of these men, who must necessarily be familiar with all matters coming before them in their capacity as a board. We might at least give these three men a chance for a year, and if there is any serious complaint made, it will be quite easy to grant the power of appeal later on. We ought to take it for granted that these men who will compose the board will be competent to give justice to all coming before them. We may take it for granted they will deal fairly with everybody and give everybody justice for the first twelve months. I quite appreciate the fact that an important principle may be involved in a small amount, which would be large in the aggregate if followed up. This matter was discussed very fully in the House of Commons. I do not say we ought to be guided by them, but we ought to leave it in the hands of the board for at least a year.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman seems to share the common opinion that justice is better rendered by laymen than by judges.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It is more easily obtained.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have a very striking example to illustrate this. As far back as twelve or fifteen years ago, on the occasion of considerable congestion of business in Montreal, I had a law passed providing that it would be open to litigants to choose their own judge by consent. They were free to choose a member of the bar or anybody else, and the decision of that party would avail as a judgment, and would be executed as a judgment. To this day litigants have not had recourse to that tribunal in a single instance.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It was a lawyer was it not ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—He need not be a lawyer—an arbitrator, though I am not quite sure as to that. The experience of members of the bar—and they are the most experienced in such matters—is that arbitration in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred does not give the same satisfaction to the parties as the judges who are trained to act as arbitrators. The law is based on sound reasoning and experience of the past ; but here we have to deal with a commission which will very likely be selected with care, but will be composed mainly of laymen, and their decisions will involve very important interests. I think we should be conservative as to the right of appeal. My suggestion to limit the appeal being allowed by two judges will be a safe restriction, and will give a guarantee that the judges of the Supreme Court will not grant any frivolous appeal or appeals involving trifling amounts.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In discussing this question it seems to me the majority of the House are being led to a very unfortunate inference. It is assumed the appeals will lie from a company, and it has been pictured that the poor man will not be able to bear the expense of an appeal. In my experience, it has been the other way. If I have any knowledge of what the decisions of this court will probably be, they will be disappointing to the people ; therefore I think it will be an unfortunate thing for those who favour the people as against the companies to draw the conclusion that it is necessary to protect the people against appeals of the railway companies. The chances are it will be all the other way—it will be the people that will be appealing against the decisions of the board. Therefore, it is in the interests of the people that there should be an appeal. If there is an appeal, it may not be invoked for years and years. There is at present an appeal to the Governor General in Council from the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. I think I have known of only one such appeal in the last six years. So, I think we are imagining something that is not likely to occur ; but certainly in framing the clause we ought to look to the interests of the party who is most likely to appeal. There is an impression here that when the company does wrong, it is the board that rectifies it. That is not so. If an animal is killed, it is not the board, but the courts, that decide.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—In the case of drainage ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Well, if they do not obey the order, they can be prosecuted in the courts. The courts are always open to them.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Take a case of this kind : a question of drainage may arise in which a very small amount is involved.

Say the board decide in favour of the farmer; the company will appeal for the reason that there are perhaps a hundred cases of a similar character, and they will appeal in order to prevent that poor man from being able to follow them. They are the party who will have the important question at stake.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In that particular case it is not likely to arise.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I think the sum ought to be limited to $400 or $500. Anything beyond that of course involves a greater question.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That would prevent an appeal against a toll.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman from Glengarry will let me put the question the other way. He supposes the decision of the board will be against the company. Let us suppose that the decision is the other way, and it may affect several hundreds of farmers in like circumstances for twenty or thirty years to come.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—They will not unite for the purpose of appealing against the company.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Why not?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Under the Bill as it now stands, that would be a question of fact, not a question of law; because I think the duties of the railway commission are so defined as to reduce it to a question of fact.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—We have gentlemen of the long robe in this House who find it difficult to decide whether it is a question of law or a question of fact.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—To limit the amount would prevent an appeal on a question of toll or freight rates. The question might involve only five dollars and yet be one of very great importance.

Hon. Mr. FROST—It seems superfluous to have an appeal from the courts when there is no very great question of law involved in connection with this whole matter.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—These appeals are only on questions of law.

Hon. Mr. FROST—There will be one lawyer on the commission, and he ought to be thoroughly competent to decide all questions of law. Then you have two laymen besides, experienced business men of the country, who ought to be able to decide all matters of equity equally with the chairman, and it should be an effective commission to satisfy the business men and farmers of this country. If you are going to provide for an appeal you will simply have another court of judicature in the country which is going to lead to litigation, and you will find the farmers and business men of the country will not be satisfied. I think we can safely leave the decision to the eminent lawyer who will be chairman of the board, and the other two will be prepared to join him in matters of fact and in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred you will have an honest, true and intelligent decision which will give general satisfaction to all parties.

The amendment was adopted.

On subsection 2 of clause 202,

2. If, in any case, it is necessary to raise, reconstruct or alter any bridge, tunnel, erection or structure not owned by the company, and the owner of the same refuses to consent to such necessary changes, it shall be the duty of the company to apply to the board, and upon notice to all parties interested, the board shall hear the matter, and may make such order, allowing such raising, reconstruction or alteration, upon such terms and conditions as to the board shall appear just and proper and in the public interest.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There was considerable discussion as to what was the meaning of the clause, namely, as to the conflicting rights of the owner and the companies. It has been suggested by the railway companies that this clause does not meet all the conditions which may possibly arise with reference to bridges which may need reconstruction or alteration. I move that the following clause be substituted for it:—

2. If, in any case, it is necessary to raise, reconstruct or alter any bridge, tunnel, erection or structure not owned by the company, the board, upon application of the company and upon notice to all parties interested, or without any application, may make such order allowing or requiring such raising, reconstruction or alteration upon such terms and conditions as to the board shall appear just and proper and in the public interest.

The motion was agreed to.

On clause 224.

224. When any train is approaching a highway crossing at rail-level (except within the limits of cities or towns where the municipal authority may pass by-laws prohibiting the same), the engine whistle shall be sounded and the bell rung at least eighty rods before reaching such crossing, and at short intervals, until the engine has crossed such highway.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved :

To amend clause 224 by striking out the words 'and the bell rung,' where they occur in the fourth line of the clause, and inserting, in the fifth line, after the word 'and,' the words 'then the bell shall be rung,' and by striking out the comma after the word 'intervals.'

Hon. Mr. WATSON—How long does the hon. gentleman suppose it will take the train to go a quarter of a mile ? It appears to me the bell should be rung at the same time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The confusion arises in this way : the clause would require that they should sound the whistle and ring the bell at the same time. The amendment is that they shall sound the whistle and afterwards ring the bell.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—They should ring it as they are crossing. How can that be done if it is rung at intervals ?

The word 'intervals' was struck out and 'continually' substituted, and the amendment was agreed to.

On clause 252,

252. Such tolls may be either for the whole or for any particular portions of the railway ; but all such tolls shall always, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions be charged equally to all persons, and at the same rate, whether by weight, mileage or otherwise, in respect of all traffic of the same description and carried in or upon a like kind of cars, passing over the same portion of the line of railway ; and no reduction or advance in any such tolls shall be made, either directly or indirectly, in favour of or against any particular person or company travelling upon or using the railway. 51 V., c. 29, s. 224, Am.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved :

To amend section 252, subsection 4, by adding, at the end of the subsection the following words :—'without leave therefor having been first obtained from the board. The board shall not grant such leave unless satisfied that granting the same is not contrary to the public interest.'

There is a provision by which companies are prohibited from entering into any pooling arrangement. Now, it is said by the companies that there are occasions when pooling is not only desirable, but in the public interest, and it is proposed that this shall be added at the end of subsection 4. It leaves it entirely with the board to sanction it, and they must not sanction it unless they are satisfied that it is in the public interest. Safeguarded in that way, I do not see how any difficulty can arise.

The amendment was agreed to.

On clause 267.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It will be remembered that the hon. senator from Marshfield proposed an amendment to this clause bringing the government railways under the clauses, affecting through tariff rates. His motion was :

Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in section 3 of this Act, this section and the next preceding section shall apply to traffic on Dominion government railways and vessels connected therewith.

It was objected to by the hon. Secretary of State, and his objection was sustained by the hon. gentleman from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Kerr), on the ground that in adopting this provision it would be held as a reversal of the policy of the government in excluding government railways from the operation of this Bill. What I ask the committee to consider is whether there would be any objection to accepting the clause with a simple restriction such as is contained in the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry in reference to provincial government railways. That amendment provides that the section should not operate with regard to through traffic on railways owned by a provincial government without the consent of such government. If the committee would accept the proposal which I make on behalf of my hon. friend from Marshfield, I propose this addition to the amendment which I have read Subject, however, to the consent and approval of the Governor in Council.

So that if a sufficiently strong case were made out to the Governor in Council that it would be in the interests of traffic and in the interests of trade generally to make the clauses apply to railways and vessels which connect different provinces, they could bring it into force ; but it could not be done except with their consent. If this be accepted, it would be added as subsection 5 to section 267. The hon. gentleman will understand that this gives the Governor in Council power to bring the government railways under the provisions of section 267, so far as through traffic is concerned if they see that no injury to the government system of railways would be caused by it. My own impression is that it is a power which might very safely be given to the government, in order to provide for cases which might possibly arise, and which I believe, in some cases have arisen in the past.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The policy of the government as announced in the other House was, that the government railways would be excluded altogether from the operation of the Bill. The proposal my hon. friend makes could at any time be adopted by the government without this amendment. They can consent if they think it wise and in the interests of the public that the policy should be adopted. Of their own motion they can make an arrangement as to traffic exchange between the Intercolonial Railway and other railways; I understand at present there is a close agreement between the Grand Trunk Railway and the Intercolonial Railway with regard to a certain class of traffic. The same arrangement can be made without the intervention of law with any other railway company, as I explained to the hon. gentleman from Marshfield when he made his motion the other day.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The Governor in Council, in the absence of this provision, could not give jurisdiction to the board, and it would require legislation unless this provision were adopted. This provision of course leaves it entirely to the will of the government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no legislation authorizing the government to make a contract with the Grand Trunk Railway for an exchange of traffic with the Intercolonial Railway and the proportion which each should receive, nor will there be any difficulty in doing so with any other railway.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—These provisions which are referred to in the amendment are provisions vesting the board with certain powers as far as regulating freights and tolls and passenger rates are concerned. These matters are left with the board, and although the government might desire by Order in Council after the passing of this Bill, to give the board jurisdiction on these matters, they could not do it. We have to provide for it in this Bill, or the board could not have any jurisdiction over it by virtue of an Order in Council.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the point to which I wished to call the attention of the Secretary of State. The 3rd clause says:

3. This Act shall apply to all persons, companies and railways (other than government railways) within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, and shall be incorporated and construed, as one Act, with the special Act, subject as herein provided. 51 V., c. 29, s. 3, Am.

2. Any section of this Act may, by any special Act passed by the parliament of Canada, be excepted from incorporation therewith, or may thereby be extended, limited or qualified. It shall be sufficient, for the purposes of this subsection, to refer to any section of this Act by its number merely.

3. If in any special Act heretofore passed by the parliament of Canada, it is enacted that any provision of the general Railway Act in force at the time of the passing of such special Act, is expected from incorporation therewith, or if the application of any such provision is, by such special Act, extended, limited or qualified, the corresponding provision of this Act shall be taken to be excepted, extended, limited or qualified, in like manner; and, unless otherwise expressly provided in this Act, where the provisions of this Act and of any special Act passed by the parliament of Canada relate to the same subject matter, the provisions of the special Act shall be taken to over-ride the provisions of this Act in so far as is necessary to give effect to such special Act. 51 V., c. 29, ss. 5 and 6 Am.

So that the Governor in Council is precluded from making the arrangements to which the hon. gentleman refers, unless given power to do under the amendment which I propose. The arrangement made with the Grand Trunk Railway and Canadian Pacific Railway now exists, and I do not suppose that would be interfered with; but supposing traffic comes from Ontario—from Ottawa, for instance—and has to go on to Prince Edward Island, it might have to pass over three different railways, and then the hon. gentleman will understand that freight might be consigned from here to Charlottetown. It might pass over the Canada Atlantic Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway, the Intercolonial Railway, and then by water from Point du Chêne to Summerside, and thence to Charlottetown by rail, or to any other place in Prince Edward Island. Now, this is a case in which a through rate would be to the advantage of all the carriers.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—They get the through rates now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am informed they do not.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—Oh yes, they do.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then if they do, there is no necessity to get an Order in Council to govern rates after reaching Point du Chêne. There is now a local rate and the rate on the government railway in Prince Edward Island. I think it would be an advantage, and no disadvantage, to the railway in shipping goods from Toronto, or from some other western point, if you could make a through rate, and make it equitable to the carriers and also to the shipper.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If the hon. gentleman will let the proposition stand, I shall submit it to the government. I have not considered the question.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The objection which I see to adopting this amendment in its present form is that if the consent of the Governor in Council were once given there is no provision for its being recalled. What was the intention of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, I presume, was that the Governor in Council might from time to time order that this section might apply.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have no objection to the suggestion made by the Speaker to give power to the Governor in Council to repeal any Order in Council which may have been passed, although I differ altogether from the opinion expressed, that such power would not exist unless this proviso was made.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It stands as a notice.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My attention has been called to several important sections which may have to be changed. In the clause relating to the location of the railway, we have vested the whole power in the board. That was not the original intention. The government did not propose to divest themselves of the responsibility of seeing that the line was properly located. It is not a power which should be given to the board. Therefore, there will have to be considerable changes in the Bill where power is given to the board to control and direct the location of the line. We all know that in Acts of parliament a line may be built from one point to another, but the section of country it is to pass over is not defined in the Bill. There may be a very wide difference of opinion as to the correctness of the line, and it may be the government would not approve of the line as the board fixed it; therefore, it is proposed to make alterations in all those clauses. It is referred to in so many clauses that it will have to be very carefully considered.

Hon. Mr. FULFORD, from the Committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill and asked leave to sit again.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

JURISDICTION OF EXCHEQUER COURT AS TO RAILWAY DEBTS BILL.

THE COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (155), An Act respecting the Jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court as to Railway Debts.

(In the Committee.)

On subclause (a) of clause 1.

(a) At the instance of the Minister of Railways and Canals, or of any creditor of any person or company owning or operating such railway or section, to order or decree in such manner as it may prescribe, the sale of such railway or section of railway, and of all the rolling stock, equipment and other accessories thereof, whenever such company has become insolvent, or has for more than ten days failed to efficiently continue the working or operating of such railway or section or any part thereof, or has become unable so to do.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I move that this subclause be amended by adding in the second line after the word 'or,' the following:—

With the approval of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, at the instance

And in the 15th line substitute the word 'thirty' for the word 'ten.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But the Railway Committee goes out of existence.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—But when this railway Bill comes into operation, it is provided that the Railway Committee will be superseded by the Railway Commissioners.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It will have the approval of the board?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It will have the approval of the board.

The amendment was adopted.

On subclause (b),

(b) At the instance of a creditor of such person or company, having a lien or charge upon the railway or section, or of a mortgagee of such railway section, to order or decree a like sale of such railway or of such section, with the rolling stock, equipment and other accessories thereof in each case ; or, at the instance of a mortgagee of such railway or section, to order or decree the foreclosure of the interest of the person or company owning or entitled to such railway or such section, with the rolling stock equipment and other accessories thereof, or the equity of redemption therein, whenever in like circumstances of default the High Court of Justice in England can, at the time this Act comes into force, so order or decree with respect to mortgaged premises situate in England ; provided that nothing herein contained shall in any way affect the provisions of sections 94, 95 and 96 of the Railway Act.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I propose to substitute for the word 'premises' in the thirtieth line the word lands. It is the suggestion of the Department of Justice because mortaged premises might be taken as meaning railway premises, and it is not the case. What is meant is mortgaged lands, because in England railways cannot be sold ; it is simply to make the clause clear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to ask the hon. gentleman what would be the effect of selling a section of a railway ? This provides that you may sell the following stock, equipment and other accessories thereof in each case ; or at the instance of a mortgagee of such railway or section, it might destroy the whole railway, might it not ?

If you sold a section, it might destroy the whole railway, might it not ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It is provided in the Railway Bill which we have been discussing that a section may be mortgaged instead of the whole railway. This power is to be exercised by the court, and the court would not dismantle a railway. It is to provide for cases when a railway has been mortgaged, not as a whole but by sections.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In this clause (b) you contemplate the approval of the Railway Committee. Does the creditor named in subclause (b) require such approval ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—No, it is a creditor having a lien. In the first section it is a creditor having no lien, and he should not cause the sale to be made, except with the approval of the government, or of the Railway Board, but in the other case it is a creditor having a lien. He stands as a mortgagee.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Is it not rather an anomalous thing to say 'the owner of a railway' ? No person can own a railway. He cannot work it. It is rather a puzzle to know why that is introduced there.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—You used the same term in the Bill we have just been discussing.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—An individual cannot run a railway. He must have the approval of the government.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—He can run a railway for two years under a license from the Minister of Railways.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He must have the license.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—But having the license he keeps the railway in operation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does not the hon. gentleman think that the words 'fail to efficiently continue to work or operate the road' rather a sweeping and dangerous provision ? There might be many causes which would prevent the working of the road for some days, or a week—the washing away by floods of portions of the track, a snowstorm or anything of that kind. How would a court decide as to what constituted efficiently working ? We can understand in the ordinary acceptation of the word what it means, but this seems to me to be going a little too far, to use plain language.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Of course it is always under the jurisdiction of the court, and the court would not interfere with the railway for trifling reasons. In the English Act there are provisions to this effect as far as the appointing receivers.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We know that in the case of new roads, many times where they have not much money at their disposal, a road may continue to run, but in the general acceptation of the term you would not say it was inefficiently run. Now under this clause the road must be efficiently run, or if it fails for thirty days to be so run, then you can seize and sell it.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman cannot suppose that the court would interfere except on serious grounds. It is difficult to define those grounds.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My experience of the courts, when it is anything affecting the interests of a person, they construe the law literally. That has been my experience in anything I have had to do with courts.

The subclause was adopted.

On clause 6,

6. A railway company is insolvent within the meaning of this Act, in all cases which constitute insolvency under sections 5 and 6 of the Winding up Act, except that paragraph (g) of section 5 of that Act shall not apply to cases where possession of any railway or section thereof has been taken by trustees for bondholders under the provisions of section 94 of the Railway Act, and except further that the delay to secure or compound allowed in the case mentioned in section 6 of the Winding Up Act, shall be fifteen days instead of sixty; but such transfers to trustees shall not exclude such railway from the provisions of this Act.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I move that all the words after '60' in line 42 be struck out, as they are contradictory to the other parts of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Those words are simply declaratory of the law.

Hon. BEIQUE—I do not think they have any effect at all.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—A transfer to trustees would not affect the operation of the Act.

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman invokes the clauses of the Winding Up Act. Under the Winding Up Act railways are especially excluded and it seems rather incongruous and illogical to introduce the clauses of the Winding Up Act when under the Act itself they are absolutely excluded.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The reference made to the Winding Up Act is merely for the purpose of defining when the railway shall be considered insolvent—defining the meaning of the word 'insolvents.' The Winding Up Act is not involved in it at all.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is a definition of a condition that was not considered when it was framed. They are not applicable to railways; they were specially excluded.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This does not bring the railway under the Winding Up Act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If the conditions which affect a railway are similar to those which affect a business under the Winding Up Act they are declared to be insolvent.

Hon. Mr. KERR—It is section five of the Winding Up Act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The definition there of insolvency was not intended to include railways because they are specially excluded.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—If the hon. gentleman can furnish a better definition I am not wedded to that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is a short and sharp way of bringing a railway to time. We have general provisions for railways that become insolvent; this takes it out of the category of the law applicable to railways.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The remark was passed yesterday by Mr. Fisher who addressed the Railway Committee that if we had a law of this kind the Brockville and Westport Railway would not have been for ten years in the hands of receivers, and the creditors unable to get satisfaction. We have in this country actually a number of railways that are a burden on the public instead of fulfilling the requirements of their charter, and of the government itself; and this is for the purpose of providing means to reach such railways without destroying the equitable interest in them. It seems to me it is a very proper way when we have to define the meaning of a word, such as the word 'insolvent,' to refer to another Act of the same parliament where it is already defined, and try to find conditions which are applicable to the case.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It could not have had the effect my hon. friend speaks of in the case of the Brockville and Westport Railway, because there were nine hundred thousand dollars of bonds in the first lien, so that the outside creditor would not have much chance.

Hon. Mr. KERR—It would be a very bare equity.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I desire to move the addition of a clause to the Bill, clause 8, which will read as follows:

That this Act shall not apply to the Central Ontario Railway Company, nor shall it affect pending litigation respecting that road.

The circumstances in that case are peculiar, and the reason why I feel justified in asking for the addition of this clause, which I may say the hon. members agree is reasonable and proper to be added, is largely from this fact; that there was a private Bill applied for during this session respecting that road with a view of bringing about just such an operation as is proposed here. In the House of Commons, after hearing the matter, the bill was rejected by a vote of 128 to 3, or something like that, and under those circumstances it would seem unreasonable in a general Bill that we should comprise that case after they had determined there against it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Could the hon. gentleman give us the reasons why it was rejected by the Commons.

Hon. Mr. KERR—The reason under the circumstances was that in that case as a whole it was not right that there should be such a proceeding taken, and there is a bona fide contest as to who are the owners of the bonds and who are the owners of the stock, and while it was pending and in that shape it is not reasonable that there should be a power of this kind to those who temporarily might have control of the road.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—That is the greatest condemnation of the whole Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In past years my experience has been that it is better to have special legislation. I know the first railway that was sold was by special Act. Where the circumstances are different in the different conditions of a railway, I would feel very much safer, and I think it would be more satisfactory—because no doubt this Bill was pointed at a particular railway—if in that particular case special legislation were brought in. My hon. friend from Toronto has found out that this Bill would have worked a harm if the parties connected with the Ontario road which he mentioned had not become aware of this Bill. There are a dozen cases in Canada, I have no doubt, where roads, which practically may be thrown into insolvency, are not aware of it at all, and the first thing they will know of it will be the service of notice, and that is why I hesitated about the wisdom and propriety of such legislation. I would very much rather in those cases see an Act passed in reference to the road intended to be affected by it. We do not know where it will hit. If my hon. friend did not happen to be in the Senate it would have hit the road and worked an injury.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is hard to reconcile the case mentioned by my hon. friend from Toronto with the fact that the Commons has apparently passed this Bill. It passed the Commons and must have done so with the consent of the government, and yet the very first case that is brought before the Commons that would come within the purview of the Bill is thrown out by one hundred odd to three.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—You exempt it from this Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It seems to be the very strongest condemnation of the principle of the Bill. If such marked disapproval as to a specific case has been made by the Commons as in the case referred to by my hon. friend from Toronto, it is difficult for us to appreciate the expediency of the Bill, but yet it is even a more extraordinary thing that my hon. friend the Secretary of State, who represents the government in this House, is condemning the Bill notwithstanding the fact that the government have passed it in the other House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is nothing new.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not a government measure.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But the government should not have let it go through.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—First of all, I must say this: as far as the amendment is concerned, I have inquired about the special circumstances of the case and I would have expected that perhaps the hon. gentleman might have given them to this hon. House. If it is deemed advisable, I suppose he will have no objection, and I am quite satisfied even if the Bill had been in force at the time, that the circumstances were such that the court would not have put the law in motion in a case of that kind: but as the question was made the subject of a special Bill in the House of Commons during the present session, the parties interested were made somewhat nervous by this Bill and have suggested this amendment in order to be on the safe side. I have been requested by the Prime Minister and by the Minister of Justice, to take charge of this Bill, and before doing so I asked the Secretary of State to take the Bill himself, but because I was more familiar with the measure he suggested my taking it. It was introduced as a private Bill in the House of Commons. I prepared the Bill myself at the request of the Prime Miniter, after consultation with the Minister of Justice, and it is because I happen to be familiar with the Bill, having drafted it, that I took charge of it. The Bill was amended in some measure in the House of Commons. Subclause 2 was added after very serious discussion between the Minister of Justice, and the leader of the opposition, and several other members of the House of Commons, and to my mind it improved the Bill. That is the reason why I happened to father the Bill in this House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is another evidence of departmental administration of the affairs of the country. It is not the first time we have had exhibitions of this kind. I am not going to elaborate upon that point, but simply to call attention to the unfortunate way in which the government is carried on in that particular respect. A Bill emanating from the government ought to be understood and the provisions known by every member of that government, so that whoever has charge of it the members of the goverment could intelligently assume the responsibility when it comes to this House, and be prepared to justify it and give his reasons for it. That is my idea of responsible government. We have had a good many exhibitions here in which even the late Minister of Justice, when he was here, told us pointedly and distinctly that Bills that had been introduced affecting land titles in the North-west and many other very important matters were never submitted to him at all, at which he felt very indignant. For which no one could blame him. However, this is only another of the many illustrations that we have had. Now, in reference to the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from Toronto, something certainly ought to be provided in this Bill so as not to interfere with litigation and rights of ownership now being contested in the courts. The road to which the hon. senator refers runs through the county in which I have been living for the last seventy years, and through a portion of the riding which I had the honour to represent for about twenty-five years, and I know that that road has been in litigation almost ever since the rails were first laid, a quarrel between the stockholders and the United States capitalists who had invested large sums of money in iron mines and iron deposits in the north riding of Hastings, and it is now in the same position; but I believe that the decision of the courts at present is likely to settle the ownership, but the proposition made by the hon. gentleman would exempt this Central Ontario Railway for all time to come from the provisions of this Bill. Now is it advisable that that should be done? Would it not be better to make a general clause at the end providing that the Bill should not affect any rights that are in litigation, or where there are difficulties as to ownership, so as to prevent the possibility of declaring a certain road to be bankrupt at the instance of a small creditor. The road has been run, and I believe efficiently run, for a long time past. I do not think there is any doubt about that question. My hon. friend will know, but I am pretty sure that is correct, because I have been over the road, and it is constantly running.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Oh, yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But would the passage of this Bill, without a proviso, such as that proposed by the hon. senator from Toronto, not have the effect of jeopardizing the interests of parties interested in that road who might take advantage of the Bill in order to throw it into bankruptcy?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—This has received a great deal of consideration and the hon. senator who introduced the Bill gave it a great deal of consideration as well, but the conclusion we arrived at was that it was impossible to cover the case otherwise than by just such a definite exception as we have made here, without embarrassing the operation of the Act with reference to possible other cases we know nothing about. Under those circumstances, this being in a very peculiar position, and the Bill having been rejected in the Commons this year, it was thought that was a reasonable ground to ask that it should be excluded from the operation of the Act this year. Of course when the litigation is over, it would be quite open to repeal that section and make it apply to this case.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You would have to introduce a new Bill.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why was the exception not made in the Commons ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Because it was not known.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Would this road not come within the clause you have provided here as to it not affecting any proceeding now pending in any of the courts ? It seems to me to be rather an anomalous proceeding to ask the Chamber to omit from the operation of the Act a specific road about which we know nothing. We do not doubt for a moment the statement of facts made by my hon. friend from Toronto, yet there is nothing before the Chamber by which we can exercise our individual judgment as to whether this is a road which should come within the operation of the Act or not. I would be quite satisfied to vote for a general clause that it is not to affect any proceedings pending in litigation, but to specify a particular road without our having any data, or any knowledge upon the subject, seems to me to be rather an unbusiness-like proceeding.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The reason why this specific road was named is because it has been the subject of a Bill relating to it specially applied for by one of the parties to the litigation. That is a matter which is within the power of this Chamber, about which there can be no question whatever. That is the reason why it was justifiable to name this specific company, as is often done where the private companies or private interests are definitely to be protected and so on, instead of doing it by general terms. We tried to frame a clause in such way that it would by general terms exclude it. The point of the matter is this : there is a contest going on as to who are the owners of the bonds and stock of the company. One party who claims to be the owner is operating the road. He was entitled to the stock and bonds, they being his property, but they were out of his hands. The person in whose hands they were instituted litigation for the sale of the road, and that person got a judgment which is still the subject of appeal. They got it, of course, without notice to the adverse party. The adverse party having recovered possession of his shares, interposed, but the difficulty was there were some other bond holders outstanding, and some of them said : 'We don't want the judgment disturbed,' Therefore, a new suit has been instituted. There are some three suits or applications pending to get the interests of the parties settled by the courts. They brought a new suit for the purpose of establishing their right to the shares or bonds which they had recovered possession of, and then held. There are issues pending with reference to those shares and bonds. The difficutly of it is, if you say the pending litigation shall be observed, they could dismiss the action and bring a new suit asserting their ownership of the bonds. Under the circumstances, as there are precedents for such a thing in railway cases where there have been special exceptions of the kind, it was thought reasonable in this case to make a special exception.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—But this Bill would apply to other cases.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Yes, this Bill would apply to other cases.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—That is contrary to anything I have ever known in legislation before. All pending cases are always excepted in passing a statute. Are the parties now in litigation to lose all the expenses they have incurred ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—No.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—Does the hon. gentleman say this applies to pending cases ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—What does the hon. gentleman mean by pending cases? It applies to railways generally.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—If there is litigation.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—What kind of litigation? Supposing there should be litigation whereby a mortgage creditor would be asking that the road be sold by the sheriff, surely it would apply to a case of that kind if it is a road which is under the jurisdiction of this parliament. Instead of having the road tied up for six months or a year and not operated, a receiver might be appointed who would operate the road, and keep it running to protect the interests of the bondholders and other creditors. That would be a pending case.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—This is the way I understand it. The case is before the courts now, and by this Bill that case would be affected.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—A bondholder who might want to take advantage of this may have obtained a judgment or issued a writ to recover. This would enable him to take proceedings in the Exchequer Court instead. It would not be proper to exclude such a case as that. In the case in question, technically there is a judgment. Therefore, if you were to say all cases in which judgment has been recovered it would not affect it. It is a peculiar case.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Would not your case come within the latter clause of the amendment, namely a case in which a judgment had been recovered, without specifying the name of the road?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—We might except a great many cases which might not properly be excluded.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But you have excepted cases.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—One particular case.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. YEO, from the Committee, reported the Bill with amendments which were concurred in.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE.

PENSIONS TO JUDGES BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called.

Second reading (Bill 243), An Act to amend the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act, the Exchequer Court Act, and the Act respecting the Judges of provincial courts.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Order of the Day be discharged and that it be made an order for the 22nd September.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—This order has been postponed several times. Will the hon. gentleman be able to proceed with it after the adjournment?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It may not be an opportune time. If I can give my hon. friend any better information I shall be glad to do it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would it not be well to postpone it until the 22nd day of December?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I understand the House will be in session then.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—We are here to stay.

The motion was agreed to.

THIRD READING.

Bill (73) An Act to incorporate the Ontario and Quebec Power Company.—(Hon. Mr. Young.)

RULES OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS.

REPORT OF SELECT STANDING COMMITTEE POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called for the consideration of the report of the Select Committee to confer with a like committee of the House of Commons with a view of respectively revising rule 49 of the Senate, and rule 51 of the House of Commons, and make them harmonize.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I might inform the House that at the request of Mr. Clarke and Mr. Barker an amendment is intended to be introduced in the report as it was adopted by the Joint Committee. It reads as follows:

Mr. Clarke moves to amend section A by inserting the following subsection between subsections 3 and 4:—

3a. A company for the construction of any railway, canal, telegraph, telephones sytem or other works which, although wholly situate within one province of Canada, the promoters desire or intend shall be declared to be for the general advantage of Canada and which in their construction or operation might specially affect the interests of any particular municipality or municipalities, a copy of the notice shall, in addition to the notices in the 'Canada Gazette' and in the particular locality or localities which may be affected by the proposed Act, be sent by mail in a registered letter addressed to the secretary of such province.

The idea seems to be a good one, as tending to facilitate the work of the special committee. I move that the Order of the Day be discharged and that it be placed on the Orders of the Day for the 23rd September.

The motion was agreed to.

THE FRENCH STEAMSHIP LINE.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the House adjourns, I would ask the leader of the government if he is in a position to let us know if any arrangement has been completed between the government and Mr. Carbonneau, acting in the name of the French syndicate who propose to establish a line of steamers between a port of Canada and France.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think the terms have been settled, I do not know if the agreement has been actually signed, but it is ready for signature. I know of the terms.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand it has been signed, but there was some difficulty as to the power of assigning it to another company, and that the government had acceded to that, so that the matter is virtually settled so far as the government and the contractors are concerned. It only needs parliament to confirm it. I do not know whether I have given the correct statement, but that is my understanding of it.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Friday, September 4, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THIRD READING.

Bill (155) An Act respecting the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court as to Railway Debts.—(Hon. Mr. Bêique.)

AN ADJOURNMENT.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière) moved:

That when the Senate adjourns to-day, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, the 22nd instant, at eight o'clock in the evening.

The motion was agreed to.

CANADIAN TRANSPORTATION AND STORAGE COMPANY BILL.

AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto) moved concurrence in the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill (176) An Act to incorporate the Canadian Transportation and Storage Company.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is not my intention to oppose the concurrence by the House in the report, but I may call attention to the fact that the proceedings in connection with this Bill are the most extraordinary that have ever occurred in the Senate. It is difficult to know where the blame lies for the peculiar position in which the matter stands. It appears this Bill was introduced and then it was left off the notice paper, then followed a motion to place it upon the Order paper. Then a motion was made to send it to the Standing Orders Committee, and the Standing Orders Committee are supposed to have reported, but I have since been informed that they never did report on the Bill, although a report was laid before the House. It was then moved by Hon. Sir John Carling that the report be adopted. Then, if my memory serves me right, a subsequent motion was made in the House rescinding the motion adopted to refer it to the Standing Orders Committee. That report was sent to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, and afterwards another motion was made to refer it to the Committee on Standing Orders. How all that bungling took place I do not pretend to say, but what are the facts as they came before the Railway Committee? The report that was supposed to go to the Standing Orders Committee recommended that the operations of the Bill be confined to Ontario, as that was all they asked for in the notice that was published of their intention to apply for legislation. By that means it would have destroyed the real objects of the Bill, and in addition to that, there was a clause in the Bill giving them the right to carry on wrecking in all waters of the Dominion. That would have to be struck out on account of the adoption by this House of the report of the Standing Orders Committee. They have acted to a certain extent upon the recommendation of the committee, which was sent to them by this House. Now, the motion of my hon. friend, as I understand it, is to strike out before the third reading the amendments which were made to the Bill thereby giving the company full power and authority to carry on their business throughout the whole Dominion. It is not my intention to object to that, but I call attention to these facts so that the Senate may know what it is doing.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—In explaining the circumstances to which the hon. leader of the opposition has called the attention of the House, I should like to give a short statement connected with the procedure on this Bill. I do not do so for the purpose of reflecting on the Committee on Banking and Commerce, but I do so on account of the questions which have been raised by the special report placed before this House by the Banking Committee, which calls for some explanation because it would seem to imply that the Standing Orders Committee were not doing their duty. At the time this was passed on by the Standing Orders Committee, I happened to be in Manitoba, and the gentleman who presided over the Standing Orders Committee at the time was an old parliamentarian, and I have no doubt the proceedings of that committee closely followed the rules of the House. With reference to the explanation that the records warrant me in making, I want to say on May 27 (page 194 of our minutes and proceedings) you will find that a petition was presented from Frederick Nichols praying for the passage of this legislation. On the 29th of May that petition was received and read by the House. Therefore the petition, so far as this Bill (176) was concerned, came regularly before the House and I wish to explain that the Standing Orders Committee adopted this policy, that when a petition was referred to it, and the required notice did not appear to have been given by the party applying, rather than put in an adverse decision against the petition on account of the advertisements not being long enough, they set the petition to one side until the notices were in accordance with the rules of the House—provided the notices were being published at the time according to our rules. This petition was short in time of notice. Therefore it stood on one side until that time had expired. We find on July 15th the petition came before the Standing Orders Committee, and was reported upon as hon. gentlemen will see by the report of the Banking and Commerce Committee in which they quote the report of the Standing Orders Committee of July 15th. I just wish to refer only for a moment to that. The Committee reported as follows :

> Your committee have examined the following petition :—
>
> Of Frederick Nichols and others, of the city of Toronto ; praying to be incorporated as 'The Canadian Transportation and Storage Company,' and find that the notice of application required by rule 49 has only been published in the 'Canada Gazette' and in one newspaper in the province of Ontario.
>
> Your committee recommend that the committee to whom the Bill incorporating the petitioners may be referred to shall confine the operations of the said company to the province of Ontario.

This report was adopted by the House, and therefore the petition in all its stages was perfectly in order, and the procedure up to that time cannot be questioned. But on July 10th, we find this Bill (176) was read the first time in this House, and referred to the Standing Orders Committee under rule 59. On July 10th the petition had not been passed upon by the Committee on Standing Orders. It was passed on by the committee on July 15th. When the report of the Standing Orders Committee was adopted by the House, the senator in charge of the Bill found it was not necessary to have the Bill go before the Standing Orders Committee, because the petition had been passed upon, and he moved that the order of the House referring the Bill to the Standing Orders Committee be rescinded, so that the Bill would be brought under the jurisdiction of the House at once, because the petition had been passed upon and there was no longer any necessity to go before the Standing Orders Committee. The order rescinding the former order of the House is on record. It was the only course left open to the hon. senator who had charge of the Bill if he wished to facilitate its passage, and not lose any unnecessary time, because the petition had been passed upon and there was no necessity to consider the Bill. It would be duplicating the work, which the Standing Orders Committee would not be justified in doing, because they had already reported on the petition covering the same Bill. I take it, however, that the Banking and Commerce Committee did not have that information in full before them when they were making their report yesterday. They did have before them what they embodied in their report, but they did not have a record of the proceedings that were taken on the petition. Consequently, it appeared to them that there was an irregularity. There was something there that they could not understand. Not having the full information before them, but feeling or thinking something was wrong, the committee acted very properly in reporting to the House when there was even a suspicion that the procedure was not as complete as it ought to be. Had the explanations been made before the Committee on Banking and Commerce, they would not have referred to the proceedings before the Standing Orders Committee, but would have made the reports on the merits of the Bill as on ordinary occasions. The hon. leader of the opposition pointed out that the Standing Orders Committee reported that the Bill be confined in its operations to Ontario. They had no other option. They could have recommended the suspension of the rules, but they recommended that the operations be confined to the province of Ontario because the notice had only been given in Ontario, and while the Bill was apparently extended further, it was for the committee to exercise its judgment, which I am not going to question or criticise at all. I am only detailing the history of the case to show that the procedure was regular, and if the circumstances were to occur again to-morrow, the very same procedure I think would be followed in the best interests of forwarding legislation in the House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Is there not some uncertainty about the last paragraph? Does it not state that it is for the House to say whether it is to apply to Ontario or to Canada generally?

Hon. Mr. KERR—Yes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Would it not be well to amend that?

Hon. Mr. KERR—The hon. gentleman from Grey is giving a notice which I do not wish to have taken up to-day, because the hon. gentleman from Sorel understands it is not to come up to-day. I move that this Bill be read a third time on Tuesday, the 22nd inst.

The motion was agreed to.

OTTAWA VALLEY RAILWAY COMPANY BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called,

Second reading (Bill Z) An Act respecting the Ottawa Valley Railway Company.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved that the Order of the Day be discharged and placed on the Orders of the Day for 22nd inst.

The SPEAKER—I think it proper to call the attention of the House to certain circumstances in connection with this Bill. The following memorandum was placed in my hands by one of the clerks of the House:

A petition was presented to the Senate (under seal as required by rule 57) and read and received the 18th of March. The petition and notice in the 'Canada Gazette' and newspaper asked for power to construct a branch line of railway to St. Combe only. This petition was reported upon by the Standing Orders Committee as being in conformity with the rules.

The House of Commons Committee on Standing Orders reported to the same effect.

Bill (59), a copy of which is attached, was presented to the House of Commons, and on report of the Railway Committee, thrown out—preamble not proven.

The Bill as presented to the Senate to-day is an entirely different Bill, a new Bill, a Bill for which there is no petition presented as is required by Rule 54, and no notices published as required by Rules 49 and 50. These ought to be suspended, as Rule 54 has not, as I take it, been complied with.

Rule 53, consequently, cannot be complied with.

Rules 49, 50, 53 and 54 should be suspended.

I read this memorandum for the information of hon. gentlemen interested in the Bill, so that we shall not get into a tangle over this Bill, as happened in connection with the Bill we have just been dealing with.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The motion is simply to defer the Order of the Day, and the merits of the Bill are not under discussion, but I should like to ask the hon. Speaker if the petition was not presented to and received by the House under the same title as the Bill.

The SPEAKER—A petition was presented about three days ago by the hon. gentleman from St. John.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Is that the only petition presented ?

The SPEAKER—That is as far as I know. I know nothing of the matter myself, but this memorandum was handed to me by one of the officers who has charge of the Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the memorandum refer to the fact that this Bill was introduced in the Commons and thrown out ?

The SPEAKER—Yes, but this is not the same Bill.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Might I ask what officer furnished the memorandum ?

The SPEAKER—The clerk who has charge of private Bills, Mr. Soutter.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was informed that the hon. gentleman who had charge of the Bill intended to postpone it till the House re-assembled.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—He requested me to make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

TORONTO AND HAMILTON RAILWAY COMPANY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto) moved the second reading of Bill (147) An Act to incorporate the Toronto and Hamilton Railway Company.

The SPEAKER.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I have no desire to bring the House to a vote on the question involved in this Bill, undertaking to charter a railway such as the one now under consideration. The provisions of the Bill we have just disposed of, and which is left over until after the Senate re-assembles, are of the same kind, absolutely and entirely local in character, and they should be dealt with by the provinces. This is another case. However, as I have stated, as the Senate is thin, I am willing to let the second reading pass, and when we re-assemble we can thresh out the whole principle before the committee, but it is with the understanding that we are not committed to the principle of the Bill that I consent to that being done.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think that is a principle that has been recognized for many years past. The old parliamentary practice was that the moment a Bill passed the second reading the principle of the Bill was affirmed but not the details. I know in the House of Commons the question was discussed many years ago and it was distinctly understood then,—I heard the principle laid down by the then hon. leader of the government, Sir John. A. Macdonald—that it was to be considered that as the full merits of a measure were to be considered in committee, it should be understood in the House that upon allowing the second reading to take place the principle that had prevailed in the past of being a confirmation of the principle of the Bill should no longer be considered to be binding. Those in the House of Commons at the time, will remember it. I think that has been the practice ever since. I hold very strong views upon the question of our legislating upon questions which are purely local, but I have no doubt the intention of the promoters of this railway is to purchase and amalgamate with all the electric roads running from Hamilton, although the city of Hamilton is precluded under the Bill, to Niagara Falls, with the ultimate intention of extending it as far as Montreal. I believe that is the intention. There is one peculiarity in this Bill to which I call the attention of the House. We are asked now to incorporate an electric road from Toronto to Hamilton ; that is to declare it to be a road for the general benefit of the Dominion, and consequently coming within the purview and control of the legislation of this House. Another provision is that they are to have power to acquire one or two roads running from Hamilton to St. Catharines, and on to Niagara Falls. Those roads are by the provisions of the Bill, to remain under the control of the provincial legislature. I have no doubt in the world, that if this Bill is passed the promoters of the Bill will come down next year and ask that the other portions of the road be declared to be in the general interest of the Dominion and certainly if there is to be but one road it should not be under the double jurisdiction, and if we live until next session, I shall not be at all surprised, the moment these roads to which I have referred have been acquired by this line which is declared to be in the general interests of the country, to find a Bill introduced here to have them all placed under the jurisdiction of the Dominion. I call attention to that fact to justify the remark that I made that this Bill is rather conglomerate in its character. I do not know, under the circumstances, having passed so many Bills during the present session of a somewhat similar character, that we should reject this one.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—The promoters of the Bill should show us what it is that gives a federal character to the Bill, and what brings the Bill within the jurisdiction of the federal parliament. There has been a great abuse of those declarations that certain works are in the interests of Canada, and I think it is time a stop was put to those abuses. I have the Bill before me, and I see nothing so far to convince me that it is within the jurisdiction of the federal parliament. It is not sufficient to say that a work is in the interests of Canada. It is not sufficient to declare that it is. It must be demonstrated in some way.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—In view of what the hon. member from Hastings has said, and from his experience of parliamentary practice, that the second reading does affirm the principle of the Bill, and from what I heard outside, it is very important that the Bill should be studied, and therefore, I think it would be far better that the hon. gentleman should postpone the second reading. I am willing to admit that the greater part of the brains of this House are in the possession of the Railway Committee, but there might be a slight modicum of the cerebellum of the brain outside, and therefore, I think that in deference to them and the small number of members present, and in view of the time we shall have to study this case, in view of what Sir Mackenzie Bowell has said, we should all look into it, and, anxious as I was before, I am more anxious now, and I should ask the hon. gentleman to postpone the second reading until we return. There will be nothing lost by his doing that, and it is only in order that he might push it a step further that the hon. gentleman from Wellington has assented to its being allowed to pass the second reading to-day. I would ask the hon. gentleman not to press the second reading now, but to leave it until we resume.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It seems to me the view expressed to me by the hon. gentleman from Belleville does not cover the whole doctrine. There are Bills which contain a declaration that the work is for the general advantage of Canada and which do not show very clearly in express terms the fact that they are for the general advantage of Canada ; but that is a fact which it seems to me the committee has a right to investigate. The promoters may throw such light upon the Bill and establish so clearly that it is for the general advantage of Canada, that the doubt which might exist on a cursory reading of the Bill would be removed. That is why it seems to me that the promoter of the Bill should be entitled to make an explanation before the Railway Committee in regard to the Bill.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Would the hon. member for Belleville permit me to ask him if this is a railway crossing the Grand Trunk Railway ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Yes.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Then I desire to express my pleasure that the hon. gentleman from Belleville has somewhat changed his opinion, because when I moved the other day to strike out clause 6 of the Railway Bill, which purported to bring under the jurisdiction of this parliament all railways.

whether federal or local works for the general advantage of Canada, if they crossed a railway under the jurisdiction of this parliament, the hon. member supported clause 6. Now, I understand he holds the opinion that that is no sufficient reason.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman is altogether in error. This is a road, as I understand it, to run from Toronto to Hamilton. It may or may not cross the Grand Trunk Railway. You can reach Hamilton without crossing the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway. My hon. friend here (Hon. Mr. Kerr) tells me it does cross the Grand Trunk Railway. That does not change my opinion on the point raised by the hon. gentleman. This Bill has been opposed principally on the ground that it is an interference with municipal rights and because of its local character.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I draw the attention of the hon. gentleman to the consequence of making a declaration such as that contained in clause 6. If that declaration had been made, all railways of this kind would have been declared to be exclusively under the jurisdiction of this parliament, and therefore opposition to this Bill on that ground could not have been urged.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Perhaps it is due to the House that I should say a word or two with reference to this Bill. I did not anticipate there would be any opposition to it, or that this question would be discussed. The Bill is an important one, I did not undertsand the hon. member for Belleville to say that by giving the Bill a second reading the principle of it was adopted. On the contrary, my understanding of what he said was that it was not a recognition of the principle of the Bill, and that the committee was quite able to deal with that matter when we sent it to the committee, or the House could, on its return, deal with the principle of the Bill. That being so, I would call the attention of the hon. gentleman from Kingston to the fact that the Bill is, after all, only a very short one. There is very little in it—permission to build a railway—and I am quite sure, from what I know of the hon. member for Kingston, it would not take him very many minutes to see all that there is in it. Under these circumstances, perhaps I may be pardoned for saying that the Bill should receive its second reading and be advanced a stage, so that when we come back on the 22nd instant we may have something to do; for I doubt very much if we will have much to do once this Bill does pass. The Bill is to incorporate a company to build a railway—I want to emphasize the word 'railway'—to build a railway from Toronto to Hamilton. The impression is that it is an electric tramway. I desire to have it understood here that it is nothing of the kind, but that it is designed to be a main through railway from Toronto to Hamilton, crossing the Grand Trunk Railway near Burlington Beach, and crossing at Burlington Beach, with the permission of the municipality, if that can be obtained, and which no doubt can be obtained of the townships of Saltfleet and Nelson, and to a point connecting with the other two roads leading from there to Niagara Falls. The idea, and ambition of those who are seeking incorporation for this purpose is to build a high class railway, of the very highest order, equipped in the best and most complete and perfect manner, and to have it propelled with power from Niagara Falls as an exemplification of the finest piece of railway construction and the finest piece of electric road on the continent, and that means anywhere in the world. I can conceive of nothing in the present age better calculated to be of benefit to Canada than a road of that order, built under such circumstances, in such a place, and equipped in that manner, drawing power from Niagara Falls, connecting on the Niagara river with the leading United States railways, on the boundary of the Dominion, and from there to Hamilton over the lines of railroad which are already within the jurisdiction of this Dominion, connecting at Hamilton with this new road to be built from Toronto to Hamilton, making one complete line. Let me say to hon. senators whose attention may have been directed to this Bill on account, perhaps, of proceedings in another place, that a number of people got excited over this Bill and were under the impression that municipal rights were being invaded. Whether that was or was not possible under the Bill as originally introduced in the House of Commons, it is not necessary for me now to state. Suffice it to say, if there ever was such a provision in the Bill, it is not in the Bill now. Municipal rights are protected in this Bill to a greater extent than they would be under the laws of the province of Ontario. More complete control over their property and streets remains in the municipality under this Bill than if this railway were incorporated under the general law of the province of Ontario. So that there is no room any longer for fear or alarm that the public interest is not going to be guarded or protected by the provisions of this Bill. Under these circumstances, it appears to me that this is a case which, having regard to what occurred in the other House, it is reasonable to ask the Senate to sanction this incorporation. I may add, all the opposition to this Bill was excited by the action taken by the City Council of Toronto, who, without knowing much about the provisions in the Bill itself—it had started before they had seen the Bill—called upon a number of municipalities through which the road passes—and I believe that all or nearly all the municipalities through which the road is to pass, except the city of Toronto, were anxious that the road should be built, and were not at all apprehensive of their rights being invaded. The city of Toronto, however, opposed the Bill, but ultimately a compromise was arrived at, and a memorandum was handed into the Railway Committee of the other chamber, by which they withdrew their opposition, and the Bill was passed there, and subsequently in the House of Commons. Opposition was withdrawn and there is no reason any longer why there should be any fear or apprehension about the propriety of the Senate passing this Bill. If there were, I should not assume the responsibility of taking charge of it. Under the circumstances, I think I was justified in moving the second reading.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I desire to join in the wish expressed by the hon. gentleman from Toronto that this Bill be read the second time to-day. It seems to me we shall be gaining time, and anyway it is a question of fact whether this work is to be declared or not for the general advantage of Canada. That is a question of fact which can only properly be dealt with in committee. If the Bill receives its second reading to-day, I suppose it will be referred to the Railway Committee, where that question will be decided, and the hon. member has given information to this House which, it seems to me, tends to establish a prima facie case, anyway, sufficient to ask that the Bill be referred to the Railway Committee.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I have no desire to retard the passage of the Bill in any way. I was under the impression that we were asked to agree to the principle of this important Bill before we had given it sufficient attention. Of course, I should be glad, as I suppose we all would be, to see electricity used as a motive power for railways, and probably it may be the beginning in Canada of a power which will spread all over the Dominion. We are all sanguine enough to hope that very soon electricity may be used instead of steam. I hope the Bill will go through like a flash.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—When I intimated my willingness that this Bill should go to a second reading, I did not expect a discussion would arise on the principle of the Bill. I wish to say in reply to the hon. gentleman from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Kerr), that I challenge the action of this House with regard to the Bill, on the ground that it deals with a local work entirely within the limits of the province of Ontario, and therefore, that the company should be chartered by that province, and not by this House. Roads that are declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, come under our jurisdiction, but we cannot declare such a road as this will be for the general advantage of Canada until it is brought into existence. If it is in existence and crosses the Grand Trunk Railway and Canadian Pacific Railway, and becomes a work for the general advantage, it can be declared as such; but we cannot do that until it is in existence. I have taken the stand strongly that these Bills that properly belong to the province should be chartered by the provincial legislature. We are here asked to do the work of the province, to encroach on the rights of a province in granting charters just to such lines as this and the one which preceded this order. I said as a matter of courtesy, owing to the fact that the House was thin, I was willing to let the Bill go to the second reading, and discuss the principle afterwards; but seeing that the principle is being discussed, I want to clearly and distinctly state that I take my stand on the point that a road cannot be declared for the general advantage of Canada until it has an existence. Then, if it is of a character to be a road for the general advantage of Canada, it can be so declared, but until that time, if it is a local line, it is entirely under the control of the local legislature, and should seek its charter from the local legislature and not from this House. I care not how hon. gentlemen explain that it crosses the Grand Trunk Railway or any other Dominion work, these are no sufficient arguments for this House assuming the responsibility of chartering a local railway. That is the stand I take, and I intend to fight it out on that stand and adhere to it, until I am convinced I am wrong. I have formed these views after many years of experience, and I believe they are the views which should prevail. I know we have been sinning in this direction for fifteen or twenty years—ever since the railway Bill was introduced by Sir Charles Tupper. I do not blame him for passing that Bill, but I believe parliament has been erring on this question of chartering roads that were entirely and absolutely within the province, and should be chartered by the province. Now, I say that we should, in justice to ourselves and in justice to the province, at once recognize provincial rights in connection with all local questions. It is not within our sphere, and that is why I oppose this Bill, and the Bill which we dealt with before it. It is a flimsy thread on which to hang a contention that we should grant a charter for a road here because in years to come it may become a work for the general advantage of Canada. We have no right to bring it into existence. Let those who promote it go to the local House, and get a charter there, and in after years, if it becomes a work for the general advantage of Canada, let it be so declared.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I should like to point out to the hon. member that there is yet time for him this session to introduce a Bill to repeal a Bill introduced by himself, which contains the very same obnoxious principle which he says is contained in this Bill. To be consistent, and to enable us all to understand that he is absolutely dead in earnest in this, and not merely talking to the gallery, I think it is incumbent on him to introduce a Bill to repeal the Bill which he has already had passed in this House, with his name attached to it, under precisely the same conditions he has been pointing out. Nay, more, I will undertake to point out before the committee that there are many reasons why this Bill should receive the declaration which he has been speaking of, while I think they are not existing in the Bill which he had passed.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The Bill that stood in my name this session was put in my name without my consent. I was requested to move its reading here and I did so. Up to that time, I had never given to this whole question such serious consideration as I have given to it recently, and I have come to the conclusion that it is wrong on our part. I confess that I have been a sinner as well as other hon. gentlemen. In the other House, and in this House, we have passed such Bills. I confess I have been a sinner along with the others, but repentence at the eleventh hour is better than none at all. I say we should draw a line now. As far as I am concerned, if other members of this House do not see it their duty to draw the line, I find no fault with them, but I shall draw the line myself.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I would suggest to the hon. gentleman from Wellington, if he admits being a sinner up to the last hour, and purposes to repent at the eleventh hour, this being probably a more important Bill than the small Bills he has been sinning about all session, he might let this Bill go to the committee now.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I did not object to that.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman's attention was called to the obnoxious provision in the Bill he was fathering when it was before the committee, and he said because two other Bills of the same character had been sanctioned by the committee, his ought to go through also. The arguments advanced by the hon. gentleman show that if any electric railway in western Ontario is entitled to consideration by this parliament, it is the one which is now before us. It is in the vicinity of where there is ample electric power to be secured, and, as stated by the hon. gentleman from Toronto, I believe in a short time nearly all those railways in the vicinity of Toronto will be run by electric power. I believe steam railways will adopt electricity as a motor power. It will avoid the trouble of smoke and danger of fire, and I believe will be much cheaper in operation than the present steam motor power. If there is any one Bill of this character which has come before parliament this session which should receive the endorsation of parliament, it is this Bill. The objection to this Bill was raised in the House of Commons by the city of Toronto. The city of Toronto thought the Bill was to secure some control over the street railways of the city, and they came here to oppose it. I had an opportunity to listen to some of the arguments advanced in the committee of the House of Commons, and all the municipalities through which this road is to operate came here and supported the Bill. About the only opposition it had was from the city of Toronto, and that opposition was withdrawn on the insertion of a compromise clause in the Bill before it left the House of Commons. That being the case, there is not much left for us but to approve of the Bill. So far as the argument of provincial rights is concerned, I believe in provincial rights, but I would not like to say we should bind ourselves by a hard and fast rule that no legislation which comes before this parliament that may be considered within the jurisdiction of the local legislature, shall be dealt with here. I believe in a province having exclusive control over local affairs, as I stated here yesterday when we were discussing educational matters, but a different course may be necessary when it comes to railways. The whole purport of the Railway Bill is that the traffic of Canada can be better served by having the control of all railways under a Dominion commission. If that is a good principle, it should be applied to all railways for carrying passengers, so far as rates and tolls are concerned—they all should be under the management of the railway commission.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second time.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I desire to call attention to a grievance I have before the House adjourns. I do not want to make more out of it than necessary, but I think it is right that we should see to the correctness of the record of our proceedings. The proceedings with regard to my motion of yesterday are inaccurately recorded. In the first place, the mention of it does not appear at the proper place. It is mentioned as having taken place at the night session, whilst it took place at the three o'clock meeting. In the second place, there is no motion recorded. I made a distinct motion, which was carried, and I see in the proceedings that the motion is not mentioned at all; consequently there is no order of the House, and I cannot request the production of any paper because my intention was to call for the production of some papers and the House granted the motion. I think the attention of the proper officer should be called to it in order that our proceedings should be recorded rightly. I make these remarks with a view of having the error corrected. Whilst I am on my feet, I should like to ask the Secretary of State what is the number of the sessional paper.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE— I think the way to correct the mistake would be to enter in the proceedings a note that there has been an irregularity.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The correction will be made no doubt.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—I move that the correction be made in the record of the next proceedings of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In reply to the inquiry of the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface, I laid on the Table a copy of the document, but I could not tell the number just now. It was in the session of 1897.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I looked in the appendix and could not find it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I laid a copy of it on the Table.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I call attention to the fact that the document which has been laid upon the Table is not the document which I asked for. That document must have been signed by somebody, and there is no signature to it. Later on I will call upon the hon. gentleman to produce the genuine document.

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—I move that the correction of the error pointed out by the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface in the minutes of proceedings of to-day be published in the next issue of the minutes of proceedings.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Tuesday, September 22, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eight o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

MANITOBA GRAIN ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (232) An Act to amend the Manitoba Grain Act, 1900.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I should like to have this Bill stand over, because I wish to see the original Act. A great many sections are repealed and amended.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Would not the better way be to deal with it in committee? It is full of details.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Very well, but I should like to get a copy of the Act which this amends.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. It will be within the recollection of the House that in 1900 this body gave a great deal of consideration to the Manitoba Grain Act. It was very much discussed, particularly by our friends from Manitoba and the North-west, and I think we considerably improved it. However, there are numerous interests involved in this question. There is the grain-grower; there is the elevator man; there is the purchaser of the grain, and there is the railway company, and a great variety of questions have arisen affecting their several interests. During the early part of this session the grain-growers' association sent delegates to Ottawa, and so did the buyers' association. They met here, and the railway officials, who were familiar with the questions that arise in the consideration of this matter, met here, and they, I will not say agreed to the clauses set forth in this Bill, but as nearly as possible they did so, each one yielding something. They thought that this was the best compromise. The Bill repeals the amendments made last session in toto. In 1902 we amended the Act of 1900. This Bill repeals the Act of last year. I will run rapidly over the various paragraphs, mentioning the interests that they affect. The second clause is the interpretation clause. The next authorizes the appointment of deputy warehouse commissioners. Heretofore there has been just the one commissioner, and as his territory extended between Fort William through to the Rocky mountains, it has been found impossible in the busy season that he should give attention to the various difficulties that arise in different localities which require personal attention, and authority is given to appoint a deputy commissioner. Then, a new individual has arisen under this Bill, known as the track buyer. The parties engaged in the selling and buying of grain take out a license. It is found that there is a person, known as the track buyer, who does a considerable amount of business. It is proposed that he should be included among the persons compelled to take out a license. The next clause adds to the duties we impose in obliging them to also state whether the car is leaking or in bad order, when he is making his examination. Then, the next is regarding statements that heretofore have been made every Tuesday morning. They are hereafter to be made weekly, but under the direction of the commissioner. Clause 7 gives power to the commissioner to settle disputes as they arise from time to time between the parties. Then, clause 9; heretofore it was absolutely necessary for an elevator to receive the grain, and it was found in many instances that a larger quantity was offered than the elevators could receive; there was not sufficient space, and so that clause has been repealed.

Then this matter of storage; it was provided in the law as it stood, that if grain had been placed in an elevator with the intention of removing it on to Fort William, after seven days there should be no storage charge. This is modified. Provision is made that no storage shall be charged in the event of the person entitled to remove the grain, obtaining a car at the earliest possible time, and having the grain sent forward. Clause 12 amends the provision relating to the duty of the warehousemen when grain is out of condition. Clause 13 deals with the duty of the warehousemen in furnishing statements for the commissioner. Clause 14 provides for the erection of flat warehouses. Clause 15 defines the time within which any person who has procured a site shall be required to commence the erection of his elevator or warehouse. Clause 16 makes provision for the erection of loading platforms. Clause 17 regulates the duties of grain commission merchants. Clause 18 provides for the application of the fees collected. Clauses 18, 19 and 20 relate to the penalties for infractions of the Act. Clause 21 deals with the distribution of cars, and the remaining clauses, 22 and 23, deal with the question of storage charges. These are clauses that individually are not affected by preceding or subsequent clauses, and therefore we can discuss them better and give fuller explanations when the House is in committee on the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

PENSIONS TO JUDGES' BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Second reading of Bill (243) An Act to amend the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act, the Exchequer Court Act, and the Act respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Order of the Day be discharged and that it be made an order for Friday next.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Will the hon. gentleman inform the House why this Bill is postponed from one sitting to another.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There are a number of gentlemen who take a very great interest in it who are not present to-night—one particularly.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why not say to-morrow ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There are some questions on which I wish to get the views of my colleagues.

The motion was agreed to, and the Order of the Day was discharged.

OTTAWA VALLEY RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Second reading of Bill (Z) An Act respecting the Ottawa Valley Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Domville.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think the hon. member can proceed with this Bill, inasmuch as a similar Bill has been thrown out by the House of Commons, and it would be contrary to all parliamentary practice, after a Bill has been defeated in one House to introduce it in another. There is a slight change in the Bill. Perhaps it would be more fair to the gentleman who has charge of it not to give the facts as I have them, and therefore it will be better to let the Bill stand over.

The Bill was allowed to stand.

PENNY BANKS BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (198) An Act respecting Penny Banks.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be read the second time to-morrow. He said : This Bill is due to a movement made by a number of benevolent people in the city of Toronto, who desire to establish a bank to encourage thrift among the poorer classes, allowing very small sums to be deposited. The bank starts with a capital of $10,000, and the directors carry it on simply for the object set forth in the Bill, which can be more properly explained, perhaps, at the second reading of the Bill. The capital is limited to $10,000, and the moneys under deposit are to be transferred to the government savings banks. A sum of five per cent is retained by the bank for the purpose of meeting the cheques which may come in from parties who desire to withdraw their deposits.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is the word 'penny' recognized in our currency?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think it is, since we adopted the decimal system. I presume this was copied from some English Bill, but that will not disturb it. Depositors can, of course, invest one cent, or five cents or two cents.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—As we understand it, the English penny passes for two cents. Is that provided for in the Bill, declaring that a penny shall be two cents?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is a mere name.

The motion was agreed to.

IRON BOUNTIES BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (238) An Act to amend chapter 8 of the statutes of 1899 respecting bounties on steel and iron and to provide for the payment of bounties on certain articles manufactured from steel.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The object of this Bill is to enlarge the bounty system in regard to steel and iron, giving a bounty of $6 per ton on rolled round wire rods of certain proportions made in Canada. It also extends the bounty system, as passed in 1897—that is, continuing the present year the higher rate that was in force last year. I shall explain the details of this Bill more fully at the next stage. I move that the Bill be read the second time to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAD BOUNTIES BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (239) An Act to provide for the payment of bounties on lead contained in lead-bearing ores mined in Canada.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN moved that the Bill be read the second time to-morrow. He said: This Bill grants a bounty of $500,000 a year for five years for the mining and smelting of lead in Canada. It is payable, I think, at the rate of three-quarters of a cent a pound on the refined lead mined and smelted in Canada. The mining of lead and silver ores in the province of British Columbia some years ago was a very large and important industry. Due to various causes, largely to the combination of smelting interests in the United States, the mining of lead became unprofitable in Canada, because we could not sell our ores to the United States smelters. The price of lead also depreciated the last few years, so that, to encourage the industry, it was found necessary to grant a bounty of this kind, or give some aid, and this was the method adopted by the government to assist that large and important industry. I am very glad to say, the announcement of this bounty has very greatly improved the condition of things in the great lead and silver mining country of the Slocan. The Bill is a very simple one. No doubt, it will provoke a discussion on the second reading, which I have moved for to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

CANADIAN CABLE NEWS BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with the Bill (240) An Act to assist in establishing and maintaining an independent foreign service of telegraphic news from Great Britain for publication in the Canadian press.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN moved that the Bill be read the second time to-morrow. He said: This Bill grants to an association, to be called the Canadian Press Association, the sum of $15,000 a year for two and a half years, ten thousand dollars for the following year, $5,000 for the fourth year, after which the aid is to be discontinued. This, I understand, is about one-half of the expected cost of the new Canadian Associated Press system, which has been recently established, and which is now in actual operation, the despatches being received by the newspapers of the country which have taken advantage of the formation of this association, as already hon. gentlemen will see. I myself, as a newspaper man, am inclined to think it is calculated to be of considerable advantage to the country, although I am bound to say there is a possibility of improving the service as regards the character and class of news thus far received. No doubt, however, as the correspondents at the headquarters in London familiarize themselves and learn the class of news required in this country, the service will be materially improved. We have been complaining for many years that the character of the despatches received from Great Britain, filtering through the United States channels, gave to the British news published here a distinctly United States flavour. It was for the purpose of obtaining accurate and reliable news from Great Britain that the government have thought it wise to supplement the efforts of the newspaper men of this country, by giving them this aid.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I hope the government will, if possible, endeavour to make some general statement with regard to its policy as to bounties. I regret that the hon. gentleman from Rockland (Hon. Mr. Edwards) is not in his place, because I understand him to be generally opposed to bounties, as I myself am, although I do not say that I would not vary my view to meet some particular case where it would seem to be exceedingly advisable to do it. We have already passed one Bill for bounties, and here are three more Bills of a similar character. It is quite a novel practice to grant a bounty to such an industry as the collection of news. Perhaps I should not object to it, although I do not think the result will follow which the hon. member who has charge of the Bill predicts. What has been done so far is not very much. I think there should be a statement, for the satisfaction of free traders like myself, as to how far the government intend to pursue a policy of granting bounties. They appear to me to be very inconsistent with the general policy of the Liberal party, and I should like to know, when the second reading comes up, in a more definite way what is to be done in the matter of bounties.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The suggestion of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, I think will meet the approval of the members of the Senate generally, whatever their opinions may be as to the policy of granting bounties. When we reflect for a moment on the position taken in the past by the gentlemen who are now extending the principle of bounties, we might well ask what the policy is to be for the future? Speaking personally, I am not opposed in toto to bounties; I am not a free trader like my hon. friend, but the policy of the present government in extending the principle of granting bounties is simply a device to evade the other greater and more important question of protecting the industries in this country. It is a kind of makeshift, if I may use that expression, in order that they may say to the people: 'We have not violated the free trade principles which we have been advocating; we accomplish the same object by granting bounties out of the funds of the country to which you all pay a part.' It was not my intention to have said anything upon the question at this stage, nor should I have done so had not the hon. gentleman from St. John asked for an explanation of the general policy of the government upon this question. Are we to evade the economic principle of free trade or protection and adopt the other—what shall I call it?

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Compromise.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Well, that is scarcely the correct word.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Substitute.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Compromise or substitute—I think it is an evasion of the principle, and whether it is to be the general policy of the government is an important matter, because it is a very grave question to submit to the people as to whether industries of the kind which are being aided by a bounty, temporary in its character, will have the effect that we desire, of encouraging and perpetuating the industry thus aided. My own view is that if we desire to encourage such industries as the refining of lead in this country, we have to adopt a principle similar to that which exists in the United States. When the United States refuse to admit our raw material into their country without taxing it in proportion to its intrinsic value, or the percentage of lead that is in the ore, that we should at once—I do not like the word retaliate, but I would adopt a principle in the interest of Canada no matter what policy the United States might pursue. If we impose a fair protective duty, the lead could be refined in this country, and I have no doubt that in a year or two there would be ample to supply the markets of this country and also a large quantity to export to outside markets. Until we do that, depend upon it we will have no real success in the establishment of these different industries permanently. The expedient of granting a bounty for a few years is temporary, and when the aid is withdrawn the producer would find himself in the same position he occupied before the bounty was granted. Another point we ought to consider is that in granting a bounty we do not interfere with or restrict the importation of the article that comes in competition with that which is produced in the country by granting the bounty.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In other words, it does not give the market to the producers in Canada. It is only a temporary expedient for a very short time. I hope when the second reading is moved we will have the information asked for, and we will then be in a position to deal intelligently with the Bill.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—I am inclined to think my hon. friend has been speaking more with reference to the bounties on lead than with regard to the Bill before us. I can scarcely think that my hon. friend will consider this a bounty of the same character as the aid extended for the encouragement of the lead-mining industry or the manufacture of steel. This is really a grant, so to speak, to encourage for a time the newspaper men of Canada to procure a reliable news service from the old country. It is a very common thing with governments to encourage deserving enterprises of this kind. This year already the government has given grants to the Toronto exhibition of $50,000; to the Board of Trade, Montreal, in connection with the recent meeting of the chambers of commerce of the empire, $25,000, and so on. This is not a bounty such as my hon. friend has been discussing. It is an encouragement to the newspaper men, a contribution, dollar for dollar, to the newspaper men, of $15,000 per annum for three years. It may not exceed that. It may be less. I trust my hon. friend will join the association, so that the cost to the country will be less. If we all joined the association and paid toll for bringing the news across the cable, the cost to the country would be small indeed. But the newspaper men of Canada are poor, as my hon. friend and myself know. They cannot afford to pay the very large toll charged for cable service, and it is very necessary in the public interest that Canada should be served with a reliable, up-to-date news service from the old country. We thought it a patriotic thing to give this aid, and I dispute entirely the premises of my hon. friend when he argues along the line that this is a bounty which is being given because we want to evade the giving of encouragement through the medium of protection, as he would advocate. As to the suggestion of my hon. friend from St. John, I am sure my hon. friend the Secretary of State will be able to announce the policy of the government in respect to bounties on the second reading of this Bill.

The motion was agreed to.

MOUNTED POLICE ACT, 1894, AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (242) An Act to amend the Mounted Police Act, 1894.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be read the second time to-morrow. He said: Under the Mounted Police Act they are not to be engaged in carrying out the laws affecting municipalities—that is, police work of the locality. In the Yukon their position is somewhat different; they really are the constables who put in force the various ordinances there. To remove any doubt, this Bill provides that subsection 3 of section 13 shall not apply and shall not be deemed to apply. That clause made provision that they were not to interfere in carrying out the by-laws of the various municipalities.

The motion was agreed to.

JUDGES OF PROVINCIAL COURTS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (250) An Act to amend the Act, respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be read the second time to-morrow. He said: At the last session of the provincial legislature of Ontario, an Act was passed providing for the appointment of two more judges for the Exchequer Court, and the object of this Bill is to appoint a Chief Justice for the Exchequer Court and an additional judge, the salaries being the same as are paid to the judges of the other courts. The judges of the other courts are enumerated in this Bill, but simply for the purpose of having it all consolidated. It only affects practically the two judges who have to be named to fill offices created by the province of Ontario.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is this Bill to provide the salaries of the two new judges for Ontario?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, that is all.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And for their appointment. It is a matter which can better be discussed at the second reading, but I notice that there is another Bill—I do not suppose that is provided for in this—to provide an additional judge for the province of Quebec. That has been introduced in the other House. It was only last year, or the year before that, we passed a Bill to appoint three new judges in the province of Quebec, if I recollect rightly, and the new Bill is for a fourth.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is Ontario, making the Exchequer Court on the same plane as the other courts.

The motion was agreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (244) An Act respecting the Western Assurance Company.

MANITOBA GRAIN ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

NOTICE OF AMENDMENT.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I beg to give notice that on the third reading of Bill (232) 'An Act to amend the Manitoba Grain Act, 1900,' I will move an amendment to make the wording and the intention clear.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why is it necessary now to give notice of an amendment? It can be done in committee without notice. It is not necessary, but of course it gives us some information. It seems to me that it establishes a very undesirable practice by implication. It may lead to the conclusion that hereafter members will have to give notice of an amendment to be made to a Bill in Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—My only object in giving notice was to follow the practice in the House, and also to give an opportunity to those interested in the measure to consider the proposed amendment, so as to see that the amendment is one which they can heartily concur in and support. However, I do not wish to weary the House.

The SPEAKER—There is no objection to the hon. gentleman giving the notice, and I think he had better give it.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Wednesday, September 23, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

CANADIAN TRANSPORTATION AND STORAGE COMPANY BILL.

THIRD READING POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called:

Third reading Bill (176) An Act to incorporate the Canadian Transportation and Storage Company, as amended.—(Hon. Mr. Kerr, Toronto.)

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—In the absence of the hon. gentleman from Toronto, I beg to move that this Bill be now read the third time.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—There is a notice of motion on the Order paper of an amendment to this Bill, and I think it would be better to postpone the third reading until the hon. gentleman who has given this notice and the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill are present.

The SPEAKER—I am informed that this amendment which is proposed to be made is one which was proposed in committee and not accepted by the committee. I think it was dealt with by the House before.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The fact of its having been rejected, even if it were proposed in committee, would not prevent a member making a motion to amend the Bill on its third reading by inserting the word 'Ontario.' For myself, I do not recollect whether the question was decided or not in committee. I do not think it makes much difference.

Mr. SPEAKER—I remember the circumstance now. The report of the special committee recommended that the word 'Ontario' be inserted instead of 'Canada,' and the amendment is to propose that the House shall reverse its action on a previous occasion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the hon. Speaker is right. If the House has already pronounced upon the proposed amendment, it cannot take it up again this session.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I would suggest, in fairness, inasmuch as the hon. senator who has charge of the Bill is not present, that it should stand over until Friday.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—Could we not let it stand until Monday next? The hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill asked me to have it set down for Monday next.

The Order of the Day was discharged and set down for Monday next.

RAILWAYS LAW CONSOLIDATION BILL

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole consideration of Bill (21) An Act to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—During the recess I had the opportunity of hearing a good deal of criticism in reference to the amendments made to the Bill by the Senate, and was advised that when they came to be considered elsewhere, possibly some changes might be made. I think, therefore, if we can revise some of our amendments in the direction of making them more acceptable in another place, it would be in the interests of this body to do so. I shall go over carefully the various clauses, in which changes and some new amendments ought to be made. I announced at the time the Bill was before the committee on the last occasion that, under the Bill, the board had control, practically, of the location of the line, because the plan was submitted for the approval of the board, and that therefore it seemed to me the location of the road, under the Act of Parliament, ought to be a matter of policy on the part of the government; because we know in a large country like this, the road might be deflected a couple of hundred miles, and the spirit of the Act would not be carried out. The government ought to be responsible for the location of the road in accordance with the intention of parliament in granting the charter. I propose, therefore, to strike out the clause giving the board of commissioners power to accept the location of the line. I first take up clause 2 of the Bill: We struck out subsection (b) for the reason, as urged strongly, that a resolution ordinarily is not attended with the same ceremony as a by-law, and therefore they should not be on the same plane. On looking over a number of clauses of the Bill, I find resolutions are referred to in the sense that by-laws are, and that therefore the object of subsection (b) was to elevate the resolutions to the plane of a by-law—in other words, wherever 'resolution' is referred to in the Bill, it carries with it the ceremony which usually accompanies the passage of a by-law. That is, the seal of the company must be affixed, and the signature of one of the executive officers must be attached. As that is the intention as appears by subsequent clauses, I move that we reinstate subsection (b).

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I would suggest that the clause be made to read as follows: 'Except when referring to municipal bodies, the expression 'by-law' includes a resolution, for the reason that I mentioned before. There are clauses of this Bill dealing with rights or franchises to be granted by a municipal council. Those rights should be granted not by resolution, but by by-law; therefore I think there would be serious objection to re-inserting subsection (b) as originally printed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Perhaps my hon. friend did not understand me. Where 'resolution' is referred to in this Bill, it requires to be carried with the same formality and ceremony as a by-law is. Therefore we are very much safer in restoring the clause. That is the opinion of the critics I have heard.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I understand what the hon. Secretary of State says, but a resolution passed by a municipal council, and a by-law passed by a municipal council, are two very different things; and if we say that the expression 'by-law' includes a resolution, it will amount to saying this, that when we deal with a by-law to be passed by a municipal body, under specific clauses of the Bill, it will be open to this contention that the expression 'by-law' means there a resolution as well as a by-law——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is the resolution means a by-law, not the converse.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—And, therefore, the franchise could be granted by mere resolution of the municipal body.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, the resolution must be accompanied by the same formalities as the by-law, and a resolution passed as the hon. gentleman sets forth would not be in accordance with the statute.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. Secretary of State has made an assertion. Would the hon. gentleman be kind enough to point out the place in this Bill where it is stated that every resolution shall be accompanied by the formalities of a by-law?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Where you make it a by-law it must be accompanied by the formalities.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Does not subsection (b) refer to a resolution of a company, not of a municipality? My hon. friend from de Salaberry seems to think it would apply to a resolution passed by a municipality dealing with any matter coming within the by-law.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman will notice that subsection (b) says in a general way that the expression 'by-law' includes a resolution. Therefore, the word 'by-law,' is defined wherever it is to be found in this Bill, and this expression 'by-law' is to be found in this Bill not only in connection with a by-law passed by a company, where I would not object that it be made to include a resolution but also in connection with by-laws contemplated to be passed by a municipal body. I object to the by-law comprising or being the equivalent of a resolution, or in other words, as covering the word 'resolution' as well as 'by-law.'

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I quite agree with my hon. friend, and I think this limitation should be applied to the term, namely, a by-law or a resolution of the company should do so and so.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—That is my suggestion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand the hon. Secretary of State to say that the passage of a resolution under this Act would require the same formalities as the passage of a by-law. Unless that is provided for in the Bill, it certainly could not bear that construction, and I have no recollection of any such interpretation, or any such clause in the Bill. Those acquainted with municipal government know that a snap resolution may be passed by a body of men almost upon any occasion, sometimes when there are but few members present. A by-law has to be introduced and notice given of it, and it must be read a first, second and third time. So that it gives every member of the municipality an opportunity of knowing what is being done when a by-law is passed. A mere resolution, as compared with a by-law, certainly might become very dangerous, if the word 'by-law' is to include a resolution without any explanation being made, as suggested by the hon. Secretary of State. If a provision is made in the law declaring that a resolution, to have the effect required here, shall have the same formalities in its passage by the municipalitiy as a by-law, then there can be no objection to it, but it strikes me as a dangerous provision without that safe guard.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The design of the gentleman who drafted the Bill was to put that interpretation upon it. I find there are several clauses which relate to by-laws, rules and regulations. His interpretation was, that rules and regulations came under the definition of 'resolution,' and as such, that they should be passed with the same particularity as a by-law.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I understand, the gentleman who is referred to is a clerk in the Railway Committee of the other House, and it does not seem to me that his interpretation of the Bill binds the Senate in any sense.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is a heading here, No. 10, 'By-laws, Rules and Regulations.' The word 'resolution' is not mentioned in any of these sections 243 to 250. 'Resolution' is mentioned in clause 80, and that clause reads as follows :—

> The directors may make by-laws or pass resolutions from time to time for the management and disposition of the stock, business and affairs of the company not inconsistent with the laws of Canada.

The two things are distinguished here. I think the Senate, having made this amendment after due consideration and deliberation, had better adhere to it, and if the House of Commons choose to disagree, it is their affair, and it will be our duty to deal with their action when it comes before us; but I do not think, because a clerk of the Railway Committee of the House of Commons thinks we made a mistake, that we should give way to him.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is not a clerk of the Railway Committee.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is the law clerk of the Railway Department, not the law clerk of Commons. There is a great deal of force in what the hon. Speaker says will be proven hereafter, when we consider one or two other clauses which it will be necessary to amend, because the law clerk himself, I believe, has stated that he had no such intention, that that was not his intention, and that he had overlooked certain points. It is for the Senate to consider whether these amendments should be made or not; but if the hon. gentleman persists in his motion, I would respectfully suggest that he have a provision made to define what a resolution of a railway company means.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I find, on referring to the Minutes of 31st August, that I had given notice of this amendment, at page 739. I gave notice to substitute for subsection (b) the following :—

> Except when referring to municipal bodies the expression by-law includes a resolution.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no objection to adopt that.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not wish to be too critical, but it seems to me that even that might possibly lead to mischievous consequences, inasmuch as the railway companies will probably have to deal with other companies. Now, those other companies would not necessarily acquaint themselves with the requirements under the Railway Act as to a by-law which they might pass in connection with the railway companies. I think, if the amendment were simply confined to the company's resolutions and by-laws, it would cover the ground. Then, all railway companies coming under this Act would see that their resolutions complied with the Bill, namely, that they were passed subject to all the formalities required, but if you go outside, as my hon. friend's proposed amendment would, it might extend to bodies other than municipalities, and possibly lead to mischievous consequences, for this reason: it would also lead to a conflict probably between Dominion and provincial legislation that is, where other corporate bodies are entities under provincial law. The provincial law calling them into existence will define what a resolution or by-law may be and what formalities will have to be observed with reference to either. This Bill would then step in and come in conflict with the provincial legislation as to what constitutes a by-law or resolution. I think, if we would put it 'resolution or by-law of the railway company,' it would answer.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The best way is to leave the matter as the Senate passed it before. A by-law and a resolution are essentially different, and the ordinary reader who takes up this Bill will probably not go to the interpretation clause. He will see such and such things are to be done by by-law, and he will not suspect that what requires a by-law, which is passed with various formalities, can be done by a mere resolution, passed without any notice and without any repeated consideration. No difficulties whatever, as far as one can see, can arise from what we have done.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—To the layman this phrase is very ambiguous; I certainly do not understand it, and if the hon. Secretary of State will consult with the gentleman who framed this, probably, knowing the feeling of the Senate, he would make it so as to suit. I know the legal phraseology is very much involved. I thought it had all been done away with years ago, but still it crops up occasionally, and this is one of the cases. I think that the framer of the clause would probably fix this to suit.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—With all due deference to the law clerk——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is also passed by the Department of Justice.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I think the object would not be attained at all. I think the intention of the Law Clerk, from his remark, is to avoid a resolution being taken as the equivalent of a by-law. If we adopt this subclause (b) as it is printed, it would have the other effect. It would be better to strike it out altogether.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I do not see why they should not have an opportunity of arranging it after the explanation given by the hon. Secretary of State. It is for the purpose of making it more stringent and strict; where a by-law should be passed a resolution will not be accepted. I take it that is the explanation.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If you say that, it is another thing.

The committee divided on the motion to re-insert subclause (b).

The motion was agreed to: Contents, 23; non-contents, 14.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I hope the hon. Secretary of State will consider the proposition I have made to define what a resolution is and how it should be carried.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall call the attention of the Minister of Justice to it when it goes back to the House of Commons. The next clauses to which I shall call attention are 5, 6 and 7. We made very important changes in these clauses, inasmuch as it was thought the clauses as they stood in the Bill rather encroached on the domain of the provinces, and there was a very strong opposition to the clauses as they were. An amendment was introduced in lieu of 5, 6 and 7, reading:

5. Every railway steam or electric street railway or tramway, the construction or operation of which is authorized by a special Act passed by the legislature of any province, now or hereafter connecting with or crossing a railway which, at the time of such connection or crossing, is subject to the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada, is hereby declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada in respect only to such connection or crossing or to through traffic thereon or anything appertaining thereto, and this Act shall apply.

The objection to that clause is this: it was urged there were very many other subjects than the mere through traffic which ought to be considered, and would not at all encroach on the provincial domain. These clauses were very much discussed as clauses encroaching on the railways, and even electric railways under the authority of the province, and therefore we restricted the control of the board to the question of through freight, and to the crossings and junctions. I propose adding this:

Also to the provisions set forth in this Act relating to fines and penalties, navigable waters, criminal matters, accidents and statistics.

In the return made in the report of the Minister of Railways, he has included even the returns from the roads which are connected with the main lines which hold their charters from the Dominion. It seems to me, therefore, there would be no objection to inserting these words.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—There is no objection; they are already covered by subclauses of the Bill, except the word 'accidents.' There are special provisions in the Bill dealing with offences and statistics.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Would they be covered, as we have struck out the control——

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—They are already covered. As far as the word 'accidents' is concerned, I think there would be no objection to that. If it is a provincial road, then it would not come before the board. For instance, an electric road or a railway entirely under the statutes of the province, should not be brought before the board.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—According to the amendment which the hon. gentleman himself moved to clause 5, provincial roads which heretofore have been under the authority of a provincial legislature would be taken out of this authority in the particular classes enumerated in the amendment—namely, connections, crossings, or through traffic therein, or anything pertaining to those three classes of cases. I think the position taken by the hon. Secretary of State is quite consistent with the amendment which has been passed. I was opposed to the amendment at the time my hon. friend from de Salaberry moved it, because it is entirely against the general policy of the Bill. The amendment which is now proposed would certainly bring it in line with the Bill's general policy.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I call attention to clause 3 of the Bill, which says:

> This Act shall apply to all persons, companies and railways (other than government railways) within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada.

And to clause 302, dealing with statistics, and the following sections, and also to clause 290, dealing with fines and penalties. I have no objection, if there is any doubt on that point, provided the word 'accident' be left out.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have completely altered the Act. As the law stood railways which connected with or crossed Dominion railways, came under the jurisdiction of the Railway Department, in so far as all those subjects were concerned. Our amendment was very sweeping. It limited the application of this Bill to those three different subjects—the crossing, the through traffic, or anything pertaining thereto—practically only two subjects. We completely eliminated all other subjects from the control of the commission. We went very far, I thought. We would have more chance of having our amendment acquiesced in by the House of Commons if we were willing to concede that certain subjects in the public interest which did not supersede the power of the provinces in any way, but were merely for the information of the public shall be dealt with by the commission—for instance, statistics. Now, our statistics on railway matters would be very imperfect if we should exclude every road except roads under the control of the federal power. It would be a very imperfect report.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—If the hon. Secretary of State will omit the word 'accident' the amendment is all right.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it would be better to leave it in, because we would have a more prompt appeal to what is right and proper, if the commission could hold an investigation. An accident is a matter in which the whole public are interested. It is not an invasion of the provincial rights. They could have their inquiry also.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not desire to hark back to the discussion which took place on this subject, but it demonstrates the mischief which must necessarily arise owing to divided authority on that class of road. My hon. friend the Secretary of State has apparently seen the error of his ways, because he voted against the policy of the Bill and now wishes to practically restore the federal authority with reference to that class of subjects enumerated. There is this consideration about the proposed amendment, that it certainly will divest the province of the exercise of authority along these particular lines which my hon. friend from de Salaberry was fighting for when he moved the amendment; and yet it seems manifest if this Bill is to be observed in its entirety in the public interest, that that class of roads should certainly be dealt with in the same way as the federal roads. There should be no invidious distinction therein where the public are affected to the extent they will be in the operation of these roads. Because the public are as much interested in the administration provided for in connection with railways chartered under provincial authority as though they were Dominion roads. However, the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry and the hon. Secretary of State will have to fight it out between them.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The amendments suggested by the hon. Secretary of State are in the right direction, as a rule. but there are some of them which are not necessary, and the hon. Secretary of State and the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry might consider this proposed amendment and submit at the next meeting an amendment to which there would be no objection. Take clause 302, for instance, with respect to statistics:

302. In the following sections of this Act down to section three hundred and eight inclusive, unless the context otherwise requires, the expression 'company' means a company constructing or operating a line of railway in Canada, whether otherwise within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada or not, and includes any individual or individuals not incorporated, who are owners or lessees of a railway in Canada, or parties to an agreement for working a railway in Canada. 51 V., c. 29, s. 298.

So there is no necessity of putting the word 'statistics' in the clause under consideration. The better way would be to let the Secretary of State and the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry consider the question and get the clause worded in the best way. We agree to the principle.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The amendment proposed certainly excluded every subject and there was a debate in this House as to whether we could do it, whether, where the statute declared and where the road was for the general advantage of Canada, we could exclude it in this Bill, except as to certain subjects. I am not aware that I voted for my hon. friend's amendment. The Bill is too long, and life is too short to spend much time over all these clauses.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I desire to add to what I said, as far as accidents are concerned, the moment a railway is under the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature, such matter as accidents on that railway are governed by the railway committee of the province, and we could not put in under the jurisdiction of the board under this Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Would not the same argument apply to some other subjects?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—No.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Police matters and the general public safety. If the House approves of striking out the word 'accident' I am willing to let it go.

The amendment was altered and adopted.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It has been pointed out that on clause 11 the amendment of my hon. friend from Wellington to subsection 2 of section 11, in reference to the members of the commission, is too sweeping:—

3. Any member of the board accepting any gift or favour for himself or any relation or friend not provided for in this Act, or exercising his influence on behalf of any relative or friend with any railway company or officer for any position or favour, shall thereby forfeit his seat as a member of the board.

The objection to that amendment is this, that the offender might have accepted a bribe three or four months ago and the effect of this amendment would be to invalidate his acts since that time, because he would have forfeited his seat. The clause might be drafted in a less drastic form. The government have the control practically and the clause should provide that the commissioners shall not, nor shall any of them, solicit or request from or recommend to any company any position or favour of any kind from the company.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Under what penalty?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It should be competent for the government to dismiss any commissioner found guilty of doing so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But it provides no penalty.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No; it provides no penalty, leaving it to the government to dismiss the official.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then you should say so in the clause.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the other case it was thought the effect would be to invalidate his acts since the time he forfeited his seat on the board.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend is astray in the proposition of law he has advanced. The courts have already held in analogous cases that where a member of a municipal council would vacate his seat upon the doing of certain acts, the acts of the council would be regarded as valid until such time as the seat was declared to be vacated.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall not press the amendment if the sense of the House is that I should not.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—If the amendment of my hon. friend opposite were added, I can see no objection to it. If you leave it to the government to say whether a member of the commission should be dismissed or not, to my mind, you might just as well strike out the whole clause. I submitted my amendment to very high authority before proposing it, and he said he thought the clause was necessary. It might be altered in this way, that any act performed by the guilty member should be valid up to the time of his forfeiting his seat.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It is declared that he shall forfeit his position, but it does not vitiate the acts in the meantime. For my part, I am entirely in accord with the clause as it was passed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Let it stand, then.

The amendment was withdrawn.

On clause 43,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This clause, which was amended by the Senate, permits the board, of its own motion, or on the application of any party, to state a case for the opinion of the Supreme Court of Canada. The Governor in Council has, under the Supreme Court Act, the right to refer any question at any time to the Supreme Court, and therefore the addition was unnecessary.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It does no harm.

The clause was allowed to stand.

On clause 122,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is an important clause, referring to the location of the line. I propose to substitute a clause for this giving power to the minister rather than to the board.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I should like to draw the attention of the hon. minister to this point; the commission is composed of three gentlemen who are supposed to be specially qualified to deal with railways. The amendment now submitted proposes to take the matter of the location of a road out of the hands of the board and give it to the minister. It is right that the responsibility should be with the government, but it occurs to me that the location of an important railway should not be left to the minister, but to the Governor in Council. The minister then would submit his views to his colleagues and an Order in Council would pass approving of the location, but in the interests of the public it would be better that the location of an important railway should be approved by the Governor in Council and not by the minister alone.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is that not the amendment?

Hon. Mr. POWER—The amendment is that the location shall be approved by the minister and not by the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It leaves the law as it is to-day. Under our Railway Act the minister is the person who approves of the plans and it would be a very inconvenient thing if parties had to wait for meetings of council. Very often these things are done in a hurry and council must take the advice of the Minister of Railways, and practically you take the advice of the Deputy Minister of Railways in all these cases. The Minister of Railways is a member of the government, and I think there is no difficulty in leaving it as it is.

Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Are there not plans, and approving of the character of the plans and approving of the location of the road? I understand the minister has the power to approve of the plans under which the road is to be constructed, but certainly that would not include the location. If my memory does not fail me the government have not adopted in all cases the advice or decision of the Minister of Railways, either as to plans or locations. Now my hon. friend wants to place this duty exclusively in his hands.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The location is shown on the plan, and it is the plan that controls practically.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Are we to understand from the amendments proposed by the minister that the company is obliged to furnish a map showing the location of the road?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The course adopted is this: The railway company get a charter; they prepare a plan of the line, say a line between Montreal and Ottawa on the north shore of the Ottawa river. They prepare a plan showing where they intend to locate the road. That is submitted to the Minister of Railways and Canals. He has it examined. It may be in some cases that it may avoid important points on that line that ought to be touched, and therefore the minister would call attention to it. He should exercise his judgment, particularly in granting a charter assuming that they were going to take a particular direction which the plan showed they were not, and this is for the purpose of enabling the minister to judge whether the plan is in strict compliance with the charter granted by parliament.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is that the course the government intends to pursue with regard to the building of the road from Moncton to Quebec ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am unable to answer any questions of that sort at the moment. All I can say is that it is proposed to leave the law in that respect as it is to-day. It rests now with the Minister of Railways and Canals to approve of the plan.

The clause was allowed to stand.

On section 186, subsection 2,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend made a proposal with reference to this clause relating to highway crossings. It seemed to me, from the wording of it, that it was altogether too wide and therefore I asked the House subsequently to strike out the clause. It was in reference to where a railway crossed a highway. The language in the amendment moved by my hon. friend I thought was somewhat involved and left it uncertain what the company were to pay for the land they required. I had no objection to a clause being drawn showing distinctly and clearly that they were not obliged to pay for the highway, that if they took any extra land outside of the highway, then they were obliged to pay for it, and it was proposed to amend the clause in that sense.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It would meet the views of the hon. gentleman if he would add the words 'exclusive of the highway' after the word 'land' in the 8th line. It never could have been contemplated that the railway should pay for the crossing of the highway.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no objection to that. They are not expected to pay for the highway; they have a right under the law to cross the highway.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—The clause says 'upon, along or across an existing highway.' Supposing they run five hundred yards along the highway, are they to pay for that? This is objected to by the municipalities, as I understand it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But under the municipal law they could not run along a highway or road without the consent of the municipality. They would have to secure the consent of the municipality before they could do it, and if they should declare that the road should not run along the highway, then they would be protected. A case came under my own observation a short time ago in our own county. They desired to build an electric road from the city of Belleville to Trenton, twelve miles. The first thing they did was to get the consent of all the land-owners along both sides of that road, and then they had to go to the county municipality for approval before they could take possession. The only object of this is to remove what is supposed to be an ambiguity by which the railway companies might have to pay even for crossing the road.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I understand the object of this subsection as it was printed in the Bill was to open the door to a municipality whose street may be used for a considerable distance by a railway, to such compensation as any one else would be entitled to for his land. If that is not the object, then the clause should be struck out altogther, because if the suggestion of the hon. member from Belleville were adopted it would make the clause contradictory. The whole object of the clause is to provide for compensation for the use of the highway, and therefore the clause has either to remain as it is printed, or it should be struck out altogether. If the intention is to deprive the municipality of the right of compensation when the railway uses the highway, I would understand that it would not be necessary or advisable to provide for compensation when the highway is merely used for the purpose of crossing, but when a highway is used as a right of way, possibly, for a mile or two miles, why should not the municipality be entitled to compensation ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The law is plain and not changed in that respect. If they run along the highway, they must obtain the consent of the municipality. The crossing of the highway has always been allowed. Clause 184 reads :

184. The railway may be carried upon, along or across an existing highway upon leave therefor having been first obtained from the board as hereinafter provided, but the board shall not grant leave to any company to carry any street railway or tramway, or any railway operated or to be operated as a street railway or tramway, along any highway which is within the limits of any city or incorporated town, until the company has first obtained consent therefor by a by-law of the municipal authority of such city or incorporated town.

We can make the matter clear by inserting the words in subclause 2 of clause 186, 'exclusive of the highway crossing.' That makes it perfectly clear that if they run along a street they have to pay for it.

The amendment was adopted.

On clause 211, subclause 4,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I understand the hon. leader of the opposition has an amendment to propose to this clause.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Senate will observe from the reading of this clause that it is rather drastic in its character. It reads as follows :

4. Every company which fails to comply with any of the provisions of this section, shall forfeit to His Majesty, a sum not exceeding two hundred dollars, for every day during which such default continues, and shall, as well, be liable to pay to all such persons as are injured by reason of the non-compliance with these provisions, or to their representatives, such damages as they are legally entitled to, notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary with regard to any such person : provided, however, that no proceedings shall be instituted to enforce or recover any forfeiture to His Majesty hereunder without the consent of the board first obtained. Sub. for 51 V., c. 29, s. 243 Am.

No matter what agreement has been entered into between the employer and the employee it would be of no avail whatever under this clause, and I have been given to understand that such was not the intention of the drafter of the Bill. I would, therefore, suggest the following :—

Notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary with regard to any such person, provided always that any agreement made by the company with its employees, or any of them, shall be valid if such agreement shall be judged by the court or judge before whom any question relating thereto is tried to be just and reasonable.

This is giving to the court and the judge the power and the authority to say whether the agreement which has been entered into between the railway company and the employees is just and reasonable. That is only fair to the company. As the clause reads now, it is of so drastic a character that no matter what carelessness might have occurred on the part of the employee by which he got injured the company would be responsible, and no matter what agreements might have been entered into between the injured employee and the company, they would be null and void, and the company would be subject to any amount of penalty. I therefore move that the proviso which I have read be added after the word 'person' in the seventeenth line.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I hope the committee will not accept this amendment. Clause 211 contains a number of provisions as to what the railway company shall do in order to secure the safety of passengers and the employees of the company, and the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman will enable the company, by making an agreement with its employees, to contract itself out of the obligations which are placed upon it by this Bill. That would be legislation of a very injurious character. The signing of this contract might be made a condition of a man's being employed by the company, and then if any accident happened that employee the company could plead the contract. We had better let the clause stand as it is.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not know what interpretation the hon. gentleman puts upon the clause. I can assure him that such is not the intention. The intention is that if there was any dispute between them as to the character of the accident, and the manner in which the accident occurred, as to whether it was the fault of the employee or not, the court and the judge shall have the power to say whether that agreement was reasonable, equitable and fair. That is all, and it applies to no other portion of the clause. This system of restricting and hampering corporations. and the tendency of legislation in the present day, will do much to prevent the investment of capital for purposes of this kind. There is nothing unreasonable in the proposition in this proviso, unless you want to place the railway and other corporations in the hands of irresponsible parties to demand from them on all occasions just what they want.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not think the clause as it stands is open to the criticism passed upon it by the hon. leader of the opposition. If the hon. gentleman will look at the first portion of this subclause 4, he will see how the company's liability is limited. It reads as follows :

Every company which fails to comply with any of the provisions of this section.

That is all. If the company fails to comply with the provisions of the section, then the company forfeits to His Majesty so much, and also is liable in damages to the other party. If you enable the company to contract itself out of that obligation, then the company is not so strongly bound to comply with the provisions of the section.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would point out to the Speaker that the power would not be vested in the company to contract itself out of the liability. It would be for the court to say whether the contract was a reasonable one between the company and the employees. One can readily fancy a condition of circumstances arising which might be extremely onerous, unreasonably onerous, upon the company, where the employee would be only too glad to enter into such a contract as that indicated, and surely we can rely upon the courts of the country to say whether a contract of that character is just and reasonable. If it is not such a contract as would be approved of by the courts, then the company is clearly liable and the employee takes advantage of the repudiation of the contract. It seems to me to be a fair proposition, and one which, in the hands of the court, would certainly safeguard the interests of the employees.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The proposition is a reasonable one, and quite as much in the interest of the employee as of the company. We know they have funds set apart just for purposes of this kind, and which the employees get the benefit of, and a man may be receiving substantial benefits for twenty-five or thirty years, and it might be profitable for him to turn and prosecute the railway company, irrespective of any advantage which he may have derived from them. A judge would be the very best person to say whether the proposition was a safe one. You certainly cannot leave it in safer hands. The sympathy would be rather with the man than with the company.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—It seems to me to add so much to the difficulty if you have to proceed against the company. Further, if this be a sound principle, it should be introduced into a general law applying to all workmen and all companies, but to introduce it in the Railway Act means the adoption for railway purposes of principles to which parliament has not yet assented, and to which public opinion is not educated.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I understand it is practically limited to one company in this country—the Grand Trunk Railway Company. If there is an agreement by which the employees are receiving transient advantages from year to year, it would be a different matter.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is a law of a similar character in the province of Ontario—the Workmen's Compensation Act, which prevents any contract with an employee by which he would relieve the employer of the responsibility of any accident which might occur. There is a proviso however, which leaves it to a judge to decide whether an agreement entered into by an employee and an employer is just and reasonable. This is all that is asked in the amendement proposed.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It certainly will deprive many of the employees of the beneficiary funds which, in many instances, have been established to meet requirements of this character. It will drive the railway companies to say : 'You cannot take advantage of this particular fund.' It seems to me to be a reasonable proposition for the employee to say whether he will do one thing or the other, and leave it to the courts to safeguard the interests of the employee.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I cannot say that I would be against the principle embodied in the motion of the hon. gentleman from Belleville, but I doubt whether it should be embodied in this clause. For my part I would not be ready to pass a judgment upon it to-day. I would suggest that it be given as a notice of motion. This subsection of clause 211 refers to damage or injury by a railway company that has not complied with the requirements of section 211. Section 21 makes it imperative upon the railway company to adopt such and such apparatus therein described, and if any of their employees are injured and the company has not complied with these provisions of the Act, then the company is liable for damages. The hon. member suggests that a proviso be added permitting, as I understand, the company to enter into an agreement with its employees, whereby they would accept, for instance, an insurance policy instead of claiming damages that might arise under this section. I am inclined to think that the idea embodied in the motion is not altogether germane to section 211, and I would suggest that it stand until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—These amendments would not exempt the railway companies from complying with the law. They would continue to be under the liability provided for in the earlier part of the clause with reference to neglecting to provide such apparatus as might be required, not only by the Bill, but by the Railway Commission. It seems to me to be only an exemption as to personal injuries which might happen between themselves and the employees; but the right of the Crown to proceed against the company for not providing the apparatus would still continue.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have no objection to accept the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry, if he thinks there is any doubt about it—more particularly as he approved of the principle contained in the amendment I have suggested—and I would say let it stand and appear as a notice of motion. The intention of the proviso is merely that which has been indicated by the hon. gentleman from Calgary. It applies only to injuries to the employees who may have entered into a bargain with the company to exempt them from liability in case of accident. This law proposed provides that no matter how the accident occurs, whether it be through the negligence of the man himself or not, the company would be held responsible, notwithstanding any agreement which may have been made, and the proviso is simply to provide for cases of disputes of that kind, as to whether the accident was the result of the negligence of the man himself or of non-compliance with the rules by the company. Then, it is left to the court and judge to decide whether the agreements which were entered into were reasonable under the circumstances. I have no objection to let the amendment appear as a notice of motion.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. member has gone a little further than I intended to go. I would not be ready to condemn the principle embodied in this motion. It appeals at first sight to my mind, but I should like to consider it more fully, and I am quite sure that I shall be able to satisfy the hon. gentleman that it is not germane to subsection 4—that it should be made a separate section.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have no objection to that. Let it stand.

The motion was allowed to stand.

On clause 236,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This clause refers to accidents. The last subsection sets forth what is to be done in case of accidents, and the representations to be made.

> The person or persons so appointed shall report fully in writing to the board his or their doings and opinions on the matters respecting which he or they are appointed to inquire.

I propose adding to that a clause worded this way:

> And the board may act on such report and order the company to suspend or dismiss any employee of the company whom he may deem to have been negligent or wilful in respect to such accident.

The amendment was agreed to.

On clause 237,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is a clause relating to the killing of animals at crossings. In amending the clause, our intention was, no doubt, that if an animal got on the railway from the highway where the railway crossed it, and got on the track, the company should be liable. But to carry out effectively our view, the words 'subject to the provisions of the foregoing sections of this section' should be struck out, and should read 'whenever any animal,' and so on. The amendment we made, I do not think differs very materially from the clause passed by the House of Commons, which made the company liable wherever the animal got from the highway on to the property of the company. It could only get on the property of the company by a defective fence or cattle-guard, and, to that extent, I think public opinion is in favour of holding the company liable. The impression in the minds of many hon. gentlemen, I think, when this clause came up first, was, that the company would be liable for an animal killed on a highway at a crossing. The clause prepared in the House of Commons did not carry out that intention, and I think it was in the minds of several senators that it went that far, though it really does not; therefore, practically, the difference between the amendment made by the Senate and the amendment made by the House of Commons, if you strike out the words I have indicated, will be very little.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have drafted an amendment as a substitute for this subsection 4 of clause 237, which I shall give as a notice of motion. I call attention first to subsection 2 of clause 199, which says:

Such fences, gates and cattle-guards shall be suitable and sufficient to prevent cattle and other animals from getting on the railway.

Under this subsection the railway company is required to keep and maintain fences, gates and cattle-guards, suitable and sufficient to prevent cattle or other animals from getting on the railway, and if they fail to do that, of course they become responsible. Then under 237, now under consideration, it is provided in subsection 3 that:

3. If the cattle of any person, which are at large contrary to the provisions of this section, are killed or injured by any train, at such point of intersection, he shall not have any right of action against any company in respect of the same being so killed or injured.

It is when the owner allows the animal to be at large on the highway within a given distance,—half a mile, I think——of the railway crossing, he is deprived of the right of action. It is very objectionable, to my mind, to adopt, except under absolute necessity, any special law. The common law should take its operation as far as possible, and this would apply to this railway Bill as in all other cases. Now, the duty of the railway company being established, and therefore the liability being established, as it is under several clauses of this Bill, and especially clause 199 to which I have just referred, it seems to me that the best way to meet the difficulty would be by adopting as subsection 4 the following:—

Except as provided in the first and third subsections hereof,—

The first and third subsections are the sections providing that the owner of the animal will not be entitled to damages if he allows his animal to be at large without protection within half a mile of a railway crossing:

Except as provided in the first and third subsections hereof, whenever an animal is killed or injured on the property of the company, the fact that such animal got on such property from land other than that of the owner of the animal or that such animal was not then in charge of some competent person, shall not deprive such owner of the right to recover from the company the amount of the loss.

If otherwise, he is entitled to recover.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is practically the House of Commons amendment.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Yes, it is practically the House of Commons amendment; it embodies all the provisions of the House of Commons amendment, except this very important provision, placing upon the railway company the onus in all cases of proving the negligence of the owner of the animal, which is altogether unfair. If this clause is allowed to stand, I give this as a notice of motion.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I think the clause to which the hon. Secretary of State has drawn attention should stand, with a view of trying to make the provisions of that particular clause fairly just to the railway company and to those owning cattle. For instance, supposing a man has a breachy animal, an animal that he cannot let into his own field, and suppose that animal gets out, and jumps across the cattle-guard, or breaks the fence and gets on the railway track, is it justice to call on the railway company to pay for an animal of that kind if it is killed? I do not think it is. It is not fair that we should legislate to make the company liable where there is carelessness on the part of the owner, or inefficiency of the enclosure in which animals are kept, or the gates are left open and animals get on the public highway. If the company have complied with the provisions of clause 199, and their fences are of standard efficiency, and if they have complied with the by-laws of the municipality through which they run with regard to the height of these fences, and if the cattle-guard that they are using is efficient, as good as anything that is known of, to guard against ordinary animals which run the highway, the company should not be held liable. But if you have an animal, for instance a racehorse, a bull or some animal of that kind that breaks out of his enclosure in the night and gets on a railway over a proper cattle-guard and a proper fence, and is killed, is it fair to say that the railway company shall pay for that animal after all the precautions they have taken ? I do not think that should be law. It is an extreme view to take. I am quite willing to guard farmers wherever, through inefficiency of fences or cattle-guards or carelessness of trackmen, they sustain loss, but where the company adopt the best known guard in use, and comply with all the conditions in regard to the height of fences, and the fences and cattle-guards are kept in the proper condition, is it right that the railway company should be called upon to pay for some vicious animal that breaks out on the railway and gets killed ? I do not think so.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I hope the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry will be accepted and that this clause will be allowed to stand. Certain newspapers have complained in very strong language of the action which the Senate took with respect to this particular provision. I know they made special reference to myself—in fact, a newspaper attributed to me an amendment which was moved by another hon. gentleman. I had prepared an amendment and another hon. gentleman submitted one which he thought was better, and I abandoned mine. The enactment as made by the Senate is a very reasonable and proper one. It is not quite perfect. It needs some amendment, and I think on the whole, the substitute proposed by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry is an improvement. I wish to say, with respect to myself, that in 1888, when the Railway Bill was going through parliament I called attention to the fact that the cattle owners' interests were not sufficiently protected, and an amendment was inserted at that time, extending to the three lower provinces provisions which would not have been extended to them under the Bill as it came in here. Again in 1890, with other members of this House, I advocated the claims of farmers as against the railway company. We are here to do justice betweeen the two parties. When the labour men, for instance, ask us to do things which are not just and fair, it is our duty not to agree with them. If the employers of labour wish to do things which are not just and fair we should not agree with them either. It is our duty to try and do what is just and fair ; and if there is any doubt in a question I would rather lean to the farmer than to the railway company, because the railway company is generally a wealthy corporation and able to look after its own interests. Still I do not think this House would be justified in passing legislation which is manifestly unfair to the railway companies. The hon. Secretary of State misapprehends to some extent the intention of this House when it made the amendment. Subclause 4 as it stands in the Bill would override the provisions of the previous subclauses, and therefore the words 'subject to the provisions of the foregoing subsections were necessary.' This fourth subclause makes no exception whatever, but states when any cattle at large on the highway or otherwise —it does not refer to cattle at the crossings particularly, but no matter where they are at large—if they get on the property of the company and are killed or injured, the owner shall be entitled to recover. There is no limitation to that. Then it goes on :

> In any court of competent jurisdiction, unless the company in the opinion of the court or jury trying the case establishes that such animals got at large through the negligence or wilful act, or omission of the owner or his agent.

Now, how can the railway company establish that ? You are putting on the railway company something which is entirely beyond its power to establish. The owner can prove if the railway company has not a proper fence, but it is impossible for the company to establish that the animal got on the track through the wilful or negligent act of the owner. Under the Bill the company are liable if they have not provided a proper fence. I try to do what is fair and right, and I do not think we should be influenced in this House by what I should look upon as the unreasoning clamour of any particular section of the population. It is our duty to try and do justice to all parties. Now, I shall read the amendment which I drafted, but I think on the whole the amendment of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry suits better. This is what I proposed to substitute:

4. Subject to the provisions of the foregoing subsections, whenever any animal at large upon the highway or otherwise, gets upon the property of the company, whether from the land of the owner of such animal or not, and is killed or injured by a train, the owner of such animal shall be entitled to recover the amount of such loss or injury from the company in an action in any court of competent jurisdiction, if, in the opinion of the court or jury trying the case, such animal was at large without any negligence or wilful act or omission of the owner or his agent, or of the custodian of such animal or his agent, and got upon the railway by reason of fences, gates and cattle-guards not being erected and maintained by the company, as required by this Act: Provided that, in any case not falling under the first or third subsection, the fact that such animal was not in charge of some competent person shall not, for the purposes of this subsection, deprive the owner of his right to recover.

I think that is going rather further against the company than it ought to go, but in cases of that kind, one gives the farmer the benefit of the doubt. I shall let this go as a notice of motion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Why mention those words, 'subject to the provisions of the foregoing,' etc.?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Simply to provide that where the owner of the cattle has to come under the provisions of the first and third subclauses, he shall not be entitled to recover.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is contradictory to have those words in.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not see that. It is contradictory as it is, because now you provide by subclauses one and three that the owner shall not recover if he has been guilty of negligence, and then you provide in subclause 4 that he shall recover in any case. It is to prevent conflict that I give this notice.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry intimate what his amendment proposes?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The amendment is to this effect: Under clause 199, amongst other clauses, the liability of the company is established in this manner, that they are bound to maintain fences and cattle-guards sufficient to prevent cattle from going on their property; therefore, if they fail to comply with that provision, they become liable and responsible to the owner of the animal killed or injured. All that is required, to my mind, is to provide for this in an additional paragraph, that the fact that the animal will go on the property of the company from the land of an adjoining owner, instead of from the land of the owner of the animal, or that the animal will be at large, otherwise than is mentioned in the first and third paragraphs of section 237, will not deprive him of compensation if the common law provides for the liability of the company. It is to apply the common law to the company and not create any exceptional law.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I should like also to give notice of motion to amend section 199. It may not be necessary when we come to discuss the various amendments which are proposed, but I shall give notice of the following amendment:

That subsection 2 of section 199 be amended by adding at the end thereof the following:—
'The Board may, from time to time, by order or regulation, determine standard descriptions and specifications for the construction of any such fences, gates or cattle-guards, and may declare that fences, gates or cattle-guards properly constructed in accordance with such order or regulation shall be deemed to be suitable and sufficient.'

I think hon. gentlemen will appreciate the value of the board determining what is a suitable fence or cattle-guard so that there may be uniformity of decision or of holding upon that point. That is to say, the company throughout the Dominion, may establish certain cattle-guards, and build certain fences. The courts of one province may hold them insufficient, the courts of another province may hold them sufficient. Hon. gentlemen will appreciate the desirability of having uniformity with reference to the construction of these utilities, and in that way companies will recognize what their liability is and there shall be no departure from the uniform system of construction along those lines.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I heartily approve of that.

On clause 239,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We struck out that clause and introduced an amendment which was a very good one, but we can improve it. The clause as it stood read :

239. The company shall at all times maintain and keep its right of way free and clear of all inflammable matter.

We amended that as follows :

The company shall at all times maintain and keep its right of way free from dead grass, weeds, and other unnecessary combustible matter.

It is proposed to add the word 'dry' after 'dead.'

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Take, for instance, the case of dry standing grass. Is it necessary for the company to have a lawn mower run over their entire right of way ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think they would have to cut it down.

The clause was amended and adopted.

On clause 242,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Clause 242 reads as follows :

All actions or suits for indemnity for any damages or injury sustained by reason of the railway shall be commenced within one year next after the time when such supposed damage is sustained, or if there is continuation of damage within one year next after the doing or committing of such damage ceases, and not afterwards ; and the defendants may plead the general issue and give this Act and the special Act and the special matter in evidence at any trial to be had thereupon, and may prove that the same was done in pursuance of and by the authority of this Act or of the special Act. 51 V., c. 29, s. 287.

As the law now stands in actions of tort—that is, for wrongs or individual injuries or actions of that sort—the time within which the action must be brought is limited to one year, and it is proposed to make that clearer than it is in the section. In all matters of contract the limit is five years in the province of Quebec and six in Ontario. Whatever the provincial law may be it is not disturbed or interfered with , but in so far as torts are concerned it is only fair that parties should not be allowed to go on from year to year holding claims of that kind, because it is impossible for the companies to obtain their evidence. I suggest therefore that in line 2, after the word 'of' we insert 'the construction or operation of.'

The amendment was adopted.

On subclause 2,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In order to carry out what I stated just now, drawing a distinctive line between actions of tort and actions of contract, there should be a slight change made in subsection 2. I suggest that it should be framed to read in this way :

Nothing in this section shall apply to any action brought against the company, upon the breach of any contract expressed or implied.

Striking out 'or for any wrong or default committed by it,' because a wrong or default involves an action of tort. Then, I strike out the words 'in its capacity as common carriers,' and I propose to substitute in lieu of that the words 'in the carriage of any traffic.' The effect of that would be in an action of tort or wrong, there would be a limitation to one year. In all other actions there is the law of estoppel, which is five years in the province of Quebec and six years in Ontario, and that would prevail.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Better leave that as a notice of motion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall let it stand as a notice of motion.

The clause was allowed to stand.

On clause 258,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We had a little puzzle on clause 258. Some hon. gentleman made an amendment where it referred to the fractions. It reads :

Any fraction of five cents, less than two and a half shall be waived by the company, and above two and a half cents shall be considered as five cents by the company.

It should read as follows :

And above two and a half cents and up to five cents shall be considered as five cents.

The clause was amended and adopted.

On clause 284,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We introduced a substituted clause. We struck out all of 284, subsection 2. It related to traffic agreements. The railway companies maintained that as the law was framed it was impossible for them to make temporary arrangements, and there were occasions when two companies coming together made traffic arrangements for comparatively short periods. They were not of a permanent character and it would be quite impossible for these to be ratified by the board and published in the 'Canada Gazette' as the law required. Therefore this House introduced an amendment, or rather a substituted clause, the effect of which was that where the traffic arrangement was for one year or less it was not necessary to have it ratified in the manner indicated. I understand there is some objection to be urged against our amendment in that regard and, in order to make it wholly unobjectionable, I propose that at the end of our amendment we authorize two companies to make temporary arrangements—it might be for a week or for a month, it might be for twenty days. I am told that that is a very common practice between the managers of lines, and it would be quite impossible for them to apply to the board and go through all the formalities that are involved in this clause of the Bill, and therefore we thought that traffic arrangements between companies that extended over a year should be ratified by the shareholders and approved by the board and published in the 'Canada Gazette,' but arrangements made for shorter periods—I do not know whether one year was considered the correct time, or six months—need not be so ratified.

Hon. Mr. POWER—We fixed it at one year.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The objection I understand has been urged, that if we give the power to the companies they might say when the year expired, 'we will make it for another year,' and so on, and contract themselves out of the law. In order to meet that objection I propose to add these words at the end of the section :

> And provided further that the agreements referred to if made for a period of one year or less may at any time be cancelled by the board.

So that it would be competent for the board to interfere if they think a traffic agreement is in violation of the statute and the powers vested in them. They may say to the company, 'we will cancel that.' I think that will remove the objection urged against the clause.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I call attention to the fact that on a previous occasion the amendment adopted was considered altogether against the economy of the Bill. The Bill seeks to place under the jurisdiction and control of the board all questions of rates and traffic tolls, and the amendment as adopted to my mind would have the effect of taking away from the board those questions, and leaving it entirely with the company. I think there are very good provisions in clause 204 as it was printed in the Bill, and I refer specially to the latter part of the first paragraph of it, where it is said :

> Provided that the board may, by order or regulation, exempt the company from complying with any of the foregoing conditions with respect to any such agreement or arrangement made or entered into by the company for the transaction of the usual and ordinary business of the company, and where such consent of the shareholders is deemed by the board to be unnecessary. 51 V., c. 29, ss. 238, 239 Am.

I think that there is in this proviso almost all that is necessary to protect the company, because on appealing to the board they would be enabled, I have no doubt, to obtain such relaxations or concessions as would cover the ordinary business of the company. However, with a view to meeting the wishes of the railway company in a fair measure I would suggest that the following be substituted for the first portion of clause 284, the portion extending down to line six on page 97 :

> The directors may at any time make and enter into any agreement or arrangement not inconsistent with the provisions of this or the special Act with any other company, either in Canada or elsewhere, for the interchange of traffic over the said railways respectively, and for the division and apportionment of tolls in respect of such traffic.

I would make this an independent section which would be left altogether to the board of the company, or the company and its officials, and then I would proceed with subsection 2 and make it read as follows :—

> The directors may also make and enter into any agreement or arrangement not inconsistent with the provisions of this or the special Act for the running of trains.

And then go on with the section as it was in line six—'of one company over the tracks of another company,' &c. I give notice of this amendment for to-morrow.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is that to amend the amendment which the Senate has already adopted ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Yes, it would be in lieu of the amendment already passed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think my hon. friend is wrong in the interpretation he puts upon the clause. It has no reference to tolls. It is simply an interchange of traffic, or the cars of one road running over the tracks of another. It has no connection with traffic or anything of that sort. Clause 284 reads as follows :—

284. The directors may, at any time, make and enter into agreement or arrangement, not inconsistent with the provisions of this or the special Act, with any other company, either in Canada or elsewhere, for the regulation and interchange of traffic passing to and from the company's railways, and for the working of the traffic over the said railways respectively, or for either of those objects separately, and for the running of the trains of one company over the tracks of another company, and for the division and apportionment of tolls in respect of such traffic.

It is only limited to that particular traffic that runs over the road.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—If it is important to give to the board the control of the traffic and the rates on the roads, surely it applies to all roads of the several companies and it would not be logical to declare that when it is a traffic or toll arising from traffic on the lines of two companies, then that the board would have no control, that it would be left entirely at the mercy of or under the control of the companies.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If we begin amending our own amendments it will be some time before we get through. It seems to me that where we vest in the board the supreme power to cancel any agreement made with the companies at any moment, we are not carrying the principle too far of allowing them that reasonable latitude. Take two companies out in British Columbia ; the board are all here. It will suit them to make a traffic arrangement lasting perhaps for a week for interchange of cars. It will only perhaps be for two or three occasions. Are they to hold up their traffic until they communicate with Ottawa and get permission of the board ? The law as it stood has been a dead letter. This clause is taken from the old law and the Railway Department have never attempted to put it in operation. Why should we put in operation a law that has never been observed in the past, where there is no necessity for it, so long as we vest in the board the supreme power of cancelling any agreement of that kind made for a short period. The clauses in the Bill are taken from the Railway Act. On inquiry I find it has been a dead letter, and no attempt has been made to interfere or disturb it, and I thought we should allow a certain degree of elasticity to railways doing business day by day and leave with the board the power to cancel any agreement that they made that was not in the public interest.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I suppose the hon. Secretary of State would not have any objection, if his amendment were carried, to insert these words :

Not inconsistent with this Act or the special Act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is in a measure inconsistent with this Act.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is the law as it is at present.

The amendment was allowed to stand as a notice of motion.

On clause 267,

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have given notice of an amendment to this clause. I move that the following subsection be added to clause 267 :—

5. Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in section three of this Act, this section and the next preceding section shall apply to the traffic on Dominion government railways and vessels connected therewith :

Provided, however, that the Governor in Council may from time to time, in his discretion, order that this and the next preceding section shall apply.

We have already made this exception in the case of provincial government railways and it is thought, in the interest of navigation in particular, and the maritime provinces, that power should be vested in the Governor General to make the clauses affecting traffic apply to steamships, which connect Prince Edward Island with the mainland. This is a matter in which the hon. gentleman from Marshfield has taken a great interest. This is not bringing the railways under the control of the board, but placing the traffic to which this clause refers in the same position as the traffic on the railways owned by the local legislatures, and it leaves it to the Governor General in Council to say whether it will apply or not. I ask the hon. Secretary of State to take this matter into consideration.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall do so.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If the government decide to accept this amendment, it will need to be worded a little differently. I would suggest as follows :—

Provided, however, that the Governor in Council may from time to time, at his discretion, order that this and the next preceding subsection shall apply to the traffic on Dominion government railways and vessels connected therewith.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I may say there was a very decided vote taken on section 3, and after a consultation with the government as to whether any concession was to be made on that subject, bringing the Intercolonial Railway under the control of the board, the decision was it should not be. The Intercolonial Railway is not now within the purview of the Railway Act, and it is proposed to let that policy continue, leaving it entirely with the Minister of Railways to make any regulations which, in his judgment, may be reasonable and proper. A traffic arrangement was made by the minister with the Grand Trunk Railway at one time, when the Intercolonial Railway was extended to Montreal, and it must rest entirely with the minister. That is the decision of the government on the subject. There is no intention to disturb that arrangement. The people of the maritime provinces seem to prefer continuing the present policy.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That being the determination of the government, I shall not press it to a vote, but I do not think the instance given by the hon. gentleman is at all analogous. That would be between the Grand Trunk Railway and the Intercolonial Railway where the traffic would have to be interchanged at Point Lévis or Montreal. That I think is all right enough, but this is particularly to affect the freight which would go to Prince Edward Island. The steamers that connect the mainland with the railway system on Prince Edward Island can put up their rates, without any control whatever either by the government or by the board, to an unreasonable height. I shall not press the amendment, but will leave it for the hon. gentleman from Marshfield to give his reasons for it hereafter.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall be very glad to submit to the Minister of Railways any suggestions that the hon. gentleman from Marshfield may make.

On clause 239, subsection 2,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The law at present in regard to accidents by fire caused by locomotives depends on this principle : if the company are guilty of negligence, then in all cases they are liable ; if not, they are not liable. The question of negligence depends on a variety of circumstances. Amongst others the most prolific for inquiry is the question as to whether the hood of the locomotive is sufficient to prevent sparks escaping from the smoke-stack. The law has been changed, and I believe is different to the law which exists in any country as far as I know. As the Bill came from the House of Commons it made the company liable in all cases and for every amount and not only for the immediate but for the distant effects of conflagration, which might mean a very serious matter, because while the direct and immediate consequence of a fire might be apparently small, yet if it were allowed to smoulder for days or weeks, it might, owing to the carelessness of other parties outside of the railway proper, spread and cause a serious conflagration. I propose to amend subsection 2 so as to read :

Whenever damages caused to crop, lands, fences, plantations or buildings, and their contents, by a fire started by a railway locomotive, the company making use of such locomotive, whether guilty of negligence or not, shall be liable for such damage, and may be sued for the recovery of such damage in any court of competent jurisdiction, provided that unless it is established that the fire was started by the negligence of the company the total amount of compensation recoverable under subsection 2 of this section in respect of any one or more claims for damages from the fire or fires started by the same locomtive and on the same occasion, shall not exceed $5,000.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Is this given as a notice of motion ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have given too many notices of motion and I think the House ought to decide where it can. It leaves it as it is now where the company is guilty of negligence—the liability is unlimited. But we depart from the common law of the country, and the law of all other countries, and make the company liable in all cases, whether they are guilty of negligence or not, and this amendment provides that in a case where they are not guilty of negligence, the limit shall be $5,000. If there is negligence the liability remains just as it is now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why should a company be held responsible for losses that do not occur through any negligence on their part ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend knows what the House of Commons have done.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The House of Commons have passed a good many of these clauses that we amended.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have passed this clause ourselves.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They will scarcely know their own child when they get it back. I cannot understand the equity or justice of holding any individual or company responsible for damages that have not occurred through their negligence or their fault. Why we should hold a company liable for damages to the extent of $5,000 for destruction of property by fire which they have not caused, I cannot understand.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The railway companies recognize the feeling which prevails at present, and they are willing to accept this as a settlement of the question.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—We by legislation give a railway company power to run locomotives through the country. They have to carry fire and they certainly ought to excercise care in ruuning tliose locomotives and see that they do not do any damage. If we felt they were going to set fire to the country, we would not grant the company a charter, and the company ought to be held responsible for fire caused by their engines. I do not believe, if a railway company use proper appliances in their locomotives, that they can set fire, because I am satisfied that cinders which blow out through a proper screen on the smoke-stack will not set fire. In a great many cases the engineers remove those screens from the hoods of the locomotives to assist the draft, and large cinders escape and start fires.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That would be an unlawful act.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—How are you going to prove it is an unlawful act ? I do not believe fire can escape from a locomotive if proper precautions are taken. It is through neglect that fire escapes, and if we do not make a very stringent Act, holding companies responsible for all damages caused by fire from their locomotives, it will be impossible for an individual to prove that they did not have proper screens. In Manitoba the settlers are held responsible for fire escaping and causing damage. If a fire can be traced to the individual who started it in a prairie, he is liable for the damage.

The amendment was allowed to stand as a notice of motion.

Hon. Mr. FULFORD, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill and asked leave to sit again.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER—It is moved by the Hon. Mr. Scott, seconded by the Hon. Mr. Templeman that this House do now adjourn.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is past six o'clock and I object. We have plenty of work to keep us busy to-night.

The SPEAKER—Pursuant to the order of——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I object to the House being dictated to by the Speaker. There has been too much if it of late. At six o'clock the rule is that the House rise, and no motion can be put.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Some of us have made engagements for this evening and I hope the hon. gentleman will not persist in his objection.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In deference to the hon. gentleman's wish——

The SPEAKER—I declare this House continued until 3 o'clock p.m. to-morrow.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I withdraw my objection, but in future I shall take care not to be blocked by the Speaker or anybody else.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Thursday, September 24, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I desire to call attention to the proceedings of last evening at the close of the sitting. I am sorry the hon. Secretary of State is not here. I should like him to be present, as I propose to deal with the rules which I think should govern the Senate in all matters and more particularly these rules which should guide us in questions of adjournment, and also questions affecting the honour of the Senate and the honour of the senators and their position and their rights in respect of the Speaker as well as of the House. I need scarcely say that for some 36 years of parliamentary life that I have never before felt it incumbent upon me to take a position, either in this Chamber or in the Commons, antagonistic to any Speaker. I have great respect for the Chair, and realize the difficulties which constantly present themselves to a Speaker in keeping order and dealing with questions which may be referred to him, for that reason upon very many occasions in this House I have not publicly differed from the position taken by the Speaker, though I have differed from him for reasons which I have indicated, and I think that many of the senators who are present are well aware that upon many occasions I took sides with the Speaker when I thought he was right against those of my own individual friends. I merely make that statement in order to show that anything that I may say now in reference to what took place last night will not be considered as emanating from a spirit of revenge or retaliation, but that I call attention to the incident of yesterday for the purpose, principally, of endeavouring to bring back, if I may use that expression, the Senate to a proper sense of its own duty and its own dignity. Last night when we were in Committee of the Whole, the clock had passed the hour for rising—not for adjournment. I called the attention of the then chairman that it was past six o'clock, and it was his duty then to have vacated the Chair, and the House would consequently stand adjourned until 8 o'clock p.m., but the hon. Secretary of State having got through the different motions which were before the committee at the time, asked that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again. I objected to that on the ground that the hour had passed at which the House should rise, and I frankly say that my intention in doing so was that the Senate should meet again after dinner at the regular hour, and proceed with the business. That there may be no mistake about this, the House will remember that when the hon. gentleman from Marquette rose to address the House the chairman called his attention to the fact that it was after six o'clock. Now, the usual practice in the Commons—I do not think we have carried it out so rigidly here—has been that when an independent member calls the Speaker's attention to the fact that it is six o'clock, the member at once takes his seat, and the Speaker announces the fact, 'It being after six o'clock. I leave the Chair.' Then what follows we all know—the re-assembling of the Senate in the evening. Notwithstanding my objection, the motion was put to rise and report. The chairman vacated the Chair and did report to the Speaker. The Speaker assumed his position as Speaker of the House, and put a motion moved by the hon. Secretary of State, and seconded by the Hon. Mr. Templeman, for an adjournment of the House. I took exception for the reason first, that it was past the time, that his duty was to vacate the Chair, and not to put the motion. I took a further objection, that I heard no motion made or proposed by the Secretary of State. However, the Speaker at the time kept his position, standing. The Secretary of State then very courteously gave a reason why we should adjourn—in order to meet the convenience of certain of the members, and he expressed the hope that I would not press my objection. I rose at once and I think the language I used—in fact in reading the official report just now, I find my memory was quite correct—that in deference to the request made by the hon. Secretary of State, I would—but then I could get no further. The Speaker declared the motion carried, vacated the Chair, followed by the Ser-jeant-at-Arms with the mace, and that was all done while I had the floor. Now, every parliamentarian knows that no motion can be put while a gentleman is standing and addressing the House, and more particularly under the circumstances, when I was about acquiescing in the request of the hon Secretary of State. The motion was declared carried, the Chair was vacated and the Speaker left the House. Whether that be a discourtesy to the gentleman who was speaking, or whether it was violating a rule of the House I must leave those who were present and saw and heard what took place, to form their own opinion. I frankly admit that very often I have known this to take place, that when it was desirous to finish a certain debate, or to secure the passage of a certain motion which was before the House, and the hour hand had passed six o'clock, some person would intimate to the Speaker, 'Don't look at the clock,' and I have heard, further, where it was necessary to do that—and there are gentlemen here from the House of Commons who will verify what I say—the remark. 'We will not call it six o'clock yet.' On other occasions, fifteen minutes before six o'clock, it has been said, 'We will call it six o'clock,' and in doing so the House rises. This procedure has always been by mutual consent, in order if possible to facilitate the carrying on of the business of the House, which is quite correct, because it is a courtesy extended to both sides of the House—to individuals, to the government and the opposition. It constantly occurs, and that kindly feeling always should exist in both Houses. In the House of Commons party relations are much more acrimonious than they are here. We should not be governed by the same spirit, and are not, I hope, that governed us while we were in the other House, and for that reason a greater courtesy should exist, not only between the government and the opposition, but between the Chair and the members. Having said this much, let me refer to the rules which should guide us, but unfortunately have not guided us to a great extent in the past. If we refer to rule 4, headed 'Evening Sessions,' hon. gentlemen will find that if at six o'clock the business be not concluded, the Speaker leaves the Chair until 7.30, the mace being left on the Table. If we refer to rule 75 hon. gentlemen will find that the rules of the Senate are to be observed in the Committee of the Whole, except the rules limiting the number of times of speaking, and that the previous question can not be put, &c. Now, the rule which governs the Senate is that the Speaker leaves the Chair at six o'clock. The same rule applies to the committee with the exceptions to which I have called attention, and consequently it was the duty of the chairman, when six o'clock arrived, to have vacated the Chair, and having vacated the Chair, the recess between six o'clock and 7.30 p.m. would have occurred. Consequently, no motion could have legally and properly, been made under the rules of the Senate, after the attention of the Speaker had been called to the fact that the time had arrived from him to vacate the chair.

Let me call the attention of the Senate to Bourinot, page 488, second edition, where it will be found that the duty of the Speaker, when the House is in Committee of the Whole, at six o'clock, is clearly and definitely defined. Bourinot says:

> When six o'clock comes the Speaker will resume the chair immediately, without waiting for any report from the chairman, and will say: 'It being six o'clock, I now leave the Chair.'

There can be no misunderstanding that language. Now let me turn to rule 17 which reads as follows:

> No motion to suspend, modify or amend any rule or part thereof, shall be in order except on one day's notice in writing, specifying precisely the rule proposed to be suspended, modified or amended, and the purpose of such suspension. But any rule may be suspended without notice by the unanimous consent of the Senate, &c.

That being the case, the motion of the hon. Secretary of State made after it was six o'clock, could not have been properly put under the rules, unless rule 4 had been suspended, which declares that the Speaker, or Chairman, shall leave the Chair when six o'clock arrives. Under these rules it is quite clear that the motion made by the Secretary of State was not in order, and I objected to it at the time, but for the reasons I have already indicated, I had no desire to prevent those members from carrying out their social or whatever arrangements had been made, as indicated in the request of the hon. Secretary of State. It was also objected to, when the Speaker put the question to the House for the adjournment. I then took the objection that the motion could not be put under the rules. The remark of the Speaker at the time, as I understood him, was that that was something new. Well, I admit it was something new. No one had ever been placed in the same position, to my recollection before, and consequently when the motion was put and I was desirous, as I said then, of continuing the session after six o'clock that we might proceed with the business on the Notice paper, it suggested itself to me at once that that motion could not be put under the rules, and consequently I took objection to it. However, my objection was not accepted by the Speaker, who at once, as I have stated before, and repeat now, while I occupied the same position I do now, addressing the House, offering to accept the suggestion made by the hon. Secretary of State, in deference to the request he had made, declared the motion carried, and left the Chair, leaving me standing. I have not been standing ever since, but I mention the facts as they occurred. There are some other questions to which I might call the attention of the House, but I do not know that it is necessary. I have no desire to intensify any feeling which may exist either in my own breast or that of any other hon. gentleman in connection with this matter, but I hesitate not to say that on many occasions his Honour the Speaker, has stepped beyond the bounds of his duty in his interference with members of this House when they have thought it their duty to make suggestions.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There have been occasions when some of the oldest members of this House have risen in their place to make objections and have been interrupted and interfered with by the Speaker in a manner that, I am quite sure, on reflection he would know is neither right nor proper, nor within the purview of his duties as Speaker of the Senate. While we are discussing this matter, we may as well be frank. The Speaker frequently rises in the Chair and addresses this House without leaving the dais. If hon. gentlemen refer to the authorities they will find that the Speaker has no right to address the House from that position. Bourinot lays down the doctrine, and so does May, very clearly so far as the duties of the Speaker are concerned. Bourinot, chap. 3, page 203, uses the following language :

> The Speaker presides over all the deliberations of the Senate except when the House meets in Committee of the Whole, and then he must call another member to the Chair. He has in all cases a vote which is the first recorded on the side on which it is taken, and he decides the question of order when called upon for his decision and not before.

Senators had better keep in mind, that the Speaker of the Senate does not occupy the same position, or have the same authority in that respect as the Speaker of the House of Commons. The Speaker's duty, under the law as laid down in this book, is, when his attention is called to any question, to decide the point of order, not to raise it himself, or to interfere with the deliberations of the House. Then it goes on :

> If he wishes to address the House on any subject, he will come down from the Chair like the Lord Chancellor in the House of Lords, and speak from the floor like other members, but this is a privilege which he will very rarely exercise.

I presume the writer when he penned that sentence must have had the Lord Chancellor in mind, and not the present Speaker of this House. The writer continues :

> He stands uncovered when speaking to the Senate, and if called upon to explain a point of order or practice, he has to state the rule applicable to the case and also to decide the question when required, subject to an appeal to the Senate.

I have occupied a longer time upon this question than perhaps was necessary, but I felt it incumbent upon me, in defence of the position which I took last night, to make this statement. I felt it still more necessary and incumbent upon me as, perhaps, not a very old member of the Senate, but having had some thirty-six years' knowledge of parliamentary practice, and having a very high regard and respect for the dignity of this House, that it was quite time the Senate's attention was called to the irregularities that have occurred in the past on the part of the members themselves, myself not excepted from the number, and from what I may term, and what I believe to be, the unnecessary and undignified position assumed by the Speaker of the Senate. I must apologize for having made this statement. It has been a painful duty for me, but I am acting, I repeat, in self respect and in the interest of the proceedings of the Senate. I wish it distinctly understood—and I think the Speaker will give me credit for it—that what I have said is from no disregard for the Speaker personally, or from any revengeful spirit. I hold the Speaker in as high estimation as any gentleman here, but while we have a duty to perform and should respect to the fullest possible extent the authority and power of the Chair, he should extend the same consideration to each member of this House. I have made these remarks from the best and purest motives, and I trust that I may never, if I am here for thirty-six years more, feel it incumbent upon me to call the attention of the Senate to the action of any Speaker no matter who he may be. I shall endeavour in future to treat the Chair with that respect which I think I have shown it in the past, and all I ask from the Chair is the same courtesy and respect that I extend to it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am sorry that I have been the innocent and unintentional source of this unpleasant incident of last evening, and the repetition to-day. I myself had an engagement last evening that I was obliged to keep, and it so happened a number of gentlemen, I think from each side of the House, came to me between five and six and asked if there would be an evening sitting, and I said 'no, the feeling is that we will not sit to-night. We have had a very active afternoon, and we will not sit to-night,' and that became the general impression, in this neighbourhood at all events. My hon. friend is perfectly correct in the rule he has laid down, and the authorities he has cited as to the practice that should prevail in this Chamber, but he will admit, I have no doubt, that we have been very lax in the past in observing the rule as to the hour of six o'clock. Invariably when the House has been in committee at the hour, and we were within a short period of finishing the subject under discussion, it has been usual to go on, no one calling attention to the fact that it was six o'clock. No doubt the proper course would have been for me to have moved the adjournment out of committee five minutes before six, in order to have properly put myself before the Chairman to move that the House adjourn over until to-morow. I did not do that, misled by the loose practice that has prevailed in the past of allowing the Chairman in committee to sit beyond six o'clock, and then trust to the general good-nature of the House, if it became desirable not to sit in the evening to allow the motion to be put. Probably the Speaker was aware of the fact that there had been a very general feeling to adjourn and it had been supposed that the House would have acquiesced in the proposal without any hesitation. I am quite sure that the Speaker had no intention really to act improperly, or to act too hastily. We all have our little weaknesses sometimes of acting perhaps more hastily than we should, and the Speaker I presume, is subject to that human weakness, the same as the rest of us. But I am quite sure every one in this Chamber will acquit him of any intention to offend any hon. gentleman, and especially the hon. leader of the opposition. They have always been the best of friends and the kindliest sentiments have always been expressed by my hon. friend towards the Speaker, as I have noticed on very many occasions, and therefore it could only have been from thoughtlessness at the moment that this unhappy incident occurred. I am sorry that I happened to be the cause of this unpleasantness. I shall be extremely careful in the future to see that similar conditions do not arise while I have control of this side of the House.

TORONTO AND HAMILTON RAILWAY COMPANY BILL.

THIRD READING.

The Order of the Day being called :

Third reading Bill (147) An Act to incorporate the Toronto and Hamilton Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Young.)

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—In the absence of the hon. promoter of this Bill, I move that the Order of the Day be discharged and placed on the Order for Tuesday next.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT— I received a letter to-day from a number of influential parties in Hamilton desiring to be heard against this Bill. Their objection was to the line being carried along Burlington Beach, where a number of citizens have private residences. I am not sure whether that question was brought up in the committee and attention called to it. I answered the letter and said that the Bill had been reported to the House, and was set down for third reading, and it was now too late to give any notice to amend the Bill, and it was useless to offer any opposition. If the Bill is postponed till Tuesday, I presume, in deference to the request of these gentlemen, I will have to present three objections. It is for the hon. gentleman to say what course he is going to take. I should like to be informed whether this opposition was urged in committee.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—For the hon. gentleman's information, I may state that Mr. Bruce, one of the members for Hamilton, was present at that committee and read the resolution that was passed at a meeting of the summer residents of Burlington Beach. They objected to an additional track being laid on the beach upon which summer residences are erected on account of the danger to the children in the locality. The resolution passed was that it should be provided in the Bill as far as practicable that the electric railway should run its cars over the Grand Trunk tracks, which was given permission by the city of Hamilton to enter the city by the beach. It was pointed out to Mr. Bruce that it would be impossible to insert a clause in the Bill compelling any property holder to allow a second company to utilize their track for other purposes than that for which it was built, and that it would be better to put in a clause recommending the Grand Trunk Railway to accede to this request, that they could accomplish that object just as well by negotiations between the two companies for the use of the Grand Trunk Railway track over the beach as if it were placed in the Bill. Mr. Bruce saw the reasonableness of the position taken by the committee. I myself made the same suggestion that my hon. friend has offered, that we should postpone the Bill for two or three days in order to enable a deputation to come down and lay their views before us, and after a good deal of consideration it was looked upon as utterly useless to delay it, for the very reason that no clause could be put in the Bill that would meet their request. I may say for Mr. Bruce that he saw the reasonableness of the position taken by the committee, and he said that under the circumstances perhaps it was just as well to let it be passed as it was quite evident the Bill would be pased under any circumstances.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The Bill provides for all the care that can be taken of the residents ; the municipalities through which it runs have to give their consent. Burlington is in two municipalities, and these municipalities will have to give their consent. These residents on the beach can go before the municipalities and represent their claims. I felt on the committee, and feel now, that the Bill ought to be passed. It has been long enough before the Commons and the Senate and no good object can be served by a deputation coming from Hamilton. They did ask to have a clause inserted to operate the road over the Grand Trunk Railway tracks. Of course we could not do that.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I might be permitted to add that the provisions in the Bill appear to me wholly to protect the rights of those who brought this grievance before us. I am familiar with the track that they speak of. It is a very narrow tract of land at Burlington Beach and by the time the railway allowance is taken off it, there is scarcely any room for another line of railway to come in there and I suppose on that account the provision in the Bill is made so strict that it is impossible for an electric line to be built there unless the parties interested give their consent. There must be by-laws passed by the two townships, under different jurisdiction, and we considered that was as much protection as could possibly be given by parliament, because it is utterly impossible to insist upon the Grand Trunk Railway giving them the right to go over their land. I do not think parliament would be willing to say that, independent of the consent of these residents and these municipalities, we should should give power to them to have any other line made there, and I rather think the rights of these people are quite sufficiently protected by the Bill as it stands.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am very glad to hear that the views of the residents on the beach have been before the committee and have been considered, and that what they desire has proved to be impracticable. Therefore they canot complain when it is impossible to meet their wishes.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—There is evidently a desire on the part of the House to pass the third reading now. With the unanimous consent of the House, I move the third reading of the Bill. The hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill is unavoidably absent. He asked me to take charge of it yesterday. I fancy there are no other amendments to be made to it.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

RAILWAYS LAW CONSOLIDATION BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole, consideration of Bill (21) 'An Act to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways.'

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I desire to submit for the approval of the committee some amendments of which I gave notice yesterday. The first one to which I shall call attention is clause, 122, in regard to the location of the line. This clause will stand as it is, and what I am about to move is a preliminary to that section. The effect of it is to give power to the Minister of Railways and Canals to pass on the plans as they are presented. I move that the following form part of clause 122, preceding the clause as printed :

The company shall prepare a map showing the general location of the proposed line of the railway, the termini and the principal towns and places through which the railway is to pass, giving the names thereof, the railways, navigable streams and tidewater, if any, to be crossed by the railway, and such as may be within a radius of thirty miles of the proposed railway, and, generally, the physical features of the country through which the railway is to be constructed, and shall give such further or other information as the minister may require.

2. Such map shall be submitted to the minister in duplicate and prepared upon a scale of not less than six miles to the inch, or upon such other appropriate scale as the minister may determine, and shall be accompanied by an application in duplicate, stating the special Act authorizing the construction of such railway and requesting the minister's approval of the general location as shown on the said map.

3. Before approving such map and location the minister may, subject to the special Act, make such changes and alterations therein as he may deem expedient, and upon being satisfied therewith shall signify his approval upon the map and the duplicate thereof, and when so approved, the map and application shall be filed in the Department of Railways and Canals and the duplicate thereof with the board, and no change or alteration from the general location of the line of the railway, as approved by the minister, shall be allowed, unless such change or alteration has been first approved by the minister.

4. The aforegoing provisions of this section shall only apply to the main line and to branch lines over six miles in length.

5. Upon compliance with the preceding provision of this section.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The next important amendment to which I desire to call the attention of the House is in reference to subsection 2 of clause 239, the fire clause. This clause has been fully considered by the government, and they think that the amendment which was submitted to the House yesterday, of which I gave notice, is a very fair one. As I explained, wherever the company are guilty of negligence, their liability is unlimited. Where, however, there is no negligence, and where under the law of other countries the company would not be liable, the companies are willing, in view of the strong feeling on the subject, to submit to be liable up to the amount of $5,000. So long as the amount is limited they are prepared to accept it, rather than battle with public opinion, hastily formed on the subject. The amendment is as follows :

239 (2.) Whenever damage is caused to crops, lands, fences, plantations, or buildings and their contents, by a fire, started by a railway locomotive, the company making use of such locomotive, whether guilty of negligence or not, shall be liable for such damage and may be sued for the recovery of the amount of such damage in any court of competent jurisdiction :

Provided that, unless it is established that the fire was started by the negligence of the company, the total amount of compensation recoverable under subsection two of this section, in respect of any one or more claims for damage from a fire or fires started by the same locomotive and upon the same occasion, shall not exceed $5,000.

3. The company shall have an insurable interest in all such property upon or along its route, for which it may be so held liable, and may procure insurance thereon in its own behalf.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Are we to understand by the amendment that the $5,000 is to cover damage caused to one person only, or to a whole village ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Where the fire arises on one day from one cause, the $5,000 would be distributed amongst the persons affected.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I understand that the clause suggested by the hon. Secretary of State would mean that if a locomotive on one day started five fires, the company would be liable only for $5,000 ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, on the same occasion.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—On the same occasion ? The same locomotive might start half a dozen fires on a run of 100 miles and the company would be liable for only $5,000. This clause, if adopted, would throw the onus of proof that there was negligence on the part of the company, in case a fire was started by a locomotive, on the party who suffered. It must be apparent to any hon. gentleman that that is practically impossible.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman is wrong. In any case, the company is liable for damage caused by fires to the extent of $5,000.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The sufferers must prove it was caused by a locomotive.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I do not believe it is possible for fire to start from a locomotive unless it is due to negligence. We know, from cases which have been tried, it is very hard for anyone to prove that a railway company has been guilty of negligence. The evidence may show the fire was caused by a locomotive, but to establish negligence is almost impossible, and the damage often exceeds $5,000. I know of one large fire started a year ago in Manitoba, which ran for thirty or forty miles. There was no question but that it started from a locomotive, and the Canadian Pacific Railway did settle with those who lost their hay and cattle. The law which applies to an ordinary resident and settler in the North-west should apply to a railway.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They would be liable in the case the hon. gentleman puts.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—To the extent of $5,000. I am satisfied that in all cases where a fire does start from a locomotive it is due to negligence. The engineer takes the screen out of the locomotive for the purpose of improving the draft. They say they cannot keep up steam unless they do it. The result is they set fire to the prairie and there is loss. Another way in which damage results from negligence, is allowing fire to escape from the ashpan. These are the only two places from which fire can escape from a locomotive. I am satisfied if proper appliances were placed and retained in the locomotive it would be impossible for fire to escape. The same way, if cinders are not allowed to escape from the ashpan, there can be no fire. If fire starts from the locomotive, the company ought to be liable.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is going very much further than the present law. In the case the hon. gentleman put, the company would not dispute the question of negligence. They would pay. They very often pay where persons lose their property, to escape litigation.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Sometimes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is a large concession.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Either the company is responsible or it is not. If the company is responsible, it must be responsible to the extent of the damage caused. If it is not responsible, the company should not be condemned to pay $5,000 or one dollar. You might as well put a clause in the Bill to provide, when a man loses two arms or two legs, the company will be responsible for one arm or one leg if negligence cannot be proved. The limitation is based on no principle of law. I should like to have a text of the law cited which would justify such a limitation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman must know—it has been pretty well discussed in the papers—that the company are not liable at present unless negligence can be proved. A different judgment was rendered in the case of Roy vs. the Canadian Pacific Railway, which originated in the province of Quebec. The case went to the Privy Council, and the judgment was reversed. Now, this clause is a concession to the people. The company are not liable as the law stands. We authorize railway companies to use fire. That is for the convenience of the general public. We could not do without locomotives. The consequences flow from that. We say at the same time to the company, you must be exceedingly careful of a dangerous element. If you are not careful, you must pay the consequences. So long as you use the best appliances and exercise care, you are not liable. Now, this is to meet cases similar to that of Roy vs. the Canadian Pacific Railway; but if the principle my hon. friend lays down were adopted, any railway company might be ruined, because their liability would be unlimited. They should be responsible for the direct results. But we know that indirect consequences very often flow from a fire. Take, for instance, the conflagration in the city of Ottawa some few months ago, where railways pass through lumber piles. It might be given in evidence that the fire in the lumber piles was started by a spark from a locomotive. The fire from the lumber piles communicated to the buildings, and extended over a very large area. The company ought not to be responsible for the indirect and consequential results. They were not the direct cause of the large conflagration, and therefore my hon. friend will see it would be manifestly an injustice to hold them responsible. However, this is a modification in order to meet the conditions which have been represented in the other Chamber, and it has been considered a fair compromise.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I would call the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to this feature of the proviso, that the $5,000 is intended to cover a multitude of claims. How would it be divided? It seems to me if there is a compromise, the compromise should rest upon some principle. There may be twenty persons concerned. Under what rule would the money be divided? Would it go to the party whose property was first destroyed?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It would be divided.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I do not think it is so clear as that. It would be very puzzling to divide it.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—How would the hon. gentleman divide it

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The principle adopted in England has been to exonerate the railway companies, and has been adopted on this ground: they are chartered to perform a certain service, and provided they use the ordinary apparatus the intention of parliament is presumed to absolve them from any damage. That may be very well in England where the companies are not subsidized as they are here.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It has been the law in Canada.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—No. In the province of Quebec the law has been applied the other way, and it was only in the case of Roy that the judgment went to the Privy Council, and the Privy Council applied, very properly, the principle which they had been applying in England for a great many years. They held that the common law of the province of Quebec was not different from the common law of England, in that respect. It was by interpreting the statute that the judgment was rendered exonerating the company. In this country most of the railway companies are subsidized by the government, either the federal or the local, and I fail to see that they are entitled to be treated differently from any one else—that they should be exonerated from the responsibility which they incur in using locomotives or any other apparatus. As has been very well stated by the hon. gentleman from Marquette, by using proper precautions, the railway companies can relieve themselves from responsibility, and the principle which has been adopted in the Bill as printed is not unreasonable. I would call the attention of the House to this fact: in the province of Quebec, where the law has been applied up to a year ago in the direction of holding railway companies responsible, it will be admitted it has not been ruinous to the railway companies. They have not had to pay large amounts of damages, and have not been seriously inconvenienced. As far as the 3rd paragraph contained in this amendment is concerned, I am altogether in accord with it. I think it would be well to declare that the railway companies should have an insurable interest in order to protect themselves.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It might be pointed out that the railways which have been incorporated by the federal law of Canada, have in law been exempt from the liability which, under this Bill, it is proposed to attach to railway companies. This certainly is a very radical invasion of vested rights of railway companies. A railway company, up to the passage of this Bill, had a right to assume that the only liability which they contracted with reference to fires, was in respect to their liability arising through negligence on the part of the company. We now make a very serious departure so far as railway companies are concerned—that is to say, we make them liable now for all the damages which may arise from a fire started by a locomotive. Now, inasmuch as the railway commission have authority to say what appliances shall be used upon locomotives, and to place all sorts of restrictions around railway companies, it seems to me to be illogical to say that notwithstanding the fact that they observe most strictly every requirement placed upon them by Act of parliament, and that they are sanctioned by parliament to run their locomotives through the country, they must be liable in a way they have not hitherto been. My hon. friend from Montreal has asked for a citation of a principle of law analogous to this embodied in the amendment of the hon. Secretary of State. I would direct his attention to an analogous principle which obtains in England, and in almost every province in the Dominion. I refer to the principle of the limitation of liability under the Workmen's Compensation Act, and the Employers' Liability Act, by which dangerous machinery may be used by employers, and under which Acts the employers are exempt from injury which may proceed from the use of that machinery by an employee beyond a certain amount. I think in England the employer is liable only to the extent of £500 in each case, and that has been followed in some of the Canadian statutes. I understand also in the different states of the neighbouring Republic, similar legislation is to be found on their statute-books. That, I might say, is an analogous principle to that which has been introduced in this amendment. It seems to me extremely unreasonable that, as railway companies have up to the present time been exempt from this liability we should now attach to them a liability which, in its magnitude, could possibly wipe out the whole assets of a company—all on the finding of a petit jury that may be prejudiced against a company and decide that a fire has been created by a locomotive. When you take into consideration that that means liability which one can easily fancy would run into millions, that it rests in the hands of a petit jury to find the fact——

Hon. Mr. WATSON—You have an appeal.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The liability is one that should have its limitations. My hon. friend says the railways would secure an appeal. There is no better established principle laid down by courts of appeal than this, that once a jury make a finding on a question of fact, a court of appeal will not review that finding of fact. They will review the law, but except the evidence is manifestly wrong, they will not disturb a finding made by a jury. Consequently, there is practically no relief, even if they go to the Privy Council, from a finding of fact of that character. Under the circumstances, I think the rights of the public would be well preserved by the adoption of this proposal, and certainly a very onerous responsibility, vastly different from that which has heretofore obtained, would be placed upon the company.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—If the statement of fact which has been made by the hon. gentleman from Calgary was admitted, it would appeal to my mind, but I dispute his statement that the railway companies heretofore have been exempt from that liability under their charters. On the contrary, I could cite any number of judgments of courts in the province of Quebec—and I would invite the hon. member to cite a judgment to the contrary effect—whereby it has been held that they were liable. They have been held liable in virtue of the common law principle—the common law principle in England, as well as the common law principle of Quebec. Therefore, the decision of the Privy Council, which is but a single decision rendered twelve or fifteen months ago, is a new departure, and based merely on an interpretation of the statute. Therefore I fail to see how the railway companies have vested rights. The hon. gentleman refers to the principle adopted in the provinces as to liability for accidents. There is no parity between that principle and the one in question. There it is because the employer is made responsible, although he is not in law responsible—he is made to insure his employee, and that law is not based on the principle of responsibility. Here it is based on the principle of responsibility.

It is very well to say that the railway company may be exposed to a very large amount of damages, but suppose I am a manager or the owner of a mine—let us take, by way of illustration, the Dominion Coal Company. They have thousands of employees working underground. Through the negligence of one of their employees, thousands of lives are lost. The company is responsible, and may be mulct into hundreds of thousands of dollars damages. Should they be relieved of their responsibility? They should not be. And why should the railway company be relieved if they cause damage to any neighbouring property by fire or otherwise? By what principle should they be relieved of their responsibility? I fail to see the unreasonableness of the principle sanctioned in this Bill. I would have understood that the railway company would have drafted a clause to avail themselves of this. They have been claiming that under the common law, as it obtains in Ontario, and other provinces, if a fire is set to a neighbouring property, and then passes from that property to another one, their liability would not extend to a second or third, but be limited to the first property. If that is the common law, I would understand they would ask to be placed on the same footing as any one else. In the province of Quebec the common law is not the same. The moment a fire is caused to property, however far it may extend, the law would reach the party responsible for the fire, and it would extend to any number of owners.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Suppose damage is caused to twenty proprietors of farms on a railway? One of the proprietors puts in a claim for $5,000. It goes before a court, and he proves that he has suffered damage to that extent. The other proprietors do not put their claims before the court—they are waiting. What will the judge say? This amendment says the company is responsible only to the extent of $5,000; will the judge give the whole $5,000 to the first man who has sued the company, or will he say 'no, I will not give judgment now. I must wait until the other proprietors put in their claims, so as to make an equitable division of the $5,000.' If the hon. gentleman from Calgary can answer that I shall vote for the amendment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The clause says distinctly, recoverable in respect to any one or more claims for damages. It is divided amongst them.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Has parliament the right to put such a limitation? It is a matter of civil rights, and civil rights fall under the jurisdiction of the provinces. We have the right here to grant franchises to railway companies, but we have no right to amend the law of the respective provinces. It seems to me this clause should remain silent on the matter, and the whole thing should remain under the common law.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the Bill as it passed the House of Commons we reversed the laws of the province in that respect.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—By what right?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We are doing it in the Bill, because we say the railway company will be liable in any case where fire arises that can be traced to the company, whether caused by negligence or not. You have already, by the adoption of that principle by the House of Commons, interfered with the laws of several of the provinces, and I must dispute the conclusions reached by my hon. friend from Montreal, in which he says that the Privy Council did not decide the case of Roy on the Quebec law. I say, they did. The only reason it was not decided before was that these cases were not appealed until they became too numerous. Then when an appeal was taken, the decision was given in favour of the company's contention.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Speaking of liability with regard to accident, it is quite easy for a manufacturer to produce evidence to show negligence on the part of an employee, but it would be almost impossible for a farmer out on the plains to prove that a railway company was negligent and caused a fire on the railway track. The hon. Secretary of State says that this would apply to damage from a fire or fires started by the same locomotive on the same occasion. The question arises, what is 'the same occasion.' I am satisfied any court or jury would decide it was during the trip of a locomotive going from one point to another.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The Secretary of State calls attention to the fact that if this fire which occurred in Ottawa last May had been traced to the negligence of the railway company, or by accident through the railway company, it might ruin the company. What about the people who were burned out? They have some rights. I do not think any person has offered to suggest that there is any chance of fire starting from a locomotive unless there is negligence. If you make it easy for a company to escape the damages, they will not be so particular about exercising caution. In the case to which the hon. Secretary of State alluded, why should the man who has got his lumber piles burned up be paid while the man whose house was burned by the fire from the lumber piles gets nothing? Take the prairie country for instance: I have known fires, started from a railway locomotive, or from some settlers being careless setting out fire, to run over fifty or sixty miles, and destroy a great deal of property.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Did the railway company pay in that case?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—They paid if it was proved it was due to their negligence.

Why should a railway company be exempt any more than a settler in Manitoba? A settler is liable for every dollar of loss he causes by setting out fire. Out in the ranching country there is great danger of fire starting by setting fire to the grass in the fall or spring. We cannot impose too great liability on railway companies for the purpose of making them careful not to allow fire to escape. I do not think there is any hardship. They may not be able to haul as many cars because they have to keep a screen in the smokestack, but they can do their work, and if we make a stringent law, we will prevent a great many fires. In the distributing of the $5,000, the case cited by my hon. friend from Montreal (Hon. Mr. David) shows it would not work. If one man's claim is $5,000, and he sues and proves his damages, where would the others get anything? Suppose the company damages property to the exaent of $5,000, the man who sues and gets judgment for $5,000, he will get the entire amount. Others might go before the court and be told: Judgment to the extent of $5,000 has been given, and there is nothing for you?'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh no, it would be nothing of the kind.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I should like to ask the hon. Secretary of State what a court would do in a case such as has been cited by the hon. gentleman from Montreal?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The court would say there would be only $5,000 to be divided among those who suffered the loss.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—But the court has no knowledge of any loss except that which comes before the court. They cannot take cognizance of any loss or damage unless it comes before them, and the only case before the court is the one in which they have given judgment. The others have not taken action, and the result is they would get nothing. I do not think there should be any limit, and if this clause is to pass, a change should be made to make plainer what a fire or fires from a locomotive on the same occasion means.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Anything which is necessary to make the meaning plain should be inserted, but I call the attention of the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie to the fact that the railway company would not make any defence up to $5,000. The company will ascertain, as a matter of course, I assume, what the approximate amount of the loss was, and who the losers were, and see that the $5,000 which they were called upon to pay was apportioned between the sufferers by the fire. If that is not the case, this clause should be made plainer. Now there is this to be considered, that the common law liability of the company to which the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry has referred, and also the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface, is not interfered with at all. Where there is any negligence established on the part of the company, the liability is unlimited, and in addition to that common law liability, this amendment proposes that the company shall, in any case, whether there has been negligence or not, be liable to the extent of $5,000. It may be that the amount is not just the right amount. The 'same occasion' would mean the one occasion which arises at the same instant; but if that language is not clear I suppose the hon. Secretary of State is quite prepared to make it clear. If there has been no negligence on the part of the railway company, it is going a long distance to impose upon them an unlimited liability for the damage caused by the fire.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I call attention to this case. The last speaker has just said that probably there will be no suits, that they might settle. Supposing ten or twelve farmers have their houses burned by fire and one of them comes up and asks for the $5,000, and there is no negligence at all, the company might give the $5,000 to one of them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, they could not.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What prevents them?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The statute is perfectly clear.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What prevents them giving the $5,000 without going to court? Is the company obliged to go to court?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If they give the $5,000, what next?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—It is quite clear if the company was called upon for damages in the case cited by my hon. friend, the company would take steps to ascertain who was entitled. The railway companies do not engage solicitors and counsel of such stupid calibre that they would allow them to pay over $5,000 without investigation. They would investigate and see that the company would be freed from all liability by that payment.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If they paid $5,000 no one could claim more, and if they find a lawyer that comes and asks $5,000 for an individual that lost by a fire, they might pay the $5,000.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I desire to read an extract from the judgment of the Privy Council in support of what I stated as to the grounds upon which the judgment was rendered. Law Reports, House of Lords, Canadian Pacific Railway v. Roy, at page 231, Lord Cairns used the following language:

> Much was argued by the learned counsel for the respondent as to the peculiar jurisprudence of Quebec; but in truth there is no such difference between the law of England and the law of Quebec in this respect as he seemed to suppose. The law of England, equally with the law of the province in question, affirms the maxin 'sic utere tuò ut alieno ne lædas,' but the previous state of the law, whether in Quebec, France or England, cannot render inoperative the positive enactment of a statute, and the whole case turns, not upon what was the common law of either country, but what is the true construction of plain words authorizing the doing of the very thing complained of.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The Lord Chancellor in his judgment proceeds as follows:

> The argument appears to be founded on the suggestion that Quebec has a civil law of its own and that in that province all corporations like all other persons are responsible for causing damage to their neighbours by a fault—that is to say, any actionable wrong, whether imprudence or want of skill; and another article of the code provides that civil corporations constituting by the fact of their incorporation ideal or artificial persons are as such governed by the laws affecting individuals, saving the privileges they enjoy and the disabilities they are subjected to. If the immunity claimed for the applicants were simply claimed upon the ground that they were a corporation without reference to what they are authorized to do in that capacity, the argument would be well founded; but the fallacy of the suggestion lies in supposing that that immunity is claimed because they are a corporation. If that were so, there would be no difference between the law of England and the law as so expounded in the province of Quebec; but the ground upon which the immunity of a railway company for injury caused by the normal use of their line is based is that the legislature which is supreme has authorized the particular thing so done in the place and by the means contemplated by the legislature, and that cannot constitute an actionable wrong in England any more than it can constitute a fault by the Quebec code.

And, I repeat, the whole case went on the ground that the railway company is absolved by reason of the fact that they were authorized to use their engines and provided they employ the ordinary methods in using them they are absolved from all consequences, and this is placing railway companies in a different position from ordinary companies, because all other corporations or persons are responsible for damage caused by them.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The principle which I mentioned a moment ago is based on the fact that parliament having authorized those companies to use locomotives, they were absolved, except where they were negligent or where there was an absence of skill. I quite appreciate the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie with reference to a serious fire being set out in the west, but I would point out to the House this great difficulty which a railway company is called upon to face. The courts have held that a jury would be warranted in making a finding of fact as to a fire having been started by a locomotive, although there was no direct evidence that the fire was set out from a locomotive—simply from the fact that the locomotive passed a certain point at a certain day and the presence of fire immediately thereafter. It does not require any violence of the imagination to come to the conclusion that that fire might have been set out from a dozen other causes. A passenger might have thrown a cigar from the train, or a traveller might have thrown a match from the train, and a dozen causes quite as conclusive as that of the locomotive originating the fire might easily be arrived at.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—We have provided in this Bill that all combustible matter shall be removed from the right of way.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It might not happen on the right of way, but might happen on a lumber pile where a tramp was sheltering himself. According to the authority I have given, the jury can be told that a locomotive passed at a certain hour on a certain day, losing sight of the fact that the fire might arise from other causes. As to the apportionment of the $5,000, it might be solved in this way: that the $5,000 should be apportioned by the court as they saw fit. Under Lord Campbell's Act, when an action is brought the court will ascertain who might be interested and will make such an appointment as seems proper. If at the end of subclause 2 the words 'and shall be apportioned as the court may declare' were added it would meet the difficulty.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—There is a more serious difficulty arising from that proviso. This proviso would be liable to the interpretation that the liability of a company would be limited to cases where there was actual negligence, and that they would be presumed to have been relieved from responsibility for having used proper appliances. I am quite satisfied that the House of Commons will not, even if this amendment was adopted by this House, accept it. If it is the sense of the House to mitigate to some extent the effect of the clause so as to show that we do not go beyond the common law of any province, the clause should be drafted differently, but in its present form it seems to me it should not be adopted.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I hope it is no breach of the dignity of this House, and I hope it will not be considered as such, for me to say that I wish that the legal gentlemen of this House would meet together in some conclave and decide on what is the law, and then they could inform us. To have one's mind wrenched in the way it has been this evening by these eminent lawyers is something terrible, and it may have a serious effect on some of the members who are not gifted with that fine sense of analysis that these legal gentlemen have. I do not think we will ever get through with this Bill. I was going to suggest that it be allowed to stand. I suppose that would entail another day's discussion; but as to this point I may say that I have seen a great many men punished and mulcted severely in damages where it was not their fault at all. The hon. gentleman from de Salaberry tells us about the law. Well, what are the juries like there? I suppose the juries are as depraved in Quebec sometimes as they are in Ontario, and do not always decide according to what is right or fair. I have seen men severely punished where a case would go to a jury, and I think it is eminently proper to put in something that would debar people from bringing these actions. The hon. gentleman from Calgary has made this very plain and clear. If they have their redress against the company for negligence, it is proper they should be debarred from bringing these actions trusting to get a jury who will give other damages. Every one knows how any action tried by a petit jury against a railway company will result. You can make a sure prognosis on that case. I have the greatest respect for the hon. gentleman from Laprairie, but if he does not know any more about law than he does about the English language, I think he had better go and study it up, because what he learns here will not tend to instruct him very much.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have added the words 'the amount to be apportioned as the court may direct.'

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—Suppose the insurance along the line is greater than the $5,000, what is to happen then?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The company can only recover from the insurance company what they have to pay.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It would be the same if you insured a building for a certain amount and the loss did not come up to the amount of the insurance.

The committee divided on the amendment, which was adopted on the following vote : Contents, 24 ; non-contents, 15.

On clause 242,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This clause was made to read as follows :

All actions or suits for indemnity, where any damages or injuries sustained by reason of the construction or operation of the railway, shall be commenced within one year after the time when the damage arises.

There is a proviso to that that it shall not apply to any action arising out of contracts, or to questions of tolls, and the amendment would read in this way :

Nothing in this section shall apply to any action brought against the company upon any breach of contract expressed or implied in the carriage of any traffic nor to any action against the company for damages under any section of part of this Act respecting tolls.

In all of those actions the parties have five years, six years, whatever the law of the province happens to be, to bring the action.

The clause was amended and adopted.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There are several amendments of which hon. gentlemen have given notice. Probably I had better deal with those that I have a note of. We made a change in section 310, which was the repealing section. We repealed chap. 29 of 51 Vic., except 306, and we also repealed—I am not sure what hon. gentleman moved the proposition to repeal that part—sec. 2 of chap. 9 of 59 Vic., which I think was a mistake, because we are repealing a statute passed in 1896, which declared that resolutions, where they had been adopted up to that time, should have the force of by-laws under certain conditions, and therefore we should not disturb legalized resolutions. The question might arise now, if we repealed that section, that the resolutions might be called in question and therefore we should leave it as it was.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The repealing of any Act does not render anything done under that Act invalid, and for the future clause 80 of the Bill provides as follows :—

The directors may make by-laws or pass resolutions from time to time for the following purposes.

That is practically a re-enactment of the Act of 1896, and there is no sense in having the two things.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My motion is to restore all except section 2—to allow it to stand.

Hon. Mr. POWER—One of the objects of the government is to have all the railway law consolidated in one Act. There is no necessity whatever for leaving in those words that are proposed to be put in again, and they are calculated to mislead any one who is dealing with the Act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Act of 1896 refers to what occurred before 1896. Why should we disturb it ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—We do not disturb it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I propose to read from the statute passed in 1896 amending the Railway Act. It would appear to have been prompted by the fact that certain proceedings of the railway company were illegal because the directors had not observed the ceremony of adopting the ordinances by by-law, and so parliament, in order to confirm what was defective, among others, passed this section :—

All resolutions heretofore passed——

It only refers to a time anterior to 1896. It proceeds :

Instead of by-laws for the purpose mentioned in section 59 of the Railway Act as substituted by this Act are hereby confirmed.

Is it not very much better not to disturb the Acts that have already confirmed what occurred anterior to 1896 ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why should my hon. friend not re-enact it and have the whole body of the railway law in this Bill ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It seems simpler as it was passed by the Commons in that form, to let it go, and it can certainly do no harm. Striking it out at first sight looks like interfering with class legislation which has legalized certain results.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I quite agree with the necessity of its retention. I think my hon. friend is perfectly right there. I did suggest before that these two exemptions, namely, chap. 29 of 51 Vic., and chap. 9 of 59 Vic., should be reenacted in this Bill, and then we should have the whole body of railway law in the Bill that we are about to pass.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am quite sure there is a provision in this Bill to the same effect.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think my point is entirely overlooked.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Let me call attention to the Interpretation Act in the Revised Statutes, paragraphs 50, 51 and 52, which provide :—

50. Whenever any Act is repealed, wholly or in part and other provisions are substituted, all by-laws, orders, regulations, rules and ordinances made under the repealed Act shall continue good and valid in so far as they are not inconsistent with the substituted Act, enactment or provision, until they are annulled or others made in their stead :

51. Whenever any Act or part of an Act is repealed and other provisions are substituted by way of amendment, revision or consolidation, any reference in any unrepealed Act, or in any rule, order or regulation made thereunder to such repealed Act or enactment, shall, as regards any subsequent transaction, matter or thing, be held and construed to be a reference to the provisions of the substituted Act or enactment relating to the same subject-matter as such repealed Act or enactment : Provided, always, that where there is no provision in the substituted Act or enactment relating to the same subject-matter, the repealed Act or enactment shall stand good, and be read and construed as unrepealed, in so far, but in so far only, as is necessary to support, maintain or give effect to such unrepealed Act, or such rule, order or regulation made thereunder :

52. The repeal of an Act, or the revocation of a regulation, at any time, shall not affect any Act done or any right or right of action existing, accruing, accrued or established, or any proceedings commenced in a civil cause, before the time when such repeal or revocation takes place ; but the proceedings in such case shall be conformable when necessary to the repealing Act or regulation.

The point is, in 1896 an Act was passed to validate what had been previously done, and giving the companies power to do these things by legislation or by-law, and that has been in operation ever since.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—To confirm what had been done.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It remains confirmed.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—In connection with clause 2, subsection (b), yesterday this subsection was re-inserted in the Bill ; I desire to call the attention of the Secretary of State to some of the provisions of the Bill which would come in conflict with that interpretation of the word 'by-law.' I propose to move that instead of subsection (b), the following be inserted :—

The expression 'by-law' when referring to an Act of the company includes a resolution.

I call attention to clauses 184 and 185 of this Bill. The first subsection provides for the consent of the municipality to carry a railway along, upon or across an existing highway, and the consent of the municipality should be obtained by by-law. Well, if subsection (b) was maintained, the word 'resolution' would be taken as the equivalent of 'by-law.' Then in clause 185, we have the very same thing.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no objection to the hon. gentleman limiting it to the railway. I do not agree with him in his interpretation.

The motion was agreed to.

On clause 8,

Hon. Mr. POWER—The amendment of which I have given notice is as follows :—

That clause 8 of the Bill be stricken out, and the following section substituted therefor :—

8. The Railway Committee of the Privy Council is abolished, and in lieu thereof there shall be a commission, to be known as the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada,' consisting of three members, who shall be appointed by the Governor in Council, at any time after the passing of this Act, and from time to time, as vacancies occur. Such commission shall be a court of record and have an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed.

2. The term of office of a commissioner shall be ten years ; but any commissioner may be removed for cause, by the Governor in Council, before the expiration of such term. A commissioner shall be eligible for reappointment on the expiration of his term of office. No commissioner shall be capable of holding office after attaining the age of seventy-five years.

3. One of such commissioners shall be a barrister of not less than ten years' standing, shall be appointed by the Governor in Council, chairman of the board, and shall be entitled to hold the office of chairman as long as he continues to be a member of the board. Another of such commissioners shall be a man of experience in railway traffic, and the third commissioner shall be a farmer or a commercial man. One of such two last-mentioned commissioners shall be appointed by the Governor in Council, deputy chairman of the board.

4. Whenever by an Act or document the Railway Committee of the Privy Council is given any power or authority, or any duty is cast upon it in regard to any company, railway, matter or thing, the power or authority so given, or the duty so cast upon the said committee, may or shall, as the case may be, be exercised by the board.

Also, substitute 'chairman' for 'chief commissioner' wherever the latter words occur in sections 10 and 11 and any subsequent sections.

I propose to strike out a portion of the amendment of which I have given notice, beginning in subclause 3, 'Another of such commissioners shall be a man of experience in railway traffic,' down to the end of the sentence.

The Bill sets out that the chairman of the board is to be a person of very considerable consequence. His decision on questions of law is to bind the board, and clearly he should be a barrister. It is assumed that he will be a barrister, but there is nothing in the Bill to make it necessary that he should be, and I think that the declaration made by the hon. minister who had charge of the Bill in the other House, to the effect that this officer was to be a barrister, ought to be embodied in the Bill. I hold, also, that the wording of this amendment is better and clearer than the clause in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Supposing he was a judge, and had retired, or was not a practising barrister at all?

Hon. Mr. POWER—If he was a judge he would be a barrister.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This clause was thoroughly discussed by Council, and they thought that the announcement they made to the House ought to have been sufficient as to the personnel of those who are to form this commission. It is usual to accept announcements of that kind made by the government. They thought it was only proper they should have the latitude under the clause as drawn, and I hope my hon. friend will not press his motion.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It may be true that the present government can be trusted, but there may be another government which cannot be trusted. The best way is to make the law clear.

The amendment was declared lost on a division.

On clause 237,

Hon. Mr. WATSON—In the absence of the hon. gentleman from Toronto, I move that the following be substituted for subsection 4, amended :—

That subsection 4 of section 237 of the Bill be stricken out and the following substituted therefor :—

4. When any cattle or other animals at large upon the highway or otherwise, get upon the property of the company and are killed or injured by a train, the owner of any such animal so killed or injured shall be entitled to recover the amount of such loss or injury against the company in any action in any court of competent jurisdiction, unless the company, in the opinion of the court or jury trying the case, establishes that such animal got at large through the negligence or wilful act or omission of the owner or his agent, or of the custodian of such animal or his agent; but the fact that such animal was not in charge of some competent person or persons shall not for the purposes of this subsection, deprive the owner of his right to recover.

The clause is word for word as it came from the House of Commons. While I do not hold the Senate should be bound by a decision of the House of Commons, still this is a question which has engaged the attention of that House for three or four years, and Bills have been introduced to that House, for the purpose of trying to protect settlers from the loss of cattle by accident on railways and the result is the House of Commons, I believe unanimously, adopted subsection 4 of clause 237. The motion before the House is to restore that section as it came to us originally. The objection taken to the clause as it stands is the fact that the company have to prove the negligence of the owner of the cattle. There is no doubt there is a great deal of loss to farmers, by having their cattle destroyed on account of the negligence of railways in not providing suitable cattle-guards, and not keeping their fences in proper condition. Up to the present time, the only cattle-guard which has been found effective in stopping cattle is the old pit. That guard was used by railway companies up to about fifteen years ago, when the government saw fit to make a change in the Act. As far back as 1857, it was provided that cattle were illegally at large if on the highway half a mile from a crossing, and if they were killed on the track the company was not responsible. Later an Act was passed declaring cattle were illegally at large if they were straying on lands which did not belong to the owner of the cattle. And that being done, it was almost impossible for the owner of cattle to recover from a railway company, or prove that cattle got on the track through the negligence of the railway company. Since that change was made, the railway companies have not been so particular about keeping cattle off the railway tracks. This clause was passed in the House of Commons after a great deal of consideration—passed unanimously by members who had paid particular attention to the matter, and had been advised by their constituents. I am satisfied from the unanimous feeling which prevails in the House of Commons, that the amendments suggested in the Senate will not be acceptable in the other House, that the clause as submitted to the Senate in the Bill coming from the House of Commons, will be reinstated in that House, if not here, and that being the case, I think we had better accept the clause as it came to this House originally in the Bill. It was a matter of discussion in the Railway Committee of the House of Commons, and a matter of discussion in this House, and the result of careful consideration on the part of the representatives in the House of Commons. It is said it is unfair to ask a railway company to prove that it was through the negligence of the owner of the cattle they got on the track. It is just as hard to say that the owner of the cattle shall prove that the railway company was not negligent. As a matter of fact, when the owner of cattle makes a claim against a railway company, and finds it necessary to sue the company for damage for his cattle killed on the railway track, he will have to produce evidence to show that the cattle were legally at large or legally crossing the track. If he cannot establish that, the Act provides that under certain conditions the railway company are not liable. The company are required to have cattle-guards and fences, and they ought to be required to prove that the owner of the cattle was negligent in allowing them to be on the track. If the argument were applied so far as the fires are concerned it should apply now, because it is much easier in one case to know how a fire starts from a locomotive than to prove negligence in the other. I should like to suggest for the consideration of the House a further clause added, to provide :

In all actions under this section, where a judgment shall be obtained the amount of which does not exceed $200, there shall be no appeal from a court of competent jurisdiction.

I have named $200 because I do not think the amount is excessive. If a railway corporation appeals, it can be easily understood no farmer can afford to follow an appeal for the value of a horse or cow. I think this will facilitate the settlement of a great many claims without going to court at all if the railway company knew that there would be no appeal from the first court of competent jurisdiction for any amount under $200. I offer this amendment along with the other because they may as well be discussed together.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Without taking up the time of the committee I desire to say, as I stated yesterday, in my mind the liability of the company is fixed by section 199 of this Bill, under which it is incumbent on the railway company to maintain and keep cattle-guards and fences sufficient to prevent cattle getting on their property. If they fail in that, they are responsible for any animal found killed on their tracks. It seems to me that is going as far as is necessary. Subclause 4 is in contradiction to subsection 3. Under subsections 1 and 3 it is provided that if an animal is allowed to go at large without being in charge of anybody, and within half a mile of a crossing, the party cannot recover. Then subsection 4 comes in and tends to make the company responsible in all cases unless they prove that the owner of the animal was guilty of negligence. I must confess it is going altogether too far. It is asking a railway company to prove an impossibility. How can they, as a railway company, know anything of what took place on the property of land owners residing perhaps a mile or two from the railway ? In virtue of what principle of justice could you make the company responsible and throw on them the onus of proving that the owner of the cattle has been guilty of negligence ? I have given notice of an amendment in substitution of subsection 4 and it seems to me it should meet with the approval of this House. My amendment reads as follows :

That subsection 4 of section 237 be stricken out and the following substituted therefor :—

4. Except as provided in the first and third subsections hereof, whenever an animal is killed or injured upon the property of the company, the fact that such animal got upon such property from land other than that of the owner of the animal, or that such animal was not then in charge of some competent person, shall not deprive such owner of the right to recover from the company the amount of the loss.

As far as liability is concerned, it is altogether fixed by clause 199 and all that we have to provide for is, as mentioned in subsection 4, that the fact that the animal got on the property of the company from land other than that of the owner of the animal, or that the animal was not then in charge of some competent person, shall not prevent the owner from recovering.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do I understand that amendment is to be substituted for subsection 4 ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Yes, as amended.

The committee divided on the amendment to the amendment, which was adopted : Contents 21 ; non-contents 18.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The amendment of which I gave notice becomes unnecessary now.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Before we leave that clause I should like to move to add subsection 5 of section 237, to read as follows :—

With all actions under this section where judgment shall be obtained in which the amount thereof does not exceed $200, there shall be no appeal from a court of competent jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would suggest that we have no authority to pass a clause of that kind. It is something entirely within the jurisdiction of the provincial courts. We are certainly attempting to take away from the provinces the right which they have of permitting an appeal in those matters.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We have been doing that the whole afternoon.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The point of the hon. gentleman from Calgary is well taken.

The motion was adopted on the following division : Contents, yeas, 27 ; non-contents, not taken.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would suggest to my hon. friend, who seems to be the champion of the farmer, that he should look into that matter because he is making lots of trouble under that legislation for any farmer who may seek to take advantage of it.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I have never known a farmer to appeal from the decision of the court, and I have always known the railway company to appeal.

On clause 199,

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED. I beg to move :

That subsection 2 of section 199 be amended by adding at the end thereof the following :—

The board may, from time to time, by order or regulation, determine standard descriptions and specifications for the construction of any such fences, gates or cattle-guards, and may declare that fences, gates or cattle-guards properly constructed in accordance with such order or regulation shall be deemed to be suitable and sufficient.

I pointed out yesterday the desirability of there being uniformity of this kind, so that as between the different provinces it cannot be held in one province that a cattle-guard is insufficient, and in another province that it is sufficient, and the same would apply to fences. It is also desirable that this power should be vested in the board so that the public may have the best crossings and fences that can be obtained.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I should like to say that we cannot posibly have any uniformity with regard to fences throughout the Dominion of Canada. The description of fence that would be accepted in one province would not be accepted in another.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then they can stipulate what it shall be in each province.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think that the fences and gates and cattle-guards are specified in clause 199, and it is stated what they should be. I was afraid that if we provided that the board should state what the fence should be and the companies erected such a fence and an accident happened, then the company would be relieved. I do not think we should complicate matters, or give any chance for lawyers to get in their fine work to interpret as between what section 199 sets forth and what it might be intended to mean by the amendment of the hon. gentleman from Calgary.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I should like to ask the Secretary of State what was the object of the government appointing a commission to inquire into the efficiency of cattle-guards with a view of the adoption of an efficient guard, if they are opposed to legislation of this kind being embodied in the Act. The principle of the appointment of such a commission was all wrong, and the investigation made by the commission was all wrong, and in fact the whole idea was wrong if it now is unwise to embody the principle in this Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The effect of the adoption of that clause would be this : that if an animal got on to the railway track owing to a defective cattle-guard that had been approved by the commission, the company would not be liable, and I do not think that is a reasonable proposition. I think that if an animal gets on the track because of a defective cattle-guard or a defective fence the company should be liable, and the adoption of this clause would have defeated that proposition which we have affirmed over and over again.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It simply resolves itself into this: it has to be determined between a jury and the board of commissioners which is to be the tribunal. A court or jury can pass upon the point. Surely the commission who are experts are much better qualified to say than a court or jury. You must elect between one or the other. If the commission does not say what is an efficient cattle-guard, then the court is going to say.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But supposing the cattle-guard is the best ever invented, if the cattle get over it the company is liable, and in the same way with the best fence constructed, if the cattle can get over or through, the fence the company is liable.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If the court finds the company has erected the best fence, or the best guard, then the company should not be liable.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I dare say that, but the principle of the Bill, and the principle of all the amendments, even the last amendment, admits the soundness of that. The only diffence, as I understand it, from this amendment just now in reference to an animal killed is that the proof is not thrown on the company when an animal gets on from the highway. In all other cases the company are liable, and as the Bill came from the House of Commons, the company are liable also for an animal getting on the track from the highway, although in the preceding clause it is declared that the person owing the animal is guilty of an offence because he let the cattle stray on to the crossing, but yet we have affirmed the principle that though the owner is at fault, if the cow is killed the railway company must pay for it.

The amendment was adopted.

On clause 211,

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I beg to move the following amendment after the word 'person' in the 17th line of subsection 4 of section 211:

Provided always that any agreement made by a company with its employees or any of them shall be valid if such agreement shall be adjudged by the court or judge before whom any question relating thereto is tried, to be just and reasonable.

When I made the motion the other day the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry made some suggestions. I then intimated to him that I was quite willing to accept any suggestion that he might make which would have the effect desired in the amendment which I have proposed. Subclause 4 reads as follows:

4. Every company which fails to comply with any of the provisions of this section, shall forfeit to His Majesty, a sum not exceeding two hundred dollars, for every day during which such default continues, and shall, as well, be liable to pay to all such persons as are injured by reason of the non-compliance with these provisions, or to their representatives, such damages as they are legally entitled to, notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary with regard to any such person; provided however, that no proceedings shall be instituted to enforce or recover any forfeiture to His Majesty hereunder without the consent of the board first obtained. Sub. for 51 V., c. 29, s. 243 Am.

My amendment is to insert after the words 'notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary,' the following: 'in regard to any such person.' Clause 10 of the Ontario statutes, in what is termed the Workmen's Compensation Act, reads as follows:

No contract or agreement made or entered into by a workman shall be a bar or constitute a defence to any action for the recovery under this Act of compensation for any injury;

1st. Unless such workman entering into or making such contract then was other consideration than that of his being taken into or continued in employment.

In case he should make an agreement of that kind, that could not be set up in defence of any action for damages because it would be considered unreasonable. Then the clause proceeds:

2nd. Unless such consideration was, in the opinion of the court or judge, ample and adequate.

3rd. Unless in the opinion of the court or judge such contract or agreement in regard to such consideration was not on the part of the workman improvident but was just and reasonable.

The intention of adding the proviso which I have moved is simply to place the railway companies in the same position as they would be under the Ontario Act. If an employee enters into an improvident contract with the railways, or one that is not reasonable, or one that might be exacted from him in order to secure employment on the railway, then that could not be set up as a defence, and very reasonably so too, and that is simply the object of the amendment that I have proposed. So that in case any difficulty should arise as to the character of the contract into which the workman and the employer entered, it should be left to the court to adjudge as to the reasonableness or unreasonableness of it. I might intimate to the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry that I am not wedded to this wording if he thinks something else could be substituted therefor which would have the same effect.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have given some consideration to that question, and it seems to me that there is something in the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman from Belleville, but I would suggest either to add after the words 'any other person,' the following :

Unless such agreement shall have been adjudged by the court or judge before whom such litigation is tried to be just and reasonable.

Or the following :

Unless such agreement shall have been first approved by order or regulation of the board.

I think it would be better to adopt the latter wording and leave it to the board, because otherwise it is opening the door to a great deal of litigation. It would be only on the occasion of the trial that the court would be called upon to declare whether the agreement was fair or not. If, on the other hand, it was left to be approved by the board, no litigation would take place.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have no objection to that.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I do not think that is practicable. I regret that the hon. member for Belleville has accepted the suggestion. In principle it may be all right, but I do not see that it can be applied. In that case all agreements made between employees and the government would have to come to the board and the board would have to express their opinion as to whether they are reasonable or not. I think it much better to leave that question to the judges. The judges or the jury will in all cases give sufficient justice to individuals and at the same time will provide that the railway companies shall not be molested. I think in practice that the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman is not at all practicable.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I would draw the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that what I want to cover by this wording is this : open the door or give power to the board to approve of a class of contracts such as the contract which has been referred to. Under the law governing in Ontario, and in England, it is permitted for the company to enter into certain contracts with their employees whereby the employees are protected to a considerable extent, and the company's liability is limited, and that I understand is the intention of the hon. gentleman from Belleville. I think it is better to leave it to the board to decide. If it is left to the court, the court will have to pass on each individual contract.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—So will the board.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—No. The board will approve of a form of contract which the company will be allowed to make with all its employees, and therefore it will avoid litigation and be settled once for all.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—On principle I think it is all right, but I cannot see that it will work. Supposing a particular arrangement is made between a company and an individual employee ; all this would have to be referred to the board, which in the case of a lawsuit would be impracticable. Of course, if the companies were to make uniform agreements with employees they would be all right, but certain railway companies may make a special arrangement with particular individuals which will not be according to the general tenor of what is suggested here, and in that case, if there was a lawsuit, that particular question would have to be referred to the board, which, in my view of it, would be impracticable.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would point out that I think the board should determine upon the question. That is the only practicable way ; otherwise you would have the different courts of the province pronouncing differently upon it.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman is losing sight of the wording of the amendment. The amendment requires that the contract be approved before it is made. It will cover a classification of contracts. The approval of the board must be obtained before the contract is made.

The amendment was adopted.

It being six o'cock, the Speaker left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole, consideration of Bill (21) 'An Act to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways.'

On clause 284,

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE moved that the clause be amended by adding the following words to the end of the clause :—

And provided further that the agreement referred to if made for a period of one year or less may at any time be cancelled by the board.

This would restore the clause and change it by adding these words. The difference is this : the first portion is the same except that the word 'regulations' has been left out.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Is that the only difference ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—There is this big difference, it is not controlled by the last part of the clause requiring the approval of the board. It is left entirely to the directors to enter into an agreement or arrangement with other companies. This is in no way controlled by the last portion of the clause.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Why does the hon. gentleman contend that the latter part of the paragraph does not qualify it ? Does he make this a separate paragraph ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Yes, that is the reason I made it a separate paragraph.

The motion was agreed to.

On clause 5,

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have no intention of moving any other amendment, but I desire to draw the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to an amendment which was adopted at his suggestion. I hope he will, before the third reading of the Bill, consider the matter. It is the addition, which he caused to be made yesterday to clause 5, of the following words :—

Also the provisions set forth in this Act relating to navigable waters, criminal matters, offences, penalties, police and matters of the general public safety.

When this addition was read yesterday I took it as being correct, providing the word 'accident' was left out of the motion, but on seeing it in print to-day I notice that these police matters and the general public safety should be reconsidered. I desire to call the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to this, that as far as police matters are concerned, there are, of course, police matters in connection with railways which are under the exclusive jurisdiction of the province, and it would not be proper to interfere with their jurisdiction as it would lead to a great deal of confusion. The same remark applies to the words 'safety of the general public.' As far as railways which are under the jurisdiction of this parliament are concerned, it is already provided for, but the effect of this clause would be to put anything connected with the running of a train on railways exclusively under the jurisdiction of the local parliament, under the control of the board. I am quite sure that that cannot be the intention, and I hope the hon. Secretary of State will look carefully into it.

Hon Mr. SCOTT—I had, myself, doubts on the subject. I introduced the clause at the suggestion of another party. With reference to public safety and police matters I had grave doubt as to whether it was not going too far. I have no objection to having these struck out. I therefore move that the words 'police matters and the general public safety' be struck out.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. FULFORD, from the committee, reported the Bill with amendments, which were concurred in.

NOTICES FOR PRIVATE BILLS.

The order of the Day being called :

Consideration of the report of the Select Committee to confer with a like committee with a view of respectively revising Rule 49 of the Senate and Rule 51 of the House of Commons, and make them harmonize.

Hon. Sir ALPHONSE PELLETIER—The select committee of this House appointed to confer with a like committee of the House of Commons with a view of revising rule 49 of this House and rule 51 of the House of Commons, to make them harmonious as to notice to be given for private Bills, have made their report as printed in the Minutes of this House at pages 673 and 674. The committee in the House of Commons have given notice of another amendment to this report, and I have myself given the notice which appears in the Minutes to-day. I move to add the following as subsection 5 to clause 'A':—

> And if the works of any company (incorporated, or to be incorporated) are to be declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, such intention shall be specifically mentioned in the notice; and the applicants shall cause a copy of such notice to be sent by registered letter to the clerk of each municipality which may be specially affected by the construction or operation of such works, and also to the secretary of the province in which such works are, or may be located; and proof of compliance with this requirement by the applicants shall be established by statutory declaration.

If this House is ready to accept the amendment, I move that it be adopted.

Hon. Mr. McKAY (Truro)—Has the House of Commons adopted the same amendment?

Hon. Sir ALPHONE PELLETIER—The House of Commons were to adopt it to-day, but they want us to adopt it first.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Sir ALPHONSE PELLETIER moved that the report as amended be now adopted.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I would call attention to the fact that there should be a suspension of rule 16 before we can carry this motion.

The SPEAKER—This is really making a new standing order, and comes under rule 16, which provides:—

> No motion for making any order of the Senate a standing order can be adopted, unless the senators in attendance on the session shall have been previously summoned to consider the same.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—How does the matter stand now?.

Hon. Sir ALPHONSE PELLETIER moved, in accordance with rule 16 of the Senate, that the report be submitted to a meeting of the House on Tuesday next at three o'clock.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We have already adopted the report.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Are we to understand that the adoption of the report of the committee makes a change or an alteration in the rule? If the adoption of the report has that effect, then it can only be ratified and made legal by the course suggested in the hon. gentleman's motion.

Hon. Sir ALPHONSE PELLETIER—Perhaps it would have been better to have made this last motion before moving concurrence in the report of the report of the committee. I see now that the course I took was wrong. I would ask the House to rescind the order made, and that this report stand for Tuesday.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the hon. gentleman is quite correct. The House may make an order, as they did last year, compelling a member to read his notices of motions before handing them to the Clerk. That order is only good for the session, but if we want to make an order like the one passed to-day, a standing order, we must comply with rule 16. I think the hon. gentleman has taken the regular course.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I understand the position to be this: the motion which has been adopted adopts the report of the committee. What is the report of the committee? It is that the following be substituted for such and such rules—49 and 50 of the Senate and 51 of the House of Commons. This report has been adopted. Now, to make it a rule, it is necessary that the members of the Senate be summoned, and the motion which is now before the Chair is that the members be summoned for Tuesday to consider the making of this report a standing rule of this House.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—The procedure is defined very distinctly in rule 17.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The first motion was unnecessary.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand the motion of the hon. gentleman was to adopt the report. That was declared carried. If that is right it is the law. The hon. gentleman's motion should have been for the adoption of the report at a future day, when the senators should be summoned, when it could be adopted and become law, but we have made it law by adopting the report to-day. We are asked now to summon the members to do what?

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—We have not made it law. We can only make it law by compliance with the rule of the House, which provides how it shall be made law. The only way to make it a standing order is to give notice that the members be summoned to make it a standing order at a certain date.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—The first motion disposed of the Order of the Day, and there is nothing before the House. I do not see how the hon. gentleman can make a new motion now. The best way would be to rescind the motion and the hon. gentleman might give notice for Tuesday.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I differ from my hon. friend. I think the motion made by the hon. gentleman is quite correct. By the adoption of the report we have made this an order, but we have not made it a standing order.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—That is right.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Now, if you want to make it a standing order you must proceed according to rule 16.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I cannot see how we can skip this motion and have it not an ordinary order. The moment it is adopted, as it has been, it is made a standing order. If we wish to act according to the rules of this House, I humbly suggest that the whole proceeding be nullified. I submit that all that has been done should be undone, because, as it is now, that motion, which is essentially one of the standing orders, is adopted and I do not see what we can do further with it.

Hon. Sir ADOLPHE PELLETIER—With the permission of the House, I move that the order for concurrence in the report be rescinded and that the Senate be summoned at 3 o'clock on Tuesday to make the report a standing order of the House.

The motion was declared carried.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—That is not in order.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That was not the full motion. The motion of my hon. friend was that the motion which had been made for the adoption of the report be rescinded and that the Senate be summoned for Tuesday to adopt the report.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the motion.

The SPEAKER—Will the hon. gentleman be kind enough to put his motion in writing?

Hon. Sir ALPHONSE PELLETIER—I asked the permission of the House to rescind that order and the Speaker declared it carried. Then I made a new motion to have the Senate summoned for Tuesday.

The SPEAKER—I did not catch what the hon. gentleman said. I thought he spoke of having the original motion put and I declared it carried. Now he moves that it be rescinded.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—It is not necessary to rescind that motion. If my judgment is correct, the mere acceptance of the report affirms the principle but does not make it a rule. We adopt the principle and then I think the procedure is laid down as to how we should make it a rule.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—What have the committee reported? They have reported that they have conferred with the committee of the other House and both committees recommend that certain rules be reported. Very well, the House must adopt that before doing anything else.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is not all.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—The main proposition is that rules 49, 50 and 51 of the House of Commons and rules 49 and 50 of the Senate be rescinded. We agreed to do that and we then have to amend our standing orders in accordance with rule 17, and the original motion passed, I think, was the proper motion, and the right time to make the other motion will be on Tuesday.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is that the only portion of the report? Does it not substitute other portions?

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We have not only adopted the portion of the report which rescinded the rules, but that portion which substituted other rules.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—We have agreed that these rules be rescinded and others substituted, but we have not substituted the others yet.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—We have agreed to the principle of that report. That principle recommends that the House of Commons shall make an alteration as well as the Senate, but we cannot alter the rules of the House of Commons and consequently the order is not in the nature of passing a rule, but simply suggesting it to us as a rule which should be adopted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Speaker wishes the motion put in writing, a rule, which I hope, he will enforce in future.

Hon. Sir ALPHONSE PELLETIER—I would be disposed to withdraw the whole thing rather than put it in writing, if I cannot make myself understood.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—The only way in which we can deal with this question is to summon the senators for Tuesday under rule 16, and then we will consider the original motion and the amendment thereto, and will adopt the whole thing and ipso facto by its adoption it will be adopted. After it is adopted we will refer it to that committee and take it all over again. The motion by itself is essentially one of a standing order.

Hon MEMBERS—Question.

The SPEAKER—I do not know where we are at.

Hon. Sir ALPHONSE PELLETIER—If my motion to call the Senate for Tuesday to make the standing order cannot be understood, I cannot make any further motions.

The SPEAKER—Then I propose to put the motion as I understood it to be moved by the hon. gentleman. I was told by an hon. senator that that was not the motion, and in self-defence I have to ask the hon. gentleman to put it in writing.

Hon. Mr. McKAY (Truro)—I do not see that the House has made a mistake so far. I think we were perfectly justified in adopting that rule. We appointed a committee to confer with a committee of the other House and the chairman of that committee has reported to that House. It is on the records. There is a motion on record that on a certain day they will move the adoption of the report. That has been done now. I think the House is quite right in making a motion that it be taken into consideration on a certain day.

Hon. Sir ALPHONSE PELLETIER—I have made that motion twice already.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If the motion cannot be put, I would advise that we proceed with the next order. The hon. gentleman has made his motion three times and it has not yet been put.

The SPEAKER—There is a rule that requires that motions shall be reduced to writing, and inasmuch as there is a difference of opinion as to what the motion was, in self-defence I have to request that the motion be put in writing.

Hon. Sir ALPHONSE PELLETIER—I move, seconded by the Hon. Mr. Béique, that the motion to adopt the report be rescinded. I do not believe it is necessary, but I make the motion.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I object to that. Our rules say :

No motion to suspend or amend any rule, or any part thereof, shall be an order except on one day's notice.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—Read on and you will find that with general consent that may be dispensed with.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not consent. I think we are pursuing a bad course. The motion that was passed adopting the report of the committee is in order, and I do not see why, if we are in order, we should make a motion to rescind what we have done. It is in order, and the next step is to make a motion for the attendance of the House on a certain day.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I think the hon. Speaker could settle the matter in one minute by giving us his opinion of what the rules are. My own opinion is that the adoption of the report was all correct and proper, and that it does not need to be rescinded, but that report was simply the recommendation of the committee that the rules should be changed. I think the adoption of the report was all right, and the motion to summon the House on Tuesday to adopt the new rule is also correct.

The SPEAKER—I quite agree with the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat. He has stated my views exactly.

Hon. Sir ADOLPHE PELLETIER—Once more I will make the motion. I move, seconded by the Hon. Mr. Béique, that the members of the Senate be summoned for Tuesday next at three o'clock in the afternoon, to consider the report of the select committee, and to make the contents thereof a standing order of this House.

The motion was agreed to.

MANITOBA GRAIN ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (232) 'An Act to amend the Manitoba Grain Act, 1900.'

(In the committee.)

On clause 5,

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I move that the following be substituted for subclause 4 of clause 58 of the Bill :—

4. Each applicant, or an agent of the applicant duly appointed in writing (such agent to be a resident in the vicinity of the shipping point), on being informed by the railway agent of the allotment to him of a car, shall at once declare his intention and ability to load the said car within the next ensuing twenty-four hours.

In the event of such applicant being unable to so declare his intention and ability to load the car allotted to him, the railway agent shall thereupon cancel the order by writing the word 'cancelled' in the remarks column of the car order book, and shall award the car to the next applicant entitled to it.

If the applicant, after declaring his intention to load the car, fails to commence loading such car within the twenty-four hours aforesaid, the agent shall thereupon cancel the order in like manner as aforesaid, and award the car to the next applicant entitled to it, and the applicant who so fails to load such car shall pay car rental at the rate of twenty-five cents (25c.) per hour for each hour that the car is held for him by the railway agent.

If the applicant, having commenced the loading of a car, is unable to complete the same within twenty-four hours as aforesaid, he shall pay car rental at the rate of twenty-five cents (25c.) per hour for each hour over the twenty-four hours aforesaid that the car is held for him to complete the loading. The railway company may decline to furnish further cars to such applicant until the car rental hereinbefore referred to is paid to the railway agent.

This amendment is simply for the purpose of making the meaning and intention of the measure more clear. I might explain that the Grain Growers' Association of Manitoba, and also the Grain Growers' Association of the North-west Territories at the beginning of the session made an application here, and made those several recommendations which we find in this proposed legislation. They were very clear on one point, and it was this : that any applicant ordering a car and not loading it, but detaining the car unnecessarily should be punished, inasmuch as the cars are at a premium, you may call it, and for delay of a car, which would be a loss to other farmers who could have loaded their stuff promptly, they propose a penalty of 25 cents an hour for every hour the car was unnecessarily detained. The wording of this subclause as printed does not appear to quite bear out their proposition, and I think the amendment I have proposed will answer the requirements. Just so soon as a man knows that he has a car at his disposal on the siding he has to state whether he will load it or not. If he says no, there is no penalty, but if he says 'yes, I will load it,' and does not load it, or if he declines to say whether he will load it or not until twenty-four hours are up, then the penalty ensues from the time that he has had fair notice to declare his intention.

The amendment was adopted.

On clause 62,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is only where grain is bought on credit. The whole object of the clause is to see that proper security is given.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I have seen letters from people who have track-buyers out in the west, men who buy three or four carloads of wheat, and the interpretation the commissioner is inclined to put on that particular clause is that every man who bought a car of wheat not for a commission man in Winnipeg would have to give bonds. The clause does not bear that construction and the commissioner would be justified in accepting the bonds of the person.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—So long as he has the security in any person, I think it would be sufficient. If the commissioner has ample security from A for B, C and D, that is sufficient.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—In recent years a new set of men dealing in grain have cropped up, largely the result of the congestion of traffic and the cars being at a premium, who buy grain by car-loads and pay to the owner of the grain a certain amount down, the balance to be paid when the car is inspected and weighed. Consequently, for a certain length of time on each car-load there is an unpaid amount, varying according to whatever margin is left between the seller and the buyer. Under our Act of 1900 the elevator men, the mills, &c., had to put up security to ensure the proper payment of these moneys when they became due, and the track-buyer, who very frequently might not be one who would be responsible—it might so happen—has no security to put up at all; therefore it is to make the law uniform that every one who buys grain on time and does not pay cash for it shall furnish a certain amount of security to the farmer who sells the grain. He may not know the buyer at all, and it is to protect the farmer and to see, as far as bonds will go, that he is secured for the balance of his car-load.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think there need be any apprehension. The principal will get the proper bonds to cover all the agents.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—He will have to carry the bonds according to the conditions. If a man starts out with one or two buying, and ends up with a dozen men buying it is only reasonable that he should increase the bonds, because there is a greater risk.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—There is no complaint against the track-buyers or commission men giving ample security, but the commission man in Winnipeg objects to have the track-buyers throughout the country each one giving a separate bond. He is willing to give ample security, but he was afraid the commissioner was inclined to put the construction on the clause that each individual who bought would have to give bonds. That is not the intention at all.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The clause says it shall be unlawful to act in that way, but there does not seem to be any penalty.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—In the Act of 1900, section 57, we find provision for a penalty, and it should be in this one, to be uniform.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—In respect to the cars being made fit to receive the grain before they are assigned the buyers, I have a motion to make. I have had some little experience in this matter. A few years ago a car was assigned to me to load, and I did not give it that careful attention that perhaps I should have given it, but when I got it half loaded I discovered it was badly damaged at one end, and I had to go to great expense and inconvenience to get the wheat out of that car and into another car.

Now I have prepared a motion to this effect:

All cars, before being assigned to the shipper for loading, shall be inspected by some officer appointed by the railway company as to their fitness to receive grain, and if found faulty, to be made secure and safe by the railway company before they are offered for loading.

That is common sense and fair. A farmer sends a man to load his car. He may have his wheat in sheds in the town, and he hires a man to take it out at a cent a bushel, and that man might not be careful enough in getting the wheat loaded—the car might be leaky. Last winter I know a large quantity leaked out of cars on the track. The amendment I have should go in clause 58.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—All those cars now, under the Act of 1900, are subject to inspection, and are, I presume, inspected.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—No, they are not inspected.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Clause 10 of the Act of 1900 makes provision for the inspection.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—That would be at some terminal point.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have amended that section in clause 5, by adding the words 'and stating if the car is leaking or in bad order.' Before a car is sent out it must be inspected, and there must be a report as to whether it is leaking or in bad order.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Sometimes a car will bring lumber or merchandise in large quantities to the different stations and unload it, and before the merchandise is all taken out of it, I have seen them attempt to load the car with wheat. That would not apply to this case. My motion is simple and to the point. The railway company could get a man to repair the car.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There would have to be a man at each point.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—The agent could do it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The difficulty is to get a person to do it at a particular point—at a farmers' platform, for instance, where there is no possibility of having it done.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Yes, there is a possibility in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred. There are the roadmasters, for instance, and the agents.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—There can be no question that a great many cars are sent out to various shipping points in bad order through carrying, maybe, heavy freight. The bottoms become smashed up and the result is either a great loss in shipping, or a great deal of carpentering at shipping points. This trouble increases more especially during the time of congestion, or car shortage, and frequently cars are sent out in a condition calling for a great deal of repairing. My hon. friend makes a suggestion to cure that, but I do not know whether it can be worked out or not. At many points, under that amendment, the railway company would require a car inspector.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—A car is sometimes in bad order when it is unloaded at a shipping point in the interior. If it has been loaded with heavy castings, or other heavy goods, the inside may be smashed and that car would be unloaded probably at some interior point, and the inspector would have to inspect it there and the repairing would have to be done there. A cure might be effected in another way—if the farmer or shipper, whoever he may be, were allowed the cost of repairing the car.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—They are allowed that now.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Then, if my hon. friend has been allowed it he has been one of those very rare privileged persons. I have been interested in the loading of a great many cars, many of which have had to be repaired and I never got a cent yet from the railway companies for any of the cars I have had to repair. Some of them were extensive repairs, but rather than do without cars, I have had them repaired myself. It is a grievance, but I am not clear that my hon. friend's amendment will work out satisfactorily, much as I would like to see all cars sent to shipping point in good order for carrying grain. I think my hon. friend had better let it stand over and see if it can be improved.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I presume every station agent can report whether a car is in good order or not.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It might be well to at least provide that the shipper who orders a car would not be required to receive a car which is in bad condition or leaking. As I understand, at the present time the shipper has to register for a car and must take his turn, and if the farmer is notified to receive a car at a certain date and he finds it in a bad condition and refuses to accept it, he loses his turn. It seems to me he should not lose his place under the circumstances. The clause read by the hon. Secretary of State is there for the purpose of requiring inspection and report, because if a car is leaky and in bad repair and has lost weight in transit, the company are responsible. The shipper will really not be the loser. The company is supposed to furnish cars in good condition to carry grain. The hon. gentleman from Killarney suggests that subsection 4 of section 58 be amended after the word 'car' in the fourth line by inserting the words 'in good order and condition.' The company are not supposed to give cars which are not in good condition, and that will protect the farmer who registers for a car in the order-book.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—All I want is to provide that the cars shall be in good order. Last year the cars came frequently to Wolseley loaded with lumber. You apply for a car and you are told, 'the moment we unload this car you can have it.' It may be a leaky car. I want to have it so that you can get a car that will carry grain. The hon. gentleman is wrong in saying the loss will be made good to the farmer. The shipper does not know the weight of the car and cannot tell how much may be lost. The car-load is not weighed when the car is loaded. The wheat is only weighed when it is taken out, and these cars may receive some injury and the buyer, if he is not sharp and does not examine it carefully, might put his grain in a leaky car. The company should be required to see that the cars are fit to receive grain, and should be held responsible for leakage. I have no business to tinker with the railway company's cars. Let the company do it themselves, and they will do it in a proper way.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The Secretary of State has pointed out that an endeavour is made in this Bill to check the cars as they arrive at Fort William, by an independent officer, the weighmaster, who, in addition to the duty of weighing, will know the condition of each car and see that it is put in proper condition. He will know whether it has leaked on the way, so that the shipper will know where his grain has gone.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—But you may have examined the car before you ship your grain. I have always made a close examination of every car I have had anything to do with. If it has been out of order, I have said to the agent: 'This car is not fit; there are several holes in the bottom of it,' and I have sent to the lumber yard myself for lumber and fixed up the car and the company have paid me for it. I presume they will do that for anybody. However, it is a great inconvenience to a shipper, and if a man is not careful he will not do it. If the railway company will examine their cars, through their agents and foremen, they can see whether they are in proper condition. They have no right to give us a leaky car. A car may be injured on the way and they would know nothing about it. In that case you take the car and are prepared to pay a dollar or two to repair it, but the company should be compelled to do that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The loss of grain by being placed in cars that were in bad condition has evidently been the reason for making the amendment I have referred to, that is, it is the duty of the weighmaster, when weighing the car before sending it out, to see that it is in proper order. It is suggested this amendment would meet the hon. gentleman's wishes. In the amendment moved by the hon. gentleman from Killarney a clause has been introduced that an applicant will not be obliged to accept a car unless it is in good order and condition, and it does not count against him. If he orders a car it is placed at his disposal, and if he finds it is not in good order and condition it does not debar him from demanding a good car.

This amendment, I think, will meet the case exactly. If a car is placed at the disposal of the applicant, and it is not in good order he is not obliged to accept it.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—He is to decide it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think that will meet the case.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Anyone, of course, can refuse a car if it is not in good order, but what the hon. gentleman from Wolseley wants is to have a car and have it in repair too. At a time when there is a scarcity of cars, if the shipper refuses to accept one in bad condition, another shipper might take it, and he would be without a car.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This does not deprive him of his right to a car. He makes the entry in the book, and he is entitled to a car in his order.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Would he not forfeit his turn?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, he is entitled to get a good car then and there. He does not lose his turn.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The amendment will encourage the agents to put cars in good condition. I think the company will instruct their agents to keep the cars in good condition.

The amendment was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. TESSIER, from the committee, reported the Bill with amendments, which were concurred in.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

SECOND READING.

Bill (Z) An Act respecting the Ottawa Valley Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Domville.

PENNY BANKS BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (198) 'An Act respecting Penny Banks.' He said: I explained very fully at the first reading, the object of this Bill. The measure has been very carefully prepared by the Finance Department to protect depositors. The money is not intended to remain in the bank, but will be transferred from time to time to the government savings banks, the bank retaining only five per cent of the deposits to meet cheques.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

BOUNTIES ON STEEL AND IRON BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (238) 'An Act to amend chapter 8 of the statutes of 1899 respecting the bounties on steel and iron, and to provide for the payment of bounties on certain articles manufactured from steel. He said: This Bill is amending chapter 8 of the statutes of 1899, which authorizes the payment of bounties. Under this Bill the Governor in Council, may authorize the payment of bounties on the following articles manufactured in Canada from steel produced in Canada, from ingredients of which not less than fifty per cent of the weight consists of pig iron made in Canada. On rolled round wire rods, when sold to wire manufacturers, for use in making wire in Canada, a bounty of $6 a ton. On rolled angles, tees, channels, beams, joists, girders, or bridge building or structural rolled sections, and on other rolled shapes not round, oval, square or flat, and also on flat eye-bar blanks when sold for consumption in Canada, a bounty of $3 per ton. On rolled plates, not less than 30 inches in width, and not less than one-quarter of an inch in thickness, when sold for consumption in Canada for manufacturing purposes, a bounty of $3 per ton. The bounties are to be continued until 1907. I do not know that it is necessary for me to make any further remarks, though some reference was made to the necessity of explaining why we give bounties. The first Act passed on the subject was in 1883. The bounties were given then for pig-iron produced from Canadian ore, and these have been considerably enlarged and extended with the object and purpose of securing particular industries in Canada. The fact was accomplished. Whether these bounties will be a success or not, I cannot say. I think myself they will be. We are not responsible for mistakes made sometimes in the formation of companies, and establishing concerns on, perhaps, too extravagant a basis, and I will not say putting too much water into them, but inducing the investment of more capital perhaps than was absolutely necessary. The principle of bounties has been one that Canada has for a long time been a party to, perhaps not always directly under that name. Our subsidies to railways are nothing less than bounties; our subsidies to graving docks are bounties. We are contributing to a number of enterprises which are of very great value when developed, and which, without government assistance, would not be started. I think the proposition is a wise and good one. Both political parties are committed to it—at all events to the extent we see it in the statutes. It is likely to be beneficial, or parliament would never have affirmed and approved of the policy.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I hope that my hon. friend from St. John (Hon. Mr. Ellis) is fully satisfied with the lucid explanation that has been given of the policy of the government on this question. It is so clear that any one with ordinary comprehension can understand it. There is one expression which he used, we can understand, and that is the declaration that the principle of bounties 'is a good and a wise one.' It is still further evidence of the marvellous change in opinion that has taken place in the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite, within the last few years. If we refer to the Debates and the utterances of the party leaders on the stump and in parliament, it will be seen what a marvellous change has taken place. If the hon. gentleman belonged to the religious denomination, with which my hon. friend opposite (Hon. Mr. Templeman) and myself are connected, who believe in the doctrine of sudden conversion, my hon friend would be a good representative of the same principle in his political faith that his hon. friend does in his religious faith. The hon. Secretary of State has not given an explanation of the effect of this Bill such as it deserved. He refers particularly to the bounties which were granted by the late government which inaugurated this principle, so far as the production of iron from the raw material was concerned in Canada. The bounties, as he terms them—bonuses, I think is a better word—as applied to graving docks, and the construction of railways, should not be, and cannot be considered analogous to the bounties provided for in this Bill. If the bounties which are to be granted were for the production of a manufactured article from the raw material, as we understand raw material, then it would be a full adoption of the principle inaugurated by the late government. I know there is great room for argument as to what constitutes raw material. Raw material to one man is the manufactured article of another man, and consequently, if the economic principle of protection be adopted, so far as it applies to our manufacturing industries, you will have to begin at the bottom. If you require a scientific tariff you must apply the principle to iron, beginning with the ore as you take it from the earth, and so raising it in proportion to the more refined article. If my hon. friend said that the tariff now on the statute-books had virtually closed the industries which produced the articles mentioned in the clauses to which he called the attention of the Senate, he would have correctly stated the reason why the bounties are extended to those different articles. The duties on railroad iron, on wire rods and structural iron generally, have been made so low that it is impossible to produce them in this country without the imposition of a higher duty or the granting of this temporary aid by way of bonuses.

Now, those who have watched the operations of the tariff know that the duty on beams and joists and girders and bridge building materials, under the old protective tariff, was some 12½ per cent, and for this reason : that they were not produced in this country at the time that Tariff Act was placed upon the statutes. That was the reason why the duty at that time was made so light. Afterwards the duty was raised and they began the manufacture of these articles. When the present government came into power and introduced what they called a revenue tariff, in some respects they so lowered the duty as to render the manufacture of such articles in this country impossible under the circumstances by which these industries were surrounded. The difficulties of obtaining raw material, freight and other causes which it is not necessary for me to enumerate, render their manufacture unprofitable and some of these industries have been closed, and others are about to be closed. Take the article of barbed wire ; it has been totally closed. If I had time I could point out other cases, but I do not think it is necessary. Hon. gentlemen who have studied the tariff know that it is so worded and so arranged as to make it more profitable for the seller to purchase the article abroad than to manufacture it in this country, for this reason : that the raw material from which the wire is drawn pays a higher duty than is imposed upon the wire itself. Hence we find now this expedient of introducing a bounty system in order to enable them to pay the duty upon what to them was the raw material in order to enable them to carry on their industries. As every political student knows, it is a very intricate question, and one which would occupy the attention of any speaker for hours if he attempted to elaborate all the different points that suggest themselves. While I stated the other day that I was not opposed to bounties under certain conditions and on certain principles, the system of granting aid in the way the present government is doing it, instead of by a direct protective tariff, can only be temporary in its character. It may enable the manufacturer to continue his industry by subsidizing him out of the public revenue to which every man who consumes an imported article contributes his mite, instead of adopting a good round protection, you will have temporary aid given to these industries, and the moment the bounties cease, the manufacturers will have to face the same difficulties that prevail at the present moment ; whereas, if you adopted the other principle, of a good round protection, you would secure the whole market of the Dominion to the Canadian manufacturers, and so long as that duty was maintained just so long the industries would be carried on. They would become more firmly established in the country, that you might adopt the principle that was suggested by the late Sir John Thompson when discussing this question, 'to lop off the mouldering branches,' as he termed them, or reduce the duty upon articles when the manufacturers had become sufficiently wealthy and sufficiently established to enable them to carry on their industries. Had there been a good round duty upon the products of the Sault Ste. Marie works, they would not have been closed to-day. I am confident of that; and had the government, instead of offering them $7 a ton and a certain bounty for the protection of steel rails, given them a good round duty as that placed upon articles imported into the United States, these works would have been flourishing to-day and producing hundreds of thousands of tons of iron. The moment this country proposed to put $7 a ton upon steel rails, the United States manufacturers reduced the price of steel rails to the extent and more than the extent of the duty. I may be met with this argument: that while it is true that they reduced the price per ton on those articles which have been, and would have been, under a protective duty, manufactured at Sault Ste. Marie, that duty would have to be paid upon the price at which the articles were sold in the United States. That we all know is the law, but it requires constant vigilance in order to protect the revenue from what may be termed frauds in that respect. I am not prepared to say that the present Minister of Customs does not take every means possible for the protection of the revenue, but I merely point out this to show what the effect is. You might grant bounties till doomsday and it would not affect the importation from the foreign countries to the extent of one dollar, for the simple reason that they can get into the market of Canada without paying any extra duty. But if a duty equivalent to the bounty were placed upon these articles, then the market would be secured to the Canadian manufacturer, and what is equally important, the party who used the article which is imported upon which the duty is paid would have to pay the duty. He would be the sufferer, if sufferer there would be, under the circumstances, and not those that have, under the present system, to contribute towards the payment of the bounty. I am very much afraid in discussing this question, which is so prolific in its character, that I may weary the House. I merely rose to show first, in my opinion, the fallacy of adopting his principle of bounties to the extent to which government are carrying it, and secondly, to point out from my experience in the administration of the Customs Act, and watching the effect of a revenue tariff and a protective tariff, that granting bounties is not a proper policy to pursue in order to accomplish the object which my hon. friend says the government have in the encouragement of those industries. It gives temporary aid to the manufacturers, to that extent I approve of the principle, but it would be much better if the government did not try to make the people believe that they are carrying out the pledges which they made when in opposition, of adopting either a revenue or a free trade tariff, by presenting to parliament bills of this character which to the extent to which the bounty goes, gives protection to certain industries. It is nothing more or less than an attempt to convince the public that they are all still free traders, and at the same time to try to convince the protectionists that they are doing what they profess to abhor and spoke so long against and denounced in such vigorous terms. I am surprised that the ghost of the former self of the hon. Secretary of State does not haunt him every night when he considers for a moment that he has introduced in laudatory remarks a Bill of this character, particularly when we consider his utterances in days gone by, and I can only account for it, as explained in a very popular hymn, that:

> While the lamp holds out to burn
> The vilest sinner may return.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière)—I quite agree with the hon. leader of the opposition that this system of bonuses is simply temporary. In order to establish industries I think it is the proper course for the government to pursue. If we were to adopt the policy now advocated by the hon. leader of the opposition and to impose immediately duties on articles not manufactured in this country, it would amount to taxing the people and giving no protection, simply increasing the cost to the consumer.

It would take some years before the finished product could be manufactured and sold in the market. Then would be the time, if thought necessary by the government of the day, to drop the bonuses, but for the present I believe it is only right to grant bonuses to encourage the establishment of industries. What would be the good, for instance, now, of putting duties on articles that are not manufactured at all in Canada? As I pointed out, these articles are not manufactured in Canada, and supposing a duty was put upon them, the people would be called upon to pay duty on those articles. But when those industries are established in the country, if they cannot get along without adequate protection, then will be the time for the government to consider helping them. I do not want to discuss the matter of the Sault Ste. Marie industry at present, but every one knows that the works were carried on at the Sault at an immense expenditure, and if those interested in the iron and steel industry would look at what took place in the United States they would see that many of these industries, under a duty 30 per cent higher than the duties in this country, went to the wall, and only a few of them with the strictest economy have been able to survive.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—What does the hon gentleman mean by that?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I am speaking of the steel industries in the United States. They put a duty of $28 a ton on rails and they sold as high as $85 a ton, and when the price came down to $56 a ton; yet these very high duties did not save all the industries. I would refer the hon. leader of the opposition to a most interesting book which has just been published, the history of the United States Steel Corporation, where this matter is treated at length. This huge corporation got control of all these various manufactures during a period of some 40 years, and when the manufacturers were on the verge of bankruptcy, notwithstanding the very great amount of protection they were receiving at the hands of the United States government acquired many of them. I believe the bonus system of this government is the right policy. These bonuses are on a sliding scale diminishing every year, and after these bonuses have run out it will be for the government of the day to put on duties if necessary in order to continue the industry.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—I should like to ask the hon. leader of the opposition one question; was it because the duty was not high enough that the Clergue Company failed to fulful the contract for 25,000 tons of steel rails some years ago?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—All I have to say, in reply, is that the manager and controller of that industry told me that had they had a good protective duty they would have been able to carry that out—I won't say two years ago, because the plant was not then in a position to produce it.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—They undertook to manufacture 25,000 tons of rails within a certain time? Why did they not fulfil their undertaking?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have told the hon. gentleman distinctly why they did not fulfil it. The mills were not in a position at that time to produce it, hence they were unable to produce the 25,000 tons of rails to which he refers. But they went on as rapidly as possible to complete the rolling mills and steel plant, and if there had been sufficient duty on steel rails while they might not have been able to produce as much as they believed they would in the time required, they would have been justified in making a greater effort. I would advise my hon. friend to go up and see the extent of those works.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—I have been there.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If they had a sufficient duty on the articles which they were to produce, I believe that they would have been running to-day instead of having to shut down with 3,500 men thrown out of employment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It ought to be remembered that the government announced that the moment any concern was ready to turn out steel rails a duty of $7 a ton would be put upon rails.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, and when that announcement was made, the United States manufacturers reduced the price to the consumer in Canada to that extent and consequently left the market in the same position.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—If I did not get as much information as I desire from the hon. Secretary of State, I got poor consolation from my hon. friend opposite, who advises me to jump from the frying pan into the fire. My position is this: In 1898 I had the honour of a seat in another place when this question was up. I expressed my views upon it, and I expressed my fear of what has now come, that the system of bounties would be enlarged. I declared myself against such a policy. The system would be enlarged and the time extended. My hon friend —the Senator from de Lotbinière—holds out a hope in the few observations he makes that there will be a time when these bounties will be removed. I am afraid I am too old to live to see that time, and I am afraid he is too old to live to see it, because I observe the system does not decrease. It grows, and I raised the question the other day upon the proposition of a bounty to the cable service for newspapers. This year we have already passed one bounty bill, I think it was on binder twine. We have now three before us, the present one for bounty on lead; the one we have just read giving a bounty on iron and steel, and the one which gives a bounty to newspapers in the collection of news; and so we can extend the system indefinitely. It may be that the system of bonuses is not as troublesome as the system of protection, but both are the same in a sense, and I feel sometimes, when I see the growth of the disposition to embrace heresies which I believe are compatible with sound principles of political economy, that it is the duty of those Liberals who believe in free trade, who believe that the principle of free trade is a sound one, who believe that the best interests of the country are promoted by the adoption of the free trade principle as far as it is possible to adopt it in a country which requires a revenue, to at any rate, protest as far as protest may go against the extension of the principle now before us as presented in this Bill. I regret to observe that there is a heavy tax already on the revenues of the country to pay bounties. I have not the figures before me, but if I remember rightly this year we will pay a million and a quarter, something over a million in the effort to bonus this iron industry. It seems to me there might be something gained if the duty on coal were taken off. I know that coal is largely used in the production of iron, but there is a heavy duty on coal. Instead of bonusing iron I would take the duty off coal in part or altogether. I am in a part of the country where we have to pay a duty on coal, and instead of doing what is being done now, increasing the number of articles on which a bonus is to be paid and extending the time during which the payment is to be carried over, I would take the duty off coal. I regret exceedingly that this system of paying bonuses has been adopted by the hon. minister and his colleagues, and I regret that the promises made to myself in 1898 and to the hon. gentleman from Rockland (Hon. Mr. Edwards), who is not present—were not fulfilled. Therefore, I raise my voice against the insidious way in which the protection theory is being pushed.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—This question has been raised so often, and it has been urged that the government is responsible for the condition in which the Sault industry is found to be, and also for the position in which the Dominion Iron and Steel Company is placed, that I suspect that several persons who have expressed that opinion have done so for political effect. I exclude the hon. leader of the opposition.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the hon. gentleman allow me one moment to disent from that imputation as far as I am concrned. Ever since I was a boy reading the tracts of Horace Greeley on this question I have been an ardent protectionist, and the older I grow the stronger I am in the conviction that it is right as applied to this country. So that it is not for political reasons. I advocated it before my own party took the matter up, and have advocated it ever since, and had the hon. gentlemen now in power introduced a Bill of this kind they would have had my hearty support.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I purposely disassociated the name of the hon. leader of the opposition from the accusation, if I may use the expression. I am myself a protectionist and have always been a protectionist. I have been for a great number of years considerably interested in a large number of industries in the country, and I have made it my business to follow the developments of the industries of this country. As far as the Dominion Iron and Steel Company are concerned, if they have met with any trouble I think it is due mainly to their expanding too much and wasting money to an enormous amount in installations. We have the fact that the Nova Scotia Steel Company has been a prosperous company paying high dividends because it has been well conducted, and alongside of that we have this big corporation which has sunk an enormous amount of capital. Now, as far as the Sault works are concerned, I have no desire to say anything injurious to that enterprise, but it is well known that they have expanded beyond measure, and that is also the reason of their trouble. The hon. leader of the opposition suggests that if the government had raised the tariff these troubles would have been avoided. But that would have created much more serious trouble for them; it would have brought United States steel company into this country. They would have established works here and injured both the Sault Ste. Marie and the Dominion Iron industries, and my own impression is that these bounties, although they do not go as far as the raising of the tariff, as suggested by my hon. friend, would yet bring the same result. I do not think that this Bill should be the occasion of raising a discussion of the bounty question as a general principle.

I am not in the secrets of the government, but I take it for granted that the government has had in mind to try and meet a temporary difficulty for one reason or another. These two concerns got into trouble. Public opinion was very much concerned in trying to rescue them from their difficulties. Whether they deserved it or not, it was considered it was in the interest of the country that some measure should be adopted whereby they would be assisted to a reasonable extent. This is the only measure which could reasonably be adopted. It is well known that the tariff should have a character of permanency. Tariffs cannot be changed from one year to another. A change of the tariff is a very serious thing. As has been stated by the hon. leader of the opposition, what is raw material for one manufacturer is the finished product of another and vice versa. The raising of the tariff on certain lines of goods is liable to disturb the conditions of a large number of manufacturers. If could not be done during the present session, and the only reasonable remedy was to proceed by bounties, as is now proposed to be done by this measure. If the tariff was as bad as suggested by the hon. leader of the opposition, we would not have the condition of things known to exist, that the manufacturers as a rule—almost without exception—are exceedingly prosperous. Their establishments have been kept busy to their full capacity for the last five or six years, and the country has been exceedingly prosperous. This, it seems to me, indicates that the tariff is not as bad as suggested by the hon. leader of the opposition. I could invoke a very valuable authority. It was only five or six days ago that at a meeting of the Manufacturers Association the gentleman who has just vacated the presidency of the association, stated, not that the manufacturers were of opinion that a general raising of the tariff was necessary, but that what was necessary in the near future was an adjustment of the tariff as to certain items. When we approach the question irrespective of political bias, the government should be complimented on the tariff that has been adopted, and on having decided to bring this present measure before parliament, because it is the best measure under the circumstances that could be submitted for the purpose of assisting to a reasonable extent these important industries.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I wish to say one word to console the hon. gentleman from St. John. I wish to satisfy him that a man may be a free trader, and at the same time in favour of temporary protection and bounties. If I had the book before me, I could cite an authority which I read long ago and remember well—a book written by the great writer on political economy, John Stuart Mill, who is considered the father, almost the god of free traders. Mill, after having written three or four hundred pages in favour of free trade, to prove that free trade is the only sound principle of political economy, says, if I remember well in the 5th chapter of his book, that he must admit in a young country, where industries are in their infancy, temporary protection may be necessary. Palgrave, the author of the Dictionary of Political Economy, speaking of the principle of Stuart Mill says the arguments used by John Stuart Mill, to advocate a temporary protection applies as well to bounties. That is all I rose to say. I wanted to show that a man may be a free trader like the hon. gentleman from St. John and be in good company.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

BOUNTIES ON LEAD BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN moved the second reading of Bill (239) 'An Act to provide for the payment of Bounties on Lead contained in Lead bearing Ores, mined in Canada.' He said: After the very general discussion on the Bill that has just been read the second time, I do not suppose it will be necessary for me to make any lengthened explanation of the Bill now before us. The principle is the same, although the Bill is somewhat different in its method of applying the bounty. As I explained on the first reading of the Bill, it is proposed to pay a bounty of $500,000 a year as a maximum for five years, for the mining and smelting of lead in Canada. At the present time there is a statute authorizing the payment of a bounty of $100,000 a year on lead mined, smelted, and refined in Canada. The operation of that law has proved to be not altogether satisfactory, and in increasing the bounties under the present law it will be found that the existing Bounty Act is repealed. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition will see that it will be possible, under this Bill, if the price of lead should go up in the London market, to have the bounty relatively reduced. In other words, if the price of lead should advance to about £16 per ton, the bounty under this Act would be entirely wiped out. That is a new principle in paying bounties. I think it ought to be acceptable. In order to allay the fears of some of our friends, who think we are rushing into the granting of bounties to an alarming extent, I may point out what would have been the result if this law had been in force the last five years. Clause one of this Bill provides:

> 1. The Governor in Council may authorize the payment of a bounty of seventy-five cents per one hundred pounds on lead contained in lead-bearing ores mined in Canada, such bounty to be paid to the producer or vendor of such ores: Provided, that the sum to be paid as such bounty shall not exceed five hundred thousand dollars in any fiscal year: Provided also, that when it appears to the satisfaction of the Minister charged with the administration of this Act that the standard price of pig lead in London, England, exceeds twelve pounds ten shillings sterling per ton of two thousand two hundred and forty pounds, such bounty shall be reduced by the amount of such excess.

Now, the average price of lead in the London market, during the last five years—I take five years, because it is the term for which we propose paying the bounty—has been as follows: In 1898 the average price was £13 10s. That year, instead of paying 75 cents per hundred pounds as bounty, as it is proposed to do, we would have paid 62 cents. In 1899 the average price was £15 per ton. That year, under the operation of a bounty system such as this, we would have only paid 25 cents per hundred pounds, or one-third. In 1900, the average price of lead in London was £17, 3s. In that year we would have paid no bounty at all. In 1901, the price was £12 10s. and in 1902 it was £13. In each year we would have paid the total amount of bounty, 75 cents per hundred pounds. Another provision of this Bill is that sixty per cent of the bounty is paid on smelter returns. Hon. gentlemen will see that the proposed bounty is to the miner, that is, the mineowner, the man who mines the ore, but it can only be paid on his having sold the ore to the smelter, and on proof being furnished that it will be subsequently smelted in Canada. The remaining forty per cent will be paid at the end of the year when evidence is furnished that the ore has been so smelted in Canada. Another clause provides, as only $500,000 is to be paid in bounty, that should the total amount of lead smelted in Canada exceed 33,333 tons, the bounty would of course have to be relatively reduced, so that the total amount of the bounty would be proportionately distributed to all the miners who had produced ore. We have introduced clause 3, providing that should it appear that the smelters and transportation companies were combining in any way to discriminate against the mine owners, the Governor in Council may authorize the payment of a smaller bounty and permit the ore to be smelted out of the country. These are the main features of the Bill. This bounty is being granted at the request of the mining interests of the province of British Columbia. It is only a few years since the mining of lead and silver was first started in that province. It grew rapidly until about 1900 or 1901, when the maximum was from 32,000 to 33,000 tons, the largest output we have ever reached. Since that time, the output has been rapidly decreasing owing to various causes, but very largely to the fact that the smelters in the United States in that year, or about that time, formed a combine, and refused to purchase the ores from the province of British Columbia. The output last year was approximately only 5,000 tons, and that output was very largely due to the fact that mines have to be worked more or less in prospecting and further developing, and a certain quantity of ore is being taken out all the time, and also the fact that a few mines, which are very rich in silver, produce more or less lead. But 5,000 tons of lead, as I am advised by those engaged in the industry, was all that was produced in 1902-03. In the year of our greatest prosperity the value of the lead and the silver contents of the lead ores was approximately about $5,000,000. That great output—because it was a very large output having grown to that in a very few years indeed—has almost entirely disappeared.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—That is silver lead.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Yes.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Which is the more valuable, the silver or the lead ?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—The greater value was in the lead. The galena mines of the Slocan county are all silver lead—that is, the majority of the mines are more valuable in lead than in silver. There are a few rich in silver. In mining one, they mine the other, but they are primarily and essentially lead mines. We at that time employed some 2,500 men in mining the ore, which gave employment to three or four smelters, and two or three small transportation companies. Then our mining country was very prosperous. The cause of the depression in the mining industry was also due, no doubt, to the fact that the price of lead has depreciated in the London market in the last few years, and also to the fact that the melting trust of the United States refuse to purchase our lead ores altogether, because in the year I have mentioned as our more prosperous year, our ores were sold to the United States smelters. We have the richest lead mining country in the world in British Columbia. I know my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, will tell us that if we had adopted his method of curing this evil, and had changed the tariff and put a high tax on pig lead and the products of lead, we probably would have accomplished this result in a better way.

I have myself a very great doubt that a revision of the tariff along those lines would have accomplished the result that will be accomplished by the payment of this bounty. As a matter of fact, the entire consumption of lead in Canada of all kinds, on lead and lead products, do not amount to more than 14,000 or 15,000 tons. The entire output of our mines in British Columbia alone when working to their normal capacity—and it is quite possible to increase them very largely by developing the mines—was 32 or 33,000 tons a year ago, so that we have to find a market for the difference between the consumption in Canada and the possible output of our mines, and while I have no doubt it was quite possible, by a slight rearrangement of duties, to give to Canadian mine owners and producers of lead the Canadian market, they would still have to find a market abroad for fully 20,000 tons of lead. The proposal was made early in the agitation of a change in the tariff to provide some assistance to our lead miners. The proposition was made that we should put up the duty to a level with the United States tariff which would allow the lead producers to charge for the lead and lead products such a price for the amount of lead consumed in the country that they could sell the excess abroad in a foreign market below its cost. The government thought they could not very well do that. This bounty will, I believe, place on a sound substantial basis the mining industry of British Columbia. I hope it is only temporary. If I thought we were entering upon a system of giving bounties for the encouragement of the lead mining industry of our province, that we would have to continue for ever, I for one would not favour it. I believe when we have this industry well established, and transportation all through all the country, and the mines more largely developed, the cost of conducting mining operations being reduced in that western country as it will be by the time this bounty has expired, that our mine owners will be able to compete with the mine owners of the United States and with cheaper products from Spain and Mexico.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—Can the hon. gentleman tell me how much will be paid out on lead ?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Five hundred thousand dollars is the extreme.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not propose to follow the hon. gentleman who has just spoken upon this question, although he has laid down a good many principles which at least are controvertible. I shall not at this hour of the night attempt to answer him. The two clauses to which he has referred and upon which he laid very great stress as meritorious are the worst features of the Bill, to my mind. I am very much inclined to agree with my hon. free trade friend from St. John, who has just spoken, with reference to bounties. I do not expect that about the time the payment of the bounty ceases the miners will be able to stand upon their own feet and to compete with the producers of lead in the United States who have a prohibitive tariff. The experience of the past shows that that statement at least is not verified by precedent or practice. It is evident too from the clause to which he has referred and which he thought was very meritorious—that third clause—that we are to grant a bounty at the will of the government of the day, who can use it for any purpose they think proper for political purposes in case of elections. Judging from their actions in the past there is little doubt that they would do it as, at any time they can grant a bounty in case the market of Canada was glutted with raw material which the United States required in order to carry on their industry. I take issue too altogether from the statement that it was the combines of the United States that led to the decrease in the products of the raw material of lead in Canada. The great cause of the falling off of the industries was the fact that they had not refineries in this country to enable them to refine the ores which they produced in Canada, and that the duties were of such a character in the United States as to prevent Canadians from producing and refining it in Canada and sending it into the United States, and selling it there at a profit. It is also well known—the documents are in the possession of the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—My hon. friend must know that we have never had a refinery on a large scale. We have not to-day.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I quite admit that ; that is what I say.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—He must further know that we can send all our lead bullion into the United States, refine it there in bond and ship it back in bond to Canada or ship it to any other part of the world without paying duty.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Only proportionately.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—No, practically all of it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My recollection of the fact is not as the hon. gentleman states. However, in committee we can have the facts and figures before us and also a return as to the amount which has been paid. I am not going into a discussion in which I might be led if time permitted arising out of the statements of the hon. gentleman, but when he tells us that the producers of lead in Canada, wanted a duty sufficiently high to enable them to supply the whole of the market in Canada at a price sufficiently remunerative to enable them to send their surplus to the United States and other foreign countries, and sell it at a loss. He is asking us to believe the miners are more than unreasonable. I do not question the hon. gentleman's veracity, but I would like very much if he could produce the document suggesting a policy of that kind. I hesitate not to say, that if a proposition of that kind was made, the hon. gentlemen opposite and the government of which he forms a part were quite justified in snubbing, if I may use the term, those who asked for such a tariff. This we know that while Canada's market may not be sufficiently large to consume the full product of the rich mines to which the hon. gentleman has referred, the object of a protective tariff would be to enable them to keep that market, and to export the surplus into foreign countries at, not a loss to themselves, but a profit. That is the real object that we desire to attain in Canada.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—My hon. friend says that by putting on a protective tariff we secure to the producers the Canadian market at a fair profit, and they can sell their surplus abroad——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not say anything about a profit.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—It is assumed that they would have a profit, and that they would sell their surplus abroad at a profit. I shall give the hon. gentleman the average prices in London for the last ten years. It has varied from twelve pounds ten shillings to seventeen pounds per ton in that time. How can British Columbia lead be sold in a London market at such figures when it cannot be produced as pig lead in British Columbia for anything like that price? The cheap leads of Spain and Mexico find ready access to the London market.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the hon. gentleman's theory be correct, then there should be no industries of that character in Canada. If there is no market for the surplus products of the mines of this country, after the Canadian market has been supplied, then it is not an industry into which any one should enter unless the hon. gentleman proposes to keep it in existence by means of bounties, taken out of the general funds of this country. I was about illustrating the point when the hon. gentleman interrupted me. We know what the condition of the agricultural implements industry was prior to the introduction of the national policy. We know that scarcely any portion of the Canadian market was supplied by Canadian manufacturings. We know that under the National Policy not only was the market of Canada supplied, but hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of material was sent to foreign countries, and not only found a market, but a remunerative market thereby, and in order to assist that industry, we gave them a drawback of the duty paid upon all the materials imported into this country, that entered into the manufacture of the implements, so as to enable the manufacturers to compete in foreign countries with machines produced in the United States and in other ports of the world. That that policy was condemned with the same vehemence, and in the same tone, and with as much virulence as was the policy of granting bounties, and yet, strange to say, the moment the hon. gentlemen came into power, and the great agricultural implement manufacturers in Ontario brought pressure to bear upon the government, they refunded ninety-nine per cent of the duty paid on the articles which go into the manufacture of the implements after condemning the Conservative government for refunding ninety per cent. It is only another illustration of the difference between profession and practice. I compliment my hon. friend from St. John, because he is honest. I believe in the sentiments to which he gives utterance, just as I claim for myself to be honest in utterances which I have made in favour of the policy diametrically opposed to that which his intellect induces him to think is right. I may say to the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry, if I can judge from his remarks to-night, that were I to attribute to him that which he attributed to me, and those who hold the same views that I do, I should be much more correct in the application than he was in making it to me. He avows himself a protectionist, and so does my hon. friend sitting opposite. They profess to be strong protectionists, and yet they compliment the government because they lower the principle of protection and adopt a temporary expedient for the purpose of accomplishing that which a true protective policy would accomplish, and yet with that coolness which characterizes the party to which they belong, in order to defend themselves against a violation of the principles which they have promulgated for years, they turn round and say, Oh you are advocating this for political reasons.' I am advocating it for political reasons in the higher sense of the term. If the hon. gentleman had used the term 'party reasons,' the application might be more direct in regard to some people, and if I were to attribute to him the position he has taken in this matter as a protectionist, his interest largely in industries which aid, not only in the establishing, but keeping them in operation and rendering a profit, we might say he was talking for party purposes in advocating such a doctrine. I am not interested in any industry, and consequently my views are not formed from any pecuniary reason or any profit I expect to derive from it. I frankly admit that within the last twelve months, I have put money into one factory—a lock factory. I hope it may succeed. It has paid no dividend yet, but we intend to keep it going as long as we have any money to do so; and if we had a little higher protection, I have no doubt it would return a dividend. Although those who have put their money into the industry have not received a cent in return therefor, we give employment, however, to fifty or sixty persons.

Now, instead of the American monopolies destroying and refusing to purchase Canadian lead, it was the American tariff and the cursed effects of what the hon. gentleman advocates—that is the encouragement of those labour organizations and unions which have destroyed the industry in the Rossland district and in the Slocan district to which my hon. friend refers. I visited nearly all these mines. I know what they are; I know they were prosperous and I now that the curse of the age—strikes, which I am sorry to say upon every occasion the hon. gentleman votes to sustain and to aid, have been the means of destroying these industries and I am satisfied that the perverseness of these combinations which exist in labour organizations is destroying the industries of the mother country and have driven millions of money out of the country to be paid to German and other manufactures. We are rapidly approaching that same condition in this country. Having been a labouring man from boyhood up—for I commenced earning my own livelihood at eight years of age, and have now to make my living by my labour—I look upon these organizations and the extent to which they are carried as a curse to the country and its industries, and are driving out of the country the industries which should exist here. I do not object to the organizations but I object to their dictating to the manufacturer, what man he shall employ, what he shall pay him and how long he shall work; and I object further to the system which prevails that if you do not strictly bring yourself in accord with their sentiments they will not allow you to work, though you might starve in the streets. That is one of the principal reasons in connection with the United States industries and not the combinations which my hon. friend has so eloquently, and to his own mind so convincingly laid before this House. Labour should receive every reasonable encouragement and protection, but labour should not be permitted to do what I think it has done and what I know it has done in different parts of the world and in the mining sections of British Columbia in particular. Going back to the other point made by the hon. gentleman from St. John, I believe his predictions will be verified if we live to see the time when the payment of these bounties begins to decrease the result will be in the future what it has proved in the past, as the amount of bounties decreased so in proportion will the industries fail to be carried on on account of the flooding of the market from foreign countries. Carry out the policy that you are now doing and the industries of this country will not increase as we hope and think they should, nor will the general development of the country be such as we have a right to expect.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (240) An Act to assist in establishing and maintaining an independent and efficient service of telegraphic news from Great Britain for publication in the Canadian press. —(Hon. Mr. Templeman).

Bill (242) An Act to amend the Mounted Police Act, 1894. (Hon. Mr. Scott).

PROVINCIAL COURTS OF JUDGES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (250) An Act to amend the Act respecting the judges of provincial courts.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does this raise the salaries at all?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No there is no increase in salaries.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But it is an increase in the number of judges?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, they have been provided for in Ontario.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In order to enable the work that is behind on account of a number of the judges being engaged in other work to be performed. It was announced in the other House that four of them had been absent for a year, hence, it was necessary to appoint two additional judges to perform the work of those who are employed at something else.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have no alternative.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, you have an alternative and the alternative is not to do what you are proposing to do. There is nothing in the constitution that makes it obligatory upon the Dominion government to make the appropriation or pay their salaries unless they like. The provision if I understand the constitution, is that the regulation of the courts is with the provinces but the appointment of the judges and the providing for their salaries is with this government.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—One carries the other.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Unfortunately it does. I am not speaking from my own view, but speaking from a common sense view of the law, and from statements which have been made by legal gentlemen equally eminent with the hon. gentleman who has just interrupted me, some of the best lawyers and best men in this country, Sir John Thompson, Sir John Macdonald and Sir John Abbott have given utterance to the very same opinion that it is optional with this government to grant salaries and to appoint the judges if they think proper. I admit that I believe the spirit of the law was as my hon. friend states.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—When the framers of the constitution relegated to the provinces certain powers in connection with the courts, the presumption was that that power would be judiciously exercised. If not so exercised, and it be shown to the Dominion parliament and to the Dominion government that the power is being abused by appointing a number of judges to fill the places of other judges, who are occupying their time, and attention and talent in other work, then I say it is time we should assert the rights of the Dominion, and put our foot down and not appoint them. We appointed three judges for Quebec, and now we are to have another. When that question comes up, I may call attention to some little instances that were brought out in connection with the matter before. I do not propose to waste any time on this point at present. My hon. friend might allow the second reading to stand over, or perhaps it could be understood that we should discuss the matter freely on the motion to go into committee. That is one reason why I did not object to the other Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They can be discussed on the motion to go into committee before the Speaker leaves the Chair.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read a second time.

THE MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I beg to lay on the table a return to an Address dated on the 4th of September, 1903, for a copy of the agreement referred to by the Honourable Mr. Roblin, in his interview with the gentlemen who composed the Catholic deputation, as having been entered into and signed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, representing the Dominion government, on one side, and Honourable Mr. Clifford Sifton, representing the province of Manitoba, on the other side, together with a copy of the 'reply given in writing to the memorial of the delegates, by the Premier, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and the Minister of Justice, the Honourable Mr. Fitzpatrick,' and that, if no written reply was given by the Premier, the Senate be informed of the character of the demands made by said deputation, and of the answer given by, or of the action taken thereon, by the Premier and the Minister of Justice.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In reference to this return, I have not had time to look at it closely, but it seems to me to be a copy of the agreement entered into bebetween the Greenway government and Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and Mr. Sifton.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That was what was asked for.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I know that, but it does not contain the signatures.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know ; they never were on the agreement.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I have in my hand a copy of the agreement which I had in my desk and it contains the signatures.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The document produced by the Secretary of State is not genuine.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is the only one I could find, and there is no signature to it. It has been brought down several times.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This was never laid on the Table.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I laid one on the Table a month ago.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If so what necessity was there to bring it down now ? What has been laid before the House in the past has been an Act which was passed by the Manitoba legislature which embodies the principles in this agreement. All I complain of is that this document which is laid before parliament does not show the parties who are responsible for it. Fortunately I have a copy of the original in my hand, together with the Order in Council based upon the order, which is signed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Clifford Sifton, dated in October. Might I ask, while I am on my feet, if the government intend to proceed to-morrow with the second reading of Bill 243 ' An Act to amend the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act ' &c. ? It is set down for to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I think not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Has the hon. gentleman not been able to reconcile his friends to the acceptance of this Bill ? Does the rebellion still exist among the followers of the hon. gentleman, if it is a fair question to ask.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am unable to take my hon. friend into my confidence on that subject.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That will do.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Friday, September 25, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THE HOUR OF MEETING.

MOTION WITHDRAWN.

The Order of the Day being called :

That the order for the meeting of the Senate at eight in the evening on Mondays be rescinded.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT said : When we adopted the rule that, as a matter of course, when the House rose on Friday we should meet again on Monday evening, it was understood that if at the end of the session, it became necessary to meet at an earlier hour than 8 o'clock on Monday, the House would readily acquiesce in the adoption of the former rule, and therefore I gave the notice yesterday. I am entirely in the hands of the House. I observe from the appearance of the Order paper that there is not likely to be much business for Monday. I do not know that there will be any, for the reason that the important bill that I expected from the Commons will not be here on Monday. I am having it reprinted. Therefore, if it is more convenient for the House to continue as before and meet at 8 o'clock, I am quite willing to agree to that.

Hon. MEMBERS.—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.—Then I beg to withdraw the motion.

The motion was withdrawn.

MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to ask the intention of the government about the production of the paper that I asked for on the 3rd of September last. I moved then that a certain document be produced, and the order of the House was passed that it should be produced. I am aware that the hon. Secretary of State has laid upon the Table a certain paper purporting to be the document, but I maintain that the paper that the hon. Secretary of State has laid upon the Table is not the document that I want, and not the document which the House ordered—I mean the agreement between the government of Canada and the government of Manitoba on the school question. The paper which has been produced bears no signature. I have every reason to believe that the document for which I moved bears the signature of somebody.

Consequently the paper which has been produced is not the document, and is not in conformity with the order of the House. I wish to know from the government whether they intend to produce the document with the signature attached to it or not?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I can assure my hon. friend that I produced the only document I could find in the archives of the government. What occurred in 1897 was this——

Hon. Mr. BERNIER.—We know what occurred.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.—It is not anywhere within our archives. We have not any other document. The same document was brought down in the session of 1897 or 1898, and it is to be found in the appendix of the Journals of the House of Commons without signature, the same as this one. It is simply an agreement made by certain persons, Sir Wilfrid Laurier and, I think, myself, and I have forgotten who else of the Dominion cabinet, and certain gentlemen of the Manitoba cabinet. They drew up a memo which was afterwards embodied in a statute, I think in Manitoba. It formed the foundation for it, and beyond that there are no other papers—not a scrap of paper. I had a careful search made on former occasions, and have had it made again, and I can assure my hon. friend there is no other paper in the archives. That had to be copied from the appendix in the Journals, because there is no other memo.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I have good reason to believe there is a document. What has been produced is the result of the conference between the two governments, but I have every reason to believe that there is a document bearing the signature of the two parties at least who acted then on behalf of the governments of the Dominion and of Manitoba respectively and if the hon. gentleman is not willing to give me any other answer, I take it as a refusal on the part of the government to produce the paper.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend is very unfair. I gave instructions in the Department of the Secretary of State, to make a search there, and I spoke to the Department of Justice about it. There is no other department could have the paper. There is no reason to withhold it; it would be much more pleasant for me to produce it, than not to produce it. I am willing to take any further steps, and question Sir Wilfrid Laurier about it, in fact I did ask him, and he referred me to a paper to be found in the appendix. He said it was the only paper he knew of.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—If it is agreeable to the hon. gentleman I can show him a copy of the document.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The paper which was laid before the House and discussed on former occasions was a document showing what the result of that conference was. My hon. friend, I think, will recollect that a good deal of discussion took place on the 10th clause. I remember distinctly reading that and giving what I considered to be an interpretation of it, and the present Speaker who was then occupying a position on that side of the House, before he was Speaker, asked me to read it again—I remember that distinctly. It was of such a character that I thought the concesions made to the Protestant portion of the province of Manitoba were not as great as those which were conceded to the Roman Catholics, as there was no provision in the resolutions laid before the House at the time for the teaching of the English language, while it provided that if a certain number of residents in any school section demanded the teaching of any language—it matters not what it was—they should have the right of having it taught. I remember that discussion very well, and when my hon. friend called attention to the fact that papers were laid before the House I pointed that out to him. I do not know whether my hon. friend from St. Boniface was present last night when the document was laid upon the Table, just before the adjournment. I called the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to the fact that that document did not contain the signatures to which my hon. friend has now called attention, and the explanation of the Secretary of State was precisely of the same character as that which he has given to-day. I then took the liberty of declaring I knew there was a paper containing the signature of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and Mr. Sifton, and I have it in my hand here. Consequently the paper which was laid before the House, is not a complete document, nor is it in the state in which it ought to have come before the House. Whether the return which the hon. Secretary of State laid on the Table is the only one he has, and he has not a copy of the original containing the signatures of the parties who negotiated this arrangement, I am not prepared to say. I am bound, from a parliamentary standpoint, to take his statement that he has not that document. Then if he has not that document, he has not a proper record of the events which took place in connection with that very important question.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Is the document that the hon. gentleman has in his possession the same as the paper that was brought down.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have not compared it critically.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—It must be the same except the signatures.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is only the signatures that are missing ?

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I consider the signatures are important.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—As soon as the paper was laid on the Table, I asked for it and on looking at it, I came to the conclusion from a partial reading of it, that it was precisely the same. My hon. friend from Killarney (Mr. Young) also came across the floor and looked at it, and I believe came to the same conclusion that I did.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Has the hon. gentleman the original document ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The document I have is the report of the executive committee of the council of Manitoba, also the report made by the Attorney General, Mr. Cameron, based upon the agreement entered into between Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Sifton which the document now under discussion purports to be, but does not contain the signatures of Sir Wilfrid and Mr. Sifton, and therefore not a true document.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The material point was that the Manitoba legislature were to adopt it. I understand they did adopt it at the following session. The document, therefore, became part of the statute. The original one, I presume, went to Manitoba. I have no recollection of seeing one here with the signatures, because I had occasion to refer to it some years ago, and had difficulty even to find a copy. There are no signatures attached to the one brought down in 1897.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I was one of those who took part in the conference which resulted in the settlement arrived at between the Manitoba government and the Dominion government. It will be remembered a Remedial Order was made by the Dominion government on the province of Manitoba to do certain things. That was objected to on the part of the Manitoba government, and there was a conference. A change of government took place at Ottawa, and there was a conference between the Manitoba government and the government at Ottawa. A memo was drawn up, a copy of which was laid on the Table here last night. It was put in the form of a resolution, and on the understanding that it would be crystallized into law, and the Roman Catholic minority of Manitoba should have the concessions agreed to in that memo, the Ottawa government agreed not to interfere with the school law. That is the whole story. The agreement was carried out and is the law of Manitoba to-day, and there has been no interference with the law of Manitoba. The law has not been changed by the Conservative government under Mr. Roblin which has been in power three years in Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—We are not discussing that. The remarks of the hon. gentleman are totally irrelevant to the subject before the House now. My point is this : There is a paper produced before the House in response to an order of the House. I contend this paper is not an official document at all, because it does not bear the signatures of the parties thereto. I may be wrong, but I attach great importance to having the document with the signatures. That is the only point I brought before the House.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—We had better move to have the leader of the opposition lay his original document on the Table of the House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman should not try to draw a red herring across the trail. We are discussing a document which should have been a complete document when it was laid before the House, and which is not a complete document, but a mutilated one.

RAILWAYS LAW CONSOLIDATION BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of Bill (21) An Act to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways, as amended.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) moved:

That the words 'Senate and House of Commons' be inserted after the words 'members of the' in the fiftieth line of clause 275, subsection 3, and that the words 'for members of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada and' be struck out of the 23rd and 24th lines of subsection 5 of clause 275.

He said: The object I have in view is to do away with the duty which is placed on the railway companies of Canada to grant free transportation to all members of parliament—to make it compulsory for them to do so. I want to leave it optional for the railway companies to grant or withhold free passes as they please.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I hope the amendment of my hon. friend will not be adopted by the House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No danger.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I think the Bill should be left, in respect to the clause alluded to, as it came from the House of Commons. It is a great deal better that the granting of these passes should be made compulsory than that we should receive them as we do now, as a matter of compliment or favour. I am sure there is not a single member of this House who is likely to be, or ever has been influenced in the slightest degree in his vote in legislation in connection with railways by the passes he has received from these railways from time to time; but while I am positive no improper influence has been exercised in that way in either House, there are reasons why the provision made in the Railway Bill is wise and proper. We all know there is a class of people in the country who do believe we are influenced improperly by these passes. We should not be surprised at that, because a pass such as we receive from the railways would be looked upon by many in the country as a great favour indeed. But when we see the press of this country, from which we would expect better things, denouncing the acceptance of passes by members of parliament as if it were likely to influence our action on legislation in connection with these railways, when from such a source as that, where you would expect more intelligence and a better sense of justice to prevail, you hear such denunciations, I think it is time that either one of two things should be done; either that we should be prohibited from taking passes——

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—That is right.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Or that we should receive them in such a way that no suspicion whatever could attach to the acceptance as influencing our votes as members of this House. I feel strongly on this matter. I receive a lot of passes. I seldom use more than two, on the Intercolonial or the Canadian Pacific Railway, to come to Ottawa or return to my home. I seldom use any of the others, but if we are to accept passes at all, it is better they should be given under such a provision as this Bill contains.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am sorry upon this occasion to have to differ from my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Miller). I take altogether a different view on this question of passes. I think the railways should be left in the same position that they are in now, to extend passes as they think proper. It is said that we grant them subsidies and other concessions and that therefore they should be compelled to carry members of this House free. I could understand the force of the reasons given by my hon. friend to my left if the passes were confined to members of parliament coming to and returning from their parliamentary duties. There might be some reason for that, but my own view is that we should have no law compelling railway companies to grant passes so long as investments in the corporation are made by private individuals. What the hon. gentleman has said in reference to the press of the country is quite correct, but it is not confined altogether to members of parliament. The same condemnation of the receiving of passes has been made by the press of the country against the judges. Whether the judges receive passes or not I do not know.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I do not think they do.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—All I do know is that the press assert most positively that they do receive passes when they are travelling on their official duties, and also on other occasions, and the insinuation is that they are not honest in their judgments in trying cases affecting the railways from which they receive favours. I have no sympathy with that kind of accusations. I do not believe that the granting of a pass to a judge would have any more effect upon his decision in cases that come before him any more than I believe it would upon the mind and vote of my hon. friend or any other senator. On the broad principle that as these corporations are carried on and managed by private individuals, as they have been built to a great extent by private means of individuals, they should not be compelled by this parliament to grant passes to any one. I would much rather see the suggestion made by my hon. friend from Richmond carried out, preventing any member of parliament accepting a pass at all. If he will make that motion I shall be very glad to second and vote for it. Having expressed my opinion before upon this question, I am not going to prolong the discussion. I desire, however, while upon my feet, to call attention to a report that appeared in the newspapers in connection with the discussion that took place during our last sitting. Whether our official reporter for the press is responsible for it or not, I do not know. All I know is that there are utterances here that I did not make use of at the time, and there is attributed to me a charge against the Speaker which I certainly never made. I am reading now from the 'Mail and Empire,' but the same report appeared in the 'Gazette,' and, I think, in the 'Star' and other papers. It reads as follows:

> Sir Mackenzie Bowell said the insinuation was that because members of the House received passes justice to the country has not been done.

That far I did say, and that is what my hon. friend repeated. Then it adds:

> He appealed to the records to disprove this. The Speaker had made an insinuation against him.

I have no recollection of the Speaker having made any insinuation against me in this matter. Then, the Speaker is reported to have said:

> You are putting the cap on.

I think if the Speaker used that expression and I had heard it, the probability is there would have been a retort of some kind. I would not say what kind of a retort there would be, because I never in all the discussions which took place, which were somewhat animated, heard the Speaker make any insinuation against me, neither did I hear him use the expression, 'You are putting the cap on.' I take this opportunity, first of all, of denying most distinctly that I made any insinuation against the Speaker. He and I differed, but I have no recollection of his using such an expression. Whether he did or not, he himself knows, and if he did it must have been made in such a low tone that it did reach across the House. Another complaint I have to make in connection with this subject is this: in discussing the Manitoba school question a short time ago, I was made by the same official report to say that the minority in Manitoba had been deprived of the rights which were given to them by the Confederation Act. I do not think any one will credit me with making such an absurd statement, particularly as Manitoba was not a portion the Dominion when the Constitutional Act under which we are now living and governing this country was passed and became law. It may be that I gave utterance to my opinion in such an incoherent manner that the reporter did not hear me—either that, or he did not know what I said. These incorrect reports make a public man appear ridiculous and absurd in the minds of those who read them. Every one who knows anything of the constitution of the country, every one who knows anything about the Manitoba school question and the time at which Manitoba came into the Dominion, knows very well that unless I was stupid I would never make use of expressions of that kind. I may differ from my hon. friend when it comes to a vote on the amendment before the House, I will vote for it, and if it is not carried, I shall put myself on record by moving that the words 'Senate' be struck out.

The motion was put and declared lost.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I move :

That the words 'Senate and' in the second line of subsection 5 in clause 275 be struck out.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has no right to make a motion. He has made a speech on the subject.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman is out of order himself. I did not make a speech upon this question. I made a speech on the motion of the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island, and that having been lost, I have a perfect right to move a dozen amendments and speak for 16 hours if I wish.

The motion was declared lost on division.

On clause 237,

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I beg to move ;

That subsection 4 of section 237 of the Bill be stricken out and the following substituted therefor :—

4. When any cattle or other animals at large upon the highway or otherwise, get upon the property of the company and are killed or injured by a train, the owner of any such animal so killed or injured shall be entitled to recover the amount of such loss or injury against the company in any action in any court of competent jurisdiction, unless the company, in the opinion of the court or jury trying the case, establishes that such animal got at large through the negligence or wilful act or omission of the owner or his agent, or of the custodian of such animal or his agent ; but the fact that such animal was not in charge of some competent person or persons shall not for the purposes of this subsection, deprive the owner of his right to recover.

I might say this matter has been fairly well discussed before all the members of the Senate and it is simply restoring the clause as it appeared in the Bill as sent to us from the House of Commons. I might say that I am satisfied, from what I know of the Commons, that they will insist on having that clause reinstated in the Bill as it left the Commons, and for that reason I am satisfied in my own mind—and I think the other members of this Chamber are satisfied—it would be well for us to restore that clause and have the amendments made in the Senate accepted in the House of Commons so that the Bill would not have to come back to us.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What is the opinion of the government on this question ? I think the members of the government supported the amendment made to this clause.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No ; one of them did.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They generally divide.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it will be generally admitted that the Senate have improved this Bill very materially. We have made amendments that are in the right direction in a number of instances, and it is very desirable that this amendment should be adopted by the other House. In reference to the clause to which my hon. friend has referred, relating to cattle-guards, we know that the House of Commons unanimously approved of that clause. The press of the country have approved of it ; whether they understood it correctly or not, is another question. In arguing it I think there has been a great deal of misunderstanding, even by those who have been ardent supporters of it, because it does violence to a principle that has been recognized in this country now for fully half a century ; that is, that the owners of animals living along a railway line have certain responsibilities. The law placed on the statute-book was not at the instance of the railway companies, but at the instance of the travelling public, that where a farmer or others lived in the vicinity of a railway crossing it was their duty not to allow their cattle to stray on the track. In a wide country like this, where railways are crossing concession lines, sometimes as many as ten in twenty miles, it would be absolutely impossible for a company to protect their highways by gates. It would be impracticable and too expensive, and therefore parliament, at a very early period, passed very stringent laws prohibiting the straying of cattle on to the railway tracks. The amendment adopted by the House of Commons, while it does not absolutely repeal that clause, goes this far ; that though the cattle may stray on to the railway from the highway contrary to the law, yet unless the railway company prove that the owner of the cattle was guilty of negligence he has a right to recover against the railway company if the cattle get killed on the track, owing either to a defective fence or defective cattle-guard. That is the condition of things.

I myself believe that very many who have spoken earnestly in support of this clause perhaps have not thoroughly understood it. But the clause has been adopted and is there to stay, unless it should be modified after a conference. If the Senate refuse to give way, I do not know what might be the result. I do not think it would be justifiable or in the interests of this body to dispute with the other Chamber on a question of this kind. Therefore I am inclined to support the clause as it stood, in the hope that the House of Commons will accept all the other amendments that we have made, which I consider a very great improvement. No doubt if we have a difference of opinion in reference to this particular clause, it will involve a difference of opinion in reference to many other clauses of the Bill which I think are of too great value to be lost, and which may be lost if the House of Commons were to resist our view. Under these circumstances I advise that it would be better to accept the proposal of the hon. senator from Manitoba, in the hope that the House of Commons, in a like friendly spirit will accept the amendments we have made to the other clauses of the Bill as a sort of compromise.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is exceedingly unfortunate that we should have the leader of the House accepting the proposition to insert a provision in the Bill which he himself declares to be in violation of all the principles that have guided us in legislation, and in the administration of the criminal law in the past, simply because he comes to the conclusion that the amended clause would not be accepted by the House of Commons. Well, his argument for the acceptance of the old clause would be very good and pertinent after the House of Commons has refused to accept the amendment which has been made to the Bill by the Senate. I question very much whether the Senate, if the Bill came back to us with that amendment rejected, would go to the extreme length of again adopting it, necessitating a conference between the two bodies ; but rather than adopt the principle of this clause my own impression is that we ought to go the full length and wait for the decision of the Commons as to whether they would accept it or not. In reading the proposed clause, we find that it makes the company liable in any action in any court of competent jurisdiction unless the company, in the opinion of the court or jury trying the case, establishes that such animal got at large through the negligence or wilful act or omission of the owner or his agent or of the custodian of such animal or his agent. That is to say, a vicious person might deliberately, in the night, open his fence, let out an old horse that he desired to get rid of and let it run on the track ; the train comes along—it might be a passenger or a freight train—and the animal is killed. How in the world, under those circumstances, would a company be able to prove that there had been negligence on the part of the owner ? The gate would be opened and closed. The animal would be put on the track and get killed. I do not say that would occur, but it might. There are people who are criminal in their character and commit deeds much worse than that and endanger life and property, and what I have described might happen. I regret exceedingly the course that the government has taken on this question. If the House of Commons had rejected the amendment, then my hon. friend's argument would have been pertinent and to the point, because other difficulties might have arisen, and it might endanger the whole Bill if the Senate persisted in its amendment. The Senate would not, under the circumstances, have pushed it that length. I have put myself on record on the matter, and I do not propose to do more.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Clause 201 provides against the possible contingency mentioned by the leader of the opposition. It is :—

201. Every person who wilfully leaves any such gate open without some person being at or near it to prevent animals from passing through it on to the railway, or who takes down any part of a railway fence, or turns any horse, cattle or other animal, upon or within the inclosure of such railway, except for the purpose of, and while taking the same across the railway in the manner provided by section 198 of this Act, or who without the consent of the company, or except as authorized by the Act, rides, leads or drives any horse or other animal, or suffers any such horse or animal to enter upon such railway and within the fences and guards, is liable, on summary conviction, to a penalty of twenty dollars for each offence, and is also liable to the railway company for any damage to the property of the company or for which the company may be responsible by reason of such gate being so left open, or by reason of such fence being so taken down, or by the turning, riding, leading, driving or suffering to enter, upon or within the inclosure of such railway in violation of this section of any horse, cattle or other animal; and no person, any of whose cattle are killed or injured by any train owing to the non-observance of this section, shall have any right of action against any company in respect to the same being so killed or injured. Every person violating the provisions of this section shall in addition to the penalty herein provided be liable to pay any person injured by reason of such violation all damages sustained thereby.

Now it appears to me that is a very drastic clause. The penalties are severe. There is a penalty for allowing an animal to go on the track, and in addition to that, the person can be followed for all injury caused to the railway company or to any individual by his action. It appears to me there is no danger of anybody deliberately letting an animal on the railway track. The penalty is very severe, and I do not object to it. It cannot be too severe. There are two things to be considered—the owner of the cattle, and the travelling public, and I put the protection of the travelling public first. Having provided for that, we ought to see that the railway company pay for any damage done through their negligence. All the penalties set forth in clause 201 are such as to deter any person from opening a gate, and turning cattle on the track for the purpose of having them destroyed, because there is no limit to the offender's liability, and I do not think there should be any. I am satisfied that this clause answers all the arguments made by the leader of the opposition in his objection to the clause, because there is no danger of any person deliberately putting animals on the track for the purpose of having them destroyed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. gentleman think that the clause first read sufficient to protect the railway and also the farmer?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—They have recourse at law.

Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does that clause sufficiently protect the public and the parties who may sustain losses? If I understand the clause, it provides penalties to be imposed on those who do not comply with the provisions of the Act.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What has that to do with this? This holds the company responsible for damage done to animals, and, what is objectionable, it adopts the principle that the railway company must prove that there has been negligence on the part of the owner. If a man wants to get rid of his old horse, he puts it on the track, and the company must prove that it got there and was killed through his negligence or pay for it.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I am satisfied when a claim is made for damages, the claimant has to give evidence to show that the animal was not on the track through his negligence. The argument advanced by the hon. gentleman was that some person might wish to destroy an old horse, and get paid for it. I venture to say, in view of clause 201, a man would be very careful about pulling down a railway fence or leaving a gate open for such a purpose. He cannot recover if there has been any neglect on his part, and besides, there are heavy penalties. If the animal is killed, or any injury is done to anybody through that action, the person who is guilty can be prosecuted and followed, and there is no limit to his liability.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—There appears to be in the public mind, a very confused idea with regard to this clause. There appears to be an idea that the Senate is relieving the railway companies from responsibility for cattle killed on the track. There is no such intention. The intention is by clause 99 to call upon railway companies to keep good and sufficient fences, to keep the best kind of cattle-guard they can get. They are bound to comply with the orders of the railway commission with regard to these matters. Then, if through any neglect on their part, cattle get on the track, the railway company have to pay if they are killed. But if cattle break out of an inclosure at night when the owner is in bed, and stray on the public highway, and from that public highway, they get on to the track, the railway company, notwithstanding the fact they have got an efficient fence and crossings—that they have complied with every order of the board—are to be responsible for the loss of breachy horses and cattle that the owner himself cannot keep in bounds. In my opinion that is an extreme piece of legislation and entirely unfair to the company. I know the House of Commons has passed the Bill with a very drastic clause on this point, and I believe the feeling in the country on the subject is because the people do not understand it. If they understcod it better, they would not be so extreme in their views. I should regret if we came in collision with the House of Commons on this Bill. I think the clause makes very fair provision. If the railway companies allow their cattle-guards in winter to become filled with ice, so that cattle can cross them, it is a ground upon which the railway company would be asked to pay, and would have a good right to pay. If their fences become dilapidated and are in an insecure condition and cattle get killed in consequence, they have to pay. If gates are left open and cattle get on the track, the company have to pay unless it can be shown it is the fault of the farmer. The leader of the opposition has drawn attention to a case where a man wants to get rid of an old horse. He leads him on the track at night, the animal is killed and the railway company has to pay for it. My hon. friend from Portage la Prairie replies to that. He says there is a very grave penalty for such an offence. The man who will do such an act as has been described by the leader of the opposition will do it at night when there is nobody to see what he is doing. He will take good care of that, and if you attempt to find out and put the responsibility on him, it is impossible to do it. A man who would be guilty of doing an act of that kind would be guilty of swearing it through the court. I don't want to relieve the railway companies of any reasonable responsibility, but I object to passing a law imposing upon them responsibility beyond all reason, making them pay for animals, no matter under what circumstances they get on the track. I think it is unfair. The company is made the victim, and has to pay the penalty. I think it is extreme legislation. I do not understand our law at present is in that shape, and I cannot bring myself to vote for such legislation. I am sorry the country newspapers take the view they do. I believe they do not understand the question. However, the matter is in the hands of the House.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It was at my suggestion that the amendment was adopted yesterday. I then explained, and I have no desire to repeat it, how far the amendment goes. To my mind, it goes as far as is reasonable in the direction of putting upon the railway companies the onus of proof, and the whole responsibility, because they have to keep, construct and maintain cattle-guards, fences and gates sufficient to prevent cattle from getting on their property, and then they are made responsible for animals killed on the track, whether those animals escape from the land of their owner or not. They are made responsible even if an animal is at large, to the extent of placing on the company the onus of the evidence in all cases, requiring them to prove that the animal was killed because its owner was guilty of negligence is asking an impossibility. I cannot reconcile myself to a doctrine of that kind, and I sincerely regret that the hon. gentleman from Marquette has deemed it advisable to make this motion. It is not a question of conflict between the two Houses. I would hesitate in that case myself as to whether I should insist on our amendment, but it is a question of doing what we think is right, leaving the House of Commons to act on their own judgment and responsibility.

The Senate divided on the amendment, which was rejected: Contents, 19; non-contents, 26.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman from Mille Isles has given notice of a motion, but I rise to say that he is willing to withdraw it, if the clause I am going to suggest is adopted. It is as follows:

That subsections 2 and 3 of section 239, as amended, be struck out and replaced by the following:—

2. Whenever damage is caused to crops, lands, fences, plantations, or buildings and their contents, by fire, started by a railway locomotive, the company making use of such locomotive shall be liable for such damage and may be sued for the recovery of the amount of such damage in any court of competent jurisdiction.

The hon. gentleman is willing to withdraw this amendment and substitute the following:

Provided, that if it be shown that the company has used modern and efficient appliances, and has not otherwise been guilty of any negligence, the total amount of compensation recoverable under subsection 2 of this section in respect of any one or more claims for damage from fire or fires started by the same locomotive, and on the same ocasion, shall not exceed $5,000, and it shall be apportioned amongst the parties who suffered the loss, as the court or judge may determine.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no objection to the amendment.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I was not in favour of the amendment made last night, limiting the liability, but certainly I should not be satisfied with the amendment now proposed. The provision is that if the company has used all appliances, they are not liable, and the defence in court would be that they had proper appliances, and the fire could not escape. So far as the farmer is concerned in this legislation, it is 'heads you win, tails I lose.' Now, I am satisfied that in a great many cases the fires are caused by the railway employees. A railway company may wish to use such appliances as would prevent the possibility of fire, and I believe if such appliances as I have mentioned are used on a locomotive, it is impossible for fire to escape; but the employees remove the screens from the smokestack as obstructions to the draft of the locomotive. That allows the fire to escape and the damage is done. An employee of the company would be very loth to admit that he had removed such appliances. The company would prove they had these contrivances in the locomotive, and consequently would not be liable. I oppose this amendment. If you limit the liability to $5,000, it is much better to let the clause stand as it was passed last night. The hon. gentleman from Calgary suggested that if the company had fences and cattle-guards approved of by the commissioners, that would remove the liability, and this is putting that suggestion in the shape of an amendment. This would make it almost impossible to prove that the company were negligent, because the company in all cases I know intend to have screens in their locomotives, and they would be prepared to show that when the locomotive went out on its trip it was properly equipped. I believe in a great many cases, where fire escapes from a locomotive, it is through the negligence of the employees.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman from Marquette does not quite understand the bearing of the clause. He ignores the first paragraph of the section under which the company is liable for damage, whether guilty of negligence or not. That affirms the principle of the liability of the company. The proviso is only for the purpose of limiting the amount of their liability, in the absence of negligence, that is when the damage is inherent to the operation of the road, and the use of appliances, then the damage in any one case would be limited to $5,000. That is the effect of the clause.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Which would never exceed $5,000, because they would say they had the proper appliances.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Yesterday we discussed and for my part I voted against the clause but we have to deal with the clause as amended yesterday, and the proviso as amended yesterday is liable to a construction so unfair and unfavourable to the company, that on showing it to the members who have taken an interest in the matter, they came to the conclusion to adopt the draft I have submitted. For instance, in the proviso adopted yesterday it says 'provided it is established that fire was caused by negligence of the company.' The whole principle of law is that the company are not liable unless there has been negligence. It might be construed as limiting it to an act of negligence on the part of the company, not an act of negligence arising from the fact that they used defective appliances. It is for the purpose of making it as far as possible conform to the principle embodied in the amendment yesterday, that I suggested it. Surely this new draft, if the hon. gentleman will read it attentively, will be found to be more against the railway companies than the other one, because it puts upon them the whole responsibility unless they prove that they have used modern and efficient appliances, and that they have not otherwise—I call attention to the use of the words—'committed any act of negligence.'

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—Do I understand that no matter how valuable the property destroyed the liability is five thousand dollars?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is where they cannot show negligence.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—But where there is negligence?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—There is no limit.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then they would be responsible for the full amount.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I would suggest that this very much discussed and vexed question should be allowed to stand. We have had the notice before us submitted by the hon. gentleman from Montreal and at present we have a motion by my hon. friend from de Salaberry, which contains a new proposition to some extent of which no notice was given, and it would be fair to the House that we should have time to consider it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The only difference between the clause as amended as it appears upon the Minutes of Proceedings and what has been proposed by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry is this; it defines how the $5,000 shall be distributed. That is the difference between that and the principle we have already affirmed. The House has affirmed the principle that the liability where there was no negligence proved on the part of the companies should be limited to five thousand dollars. Under the clause as it came from the House of Commons, they would be liable to any amount—an amount which might absorb almost the whole of the proceeds of the railway itself. Then a compromise was made that the limit, under the circumstances to which I have referred, should be confined to five thousand dollars. Then a question was raised by my hon. friend from Stadacona, as to how the money was to be distributed. The company might, in case of fire where the damages were over five thousand dollars, give it all to one man, and it was contended that that would be unfair to other parties who had sustained loss. The hon. gentleman from de Salaberry, in an amendment which we are now asked to adopt, provides that the five thousand, if the loss extends to that amount, shall be divided pro rata among those who lose. That is the only question before us. There is no new principle involved in the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman, but it simply provides how it should be distributed, and that was in order to meet the views of those who objected to leave it in the hands of the railway to dispose of the whole five thousand dollars to any one individual.

Hon. Mr. WATSON.—I should like to say that the hon. gentleman's amendment contains more than that. The hon. gentleman's amendment, as far as the distribution is concerned, differs very little from the suggestion of the hon. Secretary of State last night, but it does refer to the appliances to be used, and in my opinion, if a railway could show that they had used the best railway appliances, it would go a great way to acquit them of negligence. That would be used in court to show the company were not negligent, and I should think that perhaps if they could prove that they had used all those appliances it would exonorate them.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE.—No, no.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think you are narrowing down the liability of the company by this proposition, and that the total liability, either by negligence or otherwise, if they use these screens, will be $5,000; because the railway companies would be prepared to put their officers in the witness box and say that they were adopting these appliances. They do not wish to set fire to property, but their officials may have been negligent and they will try to escape the consequences. It is only by negligence that fire can escape from a locomotive.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If it is the desire of the House that it should stand over, all right, but I think it is perfectly clear. They are guilty in all cases whether negligence is shown or not, even though they have had the best appliances. But if they use the best appliances and are not guilty of negligence, then the liability is limited. In all cases they are liable up to $5,000, but if negligence exists, or if the mesh of the screen is too large and a fire occurs, then they are liable to any amount.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—We have been discussing the Bill for a fortnight, and I think we should dispose of it.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—This requires a notice, and I would ask that this be made a notice.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think there is any notice required in the case of a public Bill. This is only a variation in the mode of expressing the same idea that was discussed yesterday.

The SPEAKER—There is no rule of this House which requires a notice of an amendment to a public Bill. There is a rule which requires notice of an amendment to a private Bill.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—In a matter of this importance, if any hon gentleman desires to postpone it, I think we should accede to his request.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I call attention to the fact that no member has a right to speak after the question has been put from the Chair.

The House divided on the amendment, which was carried on the following division: Contents, 34; non-contents, 7.

On clause 284,

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I beg to move that the words "the said" in this clause as adopted yesterday be stricken out and "there" substituted, and that the word "respectively" be struck out and the words "or vessels" substituted.

The amendment was adopted.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

THIRD READING.

Bill (104) An Act to incorporate the Brockville, Westport and North-western Railway Company.—(Hon. Sir Alphonse Pelletier.)

SECOND READING.

Bill (244) An Act respecting the Western Assurance Company.—(Hon. Mr. Watson.)

PENNY BANKS BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (198) 'An Act respecting Penny Banks.'

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I should like to know how this guarantee fund is to be raised in the first instance.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The sum of $10,000 has to be subscribed, as the basis of it, by the parties who are getting up this benevolent institution. It may be called a benevolent one, because the government are paying to the bank one-half per cent more than the regular rate. That is supposed to cover the actual disbursement connected with the management of it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The government pay one-half per cent more than is paid to depositors?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

STEEL AND IRON BOUNTIES BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (238) 'An Act to amend chapter 8 of the statutes of 1899 respecting the Bounties on Steel and Iron, and to provide for the payment of bounties on certain articles manufactured from steel.'—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—Yesterday when this matter was under discussion I desired to call the attention of the House to some figures with reference to these bounties, and I take the opportunity to do so now, so as to complete the observations which I then made. I know, of course, that there is no chance between both sides of the House, of having this Bill rejected, and as it is part of the government policy, I might be torn by conflicting emotions if it were. On the 17th of this present month the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) was asked what was the amount paid as bounty on iron and steel each year, ending the 30th of June, from 1890 to 1903, both years inclusive, and he submitted the following statement to the House:

Years ended June 30.	Pig Iron.	Steel.	Puddled Bars.	Total.
	$	$	$	$
1890.	25,697 27			25,697 27
1891.	20,153 05			20,153 05
1892.	30 294 37			30.294 37
1893.	93,896 48			93,896 48
1894.	125,044 49			125,044 49
1895.	63,383 96			63,382 96
1896.	104,104 84	54,498 52	5,611 17	164,214 53
1897.	66,508 69	17,366 16	3,018 82	86,893 67
1898.	165,654 25	67,454 03	7,705 78	240,814 06
1899.	187,954 35	74,644 28	17,511 02	280,109 65
1900.	238,296 14	64,360 29	10,121 10	312,777 53
1901.	351,259 07	100,057 74	16,703 09	468,019 90
1902.	688,769 11	84,609 79	17,710 48	791,089 38
1903.	670,339 74	721,923 86	9,541 18	1,401,804 78
	2,831,355 81	1,184,914 67	87,922 64	4,104,193 12

In 'Hansard,' No. 80, on the 13th of July, the Minister of Finance also brought down a return in which he showed how much money for the last year had been paid. He was not able at that time, the accounts for the fiscal year not being closed, to give the full statement which Sir Richard Cartwright gave for the preceding years, but he was able to give the following information up to that date :

1. The total amount paid for bounties on iron and steel during the last fiscal year, so far, is $1,245,382.25, which includes $147,022.91, deferred from the previous year.

2. The amount paid to each company has been :

Pig Iron.

Dominion Iron and Steel Company..	$386,337 98
Hamilton Steel and Iron Company.. ..	90,314 73
Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company..	38,973 05
Canada Iron Furnace Company..	87,472 22
John McDougall & Company..	4,598 40
Deseronto Iron Company..	12,409 20
	$620,706 18

Steel Ingots.

Dominion Iron and Steel Company..	$499,625 51
Hamilton Steel and Iron Company ..	36,792 21
Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company..	79,851 59
	$616,269 31

Puddled Iron Bars.

Hamilton Steel and Iron Company..	$ 8,406 76

The total amount received by the Dominion Iron and Steel Company alone was $885,963 out of the $1,245,382 paid up to that time. Of course, my objection to bounties is that bounties are a form of protection, the most objectionable to my mind. I differ from the hon. member for Hastings on that. I think it is a more objectionable form of protection than levying the duties over the country altogether, and although the hon. gentleman behind me (Hon. Mr. David) gave me some consolation from John Stuart Mill. If I remember right, the position which Mill then took was withdrawn from the later editions of his books, and he did not remain an adherent of that heresy through his life. I hope he died in a state of glory. I merely bring these figures forward in support of the position I took yesterday, reminding the House that as the years go on, the amounts which will have to be paid will have to be increased, the demands will become greater, and I fear we can never satisfy the demands of gentlemen who are getting this money so largely out of the public treasury, and who get it so easily.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But those bounties expire by gradual diminution.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—The point I made yesterday was when the Finance Minister in 1898 brought down his scheme for bounties, that was an extension which he declared ought to be a finality, but this year he has brought down a further extension, and an increase of the articles on which the bounties are to be paid. I feel my humble effort in this direction is like Mrs. Partington's endeavour to sweep the ocean off the shore with a broom ; but I call attention to the fact that this is an evil which is likely to grow and will not expire with time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend recognizes it has already been productive of good in these cases.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—Where ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the establishment of works at Sydney, Collingwood and Sault Ste. Marie.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—That is a detriment to Canada.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is believed that before the year 1907 these concerns will be on such a footing that they will be able to live without this aid. They would not have been started without this aid, because from the figures read by the hon. gentleman from St. John, it is quite apparent since the establishment of the bounties, which commenced in 1883, the progress was very slow, scarcely moving, until we increased the bounty in 1897. That was the first thing that gave the industry a stimulus in this country. When Mr. Whitney and those associated with him were going to establish an industry at Sydney, they only did so on the assurance that they would receive bounties. That started the industry. Will any one contend that has not been of value to Canada? Even the unfortunate concern at Sault Ste. Marie has given an important name to Canada. The general consensus is that under proper management that industry will flourish and be an important one in this country.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I listened to the address delivered by the leader of the opposition last night on the subject of bounties, and comparing it with adopting a system of protection. In my humble opinion, if there is any raw commodity that Canada has and wishes as a country to develop, it is very much better to develop it by granting bounties than by a system of protection. In the first place, take the question spoken of last night, the bounty on lead. We do not consume anything like the quantity of lead we produce in this country, and by producing it under a system of bounties we can find an outside market and build it up so that it will be able in a few years to live without a bounty. A bounty is the most prudent and honest system that can be adopted for developing anything for which we have the raw material. If we develop the lead industry by imposing a duty, those who use lead have to pay enhanced prices. But when we develop by a bounty, we pay it out of the gross revenue which is collected from all classes, grades and conditions of men. As I said before, the leader of the opposition uses no lead, and if he uses no lead he will pay no duty; but he wears a plug hat and on that he pays a duty and a percentage of that will go to help to develop the lead industry. Another man wears something else on which a duty is paid, and a certain percentage of that duty goes toward developing the lead industry. My hon. friend wears a good suit made of English worsted, and from the duty which he pays on that a certain portion is taken to develop the lead industry. Now, that is a prudent policy, and it strikes all consumers of imported goods. I say that is a right policy—more particularly is it right just now, because the revenue of the country at this moment is buoyant—the surplus is twelve or thirteen millions of dollars. It is prudent, therefore, on the part of the government to bring into existence industries for which we have the raw material, and put them in a position where, after a few years, they will be able to live themselves. If we had a population of some eighty millions, like the United States, very large users of lead and tin, we could very well develop an industry by putting on a duty; but where we have a limited population such as ours, and a limited number of consumers, it is a different thing. In the United States, for instance, they put a duty on tin so high that they crushed out all foreign tin and laid a heavy burden on the users of tin in the United States for many years. But they developed the tin industry, and now it is able to compete with Great Britain. Great Britain's tin industry was virtually wiped out by that policy, and the operatives had to come across to the United States and seek employment in the tin industry there, because the manufacture of tin in England was seriously interfered with by the very heavy duty put on in the United States, and because the United States had gone into the production of tin. The United States is successfully competing with England in the markets of the world with tin, but the industry was established under a protective duty. Would they have ever done it without that? Certainly not. If you have a large population and large consumption of any article for the manufacture of which you have the raw material, you can encourage the industry by a duty, but where a population is limited, and where the consumers are limited, the most prudent policy is to grant a bounty carefully until the industry gets on its feet and is able to live without a bounty. The same argument applies to pig iron. Where would the pig iron industry of this country have been to-day without a bounty ? The leader of the opposition I know is strongly devoted to the principle of protection. He knows that under the government of which he was a member himself they vitalized the pig iron industry by granting a bounty. They did that for years, and I commend them for the wisdom of the course they took, although I am not a protectionist to the extent of loading down the people who consume the product with a heavy duty in order to produce an industry. But wherever a country has a raw material essential for the production of something that is in common use, and it is lying in the earth unused, if you can bring it into use by means of a bounty, you are doing a prudent thing in building up the industries of the country and bringing into use raw material that otherwise would be latent, and you are giving employment to the people. The bounty under these conditions is a justifiable method of producing an article for which we have the raw material.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—I do not desire to engage in any lengthened discussion on this matter ; I simply wish to enter my protest against bounties on lead or upon anything, and I dissent entirely from the views expressed by my hon. friend opposite who advocates bounties as being preferable to a protective duty. The principle is identical. There is no difference whatever. It is the taking of money from the entire populace to put it into the pockets of special individuals. That is what it amounts to. Now, so far as the advocacy of the principle of bounties is concerned, look at the position of the sugar bounties in Germany. If my hon. friend who has just spoken desires an illustration showing that it is for the benefit of the people of Germany that those bounties were granted, let us state the facts. The people of Germany have been paying to supply cheap sugar to the people of England. Is it wise that we should follow that practice and that the people of this country should pay a bounty on pig lead in order that the manufacturer may sell it cheaply abroad ? Is that desirable ? By no manner of means. What was the condition of things in England ? England has been able to buy the cheap sugar of Germany and use it to produce jams and other articles which they have sold back to the Germans at a profit. Of course that condition does not continue to-day, but England profited for many years by the folly of the Germans. Applying the question of lead bounties to the people of Canada, if the people of Canada were to derive a benefit as a consequence of paying those bounties, there might be some argument in favour of it, but my hon. friend says they are not using lead to any great extent, and it is not because the people of Canada are going to be benefited very much, but the producers of lead are going to get the benefit by being enabled to sell lead cheaply abroad. If there is anything sound in that policy I am unable to see it. A protectionist necessarily has a diseased mind, and when he wants an argument he has to go and get it somewhere, but a sound argument is simply this : we have products which are natural to Canada, which Canada can produce as cheaply, or perhaps more cheaply, than any other country, and the people of Canada are best engaged in producing that which is natural to Canada and which can be produced without any artificial means. If we are going to carry out the policy of giving bounties to its logical conclusion, then for all our native products which cannot be produced any other way you should give a bounty. If you are going to do that, give a bounty to the production of gold ; it is just as sensible as giving a bounty for the production of lead. The gold of Canada was never produced at a profit. Taking the aggregate, it has been produced at a terrible loss. In the aggregate not a dollar has been made by the production of gold in Canada. Would it be suggested for a moment that a bounty should be given for the production of gold ? I do not think it. There is no argument for giving bonuses for the production of lead. It means this, that the Canadian people as a whole have to pay to sustain an industry which cannot naturally sustain itself. It means that and nothing else. Now, as to what the hon. leader of the government has stated with regard to the bonuses paid on the production of iron and steel at Sault Ste. Marie and at Sydney, these are delicate questions. I do not wish to say anything detrimental to these industries in any respect, but I was in the House of Commons when Sir Charles Tupper introduced the first bounty upon iron, and what was his statement at that time? By the granting of these bounties we were going to see from Halifax to Vancouver works established for the production of iron. But did we see that? Not at all. But many years afterwards these two industries to which my hon. friend referred did get into operation, and because unnatural means were used for putting them into operation they have not up to the present been any benefit but are both a detriment to Canada. I hope they will exist notwithstanding that. I should be very sorry to see them suppressed, but the foundation on which they were laid was an unsound foundation and as a consequence they may be both yet a very great curse to Canada. I hope they will not, but the best means to adopt in order that an industry shall prosper is that it shall have a sound basis to start from, and unless it has that sound basis we had better be without it in Canada. The question is a large one. Discussing the relative positions of the producers of the wealth of Canada, the farmer after all is the great producer of wealth. If iron has to be produced in Canada by means of bounties and the farmer has to pay more than he would for imported iron, then iron never can be produced in the Dominion in the interests of the people of Canada. If it can be produced more cheaply without any artificial support, then it will be a benefit to the people, but just so long as it has to be produced by artificial support it will be to the disadvantage of the people and the country. These are the reasons why I am opposed to bounties. I am unalterably opposed to bounties and protection as being adverse to the interests of the great producing and consuming industries of this country and of all countries.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The hon. gentleman in his argument has said that Germany sent her bounty-paid sugar into the English market, and that year by year the people of Germany had to contribute to the well-being of the people of England by selling German sugar in the English market below its actual intrinsic value. The government of England are supposed to be practical, long-headed statesmen. My hon. friend will say they are because they are free traders. Why was it that lately England said to Germany, unless you repeal your bounty system we will put on countervailing duties to meet that system? It was simply because Germany was driving out of existence every sugar refinery in England. They felt that in a short time Germany would have the whole of the sugar refining business.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—Not at all.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Yes, and England itself at last woke up to the fact that unless they made a move in the direction of stopping it, the Germans would kill out the sugar refineries of England. I admit free trade is a grand principle if you can get people to free trade with you, but here we are alongside of a nation which has systematically adopted a tariff to exclude Canada from their markets. Will my hon. friend say if we were to reduce our tariff to a revenue basis and let the people of the United States come into this country and sell as they please, that our manufacturers could stand it? They would shut up every manufacturing institution in Canada to-day. Here is my hon. friend who runs an agricultural implement establishment. The United States competition would put him out of business, and they would destroy every industry we have if we permitted them to do it. I never was a protectionist from choice, but I am a protectionist to prevent outsiders from ruining our industries. If the nations would free trade with each other, I would say, 'All right, we will meet them in open competition'; but when other nations adopt a policy to shut out of their country everything that they can produce themselves —everything we have to send them, then I say, under such conditions we are bound to adopt a policy to counteract conditions we have to contend with, whether we like it or not. Canada is bound to see that her industries are not wiped out of existence, simply because the conditions which surround us are such that if we were to adopt the policy suggested by my hon. friend, we would not have a cotton factory or a refinery or any other manufactory in a short time; but it would please my hon. friend because he appears to be a free trader above everything.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—My hon. friend has never known himself; he has been a protectionist all along. When any gentleman says that if a country will free trade with me I am willing to free trade with him, that man is a protectionist, not a free trader. The protectionist is a man who says 'I do not care how foolish another country is, I shall not impose duties upon the population of my country for the benefit of the few.' That man is a free trader, but the other is a protectionist.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Then Mr. Balfour is a protectionist.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—As to Canada being in danger from the United States manufacturers, I dissent absolutely from that idea. The importation of free commodities into this country will not hurt the farmers. The United States agricultural products coming into Canada cannot hurt the Canadian farmers. We produce a surplus and sell it abroad. If all the agricultural products of the United States passed through Canada, it would be only to find a market in foreign countries. Would it hurt the lumbermen? Not at all. Would it hurt the Canadian miners or the fishermen of Canada? Not at all. These are the producers of the actual wealth of Canada. If it hurt the cotton king, who cares? He never had a right to exist in Canada. Every pound of cotton produced in Canada has been produced to the serious detriment of the Canadian people. It would have been better for the Canadian people to have voted every man manufacturing cotton in Canada a bonus to stay idle, and Canada would be much better off. But we must not get into a discussion of the whole question to-day. I simply want to answer my hon. friend's question as to why England has taken the position it has against Germany and other European countries giving bounties on beet sugar. Germany is not the only country that has given bounties for the production of sugar. Belgium and France were in the same position. The reason is because of the pressure brought to bear on the Imperial government from the British West Indian Islands. That is the reason and the whole reason, and England in doing so, will suffer seriously as a result for her colonies. There are men to-day in England who are crazy enough to think that they are going to punish the people of England for the benefit of the other colonies. I am one of those Canadians who think too much of my own country to think that the Canadian people would ever ask England to levy duties which will be for the benefit of Canada, but for the crushing of the poor people of England. I am absolutely opposed to the suggestions which are made in England which will impose duties upon the masses of England for the benefit of Canada or any other colony. But I simply desire to answer my hon. friend as to the reasons why England is doing what I think is a folly in not allowing Germany to slaughter herself by supplying England with cheap sugar.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This discussion I must confess is somewhat interesting to me, as it will be no doubt to those who hold the same opinions as I do upon trade questions. It is extremely gratifying to find so many gentlemen in the present day in accord with the system that was adopted by the late government and which they condemned so vehemently. The speech made by the hon. Secretary of State, is one that might have fallen from the lips of the strongest protectionist in the country. He actually and bona fide justified the voting and granting of bounties at its inception in Canada. And therefore, through that, he has expressed confidence to that extent in the government of which I was a member, and which had something to do with the imposition of the bounty system upon the people and who inaugurated what is termed the National Policy. I am glad to find that my hon. friend from Wellington is following in the wake of the hon. Secretary of State. I do not think the minister without portfolio is exactly in accord with his colleague upon very many questions, for the reason that we have found him, even during this session and previous to it, voting in a way diametrically opposed to him. One would rise on one side and the other on the other. That is admitting a freedom of thought and action in a government that is supposed—because it is a mere supposition—to be governing the country under the principles of responsible government.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Will my hon. friend be a little specific and point out wherein the minister without portfolio differed from his colleague the Secretary of State upon any question of principle or government policy, or any important measure? I assume the hon. gentleman allows me to have my private opinions on legislation of all kinds, but where it comes to a question of government policy I desire the hon. gentleman, instead of indulging in this badinage, to be a little specific and point out wherein I have departed from that general rule of responsibility and of unanimity in the principles of the government in respect of public questions.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Unanimity is a good word under the circumstances. We had a Bill before us yesterday which, when a vote was being taken, the hon. Secretary of State told his followers was a government Bill. My hon. friend who sat to my right, who is in the opposition, remarked to me, 'Well, the government will have to be sustained on this occasion by the votes of the opposition,' as one of the government is voting against the other member, and they were. My hon. friend without portfolio voted contrary to the vote given by the hon. Secretary of State.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Would my hon. friend permit me. It is within the recollection of my hon. friend the Secretary of State as it is within my recollection—and I am sure it is in the recollection of every member of this House who noticed that little incident—that the hon. Secretary of State and myself voted in accord on that occasion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—All I have to say is that it is within the recollection of this House that upon two occasions during the discussion of this Railway Bill which we have been considering for so many days, the two hon. ministers voted on opposite sides. He can reconcile it to his own conscience or to his own views, and I have no objection to what course he takes. Upon one occasion yesterday the hon. gentleman voted upon a question and the hon. Secretary of State sat still. My intention at the time was to call for a division so that we would have the pleasure of seeing them recorded in opposition to each other. My hon. friend asked me if I desired to deprive him of his private and individual opinion. No, I do not but I tell him that as a member of the government, no matter what his private opinions may be, the moment the government decides upon any policy and crystallizes that policy in a Bill his duty is to support it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Or leave the government.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Quite right.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Just as he pleases; but he has no right under our system of government to come to a legislative body and exercise his own individual opinion and vote in accordance with it.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Quite right. I ask the hon. gentleman to be specific and point out wherein I voted in that way.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Keep your temper, and you will get on better. Take your medicine coolly and nicely. We will cover it with sugar. We will give you a sugar-coated pill next time, if that will be swallowed easier. That is not badinage.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—No, it is rubbish.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I want to say to my hon. friend from Rockland and my hon. friend opposite me, that I differ from them both. My hon. friend has laid down a principle that I do not think ought to be accepted. He wants to make a portion of the population pay for that in which they have no interest, and which they do not consume. I am opposed to that principle. The principle of protection is that the man who consumes the article upon which the duty is paid pays the duty and he has a right to pay it. If he will drink champagne, let him pay the high duty upon it, and not ask me or any else who does not drink it to pay for it. I differ from my hon. friend when he says the two principles are identical. They are different in this respect, that the man who pays the duty and consumes the article contributes to the revenue and pays for what he uses. When a bounty is paid in support of any industry, the whole community is taxed to pay it, even the man who does not use or require it.

It being six o'clock, the committee rose for recess.

After Recess.

The committee resumed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not intend to pursue my remarks at any length, but simply for a short time, to give my opinion of the action of the English free traders in reference to the sugar bounty, and also to call attention to the fact that the establishment of the iron industries was declared by one of the gentlemen to be a detriment to Canada and to the remarks made both by the hon. gentleman from Wellington and the hon. gentleman from Rideau upon this question. But I do not feel inclined either to occupy the House or to talk to the benches at any length. I can only repeat my congratulations upon the conversion of the government, and the Secretary of State in particular, and the hon. member for Wellington to protectionist views. While I might differ from some of the doctrines laid down by those hon. gentlemen, I am not at all prepared to differ from the defence of this Bill made by the hon. Secretary of State. It must have been a matter of gratification to any one who was a party to the granting of bounties in the first place, to hear the hon. Secretary of State express his approval of what was done, and to point out the great benefits that had resulted to the country from the granting of these bounties which is, to a certain extent, an objectionable form of protection. With that fact I am quite content to let the matter drop, and allow the Bill to proceed without further discussion. We might very well, in looking round here, defeat the Bill if we tried, but in deference to the expressions of opinion by the hon. Secretary of State, acquiesced in by the free trader who sits to his left, no matter what his individual opinion may be, we will take it for granted that they will proceed in the line of improvement and that their intellects may suggest still further protection. Experience teaches the whole of us, and if the hon. gentlemen sitting before me advance as rapidly in the future as they have advanced in the last six years in the line of the policy which has done so much for Canada, they will be greater protectionists than myself, and that is saying a great deal. I hope we may all live to see the result which we expect to follow from the increased bounties to be paid. Still, I frankly admit that I am strongly of the opinion expressed by the hon. member for St. John (Hon. Mr. Ellis) that they will not have that lasting effect that is anticipated and predicted by the hon. Secretary of State. A good all-round heavy duty that would secure the home market would have the same effect upon the products of iron and steel in this country as it has had upon the same industries in the United States.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That they would be able in a very few years to produce an article in Canada, cheaper than it can be produced in the United States, from the fact that they have the coal, the iron, and the stone necessary for the proper fluxing of the ores, and there is no reason in the world why, with the shipping facilities that they have, iron being carried from the furnace by a small tramway and dumped into a vessel, they could not compete with any part of the world. I hope the result predicted by the hon. Secretary of State may be realized. I repeat, I would much rather see a good high protection without bounties, believing as I do that it would be a much greater benefit to the industries themselves and would result in supplying our own people at as cheap rates as those which prevail in any other part of the world, and that the surplus would find a market abroad. With these remarks I may say that I do not propose to oppose the Bill.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. McKAY (Truro), from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

BOUNTIES ON LEAD BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (139) 'An Act to provide for the bounties on lead contained in lead-bearing ores mined in Canada.'

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understood the minister to say that pig lead could not be produced profitably in this country while the price in England was less than £15 per ton.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—I said £12 10s. was the average price in England for the last twenty years. It would perhaps be correct to say that lead cannot be produced profitably in Canada when the price in London is under £16.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Bill provides that when it exceeds twelve pounds ten shillings the bounty is to be reduced.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Yes, relatively.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I notice also that power is taken by the minister to regulate the bounty. It may be exercised on behalf of the producers, or in the other direction. Do I understand that if the price of lead in London, England—because I see London is the market which is to govern the price of lead—remains under twelve pounds, that is, if it was eleven pounds nineteen shillings, the minister would not have power to reduce the bounty; but that if it went one shilling beyond the twelve pounds he could reduce it. That would be the practical working of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—The reason the price is fixed at twelve pounds ten shillings is because that has been the average price in London for the last twenty years. Twelve pounds ten shillings in London means $2.70 per hundred pounds, plus 75 cents. This bounty would give the producer of lead in this country $3.45 per hundred pounds. Every ten shillings that the price goes up in London the bounty is reduced by ten cents per 100 pounds. In other words, if the price of lead in London is thirteen pounds, that is $2.80 per 100 pounds, the bounty is 65 cents, which gives $3.45 per hundred pounds. No matter what the fluctuations of price in London, provided it does not go below £12 10s., the bounty will give the same price to the producer in Canada, $3.45 per hundred pounds. So when lead would go up to sixteen pounds a ton,—and it has exceeded sixteen pounds several times in the last five or six years—they would be obtaining the same price, that is $3.45 per hundred pounds, without the bounty and they would be paid no bounty. The price in London is easily obtainable, as it is officially recorded from day to day. As a matter of fact, all the lead that is sold by mine owners to the smelters in the Kootenay country is paid for from day to day at the London price. All lead ore sold to smelters, the lead product is paid for, when the ore is delivered, at the London prices for that day. It will work out easily. It is a new feature of the bounty system. It is impossible, under this arrangement, for the bounty ever to exceed the maximum of $500,000, while it is possible it may be very much less by being dependent on the price of lead in London, and it is impossible under this system for the lead producers of the Kootenay country to make exorbitant profits in consequence of an advance in the price of lead, because there is the relative reduction in the bounty as the price of lead advances.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What is the limit?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—When it reaches sixteen pounds the subsidy disappears on that transaction. A mine owner selling ore to the smelters to-day would get no bounty at that price; but if to-morrow the price should drop ten shillings, he would get a small bounty.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I)—It would appear as if the object was to limit the quantity of lead produced by the mines in Canada, because it says in one subsection:

> If at the close of any year it appears that during the year the quantity of lead produced, on which the bounty is authorized, exceeds thirty-three thousand three hundred and thirty-three tons of two thousand pounds, the rate of bounty shall be reduced to such sums as will bring the payments for the year within the limit mentioned in section 1.

According to that, it would be in the interest of the miners to limit their production so that it would not exceed that quantity on which bounty is paid.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—It depends on the market price whether the mine owners would combine to limit the output. Of course, it will be apparent to my hon. friend that, as a given amount of money is being appropriated for the purpose of the bounty, at a given price per 100 pounds, necessarily the quantity of ore that is to be benefited by that bounty must be named. The quantity mentioned in the clause is exactly the amount multiplied by 75 cents per 100 pounds that would consume the five hundred thousand dollars bounty, and the more ore produced over and above that, the less the bounty to the producers because no more than five hundred thousand dollars would be paid.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—The hon. gentleman said this bounty was given at the request of the miners. I saw it stated in the press, and in resolutions at various meetings of boards of trade and miners, that it would be much more beneficial to them to have a protective duty than a bounty—that it would encourage people to embark their capital with the prospect of the work being continued indefinitely, but a bounty, such as is proposed under this Bill I think will not have that effect. It will only encourage them to go on to a certain extent and for a limited time, and the probability is, as the bounty is reduced and the money expended, the work in the mines will stop after they produce the quantity which will earn the full bounty for there will be no inducement to go on. The minister in introducing the Bill said there was no market abroad for the lead product of our mines. I see by the returns given in the Statistical Year Book that there has been a very large export of lead from the Dominion within the last year or two. Canada produced in 1901, 51,900,958 pounds of lead, valued at $2,349,387. There were exported in the same year 65,561,823 pounds of lead contained in the ores, and the chief portion of that export went to the United States market. The value of the total export in that year is given as $2,512,061, so that there must have been at that time a very considerable demand for lead ore in the countries to which it was sent. It was sent mostly to the United States, and also to Chili and other countries, so there must be more demand abroad for it than the hon. gentleman intimated last night.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—I think my hon. friend said, in his opening remarks, that I stated last evening that this bounty was being given at the request of the mine owners of the country. My hon. friend must have misapprehended my remarks, or if I expressed myself so as to give that impression, I was not as clear as I had intended to be. There is no question that in the early agitation for government assistance to revive the mining industry of the country, the mine owners of the west, in conference assembled on several occasions, notably at the city of Sandon, which is in the lead-mining belt of British Columbia, and at the city of Nelson on another occasion, after long deliberation and a full discussion of the question, advocated the adoption by the country of the Dingley tariff as it exists in the United States on lead and the products of lead. The mine owners were not altogether unanimous for a long time on what form of help would be most beneficial to the industry, but finally, as I have said, they arrived at that decision. Now, as the House knows, the government decided early in the session, in fact very early in the session, that the tariff would not be touched at all this year. Without saying the government had any intention, even had they revised the tariff, of touching the lead duties, I think it probable that had there been a revision some of the incongruities in the lead duties would have disappeared. We do not need to take the doctrine of free trade or protection in this matter to show that, in so far as lead and the products of lead are concerned the tariff as it exists to-day is in some respects inconsistent. When these items in the tariff were first adopted, there was no such thing as a lead industry in the country. In fact I believe that pig lead, which is the raw product of some of our manufactures, is admitted into the country at 15 per cent ad valorem, whereas corroded lead, which is the raw product of the paint mixtures, being the white leads and the red leads for paint purposes, is admitted at 5 per cent. That is rather anomalous inasmuch as the raw product, the pig lead, pays 15 per cent and the manufactured article, the white lead, only 5 per cent. The government having decided not to revise the tariff this session, the next recourse was to help out the industry by giving it a bounty. This proposed help to the mining interests of the west, is I repeat, perfectly acceptable to all interested in the business, to mine owners, smelters and refinery men. The refinery men in British Columbia, I might say, are the Canadian Pacific Railway, as the only refinery we have in the province is owned and operated by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, that refinery being situated at Trail. So much are they impressed with the importance of this bounty, with the certainty of its accomplishing results that they have in view, that they have voluntarily relinquished the bounty which they had hitherto been receiving of five dollars per ton on lead refined in the country. There has been on the statute-books of this country, and there is now, an Act giving a bounty of $100,000 a year to lead refined in Canada. The refinery of British Columbia, feeling that if the industry was encouraged, if the mining was resumed and the ore smelted in the country, is ready to take its chance of being able to get, for refining purposes, all the bullion it can handle. I do not know that we need discuss just now what, after all, is a matter of opinion, that academic question of whether protection on lead ores would be more beneficial than a bounty. For my part, while I have given some considerable thought to the question of duties on the products of lead ores, I am bound to say that I am more strongly inclined to think that the bounty, as we have offered it in this Bill, will be infinitely more beneficial to the industry in the west than even the Dingley tariff which our friends, the mine owners, originally proposed should be established.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is where the hon. gentleman is mistaken.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—I may be mistaken.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the hon. gentleman's opinion.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—That is my opinion. We must remember the fact that the entire consumption of lead for all purposes in this country is less than fifteen thousand tons. I am bound to admit that it is growing rapidly.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How much did the hon. gentleman say ?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—I was speaking approximately. I was told it was 14,000 tons. I think probably it is less than that, but it is growing rapidly. With the filling up of the North-west, naturally the amount of paint used will be largely increased, and I think one-half the consumption of lead in this country is in the form of paint. When we remember that the entire consumption of lead in this country is less than 15,000 tons and the mines of British Columbia alone, operating at their normal capacity, could easily supply 30,000 tons, we can understand the situation. The figures quoted by my hon. friend are probably nearly correct, although I thought they applied to the year 1900 instead of the year 1901. However, that is immaterial. The highest output we ever had was thirty-three thousand and some two or three hundred tons and that was in the year 1900-01, since which time the output has been gradually diminishing until last year it was approximately about 5,000 tons, which was practically no output at all. I do not know whether the returns are all in or not. but I received this information and these figures from the representatives of the mine owners who were here this summer on this question of bounty.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—In 1902 it was 23,000,000 pounds.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—That is 10,000 tons. I was making comparisons between the bounty and the duty. If the consumption of lead is only 15,000 tons and the output 30.000 tons with the possibility of increase to almost any extent—we could make it 50,000 tons in a year or so—I think the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island will see that while we might have increased the duty to give the Canadian owner the market, and I think that could be easily done without any great hardship on the consumer, still, if we are to enable them to sell their surplus abroad at a profit, we would have to increase the duty to an enormous extent. It is for that reason I think that in this case the bounty system is much preferable to a change in the tariff.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman must have been furnished with figures not at all in accord with the record. The hon. gentleman told us in his opening remarks that the combination in the United States had resulted in a policy of non-purchase of the Canadian ores or Canadian lead—that they refused positively to purchase it.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—That is true.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It may be true, but the latest figures laid before the House do not bear out that statement. I have the Trade and Navigation returns before me. My hon. friend gave figures for the year ending June, 1902, and he has just said that the total product was 14,000 tons. That multiplied by 2,000 gives 28,000,000 pounds.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—I did not say the total product was 14,000 tons. I said the total consumption of lead in Canada year by year was 14,000 tons. I said to make it ample call it 15,000 tons.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understood the hon. gentleman to say the output of the mines was that.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Oh, no.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then of course my remarks in that respect would not apply, but the hon. gentleman did say in his opening remarks that the United States combine resulted in the non-purchase of Canadian lead and lead ores. If my hon. friend will turn his attention to the details of the Trade and Navigation returns for the year 1902, the last laid before parliament, and turn to page 323 of the exports, he will find that last year we exported no less than 30,613,704 pounds of lead, that we sent to Great Britain 589,720 pounds, to Belgium 5,301,485 pounds and to the United States, the country where the combination existed not to purchase our ores or the products of our mines, no less than 24,722,499 pounds. We can scarcely reconcile the statement made that lead industries of the United States have entered into an agreement not to purchase Canadian lead, unless that combine has been organized since the 30th June, 1902. These are the latest returns. Of pig lead we exported very little, only 200 pounds, and that went to St. Pierre. Now if you turn to page 143 of the imports, our market must have been tolerably well supplied, for I find that we imported very little lead of any kind. The manufacturers of lead—that is old scrap, pig and block—the only part, I suppose, which would interfere with our market—we imported from Great Britain 23,670 hundred weight, and from the West Indies, two hundred weight, and from Newfoundland, five hundred weight, and from the United States 98,421 hundred weight. I am giving these figures as they appear in the Trade and Navigation returns, which I have no doubt are correct. Then bars and ingots of lead from Great Britain 15,196 hundred weight, and from the United States 2,980 hundred weight. That is the whole, unless we take the lead pipe, a manufactured article. Taking the lead pipe, we find Great Britain sent us 149,523 pounds, United States 51,351 pounds, making a total of only 201,054 pounds. These are the figures as they are given to us by the government, and they show that the United States, as in the past, whatever it may be in the future, has been really the market, notwithstanding the high duties, for the product of the lead mines in this country. It will be observed, when you take these figures in the return for 1902, that they are largely in excess of those quoted by the hon. senator from Prince Edward Island, for the year 1901. So that it shows an increase in the output of the mines and the export of lead, to say nothing of the consumption in Canada, which would be very little here. I am not aware—perhaps my hon. friend could tell me—whether there are any refineries except the one to which he has referred conducted by the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—That is the only one.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That refinery, one would be led to conclude from the very small importations that have taken place during this year ending 1902, must be supplying the market of Canada tolerably well. So much for the figures. Unless my hon. friend can show that the combination to which he refers has been organized since 1902, it is difficult to understand how he reconciles these figures with the statements he has made. Let me ask him one or two questions with reference to this matter. The intention of this Bill, I should suppose, was to encourage the refining of lead ores in this country.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Not directly.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is not the intention ?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—No, excepting incidentally, of course.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the conclusion I came to from reading it. To my mind, that is one of its deficiencies. If we grant a bounty or expend public moneys for the purpose of producing an article, it ought to be to encourage the refining industry. If a high bounty was given for the refining of ore, or a tariff was enacted by which you could establish these industries, then the effect might be and would be that which has been indicated by the hon. Secretary of State as the result of giving a bounty on iron. Then there must be some system adopted by which the government, before paying the bounties, have to ascertain the actual value of the ores, because the first clause which we are considering provides a bounty of 75 cents per cwt. on lead contained in the lead-bearing ores mined in Canada. What test do you propose to put them to? Are they to be analysed?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Certainly.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Take a sample or the whole of it? It will be observed that this bounty is not for the purpose of establishing the industry in this country, but for the purpose of assisting the miners in mining ores, which must of necessity be exported to some part of the world; or is it proposed to separate the metal from the rock before it is exported? Do you take the rock and test it, because I can easily see the difficulties that might arise from that? You might be working a mine and have a pocket that contains extremely rich ore with a large percentage of silver in it, and you might mine half a dozen feet, beyond that, and turn out ore that would not be half its value. Unless there are very rigid and strict regulations as to the test of the intrinsic value of the ore from the amount of lead it contains, my hon. friend will see, and know from his experience in mining, that it would be subject to a great deal of abuse.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—My hon. friend has fallen into a series of errors.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Let us hear them.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—He is usually well informed on most matters, but not so on this subject, and though I have given it considerable thought and study myself, a year ago and six months ago, I must confess that there are a great many things in connection with the intricacies, if I may so speak, of mining that I am not well informed on. But my hon. friend undoubtedly has not even given a superficial look at this question. I made the statement generally, and without the quotation of any figures or any official information, that the lead mining industry of the province of British Columbia was at its highest in the year 1900 or 1901 when we produced, as I said, some 32,000 tons of lead. I made the further statement that in the year of our greatest prosperity and previous to that time, most of our lead ores were sold to smelters in the United States, that in consequence of a combine having been formed by the American Smelting Trust and that trust having refused to longer purchase the lead ores of the province of British Columbia, our industry rapidly declined. My hon. friend, to disprove the accuracy of that statement, quoted the figures of last year as to the amount of lead in the ore shipped out of British Columbia. When I said that I thought the output of the province for the last year of which we had returns was about five or seven thousand tons, I had reference to 1902-3, for which we have not the figures, and my hon. friend has not disproved anything of what I said with respect to this. If he will quote the entire returns he has in his hand every statement made will corroborate what I said. The growth of the lead industry in the province of British Columbia is clearly indicated by these figures. Away back in 1892 we shipped to the United States 60,000 pounds, next year 150,000 pounds. Another year we shipped 18,000,000 pounds. That is the lead in the ore, which was determined by assay. In 1897 we shipped 30,000,000, in 1898, 43,000,000, in 1899, 34,000,000 pounds, in 1891 we shipped 57,952,613 pounds to the United States. In the following year, 1902, we sent 24,722,000, which was 12,000 tons and last year we sent practically nothing to the United States. I am quoting from page 374 of the Trade and Navigation returns. My hon. friend was not fair in his argument. He tried to show that the industry was not lagging in British Columbia when we were shipping to the United States large quantities of ore.

The most of the ores in the Slocan country are what are called wet ores, that is with a high percentage of lead, and they want a certain quantity of that to smelt their ores, which are dry ores, and they buy a certain quantity of our wet ores for that purpose and that purpose only. With the exception of that, there has been very little ore sold of late to the smelters of the United States. The hon. gentleman says this is to be paid to the mine owner simply for the purpose of taking out ore, and that it will not encourage any industry in the province of British Columbia. My hon. friend forgets this will be paid for the mining and smelting of ore in British Columbia. That is another of the intricacies of this question, the large industrial work connected with mining. The industry that employs the most men is mining, second, transportation, third, smelting and the refining of it is the last. The work is putting it into bullion. The bullion is the metal from the ore—the silver, the lead and the zinc, all in one mass. That will be done in British Columbia under this bounty. Then the bullion is sent to a refinery and the metals in it are separated. We have in British Columbia started, as a consequence of the bounty to our refining industry, a small experimental refinery at the town of Trail, where the bullion is refined by the new process of separating metals. It has been remarkably successful, but up to the present stage it has been largely experimental. To the credit of the Canadian Pacific Railway, be it said, who put up the money to experiment along these lines, this is one of the first electrolytic processes of lead refining successfully carried on on this continent, I believe. Now, that it has been proved a success, the refinery is to be enlarged. Its present capacity is only 5,000 tons a year. It could not handle one-sixth of the quantity to be refined until it is enlarged, and it will be enlarged. My hon. friend will see that the effect of a bounty to lead will be to encourage, first, the mining of the lead ore; second, the smelting of lead, and necessarily, the refining of that lead in the country. I am sure if the Trail refinery is enlarged and can take care of all the lead produced in the country, all the lead mined and smelted in British Columbia will be refined in Canada also. I do not know if I have covered all the points raised by my hon. friend.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, and more too.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—The hon. gentleman will see with respect to the effect of this bounty in establishing a smelting industry, he was overlooking that point. He will also see, if he refers to the figures again, that while the mining of lead ore in the west gradually increased up to a certain year, and decreased since then, there must be a cause for it so far as our lead industry is concerned. My hon. friend must recollect this fact: All the lead in ores taken into the United States was smelted there, refined and exported, and the amount of duty paid on them was refunded, less ten per cent. The United States is a great producer of lead itself, and can produce all the lead it requires and does not need to buy our lead ore except for the purpose of keeping the smelters going. The United States does not import any lead except for the purpose of smelting and sending it abroad to Canada and other markets.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No one in the House is more pleased to receive information than I am, and more particularly from a gentleman who is so well posted, not only on the refining of lead, but on the mining industry, particularly in his own country. I would suggest to him, however, the propriety of trying to listen to what a gentleman says when he is quoting figures and making statements. If he desired to be fair to myself, he would have remembered and stated that the figures I quoted, as I mentioned, were the output of the year ending the 30th June, 1902, and that his statement could not be correct as to the effect of the combine to which he referred unless it had been formed in the year 1903, after the close of the year 1902. I do not presume to express an opinion upon the results of the lead industry for the fiscal year which ended on the 30th June, 1903, for which, I said, we had no returns. If the hon. gentleman had been fair he might have saved himself the trouble of making the explanation he did, and it was quite unnecssary for him to play the school master. I stated the facts before me in the departmental return, and qualified it by saying I did not know anything of the last year.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—In 1901——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not talking of 1901.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—In 1901 we sold practically 58 million pounds of lead to the United States and in 1902 we sold 24 million pounds. Will the hon. gentleman explain the falling off, if it was not the result of the combine ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The figures before me, and they are furnished by the hon. gentleman's own government, are over thirty millions, and not what he has stated. He might just as well do as I did, confine himself to the years and the figures to which I referred, and not try to mystify the statement.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Thirty millions is the total. Of that 24 millions went to the United States. We are speaking of the United States.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Are not those the figures I quoted ?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—No, the hon. gentleman said 30 millions.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, I said 30 million altogether. I then went on to show where it was sent. Has the hon. gentleman no memory ? If he has not, I advise him to get a phrenologist to rub up his bumps so that he may remember what is said to him. The admission the hon. gentleman has made would suggest the propriety of imposing a direct high protection on this article. The hon. gentleman tells us that we sold no lead to the United States for consumption there, that the people of the United States purchased it for the purpose of smelting it in their own smelters to export to other countries, and that their country gives them a drawback of duty paid when the refined article is imported. What they are doing in the United States in reference to lead we do in Canada in reference to articles not manufactured in Canada which we use in the manufacture of agricultural implements. While they pay back duty less 10 per cent, we pay back 99 per cent of the duties paid on these articles which enter into the manufacture of implements which are exported. That is the very principle on which the Conservative party inaugurated that system for the purpose of enabling articles to be manufactured in this country. The result is, the industry gives employment, in the city of Toronto alone, to over 1,000 artisans and labourers. That industry never would have been in existence had it not been for the policy which we then adopted, and which hon. gentlemen opposite condemned in the most vehement manner. As soon as they came into power, they very wisely—I think they did right—increased the rebate to manufacturers to the extent of 99 instead of 90 per cent, the sum retained by us. They did more than that ; they encouraged the manufacturers of agricultural implements by allowing the Conservative tariff, the National Policy tariff, to remain precisely as it was when they came into power, and as it had been established by the Conservative government. But what did they do in addition to that ? They reduced the duty on the raw material out of which the article was manufactured, and added just in proportion to that reduction to the protection of the article, and that policy has enabled that industry to flourish in a marvellous manner during the last five or six years. If hon. gentlemen look at the Table of Exports, they will find that industry is growing rapidly every year. That is the system I approve of. That is the system adopted in the United States. If they, by a combine, are going to ruin our lead industry, that is their business ; we should adopt a policy that will enable us to mine and manufacture the lead and export it, just as, by means of a drawback, the manufacture of agricultural implements has been increased in Canada. I accept the figures which the hon. gentleman has mentioned. I do not dispute them, but the reason I called attention to this point was to show that the United States had imported from Canada to the extent of nearly 25 millions of pounds for the year ending 1902, and to mix that with what has been done before and that has been done since is, I think, hardly treating the subject fairly. Next time the hon. gentleman reads me a lecture about quoting figures, I ask him to stick to the text and I will have no fault to find with him. I would rather have seen, instead of a Bill of this character—though I do not object to it—provisions for the payment of bounties so arranged as to establish in this country refineries to take the bullion and reduce it to pig lead, and then to see sheet lead, lead pipe and manufacturies of that kind established. My hon. friend from Wellington says that men like myself pay no duty upon lead, and therefore are not directly interested and that for that reason I ought to be willing to contribute my mite. If the hon. gentleman had a daily newspaper run with type-setting machines, he would find his bill for type metal, which is made from lead, zinc and antimony, run up pretty high in the course of a year. If he wants verification of that, let him apply to the hon. gentleman from London (Mr. Coffey) and the hon. gentleman from St. John (Mr. Ellis). As we have some machines in the establishment with which I am interested, I know what it costs us for lead and the waste of material, and if there was a good high duty upon it we would pay our share. I would not object to that. My hon. friend opposite (Mr. Ellis) would, for he is a free trader and I am not.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (Prince Edward Island)—The hon. gentleman from Vancouver said that British Columbia lead was sent to the United States for the purpose of being smelted there, and that it was not sold in the markets of the United States. If that is the case, I am surprised to see the figures in the exports to the amount of two and a half million dollars, and again figures in the imports for very nearly the same amount. It is rather peculiar, if it was only really sent across the border for the purpose of being smelted or refined, that it should appear as a valuable export of the Dominion. It is also stated that some fourteen or fifteen thousand tons of lead are consumed in Canada in the course of the year. That lead is not the production of Canada. The greater part of it is imported into the Dominion. If there were a duty of 25 per cent imposed on that article those who are interested in the mining and manufacturing of lead might supply the home market. But when it comes in on low duty, it is evident that the Canadian manufacturers of lead have not been able to secure this market. The importer brings lead from outside countries; whereas, if there was a reasonable duty on lead, our own people would get the benefit of the market to the extent of whatever is required in the Dominion itself.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—What would the hon. gentleman call a reasonable duty?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—The duty in the United States is at least five times as much as the duty we impose in Canada, and I am sure if we had that or a duty of 25 or 30 per cent more on lead, our own people mining and manufacturing lead would have the advantage of this market, which they have not under the present circumstances.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken. If he will look at it, three-quarters of a cent is really a duty of 25 per cent.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—The duty on some kinds of lead is five per cent.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—The duty in the United States is two and a half cents a pound, and here it is three-quarters of a cent. I was in Denver about two years ago, and I found that the reason we do not sell lead in the United States is that they have a surplus. They have also immense concerns in Mexico and have all the lead they can sell and a good deal more, and that is why they have not been buying lead from us. If we put on a duty of five cents a pound it would not make a particle of difference.

The clause was adopted.

On the third clause.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to have an explanation of this clause. It reads:

> If at any time it appears to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council that the charges for transportation and treatment of lead ores in Canada are excessive, or that there is any discrimination which prevents the smelting of such ores in Canada on fair and reasonable terms, the Governor in Council may authorize the payment of bounty, at such reduced rate as he deems just, on the lead contained in such ores mined in Canada and exported for treatment abroad.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—The business of mining and smelting ores, as I said before, is somewhat intricate. The miner mines his ore, and the smelter owner who buys his ore, visits the mine and buys the ore there—he takes the ore from the dump to the smelter, and smelts it, and pays the miner on the assay value.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—On the value of the lead contained in the ore?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—The value of the lead contained in the ore on the assay value, and that is approved by the miner himself. Every mine owner has an essayer, and every smelter has an assayer, and they have to agree, because a difference of a very small fraction would make a great difference in the total. The transportation of ore, and the smelting of ore are in the same transaction. That is, the purchaser of the ore, buys from the miners at a certain figure, according to assay value, less transportation and smelting charges. In other words, the smelters quote the figure to the mine owner. It will be readily seen there is a possibility there for the smelter man and the transportation man, by a combine, to increase charges and discriminate against the mine owner, and practically absorb this bounty. If the smelter man and the transportation man say 'We are not getting enough for our work,' they could raise their charges so as to practically take the whole of the bounty. You say if we find there is any discrimination against the mine owner, then we permit the ores to be shipped to other smelters, which of course, would be outside the country, and we will pay such a bounty as we think proper under the circumstances. Of course, it would be very greatly reduced. The clause is there as a slight hint to the smelter man and the transportation man to deal fairly with the miner.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 4,

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Gentlemen interested in metallurgical investigation, have found out a process whereby they can corrode lead in the ore. The lead at present has to be taken out of the ore and corroded. Now, they say they can take the crude ore, and corrode the lead by a new process. In the event of that being found successful, we have made the provision contained in this clause.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The only fear I have is that it may be an encouragement to foreign transportation companies to take ores out of the country. The provision, as explained by the hon. gentleman, being a deterrent to the home transportation companies perhaps is quite correct. They may learn by this that their trade would be interfered with if they entered into an arrangement for the purpose of robbing—because it would be nothing more or less than robbery—the actual miner. The fear I have of this is as I have indicated. I can conceive it possible that railways and steamers would adopt such extreme measures as that indicated, which would destroy, to a very great extent, the profits which should arise from the mining of these ores. Still it is not a bad provision under the circumstances. On the contrary, I think it is a good protection to the miners to prevent any attempt of that kind; but if all these ores were smelted at the mines, or near the mines, and all the other metals taken from the ores, then the profits would be much greater to the miner, because the expense of transportation would be upon the pig lead, only. Some of the ores run 24 per cent, some 50 per cent—some larger and some smaller. The freight charges on the ore, however, are the same, on the weight.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—The process of concentrating is carried on in all the large mines. They have machines for crushing the rock and separating the paying rock from the barren rock.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I think the hon. gentleman from Moncton was mistaken, and perhaps I was a little off myself, in the statement made about lead. I see here that the duty is five per cent on quite a number articles of lead. On scrap and pig lead, 15 per cent; lead bars, 25 per cent; nitrate and acetate of lead not ground and tea lead are free.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I want further to congratulate the government on having adopted in this Bill the policy pursued by the late government, and which has been condemned so often—that is, governing by Governor in Council. It was always an objection on the part of the hon. gentlemen opposite, giving so much power to the Govenor in Council.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—How else could it be done?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is a question I should liked very much the hon. gentleman's party to have answered at the time to which I am referring. I remember very well some years ago when the opposition used to object to this mode of legislation—that Sir George Cartier used to tell the House of Commons 'There is nothing like the Governor in Council.' My hon. friend has adopted that policy. I think the hon. gentleman for Marquettte used to kick up a row about it, but like the rest of his colleagues, he has been converted, and we welcome him to our ranks in this particular, as well as in some others.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

CABLE NEWS SERVICE BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (240) 'An Act to assist in establishing and maintaining an independent and efficient Service of Telegraphic News from Great Britain for publication in the Canadian Press.'

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—This Bill was discussed somewhat on the second reading, and I think meets the approval of my hon. friend opposite, and will not require any explanation. The first clause provides for paying $15,000 a year for three years, ten thousand for the next year and five thousand for the next. This assistance to the press of the country has been given at the solicitation of the newspapers principally of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. I think on the whole it is a wise proposition and ought to work out well.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Might I ask, before we proceed with this clause, who are the parties, if any, that have been appointed in Great Britain to forward the news to this country ?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—As my hon. friend will know, the newspaper men of the country have formed the association. I am not sure who the president is, but I think Mr. Brierly of the Montreal 'Herald' is the secretary. I received a communication from him about it. They pay the expense of cabling news from the old country and delivering to certain points here.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Has any one been appointed ?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Yes. The service is now in operation. I think there are two trained newspaper men in London, England, sending out despatches every day. It is scarcely in good workable shape yet, but it will become so very soon. I understand the association have determined to fix a charge of $375 a year to each man using the service, for the morning and for the evening edition—$375 for each service. The understanding is that the newspaper men pay dollar for dollar, and we are proposing to pay half the expense. The whole matter, in the operations and working out of it, is left to the newspaper men.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I was disposed to think, when I saw that this undertaking had been gone into, that the object was a desirable one. The news which is filtered through the United States agency has not always been just the kind of news that suited us in Canada. It was very much coloured by the medium through which it had passed, and it did seem that an independent service which would not be coloured in that way was very desirable. I am glad the hon. gentleman has stated that the Canadian Press Association were just getting to work. I must say that I have been much disappointed in the results up to the present time, and I hope with further experience the despatches will be more calculated to meet the views of the ordinary common sense man. If the despatches we get reflect the views of the average Englishman with respect to Canadian affairs, it is rather something to be regretted. Really some of the despatches are, to my mind, not such despatches as we might expect to get. What we want is good honest news of what is going on in England, and I do not think we need to get the impression which certain people in England have about Canada, people who know very little about this country and whose views are of very little consequence or value to us. They may be valuable in this way : they may show that we ought to send some Canadian school masters over to England to instruct the people. I really am very much disappointed in the character of a great many of the despatches.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was about calling the attention of the House to the character of the news that has been cabled from England to Canada since the organization of this press bureau, if such it may be termed. We had a very important item cabled to us the other day by a cable from London that General Laurie had left London to come to Canada on account of his health. General Laurie at the time of the arrival of that cable, was in Ottawa. If that is to be the character of the news that is to be sent, we might just as well save that money.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—I do not think that was a portion of the Canadian service.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It came from England as a press despatch.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—But that is not our service.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman stands about as well informed on that question as I do. Here is some news that has been cabled across the Atlantic since the provisions of this Bill have been announced to the world and to the press. Whether they are responsible for it or not I do not know, but I am going to read to the House the character of the information which we have received. It states that the news service tells Canada so and so, then that must be the service which we are subsidizing. The item reads as follows :

> The new service tells Canada that one London paper remarks on 'the growing difficulties in which we are being involved by the growing importance of the colonies,' that the Spectator contains a letter charging Canadians with the crime of regarding J. B. with bumptious or pitying contempt, that the Globe and the Pall Mall Gazette 'disparage conditions in Canada' ; that no self-respecting Australian will allow himself to be spoken of as a colonial without protest,' that Doctor Howard, Lord Strathcona's son-in-law (a Montrealer) has stated that Canadians are so certain of the justice of their Alaska boundary case that they will be very much incensed if the British commissioners don't back it to the last gasp,' and that the Liverpool Mercury ironically inquires whether the Dominion will make war on her own account if her view of the Alaska matter be not maintained by the imperial representatives. This exacerbates anew the family squabble that the industrious service excited last week by telling John Kanuck that John Bull was in a fine rage because John Kanuck was reported to suspect Lord Alverstone of a disposition to give away the Canadian case by way of placating Uncle Sam.

If that is a character of the news we are to have for an expenditure of $15,000 a year, I think the government should exercise some little supervision over it and I do not know of a better suggestion than that thrown out by his honour the Speaker that we should have some practical Canadian newspaper man sent from Canada to collect the news which he knows would be of interest to this country. Everyone has deplored in the past the news which has been sent from England through the United States, which we have all look upon as being filtered through United States sources. That is not what we require. I am very glad that this service is established. I hope that it may have the effect that is anticipated, but unless we have good practical men who understand their business and know what newspapers require, what the country requires and what is actually news which would be of interest to us, it would be utterly useless. No man knows better than one who has been connected with a newspaper how important it is, even in his own locality, to have a reporter for local news who has a knowledge of what news is, and having that knowledge knows how to condense it and put it in a shape which would be interesting to its readers. My hon. friend who has charge of this Bill has had as much experience as I have had in that matter, and it is one of the difficulties of all newspaper proprietors and publishers, and we all approve of the action of the line suggested by the Speaker. It was something I intended to suggest myself, as practical men who have had something to do with these matters know the importance of it if any benefit is to be derived from the expenditure.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—Under the Bill we are appropriating $60,000 for this service to be spread over a period. I think the government could not very well refuse the application, inasmuch as it came from members of the press of both parties and perhaps it is a reasonable effort on the part of the government to meet public opinion with regard to this question, but a great deal of the news is trivial—his honour the Speaker did not use the word—that has come so far, and some of it a duplicate of news already published. I read in the Canadian Associated Press despatches that the Minister of Militia was to be invited to a dinner in Boston. I read that ten days ago in the Boston newspapers, though it may not have been published in Canadian newspapers. There is one thing to be said, it is an aspiring effort on the part of the Canadian Press, and, on the other hand, it is well to remember that the United States newspapers, while there has been criticism of them for the character of the news, are often represented in Europe by men of great knowledge, gentlemen speaking four or five languages, who are diplomatic and able to get at the secrets of courts, who understand political movements, who can foresee events and therefore do this service as effectively as it is done in the United States. We want men of considerable ability. I think the government, in view of the fact that they are expending this large amount of money, should keep in some way a supervision over the business, and if it be not properly done—if the country does not get better value than so far received—the subsidy should be brought to a close. I heartily agree with the proposition, and perhaps we may get some benefit from it, still, I would not recommend continuing it on the news so far received.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (Prince Edward Island)—An appropriation of this kind will, no doubt, receive the approval of hon. gentlemen who are connected with the press. We have heard this policy eulogized by gentlemen who are more or less interested in or connected wtth the press.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Go for the pressmen.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (Prince Edward Island)—It is not easy to go for the press; it is one man against a thousand, so I shall let them down without any further remark. But, I think it is an unnecessary expenditure of the public money to appropriate it for the purpose of obtaining such news as has been given out to us as a sample of the information we are to get over the cable. We are lavish in our expenditures this year, I must say. We are giving bounties not only for steel, iron and lead, but for the purpose of obtaining news which would be obtained, I presume, just as quickly and as readily through the United States despatches as we can get it through this new arrangement.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not as truthfully.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (Prince Edward Island)—Judging by the specimens coming over the cable up to the present time under the new arrangement, I must say that, although it was stated by the hon. leader of the opposition that we all agreed about this matter, there is one exception at any rate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I withdraw that.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (Prince Edward Island)—I must say I do not believe in this appropriation. Bounties are, I think, indefensible in almost any case. Certainly this is one for which nothing can be said. It is an expenditure which the country will not justify or approve of. It is all very well for the press to get what they can out of the government. It is certainly to their advantage, but I doubt very much whether the country is going to benefit from this expenditure.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. WATSON, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The report was received.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN moved the suspension of rule 40 in so far as it relates to this Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Allow me to call attention to rule 41. It is not necessary to suspend that rule under the circumstances. Under the heading of public bills, rule 41 reads as follows:

'No Bill shall be read twice the same day; no Committee of the Whole House shall proceed on any Bill the same day the Bill is read the second time, and no Bill shall be read the third time the same day that the Bill is reported from the committee when any amendments have been made in committee.'

Now there are no amendments made to this Bill, and the inference would be that the suspension of the rule was unnecessary.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman is correct.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is my view of it, but I did not choose to raise the question.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—I move that the Bill be now read the third time.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

THIRD READING.

Bill 242 'An Act to amend the Mounted Police Act of 1894.—Hon. Mr. Scott.

JUDGES OF PROVINCIAL COURTS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (250) 'An Act to amend the Act respecting the judges of the Provincial courts.'

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Bill recites the salaries at present paid to judges in Ontario, except the two last on the list, and the judges in the North-west Territories. The reason for the Bill is that at the last session of the Ontario legislature they passed a Bill adding two judges to the Exchequer Court—a court similar to the Common Pleas and King's Bench divisions. No judges have been appointed and I do not know that there will be, but in compliance with the action taken by the legislature of Ontario, we put ourselves in a position to appoint them.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The first clause deals with the salaries of the judges of Ontario. We cannot, of course, amend or alter the Bill here, but I think we are justified in making any observations which naturally suggest themselves in looking at the list. If hon. gentlemen will look at the list of salaries, they will find that the chief justice of Ontario—who is the highest in rank of all the judges of the province of Ontario, and is the chief justice, as I understand, of the Court of Appeal—receives a salary of $6,000, and the other four justices of this court receive $5,000; that the salary of the chief justice of the King's Bench is the same as that of the Chief Justice of the Court of Appeal, and that the salaries of the other judges of the divisions of the High Court of the Court of Appeal. It would strike one that, prima facie at any rate, the judge of the Court of Appeal ought to have a higher salary than the judge of the court from which the appeal comes to him. That is not the case in Ontario, and it is not the case in Quebec. But that does not tell the whole story in the province of Ontario. In the province of Ontario the judges of the High Court—there are three divisions of the High Court from which appeals go to the Court of Appeal—receive certain sums in addition to the salaries which are paid by the Dominion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—$1,000.

Hon. Mr. POWER—And consequently, from a financial point of view, the position of the judge of one of the subordinate courts is very considerably better than the position of a judge of the Court of Appeal. No matter what one's opinions may be as to the salaries of judges, it must appeal to the common sense of any hon. gentleman that it is not a becoming, or logical, or sensible sort of arrangement, and I regret that the government have not seen fit to provide some additional remuneration for the judges of the Court of Appeal in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I do not propose to deal with that part of the question. I do not pretend to speak for any other province except New Brunswick, but there is a very strong feeling that there is an injustice to the judges of the province of New Brunswick, inasmuch as they are not paid the same salaries as the judges of the Ontario and Quebec courts. There seems to be no reason whatever why there should be any difference. The hon. leader of the opposition says—and I have no doubt he is correct—that some of them receive more than is declared by the Bill. I take this opportunity to express the opinion that that is a very great injustice to the judges in the maritime provinces. The hon. Speaker seems to think the judges of the High Court of Justice, Chancery Division, or whatever division he refers to, the King's Bench, are not as great in the judicial line as the Chief Justice and the judges of the Court of Appeal. That may or may not be so, but it does seem to me to be very wrong to make any difference whatever between these judges so far as the ordinary judges are concerned. I observe in the second clause of this Bill that the Chief Justice of the North-west Territories is to have no more pay than the Chief Justice of the Exchequer Court division, or any of the chief justices in Ontario. I do not see any reason why, in any part of this country, the Chief Justice in one province should be treated differently from the Chief Justice in another, and while there might have been in the early days of the country a reason for it as regards the Chief Justice of British Columbia, where it was supposed that living was more expensive, yet my observation is that New Brunswick is one of the most expensive provinces in the country to live in, that a judge living in Ottawa or in Quebec can live more cheaply than he could in that province, that at any rate the railways and all the other arrangements which have come in since confederation have equalized many differences, and while I am not in very good odour with the judges in New Brunswick, yet I feel it my duty on this occasion to say that they are entitled to be paid the same as the judges of any other province.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (Cape Breton.) I wish to put in a plea for the county judge court in the county of Cape Breton. I refer to Mr. Justice Dodd. I believe he has been the hardest worked judge in the maritime provinces for the last three or four years, since these great industries started in the Island of Cape Breton. The general opinion of the barristers of Cape Breton is that Justice Dodd does more work than any of the Supreme Court judges of the province. I may say I brought this matter to the attention of the late Hon. Mr. Mills two or three years ago, and he promised to give it his consideration. He told me privately that he believed Mr. Dodd was entitled to a much larger salary than he was receiving. I am quite sure that his jurisdiction extends over a greater population than the county court judge at Halifax, or the county court judge at Charlottetown, and yet these judges receive larger salaries. I trust the government will consider this case specially and allow Justice Dodd a larger salary. With regard to the cost of living in Cape Breton at this time, I believe it is higher than at Halifax, or even at St. John, N.B., and therefore, on that ground also, I trust the government will consider the case of Justice Dodd.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understood the Secretary of State to say, when he introduced this Bill, that it did not increase the salaries of any of the judges in Ontario ? Am I correct in saying that ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The law, as it exists now, provides certain salaries for the different judges.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I looked it up the other day and there is no increase.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then why are they all included ? Is it for the purpose of consolidating the laws.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—As to the Speaker's remarks in reference to the Chief Justice of the Court of Appeal in Ontario, I do not know what the new arrangement may be, but the impression in the minds of the people—and it has been the opinion of the Bar as well as the people generally—is, that the position of Chief Justice of the Court of King's Bench is the highest court. Does the new law make the Court of Appeal the highest court, I do not know, but there is no difference in salary. If the Chief Justice of the Court of Appeal in Ontario, be paid more than the other Chief Justices, it would be on account of the honour of being the Chief Justice of Ontario, and not the Chief Justice of the King's Bench or the Chancellor of the Exchequer Court. For I notice the Chief Justice of Ontario is to receive $6,000, the Chancellor of Ontario, $6,000, and the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, $6,000, and the Chief Justice of the Exchequer Division—that I believe is a new division

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He also, is to receive $6,000. They receive from Ontario $1,000 extra. Does that apply to all of them ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not sure. The admission of the Heirs and Devisees Act is one.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I know they were granted that by direct vote, and Sir John Macdonald objected to the paying of judges an extra sum by any provincial court, as that duty devolves exclusively, under the constitution, on the Dominion government. In order to meet that objection, they passed the law to which my hon. friend refers, and paid them $1,000 extra for work in the Heirs and Devisees Court. That gives the chief justice the same salary as the judge of the Supreme Court receives, $7,000. I am not finding fault with that, or finding fault with placing the different justices in the whole Dominion on the same basis, but the question suggests itself to me whether the salaries should not be commensurate with the work and duties performed by the different judges. If the system which now prevails is based on that principle the question would at once arise, whether the judges in the Maritime provinces have the same amount of work to perform as they would have in this province or in Montreal. I shall reserve what remarks I may have to make on the general character of the Bill for the third reading when, it is understood, we shall have an opportunity of expressing our opinions. But I may say this, while urging increased salaries to judges of the higher courts, it does seem to me that the amounts paid to our county court judges are altogether too small. These judges are appointed at about $2,400 a year. I am speaking of my own county, and I daresay other hon. gentlemen can verify it so far as their own counties are concerned. The county in which I live extends thirty or forty miles east and west. and about one hundred miles north. The county court judge has to travel about one hundred miles north to hold his division courts. There is as much expense attending the living of the County Court judge as there is that of the Supreme Court judges, and it seems to me $2,400 a year is altogether smaller than the sum which should be paid them. Our deputy heads of departments work from 9.30 a.m. till four or five in the afternoon. In justice to many of the deputy heads, I may say they work as arduously and as many hours as the ministers—but speaking from my own experience, I have had deputies who would work until 12 o'clock at night if necessary ; we pay them $4,000 a year. I do not find fault with that, but when we compare the position they occupy, and the work they have to perform with the enormous amount of work a county court judge has to do, and the extent of country he has to travel to hold his courts, it is due to them that the country should increase their salaries, to at least $3,000 per annum. It is a dignified position, and one which should be properly remunerated and maintained. The answer to that is this : let a County Court judgeship become vacant, and you find a dozen applicants besieging the government for the appointment. The County Court judgeship of this county (Carleton) has been vacant for a long time. The County Court judgeship of Lennox has been vacant for a long time. Why are they not filled ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They are filled now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Both of them ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Lennox and Addington has been filled. Mr. Madden has been appointed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There has been a squabble over that one ever since the late judge died, and it has been a question who was best entitled to it for political services, and what appointment would create least difficulty in the party. Judge Madden is the most unpopular man that could have been selected and, politically speaking, I am glad he has been appointed. Why is there squabbling over the appointment of a judge for the county of Carleton ? The same reasons prevail today in reference to this appointment, which will be the most popular, and who will bring the most influence to the government. I say in all sincerity, that is a feeling which ought not to influence the government in making these appointments. While upon my feet, I may say it is a great mistake to appoint county court judges from the local bar where they have to administer justice. They have had their practice there, and will have prejudices, and if an outsider were brought in it would be much better. I know it was the opinion of Sir John Macdonald and Sir John Thompson, but unfortunately it was not carried out, and in all probability for the reason I have indicated—political influence was too great. Let a vacancy occur, and you find a dozen men ready to take the position, and once they are appointed they begin to agitate for higher salaries. I shall be very glad to see, in the appointment of judges, the question of politics, race, or religion dropped. They should not be allowed to interfere.

On clause 2,

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Can the hon. gentleman give me any reason why the salary of the Chief Justice of the North-west Territories is lower than the salary of the Chief Justices of the other provinces? From my experience of the North-west Territories and Manitoba and British Columbia, I know that living is much higher there than even in New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—British Columbia is just the same as the Territories.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The salary ought to be $6,000.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Yes. Nova Scotia has no right to kick.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not speaking on behalf of Nova Scotia. I am speaking on behalf of the North-west Territories, Manitoba and British Columbia. I regret to hear the hon. gentleman say the judges there are not entitled to as much as the judges in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—I did not say that. I simply said Nova Scotia had no right to kick, considering our judges do not get as much.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Can the hon. Secretary of State tell us why this distinction is made between the country in which living is really expensive, as it must be in all those new countries?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is based on the assumption that the cases which arise, for instance in the Territories, do not necessitate a judge of as high a standard, as where the character of litigation is more complicated. In the North-west for a long time the president of the court was paid just the same as the others, and I think it is only two or three years ago that a change was made, giving the president of the court an extra $1,000.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Monday, September 28, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eight o'clock p.m.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Before the House adjourns, I should like to call the attention of the government to an article which appears in the 'Citizen' of to-day, and which I shall read to the House:

SOLDIERS ARE KICKING.

Object to a State Church in Canada.

Members of 43rd Regiment do not Approve of Preference Shown One Particular Church in Matter of the Annual Church Parade.

Members of the different units of the Ottawa brigade are raising objections to the proposal of the district officer commanding to hold again this year the annual church parade to Christ church cathedral and St. Jean Baptiste church. The Catholic party goes to the latter church, and, of course no kick is coming on that score, but members of the Protestant communion attached to the evangelical churches object to going year by year to the Anglican church, when, they say, two-thirds of the corps belong to other communions. It will be remembered that a storm was raised over the same question last year, and, while a large number went to Christ church cathedral out of courtesy to the officers, a number stayed outside, and others accompanied the Catholics to their service.

'There is an attempt to make a state church of the Anglican church,' stated a Forty-third man Saturday; we who belong to the other communions object to that course. Two-thirds of the men belong to other churches, and why, from year to year, we should be asked to go to a church with the worship of which we disagree, is more than we can stand. We objected last year and the kick this time is going to be even stronger. There are plenty of other churches just as large and just as much entitled to have the annual brigade service as the Anglican church. Turn about is fair play.'

The reason I direct the attention of the government to this article is owing to the frequency of, what I may term, the disregard to the other religious denominations throughout the Dominion by the officers commanding the Ottawa brigade. Some sessions ago I felt it my duty to direct the attention of the government to an article referring to a similar instance which occurred at that time, Shortly after, or about that time, I directed the attention of the government also to a similar instance which occurred in Halifax when the second contingent was on its way to South Africa and when certain members of that contingent refused to attend the church parade to the Anglican Church. They were placed under military discipline, and it required the intervention at that time, of the Minister of Militia to relieve them of what, apparently, in the estimation of the officers, was the penalty which they had incurred. I would point out that the officer commanding the Ottawa brigade, whoever he may be,' seems persistent in ignoring a well-established regulation taken from the King's regulations, and which is to be found in paragraph 20 of section 3, of the Regulations and Orders of the Militia of Canada, 1898, which makes it imperative that where there are twenty men belonging to any particular church it shall not be optional but it is the duty of the officer commanding to see that those men are marched to their own church. In 1890 a similar difficulty arose in Ottawa and considerable attention was paid to it. The matter was very much discussed in the press, and at that time the attention of the government was called to the fact that the regulations had been ignored and that men had been denied their rights and it was hoped that this would not occur again. I need not point out that the Anglican Church is not by any means to blame that this happens from time to time. The Anglican Church, the same as any other church, is only too glad, I fancy, to throw open its doors, and extend all its offices to those who choose to enter within its walls, but why the Anglican Church, to the exclusion of other churches, should be selected in total disregard of the militia regulations, I find it difficult to understand. It can only be due to the want of knowledge which characterizes some of the officers in the militia force of Canada. It must not for a moment be assumed that there is a state church in Canada, or that the Anglican Church is an estate of the realm as it is in Great Britain. It must be recognized that all churches occupy a position of equality in Canada. The regulations are framed in recognition of the equality of all churches in the Dominion. I think it is only necessary to direct the attention of the government to this apparently wilful defiance of the regulations of the Militia Department which seems to take place from year to year. I therefore give notice that I will, to-morrow, inquire :

Under what authority the officer commanding the Ottawa brigade has issued, or is about to issue, an order for the annual church parade to the Anglican church, and under what authority such church parades have annually taken place to the Anglican church to the exclusion of other denominational churches, and contrary to paragraph 20, section 3 of the regulations and orders of the militia of Canada, 1898.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I think my hon. friend is mistaken with regard to the militia law. The regulations which he quotes are that the men can go to a church of their own denomination under a non-commissioned officer or an officer, therefore, all they have to do is to call the attention of the adjutant —the adjutant being the proper officer—to the fact that they wish to go to another church, and they are dismissed from the parade for that purpose. The government does not have anything to do with it. The commanding officer could not compel the men to attend a church to which they did not belong, and I am sure he would not ask them to do so. I have seen a regiment turn out for church parade in the morning in camp for service, and afterwards the men fell out and went to their own churches. It is entirely their own fault if they go to churches to which they do not belong.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I might point out to my hon. friend that the contrary was the fact in Halifax, when the 2nd contingent was going to South Africa. The men sought to take advantage of the regulations which permitted them to attend their own church and notwithstanding that the statement is made on good authority, and I believe it to be substantially true, that those men were placed under military discipline, and it was not until the Minister of Militia was asked to intervene that they were accorded their rights. I am not saddling the Department of Militia with this responsibility, but the department should see that the officers in command are not permitted to issue arbitrary orders or any orders which the men might misunderstand as compelling them to attend any particular church. If an officer in command issues an order that there will be a church parade on a particular day to a certain church, the men may fall out, but no commanding officer has a right to issue such an order. There should be no coercion ; there should be no order designating any particular church. The objection is to designating a particular church to which the parade shall be. That is the fault I have to find with those who gave the order in the case to which I have referred. Let the men understand what their rights are. I hope hereafter, that the democratic spirit which underlies all our institutions will actuate the men whenever an attempt is made to coerce them into attending a church to which they do not belong.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—It is incumbent on the officer commanding the corps when on duty to order a church parade, but he has no power to go any further. He cannot order them to go to any church, but he must order them out for church parade every Sunday when serving as militia on duty. If he should issue an order compelling them to go to a particular church, his regimental orders of the day would show it, and the government would be bound to bring him up, because he has no power to do so under the King's regulations, which govern the Militia Act. The regulations are quoted in the Militia Act, and they cover everything which the Militia Act does not cover. The Militia Department have no right or authority to compel the men to go to any church except their own, and therefore my hon. friend will find there has been a misunderstanding in this matter—either the men did not understand it, or they had no non-commissioned officer to tell them to fall out from the ranks and to take them to their own church. The commanding officer would take no notice where they did not claim their rights. I think my hon. friend will find that there could not be any desire to take them to the Anglican Church, although it would not hurt them if they went there.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—There is one view of the question I wish to present. As I belong to a military town, and know something of these matters, and have served some time myself, I think I might enlighten some hon. gentlemen on this matter. The fact is that the church parades are exhibitions, united exhibitions, of the regiments of whatever corps are going to attend religious services on that day. It is not so much for the exercise of religion as it is for the purpose of the men having a parade, and for the people listening to the band and seeing the exhibition. The soldiers themselves do not want to split up the business. If I were commanding officer I should have one church and they would all go to it. Military discipline requires united action and there is not supposed to be any voluntary principle in military matters. Each denomination cannot exercise its own will. Supposing they were allowed to do so, look at the disorder that would result. They come out to show their strength and beauty and to charm the young girls who are looking at them. If they all separated into detachments what sort of an affair would it be ? Who is going to collect them together ? How are they going to divide ? What church will the band go to ? You would have it all confusing. In the city of Kingston there is a church parade of the military several times annually and they all go to one church and they go to the Anglican Church par excellence—the state church of Great Britain if there is such a thing—and I do not know the reason, but they all seem to wish to go there. I never heard the slightest disturbance or whimper and instead of there being any fault on the part of the officers or commanding officer I am bound to say that the fault is among the clergymen.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—A clergyman will get jealous and will not see why they cannot go to his church as well as any other; but I hope no such argument will be used here that it as an offence against a religion or the religious belief of the soldiers. They need not go to church unless they wish. They are told it is a parade, and they go voluntarily and seem to enjoy it and there is never the slightest trouble over it in Kingston.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do they always go to the Church of England ?

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Yes, always. Let them have the same sense of politeness in Ottawa as they have in Kingston and there will be no trouble about it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think there is a slight misunderstanding on the part of the junior member for St. John and the hon. member for Calgary. The hon. gentleman from Calgary did not find fault with the Militia Department, but he found fault with what he thought an undue interference on the part of the commanding officer. My recollection of the King's regulations is precisely the same as stated by my hon. friend opposite. It is laid down very distinctly that the religious faith of any soldier is not under any circumstances to be interfered with. When I was on duty, under military rule, when a Sunday parade was ordered the commanding officer turned out the battalion. They all had to go to church. Those belonging to the Anglican Church were told to 'fall out.' Then they would fall out. Those belonging to the Church of Rome would be asked to step aside and they would do so, and so on with the Methodists and Presbyterians, and they would then be marched off according to their numbers to each church by an officer or sergeant or corporal or lance-corporal, as the case may be. That is the way we used to manage it. I am afraid if my hon. friend from Kingston were the commanding officer and attempted to enforce any such rule as he says he would enforce, he would very soon have his regiment disbanded. Why can they not do in Ottawa as they do in Belleville? There also they have church parades. One Sunday they will go to the old Kirk, and the next Sunday to the Methodist Church, and the next Sunday to the Free Church and then to the Anglican Church, and so on. I never heard of any dispute amongst them. In our town it is all done by mutual arrangement between the officers and the men, and the very best of feeling prevails between the battalions. My recollection of the Halifax escapade is not exactly the same as that indicated by the hon. gentleman from Calgary. If my memory serves me right, the difficulties did arise to which he called attention. The Minister of Militia was applied to and he did not, unless my memory is at fault, give any instructions but simply decided that it rested with the commanding officer, indicating that they must settle it between them. What struck me at the time was, that the Minister of Militia, instead of giving that order—instead of evading the question, perhaps that is the better way of putting it—should simply have referred the commanding officer to the King's regulations, and had he done so, he would have done all within his power, and the commanding officer if he had known his duty, would have acted in accordance with those regulations. If the men knew what the regulations were, they could have refused to go to any church whether Roman Catholic or Protestant if they thought proper. They might be compelled to go to church, but they could go to their own church. It is a pity that these troubles occur, because it tends to dismemberment of the force, and prevents that cordiality which should exist between officers and men. If the commanding officer in this city does not know his duty better than to issue an order compelling his battalion to go to any particular church, the sooner he is taught his duty the better, and, perhaps, the fact of bringing this question under the notice of the House will have the desired effect. I have no doubt my hon. friend opposite will call the attention of the Minister of Militia to the matter, and if an improper or illegal—I mean illegal, in a military sense—illegal order has been issued by the commanding officer, I think the Minister of Militia should call his attention to the fact and tell him not to do it again.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not having a military education such as my hon. friend who spoke before me seems to possess, I can only say I am really not familiar with the King's regulations. My hon. friend from Rothesay seems to be an authority on the subject and his answer appears to be a plain one, that the men were free to break from the ranks and go to their own church. However, if there has been any irregularity on the part of the officer commanding in ordering the men to go to any particular church against their inclinations, the Minister of Militia will rectify the matter. I shall call his attention to the observations that have been made and it will probably lead to a removal of the grievance referred to.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I am sure that the hon. gentleman from Calgary feels as I feel, and that he has no intention to make any attack on the district officer, for it might be looked upon as such, and the hon. leader of the government having signified to him that he will look into the matter, I would ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw his motion.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I have no desire to precipitate any acrimonious discussion on the subject, and as the hon. Secretary of State says he will communicate with the minister on the subject, I have no objection to withdraw the motion.

The motion was withdrawn.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (253) An Act to increase the Representation of the North-west Territories in the Senate.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Bill (254) An Act to further amend the Yukon Territory Act.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Bill (255) An Act to further amend the Act respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Tuesday, September 29, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

RULES OF THE SENATE.

MOTION.

Hon. Sir ALPHONSE PELLETIER moved that the order of the 24th instant, adopting the report of the Select Committee appointed to revise and amend rules 49 and 50, be declared, under rule 16, to be a Standing Order of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the motion is adopted, for my own information, I should like to know why we adopt it in its present form at this sitting? If a meeting was called why did not the meeting take place in the regular way before the House met? I received a notice of motion calling a meeting at three o'clock sharp. I do not see why we did not have it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Is it not three o'clock so long as it is not four? Is that the only objection the hon. gentleman has to the report?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the regular way would be, we should sit outside of our regular hours.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Although it might have been more regular had the House gone immediately into the consideration of the matter for which we were called together, still I do not think there is any irregularity in taking the matter up now and putting it through.

Hon. Sir ALPHONSE PELLETIER—I did ask the consent of the House before making the motion. The question before the House at the present moment is a proposed permanent amendment to two of our rules, namely, 49 and 50, which have reference to the manner in which notices of application for private Bills shall in future be advertised. It seems unnecessary for me to enter into any further explanation of the matter, as that was done when the report of the select committee appointed for the purpose was placed on the Table some time ago and later on amended and concurred in by the House. Rule 16 of the Senate reads thus:

> No motion for making any Order of the Senate a Standing Order can be adopted, unless the Senators in attendance on the session shall have been previously summoned to consider the same.

The object of bringing the question before the House to-day is to obtain, under that rule 16, the sanction of all the members in attendance at the present session of parliament to the proposed amendments, so that those two rules as amended shall become permanent rules of the Senate in lieu and stead of rules 49 and 50 heretofore in force.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—The objection that I see is that the motion is not a proper motion. The adoption of the report of that committee is not what is required to change a rule. There should be a specific motion that rule No. 56 be repealed, and this substituted for it. If we adopt the report of the committee, there is the appointment of a new standing committee recommended. In my judgment these things should be done deliberately and separately. If there is a committee to be appointed on legislation, that should be a separate motion, so I think, and substituting the one which the committee recommended should be done regularly and in order.

Hon. Sir ALPHONSE PELLETIER—I am in the hands of the House. If his Honour the Speaker decides that it should be done, I have no objection to moving the repeal of rules 49 and 50 and the substitution of the new rules for them.

The SPEAKER—To be very accurate, I think the hon. gentleman from Sarnia is correct, but at the same time, this motion is clear enough. Every one understands it, and it will be the duty of the clerk of the House to substitute the rule which is embodied in the report of the select committee. If I may be allowed to say so, I find that this is really not the resolution which I thought it was. It will be remembered that the recommendation with respect to the alteration of rules 49 and 50 was reported by the Standing Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours—at least, I think so.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—Yes.

The SPEAKER—And this is a report of a select committee appointed to revise rules 49 and 50. I am not aware that there was a select committee appointed for the purpose.

Hon. Sir ALPHONSE PELLETIER—Yes, there was.

The SPEAKER—Then, substantially this resolution is correct, because it will be the duty of the clerk to substitute the rules which are submitted in that report for the existing rules 49 and 50.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The motion of my hon. friend would be in better form if he would simply move that rules 49 and 50 be amended as follows, and then give the recommendation of the committee.

Hon. Sir ALPHONSE PELLETIER—I do not see that it would be better.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Would it not be well that due notice be given to the public of this amendment of our Standing Orders, because it so happens that we amend that portion which deals particularly with those who seek private legislation, and due publicity should be given of the change before another session.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—As a matter of course that is done every year.

Hon. Sir ALPHONSE PELLETIER—Of course it is done, but it will be done more particularly this year.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I should like to ask, for information, whether the motion which has just passed changes rule No. 80 ? That is a part of the report that rule 80 be changed by the appointment of a committee on legislation ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—That is another report. We are not dealing with that portion.

Hon. Sir ALPHONSE PELLETIER—That portion has been already adopted. It has nothing to do with the present one.

The SPEAKER.

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY INDEBTEDNESS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER inquired :

Is the Grand Trunk Railway Company indebted to the government of Canada ?

If so, what is at the present moment the amount of such indebtedness ?

How much for capital ?

How much for interest ?

At what date, on what conditions and under what circumstances was such indebtedness entered into ?

Has the Grand Trunk Railway Company ever reduced in some way such indebtedness, and if so, in what way, and when ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In answer to the first question, yes, there is a debenture account charged up against the Grand Trunk Railway Company to the amount of $15,142,633.34. The interest charged up to date is $10,457,458.01, together with a special account of $7,302.18. The above amounts were taken over from the province of Canada at confederation, and no change has been made in the accounts since that date. The account was incurred somewhere about, I think, 1835 to 1860. It was long before confederation. No claim that I am aware of has been made on the Grand Trunk Railway for it, and in my opinion, none should be made.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Is interest running on to the present time ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I presume so. I got this reply from the Finance Department.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It seems strange that on such an old debt the interest should be only ten million dollars.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know at what rate the interest has been charged.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—What was the original rate of interest ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—At the time the money was borrowed, the rate would probably be 6 per cent.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—What would be the authority for reducing the rate ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know. Canada got the benefit of it four times over, in my judgment.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I suppose the debt is proscribed, anyway ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Has any government since confederation, made an attempt to collect that amount ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think it is not fair for the hon. gentleman to take the minister by surprise in that way.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Perhaps the question should have been put to the leader of the opposition.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Secretary of State expressed an opinion altogether outside of the question asked.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, it was my own opinion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman might have gone a little further and informed the House that a number of Bills have been passed by parliament giving other claims priority over the original loan ; consequently, if the government made an attempt to collect this claim it would be useless, because the preferential stock, anl other issues by the Grand Trunk Railway Company have been so large that this claim is valueless. Those later issues have been under the authority of parliament. and have been given precedence over the government's claim. It stands, however, in the public accounts as an asset. I might express the opinion to my hon. friend that instead of that twenty-five million dollars standing as a liability against the Grand Trunk Railway, it should be wiped out altogether. It is not an asset that is worth the snap of your finger under the circumstances I have told you, and I might say that was my view when I was a member of the government. I am sure if the present government would do it the country would not lose one cent by it and it would place the Grand Trunk Railway in a much more favourable position than it is at present.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Another argument is that it would put the Grand Trunk Railway in a position to make a bigger haul out of the people of Canada than they could otherwise.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think if my hon. friend would give a little attention to the history of the Grand Trunk Railway he would see that it is a blemish on the fair name of Canada, the representations made by the government in this country when some twenty or thirty millions of dollars were raised in Great Britain, and Canada received the benefit of every dollar spent. Trust money in England was invested in the stocks of this company because two or three members of the government of what was then Canada chose to recommend it as a first-rate investment, six per cent interest.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, it was 3 per cent which Sir Francis Hincks pledged himself to pay in the prospectus.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As a result families in England in independent circumstances were reduced to poverty. So that I do not feel that the Grand Trunk Railway owes Canada anything. The account is the other way.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—Have these families, with whom I sympathize, received any benefit from the Grand Trunk Railway ? Have they been paid anything.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not a dollar. It was all swept away and it is not worth a dollar except for floating purposes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—While we are discussing it, perhaps my hon. friend can inform the House whether this amount owing by the Grand Trunk Railway was taken over by the Dominion as an asset of the old province of Canada at the time of confederation—and whether it is still regarded as an asset of the Dominion ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It has been retained, following the system of book-keeping from old Canada. In my judgment it ought to have been wiped out long ago.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Then the actual debt of Canada is so much greater.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I must express my regret that the hon. gentleman has not given a precise answer to my question. We have no answer from the government. We know no more than we knew before. This matter is not directed against the Grand Trunk Railway or in favour of it. There are many of us who are not so old as the hon. gentleman, and who do not know as much about this debt as he does. I think it is fair the government should place before us the circumstances of this case. If the Grand Trunk Railway owe us anything we should know it, and if we owe the Grand Trunk Railway anything we should know it, and I regret that the hon. gentleman has not posted himself properly so as to give me a precise answer.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have answered the questions put by the hon. gentleman as definitely and as positively as I could. I do not know what is remaining, unless he wants me to go into the history of the country from 1852 down to the present day.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Why not ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not propose to do that. I refer the hon. gentleman to the history of Canada.

JUDGES OF PROVINCIAL COURTS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of Bill (250) An Act to amend the Act respecting the judges of provincial courts.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I wish to say a few words before this motion is carried. When this Bill was introduced by the Minister of Justice, about the 10th of August, I find that it went through with a hop, step and a jump without anyone objecting in the slightest. I was astonished at that, inasmuch as there are so many legal gentlemen, and able legal gentlemen too, in the House; but I would observe that we have in this an unprecedented Bill, a Bill which discriminates and a Bill which I think would not be a benefit to the judiciary of the country at the present time. In thinking over this matter it has led me a little far afield, and I hope, therefore, the House will bear with me if I allude to some other matters so as to bring before you thoroughly the position of the judiciary in Canada at the present time and the absolute necessity there is for some change. Every Prime Minister since the days of Sir John Macdonald—and I believe including that right hon. gentleman also—has been most anxious to make some change in the judiciary of the country. They saw that the judges, in the first place, were not sufficiently well paid and that there was some discrimination existing as between the different provinces. However, on approaching the question they seemed not to take hold of it. It seemed as if there was something about it which was repugnant to their feelings. At all events, Sir J. Thompson, Hon. Mr. Mills and Hon. Mr. Mowat, all those premiers in fact let it pass. I think the Senate is the proper place to discuss a question of this kind because it is a Bill absolutely free from politics and the Senate contains a large number of gentlemen well-versed in law, gentlemen who could, by bringing their united judgment together, evolve a measure which would not conflict with the policy of the learned and hon. Minister of Justice, but which would be a sort of suggestion to him. We could bring in a Bill which might remedy the defect which exists, because if defects exist and if there are grievances they should be remedied. There is no reason why they should drag on from year to year without being attended to, and I think I have shown that there are defects, and if I have shown that, I think hon. gentlemen ought to consider it would be worthy of some act or recommendation. If I have not done so—I shall apologize for occupying the time of the House. In looking at this matter, we consider three things, the jurisprudence of the country, the judiciary of the country, and the public. The jurisprudence of this country is the same as that of England. In fact there are only two systems of jurisprudence at present that are recognized by the civilized world. One of these is the Roman law, a law which ought certainly to be perfect. It is the accumulated wisdom of ages, and the most learned jurists have spent their efforts on it. Placing its origin in Egypt, the Greeks took it up. They must have improved it by the wisdom of Solon and the eloquence of Demosthenes. The Greek empire broke up and there we have the prototype of the great British empire to-day, because the Romans took what they wanted, and they said : what we have we will keep. Those two ideas which are thoroughly English were acted on by them. However, it passed through them, and, on the breaking up of the Roman empire, went to the west, and was acted on by the emperors there, Theodosius and Justinian, and came down to the present time. It has also been added to by the extraordinary genius of Napoleon, and it was through him—at least he and the men he had were engaged in perfecting it—it was called the Napoleon code and I believe, to a certain extent, it has an existence in lower Canada. The other code is that which you all are acquainted with, that which we live under. Now I am not going to make any great distinction, but if I were an Englishman, I would be exceedingly proud of English law. I should be proud of it because it is connected with the history of that country from the Saxons down to the present day. If we trace the history of British law we are simply tracing the history of England, not going any further back, not taking up the trial by jury of Alfred, nor the confessions of Edward, considering them as apocryphal. We boast of charters, the Magna Charta of England which should be the pride of England, and two men stand out in connection with this whose names ought to be remembered and revered by everybody. One was Stephen Langdon, who represented the church, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the other was Hubert deBurg, who was the Justinian of England at that time, and one of the most notable men England has produced. We have the most fortunate union of church and state, a union bound to stand for patriotic motives, against the use of arbitrary power by the King, and it would be well if the law as founded upon this was applied to many of the institutions we have at the present time. We have the Habeas Corpus Act, the Bill of Rights and other matters, and portions of them are taken from these old laws. One of the clauses of this great charter was that I shall not steal, I shall not deny nor delay justice to any man in the kingdom. Another was that every man should have a fair trial, that he shall not be confined in prison dispossessed or outlawed without a trial by his peers and that he shall be tried according to the laws of the land. These things hon. gentlemen will see were not accomplished, of course, immediately, but I mention this merely as an attribute of my respect at all events for this great work of the judiciary. I might illustrate the whole of the English history down, passing on to each of the great movements that were made. They did not act on its provisions immediately, but after some hundred years it was acted upon, and has been acted upon down to the present time. Comparing it with the old law, we find that there is a great deal of difference. In order that we should realize the importance of the subject of the Bill before us, we may compare the law of England with the law of France—and France may be taken as the champion of this Roman law. If you examine the two and make a contrast you will see what a great difference there is. I have a paper here with regard to the judges, and I could give the House some figures compiled carefully from the latest returns. Turn to the English law and compare it with that and we will see a great difference. We will see a difference in the mode of conducting trials also, and we find that a number of judges in France will sit on a case, whereas the English system is to leave the trial to one judge. They hold that man responsible. He must be a man to suit the requirements of the position and they pay him a good salary, so the difference is very great. There is first, the Lord Chancellor, who receives $50,000 a year; the Lord Chief Justice of England receives $40,000 a year; and four members of the Court of Appeal of the Privy Council get $30,000 a year each. Then, they have other judges, twenty-three of them, of the Superior Court who receive $25,000 each. The Master of the Rolls receives $30,000. Coming down to the less important ones, the County Court judges, they receive $7,500 each, and eleven metropolitan magistrates are paid at the same rate. So you see the number is infinitely less. Whereas judges number by the thousand in Europe, in England there are comparatively few, only fifty-six county court judges, and you can understand why there is the difference. Not one of them receives less than $7,500 a year, and I find there is no other country in the empire but Canada where a judge receives so small a salary as our county court judges are paid. I have said this much in order to bring before the House forcibly, the necessity for doing something to place the judges of this country in the position that they should occupy, filling the important office which they do. I have examined into the payments to judges in every colony of Britain, and I find there is not one of them outside of Canada which pays so small a salary to its judiciary as Canada does. My authority is 'Whitaker's Almanac.' There is not a judge in any other colony who receives less than $7,500. They have followed British precedent with the object of having the law respected, and it cannot be respected unless you have judges who are capable of inspiring respect, and no man can support the dignity and inspire the respect due to the position on such small salaries as are paid to our judges. People pay great respect to wealth, and if our judges are respected only in proportion to their salaries, the amount of respect must be very small. Now, in Canada there are differences on the bench also. There are four chiefs in the province of Ontario, who receive $7,000 each. The puisne judges attached to the same courts, receive $5,000 each.

Hon. Mr MILLER—The Chief Justice gets $1,000 from the local government and $6,000 from the Dominion government.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—In the province of Quebec we find the same judiciary, but under different names. The province of Quebec has a court of King's Bench, presided over by Sir Alexander Lacoste, who receives $6,000. Sir Melbourne Tait and Judge Casault are paid at the same rate. The Superior Court in Quebec corresponds with the county court in Ontario. There are five judges of the Superior Court who are separate from the others, and who get $5,000 each and besides there are thirty-one judges who may be compared with our county court judges of Ontario. They stand in exactly the same position so far as their work is concerned, but they receive higher salaries. Heaven forbid that I should say a word against the judiciary of the province of Quebec. I consider that they are fairly entitled to higher salaries than they are paid, but, I find that they receive from $4,000 to $5,000 each for precisely the same court work that is done by our county court judges in Ontario, and for which the Ontario county court judges receive only $2,500.

Hon. Mr. THIBAUDEAU (Rigaud)—The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I do not care what title you give them; I take the work they do. I know the character of the work which has to be done, and it is precisely the same as the work done by the county court judges in Ontario. I am only mentioning this as an argument for increasing the salaries of the county court judges of Ontario, and I hope the judges of Quebec and the legal gentlemen from that province in this parliament will assist in having the salaries of the county court judges of Ontario increased. There has not been an increase in their salaries since confederation—I am speaking now specially of the county court judges. They are the men whose cases cry loudly for redress. We know the only people whose remuneration has not advanced are the salaried classes of this country, and specially the judges. Anyone who will figure out the cost of housekeeping must recognize that a judge cannot maintain his household in the style befitting his station in life for the amount that he is paid. I know three judges, very able men, one a gifted son of a most gifted father, Judge Draper, who, when he died, left nothing, not even insurance. The amount paid him was not sufficient to enable him to ensure his life. Instead of superannuating judges they should be given enough to enable them to carry a proper amount of life insurance. The man who now holds the position of judge in succession to Judge Draper had a lucrative practice before he accepted the position. He finds that he cannot live on the salary he receives, yet there is no more moderate living man, consistent with the respect due to his position, in this country. He told me that he has to draw on his private income. It is the same with the rest. It is high time, if the Senate could find it within their power, to endeavour to rectify this wrong. A judge must be a man of education and refinement, a man of spotless character, and a man well versed in the law. The course required of a law student in Ontario, is not surpassed by that of any student in the English-speaking world, and I should like to see our judges receive their due. Some mention may be made of probate dues. We have nothing to do with that, and they do not amount to much. The probate dues are paid by fees, and the Dominion should not shelter themselves behind the fees. Taken altogether, they do not amount to more that $400 a year in a county.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Do the judges receive those fees ?

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—They were to receive the fees, but they were commuted for so much.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is very improper.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—That has been mentioned as a large addition to the income. I hope I have made clear to the House the position of the county court judges of Ontario. I have stated nothing but what is true. This year is not annus mirabilis but an annus tristis. In the first place we have this unfortunate Gamey trial mixed up with politics. It is unfortunate that judges were mixed up in it. It is admitted that it has soiled, to some extent, the purity we have always associated with the judges of the land. My hon. friend from Marshfield (Hon. Mr. Ferguson) introduced a Bill this session to prevent judges from acting on commissions. That was characterized as a political movement. If it was a political movement it would have been perfectly fair to vote it down, but if it was not intended to have any effect of the kind the matter rests with the conscience and honour of the hon. gentleman who brought in the Bill. Next, we have the incident of Mr. Ewart addressing Judge Perdue in Winnipeg. Not since Judge Gascoigne rebuked the Prince of Wales, who threatened him in open court, has there been such a case. I cannot understand why a judge should allow any one to lecture him in the way Judge Perdue was lectured by Mr. Ewart. It is singular that the judge allowed him to go on.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—He was pleased with the remarks.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—If the remarks were offered in an honest, sincere spirit. There is no doubt the gentleman who uttered them is a lawyer of great prominence and ability, and I am told he is a Liberal too.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Ah, that is what I was told. I think he had a right to go deeper into the reasons why judges are sometimes placed in that position. I have had a little experience myself in connection with a loan company which illustrates what I have been trying to point out. I took some stock five years ago in a loan company of which a judge is the president. It is in one of the largest towns of Ontario. I could not find the agent for a time, and when I did find him, I paid arrears and six months in advance, for the amount was small. I found that I was fined two dollars and ninety cents—on the arrears—that was more than the whole of the interest. I asked him to send me a copy of the by-laws, and I found that under the by-laws, the company is allowed to impose a fine if you are one month in arrears, and if you are six months in arrears they can wipe out your interest altogether. Here are the sections of the by-laws under which the fines are imposed :

ARTICLE VII.

Fines and Forfeitures.

Sec. 1. Every member who shall neglect, or fail to pay the monthly instalments, premium, or interest when due, shall pay to the association a fine of ten cents per share on classes A and B stock, &c.

Sec. 2. If any member neglects or refuses to pay the monthly instalments, premium or interest, or fines for a period of six months, the shares, in regard to which such default exists, may be declared forfeited to the association by the directors, and such shares shall revert to the association.

That is a terrible law, and it is a disgrace to this country that such a thing should exist. If a judge can tolerate such conduct as that in a company of which he is the head, if he can allow his agents and managers to charge me in the way I have described, it shows that there is a necessity for a change. I paid in $72 and was to be allowed $73, and there was $2.90 of that for fines. I think a judge should be ashamed of such conduct, and the sooner such a law is taken off the statute-book, the better. What is the cause of all this trouble with the judges ? Politics and insufficient salaries. If they had sufficient to live on as they should, if they had enough to maintain that high and dignified position, which they were intended to occupy and which they do occupy in England, there would never be any such trouble as this. The estimate of the bench in England is such that a judge connecting himself with such a company as the one I have referred to, would be impeached. Politics have nothing to do with judges in England, and the highest lawyers in the land are attracted to the bench. The late chief justice received £16,000, £20,000 and £22,000 for three years previous to the year he was appointed to the bench, and for the portion of the year before his appointment, he had received £10,400. These large incomes are given up gladly because in England judges are so highly honoured; they are the equal of the highest aristocracy of the land for life, and no matter what amount they are earning at the bar they are willing, because of the honour of the position, to serve their country on the bench. Have we no able lawyers or jurists who will be glad to take such positions, and have such dignity and honour on the bench that it will make up for any deficiencies in income there may be connected with it? I think that the English law is the most splendid body of laws that could be devised by man. Blackstone says it is the perfection of reason, but Blackstone used a good deal of blarney when he said that. Bacon says it is based on Saxon custom, moulded by Norman lawyers; it is essentially a national system. It is as national as our language, and as varied. Another man, as great as Bacon—the greatest critic and law reformer and severest critic of existing systems that has ever appeared in any age or country, Jeremy Bentham, has admitted this:

> Confused, indeterminate, inadequate, ill-adapted, and inconsistent as to a vast extent the provision or no provision would be found to be that has been made by it for the various cases that have happened to present themselves for decisions yet in the character of a repository of such cases it affords, for the manufactory of real law, a stock of materials which is beyond all price. Traverse the whole continent of Europe, ransack all the libraries belonging to all the jurisprudential systems of the several political states, add the contents together, you would not be able to compose a collection of cases equal in variety, in amplitude, in clearness of statement—in a word, all points taken together, in constructiveness—to that which may be seen to be afforded by the collection of English reports of cases.

I thought I would read this as it gives an adequate idea to those who are not legal gentleman of the beauty of English law. The more one studies it, the more he becomes convinced of its greatness. It is true it is a sealed book to all who have not studied law, and to a good many who have studied it, but at the same time it is calculated to awaken the highest interest and to give one a great deal of information. That principle which England lays down of giving a sufficient salary and every honour to judges, I cannot speak of too highly. It keeps them free from suspicion of foul play, and when one goes to them for justice he feels that he is getting it from the fountain head. I hope the government will do something for the county court judges of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—After the eloquent and very learned disquisition of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, on the different systems of law, ancient and modern, I rise with a good deal of diffidence to make one or two plain, prosaic statements of fact. In the first place, my hon. friend has appealed to this House to do something with regard to ameliorating the sad condition, he would lead us to believe, of the judges of this country in respect to their official remuneration. Now, my hon. friend must know that this House has no power to initiate legislation of that character; that a Bill of that character would be a money Bill, and must originate in the House of Commons, and therefore this one plain, prosaic fact comes very much in collision with the beautiful disquisition of my hon. friend upon the principles of Roman and English law. Yet I listened to the hon. gentleman with a great deal of pleasure. His speech showed much research of an abstract kind, but its relevancy to the Bill before the House, I found it difficult to understand.

With regard to this question of the judges' salaries we have had a great deal of talk in both Houses, and without any reference to my hon. friend, I would say that there was a great deal of nonsense talked about it. I am in accord with the learned leader of the opposition in the other House who recently uttered some very sensible remarks in regard to this matter. I have never said anything one way or the other on the question, because, in my opinion, the condition of the judges of this country is not at all as bad as we hear it represented to be sometimes. When judges go upon the bench they know what salary they are to receieve. Very few of them make large sacrifices of emolument when they go there, and the majority of them none. I admit that in some great centres of population, such as Montreal and Toronto, and perhaps Quebec the judges sacrifice their professional incomes for the honour, dignity and ease of the bench. They do not expect as big a salary on the bench as they would make in the struggle and turmoil of the bar. They make that sacrifice with their eyes open, and I do not think they are entitled to the commiseration that we find so frequently given to them, not only in this House but in the other Chamber. I consider that the great majority of the judges of this country are well and sufficiently paid, but I can understand how in expensive centres where social duties have to be maintained, the salaries of the judges are inadequate, and I could understand some discrimination being made in regard to those living in the large cities as compared with those in the country districts or small cities. A judge of the Superior Court in Quebec receives $4,000 a year. The chief justice of that court living in Quebec receives $6,000 a year. I believe $3,000 would be a better salary to the puisne judge in his district than $6,000 would be to the judge living in Quebec or Montreal.

Hon. Mr. THIBAUDEAU (Rigaud)—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The money would go further and give more comfort. He could keep his horse and wagon in the country district. Lawyers in those country districts live cheaply, but in Montreal, Toronto and Quebec besides the expense of living there are social duties to be considered. The great trouble has been that this matter has not been taken up in the proper way. Sir John Thompson felt that some of the judges had good grounds of complaint. I believe the present Minister of Justice feels the same thing, but the difficulty is that the minister has not the moral courage to increase the salaries of the deserving ones without increasing the salaries of the judges who do not deserve it, and who have no claim to it whatever. If an impartial investigation were made of the salaries and duties and the expenses of living of all the judges, it might be found that out of the whole judiciary fifteen or twenty of the judges of this country would deserve to have an increase of salary, and that the others were getting just as much, or perhaps more, than they were making at the bar. In the smaller provinces of the Dominion very few first-class lawyers make more than $4,000 a year by their practice, and is nothing to be allowed for the dignity and ease and prestige which the bench gives to a lawyer when he becomes advanced in years? Many a man sacrifices a large practice for the sake of obtaining these advantages. I wish to place myself on record on this question, and my opinion is that there are some judges in the country who deserve the consideration of parliament, but that the great majority of them are sufficiently well paid at present. I am in perfect accord with the hon. leader of the opposition in the other House, as expressed a few days ago, that this continual agitation about the injustice we are doing to our judges is doing more harm than good, and I feel it my duty to make the few remarks I have made as expressive of my opinion on the subject.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should not have inflicted any remarks on the House were it not distinctly understood that this question should be fully discussed on the third reading of the Bill. I have listened with a great deal of attention to the remarks made by the hon. gentleman from Kingston and also the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Richmond, which have been more of a practical character, probably, than the disquisition of the hon. gentleman from Kingston. The Bill before the House at the present moment is for an increase of the number of judges in the province of Ontario, and also for regulating their salaries. A great deal has been said in reference to the amounts paid to the different judges. I have already given my opinion, so far as it affects the county court judges of the province in which I live, and I am fully in accord with the hon. gentleman from Kingston when he says their remuneration is not what it ought to be, although there is no denying the fact that the moment a vacancy occurs, whether by a death or otherwise, there are a dozen lawyers eagerly seeking the position.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Now what I object to more than anything else is the increase in the number of judges. It has been said—and, I think, with a great deal of truth—that the time of the judges has been taken up in other matters than those which pertain to their official duties. The instance given by the hon. gentleman from Kingston, of a judge who was president of a loan company, is one of the evidences of the necessity of doing something in reference to these county court judges both in the way of increasing their remuneration and by adopting the principle involved in the Bill introduced by my hon. friend from Marshfield, to prevent them from occupying any other position than that which pertains to their duties on the bench. You can easily understand from the remarks made by the hon. gentleman that a judge who is president of and controlling a loan company may have cases constantly coming before him arising out of disputes between the company and those to whom they have loaned money, and also, in cases between the shareholders and the directors. It is one of the strongest evidences that can be given, I think, of the necessity of preventing judges occupying any such position. I know a county court judge in another city who is president of a loan society, and while I know nothing of an improper character in reference to his proceedings, I am aware that negotiations are going on to-day for the amalgamation of two companies and circumstances have arisen as to the manner in which the proceeds of the sale are to be distributed. I give that as a practical illustration, and another reason why I think our county court judges and Superior Court judges should be prevented from entering into any other occupation than that to which they are appointed. In the province of Ontario we have ten judges who go on circuit, four in the Chancery division, three in the King's Bench division and three in the Common Pleas division. Of these ten judges it is alleged that four have not performed any official duties during the last year. That is disputed, however. But it is admitted that there were three. Supposing there were three whose time was occupied with matters other than those for which they were appointed—that is judicial duties—is that not a good reason why this Bill should not have been passed by the other House, or presented to this House? Of these ten judges, three at least are admitted to have been out of the country or engaged in some other vocation. Why should the provincial government, in order to enable the judges to devote their time and attention to other business than that for which they were appointed, ask parliament to appoint additional judges? Under the Bill before us it is provided that a salary of $6,000 is to be allowed certain judges. Under the Ontario statute these judges receive an allowance of $1,000 per annum. It will be remembered that I called attention to this the other day, and stated that the late Sir John Macdonald, when he was Premier, objected to the law and informed the Ontario government that unless they would repeal the law he should feel in duty bound to disallow it on the ground that the Dominion government alone were the parties who should remunerate the judges appointed by them, for the reason that they should not be occupied in other positions. Now in addition to that, if you consult the Auditor General's Report, you will find that some of these judges of the Superior Court drew $1,000 for travelling expenses, while others drew as high as $2,000, and others $1,700, $1,400 and $1,500 for travelling expenses. The difference between the travelling expenses might possibly result from the fact that some of the judges have to attend the election courts, and consequently, have to be away from home more frequently than those who have not such duties to perform. I wish it to be distinctly understood that I am not casting any reflection upon the judges who drew these amounts, but what I mean to say is that while they received the $6,000 per annum from the Dominion and the $1,000 from the Ontario government, making $7,000, and their travelling expenses in addition to that, making their salary $8,000, and some of them $9,000 per annum, they are not so badly paid as some hon. gentlemen seem to think. The wrong that is inflicted upon the litigants and the trouble to which the legal profession is put, is well illustrated in an article which appeared in yesterday's Toronto 'News.' It shows the bad effects of judges having been appointed to perform duties other than that for which they were appointed, and if hon. gentlemen have not read this article, I will read it. I am sure it must convince any one who will take the trouble to think of it for a moment, that the position taken by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield should have been affirmed by this House in the interest of litigants, in the interest of the profession, and in the interest of good government. The article reads as follows:

The absence of Mr. Justice Britton, who was sent by the government to the Yukon, for the purpose of conducting an inquiry into the Treadgold concession, is causing much delay and worry to lawyers and litigants at Osgoode Hall. The financial loss sustained by parties to suits pending is incalculable, and is directly owing to the absence of the judge. There are numerous cases on the list of the Divisional Court involving large sums of money, and rights of equal value, which are practically tied up as a result of the lack of judges. This state of affairs cannot be accounted for by the fewness of the judges on the Ontario bench, it being clear that were Judge Britton here to attend to his judicial functions, the present crisis would not have occurred. A sitting of the King's Bench division was scheduled to begin on the 14th of September, before Chief Justice Falconbridge, Mr. Justice Street, and Mr. Justice Britton. Unfortunately, Justice Street fell ill. This, however, would not have interfered with the work of the court, as two judges constitute a quorum, and, had Justice Britton been on hand to take his seat beside Chief Justice Falconbridge, no delay would have occurred. As it was, however, the sittings had to be adjourned till the 5th of October. The term opened with ninety-eight cases on the Divisional Court list. Of these fourteen cases were disposed of by the Chancery Division, leaving eighty-four still pending, and in which no progress can be made till the sittings of the Common Pleas division. The cases waiting include the names of municipalities and large corporations and firms with whom time is money.

Then follows a list of the cases which had to be laid over until the next court. It would not add anything to the argument I am presenting to the House were I to read the list. Hon. gentlemen can easily judge of it when it occupies nearly half a column of space in the newspaper in simply giving the names of suits alone which have to be laid over arising purely and simply from the fact that the judge who should be here in Ontario to attend to his duty is now performing duties for which he is to receive in addition to his travelling expenses $2,000, and his full salary running on at the same time. It is a very serious matter. Let us apply the position to ourselves. You might have a case before the court and you might not be possessed of much of this world's goods to assist you in carrying it on in paying your lawyers. In the delay which takes place your interests must suffer. These delays are of so flagrant a character that it does strike me that whatever may have been the practice of past governments, one is not more guilty than another, experience should teach them and should teach us that the practice of employing judges on extra judicial duties should be put a stop to. I must differ entirely from the remarks made by the hon. gentleman from Kingston, in which he refers to Mr. Ewart's address to the judge in Winnipeg. I think Mr. Ewart deserves the approval of every right-thinking man in this country for having the courage to express his opinion on an occasion such as that which presented itself to him at that time. I have seen it mentioned in some of the Liberal papers that it was only a political move on the part of Mr. Ewart. Those who know Mr. Ewart know very well that if he were acting from political motives he would not have taken the position he did in reference to Mr. Justice Britton, or on any appointments which might reflect on the present government. I have known Mr. Ewart for many years. He occupies one of the most prominent positions at the bar, I am safe in saying, in Manitoba, and I do not believe there is a man in Canada who stands higher morally, legally and otherwise in the estimation of those who know him. So conscientions is he that I have a distinct recollection of the time when the title K. C. was tendered to him by the late Sir John Macdonald government, so fearful was he that it might be considered a sop to him, being a strong Liberal, it was a question with him whether he would take it. The hon. gentleman from St. Boniface may remember the circumstance. He is also a nephew of the late Sir Oliver Mowat, although it does not necessarily follow that he should be a Liberal. But we do know he has been one of the leading spirits of the Liberal party in the province of Manitoba. The party press that attack him and accuse him of being a Tory, I suppose do not think it possible that one of their own party could utter such sentiments and tell the truth when it might reflect on the party of whom he had been a supporter all his life. I am so impressed with the importance of his remarks, in relation to the question I have been discussing, that I propose to read them in order that they may go upon the record of our debates. I can only repeat what I have said, that in my opinion—and I believe in the opinion of most men in this country who have given any thought to or reflected on this matter—that Mr. Ewart was justified in the course he pursued, and, I may add further, that instead of the new judge who was appointed lately disapproving of the remarks made by Mr. Ewart, he complimented that gentleman on the fact that he had taken the opportunity of expressing his opinions and expressed his concurrence in them with the exception of one or two points in which I think the judge was quite right. That point was one in which a judge might be required to assist in the consolidation of the statutes. In that case he should be paid extra when he is appointed to perform such duty. If his time permits it and he should be occupied in that particular work, he should receive extra pay, his salary running on at the same time. The gentleman to whom my hon. friend from Kingston referred as being a critique on this question laid down the principle clearly and distinctly that no judge should be permitted to do any work outside of his judicial functions other than that to which I have referred, namely the consolidation of the laws and literary work. He said there could be no objection to literary work, more particularly when writing articles or books upon questions of law or constitutional or other such questions as would not interfere with his judicial functions. Mr. Ewart, in addressing the judge spoke as follows :

My Lord, supplementing the welcome already given to your Lordship in Chambers, may I be permitted now, as for the first time you appear in court, to extend to your Lordship, on behalf of the bar, their congratulations upon your elevation to the bench of this province ?

Your Lordship will recognize that an attempt to supply the place rendered vacant by the elevation of Chief Justice Killam to the Supreme Court of Canada is a task of no ordinary difficulty, and I can place no higher or more truthful estimate upon the value of your services as a Manitoban judge, and at the same time better express my hope for your Lordship's success, than to say that I could wish that you should be in all things, save one, such as he was. Justice Killam possesses in a very rare degree, the qualifications and equipment of an excellent judge, and it is with the very greatest of personal regret that I see coming to an end the frequent recurrences of the pleasure which I enjoyed in arguing cases before him ; and yet, my Lord, I would not have you accept employment and emolument outside that attached to your office.

I am firmly convinced that the recent governmental practice of giving jobs to judges is subversive of the usefulness of the bench. It is destructive of the popular belief in its impartiality and its integrity.

My Lord, courts of justice stand between society and anarchy. Their strength lies in the security which they give to property and rights and in the satisfaction felt by the people in their administration of justice. It is the duty, therefore, of every good citizen, and, perhaps, especially the duty of members of the bar, to endeavour to maintain the existence of such conditions as will protect the bench from the approach of influences which are injurious to it.

My Lord, who can congratulate with equanimity or patience the present position of the judicial office in Ontario ? I do not believe that it is well for the bench that it should be shielded from all criticism, but I do think such criticism is a misfortune, and that the habit of mind which seeks explanation for decisions in personal bias of the judges is one of the most deplorable mental attitudes which can take possession of society.

My Lord, the result of the Gamey investigation, if Mr. Stratton was to be acquitted, was easily foreseen, namely, that two of the very best and purest-minded of the Ontario judges are believed by probably scores of thousands of people to have been influenced by circumstances not found in the evidence. Those who know these judges, as I know them, have no such thought, or, if the language of the judgment is calculated for a moment to rouse the idea we can easily put it aside. But we must not wonder that the general public, and particularly strong Conservatives, are not so generous, and that these judges have been attacked and condemned not only in the press, but in the legislature and upon public platforms. To a lover of his profession this is, I say, inauspicious and disquieting.

In Dawson city, at the present moment, a judge, who, till yesterday, was a strong political partisan, is inquiring into matters in controversy between the political parties. And can we be surprised that his rulings are being telegraphed to the opposition at Ottawa to be there discussed and denounced ? While Mr. Justice Britton's regular salary runs at the usual rate, he is presented by his political friends with the finest holiday trip that the continent can afford and a bonus of $2,000. His judicial usefulness in every case of political complexion is for ever gone. Henceforward every decision adverse to the Conservative party will evoke memories of the Treadgold commission.

My Lord, the habit of attributing decisions to improper influences is easily acquired, and had already become so familiar that an attack upon Mr. Justice Maclennan (as righteous a judge as ever sat upon a bench), because of his action in some interlocutory application, passes almost unnoticed. Mr. Justice Killam, too, has been traduced in unmeasured language by the press, and little more heed is given to the incident than if he were a politician. Process for contempt has lately become almost impossible, for the reason, unfortunately, that too many people would be involved.

My Lord, now that you are Mr. Justice Perdue, you will be approached by the railway companies, and will be offered free transportation over their lines of railway. It is my belief that you will refuse all such degrading offers. If it be asked whether I think that government jobs and railway passes influence judges, I reply that human nature is weak ; that motive and mental influence work subtly, and their operations are much more easily discerned by onlookers than by the one affected ; that such things usually do produce a frame of mind favourable to the donors, and that I myself, with all my innate and trained respect (reverence, I would almost say), for the bench, cannot sometimes restrain the thought that elevation to the bench is not equivalent to inoculation against the feelings of gratitude for past favours or pleasing anticipation of those to come.

My Lord, it is a fact of some sinister significance that the political parties, the governments and their oppositions, have in these latter days become the most frequent of litigants and that the practice which I am venturing to condemn has grown up and expanded synchronously with the development of that condition. My Lord, I see no justification for the employment of judges in matters outside their office, and not covered by their salaries in the assertion that it is the governments of the day that are the employers and the paymasters. The 'government of the day' is but an euphemistic alternative for the name of some particular politician, representing some political party. If employment is accepted from Mr. Sifton and Mr. Roblin, why not from Mr. Borden and Mr. Greenway? If from the government of the day, whose members are deeply interested in much litigation, why not from the Canadian Pacific Railway, or the Hudson Bay's Company? Would it be sufficient reply to such employment to say that the judges were too pure and too little human to be affected by such engagements; and if, my Lord, judges may accept free transportation from the railway companies and be unaffected, why may they not also accept a cask of wine from Mr. Galt, a bale of silk from Mr. Stobart, or a bag of flour from the Ogilvie Milling Company?

My Lord, I hesitated long before deciding to say publicly what I have now addressed to your Lordship, and I have awaited for its utterance some public opportunity which might possibly attract to my words that notice which my private position would not of itself insure. I am persuaded, too, that by the judges my words, although probably thought unnecessary or even ill-judged, will be accepted as the true belief of one who I can assure them, by no means stands alone in the apprehension with which he contemplates the present popular attitude towards the judiciary of this country.

I read this to the House for the purpose of presenting to hon. gentlemen what an eminent barrister thinks of the course that has been pursued by all governments. I am not confining it to one government—and I know that if you read the debates in the Ontario legislature, you will see that Hon. Mr. Foy, one of the leading barristers of Toronto, condemned in the strongest possible manner the appointment of two additional judges for the province of Ontario, as not being at all necessary. I know others whose names I shall not mention now, who occupy high positions at the bar of that province, who take precisely the same view as expressed by Mr. Ewart and by Mr. Foy. It is lamentable that it should be so. As has been very properly said, we have been in the past looking on the bench as incorruptible. I do not say they are corruptible now, but unfortunately the positions they have occupied, and decisions they have rendered in cases which are to a certain extent, of a political charcter, have led the public to believe that they were influenced improperly, and for that reason I should like to see this Bill thrown out, just as two or three years ago we threw out a Bill appointing three additional judges in the province of Quebec. It was then argued that they were required to relieve the congestion in the courts of the district of Montreal at that time, but it was acknowledged by the Premier himself that there would have been no need for more judges if it had not been, to use his own term, for the 'antiquated' system which exists in that province, to which the people were so wedded that no political party had the courage to effect a reform. In the Ontario case we are in the same position, but for other reasons. Judges have been appointed to perform duties outside of their offices, and the result has been, as I have already pointed out, that there are some eighty-four cases in one court, which are delayed to the annoyance, expense and trouble of the litigants, and their legal advisers. I take it for granted that lawyers who have cases in court like to get through with them, and when they go to court prepared to proceed and find their cases thrown over for months, and they have the trouble and annoyance of having to study up their cases again, it must be a very serious inconvenience to them. I hope the present government will take the strongest grounds in the future on this question. I should like to see it go further, although formerly I frankly confess I was strongly in favour of relegating all election contests to the judges, I should like to see some system adopted by which they would be relieved of the responsibility of deciding such cases, and more particularly in view of what has taken place of late. I shall not mention the names of the judges, but I may refer to two cases in the province of Ontario. In one, a member was unseated because his agent bought a glass of whisky and treated an elector. In another election contest in a neighbouring county, the candidate himself admitted under oath that he had bought liquor and treated electors over and over again during the contest. He was not unseated—why? Because, in the evidence which he gave, he stated that it was his practice always to treat his friends when he met them. Such decisions as these lead politicians to the conclusion that while judges may honestly differ in their opinions, some other means should be adopted whereby they should be relieved from the imputation of being influenced in any way by political considerations in their decisions, and in any action they may take when these cases come before them. I apologize for the length of time I have occupied in discussing this question, but I have done it from the conscientious conviction that I should try and impress on the government and upon this House, the necessity of taking positive and distinct action when questions of this kind come before them. Notwithstanding the additional three judges appointed two or three years ago in the province of Quebec, we have a Bill before us now for the appointment of another judge. How far litigation has increased in that province to render it impossible to relieve the courts of congestion without another appointment, I do not know. My hon. friend opposite will be a better judge of that than I am; but I am quite convinced he will agree with the remarks made by the late Attorney General of the province of Quebec, and which were acquiesced in to a very great extent by the Premier himself, that if the system in the province of Quebec were changed, there would be no necessity for adding to the judiciary of the province.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—As a young attorney, and as a young member of this House, I rise with a sense of diffidence to disagree with the opinions and sentiments expressed by the hón. leader of the opposition. The hon. gentleman should understand that the government of Canada is not responsible for the creation of positions for judges; the provinces alone have a right to deal with that, and once the place is created, it is the duty of the government of Canada to make the appointment.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Not in all cases.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Under all circumstances. The law does not say that they shall be filled, but the British North America Act gives the province the right to create the position of judge, and it must be filled, otherwise the provision would have no sense. When the leader of the opposition endeavours to fasten the responsibility for creating more positions on the Dominion government he is not doing what is correct, or in accord with proper political warfare. He must know that the responsibility for creating those positions rests not with the government of the day, but with the provinces, who are the best judges of what they want. It is not for this House to say whether a judge is wanted for a particular district; the leader of the opposition has admitted that. He says he does not know to what extent litigation has increased in the province of Quebec to warrant the appointment of more judges, and nine-tenths of the members of this House are in the same position; but the province of Quebec knows. Those who preside over the destinies of that province know whether more judges are needed or not. The province creates the position, and it is the right and the duty of this parliament to fill that position. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell)has quoted an instance in the province of Ontario where some 84 cases are awaiting consideration. I have known the courts of Quebec to be congested to a much greater extent. Three or four years ago thousands of cases were behind because there were not sufficient judges to try them. Therefore when this House was asked to pass judgment upon the wisdom of an Act of the local legislature, I say no senator should appeal to political or party prejudices to subvert the decision of the legislature.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Who did?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That quotation from Mr. Ewart's address is an appeal to party prejudice against the usefulness of our judiciary. It was mentioned as an address of welcome to a judge. I look upon it as a piece of effrontery. That would be first-class literature before a Sir John Macdonald club or a Junior Conservative club, but to a man who goes on the bench for the first time, I would not consider it an address of welcome. The hon. leader of the opposition wants the country to take that as the real estimate of what our judges are worth and are able to do. He must know that two-thirds of the judges on the bench of the country to-day are his own nominees, or the nominees of his predecessors. In their name, and on their behalf, I repudiate the attack which is made upon them through Mr. Ewart.

Mr. Ewart does not command in this country all the wisdom and judgment necessary to form an opinion of our judiciary and what they are able to perform. It was not fair to put that expression of opinion of Mr. Ewart on the records of this parliament as being the sentiment of the Canadian bar. It is not the sentiment of the bar of the several provinces, and it is not the sentiment of the vast mass of the people of this country, and when the leader of the opposition apologized for making his remarks, I considered an apology was well merited. Under the circumstances, when the leader of the opposition appeals to this House to reject a measure which is not the work of the federal government, but which simply meets the wishes and needs of the provinces, that appeal should not be listened to. We are here to sanction the principle of home rule in every province; we are not here to advocate the principle of centralization. This country is a federation; every province must be master of its own business, and when an hon. gentleman of the capacity and experience in the government of the country, such as the leader of the opposition has had, makes such a speech as he has made here to-day, I say he belongs to the old school of Sir John Macdonald, which would have wished to see this country under a central government instead of a federation. I challenge his attitude to-day, and in behalf of the provinces I rise and ask the Senate to stand by the principles which underly the constitution of this country. We are a federated power, and every component part thereof must have its rights respected, not only in its own home, but here at Ottawa. The hon. leader of the opposition has put his work in, and he did it deftly, but he belongs to the old school——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And he is not ashamed of it, either.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I admire the attitude of the hon. gentleman. I admit that he has a right to his opinions, but there are others in this House who will combat them in the interests of the provinces and of the Dominion, and on that ground I say our duty is to stand by the rights of the provinces, especially in regard to the judiciary.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the hon. gentleman who has just addressed the House has not fully understood the remarks of the leader of the opposition. He must have thought that the meeting which took place last night was in the name of the Senate and not in the name of the constituency when Mr. Tarte was asked to resign his position. Full of the vim he displayed last evening, he comes here to-day and tries to impress this honourable Chamber with sentiments which may be his own, but which certainly are not ours. I would ask the hon. gentleman, if he is sincere in his argument, to answer this question: suppose the province of Quebec at the next session of its legislature should enact that there shall be twenty-five more judges——

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Then they would go down to the hon. gentleman's asylum at Beauport.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Where I might find the hon. gentleman himself. I would ask him if the province of Quebec were to enact that twenty-five judges be appointed, would this government be obliged to name the twenty-five and provide their salaries?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If necessary, yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Who is going to settle that question of necessity?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The members of the Quebec government.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—And this government would have nothing to do but be the humble servant of the province of Quebec or any other province—would have no discretion as to the necessity for the additional judges? The proposition of the hon. gentleman is so extravagant that it needs no further comment.

The motion was agreed to on a division, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

MARITIME RAILWAY AND TRANSPORTATION COMPANY BILL.

DEBATE ON SECOND READING RESUMED.

The Order of the Day being called for resuming the adjourned debate on second reading Bill (180) An Act to incorporate the Maritime Railway and Transportation Company.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It will be remembered that when this order was reached some weeks ago my hon. friend, the member for Port Hill (Hon. Mr. Yeo) addressed some very pointed observations to this House against the Bill becoming law. I entirely agree with the hon. gentleman in that view. I think it is a Bill which this House should not proceed any further with. It is almost impossible to find out what the promoters of this Bill are after, what they are really seeking to do. I am sure my hon. friend who has charge of the Bill has not studied its genesis up to the present time, or he would not care to have his name connected with it. When the notice was given with regard to this Bill, and when the Bill itself was introduced it had altogether a different form and object from that which it now appears to have. It was described at that time as a Bill to incorporate a Prince Edward Island Ferry Company, and the Bill was then following the lines of the petition presented in this House and its published notice in the maritime province newspapers; and I cannot help thinking, notwithstanding the name of the Bill is changed and many of its provisions also very seriously altered, that the object of the promoters of the Bill is still to endeavour to get in between the government of Canada and the people of Prince Edward Island with regard to winter communication. On that account, if for no other reason, I do not think that this House should proceed any further with the Bill. Hon. gentlemen will remember that part of the terms of Union between Prince Edward Island and the Dominion was that efficient steam communication, winter and summer, should be maintained by the government of Canada between the island and the mainland. It is not necessary that I should discuss the present state of that service, but hon. gentlemen who followed the newspapers last winter and heard the discussion which took place in the other branch of this parliament, know very well that the present position of that service is not satisfactory, notwithstanding that we must give to the present and past governments of Canada credit for doing a great deal and making faithful and honest endeavours to make that communication as satisfactory as possible. Last year the service was split up, one of the boats being placed on a western route where an experiment was being tried, and the other boat being left on the old route between Georgetown and Pictou. The western boat got fast in the ice and drifted up and down the straits, and the other boat had to be taken from the other route to go to her relief and also got disabled. The consequence was that the province was left for many weeks without any communication whatever. There are two excellent boats provided there, one by the late government and one by the present government. They are manned, I am bound to say, by excellent officers, and I have every reason to believe that with better direction than has been given to the service a great deal better results can be obtained. One of the difficulties arising in connection with the service is the attempt to direct the whole service from the Marine Department at Ottawa, which it is utterly impossible to do—from a point 1,200 miles from the scene of operations. The department at Ottawa insists on being consulted in dealing with conditions which are liable to change every few hours. It was so under the former government; it is so to-day. They give an order on the advice they receive, and when the time for action arrives it is found that the conditions have altogether changed and a different course should be pursued. To my mind the direction of that service must be more thoroughly a matter to be dealt with in the lower provinces at the seat of the trouble. Although I am not going to enter very fully into the subject at the present time, I have a strong conviction that if this service were placed with the Department of Railways, that department having a staff of officers at Moncton and Charlottetown so nearly on the spot, and having railway communication to the different points on both sides of the straits where the communication is attempted to be carried on and being well equipped for railway transportation, we would have much better service than we have now under the direction of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I do not find fault with the officials of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, but I believe the Railway Department is the proper department to control the service, and in this way we would get rid of the divided control which now prevails with regard to furnishing trains and providing accommodation in connection with the steamer. I want to say this much with regard to the summer service between the island and the mainland; that is in the hands of a local company subsidized by the government of Canada for the purpose of carrying the mails, and I am bound to say the service is an excellent one and is giving good satisfaction. They have two boats on the route. One of them, the one between Summerside and Point du Chêne is a splendid boat and is giving every satisfaction. The other is a good boat but probably is not as large as is now required in consequence of the trade that has developed in the eastern part of the island, in connection with the enterprises which have been developed at Sydney.

There is only one criticism that I would make with regard to the summer service, and that is that there is a difficulty about getting through freight rates on very many things, both in importing into the island and in exporting from it, and also for passengers. It is conceded that the steam navigation company which controls that service could not possibly be expected to accept a pro rata division of the freight rate with the railways on the mainland, when it is remembered that they have so very much of the handling to do, and that therefore their rate has to be somewhat of an arbitrary one. I am not finding fault with that. I do not know the rates are too high, but we ought to be able to get a through rate both in getting goods moved to the island and in sending away our produce to any point on any other railroad or to any port of ocean shipment. I find that that is very difficult to get. During the last vacation of the House I had a difficulty in that line and I found I would have to write to Halifax and wait for a week before I could get a through rate. That is one difficulty to be encountered with regard to freight rates which I hope will be grappled with, so that any person doing business on the island or abroad will be able to obtain through rates, not insisting that they shall be less than the local rates now quoted, but that a through rate shall be granted. That is the state of the service in summer and in winter. Now we have a Bill to incorporate the Prince Edward Island Ferry Company. They propose to carry on this service at any point between the island and the mainland both summer and winter. As far as the summer service is concerned we would be sorry to see any company come in to interfere, because my experience with the Steam Navigation Company is that they are well able to do it. They are rendering a good service and there is no necessity for any other company to come in. With regard to the winter service, a great many are of the opinion that it can be best carried on at the narrowest point, between Cape Traverse and Cape Tormentine, where the strait is only eight or nine miles wide. It is the belief of a great many practical men that if good harbour facilities were provided on the Prince Edward Island side of the ferry, having already a railroad extended to both points, a good service could be maintained at that place, but we know very well that it calls for the expenditure of a large sum of money by the federal government to provide harbour facilities on the island side. There are estimates of what that would cost, and we know that they are very considerable, and while I am not to be considered at this moment as urging the government—though strong petitions have been presented to the government to go on with the harbour at this place—I am not saying I would urge the government to take up this matter immediately, but there is so much that is reasonable in the proposition to solve the question of winter communication at that point that we should not let any private speculators come in and get rights at that place which would interfere with the government carrying out the terms of union as provided for at the time of confederation. We have had some experience with regard to telegraphic communication. More will be said on the subject in this House within a short time about the difficulties we have had on that point. A private company has come in who claim a monopoly. They give a very inefficient service now, and that they will not furnish us telegraph facilities such as are enjoyed in every other part of the Dominion, and the government may have to come in and buy that company out. I am quite satisfied that this company is composed of men who have not the means to grapple with that question, that it is a service out of which no private company can make money. It will have to be done by the government of Canada, if it is done at all, at a loss to the taxpayers of the country. There is no question about that. It is not desirable, in addition to all the natural disadvantages that the government has to contend with in giving communication to the people of Prince Edward Island, that they should allow a private company to come in and get vested rights at that place and do something which we know would be wholy futile in the way of establishing communication with the island, but by which the government might be held up to pay compensation before they could deal with the question themselves. I have stated the view that is taken by the people of Prince Edward Island; I think I am expressing the view of nearly the whole population of the island. They are opposed to allowing this private company to obtain the rights they are seeking to acquire at that place. But apart from that although I should think that would be a strong enough ground why we should not proceed any further with this Bill, I wish to point out to the House that this Bill which we have now before us is not the kind of Bill that was petitioned for. I have a copy of the petition in my hands, and I find there that the ferry is made the main undertaking; there is no ferry mentioned in the Bill before us. The petition proposes to carry on transportation in connection with the ferry, and the Bill provides for a general transportation business between ports of Canada and ports in foreign countries. The Bill is not in the slightest respect, as it stands to-day, like the petition, or in fact like the original Bill. Then the petition proposes to own and operate branch lines of railways to connect with railways situated within twelve miles of either extremity of the ferry; the Bill asks power to construct railways starting at Cape Tormentine. One of them would run to Truro, Nova Scotia, and another to Shediac in the province of New Brunswick. Then the petition asks for general powers incidental to the operation of a ferry, while the Bill gives them full power to bond railways, to mortgage vessels and deal in other property which they may wish to possess. In addition to that, I find that the notice is only published in Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, while one undertaking is to build a railway from Cape Tormentine to Truro in Nova Scotia, which has not been asked for in the petition. Then they ask power to build a railway from Cape Tormentine to Shediac, a ground that is traversed by a charter for a railway granted by the province of New Brunswick. In addition to all this, they ask for federal incorporation for building these local railways. The one in New Brunswick would be essentially and entirely a local railway, while they do not ask that it be declared 'a work for the general advantage of Canada.' Putting all these things together, taking the cardinal objection that it is strongly objected to by the people of Prince Edward Island—and all the members of Prince Edward Island in this House, and I think nearly all the members of the House of Commons also are unanimous—and that the Bill in itself is so entirely foreign and repugnant to the petition on which it is founded, I do not think we should proceed further with it. I therefore move, seconded by Mr. Robertson:

That this Bill be not now read the second time but that it be read the second time this day six months.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—After the lucid manner in which the hon. senator from Marshfield and the hon. senator from Port Hill have laid their objections to this Bill before the House, I shall only make a few remarks simply that I may show hon. gentlemen that representatives from the province of Prince Edward Island are unanimous in their opposition to this Bill. I make that statement because the people of Prince Edward Island are almost unanimous in their opposition to the Bill. I have here a letter from the Board of Trade of Summerside and also letters from the boards of trade from the east end of the island, composed of the business men of the island, in opposition to the Bill. I shall not occupy the time of the House reading those letters but will simply state that I have evidence here that the business men throughout Prince Edward Island generally are opposed to this Bill and that the people are opposed to it. The reason they are opposed to it is, first, that it may interfere in some way between the Dominion government and the province of Prince Edward Island in regard to our terms of confederation with the Dominion. If hon. gentlemen will just look at the Bill they will see what I mean. I refer hon. gentlemen to section 11 of the Bill, which reads as follows:

11. The company may enter into an agreement with the New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island Railway Company, the Shediac and Coast Railway Company, and the government of Canada, for conveying or leasing to such companies, and to the Intercolonial Railway, in whole or in part, any powers or rights acquired under this Act.

Here they come in and ask for powers from this parliament, they can re-lease back to the Intercolonial Railway, which is simply the Dominion of Canada. From this I argue that they can come between us and the Dominion in regard to our terms of communication. I also wish to say that the board of trade at Summerside sent a delegation here when the Bill was before the committee in the House of Commons to oppose this Bill. The business men of Charlottetown sent a delegate to oppose the Bill; the four senators from Prince Edward Island are opposed to it, and all the members of parliament from Prince Edward Island are opposed to it except one. Surely, under all those circumstances, I think the Senate will be fully justified in voting for the motion of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield. My hon. friend has so lucidiy described our summer and winter communication that I shall not make any remarks about that. Our summer communication is as good as it can be, giving good satisfaction, and I may add in this connection that on the New Brunswick side the steamer touches Point du Chêne where the government of Canada has expended large sums of money to build a pier for the purpose of accommodating the steamer, that is one of the termini of the Intercolonial Railway. If we pass this Bill and the promoters of it should attempt to do anything it would destroy all that arrangement. That portion of the Intercolonial Railway between Painsec junction and Point du Chêne would be useless, and the works they have built there would be useless at Summerside, where a town of some 5,000 or 6,000 inhabitants has grown up from the trade on this route, would be destroyed also. Again, at the east end between Charlottetown and Pictou, where the other boat runs, the government have expended large sums of money to build a pier and warehouses for the convenience of this trade. It is also one of the termini of the Intercolonial Railway, and those works would be lost also, in a similar way to the western end. I think the House will be fully justified in adopting the motion of my hon. friend and I hope they will do so.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—As my name happens to be mentioned as one of the incorporators of this Bill, I think I may be allowed the privilege of saying a few words concerning it. Although my name is on the Bill, I must at the start say I am not interested financially in this measure. My name was put there to represent people that were likely to be in a position to carry out the purposes of the Bill. The great alarm that is raised against this scheme, in my humble opinion, has very little foundation indeed. I should like to know what my hon. friends from the island really desire. My hon. friend from Marshfield talks about the genesis of this Bill. I hear a great deal about the genesis of this Bill both privately and publicly. I can say, hon. gentlemen that I am perhaps the first promoter of this Bill, and there is nothing to be dreaded in the intentions of the promoters of this Bill, there is no sinister intention, nothing at all that could be in any way objectionable to it. The genesis of this Bill, since it has been referred to is this: In 1890 with the intention of establishing permanent communication between the Island and the mainland; and at that time our friends from the Island were clamouring to have regular communication with the mainland, and you are all aware that these gentlemen have been constant in their clamouring every year for communication which they have a right to demand. I am sorry that they have not so far succeeded in obtaining it from either government. Every year they come before parliament for a ferry or a tunnel, and I admire their perseverance. On the strength of that, parties from the other side of the line keeping close in touch with our Dominion politics, came, some thirteen years ago with the intention of arranging this winter and summer communication. They did it leisurely. They took the right way of doing it. I was their counsel. That is how I happened to be mixed up with the Bill. There was misgiving as to the possibilities of the navigation, in winter especially. The Department of Marine and Fisheries placed men at Cape Wolfe and Prince Edward Island, and Cape Richibucto on the New Brunswick side, to take daily observations, which were taken for two years. It was shown conclusively that a ferry could be made there to run every day of the year barring tempests—that the passage was clear in winter. Engineers were employed. They had the preliminary work done and they were ready to carry the scheme into effect. A Bill was passed. I introduced it myself. It was for a ferry between Cape Wolfe and Richibucto, about 14 miles. The cost and everything had been computed, and whilst my hon. friend says no man was competent to build that road, I will tell him of one firm who could build it. It was the Drexels of Philadelphia, and hon. gentlemen know that they were at that time the first financiers with the Goulds and Vanderbilts. Those people took all the precautions to proceed as business men proceed. The Bill was passed by the Conservative government, and what was the result? The result was that the Liberals of Prince Edward Island especially opposed it as this Bill is now opposed. There was a chance for them to have winter and summer communication. The company that was undertaking it was able to do it. The opposition came from the island, and the scheme was abandoned, because I told my clients, 'gentlemen, it is useless to try and impose a ferry upon people who are clamouring for it every year, if, when the ferry is offered, they do not want it.' So there was no more pressure. The Conservative government were ready to allow us to go on with the Bill, and we were asking for no subsidy.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman did get the Bill.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Yes, but it was abandoned on account of the opposition of your people.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There was nothing to prevent them going on.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Those strangers from the United States would not force on the people a ferry for which they clamoured so long, and against which they had turned. My clients came in as foreigners and I advised them not to press the project, because it was not desirable to force the ferry on the island. This year what happens? One of the reasons why the islanders—and I have none but good feeling about our neighbours, they are good people—one of the reasons why they did not up to this date get the ferry they were asking for was because they could not agree upon its location amongst themselves. One party was for one route and one for another. One party was for Summerside and Tormentine and another for Summerside and Pictou, and another for Georgetown and Pictou. There was rivalry amongst themselves, and any house divided amongst itself does not stand. I shall not follow the ground taken by my hon. friend. The people last winter found themselves without any service for nearly a month, because they had prevailed on the government to have a test over different lines which they were sure were the best lines. The consequence was, one vessel got entangled in the ice and the other went to its rescue and got entangled in the ice also and both remained there for several weeks and the people had no communication during that time except by ice-boats. The people then got together and found out that divisions among themselves were delaying the project and were detrimental to their interests, and recommended the Cape route. That convention that met on the island—I am speaking from memory—was held last winter and agreed upon a resolution, the tenor of which was the recommendation of a ferry between the two capes. On the faith of that, hon. gentlemen, I took the initiative in this affair, and I say that if I now put my name forward it is to meet this argument that it is a political affair. I should like to know from the hon. leader of the government if I ever did try to pull from the Liberals and try to obtain moneys and subsidies for the election of Liberals. That is one of the arguments that is put forward openly or otherwise against the scheme. I tell hon. gentlemen there is no political motive at all in this measure. I simply saw an opportunity of having the ferry built, now that the people were agreed upon it, and I told my friends about it and started the project. What happened? When the Bill came to the other House the very same opposition that was offered 12 years ago was offered again, and we found that the people who were saying that they wanted to have a ferry would not have it any more. I have no personal interest in it. I represent other people. What did the company do? Our main object was not the ferry even then. Our main object is recited here. Our main object is transportation, to have docks, elevators, and so on. Seeing that the islanders were opposed to the ferry, to please them we dropped the ferry, and what do we ask now? We ask what every free citizen of this country has a right to ask, for privileges of a commercial nature. Is the company to be deprived of the right of constructing and navigating steam and other vessels for the conveyance of passengers, goods and merchandise, between any ports in Canada or ports in Canada and any port in any other country, and carrying on the business of common carriers of passengers and goods and to act as warehousemen and wharfingers, and to construct buildings, and so on, as recited in the Bill, because we may possibly deal with Prince Edward Island, that beautiful little island, so fertile, which is exporting products of all kinds in such large quantities, but which is now under the control of one company, which company, I understand, is substantially making the opposition to this Bill. Are we, because our friends of the island are supersensitive, to abandon all legitimate enterprises? There is no ferry about it, since a ferry they do not want, but hon. gentlemen will find they will be asking again for a ferry next year, and I will support it, because they have a right to it. But we ask for no ferry. We ask for the general powers that are usually given to such companies as these. One of the promoters of this Bill has large interests in Prince Edward Island. He goes for the business of pork-packing, for example, and elevating grain. Are we going to be deprived of the advantage of having this company in operation because it may be, as I said before, that we will deal with our little island? I do not think it is fair. There is nothing wrong with this Bill as it is. I will admit it is not exactly on the lines of the notice, but if it is not, it is not the fault of the promoters. It is the fault of the hon. gentlemen themselves. It is not my habit to make extended remarks, but I have to answer the points taken. The hon. gentleman from Marshfield has stated, and it has been repeated by my hon. friend from Port Hill, that there was unanimity of the people of the island against this Bill. I am sorry to contradict him. Doing it in the most polite manner I can, I say that I do not believe that to be the case. I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Wednesday, September 30, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THIRD READING.

Bill (Z) An Act respecting the Ottawa Valley Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Domville.)

CANADIAN TRANSPORTATION AND STORAGE COMPANY INCORPORATION BILL.

THIRD READING.

The Order of the Day being called, third reading (Bill 176) 'An Act to incorporate the Canadian Transportation and Storage Company, as amended.'

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto) moved:

That the order of the 4th September instant, adopting the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on the said Bill, be rescinded, and that the said report be not concurred in.

He said: It will be remembered by hon. gentlemen that the Bill was limited in its operations to the province of Ontario, and that was an objection which was taken at the time. I understand the opposition to the Bill has been withdrawn and that all are agreed that the Bill should be passed as originally introduced. For that purpose I make this motion. That will leave the Bill as it stood when sent to the committee after second reading.

The SPEAKER—I venture to suggest to the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill that the report of the committee recommended that the Bill be passed with a certain amendment. Now the resolution which the hon. gentleman has moved will strike out the report altogether and the Bill will not be properly before the House. I think it is only so much of that order as proposes to substitute the word 'Ontario' for the word 'Canada' which should be striken out.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—With the permission of the House I ask to amend the motion in the way His Honour the Speaker suggested and beg to move :

That the Order of the 4th September instant, adopting the Report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on the said Bill be rescinded, and that the said Report, in so far as it refers to the amendment made to the said Bill, be not concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. KERR, moved that the Bill be now read the third time as amended.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

MARITIME RAILWAY AND TRANSPORTATION COMPANY BILL.

SECOND READING.

The Order of the Day being called,

Resuming the adjourned Debate on second reading (Bill 180) An Act to incorporate the Maritime Railway and Transportation Company, and the motion in amendment that the said Bill be read a second time this day six months.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I showed yesterday that a similar Bill to this one, passed about the year 1890, was nullified by the opposition that came from the island, because they did not wish to have a ferry running between Cape Wolfe and Cape Richibucto under the pretense that it was too much to the west of the island and would displace the commercial axis. So the company, which were able and willing to operate at that time, on my own recommendation, discontinued. Now, after the island, last winter, had decided upon advocating this Cape line, a company comes in, I believe, with sufficient capital at their back to build their road. The road is killed already—nipped in the bud. I should imagine, that ought to be sufficient for the hon. members for the island. But let me review some of the reasons given by my hon. friends for killing this Bill. My hon. friend on my left here stated that it would injure the St. John and Shediac Railroad and also the Pictou road. He displays a great deal of solicitude for those two roads, which can very well take care of themselves. At all events one could possibly perceive some lack of sincerity when in the very same breath the building by the government of the identical ferry is advocated. But I will not deal with that question; I will take the argument of my hon. friend from Marshfield. He, I believe, came nearest to the true reason why this Bill is mercilessly opposed. He showed us that there was the Steam Navigation Company doing all that the island apparently requires in the way of navigation—a monopoly, hon. gentlemen, or what is equivalent to a monopoly. There is no fault to find in the transportation of the people; there might be some fault found in the prices charged for the transportation of grain, but as he himself hails from the island he would wink over that.

That is possibly the gist of the question, I am in a position to say this, that to-day the island demands better transportation facilities. A ferry is certainly needed for passengers, but the island demands better facilities for traffic. I may illustrate this by my own experience. I went three or four years ago to the island to get some grain, some fifteen or twenty thousand bushels of feed for mashing. I went to Alberton and Tignish. I could get any amount of feed there, but I found it would cost me just as much to get that grain from Alberton or Tignish to Shediac as it would cost to get it from Toronto, and why? Because the boat with which the hon. gentlemen are so much satisfied asked me, I think, four and a half cents a hundred, simply to carry freight from Summerside to Shediac, and then I would have freights on two railroads to pay, and the price would be as high as bringing it from Toronto. I could handle a large quantity of wheat, but I cannot to-day buy my grain from the island. Is it reasonable to say that the island is opposed to better communication? The island cannot very well wait, but it is the Steam Navigation Company that can wait just now. They do not wish to have competition, and hence this opposition to the Bill. I was told and the House was told by my hon. friend from Marshfield that the people on the island were opposed to an enterprise such as I advocate, and my hon. friend to my left (Hon. Mr. Robertson) said the opposition was unanimous in Prince Edward Island. I will not put my word as against the word of those hon. gentlemen, but I will take one of the newspapers I happened to find to-day and read an article on the subject. This is one of the island papers edited by Mr. McCready, a former editor of the St. John 'Telegraph', and a man that will not be discouraged from advocating what he thinks is favourable to the island because it might not suit the views of the Steam Navigation Company. Here is what Mr. McCready says in the Charlottetown 'Guardian':

The Ferry Company's Bill.

For some reason not fully explained to the general public an attempt has been made to make our representatives at Ottawa believe that the people of Charlottetown and the island are opposed to the Capes Ferry Bill. At a very small meeting of the Charlottetown Board of Trade, with fourteen members present a resolution was passed by a vote of seven to four, the majority making up a bare half of a small meeting, and this resolution was thought important enough to be wired to Ottawa. Next we hear that F. L. Haszard and Richard Hunt appeared before the Railway Committee at Ottawa in opposition to the Bill. These are respectable and influential men no doubt, but whom did they represent? Their principal argument seems to have been that the incorporation of the ferry company might in some way tend to release the federal government from its obligation to provide continuous steam communication. Both Mr. Haszard and Mr. Hunt are quite intelligent enough to know that it could not possibly have any such effect, and so the reason for the opposition to the ferry company must be sought for elsewhere.

So far as we can find the public are not only not opposed, but are very favourable to the development of the Capes route. Preferably we would have the government complete the work upon which already a good deal of public money has been spent, but the next best thing would be to have a strong company undertake it. We want free competition in the carrying trade between the island and the mainland. That is clearly in the public interest. Any opposition to the Bill based on shutting out competition ought not to be entertained or carry weight with our legislators. We fail to see any danger from giving the Ferry Company the incorporation they ask for, and we see in the measure distinct possibilities of benefit to both the island and the mainland.

This is the unanimous opposition presented to this measure by the people of the island. It is not natural that an island so prosperous and so full of initiative, so overflowing with natural products should oppose facilities for exporting its products. Competition is what is wanted in every country and what is particularly asked for in Prince Edward Island, except I am very sorry to say, by the Steam Navigation Company and the shareholders thereof. But I will drop that question. I simply want to show that I stand to-day perhaps a better champion of the island that the representatives that are here, on this particular question. The Ferry Bill has been dropped, and why? Because of this opposition. But now we come in with a different Bill. Why should those gentlemen pursue their vengeance to the extent they are pushing it? Are they not satisfied to have crushed the Ferry Bill and killed it? Why should they come and oppose this innocent Bill which has nothing to do, apparently at least, with a ferry? Hon. gentlemen will remember what is said of a Roman emperor who had killed some one whom he hated. He would go every day and trample on the body, until one day one of his courtiers said 'Your Majesty that corpse is putrid.' 'Nonsense,' said the emperor. 'The corpse of an enemy always smells good.' In this case, my Prince Edward Island colleagues are not satisfied with having killed the original Bill. Behold, they come here and make every effort to kill, on principle, an innocent Bill. The second reading of a Bill affirms the principle of a Bill, and I ask the House in all fairness, what is there that is wrong in this Bill. Here is what we demand:

8. The company may, for the purpose of its undertaking,

(a.) construct, acquire and navigate steam and other vessels for the conveyance of passengers, goods and merchandise between any ports of Canada, and between any port of Canada and any port of any other country, and may dispose of the said vessels, and may carry on the business of elevating grain, of common carriers of passengers and goods, and of forwarders, wharfingers, warehousemen and shipbuilders;

(b.) construct, acquire, lease and dispose of wharfs, docks, elevators, warehouses, offices and other facilities or buildings;

(c.) construct, or aid in and subscribe towards the construction, maintenance and improvement of terminals, harbours, piers, wharfs, elevators, warehouses, roads, docks, dock-yards, and other buildings and works necessary or convenient for the purposes of the company;

(d.) construct, acquire, lease, use and sell all facilities designed for the lightering of steam or other vessels, and charge tolls for such lightering.

What is wrong in principle in this Bill? I know some of the promoters of the company, and they are all, barring possibly myself—good, substantial men. I know that some of them intend to go to the island, and do pork-packing. I know some, like myself, would like to do some lightering, and import some grain from the island. Is there here anything wrong in principle? And hon. gentlemen propose a six months' hoist on the plea of principle. Hon. gentlemen will mark that for fear of shocking the sensibilities of hon. gentlemen, the name of the island is not mentioned. The island we are not to touch, except possibly by navigating the straits. We may force some of the waves to strike the shores of that beautiful little island, and possibly affect the sensibilities of the Steam Navigation Company, but that cannot be helped. We have nothing to do with the island especially. It is a legitimate enterprise we are asking for. These gentlemen, I should think, ought to have been satisfied with killing the ferry and not pursue this Bill with vengeance to the extent they are doing now. I know, hon. gentlemen, I speak to an unprepared jury. I have asked no hon. gentleman beforehand to support me in this matter. Ask my room mates, the hon. gentleman from Wolseley, the Hon. Mr. Casgrain, and the Hon. Mr. Baird, if I ever even asked them to support this Bill? I do not believe that such things should be done. I stand here having canvassed no one. I am told that many senators have been privately asked to kill this Bill. This is regrettable, on principle. I think we are doing wrong if we allow ourselves to be canvassed, and to be committed beforehand to a Bill. Every Bill should stand on its own merits. The fact that I go and ask hon. members beforehand to support a Bill, shows there is something wrong with it. On the other hand, the fact that I ask hon. gentlemen to kill a Bill would indicate that that Bill is possibly all right by itself, but that I had some personal motives in killing it. I stand here with a jury unprepared, but I will ask all of you who believe in equal rights for all men and all companies, to give this Bill a fair show; at all events to allow it to go where other Bills go, to the committee who will have charge of the details of it. You are not going to condemn this Bill on principle. There is nothing wrong in the principle; if the details are wrong, then there is a committee detailed to deal with them, and I would ask hon. gentlemen in fairness and justice to vote at least, for the sending of this Bill to the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I desire to say just a few words upon this matter before a vote is taken. After what my hon. friend from Shediac has said there appears to be at least two sides to this question, and perhaps the representatives of this Bill, or the persons interested in the Bill, the promoters of the Bill in the other House and those who are interested in it in the maritime provinces have not had their views properly presented to this Senate, and the request which my learned friend has made to allow the Bill to go to the committee, and to give those gentlemen an opportunity of presenting their case, is a fair one and entitled to the consideration of the House. A good deal of reference has been made in the course of this discussion by my hon. friends from Prince Edward Island to the unsatisfactory nature of the communication between the island and the mainland. This is an old subject which has often been discussed in both branches of parliament, and I intend to say but a word or two on that point. I agree with the principal part of what has been said by the hon. gentlemen from Prince Edward Island in the references they made to this subject, particularly to what my hon. friend opposite from Port Hill (Hon. Mr. Yeo) said in his remarks some weeks ago. He refers to the attempts which have been made by the government during the last two years to improve this service by placing one of the steamers which the government have built and which have been in use in that service, upon the route between Summerside and Cape Tormentine, and to the fact that the first winter the steamer 'Stanley' was placed upon this route the service was, upon the whole, satisfactory. The steamer made as many trips as the steamer 'Minto' on the eastern route, and the expenses, owing to the shortness of the route, were very much less. It is true it did not do as much business as the other steamer, but that could be naturally explained. The route was new and the public were not aware that freight could be carried by that route, and passengers were generally directed by the railway agents to go by the other route. Last winter, unfortunately, a mishap occurred; the steamer became entangled in the ice, as my learned friend said, and after drifting about for some time, it was near spring when she was released, and she was not placed on the route again. There have been many expressions of opinion in regard to who was to blame for this condition of things. Blame has been attached to those in charge of the service and to the captain—I don't intend to express any opinion on that point, but I do not think that the failure of the steamer to give a better service during the last winter was sufficient in itself to condemn the route entirely. I agree, however, with my hon. friend when he says that the shorter route between the capes must eventually be adopted, if this service is to be made a success. The ground of opposition to the Bill as it was originally introduced arises, if I understand it correctly, from the fact that the people of Prince Edward Island desire to hold the government responsible for the proper performance of this service, and are not willing that any company should intervene between the government and the people of the island. I admit there is force in the argument, and I do not propose to combat it. I merely say on that point that I think, if the views of our friends are correct in this regard, that they should urge more diligently and forcibly upon the government the necessity of taking some prompt action in this matter. They have been labouring under the inconveniences of the present service for a number of years, indeed for all time up to the present, and I am satisfied, from my own knowledge and observation of the conditions there, that, so far as the winter service is concerned, it will never be satisfactory to the people of Prince Edward Island, that it will never be as efficient as it should be until the short route between the capes is adopted. It is a short route, it is only about eight miles. There are very seldom blocks of ice between the capes to prevent the passage of a steamer. The route is so short that the person in command of the steamer can always know before he leaves the wharf on either side whether the conditions are such that he will be able to make the other side or not. So that the dangers of that route are, for this reason, reduced to a minimum. If the people of Prince Edward Island, and those who represent the interests of the island in this House, and in the House of Commons, desire the government to carry out the terms of confederation, they should insist upon prompt action in this regard. If they do not do this; if they do not utilize the advantages which the Capes route affords by establishing a government service there, I think they are hardly justified in offering opposition to a private company desiring to establish a ferry between those points. So far as the summer service is concerned, the gentlemen who have spoken have expressed satisfaction with the service as it is now performed by the Prince Edward Island Steam Navigation Company. I concur in what they say with regard to that company, that they provide very good and suitable boats and are giving an excellent service, but if I understand correctly the views of the promoters of this Bill, they desire to be allowed to establish some additional steam communication between other points on the island and the mainland. Just what their schemes are, I am not able to explain to the House: I have no doubt they will be fully explained if this Bill goes to the committee. My hon. friend has referred to some enterprise in connection with pork-packing. I understand the promoters of this company are engaged in that business now, and intend to enlarge the business, and also have something in view in connection with the export of fish and other articles of island produce. It would appear to me that if this Bill went to the committee, should there be an objection on the part of the gentlemen from Prince Edward Island to the company being allowed to conduct a winter service, that might be eliminated from the Bill, and anything which would interfere with the interests of the present steam Navigation Company might also be struck out. But it seems hardly reasonable that this House should take the position that because there is one good service between the island and the mainland, therefore no other company should be incorporated or given powers to carry on business, or to establish a steamship service to carry on business between the island and the mainland. So far as I am personally concerned, I have no interest whatever in the Bill, but as I live in that locality and know something of the people and have had some communication with the promoters of the Bill, I only thought it proper that I should make these remarks. It is, of course, a delicate matter to urge anything affecting the island against the unanimous views expressed in this House by the gentlemen who come from that province, and I would only do so to the extent of asking the House to consider whether it is not right and proper, under the circumstances, that this Bill should be allowed to go to committee, and that the gentlemen who are interested in it should have the advantages which the committee affords of enabling them to explain the project in which they are interested, and to express fully their views in regard to it.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—The hon. gentleman from Acadia (Hon. Mr. Poirier), who opened up the question to-day, and whose name appears in the Bill as one of the promoters, set out by giving us the genesis of that measure, and truly it was an appropriate term to apply to the Bill, for we have to go back to the past century to find its inception. It appears that in 1890 this matter of communication between the provinces of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island was first proposed by means of a ferry between Richibucto in the province of New Brunswick and Cape Wolfe on the island. A Bill was passed authorizing the inception of that work. About that time a gentleman of some means and ability was down here before the members of the Senate and House of Commons promoting that measure, and during several succeeding years, he was to be found here advocating the measure very actively; but it never came to anything. As is stated by the hon. gentleman from Acadia, the names of some celebrated people were mentioned in connection with it—the Drexels and other men of means who certainly were in a position to carry that scheme into effect. The hon. senator stated that it was not carried out because the people of Prince Edward Island did not take any stock in the measure. Now, I do not know that that is a sufficient reason for that project not being carried into effect. After the gentleman who had first advocated it had disappeared from the scene, another gentleman from New York, or originally from Paris, came here and proposed to establish a ferry between New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island at the shortest crossing possible, if the other was not feasible, and he spoke in very liberal terms as to what could be accomplished there, and apparently from his advocacy of the measure it was a matter that millions would not prevent their accomplishing. The amount of money required to build harbours, steamers, and all those things in connection with it was nothing to them; they had lots of money and could do this without any trouble. That scheme also dropped, and now we have the present Bill before us. We do not find associated with it the names of any such celebrated financiers as Drexels or Vanderbilts or men of the means which they possess. We know the gentlemen whose names are associated with the Bill, and although the Dominion Packing Company was mentioned, I have the authority of some members of that company for stating that they have nothing whatever to do with it.

Now, hon. gentlemen, I think, under these circumstances that it is our duty to consider whether it is advisable to pass a measure of this kind which will certainly to some extent, interfere with what the government of the Dominon has undertaken to do in the way of keeping up winter communication between the province of Prince Edward Island and the rest of the Dominion. I fear that if we pass a Bill of this kind, it will interfere with that to some extent. The Bill as it was originally introduced was a Bill for the purpose of establishing a ferry between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. Some of these powers were eliminated in the House of Commons, and, as the hon. senator from Acadia has stated, it is now apparently a Bill of another character. True, it may be apparently so, at the same time the object of this measure has been the same from the first to the last. We fear that it will interfere with the duty which the government is pledged to discharge to Prince Edward Island. The hon. gentleman referred to the Bill that was passed in 1890. That Bill was not thrown out through any opposition from Prince Edward Island. There was no opposition whatever to it in the province, and it was altogether in the power of those who were the incorporators under that Bill to give it effect if they had desired to do so, but it was only a paper charter and we should be very cautious about passing Bills which are merely charters on paper and which the parties who obtain them may not be able to carry out. We know that in order to carry out this scheme it requires a very large amount of money to give such communication as they proposed under the original Bill between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. The government of the Dominion, during the past winter had a survey made at Cape Traverse in Prince Edward Island for the purpose of ascertaining what it would cost to make a proper landing place with harbour there, and although I have not the figures before me I am sure that the amounts required for that purpose would be many hundreds of thousands of dollars. As far as I recollect the amount asked is about eight hundred thousand dollars. The hon. gentleman stated that the island was united in asking for this Bill, and he read to us an extract from a paper published in Prince Edward Island advocating a measure of this kind. As far as that is concerned, if I were to take the time or trouble of reading to you extracts from several other papers that are published there, hon. gentlemen would find that they did not agree in the conclusions which apparently were arrived at by the paper from which my hon. friend has quoted. He spoke also of the monopoly which the Prince Edward Island Steam Navigation Company have of the service. I have no interest in the company, never owned a share in it, and never expect to. That company has no monopoly. It is true they have a subsidy from the government and are keeping up the service there, as far as that service goes, in a very satisfactory manner. I may say that the people of Prince Edward Island generally are not in favour of a measure of this kind.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—It has been dropped.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—They desire to have this matter left altogether in the hands of the government. The hon. gentleman says that measure has been dropped. He just told us a few moments ago, when addressing the House, that this Bill was, apparently, of a different character. Well, hon. gentlemen, it is only 'apparently' so, but the object is the same, and I leave it with your honours to deal with as you deem best.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I have listened to the discussion upon this matter with considerable interest. I have no desire by my vote to force upon Prince Edward Island something that the people of that island do not want. I do not think it would be courteous on the part of this Chamber to do so, when we find that every senator in this House, from that province, has risen and expressed his opposition to the Bill. Under those circumstances I certainly should hesitate to give a vote to force them to consent to the passage of a measure to which every one present is opposed. I sympathize somewhat with the view expressed by the hon. gentleman from Westmoreland. I would be quite willing, if the members from Prince Edward Island were satisfied, to allow the Bill to go to committee and give every party who has an opinion to express for or against the measure an opportunity of expressing that opinion and there dispose of the Bill, or to make a report recommending its adoption. But if they force a vote on the six months' hoist, in view of the opinions expressed I certainly should feel disposed to vote against the second reading. I do not want by my vote to force upon the people of Prince Edward Island what they do not want themselves.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Before the vote is taken I desire to make an explanation to make my own position perhaps a little clearer than I did yesterday. I may say in reply to my hon. friend from Shediac, that I have not one cent interest in the Steam Navigation Company, and the course that I am taking here is not in the interest of that company. Hon. gentlemen who followed my remarks yesterday will notice that to a limited extent, just as far as I thought they deserved it, I criticised that company and I am perfectly free from any inference that I am acting in the interest of the Steam Navigation Company in any sense whatever, and, more than that, let me tell my hon. friend that the opposition of the island to this Bill does not come to any great extent from the Steam Navigation Company but from the people generally. My hon. friend seems to have a grievance with Prince Edward Island because they have not accepted him as a deliverer—he and his New York friends—when he undertook to lead them out of the house of bondage some ten or thirteen years ago. I want to make an explanation with regard to that. It is just one point that should make us a little more careful with regard to this measure. At that time a Doctor De Bertram, from New York, appeared here with a proposition to connect the island with the mainland between Cape Wolfe and Richibucto, and he prepared a prospectus, I saw it myself, that he was going to submit to some capitalists—I suppose those my hon. friend refers to—and in that prospectus he had gone to the previous census and found how many bushels of potatoes and oats and other things of that kind Prince Edward Island produced and computed the earnings of the company upon the transportation of the entire product of the island in potatoes, oats and other things, all of which they were to carry away around by Richibucto. I may say, as far as I am aware—and I think I speak from some knowledge—that nobody in Prince Edward Island raised a finger against that proposition. It afforded them a good deal of amusement. This Doctor De Bertram proposed to acquire the Prince Edward Island Railway, to change the gauge of it and to put steamers on the route which could carry loaded trains where the channel was seventeen miles wide. They were allowed to have their own way. They came to parliament and got a Bill, and nobody said a word against them, and the scheme all evaporated in thin air.

It was not because the people of Prince Edward Island raised any objection at all. It afforded them a little amusement. They did not take it seriously. But I may say with regard to the communication between Cape Tormentine and Cape Traverse, it is a serious matter for Prince Edward Island. I have no hesitation in saying there are only two points between the island and the mainland where communication can be carried on successfully in the winter, and these are between Georgetown and Pictou at the east and between Traverse and Cape Tormentine at the middle west. With due deference to my hon. friend from Port Hill and others in the province, who think differently, I am quite satisfied that no service that could be of any use to the island would ever be effected between Summerside and any point on the mainland or between Charlottetown and any point on the mainland. These places are entirely out of it. The two points where the service can be maintained efficiently are between Georgetown and Pictou in the east and between the capes. The capes are, to my mind, the most important points. They are only seven or eight miles apart. There are railways communicating with the capes on either side, and it is the place we have to fall back on when the steamers get disabled or troubled in the carrying of mails and passengers. Almost every winter we have to fall back on that route, and if a steam service, as many believe, can be maintained at that place, it will have the enormous advantage, first, that it is so short, and secondly, when the steamers get disabled, as they may, or impeded from crossing, the mails can be transferred to the ice boats and the transportation of mails and passengers will go on. But, on any other route, when the steamers are blocked the mails have to be sent away to the capes, and a great deal of time is lost. Sometimes they get blockaded at one point and have to be shifted to another. If the service could be carried out at the capes, the ice boats would always be available there, and there are many—I confess I am one of them—who believe that if a good harbour were provided on the island side, and a good dock erected there, the question would be solved in a way that would be advantageous to the people of Prince Edward Island. I want to emphasize this point; the people of Prince Edward Island will not submit to wild experiments. They cannot afford to have the steamers taken away in experimenting, because it paralyses the whole trade of the island. There is no getting over the fact that very valuable service has been done to Prince Edward Island with the running of these steamers between Georgetown and Pictou——

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—At whose instance did they put the 'Stanley' on the Summerside route last year?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My learned friend asks this question. I don't want to find fault, but I have this to say, you will find in Prince Edward Island at almost every place people who will stand up for their own particular locality and they will say honestly, I suppose, that the service can be carried on at such place. It is true the steamer at Summerside made a good many crossings in 1892, so many as to make some think that route would be successful, but my hon. friend from Westmoreland knows very well we had practically no winter in 1892 at all. The thermometer never fell to zero at Prince Edward Island during the winter, and very little ice formed. It was a winter we never saw the like of before, and may probably never see again. I want to emphasize this point, that it is in the interests of Prince Edward Island that this Capes route should not be handed over to a private company of promotors whom we know have not sufficient capital to undertake such an enterprise as this, for the engineer's report shows that three-quarters of a million is required to build a dock at Cape Traverse to begin with, and we know these people have no thought of doing anything of that kind, which will have to be done by the federal government who will build the transcontinental railroad and who appear to have money enough to do anything which they undertake, and who are bound by the terms of union to give constant and efficient communication with Prince Edward Island. We do not want the government, in addition to having the great expense of building docks at Cape Traverse, to have to buy out private promoters who may claim, if this Bill is passed, to have some vested interest there. It is not in the interest of Prince Edward Island that any such thing should happen. We know the value of the route between these capes and we do not want any private company to interpose any new difficulties. There are too many difficulties now, and it is not desirable there should be any more. We are always glad to have the sympathies of our friends on the mainland with regard to this question, but they are not so deeply interested generally as we are. Projects have been suggested in favour of this route and that route by the people on the mainland. The people of each section believe that their own particular locality is better than any other. I will make one exception as to the assistance we have received from other provinces in favour of my hon. friend from Westmoreland. My hon. friend has done signal service to Prince Edward Island as well as to a particuler part of the province of New Brunswick by extending a railway down to the capes, a railway which will become a most important link in the carrying out of the terms of union with Prince Edward Island. An excellent service has been rendered as far as it is possible for any railway to effect that service, and I believe that it is not in the interests of that company, it is not in the interests of the people of Prince Edward Island, and it is not in the interests of the government that there should be given to any gang of promoters, who, as far as we know, possess no money at all, any valuable rights there which would stand in the way of the carrying out of the terms of union with Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I should like to say just two words: First, the features in the Bill that are objected to by my hon. friend have been dropped. There is no ferry now. Second, the Bill presented in this House has come in its present shape from the other House, where it had been opposed. The ferry part was dropped and it was accepted there in its present form, and it would look a little harsh for us to reject this Bill by giving it the six months' hoist, without condescending to look into it. It would not be a compliment to the other House.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—I quite agree with the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, in my opinion, that the only place where a winter service can be satisfactorily carried on and maintained is between Georgetown and Pictou. I live where, by fifteen minutes driving, I can go to a place where I can see those boats crossing, and that is my opinion. It is only an opinion, and what has that to do with the Bill before us? I understand the Bill is from gentlemen who ask for an Act of incorporation. I have read it very carefully, and have not found a single objectionable clause in it. They are not asking for any subsidies, exemptions from taxes, or anything else. They are merely asking us to incorporate them for a certain purpose. My experience in this House has been short, and I do not know what the practice has been, but it seems a summary way to treat gentlemen who are seeking incorporation by a private Bill, to move the six months' hoist on its second reading without allowing them to go before a committee to explain what they want.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—I should like to say, as the hon. gentleman from Marshfield has said, that I do not think the Steam Navigation Company have given any opposition to this Bill. Not a member of that company has spoken to me about it, and I am not influenced by them. If they had spoken to me, I probably would not be as decidedly opposed to the Bill as I am. We are opposed to it entirely because it is coming between us and the Dominion government in the matter of maintaining winter communication. We are very thankful to the gentlemen from New Brunswick who have shown such an interest in this matter, but I assure them we object on that ground particularly. When this Bill was first introduced in the other House, it was called an Act to incorporate the Prince Edward Island Ferry Company, and by it the company asked for power to run, operate and maintain a ferry between Cape Traverse and Cape Tormentine. When they saw the opposition from Prince Edward Island in the other House, they very shrewdly, and of course, wisely in their own interests changed the name of the Bill altogether, and called it an Act to incorporate the Marine Railway and Transportation Company of the Maritime Provinces.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—That was done expressly at the request of Mr. Blair, and we did it reluctantly.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—When Mr. Blair saw the opposition from Prince Edward Island with regard to the Bill, he opposed it. Then the promoters changed the name. But what does clause 8 of the Bill say ?

8. The company may, for the purposes of its undertaking,

(a.) construct, acquire and navigate steam and other vessels for the conveyance of passengers, goods and merchandise between any ports of Canada.

Now, Cape Traverse and Cape Tormentine are both in Canada, and they have substituted this, which is a very sinister way of getting the same thing through the House. That is the important thing they are asking for in this Bill, to get a charter for a service between Tormentine and Traverse, and as the hon. gentleman from Marshfield said, we utterly object to any company or man coming between us and the Dominion government in regard to our control of communication between those two points, because we do not know what the Dominion government may do for us, and we do not want to have another Chignecto Ship Railway business in the maritime provinces. One of them was enough. The government has had a sorry experience in regard to that, and we want no more of it. That is why I oppose this Bill so strenuously.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No doubt the rule has prevailed, and very properly, in this Chamber, that private Bills should be remitted to the Private Bills Committee, and if the opposition is strenuous, it is to be fought out there. That has been the practice, and a very proper practice it is. There may be occasions, however, when the feeling against a Bill is that it is going to operate injuriously to certain vested interests, the House adopts the unusual practice of throwing it out on the second reading. I do feel a good deal impressed as to the manner in which I shall vote on this motion—and I have no doubt many of my colleagues have the same feeling—by the position taken by the representatives from the island. I have had a long experience of this difficulty of maintaining communication between the island and the mainland. Thirty years ago, when I was a member of the government I know I was very often attacked by the representatives from Prince Edward Island because a better service had not been established. During those thirty years I have been a listener on many occasions, to accusations not only against the government of that day, but also against their successors, that a service such as was called for by the terms of union, had not been established. For the first time in thirty years I hear to-day an expression of approval on the subject. Whatever my disposition would be ordinarily, I am very strongly disposed to take advantage of this opportunity, and say: 'Let well enough alone.' A good deal has been said about the parties who are opposing the Bill not wishing to have the relations between the present company and the government disturbed. I know nothing whatever about that. The government have no policy on the subject. The parties seeking incorporation have a right to make any proposition they please, but knowing something of the history of the past, I fully appreciate the fear that the representatives of Prince Edward Island entertain, that some complications may arise which will make the service less satisfactory than it is at present. It is the people of the island and not the people of the mainland who are interested in this. The object is to establish a satisfactory communication between the island and the mainland, in the winter months particularly, and it is their feelings that have to be largely consulted, and that influences my judgment in the view which I take on the present occasion. As I said before, it is a very embarrassing question. On the one hand, one feels that a Bill of this kind ought to go to the Private Bills Committee to be threshed out there ; on the other hand, our friends from Prince Edward Island seem to be unanimous, and if the island is unanimous on the point, my judgment would rather lead me to favour the motion made to throw out the Bill.

The Senate divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following vote :

CONTENTS.

Hon. Messrs.

Béique,	Macdonald (P.E.I.),
Bowell,	McDonald (C.B.),
(Sir Mackenzie),	McMullen,
Casgrain (Windsor),	Merner,
Casgrain	Miller,
(de Lanaudière),	Montplaisir,
Church,	Pelletier,
Coffey,	(Sir Alphonse),
Dever,	Robertson,
Dobson,	Templeman,
David,	Tessier,
Ferguson,	Thibeaudeau (Rigaud),
Godbout,	Vidal,
King,	Yeo,
Lougheed,	Young.—28.
Lovitt,

NON-CONTENTS.

Hon. Messrs.

Bernier,	McSweeney,
Boucherville, de	Poirier,
Cloran,	Thibaudeau (Vallère),
Forget,	Watson,
Kerr (Cobourg),	Wood.—11.
MacKeen,

YUKON TERRITORY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (254) An Act further to amend the Yukon Territory Act. He said : The object of this Bill is to provide that when an appeal is made from a judge sitting in the Yukon Territory to the present Court of Appeal there, the two judges shall take the appeal, and the judge who rendered the decision in the court below shall not be one of the two judges.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CONTINGENT ACCOUNTS OF THE SENATE.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved the adoption of the third report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is a prerogative of this Chamber to fix the salaries of its officials, but it is a matter of very great regret that some proper principle does not prevail in adjusting the salaries of our officers. In the civil service generally, of which those officers are members, there are regular gradations from junior clerks up to senior and chief clerks and all the intermediate stages. The same rule prevails in the House of Commons, and when salaries are being increased the rule has been to adopt some uniform system. The rule which prevails in all the departments of the government has been to increase gradually by fifty dollars a year up to the maximum of the class, and then, when the official deserved it, he was moved up to the class above. The Senate has entirely ignored that rule and promotion from time to time has been in a very hap-hazard way. I had occasion last session to call attention to what I thought was a very extraordinary thing, the giving of an increase of $600 at one jump to an official. However deserving the increase might have been, it did not seem to accord with the practice that has prevailed in the past elsewhere, and the effect of the action of the Senate has been to disturb very materially the officials in the other branches of the government. They note that, by, I shall not say favouritism, but by a judgment that does not seem to be based upon any sound principle, officials are moved up one hundred, two hundred, three, four and five hundred dollars at a time. That does not prevail in any other branch of the service and it cannot be urged that the officials of the Senate are more hardly worked than any other branch of the service. On the contrary, it is the lightest branch of the government service. I think we have sat now, in this unusually long session, only eighty days, and the House of Commons has sat probably a third longer, and that I quote as one of the evidences why the service ought not to be compensated at a higher figure certainly than in the several departments. Speaking from my own department, I can point out officers who have been in the service since the early seventies and have not yet reached anything like the figures of other clerks who were appointed very many years subsequent to that date, and the effect is that it gives rise to a great deal of dissatisfaction. The pressure brought to bear constantly upon ministers—and my hon. friend opposite, I dare say, has had some experience of that—to increase salaries, is perpetual and when they point to increases granted in other branches as precedents, it gives rise to a very serious difficulty in administering a department. I think it is very unfortunate that the Contingent Committee has not laid down some rule that ought to prevail in making those increases. Where increases are made in a department we all know that if the increase is beyond fifty dollars the name has to be given, the special attention of the House of Commons has to be called to it, and the words 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary' have to be added in order that public attention may be directed to the fact that this is a departure from the principle that prevails throughout the public service. Since this report has come from the Contingent Committee, I have heard a great deal of dissatisfaction expressed outside at the changes which have been made. It is a delicate matter to disturb or interfere with a report made by a committee of this Chamber, particularly when that committee consists of twenty-five members composed of gentlemen on both sides of the House. It is an ungracious thing to interfere with, because one would naturally like to feel that they had given some consideration and thought to the subject and that they felt they were justified in making the recommendation they did; therefore, I felt very great repugnance about disturbing or interfering with the report of the committee. One has a natural objection to doing it. We depute to a body of hon. gentlemen the duty of considering certain subjects, and the natural inference is that they have done their duty faithfully, and having appointed them to do a special duty we recognize that we ought to accept it, but while accepting it, I felt it my duty to call attention again, as I did last year, to what I think is a very improper practice that prevails in that committee of giving these increases without any principle to guide them, and not based on any rules. I trust, hereafter, when we form that committee another year, that we shall adopt the principle laid down in the House of Commons, that the officials must rank in some class or other, juniors, first class or second class, chief clerk or some definite term by which their salaries shall be regulated. I have no fault to find with any of the officials, none whatever; but it must be conceded that they are not nearly as hard-worked as the officials in other departments of the government. Certainly the officials in this department cannot be charged with working more than from three to four months of the year, whereas officers in the other departments, who are paid very much less salary, holding similar positions, work the whole year with a vacation perhaps of three weeks. I make these observations in the hope that when we are again forming the Contingent Committee they will be impressed with a sense of the duty that this House casts upon them to adopt some rule that will justify the action of that committee and that it will be somewhat in harmony with the promotion and advances that take place in other branches of the government.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I should like to ask the hon. Secretary of State a question. The government has introduced a Bill in the other House regulating the salaries of deputy heads. I should like to ask him if it is intended to apply the same rule to the chief officers of this House who occupy the position of deputy heads, the clerks of the Senate and the House of Commons, who are officers in point of rank higher than any deputy head of the ministers, who are officers in point of rank higher than any deputy minister, and whose salaries now are higher than the great majority of deputy ministers? I see the government has introduced a Bill giving an increase first of three hundred dollars to deputy heads having now thirty-two hundred dollars, and a further increase of one hundred dollars a year until their salary reaches the sum of four thousand dollars. I should like to know—I presume the hon. gentleman will be in a position to give me the information—if the officers at the head of the service in both Houses are to be placed on the same footing as deputy ministers of inferior rank, and now with inferior salary, under the new arrangement? Of course the officers of parliament do not, technically speaking, belong to the civil service. They are outside of the civil service, technically speaking, and it will require some special legislation, I presume, to place the heads of the staff in the two Houses upon the same footing as the deputy ministers who are to be promoted. I certainly think that the principle ought to be applied to the officials in both Houses, and I should be very glad to hear from my hon. friend that it is to be applied to these officers.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think in the past the high officers to which he has referred, the clerks of the Senate and the House of Commons have been paid the salary of deputy heads.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—They take rank over all deputy heads.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am speaking of the material point which my hon. friend raised. That is, their salaries. I think in the past Mr. Langevin who was so long here, and also Mr. Lemoine, who was here so long, received a salary equal to a deputy head, which was then $3,200.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—They have more than some of the deputy heads.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As a rule they receive $3,200. There are special officers in the Department of Railways and Canals, Finance and Department of Justice.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—And the law department.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They have enjoyed an increase of $1,000 a year for very many years. They were considered to be exceptional officers, having very high and important duties, much more so than the deputy heads which it is proposed this year to increase the salaries of. Speaking from memory, I do not really know the exact position of the Bill or whether any changes have been made in it, but in the original I think it was provided that the deputy heads should be increased up to a certain sum, I think up to $3,600, and a gradual increase of $100 a year until they reached the $4,000 maximum. I think that is the rule laid down. I think it would be for the House of Commons and the Senate to adjust these salaries. They have had to deal with the salaries of these officers. They have not been fixed by the government. They have been added to from time to time by the committee of each House, and it will be for the committee in the future, as in the past, to adjust the salaries according to their judgment, which I think most fairly ought to be up to the class my hon. friend refers to, whatever the deputy heads have received.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I happen to be a member of the Contingent Accounts Committee, and I must express regret that there was no minister of the Crown there during the time this question was under consideration.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I am sorry the hon. Secretary of State was not present. I dare say had he been at the meeting the committee might have been guided in the course they took by the advice he would have been disposed to give them. Under these circumstances, I feel quite satisfied that the members of this House are disposed to deal generously with all the officers. We have unquestionably a very efficient staff of officers, and I for one am quite willing they should be dealt with on the same line that officers of an equal standing in the other House are dealt with. If they have increased the salaries of deputy heads in the other House, I would be quite willing to recognize the merits of the officers that we have in the same grade, and in order to give the committee a further opportunity of considering the question and bringing in a recommendation that may meet with general approval, and to give the hon. Secretary of State an opportunity of meeting with the committee and advising as to what should be done, I move:

That the report be not now adopted, but that it be referred back to the committee for futher consideration.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I second that motion.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Before the motion is put, I may just say that I have no particular objection to the report being referred back to the committee. The increases that were made, I might say, in some cases, were not made with the unanimous approval of the committee, but the consensus of opinion of members of the committee who were present was, of course, that the increases reported should be made. I trust that all the members of the committee will be present when this report is reconsidered. I should much prefer that some system should be adopted, such as the hon. Secretary of State has suggested, and which is a standing rule, I believe, in the House of Commons. While their officers are not on the civil list and are not in the civil service, they are controlled by the classification in the House of Commons. I am perfectly satisfied that it would be much better and much more agreeable to the Committee on Internal Economy if the officials were classified in the Senate in the same way. I find in the House of Commons they adopted a rule in 1885 which really applies to all the officers of the House of Commons. They classify them and fix the maximum salary, and it would be much better if that were done in connection with the Senate staff, because, as can be seen by this report, one or two gentlemen are selected who pressed their claims more than others, and called the attention of the committee to the matter, and got the majority of the committee to support the increase. Other members of the service, who are, probably, just as much entitled to increased pay are neglected because they do not press their claims, and I think it is well that this report should be referred back to the committee, inasmuch as the government, at the present time, are passing a Civil Service Bill which is dealing with the branches of the civil service. We will have to base the salaries paid to officers of the Senate somewhat along the lines of the salaries provided for in that Civil Service Act, because I can quite understand that when we increase in one branch of the service, all branches will expect the same increase, and there can be no question about the increases we make. I believe the clerk of this House ought to rank with the deputy ministers.

Hon. MEMBERS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I believe, considering the responsibilities he has in connection with the affairs of the country, that he should rank with the deputy ministers. The proposition submitted in the House of Commons is that $4,000 shall be the minimum salary of deputy ministers, and I think Mr. Schreiber's salary is $6,000. Law clerks may be dealt with in the same way. I think it would be well, when we consider the salaries of our officials, to take into account what the government is proposing to do in connection with the Bill at present before parliament dealing with the salaries paid the civil service. I have no particular desire to press my motion and am quite prepared to reconsider this report in committee.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I feel that some justification is required for referring the report of the committee back for further consideration. Of course it is not a reflection on the committee by any means, and the members of the committee, I have little doubt, will not look upon it in that light. Still one ought to have some justification for sending a report of this kind back for further consideration, because the committee appointed to look after the contingencies and internal economy of the House is a committee that is presumed to be perfectly cognizant of all the details of the service and generally gives its best attention to matters in detail as they come before us. But a practice has prevailed, a very good practice it has been, for years past in summoning the Committee on Internal Economy to accompany the notice with a docket showing the business to be brought before it at that meeting, and that practice has been so firmly and generally established, that one expects to receive specific notice in such a docket, of the business to be transacted, at every meeting of the committee. When the last meeting took place, I received a notice beforehand, and instituted inquiries as to the business that was to come before the committee, and I was told then that only the consideration of the clerk's report, which had been submitted early in the session, was to engage the consideration of the House. I therefore considered there was no urgent necessity—I was not very well at the time—to attend the meeting of the committee. I found, however, that the meeting, which was a small one, I believe only half of the committee were present, most unaccountably, to my mind, undertook to make very serious additions to the disbursements of this House, in the way of increase of salaries of officers. Some of them are justifiable, or partly justifiable. The increase in the clerk's salary, for instance, I think is partly justifiable. I would go, as I said just now, for placing it upon the same footing as the salary of a deputy minister. Three hundred dollars of an increase this year, and an annual increase of $100 until it came to $4,000. The postmaster is the oldest member of the service, connected with the Senate. He came here at confederation, and has been employed in the Post Office Department connected with the old legislative council. During all his years of service, since confederation, he has occupied this most important and responsible position and has been most obliging and courteous and assiduous in the discharge of his duties, and there has not been one single complaint of any kind against him. In fact he is a man who will go out of his way to oblige a senator whenever the occasion offers. I would, therefore, be favourable to increasing his salary, not to $1,900, but to $1,800, in view of his early retirement and superannuation. The clerk of the other House, who has not seen so long service, retired on superannuation with $1,900 a year, but I think a fair increase on which to base the retiring allowance of a postmaster should be about $1,800. On those two items I do not differ. The others are open more or less to argument, but there is one item, which I certainly would not have approved of if I had been on that committee, and that is the increase to the law clerk. I think it is altogether unjustifiable. I think there is no man perhaps in the civil service that has a softer thing, than has our law clerk, and I think he is well paid at $2,800 for any services he renders to this House. I recollect when that officer came in first his salary was fixed at $2,000, with the understanding that he should be here a month before the session opened and should stay a month afterwards, and the rest of the time he should have to himself. He said he had some law practice, and as there was no business for him to do, during those months in connection with the Senate, we generously allowed him to have that time and gave him a salary of $2,000. It is a very handsome salary for the work he had to do. There are in all the provinces, in the rural districts especially, and in many of the cities, first-class lawyers—gentlemen in the first place, and men of ability and education and standing in their profession who would be very glad to come here and take that office for $2,000 a year, and would give at least as much satisfaction to members as the occupant of that office does at the present time. What does he do? During this parliament we have had only two sessions, not including this one, and neither of them was a four month's session but our average session ought to be about four months. That would make the time that the law clerk would be in the service of the Senate, six months, and for six months you give him now $2,800, nearly as much as those hard-worked men, the deputy heads get for the whole year round, and I assert there are no harder worked men in the civil service of Canada than the deputy heads, I do not care what department you go to. Taking the amount paid to the law clerk for his six months' services, it would amount to $5,600 a year, and with the increase it would be $6,400 a year. I say we can easily get a man for $2,000 on the terms on which Mr. Creighton was brought in here, fitted to discharge the duties of law clerk of this House. There is another thing in this report to which I decidedly object, in consequence of which I would like it to be referred back to the committee. There is an item here for a typewriter operator in the law clerk's office. I have asked many members, in fact there is no one better able to answer the question than myself, from my experience as a member of this House, what are the duties that require a typewriter in the law clerk's office. My experience in this House ought to enable me to answer this question as well as any gentleman to whom I addressed it, but I cannot tell you what they are. I found no member who could tell me what the duties are. Last year we gave the chairman of the committee power, in his discretion, to authorize the employment of a typewriter in the law clerk's office. Well, it was done.

We know what a kind-hearted man the chairman of the committee is. We know how hard it is for him to refuse a favour of that kind, and he did it. But what do I find this year ? I find a clause was drafted by the law clerk—it is drafted by the law clerk, of course, in this year's report that the hon. chairman has no option in doing next year what he did this year. I think it is a little bit of sharp practice, because it was never intended. It was intended that the discretion this year, as last year, should be with the chairman, and that is one reason the matter should be referred back to the committee. But I want to know, before I vote for the employment of a typewriter, I want to know what service she has to perform ? There are typewriters next door to the law clerk's office, the official reporters of the House, who have their regular scale of fees for typewriting work. I venture to say that all the work that would be required to be done by a typewriter in the law clerk's office would not exceed $20 or $30 if done according to the regular rate. But three or four hundred dollars is the bill for this useless office. I consider it one of the most unjustifiable items in all our disbursements, and it is one of the reasons I want to have the report sent back to the committee, that we may get some information with regard to this point ; what is the service, and what is the necessity for this typewriter ?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Might I be permitted to add one word to what I said ? My idea in moving that the report be referred back, was for the purpose of considering the increases in the light of the statement made by the Secretary of State regarding increases made in the other House, and to heads of departments. Now, as far as our clerk is concerned, I have not the slightest desire in any shape or form or way, to oppose a respectable increase being made to him, to bring his salary up to that of a deputy head of any department. I am quite willing to do that. I must confess that I would like on many matters to agree with my hon. friend who has addressed the House, but I cannot agree with him with regard to the law clerk. I may be mistaken, but since I came to this House I have admired the ability that that gentleman has displayed in the discharge of his duties. I think that he is, on the whole, an efficient law clerk. I do not know what he may be able to do after this House rises, or whether he does any legal work at all or not. In my humble opinion if he does not earn money in any other shape than by the services that he renders in connection with this House, he is not overpaid and I would be quite willing to grant him an increase. I believe him to be a thoroughly able, capable man. With regard to the typewriter, I do not at all agree with my hon. friend, for this simple reason : I have made attempts to prepare a Bill or two to introduce into this House, and I know that I got very efficient assistance from the law clerk, and in every case where they were amended, they were re-typewritten by his typewriter. If every other member of this House gave the same trouble as I did, the law clerk would certainly require to have that typewriter all the time. I have had work done also at a time when I could not get it done elsewhere, and without any charge, at the request of the law clerk, so that in the discharge of his duties, I cannot see very well how he would be able to get along without a typewriter. Most business men and lawyers now have typewriters. They cannot get along very well without them. I do not see how the law clerk, in answering correspondence that comes from a distance with regard to Bills and business in this House, could attend to such correspondence without the aid of a typewriter. It would take up a considerable amount of time, and I do not think it would be a credit to the dignity of this House if the correspondence had to go out written by hand instead of being typewritten. I do not for a moment challenge the right of the law clerk to have a typewriter. I am willing, however, if it is the wish of the House, to refer the report back and let the committee talk the matter over quietly with the Secretary of State present, and decide what increases should be made in view of the increases that have been made in the other House and to deputy heads, and I am willing to act generously with every officer of this House and place them fully upon a par with officers in other departments. I do not wish to force the report upon the House if there is anything in it that shows extravagance or excess, or anything beyond what we really should recommend.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I do not understand this question of a typewriter. I presume that when a gentleman comes to the Senate he has passed through many phases and he ought to be able to do his own typewriting, and if the law clerk requires a typewriter, I think each of us should have one. I do my own typewriting. I have a machine in my own room, and I come there early in the morning and get through all my correspondence. Why should I be placed on a different platform from the law clerk of the House ? I had served my apprenticeship before I got to the Senate. I was elected in 1872, and have been in public life for many years, and though I am here as a senator I am not too old to do my own typewriting. I would like to have a good-looking typewriter. It is all the better to have an operator to do such work when the work is heavy. I fully agree with the proposed increase to the salary of the clerk of this House. He holds a very responsible position.

I had the honour of being for a number of years a member of the House of Commons, and judging from my experience there and recognizing the value of the services there, I think next to His Honour the Speaker, perhaps the clerk is the most responsible man in the House, and I can recognize when we get to the heads of departments, that he should be in no position inferior to them, either in position or in pay; but when we come down to advocate an increase of salary to the law clerk, it is a large sum of money, and if he does not think it is enough, let him get out like myself. If I am not satisfied to come here and spend seven months at a time and be docked eight dollars a day for every day I am absent, I can pick up some other job. I am not finding any fault with the law clerk or with his services. I think it is a very great thing to have him here to advise some gentlemen who are not very well posted, and who, like myself, are somewhat lazy, perhaps, and do not intend to get posted. One thing I have to say, and I think this is the proper time to say it—I entirely object to the law clerk taking charge of the committees of the Senate. I was for four years chairman of a committee in the House of Commons, and the law clerk of that House never attempted to dictate to the committee. We have had instances of such dictation within the last few hours. The law clerk can take advantage of his position to throw obstacles in the way of legislation.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am entirely in accord with what has been said by the hon. Secretary of State. An additional reason to send the report back to the committee is this—I am not a member of the committee, but I happen to know that a sub-committee has been appointed to look into the question as to whether other employees' salaries should be raised. Their work is not before us, and for my part, without any solicitation, without having been approached on the subject by any employee, I consider that some salaries should be increased. I know of one who is entitled to an increase, but these questions should come as a whole before the Senate ; the subject should not come up piecemeal. The employees should be fairly treated, but they should be put on a proper scale, and whether they ask for an increase or not, the merits of each employee should be considered. The fact that a matter of the same kind is actually engaging the attention of the sub-committee of the Contingent Accounts Committee is a sufficient reason to send the report back and have the subject reported upon as a whole.

Hon. Mr. MacKEEN—I would venture to say that this discussion and criticism of the servants of the Senate is not exactly fair. I do not think it is quite kind on our part to criticise men who are evidently doing their duty, and perhaps are entirely innocent of the action of the committee in recommending these advances. My experience, and I have had some, in the way of regulating salaries in connection with banks and incorporated companies, has been to make it a rule that these advances should be uniform, for two reasons : to reward merit and encourage good, honest service, and also to recognize that it is necessary to keep these advances uniform, otherwise you are discouraging servants who are trying to do their duty—not only discouraging, but prejudicing them. For instance, I may be working alongside of an office clerk doing the same work ; he may have more aptitude than I, but if he gets a hundred dollars of an advance and I get none, what do I consider? That my employers do not think I am worth the same remuneration as my desk mate. Now very often there is not enough attention paid to regulations of that kind. What I wanted to say was this: From my intercourse and what I have seen of the servants of the Senate, you will meet as uniform courteous treatment from the employees of the Senate as you will find in any institution I have had anything to do with. They are uniformly polite. Although I do not pretend to judge, I would say that this law clerk is doing his duty fairly well—as well as any of his predecessors—and to say that he is useless and over-officious in his attendance on committees is, I think, a little censorious, not to use any stricture towards the speakers who have given their opinion pretty freely. The law clerk is taken before those committees for what? To advise them. His advice is asked—he is there for that purpose and it is his duty, I take it, to advise on questions of law, of usage and so forth, that the ordinary lawyer perhaps is not as conversant with as he has every right to be. I do not think it is quite fair to criticise these men without closed doors. I do not think it is quite fair to say they have typewriters that they should not have, and indulge in criticisms of that sort without hearing the report of the committee. There may be reasons for these statements, but I thought perhaps it was a little unnecessary to make some of the remarks to which we have listened.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It is in the report; are we not discussing the report?

Hon. Mr. MacKEEN—It may be, but all the same, that is my view. Though they may be well paid, there ought to be strict regard to the comparative salaries in the advances that are given to all our employees. In this matter there should be a joint committee of both Houses to regulate the advances, so that there would be no hard feeling between the branches. They should be uniformly paid for the services rendered. It may be out of order to make some of these remarks, but it struck me the criticisms were just a little too hard on some of these men, who, perhaps, are not responsible for the views the committee have taken.

Hon. Mr. MacKEEN.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—The minister was quite right in expressing the view that there should be rules to govern all these matters. As a member of the committee, I have tried on two or three occasions to come to that, but never succeeded in convincing my colleagues on the committee. I hope the stand taken on this report has directed attention to the subject, and that the suggestion made to-day will be followed up. Until then we shall never have any satisfaction. All the members of the committee have experienced a good deal of unpleasantness in such matters as those now under discussion. If there were rules to govern the committee that unpleasantness would disappear.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Apparently the sense of the House is in favour of uniformity, as expressed by the hon. gentleman from Cape Breton (Hon. Mr. MacKeen), and that appeals to the sense of fair play in the House. If uniformity could be established, it would go a long way towards preventing jealousy or dissatisfaction among the servants of the Senate. In 1885, when the House of Commons passed the regulations to which the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie (Hon. Mr. Watson) has referred, they must have felt the very same necessity. They classified their officers. I am not a member of the committee, but I should like to know if it will not be necessary, in order to ensure uniformity, that there shall be a classification. If that is so, would it not be well to add to the motion of my hon. friend that the report be referred back to the committee for further consideration with a request that the committee take into consideration the classification of the officers of the House. That is the best method to ensure uniformity, as the hon. gentleman from Cape Breton has said very truly, and we should at once take such steps as will bring it about. It will be more satisfactory not only to ourselves, but also to the officers of the House, because all then would get justice, whether they pushed their claims or not. They would get justice on the principle laid down by my hon. friend, good service would be recognized by the committee, and we would have none of this trouble from year to year.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I simply desire to emphasize the suggestion made by the hon. Secretary of State and concurred in by the chairman of the committee, that is, in the line suggested by the hon. gentleman from Cape Breton (Hon. Mr. MacKeen) and the hon. gentleman from Killarney (Hon. Mr. Young). It would prevent in future what may be termed unpleasant discussions in reference to the salaries of our officials. What did strike me as peculiar when I read that report, was that some of the officials of the Senate, whom we all know are assiduous in the performance of their duty and never fail to attend to it, are not mentioned at all. I refer particularly to the gentleman who is in the accountant's branch. There is not a kinder-hearted or more faithful servant belonging to the Senate.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—What is his salary ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not know, but it is not so large as some of those that have been recommended for increase. The accountant has to attend to his duty the whole year round, because he has to pay the different officials. When I made inquiry as to why this gentleman had been overlooked, the answer was that his name had not been brought before the committee, and that he himself had not made application or pushed his claims before members of the committee, and my impression is that he was not thought of. I do not think it was intentional on the part of any member of the committee, and if this report is sent back, some consideration should be given to that gentleman as well as the others, if the salaries are to be raised. This difficulty has arisen almost every session, owing to the fact that some ardent members of the committee, perhaps, are unnecessarily bothered and canvassed upon this question of salaries. If the chairman of the committee will only carry out the suggestion made to-day and classify the officers, and lay down as a principle what the minimum salary shall be when an official enters the service, and what the maximum shall be, and let the increases be annually, as provided for in the civil service, I am quite sure this matter will be dealt with in a more satisfactory way in the future than it has been in the past. There is one point raised by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay (Hon. Mr. Domville) in reference to the law clerk, comparing his duties with those of the law clerk of the Commons. They are not analagous. The law clerk of the commons never attends the meetings of the committees.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The law clerk of the Senate is obliged, by our rules, to attend the committees. He is made a clerk of the committees, and my experience has been, without saying anything about his salary, that he has very seldom—and I have been on nearly all the important committees since I have had the honour of a seat in this House—given an opinion unless it is asked by the chairman or by some member of the committee as to the effect which an amendment will have upon the clauses in the Act. That he sometimes unnecessarily gives his opinion, I frankly confess. I think I have objected once or twice myself, intimating that he had better wait until he is asked for his opinion, but there is this justification, and I desire to point it out in justification for his interference in that way, and that is the different position which he occupies towards the committees of the Senate to that which is occupied by the law clerk of the House of Commons. I notice, in the debate in the House of Commons the other day, that one of the members from Toronto complained that the salaries paid to the officials in the Senate were higher than those paid to similar officials in the Commons. I must confess that I was not aware of that. I had been under the impression that it was the other way; but when he asked an explanation from a member of the government upon that question the answer was that he could not tell. The Senate had control of its own contingent fund and consequently could dispose of it as they thought proper. That is all I desire to say upon that question. From the tone of the hon. gentlemen who have spoken I am under the impression that the report will be sent back, and in any report the committee may make during the session—I do not think it will take much time—they will take upon themselves to lay down a rule or principle upon which the salaries of all the officials will be treated in the Senate and I am quite sure we shall accept the proposition. I compliment my hon. friend opposite on the moderate tone —I cannot help referring to a little ancient history—with which he dealt with these unprecedented increases. When I brush up my memory I remember, when another party had the control of the Contingent Committee, how vehemently he attacked us when we would recommend a hundred dollars, or fifty dollars, or two hundred dollars of an increase to some of the officials. The tone was quite different then from what it is now when his own friends control, not only the destinies but the distribution of the funds that are in our hands for the payment of clerks and otherwise. It is only another evidence to my mind that as we advance, that that which used to be termed extravagance and unnecessary expenditure of the public money on our part can be excelled and exceeded by the hon. gentlemen themselves. Those who used to find fault with us upon that point can change their minds and be much more extravagant than we ever were. They are becoming much more lavish in the expenditure of money in every way than their predecessors in office. However, I congratulate the hon. gentleman on the different tone which he now adopts. As we grow older we become more moderate, and a suggestion thrown out by him just now in reference to uniformity in payment of salaries I am fully in accord with. I hope the Contingent Accounts Committee will adopt the suggestion and will bring in a report which I have no doubt will be accepted by the Senate.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend's memory is better than mine. I am not aware that I was the economist he would describe me when I was a member of that committee. I am not a member now. I was rather a prominent member years ago.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I hope the hon. gentleman did not understand me to say that he was a member of the committee or that he was an economist, except when in opposition. I was speaking of the tone with which he treated the report of the committee.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because I have always been in favour of paying the officials of the Senate a fair salary. I was very sorry to hear the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Rothesay in reference to the law clerk. I have known the law clerk for a great many years and I have found him an extremely efficient officer. I know that not only myself but other members of this Chamber have had recourse to him whenever it became necessary to draft Bills or draft clauses of Bills, and I have always found him equal to the work he was engaged for. It must be remembered that in employing a professional man we select one in whom we have every confidence. We have every reason, I think, to feel confidence in the gentleman we selected a good many years ago. I think it was 1882 that he was appointed, which was over 20 years ago. It must be recollected that that gentleman had to give up all his practice. It was quite impossible for him to practice outside and at the same time act as law clerk of the Senate. He has to be here for some considerable time before parliament meets and he has to be here for some time after it prorogues, and the duty he performs is very efficiently done, in my judgment. In reference to the observations made about his having an assistant in the office, a typewriter, I think that is quite defensible, and I am glad to hear that hon. gentlemen agree in that view; but certainly I do not think he is open to the criticisms that have been passed upon him. When I have attended the meetings of the committees I have found when he was appealed to that his judgment was always good. He knew where the point could be settled by looking up the statute or the case which was referred to. It was a great convenience to members of that committee to feel confidence in an official to whom they appealed for guidance in matters of doubt with which he happened to be familiar. I do not desire at this late period of the session that this report should go back. I merely wanted to sound a note of warning that for the future some change should be made. There is a Bill relating to the civil service before the House of Commons. I do not know what changes they will make. It would be rather premature, I think, for the Contingent Accounts Committee to make any alterations or changes until the Bill becomes law and I, therefore, should much prefer if the matter were postponed. This is rather a late period to make changes unless we are confident that they are in conformity with the Bill that will be passed by parliament. It will probably be up before this Chamber next week and possibly it will be wise to defer until that Bill comes before us, advice to the committee to take any action on the matter which has been suggested in reference to classification.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That Bill only deals with the civil service.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not with us at all.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I should like to ask the chairman of the committee how much we pay for the typewriter who is working in the law clerk's office ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—$40 a month.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—And I suppose that assistant is necessary ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It has been judged so.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—The law clerk in the House of Commons has no typewriter. I do not doubt the efficiency of our law clerk. I do not doubt that a great many hon. gentlemen here have nothing but praise for him, but as far as I am concerned I had better not deal with his case personally. But if I cannot help him I do not wish to be prejudicial to him, I simply wanted to ask the question as to the salary, because what is paid for his assistant accrues to his salary—increases it to that amount. She is paid $40 a month, I am told.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—Only for the session.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Although but a young member of this House I feel that it is due to the gentleman whose name has been discussed here to-day that I should say something with reference to what I think is the able and efficient manner in which he has discharged his duty. I think Mr. Creighton is an underpaid man at the sum to which it is proposed to increase his salary. I think he is thoroughly fitted for the position, and I have observed him not merely during this session, but in previous sessions when I have been here, and I should be extremely sorry to have this matter dealt with at all, without bearing testimony to his uniform courtesy, and to the ability which he has displayed when called upon to give advice promptly, sometimes in difficult matters. I think it is due to him, that I should say what I have said upon that point. There is no person who has occupied that position as long as he has but is well worthy of fair, reasonable compensation on a much more liberal scale than is proposed in this Bill. I do think it is an unfortunate thing, when a person enters the civil service of the country—a man occupying a position in the profession which he did, with reasonable prospects which he had of promotion, and the income he could reasonably have expected to earn, all of it being set aside—I think it is an unfortunate thing when the opportunity is afforded of doing some justice to him, that it is not taken advantage of, and I think, therefore, it is only right that one who has had an opportunity of forming a judgment about it, should give the House the result of that judgment.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Does the hon. gentleman think a salary of $2,800 for half a year, which is about the time he is occupied in the Senate, is not a very good salary ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—No professional man can leave his practice for the length of time Mr. Creighton is engaged in the Senate, and expect to go back to his profession and realize that his professional income is going on as if he had not been here. Many who leave their practice because they become members of the House, or who have been otherwise called upon to leave their profession, know perfectly well that in leaving their profession they are abandoning a great deal more than is represented by a salary such as this. There is no opportunity to resume practice, because he is at a different place, and I think it would be an undesirable thing that he should be practising here in competition, with the professional men who would be called upon to bring matters before the House and with whom he would be brought in contact. I think it is a fortunate thing he does not practice here.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I think Ontario legal gentlemen have very large ideas with regard to the remuneration of the profession, hardly suited to the economical ideas that prevail in other parts of Canada.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Is the reason not because they have some knowledge of what the services are worth ?

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The highest salary of a county court judge in Ontario is $2,400. He does four times as much work as the law clerk. He must have talents and requirements just as great as the law clerk of the Senate, and, as I said just now, you can get dozens of men in the profession, of good standing, gentlemen in every respect, who would be very glad to come here and take his position at the salary Mr. Creighton was engaged at, with the privilege of following their business the other six months of the year. That is the fact we have to deal with. We are not to deal with the fancy figures of the practice of a great lawyer in the cities of Montreal or Toronto. We cannot make a comparison with those figures at all. I can understand my hon. friend from Toronto, who has been in a circle where tens of thousands of dollars may be the income of a lawyer, gauging everything by that, considering that our law clerk is not sufficiently paid for the work he does ; but those who come from the smaller provinces, and whose ideas are not at all the same as those entertained by the profession in such places as Toronto, look upon these matters in a very different light. But I know that the law clerk got a very soft thing when he received an appointment at $2,000, and he could not have got it had it not been for my support and assistance. I had sufficient influence in the committee, which was very closely divided, to carry it for him. I did it because he was a Nova Scotian, and I did it because I thought Nova Scotia had not a fair representation in the offices of parliament, connected with the civil service.

The amendment was adopted, and the report was referred back to committee.

REPRESENTATION OF NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES IN SENATE BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (253) An Act to increase the representation of the North-west Territories in the Senate. He said : In consequence of the large increase of the population of the North-west it is proposed to give two additional senators to the Territories. I may say that even giving it two additional senators, the senators of the North-west will represent a larger number of electors and population than any other province except the province of Ontario. The twenty-four senators from the province of Quebec mean one senator for every 68,000 persons. The twenty-four for Ontario mean a senator for every 98,000. In Prince Edward Island, one senator represents 25,000, the same as the representatives of that province in the other Chamber ; the ten from Nova Scotia mean one senator for 46,000 ; the ten from New Brunswick mean a senator for every 33,000 ; the four from Manitoba mean a member for every 63,000 ; the three from British Columbia a senator for every 59,000 ; the four from the North-West Territories mean a senator for every 70,000 based on this assumption : In 1891 the population of the Territories was 66,749 in the organized, and 32,000 odd in the unorganized, making 98,000, which would be one for every 49,000 ; but at the time the two senators were given to the North-west Territories the population was very much below that. It was based on a calculation about one for every 25,000. I calculate the population of the North-west Territories at present at 184,000, which, I think, is under the mark. It was 184,000 taking the organized and unorganized territories and excluding the Yukon, in 1901, when the census was taken, and certainly 100,000 people have gone in since that time. I think considerably more have gone in, but I put it on that basis and that would give one senator for every 70,000 of the population, which is a larger proportion than any province except the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does the hon. gentleman think it is fair to take population as the basis of representation in the Senate ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is some guide.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, not at all.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Perhaps not in the eyes of the hon. gentleman. I do not take it as an absolute guide, because I am pointing out that the smaller provinces have properly, in my judgment, the true representation on ratio just as they have in the United States where the little State of Rhode Island has as strong representation in congress as New York with five or six millions of population.

But in the past the representation has been some guide in fixing the number of senators. If you take the Territories the claims of the North-west Territories would be very much greater because it is the most expansive part of the whole Dominion, far greater than any of the provinces, and therefore if you put it on that ground the two additional senators would not be an unreasonable proposal.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—What district in the Territories will the new senators represent ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It has never been thought of.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Would the Yukon Territory be included in the representation ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it was not on this calculation. The Yukon with a population of 20,000 has one member representing it in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—But would not these senators be for the Territories, including the Yukon.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not in the Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am merely going to remark that the North-west Territories have not been given the additional representation in the Senate too soon. I know it was the intention, when I was in the government six or seven years ago, to add to the representation of the North-west Territories in the Senate. The only question now is as to whether the additional two members is sufficient, considering the rapidity with which that country is being populated and the extent of territory, though I am not aware that the extent of territory, or the population of any portion of the Dominion should be the guide or the principle upon which the representation in the Senate should be based. As has been intimated by the hon. Secretary of State, in the United States, the different states are represented in the Senate equally, no matter what their size or population, and that is, as I understand it, to prevent the more democratic bodies from interfering with the rights and privileges of the different states, and it was upon that principle that the fathers of confederation adopted the system which prevails to-day in Canada giving to Quebec twenty-four, Ontario twenty-four, and to the maritime provinces twenty-four senators.

As the new provinces were added to the Dominion, there was no guide, and it is simply a question of equity with the government of the day, as to how many senators shall be appointed. When British Columbia came into confederation, they had a larger representation, proportionately, than the other provinces in the Senate, and it was for the reason that I have already indicated, that it was known to be a growing province, just as in the case of a representative in the Commons when the redistribution took place a number of years ago, giving a representative to the Muskoka district with only 8,000 people living in it. But experience justified the Act of the government of that day, from the fact of its rapid growth until now it has a population that have a number of representatives. I fully concur in the provisions of this Bill, and the only point with me is whether the representation should not be increased to six instead of four. I suppose the probability is, in a very short time that the representation will be increased, no matter which party is in power.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I desire to express my satisfaction with the policy of the government in thus increasing the number of senators for the North-west Territories. The only fact I regret is that the increase has not been larger than four. Even with the present population, and the rapid development of the country, certainly the government would have been justified in increasing the representation in the Senate, say, on the same basis as the Senate is represented in the maritime provinces. Take, for instance, the province of New Brunswick, which is represented by ten senators in this House, and the present population of the Territories must very closely approach the population of New Brunswick. My hon. friend from Stadacona seemed to express some degree of surprise that the principle of representation should be upon the basis of population. A very much more important fact is to be taken into consideration in the matter of representation of the Territories, and particularly the western part of Canada. If any portion of the Dominion should be well represented it is those portions that are being so rapidly developed, as the west is, at the present time. The duties of members are certainly more onerous on account of the growing character of the country, than those imposed upon members from the eastern and more settled sections of the Dominion. I might refer particularly to the very onerous duties imposed upon the members of the Commons from the North-west Territories. I undertake to say that no members of the Commons begin to perform the onerous and the burdensome duties that those gentlemen are called upon to perform in their respective constituencies, not only departmentally here, but while they are at their homes. I cannot say that the same will so largely apply to the duties cast upon members of the Senate, from the west, in this Chamber, at the same time if they will discharge the duties commensurate with the growth of the districts which they represent, and if they will keep in touch with the public business in those rapidly growing districts, certainly the duties which would be imposed upon senators in this Chamber, would warrant the government in giving as large a representation from the North-west Territories as from the other parts of the Dominion where the population is no greater.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not find fault with the government in bringing in a Bill to increase the number of the senators in this House and give two English-speaking senators to the North-west, but I do protest against the argument, saying that this increase is based upon the fact that the population is increasing there so rapidly. The population was never the basis of representation in the Senate, and I protest against this argument being used at the present time.

The Bill was read the second time.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (252) An Act to amend the Act relating to Ocean Steamship Subsidies.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

The Bill was read the first time.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Thursday, October 1, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (211) an Act respecting the Nicola, Kamloops and Similkameen Coal and Railway Company.—(Hon. Sir Alphonse Pelletier.)

Bill (168) an Act to incorporate the Chicoutimi and North-eastern Railway Company.—(Hon. Sir Alphonse Pelletier.)

PENSION TO JUDGES BILL.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of (Bill 243) an Act to amend the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act, the Exchequer Court Act, and the Act respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts.

He said: The main features of this Bill are to enable the government to retire judges after they have attained a certain age, and have served a given number of years. We all know—it is pretty well recognized in a majority of instances at all events—that when judges have arrived at a certain age their mental acumen is very apt to diminish, the vigour of mind suffers with the physical decay of the body. The persons least apt to recognize that melancholy fact are the judges themselves, and without referring to any living cases, I daresay I could recall to many hon. gentlemen that in past years, it has been somewhat of a scandal that judges continue to remain on the Bench long after the time when they have ceased to be of any service in their judicial capacity. This Bill authorizes the retirement of a judge after he has attained the age of seventy-five years, and has served on the bench for twenty years, and also, in the case of a judge who has attained the age of seventy years and has served for twenty-five years. Under these circumstances the judge may retire under the salary that he enjoys. It also applies to a judge who has served on the bench as a judge of one or more of the courts for a term of thirty years, which seems only reasonable and fair, that after so long a period a judge should be entitled to retire on the full allowance. Clause 2 is of a different character and refers to the pension of a judge who has served for a time as lieutenant governor. I understand there is such decided opposition to this clause that it is proposed to drop it. The clause allows the time a judge may have served as lieutenant governor to count on his superannuation, although he may not have served the requisite time, either as judge or lieutenant governor. Clause 3 refers to the county court judges, and enacts that a county court judge who has attained the age of eighty years may be compulsorily retired, and at seventy-five if he resigns. In both those cases he shall be entitled to the full allowance of his salary, but if he has served less than twenty-five years then he would only be entitled to receive the two-thirds allowance. The last clause, clause 4, provides that a judge of a county court who has continued in office for a period of thirty-five years, and has become afflicted with some permanent infirmity which disables him from discharging the duties of his office, may be retired on a salary equal to the one he was enjoying on the bench at the time of his retirement. With those observations I move the second reading of the Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Bill before the Senate, is to my mind, as a layman, of a somewhat extraordinary character. In the first place it provides for the granting of a full amount of salary which a judge may have received upon his retirement either voluntarily in one case, or compulsorily in the other. Speaking to the principle of the Bill I do not understand why a judge should be thus favoured any more than any other public servant, or any other class of the community. If the government is prepared to adopt the New Zealand law and provide what is termed 'the old Age Pension,' then I could understand carrying it a little further on the line of democratic and socialistic principles; but for myself, I would have no objections—and I think I speak the opinions of a vast majority of people—at least of those amongst whom I live—to increasing the salaries of judges commensurate with the importance of the positions they hold in order that they might do as others do who are not so favourably situated—lay aside a portion of their earnings during the time of their health and youth. I think the hon. Secretary of State in his introductory remarks fell into an error. If I read the law correctly we have no power, under the constitution, to compel a judge of the Superior Court to retire. The provision is, if I read it correctly, that if he retires when he attains a certain age, then he shall be entitled to the full amount of his salary as a pension for the balance of his life.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The compulsory retirement applies only to county court judges.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—So I understood. What I was calling attention to was, that the hon. gentleman in his remarks when introducing the Bill stated that they took power to retire the judges compulsorily, and I came to the conclusion that that only applied to the county court judges. I do not see what necessity there is for compulsory retirement of the county court judges. I know the difficulties, to which the hon. gentleman has called the attention of the Senate, did arise during the time of Sir John Thompson's administration and while he was Minister of Justice. In order to meet a case of a judge who had softening of the brain and who was totally unfit to perform his duty, Sir John Thompson introduced a Bill, which stands now on the statute-book, providing for the appointment of a commission to make an investigation and if the report should be of a character to justify the retirement of the judge on a pension, then the government had the power to retire him. Clause No. 3 of this Bill goes much further than that. Upon a county court judge arriving at a certain age, the government can, under this Bill, compel his retirement, and, in certain cases he is to have the full retiring allowance and in other cases only a portion of it. These are the principal features of the Bill, and why, I ask again, judges who have served for a certain length of time should be paid the full amount of their salary on retirement any more than any other civil servant who has performed his duties satisfactorily to the country, I fail to understand. I think the reason which will be given for this will be the fact that they are learned in the law, that it costs a great deal to acquire their education, that they have devoted themselves to the administration of justice during the whole of their lives, and that when they arrive at the age at which they are no longer fitted for the performance of their duties, they should be offered as an inducement to retire the full pay which they had received during the whole time they were on the bench. That is the reason which will be given to justify the placing of judges in that position and supporting them at the full amount of their salaries for the balance of their lives. I cannot answer that question further than to give my own opinion and to say that if a question of that kind were submitted to the people they would reject it, and on the broad grounds I have indicated.

I was a little surprised—and I have no doubt many other hon. gentlemen were surprised, when the Bill first came before the Senate—at the provisions of the second clause, I notice that the rebellion, I may so term it, I think, in the ranks of the government supporters, was of such a character as to compel the government to withdraw that clause, if I understood the hon. Secretary of State aright ? Whether it was from an objection to the princple laid down in the clause and whether it was to affect a certain judge who afterwards became a lieutenant governor, I am not prepared to say ; but, if I were to draw my own conclusions from political likes and dislikes, I should be inclined to the latter view. However, it is scarcely necessary to waste time in discussing this clause as the government intend to drop it. Those who have studied it will observe the peculiarity that under this clause if it became law—and it has passed the House of Commons—they have given their approval to it—the judge who had served six months or twelve months on the bench and had then been appointed a lieutenant governor had served a portion of his time, or the full five years term, could be retired upon two-thirds of his salary as a judge. That I think is the provision of the clause as I understand the reading of it. While I was not going to offer any objection to the principle contained in it, I was going to object to the wording of it, and the purposes to which it could be applied, in case any government thought proper to so exercise their power under the clause. It would be dangerous, to my mind, for any government—I am not speaking particularly of this government—although I would not trust them very far, if they had an object to gain—to be in a position to exercise this power. I am speaking of the general principle. They might desire to reward a man for political purposes, or they might desire to reward him for any other purpose. They could appoint him to a judgeship and in six months they could appoint him as a lieutenant governor, and after he had served the five years, they could retire him on the full allowance to which he would be entitled as a judge, had he served a full term as judge. How it was that the House of Commons with the number of legal gentlemen who are there and the number of laymen who are in the House, never pointed out this peculiarity of the Bill, is a marvel to me. As the clause is to be dropped I shall not pursue that point further than to say, that if a judge has been serving on the bench sufficiently long to enable him to a retiring allowance of two-thirds of his salary. and then he retired and was appointed to the honourable position of lieutenant governor of the province, after having served as governor of the province for five years, it would scarcely, to my mind, be right to deprive him of the pension which he would then, by right be entitled to had he remained on the bench the whole time. I give that as an expression of my opinion in reference to the retirement of judges under those particular circumstances. Certainly I should have felt myself justified in moving some amendment to this clause if the government was prepared to push it to a decision. Perhaps I am singular, and may stand alone, but I am opposed to giving judges their full pensions when they think proper to resign, that is the Superior Court judges, although I must frankly admit there have been cases in the courts in which judges refused to be retired unless they got their full salaries, when they have arrived at an age that probably should have induced them if they had considered their own interests, their own health and their duties as judges to have resigned. There is another point which has just suggested itself to me, to which I desire to call the attention of the Secretary of State. This Bill is not retroactive. If it is equitable and just that a judge should now, upon his retirement after he has reached the age provided in this Bill, be entitled to the full salary why are not those who have been a month or two ago retired from the bench, entitled to the same consideration ? Take our own chief justice of the Supreme Court. Only a few months ago he retired after some thirty years' service, I think.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Thirty-two years.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why is he not entitled to the same consideration in reference to the amount paid on retiring, as those who may retire to-morrow, who perhaps have not served nearly the same length of time? I know some county court judges in Ontario who retired some few months ago, on account of ill-health, and they will be cut off from the advantages which would have accrued to them had they remained on the bench until this Bill became law. I do not know whether the Justice Department of the government or whether the Secretary of State has considered that point. I think it is a point well worthy of consideration. Admitting—of course I must modify my remarks in this way—admitting the principle is correct, and it is affirmed by this Bill, of retiring judges under certain circumstances with their full salaries, I think it should be extended to those judges who retired but a short time ago. Whether it should go back for all time, I am not prepared to say. We had an Act of this kind introduced into parliament during the time Sir Oliver Mowat was leading the government—my hon. friend will no doubt remember it—for compulsory retirement, and for granting full pay in case of retirement on account of age, and those ages were laid down in the Bill, and yet the most extraordinary thing was, and I chaffed the late lieutenant governor of Ontario about it at the time—finding the Senate disapproved of that Bill he withdrew it, and my hon. friend who is looking at me across the floor (Hon. Mr. Kerr) will remember distinctly that not two months afterwards, a very short time afterwards, one of the Superior Court judges was promoted to the chief justiceship, although he had attained an age a number of years over and above the limit provided for in the Bill introduced—I am speaking of the late Chief Justice Burton. My hon. friend will remember very well that after that Bill was presented to parliament, and rejected here, a Bill which would have not compelled, because if I understand the constitution correctly, we cannot compel the retirement of a Superior Court judge, notwithstanding that fact, a Superior Court judge was promoted and when I spoke to the late Sir Oliver Mowat about the inconsistency he laughingly said: 'You are right.' I give that as an illustration to show how the powers placed in a government can be used under certain circumstances, whether properly or not. I cannot say that the judge to whom I have referred, was not qualified for the position he held, because I know he stood very high at the bar, but the point we chaffed Sir Oliver about was the judge's age, as the Bill introduced had provided for his retirement, before he reached that age; and it may be the same in these cases. In the first place I am opposed to the principle of giving a man the full salary, and in the second place as far as the county court judges are concerned, there is ample power in the law as it now stands on the statute-book, for their retirement in case they are unfit for the duties which they have to perform. That is the view of a layman. I do not expect that to be acquiesced in by the legal fraternity. I would not accuse them of being actuated by personal motives, but we are all actuated to a very great extent by our ambition which leads us to attain higher positions in life, and I have no doubt that every legal gentleman here who is ambitious for a judgeship, would like to retire on full pay after he had attained a certain age. I do not find fault with that feeling, but if I had the power to prevent it, he would not get it. I would give him say sufficient salary to enable him to live, not only live in the way in which he should live, and maintain the dignity of his position, but I would leave him in the same place that other people are left, to live economically and save a portion of their salary for their old age.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—In examining this Bill I note under clause 3 it would be in the power of the government to allow the full salary as pension, and even full pay to judges irrespective of the time they have served. I am very doubtful that it was the intention of the party who drafted this Bill, and anyway I intend to give notice that when the Bill is considered in Committee of the Whole, I will move to amend clause 3. I know that it is not necessary to give any notice on a Bill of this kind, but I shall do so in order that hon. members will be better able to follow the suggestion, when the suggestion is made. My own judgment is not against the principle embodied in that clause so far as permitting the retirement of judges who have attained the age of 80 years is concerned, nor am I opposed to the principle of empowering the government to give judges—I am referring to county court judges—who have served during a reasonable number of years and who have become incapacitated, a retiring allowance. In clause 3 of the Bill it will be noticed—and that will be one object of my amendment—that no reference has been made to the fact that a judge is incapacitated. He could be retired at any time without his being incapacitated at all, and whether he has served for five years or twenty years. I doubt very much that it was the intention.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is that not provided for in the Act to which I have already referred, introduced by the late Sir John Thompson ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have not looked that up. We have to take this Bill as it is before us, and I think it should be amended in the way I suggest.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not called attention to the particular inconsistency that I recognize in the Bill. I noted it on my own paper for the purpose of calling the attention of the Department of Justice to it, because I think it in a measure nullifies the preceding language of section 3 regarding county court judges, giving the government a very much wider power than I think was intended to be exercised.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The hon. gentleman refers to the last clause.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The last four lines. I had not the opportunity after I discovered it of discussing the matter with the Minister of Justice, but I propose to call his attention to it. My hon, friend, however, has moved an amendment in that direction.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The question arises in connection with clause 3 of this Bill as to whether parliament has the power to compulsorily retire a judge.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We take the power to retire county court judges.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is a very important point I think and the question arises, can we constitutionally exercise that power ? To my mind there is little difference between the position of the county court judges and the others. The British North America Act makes a slight difference, but practically there is no difference between the position of a county court judge and a superior judge so far as compulsory retirement is concerned. The appointment by letters patent and during good behaviour is what, I think, settles the whole matter. I gave the subject some attention during the early part of the session and I have not been able to find any authority for the view that this parliament has power to compulsorily retire a judge, excepting through the process adopted in the Act of this parliament, chap. 138 of the Revised Statutes, to which my hon. friend to my left has referred, the statute introduced by Sir John Thompson, dealing with county court judges. As far as I have been able to ascertain we have the power to provide by law for the removal from the bench of any judge under an old imperial statute of 1872. It must be done in regular form. An investigation must be held and the judge must be allowed to appear in self-defence, but there is nothing that I can see in any authority on the subject or any practice I think, either in the colonies or Great Britain, by which a judge who was appointed by letters patent and during good behaviour can be summarily and compulsorily retired except for cause. The British North America Act provides that Superior Court judges can be removed by an address, but Todd lays it down very plainly that such proceeding may also be resorted to with regard to county court judges. It is undoubtedly in the power of parliament to proceed by address against county court judges as well as against the judges of the Superior Court, but I have not been able to see any authority or any precedent for the compulsory retirement of a judge for the reason given in this Bill, namely, because he is 80 years of age. No member of this House will agree for one moment with the proposition that because a man has reached 80 years of age that he must be unable to perform his duties. I believe that is the position of my hon. friend to my left (Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell). If he is not that age he is not far from it. and I think it will be admitted that his mind is as clear as it need be.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I wish I were a lawyer; I would retire on the allowance.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—The hon. gentleman is one in 10,000.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I want to call the attention of the legal gentlemen of the House to that point. It is not likely that a judge would be found to resist retirement because his work is being taken from him and he is getting his full salary, but supposing we found a judge who was desirous of continuing his work and delighted in it, and would not retire, a serious question would arise whether parliament had a right to pass legislation to retire the judge under such circumstances and it might lead to very serious complications and furthermore we are establishing a dangerous precedent. Perhaps we may have the right to pass this Bill under the authority contained in the principal section of 91 of the British North America Act under which this parliament has power to make laws for the peace, order and good government of Canada, but a judge might be able to show that it was necessary for the peace, order and good government of Canada, that he should be compulsorily retired and denied the right to continue on the bench and perform his work. He might not be able to agree with the idea that he should be retired, and it might be found, if inquiry was made into it, that it was not necessary for the peace, order and good government of Canada that he should be retired, as he was still able to perform his work. If this point is, as I think it is, a substantial one, we should not place a law on the statute-book which might be challenged, and might be attended in the end with serious consequences.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (254) An Act further to amend the Yukon Territory Act.—(Hon. Mr. Scott).

Bill (253) An Act to increase the representation of the North-west Territories in the Senate.—(Hon. Mr. Scott).

OCEAN STEAMSHIP SUBSIDIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (252) an Act to amend the Act relating to Ocean Steamship Subsidies. He said: This Bill proposes to authorize the Governor in Council to enter into a contract for a term not exceeding ten years with any individual or company for the performance of a steamship service between a port or ports in Canada and a French port or ports, on such terms and conditions as the Governor in Council deem expedient, and to grant therefor a subsidy not exceeding $133,333.33 a year, based upon a minimum service of eighteen round voyages a year, and a subsidy therefor not exceeding $100,000, and so in proportion for a more frequent service. It contemplates a service of twelve voyages in summer and six voyages in winter. Hon. gentlemen will probably recollect that we have on several occasions passed similar propositions, not in amount, the amount on one occasion was $100,000 and on another $50,000. In 1894 a treaty was made with France by Sir Charles Tupper from which very great benefits were expected to flow to Canada. The treaty, however, required that the products shipped from this country should be carried in steamships direct to France, and as we have had no direct steamship line that treaty has availed very little. The party with which the contract is proposed to be made is a Mr. Colombier, of Bordeaux, who brought letters to the government of Canada stating that he was a man of character and position, and on subsequent inquiry through the British consul the report furnished was that though not a very wealthy house yet it was a house of good standing. and that very little doubt was entertained, if the contract was entered into, that they would be able to carry it out.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not rise for the purpose of opposing this Bill, but to express the hope that the increased subsidy may have the effect of creating a trade between France and Canada that has not existed in the past. Years ago subsidies were granted for the purpose of assisting a line of steamers between France and Canada. They never were successful. The treaty to which my hon. friend referred that was entered into between Sir Charles Tupper, when he was High Commissioner, and the French government, was of a character to secure to Canada the minimum tariff. As we all know, France has for a number of years past had what is called a maximum and a minimum tariff, the minimum tariff being accorded to those countries that would carry on a trade directly with a French port in French vessels. Although the benefits that would accrue to Canada by getting the advantage of the minimum tariff are obvious, it has never been a success—never such a success as to justify the payment of the money which was voted for carrying on that trade. The government has in this Bill increased the subsidy, something more than double, and I am under the impression, from reading the debates elsewhere, that it is the intention to place on that route a better class of steamers, than have hitherto been plying between France and Canada.

Now, if that be done, and we can secure a good freight line of steamers with the aid of this additional subsidy, the government is justified in the course it is pursuing. In granting these subsidies in many cases the vessels which are employed for the service cannot secure return freight to compensate the ship-owners for the investment that they have made in carrying on the trade. The difficulty in the way of making the Australian trade as profitable as we should like to see it, arises from the fact that while the steamers leaving the Canadian port on the Pacific have always had, since the establishment of the service and more particularly lately, full cargoes, they have had comparatively nothing coming back. I had something to do with assisting in the establishing of that line, and the only justification for the government granting a good subsidy is this, that it opens a market for the output of our agricultural implement establishments, for the output of other manufactures and for the lumber of the Pacific coast, and also, when there is a failure of grain in Australia for the grain of the North-west. If it were not for that, we should not be justified in granting these subsidies. In this case I do not see any reason why, if we can get a class of steamers fit for the work, and to carry passengers, and ply directly between the French ports and Canada it should not be a success. It has not been in the past, and I think my hon. friend the Secretary of State will concur in the view I have taken in this matter, and the step which they have taken in order to make a success of that which has been a failure in the past. I think the financial condition of the country will justify what they have done. We can only hope a large and profitable trade may spring up between these two countries. I need not enter into the question of what we can send to France, because they import largely that which we produce and of which we have a surplus, and there is no reason why, with a little aid, we should not open that market to our producers as well as other markets which are opened by the granting of these subsidies. Having had some little experience in questions of this kind, having taken a deep interest in establishing a trade and opening communication between other ports and the Dominion, I felt justified in calling attention to this. I hope the government will come down with large subsidies sufficient to open up a trade with South Africa, where I am convinced, from studying the statistics of that country, there is a large market for our surplus products, while the same difficulty presents iteslf to the ship-owner that I have already indicated. There is very little in South Africa that we can bring back except it be wool and perhaps fruits which can be obtained in many parts of that country. Under the circumstances I reiterate the opinion that the government is quite justified in endeavouring to make a success of that which has been a failure in the past.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I am happy to see we are about all in accord in approving of the repeated attempts made by the government to establish a line between France and Canada. I had something to do with the effort made in 1900 to start a new steamship service between the two countries. The company that was formed at that time subscribed only a small capital, which was all absorbed by the first attempt, but the work which that company did in 1900 and the year after has convinced me—I followed its work from month to month—that there is indeed a sufficient demand for our goods in France to justify the government in making an effort to maintain a steamship service. As the hon. leader of the opposition has well said, it has been hard to find return cargoes, because the trade from France comes from the Mediterranean and from Bordeaux by long-established channels. It would take some capital and some persistency in gathering together all the trade that can come to a direct Franco-Canadian line, but I am quite sure that if there is some persistency in the attempt that we will before long have sufficient return cargo. I have followed, as I stated, the amount of trade done in two years' of the service, and there was not one trip in which the ships left without their full cargo from this side, and always came back with one-fourth cargo or one-half cargo on the return trip, and I am quite sure from the trade returns that we have that there will be sufficient return cargo if there is persistency in maintaining the line, in order to draw all the French and Spanish trade through that channel. As to the capabilities of the present directors to establish a line, I do not know. I hope that they will be able to accomplish what they have contracted for. At all events the government stands simply to win, because it can only pay a subsidy when the subsidy is earned.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (66) An Act to readjust the representation in the House of Commons.—Hon. Mr. Scott.

Bill (235) An Act respecting the construction of the National Transcontinental Railway.—Hon. Mr. Scott.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Friday, October 2, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

MUTUAL RESERVE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE moved :

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General ; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate a statement of the affairs of the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company of New York, as last sent to the Insurance Department.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMUTATION OF DEATH SENTENCE ON JOSEPH CARVER.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON moved :

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General ; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid on the Table of the Senate copies of all petitions addressed to His Excellency, or the Department of Justice, praying for the commutation of the sentence of death passed on Joseph Carver for the murder of Alexander M. Stewart, near Southport, P.E.I., during the month of March or April last.

Also, a copy of the Order in Council authorizing the commutation of said sentence.

He said : In making this motion I do not desire, and I do not think it would be proper, to make any comment whatever upon the commutation of the death sentence of this unfortunate man, Joseph Carver, who was sentenced to death, and whose sentence appears to be commuted. My reason for asking for these papers is that the brother of the murdered man has written me saying that he believes, on good authority, that many of the names to the memorials and petitions that were sent to the Department of Justice are not genuine, and it is his desire, as it is the desire of many others deeply interested in this matter, to know what representations were made and what names were attached to the petitions.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—At this moment, I cannot remember the rule in these cases. I presume those papers are always brought down. The report of the minister, which is really a substantial document, is not brought down. My hon. friend has not asked for that ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But I think his own judgment will tell him that really the petitions have very little to do with the commutation. It is based on a very much more important matter than the mere fact of a few signatures to a petition. It is the circumstances that are represented to the Minister of Justice, and on which he makes the report to council. However, I will be very glad to bring down any papers I can in connection wth it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I speak under correction just now, but my impression is that the report of the Minister of Justice, which leads the council to come to a conclusion, can be brought down, and has been brought down in the past, although I cannot speak positively upon that point. That, however, is my impression, for this reason: the minister must have had good reasons for recommending the commutation of the sentence, and there can be no reasons why the public, who may labour under the impression that the man should have suffered the death penalty, should not know the reason why the sentence was commuted. There are, unfortunately, in cases of this kind strong prejudices for and against, and if it is not contrary to the rule, as my hon. friend says, if there is any precedent for it, I suppose he will bring it down; but my impression is, for the reasons I have given, that there can be no possible harm; on the contrary, it would do good, as it might allay the feeling which exists against the course which has been adopted by the minister, because he may have shown good reasons for the course adopted. No one knows better than those who have been in council the delicacy with which questions of that kind must be treated. It is only when good reasons are given, or evidence exists on certain points, that the Executive Council depart from the decision of the jury and the sentence of the court. My own impression is, the reasons must have been good to induce the government to take the course they did, and being good reasons, it would tend to allay the feeling which evidently exists in Prince Edward Island on this questions, if they were known.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My own impression was similar to that of the Secretary of State, that the report of the minister to council was not usually brought down. I am not quite clear on that point. However, there is no object in asking for it, and I have not asked for it. What I have moved for is a copy of the petitions with the signatures to these petitions.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no objection to that.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Notwithstanding the opinion expressed by the hon. Secretary of State, I am satisfied these representations must have had a great deal to do with the decision, because these may be from very important sources, and if it is possible that any document which is not genuine has been treated by the Minister of Justice as a genuine document, it is a very serious matter. I want to call my hon. friend's attention to the importance of dealing with this matter almost immediately, as it is of great consequence.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until three o'clock on Tuesday next.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Tuesday, October 6, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION WITH PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that His Excellency may be pleased to lay before the Senate all communications between the government of Canada, or any member thereof, and the Anglo-American Telegraph Company, any other telegraph company, the provincial government of Prince Edward Island, any board of trade in Prince Edward Island or any other province, and any representative of Prince Edward Island in the House of Commons, respecting the improvement of the telegraph service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland of the Dominion; and also a copy of any contract existing between the Prince Edward Island Railway and the Anglo-American Telegraph Company regarding the use of the lines and offices of the said railway for telegraphic purposes.

He said: The matter which I am about to submit to this honourable House, deals, as will be noticed, with the question of telegraphic communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland of Canada. Hon. gentlemen may not remember that this is a question which is entirely within the jurisdiction of this parliament. I refer to the terms of union on which Prince Edward Island entered the Dominion, and I find that section 7 provides that the Dominion government shall assume and defray all the charges for the following services: Then there are a number of subections, a to j, and then comes k, which reads in this way:

> The maintenance of telegraphic communication between the island and the mainland of the Dominion and such other charges as may be incident to and connected with the service.

That is why this matter of telegraphic communication with Prince Edward Island comes properly within the jurisdiction of this Dominion. Before confederation the province had a contract with what was called the Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island Telegraph Company, and an attempt was made to maintain telegraphic communication in that way. However, it was not satisfactory, and later, in the year 1854, another company came in called the Newfoundland, New York and London Telegraph Company, and an Act of the provincial legislature was passed giving that company certain franchises, and calling upon them to perform certain work for the province, in the matter of telegraphic communication between the Island and the mainland.

I may mention this point, that it has been persistently held by the Anglo-American Telegraph Company who now perform this service that they have exclusive privileges, and that exclusive privileges were conferred upon them by the legislature of Prince Edward Island before confederation; in other words, they possess a monopoly. I shall point hon. gentlemen to the Act on which they have relied. It is a private Act of the province of Prince Edward Island, chapter 4 of the statutes of 1854, and it contains this provision, in section 2:

> The said corporation may establish, contract, purchase, hire, keep in order and work any line or lines of magnetic, electric, or other telegraph, or means of telegraphic communication in any part of the island or its dependencies, or places under its jurisdiction, or between any two or more points therein, or between any point or points therein and any other island, province, country or place in or near the continent of America, or in or near the continent of Europe, or in the Atlantic ocean; and during the existence of the said corporation, no other person or persons, body or bodies, politic or corporate, shall be permitted to extend, to enter upon or touch any part of this island, or the coast thereof or of the islands or places within the jurisdiction of the government of this island, with any telegraphic cable, wire, or other means of telegraphic communication from any other province, state, country or places whatsoever, beyond the continent of America.

This is the clause upon which the Anglo-American Company have been relying as giving them an exclusive right to land a cable on Prince Edward Island from the mainland of the Dominion, and for carrying on exclusive telegraphic service in the province of Prince Edward Island. Any hon. gentleman who will take the trouble of looking carefully at this section will find that the exclusive privilege is in regard to laying a cable between Prince Edward Island and any other land not embraced in the continent of America—in other words it was an exclusive privilege against another company laying a cable from Great Britain or from any other part of Europe, not simply direct to Prince Edward Island but by coming through Newfoundland or by Cape Breton, the way in which the telegraph lines were expected, and were then being put through.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Was there not a limitation for 50 years?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There is no limitation in the clause.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There was a limitation in the Newfoundland Act.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We had nothing to do with the Newfoundland Act, nor has my hon. friend to be troubled with that question in any way, and I think I shall make it quite plain to my hon. friend that there is nothing in the legislation of Prince Edward Island which interposes any difficulty in providing a service by another company or which gives any monopoly to the Anglo-Saxon Company. This was the Act of 1869. Then came other Acts of the province in relation to it. In 1857 there was another Act passed, and this was simply providing for a subsidy to the New York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company, providing that if they established an efficient telegraph service between the island of Prince Edward and the mainland, the province would grant £300 of the lawful current money of the island, &c., as a remuneration or a subsidy to assist in the performance of that service. It appears that no satisfactory service resulted, and in the year 1862 we had another Act of the legislature passed, which may fairly be claimed to revoke all the previous concessions, whatever they were, to this company, and setting forth, as it does in its various recitals, that the service had not been adequately performed, and it contained a further offer. It authorized the government to make a contract with any company that would give the island telegraphic communication, to make the term twenty years, and that the annual payment was to remain at the same amount, £300. During all this period it was the New York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company that was being dealt with. Then, in 1869, another Act on the subject was placed on the statute-book of the province, setting forth in its first section a provision which I think is of sufficient importance to read in full :

If the New York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company shall, on or before the 1st day of July next, lay down, in proper working order, a new submarine telegraphic cable across the Straits of Northumberland, so as to connect this island with the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia and the continent of America generally, that is to say, at or near Capes Traverse and Tormentine, respectively, or at some convenient points on each side of the said straits, and shall open offices and provide operators at Capes Traverse and Tormentine, or some other convenient point on each side of the straits, to the satisfaction and approval of the government of this island, then so long after the completion of such telegraphic communication and connection as before mentioned as the said New York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company shall maintain a regular telegraphic communication between this island and the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and the continent of America generally, and shall, likewise, during the same period, at the costs and charges of the said company, build, erect and maintain telegraph offices and stations at either end of the electric cable connecting this island with the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia and the continent of America generally, that is to say, at Capes Traverse and Tormentine, respectively, and shall, likewise, maintain and provide properly qualified operators at the said stations for the purpose of transmitting intelligence from and to this island, and to the post offices in Charlottetown and Summerside, respectively, at the same rates and charges, as regards the transmission of inland messages between one office and another in Prince Edward Island, as heretofore charged by the company, and at a rate not exceeding fifty cents additional on former charges or messages passing out and into this island through the submarine cable, and in the ordinary proportion for any additional number of words in each message, and, also, in the event of any of the people or the government of this island erecting good and sufficient posts, free of costs to the said company, for an extension of the land line to Cascumpec or Alberton, the said company do furnish the wires and insulators therefor and perfect telegraphic communication to Cascumpec or Alberton, as the case may be, and maintain said lines in proper working order, and also keep up and maintain telegraphic offices and stations and operators at Charlottetown, Summerside and Cascumpec or Alberton for the transmission of messages, there shall be paid to the company, from the public treasury of this island, the sum of six hundred pounds of lawful current money of the said island, in lieu of any former contract, by half-yearly payments, and for such sum the Lieutenant Governor, or other administrator of the government of this island, for the time being, shall draw warrants in favour of the company on the treasurer of this island in the usual manner.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Was there any limit to that agreement ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No, no limit. This is simply a contract that while they shall perform this service, they shall be paid this sum of £600, which in Dominion currency is about $2,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—What is the date of that contract ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That was in 1869. Then, the second clause sets forth that this company, if they perform the service in the way described, shall have all the rights and privileges given in the original Act in 1854. So that any right or privilege that was given in the Act of 1854 is renewed by this Act on consideration of their performing this service, and their continuing to perform it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It would be in perpetuity if the conditions were observed.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It would be in the form of a contract in perpetuity, but there must be a good service rendered. Then, there is the closing clause of this same Act —and I wish to direct the attention of my hon. friend the Secretary of State to that particularly, as it limits the perpetuity of the contract. It reserves to the government the right, if matters are not proceeded with satisfactorily, to revoke the concessions and the conditions of sections 1 and 2. It reads this way :

In order to enable the government to carry out in good faith any arrangement respecting telegraphic communication already made or negotiated, or which may hereafter be made or negotiated, with the said New York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company, or any other company, person or persons in connection with or within this island, or any point or points therein, whether hereinbefore named and specified or not, it shall be lawful for the lieutenant governor, with the advice of the executive council, from time to time, if it appear advisable, to alter, change, relax or dispense with, and again, if need be, to require to be performed any of the services in respect of telegraphic communication required to be performed by the first section of this Act, and also, from time to time, if need be, to make such further or other arrangements respecting telegraphic communication as shall be found necessary and advisable, and to apply the sum of money hereby granted to defray the costs of such altered arrangements so far as the same can extend or provide for the same.

So that my hon. friend will observe that in this very same Bill which provides for the contract with the Anglo-American Telegraph Company, and the payment to them of £600 annually for the performance of this service, the closing section of the Act reserves power to the Governor in Council to revoke, change and alter all that was done and to make a contract with any other company if the circumstances call for it or warrant their doing it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Was an actual contract signed ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think not.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It rests entirely with the statutes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think so. I have never been able to find that any contract was signed. Whatever contract there is is the statutory contract which is contained in the first section of the Act of 1869. My contention with regard to these extracts which I have read is, that there was, in the first instance, no monopoly of any kind given to the Anglo-American Telegraph Company excepting landing a cable from some point outside of the continent of America, an island such as Newfoundland or Cape Breton or any part of the continent of Europe, or islands adjacent to the continent of Europe, that is to lay a transatlantic cable or a cable of that character, but no exclusive privilege was ever given with regard to telegraphic operations within the province itself or between the island and the mainland. I want, however, to point out that in 1873 this Newfoundland, New York and London Telegraph Company, of which we have been speaking up to the present time, merged with the Anglo-American Telegraph Company, a strong concern having its headquarters in London, and this company took up this contract with the province of Prince Edward Island which has been going on from that time drawing $2,000 a year and has been performing the service in a certain way. I wish, however, to point out the fact that while the old company, the Newfoundland, New York and London Telegraph Company was merged with this company, it never was legally merged with it as far as the province of Prince Edward Island was concerned. There was no legislation asked for and no legislation obtained for that merger ; and it would therefore, appear that the statutory contract, whatever force there may be in it, made in the Act of 1869, has no bearing and no force in favour of the Anglo-American Telegraph Company, and the only right which they have is that which has grown from the annual payment to them of $2,000 a year. As I have already remarked, when we entered confederation the federal government undertook to defray the charges and maintain the service, and that is why I am addressing these observations to the House with regard to it at the present moment. I may say I have no question whatever in my mind that if it had not been so arranged, and if the province itself were dealing directly with the Anglo-American Telegraph Company, there would have been a remedy found for the present state of things long before this time. The people of the island, while they were fairly satisfied in 1873 with the service that was then being rendered, are far from satisfied now. The service has fallen altogether behind the requirements of the trade and the interests of the province. Hon. gentlemen will fully agree at the very first blush that such must be the case. Any service of that kind might be considered to be fairly good thirty years ago, but if the service has continued with scarcely any change from that time up to the present, no place in Canada would be satisfied unless they got some improvements, such improvements as are necessary from advances made in telegraph service all over the world and the cheapening of the modes of communicating by electricity in all other communities. The people of Prince Edward Island have a perfect right to expect them also, and we therefore appeal to the government of Canada to take this matter up and provide a remedy. Our contention is that in dealing with this question, they are not likely to be troubled in any way with any monopoly; that is, with any monopolistic right possessed by the Anglo-American Company. They have none. The reasons I have already submitted, I think, are sufficient; but, in addition to that, I would point out that in 1874 the parliament of Canada gave a charter to the Dominion Electric Telegraph Company to do business in Prince Edward Island. They paid no attention to any claim which the Anglo-American Company might be setting up at that time about having a monopoly and they gave a charter to the Dominion Electric Telegraph Company to extend its business to Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Did the Dominion Telegraph Company go into operation on the island?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They did nothing?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—They did nothing; they simply got the power to extend their lines to the maritime provinces, including Prince Edward Island, but they did not do so, and afterwards they merged with the Montreal Telegraph Company. I need not quote that Act. It is to be found on the statute-book of the Dominion, but I wish to point out that in my opinion, and in the opinion of a very eminent authority, that even if the Anglo-American Telegraph Company had obtained a monopoly in 1869 under this provincial Act that I have been reading, but which I do not at all admit, that even if they had, the Acts of the parliament of Canada has repealed that monopoly. Hon. gentlemen remember that under section 129 of the British North America Act certain Acts in force in the older provinces remained in force until they were repealed or otherwise dealt with by the parliament of Canada, and it is in that way that the Prince Edward Island Act of 1869 has effect and I turn to 44 Victoria, chapter 1, section 16, the Act confirmed the agreement made with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The section reads in this way:

> The company may construct, maintain and work a continuous telegraph and telephone line throughout and along the whole line of the Canadian Pacific Railway or any part thereof, and may also construct or acquire by purchase, lease or otherwise any other line or lines of telegraph connection with the line so to be constructed along the line of the said railway, and may undertake the transmission of messages for the public by any such lines or lines of telegraph.

I may say that this matter was submitted to Judge Clark, formerly solicitor of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I have a communication from him among the papers on my desk, in which he expresses his unqualified opinion that that section, if we had to rely upon it alone, gives the Canadian Pacific Telegraph Company ample authority and power to lay a cable to Prince Edward Island and conduct telegraphic operations in that island, and consequently that section alone could be relied upon as entirely setting aside any claim of a monopoly on the part of the Anglo-American Telegraph Company. In 1874, parliament dealt with marine telegraph companies, and a general Act was placed on the statute-book at that time. The Act was reserved by the Governor General at that time—Lord Dufferin, I think—and a very lengthy discussion took place between the government of Canada and the Colonial Office with regard to that matter. It will be remembered that that Bill was aimed almost entirely at the Anglo-American Telegraph Company. In those days there were great difficulties encountered in laying submarine cables between Europe and America in consequence of the monopoly which the Anglo-American Telegraph Company had acquired with regard to laying cables on the coast of Newfoundland, and up to that time it was believed that perhaps the only method of successfully connecting the old world and new by cables was by the shortest route to Newfoundland, and then connecting the adjacent continent; yet the Anglo-American Company had obtained, in 1854, an exclusive right to land wires on the coast of Newfoundland, just as they had also acquired on the coast of Prince Edward Island. The federal government was endeavouring to break down that monopoly, and the Act of 1874 was aimed at the Anglo-American Telegraph Company, in so much as it contained provisions which would render it almost impossible for the Anglo-American Telegraph Company to continue business in any part of Canada unless they relinquished the monopoly which they possessed on the shores of Newfoundland. That Bill, as I mentioned, was reserved, and the correspondence in regard to the reserving of that Bill, hon. gentlemen will find in 'Hodgins,' pages 20 to 30. The Anglo-American Company opposed the passage of that Bill. They appeared before the Senate Committee here and endeavoured to prevent it becoming law, but their reasons were not considered sufficiently good and the Act was passed; but in view of the fact that English capitalists were largely interested in the company, as stated in the course of the correspondence, Earl Dufferin thought it was a safe course to pursue to reserve the Act for the consideration of Her Majesty the Queen. The Anglo-American Company (the late Mr. Abbott, afterwards Sir John Abbott, was their counsel) sent memorials to the British government on the subject, very strong memorials, urging reasons why this Act should not become law, and insisting that it would interfere with the business which they had in Prince Edward Island. A Minute of Council was passed at that time in reply, and I shall take the liberty of reading from that Minute of Council to show what was the well-considered attitude of the government of Canada twenty-nine years ago in regard to this question, and the wonder, I think, hon. gentlemen will feel, is why this matter was not settled in the interests of Prince Edward Island long ago, in view of what were the settled opinions of the government of Canada upon the subject as long ago as 1874. This Minute of Council, after setting forth some of the steps that had been taken with regard to submitting it to the consideration of Her Majesty, says:

After full inquiry, the committee find as follows:—

1. That any exclusive concession in Prince Edward Island by Acts of its legislature was in favour of 'the New York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company,' a Newfoundland corporation, and it was expressly limited 'during its existence.'

2. That the Newfoundland company did not in fact avail itself of the exclusive provisions of the Act of 1854, or construct any cable on the faith of this protection.

3. That another company had previous to the passing of that Act laid down a cable from the island to New Brunswick, and this by section 8, was vested in the Newfoundland Company.

4. That the committee are informed that the service was, and continued to be so inefficiently performed, as to give rise to the conditional revocation of the company's powers by the Act of 1862.

5. That the Newfoundland Company were to receive an annual subsidy from the province for maintaining this line; it would therefore appear to have been constructed for the local convenience of the island and not with reference to any cable line in contemplation by the company to which the prohibitory provisions of the Act of 1854 might have attached.

6. That moreover, by section 3 of the Act of 1869, the right would appear to be reserved to the Executive government to dispense with these services, and to make arrangements with any other company for this connection.

7. That in May, 1873, the Newfoundland Company became merged in the Anglo-American Company (a corporation under the Imperial Joint Stock Companies Act), and the intention and effect of such merger was to put an end to the existence of the Newfoundland Company as a corporation. Note (b.)—See proceedings at 'General Meeting of the Anglo-American Company, May 22, 1873;' also, Société du Cable transatlantique, May 22nd, 1873. Also, terms of resolution adopted at these meetings reported in the 'Money Market Review,' May 24th, 1873 (herewith), also, pamphlet of company, p. 46.

8. That an Act of the legislature of Newfoundland had been passed which authorized such consolidation being entered into, and the transference of the rights of the Newfoundland Company to the Anglo-American Company, but must such legislation be sought or obtained in the province of Prince Edward Island?

9. That the committee believe that by the terms of amalgamation the Anglo-American Company retained part of the consideration 135,000 pounds) going to the proprietors of the Newfoundland Company against the pre-emption claim of the province of Newfoundland, but that there was no similar provision as to Prince Edward Island.

10. That the concession in the latter province would appear not to have been deemed of any importance to the contracting companies, or to have formed an element of value in the consideration.

11. That the same time that negotiations for this amalgamation were proceeding between the telegraph companies in May, 1873, terms of union between the province of Prince Edward Island and the Dominion were being discussed, and neither government could have considered that the island was in any way subject to any extensive concession in favour of any telegraphic company, because it was an absolute obligation imposed on Dominion that it should maintain telegraph communication between the island and the mainland of the Dominion, as well as an efficient steamer service for mails and passengers.

12. The parliament of Canada during the last session passed a private Act, introduced after the duly published preliminary notices, whereby the Dominion Telegraph Company was authorized to extend its limits by cable into Prince Edward Island.

It would therefore appear to be very questionable whether under these circumstances the Newfoundland Company having ceased to exist, any monopoly or concession it might have been possessed of is not also at an end, quite independently of the fact that no transfer of any such exclusive privilege or concession was made or could be made without the sanction of the Prince Edward Island legislature.

It may further be observed that, as far as the committee can ascertain, this concession does not appear to have formed any part of consideration for the purchase of the Anglo-American Company, and that as the Dominion has itself assumed the obligation of maintaining telegraphic communication between the island and the mainland, there was nothing which the Anglo-American Company could have urged before the legislature (if it had thought fit to do so) based on any circumstances connected with Prince Edward Island which could have averted to defeat the Marine Telegraph Bill or to form the subject of compensation.

And then in the same way the argument proceeds, every word of it emphatically in this line, that the company possess no monopoly with regard to Prince Edward Island. I might also read in this connection the reply of Earl Carnarvon to the government of Canada, declining to interfere with the law passed by the parliament of Canada. He says:

I am well aware from the numerous representations which have been made to me on both sides, that the reserved Bill affects the pecuniary interests of many persons not residing in Canada, but Her Majesty's Government is not on that account called upon to review the decision arrived at by the legislature of the Dominion. Looking to the large intercourse maintained between Canada and this country and the extent to which British subjects residing out of Canada hold real and personal property, and are interested in joint stock enterprises within the Dominion, it is obvious that, if the intervention of Her Majesty's government were liable to be invoked whenever Canadian legislation on local questions affects, or is alleged to affect, the property of absent persons the self government conceded to the Dominion be reduced within very narrow limits.

5. It is to the Dominion government and legislature that persons concerned in the legislation of Canada on domestic subjects and its results must have recourse, and this government cannot attempt to decide upon the details of such legislation without incurring the risk of those complications which are consequent upon a confusion of authority.

6. While therefore I entirely appreciate the action of your ministers in reserving the Bill, I am of opinion that any further consideration of the subject should be given by that body, whose province, as I have observed it, is to deal with such questions, and that I cannot properly assume the fiction of deciding between the conflicting views of those who have addressed me whether in favour of or against the policy embodied in this measure.

Lord Carnarvon declined to tender Her Majesty any advice with regard to the Bill, which we know is the course pursued, when the superior government does not consider that there has been any occasion for reserving a Bill, the matter affected belonging entirely to the parliament which originated the measure. Consequently, in 1875, the measure was re-enacted, and a clause was inserted in it, which reserved to the Anglo-American Telegraph Company any right to operate telegraphs within the province, which they were legally entitled to operate prior to the passing of the Act. A more merciful view prevailed than was the intention of parliament when it passed the Act of 1874 which certainly would have prevented the Anglo-American Telegraph Company from operating telegraphs in Canada. However, that was no expression of opinion whatever, as to whether they possessed a monopoly or had any legal rights. It simply permitted them to continue to exercise any right which they might possess to operate a telegraphic service in Canada, notwithstanding they had not ceased to hold this monopoly on the coast of Newfoundland. Hon. gentlemen will notice that my contention is that it is the duty of the government of Canada to deal with this question, and to do so without further delay. Through the courtesy of Sir Louis Davies, judge of the Supreme Court, who represented the province of Prince Edward Island for many years, both in the government and in the House of Commons, I have been permitted to see and peruse correspondence which took place some three years ago between himself, not in the capacity of a minister, but simply as a representative of the province of Prince Edward Island, and the Anglo-American Telegraph Company, with regard to this subject. I have found that the Anglo-American Telegraph Company have shown no disposition to meet the views of this government. Sir Louis Davies intimated to them he would be prepared to advise his colleagues to do anything that was just and reasonable with them in that matter; but I am sorry to say, from the correspondence I have seen, there is no indication of a disposition on their part to take a similar course. Now, there is another difficulty which interposes—it may not be very serious, it ought not to be very serious. In 1874, when the Prince Edward Island Railway was opened, an order in council was passed authorizing a contract to be made between the Prince Edward Island Railway and the Anglo-American Telegraph Company, with regard to a telegraphic service along the line of railway, and in the offices of the railway. I understand that that is a very common way of carrying on a telegraphic service in connection with railways. I shall read this minute of council. I do not think it will interpose any very serious obstacle, but still it is a matter which has to be considered in dealing with this company. It is an order in council of the government of Canada, passed in September, 1874, and is as follows :—

On a memorandum dated September 29, 1874, from the hon. the Minister of Public Works, recommending that he be authorized to enter into contract with the Anglo-American Telegraph Company for construction and maintenance of telegraphic communication along the line of the Prince Edward Island Railway on the following conditions, in lieu of those cntained in Order in Council dated July 18, 1874, viz.:—

The Dominion government and the Anglo-America Telegraph Company to bear the cost of construction of said line of telegraph equally between them, except as regards instruments and office fittings at the railway stations, which shall be provided and paid for by the railway where only one instrument is required, but if in order to transact the business of the company, a second instrument be needed, the cost to be borne by the company.

The telegraph company, should they see fit, to have the right to string for their exclusive use, at their own cost, additional wires on the poles to be erected, in which case the original wire shall be devoted to the entire use of the railway, but in case of defect in, or interruption of either wire, the wire remaining in good order shall be used for mutual advantage of both parties until fault is remedied.

The telegraph company to maintain the line and poles in good working condition and furnish all main battery power free of cost to the railway in consideration of the privileges hereinafter mentioned.

The operators at the railway stations to be employees of the railway and to be paid by it, and to be under its exclusive control, except where the business of the company necessitates the appointment of an additional operator, in which case such operator shall be under the control and in the pay of the telegraph company, but shall nevertheless be subjet to the regulations of the railway. The railway operators to transact the telegraph company's business at the stations and to conform to the rules and regulations of the company in respect to the transmission of messages received or forwarded by them on account of the company, and in respect of all moneys received therefor ; but the telegraph company shall not hold the railway responsible for loss or damage arising from delay or any other cause whatsoever.

Railway messages on the railway to have precedence of all other messages, and telegraph company to transmit telegrams on railway service free of charge over any line belonging to or worked by them within the island, except on the line connecting with the submarine cable between Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick : messages on railway service to an amount not exceeding seventy-five words per day, not cumulative from mouth to mouth shall be transmitted by the telegraph company free of charge over the cable line from Charlottetown connecting with New Brunswick. The railway to carry free all telegraph operators of the telegraph company actually engaged on the company's business, and likewise, all telegraph material required to be moved from station to station for the working of the telegraph.

The telegraph company to have all reasonable facilities afforded them on the railway to maintain the telegraph line in good working order and condition.

All messengers required by the telegraph company for the public service in the delivery of messages to be employed and paid by the telegraph company.

The total length of the above telegraph line is estimated 204 miles, and the estimated cost of same is $12,240, of which the government proportion would be $6,528, and the telegraph company's proportion $5,712.

The minister therefore recommends that he be authorized to expend a sum of $7,000 on said service.

The committee submit the foregoing recommendations for Your Excellency's approval.

And it was certified and approved. I do not know whether a contract was signed in terms of this order in council or not. It authorized the making of a contract anyway, and under that contract, it appears that the cost of establishing that telegraphic line along the Prince Edward Island Railway was borne jointly by the government of Canada and the Telegraph Company. The Telegraph Company's share of the responsibility is estimated by this order in council, at $5,712. That line, I know, was established, and is part of the system ; and it is, therefore, quite evident that the Anglo-American Telegraph Company invested a sum of something like $6,000 at that time in establishing telegraphic service along the line of the Prince Edward Island Railway, and in any arrangement that is to be made between the government of Canada and this company, by which they shall cease to conduct this service along the Prince Edward Island Railway, undoubtedly, they will have to be compensated for the original cost of the line and any subsequent contribution towards renewals up to the time that the government terminate the contract. I bring that to the attention of my hon. friend the Secretary of State, because it is evident it will have to be taken into consideration whenever the government deals earnestly with this company. I am permitted to make use of some information contained in this correspondence to which I have already referred. I have here a letter from Mr. Carson, addressed to Sir Louis Davies—I have seen it before—it was used in a committee of this House, during this session of parliament, by the legal representative of the Anglo-American Telegraph Company. As hon. gentlemen know, he endeavoured, in connection with the telephone and telegraph Bill which we passed this year, to prevent the extension of the company's operations to Prince Edward Island. The Senate Committee did not, however agree with him, and refused to insert any provision for that purpose. At that committee he had in his possession a document, which I now also have, and which is dated March 21, 1900. It is written by Mr. Carson, the general manager of the Anglo-American Telegraph Company. I do not propose to read this letter in full. It is very voluminous—but I wish to point out the conclusion at which he arrives. The point between himself and the representatives of Prince Edward Island (between himself and in fact the government of Canada, at that time, and still the remaining question, is for the improvement of that service. It is not the desire of the people of Prince Edward Island to oust the Anglo-American Company if it can be avoided. We have no quarrel with the officials of that company in the province. No better men could be got. They are carrying out the instructions of their manager and the company, and under such instructions, are doing the work as well and efficiently as any other set of men could do it. Therefore, we have no quarrel with the officials of the company. Our quarrel is with the company, that they do not maintain a proper service.

They close their offices at 8 o'clock every evening, and there is no more communication obtained until some time between the hours of 8 o'clock and 9 o'clock on the following day, and although they have been repeatedly appealed to to give a night service, they have absolutely refused to do it except on unreasonable terms. In this correspondence Mr. Carson states on what condition they will give this night service. There would be just two offices required, and all that was asked was that they should be kept open from 8 o'clock till 12 o'clock at night. That was not unreasonable; it was not demanded that it should be maintained all night, but till 12 o'clock every night. These offices at Sackville, N.B., and Charlottetown, P.E.I., were the only two offices regarding which the request was made. It would necessitate only the keeping of a junior operator in these offices a matter of four hours each night, and still they refused to do it unless they were paid $1,000 a year extra. That was the only condition on which they would give that night service, when it is notorious that a junior operator can be got in Prince Edward Island for $30 or $40 a month to work long hours, and out of the clerks so employed one of them might easily be allowed to remain three or four hours to keep up this communication at Charlottetown. But they refused to do it unless this extravagant amount of £208 should be paid for that service. Another demand the people are making is that they should get a more reasonable rate for their messages. I daresay many hon. gentlemen who have not considered this question will be surprised to learn that from Prince Edward Island to any point beyond Sackville, where the line of the Anglo-American Telegraph Company ends, we have to pay 50 cents for 10 words, and we cannot get a message any other way. There are no press despatches at night, and consequently it is posted, and information is kept back from the people that they should have through the newspapers. Therefore, our business men are prevented from having that free and easy communication that every hon. gentleman knows is so essential for doing business and keeping the people of the community informed of what is going on in the world. Still the company refuse to give this night service from 8 o'clock to 12 o'clock unless a sum of $1,000 a year is added to their subsidy. They refuse also to reduce the rate to the common rate on the mainland unless a sum of £1,300 is given to provide for the loss they say they would sustain on account of that reduction in the charge for messages, and a further sum, they say, equal to that would have to be provided to defray the loss which they allege would be sustained by other connecting telegraph companies in connection with that reduction of the rates. In this letter of Mr. Carson's they discuss the state of the telegraph business in that province and say it is not very profitable; nevertheless, they have continued that business for over 20 years, and the average net earning of the line has been over £1,000 a year, after defraying all expense of repairs of the line, the maintenance of offices and payment of salaries and everything else. The laying of a cable from Prince Edward Island to the mainland is a very small matter to-day, as well as the setting of poles and stringing of wires. An arrangement might be made with any other company to string wires from Sackville to Prince Edward Island, and there are poles placed all over the island for railway purposes to-day and for telephone purposes, and the original capital that the company has expended in this work is very small indeed. I know that up to the time of the retirement of Sir Louis Davies from the cabinet, that this subject was engaging his most earnest attention, and I regret very much that he did not remain just a little while longer in that position, because I believe, in fact I know from what I have seen of these papers, that if he had so remained a remedy would have been obtained before this time. But having gone out of the cabinet, no person appeared to feel that duty imposed upon him that Sir Louis Davies felt devolved upon him as a representative of the province, and the matter appears to have been lost sight of as far as I can ascertain from the papers I have been able to get and the information I have been able to obtain. The matter, at that time, had arrived within sight of adjustment—I may say the Canadian Pacific Telegraph Company were perfectly ready to go to the island at that time. They had stated in a general way the terms on which they would go. They had considered all this legislation to which I have referred, and found that no obstacle existed in the way of a monopoly as claimed by the Anglo-American Company. They perfectly satisfied themselves on that point.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Why did they not go ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON. Because Sir Louis Davies retired from the government and nobody there took the active interest in the matter that he did. Of course something would have to be done. The contract which the government had made with the Prince Edward Island Railway Company. stood in the way. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company were ready to go to the island, but they wanted to get the right to use the posts of the railway company, and wanted to be allowed to enter the railway offices, and do the telegraphing in the railway offices. But an order in council had already given that right to the Anglo-American Telegraph Company, and the Anglo-American Telegraph Company had borne a part of the expense of putting up the poles and establishing this service, and it could not be thought of for a moment that the Anglo-American Telegraph Company could be debarred from continuing to render that service along the line of the railway without being compensated, or without being bought out in some way or another. All these were matters of detail, and they were the only matters that stood in the way. The trouble was to get over the contract with the Prince Edward Island Railway and the government of Canada and to get over that order in council of 1874 which I have read. It was a question of the amount of subsidy to be settled, and these appeared to be the only points that were at issue between the Canadian Pacific Telegraph Company and Sir Louis Davies in the negotiations which they were carrying on at that time. If these were all the difficulties then, they are the only difficulties existing now. I said before, we have no animus against the Anglo-American Telegraph Company, and if they would give us a proper service we would be just as well satisfied to take it from their hands as from any one else. In fact better, because we know their offices and men, and we are quite satisfied with them. We have no reason to complain of them. They do what they can within the instructions they receive from their company. But there is a difficulty with reference to the Anglo-American Telegraph Company that would not exist with regard to another company. They do not own any lines on the mainland, and consequently any arrangement that is made with them for the equalization of the rate over different parts of the country would have to be made also with these other companies. They would have to make it with them and they would have to be compensated in order to bring the rate down and give us something like a continental rate. I think the proposition was that we could get a thirty cent rate. That was the proposition that was discussed between Sir Louis Davies and the other telegraph company with which he was in communication. It would still be higher than that which prevails on the mainland, but it would be such a great reduction from the present rate of fifty cents, that it would be heralded as a very great boon in Prince Edward Island. My view of it is, however, that in consequence of the Anglo-American Telegraph Company having no connections on the mainland, that the most practical method will be to buy them out, and facilitate the coming in of some other company to take their place. Either the Canadian Pacific Telegraph Company who propose to connect the line with their service at St. John, N.B., or the Great Northwestern Company, would be in a position to render excellent service as they would have practically only themselves to deal with. They have lines on the mainland, and once they get connection on the island, they would have no difficulty in maintaining a regular rate and a regular service anywhere. I do not think there is any reasonable difficulty in the way. I want my hon. friend the Secretary of State, and other hon. gentlemen who may have this question to consider, to dismiss from their minds all idea that the Anglo-American Telegraph Company possesses a monopoly. They have no legal monopoly. There are various things set up against that contention, any one of which is fatal to it; but they have a monopoly just in the sense in which any telephone or telegraph company have a monopoly once they get into a place. It is not a very easy matter for others to come in and compete with them, particularly if the place is somewhat small and there is not business for two companies. Another company coming in would know that they would have to fight this company, and they would probably prefer to go to some other place where there was no competition. Owing to that fact there would always be difficulty in getting another company to come in, although, as I said, the Canadian Pacific Telegraph Company were willing to go in if matters had been made reasonable for them by the government a little over two years ago. The proposition I would submit to my hon. friend is that the Anglo-American Telegraph Company should be approached, and asked what they are willing to accept for their property there. They contend that it is not a very valuable business, and if that is so they should not want any unreasonable sum. Failing their coming to reasonable terms, parliament should authorize the government to expropriate the company's property and to take the service into their own hands. I see no reason why we should not do it. I have been looking up authorities on the subject, and I find there are very strong arguments in favour of our taking that course. I was struck by an observation made by the hon. gentleman from Toronto, whom I am sorry not to see in his place, when the subject was discussed before the Railway Committee during the present session. He said he saw no reason even if they had a monopoly, why it should not be interfered with. Monopolies were no more sacred than private property and private interests, and they had to give way to public interests. That being so, there is no reason why the Anglo-American Telegraph Company should not sell out to the government, and if they will not sell out, the government ought to come in and, after giving them proper compensation, take over the service. I can assure my hon. friend that if they do so, and a proper method is taken of assessing the value of that property, no matter how liberally the assessors may act, and how lenient they may be to the owners, in the case of a public expropriation, the government will get a property upon which they will be able to make three per cent on the cost. There is no doubt that if they acquire the property in a proper business-like way, that they will find that there will be a lively competition between the Great Northwestern Telegraph Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Telegraph Company as to who will get in there first and there will be no difficulty on the part of the government in getting at least three per cent for any money they pay for expropriating the Anglo-American Telegraph Company's property and interests in Prince Edward Island. I do not think we are asking too much when we are asking the government to take that view of the question, and to take it immediately. To show hon. gentlemen how unfair it is that we should be left to the tender mercies of this London corporation, I will just read to the House part of a letter addressed to Sir Louis Davies by the general manager of this company. The letter is dated April 19, 1900, and reads as follows :—

I am obliged by your cable letter of the 14th instant. We have received no complaint of the manner in which the company does its business in Prince Edward Island.

This certainly is about the coolest thing I ever read in my life. This is written only about two years ago, when there had been twenty years, I am safe in saying twenty years of agitation and complaint with regard to that service. My hon. friend from St. John knows that very well. Some of the letters from himself bearing on this subject are among the papers I have had the privilege of perusing, and I know he perfectly understands the question and took a very lively interest in it not long ago. The letter continues :

We have received no complaint of the service in Prince Edward Island. On the contrary we have received from the lieutenant governor and the leading merchants of the Island, most gratifying testimonials as to the courtesy and obligingness of our officials there.

I have already explained that. There is no question about that. I have taken care to say that these officials have been courteous, and we have no complaint to find with them, but to construe that into an admission that the service is one that we should not complain of seems to me very unreasonable. The letter proceeds :

And as regards the rates charged by this company, they are considerably below those which it is entitled to charge under the Act.

That is also true as far as charges under the Act are concerned. But hon. gentlemen who have occasion to cable over the Atlantic, know how different the charges are to-day from what they were thirty years ago when this company entered upon its operations, and it is a poor contention to set up to say they might charge more than they are charging when they are still so much in excess of what is charged for similar services in other parts of the world. Then he says :

We are unable to understand why Prince Edward Island is entitled to the same rates as the mainland any more than the Magdalen Islands or Anticosti.

This gentleman seems to think that we live on a barren rock something like Anticosti where there was no business to be done, and no communication except to warn the government or somebody else with regard to the dangers of navigation along that coast, or wrecks or anything of that kind. If so, why do they cling so tenaciously to the service ? They seemed to think that that is all the duty that devolved upon the government or themselves with regard to maintaining this service with Prince Edward Island. It is certainly very cool to say that they saw no reason why Prince Edward Island should receive any different treatment in the matter of telegraphic rates than the Island of Anticosti. He says further :

A reduction of this company's proportion on the rate of Canadian and American messages of twelve and a half cents would, as per my letter of the 21st March, entail a loss to the company of £1,300 and a corresponding loss upon the connecting companies.

His demand was that the government should indemnify them to the extent of £1,300, and there would have to be a further indemnification of a similar amount, £1,300, to the lines on the mainland, and they should be paid extra for keeping the offices open from eight till twelve at night. I do not know whether this calculation is at all accurate or not, about the amount of loss that an arbitrary application of that reduction would entail. Certainly it would not amount to £1,300 if the other proposition was adopted—that is if their rate would only be reduced to eighteen cents in place of twelve and a half, a very much smaller amount would suffice to compensate them. But they entirely ignore this fact which is known to every one, that if you reduce a rate, either for a letter or telegram, very materially, that business will increase so that in a very short time the former revenue will be reached. I know that in Prince Edward Island people feel so keenly with regard to this subject that merchants mail telegrams to Pictou and Point Du Chene, and have them telegraphed from there. They send them in a letter, and have them dispatched in Pictou and Point Du Chene for the purpose of evading this fifty cent rate. Not only that, but the rate in itself prevents that free use of the telegraph which would be resorted to if it were brought down to something reasonable. They make no allowance for that and the demand that an arbitrary sum should be provided by parliament that would make up for the entire loss of business, a loss to them equal to the reduction, and making no allowance for increased business, which is certain to arise from the reduction in the rates is quite unreasonable. They made another proposition about that time. I have not found the letter, but I know it was made. They proposed that if the government of Canada would guarantee to them in the future this £200 for keeping the two offices open, and guarantee to them in future the receipts which they had been collecting in 1899, they would make the reduction which was asked for. I am told, although I have not the figures before me, that since 1899 there has been a very large increase in the receipts and in the net earnings of the Anglo-American Telegraph Company, and that the amount the government would be called upon to make good would not have been very large. There has been, as I have said, a very sensible increase in the business under the old rate, and had the rates been reduced, the business would certainly have largely increased. The capitalization involved in this service is not very large. Hon. gentlemen familiar with such matters know that to lay a cable seven or eight miles in length is not a very large affair. To connect it with Sackville would involve the stringing of thirty-six miles of wire, so that it does not call for a very large capitalization. Consequently there is no great difficulty to get over. Nevertheless, small as the obstacle is, trifling as the difficulties are that stand in the way, they have been sufficient to keep the question tied up for all these years, and the people of the island are very earnest about getting out of the difficulty. I hope my hon. friend will make a strong representation to his colleagues on the matter and that some one of them will take up this question. There is no representative from the province in the cabinet at present. But I hope some of my hon. friend's colleagues will take up the matter and push it to a successful issue, because it is absolutely necessary, in the interest of the people of Prince Edward Island, that it should be done.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hon. gentlemen, I am not aware that there has been any correspondence on this subject in the last twenty-nine years, since the contract was made. The hon. gentleman himself really has very much more information on the subject than I ever possessed, and I at one time used to be pretty familiar with this subject. I shall be very glad to lay before the members of the government at an opportune time the statement he has made and the evidence he has produced on behalf of the people of Prince Edward Island to seek a remedy from the tariff of the Anglo-American. I am afraid this government will not be a very successful government in any negotiations they may have with the Anglo-American Company. It is very well known that the Liberal party some thirty odd years ago fought the Anglo-American Company for a great many years, and therefore we do not stand in very good odour with them. The Act to which the hon. gentleman refers, which was passed in the year 1874, and which I had charge of, and which required a good deal of skill and earnestness to get through this Chamber, which was supported by one of his leading friends from Prince Edward Island (Hon. Mr. Haviland), and which was very hotly contested, was carried only by a majority of seven. I am happy to say that some of the members who voted for it are still living and here. There are only four of us, however—Mr. Miller, Mr. Vidal, Mr. Wark and myself—out of the fifty-five members who were present on that vote. Mr. Haviland supported the proposal evidently under the impression that Prince Edward Island had granted a monopoly to the Anglo-American Company. That was assumed, and the amendment which was moved on the third reading was as follows—I am reading from the Votes and Proceedings of the 19th May, 1874 :

> To leave out all the words after 'now' and insert amended as follows : Leave out clause 16 and insert the following : In case any company heretofore incorporated has legally acquired any privileges of landing wire or cable for a marine telegraph upon the coast of the Dominion of Canada.

That claim applied only to Prince Edward Island, because that was the only part of the Dominion over which they then professed to have any claim.

> Or of any other company, such company shall be entitled to exercise and enjoy any such existing privilege unimpaired by this Act, but no company heretofore incorporated by any such special Act shall acquire any further or additional exclusive privileges of landing wires or cables as aforesaid.

So that at that time it was evidently assumed by a considerable number of gentlemen in this Chamber that there was a monopoly granted by the province of Prince Edward Island to the Anglo-American Company. We had a very interesting time of it here. Cyrus Field appeared before the committee and made a very appealing speech—perhaps my hon. friend the senator from Sarnia may remember it—almost cried, described how he had invested all his money in this cable, that even his family pictures had been sold in order that the cable might prove a success, and in that way he worked up a good deal of feeling. However, that Bill was carried by a certain number of gentlemen seceding from the opposition of that day to support the government measure. So I am inclined to think that the process by which we should obtain control of the telegraph system and the cable system of Prince Edward Island will be attended with a good deal of difficulty. I presume one of the first things to be done would be to repeal the statute under which a contract would be claimed. Naturally the Anglo-American Company would ask for a fiat in order to prove the damage they would sustain, and I doubt very much whether any negotiations would be successful, except upon payment of a very large sum. However, I am not disposed to take any melancholy view of it; on the contrary, I should be only too glad if some arrangement could be made by which our friends in the island of Prince Edward would be enabled to secure the competition of another company. I presume the local companies are now under contract to work with the Anglo-American Company ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There is no provincial company.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I understood the hon. gentleman to say there was a provincial company.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There is no other telegraph company there, but there is a telephone company, and they have also a contract with the Prince Edward Island Railway, by which they string wires along the railway.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall be very glad to call the attention of my colleagues to the very full brief my hon. friend has provided, because it gives a great deal of information that is not available in any other way that I know of. I was not aware of a great deal of the legislation of the island on this question for one thing, and the matter will, of course, receive consideration, but I am quite unable to foreshadow that anything could be done within a comparatively short time. However, it will be taken up at some favourable occasion.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—I am pleased to notice the Secretary of State is disposed to take up this question in favour of Prince Edward Island. I may say to the hon. gentleman that this is a burning question in Prince Edward Island, that the people are exceedingly anxious about it, and we sincerely hope the government will take up earnestly the matter and persist to a conclusion. After the complete analysis and thorough exposition of the question that the hon. senator from Marshfield has made, it is quite unnecessary for me to detain the House by any further remarks. I only wish to say I endorse all that the hon. gentleman has said, and I hope the government will take this matter up in earnest as soon as it is possible to do so.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I would like to say a word in support of this motion. It is not only the people of Prince Edward Island, but it is every one in Canada who wants to communicate with Prince Edward Island, that is aggrieved. Take up any morning paper printed in almost any part of the mainland of Canada and you will find some report—it may not be altogether as perfect as one would desire—of what has been done in parliament the previous evening, but the people of Prince Edward Island have to wait until the next evening before they know. The island office closes and you cannot send a message even if it is a matter of life and death, after eight o'clock at night. I think I am correct in saying that you cannot until the next morning communicate by telegraph with anybody on Prince Edward Island after that hour. The grievance is a great one. The hon. gentleman from Marshfield is quite right when he puts the case this way, that great progress has been made in the transmission of communications by the electric telegraph, but in Prince Edward Island the system remains practically the same as it was when it was first inaugurated. That is a matter over which the people have a right to complain. I think the government would be quite right—I said it when I was a member of the House of Commons—in confiscating the company's whole business. I do not know whether it would be right to say that in this House, but at any rate the public demands are greater than the rights of this company, if they have any rights, and this service ought to be taken hold of with a strong hand.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I just wish to point this out: My learned friend suggested that the first remedy would be to repeal the provincial Act to which I referred, and which authorized the making of this contract and the payment of this two thousand dollars a year. It is quite competent, telegraphic communication being a matter entirely within the control of the parliament of Canada, for this parliament to legislate, and I think it has already legislated, which is an equivalent in a way to a repeal of any concession or monopoly which that company has got. But I want to point this out, that this is not a matter which can be remedied by getting up a quarrel or by stopping the payment to these people. That has been tried. The government of the province has held back and refused to certify to the fair performance of this service for a very considerable time, but in the hope that the matter would be taken up and a settlement would be procured eventually the payment was made. Protests of this kind have been made from time to time, and it is not a matter over which in the interests of the province and of the public, you can get up a quarrel, because if they were suddenly to suspend operations and the government were unprepared to lay down another line or do anything, the people would be left without any telegraphic service for weeks or months, and the very thought of it is so serious that the government should not allow anything of that nature to happen. It has to be taken up by the government. We find it has been drifting on and drifting on in this way, neither getting any worse nor any better. The government has been—I apply to all governments—holding their hands and just allowing it to go on, and after a spurt being given to it by some of the representatives of the province they ultimately get tired and it is allowed to drop. The grievance goes on, and we are as far now apparently from a remedy as ever we were. The matter can not be allowed to drift that way very much longer; there will be something like an earthquake in Prince Edward Island, I am afraid. We must have this remedied.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (256) An Act to provide for advances to the Government of the North-west Territories.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Bill (258) An Act to amend the Act respecting the Department of Railways and Canals.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Bill (262) An Act to amend the Act respecting the harbour of North Sydney, in Nova Scotia.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

DEATH OF SENATOR LANDERKIN.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Before the Orders of the Day are called, it is with extreme sorrow that I rise to call the attention of the House to the absence of one of our colleagues who was recently with us. The wreath on his desk indicates the cause of his absence; he has gone to join the majority. At our meeting on Friday, the 4th of September, none of us thought that in parting with Senator Landerkin we were bidding our final adieu. He seemed to be in the same happy humour that usually marked his conduct, bright and cheery, and we all thought he would be returning when the temporary adjournment was over. Providence has willed it otherwise. The late senator was, in the full sense of the term, a general favourite; his bright, cheery smile was always ready to greet his fellow men. Wherever he was known he was extremely popular. He was first elected to the parliament of Canada in 1872, and he continued up to 1878 to be a loyal supporter of the administration of which I was then a member. In the great political battle that followed in that year, 1878, in which so many of the Liberals went down, he lost his seat with the others. His personal popularity, however, continued, and in the following election in 1882 he was re-elected and re-elected at all subsequent elections down to the last election, 1900. I am quite sure that I echo the sentiments of every gentleman who has known him in expressing the great regret we all feel at his death, more particularly because he was taken away so suddenly and so unexpectedly, and that we tender our deepest sympathy to his family, the members of which have lost a kind husband and a loving father, and his friends in South Grey have lost a man who was alway true to them and who was among his constituents of both political parties a general favourite.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Hon. gentlemen, it is a very painful duty which has devolved upon both the Secretary of State and myself during the past few years to call attention to the demise of many of our colleagues, and when we consider the frequency with which this has occurred it cannot but bring to our minds how uncertain life is. When the hon. gentleman who has now joined the majority left for his home, I met him in the lobby and found him in that same jovial spirit he generally displayed. It is true that he complained of being a little unwell, nothing beyond that, and none of us supposed for a moment that ere two weeks had rolled round he would be missing from this Chamber. I have known the late senator from the time he entered parliament in the Commons. In our political battles we have had many 'bouts,' if I may so term them, and he has always engaged in them with the quaint witticism which has characterized the man in every position in which he has been placed, whether in private life, in social intercourse, in the House of Commons or in the Senate. It is true he did not display so much of it for the few years he was here, but, as the Secretary of State has said, notwithstanding all his little peccadilloes, he was a general favourite in the House, and more particularly with the press gallery, and I am sure we all deeply regret his death and sympathize deeply and sincerely with his family. When I look around and see that within the last seven years there have been about fifty changes in this Chamber, it is enough to make every one of us feel how uncertain life is, and how soon we may join those who have gone before. I do not know that I can say more. He was in the past, and I have no doubt would be in the future, had he remained with us, what he called himself, a staunch Liberal, and a firm supporter of the party to which he belonged. I have no fault to find, nor would any one who has strong opinions of his own have the slightest fault to find with him for the course he pursued in that particular. There may be times, and there must be under party government, in which every one is called upon to surrender to a certain extent his individuality in dealing with great public questions, but that is under the belief firmly in the mind of those who belong to a party, that the policy of his party is in the general interest of the country. That I am inclined to think, and hope, is the motive which actuates every member belonging to either party, whenever a question on which he is not fully in accord with his party, is presented to him and he is called upon to record his vote. I say that frankly from my experience. I doubt not every one of us has been placed in precisely the same position. Senator Landerkin will not be forgotten soon by those with whom he used to associate ; whether we agreed with him or not we shall all miss him. I feel that I express the opinions of all with whom I act in this Chamber, when I send our fullest sympathy to his family. We shall not soon forget our old, jovial friend, Dr. Landerkin.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I rise to a question of privilege. For the past three or four sittings a number of documents called petitions against the construction of the national transcontinental railway, have been presented in this House from different sections of the country. As a legislator who wishes to give heed to what public opinion has to say on public questions, I have taken the trouble to examine some of these documents. I regret very much to say that I find in these petitions proof that they are against the dignity and honour of this House. I hold in my hands documents which are supposed to bear the signatures of the electors of this country, and as far as I can see, without being an eye-witness to the signatures of these people, there are names in this document which are forged. The question has been put in another branch of this parliament, and a decision has been rendered that any member of parliament presenting a petition must hold himself responsible for the genuineness of the signatures. I should like to know from the hon. Speaker of this House if that rule is to apply to the Senate. If it is, I would ask hon. gentlemen in future to be careful of what they present to this parliament. Petitions have been presented in the other Chamber, and we have proof by affidavit that many of them were forged documents. I therefore rise to ask for information on the subject: If the Chair rules that hon. members are not to be held responsible for the genuineness of the signatures attached to the petitions which they present, then I have nothing further to say; I shall treat the petitions with the contempt they deserve. But if the hon. Speaker should declare that members who present petitions must bear the responsibility for the genuineness of the signatures, then I shall treat the petitions with all due respect and examine them to see what they contain. I do not want to be called on here to examine documents which on their face are forgeries. I can quote an example here. On one I find the names of two Sutherlands written in the same hand.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Does the hon. member say that that would constitute a forgery? Even assuming that his statement is right, does he say that is a forgery?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Certainly it is a forgery, because if a man cannot sign his name he has to make a cross according to law, and it has to be witnessed. There are petitions here to which all the signatures attached are in the same handwriting. Either those people do not know how to read or write, which would be a serious thing to admit, or the document is a forgery. We want the signatures of people written by themselves and not by a paid agent. I hold the documents here, and any hon. gentleman who wishes to examine them will see that, on the face of them, they are forgeries—forged petitions against one of the greatest works this country has ever been called upon to construct. We are expected to be influenced by documents of that kind; I say it should not be allowed, and I ask the ruling of the Chair whether senators are to be held responsible for the genuineness of the signatures to petitions which they present here.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the hon. Speaker rules on the question which has been put, I should like to ask him to rule first what there is before the House. I am under the impression that these petitions should first be read and be the property of the Senate, so that we may know what is in them and what we are dealing with. We have nothing before the Senate: they are petitions which have been presented, but have not yet been received. I have not looked at the rules governing the presentation of petitions for some time, but my impression is that the responsibility rests with the member who presents a petition, so far as the contents of the prayer of the petitions are concerned. It would be utterly impossible for any senator to be certain of the genuineness of the signatures to the petitions that he presents. For instance, I presented a petition from a portion of the constituency which I formerly represented. I looked to see that the prayer of the petition was properly worded and knowing most of the names attached to it, but if I were put on oath I could not vouch for the genuineness of the signatures, for the best of reasons—I am not familiar with their signatures. That a member is responsible for a petition containing an insult to this body or for any improper expressions, I quite readily admit, but common sense ought to suggest that no member can be responsible for the genuineness of the signatures attached to the petitions which are sent to him to be presented to the House. The new censor of the Senate, who has taken upon himself the responsibility of directing us as to the manner in which we should do business here, and the responsibility devolving upon each of us, should know the impossibility of being in a position to vouch for the genuineness of signatures to petitions. Everybody must thank the hon. gentleman for the deep interest he takes in the honour and dignity of the Senate. He told us on another occasion that certain questions were before the House which we did not understand, and he gave us a lesson on constitutional government a short time ago; now, I presume, if these petitions should be the forgeries he claims they are, we shall be put in the stocks or pilloried, or at the very least expelled or obliged to apologize to the House. Because if we are responsible to the extent that he claims we are and the Speaker should sustain his view, the decision ought to be followed up by some condign punishment of the members who present petitions of that character. If that is to be the rule, I am inclined to think very few petitions will be presented hereafter in this House.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I am happy to see that some of these petitions have reached the Senate. I thought this House was being slighted by the Tory organizers who got up these petitions. Now I feel that the Tory machine recognizes that the Senate is entitled to know what are the opinions of the Conservative body in this country.

Hon. Mr. McKAY (Truro)—It would be a most absurd thing if we had to get an affidavit from every man who signs a petition to be presented in this House.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Get an affidavit from the agent.

Hon. Mr. McKAY (Truro)—If the Speaker should rule, as the hon. gentleman who brought up the subject desires, no member could present a petition unless each signature attached to it was accompanied by an affidavit. Very often a man asks a friend to sign a petition for him—that is a common practice. I have presented petitions today, and I am not in a position to vouch for the genuineness of any of the signatures. The rule laid down by the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Cloran) is a most ridiculous one.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am not a lawyer, but I am not prepared to admit the soundness of the legal doctrine laid down by the hon. gentleman, that because I should tell a friend to sign my name to a petition it would be a forgery on his part. How does the hon. gentleman know that any of the names attached to these petitions were signed without the authority of the person to whom the names belong?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—We have the proof on the paper.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The only proof the hon. gentleman submits is his own opinion that some of the signatures are in the one handwriting. That is no proof whatever.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Most of us have had experience of presenting petitions to parliament. If we were to be held responsible for the genuineness of the signatures to the petitions we present, I do not think anybody in this House would be free to present them. We know in the other branch of parliament petitions are presented containing signatures of persons who never saw them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That may or may not be the case. The hon. gentleman has presented to this House no proof of this assertion.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The old saying about petitions is pretty nearly correct—you can get a petition signed to hang a man. I have no doubt it is true, and especially so in the case of some men. As a matter of fact, a petition is hardly like a stock subscription list, where you make yourself liable if you sign your name for a certain sum of money. But you can ask a man to sign a petition for almost anything. I venture to say ten per cent of the people who sign petitions never look at them.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have been asked for a proof of my statement. Here it is in the records of parliament. It reads as follows:

> We, the undersigned electors of the county of Bagot——

And it will apply to the other counties.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has no right to speak.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Has the hon. Speaker ruled against my right to give the proof in answer to the demand of the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island?

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman has already spoken, and if objection is taken I do not think he can speak again.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I must say, Mr. Speaker, that that rule has not been enforced very often recently. I think hon. gentlemen have been allowed to speak twice, and very reasonably so, too.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has no right to speak unless he takes exception to the Speaker's ruling, and appeals to the House against it.

The SPEAKER—I may be allowed to say that the rules of this House are not enforced very rigidly as a general thing. The enforcement is in the hands of the members themselves, and as a rule they do not enforce the rules of the House, but when an hon. gentleman asks that a rule be enforced, it is simply my duty to carry it out.

Hon. MEMBERS—Hear, hear.

The SPEAKER—With reference to this matter we have not the same rule in the Senate that they have in the House of Commons; but our rule, I suppose, would be held to be the same. Rule 84 of the House of Commons reads as follows:

Petitions to the House of Commons shall be presented by a member in his place who shall be answerable that they do not contain impertinent or improper matter.

It is not alleged that these petitions referred to, contain impertinent or improper matter. It will be clearly impossible for a member presenting a petition to be in a position to verify all the signatures to it. At page 321 of Bourinot, I find this statement, which is a reasonable one:

Any forgery or fraud in the preparation of petitions will be considered a serious breach of privilege and be severely punished.

If the hon. gentleman has reason to suspect anything of the kind, he can take the proper steps to have an inquiry, and anyone who has been found guilty of forgery or fraud in connection with the petition can be punished.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is what we shall do.

THIRD READING.

Bill (244) An Act respecting the Western Assurance Company.—Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell.

REPRESENTATION BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (66) An Act to readjust the representation in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG.

He said: This Bill is submitted for the consideration of the Senate in accordance with the British North America Act, which provides for the readjustment of the representation of the House of Commons after every decennial census. Section 51 reads as follows:

On the completion of the census in the year 1871 and of each subsequent decennial census, the representation of the four provinces shall be readjusted by such authority, in such manner and from time to time as the parliament of Canada from time to time provides, subject to the following rule:

We are following the precedents that were observed in 1872, 1882 and 1892 and the readjustment has been provided for by the House of Commons itself as in former years. The mode in which the readjustment is carried out is also provided for in the Act. It is provided that Quebec has a fixed number of members, namely 65. Subsection 2 of the section I have read, contains this provision:

There shall be assigned to each of the other provinces such a number of members as will bear the same proportion to the number of its population, ascertained at each census as the number sixty-five bears to the number of the population of Quebec, so ascertained.

The population of Quebec at the last census was 1,648,898, which, divided by 65, gives a unit of 25,367, so that that is the unit on which the representation of the several provinces is to be formed. Prince Edward Island at the last census had 103,000—I do not give the odd figures—and that, divided by the unit, gives Prince Edward Island four members, which is a loss of one. Nova Scotia, with a population of 459,000 is to have eighteen members. New Brunswick, with a population of 331,000, is to have thirteen members. Ontario, with a population of 2,182,000 will be represented by eighty-six members. Manitoba with a population of 255,000 will have ten members. British Columbia, with a population of 178,000 will have seven members, and the Yukon will have one member. The North-west Territories, with a population of 158,000, and Keewatin and Athabasca being added to that brings the population up to 184,000, and considering the conditions that are prevailing in the North-west and the large population coming in, there has been added to that 100,000 which brings the total up to 284,000 and gives ten members. Ontario loses six members, Prince Edward Island one, Nova Scotia two, New Brunswick one ; and the gains are Manitoba three, North-west Territories six, British Columbia one, Yukon one. New Brunswick objected to the loss of one member, although, strange to say, New Brunswick did not object when the number was reduced in 1892. It was then reduced to fourteen members. It is now reduced to thirteen. However, the government of that province thought proper to protest against the proposed readjustment and the case went to the Supreme Court, and the court decided against the contention of New Brunswick. The contention, I may say, of New Brunswick was that the Act applied only to the four provinces which came into confederation in 1867. The court held otherwise, deciding that any province coming in subsequent to that period came under the terms set forth in the British North America Act, and was subject, therefore, to have its representation either increased or diminished as the circumstances warranted. Prince Edward Island also protested against the change in representation. alleging that at the time Prince Edward Island came into confederation there was an understanding that the island was to be represented by six members. The clause in the Prince Edward Island Act reads as follows :

That the population of Prince Edward Island having been increased by 15,000 or upwards since the year 1861——

That is the year in which the preceding census had been taken.

—the island shall be represented in the House of Commons by six members, the representation to be readjusted from time to time under the provisions of the British North America Act.

Prince Edward Island contended that there was an understanding that her representation in the House of Commons was never to be reduced below six. However, on the case going to the Supreme Court, the court decided against that province. I understand that it was proposed to appeal from the decision. That, of course, can only be done by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in England, giving permission to the province to appeal against the decision of the Supreme Court. What strikes me as rather peculiar is that when Prince Edward Island suffered a reduction of one member before, as it did in 1892, when it was reduced to five, as far as I can find out, there was no protest, and, therefore, it did seem odd that they allowed the first occasion to go by without making a formal protest against the reduction of the representation. The Bill, as hon. gentlemen know, has been very fully discussed in the House of Commons, which is the branch of parliament that is affected by this legislation. Apart from the opposition which was made to the reduction of the representation in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, the chief contrast in regard to the change in the boundaries of the electoral districts was in the province of Ontario. The storm centre was there. In the other provinces the opposition has been comparatively trifling. In Prince Edward Island, as I understand, there has been some opposition to the method of allotting the four members. The plan adopted, if I am correct, has been that pursued in the past, of allowing one of the counties two members, and the other two, each one. In the province of Ontario a considerable number of the districts were affected inasmuch as the Redistribution Acts of 1882 and 1892 had been materially disturbed, and there was this further point which involved a very considerable change, Ontario loses six members. On former occasions, as in 1882, when Ontario got an increase of four members, there ought to be really no very great difficulty in allotting the four, but, strange to say, in order to give that four, over fifty electoral districts were disturbed. On the present occasion we have to take away not only six members but we have also to allot to newer portions of Ontario, where population has drifted, four members. The city of Toronto gets one. Muskoka, Parry Sound and Nipissing had one between them and now get one each, and Algoma, which has increased very largely in population, has three representatives now instead of the one that it had before. As hon. gentlemen know, population has rapidly flown in to what is called New Ontario, and therefore it became entitled to increased representation. I say, therefore, the task of taking away from the older constituencies no less than ten seats was attended with very serious difficulty, and I venture to say, if hon. gentlemen will look at the proposal fairly, that the task has been performed in a most equitable manner. In the first place the principle has been laid down, that there should be an adherence to county boundaries. That has been adhered to in all cases, except a very few where a departure from that rule was not only justifiable but proper. Take, for instance in this particular neighbourhood where the townships of Gloucester and Osgoode were attached to the county of Russell under the Confederation Act. They have remained there ever since. It equalizes the representation of Russell and reduces the number in a county that otherwise would be too populous for a single representative.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the Township of Gloucester belong to Russell ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Does the hon. gentleman refer to Osgoode and Gloucester ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, municipally they always belonged to Carleton, but under the British North America Act, and I think before that—I would not be positive about that —but under the British North America Act, at all events, they were allotted to the county of Russell, and in the redistribution of 1872, 1882, and 1892, they still remained with the county of Russell, and therefore there seems no reason why an arrangement that worked satisfactorily and had been opposed by nobody should be disturbed. The township of Monaghan which properly belongs to Northumberland, and lies north of Rice Lake, has always since confederation, and perhaps before, been attached to one of the Peterboroughs, West Peterborough I think, inasmuch as the waters of Rice Lake separate it from the county to which nominally it belonged, and its trade and business and all negotiations and markets are with the county of Peterboro. The only other departure from the rule, which I recall, are the townships of Clara and Head and Maria, in the county of Nipissing, which joined the extreme boundary of the county of Renfrew. The people there petitioned to continue with the county of Nipissing where they are now attached. Beyond those exceptions, which are not only capable of explanation but which are defensible and proper for very many reasons, there has been no departure from the principle to which I have adverted, of adhering to county boundaries. No doubt even in the distribution of an electoral district where two seats have to be given, there will be necessarily a difference of opinion, but I think if the question is looked at fairly, there cannot be much cause for criticism in the division that has been made under the present Bill. The argument used, I may say, in 1882, particularly, and afterwards in 1892, in the rearrangement of the electoral districts in Ontario, was that it was to equalize population. The government of the day took ample powers to adjust the population equally because they had no hesitation in taking away townships from one county and attaching them to an electoral district in another county. As I said before, there were over fifty disturbances in the province of Ontario, when the redistribution of 1882 was made, and therefore there was ample opportunity to have carried out the principle of representation by population and to have approached as nearly as possible to the unit of 25,000 under the Act. In order to show that this Bill now before the Senate is fairer in that particular than was the Act of 1882, I have jotted down here twenty-three electoral districts that contain less than 18,000 voters. They are as follows :

Brockville	15,000
Cardwell	13,000
Durham, East	14,000
Durham, West	13,000
Frontenac	12,000
Grenville, South	12,000
Hastings, East	17,000
Hastings, West	17,000
Huron, East	17,000
Huron, South	17,000
Kingston City	17,000
Leeds and Grenville	13,000
Lennox	13,000
Middlesex, North	17,000
Middlesex, West	15,000
Northumberland, West	13,000
Ontario, South	16,000
Ontario, West	16,000
Peel	13,000
Perth, South	17,000
Peterborough, West	17,000
Victoria, North	16,000
Prince Edward	17,000

There are twenty-three constituencies, electoral districts, which have less than 18,000, which is 7,000 less than the unit. Under the new Act there are only seven that are under 18,000. They are Prince Edward county, which was also in the other list, West Algoma, West Elgin, which has 17,000, so you could not divide equally, because St. Thomas had to be given either to East or West Elgin, if you are adhering to county boundaries, and therefore, there must be a disturbance in the county boundaries. Then North Lanark, 17,000; North Middlesex, 16,000; West Northumberland, 13,000; East Peterborough, 16,000. It totals up seven as against twenty-three. So that in adopting the principle of county boundaries we have been able to adjust the unit of representation on a much better basis than did the government of 1882, who made the readjustment to which I have adverted. The committee to whom the Bill was referred, if I read aright the reports of the debate, agreed that a county containing 36,572 should be entitled to two members, and that a county containing 60,953 should be entitled to three members.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. gentleman say that is the report?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I understood the committee to whom the Bill was referred, decided on a figure—I may be wrong about that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What was the figure?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As I understood, they agreed that any county containing 36,572 should be entitled to two members. It is rather under what I should have thought was the figure, because I thought the figures ought to be fifty per cent of 25,370, which would be rather more. A county having 60,953 should be entitled to three members. I presume the committee followed that out pretty closely. As I said before, no doubt the fairest way was to adopt the plan of the present administration. That is, of limiting the representation to the county if possible, because there is less opportunity to cause dissatisfaction. I quite admit that a township moved one way or the other may affect a vote, although my own individual opinion is that it exercises very much less influence now than it did years ago, that at all events as far as my observation goes, in very many of the provinces of this country, personal character has a good deal more to do with the success of the candidate than it had in former times within my early recollection when political questions were of a sharper and a keener kind than now, and therefore I attach, individually, much less significance to the division than some other hon. gentlemen do. In adopting the law of county boundaries—I daresay my hon. friend knows because I have had occasion to quote it before—we are following the plan that Sir John Macdonald, the leader of the Conservative party, laid down as a fundamental principle in making the subdivision of 1872. It is to be found in 'Hansard' of the 1st June, 1872, page 928. He spoke as follows:

> With respect to the rural constituencies, the desire of the government has been to preserve the representation for counties and subdivisions of counties, as much as possible. It is considered objectionable to make representation a mere geographical term. It is desired as much as possible to keep the representation within the county so that each county that is a municipality of Ontario, should be represented, and if it becomes large enough that it should be divided into ridings. That principle is carried out in the suggestion I am about to make. That rule was broken in 1867 in three constituencies, viz., Bothwell, Cardwell and Monck, and I do not think that the experiment has proved a successful one.

These are the genuine, honest opinions of the then leader of the Conservative government. The party overcame his good judgment some years after, I am sorry to say. In another part of the same speech he goes on to say:

> But it is obvious that there is a great advantage in having counties elect men whom they know. Our municipal system gives an admirable opportunity to select men for their deserts. We all know the process which happily goes on in Western Canada. A young man in the county commences his public life by being elected by the neighbours who know him, to the township council. If he shows himself possessed of administrative ability he is made reeve or deputy reeve of his county. He becomes a member of the county council and as his experience increases, and his character and abilities become known, he is selected by his people as their representative in parliament. It is, I think, a grand system that the people of Canada should have the opportunity of choosing for political promotion the men in whom they have the most confidence, of whose abilities they are fully assured. All that great advantage is lost by cutting off a portion of two counties and adding them together for electoral purposes only. Those portions so cut off have no common interest; they do not meet together, and they have no common feeling, except that once in five years they go to the polls in their own township to vote for a man who may be known in one section and not in another. This tends towards the introduction and development of the American system of caucuses by which wire-pullers take adventurers for their political ability only and not for any personal respect for them. So that as much as possible, from any point of view, it is advisable that counties should refuse men whom they do not know, and when the representation is increased it should be by subdividing the counties into ridings.

That was the opinion of the distinguished leader of the Conservative party for many years. Those associated with me did feel very much aggrieved—and I need not advert to it now at any length—by the subdivision made in 1882. The effect of it was to nearly wipe out the other political party. When the Bill was before the other House, Sir Richard Cartwright alluded to the last election as showing the disastrous consequences of the divisions as they existed, and as they exist now. Sir Richard Cartwright gave the House the official returns for the election of 1900, excluding the city of Toronto. In the 87 constituencies of Ontario, the Liberals cast 190,465 votes, and the Conservatives 189,777, yet the Conservatives had one-third more representatives than the Liberals. In South Huron, Norfolk and Waterloo, where the candidates were elected by acclamation, the figures for the election of 1896 were taken. Apart from that and excluding the ridings of the city of Toronto, the figures are those shown by the returns laid before the House of Commons.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He might have made a much stronger case in favour of his party, if he had omitted some counties—Hastings, for instance.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did not strike them out. I take all the cities except Toronto.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He might have made his statement much more favourable in the interest of the Liberals if he had omitted a few more Conservative constituencies.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But we did not do it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You have just as good a right to do that as to omit Toronto.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not at all. Both governments have recognized that the urban ought not to be as largely represented as the rural population. That is a principle which is well established, not only in Canada, but in Great Britain. In the figures I have mentioned are included the large majorities in Hastings. In North Hastings the Liberal candidate received 1,171 votes, the Conservative candidate 2,426 votes; in West Hastings the Conservative majority was even larger.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He ought to have omitted Hastings, and made the case stronger for the Liberals.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend would have had ground then for finding fault.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I will deal with that later.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I desire to be fair and frank.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I like the hon. gentleman's fairness.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am only giving the figures; and figures, it is said, cannot lie. In this case they speak eloquently. I had occasion myself to look up the figures after the election of 1882, and I found this result, that the number of voters on the electoral list in Ontario was 391,572. The Conservatives polled 140,025, the Liberals 133,771, giving a Conservative majority of 6,254. There were 55 Conservatives and 37 Liberals returned. We thought that was rather hard lines. It did not seem fair, a Liberal representing 3,165 votes and a Conservative 2,543 voters. It looked as if a Liberal required a much larger vote than a Conservative required to be elected, although his voice was quite as powerful in parliament as the Conservative.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—How would that rule apply to Quebec, where only six Conservatives were returned?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Probably it would count the other way. I presume we all acquiesce in the principle of this Bill. It is in accordance with the British North America Act. Any comments which hon. gentlemen may have to make on it will probably be made more conveniently when the House goes into committee and considers the readjustment. So far as the individual seats are concerned, of course no exception can be taken to them. The criticisms will come on the divisions of the several counties.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the motion for the second reading is put, I call attention to the fact that this important Bill is not printed in French.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The fault is not mine. It rests with the translators of the House of Commons. I hope my hon. friend will not insist on his objection. I shall try and have the French version ready for the next stage of the Bill. The hon. gentleman is sufficiently educated in English to understand all the provisions of this Bill.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The remarks made by the hon. Secretary of State in introducing what is termed the Redistribution Bill, were of such a character as to justify one who differs from him occupying the time of the Senate for a short time in laying his views before the House, and, consequently, before the country. I should not have assumed the responsibility to the extent to which I intend to extend my remarks, were it not that in the distribution of the seats of the Dominion very few changes have been made except in the province whence I come. The province of Ontario seems to have been the battle-ground, and for reasons which the hon. gentleman referred to in his remarks. He referred particularly to the redistribution of the seats in 1882, and gave to the House what he thought of it, and what his party has repeated so often, that I have come to the conclusion they really believe the statements they have made. I shall endeavour to show from facts and figures, before I sit down, that the deductions which he drew from the elections which took place after the redistribution of 1882 are not strictly in accord with the record. Before entering into the particulars of this case, I may be excused for referring to one or two remarks which he made in his opening address. He told us that the representation in Ontario loses six men on account of the falling off of the population as per the last census. That is quite correct. It is not my province just now to enter into the character of the census of 1901, nor shall I refer to the means which were taken by certain of the ministers to have so large a representation in numbers in the province of Quebec, which necessarily leads to the reduction of the representation in the other provinces.

My hon. friend referred to Prince Edward Island. If the population of Quebec increases in the same ratio, taking it for granted that the census was correct in the province of Quebec, as compared with the others, I very much fear that Prince Edward Island will find itself in a very short time with less representatives in the Lower House than they have in the Upper Chamber, and consequently it should fall to the lot of gentlemen who occupy seats here to look more earnestly and more effectively into the legislation which takes place in reference to that Island. However, as that is in the future, I shall not at the present moment discuss that point further. The next statement made by the hon. gentleman was that it would be shown on investigation that the present Redistribution Bill, particularly as it affects the province of Ontario, was equitable and based upon correct principles. That is a point, I think, I shall be able to controvert by facts and figures before I resume my seat. He gave some other particulars, to which I do not deem it necessary to refer, except to that extraordinary calculation for securing the majority for his party which he quoted as having been made in the House of Commons by Sir Richard Cartwright. It is not the first time that that hon. gentleman has given the same reasons for their defeat in that province. He also said in his address the other day—and I should not have referred to it were it not for the reference made by the other hon. gentlemen, because, according to the rules of this House it is not in order to refer to the debates in the other House—I would just say, that I saw in the newspapers a statement by Sir Richard Cartwright that he was gerrymandered out of his seat in Ontario by the redistribution made by the Conservative party. What are the facts? I was astounded that no one in the House of Commons referred to the facts. It is true the county of Huron which was a growing county, increased in population much faster than many of the other counties in that province, was given three representatives, and in the division of the county there was no portion of the adjacent counties brought into its redistribution. It was divided into the west, east, and, I think, north. Formerly it was called the centre, and the centre riding was the one Sir Richard represented. He said he was gerrymandered out. The centre riding of Huron remained in the same condition, comparatively, that it was in previous to the redistribution, but it was called by another name, I think the centre or east, and the reason why he lost that constituency was not on account of the gerrymander but because at the convention that was held immediately after the redistribution, Mr. McMillan, a Liberal, was selected by the party and Sir Richard was defeated. That was the reason he lost his seat in that county and not on account of a gerrymander. No one knows that better than himself.

It is true he sought election immediately afterwards in the centre riding of Wellington and was defeated by Dr. Orton. He then sought refuge in the county of Oxford, the member at that time having retired, and allowed the gallant knight to secure a seat in parliament. So much for that statement. The hon. gentleman again quotes from Sir Richard Cartwright's figures to show that at the elections the Conservatives had a majority of the members elected while in a minority in the whole province, but in order to establish that point he leaves out the important Conservative constituency of the city of Toronto. Why did he not go further? He might just as well have left out the city of Hamilton. When I called his attention to it, he said the intention of Sir Richard Cartwright was to show that it was the rural constituencies which gave the majorities. He might as well have omitted the city of Hamilton, which gave majorities for the two Conservative candidates ranging from 600 to 800. He might have piled up the Liberal majority by this mode to a much greater extent. Now, what are the facts at the present moment so far as Ontario is concerned? The Ross government have control of the province. By means of the Liberal machine they have so gerrymandered that province that to-day, though the Liberal government is sustained by a majority of two or three in the legislature, they are in a minority of between five and six thousand of the electors; and that is precisely what the result will be, providing the electors at the next election cast their votes as they did in the last, under the Bill which my hon. friend has asked this House, in such bland terms, to approve. Having said this much by way of introduction, it is not necessary for me to quote the clause of the constitution authorizing the readjustment of the constituencies. My hon. friend has referred to that himself and also to the opinions of Sir John Macdonald. He stated that the Conservatives had always, as a fundamental plank in their platform, advocated adhering to county boundaries in the redistribution of seats. If the hon. gentleman's recollection will carry him back to 1872—if he has not intentionally forgotten it, and I would not like to accuse him of that, because it would not be parliamentary—when the first redistribution was made, he will find on record in the annals of the House of Commons that Sir John Macdonald first laid down the principle, as my hon. friend very properly says, of adhering to county boundaries, and secondly, as far as practicable, the equalization of population. That was the first proposition made by Sir John Macdonald in 1872. In discussing the question at that time, Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, then leader of the opposition, advocated representation by population in opposition to county boundaries, which my hon. friend tells this House has always been the principle of his party. Here is what Mr. Mackenzie said upon that question:

> There was no reason whatever why the principle of representation by population should have been abandoned within the provinces. When we had to consider it between the provinces that principle was just in itself, but the Bill ignored that principle.
>
> In the portions of the country where additional population had been established, that the six additional members should be allowed to Ontario are due to the increase of population of that province, and should be allowed with reasonable regard to the population.

The House will observe that Alexander Mackenzie at that time never referred directly or indirectly to the question of county boundaries at all. Following it down to 1882, Sir John A. Macdonald, I must admit, changed his position to a certain extent, when he adopted the two principles, and in the case of the redistribution of 1882, the right hon. gentleman put representation by population first and county boundaries afterwards, as far as it could be carried out consistent with the number of inhabitants in each of the ridings. In 1892 the same principle was laid down and advocated by Sir John Macdonald, making the fundamental plank in the redistribution platform representation by population first; that is the basis upon which the last redistribution was made. It will be seen further, that if hon. gentlemen refer to 'Hansard' and read Sir Wilfrid Laurier's speech in discussing this very question, they will find that he advocated under the circumstances representation by population, in the division of the different electoral divisions in the province, and laid very little stress whatever upon the question of county boundaries, in fact he said:

> If there is a principle which ought to be recognized in a measure of this kind as far as possible it is the principle of representation by population.

Now with these facts upon record, patent to every one who has paid the slightest attention to this question, for the Secretary of State and others of his party to assert in a deliberative body like this and in the House of Commons, and before the electors, that their fundamental principles in the redistribution was that of county boundaries is shown to be totally incorrect and unfounded, if you refer to the records of parliament. You will find that principle also if you refer to Sir Wilfrid's resolution, which he moved in amendment to the then Bill. These are facts that it is just as well, after the speech made by the hon. gentleman, should be laid before the House. In 1899—to do justice to the right hon. Premier of the present day—I should say that he advocated county boundaries verbally, but in the proposition to redistribute certain of the constituencies after the party came into power, he referred the whole question, as will be remembered by those who were here, to the judges, laying down the principle that it was the most equitable mode of proceeding under the circumstances, and likely to do the greatest justice to the people of the Dominion. If he were honest then in his opinions, and he has not changed them, why did he not carry out the same principles in connection with this Bill? Had he done so I question very much whether any opposition would have been given, though circumstances have transpired, as I stated the other day, when expressing my own views that the further judges are kept from interference in or dealing with these questions of a political or semi-political character the better for the judiciary in this country. Now, the Bill before us is a very important one, as my hon. friend the Secretary of State has said, and he, like his chief, has told us it is not only equitable, but it is based upon correct principles. Any one reading Sir Wilfrid Laurier's remarks in introducing the Bill, would come to the conclusion that he and his party were actuated by the highest, purest and most lofty motives, but when we come to examine the Bill itself and the effect which it will have upon the electorate, one must come to an altogether different conclusion. The hon. gentleman said:

> What we have in view, and what we desire is to introduce a fair measure that will give all parties an equal measure of justice, freedom and responsibility. The Liberal party has always contended that the redistribution that must follow each decennial census should take place under certain rules, well understood, well defined and which everybody could appreciate. These should be the unwritten law of the country and apply wherever and whenever a redistribution takes place and should be applied whichever party is in power. We have always maintained that the guiding principles in this redistribution should be the county boundaries and should be preserved.

I have already shown by quotations from his own speeches that he first laid down the principle and advocated representation by population. Then he refers next to what took place in England. He said:

> The object of the committee will be to create the constituencies which will be allowed to elect the members of this House. In other words we do not present to the House to-day a scheme cut and dried which has to be swallowed holus-bolus by our friends, and by the opposition whether they like it or not; so we propose to invite our friends now sitting on the opposition benches, to meet us in the committee room and there discuss with us the provision of the constituencies and in fact the creation of all constituencies which shall be empowered to elect the members of the House. We propose to do what has been done in England by the government of Mr. Gladstone. We believe that if our friends opposite will meet us in this way, we can prepare a measure which will be at all events fair to all parties. We believe that we shall be able to bring into the House a measure which will be free from those blemishes which are to be found in the redistribution of 1882 and 1892. We believe that if they will agree to meet us in committee to discuss this Bill fairly without trying to take an undue advantage over each, we shall be able to present to the House a measure of which every Canadian will have reason to feel proud, a measure which will be free from those contentious elements which characterize the former Redistribution Acts which have been passed in the history of the Dominion of Canada. We intend to do this as a basis to be followed not only upon this occasion but upon all other occasions.

Who will say that these are not high sounding sentiments? Who will disagree in this House with the utterance of the hon. gentleman who made these statements? Have they carried them out? Are the statements all correct? Have they followed the precedent set by Mr. Gladstone? Mr. Gladstone referred the questions of redistribution of the constituencies in the kingdom to Lord Salisbury, and between those and the others with whom they were associated they came to a decision unanimously as to what should be the basis of the representation in that country. There was an equality between the two parties upon that committee and not a majority given by Gladstone to his own party to override every proposition made by those who were acting with Lord Salisbury. Was that the case here? They took a majority on the committee, and while the Premier states positively that principles would be agreed upon by which the distribution was to take place, what was the first act of that committee? A proposition was made by the leader of the opposition to lay down the basis upon which they should act; that was voted down. Why? Because they had a cut-and-dried scheme prepared for the division of the constituencies. Every single proposition made by Mr. Borden and his two colleagues in reference to the redistribution was voted down by the majority, and yet the Premier tells us with his customary eloquence and coolness that they adopted the same principle that had been established by Gladstone in England under similar circumstances. If hon. gentlemen have read the debates they will find that Mr. Sutherland acknowledged that they had received recommendations from the different counties as to the manner in which the distribution should be made. He acknowledged that in the county in which I live, strong representations had been forwarded to him as to the manner in which that county should be divided. Under the old system, there were three constituencies. The north, the one which I had the honour of representing, always went Conservative. The west, during the last twelve or fifteen years had elected a Conservative. The east has been represented on two or three occasions since the redistribution, by a Liberal member. I will show before I get through how this 'equitable' redistribution was to affect that county and the manner in which it was divided. I may say while upon this subject that the division of the county would have this result—the west riding contained the Conservative municipalities—the city of Belleville, and the town of Trenton. Sydney wes about equally divided. In Rawdon the Conservative majority is about 250, in Huntingdon about 150, in Madoc about 250, in Marmora and Lake about 100. In Tudor there would not be much difference either way, 20 or 30. These figures would give to the Conservative candidate a majority of between a thousand and fifteen hundred. The other portion of the county was so manipulated—that is if they vote as they did the last election—that the Liberal candidate should have about 200 majority. I have sufficient confidence, speaking from my personal knowledge of the electors of that county, to believe that this attempt—this flagrant attempt to disfranchise them and hive the two parties will have just the contrary effect to what the government hope to accomplish. Before leaving this point, I may just as well admit, because it has been done——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—So flagrant was the division of the county of Hastings and so monstrously outrageous——

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Strong words, but not half as strong as would properly characterize the machine the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) has represented in the past and no doubt will represent again if he takes the same position that he occupied before as organizer of the Liberal party in the province of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman is speaking of the gerrymander of 1882 very likely.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I will come to that presently, and will show what the effect of that was. So obnoxious even to themselves was the iniquity of the division of Hastings and Waterloo, when it was pointed out to them, that they had to back down and allow Waterloo to remain precisely as it had been under the 'old gerrymander,' as they called it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no, it never was gerrymandered.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is exactly as it was before the hon. gentleman's government touched it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Waterloo never was gerrymandered. It stands now in the Bill as it stood at confederation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why did the hon. gentleman touch it ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Lots of things were touched.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why did the hon. gentleman so gerrymander it as to make one riding run all around the other ? I am obliged to the hon. gentleman for his correction. We did not gerrymander it, but it has for a long time returned a Conservative for one riding. When the hon. gentleman thought it would return Grits for both, and in order to prevent that the Conservative Germans were hived around it. He got ashamed of that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They are all right now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman took the county of Hastings and added one of the strong Conservative townships of the west riding to the east riding, not for the purpose of giving political strength, but because the disproportion in population was so great that he could not defend it. The west riding, as first recommended by the committee, contained 33,500, and there were about 26,000 in the other.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman is not discussing the Bill as it is now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am discussing it exactly as it is now. I am discussing it as it was, and comparing it with the Bill as it is.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—May I put a question ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am trying to be clear. I was pointing out what the original division was, and showing that the government had changed that. Then I pointed out what the effect of the original division was, and was on the point of showing what the result will be under the amended division. I have here a plan of one of the ridings of Hastings. It has a bow window in one side. They have taken a township out of the east as it was in the original Bill, and attached it to the west, and for some unaccountable reason they take three rear townships that border nearly on the Madawaska river and add them to the west riding. I think I could give a reason for it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is a Chinese puzzle.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is to give the hon. gentleman two safe seats ; he has nothing to complain of.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think so; I think the people are sufficiently honest and intelligent to administer a rebuke to the government for the attempt which has been made to prevent a fair expression of the popular will. This plan is very small, but at the narrowest part it represents a constituency 10 miles wide, at another place twenty miles, and at another thirty miles, and extending 125 miles in length from the Bay of Quinte to nearly the Madawaska river. The constituency on the other side is about the same. Having said this much—and I hope I have been sufficiently plain and explicit that my hon. friend from Delorimier may understand what I have said if he does not understand what I intended to say. I would not expect him to do the latter, but I am quite sure he will understand clearly what I have said. Let me look at some of the figures, and I must be excused if I am a little tedious, but the figures presented by the Hon. Secretary of State were of such a character as to justify my occupying some little time in considering them. The census of 1891 gave Ontario a population of 2,182,947, divided among 86 members. If no distinction were made between the urban population and the rural population we find a unit of 25,383. I think those are the same figures given by the Hon Secretary of State—at least they are so near it that there is no perceptible difference. Now the table of 46 of these electoral districts shows the following result. In making this calculation, in referring to the county of Brant, in which there are about 3,000 Indians who are deprived by the Act passed by this government of votes and consequently I think may very fairly be stricken out of the calculation of the population which has the franchise, the result will be as I am giving it to the House.

Carleton would be	24,381
Dufferin	21,036
Dundas	19,757
Frontenac	24,746
Glengarry	22,131
Grenville	21,021
Haldimand	21,2333
Halton	19,545
Lennox and Addington	23,346
Muskoka	20,971
Parry Sound	24,936
Peel	21,471
Prince Edward	17,864
Brant	18,273
Brantford	19,867
East Elgin	17,901
West Elgin	25,685
East Kent	25,328
Lanark North	17,263
Lanark South	19,996
Brockville	18,721
Leeds	19,254
Northumberland, East	20,405
Northumberland West	13,055
Ontario North	18,390
Ontario South	22,018
Oxford, North	25,644
Oxford, South	22,760
Perth, South	20,615
Peterborough, East	16,291
Peterborough, West	20,704
Renfrew, South	24,556
East Grey	23,663
Grey North	24,874
Grey, South	21,053
Huron, East	19,227
Huron, South	22,881
Huron, West	19,712
Middlesex, East	20,228
Middlesex, North	16,419
Middlesex, West	18,079
Simcoe, South	26,399
York, Centre	21,505
York, North	22,419
York, South	20,699
Kingston	19,788
Total	46—966,178

It will be observed that in giving these figures the city of Toronto has not been included. That makes a total of 966,178. Now, if you add to those figures the four counties which are next lower in population increasing the number from 46 to 55 you will find the following result:

Hastings, East	26 787
Waterloo, North	25,156
Wellington, North	26,120
Simcoe, North	26,071

Making a total in these four constituencies of 104,134, or a grand total of the 55 of 1,700,312. This would make within 4,774 of one-half but you deduct the 3,000 odd of Indians if you please in order to get the fullest possible number given by the census, and this would make it 1,774, and the result would be that forty-six constituencies representing a population of 132,086 under this Bill would elect a majority of six members, and if you had five more, making it 51, the 51 constituencies would elect a majority of sixteen in Ontario and still be in a minority in the population. These figures are interesting for the purpose of comparison in more ways than one. The average population in a division to elect the 51 members would be 21,115 each. The other 35 of the 86 constituencies in Ontario would have an average of 31,325; that is to say the average number of population required to elect a member in each of these 35 constituencies would be almost 50 per cent greater than the number required to elect a member in each of the 51 constituencies. Yet the hon. gentleman told this House that the redistribution was not only fair——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But it was equitable.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The result politically will establish that fact no doubt to the interest of the hon. gentleman, and instead of saying hear, hear, twice, I have no doubt he will repeat it four times. Another table shows the population of the 18 smallest constituencies to be as follows:

Dundas	19,757
Halton	19,545
Prince Edward	17,864

Brant, including 3,750 Indians, has 18,276, but practically speaking for electoral purposes that 18,233 ought to be reduced by the 3,750 of the Indian population, scarcely any of whom, except they are freeholders, would have a vote in the case of an election. Then Brantford has 19,671, Elgin East 17,901, Lanark North 17,236, Lanark South, 19,901, Leeds (Brockville) 18,721, Leeds 19,254, Northumberland West 13,055, Ontario North 18,390, Peterborough East 16,291, Huron East 19,227, Huron West 19,712, Middlesex North 16,419, and Middlesex West 18,079 ; Kingston, 19,788, making a total of 329,243. It will be observed that while West Hastings has about 33,000 of a population and given only one representative, that West Northumberland, which returns a Liberal has only 13,055, and that is called an equitable redistribution of the constituencies. I wonder my hon. friend does not say, hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We left it as the hon. gentleman had laid it down. Many of those seats we did not disturb at all.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why did the hon. gentleman disturb any of them ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We had to take away ten seats, and we disturbed as few as possible.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We shall come to that presently, but the hon. gentleman has so manipulated the redistribution that he has deprived nine out of ten of the Conservative constituencies of their majority, and by the redistribution as the vote was at the last election, he will have five or six of a Liberal majority in the different constituencies which he has manipulated with a minority of the electors, as I shall presently show.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Because of the gerrymander of 1882.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL.—I am glad the hon. gentleman has got some one to help him. My hon. friend can go on with his interruptions just as often as he pleases, it does not make the slightest difference. He can throw in interjections and statements which are totally irrelevant to the point which I am discussing for the moment, but which I shall reach by and by, in order to satisfy the hon. gentleman from Toronto. Now let me look at the eighteen largest constituencies in Ontario, excluding Toronto, and see what is the result. You may just as well throw in 1882 again, because that would be just as relevant as it was when the hon. gentleman interjected those words. Durham has 27,570 ; Lincoln 30,552 ; Norfolk, 29,147 ; Russell, 35,168 ; Thunder Bay and Rainy river, 28,987 ; Victoria and Haliburton—that is Tory, Conservative I would rather call it—the other name is obsolete just now—38,511; Welland, 31,588 ; South Bruce, 31,596 ; Essex North, 28,789 ; Essex South, 29,955 ; Hastings West 32,504 ; Kent West, 31,866 ; Lambton West, 29,723 ; Perth North, 29,259 ; Renfrew North, 27,676 ; Wellington South, 29,526 ; Simcoe East, 29,845 ; London, 37,975, making a total of 560,233. These are eighteen rural constituencies, at least treated as such by this Bill, with the exception of the city of London and the city of Toronto, the latter being so large it would not give an idea of the proper average. These eighteen large constituencies with a population of 560,233 have an average population each of 31,124, and the 18 smallest constituencies with a population of 329,243 have each a population of 18,291 as against the 31,124 of the other average. In other words, the eighteen largest constituencies, not including Toronto, have each a population of seventy-five per cent greater than the populations of each of the smaller constituencies, which of course, is equitable so far as the people are concerned, in the estimation of the Secretary of State and the government of which he is a member. It would be interesting indeed to look at the political complexion of these eighteen smaller constituencies, and in doing so the House will find the object which these gentlemen had in view in the redistribution upon what they termed the county boundaries system : The political complexion of these eighteen smaller contituencies, under the present representation is nine Liberals and nine Conservatives. One would say that is a tolerably equal distribution, but under this proposed Bill, if the vote were the same as at the last election, there would be thirteen Liberals and five Conservatives. Now, I think hon. gentlemen can understand where the equity of this redistribution comes in and the disinterested reasons which hon. gentlemen opposite had for making this division upon assumed county boundary lines. I will treat with that presently. I have already given my opinions as to county boundaries, in a former debate and I shall not hesitate to repeat them now.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—That perhaps explains the work of 1882.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, because these redistributions are not going back, if I may use that expression, to the constituencies as they existed under the redistribution ten years previous. If the hon. gentleman's statement was correct, and I do not suppose he intended to mislead, the constituencies were precisely, before that distribution to which he has referred as they are now; then his deductions would be correct. But such is not the fact, and if he will study the geographical position of the counties previous to the last distribution, and the one of the last distribution he will find my statement is literally correct.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Has the hon. member given us this information as to whether the number of representatives is reduced or whether it remains the same? Those eighteen seats, as they stand, are represented by nine Conservatives and nine Liberals, but under the redistribution, I wanted to know if there is to be the same number of deputies?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Precisely, otherwise the argument would be good for nothing. Under the law as it stands at the present moment these eighteen constituencies are represented equally, nine Conservatives and nine Liberals. Under the proposed redistribution of the same territory it gives the same number of representatives but there will be thirteen Liberals and five Conservatives, provided the electors vote as they did at the last election.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—By adhering to the county boundaries.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not by adhering to county boundaries, I deny the principle of county boundaries.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—By putting the voter in the right place.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I thank the hon. gentleman for having the honesty to give expression to the true reason which has made this redistribution, to put the voters in the right place, and they are so distributed as to put the voters in thirteen constituencies to elect members, not similar to my hon. friend, I hope, but of another class altogether, who will have some little reason in dealing with this subject, and not guided altogether by a narrow partisanship which sometimes characterises senators, and particularly new ones, when they come in here and attempt to direct the older ones and the Senate generally, as to how they should behave themselves, and what they should do and what the constitution is, and a variety of other subjects which unfortunately those poor simple creatures who have such limited experience know very little about. I do not object to the interruption from my hon. friend from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique). I think that was a very pertinent question he asked me, because it enabled me to state the facts as they were previous to the proposed redistribution, and as they are to-day. The figures illustrate the peculiar results which the Redistribution Bill is calculated to bring about. The four smallest constituencies in Ontario and the four largest constituencies, omitting Toronto, will give results to show the unfair character of the Bill. I feel that I am wearying the House, but I am giving these figures for the purpose of putting them on record, so that hereafter when statements are made about gerrymandering by the Liberal party, they may be investigated and verified. Middlesex North has a population of 16,419, Northumberland West 13,055, Peterboro East 16,291, and Prince Edward county 17,864, a total of 63,629, or an average for each constituency of 15,907. In giving the largest constituencies I omit Toronto, because it is claimed that it should not be included in considering populations of this kind affecting rural constituencies. The argument is—and I admit there is some little force in it—that an urban population should not have the same representation proportionately to members as a rural population. That principle has in the past been recognized in the English Redistribution Bills, and has always been recognized by both parties in Canada. The four largest rural constituencies in Ontario are:

Victoria and Haliburton	38,511
Welland	31,588
Russell	31,116
West Hasting	32,504
Total	133,719

An average of 33,429, as against an average of 15,907 in the smallest constituencies. The population of the largest constituencies is twice as great as the population of the smallest constituencies, yet my hon. friend claims that this is an equitable division. Let me now for a few moments turn your attention to other points in connection with this redistribution. Victoria and Haliburton, the largest constituency outside of Toronto, with a rural population of 38,511, is given one representative ; Northumberland, with a total population of 33,550, is given two representatives. But hon. gentlemen may contend that it is according to county boundaries. Haliburton is a provisional county, north of Victoria, and might with great propriety be designated a separate and distinct county ; Northumberland is one county divided into two constituencies. Peterborough is given also two members with a population of 36,995. I come now to what might be called a Grit gerrymander for the purpose of securing Liberal representatives—Middlesex with a population of 54,726, is given three representatives. Why ? If the Secretary of State does not know, perhaps I can tell him. They increased the population of the city of London, which is within the boundaries of Middlesex and gave it one representative. Then they say as London has a larger population than a rural constituency, ergo the country must have three distinct representatives. If there is any equity, reason or justice in this, why is not the same principle applied to Toronto ? Why not give the Yorks four representatives instead of three ? But that would never do. If they adopted that they would weaken their political influence in Ontario, hence they adopted this principle of giving three representatives to 54,000 people in Middlesex, while they give Victoria and Haliburton only one representative to 38,000, and that is called an equitable division of the constituencies in Ontario. Now let us look at it in another light. The smaller constituencies will be found to be Liberal. Northumberland West with a population of 13,055, is Liberal ; Northumberland East with a population of 20,000—7,505 more than the west riding—is Conservative. The four smallest constituencies in Ontario are Liberal, the largest constituencies in population in the whole province are Conservative. Of course that is equitable so far as equity is understood by the Secretary of State. Equity from his point of view consists in so dividing up the constituencies as to give the Liberal party a majority with a smaller number of voters. My hon. friend has referred to that point of view in one or two illustrations he gave in his opening remarks. The county of Peterborough with two constituencies is divided as follows : the West is Conservative, and has a population of 20,704 ; the east riding is Liberal and has a population of 16,299, a difference of 4,405. That is, a Liberal is sent to the Commons to represent a population of 4,405 less than the other portion of the county which sends the Conservative. I am only verifying what I previously stated, that the most populous constituencies—and if it would not be offensive to the Secretary of State, the most intelligent, send Conservatives to the House of Commons, while the other class, the smaller ones, send Liberals to the House. Middlesex has two divisions as follows ; the East has 20,288, and is Conservative. The North is Liberal with a population of 16,419, a difference of 3,809. I could apply the same argument to Essex and to Middlesex. Taking the six constituencies the three Conservatives represent a population of 61,429, and the three Liberals a population of 45,766, a difference of 15,663. That is another evidence of the equitable manner in which this redistribution has been arranged, showing about one-third greater population for the three Conservative members than the three Liberal members. If this be not a direct violation of the old principle advocated by my hon. friend opposite of representation by population, which led almost to a rebellion in this country as between the province of Quebec and the province of Ontario, and which ultimately led to the confederation as it exists to-day, then I fail to understand the principle. Now, another table will give some interesting illustrations of the political character of this division. The table which I am about to read shows the vote given at different polling places, at the election of 1900, and this is the point to which I was about to call the attention of the hon. gentleman opposite when he interrupted me. The vote given at the different polling places in the election of 1900 distributing them in accordance with the proposed gerrymander—I am distributing the vote as given at the last election to show the result that would follow if the same vote be given at the next election under the present Bill. I hope that is sufficiently plain to be understood. The majorities are halved for Hamilton, Ottawa and West Toronto ; that is because each of those constituencies sent two representatives and consequently each elector had two votes. Every doubtful point has been given in favour of the ministerial lists. Toronto is treated as a unit as the polling divisions cannot well be separated. The Conservative majority would be as follows :—

Carleton	1,147
Dufferin	1,106
Dundas	258
Durham	251
Elgin, South	70
Frontenac	595
Grenville	552
Grey, East	792
Halton	146
Hamilton, East	422
Hamilton, West	322
Hastings, West	1,650

The latter is where I live. I take it for granted that is a good majority.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A good solid vote there.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—A good solid rural constituency, men of stamina and character, physically, intellectually, morally and otherwise.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have left it unimpaired.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Their characters are unimpaired.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have left the constituency unimpaired. You have two seats in Hastings and you have nothing to complain of.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not complaining of that. I am showing the effect of the present Redistribution Bill, and I am showing the House that if the votes at the next election are the same as they were at the last what the Conservative majority will be. Wait until we get the result and the hon. gentleman may not smile so blandly as he does at the present moment. Then the other figures are :

Lambton, East	276
Lanark, South	781
Leeds	589
Lennox and Addington	231
Lincoln	371
Middlesex, East	302
Muskoka	844
Nipissing	964
Northumberland, East	366
Ottawa	239
Parry Sound	37
Peel	193
Perth, North	91
Peterborough, West	320
Prince Edward	68
Simcoe, South	489
Simcoe, East	34
Stormont	258
Toronto (five constituencies)	4,616
Victoria and Haliburton	567
Waterloo, North	1,188
York, South	754

Making a total Conservative majority in each of the constituencies to which I have called attention of 20,889 and would return thirty-eight Conservative members. Now turn to the Liberal constituencies and see what the result would be. The figures are as follows :

Liberal Majorities.

Algoma, East	249
Algoma, West	30
Brant	513
Brantford	276
Brockville	5
Bruce, South	165
Bruce, North	423
Elgin, West	304
Essex, North	477
Essex, South	266
Glengarry	614
Grey, North	233
Grey, South	194
Haldimand	197
Hastings, East	81
Huron, East	213
Huron, South	4
Huron, West	136
Kent, East	339
Kent, West	207
Kingston	150
Lambton West	116
Lanark, North	869
London	353
Middlesex, North	181
Middlesex, West	422
Norfolk	245
Northumberland, West	135
Ontario, North	81
Ontario, South	251
Ottawa	13
Oxford, North	1,389
Oxford, South	605
Perth, South	235
Peterborough, East	307
Prescott	419
Renfrew, North	132
Renfrew, South	353
Russell	566
Simcoe, North	507
Thunder Bay and R R	80
Waterloo, South	556
Welland	413
Wellington, North	234
Wellington, South	238
Wentworth	344
York, Centre	303
York, North	545
	14,968

Making a total of 14,968 Liberal majorities as against 20,889 Conservative majority, and yet this equal number of constituencies would return 48 Liberal members, while the 20,889 would only return 38 Conservative members, giving the Liberal majority by these two tables, calculating the votes as cast at the last election and applying them to the redistribution now proposed will give with the difference in favour of the Conservatives of about 6,000 inhabitants—a Grit majority of 10. I hope my hon. friend thinks that is equitable. And further than that, the population in these constituencies give the Conservatives a majority in the province of 5,921 of the voters, while the Liberals according to the redistribution would have ten majority of the representatives in the House of Commons. And that is equitable in the estimation of my hon. friend opposite. Here we see the result which the gerrymander is intended to produce. There is a majority of Conservative votes, amounting to nearly 6,000 throughout the province which should return a majority of at least 15 Conservative representatives, instead of which there will be a majority of ten Liberal members, and the average majorities of the Conservatives elected is 550 against an average of the Liberals of 312. The Bill is carefully arranged so that a Conservative vote shall have less effect than a Liberal vote in electing a representative. It requires a majority of 75 per cent greater to elect a Conservative than a Liberal under the present redistribution, and this is a fair estimate of the result of the present gerrymander if such I may call it? The shaping of the constituencies so that a majority of electors may return a majority of members, thus defeating the very first object of an appeal to the electorate to choose men to represent them in parliament. Yet we are told by the declarations of the premier in introducing this measure that it is upon a fair and equitable basis, and we are told with a good deal of blandness and apparent sincerity by the hon. gentleman who is sitting opposite me that this is a fair and equitable Bill. Look at it, analyse these figures and see what the result is. If you look at them from the figures which I have given you will find that the results are as follows:—There are 46 ridings, with a population of 966,178, which is 123,295 less than half the population of Ontario which give to the Liberals six majority. Add the four ridings, the smallest, with a population of 104,134, making a total of 1,070,312, less than half of the population by 21,161, would elect 14 majority of Liberals out of the 86 members, notwithstanding they would have nearly 22,000 of a population less than those on the other side. The average population to elect 50 members is 21,406 and the average population to elect 36 members is 30,906, over 40 per cent greater than the population required to elect 50 members. That is another evidence of the equitable character of this Bill. Let me give another example. Eighteen of the smallest ridings have a population of 329,243; eighteen of the largest, not including Toronto, have a population of 560,233, a difference in favour of the smallest constituency of 130,990, and the average of the smallest is about 18,290, and the average of the largest is 31,124, being no less than 12,834 greater than what would be represented by a Liberal in a smaller constituency. The 18 smaller constituencies under the present law would elect 9 Conservatives and 9 Liberals. Under the proposed redistribution, as I have explained, it would elect only 5 Conservatives and 13 Liberals. Another evidence of the equity of the redistribution. The population of the four smaller ridings is 64,049. The four largest, not including Toronto, is 135,767. The average of the four smallest is 16,039, and the average of the four largest is 33,941, the four smallest not half the population of the four largest and the largest rural ridings in Ontario, Victoria and Haliburton, with a population of 38,511, elects one Conservative. The smallest constituency, Northumberland, with a population of only 13,055 elects a Liberal. Hence the 38,000 constituency of Victoria and Haliburton is retained with that number to elect one Conservative, while West Northumberland is retained with the 13,000 odd to elect a Liberal. We can easily understand why this division has been made from the facts as represented by the figures. I need not refer again to the premier's introductory remarks where he laid down such equitable principles which every one having any sense of fair-play would accept and the only pity is that it was not carried out. Let me, for the edification particularly of my hon. friend from Toronto, who interrupted me with a question as to the effect of the 1882 redistribution. My hon. friend opposite led in the attack by firing off the first shot, and then my hon. friend from Toronto came to his assistance and reiterated the same statement.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not know if that is approval of what I say, or approval of the hon. gentleman's own objection. I give the latter interpretation to that. I think that is what he means, because he certainly would not approve of anything I said and it is quite right and proper that he should cheer his own declarations showing the high appreciation which he has of himself. Now, the result of the elections that took place after this 'horrid monstrous, infamous'—If I had only taken note of the different adjectives that have been used in reference to that redistribution I would give them for the edification of those who have not paid as much attention to the matter as I have.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The result will not give the true test of the rascality.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How does the hon. gentleman know ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Because I know what the result has been. Some of the people were so indignant at the outrage practised on them and the interference with their rights that they rebelled against being hived together as Tories or Grits, and the result was not as bad as the attempt that was practised on that province.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Declamation is not argument : howling to an audience on the stump is not giving facts. I have heard gentlemen like the hon. gentleman who has interrupted me, before. I have heard them on the stump, I have heard them in the House of Commons, and I have heard them in very many places. If the hon. gentleman will give us facts and figures, to prove his statements, I shall consider them, but he will excuse me if I decline to accept his mere declamation for the purpose of effect, the mere reiteration of what has been said scores and scores of times by men like himself, who know nothing of the subject about which they are talking. Now, let us see what part of the declaration of the hon. gentleman is justified by the result—whether the statement he has made that the people became so indignant that they revolted against the redistribution is correct. Let us take the returns prior to that time, and compare them with the result of the election under that redistribution. I shall not be at all offended if my hon. friend hits back as hard as he likes : I have experienced a good deal of that kind of attack, and I am quite willing to meet it in the future. I shall try to do it as goodnaturedly and blandly as possible, and with less declamation than the hon. gentleman has used. Let us see the effect of the redistribution. I want the hon. Secretary of State, who knows something about it, to pay attention to the statement I am about to make, not because I expect to convey any information to him but in order that he may set me right if I fall into error. That is what I would like, and not leave it to his lieutenant from Quebec, who has not given the subject the same attention as the hon. gentleman has himself. The constituencies to which I shall call attention are those which were particularly changed, altered, and amended, and not by county boundaries. Some of them were left just as they had been. Bothwell in 1878 returned one Liberal and in 1882 it returned one Liberal. Brant in 1878 elected two Liberals and in 1882, two Liberals. Bruce, prior to the redistribution had two members : in 1882 it was given three members. Before the redistribution in 1878, the county sent to this parliament one Conservative and one Liberal: in 1882 it sent one Conservative and two Liberals. That was one result of this iniquitous gerrymander. Cardwell had existed since confederation, if my memory serves me correctly. It sent one Conservative to parliament in 1878 and in 1882, it still sent one Conservative. The county of Elgin consisted of two ridings in 1878 and sent one Conservative and one Liberal to this parliament : but in 1882, under the so-called gerrymander it sent two Liberals and no Conservative. Were these people so horrified by this redistribution that it resulted in giving additional strength to the Conservative party ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Was that a case of a hive ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Well, if my hon. friend knows as little about it as he does of what he has been talking about in the past he should not interrupt me. The county of Grey in 1878 was represented in this parliament by three Conservatives, and in 1882, under the gerrymander, that we hear so much about, it sent only one Conservative and two Liberals. That was another evidence of what is termed the iniquity of that redistribution. The county of Haldimand in 1878 was represented by one Liberal, and in 1882 it continued to send one Liberal. The county of Huron in 1878 sent one Conservative and two Liberals, and in 1882 it sent one Conservative and two Liberals—precisely the same. The county of Kent, in 1878 sent one Conservative, and in 1882 it sent one Conservative. The county of Lambton formerly had one member, but in 1882 it was given two members. In 1878 it sent one Liberal to this parliament and in 1882, after the gerrymander, it sent two Liberals. That is another evidence of the iniquitous gerrymander to which the hon. gentleman has so often referred. The county of Lincoln in 1878 sent one Conservatice, and in 1882 it sent one Conservative. The county of Middlesex in 1878 sent two Conservatives, and one Liberal, to this parliament, and in 1882, after this very unjust measure as it was termed by hon. gentlemen opposite, it sent two Conservatives and two Liberals. The riding of Monck sent one Conservative in 1878 and in 1882 it sent one Conservative. Muskoka in 1878 sent one Liberal and in 1882 it sent a Conservative. I do not know whether I pointed out in my previous remarks, but I did upon a former occasion, that when the redistribution took place, Muskoka had a population of between eight and nine thousand, but it was known to the government at the time, that that being a portion of Ontario which was rapidly growing, although the disproportion of population was apparently great, it was given a representative for the eight thousand, and before the next redistribution took place it was large enough—some eighteen or twenty thousand, and so large has that section now grown that my hon. friends opposite are giving it two representatives and very properly so. The county of Norfolk in 1878 sent one Conservative and one Liberal. In 1882 they sent two Liberals instead of one Conservative and one Liberal. The county of Ontario in 1878 sent two Liberals and in 1882 after it was given three ridings instead of two, it sent three Liberals to this parliament. The county of Oxford in 1878 sent two Liberals, and in 1882 it also sent two Liberals. The county of Peel in 1878 sent one Conservative, but under the redistribution it sent a Liberal in 1882, and continued to send a Liberal until the last election when it was carried by a Conservative. The county of Simcoe in 1878 sent to this House two Conservatives and in 1882 that old Conservative county continued to send two Conservatives, but along with them, having been given three representatives, one Liberal. The county of Welland sent a Conservative to parliament in 1878, and also sent a Conservative in 1882. In 1878 two Conservatives and one Liberal came from Wellington, and in 1882 the order was reversed, they sent one Conservative and two Liberals. Wentworth, in 1878, sent two Liberals, and in 1882 two Liberals also. The county of York in 1878 sent one Conservative and two Liberals, and in 1882 it sent one Conservative and two Liberals. The result, therefore, in Western Ontario, of the redistribution of 1882, resulted in Liberal gains of 11, and of Conservative gains of one, or a net gain to the Liberals of ten members, and yet this is the horrid and iniquitous gerrymander to which my hon. friends have called attention. I have given these figures in answer to the many charges which have been so constantly made as to the result of the elections after the redistribution of 1882, and I do not think any reasonable and honest man looking at these figures can say it was an unfair redistribution. The figures I have given cannat be contradicted. There are the records to which you can refer and ascertain whether the statements I have made, and the figures I have given are correct or not. If it is shown I am incorrect I shall be very glad to make the corrections, as is the duty of every honest man to do in discussing a question of this kind. I think I have clearly shown, though it may be wearying to some hon. gentlemen to have listened to me, what the effects of the Redistribution Bill in 1882 were. I have also pointed out by facts and figures that provided the votes should be the same at the election as they were at the last election, it will be seen that if ever there was an attempt to hive, as one hon. gentleman used the expression just now, the different constituencies, it is done in this Bill, under the plea and pretense of adhering to county boundaries.

Now if representation by population is to be considered in any respect by the electors of this country, then county boundaries is a misnomer. I could understand the theory of county boundaries very well when applied to elections in the different provinces. There it might have some force, because the local legislatures have the exclusive jurisdiction of dealing with the municipalities, the roads, the bridges, the education and everything pertaining to municipalities, and there may be and is no doubt a community of interest in each municipality, when we are considering the representation in the local House, which does not apply in any way to the representatives in the House of Commons. What difference does it make whether the lines in a district lie alongside of another township, if he has to vote upon any great question that is before the country—say the question of national policy or protection or free trade —whether he lives on one side of the line of the county or the other side of the line from where he votes? He votes upon a principle not affecting any local interest, but upon a great fiscal principle affecting the whole Dominion, and if you divide the population equitably as it ought to be divided, then you give a fair expression of opinion through its representatives in the House of parliament. If, however, 13,000 people can send a representative to the House of Commons to vote upon a question of that kind affecting the whole Dominion, while the county lying nearly to the rear of it, Victoria and Haliburton, with a population of 38,000 can only have the same voice in the administration of the affairs as the 13,000 people living in the county to the south, that is one reason why I am fully in accord with the doctrine held by Sir John Macdonald in the latter portion of his life, when he laid down the principle of the redistribution in 1882, and still further in 1891, of making the basis of the redistribution according to the population, with county boundaries as far as practicable, as a secondary consideration. The voters' list is prepared for one township the same as it is for another. What difference does it make whether a man votes in one or the other? The hon. gentleman told us in the opening of his address, that there are two or three illustrations of this character—our own county of Carleton and the county of Russell are precisely in that position. Certain of the townships belonging to Carleton are in Russell for electoral purposes, and yet he gives the excuse for not interfering with them that that condition has existed for a long time. If the principle of county boundaries were as sacred as the hon. gentleman has described it, why not carry it out in Carleton? They have given Osgoode and the adjoining township for electoral purposes to the county of Russell; had they replaced those townships in Carleton they would have been obliged to give Carleton two representatives and they knew what the result of that would be. It is an overwhelmingly Conservative county, and so the government forego the sacred principle of county boundaries and leave Russell and Carleton as they have been for years and years past. I ought to apologize for the length of time I have occupied the attention of the House to-night, but I felt in duty bound to lay these facts clearly and distinctly before the Senate for reference in the future when we want to discuss questions of this kind, and not because I expect to influence those who have made up their minds to support the Bill in its present shape.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. member has entered into details to show us the result of the redistribution of 1882. As I am unable to follow him closely for want of knowledge of the province of Ontario, I would be very much interested in having the opinion of the hon. member as to whether he considers the redistribution of 1882 was a fair redistribution.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The redistribution of 1882 was not made on the basis of adhering to county boundaries; but on the basis of representation by population, and upon that basis it was as fair as it could be made under the circumstances. There were differences of population in some few cases which could not well be avoided. I do not pretend to say that in a redistribution of a province any government could make every constituency exactly alike. That is impossible, but taking population as the basis, I do not hesitate to say, having had something to do with it, that that representation was as equitable as it could have been made, as I could show by quoting the facts and figures I presented at that time in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. FROST—Why did the late Dalton McCarthy, who was a very ardent Conservative in 1882, express his very great regret in 1897 for having taken part in the redistribution of 1882 ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I exceedingly regret that Dalton McCarthy is not here to answer the question himself. He never took me into his confidence to the extent of explaining his conversion. The hon. gentleman might just as well ask me why Dalton McCarthy changed his opinion on the subject of the National Policy of which my hon. friend is a great admirer, and by which he greatly benefits. Dalton McCarthy was a most talented man and gave more attention to the question of the tariff than most members. While he accused some of his old colleagues of having gone back on their principles I had the satisfaction of knowing that on the public platform he stated that he had no such charge to make against the member for North Hastings. His change of opinion on the subject of the redistribution, if he ever did change it, may have been for the same reason that he changed his opinion on the other subject. He has gone to his last reward, and I am not going to impute motives to him. I could give reasons which probably would satisfy most of those who listen to me, but I decline to do so under the circumstances.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—I feel that the Redistribution Bill, as far as the island of Cape Breton is concerned, has done us an injustice. Cape Breton should have been left as it was with five representatives in the House of Commons. If those who were entrusted with the interest of Nova Scotia had followed precedent, the representation from Cape Breton would not have been touched, but, unfortunately for that island, it had no friends in the House of Commons powerful enough to have justice done. The representatives of the island in the other House, evidently were not able to influence the cabinet on that question. If we had a representative from eastern Nova Scotia or the island of Cape Breton in the cabinet or an influential cabinet Minister such as we had in 1872 in Sir Charles Tupper, our representation would not have been reduced from five to four. The first redistribution after confederation was in 1872. At that time Nova Scotia got an increase of two members, and one of them was allotted to Cape Breton. That representation was retained for over thirty years. The conditions existing at that time justified the government in allotting a second member to the island. Owing to the impetus the coal industry of that island had received for some few years previous to that date, the population increased largely. It was only in 1860 that the monopoly held by the General Mining Company of London was broken. Population flowed in, industries commenced, and Sir Charles Tupper, a great friend of Cape Breton at that time and ever since, allotted the second member to the county of Cape Breton. The basis of population then did not actually justify that, but the basis of population then and the basis of population compared, ought to justify this parliament in continuing the old representation. I was looking at the census just now. I had not done so until this evening. I find by comparing the census of 1901 with the census of 1871, that Cape Breton ought to retain its representation. The unit of representation for the island in 1872 was about 15,000. The total population of the island at that time was something like 75,000 ; to-day it is over 100,000, and it had nearly reached 100,000 when the census of 1901 was taken. I have no hesitation in saying that the population of the island is large enough, with the present unit to give it a representation of five members. Had the same principle that has been applied to the North-west Territories, been applied to the island of Cape Breton its representation in the House of Commons would not have been reduced. The new settlers of the North-west set a preference to the Cape Breton people. Nova Scotia has lost two members under the census of 1901. One member has been taken from the county of Pictou. If the government were disposed to do the same justice to the island that the Conservative party did in 1872, they would not have taken the second member from Cape Breton, but would have annexed two of the Nova Scotia counties and given them one representative. Pictou county with a population of about 32,000 has lost one member. If they had annexed Antigonish and Guysboro the population of the united counties would not have been as large as the county of Pictou, and Cape Breton Island could have been left with five members, but that would never do; they would have lost one Liberal member if they had done that. I suppose they looked all over the province and found the same condition existing. They went to Cape Breton and said: 'We must reduce the representation of the island: it is true we have all Liberals from Cape Breton to-day, but we cannot trust them and we must make ourselves safe in the island.' Even then if they had followed the principle of county boundaries, they could easily have settled the matter for Cape Breton, by joining the counties of Victoria and Richmond. Victoria has a population of a little over 10,000, Richmond a little over 13,000 making less than 24,000 for the two. That would have been a fair unit of representation. They might have done that and left Cape Breton county as it was, but that would not do. They were afraid that the Liberals of Richmond would overcome the electors of Victoria, or vice versa. I read also in the newspapers and reports of the proceedings in the other House, that Mr. Fielding said there were very peculiar reasons why Victoria county should not be annexed to Richmond. I do not know what the peculiar reasons were: he did not explain them, and I presume he did not indicate what the reasons were to his colleagues in this House. I am therefore left to surmise what the peculiar reasons were. Perhaps also he had peculiar reasons for dividing the county of Cape Breton as he divided it. He divided it in a very peculiar way. His reasons for doing so I do not know, but I will surmise in the same way as I surmised what his peculiar reasons were in reference to Richmond and Victoria.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—What would the hon. gentleman do with the county of Inverness? Does it not lie between the two counties?

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—Inverness has a population to justify it in maintaining its present representation in parliament. It is progressing by leaps and bounds in wealth and population, and if the county of Inverness got its rights, the island would have five representatives in the House of Commons. It no more lies between Richmond and Victoria than does a portion of Bras d'Or lake.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—Does not the county of Inverness lie between those two counties that the hon. gentleman proposes to unite?

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—Not to prevent their union for federal elections.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—Yes.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—The county of Inverness extends along the Strait of Canso, and northward along the west coast of the island. The county of Richmond is on the Atlantic ocean on the south, and Victoria is on the Atlantic ocean on the northeast. The Bras d'Or Lake comes between the two counties, but that should not prevent the union of those two counties. I have heard to-night from the leader of the opposition that there is a county in the province of Ontario 155 miles in length. Richmond and Victoria from end to end is not anything like that—not more than three-fourths that length. I have seen in the papers that there is a county in the province of Ontario resembling the rim of a circle, and another county four hundred yards wide and six miles long and those who favour such should not object to the union of Richmond and Victoria. It is true, a large part of the county of Victoria is not settled. The settlements are along the eastern sea-coast. Richmond is settled all round, and for federal election purposes there would be no necessity to disturb any existing arrangement. But it would never do to unite those counties; the Liberals would certainly lose one member, and probably two members. I am not sure that they will not lose the whole island, notwithstanding the way they have divided it. If they had divided the county of Cape Breton as its geographical position suggests they should, they would have run a straight line from the head of East Bay to the head of Sydney Harbour, a distance of about ten miles. But that would not suit party interests. They went to the north of that line and took a section containing one thousand people and annexed it to the south riding where there was already a population of 34,000. I wonder if their object was to give the south riding a good claim for an additional member, as the Secretary of State has stated that that was a principle settled upon in the committee of the other House, that counties with 36,000 should have two members. I cannot find any other reason for giving one riding over 35,000 and the other 24,000, unless they had some 'very peculiar reasons' such as they had for not interfering with Richmond county. I wish Mr. Fielding had made known what those 'peculiar reasons' were. We ought to have them before this Bill passes. I have no doubt a great many in Cape Breton and Richmond counties will surmise what those 'peculiar reasons' are.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Perhaps the hon. Secretary of State can tell us.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—They might have left Cape Breton county as it was, in view of its great industrial enterprises and rapidly increasing population. The great coal mines, old and new, and the iron and steel industries are attracting wealth and population to that county and it has a fair claim to have two representatives continued in the House of Commons. The North-west Territories have been given ten representatives, although their population at the last census did not exceed 159,000. On that basis they would be entitled to not more than six or seven, but the government recognized the fact that population is pouring into the prairie country, and that they will be entitled to more than ten members before the next census. I do not find fault with that, but I think the government might have extended the same generous treatment to Cape Breton, one of the oldest parts of the Dominion, and with equal justice left its representation as it was fixed thirty-five years ago. I feel that an injustice has been done to Cape Breton, and I protest against it. Cape Breton has been deprived of a representative for political reasons, because, from a party point of view, it was not thought advisable to join Richmond and Victoria. This would lose them one Liberal member.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did not hear any political reasons urged in the debate in the other House. I never heard that reason advanced before.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—The hon. gentleman hears it now. We have no member in that House friendly enough to Cape Breton to protest against the injustice because of submission to party interests. The people of the island want fair representation in the House of Commons. They are entitled to their legitimate influence just as much as other parts of Canada, and I think, owing to their large industries, they have special claims to their full representation of five members.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We could not avoid taking two members from Nova Scotia under the British North America Act.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—That is true, but they might have done it in a more equitable way. They might have joined Antigonish and Guysboro' counties, and the united counties would then have had less population than either Pictou or Cumberland, and I think, Lunenburg, and it would have left Nova Scotia in as good a position as it occupies to-day. In 1872, when Cape Breton got its five members, the representation was based on a unit of 15,000, though the unit for the whole Dominion was, at that time, 18,000. If we were accorded fair treatment now as we were then by a Conservative government we would retain our five members. Of course, it is useless for me, or for anybody, to protest because the Bill will pass without change, but I protest, with all my might, against this injustice to the island of Cape Breton.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—In New Brunswick we have much greater differences in population than any the hon. gentleman has complained of in his province. Restigouche, with a population of only 12,000, is given one representative, while Westmoreland, with 43,000 people, has but one member, yet we are satisfied.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear. No doubt the hon. gentleman is satisfied.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—I am sure if the hon. gentleman from Cape Breton were entrusted with the redistribution of constituencies, he would not join the two counties he has mentioned—Richmond and Victoria. He knows the difficulties in the way of such a change. Not only are the two counties separated by land and water, but the people are of different origins. In one county they are of Highland Scotch descent and speak Gaelic; in the other they are French and speak the French language. They do not know each other, and I am sure the hon. gentleman would not put them together in one constituency.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—Surely the hon. gentleman does not mean to say that there are no Highland Scotch in Richmond ? They are represented in the House of Commons by a Highlander who speaks Gaelic, English and I believe French.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—The French language is used in one county and Gaelic in the other, and the two counties are separated by large areas of land and water.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—The population of both counties speak English as well as Gaelic and English as well as French, and are as intelligent and broad minded as the population of any constituency in the Dominion. And English is generally spoken in both counties.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—The hon. Secretary of State, having alluded to Prince Edward Island in his introductory remarks, I should like to show the position in which that province is placed under this Bill. We find the representation of our island has been reduced to four members, instead of the six that we had when we entered the confederation. Now, the principle on which the representation has been provided for in the different districts of the Dominion has been on the basis of population. That is not the basis on which Prince Edward Island entered confederation. It was protested against by the people of Prince Edward Island from the very outset. They declined to enter into confederation upon the basis of representation in the House of Commons by population. A deputation was sent from Prince Edward Island, after confederation had been formed, to the Dominion of Canada to arrange terms on which the island would enter the confederation. The commissioners from Prince Edward Island came to Ottawa and negotiated with the government of the day for terms on which the island would be admitted a province, and the point on which those negotiations were protracted and on which they held out from day to day, was the representation of the province in the House of Commons. The population of Prince Edward Island at that time was about 94,000, which would entitle them at the utmost to not more than five members. They held out from day to day for a representation of six, and they would not consent to the terms that were proposed unless they had a representation of six members in the House of Commons. That point was finally conceded, and the terms of confederation were drawn up. It would probably detain the House too long to go through the whole of those terms, but one of the conditions is as follows :

That the provisions in the aforesaid British North America Act, 1867, should, except those parts thereof which are in terms made or by reasonable intentment may be held to be specially applicable to and only affect one and not the whole of the provinces now comprising the Dominion, and except so far as the same may be varied by these resolutions, be applicable to Prince Edward Island in the same way and to the like extent as they apply to the other provinces of the Dominion, and as if the colony of Prince Edward Island had been one of the provinces originally united by this Act.

Now, hon. gentlemen will observe that the terms on which Prince Edward Island entered were different from those that are set forth in the terms on which the four provinces originally constituting the Dominion entered into confederation, hence this provision in the terms with Prince Edward Island sets out specifically that where the terms were varied with respect to the interests of that province, they were not to be governed by the provisions of the British North America Act, so far as representation by population was concerned. It was understood thoroughly at the time, I believe, between all persons who were concerned in drawing up those terms, that the representation of Prince Edward Island was to continue and not to diminish below the number of six representatives in parliament, and the British North America Act I believe contemplates that, and I have very good authority for the statement that there is no provision for diminishing or decreasing the representation granted originally to that province. In the debates of the House of Commons, in the session of 1892, volume two, Mr. D'Alton McCarthy, who was one of the leading legal minds of the Dominion, in speaking on this question, as to the powers of parliament, spoke as follows :—

We cannot, for instance, abolish our Senate. It is said that it is curious that we have not the same powers as the local bodies. They can, and they have abolished their second

Chamber, but we have no such authority. We cannot decrease the number of members in this House. The local legislatures can. We can, by a special provision, increase the number of members, but it is because express provision is made for that purpose. I take it that we cannot alter our quorum. It is 20, and it must remain 20. It is one of the fixed lines of the constitution, so far as regards this House. That being so, we have to look and see within those various clauses what our powers are as to the alteration of the House of Commons. Clause 40 says :—

Until the parliament of Canada otherwise provides, Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick shall, for the purposes of the election of members to serve in the House of Commons, be divided into electoral divisions as follows :

Until it otherwise provides : There is no express power, it will be seen, there, but there is implied power, because 'until the parliament of Canada otherwise provides' plainly imports that we may provide otherwise, and therefore, as my hon. friend from Bothwell (Hon. Mr. Mills) very properly puts it, that standing alone would give us power to increase or decrease, to alter the distribution of seats, and in fact would give us almost unlimited power, but notwithstanding that, it is plain that we cannot decrease the number of our members. We can increase the number, but why ? Because by another clause there is power given us to increase. Read clause 40 and 52 together. Clause 52 says :—

The number of members of the House of Commons may be from time to time increased by the parliament of Canada, provided the proportion of representation of the provinces prescribed by this Act is not thereby disturbed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear. That is the vital point.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—Then Mr. McCarthy continues :

If it was not for clause 52, we would have the power not only to increase, but to decrease, but as clause 53 merely gives us power to increase, it is plain that the implied authority which would have arisen under clause 40, is limited by the power and authority merely to increase. So, in dealing with the question of redistribution, if there was nothing to be found but the power to redistribute given in clause 40, there would be power to do as we thought fit in regard to that, but the Act goes to say that :

On the completion of the census in the year 1871, and of each subsequent decennial census, the representation of the four provinces shall be readjusted by such authority, in such a manner, and from such time as the parliament of Canada from time to time provides, subject and according to the following rules.

We get here the explanation of the power which is given to us by clause 40. We are not at liberty, therefore, to imply more than is expressed, especially when that would be at variance with the expressed authority given. I have looked into some of the best constitutional works on that subject, and this is a question which has engaged the best constitutional writers on the other side of the line, because their powers are largely implied, though perhaps they may be said to some extent to be expressed, because it is provided that any power necessary and convenient for the exercise of the powers conferred is to be exercised, but all the authorities agree that that provision is unnecessary. It appears to me, though on this matter I suppose it is natural that the House should take the law from my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, that it will be found that the view put forward by the hon. member for Queen's (Hon. Mr. Davies) is the correct one. It is, of course, very extraordinary that the late Sir John Macdonald, who was present at the London Conference, and other gentlemen on he floor of parlialiament, failed to take note of this, in 1872, and that it was never suggested by the fathers of confederation and other able and distinguished men in the House, that this was the true reading. Nevertheless we cannot by taking power to ourselves in 1872 or 1882, enlarge our jurisdiction. Is it to be found in this Act ? We have no inherent authority. We are a statutory parliament with defined powers, and within the four corners of our charter we must look for authority to legislate as we propose.

That is the opinion of a celebrated legal mind on this very point.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—When was that speech made ?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—1892. Now, that question has been submitted to the Supreme Court of the Dominion, and they have given a decision on the point. That decision has not been accepted by the people of Prince Edward Island or by the government. The government of that province has taken steps to appeal the case to the Privy Council in order to have the point decided by the highest authority in the realm. Thus I hold that it was scarcely fair for the federal government to reduce the representation below what it was before this Bill was introduced, while that question was still under consideration and undecided by the highest authorities to which the case can be referred. There are a great many other points in connection with this subject which would occupy too much time altogether to go into to-night ; but these are succinctly the main points in connection with it. There are very many other points that were brought forward by the gentleman who presented our case before the Supreme Court of Canada, and besides the points that were brought forward there were a good many others that were not thought of at that time. The more the British North America Act is considered in connection with this question of representation the clearer it will be found are the claims which our province has to retain the original number of representatives as accorded to it by the terms of confederation made in 1871.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Why was it that in 1892 the island did not protest against it ? If my recollection is not at fault I heard no protest then when the reduction took place, representation was reduced from six to five, and it was acquiesced in.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—It is quite true there was no protest made in the House at that time, but if we had had at that time the legal opinions and legal authority which has since been brought to bear on the British North America Act, there is not the least doubt that we would have retained at that time the six members who were originally allowed to the province. The province being represented, in the Senate at any rate, by gentlemen who are not versed in legal questions it would be rather presumptuous on our part perhaps to put forward, at that time, our own views on the subject, when we were not fortified by the opinions that we have since had from legal minds on this important question. The opinion was entertained, even at that time, that we were entitled to six members, and that there should be no decrease, no diminution in our representation. There is no such word as diminution mentioned in the British North America Act or in the terms upon which our province entered confederation, and I hold we are, as we claim, still entitled to our six representatives, and we will not give up our claim until that case is finally decided in the highest tribunal in the empire.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I wonder why the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island will not accept the principle of representation by population. Each man is worth as much in the west as in the east, in the north as in the south. Of course this is independent of the legal aspect of the case which has been passed upon by the Supreme Court. I do not rise to make any long speech on this question except to congratulate the hon. leader of the opposition upon the courage he displayed in standing up before his colleagues in this House and defending the work for which he is responsible —the gerrymanders of 1882 and 1892. The hon. gentleman has dilated upon the fact that if the counties are brought back to their lines as provided for in the present Bill the vote will be such and such in a certain number of counties, and he has compared it with the returns of the last election and the election of 1882. This is to my mind beside the question. The Liberal party has not undertaken to harm the Conservative party in this country. The Liberal party did not set out to frame and carve out for itself a majority throughout the Dominion from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The Liberal party declared before 1896,-from the moment that this gerrymander of 1882 was imposed upon the country, that it would struggle to restore county boundary lines. The Liberal party has never budged from this affirmation of principle. This is the principe which the Liberal party attempted to carry out three years ago, and which is embodied in the present Bill. In 1896 the people who were more especially appealed to on this score sanctioned the principle. In the last election the Liberal party again complained of the redistribution in 1882 and 1892, but this Chamber composed of supposed independent-minded gentlemen thought three years ago that as the dice had been loaded in 1882 and 1892 it would be good enough for use in the election of 1900. It has continued its work in favour of the Conservative party. The hon. gentleman may explain as he pleases about the results of 1882, but we all know what took place behind the screen. The hon. gentleman's friends decided to disregard county boundaries and they spread the map before them on the table and decided to play with the municipalities according to their own free tyrannical will, and to arrange the constituencies in Ontario so as to 'hive the Grits' in certain places and distribute the number of the Conservatives in such a way as to secure as large a representation in the House of Commons as they could. I quite understand the result of 1882 was not exactly up to the expectations of the hon. gentleman, yet it did an injury to the Liberal party in that year, and did a still greater injury in the elections of 1887. I know by simply looking at the map of Ontario what was attempted. The Conservative party made no attempt at hiding the fact ; they simply looked at the majorities given by each municipality, and arranged the constituencies so as to elect as large a Conservative representation in the House of Commons as they possibly could by gerrymandering the municipalities.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—May I ask my hon. friend if he could ascertain all that from looking at the map ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman is my senior, and was a politician in 1882. I was in politics that year, and no man, even outside of Ontario, could help looking at the work which was being done by the Conservative party and which was carried out by the Conservative party, in spite of the protests of the opposition, without seeing why it was done. It was glaring. Another gerrymander quite as bad was attempted upon the province of Quebec in 1892, but there was another Conservative leader in the House of Commons who could not exactly accommodate his conscience to that kind of medicine that was served to the Liberal party of Ontario, and who abandoned that attempted gerrymander on a large scale which was being practised on the province of Quebec. Yet a few changes were made in the province of Quebec. A municipality was taken from the county of Bagot, a municipality giving 200 of a majority to the Liberal party, and was thrust into the neighbouring county of Rouville, not to bring about an equilibrium between the respective populations, but to secure the county of Bagot for the Conservative party from whose fingers it was slipping. The same thing was done in Missisquoi. The Liberal parish of Notre Dame was thrown into the Liberal county of Iberville and St. Johns, from which the Conservative municipality of Lacolle was taken and thrown into Missisquoi in order to make this county sure for the Tories. It did not work, and instead of giving a majority to the Conservatives Lacolle gave a majority of 117 for the Liberals, as a protest against this kind of work. We of the Liberal party could have knifed the Conservative party in the back in this redistribution, but we did not do it. We restored the county boundaries in Ontario, and we offered three years ago to the Conservative party of the Dominion in dividing the large counties that had to be divided into two or three constituencies, to allow it to be done by a commission of judges. The Tory majority of this Chamber refused the offer made by the Liberal party and consequently we decided to divide those counties ourselves. It was done by a committee of the House where the Conservative party had a minority representation, and where they could be heard, and I have yet to hear either in this Chamber or in the other what real grievance the Conservative party have against this Bill. We only wish that the Conservative party had dealt the same measure of justice to the Liberal party of Canada in 1882 and 1892. Of course they thought they were the supreme governors of this country by divine right, and they wanted to protect themselves per fas aut nefas against a change of public opinion. To-day we are bringing in a redistribution Bill, and we can look our opponents straight in the eyes and tell them as honest men we have not done badly by them, and we can go before the people at the elections with no regret for anything we have done. We have done justice to the Conservative party, although they refused to give us justice in 1882 and 1892. If the Liberal party had so wished it could have wiped out nearly every Conservative majority in the province of Quebec. It would have been, for instance, child's play to swamp Mr. Monk in Jacques Cartier. Jacques Cartier is a small county ; it adjoins the county of Hochelaga and county of Maisonneuve, and it goes around the city of Montreal. We had only to throw St. Louis into Maisonneuve to the north or throw in St. Henry to the west, and Mr. Monk would have been swamped by 400 Liberal votes. We did not do so. I think we might by just touching a few lines of the province of Quebec have wiped out the whole of the Conservatives elected at the last election. We did not do it, and never thought of doing it. The only thing the hon. gentleman from Belleville should have said to-day is 'We have sinned, we ask your forgiveness, and we thank you for the measure of justice given us.'

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON moved the adjournment of the debate.

The motion was agreed to.

JUDGES OF PROVINCIAL COURTS ACT FURTHER AMEDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (255) An Act further to amend the Act respecting the judges of provincial courts.

He said: The only change in this Bill is the addition of one judge who is to be located in the county of Pontiac. The authority was obtained from the province of Quebec for this many years ago, I think over ten years ago.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—With regard to that Bill I may say that I wish to place some of the views I entertain before the House with regard to the position of the judiciary. But there will be an opportunity of doing it upon the Bill that stands next upon the order, and as my hon. friend wishes to advance this Bill a stage to-night, I could reserve the remarks that I intend to make for the other order, providing it is understood that it is not gone into to-night. If it is, I may just as well go into it now.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We had better go on with this, we shall have other Bills coming up from the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think it is very unreasonable.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend can make his remarks at the next stage of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No, the second reading is the stage where these observations should be made, and furthermore, my hon friend declined to put anything on the Order paper for yesterday, and the result was that a large number of the members were here all yesterday while the House stood adjourned.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend cannot with propriety make a statement of that kind. I did not decline to put anything on the Order paper. After the orders were all fixed for Tuesday and Wednesday, I was asked to put some of those back on the orders for Monday. Some hon. gentlemen said a number of members had gone away under the impression that there were no orders for Monday, and we could not put the orders back again.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am not complaining of the hon. gentleman not putting them back, but he had certainly the opportunity of placing business on the paper both for Friday and yesterday. He knew the session has been a very long one, and that there was a great deal of business yet to be put through this House, and that being the case I think it was most extraordinary that my hon. friend having these Bills in hand did not put one of them down for Monday in the first instance. It certainly was too late to do that after the members had gone away; but he deliberately took the course of leaving Monday open; although he had such important government business on his hands he deliberately put that business down later, and the consequence was that we had to adjourn over yesterday. We have to discuss his Bill now, and at 11 o'clock at night he wishes us to go on.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We will go on and finish the Order paper.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Then I may reserve what I have to say for the next order.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This Bill contains a great deal more than was intimated by the hon. gentlemen opposite.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, we repeated it in the Ontario Act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why is this repeated?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is done by the Department of Justice. I thought it was very absurd and very misleading and I asked the very same question; but it was done with reference to Ontario. I put the question to the Minister of Justice why it was necessary and he said it had been the practice of the office to put in one Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am very glad to hear the hon. Secretary of State denounce the action of his colleagues.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman spoke of the department.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What is the department? There is about the same distinction between tweedledum and tweedle de. The department, when it speaks, speaks through the head of the department, and the head of the department is the Minister of Justice, and I am inclined to think when my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) becomes Minister of Justice, when a vacancy—he may shake his head, perhaps he may not get the opportunity——

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I hope so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But I think the hon. gentleman would accept it if it were offered to him—when he becomes Minister of Justice and an opinion is given from his department, he will come to the conclusion that no one in that department except the head of the department should assume the responsibility. I congratulate my hon. friend on the opinion he has of his colleagues. It is an opinion which I entertain myself, and it is an opinion I have expressed very often of the manner in which this country is governed. It is governed by departments individually instead of collectively as provided by the constitution for the government of this country, and in the constitution which governs England. It is not the first time that I have heard the leader of this House, previous to the occupation of that honourable position by the hon. Secretary of State, give expression to precisely the same opinions. Unless this Bill covers something more than is indicated on its face there can be no necessity for re-enacting the salaries of the different judges. I find the first clause refers to an amendment. Before we are enabled to discuss this question intelligently, the hon. Secretary of State should inform the House how far these amendments interfere with and change the law as it stands. The first section says :

Section 4 of the Act respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts, chapter 138 of the Revised Statutes, as enacted by section 2 of chapter 52 of the Statutes of 1898, and amended by section one, chapter 39 of the Statutes of 1901, is repealed, and the following is substituted therefor.

Then it goes on to state the salaries of the judges. Does this Bill in any way affect the law as it stands upon the statute-book in reference to the salaries of the judges referred to in this Bill, beyond a provision for the payment, as I understand it, of one additional judge, and has this judge been asked for in Quebec ? I presume he has. It was stated when we were discussing the question before, by some of the legal luminaries of the House, that it was the duty of the Dominion government to appoint these judges, and to provide their salaries, providing the local legislature had passed an Act declaring that the judges were required. Looking back at the history of this country, hon. gentlemen will find that both parties have refused in the past to appoint judges under those circumstances. They did not take the same view of the law that some hon. gentlemen have announced here. The Mackenzie government refused to appoint judges that were asked for in Nova Scotia, if my recollection serves me aright. The Conservative government refused to appoint judges under a law passed by the province of British Columbia until certain things were done. We have precedents for that. We have precedents for the position taken by myself and one or two others on this side of the House and we thought at least that when we were speaking, we understood what we were talking about : but we were informed that we did not know anything about it. I have looked up the question since that time to see if we were as ignorant as we were represented to be, and I find that both parties in the past have taken the same view of the circumstances of this country as was taken by one or two members on this side of the House when this question was under discussion before. I think in justice to the House, the hon. Secretary of State should give us some information about this. He has told us he thinks it is an absurdity to re-enact things, but why is it done ? There should be some reason for it. The hon. gentleman should have been furnished with a precis of the reasons for re-enacting this law. I want this information before we go on with it, and I want further information as to the necessity for appointing another judge in the province of Quebec, whether it be in the district or county of Pontiac or other county, and whether there is not a spare judge somewhere else, that might be sent there. I am speaking as a layman. I am speaking from the information given by the premier of this Dominion, by the late Attorney General and others who have discussed this question of the judiciary of the province of Quebec in the House some time ago, and if I am in error, I take it for granted that hon. gentlemen from Quebec will attribute it to a desire at least for information from the parties who have become responsible for this legislation. Not only in Quebec, but in other provinces we should know exactly the necessity for increasing the expenditure in connection with the judiciary of this country before we enact laws to increase the number of judges. There may be reasons for it, and if there are the hon. Secretary of State, as representing the Department of Justice in this House ought to be able to give it to us, and that would prevent in all probability a good deal of discussion, and, what might be considered by those who do not desire opposition to it, a waste of time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I thought I had given very full information on this Bill when it was up before. I will repeat it. The province of Quebec many years ago, I think back in 1880, certainly more than eight years ago, passed a Bill organizing the county of Pontiac as a judicial district. However, it was not acceded to, and has not been acceded to the present year. It has been found, however, in the last two or three years, that it is absolutely impossible for the judge in the county of Ottawa to hold court in the extreme ends of the county. He had to travel a couple of hundred miles or more. Pontiac is the last county in western Quebec. It extends from Argenteuil in the east up to the north-west boundary of the province of Quebec probably 200 miles and therefore it was absolutely impossible for the judge of the county of Ottawa to make those trips, and at the same time attend to his own court. That is the opinion formed both by the provincial government and the government at Ottawa. I find in the Consolidated Statutes a provision in reference to the salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court of Judicature of Ontario and it repeats the salaries. The next change that took place in the law, was in 1898 and it reads in the same way. It is repeated as follows :

Section 4 of the said Act is amended by chapter 15 of the Stautes of 1887, by section 1 of chapter 59, &c.

Then it gives the salaries of the judges of the Court of Queen's Bench, the Superior Court, etc., and then the same thing is repeated in 1901. There was a change made in 1901, just in the same way. So that after comparing this Bill with the existing law I can discover no difference except that the fourteen judges are made fifteen judges in line 20 as I have already explained.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—I had not the pleasure of being present when the second reading of this Bill was introduced. I came in as the somewhat laboured explanation given by the Secretary of State was being made to the House. The Bill is a very simple one. It simply makes provision for an additional salary for a judge of the Superior Court for the province of Quebec, which is already labouring under a plethora of judges. The trouble is, that the judicial force of the province is not judiciously applied. There are judicial districts in the province of Quebec where the time of a judge is not taken up for one-tenth part of the year, and the burden of the work is put upon the judges in the city of Montreal. If the government, instead of providing additional salaries, would supplement the existing salaries, they would be doing a good work for the administration of justice in the province of Quebec ; and the remark I make will apply equally well to all the other provinces. It is known that not only the present government, but governments which preceded them were committed in the most formal way to giving additional salaries to the judges of the higher courts, and when the present Chief Justice of the King's Bench division, Sir Alex. Lacoste, was appointed, he accepted the appointment under the solemn promise from the government of the day that the salaries of the judges should be revised, and that an adequate salary should be provided not only for him as the Chief Justice, but for the other judges of that court and for the Superior Court of the province of Quebec. I know it. I was in a position to know it at the time. He hesitated very much about accepting the position, because he said frankly : 'My family is large. My income from my practice is far above the salary of a judge, and I cannot afford to accept it.' I know that Sir Alex. Lacoste stated that in the most express terms to Sir John Abbott, who was then the premier of the Dominion, and there was what was in effect a solemn promise given to him that the salaries should be enlarged in the near future. Every government that has suceeded, has admitted the necessity for doing it, and yet this government as well as those that preceded it, has not the moral courage, in the face of the caucus of the party, to do what they admit, ought to be done as a simple act of justice to the judges. I had made a few notes which unfortunately I have not at the moment under my hand.

showing the distribution of work as the courts are now constituted which shows that the judicial power is frittered away in the country districts, while additional work is put upon those who live at the business and commercial centre of the province of Quebec; and the position of the judges is not what it ought to be owing to the inadequacy of their salaries. I am not going into a discussion at this hour of the night, except to say that this government, while it is no more blamable than the preceding government was in that respect, has failed to do its duty, because they fear the electors in the rural parts. That is the English of it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—The electors say that $4.000 is a large sum of money for a man to be paid for a year's salary, and they do not see any reason why the salaries should be enlarged, and for fear of the vote in the country parts, the government has been deterred from doing its plain duty in the past and for the same reason it is being deterred at the present time. The Bill itself is so simple that I did not think it worth while, and it did not occur to me that it was necessary, to offer any explanations in regard to it. The salaries are provided en bloc. They are so provided by the Revised Statutes and its amendments. As the judges have been increased from time to time, the statute has been amended so as to include a greater number of salaries but always on the form of the present Bill; it is a form that has been consecrated by past usage.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—And the Bill is perfectly correct in its present form, and the object of it will be accomplished if it passes, as it will no doubt pass the Senate and receive the sanction of His Excellency the Governor General, and it will provide another inadequate salary for an additional judge in the province of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman has stated what I was about to remark that the form which is adopted in drafting the Bill is beyond reproach. It is much more convenient to add a new clause than to merely amend an old one, and especially in matters of this kind. It would not read properly if any other form had been adopted. I desire to add another word in this direction: we very often hear complaints of the number of judges and Superior Court judges that are appointed for the province of Quebec, but it must be borne in mind that in the province of Quebec we have no county judges, and if we refer to the amount of salaries that are paid to judges, comprising both High Court and County Court judges in the province of Ontario, to the amount of salary paid to the judges in the province of Quebec, you will find that it is much larger in Ontario than it is in Quebec. Now, as far as this additional judge is concerned, the province of Quebec has the determining of the composition of the courts. A great many years ago it was decided that the courts should be decentralized and judges were appointed for each district in the province. It is very difficult to change an established condition of things, and we are labouring under that trouble. The rural districts who have had judges living among themselves, are jealous of parting with them, and they object to forego the right of having a resident judge in their district. That has been the difficulty in the province of Quebec in getting back to the centralization, which was abandoned a great many years ago, and with the system as it is, the objection which the hon. gentleman from Bedford (Hon. Mr. Baker) has alluded to, that the work is not properly divided, is a necessary consequence; but on the whole I do not think there are too many judges for the province of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—The decentralization the hon. gentleman speaks of was a necessity at the time it was introduced. These districts were remote from the centres of commerce and the judicial centres as they had existed for many years. They were difficult of access, and decentralization was necessary, but everything has been changed. At the present day railways have been built into every section of the country, and the districts have been brought within easy access of the cities of Montreal and Quebec, and they could be served more conveniently from the cities, than they can be from some of the judges' residences in the country parts. That system although necessary at the time, is entirely unnecessary now, and the consequence is that the country has been saddled with an expense which is not too great if the cost at the present time was concentrated upon the judges in the cities, and they were relieved from the necessity of looking to other occupations to supplement their salaries, in order to maintain the proper dignity of their position amongst their fellow men. The work would be done, the judges could be relieved from the embarrassment of the financial position in which they are placed by the meagreness of their salaries, the judicial work would be more effectively done, with greater satisfaction to every one concerned, notwithstanding the complaints, that I have no doubt would be made in some of the rural districts, if the judicial work were centralized. Everybody who has thought on the question sees the difficulty. The voter always stands in the path. No matter whether it is considered in the Quebec legislature, where a system that is no longer necessary, which has outlived its usefulness, is being discussed, the bugbear of the voter behind the members has prevented the adoption of measures which would bring greater efficiency for the service, and greater satisfaction, I believe, to the bench and to the bar, and in time, to the suitors themselves. For they would be better served if a judge came from a city to administer justice, than they are served by the judge who lives among them, whom they see every day, who, if he mingles with them at all, is more or less mixed up with their objects in life. I believe that better satisfaction would accrue to everybody if the system was revised and the country districts were served from the judicial centre of the cities. That may be a very strange doctrine for one to preach who lives in the country and who practises in the country, but after giving it a great deal of thought—and perhaps from the fact that I am relieved from the necessity of consulting the voters upon such an important question as that, perhaps my views have been in some degree modified. But speaking from a purely professional point of view, I believe that it would be better for all parties concerned if the salaries of the judges were raised, and that a fewer number centralized would be able to render more effective service. I have a letter on the subject at my hotel, which was written to me many years ago by the present Lieutenant Governor of the province of Quebec when he occupied a position on the bench. I looked that letter up the other day, and it contained so many points of interest in connection with the present discussion that I am sorry the question came up unexpectedly, because I would have been glad to have read that letter to the Senate and had it printed in 'Hansard.' He was quite aware of all the difficulties of this question, and he discussed it with the clearness and force that characterizes all his utterances, and I am sorry that the Senate has not the benefit of hearing what he said about it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We have had three Bills within a very short time dealing with the judiciary, and I am sorry to say that the government is dealing with them in a very inadequate manner. The points that have been taken by my hon. friend who has just spoken have been put before this House and before parliament very frequently, and they should have received more weight than they appear to have from the government of the day. I cannot see anything very beneficial in any of the three measures that we have before us, while I think I can discover some things that are absolutely pernicious in some of them. A few days ago we put through a Bill creating three new judges for the province of Ontario and creating a new provincial court, an exchequer court, with a chief justice attached to it, and two other judges, and now we are adding a judge in the province of Quebec. I remember, only three years ago, a Bill was submitted to parliament by this government adding three judges to the province of Quebec. At that time a very long discussion took place upon it, and what I would regard as almost unanswerable evidence was put before the House against the expediency or the necessity of adding three judges to the staff of the already large number of judges in the province of Quebec. Reasons were given, coming from the bar of that province, which were largely on the line which has been presented to the House by the hon. gentleman behind me (Hon. Mr. Baker), and they showed that while there was a congestion of work in Montreal, and in some parts of the province of Quebec, many judges in the outlying parts of the province were absolutely without anything or scarcely anything to do.

The reasons that were submitted to this House were so strong on that occasion that we declined to pass the Bill, in the hope that the proper remedy would be found of distributing the work equally among the judges already, instead of making three further appointments. The Bill was rejected by this House for that reason, but the next year the government adhered to the position which they had previously taken and found it an easier way, I have no doubt, of dealing with the judiciary by providing three additional salaries out of the public chest instead of equalizing the work amongst the judges, which could have been done and the efficiency of the bench still maintained. That, I think, was proved without any doubt whatever. It was only some two years ago that we added these three judges and now we have a measure before us in response to a provincial demand to give Quebec another additional judge, with the information submitted to this House, which I think is uncontrovertible, by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, with regard to the state of the judiciary in the province of Quebec at the present time. Now, with regard to the judges that have been added in the province of Ontario, I have received a letter from a gentleman—I am not at liberty to mention his name, but if I were to mention his name it would be admitted at once that he is one of the great leaders of the Ontario bar—after the Bill adding three judges to the province of Ontario was before the House, and had passed through the different stages in the House, and I therefore could not refer to it at that time. The language used is that it is a scandal to have created that new court in the province of Ontario, and that if the judges attend to their judicial work instead of being employed on commissions and jobs—going to the Yukon and things of that sort—that if the judges already appointed attended to the work they were appointed to do, there was ample judicial power already provided to attend to the work of the courts. This gentleman says that if these judges attended to their work they would be absolutely tumbling over one another in the performance of the work of the judiciary. In view of this evidence—and I think it is very strong evidence—with regard to this subject, is it not apparent that the government is not taking the right method of dealing with the judiciary at the present moment? Undoubtedly the right thing to do would be to pay the judges that are already appointed a living wage. That would be the right course to pursue, and I would add an additional remedy which is called for, is to put a stop to their employment in all extra judicial work, or, as is described more accurately, sending them off on jobs. If these two things were done, and that is what is called for with regard to the judiciary of all the provinces at the present time, pay them proper salaries for their services and raise the position of the judiciary by preventing them from being appointed to do work such as we have been describing, it would not be necessary to appoint additional judges. I have in my hands a very important document with regard to this subject, which I wish to place before the House. I am now referring to the matter of the judges being appointed to do extra judicial work or as it is described of performing jobs for governments or any other people. In view of the strong reasons that have been presented to the people of Canada with regard to this subject, in view of the strong public opinion that is known at this moment to exist with regard to this question, I am sorry that the government is neglecting to perform that obvious duty of increasing the salary of the judges who are at present appointed, that the government has not performed another obvious duty and that is to introduce a Bill to prevent the employment of judges on extra judicial work. The document I have in my hand is a paper written by Mr. J. S. Ewart, of Manitoba, the senior member of the bar of that province, and without question one of the leaders of the bar there, a gentleman whose political sympathies are not, as far as I know, with the present opposition, but with the government of to-day. He says:

> A little analysis and explanation seem to be very necessary. The employment of the judges may for present purposes be divided into three classes:—
>
> (1) Adjudications respecting property and rights.
>
> (2) Collateral functions: such as declarations of opinion as to interpretation of statutes, or legislative powers, revision of voters' lists, and so on.
>
> These jurisdictions are sometimes granted to a court and sometimes to any judge of a court as persona designata: sometimes there is a special remuneration attached to the work, and sometimes there is none, and the feature which sharply distinguishes this second class of cases from that which is to follow is the fact that the statute prescribing the work ascertains also the person to do it and fixes the remuneration.

(3) Jobs—as I choose to call them. Governments in this class of cases are authorized by statute to issue commissions in respect of a variety of subjects; to give the work to any judge they choose; and to pay him what they please.

This analysis affords a very complete answer to those who urge that in order to be consistent in my objection, to job to judges I must be opposed to the trial by the courts of election petition. If we class election petitions, as we should, with all other appeals to the courts for adjudication respecting rights, we see at a glance the essential distinction between trying a right to a parliamentary seat and accepting a job. If a dispute arises as to who is mayor or alderman for ward 2, the courts settle it. If I am unlawfully deprived of my seat in my church I go to the courts for relief, and when the under dogs in the parliamentary committee fights got enough of that sort of justice and became the majority, the courts were authorized to adjudicate as to house seats also. A right to a place in parliament is a legal right, and the courts now ascertain and declare such rights precisely as in all other cases—that is in litigation instituted for the purpose. Clearly this has nothing to do with my objection to jobs.

This analysis will enable me also to answer those who think that judges ought not to mix themselves up in politics, but that they might properly accept jobs of the quieter sort. I see no reason why judges in the discharge of their duty to administer justice, should not mix themselves up in politics or church quarrels or angry controversies of any kind so far as may be necessary for the settlement of disputed rights. No, it is not what sort of cases ought to come before the judges that we are interested in here; but the very different question: how ought the cases to get there?

Take the Gamey-Stratton inquiry. Precisely the same investigation might have taken place had Mr. Gamey's charges been made upon the platform, and if Mr. Stratton sued for libel; and the same judges one way or other might have heard the case; and there would have been no objection and no outcry and no abuse, and the result would have been impressive. But when a government attacked, itself appoints the judges and arranges their remuneration—well, we have experienced the natural result.

With regard to this matter I say now, as I said before, that we have been going from bad to worse. This habit of referring extra judicial matters to judges was practised under the former administration as well as under the present one, but it was not practised under the Liberal government in the province of Ontario. It was only in the Gamey-Stratton case, and for the first time, as far as I have been able to learn under British constitutional government anywhere, where judges were appointed by the party who were accused and paid by them, as instructed to render a verdict between them and their opponents. Up to that stage the worst that ever was done was to appoint judges to take evidence and report the result to parliament. But in this case a new departure was made by the party who was attacked and who was one of the parties to the suit, appointing the judges, paying their remuneration and instructing them to act as commissioners and to find a verdict between the parties to the suit.

The character of the controversy of investigation then is wholly immaterial provided always that the case comes before the judges in the ordinary course of the administration of justice; and this brings us sharply to the question, why if it be admitted that all sorts of questions may properly be examined by judges, make such a fuss about the mere manner in which they may get to their lordships.

There are two sorts of jobs—one of them is bad and the other worse; one relates to non-contentious and the other to contentious matters.

The periodical revision of the statutes is of the first class, and I am asked what is more in accordance with the fitness of things than that a judge should undertake the work? But if I assent to the fitness (a) I hasten to add, 'make the revision of the statutes part of the regular work of the judges,' and I am satisfied. But leave it among the jobs and I object. I object upon the ground that the judges ought to be free from governmental or other influences. Is it not the fact that the political parties nowadays are more interested in litigation than any other organization? Is it not therefore now more than ever necesssary that the independence of the judiciary should be rigidly maintained?

I gather that public opinion is unanimously with me in objecting to the reception of railway passes by the judges. But why, if not upon the principle of the independence of the judges? Is the distinction between a government job and a railway pass that one is earned and the other a gift? Very well. Now, suppose that the Canadian Pacific Railway employed a judge to audit its accounts, and paid him a reasonable salary for the work, is the objection to such employment removed by the fact that the money is earned? Not in the very slightest; the railway has a judge in its employment—that is the point and the objection; and Judge Cooley, eminent as he was, lost his re-election to the Michigan bench after twenty-eight years of excellent service there, because the voters saw impropriety in that very situation.

When a judge takes a government job, he may nominally be in the employment of the King, but in reality he receives his instructions from the politicians who have plenty of litigation before him and who regulate his pay. If judges can maintain untarnished their reputation for integrity, although they take favours from governments and at the same time sit in cases in which these same governments are deeeply interested, what objection is there to a judge employing his leisure time which is said to be his own, in auditing the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's books ?

This idea of the essential necessity of maintaining the independence of the danger is in danger of being frittered quite away. The good old maxim, 'Once a Puisne always a Puisne,' represented the intensity of the conviction that judges may not always be single minded if left open to temptation ; and now that the maxim has been abandoned, what a flutter do we not see among the Puisnes upon every vacancy of a chief seat ? And what mental casting up of accounts with Ottawa there must be ? For fear that ageing judges, in dread of enforced retirement, might cringe a little, they were made irremovable except upon an address of the two Houses ; and Canada has almost always had senility upon the bench, because independence of the men there was thought to be more important than their mental fitness.

That certainly is a most important statement, coming from a leader of the bar that the independence of the judiciary is more important than their mental fitness, and I believe there is a great deal of force in it.

Curiously enough we maintained this irremovability long after the introduction of the prize packet system gave governments a power to purchase good-will with hard cash. It is yet in substantial operation.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—If the hon. gentleman would allow me, if he is going to read the whole article perhaps he would hand it to the shorthand writer.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have it in the public press and all of us had the opportunity of reading it. The hon. gentleman is inflicting it upon us.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I will be through in a moment. It is pertinent to the legislation before us, and I am exercising my right in reading it and I intend to read it to the end.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not making any impression upon the audience.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It does not make any impression upon my hon. friend.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not under the circumstances.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I despair, in most instances, of making any impression upon my hon. friend. He has got his lesson put before him by his colleagues in another part of this building, and he comes here before us and gets it off sometimes well and sometimes badly, and sometimes we find by reading 'Hansard' he had not the slightest conception of what was going on or the points made by members in this House, and when my hon. friend tells me this matter, which is a very important matter, emanating from a gentleman whose mind is at least equal to that of my hon. friend, is not making any impression on him I am not surprised, but every one is not so callous to good and substantial logic as my hon. friend is, and I am addressing others beside my hon. friend, and I am confident these excellent opinions are appreciated by them. The article continues :

The jobs then of the first sort, although of non-contentious character, are obnoxious because of the fundamental necessity for judicial independence. Jobs of the other class (contentious matter) are objectionable not only for this reason, but also upon the ground that they involve the injustice of the choice of judge by one only of the parties to the controversy. The attempted answer is that the judges—all the judges—are perfectly impartial, and that it is consequently immaterial who makes the selection. To which the sufficient reply is that judges are not all out of the same mould ; that any barrister will tell you which of the judges would be the best for your particular sort of case : and that if he could always fill the bench as he wished he would much more rapidly fill his own pockets by winning more of his cases.

Very much more harm is done by this second class of job than by the first, for (1) they attract very much greater notice, (2) they are sometimes met with fierce opposition, and (3) the element of injustice in them affords an not unreasonable objection to them and to submission to their findings. But after all they are the natural outcome of the job habit in its more insidious, if less publicly obnoxious, form. They are, all of them, a dangerous encroachment upon the independence of the bench.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—They are only the opinions of a single individual. They are of no consequence whatever.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman says they are the opinions of a single individual. It is true he may not be so great a man as the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—Perhaps not so great a man as the hon. gentleman thinks himself.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—When I am through with my observations——

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—All nonsense.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—When I am through with my observations, I have no doubt my hon. friend will entertain the House with a long and eloquent speech.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—No. I will not be wearying the House with nonsense when I speak.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—When my hon. friend refers disdainfully to the opinions of Mr. J. E. Ewart, the leader of the Manitoba bar, the inference is that he will put views before us of very much more importance than any member of the Canadian bar could express. The article continues :

> I take my stand upon this : I ask any practitioner of twenty-five, twenty, or even ten years' standing, does the Canadian judiciary occupy the same position in public estimation to-day as within your recollection ? Now, do not answer 'yes, in the minds of all reasonable people.' For a great many people, as you think, are very far from being reasonable, and yet it is important that they too should have a good opinion of the judges. Admittedly, then, there has been a serious change for the worse in this respect, and the question we have to consider and get a reply to at our peril is, 'What is the cause of the change ?' My answer is, 'Jobs.' If there be any better, let us have it. That these jobs have not heretofore evoked much comment or condemnation must be attributed to the great respect which the Canadian bar has always entertained for the bench, and because of a very natural indisposition to critise those whom, upon the whole, you admire, and whose mental attitude towards yourself is of some consideration to you. Let us be glad, then, of the Gamey and Treadgold cases, if they have at length forced us to consider our position, to investigate and ascertain the true foundation of the evil which is upon us, frankly to state it and absolutely put an end to it.

I think the view of this eminent man, which I have submitted to the House, ought to convince us ; but my hon. friend, the Secretary of State, gives us to understand that he is callous to all such reasons as these, that they are making no impression upon him, but they ought to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I had the opportunity of reading it much more deliberately than my hon. friend.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I wanted to stir up his pure mind by way of rememberance, and he is none the worse for hearing it again. I am glad he is apparently receding from the position he took a few minutes ago, for then he said that these views were not making any impression on the House. Now he admits they were worthy of his perusal, and he puts it, not so much on the ground that they were not worthy of consideration, but upon the ground of having read them before, and the inference was that it was quite unnecessary for any hon. gentleman in this House to read them or consider them as he had already read them. The government is signally failing in its duty to the people of this country, and to the judiciary in the course it is pursuing. What is that course ? When we take the views that have been expressed by the hon. gentleman behind me, and which are not contradicted, that there is ample judicial power in the province of Quebec at the present time, and was before the last three judges were appointed ; when we have been told by one of the great leaders of the bar of Ontario, within two or three weeks, that we have added three judges to the bench of Ontario, for whom there is not the slightest necessity—that judges will be tumbling over each other in the performance of work, instead of being required for the work in Ontario—when we find that is the case, and there is such a strong public opinion as is voiced by that able, that conclusive article, which I have read to hon. gentlemen, amongst the bar of the province, amongst the leaders of the bar, amongst the judges themselves regarding the position of our judges, the question demands consideration. Let me say further, that I have a letter in my possession received from a judge, and a judge that was appointed by the present government, strongly in the line of the argument used by Mr. Ewart in the pamphlet I have before me.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Will the hon. gentleman give us the name ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I will not give the name.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Surely it should be given.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I have no authority to give the name, and I do not think the hon. gentleman is really serious when he asks for it. We should not bandy judges' names.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It is exceedingly inconvenient to speak of a letter from a judge on a subject of this kind unless there is authority to make use of it here.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am not using this gentleman's name. I say the letter is from a judge appointed by the present government, and I shall be very happy privately to show the letter to my hon. friend the member for Toronto. I know he will not make any improper use of it, and he will have means of knowing whether the statement I have made to this House is accurate or otherwise. Really, I think my hon. friend the Secretary of State should pause before he proceeds any further with these Bills relating to the judiciary. He should take time to consider, and ask the Minister of Justice to consider the whole question of the judiciary at the present moment. It certainly is not a new question. I would be very loath to insinuate anything of that kind in regard to such very high-minded gentlemen as compose the present administration, but it looks, really, as if they are not very much averse to widening their patronage, while they are not willing to do the right thing for the judiciary of Canada by legislating on the subject on these jobs, and on the employment of judges for the extra work, and unwilling apparently, to deal with the question of giving them proper remuneration. I am sorry that I have been forced to discuss this question at this hour of the evening. I do not think there is anything in the congestion of work that has been before this House to call for forcing these matters upon us at this hour, after we have had so long a day, and I do not think anything is gained by it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I offered the hon. gentleman to carry on the discussion at the next stage of the Bill. All I asked was to advance the Bill a stage. I put it off before at the suggestion of my hon friend.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No. I did not ask him to do that. I told my hon. friend that I had some observations to make on the position of the judiciary, and I asked him not to force it on at half past ten at night.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend could have made his remarks at any time.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. Secretary of State told me I could go on with my observations, as he intended to go through the order paper. He was not disposed to show that courtesy which I think he should have shown. I appeal to hon. gentlemen in this House if, on all occasions during this long session, we have not shown every courtesy and every consideration, and whether up to this time we have unfairly pressed the government or carried discussion beyond reasonable length.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It is most refreshing to hear the hon. gentleman closing a three-quarter hour speech on two questions which have been disposed of absolutely by this House, by saying that it is very regrettable that we did not extend the courtesy to him of allowing him to make his speech at another time. He has discussed what during this three-quarters of an hour ? He has discussed the impropriety of appointing judges to the Ontario bench, and yet he prefaced his remarks upon this question, by declaring that the Ontario Bill had passed the three readings of this House. Consequently he has made a speech on a question which has been absolutely disposed of by both Houses. The Bill only requires the sanction of the Governor General to warrant the appointment of these judges. The other part of his speech has been upon the impropriety of employing judges upon outside commissions—extra judicial commissions. The hon. gentleman has been given as much latitude as he pleased to convince us—and he did his work thoroughly, I do him that justice—once before. He has had an opportunity to discuss that question to his heart's content. This House has also disposed of this question, and yet he complains at twelve o'clock that he was not given a chance of taking a whole day to re-hash what has already been said on these subjects in this chamber. The real question is as to the appointment of a judge for the province of Quebec judiciary ; the hon. gentleman has not added one single argument to what fell from the gentleman from Bedford (Hon. Mr. Baker), and what is the use of repeating and discussing the same arguments ? There is hardly an expression of opinion from the hon. gentleman from Bedford that I do not concur in, yet there is something stronger than this chamber, and stronger than the Canadian parliament. It is public opinion, and the hon. gentleman declares that public opinion in the province of Quebec, in the rural parts, which are three parts of Quebec, is against a change of the present system. So that we are face to face with an absolute refusal on the part of the rural population of the province of Quebec to do what the British will not do. They have a motto which we have seen everywhere, 'What we have we hold.' The British will not drop their system after they have tried it. I hope, with the help of the hon. gentleman from Bedford that we will succeed in enlightening them, but so long as three-fourths of the population of Quebec refuse to change, we must accept the situation as it is, and as the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry has said, we have a bench that does not cost per capita more than the bench of Ontario.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Wednesday, October 7th, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE moved :

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate the returns to the Finance Department for the years 1896 and 1897 of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association.

The motion was agreed to.

PENSIONS TO JUDGES BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on (Bill 243) An Act to amend the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act, the Exchequer Court Act, and the Act respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts.

(In the Committee.)

On clause 1,

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am not going to move an amendment; but I wish to direct attention to what I consider rather a blemish in the latter part of this clause. It seems to me that the clause would be unobjectionable if it stopped at the word 'upwards' on line 15. The effect of that would be that when a judge of a Superior Court had attained the age of seventy-five years, although he could not be compelled to resign, still, naturally, he would resign because the government would be empowered and it would be their duty to pay him his full salary for the remainder of his life on his resignation. But when you go further than that and say that when a judge attains the age of seventy years the government may retire him you begin, it strikes me, to interefere somewhat with the independence of the bench. When a judge has attained the age of seventy-five years he ought to be relieved, but a judge at seventy may be quite capable of discharging his duties, and I doubt the wisdom of giving the government the power of offering that judge a retirement on full salary. It is all very well while the present government is in power, but there have been and may be in the future governments to which we would not care to entrust the same powers. Then the last paragraph (c) says, 'continued in office as judge of one or more of the said courts for thirty years or upwards.' Of course the judge would not be a young man after serving thirty years, but, hon. gentlemen will notice that the term can be computed not only for the time spent as judge, but as a stipendiary magistrate of the North-west Territories ; and a judge might be only sixty-five years of age. I do not see why he should be retired at that age on full pay. It seems to me, as I stated at the beginning, that the clause would be unobjectionable if it ended with the word 'upwards' on the 15th line.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I could not accept the suggestion of my hon. friend. A judge who has served thirty-five years ought certainly to be able to retire. It is a pretty long service for a judge, and I do not know that in any other country they are expected to serve any longer than that.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move that clause 2 be struck out of the Bill.

Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The motion of the hon. Secretary of State is to amend this Bill by striking out the second clause. I am under the impression, if he will carry his memory back two or three years, he may remember that when a Bill was introduced here not of this character, but involving the same principle, being a money Bill, there were one or two clauses in the Bill as presented from the Commons, providing for the appointment of two or three judges in the province of Quebec. There were other clauses also affecting the judiciary in the province of Quebec. I suggested at that time the dropping of the clause which provided for the appointment of the judges, leaving the other clauses. intact. Objection was taken by the then Minister of Justice, the late Mr. Mills, that it being a money Bill we had no power in this House to amend it. Now, in looking at the authorities you will find that the late Speaker of the House of Commons in England, Mr. Brand, decided that any Bill that was based upon a resolution sent down with a recommendation from the Crown, and passed in the House of Commons was a money Bill, and if a money Bill, could not be changed, altered or amended by the House of Lords. This Bill is precisely of that character, and if we are to continue the practice as it has prevailed in the past, this amendment cannot be made.

I think Bourinot lays down that principle pretty clearly, and so did the late Speaker of the Senate. After raising this point of order I would suggest, with all due defference to the hon. gentleman who is to decide the point of order himself, who now occupies the Chair, unless he thinks proper, he could leave the Chair and call the Speaker and ask for his ruling. A very short time ago in the House of Commons—I have not been able to find a rule of that kind here—a question of order was raised as to whether it was not a violation of the rules of the House to proceed with a debate at that time in the absence of the 'Hansard' reporters, the reporters having been appointed by order of the House. The reporters had been up all night and someone—I think one of the ministers—took the responsibility of telling them that they need not remain any longer. I am not finding fault with that, because when we consider the hard work which the reporters had to perform through the night, they could scarcely have been expected to continue their work any longer. The Deputy Speaker there, who is supposed to have the full authority, and has while in the Chair of the Speaker, rose, reported to the Speaker the point under discussion and the Speaker was asked to rule and did rule. I throw out that suggestion to the hon. gentleman, unless he thinks proper to decide the question himself. Now this Bill which we are considering provides for the expenditure of money and for the retirement of judges upon certain terms and conditions, and therefore to all intents and purposes is a money Bill. I am not discussing the merits of the Bill at all; I am merely pointing out that to all intents and purposes it is, under the rules of parliament, and decisions given in the past, a money Bill. Bourinot says at page 468 of the second edition of his work:

> In 1841 an Act providing for the payment of salaries——

Now mark you, this is a Bill providing for the payment of pensions, and consequently is of precisely the same character and in the same category as the Bill to which I am now referring:

> In 1841, an Act providing for the payment of salaries of officers of the legislature, and for the indemnification of members, was amended by the legislative council by sriking out the clause paying the members out of the general revenue. The action of the council in amending a money Bill was resented by the assembly. The amended document——

I do not know whether they will carry out this principle or not:

> The amended document was seized by a member and kicked out of the House. The same Bill, with a change of title, was then sent back to the council, who receded from their former position and agreed to the measure.

You will find that decision in the legislative assembly journals of 1841, of the parliamentary records, and also in the Montreal 'Gazette' of September 21st. I do not know that it is necessary that I should allude to other cases. In the session of 1851 the Supply Bill contained the following conditions attached to the grant for defraying the expenses of the Clerk of the Legislative Council:

> Provided that no additional income shall be paid to the said clerk in the form of fees, perquisites or contingencies. The Committee of the Whole in the legislative council made a special report on the subject, and the council thereupon instructed them to agree to the condition, inasmuch as very great inconvenience would result from the stoppage of supplies. At the same time a declaration was entered on the Journals of the council.

That is, a declaration that the legislative council, which is analogous to the Senate, ought to be consulted before a measure of that kind was presented for their approval. Turning back to the first provision you will see, Mr. Chairman, that the Act provided for the payment of officers of the legislature. This provides for the payment of a pension to judges on their retirement. It provided also for the indemnification of members; that was a payment in prospective, not any sum particularly, but that they should be paid, and that also was considered a money Bill, and the legislative council was refused the right to amend it, and one member of the legislature, as I have already indicated, kicking it out of the House. Now, this Bill is in precisely the same position. The following decision of Rand was given in this case: that a Bill to provide pay and pensions (similar exactly to this Bill) is a money Bill.

The case referred to provides for the pensioning of the constabulary of the police in Ireland. That decision will be found on page 277 and 259 of the proceedings of May 11, 1883. I raise the point that the hon. Secretary of State in his amendment is asking the Senate to do that which they have no power to do. There are only three courses to pursue in reference to this Bill. The first is to pass it as it is presented to us by the House of Commons without amendment; secondly, to defeat it, or thirdly, to withdraw it. That rests with the hon. Secretary of State, being the leader of the government in this House, and as this is a government Bill and being a money Bill, it is for the hon. gentleman to say what course he proposes to take. But I do not think there can be any question about it.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Was the Bill based on a resolution introduced in the Commons?

Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—So I am told. I asked that question, if it was based on a resolution and I was informed it was, and constitutionally my hon. friend the Secretary of State knows, and no one knows as well as the hon. gentleman who has spoken, that all money appropriations must be introduced by resolution. It will be within the recollection of those who are listening to me that the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill was introduced in the ordinary way, and they had to withdraw it, an objection being taken by the hon. gentleman from Grey, Mr. Sproule, and the result was that the government had to recede from their first position, and introduce resolutions on a recommendation from the Crown and then proceed with the Bill. If my hon. friend the chairman, thinks proper to rule, I am not now going to appeal to the Chair. It is for him to decide.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend is right in the principle he lays down, that the Senate cannot interfere with a Bill imposing any tax on the people, but this particular clause to which reference has been made is simply permissive. It permits the Governor General, under certain conditions and circumstances, to pay a superannuation allowance. I doubt very much whether the point is well taken. At all events in all those cases, really if it is an infraction on the rights of the House of Commons it is for the House of Commons to reject our amendment. That is what has been done in a variety of cases. In some cases they have accepted our amendments and in some cases they have rejected them. In Erskine's 'Parliamentary Practice' sixth edition, page 539, we find the following:—

All Bills of this class must originate in the Commons, as that House will not agree to any provision which imposes any charge.

This clause is not imposing a charge. It is relieving the government from the possibility of a charge. Erskine proceeds:—

But will order the Bills containing them to be laid aside, nor will it permit the Lords to insert any provision of that nature in Bils sent up from the Commons. In cases where amendments have affected charges upon the people incidentally only, and have not been made with that object they have been agreed to.

The Prisoners' Removal Bill, 1849, was another case in which an amendment was made in the House of Lords but the Commons agreed to the amendment.

There are two cases quite parallel to this. Practically it is an Act of less importance than either of these which I have quoted.

In this case we relieve the government of a possibility of a charge upon the people. It is not in the direction of imposing a further charge ; it is just the reverse, and there are a variety of cases in which amendments of that kind have gone down to the Commons, and have been acquiesced in. I therefore submit that the proper course, in this instance, would be to let the amendment go to the Commons, and if the Commons feel that we have intruded upon their jurisdiction they will decline to accept the amendment.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I am very much astonished at the argument of the hon. gentleman. He is a very old parliamentarian, and I certainly think does know better than one would think from the remarks which he has just now made. This is a money Bill ; no doubt about it. It has been introduced upon resolutions in the House of Commons, and all Bills, introduced in that House upon resolution, are money Bills, and there is no principle of parliamentary practice more clearly settled than that it is beyond the competence of this House to amend, alter or add to a money Bill in any respect whatever. Now I quote from May, page 542. I do not think it would be necessary to argue what it means, it was so clearly understood, and I cannot understand what can be at the bottom of the present movement of the Secretary of State to amend a money Bill, a government Bill, sent up here at the last moment, as he proposes to do. This Bill has been introduced, I am correctly informed, on resolution in the House of Commons. At page 542 May says very positively :—

> By the practice and usage based upon that resolution the Lords are excluded not only from the power of initiating or amending Bills dealing with public expenditure——

This deals with public expenditure or revenues.

> —but also from initiating public Bills which would create a charge upon the people by the imposition of local and other rates, or which deal with the administration or employment of those charges. Bills which thus infringe the privileges of the Commons, when received from the Lords, are either laid aside or postponed for six months.

In the same way as the Lords have no power to initiate a Bill of this kind, so they have no power to amend it. It cannot be contended for a moment that this House has power to initiate a Bill of this kind, and a Bill that we cannot initiate, we cannot amend or alter. The principle applies all round. May further says :

> It follows accordingly that the Lords may not amend the provisions in Bills which they received from the Commons dealing with the above-mentioned subjects, so as to alter, whether by increase or reduction, the amount of a rate or charge—its duration, mode of assessment, levy, collection, appropriation, or management ; or the persons who pay, receive, or control it ; or the limits within which its leviable. Other forms of amendment by the Lords have also been held to infringe on the privileges of the Commons, such as the addition of a clause providing that payments into and out of he Consolidated Fund should be made under the same regulations as were applicable by law to similar payments ; of provisions for the payment of salaries to officers of the Court of Chancery out of the Suitors' Fund ; and alterations in a clause prescribing the order in which charges on the revenues of a colony should be paid.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend has quoted cases where it was absolutely clear that the action of the Lords was adding to the taxing of the people.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—No clearer than the clause which my hon. friend wants to amend now. Will my hon. friend say this is simply permissive ? If it passes, it is mandatory upon the government, and the government must impose a tax on the people as the clause provides. What does the clause say :

> 2. If any judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, or of the Exchequer Court of Canada, or of a superior court of any of the provinces of Canada resigns or has heretofore resigned his office as such judge to accept the office of lieutenant-governor of a province, and if he serves or has served as such lieutenant-governor, and is not otherwise eligible for any retiring annuity as such judge, His Majesty may, at any time after the expiration of the term of service of such judge as lieutenant-governor, grant to such judge an annuity equal to two-thirds of the salary annexed to the judicial office which he held at the time of his resignation.

Is that permissible ? Is not that mandatory ? Is not the government obliged under the terms of that clause, just as much as if they were commanded, to give to the judge who comes under its provisions an annuity of two-thirds his salary ? Is not that a tax upon the people ? Is not that a dealing with the appropriations of the revenue of the country ? Nothing could be clearer. I cannot understand what is at the bottom of the move to strike out this clause. I certainly agree with all that has fallen from the leader of the opposition on this point, and it seems to me there should be no doubt in the mind of an experienced parliamentarian like my hon. friend the Secretary of State, and I think that the Speaker should take the Chair and decide the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN—My mind is made up upon this point, but as it is an important question, I would prefer that it should go to the Speaker. I would call attention to Bourinot, page 483, on the matter of procedure :

2. If it be found expedient in either House to refer a point of order to the Speaker, a member will move that the chairman report progress and ask leave to sit again that day. When the Speaker has resumed, the chairman will report that the committee wishes to be instructed as to the point in question. The House will then proceed to take the matter into consideration, and the Speaker having been requested to give his opinion will decide the matter in dispute.

I would prefer, for my own part, that the Speaker should take the Chair and decide the point in dispute.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Then I move that the chairman leave the Chair, and report progress, and ask leave to sit again to-day, reporting to the Speaker the point of order which has been raised in the committee.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If the committee would allow, I think it should be distinctly understood that the discussion on a question of order can go on after the Speaker resumes the Chair, or that it shall be completed in committee, either one course or the other. I know there are hon. gentlemen who are anxious to speak on the question.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—They could speak before the Chair.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Do we understand the discussion to continue before the Speaker ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Yes. 'Bourinot' says it can be so continued.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The only difficulty would be this : That with the Speaker in the Chair, we shall be confined to one speech. I think we might just as well go on and discuss it now without the chairman rising, and when we get through the Speaker can resume the Chair.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I beg to differ from the hon. gentleman from Richmond, who claims that this is a money Bill. I shall read from 'Todd,' volume 1, page 815 :

We will now proceed to consider the subject of money Bills which are of three kinds, namely tax Bills, Bills of supply, and Bills of appropriation. All these Bills have a peculiar form of preamble which intimates that the revenue or grant of money is the peculiar gift of the House of Commons, and such Bills are invariably presented for the royal assent by the Speaker of the House of Commons.

These are the three Bills which have a special preamble and are invariably presented for the royal assent by the Speaker of the House of Commons. We have as an instance of what is a money Bill, in the statute of 1899, chapter 1. This is an appropriation Bill, and it begins with an address, Most Gracious Sovereign :

Whereas it appears by Messages from His Excellency the Right Honourable Sir Gilbert John Elliott Murray-Kynnynmond, Earl of Minto, &c. May it therefore please Your Majesty that it may be enacted, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada.

This is the form of the money Bill as laid down by 'Todd.' Then take chapter 7, of this very same statute. This is not a money Bill, it is an Act to authorize the granting of subsidies :

Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows.

This is not a money Bill which falls under the three classifications mentioned by 'Todd.' We undoubtedly cannot initiate any Bill voting sums of money, nor can we by amendment increase a vote of money by adding to the amount involved in a money Bill presented to us from the Commons, but there is no question, that we can amend the Bill by reducing the sum which it appropriates if it does not fall within the three classifications I have mentioned, or amend a Bill which incidentally contains a provision for a sum of money. We may reduce the sum ; we cannot increase it. And this is the view which was taken by the Conservative majority in this House in 1898 when a Bill of precisely the same character as this was before the Senate. I refer to Bill (150) 'An Act further to amend the Act respecting judges of Provincial Courts.' It provides as follows :

Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows :—

1. Subsection 1 of section 2 of the Act respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts, chapter 138 of the Revised Statutes, is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor :—

2. Every judge of a county court in any of the provinces of Canada shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, hold office during good behaviour and his residence in the county or union of counties for which the court is established ; providing no person shall hold or retain office as such judge after he has completed the 75th year of his age.

Then, subsection 2, which was struck out and another subsection substituted for it, was as follows :

2. The subsection so substituted shall apply as well to judges now holding offices as to judges to be hereafter appointed ; providing any judge now holding office who is by reason of his having completed the 75th year of his age disqualified to hold or retain his office shall be entitled to a pension under section 15 of the said Act, although he has not continued in office for the number of years mentioned in that section.

The hon. Judge Gowan moved to strike out this clause, and although the Minister of Justice at the time sitting here resisted the demand, it was carried by the Conservative majority of this chamber. The Bill was amended, in three or four places.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I suppose my hon. friend will lay down the doctrine that it must have been right if it was done by the Conservative majority ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I should say that what the Conservative majority was disposed to think was within the scope and jurisdiction of this Chamber in 1898 we on this side should accept as good law. We certainly are not disposed to accept a contrary dictum at the whim of a Conservative minority to-day. In the discussion on this same Bill in 1898, the hon. gentleman from Richmond took part, and was not scandalized to see the hon. gentleman from Barrie move an amendment. On the contrary he supported it, because it suited the opposition, at the time, to make the laws for the government and declare what was proper or improper in a Bill relating to the judges. It does not suit the opposition to-day that the government should have its way in presenting this Bill, but fortunately the opposition stands to-day in the minority in this Chamber, and what they laid down as being within the rights of the Senate in 1898, will be accepted to-day as being still within the rights of this Chamber. As the leader of the House has said : it is not for the Senate to limit its own jurisdiction. Even if there were a doubt we will go the full length of what we think is our right, and await the action of the House of Commons to see if they will try to limit our jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The only point raised by the hon. member from de Lorimier, is that this Bill is not a money Bill. If we show that it is a money Bill, then it follows that we cannot amend it. Bourinot, on page 585, second edition, says :

As a general rule public Bills may originate in either House, but whenever they grant supplies of any kind or any form directly or indirectly levying or appropriation of any tax upon the people, they must be initiated in the popular branch in accordance with law, and English constitutional practice. Section 53 of the British North America Act expressly provides that Bills for appropriating any part of the public revenue, or for imposing any tax or impost, shall originate in the House of Commons and a standing order of the House of Commons declares explicitly all aids and supplies granted to Her Majesty by the parliament of Canada are the sole gift of the House of Commons, and all Bills for granting such aids and supplies ought to begin with the House, as it is the undoubted right of the House to direct, limit, and appoint in all such Bills the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations and qualifications of such grants, which are not alterable by the Senate.

Which are not alterable by the Senate. What ? 'the conditions, the ends, the purposes, the considerations, the limitations and the qualifications of such grants, which are not alterable by the Senate.' I call the attention of the hon. chairman to these words :

Every Bill that appropriates a part of the revenue must be initiated in the House of Commons.

With this every one agrees. More than that, the Commons, who initiate that Bill, has the right to point out the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations and the qualifications of such grants, which are not alterable by the Senate. Well, a Bill granting a pension is a money Bill, appropriating a part of the public revenue. It is equally an aid granted to His Majesty by parliament, and as such it cannot be amended by the Senate. 'May,' who has been quoted from, is very explicit on this point: In the quotation which my hon. friend from Richmond has read, he says that the Lords are excluded, not only from the power of initiating or amending Bills dealing with public expenditure, but also from initiating public Bills which would create a charge upon the people by the imposition of local or other rates, or which deal with the administration of those charges. 'May' goes on to say:

> It follows accordingly that the Lords may not amend the provisions in Bills which they receive from the Commons, dealing with the above mentioned subject, so as to alter——

And I call the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to the following. He continues:

> —so as to alter, whether by increase or reduction, the amount of a rate or charge.

The hon. Secretary of State says that because his amendment tends to reduce the charge imposed upon the people that the Senate has a right to accept it, but 'May' says in very clear words that it follows that the Senate may not amend the provisions in Bills which they receive from the Commons, so as to alter, whether by increase or reduction, the amount of a rate or charge. What would be the effect of the amendment proposed by the hon. Secretary of State? It would be, as he says, to reduce the charge upon the people. It would be, according to 'May,' to alter the charge imposed upon the people by reduction. 'May' says the House of Lords has not that right, and if the House of Lords has not the right to alter a Bill, even in reducing the charges which would fall upon the people, I contend that this Senate has no more right to do so than the House of Lords. Further than that, the discussion of a definition of a money Bill has been raised in other parliaments. We find that in a dispute that arose between the legislative council of South Australia and the House of Assembly of that country, on August 25, 1857, a resolution was agreed to. The legislative council in that part of Her Majesty's domain was an elective legislative council, and being an elected body, the legislative council of that country claimed the right to interfere in the legislation on money Bills, and had a right to lessen or to increase the charges upon the people. A controversy took place between the two Houses, and a resolution was agreed upon by both Houses, and that resolution agreed to on August 25, 1857, by the legislative council of South Australia in its famous quarrel with the House of Assembly on the subject of money Bills, and embodied in what is called the compact of 1857 between the two legislative bodies, reads as follows:

> Thirdly, that this council further declares its opinion, that all Bills, the object of which shall be to raise money, whether by way of loan or otherwise, or to warrant the expenditure of any portion of the same, shall be held to be money Bills.

Hon. gentlemen will find that in Edwin Gordon Blackmore's 'Procedure of the Legislative Council of South Australia,' pages 173 and 182. In England there is a rule, which is called the half-past twelve o'clock rule, and this is what constitutes that half-past twelve o'clock rule. A standing order of February 18, 1879, provides as follows:

> Except for a money Bill no order of the day or notice of motion be taken after half-past twelve o'clock at night, with respect to which order or notice of motion, a notice of opposition or amendment shall have been printed on the notice paper, or if such notice of motion shall only have been given the next previous day of sitting, an objection shall be taken when such notice is called.

In other words, every opposed measure coming after half-past twelve o'clock at night must be laid aside, unless it is a money Bill. The Bombay Civil Fund Bill was introduced in July, 1882. It was a money Bill. The resolution, which was reported July 4th, read as follows:

> That it is expedient to authorize the making provision for the transfer of the assets and liabilities of the resident branch of the Bombay Civil Fund, or other fund to the Secretary of State for India in Council, and of charging the revenues of India with the liabilities of the said funds and the payments of annuities and pensions.

Objection was taken to the Bill by the opposition that the Bill was taken up after half-past twelve and should not be dealt with then. What did the Speaker say? He said:

> A Bill introduced by a resolution of the House on the report of the Committee of the House, is a money Bill and as such does not come within the half-past twelve o'clock rule.

Here is a decision which defines what is a money Bill, and the Speaker of the House decided that that Bill did not come under the half-past twelve o'clock rule. Further on he decided that a Bill which provided pay and pension was a money Bill, and does not come within the opration of the half-past twelve o'clock rule. I think I have proved, by these quotations, that the Bill before us is a money Bill. It is a Bill based upon resolutions brought before the House of Commons, and those resolutions were submitted to the Governor General in Council, and I am amazed to-day to hear one of the ministers of the Crown asking this House to reject—what? To reject a resolution which has been initiated and sanctioned by the Governor General himself, sustained by the action of the House of Commons when the resolutions were brought forward by the ministry themselves. I say this House has no right to amend that Bill, and to strike out a clause which is essentially a money clause, a clause which forms part of the resolutions brought down to the House of Commons and sanctioned by the Governor General himself.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I would like to observe, in answer to my hon. friend, that if we pass the Bill in the shape it now is, the government could not grant a salary to any one referred to in clause 2.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is not the question at all.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The money would have to be voted. We passed a Bill the other day authorizing the appointment of a judge in the county of Pontiac. The passage of that Bill would not authorize the payment of the money to him.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Why were the resolutions brought down?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Provision was made for the appointment of several parties, amongst others that particular judge, to provide the salary for a judge of the Superior Court of Quebec, in the district of Pontiac. We authorized the government to make such an appointment, but did not provide any salary. I should like to call the attention of my hon. friend from Richmond for a moment to one matter. About 1876 I had charge of a similar Bill in relation to the appointment of a judge in Nova Scotia, and my hon. friend will possibly recollect that he opposed the Bill and succeeded in defeating it.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I moved the six months' hoist.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was a government measure.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Yes; providing for county court judges in Nova Scotia. I moved that amendment and carried it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the same thing.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No; we have a right to reject a Bill.

The CHAIRMAN—The hon. Secretary of State has the floor, unless he wishes to yield.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am done.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I want to call attention to two or three points raised by hon. gentlemen who have addressed the House. The hon. Secretary of State stated, in reference to the Bill, that in it we provide for the appointment of and the salary for an extra judge. That is what the Bill provides. When the estimates come down we shall find there will be a lump sum in the estimates, because the salaries are provided by statute and there is no necessity for itemizing it; but my hon. friend begged the question, if he will permit me to say so. Though we passed that Bill, no objection was taken to it and no amendment proposed. The hon. gentleman from de Lorimier, when he called attention to the fact that a Bill was passed on a certain occasion, and amendments were made to it by this House, failed to establish the essential point, that objection was taken to the amendments which were proposed. I am sure no one knows it better than the Speaker, because he told us so the other day. We are constantly, perhaps unintentionally, violating the rules of the House.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—When the hon. gentleman says there was no exception taken——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not say that no exception was taken; I said the hon. gentleman did not establish the fact.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The House of Commons did not question the authority of the Senate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That does not affect the point at issue. The point at issue between us is whether this House has the power to amend this Bill. We are not dealing with what others have done in the past. As the hon. gentleman has failed to establish that fact, the point that he attempted to make does not amount to anything. Let me refer to the passage which my hon. friend the Secretary of State read from 'May' at page 538 of the sixth edition. 'May' says :

In Bills not confined to matters of aid or taxation, but in which pecuniary burdens——

And this is peculiarly one imposing a pecuniary burden on the revenues of the country :

—are imposed on the people, the Lords may make an amendment, provided they do not alter the intention of the Commons.

Now, I should like to ask the hon. gentleman in all sincerity, whether the striking out of this clause of the Bill is not an amendment which would interfere with and alter the intention of the House of Commons ? What does the House of Commons provide for in this Bill ? For the retirement of a gentleman who has been a judge and subsequently appointed a governor, upon the pension which he would be entitled to receive at the time he was appointed to the governorship, adding the five years he has served. The Bill says : 'His Excellency may'—and you will bear in mind my hon. friend said it was not obligatory on the government because the word 'may' was used. I may be excused as a layman for asking him if it is possible that he does not know that the word 'may' is always used when the language applies to the Sovereign ? It would be considered in our parliamentary practice an act of discourtesy to say to the Crown : 'You shall do so and so,' and the word 'may' usually appears in all statutes. No one knows better than my hon. friend from de Lorimier (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) that the word 'may' is considered mandatory when used in a statute of this character. It says :

His Majesty may, at any time after the expiration of the term of service of such judge as lieutenant-governor, grant to such judge an annuity equal to two-thirds of the salary annexed to the judicial office which he held at the time of his resignation.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Provided the money is voted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It continues :

To commence immediately upon the issue of such letters patent, and to continue thenceforth during his natural life.

Whether the money is voted or not, this clause would compel them to pay all annuities or pensions from the time the letters patent were issued, and consequently, with that law on the statutes, it would be the imperative duty of the government to place that sum in the estimates. I do not think there can be a possible question on this point. And I must again express my surprise that my hon. friend the Secretary of State did not, in reading this page in 'May,' try to explain away the words : 'may amend it provided they do not alter the intention of the Commons.' What was the intention of the Commons in this instance ? The intention was to retire a governor under certain circumstances, and if we strike this out we change and amend the deliberate intention of the House of Commons crystallized into an Act of parliament, to spend a certain sum of money. The question, to my mind, is so clear that I cannot understand why an opposite view is taken.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I propose to show that from the very authority cited by the other side the point is not properly raised. The confusion arises from taking this Bill as if it were voting a sum of money—making an appropriation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—So it is.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It is merely the expression of an opinion. The hon. gentleman from Belleville said that if this clause were passed by the Senate it would become imperative on the part of the government to pay the amount of the pension. It might become imperative as far as the moral duty is concerned, but the hon. gentleman will admit that it would be left to the House of Commons to vote or refuse to vote the appropriation when it is placed before the House. If it is refused, then the pension cannot be paid, and all that would have taken place would be, so to speak, an expression of opinion on the part of the House that a person under the circumstances mentioned in clause 2 of the Bill should be pensioned. The other error on which the point of order is based is this; that it is a clause perfectly independent of the Bill. The main object of the clause is not the appropriation, but it is as to whether such persons should occupy the position mentioned, should be put on the pension list. To elucidate this point before referring to authorities which bear on those distinctions, I would ask the hon. gentleman to suppose that he would be dealing in one clause of the Bill providing for the appointment of an additional Superior Court judge, and in another clause providing for the appointment of an additional County Court judge. Would it be seriously contended that we could not pass the one clause and drop the other, that it would not be open to this honourable House to say that it is advisable that there should be an additional judge on the Superior Court bench, but we are not of opinion that no more county court judges are required ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That same point, so clearly and lucidly put by my hon. friend, was decided against his contention by the late Speaker when it was raised on an amendment suggested by myself, that one clause of this Bill should be dropped.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—That is not an argument.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The ruling may be right or it may be wrong, but that was the ruling.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I cannot express any doubt of the statement made by the hon. gentleman——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Speaker is here and can say whether my memory is correct or not.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—All I can do is to express an opinion, which, of course, cannot go a long way, because I cannot claim a large parliamentary experience. But I base my opinion upon common sense, and I think that when a Bill contains clauses which are intimately connected with one another, that a Bill of that kind is taken as a whole, and this doctrine is supported by Bourinot, but when a Bill deals with different subjects in separate clauses, and one clause relates entirely to one of the subjects dealt with, it would not be common sense to maintain that it would not be open to this House or any other House to deal with each clause on its merits. Let us refer to 'Bourinot' : The hon. member from Stadacona has referred to Bourinot, pages 585 and 586. I refer to the same pages, and I find there the very doctrine I am contending for. I shall not read what he has read, but I shall read the last paragraph :

> It is quite regular to agree to amendments which 'affect charges upon the people, incidentally only and have not been made with that object.'

What is the main object of this Bill ? Is it an appropriation Bill ? If the question before this House was a question of the amount necessary to pay the charge, then it would be ; but the object is a matter of principle as to whether it is advisable that the persons who would come under the conditions set out in clause 2 of this Bill should be pensioned, and I say that this question is the property of this House, and this House can deal freely with it. If we refer to, May, I find this contention perfectly borne out on pages 551 and 552 of the tenth edition, under the title : 'Rejection by the Lords of Provisions Creating a Charge.'

> The right of the Lords to reject a money Bill has been held to include a right to omit provisions creating charges upon the people, when such provisions form a separate subject in the Bill which the Lords are otherwise entitled to amend.

That is the very case.

> The claim of privilege cannot, therefore, be raised by the Commons regarding amendments to such Bill, whereby a whole clause or series of clauses has been omitted by the Lords, which though relating to a charge, and not admitting of amendment, yet concerned a subject separable from the general objects of the Bill.
>
> On the 30th July, 1867, it was very clearly put by Earl Grey and Viscount Eversley, that the right of the Lords to omit a clause which they were unable to amend, relating to a separate subject was equivalent to their right to reject a Bill which they could not amend without an infraction of the privileges of the Commons.

I claim that this supports entirely the doctrine that I have tried to enunciate, that when we deal with a separate clause, we are not obliged to reject the whole Bill, but we may reject the clause. In other words, when the Bill covers matters which could be dealt with by separate Bills, that we are not compelled to reject the whole Bill, but we may deal with the clauses separately and adopt one clause and reject another; and the further contention that in this Bill the money question is a mere incidental matter, the question is not the money itself, but a matter of policy as to whether persons coming under the conditions mentioned in this clause, should be pensioned. We are not dealing with the vote of the money, the money would have to be voted upon a later occasion, and it could be refused or granted as the House desired.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has appealed to our common sense. So shall I, and in doing so I shall with all deference to the hon. gentleman say that to my mind he is entirely mistaken. He has said this Bill is only a matter of policy or an expression of an opinion. I submit it is not so; it is a law imposing a duty upon parliament, and that duty is appropriating public money for the payment of the pensions which are to be paid to the judges here. Hence if this Bill passes parliament, it will be the duty of parliament to vote yearly the sum necessary to pay those pensions. The word 'may' used here, when it is applicable to His Majesty, is equivalent to saying he shall. We do not use the word 'shall' to His Majesty, and the word 'may' is used in that sense. It will be the duty of parliament, after this Bill has passed, to vote the money. This Bill will create a charge in favour of the judges upon the public treasury. In my opinion a money Bill is a Bill which creates a charge upon the public treasury. Surely the Bill is nothing if it is not that. The hon. Secretary of State says we might alter this Bill because the amendment he proposes is for a reduction of the charges. Well, that very contention is an evidence that this Bill is a money Bill, that is, it creates charges, because the amendment could not be a reduction if there were no charges at all. Then, if there are charges upon the public treasury created by this Bill, it is a money Bill, and to judge of that also, we are not to take into consideration the character of the amendment of the hon. gentleman but the character of the Bill itself. If we examine the Bill itself we see that it creates charges which parliament will be unable to divest itself of in future. It seems to me that, under the circumstances if the principle that the Senate cannot alter a money Bill is correct, then the amendment should be rejected.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I would point out to the hon. gentleman this fact: if we read the Bill itself, we find its title is:

An Act to amend the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act, the Exchequer Court Act and the Act respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts.

I will ask the hon. gentleman, who says that this is not a money Bill? It is unnecessary that the money wanted to pay the pensions enacted by the Bill should be mentioned in the Supply Bill, just as it is unnecessary that the Supply Bill should provide for the payment of the salaries of the Supreme Court judges. Does the Supply Bill provide for the salaries of the provincial courts?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It does when they are named.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Of course it does.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Not at all. All those judges are paid out of the consolidated fund.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I produced the statute of this year, in which we are providing for the payment of the judge of the county of Pontiac. Unless we voted a sum of money to pay him, the salary could not be paid.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman shows me a Bill in which he says the salaries are provided for. This Bill provides for the salaries; and inasmuch as it provides for the salaries, they will not appear in the Supply Bill. Am I right or wrong?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—When the statute names the particular officers. But in this particular case, where there is a new appointment, then the salary has to be voted in the statute.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, I dissent completely. This Bill provides that any person who falls under the scope of the Bill shall receive two-thirds of his pension. No necessity for naming the persons. The provision is made, the money required for the payment of those officers is provided for by the Bill itself, and no item whatsoever connected with it will appear in the Supply Bill; the money will be taken out of the consolidated fund in virtue of this Bill when it becomes law, or of any Bill of the kind which passes in this parliament. What does Todd say on this point?

We will now proceed to consider the subject of money Bills, which are of three kinds, tax Bills, Bills of Supply, and Bills of Appropriation.

He makes a division. He shows what is the difference between a tax Bill, a Bill of Supply and a Bill of Appropriation. He says then:

The public revenues of the country are now chiefly obtained from taxes and other imposts which are levied under the authority of Acts of parliament. The whole revenue, from whatever source derived, is now paid into the Bank of England or Ireland to the account of Her Majesty's Exchequer.

The revenues which are thus paid into the Bank of England, to the account of the Exchequer, comprise all the principal revenues of the kingdom, including the customs and inland revenue and the receipts from the post office.

Formerly the proceeds of parliamentary taxes constituted separate and distinct funds, but by the Act of 27 George III., chapter 13, section 47, it was directed that the various duties and taxes should be carried to and constitute a fund to be called 'the Consolidated Fund.'

Besides the cost of its collection the revenue was formerly chargeable with certain judicial and other salaries, pensions and other pensions. By Mr. Gladstone's Act (in 1854) these charges were transferred either to the Consolidated Fund or to the annual supplies to be voted by parliament.

Under the authority of this Act, moreover, a very large number of charges previously paid out of the Consolidated Fund were placed thenceforth in the annual estimates; and by the Act 19 and 20 Victoria, chapter 59, certain superannuations and other charges which still remained payable out of the gross revenues were directed to be removed from the same and placed upon the Consolidated Fund.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This has not been placed against the Consolidated Fund.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is this an Act to amend the Supreme Court Act, the Exchequer Court Act and the Act respecting the judges of provincial courts? If so, money wanted to accomplish the purpose of this legislation will be taken precisely from the same fund which furnishes the salaries and the pensions already established, by the original Acts which this Bill amends. Is that money obliged to be votetd every year by the Supply Bill? No, it is taken out of the Consolidated Fund of the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Will the hon. gentleman allow me to explain for a moment: I have sent for the Supreme Court Act. The Supreme Court Act provides that the court shall be composed of a chief justice and five puisne judges.

There shall be paid and payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, the yearly sums following, as and for the salaries of the said judges, as judges of both courts, that is to say, to the chief justice . . . and to each of the puisne judges. . . .

If we now name a judge for that court, he does not at once become entitled to a salary. Parliament has to vote it the first year. That is the invariable practice. Just as pointed out when we had a Bill before us the other day for appointing a judge for the county of Pontiac, if my hon. friend's opinion was correct, it was not necessary to provide for his salary in the estimates; yet the supplementary estimates laid before the House of Commons a day or two ago, provided for $3,500 for the judge of the county of Pontiac. That is for the first year. Until that has been voted by parliament and is made a charge on the Consolidated Revenue Fund, there is no liability. If this Bill passes and the appropriation is not made by parliament, no salary can be paid.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Not for this year, but it will be paid next year.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Until the Supply Bill comes, and we approve of it here as well as in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I wish to point out to the hon. gentleman this distinction.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have read the law for the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. Secretary of State must credit us with understanding a little, and this is what I understand: When a position is created, like the one suggested by my hon. friend, the salary cannot come under the scope of the Consolidated Revenue Fund for this year, because provisions are made by the Audit Office for the payment of all the salaries, and for all the disbursments any kind which take place in the course of one year; so it is necessary to have a special vote of parliament for the time being, but that vote of parliament for the salary for one year, does not create an obligation upon the country to pay it yearly afterwards. It is the law that creates that, and the law that we are passing to-day creates a charge upon the Consolidated Fund, because that law is an amendment to an Act which by the authority of parliament takes out of the Consolidated Fund the money necessary to pay the salary of the judges. I come now to the point raised by my hon. friend from de Lorimier. He pointed out that right of the House of Lords to omit a clause which they were unable to amend relating to a separate subject was equivalent to the right to reject a Bill which they could not amend from the Commons. But this applies only to those money Bills which the lords could otherwise amend, a class in which the present Bill cannot find its place. And further more it is stated :

The claim of privilege cannot therefore be raised by the Commons regarding the amendments to such Bills, whereby a whole clause or series of clauses, has been omitted by the Lords, which, though relating to a charge and not admitting of amendment, yet concerned a subject separable from the general objects of the Bill.

Is the subject which is asked to be eliminated by the amendment separable from the general object of the Bill ? It is one of the objects of the Bill itself. It is not a penalty imposed or something else that would be separable from the general object of the Bill; it is quite the object of the Bill, and so much the object of the Bill that it was introduced in the Commons by a resolution carrying with it the sanction of the Governor General. What is the object of the Bill ? The object of the Bill is to grant pensions, and the hon. gentleman cites as an example the fact that in one case the House of Lords omitted a clause which was separable from the object of the Bill, and which was not in accordance with the object of the Bill. That is the precedent he wants to impress upon this House. The reading of the remarks made by May on the question shows that in this case the precedent cited cannot apply. The hon. gentleman must not forget that this is a money clause, that this is one of the clauses introduced in the House of Commons upon a resolution, and that resolution makes it a money clause, and we have a standing order in the House of Commons which says that the Senate cannot alter the conditions of this kind of grant.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Speaking of the Bill which we passed a short time ago for the appointment of some 15 judges, are we to draw the conclusion from the hon. gentleman's remarks that the Senate has power to strike out the word 'fifteen' and insert the word fourteen' ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think so.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is consistent with the position the hon. gentleman has taken. I omitted to call attention to one matter when I spoke. The hon. gentleman opposite says we have the power to reduce, but not to increase. That power exists in the Commons, but not in the Senate. The Senate has no right to increase or reduce; if we had we could take the Supply Bill and chop it to pieces.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—That is a money Bill, but this is not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The authorities say that this is a money Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon.

Hon Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I beg pardon. If the authority the hon. gentleman has quoted on this question is reliable, the hon. gentleman is wrong. If he refers to Blackmore's 'Speakers' Decisions,' he will find that Mr. Denison as well as Mr. Rand, decided that a Bill providing pay and pension—and these are pensions—for the Irish constabulary and police was a money Bill. I leave it at that. We accept these decisions as authority. I want to emphasize what my hon. friend said in reference to that portion of May's decision which was referred to by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry. I confess when I heard him I was somewhat staggered, not being able to hear very clearly, but upon reading the whole clause, I think it clearly bears out the contention of the hon. gentleman from Stadacona. It says :

The claim of privilege cannot therefore be raised by the Commons regarding amendments to such Bills whereby a whole clause or series of clauses has been omitted by the Lords which, though relating to a charge, and not admitting of amendment, yet concern a subject separable from the general object of the Bill

Is the clause which we are now considering separable from the intention or provisions of the Bill? The Bill deals exclusively with the pensioning of judges, and the Lieutenant Governor of Quebec has been a judge, and it provides that the Lieutenant Governor, upon his retirement, having been a judge, is entitled to a pension just the same as if he had never vacated the bench, and it is clear that this clause, in the opinion of May, as read by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry, comes within the purview and within the meaning of a money Bill. Of course, we shall leave that question with the Speaker to decide, and then we shall know what position we are in. I merely want to repeat what I said to my hon. friends a few moments ago. I took precisely the same position the hon. gentleman did upon a question which was before the House two or three years ago.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman should have maintained that position.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It was ruled against me and we are now taking the grounds based upon the ruling of that time.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I desire to say a few words in reply to the question which was directed to me at the beginning of the second speech of the hon. gentleman from Stadacona. I shall answer it by putting another question. I have here the estimates which provide for the salaries of the judges of the province of Ontario, and it is the same thing for each province, salaries of the chief justices and four other justices, and so on, and I would ask, if this Bill were passed without amendment, if any money could be paid by the government before the estimates are placed before the House and revoted next year by the House of Commons, which would provide the money required to pay the salaries mentioned?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does the hon. gentleman want an answer?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I say that it cannot be. The money which would be paid would have to appear and it would be optional with the House of Commons to refuse to pay.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I will draw the hon. gentleman's attention to this fact: in the estimates to which he has been just referred there are two parts. There is a part to be voted by the House and a part that is already provided by law. As this matter today is not provided for by law, and as it is not voted by the House, it would be necessary for this year, if you want to pay the sum, to have it voted by the House.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—That is all I want.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—But it is voted by the House because it is not yet the law. When it becomes the law it will be put with the pensions in the proper place.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Then I wish to draw attention to the wording of the rule of the House of Commons, No. 89, which reads as follows:—

> All aids and supplies granted to Her Majesty by the parliament of Canada are the sole gift of the House of Commons and all Bills for granting such aids and supplies ought to begin with the House, as it is the undoubted right of the House to direct, limit and appoint in all such Bills the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations and qualifications of such grants which are not alterable by the Senate.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear. Not alterable by the Senate.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—But does this Bill fall under those words 'all aids and supplies granted to Her Majesty by the parliament of Canada.'

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is it appropriating money?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—This Bill is not for an appropriation of money. There is no money. The money will not be paid out of the Consolidated Fund. The whole argument of the hon. gentleman is based on the fact that it is a Bill to amend the Exchequer Court Act. That is a mere title, but has it any connection at all with the Exchequer Court?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—No connection whatever. It is merely a matter of convenience. Properly speaking it should have been made the subject of an independent Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Can the hon. gentleman tell me whether a resolution was passed.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman has had the floor. He will find the answer to his question by referring to clause 54 of the British North America Act, which provides :—

It shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address, or Bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue or of any tax or impost, to any purpose that has any tax or first recommended to that House by message of the Governor General in the session in which such vote, resolution, address, or Bill is proposed.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Any Bill that may entail an expenditure is founded on a resolution approved by a message from the Governor General, but that does not make them all money Bills.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It does.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Anyway, I think the arguments which I have presented to this honourable House, that it is a matter perfectly independent of all the other matters mentioned in the Bill, should be conclusive, as giving the right to this House to deal with it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I should like to point out where we would be landed if the contention of my hon. friends opposite were to prevail. We have before us here an important Bill called the National Transportation Bill in which there are a number of money clauses. Is the Senate at liberty to make changes in those clauses ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No.

Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not believe the Senate can.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am very happy to hear it, because I find that in appropriating money in this railway Bill, it is not that the Governor in Council ' may ' do such things, but that the government ' shall ' pay interest upon the amount of bonds equal to the principal of the bonds guaranteed by the government on account of the construction of the mountain section, &c.

There are several money clauses.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—That is a contract.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I know, but the contract is part of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—It is a contract, not with the government, but with His Majesty.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was interrupted a few minutes ago when I had in my hands an authority I should have liked to submit to the House, particularly for the consideration of those gentlemen who were taking as the standard whether the proposition should be submitted by a resolution to the House of Commons. I find it laid down in Denison's and Brand's decisions of the House of Commons that where it is intended to purchase property, for instance, or make a certain expenditure, in cases of that kind it is not absolutely necessary, because the money has to be voted afterwards, and therefore in those cases the resolution is unnecessary. It has been pointed out over and over again that until parliament votes the money there is no authority to pay it. Even if we pass the Bill in its present shape we could not pay the pensions until the Supply Bill containing the necessary appropriation is passed. I refer to page 25 of this book :—

A Bill to enable the government to take ground for public purposes but not providing funds.

Now, that is a parallel case. This is authorizing the government to spend the money, but not appropriating the funds.

Need not originate in Committee of the Whole House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Certainly.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is exactly the point.

Mr. Cowper moved for leave to bring in the Bill.

Motion made and question proposed,—That leave be given to bring in a Bill to enable the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings to acquire additional lands for improving the site of the new government offices in Downing Street and the approaches thereto.

This Bill is to give authority to the Governor in Council to pay superannuation money. That superannuation money is not provided for in this Bill, it has to be provided for later on by parliament. The same point comes up in another case mentioned on the following page of the same book.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—We could not change the Supply Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, but it has to be passed on. We can pass it or reject it as a whole.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—We could not amend the Supply Bill by taking out this particular item ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The mere passing of this Bill does not impose a charge on the revenues of the country. Until the money has been voted in the Supply Bill that pension cannot be paid.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But you would not vote it until you had the authority to pay it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The same way with the National Transportation Bill. Although provision is made in the Bill for the payment of certain money, that money will have to be voted in the Supply Bill. The other case to which I was about to refer is as follows :

> If a Bill does not impose a charge upon the public, although it is intimated that at a future day another Bill will be proposed to replenish and increase an existing fund out of which the works under the Bill under consideration would be defrayed, it is not necessary to go into committee as a preliminary.

What I maintain is, that these two cases are parallel to the one under consideration. It makes provision for an expenditure but does not authorize the expenditure. The expenditure has been authorized by the Supply Bill or by statute.

The CHAIRMAN—Is it your pleasure that I rise ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) is confusing the two Bills. A Bill purporting to give the government power to acquire certain lands, but not fixing the price to be paid, is quite different from a Bill which enacts that two-thirds of a certain sum shall be paid to certain persons if they come under the scope of that Act. This Bill provides for the payment ; we do not need any Supply Bill to provide the money. If you want the money this year, very well, put it in the Supply Bill ; but if you do not want the money this year, next year the provision for it will appear in makng up the estimates.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, the Auditor General would not pay it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Yes, because he would have the authority of the law.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, because no money is voted.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—He would not want it voted ; he would take it out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. We do not vote every year the money required for the payment of pensions to judges. It is paid under Act of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The statute limits the number.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If an Act of parliament says it shall be paid to such a class of persons, it must be paid to such a class of persons. I call attention to an admission made a few minutes ago by the hon. Secretary of State. He says that we are allowed to make amendment to the National Transportation Bill because it is not a money Bill. I do not know ; we must study that a little. I always thought it was a money Bill, and that we had no right to amend it. Not long ago, just last week, we were in committee here on a Bill to provide two additional judges for the province of Ontario. When it was in committee the Speaker of this House said : 'You cannot amend this Bill because it is a money Bill.' The remark can be found in the debates. That Bill was of the same character as this Bill.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill, but, a point of order having been raised in committee the decision of the Speaker was requested.

The SPEAKER—I feel in a somewhat awkward position. The question on which my opinion is asked is an exceedingly important one, and had I known that it was coming up to-day, I should have taken care to fortify myself by reference to the authorities. I do not seek now to excuse myself for not having done so ; I simply state the fact. The reason why I did not study the question was, that when this Bill was before the House at a former stage the Secretary of State intimated that he would move to omit this second clause when the House went into committee on the Bill, and the hon. leader of the opposition, who, I suppose, spoke for those opposed to the Bill, intimated that there was no objection to that—at least I gathered from the way the hon. gentleman spoke that no question was to be raised. I am not finding fault with any one ; I am simply trying to explain my own negligence in not having studied the question as I should.

If this were the first time a question of this kind had come before the Senate, I should be disposed to hold, as the hon. Secretary of State intimated he thought the House should hold, that it was my duty as Speaker of the Senate, to extend or amplify the jurisdiction of this House as far as I could reasonably do so. In that case I should have been disposed to say that it was for the House of Commons and not for the Senate to question the right of this House to amend the Bill. But, hon. gentlemen, this is not the first time this question has come before the House; and while previous decisions are not perhaps absolutely binding on the Senate or on the Speaker, I should be very sorry to decide the question adversely to decisions given by previous Speakers. I have not, unfortunately, looked up the various cases in which decisions have been given, but I remember one case in which I happened to be concerned myself. It was, I think, in the session of 1885. There was a Bill before the Senate providing for the construction of a railway from Montreal to Salisbury, in the province of New Brunswick. The hon. gentleman from Richmond (Hon. Mr. Miller) was at that time in the Chair of the House. I moved an amendment, not dealing directly with the money involved, but making some provision with respect to the way in which the work was to be done, and the Speaker of that day ruled against me. Subsequently another amendment was moved to the effect that the work should be begun simultaneously at the two ends of the line. That did not seem to be a resolution which very materially affected the money portion of the Bill, but it was ruled that that was out of order also. Then in the session of 1886 there was a somewhat similar case. Reference has been made to the case under my immediate predecessor. On the other hand there is the fact that in the session of 1898 a Bill, which was for all practical purposes on all fours with this, was amended in this House. The case was a little stronger then than it has been put by the hon. gentleman from de Lorimier, who was under the impression that the Senate had simply stricken out the clause of the Bill. That clause was as follows:

1. Subsection 1 of section 2 of the Act respecting the judges of the provincial courts, chapter 138 of the Revised Statutes, is repealed and the following substituted therefor:—

'2. Every judge of a county court in any of the provinces of Canada shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, hold office during good behaviour and his residence within the county or union of counties for which the court is established: Provided that no person should hold or retain office as such judge after he has completed the seventy-fifth of his age.'

2. The subsection so substituted shall apply as well to judges now holding office as to judges to be hereafter appointed; provided that any judge now holding office who is, by reason only of his having completed the seventy-fifth year of his age, disqualified to hold or retain his office, shall be entitled to a pension under section 15 of the said Act, all mentioned in that section.

The House did not strike out the clause but amended it. The amendment that was made here struck out the second subclause and substituted for it the following:

The subsection so substituted shall apply only to judges to be hereafter appointed.

It strikes me if that there had been no previous decisions I should look upon that as indicating that the feeling and practice of the House. But it happens that in that case the question of order was not raised. Hon. gentlemen know that we are continually doing things which are not in order, just because the question of order is not raised, and I am afraid we should not regard the fact that we did nothing in a case as involving a very strong argument.

We have to consider now whether this is a money Bill or not. I think it is a money Bill. It has been stated, and not denied, that it was introduced by resolution in the House of Commons. No hon. gentleman, I suppose, would deny that the Bill put through committee yesterday with respect to the salaries of judges of the courts of the province of Ontario was a money Bill. That Bill dealt with the salaries of the judges who are sitting on the bench. This Bill amends substantially the same Acts which that Bill proposed to amend; it deals exclusively with retiring allowances to the same and other judges. The object of the Bill is to enable the government to pay retiring allowances under certain circumstances; and, taking that fact in to consideration, I cannot honestly come to any other conclusion than that this Bill is a money Bill. The fact that the money has to appear in the estimates does not make any material difference; because as the hon. gentleman from Stadacona (Hon. Mr. Landry) has pointed out the estimates are divided into two classes. There are sums which have to be voted by the House of Commons, because there is no statutory provision for them, and there are sums put in merely for the purpose of book-keeping, for which provision is made by statutes and if this Bill passes, these retiring allowances would appear in next year's Supply Bill under the head of those which are provided for by statute.

I cannot therefore concur in the views of hon. gentlemen who think that this Bill is not a money Bill. Some hon. gentlemen took the ground that this Bill is not imperative, but no money Bill is imperative. If the government do not choose to expend the money which they are authorized to expend they are not obliged to do so; and, while I have the greatest deference for the hon. gentleman who used that argument, I do not think there is much weight in it. A point which I think of some importance is that one brought up by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry. He quoted from Bourinot, page 587:

It is quite regular, however, to agree to amendments which 'affect charges upon the people incidentally only, and have not been made with that object.'

I thought at first that there was a good deal of force in that argument; but, after all, the object of this Bill is to provide these retiring allowances and the Bill does not deal with the charges on the revenue incidentally only. I do not think the citation from Bourinot is conclusive. Then the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry took this ground, and, it is the one point upon which at the present moment I entertain any doubt—that this was an independent clause—a clause which might be a Bill itself, and if we struck it out we were doing the same thing as if we rejected an independent money Bill, and that undoubtedly the Senate had the right to reject a money Bill. On this point I cannot say that I feel very clear or strong. I wish to refer now to the cases cited from 'Blackmore' by the hon. Secretary of State:

A Bill to enable the government to take ground for public purposes but not providing the funds, need not originate in Committee of the Whole House.

In that case, Speaker Denison said that the Bill did not give property. The funds for that purpose should be voted afterwards, in Committee of the Whole House.

But in this case the money need not be voted afterwards, once this Bill becomes law. Then I turn again to the argument of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique), which, as I have stated, is one as to which I have not any very strong opinion. I shall read to the House the passage from May referred to by the hon. gentleman. At page 551:

The right of the Lords to reject a money Bill has been held to include a right to omit provisions creating charges upon the people when such provisions form a separate subject in a Bill which the Lords are otherwise entitled to amend.

Now, the question is whether this is a Bill which we would be otherwise entitled to amend. This Bill deals with only one subject, the payment of retiring allowances to judges:

The claim of privilege cannot therefore be raised by the Commons regarding amendments to such Bills, whereby a whole clause, or series of clauses has been omitted by the Lords, which, though relating to a charge and not admitting of amendment, yet concern a subject separable from the general objects of the Bill.

Now, is this a subject separable from the general object of the Bill? I do not feel clear on that.

On the 30th July, 1867, it was very clearly put by Earl Grey and Viscount Eversley, that the right of the Lords to omit a clause which they were unable to amend relating to a separate subject, was equivalent to their right to reject a Bill which they could not amend without an infraction of the privileges of the Commons.

Now, if this Bill dealt with other subjects besides these retiring allowances to judges; if it dealt even with other questions with respect to the judiciary, I should be disposed to hold that a portion of the citation from 'May,' read by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry would apply. As it is, I do not feel clear that it does. I really think it is a question which the House ought to decide for itself; but if I am asked to decide now, I think I shall have to decide as a matter of order that it is not in the power of this House to strike out the second clause of this Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—In view of the hesitancy of the Speaker in rendering his decision and of his declaration that the House should perhaps decide the question for itself, I move, seconded by Mr. Young: 'That the decision of the Speaker on this point be not concurred in by the House.'

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Have we a right to speak on that motion ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It is for the Speaker to say.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—This rule of May——

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I rise to a point of order: I want to know if the hon. gentleman can speak on that appeal from the Speaker's decision ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Every member has a right to speak on a motion; I do not want to discuss the Bill at all.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I should like to have the ruling of the Speaker.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Is there a motion before the House ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Yes, an appeal from the decision of the Speaker.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Is there any authority for shutting off discussion on a motion ? If the hon. gentleman takes a point of order he should state it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I consider that there is no discussion upon a motion to appeal from the decision of the Speaker.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am not discussing the appeal from the decision of the Speaker. I have no right to discuss it. I do not want to discuss it, but as the decision of the Speaker is submitted to the whole House, I want to point out that the only question which the hon. gentleman does not find very clear applies to a Bill which the Lords had the right to amend.

Some hon. MEMBERS—Order, order.

The SPEAKER—My impression is that there cannot be any discussion on the appeal, but to tell the honest truth, I cannot lay my hands on the authority for that opinion.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Surely my hon. friend from de Lorimier and the Speaker do not intend to choke free discussion in this House, unless they can point to some authority, no matter how vague it may be, to support the contention of the Speaker. I do not think the House will submit to any such decision as that. If there is to be a decision along those lines, the House should know it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Rule 28 reads as follows:

> The Speaker stands uncovered when speaking to the Senate, and if called upon to explain a point of order or practice, he is to state the rule applicable to the case, and also to decide the question when required, subject to an appeal to the Senate.

He has given his ruling, and the hon. gentleman from Stadacona rose to make some remarks, and he is called to order by an hon. gentleman. Of course, the Chair must decide whether he has a right to speak or not.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I would ask the hon. gentleman if he can cite the rule. May reads as follows:

> The right of the Lords to reject a money Bill has been held to include——

Some hon. MEMBERS—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The Chair has decided there shall be no discussion on this matter.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The Speaker did not decide anything of the kind.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I heard him make the decision.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman did not hear well.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The Speaker is looking up the point of order as to whether the hon. gentleman has a right to speak.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I have no objection to wait, but I do not want to be governed by the hon. gentleman behind me.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I told the hon. gentleman last week that I would get back at him.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the hon. gentleman will take back what he did not hear, it is all right. I will call the hon. Speaker's attention to rule 20, which reads:—

> A senator may speak to any question before the Senate.

These are our rules; I could discuss the point of order.

The SPEAKER—I wish some hon. gentleman would cite me the authority for the doctrine, that there is no discussion on an appeal from the decision of the Speaker.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

The SPEAKER—Hon. gentlemen, from the best information that I can get, I think there is no debate allowed on an appeal from the Speaker's decision.

Hon. MEMBERS—Hear, hear.

The SPEAKER—So that the question will now be on the resolution moved by the Hon. Mr. Dandurand, seconded by Hon. Mr. Young, that this House does not concur in the ruling of his Honour the Speaker on the point of order raised on the second clause of Bill No. (243) An Act to amend the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act, the Exchequer Court Act and the Act respecting the judges of provincial courts.

The House divided on the motion which was carried on the following division.

Contents, 30; non-contents, 20.

CONTENTS:

Hon. Messrs.

Béique,	Lovitt,
Casgrain,	McGregor,
(de Lanaudière),	McHugh,
Church,	McSweeney,
Coffey,	Pelletier
Cox,	(Sir Alphonse),
Cloran,	Robertson,
Dever,	Scott,
Domville,	Shehyn,
David,	Tessier,
Ellis,	Thibaudeau
Fiset,	(Rigaud),
Frost,	Thibaudeau
Fulford,	(la Vallière),
Godbout,	Yeo,
Kerr (Cobourg),	Young.—30.
King,
Legris,

NON-CONTENTS.

Hon. Messrs.

Baird,	Kirchhoffer,
Bernier,	Landry,
Bolduc,	Lougheed,
Boucherville, de	MacKeen,
Bowell	McDonald (C. A.),
(Sir Mackenzie),	McKay (Truro),
Carling	McMillan,
(Sir John),	Miller,
Casgrain	Montplaisir,
(Windsor),	Perley,
Dobson,	Vidal.—20.
Forget,

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Read the names.

The names having been read,

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I call attention to the fact that the hon. Mr. Ferguson has not voted.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am paired with the Hon. Mr. Watson, who is absent attending the funeral of the late Senator Landerkin.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I call attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman from DeLorimier did not vote.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I am paired with the Hon. Mr. Owens. If I had voted, naturally I would have voted for my motion.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Naturally ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I call attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman from Charlottetown (Hon. Mr. McDonald) did not vote.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I)—I am paired with the hon. senator from Vancouver.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I call attention to the fact that the Hon. Speaker did not vote.

An hon. MEMBER—He is interested.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Not pecuniarily.

Hon. Sir ALPHONSE PELLETIER—I think that I am pointed to in that matter as one of the predecessors. I have before me a decision which I rendered when I was Speaker, and I am quite able to defend the position I took, which is not at all analogous to this one.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—I think that I am pointed to in that matter as one of the predecessors. I have before me a decision which I rendered when I was Speaker, and I am quite able to defend the position I took, which is not at all analogous to this one.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We shall see that just now.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would desire to point out to the House that His Honour the Speaker has given a decision upon a point of order regarding which no authority can be found either in May or Todd or Bourinot, so far as research can ascertain whether there is any authority upon the subject, and as doubtless this will be regarded as a precedent in the future, and as for years there has not been an appeal from the Speaker's decision, I think it would be desirable that the Speaker should elaborate to some extent the reasons which led to the decision that there could be no debate upon a motion of appeal from his decision. I am not criticising the finding in any sense, but as the point is a novel one, and as there is no authority upon the subject, and as it may possibly again arise, I think it would be desirable in the interests of our practice in this House that there should be some elaboration of the point.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would go a little further and suggest that the objection taken to the motion for the striking out of that clause upon the point of order, and the decision of the Speaker should be elaborated and entered upon the Minutes, otherwise the vote which stands there disagreeing will be meaningless; no one will know what we are voting for or against, and I trust the Speaker will commit to writing the reasons which he gave for the decision which he rendered, and then it will be a precedent in the future to refer to. If that be not done, we shall have the bare vote of condemnation of the Speaker's decision without knowing why the House so voted. I think the Speaker will recognize the force of that suggestion, and I think the House will approve of it.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I do not think the proposition of the leader of the opposition can be very well carried out, because the Speaker might, having taken a longer time to look up the authorities and prepare his decision, possibly it might have influenced his judgment before he gave his decision.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Or he might have died before giving it.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Yes. He might also, we think, very reasonably have come to a different conclusion had he taken that course.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. member is discussing the decision of the Speaker, and he has no right to do that.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—No, I had no intention of discussing the decision of the Speaker.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the hon. gentleman was not doing it with or without intention, he was doing it at all events.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I was pointing out an inconvenience which might arise from following the suggestion of the leader of the opposition.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is no excuse. I quite approve of the suggestion he makes had the Speaker taken that course, but he did not; and I find on page 298 of the Journals of this House that while Hon. Sir Charles Alphonse Pelletier was Speaker that he gave a decision upon a case somewhat similar to this, and the reasons are given there. All I ask is that the reasons for the decision just given by the Speaker be entered upon the Journals, and then the vote which we have given will be intelligible to those who read it in the future. There was no appeal against the decision of the Speaker in the case to which I allude—it is not necessary for me to go into the merits of it; but if I did, I think I could controvert the position taken by the hon. gentlemen opposite. I am not going to do that; but in the interest of the rules of the House I think the Speaker will accept my suggestion and the House will justify it; otherwise, it will appear that hon. gentlemen have voted and do not want the reasons to be put upon record, so that people will know hereafter what they did vote for or against.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The record will be in 'Hansard.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is not the place to look for it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is more than that, there was a motion made in committee asking the chairman of the committee to report progress, to bring before the Speaker the question of order and to ask the decision of the Speaker. All that should come as res gestae in the Orders of the House.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It will be in 'Hansard.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no doubt the Speaker, in his judgment, will exercise the discretion the House has requested him to use in connection with this matter, and as is has been pretty well discussed I would move that the Speaker do now leave the Chair, and that we resume discussion of the Bill in Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I don't think the Speaker ought to use his discretion in this matter; it is his duty, as every member of this House should know the causes which led to his vote and the reasons why he voted. There can be no objection to that.

The House resumed, in Committee of the Whole, consideration of Bill (243) an Act to amend the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act, the Exchequer Court Act and the Act respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The motion I made was to strike out subsection 2.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I would ask the hon. gentleman to state the reasons why he wants to omit this clause, which comes from the House of Commons on resolutions brought down with the recommendation of the Governor General.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Every gentleman here is a free agent and entitled to the exercise of his own judgment. This clause introduces a new principle into our system. There is no precedent for it. It is a very dangerous principle, and, as has been pointed out by the hon. leader of the opposition, would enable the government to give any man a pension for life by simply having him on the bench for a few months and lieutenant governor for a few months. The principle is a vicious one.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Was that principle adopted by the Governor in Council?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The first I saw of it was in the Bill before the House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Then the hon. gentleman was not in council when it was passed? The hon. gentleman says the first time he saw it was when it was in the form of a Bill before this House. If we must take his word, he was not in council when it was prepared or he did not see it then. I should like to have the reasons why this clause is to be struck out.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman is not entitled to any more than I have given. I have given good and substantial reasons why the clause should not be in our legislation.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend is a member of the government which recommended this Bill by message. Is it therefore possible that my hon. friend should not know everything about the genesis of this Bill? It cannot be possible that this clause was not inserted in this Bill to meet some case in the public affairs of the country, and my hon. friend is surely able to tell the House what particular case or cases this is intended to meet. I think it is due to the Senate that we should know why this provision was inserted in the Bill. There must be the case of some judge who retired to accept a lieutenant governorship and my hon. friend must certainly know who that judge was, and what governorship he accepted for whom the provision was intended to be made. It is due to the committee that we should get this information.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—And if I were allowed to suggest, I think, it is due to the Senate that the hon. Secretary of State should give us some explanation for his sudden change of base. He announced from his place in the Senate the other day that it was a part of the policy of the present government to govern by department and that he was shocked at any suggestion being made that any proposition made by one of the members of the government should be criticised. I should like to hear what the hon. Secretary of State has to say upon that point in connection with this case. This measure comes down based upon a resolution after being authorized for submission to parliament by His Excellency the Governor General. It is submitted as a government measure by the Department of Justice. The Minister of Justice himself was responsible for the measure, and we find now that his colleague, the hon. Secretary of State, after announcing that it was the policy and the intention of the government to stand by the heads of the departments, has turned tail upon his colleagues and seeks to strangle a Bill that was introduced in due form with the undivided authority of the government of which he is a member. I should like to hear his explanation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no explanation to offer other than this; it is perfectly free for a government to withdraw its measures or any part of them at any time. If I could charge my memory, I dare say I could find a great many cases where measures or parts of measures have been withdrawn. Public opinion declares against a measure and parliament wishes to consult public opinion and drops that measure. It is a common thing in England and the United States. Under popular form of government when the press and the people speak out, the government should re-echo the sentiments of the people and express in parliament public opinion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I may say I am fully in accord with the last remarks made by the hon. gentleman. That has often occurred, but I question whether in the history of England or of any country in which a constitutional form of government exists, the hon. gentleman ever found one minister leading a House as the hon. Secretary of State is to-day, introducing a Bill and affirming what the principles of that Bill are, declaring that it was the policy of the government, and when one of the members of the opposition pointed out a defect in the wording of it, he comes down and asks to have the clause struck out of the Bill with the declaration that the principle involved in the Bill was 'vicious.' This is a Bill that was solemnly prepared in the office of the Minister of Justice, involving a new principle and a new policy and it would be supposed under responsible government that every member of the government knew what was being done, and if he did not know, it was his duty to find out, and under the circumstances he was equally responsible with his colleagues; yet we find one minister of the Crown coming before a deliberative body, in order to justify the position he has taken, declaring that the principle involved in a Bill prepared by and carried through the Commons by his colleague the Minister of Justice as 'vicious.'

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If any one who has read anything of constitutional history, I care not how little his knowledge may be or how restricted his reading may be, can point out a precedent for an exhibition of that kind, I shall be very glad to see it or to hear it. I can only say that under constitutional government in this country, I hope that such an exhibition will never be repeated. We are supposed to govern the country under rules and procedure similar to those which govern the mother country and to hear one minister denouncing the action of his colleagues, while sitting at the same council board, while consulting with him on all questions that come before the public, telling the House that he moves to strike out a clause in their own Bill because the principle therein is vicious, is not an exhibition of the unanimity, and the brotherly love that should exist between members of a government. It is only another evidence, if the hon. gentleman's statement is correct, and I am not prepared to deny it, that he knew nothing whatever of this Bill until it was presented in this House. That is his own declaration. It only proves what I have repeatedly pointed out, the unconstitutional manner in which the cabinet are carrying on the government of the country. I shall not comment upon the vote that has been taken on the ruling of the Speaker, because that would perhaps be improper and indelicate; but I do protest against a violation of what we understand as responsible government in the hon. minister declaring on the floor of the House to be published to the world that the very principle of the Bill which was prepared by his colleague the Minister of Justice, and carried through the House of Commons on the recommendation and support of the Minister of Justice on resolutions introduced, with a message from the government as it involved an expenditure of money carried through that House, sent to this chamber, moved by the Hon. Secretary of State, and then we are told by him that the principle involved therein is vicious. Well, God protect us from any such government as that, or rather protect the country against any such mode of governing in the future. Perhaps I am speaking strongly, but the circumstances only suggest strong language. I might go further than that. It shows there is no unanimity in the cabinet that is governing the country, and there being no unanimity one minister never knows what his colleague is producing and in order to get rid of what he calls a vicious clause of a Bill he has to vote in condemnation of his own Speaker. I compliment the hon. gentleman on the position which he occupies.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I take the opportunity of saying a word or two on this matter. It appears to me the position is a little misunderstood by the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat.

Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman is very much mistaken. I understand it exactly.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Forgive me if I say that I think the hon. gentleman misunderstands the matter for two reasons.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman himself might be in error.

Hon. Mr. KERR—First, because a portion of his remarks indicated that he did not understand it, and secondly, those remarks were inconsistent with what the hon. gentleman said a few days ago in this House. I venture to point out that the resolution which passed by resolution to the House on which this Bill is introduced is one with reference to an Act to amend the Supreme and Exchequer Court Acts and it deals with a subject which is dealt with in the Supreme and Exchequer Court Acts where hon. gentlemen will find provision made that under certain circumstances a retiring allowance shall be given to judges who have served a certain term. The circumstances are very express in the Act as it stood and it provides for, in cases where judges have served a period in office or suffer from a permanent infirmity. The general provisions of this Bill, without the clause in question, deal with that proposition, and the Bill in that form with that section embodied would be perfectly proper, reasonable and within the lines of a proper and reasonable amendment. The clause in question is one which is not germane to any principles that exist or to be found in the Act respecting the Supreme and Exchequer Court, of which this is an amendment. The principle in the one case is the service of the judge and infirmity. In this Bill the condition is service of a judge and attaining a certain number of years, which are supposed to carry with them a species of infirmity, or, at all events, it may be inferred that the service of the country would be better promoted as a whole by the retirement of such judge.

The proposal in the second clause of the Bill, the one which it is proposed to strike out, is not germane to the rest of the Bill. That proposal is to provide, not for a judge who resigns and takes his retirement allowance, but that a judge who has resigned his office for another, and has occupied that other position—in other words provides that a retiring lieutenant governor is to be dealt with and treated as though he were a judge, an entirely different proposition and quite foreign to the provisions of the Act, not on the same lines, and, therefore, one which was not at all necessarily covered by any such proposition as the one in this Bill. So I think I am justified in what I said in reference to the opposition expressed just now by the hon. senator from Hastings. My second proposition is borne out by the recollection of all the hon. gentlemen present who heard him the other day express the view, which will not be disputed —that he had intended, if the hon. leader of the Senate had not done so, to strike out this clause. Under those circumstances, I think the position I have taken is sustained, and for both reasons there is an inconsistency. Just let me say further now, and as the hon. senator has come in, the attitude which he has taken here shows that not only may there be the differences that he has tried to point out between the members of a legislative body, but there will be occasions when an hon. senator will differ from himself, as for instance when the hon. gentleman to-day declined to allow this clause to be struck out he is differing from himself a few days ago when he intimated his intention to strike out or oppose the clause.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Could the hon. gentleman prove what he says ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I am stating a thing which occurred in the House. If the hon. gentleman wants more proof of it, I leave myself in the hands of the House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I made no such declaration. What I stated was this : In pointing out the peculiar wording of the proposed clause that it would have a certain effect if it became law, I thought of suggesting an amendment in order to avoid that difficulty. I did not intimate that I would move to strike it out or that I would vote against it. I remember distinctly what I said, and I am in the hands of the House as to the statement I made. I know my remark has been perverted to that extent. An hon. gentleman afterwards said to me you proposed to do so and so. I said : 'You are mistaken, there is a defect in the Bill and I pointed out what I thought the defect was.' The defect in the Bill as it is worded is in providing that if a judge was appointed to a governorship and occupied the position but a very short time, he could retire upon two-thirds the salary he had been receiving as judge at the expiration of the term of the governorship. I thought then, and I repeat now, that that portion ought to be amended.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—As the occasion seems to be one for the expression of frankness, particularly on the part of the government, I wonder that my hon. friend the Secretary of State has not been even more frank than he has been. In case hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the House should think the quality of our simplicity is as beautiful as it seems to be, I might say that it is a well known fact, not only in this House but throughout the country, why the government on the present occasion is seeking to omit clause two of this Bill, and there is no reason why hon. gentlemen in this House should disguise the fact. It is well known that this clause was inserted in the Bill for the purpose of giving an advantage to a political friend of the government who, on one occasion, was a judge and afterwards became a lieutenant governor, but having introduced the clause and passed it through the House of Commons they then ascertained that a political opponent would enjoy an equal advantage, and rather than permit a political opponent to stand on the same equality as a political friend they at once came to the conclusion that the clause must be omitted. My hon. friend may shake his head.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, the hon. gentleman is wrong.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I repeat with emphasis the fact which is well known not only in the province of Quebec but elsewhere. It is well known that the late lieutenant governor of Quebec, Mr. Angers, could take advantage of this particular clause, having been once a judge and afterwards a lieutenant governor, and would also profit by the passage of this legislation. It is a well known fact also that the strongest political influence was brought to bear on the government from the province of Quebec for the omission of this clause. My hon. friend the Secretary of State a few moments ago expressed himself as having been shocked, perfectly shocked, when this Bill came into the House, and he observed that clause two was introducing what he termed a vicious principle, and while acknowledging that it was solemnly passed by the government of which he was a member and solemnly passed by the House of Commons, yet it now dawns upon him as a revelation, and the viciousness of the principle embodied in the clause so really shocked his virtue, that he felt impelled, notwithstanding the government responsibility attached to its introduction and passage through the House of Commons, to assume the responsibility of asking this House to strike it out. On being confronted with the fact that he was a member of the government and must necessarily have been a party to the passage of the clause in council, and have been familiar with the fact that it passed through the House of Commons through the medium of the government, he was then impelled to say that the government on reconsideration really discovered that they were human beings, that they were fallible, that there was a possibility of their erring, that they had erred when they introduced into this Bill a vicious policy, and in a moment of contrition they had asked my hon. friend the Secretary of State to have it struck out in the Senate. So far so good. There is a candour about that statement which is really virtuous, particularly for my hon. friend to admit at any rate, and I am sure we are all plesed to know that the present government is not infallible, that there is a possibility of their sometimes doing wrong ; but they might have been equally frank in saying that they had ascertained that this clause would have given an advantage to a political opponent, and, for that reason rather than on the high ground they hve put it on, they have asked this House to strike it out.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I fail to see the reason for the criticism which has been offered on this occasion. The hon. member for Belleville occupied the high position of Prime Minister for this country, and I suppose he would be disposed to admit that neither he nor his government claimed to be infallible. I am sure he would admit that on many occasions on reconsidering a question, they came to the conclusi n that Bills which they had presented to the House should be withdrawn or modified because on the first consideration they had not properly or fully considered the question. Therefore, it is no new doctrine on the part of the government and no new departure to withdraw of their own motion a clause of a Bill or to assent to an amendment which has the effect of striking out a clause or amending a government Bill. We have had a number of Bills of the government before this House—though I cannot speak personally, as I have not long had the honour of sitting in this House, but I am sure, and as a matter of fact I know, Bills of the government, under previous governments as well as under this one, have been amended by the Senate with the assent of the government. When the government assented or themselves suggested that their own Bills should be amended, they were acting exactly in the line that the hon. Secretary of State is acting to-day. Now, I take this very Bill. I myself on the occasion of its second reading, announced that I would move an amendment to clause 3 of the Bill, that I did not consider that the principle embodied in the third clause was the principle which should be adopted by this House. The hon. Secretary of State, and he should be commended for having done so, said he acquiesced in the suggestion. Is this amendment open to any criticism? If it is not open to any criticism, where is the reason of the criticism which is made on the occasion of withdrawing clause 2 of the Bill? What is the effect of this clause 2? The effect was to permit the government—irrespective of whether a judge has sat for six months or 25 years—on the occasion of appointing him a Lieutenant Governor, to pay a pension equal to two-thirds of his salary. When the attention of the government was called to the fact that this was a measure which should not receive the assent of this hon. House, or which the government should persist in, I think it is honourable on the part of the Secretary of State, it is honourable on the part of the government, on being shown the reason why, if this lies open to criticism, it should be withdrawn, to assent to the clause being withdrawn and for themselves for moving in that direction.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend who has just addressed the House, always presents a very good argument, even when he has not a very good case, and I do not know that it was very bad policy on the part of my hon. friend the Secretary of State to remain silent in his seat after the observation of my hon. friend from Calgary, and allow the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry to present a plausible statement to the House on the subject. However, I think it is due to this House that my hon. friend the Secretary of State should make an explanation, particularly after the statement that has been made by my hon. friend from Calgary. I do not think that is a statement which any government having respect for itself should allow to pass without either a contradiction or an explanation or a justification of their own conduct. It has been stated by my hon. friend that the history of this Bill and this particular clause in the Bill is this, that the government having a great political friend who had been a judge and accepted a lieutenant-governorship, they put this provision in the Bill in the interest of this great political friend. My hon. friend went further and stated that it was subsequently ascertained by the government that the effect of this clause would be also to reach the case of another gentleman who was not a political friend of this government, but who had also been a judge and who had resigned a judgeship in order to take a lieutenant-governorship, and having made this discovery, and their friends having found out what an awfully vicious thing it would be if this opponent of theirs should receive the advantage of this clause, they came to the conclusion that they must expunge the clause entirely from the Bill in order that this vicious thing should not happen, that the same treatment should be meted out to a political opponent of theirs who had been a judge and a lieutenant governor, as would be meted out to their political friend who had been a judge and a lieutenant governor. I think the charge that is now levelled against the government in this matter is that while they thought this provision was to redound to the advantage and satisfaction of a strong political friend of their own, they were carrying it through parliament with all the strength they possessed in both Houses, but as soon as they discovered that under that clause another gentleman, not a friend of theirs, would reap a similar advantage to their friend they found that it was a vicious Bill and resolved to expunge it. I think we have a right to an explanation whether this statement is correct or not. If I have got the correct information, and I have heard a great deal from both sides of politics with regard to it, I think my hon. friend from Calgary made a correct statement, and my hon. friend the Secretary of State will scarcely care to get up in the House and contradict it. But there is another point in connection with it upon which I think we have also a right to get some information, for this is a very interesting subject. Having determined that their political friend in whose interest they inserted this clause in the Bill in the first instance, was not to get that provision made for him, it will be interesting to the House to know whether the government have resolved on making some other provision for him which will carry him safe and sound after they have determined to drop out this very vicious principle of making a provision which would meet the case also of one of their political opponents. I think it is due to this House, I think it is more than due to this House, it is due to the government, that they should make a full explanation of this, and why it was that at this particular moment the discovery was made that this provision was a vicious one, and should be dropped from this government Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Who is the great political friend the government had in view ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend has been so extremely candid in answering our inquiries, that we should be ready to be turned right out for his particular benefit at this moment. I think it is due from my hon. friend as the representative of the government in this House, that he should give information upon the point to which we have referred, and to say if it is not correct that this is a true history of the dropping of this clause. Surely my hon. friend will not undertake to contradict the statement and say there is no truth in it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I presume it is Lieutenant Governor Jetté hon. gentlemen are referring to ; I do not know of any other judge. Is it Judge Jetté the hon. gentleman had reference to ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Might I ask my hon. friend, as the leader of the government in this House, when the government discussed this particular clause in council and afterwards passed it in the House of Commons, what particular ex-judge who had afterwards assumed the position of lieutenant governor it was intended to apply to ? My hon. friend surely can answer the question.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman has made a plain statement.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Will my hon. friend answer on behalf of the government ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—My hon. friend has made a plain statement that this second clause in the Bill was drafted to come to the help or rescue of a judge, a friend of the government, who had been appointed lieutenant governor. Would he kindly give the name of that gentleman ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am not in the confidence of the government, but they must have had some particular individuals in view when they introduced this legislation. I am sorry I am not in the confidence of the government, like my hon. friend, and I cannot answer the question off-hand that way. We are here on this side of the House to seek for information, and I ask my hon. friend the Secretary of State what particular individuals had the government in view when they passed this particular clause ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman from Calgary and the hon. member from Marshfield, both stated the object of this clause was to give a friend of the government a superannuation allowanace, who otherwise would not be entitled to it. They pointed particularly—I think one of them mentioned Lieutenant Governor Jetté.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No one mentioned it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I thought I heard some one mention him.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Probably the hon. gentleman behind you.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman from Windsor mentioned the name of Hon. Mr. Jetté.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was not true. Lieutenant Governor Jetté was entitled to a superannuation allowance. He had served 20 years when he became Lieutenant Governor of Quebec, and a minute of council was passed at that time which made it certain that when he left the gubernatorial chair he was entitled to superannuation. Hon. gentlemen assume that every Bill that comes here has been considered in the Privy Council. I do not think hon. gentlemen are quite correct in that; a great many Bills coming here are drafted in the department. I know the hon leader of the opposition often states that we govern by departments. We do not govern by departments where there are great principles involved; in that case they must be settled by the Council. We are supposed to follow the British constitution, but if my hon. friends will look up the history of carrying on the British government, they will see it is governed by departments there. It is not so in this country, and never has been.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Until now.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not worth repeating; all I can say, once and for all, is that my hon. friend is entirely wrong. Great questions of public principles have to be discussed. This did not happen to be one of great public principle, and I have no recollection of hearing of it in council. Hon. gentlemen will remember when this Bill came down I put it off from time to time, until interjections were thrown across the Chamber as to whether I intended to go on with it; I neither said yes or no. It has been before this House for nearly two years. Hon. gentlemen scarcely expected it to pass, because I was chaffed a good deal about it, and they said, 'Oh, strike it off the Order Paper,' and when I got up to make an explanation of the Bill, I frankly told the House the second clause was to be struck out; there was no hesitation. And I understood it met with the approval of some hon. gentlemen. I have given all the information I propose to give on the subject, and all I think the House is fairly entitled to ask. I like to give the House all the information they ask for.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I wish to pay a few moments of respect to the hon. gentleman from De Salaberry. If he had listened to what I said when I rose to address the House in reply to the statements made by the hon. Secretary of State that the principle in the Bill was 'vicious' he might have saved half his speech. I admitted frankly the position taken by the hon. Secretary of State, that upon many occasions all governments change their Bills, and sometimes drop them. I acknowledged that fact. I know that to be a fact because I have experienced it very often. What I called attention to was that one colleague should come to a deliberative body like this and declare that the principle involved in a government Bill introduced by resolution in the House of Commons was 'vicious' in character and that he knew nothing about it before it was laid before the Senate. If the statement of the hon. Secretary of State is correct—and we are bound according to parliament usage and practice to accept his statement that it was not intended to effect the present governor to whom he referred, then they must have had somebody in their minds whom it was intended to effect or the suggestion of such a Bill would not have arisen.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Surely a principle of that kind involved as it was in that Bill must have been suggested by somebody and for some reason, and if it were not Governor Jetté, then it must have been somebody else, and as I understand it—I do not know how true it is, I do not give it on my own authority—it was stated in the lobbies of this House and of the other House that it was intended to meet the case of Governor Jetté.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But afterwards it was found out that it was not required in his case, because he had served the requisite term necessary to draw his pension of two-thirds of his salary, and therefore it was not necessary as I repeat, in his case. Then it must have been intended for somebody else. Who is that other person? That is what the hon. gentleman has asked, and why cannot that information be given? And then the reason why the clause is withdrawn. The hon. gentleman very blandly, in his usual mild and shall I say sophistic manner, told us he had postponed the Bill repeatedly. We all know that, and upon one occasion, when he moved its adjournment, I asked him if peace had been declared or whether the rebellion still raged in his own ranks against the second clause of this Bill. He smiled, as he usually does, and that was the answer he gave me. We all know who was the generalissimo who was conducting this opposition and this war, just as well as he knows himself. My hon. friend who sits immediately opposite me and immediately in front of my hon. friend from Smith's Falls, can tell us all about it. I am quite satisfied he can. Let him be candid in this matter. Let him tell the House that as this was to meet the case of a political opponent in whom he has no confidence and whom he holds in utter contempt, politically, of course—I would not accuse him of doing anything else because I do not think he is capable of holding spite against any individual other than politically. He can tell us all about it. We know he led the rebellion and stirred up the opposition in this matter and we know he brought the government to their marrow bones and they dared not move in opposition to his demands. We all know that. Will the hon. gentleman tell us all about it and give us the reasons? The hon. Secretary of State will not. We know that in watching the events on this side of the House, the hon. gentleman is in the confidence of the government, and I am quite sure the hon. Secretary of State receives a great deal of information and advice from him, for whenever any little difficulty arises in the Houses he occupies his time, whether it is for the purpose of giving advice, friendly, politically or otherwise, or whether it is to distract his attention from that which is being said by the hon. gentlemen on this side, I do not know. I scarcely think he would be discourteous enough to pursue that course, but seeing the Secretary of State getting into somewhat of a dilemma, and fearful he would not be able to get out of his difficulty in the manner in which he would like to see him slip through the toils of the opposition, he generally comes down and gives that fatherly advice which would come from one of so vast an experience as the hon. gentleman. I am sure the hon. Secretary of State, who is very youthful, having seen very little of political life and knowing very little of the ways and habits of legislative bodies, always accepts that advice in the same manner as youngsters accept advice from their parents. I commend him for that. It is a commendable position to occupy, but with my pugnacious temperament I think if I were interfered with as much as he is by an hon. gentleman I would be apt to say something he would not say. The difference is that he is Irish and he has a little more perhaps of that French character of politeness and delicacy that does not characterize an Englishman like myself. We are too much of the John Bull and blurt out what we have to say. Now I appeal in all sincerity and I am honest in the appeal. I should like the hon. gentleman from de Lorimier to give us the inside history of this. We know that he is the man who has dictated—I won't say advised—the course that the government has taken in this matter.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Can the hon. gentleman prove that?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is my opinion, and I have good reasons for saying so.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I want the proof of it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—When the hon. gentleman gets in the witness box and the question comes between the judge and myself to give the evidence, then I shall tell him all about what I think and what evidence I have to sustain the position. If the hon. gentleman is willing to give the information that I have asked for I think my hon. friend from Prescott might be satisfied. However, I like the interruption of my hon. friend. He is not like the hon. Secretary of State; he has had very little experience and consequently requires advice. But my hon. friend the Secretary of State is an old stager. He has been in political life a great many years, being in parliament the last forty or fifty years and consequently knows all about the rules which should govern us, and he can dictate and advise, and I shall accept all the advice and admonition that he can give me as humbly as a child who has committed an error and been chastised by his grandmother. Having said that much, let me ask the hon. Secretary of State again will he tell us who the party is that was intended to be benefited by this Bill and why the government have changed their mind, for I can scarcely believe he has done it without the approval of his colleagues, and if the hon. Secretary of State will not give that information to the House will my hon. friend from de Lorimier do so? I think he can do it. I would be very cautious about making positive statements knowing that the critic behind me would demand positive evidence. Let me ask again, can I appeal with greater force than I have done to the hon. gentleman for the information ? Now, don't be reticent. The hon. gentleman should not sit there dumb as an oyster without moving, or opening his mouth or giving the information that we are entitled to upon this Bill before we have to vote on the motion of the hon. Secretary of State to strike out this clause. It is a very serious question and I am sure the hon. gentleman appreciates it. Now, will the hon. gentleman open his conscience and let us know like a good boy, and we will be satisfied ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I suppose the hon minister will give us an answer. We cannot adopt that clause without the information.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have given the fullest answer I propose to give to the House. If it is necessary for me to go further—I am not sure if I made the statement before. —the proposal to strike out clause 2 was with the approval of my colleagues.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is the first time we have heard it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As representing the government it is to be assumed that I act for them and not in opposition to them.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I suppose we could add to our journal what was recorded in the House of Commons, when the Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick moved that the House go into Committee of the Whole on Thursday next, to consider the following proposed resolution : and he proposed his resolution including clause 2. The journal reads as follows :

> Whereupon Mr. Fitzpatrick informed the House that His Excellency the Governor General having been informed of the subject-matter of the said proposed resolution recommends it to the House.

I move now that in Committee of the Whole we should add to the journal that the hon. Secretary of State moved that clause 2 be struck out, whereupon the hon. Mr. Scott informs the House that his colleagues, having been informed of the subject of his motion, recommended it to this House. That will be the way to get out of it. Will the hon. Secretary of State answer the question proposed by the hon. leader of the opposition, who was the person in view ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall answer no more questions.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Who was the person in view, if it was not Governor Jetté, that was to benefit by this clause.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I deny the right of hon. gentlemen to catechize me in this chamber. I have said all that I thought was proper, judicious and right, and I do not think the House should force me any further, because I do not propose to give any further answer.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We can note in the journals of the House that the clause was withdrawn by the hon. Secretary of State, but that will not give the information that it was withdrawn upon the ground that it contained a vicious principle.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am quite prepared to approve of that. What we say in this chamber goes into the 'Debates,' and is a published record there.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, the hon. gentleman is in error; it is only additional evidence of what I said, that he has very little experience of public affairs. What takes place in committee does not go in the journals; the record gives what takes place when the Speaker is in the Chair. A motion should be put on record stating the facts and the reasons for the Secretary of State withdrawing this clause of the Bill. I should state it this way: notwithstanding the fact that the Governor in Council had recommended the introduction of a Bill providing a pension for judges who had accepted the position of lieutenant governor although they may have served in both positions for a very short time, that they should be permitted to retire on two-thirds of the salary they had received as judges; that after the Bill had been introduced by a resolution in the House of Commons and passed through that chamber for good and proper reasons, when it arrived in this House the Secretary of State, a member of the same cabinet as the Minister of Justice who had introduced the Bill, and who is supposed to know what is being done by his colleagues, declared the principle involved in the Bill to be 'vicious' and therefore asked leave of the House to have it struck out. To make it a little plainer so that it may be understood by a common intellect like mine it might be well to say that the Minister of Justice had no knowledge of what constituted correct and proper principles, that his moral status was of such a character that he actually inserted in the Bill and carried through the House of Commons a policy which is denounced by his colleague in this House to be vicious in principle. If we can get that on the journals or something similar to that it would be information for future senators. Many of us, like the hon. Secretary of State and myself, are pretty well up in years and may very soon be passing away. Younger men who will follow us might like to look back at the proceedings of the House and learn what had been done and what principles had guided our legislation under different governments in the past, and therefore it is well that we should have this record put on the journals of the House. That is why I suggested to the Speaker that he should prepare a paper giving his reasons for the decision he rendered, and that the paper should be entered upon the journals. That recorded with the names of the hon. gentlemen who voted against the decision of the Speaker will enable politicians in the future, when they read the names and study the character of those who voted for and against this question, to understand the facts. They will learn that the government which rules at present, unfortunately, the destines of this country, actually with all their followers voted in condemnation of the decision of the Speaker, an appointee of the Governor in Council and it will be an interesting fact to know that the opposition, these horrid Tories supported the Speaker and came to his rescue, believing him to be right. That is a happy position for the Speaker and the government who appointed him to be in. It will be information for future generations and for that reason I should like to see it on the records of parliament. Let me appeal again to the hon. gentleman from de Lorimier to tell us how he drummed up—I withdraw that—how it is he exercises such a powerful influence not only amongst his fellow members but upon the government? I can understand that a gentleman of such persuasive and genial manners might easily influence those who surround him, but how did he work so effectively upon the government as to make them change their policy and declare that the principle embodied in their Bill is vicious? I know he can tell us that if he likes, but it seems he will not. I repeat—he has not denied it—the government was in danger of being defeated. I would not consider that a misfortune if they were. He has attained the object he had in view and having done that he is quite satisfied. He rests in peace, and is as happy as if he was slumbering, but he has determined not to give us any reasons for the action he has taken. However, the reasons are as plain as the nose on his face and those reasons were given by the hon. gentleman from Calgary. The Bill as it passed the other House was going to assist a gentleman who had been a judge and subsequently a lieutenant governor whom he does not like.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—What is his name ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is it possible the hon. gentleman's intellect is so dull. He knows there is but one lieutenant governor who had been a judge in that position.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It had no application to that judge.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If it had no application to that judge, the only one it could possibly affect, why was the clause put in the Bill at all ? Why did it pass the House of Commons and receive the sanction and support of the Premier, the Minister of Justice, and every member of the cabinet except himself, and himself also, until he received it here in this chamber, and was told it could not pass, that if it did dire consequences would follow. My hon. friend knows that better than I do, but he will not say it. I could occupy the time of the House till midnight, but I have consideration for my hon. friend the Secretary of State, and I am willing to let the House adjourn to enable the hon. gentleman to fight the battle of the National Transcontinental Bill to-morrow. He will need all his strength to advocate such a measure. Will not my hon. friend give me that information so that we may adjourn ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—My first duty is to refuse to accept the responsibility that the hon. leader of the opposition casts upon me of having slighted in the least the hon. Speaker of this House. We listened with very great interest to the dissertation of the Speaker on the point of order. He closed his remarks by expressing a certain hesitancy in coming to a conclusion, and asked himself if he should not have left the decision for the Chamber to pass upon. In view of this state of mind of the Speaker, I thought that we could test, on this important point, the sentiment of this Chamber. Now, the hon. gentleman from Calgary has made a statement, a positive statement, that this Bill had been framed to help a friend of the government, but that the government had found out that it would benefit one of their opponents, and had therefore decided to withdraw that clause of the Bill. What we want to know on this side of the House is, who was that friend of the government, in whose interest the clause had been framed ? The hon. gentleman did not deem it proper to state any name, nor did any name come from the other side of the House. It was a supporter of the hon. gentleman on this side of the House, the hon. gentleman from Windsor (Hon. Mr. Casgrain), who suggested the name of Lieutenant Governor Jetté.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do not insult him by claiming him as a supporter.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I said a supporter of the hon. gentleman on this side of the House. It pleases the hon. gentleman to support the opposition. I do not respect him the less for that, but the hon. gentleman from Windsor said that Lieutenant Governor Jetté was the close personal friend of the government who was being provided for in this clause. The Secretary of State denied the statement. We have yet to hear from the hon. gentleman from Calgary a substantiation of his assertion that this clause was for the purpose of helping a special friend of the government. If the hon. gentleman has any other name to give than that of Lieutenant Governor Jetté, who was the party intended to be benefited by this Bill, I still invite him to mention that name. He does not do so. I take it for granted, therefore, that there is no such personal friend of the government who was to be benefited by the second clause of this Bill. Now, the hon. gentleman from Belleville has stated that I knew very well that that there was only one party in Canada who could fall within the scope of this second clause. Mention has been made of a party who could benefit by this clause, having been a judge and afterwards a lieutenant governor, and who is a friend of the opposition in this Chamber. Now, I would ask, because I suppose we are discussing this clause for the purpose of reaching an effective decision, if any of the hon. gentlemen opposite will rise and ask the government, knowing full well that there is one party in their minds who would be covered by this clause, to let the clause remain in the Bill in order to benefit that friend, of whom mention has been made ? When such a demand comes from the other side of the Chamber, I shall continue my remarks.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I take it that we have arrived at about this point, that there are only two persons in Canada who could be affected by this clause had it become law. One of them has been named, and I see no objection whatever to mentioning the name of the other. The name that come from the other side of the House was that of Governor Jetté, who is at present engaged on the Alaska boundary inquiry, and the other gentleman to whom this clause might apply is Lieutenant Governor Angers, formerly a judge in the province of Quebec, and subsequently Lieutenant Governor and a member of the Dominion cabinet. Now my hon. friend the Secretary of State has told us solemnly across the floor of this House that it was not intended this clause should apply to the case of Governor Jetté or for his benefit; therefore we are bound to take his statement and arrive at the conclusion that Lieutenant Governor Jetté was never thought of in the framing of this clause. Then we come to the case of the other gentleman I have named, and we must surely arrive at the conclusion that it was never intended in the first instance that the gentlemen comprising this government should have gone to so much trouble and got themselves into the difficulty they are in to-night for the purpose of serving ex-Governor Angers. It is scarcely conceivable that that was the object. They have not explicitly stated that it was not their object, but the inference is very plain that it could not have been. When we look around we cannot find any other judge in any province in Canada to whom this clause could apply and therefore we are at sea to find out what was intended when the clause appeared in the Bill. I have a solution of my own for this difficulty, and when I have named it I am sure i shall remove all the difficulty the Secretary of State has felt over this Bill to-day, and his friends will move a vote of thanks to me for offering a solution so creditable to them and which I am sure will be satisfactory to this House and to the whole country. And, in connection with that matter, I feel that I have a right to take a good deal of credit to myself. I have been doing a little missionary work this session with regard to the judiciary. I have pointed out the evil influences that have pervaded the country in connection with the giving of jobs to the judiciary. The solution of this difficulty which I think I have discovered is this, that the government put this clause in the Bill for the purpose of holding out a temptation to the judiciary of Canada generally and I suppose that explains the remark of the Secretary of State, that the principle of the clause is vicious. They had put that clause in the Bill with a view to influencing the judiciary of Canada, in order that they might benefit by having friends in court on all occasions. My hon. friend's explanation that they found out that the clause was a vicious one is thoroughly in accord with this explanation, but here is where my particular mission came in. The cause that I have been advocating with the assistance of very able advocates in this House and out of it in pointing out that it is wrong to throw temptations before the judiciary, has had its effect, and we have converted the government to our view. And my hon. friend the Secretary of State by the admission that he has made to-night, that he found this to be a vicious provision, has adopted our view and he wants to drop the clause because it would be a moral wrong to leave such a provision in the law as a temptation to the judiciary. It is gratifying to find that the members of the government have come to this high resolution, finding the course they had been pursuing was vicious and that they have turned their faces resolutely in the path of virtue. It is further satisfactory to find that when the members of the government took that course their supporters in this House followed them so loyally. They turned their backs on those vicious principles all at once, and were prepared to follow their leader, the Secretary of State, in the path of virtue with a resolution and celerity that is certainly highly commendable. The only thing I see regrettable in it is that in their pell-mell march in the path of virtue they have trampled on the Speaker and almost destroyed his power and influence in the House by the course they have pursued. It is very regrettable that they have in this commendable resolution appeared to have formed to start in the paths of virtue and denounce and renounce their former vicious principles, have been so hard on my hon. friend the Speaker of the House, and that they have not been able to convince him to turn in the path of virtue just at the particular moment that they saw the error of their own ways and resolved to be virtuous people for the rest of their political lives. I take a great deal of credit to myself for having made this conversion and the good work I have been doing in this House and outside of it. I am glad to see it is beginning to bear fruit, and if the government will accept this explanation as their's, there will be no difficulty in our going forward with the work of the House and accepting the Bill as they now propose to make it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I want to make a proposition to my hon. friend. He has asked for certain information from me. The proposition I make is this: I will tell him who I meant and why I think he gives his opposition provided always there is a little reciprocity in this matter, that he will inform the House how it was that he used such extraordinary influence on the government to withdraw it, and the reasons which he gave to the government that led them to take that course. I think that is fair. You must not expect to get what information I have unless upon reciprocal terms.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It is not the only question I put to the hon. leader of the opposition. I thought we were not here playing around the bush and discussing academic questions; that we were discussing the value of clause 2 of this Bill, and I said that if the hon. leader of the opposition, representing the great Coiservative party of Canada in this Chamber, rose from his seat and asked the Liberal government of to-day that this clause be retained in order to benefit a gentleman whose name he offers to give, then I shall have further remarks to make and will satisfy fully his curiosity.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before this motion is carried, I want to read to this Chamber what was published in the organ of the Liberal party in Quebec upon this question. This is an extract from a journal called 'Le Soleil.' In an article published on the 13th of August, this year, we read as follows—I am going to translate it, and I hope members will comprehend my defective translation:

One of our English confreres published last evening a despatch which has caused a certain feeling in the political circles of this city. It is said in this despatch that some one had mysteriously caused to be adopted the day before a law, one of the clauses of which had the effect of creating a pension in favour of ex-Lieutenant-Governor Angers. The despatch adds that the Liberal deputies of the province of Quebec are very dissatisfied with this legislation. Certainly our friends would have ample reason if the Liberal government had really adopted special legislation so as to create rents to the persecutor of the regretted Mr. Mercier.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (Windsor)—Who is the persecutor?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Mr. Angers, as the paper says.

It would not be the vulgar sentiment of vengeance that would inspire these protestations, but the most elementary sentiment of dignity. We believe, however, that without being particularly informed about the question, that there is a misunderstanding. When a few months ago the term of office of His Honour Lieutenant-Governor Jetté expired, we stated the injustice of the law. The judges have a right when they retire to a pension representing two-thirds of their salary. Sir Louis (that is the present Lieutenant-Governor) has been a judge during twenty-five years. Because he has accepted the Lieutenant-Governorship he found himself, at the expiration of his term of office deprived of his pension as judge. It is, everybody will admit, an abnormal position. Hence the idea of legislation enacting that a judge who accepts to be lieutenant-governor shall not for that reason lose the pension to which he is entitled.

That is what the Liberal organ said.

The Hon. Mr. Angers finds himself, it is said, in the same position as Sir Louis will be when he gives up his position of lieutenant-governor. It will be very unfortunate, however humiliating for the victims, to give any appearance of a kind of reward to the atrocious persecutions which they have suffered, but could that be avoided; would it be convenient enacting a general law to insert a clause of exception for Mr. Angers. As regards to us we prefer seeing Mr. Angers living on what the Liberals would give him than to see our own friends inserting in a public legislation a clause of exception, which would eternally demand explanation.

That was the sentiment professed by the Liberal organ in the province of Quebec. Who was it brought forward the name of Lieutenant Governor Jetté? It was the Liberal organ, and it was the first time—that was in the month of August—that we saw that name published in the papers of the province of Quebec. Well, we are told to-day that Governor Jetté was not the person aimed at when the resolutions were passed——

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman must have the letter before him of Lieutenant-Governor Jetté denying that he was concerned in that legislation.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Will he read it?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Yes. That proves the hon. gentleman knew very well that the name of Lieutenant-Governor Jetté was before the public, and he need not say the member from Windsor was the first who mentioned that name in public.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—In this Chamber.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—In the Chamber and in public—what is the difference, for the cause we are advocating now? No difference at all.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I am not advocating any cause.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—When Lieutenant Governor Jetté saw that publication he gave the following letter. I do not know whether the letter was written by Governor Jetté or by anybody in Montreal, or by one who is called, and very well known in Quebec, as the son-in-law of the province of Quebec.

Here is what he said at all events:

'The Editor of 'Le Soleil,'

'The trip to Montreal has prevented me reading before this moring the article that you published on Thursday, the 13th inst., entitled an incident on the subject of ex-lieutenant Governor Angers, in which I was much surprised to find what follows: When a few months ago the term of office of his Honour Lieutenant-Governor Jetté expired we stated the injustice of the law. The judges have a right when they retire to a pension representing two-thirds of their salary. Sir Louis has been a judge for 25 years. Because he has accepted the lieutenant governorship he finds himself at the expiration of his term of office deprived of his pension as judge. It was, everybody will admit it, an anomalous position; hence probably the idea of legislation enacting that a judge who accepts a lieutenant-governorship shall not, because of doing so, lose the pension to which he is entitled. The Hon. Mr. Angers finds himself, it is said, in the same position as Sir Louis will be when he gives up his position of lieutenant-governor.'

That is what the journal had said. Now read the direct answer given by the Lieutenant-Governor of the province of Quebec. It is as follows:

'As my personal affairs do not interest the public I shall give no explanation, but I think it is my duty to say that all that concerns me in the article that I have just quoted in its greater part is entirely untrue.

Yours truly,

L. A. JETTE.

That is the answer given by the Lieutenat-Governor to the article that I have just read that was published in the organ of the Liberal party in the city and district of Quebec. The article is there. It is Mr. Pacaud's journal that first brought out the name of Sir Louis before the public, and it is that journal which asserted that the law was enacted in aid of Sir Louis Jetté himself; but we were told, when the hon. member for de Lorimier interrupted me, by the Secretary of State, that Justice Jetté had nothing to do with the case; that his case was settled long before by an Order in Council. Is that sure? The hon. gentleman knows so little what takes place in the council chamber. At all events if it is not Sir Louis Jetté it must be another party. When the council assemble and adopt resolutions which are brought down to the House of Commons and to which the assent of the Governor-General is attached, one might suppose that the Secretary of State, as a member of the government, should have a little cognizance of what has taken place, and that he would not come here to the amusement of all the members of this House and state that it is the first time he saw that vicious clause in the Bill that he himself presented to the House, which he carried through the second reading, thereby sanctioning that vicious principle.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does not the second reading of a Bill affirm the principle of it?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I announced publicly that I was going to drop that clause.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is a public Bill, and the second reading of the Bill affirms the principle of it. The hon. Secretary of State introduced the Bill in this House, had it read the second time and thereby this House was made to accept the principle of the Bill. After all that was done the hon. gentleman rose one day in his place an announced to the House that a most vicious principle had cropped up in the measure. That vicious principle he, as a member of the cabinet, had endorsed ; that vicious principle he had asked His Excellency to put his name to because it was in the resolutions that were brought before the House of Commons. The Governor General was asked to sanction by his assent that vicious principle. That vicious principle was submitted to the House of Commons, embodied in the resolutions, those resolutions passed in committee, and then that vicious principle was embodied in this Bill. The Bill received its first reading, then the second reading sanctioning that vicious principle once more, then the third reading adopting it, and it was brought and given to the solicitous care of the hon. Secretary of State. The hon. Secretary of State had the baby for a number of days.

Hon. Mr. McKAY (Truro)—Then he strangled it ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—And then he strangled it. It does not surprise me that he did so, but what surprises me is the reason he gives for the strangulation, because it is so vicious—so young and yet so vicious—and that is the intent of the government of the day. That is a Bill of the government, a Bill introduced here at the instance of the government, a money Bill, and now it is asked to be amended by the government. The hon. Secretary of State must know that in honour he his bound to accept this Bill as it passed the House of Commons, without any opposition whatsoever. What will the House of Commons say when it goes back to them in the amended form ? The hon. gentleman from de Lorimier thought I was going to say something else. I see it by his face. I see by his smile.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I do not understand the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Say it in French.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I see the hon. gentleman did not catch all that he thought I was going to say. He laughed too soon but he is trying to catch what I did not say. What will the Commons say when this Bill goes down to them, mutilated by one of the members of the cabinet ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Does the hon. gentleman remember that we amended the Railway Act which was presented by a member of the government in the other Chamber, and that we amended it here in about 100 instances.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the Railway Act was not presented in this House by the government.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It was presented by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry who took the Bill under his paternal care.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—No, the hon. Secretary of State.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What was the Bill that was brought here in the name of the government and given to his tender care.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It was about the Railway debt.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That was more of a money Bill than the one cited by the hon. gentleman. The Railway Act is not a money Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—No, but it is a government Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We know that. We are entitled here to amend any government Bill except a money Bill, but what will the Commons say when they see that little child of theirs brought back, a mutilated government measure and money Bill ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Will my hon. friend permit me to correct him in one word? Up till to-day we were not permitted to amend a money Bill ; now we are permitted.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—But this is not a money Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is a money Bill.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is a money Bill. The hon. gentleman who presides over this House had made a special study of the question and has decided it was a money Bill. The Speaker of the House of Commons in England has decided that every Bill which embodies a resolution presented in the House of Commons is a money Bill. The assembly of South Australia and the legislative council of South Australia have decided in a compact that they signed in 1857 that all Bills appropriating any money, making any expenditure of the public funds either of the consolidated funds or by way of supply are money Bills, and the hon. gentleman from Grandville decided in former days what was a money Bill, in the discussion of a Bill that was less a money Bill than the one presented to-day because if we read what took place on that occasion we find that it was an Act respecting the transport contract between Her Majesty and the Winnipeg and Great Northern Railway Company and that——

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman is altogether out of order. He is not discussing the question at all. He is discussing a matter which has already been settled by this honourable House, on the point of order as to whether this is a money Bill or not, and that is not now the question before the committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the hon. gentleman did not seize exactly what I want to prove. I was discussing this point that if you want clause 2 amended you must give a good reason for it. The reason given is that it is not a money Bill. The hon. gentleman says it is not a money Bill.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—No such reason was assigned.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am very glad the hon. gentleman does not accept the reason given by the hon. gentleman from de Lorimiere.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I did not give that reason at all.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is no reason at all to be given. I was going to read a decision which is quite opposite to the contention of the hon. gentleman who said that this was not a money Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman stated in his dissertation that this was a money Bill. I said no. but I agree with the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry that the hon. gentleman is quite out of order. This is not the question which is before the Chair now.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—But as the hon. gentleman is not the chairman or the speaker, I am not inclined to take his opinion as settling the question.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—But the point of order has been taken and we are asking a decision.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am discussing the point of order and I claim to have a right to discuss that point of order. Can the Chair inform the committee what is the question of order ?

The CHAIRMAN—I understand the point of order raised is, that the hon. gentleman is not speaking to the qeustion before the House. The question is whether the motion to strike out clause 2 shall carry. Under the practise in committee a pretty wide latitude is allowed in such discussions, and while I think the hon. gentleman is drifting away somewhat from the Bill I would not like to shut him off, because he must frame his own argument provided he keeps within reasonable bounds.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I shall keep within bounds. I am discussing the monetary character of the Bill. The hon. gentleman may argue that it is not a money clause, but he can not deny that it is of a monetary character. I was quoting a decision given by this Chamber and it was just to the point. It was on a Bill that was presented in 1898, entitled 'An Act respecting the Transport Contract between Her Majesty and the Winnipeg and Great Northern Railway Company,' and hon. gentlemen will see when we come to the question what points have been settled during the discussion of that Bill. I quote from the Journal : The title of the Bill was read and postponed. Then the preamble was read and postponed. The first and only clause of the Bill being read it was moved in amendment that the question of order being raised that the words 'And the companies land subsidies shall apply to the line hereby authorized' at the end of said clause be struck out. The question of order being raised that the amendment proposed to alter the dispositions made by the Bill of certain public lands and so to change the subsidy which the House of Commons had decided to offer for the construction of the line of railway mentioned in the Bill, and that the Senate had no power to make any such change. The chairman of the committee came to the conclusion in that case that he should report the point of order to the hon. Speaker for his ruling. That is just what the chairman has done in this case. Perhaps without knowing what had been done in the past, but having the proper intuition as to what should be done, you did exactly Mr. Chairman what was proper and reported to the Speaker. Then the House was resumed and the Hon. Mr. Clemow (in the case I am citing) from the committee reported the point of order raised, and the hon. Speaker gave his ruling thereon. Though I am citing this as an argument to sustain my contention that the clause we are now discussing is a monetary clause, it will at the same time serve as a precedent for future rulings. The Speaker's ruling was as follows :—

'It has been maintained during the discussion of the point of order that the Senate had no right to interfere with bills which increased the expenditure of money but would have the right to amend such bills in order to decrease or prevent the expenditure of money.'

That was just the argument that was put forth by my hon. friend the Secretary of State this afternoon. Then the Speaker of those days of 1898 proceeded :

'I admit that at first sight I was not of that opinion, but the authority of May cited by the hon. Secretary of State states——

Not this Secretary of State, another Secretary of State—the one that existed in 1898. We must not make any confusion. We must not mistake the Secretary of State of 1898 for the Secretary of State of the present day. Perhaps he was the same gentleman. though I may doubt it if one takes into consideration the differences of opinion expressed in 1898 and 1903. He does not protest. Then he must be the same. We shall see what the hon. Secretary of State of that day thought. The ruling proceeds : but the authority. cited by the Honourable Secretary of State, at page 542, just the same page as the one cited this afternoon by my hon. friend from Richmond, the same authority, the same page, the same Secretary of State——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No that is his ghost.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I proceed with my quotation : "But the authority of May cited by the Secretary of State at page 542, after saying that the House of Lords is excluded not only from the power of initiating or amending Bills dealing with public expenditure or revenue, but also from initiating public Bills which would create a charge upon the people or which would deal with administration or employment of those charges, adds :

It follows accordingly that the Lords may not amend the provisions in Bills which they receive from the Commons dealing with the above mentioned subjects, so as to alter, whether by increase or reduction the amount of a rate or charge, its duration, mode of assessment, levy, collection, appropriation or management, or the persons who pay, receive, manage or control it, &c.

Now the Speaker goes on to say :

'To this the hon. leader of the Opposition said that there is in that amendment neither a question of increasing or reducing the expenditure of money, but of transferring the grant of land from one line to another.'

What does the Speaker decide ? He says :

'But in reading the amendment as it is, I cannot come to any other conclusion than this amendment would really interfere in the disposition of public money, and the very words of the amendment were : 'And the company's land subsidy shall apply to the line hereby authorized.' By this the amendment goes to say that the disposition of the land grant will be changed, and, as the hon. gentleman from Montarville pointed out, if this amendment is carried, then the land already granted will be removed from its destination or appropriation, that is from one line to apply it to another, and then there will be no grant of land for one line which had it before, and as I am of opinion that public land ought to be considered as public money'——

If public lands are here considered public money I suppose pensions should be considered in the same light. He proceeds :

'I cannot come to any other conclusion than that the point of order is well taken, and that the amendment is not in order.'

That was the decision given by the hon. Speaker in 1898. I do not know how the hon. gentleman from Grandville voted this year but I know how he spoke in that year. I think I have convinced this House with this authority that this is a money Bill, that the clause which the hon. Secretary of State has proposed to withdraw is a money clause and that he has no right to ask that it be withdrawn. He might say 'Well that question has been decidel. We appealed to the Chair.' Then what was the motion? The motion was to call on the Chair to have the opinion of the Speaker. We had the opinion of the Speaker and the Speaker decided that it was a money clause and that we had no power to amend the Bill. That was the decision we were asking for. We got it, but the hon. Secretary of State and my hon friend from de Lorimier were not satisfied with the decision of the Speaker. They were very willing to get it but when they got it they did not feel satisfied. As no decision of that kind could content them they appealed from the decision of the Speaker to the opinion of their followers, and they had the opinion of gentlemen who had given on that point in the past, decisions that ought to bind them to-day, but the claims of party were there; the cry of the party was there and the motion of the hon. gentleman from de Lorimier was carried. We on this side of the House never asked for an appeal to the partisans of the government; we asked for the decision of the Chair, and we got it, and now the question arises should we take that decision, or the opinions of partisans of the government on that question? I think it is safer to take the decision of the man who is in the position of Speaker, who knows the duties of his position, and who realizing the responsibility of the position he occupies, gives a fair an enlightened decision.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I rise to a point of order; is it proper to use such an expression here with reference to the action of hon. gentlemen in this House?

The CHAIRMAN—The hon. gentleman raises the question that the term 'partisan' was not proper and I agree with him.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I never said offensive partisans. The expression I used was not given in an offensive sense; it was partisanship used in a very mild way, but if I said offensive partisan, I withdraw the expression. I should not like the expression to be used in this House. There are no offensive partisans here, but I think there are possibly a few mild partisans. I would not assert that the hon. member from Toronto is an offensive partisan; he never did anything to make me believe he was. Well, we asked the opinion of the Chair, and we got it, but notwithstanding we have the opinion of a man who is supposed to give his time and study to the difficult questions of order arising in this House, his decision has been put aside, and by whom? By the hon. leader of the government, in this House, the gentleman who chose the man whose judgment he had most confidence in to decide these questions, and to preside over the House with all the dignity the Speaker brings to the Chair, and with weight of the knowledge he brings to his decisions. He is the choice of the hon. Secretary of State, and that choice having been made, a question of order was deferred to the Speaker who gave his decision with an apparent hesitancy though he was sure of what he was saying. But he knew an appeal was coming, he knew that if he gave the opinion it woud be against his friends, and that an appeal would be taken; so to smooth things, to offer to his hon. friend a milder way to appeal from his decision, seeing what was coming he made a few steps in the direction where the appeal was coming—as I am not master of the English tongue, I will be pardoned if I do not always make use of the proper expression, but he courted the appeal, if my expression is correct, and the hon. gentleman from de Lorimier got up and made a motion. He did not say 'Mr. Speaker,' I appeal from your decision,' but he made a motion and I got up on that motion, but I was deprived of the right to speak because it was a motion of appeal, though article 20 of our rules says that a senator has a right to speak on every motion.

The CHAIRMAN—Will the hon. gentleman allow me. He understands the rules of the House as well as I do, if not better, because he has been here longer, and he is a man of common sense; he is impugning the judgment of the hon. gentleman when he was in the Chair, and I would suggest to him that he keep along the line of argument and leave that part of it alone.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am not going to leave that part alone. But, Mr. Chairman, to go back to the monetary aspect of that clause, do you really believe though you have voted upon it, and that so far you might be prejudiced, do you really believe it was not a monetary clause? If it is a monetary clause, I do not think, after the decision given by the Speaker, you have the right to put your initials to the Bill and write against the clause the words 'struck out.' You ought to put your initials, Mr. Chairman, to the Bill as accepted, and not otherwise. If the hon. Secretary of State will tell us why the clause is to be struck out, we are reasonable men, who can accept an argument for what it is worth, and accept the conclusions, that the hon. leader of this House could impose upon us by his arguments. But when he stands mute, when de declines to tell us why he wants to strike out that clause, I think it is not fair, Mr. Chairman, to strike it out arbitrarily. We should have a reason for it. He says it does not refer to Justice Jetté. If it does not refer to Justice Jetté to whom does it refer? If it refers to nobody, why did he accept it while he was in the council? Why did he pass that resolution which was sent to the Governor General embodying that clause? Will the hon. gentleman say that he did not know what he was doing? He will not say that. That would not be true. The hon. gentleman pretends to know what he does. I am not imputing motives there, I hope, in saying that in his estimation he always knows what he does. While he was in the cabinet chamber, while he was at that meeting of the council, the resolution was brought in; it must have been brought in on a report of the Minister of Justice. I was never a member of the cabinet, and I don't think I will ever be one, but I am informed that generally a resolution from council is brought up under the report of the head of the department—I am addressing myself to people who have been in the Cabinet, and are there yet—and this resolution of the Minister of Justice must have been brought up in council. I see an hon. gentleman who has been a member of the Cabinet in the province of Quebec, and I know he will not dispute what I state, that a resolution of the Cabinet is brought in by a report of the head of a department.

The Minister of Justice must have brought in that report. It must have been discussed by the cabinet. Was the hon. Secretary of State there? He was or he was not. If he was he should not tell us that the first time he knew of that vicious clause was when he saw the Bill here. If he was present at the meeting of the cabinet when his clause was under discussion, how can he come here and make the extravagant statement that a clause for which he is just as responsible as any of his colleagues is vicious, and that he never heard of it until he saw it in the Bill? Even though he would not be present at the council meeting, he is responsible for every resolution adopted by the cabinet and sent to the Governor General to be signed so that it may be introduced in the House of Commons. Does he disclaim that responsibility? He cannot. He knows that he is responsible, and yet he comes here to-day to strangle his own child, to repudiate a Bill for which he is responsible to this House, and the principle of which he got this House to sanction by the second reading of the measure. He brought it before the committee for the purpose of strangling it. I see here an hon. gentleman who was at one time Speaker of the House of Assembly of the province of Quebec. I am sure of one thing—if he, as Speaker, had rendered a decision he would stick to it, but all people have not the same virtues and qualities. What one might do, another, perhaps, fails to do. We all have the weaknesses of human nature, and no doubt a good deal will be forgiven to those who do not know better. Let me suggest to the chairman of this committee the propriety of dropping this motion. I hope the hon. Secretary of State will not press it, that he will feel it is an injustice to the House of Commons, to the members of the cabinet and to the Governor General. If the government asked the Governor General to sign that resolution, why should the hon. gentleman come here to-day, in the face of that decision taken by the cabinet, and by the Governor General, and ask the committee to strike out that clause? Though he asked the Governor General to sign it, he comes here to-day and says it is a vicious clause. He got the Governor General to sign a vicious clause—to put his name at the bottom of a resolution which to-day he has declared to be vicious. Is that fair? If I were the Governor General, I would turn out the government immediately. I am not the Governor General and do not expect to be, but I know what my duty would be if I were. If a man brought me a resolution, and asked me to put my name to it, and immediately afterwards would go to parliament, and say 'This is a very vicious resolution to which I got this signature,' would it not be my duty, if governor, to withdraw immediately my confidence in him ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—And we would pension you for it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Who would pension me ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The government.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman is not very clear. In the interests of the government, if he wants to remain in power for the rest of the session, and in order to remove friction between the ministers and the Governor General, the hon. Secretary of State should withdraw his motion. I feel that motion tires him, but there is a remedy—let him withdraw it. I want the hon. gentleman from de Lorimier (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) to give us reasons why this clause should be struck out. He will not give it. He does not want to tell all he knows. He did not say that Sir Louis Jetté had answered a letter that was published in the Soleil. It came out at last because I brought it out. When I read the article in the Soleil, the hon. gentleman from de Lorimier said, 'There is a reply to that,' showing that he knew all about it. He could tell us a little more—why not tell us ? Why not tell us what occurs every year in Montreal on the first of November, when a great pilgrimage takes place to the cemetery of Montreal.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The second of November is All Souls' Day.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—My spiritual adviser tells that the second of November is All Souls' Day. Well, on the second of November every year or on the eve of it a pilgrimage is made to the tomb of the regretted Mercier. I think I have said enough—does the hon. gentleman understand ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Give us the rest.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does the hon. gentleman really want the rest ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—You will not complain ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If it is no worse than what we have heard, let us have it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am addressing myself to the hon. gentleman from de Lorimier. I ask him if he knows, from what I have said, that I understand what took place and all about the efforts that were made to influence Sir Wilfrid Laurier, that I know who the people were that wrote him, who the people were that came here and did what was necessary to be done to have him withdraw that clause. If I am correctly informed the Hon. Premier of Canada said that he was in honour bound to retain that vicious clause in the Bill. But I suppose the state of the hon. gentleman's health is not strong enough to resist the pressure that was brought upon him—the efforts made by my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Dandurand)—and those that he interested in his opposition to this clause. Does the hon. member understand ? He should. He was a party to many of those doings ? Does he want me to say a little more ? I am ready to proceed, but surely he can tell me if he understands or not. Why does he want this clause to be struck out, because he is the party who is asking to have it omitted. It is not the ministry, it is not the Secretary of State, it is not the Premier of this Dominion who want it ; they all agreed to put it in the Bill. They had a meeting of the cabinet ; the report of the Minister of Justice was brought before them ; they adopted the report and prepared a resolution which they asked the Governor General to sign. Who is carrying on the war ? The hon. member for de Lorimier. The hon. gentleman from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr. David) should have supported the decision of the Speaker, and I could name others who ought to have voted to sustain the Speaker. I thought the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) would have done so.

Hon. Mr. THIBAUDEAU (Rigaud)—The hon. gentleman should tell us what he does not think.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I never thought to depend on a promise which some hon. gentleman might make. I thought the hon.

gentleman would have voted to sustain the Speaker's decision, but as I have said, I was mistaken. I thought that a decision rendered in years gone by would have influenced him, but it has not done so. Another opinion influenced him. Mr. Chairman, would you use your influence to bring the government to a better state of mind, and get them to withdraw this motion? It will be a stain on our records to say that the government brought in a measure and that the first one to oppose it was the leader of the government in this House himself. It is a stain which we should not allow any one to put on our records, and if you are of my opinion, you will write at the end of that clause 'unanimously carried.' If the minister will withdraw his motion, he will prevent the friction which is sure to come between himself and colleagues and the Governor General.

The motion was agreed to on a division.

On the 3rd clause,

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE moved:

That section 3 be struck out, and the following substituted:—

'3. Every county court judge who has attained the age of eighty years shall be compulsorily retired; and to any judge who is so retired, or who, having attained the age of seventy-five years, resigns his office, and in the latter case has continued in office for a period of twenty-five years or upwards, His Majesty may grant an annuity equal to the salary of the office held by him at the time of his retirement, or resignation; or if he has continued in office as such judge for a less period than twenty-five years and become afflicted with some permanent infirmity, disabling him from the due execution of his office, an annuity equal to two-thirds of such salary; the annuity in either of the above cases to commence immediately after his retirement or resignation, and to continue thenceforth during his natural life.'

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order——

Hon. Mr. POWER—I should like to have a little information about this clause. I should like to know why the government propose to give to a county court judge who has attained the age of eighty years and who is compulsorily retired—I presume because he is deemed no longer qualified to discharge his duties—and also to a judge who has attained the age of seventy-five years and has continued in office twenty-five years, a retiring allowance equal to his full pay. I cannot myself see why the country should pay the man who has been retired because he is no longer fit to do the work, the same salary that is paid to a judge who is doing the work. An ordinary member of the civil service can be compulsorily retired at sixty-five and cannot get more than two-thirds pay; I have not heard any reason given why the practice which has prevailed in the past of giving the county judges not more than two-thirds retiring allowance should be departed from. In 1898 the government undertook to deal with this very matter of the county judges, and this was the provision which was submitted to this House and which in my humble judgment is one that ought to commend itself more to the judgment of hon. members than that which is before it now.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Is that the provision this House rejected.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is a very good reason for the government adopting the views of this Chamber.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The membership of this House has altered considerably since then. At that time the hon. gentleman had not a majority behind him; and it was the Conservative majority which threw out this measure, so that I do not think there is very much in that observation.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is nothing at all.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I simply put this matter to the good sense of the House. The provision which was proposed to be inserted then would read as follows:

'Every judge of a county court in any of the provinces of Canada, shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, hold office during good behaviour, and his residence within the county or union of counties for which the court is established: Provided, that no person shall hold or retain office as such judge after he has completed the seventy-fifth year of his age.

2. The subsection so submitted shall apply as well to judges now holding office as to judges to be hereafter appointed: provided, that any judge now holding office who is, by reason only of his having completed the seventy-fifth year of his age, disqualified to hold or retain his office, shall be entitled to a pension under section fifteen of the said Act, although he has not continued in office for the number of years mentioned in that section.

3. This section shall come into force on the first day of January, one thousand nine hundred and four.'

That is a simple section which provides that when a county court judge attains the age of seventy-five years without any action of the government, or the judge himself, he simply becomes incapable of remaining in office any longer and he retires on a two-thirds allowance. I think that is a much more satisfactory and business like proposition than the rather complicated one which is embodied in the third clause of the Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The reason the Conservative majority threw out the Bill was that they were opposed to the principle of interfering with what they considered the independence of the bench.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That was not the reason given by the hon. gentleman at the time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the hon. gentleman will consult the Debates he will see that that was one of the reasons given by the members who took that position. The principal reason was that the compulsory retirement, under that clause, of the judges would act as an interference with the independence of the bench, and that it was retiring men in many cases who were quite capable of performing their duty. I know a county court judge now in Ontario who is eighty-four years of age, who is performing the duties of his office over a very large section of the country. He attends also to the duties of the Surrogate Court and performs all that is necessary for a judge to do. Those were the reasons given at the time. It was urged that they should not interfere with the bench in any way. I do not propose at the present moment to discuss the question involved, or the charges involved in the amendment made by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry. I am convinced in my own mind that that is just as much out of order as the motion which was made and upon which we had an appeal this evening, if not more so. I should be very much surprised if this Bill goes back to the Commons in its amended state. I do not know whether the Secretary of State on behalf of the government is prepared to accept this amendment.

Hon. Mr. POWER.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then I should be very much surprised if the Commons do not refuse to accept the Bill as it goes back to them unless the government are sustained by the majority at their back. I should be more inclined to think that they would act upon the principle which has guided the House of Commons in the past on questions of this kind, and allow the Bill to drop or abandon it altogether and introduce another Bill amended probably as this is, and send it to this House for ratification. That has been done. Bourinot quotes a case where it is clearly laid down that the legislative council amended a Bill which was refused by the Lower House and, to use the language of Bourinot himself, the Bill was kicked out of the House by one of the members. The then government introduced a Bill, omitting that part to which the legislative council objected, so that it was virtually a new Bill, but a Bill similar to the one that was amended. It was then sent back to the legislative council and was accepted by that Chamber. It would be useless, after the action of the Senate on the ruling of the Speaker to raise another objection or put the Speaker to the trouble of giving another ruling should he maintain the position he took on the other point of order and consider this Bill of a similar character and then have the House reject his ruling again. I think the better way is to allow the Bill to go in as deformed a state as possible so that the question may arise and we shall know hereafter what powers we have. I say in all sincerity that I think we are setting a precedent that my hon. friend opposite will find it difficult to reconcile in the future when other Bills come up affecting the appropriation of money in the same manner that it is appropriated here; that is providing for the payment of money upon certain things being done. This Bill provides for the superannuation of certain people. The hon. Secretary of State says that the pensions are not payable until voted by parliament. Other Bills come here which might fairly be called money Bills, but the money could not be paid until it is earned. If the decision of the House to-night is to be taken as a precedent for the future I do not see any reason why we cannot move to strike out any clause in a money Bill. I might as well point this out, because difficulties may arise in the future and may give the ministry representing the government in this House no little trouble to reconcile the position he will have to take then with the position he has taken to-night. I suggest to my hon. friend on my left not to push this matter further than to protest against it, believing it to be out of order as the other was and if the government accept it let them take the responsibility.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman will see the necessity for the amendment which is inconsistent and evidently was an error of the draughtsman. Under that clause a man two or three years in office would be entitled to retire on full allowance, and that is evidently an error.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That may be; still it lays down a principle.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—My hon. friend was not so scandalized in 1898 when he amended the very same Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This tu quoque argument is of no affect. It may please my hon. friend, but I desire to point out that this Bill came to us in the shape in which it is. This Bill came to us for the retirement of judges under certain conditions. Some of those conditions may be inconsistent with the others as the hon. Secretary of State says they are, but we are changing the effect of the Bill materially on that point.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—As in 1898.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What has that to do with it? We are not dealing with 1898 at all. There was no objection taken in 1898, unless the hon. gentleman refers to the Bill rejected by the Senate, but that has nothing to do with the Bill we are now discussing. You might go back five hundred years and they might be all wrong.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—1898 is not far back.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am considering the Bill before us.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman admits he was wrong in 1898.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Supposing it was so, would that make this right?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I am glad the hon. gentleman admits a contradiction.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not admit anything of the kind. I take the hon. gentleman's statement and I say, supposing his statement is correct, does that make this right.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—According to the precedent of 1898, certainly.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—For the information of the House I might say the Bill of 1898 did not provide for a retiring allowance to the full extent of the salary. In fact it made no provision for it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It was on the same lines as this Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Bills were totally dissimilar. Here is a Bill to provide for the superannuation of a judge under certain circumstances. The hon. gentleman says if a judge had served a few years he would be entitled to retire. That is the provision of the Bill. That is the clause which gives the retiring allowance to the judge. We are asked to amend that. I am sustaining as far as I can the position taken upon the other clause. This is clearly an intereference with the principle of the Bill. It may be absurd, for ought I know, and it may be vicious and that is why I suggested to my hon. friend to let it go in as mutilated a state as the House likes to put it, particularly if the government take the responsibility. I do not see why we should take any more trouble with it.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN—There is an amendment proposed in line 7 of section 4 to leave out the word 'retirement' and insert 'resignation.'

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does the government accept that?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I want to call the attention of the hon. gentleman who moved the amendment to a point on which I desire some explanation. I think it is a matter of some importance. This amendment, as it has been submitted by my hon. friend from de Salaberry provides that judges shall be retired in case of infirmity. It does not point out how this infirmity is to be ascertained. There is a provision in the revised statutes providing that any county court judge being inflicted with an infirmity the Governor in Council may issue a commission to a Superior Court judge to inquire into it, and he can be removed in that way. By this amendment would the removal come under the operation of chapter 138 of the revised statutes, or is it supposed to give power arbitrarily to the Governor in Council to retire a judge, when it is found that there is an infirmity ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—You have to trust the Governor in Council for taking some method to be correctly informed.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We have a carefully worked out law in the statute book to provide how judges afflicted in this way shall be removed. If the hon. gentleman will turn up the revised statutes, chapter 138, he will find it there also. A case arose, at the time Sir John Thompson was Minister of Justice, of a judge who was afflicted with softening of the brain, and it was found he could not be removed without some process of inquiry and the facts having been ascertained properly and legally, and this amendment was made to the law and afterwards incorporated in the Act relating to provincial courts. There is complete machinery provided there that the Governor in Council can issue a commission to a judge of the Superior Court to make an inquiry, and upon the report so obtained they can remove the judge if they find he is afflicted so as to be unable to perform his duty. If we adopt the amendment of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry we are giving power to the Governor in Council to remove judges without taking proper means of ascertaining whether they are able to perform their duties or not. It would be a most dangerous thing that the Governor in Council should have the power to proceed without due enquiry to remove a judge on the alleged ground that he was mentally unfit to perform his duty. I think it would be a dangerous thing affecting the independence of the bench. Possibly I am wrong about this. Possibly this part of the revised statutes that I refer to, chapter 138, section 2 will apply, and that this amendment of my hon. friend's will be worked out under that section.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think my hon. friend might rely upon it that no government would think of disturbing a judge under the conditions laid down in the statutes without issuing a commission and taking precaution that due care was observed in making the inquiry. Governments have to be trusted with a good deal more than that.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The Act to which the hon. gentleman refers, chapter 138 of the revised statutes, was passed for another purpose. It was passed because under the British North America Act the judge of the Superior Court cannot be removed except on a joint address of parliament, and there was no machinery at all to remove judges for bad behaviour. They did not fall under the provisions of the British North America Act, and so the statute was passed to meet cases of that kind. The section reads as follows :

'The Governor General in Council may, for the purpose of making inquiry into the circumstances respecting the misbehaviour, inability or incapacity of such judge, issue a commission to one or more judges.'

But the law affecting the judges of the Superior Court provides for their being pensioned if they are sick or if they are permanently incapacitated and rendered unable to discharge their duty, and then it rests with the government by order in council, after having obtained as much information as may warrant them to act, to accept the resignations and grant the pensions.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend is speaking of the Superior Court.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Yes, and there was no provision of that kind, as far as the county court judges were concerned, and one of the objects of the Bill and the object of the amendment which was adopted at my suggestion, is to assimilate the proceedings in relation to county court judges and Superior Court judges and permit their resignation being accepted and the two-third pension being granted to them if they are permanently incapacitated and are unable to fulfil their duties. I take it for granted that it will operate in the case of Superior Court judges and that it would not be necessary to have recourse to the commission which is mentioned in chapter 138 of the statutes. I speak guardedly because I have not considered the point at all.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Will my hon. friend point out where that law is that relates to the Superior Court judges and provides for the Governor in Council removing them.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière)—The British North America Act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no law in that respect applying to Superior Court judges.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman from de Salaberry says there is.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They can only be removed by an address from parliament.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That has no bearing upon it. This is for removal by address, but this clause provides for their removal in some other way, does it not ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman places in my mouth words which I did not use. I did not speak of their removal. It is accepting their resignation and granting the pension if they become permanently incapacitated.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I do not think the word retired, or resignation, is stated in the clause.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am able now to refer the hon. gentleman to that decision which he asked for. It is to be found in the revised statutes, chapter 138, section 14, which reads as follows :

'If any judge of a Superior Court, or of a court of Vice-Admiralty, in any of the provinces, who has continued in the office of judge of any one or more of the superior courts, or of the Court of Vice-Admiralty, in any one of the said provinces, for fifteen years or upwards, or, in the North-west Territories, in the office of judge of the Supreme Court of the North-west Territories, or in such office and the office of a judge of any superior court in Canada, or of a stipendiary magistrate of the Territories, for fifteen years, or upwards, or who becomes afflicted with some permanent infirmity, disabling him from due exercise of his office, resigns his office, His Majesty may, by letters patent, under the Great Seal of Canada, reciting such period of office or permanent infirmity, grant unto such judge an annuity equal to two-thirds of the salary annexed to the office he held at the time of his resignation, to commence immediately, after his resignation, and to continue thenceforth during his natural life.'

The hon. gentleman will see that it is exactly the same thing as the third section which was adopted a moment ago.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am thankful to my hon. friend for turning up that reference. I had not observed it, and I find the object of his amendment is to make the law with regard to county court judges correspond with the law respecting Superior Court judges. But is it not possible that the law with respect to Superior Court judges is as good as that respecting county court judges ? Suppose a case of a judge afflicted with a malady such as would entitle him to resign arose, and suppose he would not resign, there is no provision in this section by which he could be compelled to resign whereas in section 2 of the same Act there is a provision that notwithstanding he would not be reasonably or mentally capable of dealing with the government, and of resigning, that his resignation could be brought about. I suppose that the matter is safe anyway, but I really think it would be safer in the public interests to have the county court judge dealt with under section 2 of that Act, which was provided especially for county court judges. Subsection 2 reads as follows :

' A judge of a county court may be removed from office by the Governor General in Council for misbehaviour, or for incapacity or inability to perform his duties properly on account of old age, ill health, or any other cause.'

I think the better way would be to leave it to a commission.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That clause provides for superannuation and the clause my hon. friend has read provides for absolute removal without any superannuation.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I shall not press the matter, but my suggestion would be that after the word ' office ' in the tenth line of my hon. friend's amendment, we insert, ' to be determined under section 2 of chapter 138 of the revised statutes, and the mode of his retirement would be settled in that way.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman has not carefully read section 15 of chapter 138 of the revised statutes, and that I think is the section which this clause of the Bill to a certain extent intended to replace. The section to which the hon. gentleman has referred, section 2, deals with certain cases where the judge either will not resign or cannot resign. Section 15 deals with the case where he does resign and reads as follows :

' If any judge of a county court, after having continued in office as such judge for a period of at least ten years, becomes afflicted with some permanent infirmity, disabling him from the due execution of his office, and resigns his office, or if a judge of a county court, after having continued in office as such judge for a period of at least twenty-five years, resigns his office, His Majesty may, by letters patent, under the Great Seal of Canada, grant to him a pension equal to two-thirds of the annual salary of which he was in receipt at the time of his resignation, to continue thenceforth during his natural life.'

Now, the principal change which I see is that under the clause of the Bill he is to get a pension equal to his whole salary. Under section 15. of chapter 138 of the revised statutes, he receives only two-thirds. I do not think that is a step in the right direction, but I suppose if you are going to give the other retiring judges full pay there is no reason why you should not give it to them all.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. member for Marshfield will bear in mind that the Revised Statutes, chapter 138, remains in force, and it would receive its application in the case which he has mentioned. If a judge became so incapacitated that he could not resign then he would fall under the provision of section 2 of chapter 138, and such cases of that kind are already provided for.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am satisfied from what I have read and what the hon. gentleman has said, that any extreme case, such as I have referred to, where a judge might be mentally unfit, and the government would have to get his resignation before they can act, that they can under this provision fall back on the machinery that I have referred to.

The motion agreed to and the clause as amended was adopted.

The chairman from the committee reported the Bill with amendments.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move that the amendments be now concurred in.

The motion was declared carried.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I object.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Can that report be carried if an objection is taken to it

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Concurrence is not a stage.

The SPEAKER—There is no rule which forbids concurrence. I declare the motion to concur in the amendments carried on division.

OCEAN STEAMSHIP SUBSIDIES BILL.

THIRD READING.

The Order of the Day being called for the third reading of Bill (252) An Act relating to Ocean Steamship Subsidies.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The next item is a very short one. I notice by the cable communications that a company has been formed in Bordeaux to establish a line of steamers between France and Canada, and it is quite important to give them an assurance that the Bill is to become law.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I would ask the hon. gentleman to postpone that Bill until to morrow.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Then it will not go through this evening.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am willing to give all the information possible ; it is only a Bill of one clause.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I ask that it be not brought up to-night.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The companies wanted a cable sent——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—But I want to speak on that question.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Let the hon. gentleman speak. Let him deliver his speech.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I shall deliver it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—We will go to sleep.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not care.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What does the Bill propose ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Bill provides a subsidy to a line of stemers to run between France and Canada. A cable was receivel wanting to know whether the Bill had actually passed, as a company was being formed in Bordeaux, and they were waiting before giving orders for the building of ships, to know whether the Bill would be passed, and I was asked yesterday to get it through in order that a cable might be sent.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The ships are built. I have a document which states four ships are already built.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman can move it. I know the hon. gentleman from Stadacona (Hon. Mr. Landry) told me he was going to speak in opposition to the Bill. I don't know what his reasons are, but he has some objections to it, and I would suggest that the hon. Secretary of State move the House into committee and let the hon. gentleman speak.

The CHAIRMAN—Pursuant to the order of the House I leave the Chair.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before this motion is carried I want to call attention to an irregularity which has just taken place. The hon. Secretary of State has just jumped over one of the Orders of the Day.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman is too late now. We are now in committee by Order of the House.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the adoption of the first clause.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before this is carried I want to say a few words on the question brought before us. We are asked to pass this Bill which contains only one clause. In discussing it, I shall at the outset, call the attention of the House to an article which has been published in the Yukon Weekly 'Sun.' It is a special despatch from Ottawa to the 'Sun.'

A discussion took place on the subsidy for the establishment of a line between Canada and France. Columbier Bros., of Bordeaux, have the contract. This firm was brought out here by C. E. Carbonneau, well-known in Yukon.

The first question that arrests our attention in this official 'Gazette' of the Yukon is that the contract passed between the government and Messrs. Colombier, of Bordeaux, has been bought out by a man called E. Carbonneau, well known in the Yukon.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not bought out by him; the government declined to have any man intervene.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Has the government declined that on the occasion upon which the Hon. Premier of the Dominion invited Mr. Carbonneau to his table?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I want the hon. gentleman if he calls me to order to state the rule I am transgressing, so that we shall know what he wants.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I shall state my point of order: Bringing in private matters and table matters in connection with this Bill is totally out of order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What is the rule?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Common sense is the rule.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is only the hon. gentleman's opinion.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Yes, and I ask the chairman's ruling on it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—This is a question of public interest. I am told by the hon. minister that the government has declined to have anything to do with Mr. Carbonneau, and I am asking when he declined that contract, if he declined it on a certain occasion, and I am perfectly right in asking that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is perfectly within the hon. gentleman's right, but until the Bill is passed the contract cannot be executed. The proposition was made to the government to allow the contract to be assigned, and we declined to do it, not knowing the person to whom it would be assigned. What I mean is, the desire of the government was that the contract should not be traded. If they bring in with them any persons of means, there can be no objection to it, but at any rate nothing has been done in that direction. I can assure my hon. friend the persons whom he mentioned have not been made sharers in the contract in any way, and are not proposed to be.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If I understand the hon. gentleman correctly the contract is not signed yet?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. It cannot be until the Bill passes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am very glad to hear it, because I am going to give the government some information which may perhaps help them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Some foundation was laid for the statement, because it was rumoured that Carbonneau had sought to intervene, but that has not been allowed, and nothing of that kind will be allowed, and no contract could be made binding until authority is granted.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I have here a paper published in France, called 'Le Canada,' a paper published, I believe, by Mr. Obalski. The date is September 20, 1903, and it contains the following: I give a translation:—

The good news I promised you last week is the creation of an Oceanic line between France and Canada; it is the signature of the contract between the government of the Dominion and a group of French capitalists; it is the establishment of direct communication between these two countries, without which there can be no trade. We must hope that the French politicians and industrials will congratulate themselves on this occasion. The Canadian press, English as well as French, shows itself very favourable to the new enterprise. Here are the terms on which this event is announced by dispatch in the journals of the capital:

Ottawa, August 29.—The government has signed to-day a contract for the establishment of a line of steamers for the transportation of freight and passengers between France and Canada, with the Franco-Canadian Trans-Atlantic Company. By the conditions of the contract the firm of Columbier Bros., of Bordeaux, France, consent to establish a line of a minimum of eighteen trips per annum. The summer ports will be Montreal and Quebec, the winter ports Halifax and St. John. If it is necessary, twenty-four trips going and returning will be made every year. The annual subvention will be 500,000 francs for the minimum, and 650,000 francs for the maximum. The contract is for fifteen years, and will begin on the first of April next. The company has already four steel steamers, and proposes to start every ten days. There will be first, second and third class passengers. The principal object of this line is to increase the commercial relations between France and Canada by the sale of grain, wood, cattle, and to promote emigration. The steamers are provided with cold storage apparatus. Leaving for Canada the steamers are to call at European ports, but the final departure for the whole trip to Canada will be made from a French port. The speed of the ships will be thirteen knots, which will permit them to make the trip in nine days. Negotiations are commenced with the French government so that the French products which are destined for the St. Louis Exposition, will pass by that line. The company, or rather the new line of steamers that is just established, is in great part, the work of Mr. C. E. Carbonneau, a rich Canadian capitalist living now in Paris. Mr. Carbonneau is already engaged in a number of enterprises, especially in the mining districts of the Yukon, where he was one of the pioneers. He has placed in France the workings of a Klondike mining company, which has given magnificent results to the shareholders, and which promises a good deal more, and quite recently he has concentrated his efforts in establishing this new line of steamers in which he is deeply interested.

Mr. Carbonneau has very great confidence in the opportunity which presents itself to improve the relations between France and Canada, and he proves his great energy in bringing it to the attention of the French people through his journal——

This is the journal I am reading:

——which is published in Paris, the advantages that the Dominion of Canada offers.

Then the journal goes on to say:

This effort is the third or fourth towards tightening the relations between Canadian and the French interests. The first efforts were not fruitful, and why? The first company which thought of establishing a Franco-Canadian had the very strange idea of creating a service between Havre and Montreal via Rio de Janeiro. We are like dreamers when we speak of such a circuitous voyage, but it is none the less true that that line passed by Rio de Janeiro.

The second company—the Company Bossiere—were more serious. Its promoters were shipowners of Havre. They got an annual subvention of 250,000 francs from the government. This line worked for three years. In the first year they had little success, but in two others they had more success. The service of the Bossiere line was very irregular. Their ships were not water tight, and the freight was damaged by sea water. Notwithstanding that the company of Bossiere realized very high profits. If the Bossiere Company had concentrated their efforts on that line, if they had given a better service their interests to-day would be very large. Unfortunately, they tried to go out of their way to the West Indies, and the money they made here, they lost in the other excursions. The other efforts we need not mention. They failed very soon.

The fact I wanted to bring to the notice of the House is this, that the company we are now legislating for was specially promoted by a rich capitalist of Canada, now living in Paris, called Carbonneau, who is interested, as this French paper says, in this enterprise, which is one of his latest efforts, and one of his most gigantic efforts. Who is Mr. Carbonneau? We can find his history in a London paper. If we go back to the British Columbia 'Review,' which is published in London, we shall find this article in the number of October 11, 1902. The British Columbia 'Review' is a weekly journal published in London in the interest of Canadian enterprises. Here is what is said on the 'Gold Run Klondike.' What 'the Gold Run Klondike' is will be explained in the article itself, and hon. gentlemen will see what it is, and how Mr. Carbonneau came to put that Gold Run Klondike on the French market.

THE SCHEMES OF AN UNSCRUPULOUS PROMOTER.

A Timely Warning to Investors in London and Paris.

For some time past we have been kept informed of an effort which was being made at Dawson to interest French capital in a large mining deal—large in this connection applies more to the purchase price of the property than to the intrinsic value of the claims. As the French engineer sent out to verify the vendor's statements was not impressed with the value of the property, and certain statements appeared in the Dawson papers accusing the promoter of attempting to 'salt' the claims he was endeavouring to sell, we presumed that another 'wild-cat' had been scotched in embryo. It was, therefore, with some little surprise that we learned a few days ago that the Gold Run Klondike Mining Company had been registered on October 1 at Somerset House, with a capital of £400,000 in 10s. shares.

The object of the company is to enter into an agreement with Charles Eugene Carbonneau, who figures in the triple capacity of vendor, signatory, and director of the company.

A visit to the registrar's files discloses the fact that the agreement is dated June 23, about ten days after the 'salting' affidavits had been sworn-out in Dawson. The vendor's price for the claim is £350,000, of which he requires £150,000 in cash. The intention, we understand, is to attempt to unload these shares in Paris, but a promoter of such unbridled assurance is not likely to make an attempt in London also. It is to be regretted that he has found some one so ill-informed and credulous as to incur the not inconsiderable expense involved in the registration of the company. We will give our readers a short sketch of this promoter's career in connection with the Klondike gold-diggings, and they will then be able to judge if our warning is necessary.

The advent of Charles Eugene Carbonneau in London, in the role of a Klondike mining agent, took place in the summer of 1898, when, by means of his plausible manner and specious representations, he sufficiently succeeded in interesting some city people to induce them to form a small syndicate for the purpose of sending him out again to Klondinke to secure certain properties.

Upon Carbonneau's return to London, in the autumn of 1898, with options over two claims, the syndicate who had despatched him to Klondike obtained independent information as to the value of the properties such as justified them in forming a small Klondike mining company, and the subsequent history of the claims showed that, under anything like decent management, they would have proved a good investment. Carbonneau was appointed manager, and returned to Klondike. The effect was disastrous and the result was ruin to the company. The narrative is too long to be fully set out here, but amongst other occurrences during Carbonneau's regime as manager may be mentioned the illegal and unauthorized granting of a mortgage over the company's mining property in favour of a certain Miss Belinda Mulroney, who was at that time a hotel-keeper, a mining speculator, and a well-known feature in Dawson life. It is of peculiar interest to know that Carbonneau's power of attorney specifically and absolutely prohibited him from granting such a mortgage or in any other way encumbering the company's title to the claims, and this would, to the ordinary individual, no doubt, have presented an insuperable difficulty to carrying through his scheme. Here accident, however, came to his aid, and his power of attorney was burned while in the custody of the bank, during the fire which occurred at Dawson in the spring of 1899. This cleared the way for Carbonneau, who thereupon proceeded upon his scheme by swearing an affidavit that his power of attorney gave him power to grant such a mortgage, which he thereupon granted. The eventful upshot of the whole matter was that these valuable claims eventually fell into the possession of Miss Mulroney, who by this time had become Mrs. Carbonneau. Comment, we think, is unnecessary, and the trouble which the enterprising couple had taken to secure the property of the English company was no doubt well rewarded by their subsequent working of the claims. These ill-gotten gains have apparently so stimulated his cupidity as to induce him to again make an appearance here, relying upon the forgetful nature of the British investor and the short memory of the press. We can assure Mr. Carbonneau, however, that all he is doing and attempting to do, is known and is being most carefully watched.

It is, by the way, interesting to learn that Carbonneau has, during part of his career, posed as a French 'Count,' and is known as 'Count' Carbonneau over the whole scene of his operations in Klondike. His right to such a title, however, is absolutely apocryphal, and was emphatically repudiated by the French Consul in the public press at Vancouver, in July, 1899, when 'Count' Carbonneau's name was figuring most prominently in connection with a most disreputable scandal.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Would the hon. gentleman be kind enough to tell us what connection this has with the Bill ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the hon. gentleman cannot understand it is impossible for me to drive it into his head.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Does the hon. gentleman himself understand it ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the hon. gentleman wants to make a speech he can have the floor.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—I am tired listening to the hon. gentleman's speech and so is everybody else.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Carboneau is not a party to this transaction at all. I assured my hon. friend of that in the first instance.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I take the hon. gentleman's word. He thinks Carbonneau is not a party to it, but I know he is a party. I tell the hon. minister he is a party and he is the whole brain of the enterprise, with one of the hon. ministers in the Cabinet.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Of course it rests with the Minister of Trade and Commerce and I heard him discussing the point whether Colombiers should be permitted to assign his contracts and it was decided he should not. We only knew Colombiers in the transaction. He brought letters from bankers in Bordeaux and Sir Wilfrid at once cabled to the British Consul at Bordeaux to verify the correctness of the credentials, and the report received from the British Consul was that although the firm was not a strong firm financially, yet they were a respectable house and no doubt he would be able to enlist any financial aid that might be necessary in the event of a contract being awarded. That is all we know about it. W declined to deal with any other parties in the meantime. Carboneau may be a silent partner. I could not tell, and nobody else could tell anything about that.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think it is my duty to bring these matters to the attention of the government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall be glad to send the hon. gentleman's remarks to the minister.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am as anxious as any body else to see those relations with France renewed. But I think if those relations between France and this country are put into the hands of parties who have not the reputation they should have, that we are working against our own interests and we are compromising for ever the commercial relations we might have with the French people. If we want to succeed it must be carried out by men of means and of good reputation.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—That is right.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—For that purpose I thought it my duty to put the ministry of the day in possession of some facts and when a paper published in France the 'Crédit Canadien' says publicly in France that this contract has been obtained by Mr. Carbonneau, that Carbonneau is the brain of the whole concern, I think I have a right to let the hon. minister know what kind of a character Carbonneau is and to call his attention to the danger of the transaction if that is the transaction. The article reads as follows:

> Carbonneau was in London again last winter for the purpose of foisting his proposition upon the British public. Happily, however, they found that London was not at all in the mood for business, and the scene of operations was thereupon shifted to Paris, where fewer sources of information regarding exist, and where there representations might possibly be more readily believed. There they sufficiently interested a certain French financial group to induce them to send out to Klondike, for the purpose of substantiating their statements as to the value of the claims, M. Bel, a French mining engineer. Upon his arrival at Dawson he was for some time most assiduously 'shepherded' by Carbonneau and his associates, in order that he might be prevented from seeing things otherwise than through their eyes, or from hearing stories of Carbonneau's character and career, which are, of course, common knowledge in Dawson. After some little time, however, M. Bel succeeded in evading the espionage of the would-be vendors, and, on being informed in reputable quarters regarding the true character of the business upon which he had to report and those associated with it, he became so convinced of the undesirability of his employers having anything further to do with it, that he at one returned to Paris, closely followed, however, by the indefatigable Carbonneau. What report M. Bel gave to his principals, and what has become of it, it would be interesting to learn. No prospectus has been filed, and it is extremely unlikely now that such a document will be added to the archives of Somerset House; but it is absolutely necessary, both in the interests of the public and for the reputations of the co-directors of Carbonneau, that M. Bel's report should be published before a single share is offered for sale, either here or in Paris.
>
> Considering the whole circumstances, it is our obvious duty to give full publicity to the foregoing information. We specially recommend it to the members and committee of the London Stock Exchange, as no doubt an effort will be made to have dealings carried through and secure a settlement in the shares here, if only to assist their schemes in Paris. Our French contemporaries will also do well to take note.

That was the article published in the British Columbia 'Review' as I said in the month of October, 1902. In the month of November a single paragraph from the same paper reads as follows:

> In regard to the Gold Run, Klondike, Company, we regret that we have not received a copy of the report of Mons. J. M. Bel, but we understand that the syndicate for whom he went to report has been dissolved, which explains the delay in obtaining the necessary authorization. We notice in a recent copy of the 'Tabarin,' a small Paris weekly, that our remarks in connection with Carbonneau and his Klondike Company are reproduced, and our contemporary observes that the 'Cocarde,' a Parisian gutter journal, is puffiing the Credit Canadien, the stalking horse through which Carbonneau is endeavouring to foist his shares on the French pubilc. As our contemporary pertinently remarks, eulogy from such a quarter ought to be sufficient to put the public on its guard. Apparently, Carbonneau is still installed at the Elysee Palace Hotel, where, according to our contemporary, he lives in 'regal style,' so the pockets of some too confiding investors must be the lighter.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Has the hon. gentleman any more of that historical record to produce ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—A little more.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Then I rise to a point of order. The government has given its word that there is no dealing whatever in this Bill with a certain gentleman called Carbonneau. The hon. gentleman is reading from papers of which he knows nothing. The government has pledged its word that it has nothing to do with Carbonneau. Why bring him into this discussion on the strength of a newspaper report ? I contend that the hon. gentleman has no right to describe the character of a gentleman called Carbonneau who has nothing whatever to do with the question before the House. The question was put to the hon. Secretary of State, representing the government here, asking him what connection Carbonneau had with the contract, and the Secretary of State on behalf of the government, has stated that he had no connection whatever. If the Chair is going to allow a discussion like this to proceed, we shall be here all night, and I think the Chair should use his authority and declare such allusions to parties who have no interest in the Bill out of order, and I ask for a ruling in the matter.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am going to speak on the point of order. Will the hon. gentleman have courtesy enough to allow me to speak on a point of order ?

Hn. Mr. CLORAN—Yes, but do not give us any more Carbonneau.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am perfectly in order, I think. Here is a measure of public interest. A man called Colombiers is negotiating with the government for the signing of a contract. I want to prove, and I shall prove, that this man Carbonneau is closely connected with Colombiers ; that Colombiers is only a figure head, that the real man contracting is Carbonneau himself.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Will the hon. gentleman allow me to put this question ? Is he going to give us the record of all the men that are connected with Mr. Colombiers and do business with him ? If he is entitled to give us the record of one party who does business with Colombiers, he will be entitled to give us the record of every other man who does business with that house, and I think the chairman should exercise his authority.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I was speaking on the point of order, and I am pointing out that I was in my right because I was discussing a question of public interest, and I was showing in what way I was right, in what way the name of Mr. Carbonneau was brought before this House, and it is my duty as a public man to do so. The hon. gentleman may raise points of order as often as he likes ; he knows I am in order, and his attempt to choke off the discussion will not succeed. I want to show what Carbonneau is, and I want the government to know who he is, an I want to convince the government—as I shall if I am allowed to speak—that Mr. Carbonneau is really the factotum in that contract and that Mr. Colombiers is only a prete nom. That is what the English papers were saying. I think that is sufficient to bring in Mr. Carbonneau. If he has been slandered he should have vindicated his own reputation. But now comes another phase of the question. Mr. Carbonneau published in Paris a journal called 'La Canada.' The journal 'Le Canada' says in a despatch that Mr. Carbonneau states that he is the man who is conducting this negotiation for a contract and though Mr. Colombiers is the man who is working with the government, he is only the prete nom. That is, the man in contact with the government, but the real proprietor of the whole scheme is Mr. Carbonneau himself. I read in my opening remarks that a despatch from Ottawa stated that all the interest of Mr. Colombiers in this matter had been bought by Mr. Carbonneau. This gentleman went to Paris, as has been shown, and is now in Paris working this scheme but while he was working this scheme he was working the Goll Run scheme also. The shares of the Gold Run scheme which are now being foisted on the French investing public by the means of the Credit Canadien which appears to be a mushroom bucket shop, have evidently not been received with favour and so the enterprising promoter——

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Will the hon. gentleman tell us what he is reading from that characterizes the Credit Canadien as a mushroom bucket-shop.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am reading from the British Columbia 'Review', an English paper published in London. I know what the hon. gentleman is coming at, but there is no danger, I will go on just the same. The article continues:

> The shares of this company, which are now being foisted on the French investing public by means of the 'Credit Canadien,' which appears to be a mushroom bucket-shop, have evidently not been received with favour and so the enterprising promoter of both concerns. Charles Eugene Carbonneau appears to have started or subsidized a paper called 'Le Canada,' the first number of which is dated the 14th instant, which devotes much space to puffing the advantages of the Gold Run Company and the 'Credit Canadien.' Its frontispiece contains large photographs of the Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Hon. Raymond Préfontaine. It will be remembered that the name of the latter was given as one of the directors of the 'Credit Canadien.'

That name was given in this country. It was given in Paris. It was given throughout the world. In fact, M. Préfontaine is the well known companion of M. Carbonneau. The article continues:

> Mr. Préfontaine, who was at ont time mayor of Montreal, has now joined the Canadian Cabinet as Minister Marine and Fisheries, and the 'Credit Canadien' publishes an alleged letter from the Minister, which, if genuine, most seriously involves that gentleman's responsibility. It is hardly conceivable that a Minister of the Dominion Cabinet would recommend to French investors an undertaking of the kind.

The letter as published was written in French and the translation is as follows:

> The Department of Marine and Fisheries,
> Ottawa, Canada, Nov. 26, 1902.
>
> Gentlemen,—Since November 14 I am a member of the Canadian government as Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Under those circumstances it is impossible to act as one of the administrators of a company so important as the one you have founded. The enterprise in which this company is called to enter would conflict with the duties of my position. On the other hand it is a rule here in Canada that a member of the Crown should not be a party in any industrial or financial company.

That is the rule asserted by Mr. Préfontaine. It does not apply to senators.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Very fortunately for some.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Very fortunately for senators who may be involved in great enterprises. The letter continues:

> That does not mean to say that I have no confidence in your enterprise. On the contrary, especially if the 'Credit Canadien' occupies itself specially with mining affairs such as the Gold Run in the Yukon, and as the dredging of the gold of the river Saskatchewan.

Hon. gentlemen know that Mr. Drolet, well known in Montreal, has property on the river Saskatchewan, and the hon. Mr. Préfontaine, in giving his paternal advice to the journal, to the company, to Mr. Carbonneau and others did not forget his friend Mr. Drolet, and he says specially that the 'Credit Canadien' will be a success if the Credit Canadien limits itself to the mining interests of the Gold Run, and to the dredging of the gold in the river Saskatchewan, &c. The letter continues:

> I know, for having visited these two mining properties, they promise very exceptional advantages to the shareholders, and I have no doubt that these two enterprises, if they are well established on a solid financial basis, will yield a profit. Hoping that you will succeed, I must say, to my great regret, I am obliged to resign the presidency of your board in order to conserve my own independence, which I hope, with the reasons I give, will be judged sufficient.
>
> Believe me to be yours truly,
> R. PREFONTAINE,
> Minister of Marine and Fisheries.
>
> To the members of the board of administration of the 'Credit Canadien' of Paris.

Naturally the promoters of this bucket-shop make the most of this testimonial and while they regret that Mr. Préfontaine has found it necessary to retire from the board of the company if he ever was on it, they say:

> He nevertheless gave to the 'Credit Canadien' a testimony of sympathy and encouragement, especially precious, and in all sincerity the 'Credit Canadien' never hoped to be known in France under a better patronage.

Then the article continues:

> It would certainly appear that this unscrupulous scheme which is being puffed under such auspices constitutes a grave danger to a large class of French investors who, like many in this country, are easily attracted by a prominent name.

It is satisfactory to note that the majority of the French financial papers of standing have warned their readers against the 'Credit Canadien' and the shares which it is offering, and many of them reproduce the exposure of Charles Carbonneau, which first appeared in these columns. The 'Paris Bourse' has dealt with this promoter at some length in its recent issues, and joins with us in asking that the report of M. Bel should be made public. In referring to the details which we published concerning the financial methods of Mr. Charles Carbonneau, the 'Financial News' this week, in referring to our statements, says :—'If the statements therein contained are true, the sooner this egregious gentleman finds another occupation the better it will be for all parties concerned. If they are not true, Mr. Carbonneau, in the interests of his own honour, should lose no time in seeking legal redress,' and our contemporary concludes by saying that 'if the Paris press takes the matter up, Mr. Carbonneau will probably see the French market as securely closed to him as the English one appears to be. In that event, he will probably find himself, finally, with the bulk of his shares left on his hands.'

A French paper took up the affair and we find in the 'Bulletin Mensuel,' published by the French Chamber of Commerce of Montreal, the following extracts, under the title of 'French Banks in Canada, and Canadian Banks in France':

The note published in the last number of the 'Bulletin' concerning certain persons who have come to Canada and are claming that they represent the Franco-Canadian Bank and the Banque Syndicate, had not yet arrived in France when a journal of Paris, 'Lan Concorde,' published against those same persons a very violent article, the violence of which is nevertheless justified if the facts mentioned are true. While we recommend to our readers in France to be careful, 'La Concorde' entitled its article 'Canadians take care of your pockets.'

Now we announce the creation in Paris of a Canadian bank under the name of the Credit Canadien with the object of furnishing capital to the mining interests of Canada. Very honourable names figure amongst the founders and directors of the Credit Canadien, amongst others the name of the Hon. Raymond Préfontaine, formerly mayor of Montreal, and lately Minister of Marine and Fisheries in the cabinet of Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

But we find also, the name of a person who is well known in Canada, where he left burning regrets amongst his dupes. The name of this personage would be sufficient to bring to its end any affair which may be put on the market, and we have not only been surprised, but amazed to see his name in company with the name of the Hon. Mr. Préfontaine. We endeavoured to express our surprise to the new minister who formerly declared to us that his name has been used by the directors of the Credit Canadien without his knowledge. He wrote first and then telegraphed to stop the unauthorized use of his name. It is probable that the other respectable names are there also without the knowledge of those who bear those names. We are, in consequence, perfectly at our ease when we tell French readers to keep at a distance from the Credit Canadien ; as to our Canadian readers, they know all about it.

That man Carbonneau was not always in France. He was in Montreal, and Quebec. He was in mostly every place. But what was he in Montreal ? I think the hon. minister should know that. It was in 1898 he was in the Klondike. If you look up the 'Hansard' of the House of Commons you will find that he got up to the Klondike in the party that was organized by Mr. Charleson, when they put up the telegraph posts along the route in the Klondike. He was in the party. I think he occupied a rather high position. He was cook of the party, but he succeeded in getting to the Klondike ; but before that, what was he ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Does the hon. gentleman make that affirmation upon certain date, as to going with Mr. Charleson ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—As cook ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Does the hon. gentleman make that affirmation on his own responsibility ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No. I said if we looked in the 'Hansard' we will find that information. It was given to me, and I had no time to hunt up the 'Hansard,' but it was brought forth before parliament, I think by one of the members of the House in the last parliament. Here is information on which we can rely, because the facts came out in the courts. I read from the 'Star,' dated August 8, 1895 :

A MANAGER ARRESTED.

Charged with theft from the Canadian Trading and Shipping Company.

There is a sensation in the wine and liquor business, brought about by the arrest of Charles Eugene Carbonneau, lately manager of the Canadian Trading and Shipping Company, limited, for theft. The arrest was made last evening by a Detective Carpenter on a warrant issued by Mr. Ulric Lafontaine, on a charge of theft laid by Mr. Antoine Hurtboise, head bookkeeper of the firm. The complaint charges Carbonneau with having, on or about December 1st, 1894, stolen a basket of champagne of the value of $28, which was owned by the company. The news of Carbonneau's arrest caused a great deal of gossip in the wine business. Carbonneau, who hails from Quebec, has been well known here and in France for some years and stories of all kinds are being told on his account.

When the Canadian Trading and Shipping Company was formed in September, 1894, Carbonneau, who had the reputation of a live business man, was engaged at a salary of $5,000 per annum, and allowed $75 a week expenses when travelling. He made two trips to France in the interests of the company, and returned the last time only a few days ago. Somehow or other he did not give satisfaction, and some three months ago he handed in his resignation, but consented to withhold it for three months.

Last Saturday, the three months being up, he was informed that he was no longer in the company's employ. It would appear that he made certain threats against the directors, and they decided to prosecute him. 'We have placed the matter in the hands of Messrs. Greenshields & Geoffrion,' said Mr. J. A. Bousquet, the president of the company, this morning, 'and they have instructions to push the matter to the end. This first charge we have made against Carbonneau is only the beginning. We have a number of others cases which we want him to answer for.'

Carbonneau says that this particular basket of wine which he is charged with stealing was sent as a complimentary gift.

Mr. A. G. Mallette, the manager of the company, denied that it was the custom of the company to send baskets of wine to the mayor and aldermen.

Dr. Beausoleil, a director of the company, denied Carbonneau's statement that the company did $1,500,000 business while he was manager. The company is prosperous, and has taken no stock whatever in Carbonneau's demand of assignment.

Carbonneau was to have sailed for Europe in a day or two for the purpose, it is said, of organizing a company in opposition to the present company.

Charles E. Carbonneau was arranged in the police court at eleven o'clock this morning before Mr. Lafontaine, the acting magistrate, on the charge of stealing a box of champagne from the Canada Shipping and Trading Company. After the charge had been read to him the accused was asked if he had anything to say and replied not guilty.

The name of the counsel who appeared for Carbonneau is obliterated.

Q.C., appeared on behalf of the prisoner, made application that the case be gone on with at once, as he had been led to believe that there were other charges to be made against the prisoner.

The court decided that the enquete would proceed on Monday.

The lawyer for the defence then made application for bail, but met with a refusal, as the magistrate wished to await the other complaints. On the prisoner's being taken back to the cells, Mr. Joseph Chaput swore out a complaint to the effect that Charles Eugene Carbonneau did unlawfully, on June 15th, steal from the Canada Shipping and Trading Company an express waggon, valued at $100, and further, that the said Charles E. Carbonneau did on March 13th, steal from the said company the sum of $20, and also that an investigation of the books of the company will show a large defalcation.

Up to 12.15 o'clock, the accused had not been able to secure bail, which was fixed by the magistrate at $800, in two securities of $400 on each charge. Judge Desnoyers consented to wait until one o'clock in order to allow the prisoner to secure bondsmen, if possible.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I should like to appeal to my hon. friend if this historical indictment has not gone far enough. It seems very unfair.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I proposed an adjournment of the debate, which the hon. minister refused. So I was forced to proceed immediately.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have given my hon. friend the assurance that I will draw the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to the matter. If he added ten volumes to it he could not give it more weight. I think he is very unfair and very inconsiderate to the members present. In all my forty years of parliamentary experience, I never heard of an hon. gentleman so trespass on the good nature of the House, at one o'clock talking on a subject which has no earthly connection with the Bill before us, and traducing a gentleman who is absent, and has no one to speak for him, and libelling him in a way that he would not do outside this House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is the second time the hon. gentleman imputes to me motives, and he has no right to do so.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have a perfect right. I am speaking on behalf of gentlemen who have tolerated this thing long enough, but the time has come to interfere, to protest against having our night's rest taken away with this rubbish.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Then, I will move the adjournment of the debate. I do not want to remain here.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I object to the adjournment of the debate. I know what the hon. gentleman's purpose is. He is running a newspaper in Quebec, and he thinks it will earn a vote.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I would appeal to the leader of the opposition to ask his follower to keep within bounds.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am not under the whip of the hon. leader of the opposition. The hon. gentleman may be under the whip of somebody, but I am not, and what I want to do I will do. I do not want to trespass on the patience of the House. I asked the hon. gentleman to postpone the question till to-morrow, but I wanted to bring out these facts. If the hon. Secretary of State will not consent to an adjournment let us go on. I am not keeping hon. gentlemen here; it is the leader of the government in this House. If he does not want to keep the House here, let him consent to an adjournment of the debate, and the whole matter will be threshed out to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I appeal to the Chairman whether the hon. gentleman is in order in discussing a matter that is not relevant to this Bill, nor in any way connected with it.

The CHAIRMAN—Hon. gentlemen I have no desire to restrict the discussion on this Bill, not the slightest, and I leave it to my hon. friend's own judgment, whether or not he could not bring his remarks more in touch with the Bill and more in harmony with the wishes of the House, but it is entirely within his judgment to do so.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am very pleased with what the Chairman has just said, and I think if the hon. minister will be fair with me he will admit this is connected with the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. The hon. gentleman has given us a hundred different facts. One would be quite sufficient to put a black mark against this gentleman. It is not necessary to go on with this long discussion. The hon. gentleman did not add to or strengthen the case by giving us all these incidents.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not want to trespass on the patience of the House, but I will just say in summarizing the whole thing, that this gentleman was arrested in 1895, in Montreal. He was arrested again in Montreal in 1897.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Was he convicted ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, but he paid up.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Lots of good people are arrested.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—He was arrested in 1895 and was arrested again in 1897. He was capiased in 1897 on a judgment that came from France.

Hon. Mr. FROST—Is there any way in this body by which, a speaker can be shut off from talking irrelevant matter, if he is not speaking to the question ? I quite agree with the hon. Secretary of State in saying that this House is being imposed upon by the speech of the hon. gentleman ?

The CHAIRMAN—The hon. gentleman intimated to the House that he was merely summing up, to bring himself in order by speaking directly on the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I have plenty of things to say, but I will sum it up in two words. In 1897 Carbonneau was again arrested and capiased in Quebec while he was just enjoying two boxing matches that he had organized; he brought two boxers from Boston. He was arrested there in Quebec and brought to Montreal, and obliged to pay $900 to settle a judgment obtained in France against him, as is reported in the following extract of the 'Star" of the 28th October, 1897 :—

There is more trouble in store for Manager Carbonneau, of the Canadian Athletic Club, which seems still hopeful of pulling off the McCoy-Creedon fight in Quebec. The Court of Review has confirmed the judgment of the Superior Court in the case of Henri Duphot and Fernand Sardou, of Pons, near Cognac, France, against Charles Eugene Carbonneau and Charles Rousseau. The case is for some $1,200 and costs, and involves contrainte par corps, or, in other words, imprisonment until the amount is paid. In 1892 the plaintiffs caused the arrest of one. Louis Netter, doing business in this city under the name of Netter Freres, on a capias ad respondendum, for an alleged debt of $1,137. François Carbonneau, of Montmagny ; C. E. Carbonneau and Charles Rousseau went bail for the amount until the case was decided.

Before this was done Netter left the country. In April, 1893, Judge Taschereau confirmed the capias. Proceedings were then taken against C. E. Carbonneau and Chas. Rousseau. In the judgment of October, 1894, Judge Loranger states that both Carbonneau and Rousseau failed to appear, and the application for a rule nisi absolute against them was granted. Charbonneau subsequently carried the case to the Court of Review, and now that court has confirmed the judgment of the lower court against him and Rousseau.

It is stated that Carbonneau has made an offer to settle the case on a compromise of $900. In the meantime the rule nisi stands and may at any time be put into force against Carbonneau, who, is now said to have gone to New York in connection with the fight.

In regard to the fight, it may be stated that Major E. L. Bond, president of the Citizens' League, had a lengthy interview with the Hon. Mr. Marchand, and that the latter gentleman assured him that he, Mr. Marchand, would make it his business to see that the fight or anything resembling it would be prevented by the government.

I will now close my remarks in reading an article which appeared in the 'Citizen' of the 20th August last. It is as follows :—

FRANCE-CANADA TRADE.

The Possibilities of its Great Development.

The projector of mercantile and immigrant traffic of French Canadian capitalists now in the city—A talk with Mr. Eugène Carbonneau.

There appear to be great possibilities for the development of a vigorous commercial relationship between Canada and France when the project for the establishment of a fast line of freight and passenger steamers between Canada and French ports is carried into effect, as it seems to be the likelihood in the not far distant future. Attracted by the great resources of the country and the splendid opportunities for its commercial and industrial development, the eyes of French capitalists are looking this way as a profitable field for investment and one of the biggest projects is that of the Compagnie TransAtlantique France-Canada in the interests of which Mr. Eugene Carbonneau and Mr. Gustave Columbier, of Paris, are in the city. Mr. Carbonneau is a Canadian by birth, who has amassed a fortune in various speculations and has extensive interests both in France and Canada, and Mr. Columbier belongs to the wealthy firm of Columbier Fils, of Bordeaux, France, which operates lines of steamers to South Africa, South America and other ports. The company in which they are interested and which has contracted for several new steamers of the latest improved type, contemplates the establishment of a direct line between Canada and Bordeaux, France. Montreal and Quebec would be the summer termini, and Halifax or St. John the winter ports. The steamers would be fast freighters of a speed of 17 knots per hour, and the service would be weekly. It is proposed to have on each steamer complete cold storage apparatus for the handling of perishable products as well as room for all classes of freight and accommodation for fifteen hundred immigrants. There would be moreover accommodation for a limited number of saloon passengers. But the primary objects of the proposed line would be for freight and immigrant traffic, particularly, in the former line, lumber, grain and cattle. That would be the main cargo going over, returning the company would rely on its immigrant and general mercantile traffic.

To a 'Citizen' reporter last night Mr. Carbonneau, who is a guest at the Russell, talked of the great possibilities of development of trade as one who, having resided in both countries, is conversant with the prevailing conditions. He is strongly of the opinion that Canada and Canadian industries may open up a vigourous market for their products in the French republic. 'The blue books,' Mr. Carbonneau stated, 'show that annually France imports in cattle, grain and lumber alone, $213,000,000 worth. The share of this furnished by the Canadian people is trifling but if there were proper transportation facilities there is no country that could successfully compete with Canada. Norway supplies France with $60,000,000 worth of lumber and of but one variety. Canada's supply of that commodity to the French totalled but a few thousand dollars' worth last year. The grain exportation from this country to the republic was $370,000. The cattle trade was nil. We feel confident that the establishment of an up-to-date line of steamers with accommodation for all classes of freight will be the means of developing Canadian trade. What country is there that can surpass Canada as a source of supply for lumber, grain and cattle to say nothing of its cheese, butter, fruit and other products ? There is no reason why a great proportion of the French consumption of all these products, particularly the three first mentioned, should not go from Canada and bring money to Canadian pockets. Then there is great opportunity for the development of French immigration to this country. The French farmer is intelligent, well read, up-to-date, and would make a most desirable class of colonist for the newer and undeveloped portions of this growing country. We feel confident that our line of steamers when established will meet a long felt want and do much by means of a weekly service to foster and develop trade between the two countries now hampered alone for want of transportation facilities.'

Mr. Carbonneau would not talk of the proposition he and his associates have made to the government or as to the measures of assistance which is asked for. There is a strong feeling, however, that government aid of the proposed long wanted line would be productive of beneficent effects in the line indicated.

You have seen by this paper that Mr. Carbonneau was in Ottawa a few days ago, and in a conversation he had with a reporter of the 'Journal,' he referred to himself as one of the parties who are making arrangements with the government for that line, and for that reason I have always been in order, and I am still in order in pointing out to the hon. gentleman the record of Mr. Carbonneau. Mr. Carbonneau has so bad a record that in the public interests he should not be allowed in any way to mix up with this business, and he should not compromise our relations with the French people. If he identifies himself with it he will spoil the whole business, and we will lose what benefits we should derive from a good contract made with France in the interests of Canada.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG, from the committee reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned until 3 p.m. to-day.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Thursday, October 8th, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at 3 o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

MUTUAL RESERVE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE inquired:

1. Is the government aware that the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company was formerly called the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association?

2. Did the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association get incorporation in the United States of America to change its name to the Mutual Life Insurance Company?

3. Has the Mutual Reserve Life Incurance Company changed the plan of insurance of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association in doing business from assessment to straight life? It so, at what date?

4. If the plan of business was changed from assessment to straight life, what provision was made for those who were insured under the assessment plan?

5. Did the old policy-holders under the assessment plan come in under the straight life by surrender of their policies or otherwise?

6. How many policy-holders, in number and amount, came under the assessment plan at the time of the change of system?

7. Are the funds now held by the Finance Department for the security of policy-holders in Canada, for the benefit of both systems, or are they separated? What amount is held for the security of policy-holders under the assessment plan?

8. Has the government looked into the powers of the new company to see if they could compel policy-holders under the assessment system in the old company to accept the new or amended incorporation?

9. When such amendment was made to their charter or Act of incorporation, did it provide a fund to be established in Canada to protect Canadian policy-holders who were insured under the assessment plan? If so, at what date and how much?

10. Has the Finance Department received a copy of the new incorporation, known as the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company? And is it now in the possession of the Finance Department?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answers given to me by the insurance branch of the Finance Department are as follows:

1. Yes. See 'Gazette' statement of licensed companies in which appears 'The Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company' (formerly the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association).

2. The Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association obtained reincorporation on the 17th April, 1902, under the Insurance law (chapter 690) of the State of New York, by which its name was changed to 'The Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company' (not the Mutual Life Insurance Company, as in the question).

3. From the above-mentioned date (April 17, 1902) the business done by the company is as follows: Insurance upon the lives or the health of persons, and all and every insurance appertaining thereto, the making of endowments and the granting, purchasing and disposing of annuities, such kind of insurance being authorized under subdivision one of section 70 of 'The Insurance Laws.'

In Canada the company is authorized to carry on business 'on the the assessment plan as to business prior to 11th August, 1899,' but 'the notice prescribed by section 42a of 'the Insurance Act as amended having been filed in this office, the date named therein being August 11th, 1899, the insurance business carried on by the said company is subject to and regulated by the provisions of said section, provided the company shall not assure any annuity or endowment.'

4. The change of the system from assessment to reserve bearing, applies only to the new policies issued after the above-named date (August 11th, 1899).

The holders of the old assessment policies are subject to the provisions of their contracts.

5. We understand that an opportunity was (and is) given for a policy-holder under the assessment plan to surrender his policy and take out in lieu thereof a level premium, or reserve-bearing policy. A number of the assessment policy-holders have done this. In these cases the provisions applicable to policies issued since August 11th, 1899, apply.

6. Returns are made to the insurance department once a year on the 31st December.

On the 31st December, 1899, which is the date of the return nearest August 11th, 1899, there were in Canada 9,757 assessment policy-holders in good standing for an amount of $19,562,127.

7. The deposit with the Finance Department is separated. The amount applicable to the assessment policy-holders of date prior to August 11,1899, is $238,460 par value, the accepted value being $228,045.

8. The department has examined the charter of the new company and is not aware that any powers that are illegal are contained in it in reference to the assessment policy-holders. This is, however, a question for the courts of law to determine.

9. No. The charter of the company makes no provision for any special funds to be established in any country or state.

10. Yes. A statement was also given me of the list of insurance companies licensed to do business in Canada. The Mutual Life Insurance Company, formerly the Mutual Reserve Life Association, appears on this list and certain details with reference to the company and its operations are given. I will hand this list to my hon. friend for his information.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I want to call attention to a matter which I think is a very important matter to those who have arrived at a certain age like myself and whose families may be left dependent upon insurance for their support. While I have got this report, and it is all right, it is not exactly what I wanted. I would like to call my hon. friend's attention to the report as to the assets of this company. I state their assets are not correct. I did not want to say so now for I propose by-and-by to bring up the whole business. Their assets in 1896 or 1897 were some four million dollars. I am merely speaking from memory—and I may not be exactly correct—and to-day they have only got four millions, with this proviso that they have asked their policy-hollers and men who have insured, to resume their policies that have lapsed. They have issued a circular to say 'if you will come in we will take you all in again and you give us your premium note, and we will charge that against your policy, and make it a mortgage or a lien on your policy,' and they have included that in their assets in their report to the department. Now, is that an asset to the policy-holders ? It is a delicate matter, but I have been asked to bring it up by a number of people who have got policies in the company, and they feel that the return made to parliament is not a correct statement. If a policy holder resumes a lapsed policy and gives his note for all the back premiums, it is made a lien on his policy, and that is put in the statement of the insurance company as an asset. I do not want to make a speech now, because I am not prepared to do so. Later on I am going to lay this whole subject before the House in the interest of the policy-holders, and I would call the attention of my hon. friend the leader of the government in this House, by another notice or two, and he can probably look into the matter, to whether a foreign company can come in and get the premiums of people in Canada without adequate security. An insurance agent comes along and gets a man to insure who believes the company is all right. Then he finds year by year that the rate is being put up on him, and when the returns made by the company to the government are looked at they are found to be simply falsified. There is no other word to use except that.

This is a question in which I feel very much interested. The company was working under the name of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York. They changed their name now to the Mutual Reserve Life Association and compelled those who were insured with them under the assessment system, either to take a straight life policy, or submit to higher rates as years advance. If they took a straight life policy, they had to submit to a higher rate than that at which they were insured ; if they remained in the old position young lives would come in under the assessment system, they are hived down. Every man has to pay for his neighbour and finally the ninety-nine man has to pay for the hundredth. Some of my hon. friends who know the insurance business, can verify what I say. The ninety-ninth man having to pay for the hundredth, he is obliged to pay every year, as much for his policy as he will ever get out of it. I want the leader of the government in this House to look into the matter, and see that those who are insured, in this company and have been paying their money under certain representations are protected, if the company continues to do business in Canada. We have good companies in Canada—none better. I could point to hon. gentlemen here who are connected with some of them. This New York company having obtained a foothold in Canada were bound to protect those who insured with them under circumstances which do not exist to-day. The policy-holders never consented to the change of name and conditions. They were told that, under the assessment system, by paying so much they would get back their money; to-day they are met with the fact that those who live long enough will not only get nothing, but will have to pay more than they would have received if they were to collect their policies. I do not propose to die in order to get the amount of my policy. I ask this House to legislate in such a manner that we shall have absolute protection for the money we have paid in. I am not speaking for myself now, I am speaking for many people in Canada. We have good Canadian companies which are doing straight honourable business, and I propose if this United States company is to continue doing business in Canada, to ask the government to compel them to protect their policy-holders, who are not protected to-day.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I would ask the hon. gentleman if that Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company is the same company which has just been brought before the Privy Council in England?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I would not be at all surprised. I shall be prepared later on to give my hon. friend from Stadacona (Mr. Landry) more information. I shall be prepared to lay before this House some statistics that I think will astonish hon. gentlemen and stagger the government who are allowing them to do business here.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I asked the question to be sure. I heard that that company had just lost a very important suit before the Privy Council in England on the ground that they had increased their premiums to a very considerable extent, contrary to the conditions agreed upon between the policy holders and the company, establishing a maximum rate. They exceeded that maximum and lawsuits followed. One was tried here in Canada. In the Court of Appeals, judgment was given in favour of the company but the final decision on the case being appealed to England, is against the company. If that is the same company to which the hon. gentleman from St. John refers, the government should have its eyes opened, and should take steps to protect the interests of all parties concerned in Canada.

The motion was agreed to.

FIRE INSURANCE PREMIUMS PAID IN MONTREAL.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. DAVID moved:

That a humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that His Excellency will be pleased to cause to be laid before this House a statement showing the amount of premiums of insurance against fire which have been paid each year in the city of Montreal during the last ten years, up to the 1st of July last, and also showing the amounts paid each year at Montreal during the same period by insurance companies to holders of policies, and also the names of these companies.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was about to rise to make some remarks on the motion which has just been carried, but I can do it as well on this motion. The hon. gentleman from St. John's (Hon. Mr. Domville) made a serious charge against a life insurance company, and no doubt the attention of the department will be called to the fact that the returns made by that company are said to be incorrect. It is a very serious charge to make against any company, and if this foreign company has been making false returns, the severest penalty should be imposed on them. The hon. gentleman might have stated at the same time that the securities which are deposited with the government are not taken at par.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I mentioned that. I mentioned the par value and the amount at which they were accepted. They were accepted at a lower figure than par.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The $265,000 securities deposited by the company were accepted by the department at $253,000. What I wanted to impress on the hon. gentleman was the charge made by the hon. gentleman from St. John that this company had made inaccurate returns. It appears from what has fallen from the hon. gentleman from Stadacona, and also from information I have received from another source, that there are one or two suits now before the courts arising out of the difficulties mentioned by the hon. gentleman, and I was under the impression that the suit that had been entered by the hon. Mr. Angers had been decided in his favour. I am not sure about that, or whether the case is now before the Supreme Court.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—He lost the appeal, and the case is now before the Supreme Court.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to ask my hon. friend the leader of the House whether he is prepared to lay on the Table of the House the returns which I moved for at an early stage in the session, and also the returns which I moved for a week or two ago? Perhaps my hon. friend will remember that the motion made some time ago is one asking for all correspondence and contracts with regard to the equipment of steamers engaged in carrying perishable freight from Canada to the old country. That is one motion, and the other is for all the papers, petitions and Orders in Council passed on the commutation of the death sentence on Joseph Carver, of Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In reference to the first return, I shall make inquiry when it will be brought down. In calling for the papers to prepare the information asked for by the hon. gentleman in the other matter, I found that correspondence had already taken place with the Department of Justice on the subject. Mr. Bruce Stewart had written the Minister of Justice for the information my hon. friend asked for, and I shall read the answer which was given him (reads). I find also another letter, addressed to D. A. McKinnon, K.C.,M.P., dated 25th September, 1903 (reads). In view of those letters I felt myself precluded from bringing down the papers when the Department of Justice had objected.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Can that not be considered as a return?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it cannot.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The letters cannot be considered as a return, but there can be no objection to their going on record.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, I should object to that; they were personal letters.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman has made them public by reading them here.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not care about them being put in 'Hansard' without the authority of the Department of Justice. I got them particularly to show my hon. friend rather than read them in the Senate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is why I said I thought they became public property, the hon. gentleman having read them, as he did not preface his remarks by saying he did not wish them published in the reports. My impression is they ought at least to appear in the Debates. If the hon. gentleman requests that they shall not be put on record, I do not know that we should insist upon it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think they should go on record. They are so thoroughly noncommital that they do not express anything at all further than that the minister came to the conclusion that the requirements of justice would be served, which we know is a very general statement.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will think it over.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am not going to dispute the position taken by the Minister of Justice, but I am under the impression at all events, that the public have been made acquainted with the grounds on which sentences have been commuted; however, I am not positive about that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was under the impression that there ought to be no objection to the petition, but on inquiring at the department I was informed they always decline to give them out. If any one chooses to call there and see them, I daresay there is no objection. I have no objection to discuss it with my hon. friend privately.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The point that was made by the brother of the murdered man is that he was informed—of course, he cannot be sure of that—that some of the names attached to this petition were not genuine. I suppose the hon. minister has no objection to myself or Mr. McKinnon, the member for the constituency, looking over the names, and possibly anything found flagrantly wrong in them would be ground upon which the government would be prepared to act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I would be very glad if the hon. gentleman finds it convenient at any time to call. I shall be very glad to get the file and let him see it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I know it will satisfy Mr. Stewart as well as many others.

A POINT OF ORDER.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to call attention to the report of the Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate to-day relating to what took place yesterday. On page 894 we find the following :

> The House, according to order, was adjourned during pleasure, and put into Committee of the Whole on the Bill (243) intituled : 'An Act to amend the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act, the Exchequer Court Act, and the Act respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts.'
>
> In the Committee.
>
> The title read and postponed.
> The first section read and agreed to.
> Upon the second section being read,
> It was moved, that it be struck out of the Bill ;
> A question of order being raised that it is beyond the competency of the Senate to amend the said Bill, because it is a money Bill.
> The Chairman came to the conclusion that he should report the point of order to His Honour the Speaker for his ruling.
> After some time the House was resumed, and The Honourable Mr. Ellis, from the said committee, reported, that they had taken the said Bill into consideration, made some progress therein, and asked leave to sit again to-day.

I do not see in the report of yesterday's proceedings a motion that was made by me asking that the committee rise and report progress, and ask leave to sit again and report to the Speaker that a point of order had been raised stating what the point of order was, so as to have the decision of the Speaker. It says that Mr. Ellis from the committee reported that they had made some progress with the Bill and asked leave to sit again to-day. Then it is ordered that the said committee have leave to sit again to-day. When was that order given ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Before six o'clock.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The order that the committee should have leave to sit again ?

Hon. Mr. BAKER—Yes, certainly.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Was it given before the Speaker ruled on the point of order afterwards ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In order to give the Speaker time to consider, we called it six o'clock.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman is confusing two decisions. He is confusing the decision of the Speaker given on the point of order raised in the committee, and the decision given by the hon. Speaker when I rose to speak on the motion appealing from his decision. Those are two different points of order altogether. I am speaking of the first point of order raised in committee, and reported by the chairman of the committee to the Speaker. The Speaker gave his decision. I am asking if the leave to go back into committee was given before the decision of the Speaker or afterwards ?

The SPEAKER—Before.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—The records are all right.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—But I do not find them complete. In the first place that motion in committee asking the committee to rise and report progress, and report to the Speaker, a point of order that was taken, does not appear. The second point is that the decision given by the Speaker should be entered in the minutes. I find that in 1878, page 298, the Speaker on a similar occasion gave his decision when hon. Mr. Clemow, from the said committee, reported the said point of order raised in the committee, and the hon. Speaker gave his ruling thereupon and the decision of the Speaker is given in the journals of the House at that time at length. Then when it was given, the House, according to order, was adjourned during pleasure and again put into Committee of the Whole. What I want to point out to this House, and what I ask, the House to do is this : that a motion made in committee to report a point of order to the Speaker should be mentioned in the journals and secondly the decision given by the Speaker should also be recorded.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—Both these things are mentioned.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not say they are not. The point of order was raised by the leader of the opposition, and subsequently a motion was made in committee, that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again, and report to the Speaker the point of order that had been raised. That motion is not here.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That was after the point of order had been taken.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Yes ; that motion is not recited in the record.

The SPEAKER—That was a motion in committee, and it would not appear in the Journals of the House. It is not the practice to insert the proceedings in committee in the Journal.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I understood yesterday that the order was given. If the hon. Speaker rules that his decision should not be recorded, I have nothing more to say.

The SPEAKER—I was merely mentioning for the information of the hon. gentleman that it has not been the practice to record proceedings in committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I ask that the decision of the Speaker should form part of the minutes of proceedings.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The Speaker ruled that the point of order was well taken ; that is on record.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I call attention to what was done in the year 1898. It will be found at page 298 of the Senate Journals of that year. It is a precedent that I invoke. In the minutes of yesterday the entry is simply in these words : ' The hon. the Speaker ruled that the point of order was well taken.' In the other case the decision of the Speaker was printed in the Journals of the House, as given by the Speaker himself. It appears verbatim. So that we have in the Journals of the House, and fortunately had yesterday for reference, the exact wording of the Speaker's decision on that occasion. I ask that the decision of the Speaker yesterday be recorded in the same way that the decision of his predecessor was recorded in 1898 ; that is, in the exact words of the decision.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If the hon. gentleman is going to take up the whole afternoon with these technical proceedings, we shall have to sit this evening. It is absurd that the hon. gentleman should attempt to force his will against the will of the majority, which is to attend to the business on the Order paper.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has no right to threaten a member for the purpose of preventing him speaking.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—He ought to be ashamed.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Yes, he ought to be ashamed.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the hon. gentleman does not wish to be ashamed on his own account, I am willing to be ashamed for him. I will not submit to a threat like that which the hon. Secretary of State has uttered. If he wants to punish all the members of this House, let him do so.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman is punishing the members just now by wasting time.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am not punishing the members. I am calling attention to the fact that in 1898 the decision of the Speaker was given at length, and asking that the same course be followed now. I am asking with all deference that the Speaker's decision rendered yesterday be recorded in the Journals, and because I do so I am threatened by the Secretary of State that if I do not sit down he will force us to sit here to-night. Well, I am ready to sit here to-night. Others can go, if they please, to the banquet which is to take place this evening ; for my part I am ready to stay here alone.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am sorry that this discussion has taken up so much time. I intended to call attention to the request I made last night, but not to argue it, as my hon. friend has done. I wish it understood that the hon. gentleman is acting on his own account, as he has a perfect right to do. If we study the history of parliamentary government since Magna Charta, we will hardly find a minister of the Crown threatening a member that if he does not do so and so, a certain course will be followed. I am sure the hon. gentleman, on reflection, would not undertake to carry out such a threat. It is quite unparliamentary. However, if the majority of the House wish to sit to-night they can have it to themselves, because most of us on this side intend to do honour this evening to the leader of the opposition in the other House. What I should like to know is whether the Senate is of opinion when an important decision is given by the Speaker it should be entered in the Journals of the House in the same way that decisions of the late Speaker were recorded. My own view is that it should, but I do not intend to press the matter. I leave it to the consideration of the Speaker himself, and if in the future he decides that it is not proper to do so, then I shall feel justified in trying to have a rule laid down by parliament as to the disposal of decisions by the Speaker. My reason for that is this: When a decision is given on any point, more particularly a point affecting parliamentary procedure, we should know the reasons for the decision. I am perfectly in accord with the decision given by our Speaker last night, as my vote indicated, and I should like him to say, after reflection, whether he thinks it is his duty to put it on record, and then the House will be in a better position to judge whether it is advisable to take any further steps.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—After due reflection, he might change his ruling.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Oh, oh.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I shall not discuss that implied reflection upon the Speaker. I leave that point to the hon. gentleman himself, who probably in the past may have been in the habit of changing his mind when he thought it expedient to do so.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—A wise man sometimes changes his mind.

PENSIONS TO JUDGES BILL.

THIRD READING.

The Order of the Day being called:

Third Reading (Bill 243) An Act to amend the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act, the Exchequer Court Act, and the Act respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts, as amended.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I had a slight amendment to propose to the Bill yesterday and in the confusion I forgot about it. As the law stands now in regard to this question of superannuation, the judges of the courts of vice-admiralty and the maritime courts of Ontario, shall be deemed to be superior court, local judges in admiralty, in the Exchequer Court to be judges of the superior court, and stipendiary magistrates in the North-west Territories, to have been judges of the superior court within the meaning of this section.

I omitted proposing this amendment until my attention was called to it. The amendment reads:

Subsection 2 of section 14 of chapter 138 of the Revised Statutes of Canada as amended by chapter 39 of 54 and 59 Victoria shall apply to the interpretation of this Act.

And that reads as follows:

Courts of vice-admiralty and the maritime courts of Ontario shall be deemed to be superior courts, local judges in admiralty in the Exchequer Court to be judges of the Superior Court, and stipendiary magistrates in the North-west Territories to have been judges of a Superior Court within the meaning of this section.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Do not the county court judges sit as judges in the vice-admiralty court?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, Mr. Hodgins is the judge in admiralty at Toronto.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is the intention of the amendment to place vice-admiralty judges in the same position as superior court judges?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They are now, under this statute which was passed in 1895 from which I am reading. I think there are only two maritime courts in Ontario. There is one in St. Catharines, and the county court judge there presides.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They are not presided over by Superior Court judges?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think there are only two or three of them, one in Toronto, I think there is one in the west.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In the matter of superannuation it would place them upon the same status as Superior Court judges, although they may be only county court or local judges.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In the event of their retiring would the allowance be two-thirds the salary of a Superior Court judge?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, what they were enjoying. I will read the section again.

Courts of vice-admiralty and the maritime courts of Ontario shall be deemed to be superior courts, local judges in admiralty in the exchequer court to be judges in the Superior Court and stipendiary magistrates in the North-west Territories to have been judges of a Superior Court within the meaning of this section

They would get two-thirds of what their salary was at the time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It would shorten the retiring period of a county court judge by ten years, simply by appointing him local judge of the vice-admiralty court. It seems to me if the government introduce an amendment of that character there may be a general demand on the part of the county court judges throughout the whole of Ontario to be appointel local judges of the vice-admiralty court.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They do not appoint them.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Still it is a very easy matter to introduce machinery by which they can be appointed, and it is a very easy matter in many cases to bring influences to bear upon the government to make the appointment. It seems to me there is just a possibility of injustice being done to many men by reason of a provision of that kind.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Has my hon. friend a motion ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. I move that Bill (No. 243) be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole with instructions to amend the same by adding the following section :

Subsection 2 of section 14 chapter 138 of the Revised Statutes of Canda as amended by chapter 39 and 58 and 59 Victoria shall apply in the interpretation of this Act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before that motion is put I would like to ask the hon. Secretary of State if that is not adding an additional class of judges to the pension list. That would be the effect of it, would it not ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If that amendment be for the purpose of adding an additional class of judges to the pension list, then we are taking the responsibility of passing a clause which makes a direct charge upon the revenue, which is not covered by the Bill sent from the Commons; nor am I aware that it was contained in the message from the crown or in the resolutions that were passed in the House of Commons upon which this Bill was based. If that be the case it is a direct and positive charge upon the revenue, and if the point taken by myself yesterday was correct—and it was decided to be correct by the Speaker—this is a more flagrant case than the other.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend says no; we might just as well add a clause providing that the hon. gentleman sitting alongside of him shall, under certain conditions, have a pension at a certain time and after he had performed certain duties. The admission made by the hon. gentleman himself that he is adding another class of pensioners, and if he adds another class of pensioners he is adding another charge to the revenues, raises the question, have we the power to do that ? I intended to call attention to that point on the third reading of the Bill. This is going a good deal further than we went yesterday in amending the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is my view of it. The hon. gentleman may say no, but that is my conclusion. I wanted to put myself on record, that while I took the position I did yesterday and that I take to-day, it is not because I want to restrict the powers of the Senate. All I have to say is that I hope the Commons will accept the doctrine which the majority of the Senate has affirmed by our action of yesterday, intensified by our action of to-day. If the Commons accept this legislation we shall have a precedent in future for exercising further powers than we have claimed in the past, and when certain Bills come before us in a very short time, we can consider the propriety of striking out one of the resolutions. I repeat again that I hope the Commons will accept this legislation, thereby establishing a precedent to which we can refer in the future when questions arise as to the powers of the Senate. I wish distinctly to be understood that in the action that I have taken it is not because I desire to restrict the powers of the Senate ; on the contrary, I would like to see us have more, and if the Commons accept it, so much the better for this body. I question very much whether it will be in the interests of the public to give to a body that is not directly responsible to the people the power to deal with the money raised by taxation. I am not going to raise a point of order to create discussion or to spend time just now, but I call attention to this important point, that we are by this amendment adding another class to the pension list, and are thereby imposing upon the revenue of the country a further tax that was not contemplated in the Bill as it came from the Commons.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I scarcely think my hon. friend is justified in coming to that conclusion. My answer perhaps ought to have been a qualified one. Chapter 138 of the Revised Statutes relates to judges of the provincial courts. It relates to the judges of the county court, and also to the judges of Superior Courts. It relates to the judiciary of Ontario, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and British Columbia. It includes the county court judges. That is the original statute. It includes all the judges of the county courts, and therefore I am not adding in this particular amendment any particular class. That Act was amended by chapter 39, and in that way, among other things, it included the clause I read in relation to the judges of the Superior Courts, and it included also :

> Courts of vice-admiralty and the maritime courts of Ontario shall be deemed to be superior courts, local judges in admiralty in the Exchequer Court to be judges of the Superior Court and stipendiary magistrates in the North-west Territories to have been judges of a Superior Court within the meaning of this section

The Act, as it was prepared, did not, in the opinion of some eminent lawyers, include, as they thought it should have included subsection 21. It does not apply to any more county court judges than it would apply to now, because, as a rule, they are not judges in admiralty. I think there are only three in Ontario, not more than three at the outside. One is the master in chancery at Toronto, Mr. Hodgins, and I think there are two others, I would not be sure. And in the provinces they are already named the judges in admiralty. I do not know that they are judges of inferior courts. I think they are limited to judges of the Superior Courts, as my hon. friends in the maritime provinces know, and therefore it does not include that class, but it applies the law of 1895 to the present Bill in regard to subsection 21, in regard to the judges of vice-admiralty, which is very proper. They were under the law before, in regard to superannuation. It adds no more to them. They may be affected in this respect. We have in the Bill before us given the benefit of larger annuities under certain conditions, and so far as that would apply to them it would be probably a benefit, but no further than that. No other class comes in than those who are already in.

Hon Mr. LOUGHEED—I should like to ask for information, does it not make this difference : a judge in a Vice-Admiralty Court now may be a county court judge. Could he claim his retiring allowance, under the Act as it stands to-day, until he had served twenty-five years. You are now giving them the status of Superior Court judges. That is, shortening the length of service by ten years. so that it makes a very considerable difference. Instead of having to serve twenty-five years he would now have to serve only fifteen years, and then claim his retiring allowance.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If he was a judge of the county, would he not come in under clause three.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—As I understand, the amendment proposes to place the judges of the Vice Admiralty Court in the same category as the judges of the Superior Court, and a judge of the Superior Court can claim the right to retire on the expiration of fifteen years service.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend will recollect we have two clauses, especially applying to county court judges. They would still apply. It would not remove them to another class at all, and they would be governed by the term of service set forth in this Bill. The advantage I see which would follow would be some modification of the time, only so far as provided in sections 5 and 3 and 4, which apply to the county judge.

And clause 14 also applies to the county court. It would not give it to the county court judges who happen to be now judges in admiralty, if there are any. I am speaking from memory. I thought there were one or two. I may be mistaken. It is not an incident to the office. They have to be especially appointed. They are appointed to the office.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It seems clear to me that if by legislation you say that for the purpose of this Pension Act a judge in Admiralty becomes a Superior Court judge, then he manifestly can claim the right of retirement under clause 1 of the Bill upon the expiration of fifteen years, notwithstanding the fact that he is only a county court judge, because by legislation you are making him for the purposes of this Bill a Superior Court judge. That is not touching at all, the constitutional questions raised by my hon. friend as to the right of the Senate to amend a money Bill. Let us go into committee and we can see the effect. We are discussing an amendment without having it before us. That is one of the difficulties in amending a technical Bill which requires some close consideration.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order, or I may say, two points of order. There are two considerations. I shall take one point and bring two good reasons in support of it. I ask that this motion be declared out of order, firstly because by this motion we are creating a new class of pensioners.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no, we are not.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I take what the hon. gentleman said in opening his remarks, that we were enlarging the number of people who should come under the scope of this Bill. We are creating a new class, and in doing so we are amending a Bill so as to increase the charges upon the revenue.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—This we have no right to do. It was contended yesterday by some hon. senators that we might have the power to lessen the burden, but here we are increasing the burden and for that reason this amendment should not pass. Certainly the amendment should not pass because you are asking to add to the Bill a very important clause, and the rule requires that when we add a clause to a Bill, and a very important one, we should have notice of it, and this is the second point or order I raise.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The change is not sufficiently important, to my mind, to lose the time now, and therefore, with the opposition shown to it, I shall withdraw my proposal and move the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I must compliment the hon. minister on having acknowledged, by the fact that he withdraws his motion, that this is a money Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. but the clause is not sufficiently important to involve a debate on the subject.

The motion was agreed to on a division, and the Bill was then read the third time and passed.

READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION BILL.

DEBATE CONTINUED.

The Order of the Day being called for :

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill (66) 'An Act to readjust the Representation in the House of Commons.'

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON said : I have a good many notes before me, but I do not feel that it is necessary, or perhaps desirable at this late stage of the session that the discussion on this question should be unduly prolonged. Nevertheless, the measure is one of such very great importance, and it has engrossed the attention of the House of Commons so long, and taken up so much of the attention of the country, that it certainly calls for fair and reasonable consideration in this House. The different redistributions of the representation of the people in the House of Commons since confederation, have called for a good deal of discussion, and it is not improper to say that taking them all in all, a good deal of dissatisfaction has existed with regard to this subject ever since confederation. The redistribution which was made in 1872 did not appear to have been very well considered, and it does not appear from the discussions that took place on the redistribution in 1882, that the public men of the country looked very deeply into the question, but in 1892 a discussion took place on the subject in the House of Commons which was very important and instructive. There was a friction of mind on the whole subject at that time and new views were enunciated, some of which have been accepted, and others have not been adopted, but which are entitled to a great deal of consideration and will no doubt receive it as the years go by and we have again and again to deal with this question after each decennial census. In 1892 some very able speeches were made on this question, and I think the most notable one was that of the late Minister of Justice, the Hon. David Mills. He took new ground. One of the points that he laid down in the discussion was that the parliament of Canada had not the right or power within itself to divide the constituencies, and to make this redistribution of seats within the different provinces. He held that the British North America Act, section 51, called for the appointment of an independent authority under which this redistribution should be carried out. If hon. gentlemen will turn to that section and read it carefully they will find that that view is entitled to a great deal of consideration. We first start with section 40, which provides :

Until the parliament of Canada otherwise provides, Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick shall, for the purposes of the selection of members to serve in the House of Commons, be divided into electoral districts as follows :

Then came section 51 :

On the completion of the census in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-one, and of each subsequent decennial census, the representation of the four provinces shall be readjusted by such authority in such manner and from such time, as the parliament of Canada from time to time provides, subject and according to the following rules.

Then we have a number of rules which were to govern the distribution to be carried out in this way. The more we look into these two clauses, the more convinced we shall be that they were worded deliberately for the purpose of causing an independent authority to be constituted for the purpose of making this redistribution. This was the opinion of Mr. Mills. I may say that that opinion was coincided in by a number of gentlemen who gave the subject a great deal of consideration on that occasion. The late Mr. Dalton McCarthy, who also delivered an exhaustive speech on the question, while not altogether falling into the same line as Mr. Mills did on this point, expressed another view, to which a great deal of importance is being atttached just now in connection with the case of Prince Edward Island. He laid down the view as read to the House by my hon. friend from Charlottetown (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) the other day, that it was not in the power of the parliament of Canada to decrease the number of representatives provided for at the time of confederation to any province. He bases that upon section 52 :

The number of the members of the House of Commons may be from time to time increased by the parliament of Canada, provided the proportionate representation of the provinces prescribed by this Act, is not thereby disturbed.

There is a very carefully prepared argument spread out in the 'Hansard' of 1892 by Mr. McCarthy, that that section prevented the parliament of Canada from decreasing the representation of any province, and that they could not decrease it because there was an express provision giving them power to increase, but no corresponding power to decrease the representation. It is not necessary to go into that point ; in fact, it would be futile to argue it now as the case is going to the Privy Council. But, coming from a man of Mr. McCarthy's eminence, the opinion is entitled to a great deal of respect. I understand, though I have not read the argument, that it forms the crucial point in the case of Prince Edward Island at the present time, and of course it will be settled before long by the Privy Council of England, and we will have an authoritative decision on that point. The Quebec resolution, as hon. gentlemen are aware, contemplated the distribution to be made, not by the parliament of Canada, but by the legislatures of the various provinces. The confederation debates indicate that very plainly. It arose out of the distrust on the part of the different provinces and their representatives who were trying to arrange the terms of confederation, as to what the parliament of Canada might some day do, with regard to provincial representation. There had been a long conflict mainly between Upper and Lower Canada with regard to the question of representation by population, and it is easily gathered from the confederation debates, that a fear was entertained by the people of Lower Canada, that there might be some restriction of their rightful powers and privileges by the parliament of Canada. The French population in Quebec might be so hived that the English speaking people might be given a larger representation than they were entitled to by their numbers. On the other hand fear was expressed in Upper Canada that some of the representatives of the lower provinces might unite with the majority in the province of Quebec and unduly affect the representation of Upper Canada. It is quite easy to gather from the confederation debates, that this feeling of distrust existed. Of that there is no doubt because in the Quebec resolutions it was provided that the redistribution of seats for the Federal House of Commons should be effected by the provincial legislatures. Mr. Clemens, an authority on the constitution of Canada, mentioned, on what he says was the authority of two of the fathers of confederation, that it was under consideration before the passing of the British North America Act to establish under that Act an independent authority for the purpose of carrying out this distribution. Mr. Joseph Pope in his confederation papers says that it was at one time intended to name a commission of a number of judges in the British North America Act under which the first redistribution should be made. However, that was not done, and it is ascertained—this is a matter of history which can be easily verified and I think to-day is an established fact—that when the London conference took place shortly before the passage of the British North America Act, the 51st section of that Act was then drafted and put in the law instead of the resolutions of the Quebec conference, which provided for the adjustment and settlement of this question, entirely by the provinces. Knowing that this was the case, it throws a great deal of light on this 51st section of the British North America Act, and settles, to my mind, at least, a point on which a good deal of discussion has taken place, that is, that the parliament of Canada has no power to make any redistribution except the one that is provided for in section 51, and which should be made only after each decennial census; and it would also appear to settle the other point, that this distribution should not be made by the parliament of Canada itself, but that an independent authority should be constituted that would make the distribution. With regard to that point, I may remark that in one of the two redistribution Bills that have been introduced by the present government, there was a provision for constituting such authority but these Bills were rejected by this House, on the ground set forth in a resolution moved by my hon. friend on my left (Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell). At that time the government of the day contemplated the handing over of the division of the counties, and cities, entirely to a commission of judges. It appeared to be carrying out the position taken by the Liberal leaders in 1892, when they complained, and complained very bitterly that the Conservative government did not take that course, when it was so ably pointed out by Mr. Mills and Sir Louis Davies and other hon. gentlemen that the British North America Act actually called for the appointment of a tribunal to be named by the parliament of Canada itself, but which should be an independent one, and should make this redistribution without being influenced by any party consideration. That proposition was in the Bill of 1899, but the Bill, as I have said, was not agreed to by this House, and when the Bill which has been introduced on the present occasion was submitted, it did not contain any provision similar to that contained in the Bill introduced in 1899 by this government. Before giving my views on the course that has been adopted by the present government in the framing and in the carrying out of this Bill, I may be permitted to say a word or two upon the English example which we have with regard to redistribution. We can point with the greatest degree of pride and confidence to the settlement of this question the last time it came before the people of Great Britain in 1884 and 1885. We know that there were very many struggles over this question of representation on previous occasions, but the rejection by the House of Lords of the Franchise Bill in 1884—possibly towards the end of 1883, but I think 1884 brought matters to a crisis.

At that time it was proposed to enfranchise about 2,000,000 of men in the British Isles, and the House of Lords took the ground that that enfranchisement of 2,000,000 people should go hand in hand with the general question of the redistribution of seats, and they were able to point out, with a great deal of reasonableness, that the measure would be almost futile without a redistribution. A great many anomalies in the representation had been allowed to remain after the passage of the Reform Act, and even after the passage of Disraeli's Act on that question in, I think, 1858, and other anomalies had grown in consequence of the increase of population or the changing of the centres of population all over the British Isles. After this Franchise Bill was defeated by the House of Lords, the leaders of the two parties got together upon this question. At that time Mr. Gladstone was leading the party and leading the government and Lord Salisbury and Sir Stafford Northcote were the most prominent men on the Conservative side. An approach was made between these distinguished men. There is no public record of how it began or how it proceeded, further than it is stated and stated as a matter of history, that Lord Salisbury and Sir Stafford Northcote actually attended the precincts of Cabinet Council meetings and there met Mr. Gladstone and the Earl of Kimberley, who were entrusted with the management of the business on the other side, and they there agreed upon a plan by which the whole business could be carried out. The result of their agreement was that on the first of December, 1884, Mr. Gladstone introduced a Bill for the redistribution of parliamentary seats in Great Britain, and he there made a statement that there was a reasonable assurance that the Franchise Act would be allowed to pass and would be proceeded with, with the sanction of both Houses and of both political parties, and that the Bill that he had introduced would also meet with the same sanction and the same cooperation. He outlined that this Bill was a skeleton one containing merely the elementary principles that were adopted, indicating the number of members that would be assigned to each borough and to each county, a point which it turned out, although he did not explicitly say so, had been settled between Lord Salisbury and himself. They had absolutely settled upon the number of members that would be assigned to each county and to every borough in Great Britain. He went further, and said that the boundaries of these counties and boroughs would be arranged by a commission, and he named to the House who the commissioners would be that would make this redistribution, and it is also a matter of history that these were names that were selected by the leaders of both parties, on which they were perfectly agreed, and he indicated further that the instructions were compared and would be issued to these commissioners outlining the lines upon which they would make the divisions. In the meantime, he intimated that the House, having agreed to the principle of the Bill and having advanced it some stages, that somewhat later the Bill would be hung up till this commission would sit and would make their report, and then, after the result had been submitted to parliament, the Bill would be recommitted, and the result of the report of the commissioners, if satisfactory, would be incorporated in the Bill, and would in this way be sanctioned ultimately by both the House of Commons and the House of Lords. As a result of this announcement, the commissioners were named; in fact they were at work at the very time. They reported a little later on that the work was greater than they could do personally and asked that assistant commissioners be furnished, and these commissioners were agreed upon and named, and as a consequence the work of dividing the counties and the boroughs went on. Meetings were held in all the counties and in all the boroughs. Public notices were given. All persons interested, representatives of the counties, public men and municipal bodies were invited to come before this commission and give their views. All kinds of information was sought for by the commissioners and, as a result a report was made which was accepted by the House of Commons, and the Bill reached the House of Lords on the 8th of June of the following year and the measure speedily became law. The result of that was that the Franchise Act was passed. The House of Lords withdrew their opposition to the Franchise Act. Two million voters were enfranchised and a Redistribution Act was provided which, while it was not claimed for it that every anomaly in the representation was removed, still it was so well framed to meet the requirements of the day, and was formed on lines so fair and equitable, that there has not been any strong demand for a redistribution from that time up to the present moment. I noticed that in the introduction of this Bill by the hon. leader of the government in the other branch of parliament, he set up a claim that the British example was being followed. No greater absurdity could be stated by any gentleman than that. In no respect whatever has the British example been followed. There was no consultation between my hon. friend the leader of the opposition in the House of Commons and my hon. friend in this House with the hon. gentlemen holding equally responsible positions in the government; they were not invited to meet the government, and they did not meet. Something that they imagine approaches that, was done in the way of forming a parliamentary committee, in which care was taken that four of the government should should sit and only three of the opposition, but that was nothing approaching or corresponding in any shape or form to that agreement which was arrived at between the leaders of both parties in preparing the English Bill. In fact, the Bill was already submitted to form a committee, and the work the committee was to do. If there was any comparison at all, it was that the work to be done was similar to that which was done by the commission appointed in Great Britain in 1884 and 1885. The present Bill was introduced distinctly as a government measure, on which the leaders of the opposition were not consulted at all. I have said that a committee was appointed, and I may say further that the vast majority of the Liberal-Conservative party in Canada, did not look upon the proposition to appoint that committee with any degree of favour, and I believe the popular feeling was that their leaders should not have accepted the proposition, because they were prepared before hand for what happened. They were prepared to find that the committee, by a majority of one, would practically carry out their own plans and their own policy, and the minority would not get very much, if any of their own way. However, my hon. friend the leader of the opposition in the House of Commons, as I understand, somewhat contrary to the views of his own supporters, but with that reasonable feeling which he has shown on all occasions, said that there was in the proposition itself a semblance of fair-play and an approach to an amicable arrangement, and it was the duty of the opposition to meet them in that way and endeavour to see if anything could be done to bring about a result that would be more satisfactory than by the government proceeding in its own way to distribute the constituencies. I have followed the discussion in the other House and through the press, and I think the conclusion which the opposition, at all events, have arrived at the present moment is this, that while there has not been and is not a great deal of complaint in any of the provinces outside of Ontario against this or the other redistributions since confederation, yet the old complaint is as strong in Ontario to-day with regard to this measure almost as it ever was, and that the government has with a strong hand shaped the constituencies and allotted representation throughout the province of Ontario largely with a view to the political advantage they shall gain out of it, and they have done that in almost every case by the strength of their party majority in the committee and in the House of Commons. This redistribution, then, while as far as the province of Ontario is concerned, and to some slight extent out of it, is quite unsatisfactory, and in many respects very unfair, it is more to be condemned because such loud professions of fairness were made in connection with the introduction of it, and therefore the complaint is not only that the measure is unfair, but that there is the element of hypocrisy connected with it which makes that unfairness even more repulsive than it would be even if that profession of fairness has not been made. I have seen it stated there are 38 cases in the province of Ontario in which a division arose on that committee in which the four members representing the government carried their own way by a party division, and that there were only three or four cases in the whole province in which the minority were allowed their own way. In one or two instances there were compromises made and the opposition accepted the best of two propositions, but that could scarcely be called a disposition to meet fairly and equally and to give and take. One of the principles on which the present government, when in opposition, claimed that the constituencies should be divided, in fact the main principle, was that county boundaries should be respected. With regard to that, I may say that as far as I have been able to go into it, there is probably a larger attention being paid to county boundaries in this redistribution than there was in former ones; at the same time, the principle of county boundaries has not been inviolately maintained. Take the province of Prince Edward Island; there they have adopted county boundaries, but if you take Cape Breton, they have abandoned the principle of county boundaries.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—Does the hon. gentleman know that the leader of the opposition, who is a member of that committee, was the first to make that proposal with regard to Cape Breton ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am not aware of it.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—I beg to tell my hon. friend from Pictou that the leader of the opposition gave notice of an amendment to the Bill as agreed upon by the committee of the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—I have it on the best information that the hon. member, who is the only member from Nova Scotia, made that first proposal to divide Cape Breton in that way. The hon. gentleman, speaking yesterday on the subject, complained that Cape Breton had lost a member, and I am informed on the very best authority that the leader of the opposition was the very first one to make that proposal.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am quite sure that my hon. friend is wrong in saying that the hon. leader of the opposition was the first one to make that proposition, and my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. McDonald) coming from that county tells us that he put a notice on the Order paper later for a different division, which would seem to contradict the statement of the hon. gentleman. But my hon. friend will observe the point I am making at this moment is not whether the division in the island of Cape Breton has been made with or against the views of the leader of the opposition, but I am pointing out it violates the principle of county boundaries which the leader of the government laid down in 1892, and in fact ever since as a correct principle. I have pointed out one instance to show that the government have not followed this principle of county boundaries even in the redistribution which has been made. If they were loyally attached to the principle of county boundaries we know that they would be sorry to dissent from it, even if the leader of the opposition had advocated it, which I think is not correct. There is another point that was put forward in 1892, and that was the principle that there should be no double constituencies. The late Minister of Justice, Mr. Mills, who discussed this question in 1892, as I have already remarked, with a very great deal of ability, presented an argument against double constituencies, an argument which I believe is unanswerable, and he laid down the view that if the Liberal party were to return to power and deal with this question that they would do away with double constituencies. He gave some reasons, any of which would be very good. One of them was that in the event of a member dying or a member accepting an office of emolument, that the whole county—take the city of Ottawa for instance, that the whole constituency of Ottawa which has two representatives would be put to the trouble of an election, whereas it was only necessary under a proper representation that only one part of it should be put to that trouble, and a candidate should be put to the trouble and expense of canvassing and conducting a campaign in a double constituency. He gave that as one reason. He gave another which was even much stronger, and that was that by single constituencies the minority had a better chance of getting representation. The strength was more likely to be divided between the parties, while in the double constituency two members might be returned for one side though if the constituency were equally and fairly divided there was a better chance that one of each party might be elected, in which case the minority would get a better representation. But what do we find? We find the government in this Bill creating a new double constituency in Prince Edward Island, and while they do away with the principle of a double constituency in Cape Breton, and while they do away with it, I think, in the city of Hamilton, and I think possibly in almost every other place where it exists except in Halifax and Ottawa.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not in Hamilton.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I was under the impression that they had in this Bill. However, the point remains that while professing, as many of the members of the government did when in opposition, that they were against double constituencies, they created a double constituency in Prince Edward, whereas since 1892 we have had the correct principle applied of single constituencies. A great deal of stress has been laid and a great deal of discussion has taken place with regard to the distribution of representation, as between the urban and the rural population, and I notice that in the House of Commons and in the press, that the supporters of the present government have claimed that in making a sharp distinction in favour of the rural constituencies, as against the cities, they are following the practice of Great Britain. With regard to that statement, I can furnish an undoubted authority on this subject, and that is the Earl of Kimberley, when he introduced the Redistribution Bill of 1885 in the House of Lords. This abuse of a better representation in the boroughs as against the country constituencies was one that this great Redistribution Act was particularly made to remedy.

I may mention under the present system in England that the proportion of seats is in counties one to 70,800, and in boroughs only to 41,-200. Under this Bill the proportion will be one to 52,800 in counties and one in 52,700 in boroughs.

It took 70,800 persons in the counties of England to entitle them to one representative in the House of Commons, while in the boroughs there was one to 41,200. That was the state of things that existed before the passage of the Representation Act of 1885. He says in this Bill the proportion will be one to 52,800 in the counties and one to 52,700 in boroughs—absolutely the same. They worked the matter out so accurately that on the whole general result in the counties, I think, 52,800 persons obtained representation, while in the boroughs, 52,700 received the same power and the same influence in the government of the country. That was what the great public men of England of both political parties worked to obtain, and that is what they did obtain by the Act of 1885. We find in Canada, at the present moment, that the government has asserted the principle and laid it down, but they have not followed it by any means, only where it suited them. They laid down the principle that rural constituencies were entitled to a larger representation than the urban centres, on the ground that the rural districts were more sparsely settled, and the territory was entitled to some consideration as well as the population. It could not be on account of the sparseness of the population, although that has been stated, that the country constituencies were more likely to increase than the cities, for we know that the trend of population is towards the cities in Canada, as it is in almost every civilized country, and that the city population is increasing faster than the country population. But while laying down that principle, which I am bound to say was in entire variance with the British principle, arrived at by the leaders of both political parties in 1885, let us see for a moment how it has been respected by the present government in the Bill which is now before us. I shall take two constituencies to make a comparison. I take North Victoria and Haliburton, a very sparsely settled country district, which has a population of 38,511, and it is given one member. The county of Brant contains one city and many important towns. Throughout its whole length it is practically an urban population. Brant contains a population of 38,-140, or nearly 400 less than North Victoria and Haliburton, and yet it is given two members, while the sparsely settled new country embraced in North Victoria and Haliburton is given only one. Many reasons might be assigned for this extraordinary discrepancy, but I think the true reason will be found in the fact that North Victoria and Haliburton is a decidedly Conservative constituency, while Brant is rather the other way. There are many anomalies quite as important as those I have mentioned, but I refer to these for the purpose of impressing on the House the truth so far as the province of Ontario is concerned. I take the case of Toronto, as another illustration. According to the last census it contained 208,040, and this population is given five representatives, the unit of representation being 41,608. The county of Brant, which, as I have already remarked, contains a considerable urban population—not quite so strongly so as Toronto, but still something of that character—is given two members, so that 19,000 people in the county of Brant are given a representative, while it takes 41,608 of the people of Toronto to get a representative. Now, we take the city of Toronto as compared with the county of York, in which it is situated. York, with 64,000 of a population, is given three representatives, or one to every 21,000, while the city of Toronto is given only one to nearly 42,000. York cannot be classed among the sparsely settled counties. It is supplied with telephones and electric cars, and urban advantages and conditions prevail. However, this point will be conceded, that the county of York is not by any means in as bad a position as is North Victoria and Haliburton in being sparsely settled; yet 38,511 persons living in a sparsely settled district are given one representative while less than 22,000 in the county of York, outside of Toronto, are given a representative.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—My hon. friend will perhaps call attention to the fact that the three members for York live in Toronto, so Toronto has the benefit of that extra representation.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend cannot make that statement for the future more than I can. He has no guarantee or assurance that any member for York will live in the city of Toronto. It is to be assumed that the people of those country constituencies will do what nearly all the country constituencies are doing, and that is tend more and more to resident representatives. They are almost certain to claim that residents shall be their candidates. However, even if that were not to happen, and two or three of those constituencies were to elect as representatives men living in the city of Toronto, it does not alter the argument to the slightest extent. My experience in public life is that any man with decent instincts, who becomes the representative of a constituency, will wrap himself up with that constituency and pay comparatively little attention to the place where he lives. I never attached much importance to the question of non-resident representation. I have been elected in that capacity myself, and I know I attached myself to my constituency, and no other constituency I felt had a claim on me compared with the one I represented. I am sure it is the same with most gentlemen who become representatives. Does it not seem to hon. gentlemen that a fairer method of proceeding with the city of Toronto would be, if it was determined that you could not get more than eight members for the county of York including the city of Toronto, without depriving some outside constituencies of representation which they had long enjoyed, and which they would not forfeit without certain friction, to divide the representation more fairly between the city and the county. I admit anomalies may arise from the fact that a continuity of representation in a constituency establishes a claim which should be respected within reasonable bounds, but would it not have been just and fair in dealing with the city of Toronto and the county of York to have given two members to the county outside of the city, and six members to the city? That would have worked out this way: the unit of representation for Toronto would be 34,673, and for the county of York, 32,000. I speak in the presence of gentlemen who live in Toronto and vicinity and know all about the conditions there, and I have no doubt when I appeal to them as to whether that would not be fair and right, they will, in their hearts, no matter what their attitude towards the Bill may be from other considerations, admit that the proposition is just and reasonable. It is unfortunate that this Bill should contain such a discrimination against the city of Toronto as is involved in the figures I have quoted. It is a city of great wealth and importance, whose people rank with any city in the world in intelligence. I have the greatest pride and admiration in the city of Toronto, and it is not fair or just that such a city should be discriminated against as it is in the Bill before us. What makes the discrimination unfortunate is the well known fact that the electors of the county of York, outside Toronto, have for a long time—and possibly up to the present time, that is the expectation of the promoters of the Bill—had strong Liberal leanings, while the electors of the city of Toronto, in all its ridings, have been for a long time, and are still known to be, strongly Conservative. In view of that fact, I ask if the provision in this Bill which gives three representatives to 64,000 in the county of York outside of Toronto, is not practically depriving the Conservative party of one member to whom they are legally and honestly entitled and giving that seat to the Liberals, supposing the views of the people on political questions remain as they have been in the past. The cities of Canada have mainly shown a leaning towards the Conservatives in politics. Exceptions of course, have existed, and may be found to exist still, but taking the city of Toronto, I think that remark is correct. I find that the Liberals have been able to carry elections in some of the cities of the province of Ontario, outside of the city of Toronto. In Ottawa they are now represented by one, in London by one, in Brantford one, and in Kingston one. In fact, at the present moment four out of seven representatives of the seven cities are Liberals. As it is near six o'clock, I move the adjournment of the debate.

The motion was agreed to.

ADVANCES TO GOVERNMENT OF NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (256) An Act to provide for advances to the government of the North-west Territories. He said: The proposal in this Bill is to authorize an advance of $250,000 to the North-west Territories debt account. Of course with the very large number of persons going into that country, the expenses of that government have been largely increased, and public opinion has been exercising a good deal of pressure to deal liberally with them, and this Bill authorizes an advance of $250,000, to be taken into consideration as a debt owing by the Territories to the Dominion of Canada in any financial arrangement that may be made in connection with the organization of a province or provinces.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

HARBOUR OF NORTH SYDNEY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (262) 'An Act to amend the Act respecting the harbour of North Sydney in Nova Scotia.' He said: This Bill provides for striking out the word 'four' in the last line of the said section, and substituting therefor the word 'five.' It increases the salary of the harbour master from $400 to $500, and section 10 of the Act is amended by inserting the words 'after deducting five per cent for his remuneration.' That refers to the officer who collects the harbour dues, and this provides that he may retain five per cent before paying the dues to the commissioners.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

DEPARTMENT OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (258) 'An Act to amend the Act respecting the Department of Railways and Canals.' He said: The practice in regard to the advances made to the Intercolonial Railway to buy their steel rails, engines, ties and the various stores, has been that they have got the credit of a certain sum, upwards of a million or a million and a half, or two millions sometimes, and as the articles were taken out of the store and used in the railway, they were credited with them.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—How much do they require?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think the account averaged from a million and a half to two million, a running account. There is a large amount of stores kept on hand, to be used from time to time as the exigencies of the railway required. The authority ought to be given by statute, and it is for the purpose of meeting the objection of the Auditor General that this Bill is introduced. It limits the amount of advances to the Intercolonial Railway at any one time to a million and a half, and to the Prince Edward Island Railway $100,000. When a credit is advanced a charge is made, and as the goods are taken out and placed on the railways, or used in any way, they are charged up. It is a matter of book-keeping.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—They cannot, at any one time, have more than a million and a half in stock.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, and the Prince Edward Island Railway cannot have more than $100,000 in stock.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That will enable the department to reduce, apparently on the face of it, the expenses attending the railway during the year?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it has no bearing on that point. They have bought coal enough, for instance, for perhaps six months at a time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is always debited to the expenses of the railway.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Only when it is used.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—When it is used the credit is charged up against the railway.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second and third times and passed, under a suspension of the rules.

The Senate adjourned till three o'clock to-morrow.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Friday, October 9th, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (AA) An Act for the relief of the Canadian Policy-holders in the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company.—(Hon. Mr. Domville.)

SATURDAY SITTINGS.

MOTION DROPPED.

The Order of the Day being called:

That when the Senate adjourns to-day, it stand adjourned until to-morrow, the 10th instant, at three o'clock in the afternoon.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—From what I can learn in the House of Commons, I do not think there is any chance of the House proroguing next week. I see that they are still on the main estimates in that chamber, and, of course, there are the supplementary estimates and railway subsidies, and a number of Bills to be taken up, so that there will be no necessity of our meeting on Saturday, if we meet on Monday at three. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it stands adjourned until Monday at 3 p.m.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And if the hon. gentleman sees that there is any probability of completing the business during the coming week, we might meet a week from to-morrow. There would be no objection to that, unless some of our friends on the other side are desirous of remaining a few weeks longer. I think some of them have intimated that desire.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—We are quite willing.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think the business will suffer if we do not meet to-morrow.

The SPEAKER—The rule of the House is to meet on Monday at three, and the order which suspended that rule has already been rescinded.

The motion was dropped.

OTTAWA VALLEY RAILWAY COMPANY BILL.

AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE moved concurrence in the amendments made by the House of Commons to Bill (Z) An Act respecting the Ottawa Valley Railway Company. He said: The hon. gentleman from Mille Isles, I understand, has withdrawn his objection, and these amendments may be considered now, so that the gentleman interested in the enterprise may proceed to New York.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—In view of the remarks which have been made, and of the discussion which has taken place in Montreal with regard to this Bill, I think proper to say that I did not oppose it for several reasons, one of which is sufficient. As regards municipal rights, I do not think they are affected by the Bill. As regards provincial rights, it is perhaps different, but the Bill is so similar to many other Bills which have been adopted by parliament this year, that I am too recent a member of this House, though not young, to assume the role of a very radical reformer and ask the Senate to depart from the custom which has prevailed for many years. Another reason is this: That though I am inclined to think that many Bills which have been adopted have somewhat infringed on provincial rights, I think if the committee which has been proposed by the hon. member from de Salaberry is appointed—as I am sure it will be—it will make rules which will establish a line of demarcation between what are to be considered the federal and the local powers. I beg to add, hon. gentlemen, in excuse for the position I have now taken and which I shall take in the future, that I will be very fair on that question, and that I shall be actuated and influenced by two principles, the first, that when the principal object of a Bill is provincial, I shall vote to refer the Bill to the proper provincial authorities; secondly, when a Bill is what might be termed a half-breed Bill—including federal and provincial powers—I shall try to induce my hon. colleagues to incorporate the clauses that are federal and to send back to the local legislatures the clauses that are provincial. I beg to say in taking this position I am not actuated by capricious or selfish motives, but by convictions of long standing, based upon the broad and patriotic principle of the autonomy of the provinces. To show that I am not actuated by recently acquired convictions, I may add, though I do not want to make a speech, that I was one of the young men in the province of Quebec who were opposed to confederation, and that one of the motives which then influenced us, was that the new constitution might be converted too easily into legislative union, and that there were certain clauses of the British North America Act which might be interpreted so as to deprive the provinces and municipalities of their local rights. Our fears have been justified, to a certain extent, by what has since happened, for nobody can deny that there have been numerous encroachments at different times upon the rights of the provinces and of the municipalities. I belong to the school of Sir Oliver Mowat. I think it is a good and patriotic school. His motives in defending the rights of the provinces were good and patriotic and in the interests of the proper working of the constitution. Although I am one of those who opposed confederation, following the example of a great many like Lafontaine, who opposed the union of the two provinces in 1840, and perhaps I might cite also Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who opposed confederation—I am of opinion that when a constitution is established, the best we can do is to take advantage of it and try to make it work in the interest of the country. A reaction was necessary; that reaction has taken place, and we have seen all the municipalities organizing themselves into a league to defend their rights before this parliament, during the last two or three sessions, and the provincial governments have felt obliged to do the same. I have just said that it was in the interests of the whole country and of the constitution to take such a position. We are all proud to feel there is a great future in store for our young country; that Canada possesses great elements of prosperity, progress and greatness. While I am of that opinion, I think those elements of progress, greatness and prosperity will be injured if we do not take great care to maintain peace and harmony between the different nationalities and sections of this country, avoiding the conflicts between the local and federal powers which have taken place in other countries, and which have brought about so many national disasters. We all know the fratricidal struggle which took place in the United States was the result of disputes between the federal and the local powers. We, as a young country, should profit by the experience of older nations. The amendments which have been proposed this year by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique), and which have been adoptetd by the Senate, would have the effect of removing these causes of difficulty, and I hope the Senate will continue to show its wisdom and usefulness by upholding municipal and provincial rights, and by applying the old and patriotic principle of home rule in local affairs in the future.

The motion was agreed to.

JUDGES OF PROVINCIAL COURTS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (255) An Act further to amend the Act respecting the judges of provincial courts.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I explained to the House on a former occasion the necessity for appointing a judge for the county of Pontiac was the opening up of new districts on the north-east end of Lake Temiscamingue, which will probably make the united counties of Pontiac and Ottawa extend from point to point over two hundred miles, and it became inconvenient for the judge of the county of Ottawa to travel so far to attend to the duties of his position.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Where is the judge to reside ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He resides at Hull now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand the present judge resides at Hull. I want to know where the new judge is to reside, and what is the territory over which he is to administer the law ? Hon. gentlemen will remember that when that country was being opened, a few years ago, by the Canadian Pacific Railway, a new judge was appointed for the section of the country up around—was it Sudbury, or where was it ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is on the Quebec side. The judge will probably reside at Bryson or Portage du Fort. There are several villages up in that county.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG, from the committee, reported the Bill, without amendment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

ADVANCES TO GOVERNMENT OF NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES BILL.

THIRD READING.

The Order of the Day being called :

Committee of the Whole House on (Bill 256) an Act to provide for Advances to the Government of the North-west Territories.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is directly a money Bill. I do not know that we should go into committee on it, because it is a Bill granting some $250,000 to the North-west government.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I was not aware yesterday that my hon. friend was going to send it to committee, and as it was six o'clock when it came up for second reading, I refrained from speaking upon the Bill. Without now going into committee we might regard this stage as a proper occasion upon which to discuss the whole Bill. I direct the attention of the House to the fact that the proposal is to carry to the credit of the North-west Territories, $250,000 and to also make an advance of $250,000 on capital account. I might say the subject of the Bill has created considerable discussion between the two governments, for some time past. One feature to which I have alluded, namely the charge of $250,000 on capital account, is one that certainly has not been approved of by the territorial government or by public sentiment in the west. The government may possibly have regarded itself as giving this money in a liberal and generous spirit, but I would point out, as has been pointed out on former occasions, that the policy of this government towards the territorial government has been of a parsimonious character. Instead of a sufficient amount being carried to the credit of that government from year to year in the estimates, the proposed expenditure of the territorial government has been, I might say annually, cut down to such an extent as to preclude that government from meeting the absolutely necessary requirements of the public, largely if not altogether, created by the tide of immigration, which during the last two years has been. I am glad to say, flowing into that country. I think it was last year the territorial government outlined public improvements that were absolutely necessary, namely, public works, and education which would have involved an expenditure of a million dollars. The then Commissioner of Public Works, Mr. A. L. Sifton, now the Chief Justice of the territories, took this matter up with the Dominion government and indicated at that time that at least $880,000 was absolutely necessary for the expenditure of 1903. In a sessional paper brought down in the House of Commons it will be seen that in a letter written to the Minister of Finance by Mr. Haultain, dated 20th April, 1903, this statement is made :

For instance, representations were made on December 17 and January 9 last by Mr. A. L. Sifton, the then territorial treasurer, that it was necessary that parliament should be asked to provide for the expenditure of the sum of $880,000 during the year 1903, upon the services devolving upon the government of the territories. On February 21, whilst in Ottawa and at the request of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, I submitted a carefully detailed statement of our affairs, showing the nature of the requirements of the country, and pointing out particularly that the public necessities were to a very large extent due to the rapid influx of population, a cause entirely beyond our control but which, to some extent, may be attributed to the Dominion government's efforts to direct immigration to the west. I also pointed out that between December and February conditions had so far changed that the amount asked for in December would be entirely insufficient to provide for necessary expenditures in new and unforeseen directions. In December, we asked that parliament should provide $880,000 for our use during 1903. As a reply to that request, the government proposes to vote $457,979. This is the amount as was voted last year and which fell short of the smallest possible expenditure we could make by $250,000. Climatic conditions created a general and urgent necessity for replacing a large number of bridges that had been carried away by floods, but that necessity only made it impossible for us to consider other public undertakings of comparatively less urgency, but which are all calling for attention this year. If we were $250,000 short last year, what we will be this year with increased demands and necessities in every direction, I can safely leave you to form your own estimate.

Without going over the ground again I would here simply say that if we have found the necessity for making capital expenditure out of an annual income a particularly onerous burden, the difficulties of our financial position will be rendered only the greater by the strong temptation to draw upon a capital account, should such an account be established, for expenditures that should, under every rule of legitimate finance, be provided for only out of annual income, but which condition of affairs would be forced upon us by the manner in which the Dominion government fulfils its self-imposed duty of providing for the peace, order and good government of these territories.

I trust that the further consideration of this whole subject, promised in your telegram of this date, will result in some more definite recognition of our necessities than has hitherto been evidenced. The one, and the best solution of all these difficulties has, on several occasions of late, been suggested to the Dominion government, and it seems to me that I might well close this communication by an expression of the opinion that just so long as the provincial status is withheld from the territories will it be necessary for the government of the territories to direct attention with increasing force and emphasis to the present unsatisfactory manner of making financial provision for the public requirements of the country.

Now, then, we find this condition of affairs. In a country which is being rapidly settled up, into which I suppose 100,000 settlers have gone during the present year, and which has increased its population so rapidly as to warrant the government in the present Redistribution Bill increasing the representation in the federal parliament from four members to ten, one can easily appreciate the futility of the government for one moment imagining that the grants which heretofore have been made, will continue to be adequate to the growing necessities of that vast country. Hon. gentlemen will simply have to consider for a moment how inadequate it will be if the present and future grants should be based upon the parsimonious policy which has hitherto been followed namely, paring the government down to the absolute necessities which arose from time to time at a period when the population of the territories was almost stagnant. I need not point out to my hon. friend that in the matter of education alone the sum of $250,000 has been voted. It is absolutely necessary that educational institutions should be established throughout the length and breadth of those territories which geographically are almost an empire in themselves, and it is in the public interest not in the interest alone of the territories, but the interest of the entire Dominion, that the growing population of that country should be well educated, that not only the higher educational advantages should be extended to the children of settlers, but that it should be regarded as indispensable that the elementary rudiments of an education should be furnished to the people in every settlement, particularly foreigners who are coming from all parts of Europe and who should have their children educated in the language in which we speak and made familiar with the institutions by which we are governed. Over a year ago, $250,000 was appropriated for educational purposes in the territories. As I have said, that has been found to be entirely inadequate, and the demands which are at present made upon the territorial government will probably induce them to make estimates almost reaching $300,000, to meet simply the increased demands for elementary educational institutions in that vast country. Well, when this government votes only $457,000, out of which must be taken almost $300,000 in the first instance, for educational institutions, I need not further point out the inadequacy of such a vote. That is but a feature I pointed out, namely, educational institutions; then there are public works such as roads and bridges which are absolutely necessary. I need not point out that while there may be main lines of railways running throughout the territories, colonization highway roads must be opened up, streams must be bridged, and public works of that character involving very large expenditures, must positively be made, otherwise it will be impossible for the demands of the settlers to be acceded to by the territorial government. The question has resolved itself into this: if the Dominion government refuse to give a grant adequate to the necessities of the case, and refuse to give provincial automomy to the territories, whether the territorial government will not have to throw up their hands and refuse to administer the affairs of that country. So long as parliament has given governmental machinery to the territories, so long as there is vested in the hands of the territorial government the power to administer the affairs of the territories, to carry out public works and to establish educational institutions and to practically do the other work of a province, so long is this parliament in duty bound to furnish such funds as will be necessary to meet the public demands. This consideration must not also be overlooked, that while all the machinery of government obtains in the territories for the purpose which I have mentioned, yet the territorial government is helpless in the matter of obtaining funds if this parliament will not vote them.

The revenues to be derived from the territories by the sale of the lands, by the disposition of the mineral interests and otherwise are entirely vested in the federal government. We are in leading strings in that country yet, from a governmental standpoint, and while there has been a very emphatic demand on the federal government, not only by the public, but by the legislature, that provincial autonomy should be extended to that country, yet the government of the day has not seen fit to accede to that demand. So long as this situation continues, I cannot impress too strongly on the government, in the interests of the entire Dominion, that a change should be made, because if the absolute requirements of new settlement are not fully met, it will not only enure to the disadvantage of the territories, but must be equally and strongly felt throughout the Dominion at large. The interests of the territories are the interests of the entire Dominion, and I need not point out here that the growth of the North-west is really what gives vitality to a very great extent, if not to a greater extent, than any other quality, to the growth of the whole Dominion. It seems to me that that does not admit of any doubt. If you could by any possibility wipe out that western country, the vitality of the remaining parts of the Dominion would be extremely weak. Hence it is necessary that those from the eastern provinces, and the government of the country particularly, should regard the possibilities of this Dominion as being very largely, if not entirely, wrapped up in the development of those vast territories. So much for that feature. As I say, there are two items in the Bill, one of $250,000, intended to cover the deficit of last year, which will not cover the deficit entirely, but this government in its wisdom has seen fit to vote $250,000, to be applied in covering the expenses of the territorial government for last year. But a more objectionable feature is, in addition to this sum not being large enough to cover the deficit, this government proposes to charge the amount to capital account. By what process of reasoning this government, that holds in its hand the leading strings of the territorial government, should charge $250,000 to capital account, and make that chargeable with interest, it is difficult to understand. It is certainly a proposition that does not receive the approval of the territorial government or of public sentiment in the North-west Territories. That has been a very debatable question, and the territorial government, notwithstanding the declaration of this government that the intention was to make it chargeable to capital account, has refused to accept it upon that basis. In the correspondence which will be found on the same page of the sessional papers to which I have already alluded, I might point out a letter which was written by the Premier of the territories to the Minister of Finance, and dated June 15th, 1903. Dealing with this phase of capital account, Mr. Haultain says, amongst other things :

> With regard to the question of an advance on capital account I can only refer to my letter of April 20, and the position therein taken up. An advance on capital account is nothing more or less than a loan upon which eventually we should have to pay 5 per cent per annum. We feel indisposed to consider an invitation to borrow money as a satisfactory settlement of our request for the necessary amounts to carry on the affairs of this country. At all events the proposition to give us an advance on capital account of $250,000, already debited with $84,000 for the bridges mentioned above, is one which we cannot entertain. We cannot reasonably object to the requirement of the consent of the Governor General in Council to any broad scheme of expenditure under this heading, but to be obliged to ask such consent to every detail would be as burdensome as it would be unnecessary.

Now, in that connection I may say there is to be debited against this $250,000 an item of $84,000 for the reconstruction of two bridges, one at Lethbridge and one at McLeod, which had been originally constructed by the Dominion government, which were regarded as of the Department of Public Works of Canada, and which by an Order in Council this government proposed to reconstruct; yet, after deliberately passing an Order in Council solemnly agreeing with the territories and if the territories would reconstruct those bridges, which had been washed out by the floods last year, the money would be reimbursed to the territorial government. Notwithstanding that arrangement, we have this audacious attempt to charge up the $84,000 against this vote of $250,000, to reimburse the federal government for replacing their own works at Lethbridge and McLeod. Arising out of that consideration, namely, that of building bridges, it does not require a very potent appeal to hon. gentlemen for them to at once appreciate the fact that if the Dominion government, through its various channels which are at work to-day, not only on this continent, but on the continent of Europe, will place from 100,000 to 200,000 immigrants on the broad prairies, they must necessarily do something for them in the way of building roads and bridges. It does not require any reasoning on my part to point out to hon. gentlemen not only the equity of such a proposition, but the absolute necessity that it should be done. I might point out that those territories are traversed in all directions by streams which in the spring time are in mountain flood, and except very expensive bridges are constructed, which would be entirely beyond the financial strength of the territorial government, it would be utterly impossible for the settlers in that vast country to reach their various markets. Hence the Dominion government for several years past have been constructing bridges over the main highways and over the unfordable stereams and I cannot point out too strongly the necessity of the government being impressed with the desirability of keeping pace with the growth of the country in the carrying out of necessary public works. Now why should the government haggle over a paltry sum of $250,000 or $500,000 in thus keeping pace with the rapid growth of that magnificent country. When we take into consideration the fact that parliament has voted practically $74,000,000 of estimates this year, also proposed railway subsidies of $13,000,000, also lead bounties, steel bounties and iron bounties which will probably approximate three or four millions, also in addition thereto practically $100,000,000 for a national transportation system—why, I ask should this government, or any other government haggle in this miserable two-penny shopkeeping way of carrying out adequate improvements in that vast country which I say gives the throb and vitality of energy to the entire business of this Dominion ? If hon. gentlemen will go through the estimates which have been voted, not only this year, but in former years, they will find that no estimates of any considerable extent have been voted in any year to public works in the territories. I say without fear of contradiction that there is no part of this Dominion in which less public money is being expended than in the North-west Territories. Owing to the rapid development of the territories the government as a matter of policy has not consilered it advisable nor desirable that large public works should be carried out in any particular locality. The consequence is that very small sums have been voted from time to time for temporary works, and temporary buildings, since this government came into power. I cannot recall at the present moment any public building that has been erected in the whole of the North-west Territories under this government that would do justice to one of the small towns in the eastern provinces. I am not saying that that is inadvisable, because what might be a sufficient expenditure on a public building to-day might be entirely inadequate for the demands or requirements of ten years hence. But I say, in view of the fact that public money is not being expended in the territories, notwithstanding its very rapid development the government should certainly be generous and liberal to a fault in keeping pace with the rapidly developing settlement of those vast prairies. So much for that phase of the case. Might I point out to my hon. friend the Secretary of State that, from a political standpoint, if this government desires to remain in power it should certainly listen to its friends. Sometimes even public men do not succeed in making a deep impression on the government as to the necessities of wise public expenditure, but when the party men approach the government and point out that party advantages are to be gained by a liberal expenditure of money, the government invariably becomes responsive to that class of argument. In those sessional papers to which I refer, Mr. Bulyea, the territorial commissioner of public works, who is one of the high priests of Liberalism in the North-west Territories, makes sufficiently free to correspond with the Premier of the Dominion as to the effect upon his political party of the government's parsimony with reference to territorial expenditure, and by some means or other this letter, which possibly was not intended to see the light of day, but to be considered only by the faithful, became impressed upon the pages of our public records. He writes the Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, G.C.MG., Premier of Canada, Ottawa, as follows :

> You will please excuse the liberty I take in addressing you, if it is a liberty to lay before you facts that I consider will be of material influence on the welfare of the Liberal party in the North-west Territories.
>
> You are, of course, cognizant of all the representations that the territorial government have made in reference to increase of the financial assistance that is voted to us from time to time, and the arguments that have been advanced why a material increase is absolutely necessary, if the alternative of provincial autonomy were not granted to us. I have had considerable correspondence with the federal members representing the territories, who were kind enough to apprize me of the general representations they had made to your government, and I advised them that I consider that if such were adopted it would reasonably satisfy the general public in the territories, and would put your candidates and your supporters——

Now will the government listen to this appeal, and if on no other ground, will they not do it on the grounds of political expediency ? The letter continues :

> And would put your candidates and supporters in the coming elections in a position with which they could fight with zeal, and I am pleased to say, with every prospect of success.

If I were unpatriotic I would ask the government to pursue the disastrous course which they have been pursuing with reference to the territories, but on grounds of patriotism I am willing entirely to forego the advantages that the Conservative party might secure in the territories if the government will only listen to Mr. Bulyea's appeal of expediency. The letter continues :

> The supplementary grant, and the addition to the main vote, while not as much as we asked for, will be of very material assistance to me in the work of my department as Commissioner of Public Works. The capital advance tendered is also needed for the construction of the large and permanent structures that must be completed to meet the requirements of the large influx of settlers into the country.
>
> I regret to say, however, that not only as a member of the territorial government, but as a citizen of the North-west Territories, I must dissent most strongly from the proposition to charge up against this vote the large expenditure of $84,000 which is purely and simply for the reconstruction of two federal public works, viz.:—the bridges over the Old Man's and Belly rivers, erected by the late Conservative government.
>
> During the floods of last year these two bridges were washed out, and your government, through its officers, agreed to have them replaced by permanent structures. Your officers in the territories reported on the necessity of such reconstruction, took charge of the old bridges, and sold the old material. Later, through the late Commissioner of Public Works, the Hon. A. L. Sifton, the matter was taken up with the federal Public Works Department, and as we have a fairly large staff of competent bridgemen, and have been very successful in the construction of bridges of a less size than these, it was arranged that the territorial government should proceed with the construction of the bridges, and that they would be recouped for such expenditure to the amount of $55,000 in the case of the bridge over the Belly river at Lethbridge, and $29,000 in the case of the bridge over the Old Man's river at Macleod.
>
> For your information I attach a copy of extract from the report of the Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency on February 6, 1903.

On the authority of this Order in Council my department proceeded with the work. Considerable preliminary work has already been done in making the necessary approaches to the bridges, tenders have been called both for the material and the concrete piers, and for the steel superstructure, and I maintain that the federal government cannot, in honour, recede from the position that they have taken as shown by this Order in Council, even if there were no political reasons——

Will my hon. friend mark that. The letter continues :

Even if there were no political reasons for carrying out their definite agreement in this matter.

Official correspondence from the government will no doubt be laid before you in due course, protesting against the suggested charges, and while the matter is, in a sense, 'sub judice,' we cannot of course proceed to use the suggested advance on our capital account.

A refusal to use this money on capital account. The letter proceeds :

I trust, therefore, that you will see the necessity of meeting the reasonable views not only of the North-west government but of your friends who are members of the territorial assembly, and who uphold unanimously our government in claiming that the territories are entitled to have these federal structures replaced at the general expense of the Dominion of Canada.

GEO. H. V. BULYEA.

And then so as to thoroughly impress upon the government the political or party expediency of this appeal, this novel endorsation is subjoined to the letter of Mr. Bulyea :

The undersigned members of the legislative assembly strongly approve of the tenor of the above letter :—

George W. Brown.	P. Talbot.
L. Geo. de Veter.	B. Prince.
J. W. Woolf.	R. A. Wallace.
W. J. Finley.	J. A. Simpson.
C. A. Fisher.	A. S. Rosenroll.
A. D. McIntyre.	Thos. Macnutt.
Charles Fisher.	Alex. C. Rutherford.
A. S. Smith.

There are here, some fifteen names, all members of the Liberal party and members of the local legislature, so that Mr. Bulyea with the valiant backing of half the members of the legislature, all Liberals, has appealed to this government that upon grounds of expediency if not upon grounds of fair-play, more generous treatment should be accorded to the territorial government. Now as to the repudiation of liability for the $84,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman need not go into that, the item is in the estimate—it is not charged against the government. I turned up the estimate while my hon. friend was speaking.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I find that they have already debited it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The account must have been altered. Because I have looked up the estimate before parliament.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What item is that ? The item for the Old Man's bridge ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, the bridge at Lethbridge and the Old Man's bridge.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The Bill would not necessarily show that this $84,000 was debited against capital account ; that will be a matter of book-keeping and instead of paying over to the territorial government the $250,000, they will credit the territorial government with that debit of $84,000. With that presentation of the case I leave it with the government and would simply point out that it is high time that the present government should give greater consideration to the requirements of the territories than has been done heretofore, and, as I have said, if they will not regard the voice of public sentiment along those higher and more ethical lines I would appeal to the government on the ground advanced by Mr. Bulyea, namely on grounds of political expediency——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We could not accept that suggestion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, but the government would not act upon it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman must remember we have been increasing largely the contributions to the North-west Territories and more particularly during the last year. While the hon. gentleman was speaking, I was counting up the various sums and I find they will amount to about a million and a quarter. There is $450,000 debited in the yearly estimates, and there is $250,000, and at page 29 of the supplementary estimates there is the additional grant required for schools, clerical assistance and printing and so on, $250,000. Then I find the Public Works Department are authorized to go on and complete the Belly river bridge at Lethbridge and the Old Man's bridge, amounting altogether to $85,000, but in addition to that there are various other items which I turned up while my hon. friend was speaking. There are items for telegraph lines.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They are Dominion works.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They should not be considered, because there is some revenue supposed to be attached to them. Speaking of public buildings, I find there are $75,000 for buildings, the Edmonton jail, the Prince Albert court-house, and a number of other small items.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Some of those are re-votes. I think those were on the estimates for some years. In fact they were started at the last general election.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That $75,000 referred to is in the supplementary estimates just brought down.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, the supplementary estimates now before parliament, but there were some other items. I was glancing at the figures and they amount to about $1,200,000. I fully appreciate the needs of the North-west, but it must be remembered that the government are expending a great deal of money in other ways. The emigrants that are going in are looked after by the Department of the Interior and the railway subsidies to which my hon. friend refers, a large portion of them, will be spent in the territories; in fact one of the reasons that induced the government to give this very liberal aid to the Mackenzie & Mann road, to lend them rather $13,000 per mile, was for the very purpose of having the money spent in the North-west Territories, so that the people going in there would have the opportunity of securing employment on the road, and then a proportion of the amount required for the building of the Trans-Canada Railroad will be spent through the territories, and they will get the benefit of it. We have spent very large sums of money for the benefit of the North-west, and I fully appreciate we will get value for it. I have the most abounding faith in that country and believe it will return to the older parts of Canada, all that the older parts of Canada have expended on it; but my hon. friend will appreciate that it is very difficult to keep pace with the growth of the North-west, because it has been somewhat phenomenal, in the last year particularly. No one ever dreamed that 100,000 people were going in there during the year 1903, and the reason that the Finance Minister thought it the wisest way to charge up $250,000, or such other moneys as may be wanted from time to time, is that it was a simpler way of making the advances. When the autonomy of the territories has become established, it will be time enough to discuss what the territories ought to be charged with, or whether they ought to be charged with anything. I am not foreshadowing what the financial agreement will be. They were asking for very large sums of money. They could not, of course, go into the details of what the money was required for; they needed it for present necessities, and if you gave them three or four or five millions, they could expend it probably, and probably to the advantage of the country, but it would not be a judicious thing to do, and more particularly in view of the reading of the letter of Mr. Bulyea, practically asking a bribe for the North-west. The Premier would be shocked about making any liberal advance. We might be charged with attempting to secure the vote of the North-west—we wish to be quite independent of any such consideration, and we have to be cautious. I think the amount this year is very nearly one and a quarter million dollars.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I might point out the grant which the hon. gentleman refers to for education and the grant for public works make up the $457,979.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But in the estimates there were $450,000.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think not.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, yes; this is wholly independent of the former advances. There was something in the first estimates. However, I can assure my hon. friend the government will take into consideration all the reasons he has urged why this liberal treatment should be extended to the North-west, but I think that he ought not to ignore the fact that the government are contributing in a great variety of ways through other channels than strictly through the territorial government in advancing the interests of that country and bringing in immigration, and in a variety of ways through the Department of the Interior. The sales realized from land have scarcely more than paid the expenses. We are giving away our land in the North-west. The sales of land there have been by companies who acquired lands years before. I think my hon. friend will have nothing to complain of after this year.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I think my hon. friend has a great deal to complain of. I am quite in accord with the remarks made by my hon. friend from Calgary (Hon. Mr. Lougheed). The Secretary of State spoke about the immigration into that part of Canada being a benefit to the North-west Territories. So far as revenue is concerned, I say distinctly that the immigration is a detriment to the North-west Territories. Our lands in the North-west are controlled by the federal government. Until recently, I have been opposed to giving of provincial autonomy to the North-west Territories, because the necessities for the administration of the government have become so great in the last three or four years through the immigration brought in there by the federal government—we find no fault with that—that the territorial government has not sufficient funds to supply schools and build roads and bridges for the increasing population. The Premier of the North-west Territories, two or three years ago, stated in a speech made at Yorkton that one of two things must be done: Either the federal government must provide more funds for them, or they must resort to direct taxation to provide for the education of the people, and the construction of roads and bridges. The government of the North-west Territories does not get a farthing of revenue from anything taken into the country for the last three years or any other number of years. The only revenue they get from the population is derived from licenses. The revenue from the great immigration into that country flows into the federal treasury; the government of the North-west Territories does not get a cent. There is no part of the Dominion which contributes as much to the federal revenue, according to population, as the North-west Territories. We do not manufacture anything for ourselves in that country. We are the people who give a stimulus to the trade of Canada. If it had not been for the opening up of the North-west Territories, and the consumption in that part of Canada of manufactured goods, the older provinces would be in a less prosperous condition than they are to-day. The people of that country want roads and bridges and schools. To the credit of the people they have built excellent school-houses by direct taxation. They have provided the means out of their own pockets, and throughout Assiniboia, and as far west as Calgary you will find as good a class of schools as are to be seen anywhere.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Do they not get a portion of the school money?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—No; I can speak for every town in Assiniboia, I know more of that part of the territories than further west. We built our schools with money raised on our own individual properties, not a dollar of it came from the funds of the North-west Territories, or the federal government. While the federal government derives all the benefit of the rapidly increasing population in the territories from the increased revenue derived from customs and excise duties, they supply the territorial government with a bare pittance. I claim that we have the best school system in the world, and our schools are brought within a reasonable reach of the settlers. No country that I know of can compare with the Canadian North-west Territories in the provision that has been made for roads and bridges and schools. The government at Ottawa ought to be able to give some portion of the revenue they derive from that section of the country towards education and public works. The federal government does not give one-tenth of the money derived from the settlers in the North-west to the territorial government. The construction of roads and bridges in that country is very expensive. It is not a wooded country, and what timber is found there is not suited for the construction of bridges. We have to import the wood we require for that purpose. There is a combine on the lumber supply in that country. I cannot buy a thousand feet of lumber from a manufacturer direct. Is it not outrageous in a civilized country which boasts of its freedom that a man cannot buy a carload of such a necessary article as lumber, because of a combine? That combine is fostered by the government, because they will take no steps to put an end to it. We have to build iron bridges, and on the iron we import into the territories there is a heavy freight rate. The result is our bridges are very expensive. We have a great number of them to build. The rivers are numerous and difficult to bridge, not from the fact that they have water all the year round, but because they run in deep ravines, and it is expensive to build roadways down to the river, and up the banks again. Not only that, but labour is very dear, living is expensive, and the freight rates are high. Therefore we require more money than is required in sections of the country where these elements of cost do not exist. The burning cry in that part of the country is, we want provincial autonomy, in order that we may be able to tax ourselves to keep up our schools, and sustain the progress with which we have started. The Doukhobors, the Galicians, and others living to-day in Europe, will ten years hence get the benefit of our heavy expenditure of to-day. Settlement is scattered all over that country. That is an unfortunate thing. It was a great mistake, and one which I condemned at the time, when that country was opened up, that so many railway charters were granted. When I went to Winnipeg, in 1882, every man I met told me to go to some distant section of the country—to buy a cayuse and a buckboard and take a fortnight's supplies and go out and select land. I asked if I could not go by railway ; they said no, but there will be one soon. I said no, I will keep within sound of the steam whistle ; but others did not do as I did. I have known men to settle 100 to 150 miles from a railway, and the government of the North-west Territories has to build roads and bridges for them, and supply money to pay teachers. All over that country we have had to build a system of railways that would accommodate 5,000,000 of people, because the settlement is scattered everywhere. Every corner of that vast territory has a settler, and the territorial government must build a road for him. The same road would accommodate 500,000 settlers. The time has come when the government should be generous—not generous, but fair. We do not ask one-half, not even one-quarter of what we should get. If you figure up what we contribute to the revenue, we would be quite satisfied to get 25 per cent of it for the North-west Territories, and that would not be an unfair thing to do. At this stage of the growth and development of that country you could advance no argument to intending settlers so strong as to tell them that we have a splendid school system, and excellent roads and bridges. The territorial government deserves great praise for the school law and the school system in existence there. When I went to the North-west council in 1885, we gave a large grant towards supporting the schools, but we had plenty of money. The federal government at that time did not have to give us as much as they do now, but in proportion to our wants, they gave us large sums of money, so that we were able to support our schools in good shape. But that amount has dwindled down and the people have to support the schools by taxing themselves. Though we have a population of about 250,000 in that country you refuse us provincial autonomy ; you keep us as mere serfs. You say, take the pittance we give you, and we cannot help ourselves. Mention has been made of the building of the Transcontinental Railway and the Mackenzie and Mann railway. We gen no benefit from that ; on the contrary, it means a heavier expense for building roads and bridges. If a hundred thousand people were to come in for the Mackenzie and Mann road, it would not contribute one farthing to the exchequer of the North-west Territories, but it will be a benefit to the government here.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—What I said was the expenditure of the money would help in the meantime.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—The men that come to the North-west are not navvies. They go there to take possession of the soil and raise wheat. A suggestion was made some years ago that a railway should be built in patches so that men could get work, but our answer was that we were not navvies; we did not want to build railways, we wanted to till the soil. If the settlers work on the railway, what is the good of them coming in, and of what value will the railway be ? The people who settle here want to become citizens of the country, and in that particular the road is of no special good to them any further than it will open up land for new settlers ; but if these settlers do not devote their time to cultivating the soil, of what use will it be to build the road ? I understand the policy of the government is to take the lands of the North-west Territories and hold them as security for the bonus they are giving to the road. Is not that the policy ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think not.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I saw it stated the other day that it was intended to hold the lands of the North-west Territories as security.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think any such policy has been announced.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It was indicated by the Minister of the Interior in another place.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—If the lands are set aside for that purpose, what have we to fall back on ? We will be denied the privilege that every other province enjoys of having control of the public domain within its limits. We are to be serfs to the rest of Canada. I say that is wrong. The government should come down with a good liberal grant—not a liberal grant, but a fair grant. The people should be given enough money to carry on the government of the country. My hon. friend from Calgary spoke about the letter of Mr. Bulyea. He had exhausted every argument. Mr. Haultain had been writing to Mr. Sifton and Mr. Ross, two supporters of the government here, and using every argument possible to induce the government to give his government money, and when they found every reasonable argument unavailing, they say : 'Give it to us for party purposes.' The man was driven to it, and he used the strongest argument, and even the strongest argument has failed. The government should give us enough money to enable us to live on an equality with other people, to keep up good schools, roads and bridges, so that when immigrants come there, we can tell them : 'You are coming to the best country in the world ; you are coming to a land where the soil is fertile, where there are good roads and bridges, and where you will find the best school system in the world.' If the government will give us sufficient money to do that, they will have the strongest argument possible to attract immigration.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Is the hon. gentleman aware of the fact that there is an item of $250,000 in the supplementary estimates for that purpose ?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Only $250,000 ! And you brag that you expect to have 250,000 settlers in that country in one year !

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I have listened to the discussions in the House of Commons and also to the debates here since it has been my privilege to be a member of the Senate, with regard to the expenditure of money in the North-west. Our friends in the North-west are perhaps a little too hard to please. An immense amount has been spent in the territories on public buildings. I remember adding up the amount spent in Regina alone, and it was no less than $350,000, for the construction of public buildings, including accommodation for the North-west Mounted Police and a residence for the Lieutenant Governor. Money has been poured out there in a more lavish way than in any other part of the country that I know of. My hon. friend speaks about building schools ; that they have to tax themselves for their schools. We have got to do the same in Ontario, and every other province. Why should my hon. friend complain that they have got to build their own schools. We have to do so here. There is no grant in Ontario for the building of schools. The school sections have got to erect their own schools and tax themselves for every dollar that goes into those buildings. Why does my hon. friend complain that they have got to do in the North-west what they are doing in other sections of this Dominion, and nothing more and nothing less. Now, with regard to improvements, I am quite willing to say that the government should carefully consider every demand that is made and that is reasonable and fair for a grant for general improvements, for the construction of bridges and so on for the North-west, but really, I am afraid that my hon. friends from the North-west Territories have been so accustomed to have their demands complied with that they have the idea that the treasury of this Dominion should be open to their call and they should get everything they ask for. That appears to be the feeling as far as I can gather. We are glad to know there is a large settlement going on in the North-west Territories. We are proud to learn that it is filling up so rapidly, and we earnestly hope it will develop into the grand country my hon. friend speaks of. We shall all be proud of it. He says the immigrants going in there as navvies will be of no use to the country. I am sure they eat potatoes, they eat flour, they eat beef and use pork, and where do they get it? Do they bring it with them? Are these articles not grown in the North-west Territories? Do you not supply settlers with these goods, and do they not pay you money for them? Is not that an advantage? My hon. friend would lead us to suppose that they should get a bounty for every immigrant sent in, or that the government should pay so much a head for the privilege of sending immigrants there. I always understood that increased population to a country, even a new country, was an advantage, and it certainly is. These people will take up certain districts of land, a certain percentage of them will become settlers, and they will contribute in the way of taxation no doubt the same as others. I believe the North-west is receiving at the hands of the present government fair and reasonable consideration. I believe they were altogether overfed by the previous government, because the extravagance that characterized the expenditure there was something enormous. I quite admit that possibly there were conditions then that do not exist now. The accommodation in the way of railways was not as good as it is at the present moment, and there was more inconvenience and expense connected with the erection of public buildings, nevertheless there was a great deal of extravagance connected with the establishment of the public buildings and in connection with the North-west Mounted Police. We are glad that is drawing rapidly to an end, and we hope the North-west Territories will prosper, but they should be reasonable and not be unreasonably and everlastingly yelling out for further grants and demanding donations.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Would my hon. friend just consider this problem for a moment: it may be of advantage to us in the North-west Territories. Assuming we have to depend upon the federal government for the building of roads and bridges, that is to make appropriations for the building of roads and bridges, and the money is not voted, would my hon. friend regard it in the public interest that there should be a cessation of all public works?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I think not. I have already stated, that I think the government should fairly consider all the demands made and where there is a necessity for the expenditure of money for roads and bridges I believe it should be made in a reasonable and proper way. I am quite satisfied of that, and I have no doubt the government are taking steps to find out what is absolutely necessary. I do not find fault with the people from the North-west making a demand for all they can get—I suppose they like to have plenty of public money to spend up there, and I daresay the North-west government are also anxious to get a large amount of money under their control; but while they are making those demands it is prudent, on behalf of the government, to investigate how far they would be justified—considering the demands and the necessities of other sections of the country—in making grants up to what the people in the North-west would demand. I have no doubt the government have fairly balanced the matter and come to the conclusion that the amounts they are now setting aside for necessary improvements will be, to a large extent, equal to the demands of the present moment.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I would just like to say a few words in connection with this matter. A good deal of complaint has been made for a number of years about the Dominion government not granting autonomy to the North-west Territories. It is a question in the minds of a great many people in the territories as to whether it would be better to have autonomy granted them at the present, or whether it is better to continue under the present arrangement. There is no doubt in my mind that the Dominion government for the last few years has been treating the North-west Territories very liberally with regard to their finances. I have before me the estimates that have been made since 1892 by the North-west Territories government, setting forth the amount of money required to carry on the administration of affairs in the North-west Territories, and for a number of years their request fell considerably short of their necessities, but during the last few years, since immigration has gone in there very rapidly, the Dominion government recognizing the fact that they have to assist in supplying funds to enable the territorial government to meet the responsibilities which they are called upon to assume, such as constructing roads, building bridges and maintaining of schools, have increased the grant estimated for 1903, which is $1,130,000.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What is that for ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—That includes the total estimates asked for for public works, schools and everything else. That is the estimate they would require for the carrying on of the affairs of the North-west Territories.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not desire to interrupt my hon. friend, but was that given to the territorial government, or is it the total amount for public works which belonged to the Dominion as well ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No, the territorial government. This is the amount asked for this year. As a matter of fact, I have just got the figures from a gentleman who is more conversant with the matter than I am—they have received this year over $1,200,000; in other words they have received more money this year than they have asked for. The supplementaries actually provide for the territorial government more money for carrying on the affairs of the North-west than they have asked for in their own estimates. I would just like to call to the attention of my hon. friend from Calgary, and he knows probably more than I do about this matter, that a decision was given as to the taxation of the Canadian Pacific Railway lands and property in Manitoba, and according to that decision until the territory is formed into a province, the territorial government have the right to tax the Canadian Pacific Railway lands, roadbed and everything to raise a fund for school purposes. I may be mistaken, but at the present time the territorial government have the power to tax the Canadian Pacific Railway property for school purposes until the territories form themselves into a province. I would like to say, in reply to what the hon. gentleman from Wolseley (Hon. Mr. Perley) has said, that the people are building their own schools. The people throughout the provinces of the Dominion build their schools by direct taxation. There is no government aid given for building schools, but the people of the territories have the benefit of taxing the Canadian Pacific Railway lands for building schools. In the province of Manitoba they had to make demands on the federal government year after year in the early days, in fact they are doing it yet, and in that province the government has been compelled to give guarantees for the construction of railroads. In the last few years the province of Manitoba has undertaken to guarantee bonds to the extent of $20,000,000 for the building of railroads. The North-west Territories are getting those roads constructed at the expense of the Dominion government, and have not to pay a dollar. It seems to me if they can get railroads assisted by the federal government, and get provincial autonomy later on and start off clear of debt with railroads constructed, they are certainly in a much better position than any province in the Dominion of Canada. Now, I have a comparison here as to the amount per capita that is paid to the different provinces and the territories according to the last census. In Ontario the amount is 61⅓ cents; in Quebec, 66 cents; Nova Scotia, 94¼ cents; British Columbia, $1.72; Manitoba, $2.05½; North-west Territory, $4.47. They are doing fairly well. And when I have pointed out to the House that the territorial government this year are receiving more money from the federal government than their estimate was for 1903, it does not seem to me there is much room for complaint. Starting at 1892-93 they asked for that year $368,000 ; they got only $195,000, or 55 per cent of what their estimate was. If you estimate it on the percentages of what they asked for, for I do not suppose the territorial government asked for more than they required, in 1892 they got 53 per cent of what they asked for; 1893, 54 per cent; 1894, 55 per cent; 1895, 71 per cent—and that 71 per cent probably had a little to do along the line of Mr. Bulyea's letter, because that was just the year previous to the election of 1896—in 1896 they got 62 per cent of what they asked for.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Mr. Bulyea's letter was written this year.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Yes, but probably there were letters of a similar character written in 1895. In 1897 they got 70 per cent; in 1898, 64 per cent; in 1899, 53 per cent. Then you will remember, in the last year, when they received only 53 per cent they were allowed to retain $163,000 collected on account of licenses in the Yukon Territory, which went certainly to make up a large amount of that deficit which they failed in getting from the federal government in 1899. Then in 1900 they asked for $600,000 and got $424,000, or 70 per cent; in 1901 they got 68 per cent; in 1902 they got 75 per cent; in 1903, 85 per cent of their original estimate, and, if you take the supplementary estimates now before the House they are actually getting more than they asked for the administration of affairs this year. No doubt the requirements of the government are growing on account of the vigorous emigration policy pursued by the present government in inducing people to settle in the North-west Territories. More territory has to be opened up and more improvements are required, and the federal government realizing the needs and requirements of the new territory are providing for it by giving the additional amount now before us? While there may be a difference of opinion as to whether the territories would be better under their own local government, and able to tax themselves, so long as the Dominion government continue to give the guarantees and cash aids for the construction of railways, the North-west Territories have very little ground of complaint, and they will be much better off in future years than if they were under their own self government and had railway contractors after them for guarantees. The Dominion government has given guarantees for the construction of railways. Take the Canadian Northern Railway, $900,000 is the amount guaranteed; the amount supposed to be required for the Grand Trunk Pacific, $120,000,000; and the large subsidy to the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, which benefits a portion of the North-west Territories—all these cash grants have been given and guaranteed since the North-west Territories have been asking for local autonomy.

It does appear to me that as long as the federal government continue to deal as liberally as they have done with the North-west Territories, where they are placing no debt on themselves for the construction of railways, that they are in a very enviable position as far as finances are concerned. There is no doubt at all that in the very near future they will have provincial autonomy. There is no doubt that in the very near future the Dominion government, in dealing with that matter, will be in a very much better position than they have been in past years, because it is new territory and part of it that was supposed to be worthless except for ranching purposes a few years ago, has now become good wheat land. It was suggested that the North-west Territories should be divided into two provinces; that a portion of the territory should be added to Manitoba, the balance between that and British Columbia forming another province. These things can all be more intelligently dealt with when the country is fairly well settled, as it is going to be in a very few years. Matters have to be adjusted afterwards. People feel that changes have to be made on account of the changed circumstances which will exist after the formation of a province in that portion of the Dominion of Canada. I do not wish to take up time on this matter now, but I just present these views to the House for what they are worth.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am sure Mr. Belyea and his fifteen supporters in the legislature will feel deeply indebted to my hon. friend for pointing out the grievous mistake they made in regard to their advances.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The estimate of Mr. Bulyea and his associates made in their demand on the treasury this year was $1,130,000, and they received a larger amount than they estimated they would require.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understood the hon. gentleman to say that a similar letter to this one was written in 1895?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I did not say that. I said there might have been.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should hope not. I should hope there was no Conservative who would claim money upon the principles and for the reasons advanced by Mr. Bulyea, and I was somewhat surprised when I understood the hon. gentleman to say that a similar letter had been written in a previous year. Probably a great many things might have been done that we have never discovered, not only in 1895, but since then. This return seems to be incomplete. I do not know that that is a matter that we should call to the attention of parliament, but I should like to see Sir Wilfrid Laurier's answer to this letter, or the government's answer. That is omitted in this correspondence. It is highly interesting, I admit. The arguments advanced by the hon. gentleman from Marquette are not at all applicable to the particular case under consideration. They might do very well if they were applied to one of the older provinces, having provincial autonomy. But the territories are, to a certain extent, under the control and management of the Dominion government, and not in the same position as the provinces. It may be true that the North-west Territories have had in the past large grants of money, and in its earlier existence it was charged that the late government appropriated an unnecessary quantity of money for the development of that great country. I think that complaints were made at the time, and the statements made by the hon. gentleman from Wellington not quite correct. The grants were defended by the late government on the ground that the territorial government had no means at that time of raising money for either local or for school purposes until they had powers given to them under the Territorial Act, and for that reason larger amounts were granted to them than would have been under any other circumstances. I desire to point out that when Prince Edward Island and British Columbia were brought into confederation, the requirements of those two portions of the country, though they were numerically much smaller in population than other provinces within the Dominion, would not, if their population had been considered, have received the same considerations and grants that were given to them; and so it is in the North-west. Manitoba and the North-west Territories are growing much more rapidly, and hence the necessity for giving them more money. I am not going to argue with my hon. friend behind me as to the advantages and disadvantages to the local territorial government of sending in immigrants, but we must bear this in mind——

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—The hon. gentleman does not approve of the statement of his hon. friend that immigrants are no good to the country?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, I do not.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I said no benefit to the revenue of the North-west Territories, and I challenge the hon. gentleman to contradict it.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—It is quite easily contradicted.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I challenge the hon. gentleman to contradict it if he can.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is a virtue that characterizes the present government and which characterized them also in the past, that whenever they make an interruption of the kind that has just been made, and they are asked for an explanation or to prove it, they are conveniently silent. Silence is golden, and it would place this House in a better position if they did not interrupt so much particularly when they are unwilling to give explanations. Those who live in the North-west know that no portion of the west was so clamorous for advances of money as the province of Manitoba. They were always complaining. We have heard little complaint from them lately, but formerly, when they required it more than they do now, when they were younger and had not so many people to tax under their autonomy to raise money, my hon. friend from Wellington was one of the most clamorous in opposition in opposing the grants. He was the Joe Hume of the Commons of Canada. I hope, in the future, when the estimates are considered and other appropriations are made, hon. gentlemen opposite will display the same economic spirit they have in the past. If they have sent 100,000 into the North-west Territories this year, and I hope they have, I should be delighted if it was 200,000, does not that establish this important fact that it is necessary to build more bridges, it is necessary to open more concession roads and main roads, and to give facilities to cross these great valleys and gullies, to which my hon. friend refers. No one knows better the requirements of a new country like that, although it is supposed to be a flat, prairie country, than the two hon. gentlemen sitting opposite me. I have heard the hon. gentleman—not the one from Killarney, but the hon. gentleman from Marquette, burst forth in stentorian tones his demands for greater amounts than he is now advocating, when he was in the House of Commons. I do not blame him for that.

I know the more one studies this question the more he will be convinced of the absolute necessity of the Dominion being very liberal in their appropriations in assistance of that new country, until they get provincial autonomy. I believe the time has arrived when it would be much better to grant the North-west Territories provincial autonomy, and the power they require to tax the lands that are held by private individuals throughout the country. They do that now, but let them have the power to impose more taxes for other requirements. Let them erect the different portions of their province into municipalities such as we have in Ontario and other portions of the Dominion. Give the municipalities the power to raise the money and they will know better and be more careful how they expend it. I notice that the Premier said in answer to an interrogation in the House of Commons that the time had not yet arrived when they should give the territories provincial autonomy. If my hon. friend will take the trouble to read the declarations and statements made by certain ministers in the other House the lands were to be retained—this was in answer to a demand that lands should be put under the control of the territories and that the territories should be given the benefit of them—that the lands were to be retained to create a fund for the purpose of recouping the general revenue for the advances which might be made for the construction of the railway. That has been published in the newspapers. I think most people have seen it. Well, to charge the North-west Territories with the appropriations made for opening up and building railways through the country, I think is carrying the argument altogether too far. It is neither fair nor equitable towards the territories. The hon. Secretary of State said a few moments ago that there was a sum of $400,000 appropriated in the main estimates for the territories. I have looked through them and I find nothing of the kind.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was under that impression.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have the main estimates in my hand, and if the hon. gentleman turns to page 13 he will see that we are to vote the North-west Territories $7,000, but that is for the governor of the territories.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not a copy of the estimates. I was speaking from memory. I thought there surely must be something in the main estimates.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I find also that there is an appropriation of $5,000 for a chief justice. He will find that on page 29; he will also find that for the Prince Albert jail there is $7,500, but that is purely Dominion and not territorial expenditure. That consists of salaries, uniforms, maintenance of prisoners, discharge expenses, working expenses, industries, prisoners' equipment and miscellaneous. Then, on page 37, the hon. gentleman will find that there is an item, but that is for pensions, payable to the mounted police, $2,400. I may not have found them all, but here is an item for the North-west Territories on page 49, the court house and lock-up and police accommodation, Dominion public buildings, renewable improvements and repairs Macleod court house, Red Deer court house and the lock-up, and Yorkton court house and jail, amounting to $32,000. All that expenditure is in the interest of the maintenance of justice, and not a sum over which the territorial government would have any control.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—If the territories had provincial autonomy they would have to pay these expenses themselves.

Hon Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Possibly they would, and possibly not. They do not have to pay all those expenses for the administration of justice in the province of Ontario as between the municipality and the government.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The court house and lock-up are contributed by the province.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand that. I am speaking of the administration of justice, and that is a portion of it. I am pointing out that these are sums contained in the main estimates for Dominion purposes, the country being under control and government to that extent of the Dominion, and the territorial government is thereby relieved from taxation for that purpose.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Look at page 68 of the main estimates and you will find a total of $532,000.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is quite right. I was coming to that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is more than I mentioned. I mentioned $450,000. I did not know it was so much as that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is less this year, though the country is growing rapidly, than it was last year. I do not know which sum my hon. friend read, but I find for 1902-3 the sum voted was $634,500, and for 1903-4 it is $405,000, nearly $230,000 less.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is $550,000.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What is the hon. gentleman reading from ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The estimates of the present year.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am looking at the estimates of the present year and reading from the top of page 69.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is to be found at the bottom of the page. That is only one vote, and we have had a number of estimates this year.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The estimates taken for 1902-3, by the figures—and he is reading precisely the same figures that I am—were $634,500 and for this year is $405,000, precisely what I said ; but the hon. gentleman will see, if he had allowed me to proceed without interruption, that the appropriation, in the words in italics, 'the appropriation not required for 1903 is $203,-000.' Now, if we go through the whole estimates, we will find no such sum as that mentioned. What I want to point out again is this : If you turn to these estimates which we have in our hands and the supplementaries to which my hon. friend referred, you will find that the appropriation for different purposes for Manitoba is $121,-000, but for the North-west Territories he called attention to the fact that it was $75,-000. That is quite correct, but what is it for ? It is for carrying on the business of the Dominion. It is not a sum that is appropriated for the purpose of the territorial government. It is for the Prince Albert land and registry office, a new vault in Regina and improvements to the post office. The item for the Regina immigration building is a revote, and the item for the Edmonton jail is another revote of $35,-000. Calgary was given two examining warehouses, Prince Albert a post office, Moosejaw public buildings, barracks for permanent corps of the Strathcona Horse. That is what the $75,000 is for. It is not at all placed in the hands of the territorial government. I am not going to discuss that question just now, but when the estimates come up I think they will be well worth considering and comparing with other votes. You will find if you take the province of Nova Scotia—and this indicates to me the probability of the approach of an election—in the main estimates there are no less than 51 items, running up to hundreds of thousands of dollars, and if you will turn to these supplementary estimates, to which my hon. friend has called attention, you will find there are no less than 130 items. I think they have picked out every ditch and cross road in the provinces in order to give them money. I do not suppose that my hon. friend from Cape Breton and others from Nova Scotia will find fault with that. There are about 170 items. Ontario is not quite so bad as that, but it approximates very nearly. If you can appropriate that much money—and it ran up to nearly six or seven hundred thousand dollars for Nova Scotia alone this year—if that is to be the standard of support of the government, they must be happy. If the old provinces are entitled to the amount of money indicated in these estimates to which I have called attention, surely the new, growing territories in the west, that are just budding, if I may use the expression, into manhood, should be most liberally dealt with.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the point I wish to make by referring to these other items. I think, upon reflection, the government will take that view of it. I am tolerably sure that those from the west will. The more one knows of the west and studies its requirements, the more convinced he will be of the necessity of not lavish, but liberal grants being made to the territorial government, in order that they may provide roads and bridges to enable the settlers to take their products to the markets. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman, in his reference to the moneys paid for school purposes, referred to the school lands. When Manitoba was created a province and the territories were organized, certain sections in the townships were set apart for school purposes and, as those lands were sold, the money was retained by the Dominion government and the interest thereon paid to the provincial and the territorial governments, and that has constituted a portion of the funds for educational purposes. Parliament committed a great wrong a year or two ago. I remember very well a Bill passing here without any objection from us, for the simple reason that we overlooked it. Thousands and hundreds of thousands of acres of land in Manitoba had been sold on credit, and the unpaid principal was drawing six per cent interest. A Bill was introduced and deliberately carried through parliament reducing the interest to five per cent, and that meant just so much taken from the school fund in the North-west, amounting to thousands and tens of thousands of dollars on the unpaid principal of the enormous area of school lands which have been sold. It was thought equitable at the time, for the reason that a law had been introduced reducing the legal rate of interest to five per cent, and that was made applicable to debts already existing, and included the unpaid price of the school lands. I suppose we are all responsible for the wrong we committed then, but many of these things are rushed through this House, as they are coming now. The most lavish expenditure is laid before us, and hundreds of millions, I might almost say, are being brought down at the very end of the session, when everybody is wearied and can scarcely give the time and attention necessary to properly consider matters of such importance. That is one reason why I say the present government, as well as the late government, have made a mistake; the whole system of governing the country on those questions has been wrong. I desire to put on record my own view, and I believe the view of the country, when they understand the question, that the federal government should be liberal with the North-west, and particularly so when they are sending hundreds of thousands of people into that country. It creates a necessity for more money on the part of the territorial government, which I am sure, after reflection, the government will accede to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—The hon. gentleman in calling attention to the estimates for the present year as compared with the estimates for last year, no doubt makes a correct statement so far as it appears in the book, but he has had experience enough to know that the way the comparative statement is made up is this: All the estimates for last year, including the original and the supplementary estimates, are in one column, while in the second column, for this year we have only the original estimate for the present year, the supplementaries not appearing at all. I do not remember the hon. gentleman's figures, but he says the estimate for this year falls below the estimate for last year, inasmuch as the estimate for last year was about $600,000; but if my hon. friend will refer to the first estimate for last year, he will find it amounted to $425,359, and properly the comparison which the hon. gentleman makes should be made with that and not with the figures on the page he referred to.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would refer the hon. gentleman to the actual estimate to which my remarks really applied, and the estimate for the territorial government. The House will remember I made the statement that the estimate for this year was the same as the estimate last year, and hon. gentlemen will see that the estimate is $457,979. Hon. gentlemen will also keep in view the fact that the hon. gentleman is dismissing the estimate chargeable to the territorial government account, as appears on page 68 of the main estimates. The other estimates are chargeable to both accounts.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I am referring entirely to the estimates brought down for the territorial government, in 1903—the 229th item 'government of the North-west Territories, amount to be voted, $425,359.' I am referring solely to the comparison which the hon. member from Hastings made. The hon. gentleman's contention is that we are not voting as much for the territories this year as we voted last year. We cannot tell how much we shall vote until all the estimates are before us.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Could we ascertain from the supplementary estimates that are brought in this year if there is an amount which would increase the one the hon. gentleman has given ?

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—Of course the hon. gentleman will understand that the blue-book for 1904 will contain the estimates for the year, and they compare with all the amounts granted in the previous year, but to get at the actual amount voted, you have to take in the supplementaries as well.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I understand that, but we have actually supplementary estimates to the amount of $10,500,000. In those figures can we find what would complete the appropriation for the North-west Territories ?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Would the hon. gentleman look at page 25 of the supplementary estimates for the current year ? He will find an amount there of $255,000.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I wish to call attention to the amount for education. I do not know how the money may be expended, but I find that last year, from the Auditor General's report, the amount actually paid over to the government of the North-west Territories for educational purposes, for clerical assistance and printing was $408,000, and in addition to that there was some $7,000 for school houses in unorganized districts. I presume it is in the hands of the territorial government to apportion that amount for education as best it may.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Not in the unorganized districts.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I am referring particularly to the large grant of $408,000, which, according to the Auditor General's report, was paid over last year. Under all the circumstances it would seem to me they cannot fairly charge the federal government with want of liberality in dealing with the schools, in view of the large amount voted.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a third time and passed.

HARBOUR OF NORTH SYDNEY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The Order of the Day being called :

Committee of the Whole House on Bill (262) An Act to amend the Act respecting the Harbour of North Sydney, in Nova Scotia.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move that the Order of the Day be discharged. There is no necessity to go into Committee of the Whole on this Bill. In direct money Bills we never go into committee, because no change can be made in them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We have gone into committee for the purpose of discussing the propriety of incurring a responsibility to pay money. I heard my hon. friend say once before that it was not necessary to go into committee on a money Bill, because we could not amend it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We could reject it. Is there a rule that permits the course which the hon. gentleman proposes to follow ? If so, I can understand the propriety of suspending the rule.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It has been the practice, when the Supply Bill come up here voting a number of items we never go into committee. This Bill is a direct authority to pay $100 more to the harbour master and 5 per cent commission to the other. It is a statutory allowance. However, if the House prefers to go into committee on this Bill, I have no objection.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What I want to know is whether there is a rule which gives us the power to read the Bill the third time without going into Committee of the Whole ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think not.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does the general rule which requires us to refer every Bill to a Committee of the Whole House after the second reading, refer to money Bills ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move that we go into committee on the order.

The motion was agreed to.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Clause 1 alters 4 to 5. It says $500 is to be given to the man who collects money for the Harbour Commissioners. The change in the second clause is authorizing the collector of customs, before paying over the money to the Harbour Commissioners, to deduct 5 per cent.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read a third time and passed.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION BILL.

Debate continued.

The Order of the Day being called :

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill (66) An Act to readjust the representation in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—When the House adjourned yesterday I was making comparative statements with regard to the dealings of the Bill in reference to the city of Toronto. Before resuming that point I wish to dispose of two or three incidental subjects that came up during the course of my remarks. I made an observation with regard to the division of the county of Cape Breton and the change in the representation of that county, when I was interrupted by my hon. friend from New Glasgow, who intimated to the House that the hon. leader of the opposition had been the first person to propose the division in that way. I was almost sure that my hon. friend was in error in regard to that particular. However, I did not make a very strong statement about it then, but to-day my hon. friend has informed me that he was in error, he was misinformed on the subject and he has very courteously informed me of that. I therefore refer to it in order that the hon. gentlemen may understand the matter correctly, as there is no difference of opinion between us as to how that change was brought about. The leader of the opposition informed me that so far was he from suggesting or approving of what has been done on the island of Cape Breton, he offered two amendments against the proposition in the House of Commons. I was referring to the city of Hamilton when my hon. friend by my side doubted the correctness of my statement that under the present Bill, Hamilton is divided into two constituencies. I have since referred to the Bill and I find that my statement was correct. Hamilton is so divided, and the position of the Bill with regard to double constituencies is simply this : strictly speaking, there are two double constituencies now left in the Dominion of Canada that formerly existed, the city of Halifax and the city of Ottawa. A new double constituency created—perhaps it is not altogether right to call it a new one—the restoration of an old double constituency abolished by the Act of 1892 appears in the Bill in regard to Queen's, Prince Edward Island, where the single riding principle has been adandoned and a return has been made to double constituencies. I regret very much that this has been done ; I think the principle is bad ; in fact I thought there was an almost perfect areement in Canada that double constituencies should, as far as possible, be abandoned. There may be some instances in the case of old constituencies where it would disturb existing arrangements of both political parties in the riding where it may not be desirable to abolish double constituencies, but I think it is a great pity indeed that in a place where the double constituencies have been abolished, and where satisfaction had arisen from their abolition, that influence should be brought to bear upon the government sufficiently strong to make them go back to what I believe is a bad principle.

I made an observation yesterday with regard to the Quebec resolutions and their bearing upon the 51st section of the British North America Act. I then stated that it was the purpose, so far as I could learn from the confederation debates, that the representation for the Dominion of Canada should be controlled by the provincial legislatures, and that was what was to be learned from the confederation debates. In making further investigation to-day I found a speech made by Sir John Macdonald during the confederation debates which shows that, as far as he was concerned at all events, he did not contemplate the leaving of the settling of the constituencies for federal purposes to the provincial legislatures, and therefore I assume that these remarks which are found in Mr. Pope's confederation papers with respect to the naming of the judges in the original Bill must have had reference to the first distribution that was to be effected, the redistribution which was to stand at the beginning of confederation, and under which the first elections were to be held. I was remarking yesterday when the House adjourned, upon the different treatment accorded to the city of Toronto to that which was accorded to the other cities of Ontario in the matter of the arrangement of parliamentary seats. I pointed out to the House that the city of Toronto was only given a member for every 42,600 of the population, while with the other cities of Ontario, Kingston, Brantford, London, Hamilton and Ottawa the unit was 27,900. I am at a loss to ascertain on what principle such an extraordinary discrimination and discrepancy appears against the city of Toronto. I made my comments on this yesterday. It is not necessary to repeat them now, but I think a very great injustice has been done to the city of Toronto. It is not unfair to say that the government in the power of their majority in both Houses of parliament are taking simply one seat from the Conservative party which they have won in the past and would have every prospect of winning in the future, and handing it over to their opponents by giving three seats to that portion of the county of York outside of Toronto which has only 64,000 of a population, while they give only five representatives to the city of Toronto with a population of 208,000.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—That is a larger proportion than Montreal has.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am not dealing with Montreal. I am only pointing out this anomaly in the Bill. I dare say if I were to take up the case of Montreal it is possible that some discrepancy of the same character might be found, and I do not think my hon. friend will be able to show that the Bill is particularly meritorious simply because there may be other anomalies in it as great as the one to which I have been referring. I may also further remark that I object very strongly to the manner in which Prince Edward Island is dealt with. I do not refer now to the question of the number of representatives—I intend to deal with that further on—but with the distribution in the island. I think representation by population is the correct principle, and the same principle should have been applied there as has been applied in Cape Breton. I am not at all discussing the question as to whether the way of dealing with the two seats in Nova Scotia by adding the county of Victoria to the county of Cape Breton and dividing the united counties by two—I am not admitting that that was the correct way of dealing with the question in Nova Scotia, but having adopted that principle there I do say the government should have applied the same principle to Prince Edward Island where no such objections as applies to Cape Breton would apply at all. A very strong argument was made by my hon. friend from Glace Bay (Hon. Mr. McDonald) with regard to leaving Cape Breton Island with five members. The reason was very strong indeed—the population of Cape Breton is growing faster than the population of other portions of Nova Scotia, and although it is a little below the unit it is certain to exceed the unit before the end of ten years, and another mode of solving the question in Nova Scotia might have been found. It would have been a very easy matter to have divided Prince Edward according to population. One of the hon. members for Prince County in the House of Commons suggested an arrangement, although I was not consulted with regard to it, which would have meet the case very satisfactorily. All the townships in the island up to seventeen might have been made to form one constituency. A division might have been drawn between lots 32 and 33 which would divide the remaining part of the island, except the county of King's, about evenly in two, and give four ridings, King's remaining a distinct riding as it has about the right population to entitle it to a seat. That would have been a much better method than the method adopted under the Bill before us. The Conservative party, as far as I am able to learn from the expressions of their representatives, though they know this measure is an unfair one and arranged to operate against them in the province of Ontario to a very considerable extent, are not in the slightest degree disheartened on that account. They feel that public opinion is with them to-day and growing strongly in their favour, and this new obstacle which the government is placing in their way, making the difficulties greater than before, is far from being insurmountable. In fact I think the experience of the past is that there is very little indeed to be gained by unfair redistribution.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Less to be gained to-day than perhaps at one time. The hon. member for Smith's Falls referred to the late Mr. Dalton McCarthy as having regretted that he had taken any part in the redistribution of 1892. To be strictly fair the statement of Mr. McCarthy spread over a page or two in 'Hansard' should be more fully stated. In that statement Mr. McCarthy said distinctly that the objection was one more of sentiment than otherwise, as he did not believe the Conservative party had gained anything by the Redistribution Act of 1892, notwithstanding the very strong statements we are accustomed to hear, and that was after Mr. McCarthy had, to a considerable extent, changed his attitude towards political parties in Canada. I am quite convinced that such will be the case in the present instance. My hon. friend the Secretary of State produced figures to the House, drawn largely from figures submitted in the House of Commons by Sir Richard Cartwright, to prove that one of the redistributions effected by the Conservative party in the province of Ontario had operated very disadvantageously to his party by dividing the entire vote given for each political party by the number of representatives elected, to show that a smaller number of Liberals had been elected under the Bill in proportion to the votes cast than Conservatives, and that this proved that the Redistribution Act was a very unfair one.

I then pointed out to my hon. friend that he might extend the same calculation to the province of Quebec at the present time, and then he might give the result to the House. The result in that case would be that, at the present time, every Conservative member sitting in the House of Commons for Quebec represents 15,000 or 16,000 electors, while the fifty-nine Liberal representatives from the province of Quebec represent something like 1,800 each. So that if the argument were good in the case of Ontario, as quoted by my hon. friend the Secretary of State, it would be quite apparent that some very bad work had been done in the province of Quebec in the matter of redistribution or something else. But the lesson to be drawn from the majorities in that way is not a correct one, but this point I think will be conceded by every person who has given this subject any consideration, that if you find by aggregating the votes given to both politicial parties that the party who has the minority of votes has the majority of representatives in the province it will clearly indicate that there is something wrong. That is the position of the Liberal government in the province of Ontario at the present moment. Although receiving 6,000 votes less at the polls than were given to the Conservative candidates in the province of Ontario at the last provincial election, they are nevertheless able to command a majority, by whatever means they do it, on the floor of the House and they are enabled to hold on to office notwithstanding the adverse vote of the electors. Now I wish to refer for one moment to a statement made by the hon. gentleman from de Lorimier. He appeared to claim credit to himself and his friends for having shown remarkable magnanimity for refraining from doing some terrible things that they might have done in the province of Quebec. He explained to the House that if they wanted to put the Conservative party in an almost hopeless condition in the province of Quebec, that they could have done it in the very simplest manner possible by interfering with the boundaries of the constituencies in that province. When my hon. friend was discussing that point, my reflection at first was that he was like Alexander the Great, weeping because he could find no more worlds to conquer, but I found that was not exactly his position. It was a little more like that of Warren Hastings in his famous impeachment, when he was accused of incapacity and maladministration in India to an enormous extent, he recounted his opportunities and pointed out that he had paced up and down through vaults in the Indian cities where gold and silver coins were piled so high that they were almost even with his shoulders and he exclaimed 'My God, whenever I think of what opportunities I have had, I am amazed at my own moderation.' My hon. friend seems to look upon the question in that way, and looking over the map of Quebec, and considering what wonderful things he could have done in the way of destroying the Conservative party, he seems to be astonished at his own moderation in not having pursued that course. But some of us who have observed my hon. friend's course in this House within the last few days are not altogether indisposed to doubt his willingness to go to a very considerable length to gain a party advantage, notwithstanding the magnanimity which he assures us he pursued with regard to the redistribution of the province of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We will erect a statue for the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I now come to deal for a few moments with the claim of Prince Edward Island for increased representation, and I want to direct the attention of hon. gentlemen to the terms and conditions on which British Columbia and Prince Edward Island were admitted to the union. There was less than two years between the time when British Columbia entered the union and when Prince Edward Island came in. This is the clause of the law which refers to British Columbia :

> British Columbia shall be entitled to be represented in the Senate by three members and by six members in the House of Commons, the representation to be increased under the provisions of the British North America Act of 1867.

A little more than a year afterwards Prince Edward Island entered the union and terms were settled between the province of Prince Edward Island and the Dominion of Canada, and this was the provision which refers to the representation of Prince Edward Island :

> That the population of Prince Edward having been increased by 15,000 or upwards since the year 1861, the island shall be represented in the House of Commons of Canada by six members, the representation to be readjusted from time to time under the provisions of the British North America Act.

The whole question turns upon the substitution of the word 'readjusted' in the case of Prince Edward Island instead of 'increased' in the case of British Columbia. The whole question which is now in dispute between Prince Edward Island and the Dominion arose in consequence of this change of words. There is a legal battle going on just now over this question and therefore I am not going to discuss it here; it is being discussed elsewhere. I may say that after the census of 1891, when it was found that Prince Edward Island would lose one member it did not surprise anybody in the island that the computation would have that result, because a point was stretched at confederation to give the island six members though it was not strictly entitled to it according to the basis of representation settled for the other provinces, and the reason given was that Prince Edward Island had resisted entering the union for a long time after the other provinces had joined, and the question of representation was one of the points upon which the people of the island had made a determined stand. I may say further that when the terms of union were settled, two delegations at different times appeared here, one from each political party, a change of government having taken place in the meantime, and the people of the province were assured by the delegates of both political parties at that time, and the discussions of the day will show it, that the claim for six representatives was conceded to the province, and that was to be for all time. That was the understanding of the delegates. Hon. gentlemen may say that they were not as sharp as they ought to have been as to the difference of the phraseology in the terms of agreement as between the Dominion and British Columbia and Prince Edward Island. It certainly did escape their observation, that a different word was used. Whether the use of the word 'readjustment' will settle the question remains to be seen when the case is heard and decided finally before the Privy Council in England. The Supreme Court of Canada has decided against the contention of the province, but the government of the province is not satisfied with that decision. They have sought leave to appeal to the Privy Council, and I think there is every indication that that leave will be granted, and the matter will be settled at as early a date as the Privy Council can hear the appeal. My hon. friend pointed to the fact that the province of Prince Edward Island did not make a stand upon this question in 1892. That is quite correct, for there was no positive stand taken with regard to this subject at that time. For my own part, I was not in public life then. I was taking a short rest, but I took sufficient interest in the subject to look it up and to consult some legal gentlemen in the province with regard to it, and we came to the conclusion that the terms of the law were against us, and there was very little use—I did not think at that time, upon such advice as I was able to get, there was any use in fighting the matter, as the terms of the law appeared to be against us. However, the result of the discussions that have taken place since this redistribution discussion came up, and the fact that the people of the province have become alarmed, and justly alarmed at the prospect of losing another representative, and can now see plainly with the growth of population in the west that the day will perhaps come, and at no very remote date, when it will become a question whether they will be able to hold even one representative in the House of Commons, and that being the case hon. gentlemen can very rightly understand that the people of Prince Edward Island are looking upon the matter from a very serious point of view. Therefore they are endeavouring to have it legally settled, and it is their intention, if it is not settled favourably to the province, to make a strong appeal to the Canadian parliament to have the matter dealt with by the British government in order that what certainly was the intention of the delegates from the island, and as far as we know and believe was the intention of the government of Canada at that time, that Prince Edward Island should continue to be represented by six members in the House of Commons shall be carried out. During a discussion which took place not very long ago elsewhere, this matter was discussed, and the Attorney-General of Prince Edward Island wrote a letter which appeared in the Daily 'Guardian' newspaper with regard to this subject, which I shall take the opportunity of reading some extracts from for the information of the House. It had been stated that the case before the court was heard in May, and that nothing having been heard of the matter from that time forward it was doubtful if the province intended to prosecute an appeal; at all events it had not been announced, and furthermore, some doubt was expressed both there and in this House as to whether the Privy Council would grant leave to appeal, for which we know application has to be made. The Attorney-General writes in this way:

> As it now stands an application for leave to appeal will be made ——

He had previously explained why that the case did not come before the Privy Council in May. He contradicts the statement of the Minister of Justice in that respect, and he states: that it was set down to be tried in May, but on his way to the capital he found that Mr. Justice Mills had died, and that the court was not complete; that it only consisted of four judges and he did not feel he would be justified in consenting to have the case tried by an incomplete bench—especially as one of the judges, Sir Louis Davies, had, he believed, formed a strong opinion against the contention of the province. He puts it in that way. He says:

> —As it now stands the application for leave to appeal will be made, all the papers being in, on the 1st day of November, and the case will be argued before the Privy Council by Mr. Aylesworth and myself or some other Counsel on behalf of this province in the February term of that court. As to leave being granted to appeal this case, the matter is a foregone conclusion. The Privy Council always, as I am informed by our solicitors in London, Messrs. Blake and Redden, grant leave to appeal where a constitutional case of this kind arises. I am also advised to the same effect by Mr. Aylesworth, that he has no doubt at all that the Privy Council will as a matter of course grant leave to appeal. To put the matter beyond a doubt, I received yesterday a letter from the Deputy Minister of Justice, Mr. Newcomb, asking me for certain reasons of his own and as a matter of convenience to himself, if I would not let the case stand over until next July, and stating that he could not actually consent to an appeal being granted by the Privy Council, and that he would not attend himself or oppose the application in London to appeal, but that counsel would attend on behalf of the government of Canada to formally oppose the application. But, he adds, 'while we would oppose this application, speaking without prejudice, I think it probable that as a constitutional matter involving the construction of the British North America Act, the committee of the Privy Council would give you leave to appeal and, perhaps you would not see any necessity of sending counsel over to attend upon the application for leave.

The Deputy Minister of Justice regards it almost as certain that leave to appeal will be granted, so much so, that he suggested to the Attorney General of the province that it might not be necessary for him to send over counsel for the purpose of taking charge of that part of the case. The Attorney General goes on :

So, as the matter of leave to appeal being granted, that question, to my mind, is settled. The public therefore may rest perfectly assured that so far as getting the case before the Privy Council is concerned it is practically there now, and everything is in readiness for the argument, which will take place in February. I would have preferred that the argument might have taken place sooner, but as you will see from the facts stated by me in this letter, it was utterly impossible to have had the case in any quicker than it will be. I do not think it is necessary for me to take up any of the statements made by the different members at Ottawa upon the question, and referred to in your paper. One statement referred to by you is that of the Minister of Justice that no application for leave to appeal has yet been made. This to a certain extent is correct, but the Minister of Justice in making it must have known, as his deputy minister does know (and I presume he is supposed to know what his deputy knows) that the appeal was under way. Not only was it under way, but the deputy minister of Justice was asking me to postpone the time of hearing. The Attorney General, Mr. Fitzpatrick, is also quoted by the 'Examiner' as saying that this appeal was made to the Supreme Court in May last, and there was nothing to prevent Prince Edward Island from petitioning His Majesty at either the sittings of the Privy Council in June, July or August. If this is correctly quoted, the Minister of Justice is most grossly incorrect. The case was not heard in May, as the Minister of Justice ought to have known, as there was no quorum to hear it, and it was not heard until June, the following month ; and as shown by me by the facts above, it was impossible to have had it before the Privy Council in June. The Attorney General of Canada also ought to know, I should think, that there is such a thing as a long vacation in England, and as a matter of fact the Privy Council does not sit during the months of August, September and October.

However, to put the matter shortly and to allay any unrest there may be in the public mind as to whether the appeal is going on or not, all I have to say is that the appeal is being perfected, as fast as possible, and it will be heard, barring unseen events which might happen between that time and this, in the February term of the sitting of the Privy Council. I have gone into this matter fully, because it might be said if I simply contradicted the statements made in the different papers about this matter, that I was speaking about without any grounds for what I said. I have given the facts, and I think any one can see, if he takes the trouble to read them, that the case is being prosecuted as fast as it possibly can be, and that it will be heard before the Privy Council in February, when I trust a decision in favour of the province may be given.

When this subject was discussed elsewhere the difficulty was appreciated that if this appeal went forward and should such a thing happen as every hon. gentleman knows it is possible might happen—the result is, I believe, in the estimation of the best of lawyers always a matter of very grave doubt—that the contention of Prince Edward Island should be sustained, a very serious difficulty will arise ; indeed many difficulties are in sight should that happen. We are proceeding to enact a law of Canada which provides that Prince Edward Island should lose an additional member. Once that has become law an election might be brought on and the result would be that the province would only send four members to the House of Commons, and if following very shortly after that, or even before the election is brought on, the contention of Prince Edward Island should be sustained, the election would still have to go on and the island would be returning some two members less than it would be entitled to have representing it in the House of Commons. It is therefore very evident, assuming that it is possible the contention of Prince Edward Island may be sustained by the Privy Council, a very serious difficulty and a serious set of complications will arise in connection with it. One of these difficulties I may state to the House is that Sir Louis Davies when in the House of Commons discussed this question very fully—not the question as to whether Prince Edward Island should have four or six members, but the whole question of representation, and he laid down the law in this regard and he was sustained in that view by Mr. Mills, afterwards also a Justice of the Supreme Court, a former leader of this House. Both of those gentlemen took the view that once parliament dealt with the question or representation between the provinces after the completion of each decennial census, that settled it once and for all during the period. These were the words of Sir Louis Davis. Having dealt with it their action would be final and no other disposition or arrangement could be made until another decennial census was taken. It is possible that that opinion might have been modified had this very particular case been before them. They were speaking without having any particular case in their minds but they certainly came to the conclusion that any redistribution or readjustment of the representation between the provinces made immediately after the decennial census, just as we are proceeding with this one, would be final for a period of ten years, as between the different provinces. Well, if there is anything at all in that contention it would possibly keep Prince Edward Island, notwithstanding a decision favourable to the island having been obtained from the Privy Council, out of its due representation for a period of ten years. At all events it would certainly deprive it of the voice it ought to have if a general election would be held in the meantime. For these reasons I think there is a very strong argument in favour of adding to this Bill a suspending clause that it be brought into effect only by proclamation of the Governor in Council, or what would be still better, that it should not go into effect until after a reasonable time is allowed until the result of this appeal is known. If that were done it might relieve parliament and the government from a very serious trouble and complication hereafter. For my part the general objection that I have stated to the Bill is that the government has not done what I believe they ought to have done, and that was to have referred the division of the constituencies to an independent tribunal. It was their own policy. It was the policy of the party now in power in 1892 to refer the question of dividing the constituencies to a commission of judges.

That question was brought up in the other branch of parliament by one of the members for Norfolk, who moved a resolution on the subject, the object being to test the government with regard to consistency in the fulfilment of their pledge. It was not pressed to a vote, because the Conservative party in the House of Commons believed that it would not be a good thing to appoint the judges to do any such work as that, therefore, for that reason, no vote was taken, but the principle of referring it to a commission as had been done in England in 1885, is the correct principle, and if that had been done in the present case there would have been more confidence in the result than there can be under existing circumstances. In the English case not one judge was appointed. There was a commission consisting of surveyors, members of the ordinance department, eminent lawyers, and others whose professions I do not remember, and that would have been the proper course to have pursued here. The meaning of the words, 'such authority' in the British North America Act was expounded by Mr. Mills, by Sir Louis Davies, and by Mr. Dalton McCarthy and other gentlemen in the House of Commons in 1892, and that policy was included in the Bill submitted by this government to parliament in the year 1889, that the division of the seats and counties should be done by an independent commission—not the matter of fixing how many this county and that county should have, but simply the matter of drawing the boundaries in order that the people might accept it as being done by a commission entirely independent of bias towards one party or the other. The proper course should have been to introduce a Bill and settle on the divisions as between the counties. The leaders of both parties could agree upon a Bill, and I am very sure I am not stating anything that will not be accepted as reasonable when I say that if such an approach had been made to the leaders of the opposition in both Houses they would have entered upon the question with a disposition to give and take and do what was right. Then after settling upon the constituencies, an independent commission should have been named of men to be found in various walks of life in Canada who would enter upon the matter in a judicial spirit and draw the lines and boundaries in such a way that no party advantage would accrue from the redistribution. If that course had been pursued and the Bill had been introduced and the commission appointed, and parliament prorogued after discharging their other work, they would meet again at a reasonable time when the report of the commission would be in, and these questions which had arisen in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island had been settled, and would have been able to deal with it finally. They would have had the fullest information before them, and it would have been done to the satisfaction of both political parties. These political complications would not be likely to arise in the case of Prince Edward Island, should a decision favourable to the province be arrived at by the Privy Council.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—But the suggestion of the hon. gentleman did not seem to appeal to the judgment of Sir John Macdonald—the suggestion to refer the delimitation of the counties to a commission.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Sir John was not living in 1892. When that proposition was made the Bill had been introduced and the discussion was going on. It was made then for the first time. Certainly no suggestion of this kind appears in the reports of the Debates in 1882 and 1872. In fact there had been a very inadequate discussion in both those years in parliament. In 1892 it was more fully discussed, and the result was this construction of the 51st section of the British North America Act was advanced for the first time, and the suggestion was made at a stage of the Bill when, even if Sir John Macdonald was living had been disposed to entertain it, practically it was too late to do so, because it would have been necessary to undo all that had been done up to that time. What Sir John Macdonald would have done if he had been living and it had come up at an earlier stage in the progress of the Bill, we do not know, nor do we know what he would have done if he had lived to make another redistribution ; but from the whole course of his political life it is evident that he would have considered the suggestion. He rarely allowed a good suggestion to ultimately pass unheeded. It was found that he generally accepted in the end anything submitted by his opponents that was good. That was the case with regard to the submission of the educational questions to the Supreme Court. Mr. Blake brought up the matter before the government had been committed to a different course of action, and Sir John Macdonald received and acted upon the suggestion. We do not know what Sir John Macdonald would have done with the experience of 1892 before him if he had lived to deal with another redistribution. The inference is rather, from Sir John Macdonald's whole life, that he would have accepted that proposition as one that would quiet the public mind and lead to better results, and give more satisfaction than by dealing arbitrarily with this question and making any redistribution that the majority might think proper.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I have no doubt he would have agreed to that proposition if he had been in opposition.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I infer from that remark that the hon. gentleman very seriously doubts the sincerity of his own friends in 1892, because they were making this proposition only when they were in opposition, and I am to infer from his remark that he would judge them as he is judging the memory of Sir John Macdonald, and crediting them with acting an insincere part.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The Liberal party offered it to the Conservative party four years ago.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend is quite correct in saying that this proposition was made four years ago. It was in the Bill when submitted, but the Bill was one against which there was a grave constitutional objection.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—A very grave explanation indeed.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—An objection so grave and important that no mere incident of that kind, which might be regarded as beneficial, would justify the opposition, having a majority in this House, in allowing the Bill to become law. The principle laid down by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition in this House was, that it was not expedient that redistributions of that kind should be made excepting after each decennial census. I took the ground on the strength of the opinion of such men as Mr. Mills and Mr. McCarthy—especially Mr. Mills—that it was not constitutionally in the power of this parliament to do it, but that was not the view taken by this House as a body. The view taken was that it was inexpedient from a constitutional point of view that this parliament should deal with a redistribution except after each decennial census.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That was the ground I took when I made the motion.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend from de Lorimier (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) thinks that he discovers a vulnerable point in the armour of the Conservative party because they did not spring up and hastily embrace some one beneficial point in that Bill and waive the broad important constitutional ground upon which the Bill was rejected.

I have notes before me particularly referring to anomalies on the face of the Bill. I want it to be distinctly understood that I do not take the unreasonable position that there should not be any anomaly. I question whether any redistribution Bill ever framed by the wisdom of man was free from some anomalies, but I have pointed out some in this Bill which cannot be accounted for in any other way than desire on the part of the government and their friends to obtain an advantage over their opponents. The case of the city of Toronto and the county of York is so plain and palpable that it deos not admit of any other view being taken. The treatment accorded to the sparsely-settled district of North Victoria and Haliburton is another instance. With 38,000 of a population that district is given only one member, while Brant with a smaller population and a very much larger urban population than Victoria and Haliburton is given two members. On the face of it, this indicates that the party responsible for such unequal treatment were aiming at gaining an advantage over their opponents. The policy adopted by the present government, of sending this matter to a committee of both parties in parliament, seems to have answered this purpose in their behalf; their friends all over the country are describing the wonderful degree of fairness with which they have dealt with this question. While the Conservative party came down by the very strength of their majority and shaped the constituencies according to their own sweet will. The present government referred the Bill to a committee consisting of both political parties.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—To my mind it does not make a straw's difference whether the majority is in the committee or whether it is in the House. The majority was carefully preserved in the committee. By the strength of that majority the result which is before parliament was obtained with very slight exceptions indeed. And, therefore, while the government and their party—I know what has been done in my own province—are making statements about the wonderous fairness of the present administration in referring the redistribution to a committee of both parties, we who have followed the course of this Bill right through, know they have not acted in a spirit of fairness but have taken serious advantage in their own favour in the framing of this Bill.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—I did not intend to take any part in the discussion of the Bill now before this House. I would have adhered to that decision were it not for the fact that the hon. leader of the opposition and the hon. gentleman who has resumed his seat directed their remarks so much to that particular district from which I came, namely, Victoria and Haliburton. I may say to hon. gentlemen that in so far as the redistribution of Victoria and Haliburton being somewhat of an unfair one, I agree with them in regard to the disposition of that county, but if they want this House or the country to think that that was being done to gain any political advantage, I must disagree with them in that particular. In the distribution, I know that when it was first laid out by the committee appointed in the House of Commons, Haliburton was to be placed in with the district of Muskoka. I know that the hon. gentleman in the other Chamber who represents that constituency, Colonel Hughes, went before the committee, and on his appeal Haliburton was taken from Muskoka and placed in Victoria county.

Hon. MEMBERS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—It is one of those anomalies that, as the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat has said, you will meet with in any distribution that you undertake through a large district like the Dominion of Canada. Instead of fault-finding and criticising what the government has done in that connection, if the hon. leader of the opposition or the hon. gentleman who has just spoken and who finds such fault with the distribution now made of Victoria and Haliburton can suggest how they could make a better distribution of it, I think it is quite within their province to move a resolution amending it, and if they do I am sure that this House will give it fair consideration and will assist them to make that better distribution, because I know it was not done to gain any political advantage for the Liberal party. I know that it was done on the suggestion and solicitation of Colonel Hughes, and I may say there was a good deal of force in the argument he used when he pointed out that Haliburton was connected with Victoria county judicially and commercially; that there were no railways running through the west into Muskoka and none running to the east into Peterboro. The railway runs north and south. I know there was a great deal of force in his argument along those lines and upon that argument he succeeded in having Haliburton placed in Victoria, which gives the Colonel and his political friends a party advantage there instead of the Liberals. As I said, if these hon. gentlemen, instead of condemning what the government has done in that connection will move a resolution, or point out where they can make a better distribution of this constituency, I am sure they will receive support from this side of the House.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I do not intend to occupy the time of the House at this late hour at any very great length. In the House of Commons we had men who usually, when they rose, were looked upon as members that were put up to talk against time, and I must say that if I could not get through with the different points that my hon. friend has referred to in less time than he has occupied in discussing the matter—because he spoke something like two hours yesterday and an hour to-day—I would be open to the charge of talking against time. I think I ought to be able to deal with the subject in one-half the time he has taken on this very important question.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman must understand that everybody has not his power of condensation.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—If my hon. friend will kindly keep quiet while I have the floor we will get along faster. I hope he will have the courtesy to allow me to say what I wish without interruption. He said in the first place that outside of Ontario there was no complaint with the gerrymander of 1882. I do not know that there was a great deal of cause to complain outside of Ontario. That was the province that was gerrymandered in 1882. There was at that time introduced, forced through and placed on the statute-books of this country one of the most vicious Bills that ever blackened the pages of the legislation of any civilized country.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—A more vicious and contemptible Bill introduced and carried through any House blessed with responsible government, has never been heard of than the Gerrymander Bill of 1882. My hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, was asked recently, I think in the House or outside, whether the Bill of 1882 was looked upon as a fair Bill, and he said yes, it was looked upon as a fair Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, that was not the question that was asked me. The hon. gentleman from de Salaberry asked me if I thought it was a fair Bill. It was not thought so outside.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The hon. gentleman said yes, he thought it was.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I said I thought, speaking numerically, that it was.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Then the Bill of 1882 was patched up and brought forth by a committee of the Conservative party which was appointed by the House; that committee sat from day to day with closed doors, secretly and they pitchforked municipalities from place to place backward and forward in order to hive the Reformers and to diffuse the Tories, so that their vote would tell in every case. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition was, I believe, chairman of that committee.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—He did his work well. He sat with a grim countenance quietly enjoying the manner in which he was placing his opponents in a hole. He referred the other night in his speech to Sir Richard Cartwright. He said that Sir Richard had not been gerrymandered out of Huron; that John McMillan had got the nomination, and that he had to leave Huron on that account. My hon. friend is not well posted on that point. After the Bill was introduced and before it got the second reading in that House, Sir Richard Cartwright was invited to Huron to a convention that was held, and it was there and then the people of Centre Huron tendered Sir Richard Cartwright the nomination for that constituency. After coming back, and after receiving that nomination, while the Bill was under consideration, the committee, of which my hon. friend was chief, and possibly the chairman, went to work and altered Huron by making east, west and south Huron in place of Huron north, west and south. The result was that they divided up Sir Richard Cartwright's constituency so that there was no Centre Huron, and that is the way they cut him out of his seat. My hon. friend knows that is true.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is just exactly what I said in my speech.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I must say I misread that portion ; it was not quoted in the 'Citizen,' and the official report was not available. They went to work and gerrymandered the two Hurons so that there would be a respectable Conservative majority in the east and the west divisions and they hived the Grits in the south where there was over 1,200 majority in one constituency, so that the other constituencies would give a certain majority to the Conservative party. That was not only the case with Huron ; it was the case with every county that could be touched in the whole province. They broke up county boundaries. My hon. friend referred to Mr. McCarthy. He said Mr. McCarthy did not condemn the Act of 1882. If he reads his speech in 1892 he will find that he did condemn it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I made no such statement whatever. I was asked if Dalton McCarthy had taken a certain position, and I told the hon. gentleman from Smith's Falls (Hon. Mr. Frost) I was not aware of the position he took.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The position Dalton McCarthy took in 1882 was this, that county boundaries should not have been broken up. He drew the attention of the House to the fact that members of a municipality were brought in contact with each other in judicial and municipal matters inside of certain boundaries, that is county boundaries, and it was not at all prudent to break up those boundaries in the making of constituencies, and that they should be preserved as far as possible. He went the length of admitting that after the gerrymander Act of 1882, if our party ever came in power they would be justified in gerrymandering. Here is what he said :

> But I agree in what the hon. member for Queen's said, that if they ever get the chance they will be perfectly justified in introducing such a gerrymander as will keep us out so far as they can from political life for 20 years. They will be perfectly justified in doing that. I mean to say, if we continue the system which exists, we cannot expect when the other side get annexation, as they may, that they will do otherwise. Surely it cannot be that we have the right to cut up constituencies in order to gain party advantages and howl at the other side when they get in for doing the same.

They admitted they had done it. They had not only done it in 1882 but they were then doing it by the Bill under the consideration of the House, and he condemned it in the plainest possible terms, declaring that the gerrymanders of 1882 and 1892 would justify the Reform party if they ever got into power in meting out to the hon. gentlemen opposite the dose they meted out to us in 1882. Now, with regard to the Bill that the government has passed in the other House and has now introduced here, the leader of the government proposed a committee. He asked that a certain number should be appointed from each side of the House. The government claimed a majority; they are in a majority in the House, and they certainly were entitled to a majority in the committee ; and after getting that committee they went to work and carved out the constituencies. In some cases suggestions that were made by the other side were accepted. My hon. friend will not deny it with regard to the constituency of Hastings. He knows perfectly well that the gentleman who now sits in the House made a very strong demand in regard to a certain division of Hastings and he got, under a compromise, the very division he asked. I ask my hon. friend, though his memory may not be good enough, if it is not good enough it is a good thing for him, just to cite a single instance in which a suggestion from the Reform side was ever accepted and carried out in the Bill they introduced in 1882 or in the one introduced in 1892 ? Not one.

Hon. David Mills was looked upon as an exceedingly able man, a man who was respected in the House of Commons by Sir John Macdonald and gentlemen on the Conservative side as well as those on the Reform side, and they deliberately went to work to gerrymander him out of his seat, and they accomplished it to a certain extent. For a time, by the action of the returning officer, he was kept out; but under a protest he managed to get his seat. But he was virtually gerrymandered out of his seat. What was my own case. In North Wellington, after I was nominated, in the first Bill that was sent out the division embraced the constituency as it was before. After my nomination, there was a report that the town of Shelbourne was going to be put into North Wellington, and the township of Maryboro put out. I went over to the town of Shelbourne to make some arrangement looking to an election, and when I got there I received a telegram to say that Shelbourne was not going to be put in, it was the township of Wallace, where all the Wallace lambs live, and they were going to be put into North Wellington. I made up my mind I would go home and enjoy the comforts of my own house until such times as they settled the whole question, because I had no sooner gone to one place to make an arrangement for the election and formed committees than I got word, that place was not going to be in North Wellington at all. The result was that they put in the township of Wallace. The township of Wallace is a very strong Orange township. The gentleman who sat for the county of Wellington before I did, Mr. Drew, had gerrymandered the riding in order, if possible, to beat me. He had the township of Maryboro which gave some 52 of a majority, put into Centre Wellington, and put the township of Wallace into North Wellington that belonged to the county of Perth, and which gave 198 Conservatives, in order to defeat me. I had the honour of representing three counties for 18 years. I represented the county of Dufferin because there was part of my riding in that county and I represented the north portion of the county of Wellington and aiso the north portion of the county of Perth. The fact of the matter is Sir John Thompson paid me a compliment one day referring to his visit to Western Ontario; he said it was a most singular incident in his experience while he was west, that wherever he spent his day or wherever he went to bed, in the morning when he woke up he was in North Wellington. Well, he might easily do that because it ran from 75 to 85 miles east and west and was about 15 miles wide. That was the shape of North Wellington. It was so arranged in order to defeat me. They did not accomplish it, and why did they not accomplish it ?

I will make a confession, why it is that I am here and why it was I was in the House of Commons. There is a very strong Catholic vote in North Wellington, some of them voted Conservative and some voted Reform. After I was nominated the township of Wallace, which was a strong Orange township, was put into North Wellington to beat me. When my Catholic friends realized what was done, and the purpose for which it was done, I got a united vote and I was elected. That was the reason why I carried that constituency and I have to say to their credit they always stood by me from that time to the time I was defeated by a majority of 31. But the constituency was badly gerrymandered. Then take South Grey that belonged to my dear friend who was a member of this House up to a few days ago. A gerrymander was made in South Grey clearly for the purpose of beating him. They took the township of Artemesia—I think it was out of Dr. Sproule's riding—and they put it into South Grey; after that Dr. Sproule did not live in his riding at all but lived in Dr. Landerkin's riding. But they did not succeed. The doctor was a very popular man and well liked and he managed to carry his riding just the same as I managed to carry mine. So you can go to the Bruces and the Hurons, every single county in western Ontario was gerrymandered in the most villainous shape in order to secure the return of the Constrvative party and to keep the Reform party out of power, and well my hon. friend that sits as leader of this opposition knows it. He enjoyed the hours he put in on that committee ; there never was a sweeter morsel passed under his tongue than when he sat from day to day gerrymandering these constituencies. Yes, you did, and you know you did it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman should take his medicine like a man.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order the hon. gentleman has no right to address another gentleman here personally.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not object; let him blow away.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—If I have transgressed any rule of this House I apologize. I am a little excited over this matter. I was under that gerrymander for eighteen years; I suffered the consequences of that villainous Act, and if I do at this moment feel a little irritated at the treatment that was meted out to us, it is not very much wonder. My hon. friend who spoke last said something with regard to double constituencies and he found fault that the government had not divided up all these double constituencies and made of them single constituencies. Well, my hon. friend's party in 1882 set us a very poor example in that regard. They did not reduce the number of double constituencies. The present government have reduced the number and the probabilities are if they do as well again in the next readjustment—and I have not the slightest doubt they will be there to do it—I think possibly they will be able to part with the last vestige of double constituencies. He also said something with regard to the discrepancy in representation as between urban constituencies, when compared with city constituencies, and he instanced the city of Toronto. My hon. friend ought to remember that in 1882 his party gave to West Toronto two members, and West Toronto had at that time 73,000. Why did not they give it more than two members if they were so anxious, when Toronto was a Conservative city and would return members to support the government? Why was it they only gave it two members in place of three, because it was entitled under the unit of representation to three members? The same may be said, I dare say, with regard to the city of Montreal. These two large cities supply quite a number of men that are elected for different rural constituencies, although they live in the city. Why did not our friends of the opposition give the cities full representation, while they gave in some cases over representation to rural districts? He has drawn attention to the counties of Brant and Victoria. He said Victoria had about the same number of population as the county of Brant and got only one member while Brant got two. Well, there must necessarily be some anomalies of that kind if you keep within county boundaries. Every county cannot have, proportionate to its population, the same representation. Possibly in the next readjustment the county of Victoria may be peopled to a greater extent than it is now. There are some counties which naturally have a little more population than others and I do not think there was any attempt whatever in the Bill before the House of doing any injustice to Victoria? The representative of that county in the other House advocated a change with regard to that county and the change he did advocate was made, so I think he has nothing to complain of. Then he talks of the county of Brant. The county of Brant has been gerrymandered. I am glad to say the county of Brant is going to be relieved from the conditions of things that has existed there.

My hon. friend the leader of the opposition will not deny that in his Bill of 1882, because I think I am quite right in calling it his Bill, he gerrymandered Hon. William Paterson so as to beat him if there was a possibility of doing so. They gerrymandered that riding to get if possible a Conservative elected in place of Mr. Paterson, but Mr. Paterson was so strong and popular that the people of Brant elected him and he sat up to 1896 for the county of Brant. My hon. friend drew the attention of the House to a statement made by Hon. Mr. Mills, with regard to what he thought would be a proper interpretation of the Confederation Act. He thought it was quite right, and would have been the proper way to redistribute, by leaving it to a committee of judges. He thought some authority constituted under the provisions of the Act for redistribution was the proper method by which redistribution should take place, I remember quite well that he made that argument. Dalton McCarthy who was there did not quite agree with him with regard to that. He thought the power was vested in parliament. Sir John Macdonald whom I am sure my hon. friend will admit was a very great constitutional lawyer, did not agree in 1882 with the view held by Mr. Mills, nor did he agree in the year 1892 with the view held by Mr. Mills. The best evidence of that fact is that he sanctioned the introduction of the gerrymander Act of 1882 and sanctioned the introduction and passage of the Bill of 1892. Sir John Thompson had charge of the Bill in 1892. My hon. friend will admit that Sir John Thompson was recognized as an able constitutional lawyer, yet he sanctioned the passage of those Bills. In the face of all that my hon. friend is not paying any great compliment to the constitutional lawyers on his side of the House who differed from Mr. Mills. It suits him now to bring up the views of Mr. Mills and speak approvingly of appointing a committee of judges. I was rather amused at my hon. friend making that suggestion and taking that stand. It was only a few nights ago that I heard him making a very determined tirade against the Ontario government for having appointed a commission of two judges to investigate a political matter.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend is not stating my position right. I said distinctly that I was opposed to submitting it to a commission of judges. What I said was it should have been submitted to a commission.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—My hon. friend may possibly claim the gift of creeping out of a difficulty, but I clearly understood him to mean that he rather agreed with the view taken by Mr. Mills that it should be referred to a commission of judges.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—He read Mr. Mills' opinion and cited it in support of the principles that instead of the present government making the redistribution by the Bill before the House it should be made by a commission, and Mr. Mills said that it was to be a commissison of judges. My hon. friend found no fault with the commission that Mr. Mills proposed. He virtually acquiesced, and would be glad to accept a commission of judges.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am prepared to submit the proof that I did not say so.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I will undertake to show why it would not be right, under present conditions, to refer it to a commission of judges.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Surely my hon. friend will not insist on saying that I suggested it should be submitted to a commission of judges? I stake my reputation in this House that I made my position clear that I did not approve of a commission of judges, and the official report will show it.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I accept the hon. gentleman's statement. Now the reason why it would not be fair or right to leave it to a commission of judges or any other commission is this: What would such a commission be called upon to do? They would be called upon to equalize the population of each of the ridings as nearly as possible. That would be the leading feature of their redistribution. I ask would it be fair in the gerrymandered condition of Ontario—gerrymandered under the Bill of 1882, gerrymandered under the Bill of 1892—to now ask a commission merely to readjust the number of population in each riding, leaving the gerrymandered ridings as they are? Would that be fair? No. The present government are justified in undoing that villainous Act first, and then afterwards, if our hon. friends choose to ask, that it be left to a commission of judges, or a commission of any other honourable men who will discharge their duties fairly and faithfully, I have not the slightest doubt but we would consent. It would be unfair, however, to consent to a commission now until we undo what was done, and put things back to where they were at first. That is the proper thing for the government to do, and that is what they are doing by this Bill. It is said that there is a gerrymander in this Bill. If there is, the slightest vestige of gerrymander in the Bill for the purpose of beating our opponents, I can only say the members appointed to frame the Bill are the poorest kind of men to make a gerrymander. They ought to have gone to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition and got a lesson, for they have made a very poor fist of it. To prove that the Act of 1892 was a gerrymander, I will read to the House an extract from the Toronto 'Telegram,' which is looked upon as a Conservative paper.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Here is what it said :

A twenty-one years' trial of the gerrymander of 1882 has given this journal no cause to regret its condemnation of that iniquity the time of its origin.

It says again :

The gerrymander of 1882 brutalized the politics of this country without at any time marking the difference between success and failure, and embittered the partisan differences of friends and fellow-countrymen with all the hatred of blood fueds.

Now, this quotation is from the Toronto 'Telegram.' There is another paper which my hon. friend the leader of the opposition likes to read, and that is the Toronto 'News.' An article in the Toronto 'News' reads as follows :—

The gerrymander of 1882 must take rank as one of the meanest episodes in Canadian political history. It is something of which every Canadian should be thoroughly ashamed. The worst thing about it was that the official heads of the Conservative party felt that they could afford to be open in breaking the rule of fair fighting and the principle of majority rule. The Conservative party supported them in their meanness. Sharp practice was openly made a party creed.

That is what the Toronto 'News' and the Toronto 'Telegram' say.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—A Tory paper.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Yes, a Tory paper.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Is the hon. gentleman sure ?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Yes. Here is what Mr. Bennett, M.P., for North Simcoe stated in 1892, when that measure was before the House of Commons. He moved that Simcoe be placed in its former position, and said :

This is a glaring instance of a wrong that should be rectified. Not only should the present standing of the riding be considered, but when a wrong has been done, it should be rectified ; and in this case there was a grevious wrong, so grevious that no one in this House rose to defend the measure when it was attacked in 1882.

That is what Mr. Bennett, of North Simcoe, said at page 4323 of 'Hansard.' In the face of these statements by Mr. Bennett, whom everybody knows is a consistent Conservative, in face of the statements made by Mr. McCarthy in 1892 in the discussion on the same Bill, a paragraph of which I have read to the House—and if I were to go on I could read other paragraphs—in the face of these statements and the statements of the 'News' of Toronto, which I know my hon. friend the leader of the opposition reads, if any person were to say the redistribution of 1882 was not a gerrymander, that it was a fairly decent Bill, he certainly should be ashamed of himself, because here are statements of men that were in the House, associated with the Conservative party at the time, who declared that the gerrymander of 1882 was a disgrace to the Conservative party, and that it should be undone and he was prepared to move that it should be rectified. Then again it was said by my hon. friend that Sir John Macdonald did commit himself absolutely to the principle of county boundaries. I have before me a lengthy extract of what Sir John Macdonald said in 1872 on the question of county boundaries, when it was proposed to readjust that year, and he adheres very strictly and very forcibly to county boundaries and gives very strong argument why county boundaries should be adhered to. He proceeds to state that men are first elected as municipal councillors, and after that as reeves and after that, if they are looked upon as men of good ability, they are made warden of the county. The people get to know them, are brought in contact with them through their municipal organizations and eventually they select them to be their representatives in the local house and House of Commons. He pointed out the advantages of the formation of county boundaries and the municipal organization with regard to the choice of members in that way, and he said under those conditions it was wrong to break up county boundaries. He adhered very strictly to county boundaries in 1872, but when it came to 1882, when party exigencies necessitated departing from county boundaries, there was no hesitation whatever from departing from that principle. There are some county boundaries in the province of Ontario that under the gerrymander Act had no representation at all : that is they were not recognized as counties. Take the county of Dufferin. That county was formed many years ago by an Act of the Ontario legislature and given a representative in the local house. It has never had a representative in parliament yet as a matter of fact. Part of it was left to Dr. Sproule to give him a good majority. Two townships of it were left with me, and they always rolled up about 200 to 250 of a majority against me, and they were left there for that purpose. Another township was left with my esteemed friend from Centre Wellington, Mr. Semple, who had a seat in the House of Commons, the township of East Garafraxa, and another corporation, and they rolled up 460 of a majority against him last time he ran and succeeded in defeating him. They were left in that constituency for that purpose, and the reason why Dufferin got no representative is that it did yeoman service to the Conservative party, where it was placed, and was left there for that purpose. I could cite many instances as flagrant as that to show the result of the measure passed in 1882. I am glad that the province is getting rid of the effect of that gerrymander. I am glad to think that if there is any one thing that the Reform party deserves credit for more than another it is the undoing of that villainous Act that was passed for the purpose of choking, throttling and killing off the Reformers in Ontario and giving the representation as far as possible to the Conservative party. It contributed largely to keep them in power. When the late Hon. Thomas White, a very decent man, an able man, a credit to the Conservative party, could not get a seat in Hamilton he ran in Montreal and could not get a seat there. They brought him up to Cardwell, a constituency which was created for the purpose of providing a seat for John Hillyard Cameron. It elected Cameron first; then it elected White, when they could not find a seat elsewhere for him, and then it elected his son and now it is represented by another Conservative. That will be wiped out and it will be fused into the different counties to which it belongs. Part of it belongs to Peel and part of it to Simcoe and part to Grey and a portion to Wellington. These different sections will each get the portion that belongs to them, and we shall hear no more of the county of Cardwell which should never have had an existence. It was brought forth in sin and created in iniquity.

Some hon. MEMBERS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—At this late hour, I do not wish further to detain the House, but I could not sit quietly in my seat and permit my hon. friend to give us the lengthy speech which he did with regard to the peculiarities of that Act in trying to justify it. I am sorry I was not in my seat when the hon. leader of the opposition spoke. I should like to have heard his speech, because had I done so, the probabilities are that I might have been able to make a more extended reply. I respect the hon. gentleman personally. He is an old and venerable member of this House, but while personally he is everything that we could like and respect, as a politician he has always shown himself equal to anything that is necessary to keep the Tory party in power and when a gerrymander was wanted he was willing to dip far enough down in the gutter of political iniquity to keep them there. He was always willing to do that. In the face of the Bill before the House, which I earnestly hope will become law, we shall have no more gerrymander and I hope the pages of the statutes of this country will never again record a Bill drafted solely and simply for the purpose of beheading political opponents as the Bill of 1882 was and passed into law. It accomplished a great deal for the party, it kept them in power for years. They finally reached the end of their existence. I do not say they will never return to power, but I venture to say that if they did they would come back a great deal stronger if that gerrymander had not been removed. Take Mr. Sutherland, who represents one of the Oxfords. What was done in his case? He had fifteen hundred of a majority, but in order to change North Perth so that it would elect a Conservative, they took out the township of North East Hope that gave 300 of a majority Reform, and they put it into Mr. Sutherland's constituency to make his majority 2,000, and they took another township in the south that gave a substantial Conservative majority and put it in the north part in order to create a majority for the Conservative member. That was the way it was done all around to form constituencies that would elect supporters and to hive the Grits so that their votes would not tell. That was the object of the Bill and it pretty well carried out the object in view. I could call attention to many other ridings which were as badly gerrymandered. Take the county of Bruce, as another case. My hon. friend knows that North Bruce elected a friend of his own, Mr. McNeil, but it got so tight for him that he was afraid of his election, and what did the government do ? They took the village of Port Elgin out of the township of Saugeen though is was about the middle of the township and while Saugeen was in West Bruce the village of Port Elgin was put into North Bruce though there was not an inch of the village of Port Elgin within three or four miles of North Bruce. But why was it taken off ? Because it gave 64 or 65 majority to the Conservatives, and they attached it to North Bruce to elect Mr. McNeil. There never was a more scandalous piece of political trickery practiced than putting the village of Port Elgin into North Bruce. Will my hon. friend deny that it is in the centre of Saugeen township ? Will he dare to say that it is connected with North Bruce at all ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, he will not.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—There is not an acre of it that touches North Bruce in any shape or form. It is away on the coast of Lake Huron and was taken out of the centre of the township of Saugeen and put in there to elect Mr. McNeil. Then in West Bruce they hived the Grits. They made a constituency there that gave 1,200 to 1,500 of a Reform majority, and in East Bruce and North Bruce they so diffused the Tories that there was a fair hope that they would carry both ridings. They did not carry them in the first place. Mr. Wells carried it after the gerrymander of 1882 by a small majority, and at the next election it was carried by our late lamented friend, Mr. Cargill, who was an exceedingly decent man. He carried it and held it up until his death.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He was beaten once.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—It was so fixed that it gave a small Conservative majority. I can say that I do not think there was a finer man in politics than Mr. Cargill, and if my hon. friends elect men of the same stamp as Mr. Cargill, they will be a credit to their party. He was an exceedingly fine character. There is no doubt that his popularity contributed to his election in that riding, but the riding was gerrymandered nevertheless, and there was a gerrymander in all these districts, north, south, east and west. It was gerrymandered all over, but now I am glad to think that we are going to get rid of it. I feel for the men who were under the heels of the gerrymander. I was in that position for eighteen years. Every time I was elected I had a protest to fight. I had a protest at the first election I contested, and the protest was carried to the Supreme Court of Canada in the hope that they would unseat me, and possibly get the riding. I also had a protest on the occasion of the second and third elections, and I got so accustomed to that sort of thing that I took them as a matter of course. I knew the dose I had to take. 'You have got the riding but you have got to fight it out in court.' Although I had so many protests and recounts, and I had them all the time, they never counted me out, nor did they legally put me out. I held the seat for eighteen years, although it was one of the worst gerrymandered ridings in Ontario, and I held it largely, I am frank enough to confess, by the unanimous support of my Catholic friends in the township of Wallace, owing to their being put into the riding. I suffered so much by the gerrymander of 1892 that I could not sit still in this debate without giving my experience.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not catch the figures that the hon. gentleman gave in reference to the redistribution of Huron.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Huron formerly consisted of North, Centre and South Huron before 1882.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is not what I asked.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I have not got the population.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then I misunderstood the hon. gentleman. I want to congratulate him on the temper he has displayed, because it is interesting and reminds me of old times. I am glad he has got rid of his bile ; he will sleep the better for it. I shall call his attention to the population of the Huron ridings. What I stated in answer to the hon. gentlemen from de Salaberry, when he asked the question as to the fairness of the redistribution in 1882, was that it was based upon population as nearly as possible, irrespective of boundary lines. I remember the question was put to me with reference to the late Dalton McCarthy. The question was why did Mr. McCarthy make the statement he did in reference to it. My answer was that I did not know, that I regretted he was not here to answer for himself ; that I had no doubt he changed his mind on that as he did on the national policy, of which he had been one of its most prominent supporters. Now, in reference to that fearfully iniquitous act of placing the village of Elgin in one of the Bruces, the hon. gentleman is quite right ; we did place it there, but on whose motion ? On the motion of Hon. William Paterson, the present Minister of Customs, and when that question was before the House, Mr. Paterson moved that the village of Elgin be attached to the north riding, and Sir John Macdonald accepted the motion against my advice at the time. He said, as Mr. Paterson has proposed it, let him have it, and it was added. So that if there is any particular iniquity in it, the blame must rest with the party who made the motion and not so much with those who accepted it. I shall not go into the question of double constituencies. I did not deal with that in my speech. I pointed out, however, that the government have not adhered to the principle of county boundaries in all cases, and instanced Carleton and Russell. The population of the Hurons in the redistribution of 1882 was as follows : 21,512 ; 21,720 ; 21,191.

Now, that is the iniquitous redistribution. Of course the change of the names made no difference, so far as the county itself was concerned, and that was the only ground on which the hon. gentleman condemned it. If the hon. gentleman looks at the county of Wellington, he will find that nearly the same conditions exist. One riding is 26,024, another 26,814, and the other 25,400. There is the great iniquity so far as population is concerned, and population was the basis upon which that redistribution took place. The hon. gentleman has given me credit for more than I am entitled to. I was not chairman of any committee whatever in reference to the Redistribution Bill, nor did I draft it. I gave information when it was asked of me. If the hon. gentleman will look at the population of the riding he will find my statement is correct. He says, the division of Wellington was the greatest iniquity ever perpetrated in the civilized world ; the fact that one riding in Wellington returned the hon. gentleman for 18 years after this redistribution is the best possible evidence of its iniquitous character.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I rise to congratulate the hon. member from Wellington on the stand he has taken on this important measure. He has combatted the argument of the leader of the opposition in regard to the gerrymanders of 1882 and 1892. The hon. leader of the opposition did his best in the absence of the hon. gentleman from Wellington to induce the House to believe that there was nothing more fair in the history of Canada than the Redistribution Bill of 1882. I, as a young Canadian, and a young fighter on the political platform of this country, know that if there was one thing we had to denounce against the late government of this country it was that very Act which called for the condemnation of more than half the electorate in the illustrious convention of the Liberal party in 1893. It was the backbone of our fight against the Conservative party, and when I heard the leader of the opposition after 40 years experience in the government of this country, tell the House that the Act of 1882 was the fairest measure of redistribution that any government could frame, I asked myself what could he mean. Does the hon. gentleman ignore the fights we of the Liberal party have had to sustain for 20 years ? Does he ignore the injustice perpetrated through the administration of that Act when he stands here 20 years after that infamous Act was passed and tells this country that it was a fair Bill ? I congratulate the hon. member from Wellington on being in a position to contradict his statement and lay before the country the real skeleton of that measure, a skeleton that is a disgrace to the statute-book of Canada. The hon gentleman asked how is it this government under the Liberal flag has not had courage enough to do as its predecessors did ? We had not the courage but we have a better sense of justice than they had in days gone by and have given the Conservative party a fair opportunity to secure their share of representation in parliament—more than they are entitled to according to precedent. I congratulate the hon. gentleman from Wellington on having given to this House and the country the facts that he has laid before us to-night. He could have gone further if he was acquainted with the gerrymander in Quebec where it wiped out two Liberals in Vercheres and Chambly and two Liberals in Laprairie and Iberville, and left two Conservatives in Soulanges and Vaudreuil with only 10,000 and 11,000 in either county. Why did not the hon. leader of the opposition refer to these facts ? This government is entitled to the gratitude of the country. It has given a Redistribution Bill which, as far as human skill can do it, does justice to all, and I have risen simply to congratulate the hon. member from Wellington on his remarks which I fully endorse. I hope they will tell on the public opinion of the country.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I crave the indulgence of the House to put myself right with the hon. gentleman from Wellington.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—To set him right.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend quoted me as having endorsed the expression by Mr. Mills in 1892 with regard to submitting this redistribution to a commission of judges. So far from endorsing that, I pointed out distinctly that in England no judges were put on the commission at all. I further stated the matter was brought up in the other House during the present session by the hon. gentleman from Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), but not pressed to a vote, the object of bringing it up being to call the Liberal party back to their position in 1892. But it was not pressed to a vote, because the Liberal-Conservative party entirely disapproved of bringing judges into such matters. That was my own view and I believe it to be the view of a large majority of the people of this country. I can forgive my hon. friend for not hearing me distinctly, but I can scarcely excuse him for persisting in saying that I made the statement which he wrongly attributed to me for a very considerable time, and not only that but declining to allow me the privilege which we always accord to each other in making a correction at the time. I rose for that purpose and my hon. friend persisted in speaking. I thought he might have, and should have according to the usages of this House, allowed me to make the correction.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Cobourg)—I feel compelled to make a few observations on the subject now before the House, seeing the course that has been pursued by those who are opposed to the Bill. We are, under the British North America Act, section 51, called upon to perform a responsible constitutional duty. This parliament is called upon to pass a readjustment Bill. I have never yet had the honour of considering and discussing a readjustment Bill proper. I have had the honour of discussing what I call properly redistribution Bills, and I distinguish between a redistribution Bill in its technical sense, and a readjustment Bill. In His Excellency's speech, with which he opened the fourth session of the eighth parliament of the Dominion of Canada, we were promised a Redistribution Bill, and it was hinted at that time that it would be a gerrymander Bill. I took occasion at that time to say that I hoped it would be nothing of the kind, and I am very glad to find that the Bill now before us is not amenable to that charge. I took occasion in 1900 to say that the fair fame of Canada could not stand another gerrymander Bill, that we had had one in 1882, and had that supplemented by another in 1892 ; therefore I hoped that we should never again have to consider another gerrymander Bill. I do not call the Bill before the House a gerrymander Bill. I think it is a fair and reasonable Bill. I have not a great deal of fault to find with the leader of the opposition in his discussion of this question, for I think it was more moderate than his speeches in some former discussions ; at the same time the drift of his observations was in condemnation of the Bill. My hon. friend from Marshfield said he thought that in 1882 parliament had not gone very deeply into the question. My opinion is that they went very deeply into the question. They went so deeply that it left a stain on the fair fame of Canada from that time to the present, and I hope that after this Bill has been passed into law, much of the wrong that was then done, especially to the province of Ontario, will be rectified, and that hereafter no attempt will be made such as that which was perpetrated in 1882. My object in speaking just now is to let our friends and opponents from other provinces know somewhat of the terrible manner in which Ontario was treated in 1882. You recollect that in the general election of 1878, owing to several circumstances, the hard times, and the promise of enrichment of every one by the national policy, the province of Ontario at that time, although largely Liberal returned only twenty-three Liberals out of eighty-eight members. I charge the Conservative party at that time, in 1882, when the time came to readjust the representation, with having taking advantage of the vote cast under that abnormal state of things in the province of Ontario, to make it a normal vote, and the way they did it was by the Act of 1882. That Act was to all intents and purposes, a gerrymander Act of the very worst character. The other provinces have never heard, as they have heard to-night from the hon. gentleman from Wellington, what a terrible iniquity was perpetrated on the province of Ontario at that time, and it is no use denying it, because it is a fact that the Liberal party in Ontario have from that hour to the present, been largely in political bondage. But I am very glad to see that the present Bill. if it has anything of a gerrymander about it, is un-gerrymandering the infamous gerrymander that was done by the Act of 1882 and supplemented by the Act of 1892. It will be to the Liberals of the province of Ontario a proclamation of emancipation from the political thraldom which that Act placed them under, and under which they have been at a disadvantage for the long period of twenty years. I rejoice to know that the hour of their deliverence has come.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Cobourg)—Let us for a moment institute a comparison between the Bill of 1882, and the Bill that is now before us. This Bill was referred to a committee of members from both sides of the House, and considered day in and day out, week in and week out, in open session. Every member had the privilege of going there and stating his grievance and giving his advice. It was all open and above board, and the Bill was brought down to the House of Commons and thoroughly discussed there. I claim that this Bill, as compared with the Bill of 1882, is fairness itself. I think now, as I have always thought, that a readjustment Bill should be as fair to one party as to another, that each party should stand on an equal ground—a fair field and let the best man win. Now, how was the gerrymander of 1882, conceived and brought forth ? We have had the story told. I had the pleasant duty in 1900 of referring to it. Hon. gentlemen will not be surprised, and I do not think the expression too strong, to be told that it was conceived in political iniquity. I quote from a letter written by John Hague, a respectable citizen of Montreal, published in the Montreal 'Herald' of the 9th July, 1901, and reproduced in the 'Globe' of the 10th July of the same year. He has told the history of that gerrymander, and his statement has never yet been denied. I have waited since 1901 for some person on the Conservative side of the House to contradict the statements in that letter, and up to this hour this statement stands absolutely uncontradicted :

On September 15, 1881, I received a notice from a member of the Senate, who represented the government of Sir John Macdonald in Toronto, asking me to call upon him at a certain hour. I was informed that in compliance with the constitution the government proposed to rearrange the constituencies of Ontario. I was told that the work of preparing a chart showing the boundaries proposed to be established had been entrusted to the officers of the Department of the Interior, of which Sir John held the portfolio, but they had failed to draft a workable plan. I was asked if I would undertake to construct a chart according to the ideas and suggestions of the speaker. On hearing my assurance that I felt quite equal to such a task, the senator proceeded to say that he wished a chart made showing the existing boundaries of the electoral districts, the voting strength of each of them, and majority at the last election. He wished me to make this chart quite large and to exhibit the statistics desired on small tickets, which were to be pasted over each district, the one fixed on a place which returned a Liberal member, to be pink, and the one over a district which had chosen a Conservative, to be blue. These tickets were prepared by Williams, Sleith & McMillan, printers, Toronto. They were the same size as a street car ticket. I strongly oposed this plan, as likely to prove cumbrous and very difficult to operate from in altering the boundaries, but was induced to put the plan to the test.

The next question was where was the work to be done. It was represented as one demanding the greatest secrecy ; there must be no risk of the chart being seen by any outsider. After various suggestions had been made and suggested, I offered to do the work in my own house, where I would give up my study to the service of the government, and use the help of some members of my family in filling in the tickets and other mechanical work. This was agreed to. I secured an electoral map about 18 inches by 12, and raised all the lines up, so as to be a reproduction on a large scale, the chart I made being five and a half feet by four feet. After most tedious work, extending over several weeks, for I only devoted my evenings to it, the chart with its mass of pink and blue tickets was finished, and a pretty foolish affair it was, as I had predicted. Ontario, so treated, looked like some fabulous animal, covered with loose scales, blue and pink, which fluttered like so many tiny wings. The thing was condemned, and the author of it was puzzled. He saw it was impossible to rearrange the electoral districts from such a chart, and invited me to advise as to the best way of proceeding.

Now, here is what the government desired:

I was informed that what the government wished to effect was a rearrangement of the electoral districts so far as possible, recognizing a common unit of representation. This, however, was to be made sufficiently elastic to allow the grouping of different sections of the district, so as to detach Conservative voters from places where they were in excess for the needs for a majority, and the attachment of such voters to districts where the new accession would turn the scale at an election in favour of a Conservative candidate, where a Liberal one had hitherto been returned. Electoral districts which were hopelessly Liberal, were, if possible, to be abolished——

I invite your attention to that clause, that where the constituency was hopelessly Liberal the object of the government was, he says, to abolish it. Can you imagine anything more iniquitous than that ?

—or the constituencies so arranged as to put the Liberal voters altogether in one district, especially where they could be drawn away from a district where they menaced the Conservative candidate. The process was afterwards called 'hiving,' which is quite appropriate, though while the work was being done for the Act of 1882 this word was never used. After making a colossal chart, I took each electoral district and its surroundings in hand, and wrote upon each the number polled for each party at the two previous elections, the total number of electors, with the majority in each case. I coloured each district to show at a glance its political complexion. I then made a thorough study of the official returns of the two last elections, and took out hundreds of statistics for comparison and readjustment. Some of the districts were most difficult to alter so as to secure the results desired. It was said the configuration of some of these represented nothing on earth, in the heavens or the waters under the heavens. Quite true ; they simply represented an effort to fix the boundaries of electoral districts according to two rules ; first, on the principle of equal representation to equal numbers of voters ; second, on the principle that electoral districts should be arranged to serve the interests of the party in power when they are rearranged. These rules do not work well together, hence the highly eccentric shapes of some of the districts on the chart I have constructed. When nearly complete it was taken down to Ottawa.

Done with Secrecy.

I was assigned a room close to that of the Minister of the Interior. Into that room I was instructed to prohibit the entrance of any one even a cabinet minister, unless brought in by the senator. I remember the petty rage of one minister to whom I refused admission. One day a senator, the Minister of Inland Revenue, came in and saw the chart, upon whic he made no comment. His silence elicted the remark: 'I am surprised at a straight laced fellow like you being in such company,' to which he gave his usual placid smile. One by one sevaral members were consulted as to the changes made in their districts. When the final touch was put to my chart, it was shown to Sir John Macdonald. After closely examining the work done on the boundaries, the statistics written on the face of the map, and the schedule I wrote on its side, showing the result of the changes, Sir John exclaimed 'that takes the load off my shoulders.' The Gerrymander Act, as it was called, was simply the chart I had constructed, expressed in legal language.

That is the way the Conservative party readjusted the representation at that time. How do hon. gentlemen like such a system of representation ? Do you think that was the way that a readjustment of the representation should be made ? Just imagine two or three of the public men of England sitting down in dark conclave and concocting a scheme to so readjust the political constituencies of the United Kingdom that they could defeat their opponents in the electoral battle. My view of that is, so long as that Bill is remembered so long will it be a blot on the Conservative name, and I am sorry, for I have great respect for the Conservative party, and I think they not only made a fatal mistake at that time but they committed a great political outrage. My friend from Marshfield may not have known about this. If he had I am sure that he would have taken good care not to have provoked this discussion to-night, and what surprised me more than all was that when this Bill was to be read a second time any remarks should be made upon it that would of necessity recall the Act of 1882 and the Act of 1892 in comparison with this Bill. I ask you hon. gentlemen what you think of that transaction? Do you call that a proper manner of readjusting the constituencies chiefly affecting the porvince of Ontario. I shall not detain the House by any further reference to the gerrymander, but the remarks of the hon. leader of the opposition compelled me to remind him of some of the incidents connected with the history of that notorious measure.

There was a Liberal member at that time for North Lanark ; an old time Liberal seat, and so the township of Fitzroy and Torbolton were taken from Carleton and added to North Lanark ; but on investigation it was thought that that majority would not be sufficient to upset the Liberal majority in North Lanark so that the township of Torbolton was left in Carleton and the large township of Huntley was taken from Carleton and added to North Lanark. The result was that North Lanark from being an old Liberal seat was changed to a Conservative constituency, and has elected no Liberal candidate since 1882. There is a clear and positive case of the effect of the gerrymander. Now, I call the attention of this House to one or two more instances.

The member then and now for South Lanark was worried by the fact that Senator Frost was a strong and powerful man in the town of Smith's Falls, and a stumbling block in his road ; so the town of Smith's Falls was thrown into the riding of North Leeds and Grenville and out of the county of Lanark in order to relieve the member for South Lanark from Mr. Frost's opposition. The riding of North Leeds and Grenville into which Smith's Falls was thrown was overwhelmingly Conservative, but in the election of 1896, Mr. Frost succeeded in carrying it with the small majlority of 9. It has of course been Conservative in every other election and is now Conservative.

Then, there was the riding of Brockville which was a doubtful riding and instead of taking the townships of Yonge and Escott which lie side by side with the riding of Brockville, an Orange Tory township to the north called Kitley was annexed to the Brockville riding and made the riding overwhelmingly Conservative. As there were few seats in Eastern Ontario at that time which could be carried by the Liberals, these three pieces of gerrymandering extinguished their chances completely.

Next they took up the counties of York and Ontario. From South Ontario was taken the township of Pickering, from North Ontario the Reform township of Uxbridge and the town of Uxbridge ; from the riding of North York was taken the township of Whitchurch, a strong Reform township, and from the riding of East York was taken the the Reform town of Stouffville, and these were all put together in the riding called West Ontario with the avowed object of making a Liberal hive of West Ontario and making North and South Ontario, and North and East York Conservative. There was originally a Liberal majority in all four ridings. This gerrymander was intended to make four out of five Conservative, by a small majority, and to make one overwhelming Liberal riding. In addition to that Conservative townships were taken from Muskoka and added to the north riding of Ontario, until a riding was formed which resembled nothing in the heavens above the earth beneath or the waters under the earth. In fact, at that time I happened to be in the town of Whitby and the editor of a paper wanted to know what the Conservatives had done with North Ontario, and they said they thought Sir John had made a fishing pole of it to fish in the waters of the back lakes. It was a mathematical line, it had length without breadth or thickness. It remains that way to this day. I hope the effect of this Bill will undo some of the iniquity done to those places I have mentioned. It is one thing to gerrymander, and it is a wrong thing ; it is another and quite a different and proper thing to ungerrymander, and if this Bill fails to do that I think it will fall far short of what it should do. In the county of Grey, Dr. Landerkin's riding was gerrymandered by the township of Artemesia being taken out of the heart of East Grey and added to South Grey with the intention of making South Grey Conservative. The gerrymander failed of its effect until the election of 1900. Dr. Landerkin, with whom I had a life long acquaintance ever since he was at college, has gone to his rest, but I think I am not travelling beyond my privilege to say that he was in his riding as well as in the whole country, deservedly popular, and I do not think any other man in that county could in the face of that terrible gerrymander have carried that riding. Although it took eighteen or twenty years to get in its work, the gerrymander of Dr. Landerkin's riding did its work at last. We had the honour of his presence in this House as some proof of the gerrymander. Take the county of Bruce, which was a county with an immense Liberal majority ; the riding of West Bruce was formed with about 1,000 Liberal majority, leaving North Bruce and South Bruce with small Conservative majorities of twenty-nine and seventy-five respectively; so that a county with a Reform majority of more than 800 elected two Conservatives to one Liberal. Then the county of Middlesex was added to by taking townships off other counties, and although in the county of Middlesex there was an immense Liberal majority, the county was so divided as to be thought to ensure three Conservative seats to one Liberal by throwing all the Liberal strength into a riding known as South Middlesex. From Mr. Mills' riding of Bothwell were taken the townships of Howard and Orford which were thrown into West Elgin, so that West Elgin which was already Liberal should become a Liberal hive, and Bothwell should become a Conservative constituency. Thanks to this gerrymander, Mr. Clancy, is now the member for Bothwell. Then, in the county of Oxford, an overwhelming Liberal county, the township of Dereham, the only Conservative township in Oxford, was added to Mr. John Charlton's riding. The town of Simcoe, a Conservative town, was taken off his riding, and put in South Norfolk, so as to ensure Col. Tisdale's election—torn away from their municipal boundaries and attached to other counties, torn from their roots and transplanted into foreign and uncongenial soil. Then, from the county of Perth were taken the Liberal townships of North Easthope and South Easthope, and these two townships lying beside the city of Stratford were thrown into the overwhelmingly Reform riding of North Oxford, and voted with Woodstock a town twenty miles away. The net result of the change of the Easthopes was to make both Perths Conservative, and North Oxford more overwhelmingly Liberal than before. Then in the county of Wellington, the ridings were so formed that although there was a clear Liberal majority in the county, two out of the three seats were thought to be sure for the Conservative party. The township of Walace, a Conservative township, being taken from North Perth and added to North Wellington, it was thought that with North Easthope off North Perth the Perths could well spare Wallace, and it would do more good in North Wellington. It did not succeed in defeating Mr. McMullen until the last election on account of his unusual strength and popularity in the riding. I am relating facts, and a sorry tale it is. I am relating facts which reflect discredit upon the authors of that Bill.

Then in the county of Brant, to defeat Hon. Wm. Paterson, the Reform townships of Burford and Oakland, were taken off South Brant and thrown into South Oxford to swell the overwhelming Liberal majority there, and the town of Paris, and the Conservative township of Onandaga were taken off North Brant and thrown into South Brant to further weaken Mr. Paterson. Of course, it did not get its work in as soon as it was expected, because Mr. Paterson as well as Mr. McMullen and some other gentlemen I have mentioned were exceptionally strong men, and they had the unqualified confidence of the electors of their respective ridings, and by tremendous work they were able to hold their ridings until their course was finally stopped by the effect of this gerrymander. Then another Reform hive was made out of North Brant. All the Reform parts of North Brant were left in this hive, and the township of Blenheim was taken from North Oxford, and the big Reform township of Ancaster was taken from South Wentworth and thrown into this hive with the result that South Wentworth became a Conservative seat, Mr. Joseph Rymal's old constituency where he was wont to boast that this veteran of twenty battles never knew defeat until the constituency was gerrymandered. In the redistribution of 1892 whenever it was thought the Grits had not been gerrymandered enough in 1882 some further fine work was done. The strong Reform township of Beverley was taken off North Wentworth and thrown into the Liberal hive, North Brant, and then the broken remnants of Wentworth were made one constituency, now held by a Conservative. No distribution of change can be made in Western Ontario in the present redistribution which will not injuriously affect the Conservative party, and so it ought to affect them in putting the constituencies back where they were and where they were considered fair and moderate and reasonable for both political parties. If the Conservative party is injured by placing these municipalities back in their original places so much the worse for the Conservative party, and the sooner every honest Conservative turns his back upon the infamous gerrymander of 1882 and 1892, the better for his party. I am sorry to refer at length to this matter, but I am compelled to do it, though the duty is greatly ligthened by the strong, truthful and impressive unfolding of this story by the hon. member for Wellington. He has done this Senate and he has done this country a good service by calling the attention of the public to this matter.

Some hon. MEMBERS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. KERR—It is all very well to say 'hear, hear.' That does not answer argument and facts. The facts are there, and the facts will be there as long as Canada has a political history, and in my view, although we thought the Conservatives were under a great cloud—and they were, owing to the Pacific scandal—in my view, nothing ever hurt that party in this country like the gerrymander Bills that were introduced for political ends. I hope it will be a lesson to them and to all, because I deprecate any gerrymander. I do not expect any from the Liberal government. If a Liberal government attempted anything of that kind, they should get their walking ticket very quickly. We must elevate our politics into a higher plane, and then we shall rise to the measure of responsibility of our duties, and not until then. In the redistribution of 1892, Haldimand was gerrymandered so as to make it sure for Dr. Montague, but Colonel Thompson's popularity broke the effect of that gerrymander, and in 1900 he drove Dr. Montague from his seat, notwithstanding the fact that it was badly gerrymandered. All honour to Colonel Thompson. It has been asserted again and again that the effect of the redistribution did not hurt the Liberals, because the total votes polled by the Liberals in 1882 and 1887 was smaller than the Conservatives. One reason for that is that in those times it was not thought necessary to poll the whole Liberal vote. The Liberals had not turned out because they did not consider it necessary. It would make very little difference whether the former majority was three or three hundred, but now woe to the Conservatives in these ridings which were gerrymandered, but which have been made right. It has been my pleasure to supplement, in a feeble way, what the hon. gentleman from Wellington has so forcibly stated to this House. My motto is 'Charity to all and malice to none,' and I am bound to add here and now that I have in this House as good friends among the Conservative party as I have on the other side, and we must all try to live in that spirit, but above everything in the future, let us one and all resolutely resolve to elevate our party politics—I do not mean the affairs of state, but our politics, above this kind of thing and give fair-play to each political party, and let the best men win in a fair fight. I believe the discussion tonight will not be in vain. I am sure it will not, if it enables us to see the enormity of the Acts of 1882 and 1892, and what has always surprised me is that men of the respectability of the Conservative party, whom I see around me, have justified it. I have had a very long acquaintance with the gallant knight from Belleville, and I would go a thousand miles to do him a good turn, but how he can justify or palliate this infamous gerrymander of 1882, and the further infamous gerrymander of 1892 is utterly——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Incomprehensible.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Utterly inexplicable, but I hope that while the lamp holds out to burn even the vilest political sinner may return.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do not confine it to politicians.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I do not say it offensively because I do not wish to offend my hon. friend; but I think it is doing a good thing for the Liberal party and for the country by exposing this matter and remeding the evils that exist in Ontario. I know all the constituencies of Ontario. I do not profess to go into the matter so fully argued by the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island. I am just speaking of the province of Ontario upon which a dead-set was made in 1882, because it was felt at that time, and properly so, that if the Conservative party could weaken and dash to the ground the power of the Liberals in this province, their retention of power in the parliament of the Dominion would be easy, and by these two Bills they were able to hold political power in this country for nearly twenty years. Notwithstanding that, the Liberal party, true to their faith and true to their principles, have fought the battle through good and evil report, and thanks to their efforts their polical banner is in the ascendency to-day. I hope it will retain its ascendency as long and no longer than it is kept above board and not trailed in the dust, because the moment we depart from what is right, I shall expect a process of disintegration and decay to set in in the ranks of the party; but let them do what they should do according to sound philosophy improved by the errors of others, shall I say, rather than find fault with them. But we must find fault with them. It would not be right not to find some fault. I hope this Bill will become law by the unanimous vote of this House, and I believe the Conservative party would do themselves honour by voting to a man in favour of the second reading of this Bill.

The motion was agreed to on a division and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER—I was misinformed as to the action taken some time ago, but I think it was the unanimous feeling of the House that the adjournment should be till three o'clock on Monday.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There was no motion for that.

The SPEAKER. There was a general consent.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I object to that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It was a general assent, under the impression that the former motion had been carried.

The SPEAKER—The hon. leader of the House was going to make the motion and I told him, having been so informed by one of the officers of the House, that the motion had been rescinded, because he had already acted on it, and I did not put the motion. I declare the Senate adjourned till three o'clock on Monday.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I object to that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—When we assented to that it was under the impression that the Speaker had himself declared that the motion which had been put upon the Order Paper by the Secretary of State had been carried. My recollection now, on looking up the matter, is that when the question was called, before the Orders of the Day, the Secretary of State informed us that there was no particular business to be done on Monday, and he did not think there was any necessity for making the motion, and it was dropped. That is how the matter stands now, and the motion put upon the paper for to-day was also dropped, so that really as the records now stand we are to meet on Monday at eight o'clock.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I said that if it was the feeling of the House we should not meet to-morrow I should be quite willing to adjourn till Monday, but it would be under an arrangement that we should meet at three o'clock on Monday, and the House concurred in that.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The motion of the hon. minister was not a motion to rescind the order.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The effect of the motion was to rescind the order. The House heard me distinctly, and every gentleman present acquiesced in it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not acquiesce.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman is bound by it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No. I am not bound. There is no motion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was informed officially that that order calling the House together on Monday evening at eight o'clock had ceased to exist or was not in absolute order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is not my fault.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I said the understanding was that we need not meet to-morrow, but we would meet at three o'clock on Monday.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is quite correct, but that was under the impression that the motion which the hon. gentleman had given notice of a week ago, had been passed. The Speaker stated the question rightly enough. The record is to-day that we meet on Monday at eight o'clock until otherwise ordered, and it has not been ordered, and when the hon. gentleman put the notice on the paper for a motion to meet to-morrow, he thought it was not necessary as there was not business enough and he dropped that also. That is the record as it stands, and unless the former resolution be rescinded—and that cannot be done without the consent of the House—we are obliged to adjourn until Monday evening at eight o'clock.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (Cape Breton)—I hope the hon. gentleman from Stadacona will withdraw his objection.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, I won't. I have taken that stand, and I shall stay there.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I should like to ask the hon. gentleman what his object is? All the members who went away expect to meet here at three o'clock on Monday.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I have no object to explain. I have this right to exercise and I shall exercise it.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I understood when the hon. Secretary of State withdrew his motion for the sitting to-morrow, that a motion was substituted, practically by unanimous consent of the House, that we should meet again on Monday, at three o'clock.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There was no motion made. The Order stands that when the House adjourns on Friday it stands adjourned until Monday evening at 8 o'clock.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I think the House will bear me out in the statement that when that Order was made it was on the distinct understanding that the eight o'clock meeting would continue as long as the business permitted it, but just so soon as the business necessitated a change that Order would be changed, and the Secretary of State withdrew his notice to meet to-morrow at three o'clock, when he could have carried that motion and brought us back here to-morrow afternoon. He did this simply to accommodate hon. members and there was not one dissenting voice. I think it stands in this position, that the House had assented unanimously to what might be called a compromise arrangement to meet at three o'clock on Monday.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. leader of the House gave notice of a motion to repeal the Order adjourning from Friday till Monday night, but he withdrew it and the Order stands to-day on the record and must govern the adjournment. There must be a motion to rescind, otherwise we cannot meet regularly at three o'clock.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not agree with the hon. gentleman at all. I had given regular notice of motion to meet at three o'clock to-morrow. When the Order was called, I spoke to hon. gentlemen around me and said that it would be a great convenience for many who desire to go to Montreal. I believed that there were no Bills coming up from the other House, and that prorogation was not in the near future, as I supposed it was a day or two ago, and that therefore instead of meeting to-morrow I said it would meet on Monday at three o'clock.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—If the House had not acquiesced in the suggestion of the Secretary of State, then the motion to meet to-morrow would have been carried.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In order to meet on Monday at three it will be necessary to rescind the Order which was passed on the motion of the Hon. Secretary of State, made on the 12th of June, that when we adjourn on Friday we stand adjourned until Monday night at eight o'clock. That order has not yet been repealed.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The hon. Secretary of State this afternoon rose to make the motion of which he gave notice, to meet to-morrow afternoon, but said that with the consent of the House he would waive the resolution to meet to-morrow if it was the unanimous wish of the House that we should meet on Monday at three. Not a single member rose to object, and the hon. gentleman was in his place. I think it is very discourteous for the hon. gentleman to take a technical objection now.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I make the objection, and I shall not change my mind.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No doubt the hon. gentleman for Stadacona is perfectly in accord with the rules of the House. But, no doubt, the understanding when the Secretary of State withdrew his motion to meet to-morrow was that we should meet on Monday at three o'clock. The hon. gentleman was in the House. If he will not abandon his objection, that is obstruction. Every other hon. gentleman in the House is prepared to meet at three on Monday and proceed with the business of the House, and the hon. gentleman has no reason to offer.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Well, he has no reason.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He may have just as good a reason as those gentlemen who went to Montreal to attend to their private business.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—If the hon. gentlemen from Stadacona will not meet the views of the entire House, I am inclined to think he may have the law with him on this occasion ; but I would really appeal to him —I do not do it very often—to act fairly in this matter and meet the views of all the members of the House and permit the adjournment till three o'clock on Monday. Will the hon. gentleman concede that much?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There are many things we ask in tones such as the hon. gentleman uses now when we address ourselves to the other side of the House, and our request is never granted. I have entered my objection and I say I shall stand to it.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—The motion is that the House adjourns till Monday evening at eight o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Monday at eight o'clock.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Monday, October 12, 1903.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eight o'clock p.m.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

MORNING SITTINGS.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I beg to give notice that I will move to-morrow that when the House adjourns we meet at 11 o'clock on Wednesday morning, the morning session to be a distinct sitting.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Can the hon. gentleman inform us if the House will sit on Thursday ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot really say just now. If there is important business on the paper I presume we shall. The notice is to meet at 11 o'clock on Wednesday, and each day thereafter at 11 o'clock until the close of the session.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Adjourn at 1 and meet again at 3 p.m. ?

Hon. Mr SCOTT—Yes, and every subsequent day during the session. I am not prepared to say what we will do on Thursday.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am informed by the hon. member from Stadacona, that the House intends to adjourn on Thursday.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will be able to say to-morrow.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT, moved the second reading of Bill 235 'An Act respecting the construction of a Transcontinental Railway.' He said : The measure now submitted for the consideration of the Senate is probably the most important one that has been presented before parliament since 1881 when the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's Bill was passed, and I can therefore quite understand that many hon. gentlemen who have not given the matter much thought and attention may, not unnaturally, hesitate before acquiescing in so important a measure until they have fully considered it. The more one looks into it the more confident he becomes of the importance of this measure and the necessity at this time, which is most opportune, to commence the work. The idea of a transcontinental line through the interior of Canada is not a very new one. As far back as 1895 this parliament had before it a Bill to incorporate a company, having for its object the construction of a railway from Quebec to Fort Simpson. It was known as the Trans-Canada Railway Company. Two or three sessions after that a Bill was again before parliament asking for some amendments ; so that the idea is not entirely as new, as some hon. gentlemen seem to imagine. This Bill in my judgment, is the natural evolution of what has been going on in connection with the question of transportation for the past five or six years. Naturally, one would suppose that the company that had first occupied the consideration of the public would have been the one that would have been taken. The Trans-Canada, although being composed of gentlemen of considerable importance, one or two English capitalists being members of the board, was not, however, as strong a company as would be considered essential to undertake a work of this magnitude. There was another competitor in the field, a company that for some years were looking forward to share in the developement of the North-west. Our earliest railway in this country was the Grand Trunk Railway Company. They had stretched out their main line from Chicago to Portland, and in a very short time that line, I understand, will be double tracked, in fact within a few months. It is now double tracked between Montreal and Toronto. It has also lately, I notice, been making arrangements with the Northern Pacific, the American road, to connect with the Orient, and perhaps placing a fleet of vessels on the Pacific between Seattle and China and Japan. It has, therefore, very large aspirations at the present time. It is, of course, a matter of immense value to a company like the Grand Trunk to be connected with the North-west. They are now connected with all the manufacturing centres of Ontario; they have their branches permeating that province in every direction. They have also branches connecting their main line with the various centres of population in the province of Quebec. It would, therefore, only seem reasonable and natural that a company having the standing of the Grand Trunk Railway Company should desire to be connected with the development now going on in the great North-west Territories. The Grand Trunk Company having made up its mind to enter the North-west, there were two avenues through which that could be accomplished, either through their main line by way of Chicago, or from some point in the older provinces of the Dominion. Had the line been constructed from Chicago and penetrated into Manitoba and the North-west from the United States, it necessarily would have had the effect of diverting a very large volume of trade from our western territories through the United States, to Portland and to other United States ports. It would have been a very serious blow to the commerce of Canada had a result of that kind been reached, and therefore the government, in looking forward to the construction of another national highway through the interior of the country, naturally sought negotiations with the Grand Trunk Railway Company. As hon. gentlemen are aware, during the present session that company had sought for a charter to build a road from North Bay to some point on the Pacific coast and no doubt public opinion would have supported the administration in subsidizing that railway from North Bay. It must be remembered, however, that east of North Bay the population of this Dominion is quite as large as that to the west, and it would be a serious detriment to an important section of Quebec and to the maritime provinces, had the new transcontinental line been diverted southward by connection with the Grand Trunk Railway to Ontario and southern points more particularly to Portland. It was therefore essential, in the interests of this country, that influences should be brought to bear on the Grand Trunk Railway to induce them to take up the larger scheme which was going, in my judgment, to benefit not alone the older provinces, Ontario and Quebec, but also the maritime provinces, and so the scheme naturally grew till the proposition was that the line should start at Moncton and be carried through the interior of the country to the prairie province; thence by a northern route to Edmonton or thereabouts on to the Pacific coast through the Pine river pass or the Skeena or whatever line might be available to Port Simpson. The reason for selecting Moncton as the starting point on the east is this: Moncton is in the centre, you may say, of the maritime provinces. It is within very easy access of Prince Edward Island—only a few miles from Point Duchene where the boat connects the mainland with the island. It is also equally distant from Halifax and St. John and different points in the maritime provinces, and therefore Moncton seemed to be the natural point of departure. It was only fair and right that in so large an enterprise as building the new national railway all parts of the Dominion should share in the necessary advantage that will attach to the construction of so important a highway. The Bill before the House authorizes the construction of a railway from Moncton, via Quebec through the interior of the country to Manitoba, no doubt reaching Winnipeg either by the main line or by a branch, and thence by the northern route, the route which had been originally selected by the Mackenzie administration in 1874, through the Rocky mountains to the Pacific ocean. The line is divided into two sections, known as the eastern and the western. The eastern section is to be built by and owned by the government ; to be built by commissioners after, of course, exhaustive surveys have been made in order to select the best route that can be obtained. After being built it is to be leased to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, who are endorsed and guaranteed in a manner which, I think, sufficiently secures the connection of the larger company and which as I shall explain hereafter—will be leased to that company at a rate of three per cent annuity rental on the total charges incidental to the construction of the road. For the first seven years after the road is built they pay no rental. The country will pay the amount of the three per cent for the seven years. In the eighth, ninth and tenth years, if the earnings are not sufficient over and above the running expenses and of the incidents connected with the running of that railway to pay the three per cent, then only such amount as will be the margin over the actual cost of running will be paid to the government. The other will be a charge in the future. The western section is to be built by the company. The western section will be divided into two portions, one known as the prairie section and the other as the mountain section. On the prairie section the government will guarantee the principal and interest on the bonds up to 75 per cent of the cost of the road, the amount however not to be in excess of $13,000 per mile. The government do not undertake to pay the interest on any portion of that. The company assume the interest from the beginning, just as the Canadian Northern is now building its line—that is the Mackenzie & Mann road—under similar conditions, the government guaranteeing their bonds, but taking security that if the government are obliged at any time to pay either principal or interest that they have a lien on the road for the amount of the outlay.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What is the length of that prairie section ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it is about 1,000 miles.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—More than a 1,000 miles.

Hon. Mr. THIBAUDEAU (Rigaud)—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The western section, including the Rocky mountains section to the coast.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That will be 1,400 or 1,500 miles. My hon. friend asked for the prairie section and I was giving him the prairie section only. I may be a little over the mark.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière)—It is 1,000 miles on the map.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—On the mountain section the government also guarantee 75 per cent of the cost up to $30,000 a mile. Anything in excess of that—of course there will no doubt be an excess in the construction of the mountain portion of the line—must be borne by the company guaranteed by the Grand Trunk Railway.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is there any limit to the interest.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The government pay interest on that section for 7 years.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman said the guarantee would not exceed $13.000 on the prairie section, and $30,000 on the mountain section—75 per cent of each—at what rate of interest ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The bonds were to be 3 per cent. On the mountain section, however, the government were to pay the interest for 7 years. That will be a charge assumed by the country, the 7 years on the mountain section, and, as I explained just now, the first 7 years rental on the eastern section. Those will be the two substantive amounts that the government of Canada will assume. If, however, on the mountain section, after the seven years have expired, that portion of the road is not on a paying basis, then the government undertake that they may pay the interest for the first, second and third years, making it, however, a charge against the company to be paid in the manner set forth in the Bill, either by another mortgage, a forty years extension or in such way as may be agreed upon. Now, I shall just run over what, in my judgment the cost will be. Of course it is rather presumptious for one to say what the cost of so stupendous an undertaking will be; still each one has his own idea on the subject. I have had some experience in regard to the cost of various railway enterprises in many parts of Canada, and, therefore, I submit with all humility my opinion for what it is worth. Hon. gentlemen have had the opportunity of hearing the views of other gentlemen, and they know just what value to attach to them. I think it is pretty fairly approximate, possibly the estimate may be on the outside. I am inclined to think it is on the outside. From Moncton to Quebec the distance would be 400 miles in round figures. It may be somewhat less than that, placed at $25,000 a mile the cost would be $10,000,000. From Quebec to Winnipeg, taking the different opinions and views and the different lines that are talked about, I estimate that as being 1,475 miles, at a cost of $28,000 a mile. I think that is an outside figure, from the information I have gained of the character of the country in the various reports I have, and the opinions I have been enabled to gather since the subject came before parliament. I think $28,000 a mile is an outside estimate—$25,000 would come nearer it. Hon. gentlemen will recollect it is not to include the rolling stock; it is the line, and there will be no right of way to purchase. There will be stations and sidings and the usual appurtenances of a railway, exclusive of rolling stock.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I understand the minister to say there will be nothing to be paid for the right of way?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The right of way will belong to the provinces. It is not to be supposed they will charge for the construction of a railway through an uninhabited country for the right of way except where they approached cities or towns that were occupied; therefore I put it aside as an element of the cost. It is in the older parts of the provinces a very considerable element, but I think I am perfectly safe in saying that throughout that country from Quebec to the prairie section it is not an element of cost.

Hon. Mr. OWENS—How many bridges is the hon. gentleman figuring on in that stretch from Quebec?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not gone so closely into it as that. The bridges will not be so important. The bridges north of the height of land will be towards the sources of the rivers not toward their mouths, and therefore the bridges will be a comparatively small item. They cross a great many rivers but they cross them at points where their volume is not great.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—Near the North Pole.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Do you expect to pay anything for the right of way in New Brunswick?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Certainly, but not in Quebec or Ontario. I am now speaking of the section between Quebec and the prairie province.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Have any arrangements been made or negotiations entered into between the provinces of New Brunswick, Quebec and Ontario, as to the right of way through?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I think not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then it is a mere presumption they will not charge for it?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, from past experience, and I have had a good deal of experience in this matter. The Crown will not be likely to charge. Their land will be largely increased in value. Already, I understand, there are companies largely composed, in some instances, of Americans taking up lands along what they suppose will be their route, more particularly those sections of it that pass through the spruce forests, because, no doubt, the moment this line has been constructed, the timber country in the vicinity will have a very largely increased value. It is not accessible to-day; it will be then in the market, and it will be in the vicinity of many rivers where there are water powers, and in that way large additional value will be given to the section of country which this road traverses. We have had experience with other railways that have run through sections of country that were comparatively uninhabited; we know in a very few years the land on each side became immensely valuable, although, in the first instance, it was not considered as possessing any substantial financial worth. I gave the distance as 1,475 miles at $28,000 a mile, making a sum of $41,300,000. On the prairie section I do not add anything to the cost, because the government do not undertake from the beginning to pay any of the interest on the prairie section.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The government guarantee it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We guarantee it. If we have to pay it we can take the railway and it will become our property. It will have at least 25 per cent added to its value, and will become an asset of considerable importance to this country and will be particularly gratifying to those who believe in government ownership. The mountain section I put down as 480 miles and that is at $30,000 a mile. Of course 480 miles is only an estimate, because it may have to run a devious course. It is impossible to get a straight line going through the Rocky mountains, although there is this to be remembered, that taking from the international boundary to the 49th parallel as you go north the width of the mountain range considerably diminishes. It is very much wider down at the 49th parallel than it is 300 miles further north, which would be about the distance from the boundary line that this railway will tap the Pacific ocean; and the altitude of the mountain range is much less between the prairie country and the coast, the higher you go up, which is a very important point in estimating the cost. But the government will have, at all events, for seven years to pay the interest on the $30,000, and I therefore put it in as the cost. The cost of 480 miles at $30,000 a mile would be $14,400,000. The $30,000 may not be reached ; that is to be the excess. As hon. gentlemen will remember, it will be 75 per cent on the cost, the company paying the other 25 per cent, but the liability of the country will be only up to $30,000 per mile. If the cost is larger than 25 per cent added to that, then the company must bear the loss. Now, those figures, the $10,000,000 for the eastern section, the line from Quebec to Winnipeg $41,000,000, and the mountain section $14,400,000, total up $65,700,000. That, however, is very considerably in excess of estimates that have been made by other gentlemen whose judgment may be superior to mine. I am taking what I think will be the outside figures that Canada will have to pay in considering the liability we are assuming. The mileage, the 400, the 1,475, the 1,000 for the prairie section and 480 for the mountain section, will total up 3,355 miles. I think those are all outside figures, but it is just as well to consider the extreme liability that this country will be assuming. The interest would be $1.971,000 a year, and for the ten years would be $19,710,000. Mr. Fielding's estimate, which he gave in the other House, was that when the road was completed the capital on which we would have to pay the interest would be $54,609,676. That is nearly $11,000,000 below my estimate. On that estimate the annual interest would be $1,638,290, or $16,382,900 for ten years.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is that the interest on the eastern section as well as on the mountain section ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—On all. That is assuming that the road at the end of seven years would not be a paying road ; although on the mountain section it is not fair to charge up the interest that way inasmuch as Canada, if it pays the interest, has a lien on the road for the amount ? However, assuming we do pay it for the seven years, it would amount, as I have said, to nineteen million odd dollars. Say, we pay altogether on the outside—which would be really the very outside—twenty million in ten years in round figures, that would be two million dollars a year. It would not be a very heavy burden for this country to assume, considering the enormous development which would result from the construction of a line of that kind, the immense growth of population and the development of wealth that would ensue in the ten years before this line would be probably on a paying basis. I should like to draw attention to the character of that northern country. You must not suppose that nothing is known of that country. On the contrary, we know very much more of the country between Quebec and the prairie province than we did of any part of the transcontinental line that was conceived in 1871 first by Sir John Macdonald who was at the head of the government when the Bill of 1872 was introduced. They knew far less about the country west of Lake Superior to the Pacific than we now know of the country lying to the north of us from Quebec to the prairie country. We find in the Bill introduced by the government of 1872, of which Sir John Macdonald was head, the line described simply as commencing at a point at or near Lake Nipissing, or to the south of it, and ending at the Pacific ocean. Now, that was the skeleton that was produced before parliament. The surveys had not been made at that time ; the country had not been explored ; very little investigation had been made over certain portions of it. Surveyors and explorers had been sent out a year or two before but practically nothing was known of it. The large expenditures for surveys were really made by the Mackenzie administration from 1874 to 1878. Therefore I say we know more of the interior of the country through which the government is asking the approval of parliament to build a road, than the government did in 1872 when they passed the Canadian Pacific Railway Bill, and which we all know came to an unfortunate end at that time. The Trans-Canada Railway, which was chartered in 1895, was designed to commence somewhere on the line between Quebec and Roberval. Many years ago a road was opened northward from Quebec 110 miles, running in a northwesterly direction towards Lake St. John. Before that road was opened, it was thought that it was an uninhabitable country. It was in one of the coldest sections of the province of Quebec, yet we find that the country in which the Lake St. John settlement lies has increased ten times more in population than any other place in the province outside of the suburbs of Quebec and Montreal in the last ten years. It has been found that the hardy cereals can be produced there. I cannot say what the population is, but I know in the decade between 1891 and 1901 the increase of population was over 10,000, made up largely of immigrants going into the Lake St. John district. The Trans-Canada road, which had its headquarters in Quebec, had managed to enlist some moneyed men of the province of Quebec and some from outside, and lines were run in a westerly direction. A plan has actually been filed of a road for some distance west of Roberval, where they found a country most attractive for settlement in that northern region, with easy grades and all facilities for constructing a railway. Under the engineering department of the Trans-Canada, surveys were made at different points from Norway House, at the northern end of Lake Winnipeg, to Roberval. In the report of the engineer who made the survey eastward from Norway House, he describes the first 100 miles as actually a tangent over a level country, quite as level as any of the prairie country. Now, that was a surprise to everybody, but there is the fact, if one can believe the reports of the surveyors. At various intermediate points similar reports are made. Hon. gentlemen will know that there has been a settlement for upwards of 100 miles north of this city, somewhere near the route where the proposed railway will intersect. The settlement is known as the Desert. The Canadian Pacific Railway is now building a line up in that direction. It is in operation for 60 or 70 miles, so that the interior of the country is not entirely a terra incognita.

Hon. Mr. OWEN—The height of land is about 100 miles north of the Desert.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The height of land varies very much indeed. If the hon. gentleman has examined it at all, he must know that it is an exceedingly irregular line, by no means running parallel with the great lakes and River St. Lawrence.

Hon. Mr. OWEN—Then our road will be serpentine ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, there are points where it will cross the height of land. At Lake Nipegon, which is only 40 miles north of the present line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the height of land is only, I think, about ten miles north of the lake. The rivers north of Lake Nipegon run the other way towards the Hudson Bay. As you come further west from a straight line due north from here, you come to very large settlements on both sides of Lake Temiscamingue. Lake Temiscamingue is not very far from the height of land and there is settlement going on from the east side in Quebec, and a very large settlement on the west side in the province of Ontario. Lake Temiscamingue forms the boundary between the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, and a line from the north end of that lake by the Quinze river runs due north to the new line, and there are settlements on both sides at the extreme northern end and probably north of Lake Temiscamingue. On the west side it is one of the very rapidly growing settlements made up of French Canadians who have come in from the United States and from other points. The west side of Lake Temiscamingue has for the last thirty years been known to be very rich land. It was known as such when I had the honour of being Commissioner of Crown Lands for Ontario, which is more than thirty years ago, because the report was made by one of my officers at that time on the clay belt lying to the west of Temiscamingue and extending for some considerable distance. It had not been explored, but it was known from the lake westward up towards the northern end of it as a particularly rich clay belt, with a fine growth of timber to be found at different points. In view of the value of this section of the country the province of Ontario is to-day building a road leading up somewhat west of Lake Temiscamingue, by a direct line. It is intended that that line will intersect the new national highway, so that hon. gentlemen will therefore know, when their attention is drawn to it, that that interior country is very much better known than at first blush one would suppose it to be.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—May I ask my hon. friend if it is expected that this line will pass through the country at the north end of Lake Temiscamingue? Will that be on the route of this road?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The new line will be north of that.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—How far?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is very difficult to say. The Trans-Canada was to be north of Lake Abitibi, which lies still further north than the north end of Lake Temiscamingue. I understand the country is being examined on the north side of Lake Abitibi. It is impossible to locate the railway in that country until complete surveys have been made. There is no intention of rushing into this enterprise, as some hon. gentlemen seem to think, immediately the charter is obtained. The most exhaustive exploration will be made and a thorough survey carried out, in order to obtain the very best possible line. It is intended to be a national highway that will carry the grain from the North-west at all seasons of the year over such easy grades that it can compete with navigation; and, in view of the fact, as some one has remarked, we should proceed slowly, festina lente. Let us hasten, but hasten slowly, so that the very best line can be obtained. In asking this authority from parliament, we are able to lay before hon. gentlemen much fuller information than was placed before the country when the Canadian Pacific Railway was built, and certainly very much more information than was before the government of Canada in 1872, when the parliament of Canada authorized the government of that day to build a transcontinental railway from a point at or near Lake Nipissing to a point on the Pacific, giving them a full range of hundreds of miles north and south. There was no location whatever. It was not defined. In confirmation of what I have been saying I shall refer briefly to some statements that will sustain the facts that I have been briefly laying before the Senate. I hold in my hand here—I daresay hon. gentlemen have had similar volumes placed in their hands—the report of a survey of part of the Trans-Canada Railway. This, I think, will be considerably north, at points at all events, of the proposed national road.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—That is north of Lake Winnipeg—the Trans-Canada road?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, the objective point was Norway House, just north of Lake Winnipeg, being the shortest line. Whether this line will extend as far north as that, with a branch to Winnipeg, I am unable to say. It is possible the railway may be located north of Lake Manitoba, as was intended under the Bill of 1874, the scheme of the Mackenzie administration. They proposed a northern line from Lake Manitoba, going via Battleford to Edmonton.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Via Selkirk and North Manitoba and Winnipegosis.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It eventually strikes Selkirk with a line to the south. This is only useful as showing that in this northern part of Canada we have a heritage that is really worth something, that it is not altogether a country that ought to be condemned, and I do think there ought to be a degree of pride and ambition, when Canada is prospering to-day that we should appreciate the value of that country, which, if it can be opened up, will give breadth and importance to the Dominion. No one can deny that—that if it is at all possible to open up that extended country it is our duty to do it, and there never was a more opportune time than the present, when the revenue is expanding and when public attention from the outside is being directed to Canada and settlers are pouring in at a rate that we never before dreamt of. Therefore, it is of the first importance that we should no longer neglect that section of the country. We have finished our canals, we have completed the larger public works of this country, which were formerly a drain on our treasury, and to-day we stand free to expend a reasonable amount in the opening up of our country through the interior, giving it breadth instead of a mere frontage. The charge against Canada in the past has been that settlers were confined to the front. Up to a very recent date it was a fact that the settlers were confined to the lands along the St. Lawrence, in the province of Quebec, and along Lake Ontario and the great lakes, in the other provinces. Gradually we are moving northward, and we are finding we are not disappointed, that our country is worth developing, even in the northern section :

From Roberval to the western limit of the province of Quebec, a distance of some 375 miles, the line runs through a good farming country, the soil being chiefly clay. The first 30 miles are already settled. At 130 miles the summit of 1,200 feet between Roberval and James bay is wheat, and from actual surveys taken the maximum west gradient of one per cent can easily be had. From the summit of Lake Chogibiche the country is a gentle rolling plain in the direction of James bay, so much so that in places there is not a difference of 100 feet in a distance of 100 miles. The height of land between the St. Lawrence and James bay waters is scarcely perceptible. The waters interlock and some of the lakes discharge both ways during spring freshets. On the lower part of the Chamouchouan river the country has been overrun by fire and is now covered with second growth timber, but on the other part of the forest the primitive forest still remains, the timber being chiefly spruce.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—What is the hon. gentleman reading from ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—From the surveys made for the Trans-Canada.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—A very good survey.

Hon. Mr. OWENS—That line is very much farther north than the line you are proposing to build now.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—How much ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is quite impossible to tell. The object of the new road will be to select the best line with the easiest gradients. To be of value it must be of easy grade if it is going to carry the grain. Here is another :

From mile 375 to mile 447, or from the western boundary of the province of Quebec to 72 miles westward.

A large portion of this gradient is of the same general character and equally well suited for agricultural settlement as the townships around the head of Lake Temiscamingue. The land is clay and clay loam.

