"It Was for Visions That We Fell." Now, for their sake, our lands grow lovelier. There's not one grey cliff shouldering back the sea.

But breathes their thoughts today from every bough. There's not one leaf on all these quickening trees.

And they said this--"We have no more to pray. To all men's praises we are deaf and blind. We cannot even help, if they betray Our hope--to make earth better for mankind."

They lacked the power, but not the heart. Then, when the foeman struck at what they cherished.

They never knew the secret game of power. All that this earth can give they thrust aside.

They crowded all their youth into an hour. And, for a fleeting dream of right, they died.

How should we bear those voices from the dust? Alford Noyes, in the London Daily Mail.

The Cause of Backache. ONLY IN RARE CASES DOES BACKACHE MEAN KIDNEY TROUBLE. Every muscle in the body needs constantly a supply of rich, red blood.

The muscles of the back are under a heavy strain and have but little rest. When the blood is thin they lack nourishment and the result is a sensation of pain in those muscles.

Backache is a warning that the blood is thin and needs to be enriched. It is to be cured by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

TORTURED BY RHEUMATISM

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" Brought Quick and Permanent Relief

MR. P. H. MCHUGH
108 Church Street, Montreal.

December 10th, 1917.
"I was a great sufferer from Rheumatism for over 15 years. I consulted specialists, took medicines, used lotions; but nothing did me good. Then, I began to use 'Fruit-a-tives'; and in 15 days, the pain was easier and the Rheumatism was better. Gradually, 'Fruit-a-tives' overcame my Rheumatism, and now, for five years, I have had no return of the trouble. Also, I had severe Eczema and Constipation, and 'Fruit-a-tives' relieved me of these complaints and gave me a good appetite and in every way restored me to health." P. H. MCHUGH.

Business meeting of the W. C. T. U. last Friday of every month.
Limit to Forbearance.
Levy Mayer, the well known Chicago lawyer, told the following temperance story at a banquet recently:
"A long frisky woman accented the parson on the street one day and said, 'Bill, was drunk again last night?'
"Too bad," sympathized the parson, adding, 'but if you would have a little patience with William, I am sure you could work miracles with him.'
"But the woman shook her head.
"Looks to me as if I'd tried patience a lot of times, but it don't seem to do the trick. I'm a little bit of a doctor at a time without speaking of the case, no matter what he asks me."
"And when it comes to patience, why parson, I've looked in on one of the house more times than I've got fingers and toes; and time and again I've sewed him up in a sheet, when he was full and walloped him till I was so tired I was ready to drop."
"I've bolted him in the hen house for three days at a time and see if he'd sign the pledge, and I've put vinegar in his booze so it would make him sick, and waited with the patience of Job to see if it would do any good, but it didn't."
"No, parson, it's going to take more than pat and forbearance to cure that man."
"Drank Up His Saw Mill."
A piece of excellent advice is contained in an incident some one tells as follows:
"Tom met an old friend, who was formerly a prosperous young lumber man up in northern Minnesota, but whose bad habits of drinking brought him to a pretty 'hard-up' condition, although he has since reformed and is doing better.
"How are you?" asked Tom.
"Pretty well, thank you. I have just seen a doctor to have him examine my throat."
"What's the matter?"
"Well, the doctor couldn't give me any encouraging word. At least he could not find what I want to find."
"What did you expect him to find?"
"I asked him to look down my throat for the saw mill and farm that had gone down there in drink."
"And did he see anything of it?"
"No; but he ordered me if I ever got another mill to run it by water."

The Losses of the Guards

Serve as an Illustration Of Price Paid by England

BRITAIN'S sacrifices in blood, in treasure, and in the self-denial of her people will never be fully realized by the nations whose malnourished and propped she during the course of the long-drawn-out war. Late comers in the struggle, no matter how valuable their services to the Allied cause, will never be able to grasp the magnitude of Britain's part, and, indeed, are sometimes inclined to minimize it while magnifying their own. The State of New York, for instance, is still agog over the home-coming of its own 27th Division, and still indulging, through its press and politicians, in rather remarkable claims as to the sacrifice and accomplishments of that excellent body of soldiers.

Generally speaking, an American division consists of 25,000 men, and that is the figure given by New York papers in dealing with the 27th, whose total casualties are announced as 8,237, including 58 officers and 1,288 men killed, 9 officers and 256 men died of wounds, 123 officers and 4,479 men wounded, 48 officers and 1,604 men gassed, and the balance made up of missing men and some who died from other causes than battle. That is a heavy enough casualty list, and, moreover, it is not for many, and suffering to the end of their lives for others. But to get an understanding of the full strength of the sacrifices of British manhood it should be read together with the following figures from the London Times relative to the losses during the war of the Guards' Division, which at full strength numbers about 15,000 men:

	Killed-Wounded-Missing
Infantry	4,539
Gravellers	7,174
Coldstream	3,606
Scots	2,184
Irish	4,151
Welsh	5,739
Guards' Machine-Gun Regt.	180
Total	13,671

An aggregate of 44,765 killed, wounded, and missing, or more than one and a half times the full strength of the 27th Division, and over three times the strength of the Guards' own division. Many honors were won by the Guards, and the Victoria Cross, 132 Distinguished Service Orders, and hundreds of lesser distinctions. But their premier honor will be that to the end they maintained their great traditions, the men who filled up the ranks of the Victoria Cross, the time proving worthy of their immortal predecessors of the "originals."

The Rule of the Road.
In France the rule of the road is "Keep to the right"; in England, to the left; and in consequence demobilized motor drivers are finding it difficult to get back to the British custom.

In a press interview, Mr. Blain, the honorary secretary of the London Safety First Council, said:
"The London General Omnibus Co.'s demobilized drivers are to receive special instructions. But there will be fewer accidents in London now than there were during the war. If the pedestrian rule of the pavement were altered from 'Keep to the right' to 'Keep to the left,' this would mean that the rule of the road and of the pavement would be the same. As it is, when people stop at the Pavement in passing a crowd of people, they have their backs to the traffic."
"Nearly 40 per cent. of the fatal street accidents are due to this departure from the logical course of things. It would be comparatively easy to alter the rule of the pavement, but to change the rule of the road would involve much money and many difficulties. For instance, all staircases on public vehicles would have to be reconstructed, steering wheels and drivers' seats generally readjusted; tram points altered; and British horses asked to unlearn the habit of a lifetime."

"Fit" in South Africa.
Believing that thousands of lives could have been saved during the terrible influenza epidemic in South Africa had the country been at all prepared for dealing with the spread of disease, efforts are being made by the Influenza Commission in Johannesburg to bring about a similar organization which could be mobilized with great speed should the emergency recur. A Public Health bill, before Parliament in February, provided the machinery for dealing with such outbreaks and strengthened the maritime quarantine, which, in general thought, was not severe enough during the epidemic. For the rural districts, the bill provides for the greatest sufferer, the commission should at a loss to prescribe. "The medical equipment of the Union has been starved in the past," says the Johannesburg Times, "and reforms ought to be introduced without waiting for another calamity."

Preserved His Dignity.
"You stupid man!" exclaimed the exasperated lady, "why in the world did you get seats for 'Madame Butterfly' when I distinctly told you I wanted to hear 'Pagliacci'?" "Well, my dear," was the explanation, "I had to preserve my dignity. When I reached the ticket window I forgot how to pronounce that thing!"

Farming Without Records.
You wouldn't play a game of any kind without determining who was the winner, when it was finished, would you? Farming without keeping records is the same thing, except that you are liable to wake up some morning and find that you have lost the game when you had thought you were winning.

The Silo In Western Canada

On a Western Cattle Ranch.
To raise two head of cattle where only one could formerly be raised—that is what thousands of farmers all over the American continent have been able to do with the help of silos. It is no wonder, then, that as the land in Western Canada is becoming more settled, silos should be making their appearance in greater and greater numbers there. Already in Manitoba many farmers are beginning to look upon the silo as a necessary part of the farm, and more than a hundred of them are in use in various parts of the province. Saskatchewan and Alberta, together have probably about half the number as Manitoba, and the number in all the provinces is being slowly but surely added to every year.

With plenty of uncultivated prairie land growing an abundance of nutritious grasses the cattle food problem in Western Canada has not been a really difficult one in the past. During the summer months the stock could forage over a large section of the country and there was no need for the owner to compute how many acres would support a cow. The obtaining of winter feed was just a matter of energy—a man could have as much hay as he could cut, free for the cutting. With such conditions as these, and they still prevail in many parts of the country, the need for silos has not been greatly felt up to now.

But the days of free range are drawing to a close. Already there are parts of the country where little or none is to be had. And as the country is getting more and more settled, and, moreover, as a system of mixed farming is becoming the rule throughout every province, even in those parts where for many years straight grain growing was practiced, the need for some additional means of ensuring a steady supply of feed all the year round is beginning to make itself felt in various parts of Western Canada.

Silos will, therefore, continue to spring up throughout the country. Now, Lacombe, Alberta, a ranching company, which has made a great reputation for the quality of beef it produces, is contemplating the erection of four new silos this year. This company has found with the silos it has in use that it can maintain double the number of cattle hitherto supported on the same area of land. Many smaller farmers are having the same experience. It is, as one farmer aptly expressed it, "like getting another farm for nothing." In times not long past it was not difficult to get a farm "for nothing" or "next to nothing" almost anywhere in Western Canada, and although land is still very cheap compared with its productive capacity, it is not always easy for a farmer in older settled districts to expand his holdings. That this stage is being reached in ranching districts is a good sign for the future development of the country.

In the large irrigated area in Southern Alberta east of the growing city of Calgary, there is an experiment that may eventually lead to the establishment of silos on most of the farms in this territory. It is a country admirably suited for dairying and other branches of the livestock industry, capable of producing sufficient food for the support of hundreds of thousands of horses, cattle, sheep or swine. Most of the farms are for Western Canada, on the small side, generally from 80 to 200 acres each. But the soil is wonderfully fertile, and with an assured supply of moisture made possible by irrigation, will grow abundant crops of grain and fodders, including wheat, oats, barley, alfalfa, various kinds of grasses and clovers, and also roots and vegetables. For ensilage purposes, corn, sunflowers, alfalfa, peas, oats, and many other crops can be grown. In years to come this part of Alberta will be one of the greatest food producing areas in the world.

What crops are used for ensilage purposes in Western Canada? In Manitoba corn is most used, but in Alberta peas and oats are most popular. Other crops used are sudan grass, millet, rape, buckwheat and alfalfa. Sudanoil is also being tried, but at present it is only in the experimental stage. The success with which peas and oats are grown, the enormous yields and high feeding value of the mixture, together with its moldlessness, palatability and flavor, account for its popularity and it will always maintain a leading place with the farmers of the most westerly districts of the Prairie Provinces, no matter what strides are made in the development of the country. Fate at Long Range

By SEWARD W. HOPKINS

It was somewhere about midnight when a frantic ringing of my bell started me into throwing the book I had been reading to the floor, and rushing to the great old-fashioned oak entrance.

"I had but recently moved into the Toronto, and had made no new friends, nor even acquaintances. My small, six-line advertisement was in the only paper published in the place. My Great Dane growled, being unused to having his early stumblers thus disturbed."

With the exception of the Great Dane, I was alone. I had permitted myself to visit his servant, almost as old, who was ill. Opening the door, I saw in the clear, cold light of a winter moon, a young girl. She was pale, extremely agitated and decidedly pretty.

"Oh! Are you Mr. Bayne?" she asked. "My name is Bayne—David Bayne," I answered. "In what way may I be of assistance to you?" "Yes, I am a lawyer."

"Then—let me talk to you a moment. We—I—my father—'Please take a moment to get your breath. You are excited. My office is in your house. You wish to consult me, I suppose?'"

"Yes, come with me. That is why I came here. My father is dying. Does he wish you to stay in a moment. But I know of no printed form of will. However, it will take me but a moment to write it."

"My father is Donald Redbag," said the girl. "He wants to make his will." "Do not want you to write it for him?"

"You don't want me to write your father's will?" I asked in amazement. "No, he wishes you to be left without inheritance."

"No. He wants to leave me everything. And yet you don't wish—it seems to me there is something more to this than the mere desire of a sick man to make a will. Please explain."

"He has taken a violent dislike to my father. He wishes to cut him out of a hundred dollars. I do not want that."

"How much is he worth?" "More than a million."

"Donald married—a poor girl against my father's wishes. Yet I like her, and do not understand—I do not wish him cut off. You are a lawyer. You will know how to manage."

"But if he wishes to make a will, I must write it as he commands," I answered. "Well—I suppose so—but it will be hard on me."

"As we entered the wide iron gate the girl turned to me again. 'The doctor is with him now. Try to persuade him to be fair.'"

"The doctor?" "Yes. My father. Don't let him die leaving a will that is unjust."

"I had no time to reply, and I could not have framed an answer if I tried. A tall, thin old servant hurried in, and I was ushered into a bedroom where a man lay huddled in a heap of bedclothes, and a grave, intelligent man I had seen driving about the streets not close at his side.

"You are Bayne?" he asked. "Yes." "Mr. Redbag wishes to make his will. You will need to go."

"He placed at my side a small, thin, after his first sentence. A fixed smile came over his face. 'Life is not a game. It is a struggle. I have survived old times, and that mark was going fast.'"

"Write—write'—gave the sick man. 'Leave all to Edna. Just a hundred dollars to Donald.'"

"Alone with him, and with a strange feeling of repugnance, I began writing. He was ordered to sign his name. 'It was a brief will. He simply left one hundred dollars to his son Donald, and all the residue of his estate, after his funeral expenses had been paid, to his daughter Edna.'"

"While I was writing, a young man entered. He was well set-up, a manly looking young fellow, and there was nothing in his appearance that was not pleasing. 'Father,' he said in a low, well-modulated voice, 'I am going. Will you write this?'"

"With a scream that seemed beyond his waning strength, the sick man half raised himself on his elbow. 'No!' he said sharply, although feebly. 'Strike hands with you! Do I thought you had gone?'"

Children Cry FOR FLETCHER'S CASTORIA. A young surgeon, invited out to dinner, was asked to carve a fowl, and not having done so before, he failed lamentably. Instead of trying to cover his confusion the hostess called attention to it pointedly by looking down the table and saying loudly:—'Well, but if I wanted a very clever surgeon, you may be a very odd surgeon, but I should not come to you to do it. No, madame,' he replied politely, 'but then, you see, you are not a chicken.'
