Ontario. W. W. Stuart of Calgary, inspector w. w. Stuart of Caigary, inspector of ranches, a well known Caigary citizen, who is also well known in Alberta, died at Glencie on Wednesday night. The news of his death was received by his brother, Mr. Justice Stuart in Maclend vesteriay acleod yesterday.

The late Mr. Stuart was born in Middlesex county 45 years ago. When a young man he came to Manitoba. In 1886 he and another brother drove a bunch of cattle from Manitoba to Jumping Pond where Mr. Stuart settled on a ranch. He has been in the Calgary district ever since.

He was a candidate for the northwest legislature for Wort Calgary was a set. islature for West Calgary some ars ago. He was appointed inspect-of homesteads and later inspecto f ranches. He was very highly res-ected by all who knew him and had ery many friends. He leaves a widow and two children. The funeral will ake place today.

NTERESTING SERVICES HELD LAST NIGHT

The Interest in the Crossley and Hunt er Meetings Increasing meeting which was held at Knox church last night by Messrs. Crossley and Hunter was fairly well attended. After the usual songs Mr. Hunter called upon the audience to pray for the hotel keepers. Hunter stated that he had no objection to the hotel business as long as it did not entail the business of the bar. Mr. Hunter said he expected to save 1000 souls in Calgary. He claimed that there had been 800 souls saved in Brockville during their

The note of personal salvation was cast forth by the preacher and he stated that "love tales made him sick" and that only in the Bible did he find rest. Mr. Hunter said that although he had never been bad he had been saved from sin. After making a statement concerning the necessity of confession to God, he pealed to the reporters not to for get it, if there were any reporters

Mr. Crossley spoke on the Good Shepherd. After singing "There are Ninety and Nine" in his own inimitable way, he emphasized the impor-tance of the Bible and referred to the acrostics which had been made by himself and which would be found on the back of the hymn book which was sold in the church. The Bible was no footstool. King

Edward VI. had now to stand on the Bible. Most of the objections which were made to the Bible were objections to the book of Deuteronomy. The Bible was the only dictionary in the world. The meeting throughout was conducted last night at a faster pace than upon the previous occasions and the appeal which the evangelists made was not so strenuous. At the end of the assembly nine persons were called to the Lord.

"Papa, make some excuse and get rid of him, I must not, cannot, will not meet him now, she exclaimed in a half breathless voice of ill-suppressed excitement.

The judge looked at his daughter wistfully, painfully, for a moment, and then, as something like the truth in regard to Claudia's ings broke upon him, he replied very gravely: "My dear, you need not meet him; and he has saved me who was excessively bothered by Claudia's new title and the changes that were rung upon it.

The coffee must have been strong to judge by its effects upon Claud-

"Take it away," she said, after having drunk two cupfuls. "Papa, I feel better; and while Ruth is unpacking my clothes I may just as vell sit here and tell you why, if indeed I really know why, I here alone. We were at Niagara, where we had intended to remain throughout this month of September. All the world seemed to know where we were and how long we intended to stay; for you are aware how absurdly we democratic and republican Americans worship rank and title; and how certain our reporters would be to chronicle the movements of Lord and Lady Vincent." said Claudia with the air of world-scorn and self scorn in which she often indulged, "Well, Lady Vincent cannot consistently find fault with that" said the judge, with a covert smile.

'Because Lady Vincent shares the folly or has shared it," said Claudia, "but Lord Vincent did find fault with it; great fault-much greater fault than was necessary, I thought, and grumbled incessantly of our custom of registering names at the hotels, and at 'American snobbery and impertinence' general-

"Bless his impudence! Who sent for him?" "Papa, we should have quarreled upon this subject in our honeymoon If I had respect enough for him to hold any controversy with him." "Claudia!"

"Well, I cannot help it papa! I must speak out somewhere and to someone! Where so well as here in the woods; and to whom so well as

"You have not yet told me why you Claudia, that the fact gives me uneasiness; it is unusual-unpreced-

"I am telling you, papa. One morning while we were still at Niagara I was sitting alone in private parlor, when our mail was brought in-your letter for me, and three letters for 'my lord.' . Of the latter, the first bore the postmark Of Canada. of Banff, the second that of Liverpool, and the third that of New York. They were all superscribed by the same hand; all were evidently from the same person. After turning them over and over in my hand, and in my mind, I came to the con-clusion that the first dated was written to announce the writer as starting upon a journey, the second to announce the embarkment at Liverpool; and the third the arrival at New York; and that these letters though posted at different times and places, had by the irregularities of the ocean mails happened to arrive at their destination the same day. Lord Vincent has a mother and several sisters; yet I feel very sure A. L. NUNNS, that the letters never came from either of them, because in fact I had seen the handwriting of each in their letters to him. While I was still wondering over these rather mysterious letters my lord lounged into the room.

"I handed him the letters, the Banff one being on top. As soon as he saw the handwriting he gave vent to various exclamations of annoyance, such as I had never heard from a gentleman, and scarcely ever expected to hear from a lord. 'Bosh!' 'Bother!' 'Here's a go!' 'Set fire to her,' etc., being among the most harmless and refined. But presently he saw the postmark of Liverpool and New York on the other letters, and, after tearing them open and devouring their contents, he gave way to a fury of passion that positively appalled me. Papa, he swore and cursed like a pirate in a storm!"

"At you?" "At me? I think not," answered Claudia haughtily; " but at some person or persons unknown. ever, as he forgot himself so far as to give vent to his passion in my presence, I got up and retired to my chamber. Presently he came in, gracefully apologized for his violence-did not explain the cause of it however-but requested me to give orders for the packing of our trunks and be ready to leave for New York in one hour.' "Did he give you no reason for his sudden movement?" "Not until I inquired; then he gave me the general, convenient, unsatisfactory reason 'business.' In an hour we were off to New York. But now, papa, comes the singular part of the affair. When we reached the city, instead of driving to one of the best hotels, as had always been his custom, he drove to quite an inferior place, and registered our names-'Captain and Mrs. Jenkins' "What on earth did he do that

"How can I tell? When I made the same enquiry of him he merely answered that he was tired of being trumpeted to the world w these impertinent Yankee reporters!' The next day he left me alone in that stupid place and went out on his business,' what ever that was. And when he returned in the evening he told me that the business was happily concluded, and that we might as well go on to Washington and Tanglewood to pay our promised visit to you. I very readily acceded to that proposition, for, papa, was pining to see you."
