UNITED NATIONS

YEMEN—SECONDING OF CANADIAN PERSONNEL TO OBSERVATION MISSION

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inform the house that the Canadian government has authorized the seconding of Canadian personnel for service with the United Nations observation mission in the Yemen. As hon. members are aware, the United Nations security council on June 11 approved a resolution authorizing the secretary general to establish this observation group, whose presence in the Yemen is a prerequisite to the implementation of the undertakings which have been given by the governments of the United Arab Republic and Saudi Arabia for disengagement in the Yemen. It is hoped that this will bring about the termination of a situation in that country which has become increasingly acute since the establishment of the present republican government in September of last year, and will help to avoid the danger of the internal conflict in that country developing into more widespread hostilities throughout the area.

It is intended that a substantial proportion of the officers required for the new observation group in the Yemen will be drawn from personnel already serving in the area with the United Nations emergency force and the United Nations truce supervisory organization. Mr. Speaker, Canada has consistently played a leading role in the United Nations peace keeping operations, and it is the government's intention to strengthen this fundamental role by all practical means.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, there will be general support in all parts of the house and the country for the action announced by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As he pointed out, the situation has become very critical, and there is need at the earliest possible date for an observer team or group from the United Nations to go into that area in Yemen in order to permit of the disengagement of some 28,000 Saudi Arabian troops which are there, and also to cut off the supplies which are being sent into that country from Saudi Arabia. However, the minister did not refer to the question of cost, and I had hoped he would have said something in that connection.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the costs will be borne, for the first two months certainly, by the United Arab Republic and Saudi Arabia. At the end of that period this matter will be reviewed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister has mentioned the division of costs as between these two countries over the first two months. My understanding is that the U.S.S.R. wanted to restrict the period of the operation of this force to two months, and under no circumstances would agree that any of the costs should be paid, in so far as the United Nations is concerned, by other than the security council. I think the argument in this connection on the part of the U.S.S.R. is a serious one and indicates the degree of importance that the various members of the United Nations must attach to a decision being made regarding the responsibility of all nations in the United Nations to contribute a proportionate share to the costs of the peace making machinery of the United Nations.

This announcement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, particularly the statement he made following my remark as to cost, would indicate that the problem in the United Nations as to financing these operations is still far removed from settlement. However, a makeshift arrangement has been arrived at whereby for the period of time mentioned by the minister the cost will be shared by the two countries named. I am glad that Canada is going to contribute to this operation which, as the minister said, has received the consistent support of successive Canadian governments.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I would say, on behalf of our group in this house that we lend our support to the government in its policy of taking part in this all important effort to continue the struggle for peace in the world and to prevent this from being another area adding to the conflagration of localized wars that we already have in different parts of the world.

I personally appreciate very much the fact that Canada is going to make this contribution, because I know Yemen well and the countries around it. If this situation should ever get out of hand it could certainly be another very serious crisis area in the world situation. Without going into the details as to cost and into the other arrangements which are obviously going to have to be worked out, suffice it to say that it is gratifying to note that Canada is again carrying her share of responsibility in the preservation of peace in the world.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the members of this group desire to express their support for the announcement which the Secretary of State for External Affairs has just made to the effect that Canada is going to contribute to the United Nations peace keeping functions in Yemen. Canada has a good record of contributing to peace keeping forces in various parts of the world, and I am sure that in this case we will maintain our good record.

I wish to congratulate the government on having accepted this responsibility, and to say that as far as this group are concerned we shall always give our support to any contribution which Canada may make through serving under the United Nations for the maintenance of peace throughout the world and supplying part of a world peace force.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO SUMMER RECESS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Prime Minister is in a position at this time to give the house any idea as to the general plans for the session. I recall that a couple of weeks ago in the course of a speech in the house he referred to the fact that certain things would be done in this portion of the session. What are the plans in general as to the continuance of the session, and is he in a position to say whether we are going to carry on throughout the summer and into the fall in order to complete the legislative program?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is our hope and indeed our purpose to take action on the proposals that are now on the order paper and those which will be put on the order paper next week before thinking of a recess. Whether that hope will be realized I do not know, because it is a matter for the house to decide. It is hoped, however, that we can deal with this legislative program by the middle or end of July, and if that could be done I think it would be desirable to have a recess then and come back in the autumn. Whether that will be possible will depend on the progress we make in the house on the program which is before the house.

[Mr. Thompson.]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Prime Minister indicate what are the pieces of legislation that will be placed on the order paper next week?

Mr. Pearson: I cannot at the moment, but I hope to be able to satisfy the hon. gentleman's very understandable curiosity early next week. We hope to put some additional items on the order paper by the early part of next week, and that will be the program we hope to complete before we think of a recess.

Mr. Knowles: Will that include the pension legislation?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

WEST GERMANY—MILITARY AID TO AFRICAN COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. My question is based on newspaper reports to the effect that the West German government confirmed yesterday that it had been giving secret military aid to seven African countries, and its admission that the veil of secrecy had harmed West Germany. Can the minister give the house any information with respect to these reports and with respect to the government's attitude toward this secret military action on the part of one of its NATO allies?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite certain of the purport of the question asked by the hon. member for Kootenay West, which relates to the supply of military aid by the West German government to several independent African countries. I have, however, seen the press reports according to which the German government announced details of this program yesterday.

We have not as yet received any information about this development from our embassy in Bonn. When we do we will no doubt wish to see whether there is any aspect of the arrangements which would be of direct interest to Canada although, on the basis of the press reports, I am doubtful that this will prove to be the case. I note from these reports that the German government has stressed that this aid was granted as the result of direct requests from the countries concerned to help them maintain internal order and security.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether any of his officials were aware of this action by the West German government, and whether the NATO ministerial council was consulted by the German government with respect to an action which is bound to have very serious international repercussions?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I cannot add anything to what I have already said.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ALCOHOL—REVENUE RECEIVED AND EXPENDITURE TO COMBAT USE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I have a question that I should like to direct to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, there was a question on the order paper in my name which in effect asked: (1) How much money did the federal government get in 1962 from the sale of alcoholic beverages? (2) How much money did the government spend in combating alcoholism in the same year?

The answer I received stated that the government's revenue from alcohol amounted to $242,096,000, and that the government spent $11,000 in combating alcoholism. My question today, sir, is are these figures really correct, or has not some error been made in their compilation?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question, which I received as I entered the chamber. I am having an investigation undertaken to check these figures, and I will advise the hon. member later.

[Later:]

I am now instructed that the figures given in the order for return are correct. Those figures, since they only represent amounts spent by the federal government in response to requests from the provinces, appear somewhat limited. However, they do not include the very much greater amounts which have been spent over a period of years by provincial governments, who have the prime responsibility in this field.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON SMOKING AND CANCER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The question is this. About two weeks ago, in answer to a question asked by the hon. member for Simcoe East, the hon. lady stated that any action her department might take with respect to the apparent relationship between smoking and cancer would be a matter of government policy.

In view of the increasingly grave public and medical concern over the situation, I wonder if the minister could give the house anything in the nature of a statement of government policy on this question.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank my hon. friend for giving me notice of this question. I anticipate making a statement to the house early next week on this question.

DISCUSSIONS WITH BROADCAST GOVERNORS RESPECTING CIGARETTE ADVERTISING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the hon. lady report to the house on the discussions which, according to press reports, she is going to have with the chairman of the board of broadcast governors regarding television and radio advertising of cigarettes?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, may I say in answer to the hon. gentleman's question that I learned from the same source he did that I was to have such meetings, namely through reading the public press.

ROYAL COMMISSION—STATEMENT AS TO REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam inquired as to when we might expect the report of the royal commission on health services. The chairman of the commission has reported to me in the following terms:

> Some months ago I indicated that we expected to be able to complete our report and to have it in the hands of the official translators and printers by the end of June. Unfortunately we cannot meet this objective. We commissioned a number of studies and had contracted that all these would be completed by the end of February at the latest. Several of the studies have in fact been completed but a number have not, including economic computations, manpower forecasts and certain tables which are needed as part of the text of the report. The commission will meet again during the last week of June. It is anticipated that another meeting will be required and it will be held early in September following which volume I of the report will be ready for printing.
> This volume I will contain the important and essential parts of the report. There will be one or perhaps two other volumes of supporting material and it is our purpose to publish as appendices certain of the studies made for the commission by our research people.

That is the report I have had from the chairman, Mr. Speaker, and from that report it will be clear that we cannot expect the important volume I before September.

THE MINISTRY

ASSOCIATE MINISTER OF DEFENCE—ABOLITION OF POST

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): In the spirit of co-operation that is so apparent today from the answer the Prime Minister gave to the first question I asked, may I ask if he can tell us whether, in addition to the legislation providing for the establishment of a department of industry and the bifurcation of the Department of Agriculture, it is the intention of the government to abolish the position of Associate Minister of National Defence?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, it is not our intention to abolish that position.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question regarding a statement he made in that connection on March 5, 1963.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: At that time he stated he would abolish the position of associate defence minister, so there would be a net gain of only one cabinet portfolio as a result of the action taken to which I referred earlier.

Mr. Pearson: We found when we took office that defence policies were in such a confused condition it was desirable to keep the two ministers.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In these 60 days of shift, did the Prime Minister not say that with two ministers of defence it would be impossible to secure efficiency?

Mr. Pearson: That may have been an accurate statement in respect of the previous administration.

Mr. Diefenbaker: So we are going to have a larger cabinet to do the same amount of work.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

GREAT LAKES—DELAY IN LOADING CANADIAN SHIP AT CHICAGO

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether the United States department of justice has been successful in its efforts to have a federal court grant an injunction against the picketing and boycotting of the Canadian ship Howard Shaw, which is tied up at Chicago.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I understand that a decision in this case will likely be made this afternoon by the federal court in Chicago.

PARLIAMENT HILL—MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT CROSSING PICKET LINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Labour. Can he assure the house that members of parliament carrying union cards are not violating union principles in coming up to the parliament buildings and crossing the picket line?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think this is a problem for each individual member to decide for himself.

PARLIAMENT HILL—REPORTED OVERTIME WORK WITHOUT OVERTIME PAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. Would the minister inform the house whether the adjustment amounting to over $6,000 in wages mentioned in his statement yesterday was in relation to work done on the west block in 1962 or 1963 in preparation for the NATO conference? Can the minister assure the house that the regulations governing labour conditions are being fully observed by all contractors engaged on government contracts in the Ottawa area?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): The answer given yesterday applied generally to the contract in connection with the work on the west block. The recovery now being undertaken by the Department of Labour is in connection with work done, I think, in 1962.

The matter which was raised two days ago by the hon. member is currently being investigated to see whether labour conditions are fully complied with. If not, appropriate action will be taken.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REPORTED SHORTAGE OF STRAWBERRY PICKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Is the minister aware of the critical labour situation in the Saanich peninsula on Vancouver island, where 300 strawberry pickers are immediately required to harvest the crop which, in any event, cannot fill the demand of the increasing market? Will the minister use his good offices to assist the berry growers to obtain the necessary help?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I will certainly draw the hon. member's representations to the attention of the national employment service.

REPORTED CHANGES IN WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Is the minister's department in the process of making fundamental alterations in the municipal winter works incentive program? If so, what steps are being taken to consult the provincial governments in this regard?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the changes in the municipal winter works program were announced in the house on Monday. I have taken steps to see that all the provincial governments are advised about these changes in the oncoming winter works program.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I take it, then, that the provinces were not consulted prior to these alterations being made?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I think I can say that the officials of the Department of Labour are constantly in touch with various provincial officials who are interested in these particular programs. Views are exchanged, and I am sure that the views of officials who were contacted in this informal way were reflected in some of the changes that were made.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it correct that some of the officials of the provincial governments were asked their views only 24 hours beforehand, and that before they could communicate their views these changes were made, without consultation?

Mr. MacEachen: It may be, Mr. Speaker, that the consultations were so continuous that they were held very close to the time of the announcement.

PENITENTIARIES

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL—STEPS TO IMPROVE CONDITIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I desire to ask a question of the Minister of Justice, and I am sorry I was not able to give him notice. I called his office several times this morning, but I found he was in cabinet. Upon looking at my question, Mr. Speaker, I find it is about the longest single sentence I have ever written.

My question is, in view of the fantastic information which was contained in sessional paper 74A which the minister was good enough, and I may say honest enough, to file yesterday dealing with the cause of the riots at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, can the Minister of Justice advise this house whether steps have been taken or will be taken immediately in order to prevent any further recurrence of disturbances by ridding the institution of vermin, rats, bedbugs; by reducing the over-long hours of cell confinement; by making provision whereby hot meals are not cold by the time the inmates can consume them, and by dealing with all matters which are of concern to the officers and inmates in accordance with the sessional paper which was filed yesterday by the minister?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the length of the question asked by the hon. member indicates that an equally lengthy reply would be necessary, and it is the custom to deal with matters of this kind on the estimates. However, if the hon. member had read further, as I am sure he has, he would have seen that a number of steps have already been taken, not to deal with all the difficulties that have arisen or that were the cause of the riots, but certainly to deal with those which are of a more immediate nature.

DRUMHELLER, ALTA.—REQUEST FOR CONSTRUCTION OF INSTITUTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): I should like to deal with a question which was asked some days ago by the hon. member for Bow River in connection with penitentiary construction at Drumheller.

In 1961 the penitentiary service proposed to treasury board a scheme for the construction, between 1962 and 1966, of nine major federal penal institutions in Canada. It was proposed that one of these institutions should be located in the vicinity of Drumheller, Alberta. The penitentiary service contemplated that the necessary land would be acquired in 1962-63 and that construction would commence in 1963-64. The necessary land was acquired accordingly. However, in 1962, in connection with the preparation of estimates, treasury board directed that the program of building should be phased out over a five year period instead of a four year period and that the commencement of construction of a number of institutions should be postponed accordingly.

In the result, after consideration of the relative requirements for inmate accommodation in the various regions of Canada, it was decided that the institution at Drumheller was one of those of which the commencement of construction could be postponed until the fiscal year 1964-65, and that decision was approved by treasury board. I am informed now that there is no intention of changing the decision.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

QUEBEC—ACTION TO TEST LEGALITY OF CORONER'S ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice which has to do with the concern over the rights of arrested persons in Montreal. In the light of the apparent contradiction between the coroner's act of Quebec and the Criminal Code and bill of rights, as illustrated by recent events, and in the light of doubts expressed by competent constitutional authorities, will the minister take immediate steps to have the constitutionality of the coroner's act tested in the courts?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. member for having sent me notice of his question, and the reply is as follows. The Canadian Bill of Rights is expressed to apply to every law of Canada, which expression is defined by section 5(2) of the act to mean an act of the parliament of Canada, any order, rule or regulation made thereunder, and any law in force in Canada or in any part of Canada that is subject to be repealed, abolished or altered by the parliament of Canada. There is, therefore, no contradiction between the Canadian Bill of Rights and the coroner's act of Quebec, and thus no case for referring the act to the courts.

REPRESENTATIONS BY UNIVERSITY PROFESSORS RESPECTING SECURITY INVESTIGATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should also like to put a question to the Minister of Justice.

Does the minister intend to put into effect the recommendation carried at the convention of the Canadian university professors' association held in Quebec, asking for a complete review of procedures concerning state security and intelligence.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the recommendations mentioned by the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue; I would prefer to see them before giving an opinion on the subject.

[Later:]

I should like to reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau), who was kind enough to send me the newspaper clipping stating that the resolution he was talking about and the representations made by the association of university professors had already been sent to me in a letter. I contacted that association to let them know that I was ready to meet them this week but, unfortunately, the meeting could not be arranged. Under the circumstances, I would prefer to refrain from making any statement on that matter until I have once again been in touch with the association in question.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

CONFERENCE RESPECTING TAXATION RIGHTS AND JOINT PROGRAMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Does the government intend to convene a federal-provincial conference this year in order to consider the means of giving back to the provinces their taxation rights and also to review the matter of the famous joint programs?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as already stated in the house it is the intention of the government to call a conference of provincial premiers and federal government representatives this year.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of the province of Quebec's apparent refusal to participate in the federal municipal loan fund legislation, will the Prime Minister assure the house that the legislation will include a compensation formula for provinces that do not wish to apply to the federal government for such loans to municipalities?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend's question is based on a premise which is not necessarily correct.

FISHERIES

NORTH PACIFIC TREATY—CANADIAN PERSONNEL ATTENDING CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Fisheries a question, notice of which I sent to his office early this morning. What is the name of each of the persons who actually went to Washington recently to attend the meeting relating to the international convention for the high seas fisheries of the north Pacific ocean?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. If he is interested in finding out the names of the members of the Canadian delegation who actually went to Washington last week I would refer him to page 693 of Hansard for June 5, 1963. If he is interested in finding out the names of the persons forming the Japanese and U.S.A. delegations, I suggest he put his question on the order paper.

LONDON, ONT.—INQUIRY AS TO NEW RESEARCH LABORATORY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): I have another question for the Minister of Fisheries. Can the hon. gentleman tell the house whether a new fisheries research laboratory building is to be constructed in the London area to replace the building now in use there? If so, what progress has been made in connection with this project?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have to say that I think this question is really one for the order paper.

SHIPPING

COASTAL TRADE—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport if it is true that the government has decided not to bring forward amendments to the shipping act for the purpose of reserving the coasting trade in Canadian inland waters to Canadian ships.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): The former minister has put his question in the negative form. Perhaps I had better answer him by saying it is expected that legislation on this subject will be brought forward this session.

AGRICULTURE

ALBERTA—CONSTRUCTION OF DAM ON WILLOW CREEK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has the minister anything to report on plans for the construction of a dam on the Flying E site on Willow creek to provide Claresholm and Granum with an adequate supply of water?

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt once more, but this really is a question for the order paper.

Mr. Kindt: On a question of privilege, these two towns are in great need of water and this is an urgent matter.

(Translation):

APPOINTMENT OF VICE PRESIDENT OF FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Clement Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the importance of the farm credit corporation, which lent last year $90 million to the Canadian farmers, is it the minister's intention to recommend soon that the vice presidency of that corporation, which is vacant, be filled?

(Text):

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): These things are under consideration, Mr. Speaker.

JURISDICTION OVER WHEAT BOARD AND GRAIN COMMISSION

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): This is a question that I wished to put to the Minister of Agriculture as a supplementary question yesterday but I failed to attract the attention of the Chair. I trust, Mr. Speaker, you will say it is still in order.

Replying to an earlier question of mine in connection with a board of grain commissioners hearing on grain handling charges, the minister stated that under the provisions of section 17 of the Canada Grain Act every regulation established by the board must be transmitted to his department. This means that the board of grain commissioners comes under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Agriculture while the Canadian wheat board comes under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Does the minister consider this arrangement to be in the best interest of agriculture?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

ALBERTA—CONSERVATION OF WATER SUPPLIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of Agriculture would consider, in view of the fact that the rains of the last few days have missed such substantial areas of dried out southern Alberta, sending officials of P.F.R.A. to examine the supplies of water available to irrigate crops and see that supplies are stretched out as long as possible? I can assure the minister that the concern of the people in this area is very great with such a heavy drain on the water supplies.

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member I must say we are pleased to see him back in the house. In answer to his question, I can assure him that I am in close touch with the provincial government on the question of moisture in the province of Alberta. I have lived there all my life and farm 5,000 acres, so I do know a little bit about it. We have to watch the situation very closely. This is a provincial matter and they must take the initiative, but at such time as they do the federal government will be on hand.

Mr. Hamilton: A supplementary question. Would the minister, with his great concern for the people of that area, consider going himself and seeing how dry it really is?

Mr. Hays: In reply to this question, Mr. Speaker, I am leaving tomorrow morning at ten to seven.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NEGOTIATIONS WITH U.S. RESPECTING D.E.W. LINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gene Rheaume (Northwest Territories): My question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Are negotiations under way at the present time between the government and the United States air force regarding the closing down of all or parts of the distant early warning line? If so, what proposals does the minister have for alternative use of D.E.W. line installations no longer required for defence purposes?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Some changes are in contemplation, but no decisions have yet been taken. As soon as they have been made they will be announced.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE—MEETING WITH MANITOBA DELEGATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport if he is now in a position to give the time and date of the proposed meeting between representatives of the cabinet and the delegation from Manitoba concerning the retention of the overhaul and maintenance base of Trans-Canada Air Lines in Winnipeg.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Yes. Tuesday morning at nine o'clock.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): While we are on this subject I should like to ask the minister if he is aware that according to the president of T.C.A. the decision to maintain and overhaul all jet planes belonging to T.C.A. exclusively at the Montreal base was taken in 1956, by approval of the construction of the new $20 million base, by the Liberal government of that day

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs whether it is his intention to support the Manitoba delegation in its request for the retention of the T.C.A. overhaul and maintenance base in Winnipeg.

FINANCE

REPORTED INTENTION TO INCREASE GOLD PRODUCTION SUBSIDY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Is the minister in a position to tell the house whether the government is considering increasing the assistance under the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act, as he is reported to have mentioned at a recent meeting at the Seigniory club?

Hon. W. M. Benidickson (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): The question is in reference to a speech I made to the Quebec metal mining association on Tuesday night. I do not think there was anything I said on that occasion which could in any way be interpreted as other than that the emergency mining act would come up for legislative review this session and would not likely be dealt with before, perhaps, the summer recess.

TRADE

OIL—REPORTED U.S. INTENTION TO RESTRICT IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of an answer given yesterday in reply to a question asked by the hon. member for Acadia. It had reference to quotas on exports of crude petroleum from the province of Alberta and other western provinces, and the minister said in effect that he had had some discussions with the Americans and that they were going to have further discussions. I was wondering if he would tell us what concrete proposals he suggested to the Americans.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Woolliams: He has told us about the words and the meanings, but what concrete proposals did he make in order to keep the production of crude petroleum at a level of 800 million barrels a day, taking into account our domestic consumption as well as exports?

[Later:]

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a further question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. As he did not answer my previous question, do I take it that he made no proposals to the Americans as far as quotas on exports of crude petroleum are concerned from Alberta?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I did not answer the previous question because I thought it was a speech, but may I say to the hon. member that I gave the results of my conversations with the United States authorities yesterday in discussing the President's proclamation. If the hon. member would read the answer I gave yesterday I think it would answer his question.

SUGAR

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON INQUIRY INTO PRICE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Justice. Can the minister inform the house of the developments which may have taken place following his investigation into the sugar price increase?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it is neither the practice nor the custom of the house to make public the negotiations under way respecting the question the hon. member has just asked. On the other hand, when a decision has been made, through charges, or when a conclusion has been reached through a report, the minister has the responsibility, under the act, to table that report in the house.

REQUEST FOR PROMOTION OF GREATER DOMESTIC PRODUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to direct to the Minister of Agriculture. As he is going to be away, I think the matter is of sufficient importance that it should be dealt with at once.

In view of the need for more employment opportunities in Canada and the necessity for conserving foreign exchange, and in view of the present buoyancy in the sugar market, will the minister give consideration to promoting increased domestic production of sugar by readjusting the basis of price supports, as requested by the Canadian beet growers association and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for Middlesex West for giving me notice of this question. The government has not considered any change in the support program for sugar beets for the current year which was announced on March 7. Under present circumstances the market price for sugar should result in returns to growers considerably above the support level.

NATIONAL PARKS

LONG POINT ISLAND, LAKE ERIE—INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF PARK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister of northern affairs, or in his absence to his parliamentary secretary. Is it the intention of the government to acquire land presently owned by the Long Point Company on Long Point island in lake Erie for a national park?

Mr. Speaker: This is also the sort of question which should be on the order paper.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROPOSED EXTENSION OF RUN-THROUGH PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct one question to two ministers. The ministers concerned are the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Labour. Is the government aware of the dispute which is looming because of the intention of the C.N.R. to extend its run-through program, particularly in western Canada, on August 18? Will the government use its good offices to avoid such a dispute, particularly bearing in mind the interests of safety?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the government is very well aware of this program, and some delegations have been received dealing with the subject. Some correspondence has also been received, and the question is getting very active consideration at the moment.

PROVINCIAL REPLIES TO LETTER RESPECTING ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister to find out if all the provinces have replied to his letter about the royal commission on biculturalism.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): All, Mr. Speaker, but the province of British Columbia.

PENSIONS

QUEBEC—REPORTED LEGISLATION RESPECTING PORTABLE PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Prime Minister could give us today the benefit of his consultations with the minister of health and welfare about portable pensions.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. member for his patience. Naturally I did not want to deal with the matter until I had a heart to heart talk with the minister of health and welfare. Although I have not been able to have that talk, Mr. Speaker, I can now answer my hon. friend that after some discussion of this matter with the minister. It is clear from the hon. gentleman's statement that he is referring to a report of the intention of the provincial government of Quebec to take action in this field. I should think that the announcement merely of intention to take action in this field would not affect any proposals for legislation which are now under consideration by the federal government, but the announcement of such intentions by any provincial government would underline the necessity of keeping in close contact with all provincial governments on such matters of joint concern and responsibility.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

MONTREAL—CONSTRUCTION OF HEADQUARTERS BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, on June 6, 1963, the hon. member for St. Mary asked me a question about the project concerning the construction of the C.B.C. building in the eastern part of Montreal.

The C.B.C. informs me that under order in council P.C. 1963-4/144 of January 31, 1963, it entered into an agreement with the authorities of the city of Montreal for the purchase of a piece of property in the eastern part of Montreal for that purpose. The corporation is carrying out that project in accordance with the agreement.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a topical question about a budget. Could the Prime Minister tell us whether one may assume there is friendly financial significance for his party's budget in the appointment yesterday of two wealthy men to the other place?

Some hon. Members: Order.

INDUSTRY

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF DEPARTMENT

The house resumed from Wednesday, June 12, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Pearson—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure (a) to establish a department of industry to be presided over by a minister of industry who shall be appointed under the Great Seal of Canada, to authorize the appointment of a deputy minister by the governor in council, and to provide for the appointment to the department on a temporary basis of persons having special knowledge of manufacturing industries to assist in the work of the department; (b) to provide for the establishment under the direction of the minister of an area development agency and to provide for the appointment of a commissioner and a deputy commissioner for area development; and (c) to make a consequential amendment to the Salaries Act to provide a salary for the minister.

Mr. Coates: During my comments yesterday afternoon I discussed, among other things the problems confronting the aircraft firm of Enamel and Heating Products Limited in my constituency, which has been forced to lay off personnel. I urged the Minister of Defence Production, either in his present capacity or in his proposed new capacity as minister of industry, to assist this firm in obtaining new contracts, especially one specific contract that is under negotiation with firms in the United States at the present time, in order that the people who have been laid off may be re-employed and the firm may have the buoyancy of employment that was so evident during the years when the former Conservative government was in office.

I have a few particulars which I should like to bring to the minister's attention; they came to my desk as the result of a question I asked earlier in the house. The answer came from a number of departments, but dealing with the work load provided by the Department of Defence Production I might say that in the year 1962-63 there were contracts available to this firm totalling $1,843,000. Over the period from April 1, 1957 to the end of the fiscal year 1962-63 they totalled in excess of $10 million. It was indicated in this reply that the value of contracts for the coming year is estimated to be $781,000.

Certainly, Mr. Chairman, unless increased work is provided for this firm either through prime contracts with the department or through subcontracts with either Canadian or United States firms there will be a good deal more unemployment at this plant than is evident today. I hope the minister will go into this matter very carefully and endeavour to do his best to see that this firm gets a work load sufficient to provide work for the people who were employed by it.

I wish to refer to one other aspect that I consider the Minister of Defence Production or minister of industry will have to deal with. I refer to incentives for industries which are willing to locate in depressed areas. In this regard I might put on the record a few comments made by various cabinet ministers of today. When the present Prime Minister was speaking in Fredericton, New Brunswick, on February 27 he had this to say:

> Adjustment grants for industries locating in development areas such as northwestern and east New Brunswick and its border and central areas should be provided because industry is so severely needed there. This cannot be achieved by "the free play of economic forces" but only through government intervention.

My question to the minister in this regard is, does this mean that he as minister of industry is going to tell firms in this country who wish to establish in various areas where they are to establish, as has been done in Great Britain? If this is so, what basic incentives are going to be offered to these firms to establish in an area other than the one where they might otherwise wish to locate?

I think we must also anticipate that when the Minister of Finance makes his budget speech later this day we will be informed that new tax incentives will be provided to industries that are willing to locate in areas of high unemployment. I should also like to ask the minister a question related to a statement made by the present Secretary of State for External Affairs, who stated at Tecumseh, Ontario, on March 5, 1963:

> A majority Liberal government would create a new department of industry to get new industries for all of Canada. "Such a department would get us rolling. It would examine various industries and get Canada back on the economic rail."

My question to the Minister of Defence Production in this regard is this. Just how much more of an increase in the gross national product does the minister anticipate we will enjoy in the year 1963-64 over that enjoyed in the year 1962-63? I should like him to inform the house how he anticipates that an increase greater than 8 per cent is going to be brought about.

An hon. Member: A new base.

Mr. Coates: It would be a new base, all right. If you can get half of 8 per cent you will be doing very well. If you keep tying up industry the way your boards are indicating they are going to tie it up we will be lucky if we have any increase at all. I should like to refer also to a statement made by the present Minister of Finance in Chatham, Ontario, on February 28, 1963 when he said:

> Special tax incentives would encourage construction of new plants, expansion of old ones and location of industry in depressed areas.

In this regard I should like to bring to the minister's attention the fine work of the crown company in Nova Scotia known as Industrial Estates Limited, which has done such a tremendous job in locating industry in that province. Does the minister anticipate that his new department will supplement the work of this crown company in Nova Scotia, or is it going to take over the duties that have been carried out so efficiently by that corporation since the Stanfield government has been in office in that province?

I should also like to bring to the minister's attention the very serious situation that exists in the Joggins area of my constituency, where the only coal mine in that community has been closed and the people are in need of employment. If the minister could do anything to assist this community to get back on the rails, as one of his colleagues has suggested, I know the people would be more than pleased with such action on his part. I can assure him I will assist him in any way possible to bring this about.

I might also bring to his attention the situation that exists in the town of Springhill in my constituency, which in 1958 was left without any industry of any kind but which has been brought back tremendously by the actions of both the provincial government and the federal government, though it still needs more employment for its people. Although the location of a penal institution there certainly could not be considered as locating an industry there, this would provide a significant amount of employment for the people and it would be most helpful if it could be got under way as quickly as possible. The Minister of Justice informed me that tenders will not be called for the construction of this institution before October of this year, but if there is anything the minister can do to hurry things along, perhaps by letting the contract for site clearing or something of that nature at an earlier date, it would be a tremendous benefit to the people of the area. May I also say that if there is any way the minister can assist in locating more industry in the town of Springhill it would be very beneficial to the people of that town, to my constituency and to Nova Scotia generally.

The towns of Oxford and Parrsboro also need assistance if the minister is able to provide it, and I might bring to his attention—

The Chairman: Order. I reget that I must interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I am happy to speak today on this resolution. I noticed that when the Prime Minister introduced the resolution he dealt with three or four subjects. He indicated that he felt that such a new department would service the manufacturing industries and would assist in stepping up production throughout the country so there might be new jobs for approximately 250,000 people coming into the labour pool each year. He also admitted that much of the work this new department will assume is being done at the present time by the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of Defence Production, but said that there would not be duplication.

He also said that although it would be necessary to hire more people, to take on more bureaucrats, the numbers involved would not be too great because some of these people would be borrowed from the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of Defence Production. He promised that this new department, which would be interested in industry and interested in increasing the productivity of the country, would not be eroding any provincial right. He asked the house, on that basis, to approve the resolution so the government could bring forward the bill to set up this new department.

Whenever I have spoken I have been one of those who have always been against any increase in the civil service generally, and I am going to base the first part of my argument on that premise. It was interesting to note that today when the Leader of the Opposition asked the Prime Minister a question concerning a statement he made on March 6, the Leader of the Opposition did not get a clearcut answer. I believe we should immediately place on the record the statement the Prime Minister made as quoted by the Ottawa Citizen. I am sure that if a statement is quoted by the Ottawa Citizen it is a fairly accurate record so far as Liberal statements are concerned.

The reference is to a speech made by the Prime Minister, then leader of the opposition, during the campaign on March 6, 1963. At that time he was trying to secure votes from the eastern farmers by pointing out that the Liberals would be cutting the costs of running the government. He held out a solemn promise in this regard, that there would be some reduction so far as departments were concerned, so far as the number of bureaucrats were concerned. This is what he said on this occasion. Of course all of us know that many promises were made during the last election campaign by the Liberals which any reasonable government could not ever hope to carry out. Nevertheless this is what he said on this occasion:

> Mr. Pearson's proposed associate minister of agriculture is the second new cabinet appointment he has promised. The first was a minister of industry, to take over part of the function of the Department of Trade and Commerce, but to concentrate particularly on industrial expansion problems.

This is the important part.

> However, he also said he would abolish the post of associate defence minister, so there would be a net gain of only one cabinet portfolio.

In other words he was telling the farmers that he was going to set up a new department of industry, create a new deputy minister and hire a lot of bureaucrats, but that he was also going to cut the costs of government by eliminating one portfolio, that of associate defence minister. The answer given by the Prime Minister today was to the effect that this government kept the associate minister because there was some confusion in defence policy. My answer to the Prime Minister, Mr. Chairman, is that if there is any confusion in defence he brought it about.

The Chairman: Order. May I draw to the attention of the hon. gentleman the fact that he should confine his remarks to the resolution now before the committee, which deals with the establishment of a department of industry. I have serious doubts as to whether he can discuss other departments.

Mr. Woolliams: I appreciate your remarks, Mr. Chairman. However, I was dealing with the very important subject of the costs to the country and the solemn promise made by the Prime Minister to eliminate one minister when he set up this particular department.

In any event, I should like now to deal with the subject of the increased cost to the country generally. Let us take a look at the record. At the present time, in 1963, we have on the payroll of the government of Canada 138,167 civil servants. We have on the payrolls of crown corporations 142,164 people making a total of approximately 343,821. That is the number of employees who are working either as civil servants or for crown corporations serving approximately 18 million to 20 million people. These people are active in the federal jurisdiction only. Compare this figure with 1937, when we had approximately 42,000 employees in this field. We see, then, that there has been a tremendous growth in bureaucracy in this country. This is the first point I wanted to make.

As I have said, we have a Department of Trade and Commerce and, according to the Prime Minister who presented this resolution, these things were looked after by that department as well as the Department of Defence Production. I say the establishment of the new department will mean setting up a great bureaucracy in this country that we can ill afford. What is it costing the country today to have these 343,821 people on the payroll? I make this point, that we have now too many employees of government, and it is costing the taxpayers too much. The point I want to make is that if we are going to stimulate industry, stimulate the productivity of this country, then we have to cut costs, cut taxes, so that we will be in a position to meet our competition in this world.

Now I want to come immediately to this question of what all this cost the country from February 1, 1962 to February 1, 1963. I appreciate the fact that there was another government in office at that time. However, I believe these figures should be put on the record because this government is expanding the bureaucracy, putting more people on the payroll and duplicating what the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of Defence Production can do. It is costing the country $1.57 billion—I want to repeat that, $1.57 billion—to pay the salaries of those 343,821 people to serve 18 million people. This figure does not take into consideration the cost of office space, the cost of equipment, buildings and so on. It is not any exaggeration to say that 30 cents out of every dollar collected in taxes in this country goes to pay the wages and operating expenses of the various government departments when we have a budget of between $6 billion and $6.5 billion. This might be a good time to mention that fact, because the budget will be presented this evening.

I want to repeat that it is costing the country $1.57 billion to pay the wages of these people who make up the bureaucracy of this country. This new department of industry may be the economic baby of the Minister of Finance, and it may have been mentioned in his book "Troubled Canada", about which we have heard so much. I would say, however, that he had a great deal of help from one of the best backroom men in the House of Commons and probably the best member on the treasury benches. I refer to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, who has the best political machine that anyone has ever known since confederation. I say without hesitation that there are heads of departments—I have said this before and I am not going to name them again—who are pro Liberal. These people will do everything to sabotage any other government. I warn the splinter parties that if they had any hope of forming a government, their ability to operate a government in this country would soon be eroded away by this kind of bureaucracy.

I say this is another method, the setting up of another department to control manufacturing, by which the Liberal party hope to get their political foot in the door of every industry in this country. I say this without any hesitation. I know hon. gentlemen opposite do not like this, but it is correct. This Liberal luxury is already costing the Canadian people $1.57 billion. I say to hon. members opposite that last year we had one of the largest growths in our gross national product, namely 8 per cent.

If the government really wanted to increase the productivity of the country it should think of cutting down the bureaucracy, giving a free hand to industry and seeing that industry keeps healthy by cutting taxes. I would not mind seeing a budget brought down with a deficit if, during that particular year, we had an honest to goodness reduction in taxes. One has only to look at a personal income tax form to realize how high and how many taxes are in force.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: This is a suggestion hon. members opposite have heard many times before from me and I intend to talk about it every opportunity I get. In spite of the fact that I am being heckled from the Liberal side of the house I want to make it clear the Conservatives would be very happy to see a reduction in taxes, and this will have to be done if the Liberals implement the promises they made to the Canadian people in the last general election.

Still talking on industry I draw one example, and one example only. To bring in a comprehensive medicare and health scheme would cost $1 billion, and if you add that to what it costs to operate the bureaucracy, $1.57 million, it takes up more than a third of the budget. On top of that there is the cost of defence. How can we ever hope to cut taxes? Mr. Chairman, I want to deal with that particular subject right now.

I said before that if the government were going to carry out its promises with regard to a health scheme it would mean an increase in expenditure of $1 billion, plus a new system of taxation which would lower the wages earned by the wage earners and also lower the profits of industry. If industry could keep the money or a part of the money that goes into supporting bureaucracy, then it could cut its cost of production, resulting in a lower cost of goods to the consumers in Canada and enabling Canadian industry to compete in world markets.

I say without any hesitation that if taxes were cut, labour unions would not be prone to ask for wage increases. Lots of times we ask ourselves why they are asking for wage increases. I would like to ask in reply, how many families living on the wages they are earning today, even though they are high, have enough left over after they pay their taxes to provide a home and maintenance for their families. If industry could retain part of the money it pays in taxes it would not have to go to organizations of bureaucracy to borrow money to finance expansion, such as the industrial bank of Canada.

The individual has only to earn around $15,000 in this country at present before he is required to pay 47 cents on every dollar he makes. Just think of the cost of that partnership. The biggest partner any business has in this country is the federal government. I do not need to outline the amount of taxes paid by corporations, but they cannot expand their operations when they are faced with such a high scale of taxation.

When the Liberals were in opposition they said they would cut taxes, but with the steps they are now taking they are going to make the Canadian people pay through the eye. Mind you, Mr. Chairman, my words are going to be borne out. This is the sort of thing which is a further step to create a complete welfare state, and I do not think there is much difference between a complete welfare state and this type of suggested legislation. The government is acting as a nursemaid to industry and is attempting to get into private business in the same way it has gone into welfare enterprises.

Under that kind of system the ambition and initiative of man is removed. Under it, the will of man is not shattered but softened, bent and guided; men are seldom forced by it to act, but are constantly restrained from acting. It prevents existence; it does not tyrannize but it compresses, enervates, extinguishes and stupefies a people until a nation is reduced to nothing better than a flock of timid and industrious folks of which the government is the shepherd. When we reach this conclusion we have then conformed as a socialist state, because there is no difference between the final result of that process and the final result of socialism or the final result of communism.

The socialist state expropriates your property and pays you for it later, sometimes five or six years later. Under the social welfare state, the state takes your profit and is the biggest partner in industry and business. What then is the difference between a complete welfare state and a socialist state? They are only different forms of expropriation. Under communism the state takes your property and your profits, operates your business, and the state ends up with the same amount of control.

I say now without any reservation that I am personally opposed to setting up a new department to enlarge the bureaucracy of our country. Talking about socialisms, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the Liberals have out-socialized the socialists in Canada. The right wingers of the Liberal party are the members of the New Democratic party. Facts are facts, and what makes the strangest of facts is that there are so many millionaires sitting on the treasury benches, and they want to socialize everybody except themselves. Perhaps they have in mind the final result so far as bureaucracy is concerned.

I think George Bernard Shaw described the end very well in "The Intelligent Woman's Guide to Socialism" when he said:

> I also make it quite clear that socialism means equality of income or nothing, and that under socialism you would not be allowed to be poor. You would be forcibly fed, clothed, lodged, taught and employed whether you liked it or not. If it were discovered that you had not character and industry to be worth all this trouble, you might possibly be executed in a kindly manner, but whilst you were permitted to live, you would have to live well.

That is the final result of the kind of bureaucracy which is building up in this country. I know this is rather an exaggeration so far as the socialists are concerned. They do not like it; nevertheless they would force the individual into this or that. They would tell industry it could go into this phase and could not go into that phase, and when we get into that position the state might as well own all the industrial concerns of the country.

I should like to talk for a few moments more about one particular industry. I dealt with it today when I asked a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and he said I had made a speech. This is in reference to the petroleum industry. When the Conservative government took office, western Canada was producing about 256,000 barrels of crude petroleum a day and had trouble getting rid of it through domestic consumption and exports. Then, under the national petroleum policy developed by the Conservative government, we were able to build that up to 800,000 barrels per day, and brought millions of dollars into the country from the United States to buy that product. That was done by coming to an agreement with the United States on a quota basis, under which western Canada was given a market in the northwestern United States.

When I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce about it today he shoved my question off and said it was a speech, but when he answered the hon. member for Acadia yesterday, in regard to the same thing, he said "We had a discussion with the Americans and we are going to have another discussion." Words, Mr. Chairman, will never build industry or trade. We want action. We have heard about 60 days of action, but they have turned into 60 days of marathon talk by the Liberals.

If the petroleum industry loses out in reference to that agreement in western Canada it will mean a great loss not only to western Canada but to Canada generally; because for the first time in a great number of years—I think it was 24 years—we were able to have a balance in trade with the United States so far as dollars were concerned. That occurred under the last Conservative government. When the party opposite talks about industry one would almost think they were the fathers of this thing. Canada, without trade, would fade. We must have trade. Who was it in the province of Alberta who for 20 long years opposed the export of natural gas from that province to the United States?

An hon. Member: The Liberal party.

Mr. Woolliams: That is right. Somebody is good at answering. That same party is now bidding for office in the province of Alberta, but the people remember that it was the Liberal party, even as late as the time of the last provincial election, which opposed the export of gas from the province of Alberta. Yet what a boom it has brought to industry. It was a Conservative government which set up the national energy board and it was a Conservative government which set up the Borden commission from which the national energy board legislation flowed, bringing millions of dollars to western Canada. These were measures the Liberals opposed when in opposition there. I will name some of these people. There is Harper Prowse, the former provincial leader who ran federally but who did not make the grade in western Canada. There is my good friend Grant McEwan who used to lead the Liberal party. He was against gas export.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order. I did not have the opportunity of hearing the first part of Senator Goldwater's—I beg your pardon—of the hon. member for Bow River's speech, but it does seem to me that this is not a place to carry on the Alberta provincial election campaign. We are dealing with the affairs of Canada and with a resolution to precede a bill before this house. Interesting as a political history of Alberta might be—and, incidentally, Alberta has never had a Conservative provincial government in all its history—it is altogether irrelevant to what is before the committee this afternoon.

Mr. Martineau: Might I suggest it would have been more profitable had the Secretary of State been here at the beginning of my hon. friend's speech so that he would know what point the hon. member was making before he butted in.

Mr. Pickersgill: On the point of order, I understand the hon. member was talking about gas, on which subject, I understand, he is a great authority.

Mr. Woolliams: I am always happy to have an interjection from the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. I am disappointed he did not hear my opening remarks because I paid him a great compliment this afternoon. I said he was the greatest backroom boy any political party had ever seen, and the most active frontbencher. Given the combination of those two qualities it is unfortunate his title is not that of Prime Minister, because he certainly guides that party and is the leader of that party.

The Chairman: If the point of order has been settled, we might return to the subject matter of the resolution.

Mr. Woolliams: Thank you. I knew you would wish me to answer the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, Mr. Chairman.

I was speaking about a reduction in taxation and I also mentioned something about socialism. Somebody rose on a point of order, and I said the Liberal party were out-socializing the socialists. Most people remember what happened in Saskatchewan when the socialists set up industry there. They took over the shoe factory, the boot factory, the lumber industry, the fishing industry and the petroleum industry. And when they were through with them there was no industry left in the province of Saskatchewan. I say this, with respect to members of the Social Credit party, that in Alberta the climate as far as industry is concerned is fairly healthy. But I think it might be interesting, while I am talking about democracy and socialism, to put on the record one last fact, because certainly I am an opponent of the socialist philosophy. The Secretary of State got up in his usual way with his hand over his mouth, hoping to get on the record, and tried to call me Senator Goldwater. Well, maybe Senator Goldwater has some good ideas. He says it is about time we passed laws to repeal the acts setting up some of these bureaucratic departments. That, I say to the Secretary of State, is what his leader promised farmers in the eastern townships he would do when he spoke to them during the election campaign. He has no intention of keeping that promise.

I should like to draw attention to this in order to show what happens to industry when there is too much government control. When premier Douglas promises free medicine for example, this is what happens—this is a good story and I quote from an article which appeared in the Regina Post and is referred to by Robert Tyre in his new book "Douglas in Saskatchewan".

Citizens who had not forgotten those fine promises of 1944—

—and they may not forget those which the present Prime Minister made in 1963—

—would find something tragically ironic in a news story which appeared in the Regina Leader-Post of January 6, 1962. The story reported that a 76-year-old Regina man had collapsed and died in city police court while facing trial.

The man had been charged with failing to pay his hospitalization tax in 1956. And it was the government of Saskatchewan that brought him to trial—a government that won election on a promise to provide the people of Saskatchewan with free health services.

I am going to end on this note. It is the same kind of socialism as we are being promised from the front benches of the Liberal party today. It will curtail industry and strangle it. Instead of increasing, the productivity of this country will slip away and we shall go way down the ladder, as far as being a trading and industrial nation is concerned.

Mr. Peters: Would the hon. gentleman allow a question before he sits down? Would he not agree that the creation a year ago of the Department of Forestry would fall into a category which would make it subject to the same criticism as he has levelled at this resolution?

Mr. Woolliams: I would say, no, because that had to do with a particular industry such as agriculture. We did not put up two ministers of agriculture to put the east against the west. We created a new department to deal with a particular type of industry. But the department which is suggested now is all-embracing. This government wants to get in the back and front doors of all the industrial concerns in Canada.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

(Translation):

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Chairman, I am happy to take part in this debate on the proposed establishment of a department of industry.

The constituency of Shefford, which I have the honour to represent and is well-known to you, Mr. Chairman, is half urban and half rural and can boast of numerous citizens dedicated to the development of its industry and that of the province as a whole.

The city of Granby, the princess of the eastern townships, is recognized for having the greatest number of industrial establishments—and they are of many kinds—within its walls. Being an industrialist myself, I am quite familiar with the numerous problems our industrialists have to face today, and that is why I am pleased to take part in this debate, for we, in this chamber, are not the only ones to be concerned with the problems of industry.

As a matter of fact, we know that every municipal councillor, every mayor, every industrial committee in the province of Quebec and in Canada as a whole is closely and deeply interested in the creation of new industries.

In view of the fact that the economic situation in Canada has changed a lot in the last 50 years, especially in the industrial field, it must be recognized that the problems facing industrialists today are different from those of 50 years ago. In fact, it is logical and normal to refer to a new department problems facing industrialists today, not in order to increase the number of bureaucrats, but to help remove the obstacles which industrialists meet with today, because if that proposal aimed at adding to the number of bureaucrats within the federal administration, it would surely be unwise to create a new department.

Mr. Chairman, today's issue of Le Devoir reports that since April 8 last, there are about 10,000 more unemployed than at the same time last year. We must not believe that we will solve the unemployment problem in Canada only by creating new industries because, for the last 25 years, an increase in the number of new industries has been matched by an increase in unemployment. Why?

Why? Because the solution of the unemployment problem is not to increase the number of industries, since industry's aim is not to give employment, but products. Indeed, the industrialist today must manufacture, manage and dispose of his goods. A superior quality product must be offered at a competitive price. Any industrial enterprise must also be managed as economically as possible, so as to be able to face competition. And, after having produced goods of the highest possible quality at the lowest possible price, an industry has to dispose of them, and it is more particularly in this field that the federal government, through its new ministry, will have to help industrialists to settle their problems.

Today, industries are not lacking in production, and I do not think that a single member could rise and tell me that we are lacking such and such a thing in Canada, this country of plenty. Indeed, we have an abundance of products and our storehouses are over-stocked. If the government proposes to increase productivity in Canada by creating a department of industry, I think this is a mistake. Indeed, if we persist in applying the same old remedies as in the past, nothing will be settled.

What surprises me most, is to hear my good friend, the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) suggest that the means of helping our industry is to ask the federal government to abolish the taxes imposed upon it now. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the hon. member should have suggested this three months ago, when his party was in power. As a matter of fact, if he had convinced his party that his suggestion was well-founded, he would hardly need to ask for an abolition of taxes today, because the taxes we are paying now, under Liberal rule, are the same as we paid three months ago, under a Conservative government.

Mr. Chairman, it is strange to see how the Conservatives, now that they are in opposition, have regrets, compunction, and also, within hand-reach, solutions and remedies for any problem to suggest to the government. On the other hand, on the government side of the house, they claim that the country's productivity must increase. But let me tell hon. members of the government that that is not the proper solution for our industrialists, because nowadays it is not production that is failing in Canada but rather the way to dispose of our products, of our resources and the way to empty our warehouses, because our Canadian people would be quite happy to be in a position to buy what already exists.

Mr. Chairman, I think this government should first of all take the heavy tax load off the Canadian industries because taxes are a factor in production costs; when an industrialist adds up his production costs, he considers his taxes.

When we consider that tonight the new administration in its budget will probably indicate that about 20, 25 and probably 30 per cent of the gross national revenue will be used by the federal government for its own operation, we wonder what is going on, because it means that the cost of federal government for all the industrialists in Canada is somewhere between 25 and 30 per cent of their production.

Well, Mr. Chairman, if we really want to assist our Canadian industrialists and if we are sincere in establishing this new department, we must definitely reduce taxes which burden our industry.

The second suggestion I wish to make to the hon. members who sit on the treasury benches is, first of all, to make available to our Canadian industries the necessary capital to permit an easier turnover in their inventory, their capitalization and their capital investments.

It is a known fact that at the present time the federal government, through its bond issues and its direct and indirect taxes, has monopolized most of the private capital in our country.

This seizure of the savings capital available to us, Canadian industrialists, that investment capital was used to secure government bonds in order to finance the war, or its own financing, has faced us with an accomplished fact: the private capital available to Canadian industries has been engulfed and absorbed by the government.

The second suggestion that the federal government should accept would be, first of all, to make the required capital available to public enterprise in order to withdraw from public enterprise the private capital which has been frozen there until now.

If our industrialists are to finance their own businesses, then the federal government should not finance its operations at their expense, out of the savings made by Canadians to finance private enterprise.

Canadian industrialists do not have to beg for gifts from the federal government. As far as production is concerned, industrialists are far more competent than we members of the federal government to settle problems concerning their respective production. There is no need for a federal government inspector to point out to each industrialist what are his production problems.

What is needed is the assistance of the federal government to settle economic problems, that is to help to balance the consumers' purchasing power at production level, to make financially possible in Canada what Canadian industrialists have made physically possible by stocking our shelves and our warehouses in Canada as a whole.

Concerning the solution of the production problem, Canadian industrialists are still intelligent enough to deal with that by themselves, without the help of the federal government. But when it comes to the distribution problem, to the marketing of our products, the federal government has a part to play.

I notice in reading the resolution that one of the primary objects of the new department will be to increase productivity. Well, I think that is putting the cart before the horse. It is not by increasing production when we already have surpluses, when we do not know what to do with them, when Canadian consumers cannot purchase the products we have already, that we will settle the problem.

Mr. Chairman, people may poke fun at Social Credit and deride its solution, its "funny money" theory, but in the present economic context, it will be impossible for the new department of industry to really solve the industrial problems to the satisfaction of Canadian industrialists, if the federal government does not find a way to dispose of their goods.

Mr. Chairman, today, in 1963, we note that automation is replacing to an increasing extent our labour force. While members of this house still advocate full employment, it is possible that, within 25 years there will be only industrial production through machinery and automation. So, Mr. Chairman, I think that we must realize that the time has come to ponder on the proposals advocated by Social Credit in order to make financially possible what our Canadian industrialists have made physically possible.

We have no grudge against capitalism. We are not opposed to our industrialists for if we have today, a Canada which may boast that Canadians in general, including industrialists, are each year increasing their productive capacity, it does not depend on the federal government though it tries to get the credit for doing so, but it happens though to individuals, to private enterprise, to every businessman and industrialist who works hard in his own field to produce quality goods of which there is plenty in Canada.

Mr. Chairman, before concluding, I would have some suggestions to make with regard to the amendment which the new minister of industry might introduce with respect to the industrial development bank.

[Mr. Rondeau.]

Everyone knows that, at this time, the industrial development bank, which was created to put some capital at the disposal of industry, only lends funds on real estate, or capital goods, and that this bank from its creation on until today, only has made loans to the biggest corporations in Canada, of which 65 per cent are controlled by American capital.

The industrial development bank has, until now, helped rather the large corporations than smaller business or industry.

It is also well known that it takes a year or a year and a half, to be able to benefit from a loan granted by the industrial development bank and that, on the other hand, that bank never lends anything to corporations which have been less than three years in existence.

This means, therefore, that the industrial development bank mainly helps undertakings which are already launched, whose business is well established, whose name is well known, who have goods on their shelves and which, in a word, are well on the way to success.

Mr. Chairman, I think we should amend the Industrial Development Bank Act so that the bank can help the industries finance their inventories at low interest, since if we were to allow businessmen to finance their inventories at low interest, they would be able to increase their productivity, lower their operation costs and, at the same time, their production costs.

Mr. Chairman, when establishing this new department of industry, which will come to life very soon, the minister must not interfere in the autonomy of the provinces and of the municipalities, in the autonomy of the already existing and numerous industrial groups in the province of Quebec which have rendered valuable services to several of our municipalities throughout the country.

Then, the minister of industry should be called upon to remove the obstacles which stand in the way of industry instead of increasing the foothold of bureaucrats in Canada.

As I said at the outset, if the minister of industry agreed to reduce the tax on industry gradually, that would lower production costs and, by the same token, industry could compete more easily on world markets.

The minister could set up an advisory board to help industry solve the complex problems it is often faced with.

Instead of sending inspectors out in the field to check on industry's bookkeeping, he could offer the services of experts to help industry solve its problems.

Instead of being a nightmare, those experts would lighten the burden which industry has to carry and that would serve the interests of most of those concerned.

(Text):

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, this is one of the much vaunted economic measures which the government has presented to this house and which it is asking to be enacted. To find out what it is all about it is necessary to read very carefully the resolution which is presented and upon which will be based, I assume, the legislation. It is also necessary to read quite carefully what was said by the Prime Minister at the time he introduced the resolution. If you do this, and if you read not only what was said but the implications behind what was said, I am able to say quite definitely that, like all the rest of the measures, stripped of the tinsel of the glittering phrases and the pretentious words it is nothing but a puny and undernourished scarecrow of an economic measure. I do not think there is any question about that. To establish my point I want to deal with just one particular part of the resolution. I think my hon. friend from Bow River has more than adequately disposed of the principal part of the resolution. I want to deal with that part which is set out in section (b) of the resolution, which is:

—to provide for the establishment under the direction of the minister of an area development agency and to provide for the appointment of a commissioner and a deputy commissioner for area development;

To understand that, Mr. Chairman, I think you have to read what the Prime Minister said at the time he introduced the resolution. At page 803 of Hansard he deals with this subject. I am not going to read all his comments, but I would read this particular interpretation of what he considers this legislation can do in so far as these areas are concerned:

It will create in Ottawa a small group of people whose special responsibility, on behalf of the minister of industry, will be to make sure that various federal policies are conceived and co-ordinated in ways which will be of maximum help to the areas of maximum need. Again, the point is to make action more effective by providing a focus for it. In this sense the area development agency will be co-ordinating rather than executive.

Before that, as reported at page 801, when first dealing with the resolution he said this:

The point and purpose of the department of industry, which it is proposed to set up, will be to assist in transmitting these various ideas into effective action.

"These various ideas" relates back to comments he had just finished making about the establishment of an economic council of Canada. Consequently, it is necessary to have recourse to and examine what he said regarding what this particular measure to establish an economic council of Canada will do, because the Prime Minister himself has introduced this subject into the debate. In so far as concerns this particular aspect of the department of industry which it proposes to deal with, the economic council for Canada will make a study of how economic growth, technological change, automation and international economic changes may affect employment and income in Canada as a whole. It will also study how national economic policies could best foster the balanced economic development of all areas of Canada.

In other words, the economic council is going to be a "think" factory over which will preside, so I am told, the President of the Privy Council. Having developed its thoughts, its ideas—by what formula we do not know, whether by spontaneous combustion or by slaughtering a chicken every morning and examining the entrails to get some ideas and thoughts as to what is calculated to be best in helping the people of Canada—these particular studies will then be transmitted, if I correctly interpret what the Prime Minister said, to the commissioner and the deputy commissioner for area development.

Here we are getting, in my humble opinion, a perfect example of the fragmentation of departments and the consequent futility of the kind of government operations which this government is asking the house to pass and is asking the people of Canada to accept. The President of the Privy Council will probably act as a midwife to preside at the birth of these brainstorms.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a rather mixed metaphor.

Mr. Baldwin: The function of the commissioner and deputy commissioner will probably be that of an adopting agency. They will take these ideas probably without ever having collaborated or worked together with the economic council in developing them. The sole function of this agency, as I interpret it and as I interpret what the Prime Minister said, will then be to foist ideas upon other departments of government. I suggest this is completely wrong and not only will be useless but could be disastrous.

I am going to direct the attention of the committee to a very interesting report which has come to my hand. It is a brief to the lieutenant governor in council of the province of Alberta on administrative problems of government, filed by the Alberta section of the Canadian Bar Association on January 10, 1963. It should be of interest to the speaker who preceded me that this follows another report prepared by the Alberta section of the Canadian Bar Association which referred to the proliferation of administrative boards, tribunals, judicial and semi-judicial agencies in the province of Alberta up to a total of approximately 200, I believe—far more than are found in the province of Ontario with four times the population and having dangerous implications with respect to the system of democratic government as we understand it. On page 10 of the report, section 27, the Alberta section of the bar association made this very significant statement:

The section wishes to state emphatically that the essentials of a policy to be administered by a tribunal should be stated explicitly wherever possible in the statute—

Of course, we have not got the bill before us yet and I may be quite wrong in the assumptions I am making, but having read the resolution and what the Prime Minister has said I doubt very much that we will find in the bill explicit terms as to the policies to be administered by this particular agency. If I am wrong I will be only too delighted to say so at the appropriate time, but I doubt very much that I shall be wrong.

The report of the Alberta section of the bar association was based in part on an examination of other studies which had been launched in England, the United States and Canada, in particular the Franks committee in England, a committee in Ontario which I will deal with later, the Acheson report in the United States and the Whyatt report in England. One of the reports upon which its recommendations were based was that of the committee on the organization of government in Ontario. In that report starting at page 10 I find some very interesting comments. It points out that one of the general principles on which government organization should proceed is——that related functions of government should be grouped wherever possible to limit the number of distinct or separate entities. So stated, the principle could lead into quite a lengthy discussion—

And so on.

The principle is stated in order to point up two dangers to sound organizational growth that are perhaps always present where executive responsibilities are expanding in the pattern we have noted.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

In other words, here is a categorical statement that when we attempt to divide various functions between different government entities, departments and boards, which functions could well be concentrated and dealt with under one department, we get into the problem of fragmentation which inevitably leads to difficulties. As a matter of fact, this report on the organization of government in Ontario was prepared by a committee under the chairmanship of the new Minister of Finance. I would certainly suggest to him that when he has completed his present arduous task he should reread it and do a little evangelical work among his colleagues. I think there is an ample and fertile field for him to do so.

As I see it there is the difficulty with this particular program as it is proposed. There is indeed a very serious and urgent need to do something to try to heal the very deep economic wounds on the body of this nation which have persisted for a very long time, but it will not be done by dividing the functions of the organization to deal with them among a number of different departments.

I suggest that we are not without precedent as to how this matter has been dealt with in other countries. In the United Kingdom it was the subject of a long and careful survey over a number of years. Commencing in 1936, I believe, a commission under the chairmanship of Sir Montague Barlow looked into the situation there which was, of course, aggravated in the pre-war years in the United Kingdom. The war intervened and the report was not made until 1944, I believe. In 1945 the report was the subject of legislative enactment in the United Kingdom. It is very interesting to note, particularly in view of the remarks made by the hon. member for Bow River and others, that the legislative enactment of the recommendations of the Barlow report was brought in by a coalition government. It took place before the 1945 election in the United Kingdom and at that time the wartime government under prime minister Churchill, composed of Labour, Conservative and Liberal members, was still in existence. Therefore I would imagine that the act of 1945, known as the distribution of industry act, was probably a synthesis of the views of socialist members of parliament and of those who believed in the principle of private enterprise.

It is also interesting to note that the act passed in 1945 has only been amended twice, once in 1950 and once in 1958. Here you have a situation where a coalition government brought in the legislation which was amended first by a Labour government. It was not a serious amendment, not one which destroyed the fabric and the enunciated purpose of the legislation. Then it was also amended in 1958 by a Conservative government. Here is an example of where a government dealing with this problem has done so effectively and in such a way that the public had a good idea of precisely what was going to be done.

The bill passed in 1945 consisted of 15 short sections of which perhaps five contained the kernel of the recommendations that had been made. To the extent that my studies have enabled me to come to a determination, it would appear that the legislation has worked fairly well. The remarks I am making now might well have been made on second reading of the bill but after bills are introduced it is, of course, difficult to persuade governments that they have made a mistake. I suggest to the minister and his colleagues that before the bill is brought in it would pay them to take a long and careful look at the legislation and the debate which accompanied second reading of the bill in the House of Commons of the United Kingdom, and that they should also look at the amendments of 1950 and 1958. I make this suggestion because here was a situation where the recommendations which would guide the deliberations of the body charged with responsibility for this particular program were brought out into the open in clear, definite and precise terms, quite contrary to what the situation will be, as I see it, if the proposals made by the government here are proceeded with.

The United Kingdom legislation contained precise terms under which an agency could function. The authority was vested in an existing department, and I call this fact to the attention of the minister. The department which was clothed with the responsibility was the board of trade which, of course, corresponds to our Department of Trade and Commerce. The president of the board of trade was the minister who was charged with carrying into effect the terms of the legislation and reporting to parliament. He was given guide lines, he was given directives, so that he and his officials knew precisely how they could operate. What is more important, the members of parliament and the public knew precisely what could be done.

The situation here, Mr. Chairman, I submit is entirely different. The economic council of Canada may formulate plans and study. As I said before, these studies will be conveyed to the commissioner or deputy commissioner of the area development agency. The deputy commissioner or commissioner will then have the responsibility, in the words of the Prime Minister, not for the implementation of the suggested plans but simply for co-ordination. As I understand it this is the nomenclature for trying to persuade other departments of government to implement these studies or plans. I believe this is the difficulty. The commissioner will not participate to any extent in the formulation of the plans. He will not participate in the execution of these plans, and the members of this house will have no idea of the precise intention of the government in its attempts to render assistance to these areas of Canada which need assistance.

As I say, there are but one of two conclusions at which we can arrive in assessing the value of this legislation. It is either window dressing and of no value, no purpose except the political purpose of implementing a pre-election promise or else it is the vesting in several departments of government, operating without any guide line, of an opportunity to interfere in the industrial and economic life of this country. This interference will not take place under the terms of any statute which has been seen by the members of this house, which has been debated by the members of this house or approved by the members of this house. Unless there is an amendment to the resolution or unless there is something in the act which is entirely different from the concept in the resolution this will do nothing except create the commissioner and deputy commissioner of development areas whose functions and duties will be formulated by executive decision. This, I submit Mr. Chairman, is not the type of measure the people of this country desire for dealing with this problem.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, the importance of this resolution has now been brought to the attention of the house as a result of some very able speeches, two of which we have heard within the last few minutes. The hon. member for Bow River dealt with the subject of the increased emphasis on the development of bureaucracy and the hon. member for Peace River has shown that the resolution is faulty in its concept. I propose, Mr. Chairman, to deal with this resolution because I think it is the function of an opposition to examine with the greatest care the legislative measures which are placed before the House of Commons. My experience here indicates that if legislation has been carefully conceived and carefully presented, there is not much loss of time in getting legislative measures through the house.

On the other hand, if legislation is hastily brought forward, trouble occurs. This is the situation with regard to this resolution. When we first glanced at the resolution some time ago, it seemed to make some sense. It was obviously drafted to correspond with an election promise that was made during the campaign. There is widespread and proper interest in the development of industry in this country, and widespread and proper interest in the second part of the resolution which has been dealt with so effectively by the hon. member for Peace River, namely the proposal for an area development agency.

However, the present government is showing signs of too great haste and not enough thought. This is apparent in the present resolution and, I presume, in the bill which they have been busily drafting. It is apparent in other items of legislation which are on the order paper, as we will point out in due course. The great haste of the present government is beginning to show now in careless preparation.

May I point out that everybody in the country has been aware of the first class work being done by the Glassco commission. The present government has been aware of the presentation of the final volume of the Glassco commission report. However, without an intensive study of the Glassco commission findings and recommendations, the government has rushed ahead, placing items on the order paper that run contrary to the recommendations of the Glassco commission. It may be that the government has already decided it is not prepared to accept some of the recommendations of the commission. This is sometimes the fate of royal commissions. However, it seems to me that the government's rush to place legislation on the order paper before the final report was presented indicates undue haste and careless indifference to a very efficient commission which has been examining the functions of the government of Canada for some considerable time and making suggestions for improvements.

We find in the report presented to us just this week, that the Glassco commission has suggested an entirely different role for the Department of Defence Production than the one which is envisaged in this resolution. On page 108 of the report, the commission suggests that the Department of Defence Production become a department of purchasing and supply and that its responsibilities be extended to include procurement for civilian departments and agencies.

It goes on to give other details of how a department of purchasing and supply would be more effective for government purposes but, without paying any attention whatsoever to that report, the government has brought in a resolution to establish a department of industry and amalgamate with it the present functions of the Department of Defence Production.

The second serious weakness was pointed out by the hon. member for Peace River. I have always had a serious objection to the combining of conflicting interests in a resolution or a bill. If the government fails to take the advice which we are offering constructively, and brings in a bill based on this resolution, then on second reading of that bill, when hon. members deal with the principle of the bill, we must ask what the principle is? There is no one set, definite and specific principle involved here. Apparently two things are to be discussed and questioned. One, do we have a department of industry, and second, do we have an area development agency?

In the speeches made on the resolution stage, some hon. members have dealt with the department of industry proposal. Others have dealt with the area development agency; and when we come to second reading of the bill, unless it is redrawn the house will find itself in the position of questioning what it is voting on. Are you voting for a department of industry and an area development agency? If you are in favour of one and not in favour of the other, you are committed to support both or else vote against both, and this makes for very bad legislation.

My suggestion to the government is that there is still time to make a revision, still time to split this resolution into the two parts in which it should have been presented to us originally, and there is still time to bring in a separate bill for an area development agency. As the hon. member for Peace River has pointed out, other countries have had experience along that line.

As the Prime Minister pointed out in his address, the area development agency has a distinctly different role from that of the department of industry. It is supposed to deal with those areas—and I am quoting his words as found at page 803 of Hansard for June 7—> —in which unemployment is heavy and chronic in its nature, where special government action is therefore called for in order to encourage economic development or industrial adjustment.

In those areas the whole question of manpower adjustment is important, and so I do not question the value of this at all. I am simply suggesting there should be a separate bill covering this agency.

When we are dealing with legislation we are dealing with what we hope will be things of some permanency, not just here this year and gone the next. An area development agency might very well receive unanimous support, but there should be a separate bill for it and it should be considered in that light. With the great haste of this government it has fallen into the error of lack of thought and lack of preparation, and I seriously object to its failure to have recourse to the recommendations of the Glassco commission before putting legislation in front of the house.

I do not think anyone is in disagreement with the emphasis which has been placed on the importance of industry. We all realize that the industrial development of Canada is very vital to our growth. When we talk about industrial development, in this particular instance we are talking about the manufacturing industry. A review of manufacturing industry is given in chapter 14 of the Canada Year Book for 1962, and I would like to read one short paragraph on page 599 which is as follows:

> Canada is no longer on the fringes of industrialization but ranks among the world's most important manufacturing countries. The rate of expansion throughout the years has been phenomenal but in the past generation alone Canada has changed from a country producing and exporting mainly primary products to one that is increasingly producing and exporting manufactured goods. Today, manufactures account for about 26 per cent of the value of all goods and services produced and employ a like percentage of the total labour force.

I would like to examine shortly the development of the manufacturing industry in Canada and point out some of the difficulties facing us in regard to it. The hon. member for Bow River has already indicated, in the course of his remarks, that no matter what we do in the way of developing or setting up another department of government we will still face the problem of a manufacturing industry dependant on a relatively small population.

Examining the records of the dominion bureau of statistics hon. members will see that although over the years there has been a considerable development in the number of industrial establishments in Canada, the employment of the labour force in those establishments, has not kept pace as one might have expected. I presume that is due to different methods of manufacturing, the increase in automation and changes in methods of production. So, although we would like to pin our faith on greatly increased employment with an increase in manufacturing, we must carefully consider at the same time the rapid technological advances which are being made and which slow down the increase one might expect in the number of people employed in manufacturing establishments.

May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

The Deputy Chairman: Order. So that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day or the next sitting of the house as the case may be.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock p.m. the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills.

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD ACT

PROVISION FOR CONSTRUCTION OF ELEVATOR AT TISDALE, SASK.

On the order:

Second reading of Bill No. C-8, an act to amend the National Harbours Board Act (Tisdale grain terminal)—Mr. Rapp.

Mr. Speaker: Before putting the motion for second reading of this bill, I desire to recall the statement I made at the beginning of the session when I issued a caveat respecting public bills introduced by private members. I said at that time that it was difficult if not impossible for the Chair to review the provisions of these bills to ensure that they conform to the practices and usages of this house and that the bills would be introduced with the understanding that each would be scrutinized before the time appointed for second readings and that any defects therein would be brought to the attention of the house.

The present measure, as stated in the explanatory notes, proposes that a public grain elevator be constructed at Tisdale, Saskatchewan, as a grain terminus for the national port facilities at Churchill, Manitoba.

According to subsection 2 of section 3 of the National Harbours Board Act the board is "for all purposes of this act, the agent of Her Majesty in right of Canada."

And further, according to subsection 2 of section 10 of the same act "all property acquired or held by the board is vested in Her Majesty in right of Canada."

The purpose of the bill is either to enlarge the powers of the board or to leave them as they are. In both cases, it is out of order.

I will deal first with the second alternative for, if the bill is useless, as I believe it to be, it should not be proceeded with.

The definition of a bill given at page 297 of May's 16th edition is as follows: "A bill is a draft of a legislative proposal."

In my view, according to our practice, a bill, to be acknowledged as such, or, rather as a draft of a legislative proposal, must or may do one or more of four things, namely:

(1) Alter or amend an existing law or laws;

(2) Repeal, in whole or in part, an existing law or laws;

(3) Enact a new provision or provisions of law;

(4) Consolidate, in whole or in part, an existing law or laws.

National Harbours Board Act

Bill C-8 is intituled: "An act to amend the National Harbours Board Act (Tisdale grain terminal)", and if it is to be considered as a legislative proposal it should alter the law which it purports to amend.

Does it do so?

In my opinion, it does not. This bill appears to be merely a statement that the national harbours board may deem necessary the construction, etc., of a public terminal elevator, and it accomplishes nothing whatsoever in a legislative way. It seems to me there is little doubt that this matter should be the subject of a notice of motion and not of a bill.

In the explanatory notes accompanying the bill, it is said that "this bill proposes that a public grain elevator be constructed at Tisdale, Saskatchewan", etc. In my view, this bill does not propose that a public grain elevator be constructed at Tisdale but it states that the board may deem it necessary to construct such a grain elevator, and the word "proposes" in the explanatory notes cannot, in my opinion, be considered as a legislative proposal.

Now for the second point. If this bill really proposes to instruct the board to construct a grain elevator at Tisdale—which I do not believe it does—it is also clearly out of order, as would be a bill ordering the construction of branch lines by the Canadian National Railways, a bill instructing the federal district commission to acquire real estate or a bill directing expenditures by the national centennial administration or the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, to refer but to a few agency or crown corporations.

In a decision rendered by Mr. Speaker Edgar on March 10 and 11, 1898, he stated, inter alia:

> While it is competent for a private individual, without the recommendation of the crown to propose an abstract resolution with reference to grants of money, I think this is not an abstract but a very concrete resolution providing and authorizing the government to incur a specific expenditure.

If this were an authorization to an agent of Her Majesty to construct a certain public grain elevator, which, however, as I have stated, I do not believe it is, such an expenditure of money would have to be initiated by the government under the constitutional checks required by section 54 of the B.N.A. Act and the rules of the house.

On May 9, 1933, Mr. Speaker Black ruled that an amendment involving an expenditure which would be incurred by the Canadian National Railways, was out of order because the railway is owned by the government.

On March 9 and 13, 1871, Mr. Speaker Cockburn ruled a subamendment out of order when it asked the house to commit itself in advance to an expenditure of money as such a proposition should have originated in committee of the house and should have been preceded by a message.

To summarize, I believe this bill simply refers to powers that the board already possesses and to my mind the matter under consideration would be more properly the subject of a notice of motion rather than that of a bill. This measure enacts a pious wish and it is useless to instruct the board to build an elevator as the board already has the right to either build or not to build it.

I regret that in the circumstances I am of the opinion that there is probably justification for ruling this bill out of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I might be permitted to make a suggestion to the house. My suggestion is that the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) might undertake, at the end of the debate today, to withdraw the bill, in which case the house could agree to debate this bill as though it were a notice of motion such as Your Honour has indicated it could perfectly well be. On this basis, the hon. member's wish to bring this matter to the attention of the house will be fulfilled, notwithstanding the technical defect in the way of doing it. The hon. member had the luck of the draw and got his bill near the top of the list and it seems somewhat harsh, now, to deprive him of the opportunity he gained in this way on the grounds of a technical defect such as he, or I, or some other of the less learned members of this house would be more apt to make than would one or two of the more learned among us.

I wonder whether there would be unanimous consent to such a course and whether the hon. member himself would be agreeable to the suggestion I have made.

Mr. Speaker: Before we begin to discuss the bill I should like to know whether the house agrees to give unanimous consent to proceeding in the way suggested.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The house having given unanimous consent to proceeding as suggested by the Secretary of State, I will put the motion, subject to its withdrawal at the end of the discussion or at six o'clock, whichever comes first.

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Of course, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to transgress your ruling. I should like to express my thanks to the leader of the house (Mr. Pickersgill) for presenting my case to hon. members. I should also like to express my thanks to the house for giving me unanimous consent to have this subject debated.

First of all, I should say I was given to understand that this was just a declaratory bill. It is declaratory of one of the powers the board already possesses. It gives no new power to the board to expend money for new purposes. The board already has the power under section 10 of the relevant statute, as is spelled out in the explanatory note, to construct, maintain and operate terminal elevators in Tisdale.

Churchill is a national harbour under the jurisdiction of the board and the board has the administration, management and control of the work. All these proposals of the harbour board are subject to the approval or veto of the governor in council, so I did not consider this to be a private member's money bill.

However, I should like to say that this bill is of national importance, not only in regard to the building of a terminal to expedite shipment of grain to Churchill, but because we in the west are faced with another problem, the abandonment of railroads. In this regard the building of a terminal in Tisdale would to a certain extent alleviate the situation.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to bring to your attention the seriousness of the case. For instance, the railroads are presenting a brief to the board of transport commissioners in regard to this abandonment of which I have spoken, which will affect 13,500 farmers in Saskatchewan. These 13,500 Saskatchewan farmers will be deprived of 1,274 miles of railroad, and as a result many grain elevators will not be used any more. As a matter of fact, approximately 40 million bushels of grain, taken as an average over the last 10 years, have passed over these railroads. When I said that this is a question of national importance, I think it is the responsibility not only of the grain companies to provide additional space for storage, but it is also the responsibility of the government. We all remember the years of surplus grain and how we in the west were affected by quotas. In view of that I do not think we can leave it to the grain companies to provide this additional storage space. The government and we in this parliament must see that the farmers in the west will not be put in an impossible position.

As far as this terminal in Tisdale is concerned, another purpose would be served by its construction. Over the years we in the west have always thought that the route to Churchill for the shipment of grain had not been used to its full capacity. Farmers could save from 6 to 7 cents a bushel on freight, because this is the shortest route to Europe. Even our customer, Great Britain, would be able to save about three cents, because it is about 1,100 miles shorter to use the Hudson bay route instead of shipping grain through the lakehead. In other words, a total of about ten cents could be saved.

Another point I should like to stress is that during the years of surplus, although we had two terminals, one at Saskatoon and one at Edmonton, they were never used to full capacity; they were used only to half their capacity. The reason for that was that the grain companies found it much more economical to store their grain at the lakehead at their own elevators, thus receiving more handling charges and storing charges from the federal government, which amounted to as much as $45 million to $50 million a year. I submit that we should not only ship more grain through the port of Churchill, but that the government should see that if this question of rail abandonment is proceeded with the farmers should be provided with government elevators and terminals, not only at Saskatoon and Edmonton but at Tisdale, and thus the cost of storage will be much less than it is at the present time.

The reason I submit that Tisdale requires a terminal is this. A few years ago, Mr. Speaker, the government of the day sent out officials to investigate the possibility of constructing a grain terminal between the western provinces and Churchill, particularly in the northern section of the country, and Tisdale was named as one of the places which would be very suitably located. In fact it is only about 600 miles from the port of Churchill. The Prescott terminal and the Port Colborne terminal serve the same purpose, but grain shipments from there to Montreal, Quebec and Halifax have to cover a far greater distance than the 600 miles from Tisdale to Churchill.

I should also like to say that Tisdale is the centre of the grain growing area where most of the best grain is grown. A terminal at Tisdale would serve a good purpose, because many farmers are going into livestock production, and with grain being cleaned at the terminal it could be sold back to the farmers. At the present time all the grain going out to Churchill from the elevators is uncleaned. Livestock is developing into a large industry in Tisdale. Last year, for example, approximately $2 million worth of livestock was sold at auction, just through the stockyards. But what I am most concerned with is that if we in this country are again confronted with a surplus grain position we must have storage places. We cannot depend entirely on the grain companies to provide us with the storage; the government must take the responsibility. We cannot escape our responsibilities in this regard, because as I said at the outset if this 1,200 miles of railroad is taken out 13,500 farmers will be affected, which would mean that we would have to have a storage elevator and a terminal at Tisdale, from which we could ship our grain to Churchill. At the present time there is only an average of about 20 million bushels going out of Churchill, but people who know something about the situation say that this figure could be increased two or three times if our grain companies or the wheat board agree to put more grain through Churchill. If this were done our customers in Britain would benefit very much, as well as the Scandinavian countries.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, although this bill, as you have said, has to be withdrawn, I can assure you, even though it is withdrawn, that we cannot solve the problem just by so doing. Steps must be taken by the government, either now or later on. The problems of storage and abandonment must be solved before it is too late. I understand the railroads have already applied to the board of transport commissioners for permission to go ahead with this abandonment, and I should like to stress that serious consideration should be given the matter. Mr. Speaker, I had much more to say about this bill, but I know many hon. members are interested in the problem and I am sure the house would wish to hear their comments.

So before six o'clock I will withdraw the bill as you have suggested, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, rising to participate in this debate, as this is the first occasion upon which I have taken part in a debate in this house may I take this opportunity of congratulating you, sir, even if belatedly, on your election as Speaker. I am sure that you will be a most distinguished Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sharp: I am not very familiar with the history of this chamber, but it must be very rare indeed for a minister of the crown to make his maiden speech on a private member's bill and to make it on budget day when he has no chance whatever of getting any publicity. I do so, however, because this bill relates to the improvement of grain handling facilities on the prairies, a matter in which I have had a continuing interest throughout my career and of course in which, as Minister of Trade and Commerce, I have a very lively interest today.

It has been my good fortune to have had a wide experience both in business and in government, and ever since I was of the tender age of 14 years I have been connected in one way or another with the handling of western grain; the only exception was the four years that I spent in the utility business. When I assumed my present office and the Canadian wheat board was retransferred to the jurisdiction of the Minister of Trade and Commerce I felt as if I were once again on familiar ground. It has been a source of great gratification to me, sir, to be able to work once again with my friends in the Canadian wheat pools and their grain handling organizations, with the united grain growers and with the private trade, all of whom have contributed to the development of the present facilities for handling and selling Canadian grain. May I say, sir, that since taking office I have been very much impressed by the evident desire of all these groups to play their part in improving the machinery for the marketing of Canadian grain. I am happy that this is so, because there is certainly much to be done and, if I may say so, sir, it cannot be done only by government or even only by the Canadian wheat board; we need the co-operation of all those in the country who are concerned with the efficient handling of Canadian grain.

This is not an occasion, sir, for my entering into an extended discussion on Canada's grain marketing situation, and I am sure you would stop me if I were to attempt to do this. But I hope I may be permitted in this, my first speech in this house, to make a brief reference to the grain marketing situation as it was when we assumed office a relatively short time ago. I do not intend to bore hon. members with a long statistical statement; instead, I would like to quote just three sentences from a document that will be familiar particularly to hon. members from agricultural areas in the west as well as in the east, namely the recent submission of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture to the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) on May 8, just about two weeks after this government took office. The sentences I would like to quote are under the heading "Grain policy" and they read as follows:

> The first requirement of western grain policy is of course to take all possible measures to maintain and increase exports of wheat.

I would like the house to mark the following words:

> There has been a decline in exports in the present year, and the movement at opening of navigation has been disappointing. This situation gives cause for real concern and the most aggressive measures and constant attention to export possibilities are required.

Now, sir, from some of the comments made in this house by hon. members opposite one might have concluded that when they left office exports of grain were improving; that sales were high; that everything was in good shape. I put these words on record now in my first speech to make it clear, not from what I say but from the authority of an organization for which I am sure everyone in this house has a very high regard, that at the time we took office the situation gave cause for real concern.

I would like to assure hon. members that the Canadian wheat board, which is the agency concerned with the marketing of Canadian grain, is being at least as aggressive as it was or as it has ever been in selling Canadian grain, and that it is getting at least as much support from this government as it did from this government's predecessors. I hope that with the support of all those concerned with the marketing of grain we shall be able to reverse the downward trend in grain exports that was well under way when we took office. With those few remarks, sir, I would like to turn to the substance of the—

Mr. Pascoe: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the minister a question, please?

Mr. Sharp: Certainly.

Mr. Pascoe: The minister said in his statement that exports are falling now. I recall that the former minister of agriculture said that it did not really matter what exports were like at the moment; what mattered was how they were at the end of the crop year. Could the minister indicate whether at the end of this crop year the marketings will be anywhere near the record of last year?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we will have had so little to do with the marketing of wheat in this crop year which, as the hon. member knows, ends on July 31, that in spite of the very best efforts we could make I doubt very much whether we could overcome the very serious problem that faced us when we took office. But we will be doing our best.

Now, sir, may I turn to the terms of the bill that is before us and make a few comments thereon. As the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) explained to us, the purpose of this bill is to promote—if I may put it that way—the building of a public terminal elevator at Tisdale, Saskatchewan, with a minimum storage capacity of 5 million bushels. I feel that I cannot support this bill, for three main reasons. First, the building of a terminal elevator at Tisdale is not likely to increase exports of Canadian grain, as I shall explain in due course; second, the building of this elevator would probably have the result of increasing the cost of marketing Canadian grain; third, if one were to look at the grain situation in general I think he would come to the conclusion that there are other places in Canada where elevators could be constructed with greater advantage to the movement of Canadian grain.

May I speak now, sir, first to the point as to whether this elevator is likely to increase the exports of grain from Canada. As the hon. member has pointed out, the purpose of this elevator would be to increase the volume of exports through the port of Churchill because this elevator would be located at the end of the Hudson bay railway. As he has acknowledged and as is well known, the port of Churchill is really one of the great models of efficiency in our grain handling situation and, if I may be permited to say so, I think one of the reasons is that the elevator there was built by one of the greatest Canadians of all time, the late Right Hon. C. D. Howe. In a short period of approximately 10 weeks about 20 million bushels of grain have been exported recently from this port.

As the hon. member has said in his explanatory notes and as he has repeated again today, the reason for building an elevator at Tisdale would presumably be to clean wheat so that it could be moved through the port of Churchill with greater dispatch. This is one of the purposes. The theory is that this would mean a greater volume of wheat moving through the port. However, Mr. Speaker, this reasoning is based on the assumption that the volume of wheat moved through Churchill depends entirely on actions taken within Canada, that it is in Canada that the impediments, such as they are, exist.

As the hon. member is aware, export sales out of Churchill have been running at around 20 million bushels annually for the past several years. This is all shipped out during August, September and October, and this period immediately follows the harvest period in the United Kingdom and Europe where our present market for Churchill grain exists. As a result storage facilities in those countries are usually filled with their domestic grain at that time. There is, therefore, a definite limit to the volume of wheat that can be absorbed by the European market during the time that it is convenient to ship wheat from Churchill. The only exception would be if storage facilities were built in Europe to store Churchill grain, and this would be very expensive. According to the Canadian wheat board the volume of exports out of Churchill is at or near its maximum level until such time as new outlets can be found for Churchill wheat.

The second reason that I find myself doubtful about the wisdom of building this elevator at Tisdale at the present time is that I think, as I said before, that it would tend to increase the over-all cost of marketing Canadian wheat. During the busiest part of the

Churchill season there are times when it is necessary to ship grain that has already been cleaned to speed up loading in the port. When this occurs the elevator at Saskatoon is used for this purpose, and last year the Canadian wheat board moved about 1,400,000 bushels of wheat—

Mr. Rapp: May I ask a question?

Mr. Sharp: Certainly.

Mr. Rapp: That is exactly what the trouble was over the years when we had surpluses. Instead of the wheat board filling government elevators, they filled the elevators of others who handled their own grain to the lakehead so that they could save money. At that time I think it was the fault of the government, and the two elevators in Edmonton and Saskatoon were never filled to capacity. That is the reason why only 600,000 bushels were exported through Saskatoon annually.

Mr. Sharp: May I say that the point that I was going to come to was that these 1,400,000 bushels of wheat that were cleaned in Saskatoon cost the Canadian wheat board 3½ cents per bushel. This cost is made up of a stop-off charge by the railways of 3 cents per hundredweight or about 1.8 cents per bushel, an elevation charge of a cent and a half and an inspection and weighing charge of $4 a car or about two tenths of a cent per bushel. Naturally because of this added cost the board tries to minimize as far as possible the necessity of moving wheat from Saskatoon but in order to maximize the total Churchill movement it is necessary to make use of Saskatoon. The building of an elevator at Tisdale would thus be a duplication of an elevator already in existence, use of which adds to the cost of handling western Canadian wheat and the use of which is minimized to the maximum extent practicable.

The final reason for my doubts about the wisdom of this proposal is that if additional elevator space is to be built in Canada it seems to me it could be erected in a more favourable location. Hon. members know that one of the great changes that has taken place in the movement of grain has been the development of markets in the Far East.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to interrupt the minister but he referred to a more favourable location. This is the reason we in the northern part of Saskatchewan would like to see a terminal built there, because during the surplus years we never received the quotas that other parts of the prairies received. Up to the middle of June we were only able to deliver 2 bushels per acre while others were on an open quota. This is the reason we are entitled to a government elevator in northern Saskatchewan.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Sharp: I thank the hon. gentleman for reiterating his position. I was dealing with the problem from the point of view of the interests of grain handling generally, which I think must be a viewpoint that is shared by him as well as by other hon. members from western Canada. I may say to him that even the fact that his bill was on the order paper has prompted some requests from other parts of the prairies which feel that they have at least as good a case as he has.

However that may be, in my concluding few minutes I should like to make a few remarks as to why, granted that everybody would like to have a terminal elevator in their home town, I am sure there might be better places from the point of view of increasing sales of Canadian grain than Tisdale or some other places. I am not singling out Tisdale particularly. There are two movements, of course, that have developed enormously. One of them is the movement out of the west coast to our new markets in the Far East, and there is a case for increasing our grain handling facilities on the west coast. Then, of course, there is the big market for feed grain which has developed recently in eastern Canada. There might be something to be said for increased storage facilities there, even though there has been a big increase already.

Finally, may I say a word about the other point made by the hon. member, and that is branch line abandonment rationalization. In the Tisdale area, there are, as the hon. member knows, several branch lines that could be subjects for abandonment and he has reason to be concerned about this possibility. It could be that if some of the low traffic density lines are closed down the country elevators along the lines that are abandoned would be closed. The implications of this, if I may say so to my hon. friend, are that a town such as Tisdale would likely be one of the places where storage capacity would be increased.

In Tisdale there are already four elevators with a total storage capacity of 344,000 bushels, and I am sure my hon. friend is very proud of this. If the logical pattern is followed I think Tisdale will do well. I am not making a prediction about this. I am just suggesting that it would be logical if there were greater concentration in Tisdale.

May I say a word about the trend that is now going on in western Canada with respect to elevators. I think all hon. members from prairie constituencies will agree that the modern trend is toward larger and well equipped country elevators. This permits greater over-all efficiency in handling, and because of this prospective railway line abandonment on the prairies represents both a problem and an opportunity. The problem, of course, is how to increase the efficiency of the whole system with the least possible interference and damage to existing investment and institutions. I can assure hon. members that the government has had several useful conversations already with the grain handling organizations. My colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith) is engaged in consulting not only the grain handling organizations but all of those who are concerned with this very important problem. I feel quite confident, Mr. Speaker, that in these consultations the interests of Tisdale will not be neglected.

Mr. Fisher: May I ask the minister a question? When he referred to branch line abandonment he used the words, "damage to investment". I think those were his words. May I take it from that that the problem which has been put before the government by the grain organizations and by the communities involved is that there should be some recompense for damage to investment, and is the government considering some kind of formula or trying to arrive at some basis on which this could be determined?

Mr. Sharp: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have not been the recipient of all these representations, so I am unable to satisfy my hon. friend's curiosity. They have been directed to the Minister of Transport, and he has not yet consulted with me. I am not really familiar, I am sorry to say, with the nature of the representations that have been made.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) may wonder why I am so interested in a place called Tisdale, Saskatchewan. If I may just take a moment, I should like to explain to him that after the war I practised law in a place called Tisdale, Saskatchewan. I had two very fine legal partners, there, one by the name of Earl Van Blaricom and the other was D. H. H. Hamilton, the brother of the former minister of agriculture in one of the Liberal governments. Both of them were Liberals. After spending six or seven years in this area, I feel I should like to join with the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) in support of this bill which has now turned into a motion.

I do not know whether or not the minister has had the experience of visiting what we call the Carrot river valley, which is one of the finest farming areas anywhere in western Canada. When I first went to Tisdale and met these two legal partners, both of whom came into the area about 1918 or 1919, the area of northeastern Saskatchewan was practically solid bush. This bush has been cleared away and there are now thousands of acres of the finest land anywhere in western Canada. In fact, this area has been called the garden of the prairies. It was in the Carrot river valley adjacent to Tisdale that a farmer by the name of Kermit Purdy brought rapeseed to western Canada for the first time. It is now used as an edible oil and for other industrial purposes. The rapeseed yield in this area runs to about 1,700 pounds per acre. During the war oil was a very important commodity for our defence projects and at that time rapeseed brought about six cents a pound. This very important farm area surrounds Tisdale, which is on the branch line to the city of Prince Albert. People in this house know where the city of Prince Albert is. The other point on that branch line is Hudson Bay Junction, which is now known as the town of Hudson Bay.

The branch line to which I am referring is the one that carries grain to the export market and is known as the Churchill line. There has been an association in that area for 20 or 25 years called the Hudson Bay association which has as its purpose the promotion of the greater use of this line for exporting grain through the port of Churchill to Liverpool, Great Britain. This is the shortest route from western Canada to Great Britain, our most important purchaser of western grain. I, therefore, join with the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale in requesting the government to give this matter serious attention.

I cannot go along with the Minister of Trade and Commerce when he says that Tisdale would not be a good site for an elevator. Tisdale is really the centre of a big farming area. It is the gateway to that area which produces the cereals I have mentioned and would make an excellent place for storage.

Then, too, we are moving into a new era in western Canada in connection with grain handling. At one time there were grain elevators within a few miles of every farm, and the only way the grain got to market was through these local elevators. With the abandonment of railway branch lines in western Canada and the development of more efficient trucks we find that today trucks will take 500 bushels of grain from the farm to the elevator. It seems to me that we are moving into a period in western Canada which will mean the disappearance of the local elevator, at one time the landmark on the prairies. We will have the kind of elevators described by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale. In fact, he may be the first member from western Canada to put his finger on this new revolution which will take place in the marketing of grain. I am sure that farm organizations, the Saskatchewan wheat pool, the Alberta wheat pool and the united grain growers, would be the first to go along with my remarks.

I should like to make a personal reference to my association in this house with the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale. I am sure that all hon. members who have been here since 1957 or 1958 share my belief that there is no member in the House of Commons —I say this without reservation—who works harder for his constituents than the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale. I think it is well to recall too, his maiden speech in this House of Commons. At that time he said he belonged to a certain ethnic group. When he came to this country he never hoped he would achieve as much as he did. When he walked towards the House of Commons, as a new member he said that the statue of Sir Wilfrid Laurier seemed to look down at him and say, "You now have arrived". He has arrived. He has done an excellent job not only for his constituency but for western Canada.

In spite of the fact that this is the maiden speech by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I want to take sharp issue with him in so far as the export of grain is concerned. If there is one subject about which I know something, it is this subject of grain, since I was raised in a wheat farming area known as Rosetown, Saskatchewan. I know the problems that the farmers have had over the years, and I know something about the problems of marketing grain. When the Liberal government was defeated in 1957 there were 700 million bushels of surplus wheat piled up on the farms, in old farmhouses and other old buildings, and at the lakehead. The quotas were as low as two or three bushels per acre. I do not believe the Minister of Trade and Commerce can make a case today for himself or for the Liberal government, because with a new Liberal government the farmers of western Canada can look again to the days when they will have surplus grain piled up on their farms. That is what he has promised them.

Not so long ago, after this government took office, I picked up a newspaper and noticed that the new Minister of Trade and Commerce had said that he was not going to take the same steps as the former minister of agriculture, the Hon. Alvin Hamilton. He said, "I am not going to China; I am not going to Hong Kong." He was going to leave it to the bureaucrats to look after this matter. I say to this new Minister of Trade and Commerce that he will have to be responsible to the farmers of western Canada for keeping the grain moving as it has moved for the last five or six years under a Conservative government.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Sharp: May I ask the hon. gentleman a a question? Is he suggesting that the former minister of agriculture signed the agreement for the sale of wheat to China?

Mr. Woolliams: Well, Mr. Speaker, I was not a member of the cabinet. I do not know what was signed. I have not seen these documents.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: You may laugh now, some of you people from Toronto, but you will not laugh later. I know what Toronto thinks. They think that the public treasury pours out money to the farmers. Let me answer the question. I would say this to him. Does the Minister of Trade and Commerce deny that the figures for the export of wheat from Canada under the Conservative administration, over a five year average period, were greater than in any five year period since the institution of the Canadian wheat board? I have those figures in my possession, although I do not have them with me at the moment. I put them on the record the last time I spoke, and I can say that never did a Liberal administration, under the old regime of Jimmy Gardiner, export more wheat.

Then of course we had C. D. Howe who said to the farmers, "It is your job; you look after it." The farmers remember those words. They remember the great meeting in Winnipeg area when Mr. Howe forgot himself and told the president of the Liberal association, who was a farmer himself, to sit down and listen, that he, C. D. Howe, would tell them how to do it. Let's face it. The Liberal administration was never able to export more than 300 million bushels of wheat in any one year.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is misinformed, and I suggest that he look up the figures.

Mr. Woolliams: I have not got the figures with me but I will put them on the record. I did not bring them with me because this debate came on at five o'clock and I did not want to interrupt the Minister of Trade and Commerce. But, I think he used this bill to pad the way for a new era in western Canada, an era of decline in the export of cereals from western Canada to world markets. When the figures are put on the record he will find that, with our home consumption and export markets, we were able to sell I believe 370 million bushels of wheat in one particular year. There is no question about that and today the farmers of western Canada have a degree of prosperity that they have not had for many years, brought about by the Conservative government.

Now, I want to answer some of the hon. members from Toronto. They are the kind of boys who say that the money that comes from the Canadian wheat board to the farmers in western Canada comes from the treasury of Canada. I would point out to them that the Canadian wheat board operates a pooling arrangement, and the second and third payments are payments that arise because the wheat has been sold at a higher price than the initial price paid at the time the farmers delivered it to the elevators. There is no give-away program for the farmers. They are independent people, and they will agree with the remarks I made this afternoon earlier in another debate.

When the Secretary of State rose this afternoon and, with his usual graciousness, said as the bill was out of order we could now turn it into a notice of motion, I thought this was a new era. I said there was a man I could be most fond of. Then I realized he had a little agreement with the Minister of Trade and Commerce to use private members' hour to get the fact across that there was going to be a problem in marketing wheat.

Mr. Whelan: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Woolliams: Certainly. Coming from you I would enjoy a question.

Mr. Whelan: Would the hon. member say if the government he supported is going to take credit for the drought in China too?

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, there is a real intelligent member. He is talking about drought in China. We have had droughts in China and India before, but the thing is that the aggressive Conservative government went out to China and sold grain to feed the people—

Mr. Sharp: On a point of privilege—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Woolliams: I only have a few minutes left, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Sharp: I rise only on a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I had every intention of participating in this debate, and had ever since the hon. member put his bill on the order paper. I felt there would have been disappointment if we had not an opportunity of debating it, but if anyone in the house had taken exception to this procedure I would not have had this opportunity.

Mr. Woolliams: I do not know if that is a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, but I do know our government went out and found the markets. It was not like the previous administration which lost the grain markets, which allowed the wheat and other cereals to pile up on the farms. So far as the Minister of Trade and Commerce is concerned I do not know what he has to do with it. Probably he does not understand the problems of the western and eastern farmers.

Mr. Walker: You are the only one.

Mr. Woolliams: In fact the Liberals have only one member from western Canada. He lives in the city of Calgary where he is the mayor. We have noticed he is often absent from the house, and he is probably not able to give this the interest that he might.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I suggest to the hon. member that he attempt to limit his remarks to the subject matter that is now before the house.

An hon. Member: That is very hard for him.

Mr. Woolliams: I was just going to say this: with the absence of the Minister of Agriculture that is the reason no doubt they assessed the situation and the wheat board moved back under the Department of Trade and Commerce, and that is the reason I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce made his statement with reference to the fact that he was not going to go overseas and try to negotiate other deals in wheat.

(Translation):

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I think that the previous speaker has taken much time. I even thought that he would kill the bill of the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp).

Nevertheless, I congratulate the sponsor of Bill C-8 proposing that a public grain elevator be constructed at Tisdale. However, such an urgent need surprises me because the member's government has had all the opportunities to treat Saskatchewan well. Was the member so shy with his leader that he could not state his requirements? It is a farce, since the opposition has just been turned out of office, which seemed too heavy a load to carry.

The hon. member speaks about a possible reduction of export prices. We, of Quebec, agree with this, but we still wonder why the Conservative party did not take action along that line.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

(Text):

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, pursuant to the agreement entered into with regard to my bill I ask leave of the house to withdraw it. I have done this very reluctantly, but this one hour debate was not a funeral for my bill. It was only the birth of a new baby that I will discuss much more in the hours to come.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the hon. member unanimous consent to withdraw the bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and bill withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, and it being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved:

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

He said: Mr. Speaker, somebody was kind enough this afternoon to give me my horoscope for today, which reads: "Don't worry over money matters". I do not think that is an appropriate horoscope for tonight, because in delivering tonight the first budget of this new government I am aware that it is my duty to present the facts as we found them on taking office. It is also my duty to ask hon. members and the Canadian public to face up to these facts and, having done this, it is my further duty to indicate the kind of measures which are needed to put our national affairs in order once again.

This then will be a "face the facts" budget. If we face the facts, and if we conduct ourselves accordingly, we in Canada can look forward to an exciting and prosperous future. If we are afraid to face reality, if we are afraid to take the actions and the decisions that are called for, then the consequences cannot be long delayed.

I shall begin my remarks this evening with a few words about the importance of the annual budget presentation and then go on to discuss the condition of our national economy.

We on this side of the house take the budget very seriously. We look upon it as an annual occasion of great national importance. It is an occasion when the government is expected to give to parliament and to the people a clear appraisal of the nation's financial and economic condition. It is an occasion when the government must outline the short and long term economic and financial policies it proposes to pursue to overcome the problems and to convert the prospects into realities. Above all, it is an occasion initiating a grand scrutiny by parliament of the financial affairs of the nation. It is an occasion which should not and must not be avoided or delayed.

It is now almost exactly two years since there was a budget debate in this house. I remind hon. members that in the fiscal year which ended last March 31, the estimates for only six departments were called in this chamber, and even they were not approved. We have been financing for far too long a period on interim supply and Governor General's warrants. In a period of 14 months over $5 billion has been spent by the government of Canada with no parliamentary authorization other than warrants and interim supply votes.

In the last parliament, no one was more critical of this state of affairs than we who are now on this side of the house. We protested vigorously in that parliament, and when it was dissolved we took the question to the people. The results indicated their conviction that an accounting before parliament for the nation's financial and economic affairs was due, and indeed long overdue. It is that accounting which will be presented tonight.

The year 1962 was a remarkable one in Canada's economic history. It was marked by an exchange crisis which followed upon five years of economic stagnation. It was also marked by the adoption of a fixed rate of exchange for the Canadian dollar, an action which was taken three weeks after the government of the day had indicated that it was not its policy to do so.

Despite the exchange crisis, and perhaps partly as a result of the devaluation which had been resisted for so long, the year 1962 was for Canada an improvement over 1961. This was evident in the industrial part of our economy, while in agriculture, too, incomes were up and acreage under cultivation increased. Details are to be found in the budget papers tabled last Tuesday.

It is encouraging to record that the prospects for the current year are also favourable both in agriculture and in industry.

An hon. Member: What about prices?

Mr. Gordon: I will come to that. But the improvement we are now experiencing leaves no room for complacency. Our rate of growth over the past six years as a whole has been quite inadequate. We have had a falling rate of new investment. We have had chronic deficits in our international balance of payments. And most important, we have had chronic unemployment.

All of these problems are interrelated; if we can cure one, we shall relieve the others. For example, our international balance of payments deficit on current account has averaged almost $1.2 billion annually in the past six years. This has meant that we have been importing goods and services which we should have produced at home, and that we have failed to find export markets for goods which we should have sold abroad. If this situation had been corrected, the increased production in Canada might well have meant not less than 150,000 more jobs and our unemployment problem would have been reduced accordingly.

The added investment needed to provide this increased production and employment, and the increased production and employment itself, would all have produced higher government revenues. This would have been reflected in reduced budgetary deficits.

I could go on to describe our difficulties and what we propose to do about them strictly in terms of economics. But perhaps hon. members will forgive me if I speak in more human terms tonight, and about the human tragedies that inevitably result when economic conditions are unsatisfactory and our national affairs mismanaged.

The grim experiences of continuing unemployment are to be found in nearly every part of Canada, in nearly every constituency. Most members of this house know of men and women and of whole families whose lives have been warped and whose futures impaired by long periods when they were looking for non-existent jobs.

My own riding of Toronto-Davenport is a high unemployment area. Many of the people who live there came to Canada quite recently, and they are not fully familiar with either the language or the customs of their new community. They face frustrating disadvantages in their battle for a decent life. Similar conditions I suggest prevail in most other constituencies across the country.

The prevalence of unemployment is a wrong that must be righted. Any Canadian, young or old, who wants a job must be able to find one. Any Canadian must be able by his work and his savings to make his own direct contribution to the well-being of his family, his community and his country. This is a basic tenet of Liberal philosophy. It is an aim which we are dedicated to achieve.

It is the view of this government that unemployment is the most serious domestic problem facing Canada today. I shall review briefly the steps which we are taking to combat it.

A measure has been placed before the house providing for the creation of a department of industry. This new department will contribute to the long term solution of our national economic problems by actively promoting more employment opportunities in our manufacturing industries. Its aim will be to see that we produce more manufactured goods for export and for our own domestic needs, and that we process more of our natural resources in this country.

The minister-designate of the proposed department has already held preliminary discussions with officers of the automobile industry, both the car assemblers and the parts manufacturers. These discussions have been designed to ensure that we produce in Canada a larger volume of automobile parts and components for incorporation in Canadian cars or for export. The value of our net imports of automobile parts and components this year will probably exceed $400 million. The objective in the years ahead is to reduce very greatly these net imports. The government is counting on the full co-operation of the industry in realizing this objective.

These discussions with the automobile industry will be followed by discussions with the officers of other Canadian industries designed to achieve similar results. In the search for new employment and increased economic strength we shall not be satisfied with half measures. Wherever major changes in our industrial structure are found to be necessary, we shall energetically promote them.

It is important that the new employment we are seeking to achieve in the Canadian economy, and the new investment required to produce it, be directed wherever practicable to areas of slower growth and surplus manpower. To this end the special area development agency within the department of industry will seek to encourage new investment in areas where it will do the most good.

The Atlantic provinces are an area of slower growth which for many years has not shared adequately in our economic progress. The house will be asked to strengthen the Atlantic development board through the provision of a substantial capital fund. This fund will enable the board to promote capital investment on its own initiative.

The full effect on the economy of the important measures I have been discussing will not be felt for a few years. Loans made by the proposed municipal development and loan board are intended to have a more intermediate effect. Their impact should begin to make an impression within six months to a year from the time when parliament approves the legislation contemplated. These loans should result in a marked increase in social investment and in the employment it involves.

As a further means of combating unemployment, I shall propose later this evening a number of measures to promote new capital investment by providing special financial incentives in the private sector of the economy.

In addition to these long term and intermediate term measures, I should refer to the various proposals the government is making for providing more jobs this coming winter.

We have advanced a proposal to increase the percentage of winter works assistance in designated areas. This measure is also designed to reduce unemployment by promoting investment in social capital, and to do it in areas where and at times when unemployment is most severe.

Earlier this week my colleague the Minister of Labour announced that he would propose a program designed to reduce winter unemployment by encouraging house construction in the months when activity in the construction industry reaches its seasonal low. This program will apply to rural as well as to urban housing.

The minister also announced that he would propose the expansion of the existing program for retraining the unemployed in cooperation with the provinces. And he announced that a new program would be proposed to encourage basic training, increased apprenticeship training, and the retraining of those presently employed but whose jobs are threatened by industrial change.

There is one aspect of the unemployment problem that is of particular concern to the government. That is the persistent difficulties encountered by older workers in securing steady employment after they have been out of work for some time. An improvement in general employment levels and the correction of regional unemployment problems do not seem to be enough to overcome these difficulties. Something more is needed to look after the problem of this hard core of our unemployed.

The house will therefore be asked to provide by way of supplementary estimate for the payment of a special allowance to all employers, other than governments or municipalities, who increase the number of their employees this winter in a specified manner over a base level. The allowance will be paid on employment of workers aged 45 or older who have been out of work for six of the previous nine months and who are not in current receipt of unemployment insurance benefits or pensions. The allowance will be conditional on the employer providing the worker with a significant amount of approved training. It will be paid at the rate of 50 per cent of wages or $75 a month, whichever is less, for each month of employment and will continue for up to 12 months. It is proposed that this program apply to workers hired between November 1 this year and January 31 next year.

Hon. members are only too well aware of the costs to this country of allowing people to remain unemployed, particularly for extended periods. These costs include substantial welfare payments. They also include far more important costs in terms of production forgone in our economy and in terms of misery and frustration for the individual concerned.

The proposal I have just advanced to deal with prolonged hard core unemployment is a novel one, and it is not without difficulties and risks. It will require careful administration, and adequate safeguards against its abuse will be provided. It is directed specifically to assist that group of men and women in our society most in need of a chance to earn a living for themselves and their families. These people deserve their chance.

While our major domestic problem in Canada today is unemployment, we must not overlook the problems which accompany it. The most serious of these is the continuing deficit in our current balance of international payments. The budgetary deficits of the federal government are also a matter of concern.

In dealing with our balance of payments, let me summarize first our current international transactions for the past ten years.

During that period our imports of goods, including both capital goods and consumer goods, were $2 billion more than our exports of goods in the period. In the case of travel we spent $1.4 billion more abroad than visitors spent here. Steeply rising capital imports in the form of foreign direct and indirect investment led to interest and dividend payments abroad that were $4.2 billion greater than our receipts of this type. Other transactions further increased our deficit by $2.5 billion.

The result in the aggregate was that our sales of goods and services abroad and our foreign investment income were $10 billion less than our purchases and payments.

The implications of this deficit have been a matter of grave concern in Canada. They have been extensively discussed in the press, by economists, by businessmen and by the general public. There is a clearly recognized danger that if deficits continue at this rate, they will lead to a growing measure of control of our economy passing abroad. There is a danger that in allowing these deficits to continue we are sacrificing our birthright, the birthright which our forefathers laboured so hard to hand on to us.

An analysis of the problem shows clearly that if we are to overcome it we must centre our attention on our merchandise trade. Historically we have had a continuous and substantial deficit balance in our trade with the United States, both in merchandise and in invisible items. This has been to a greater or less extent offset by a surplus in our trade with the rest of the world. In the past two years we have had small over-all trade surpluses.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gordon: I am not quite clear why hon. gentlemen opposite are so pleased about this; we should have had far greater trade surpluses.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gordon: Over-all trade surpluses must not only continue; they must be increased substantially by increasing exports and efficiently replacing imports. Such an increase will not only help to solve our balance of payments problem but will also help to solve the unemployment problem that goes with it.

We must now consider the growing series of budgetary deficits of the federal government. In nine of the 11 immediate post-war years there were annual budget surpluses, and the net debt of the federal government was reduced by $2.4 billion. In more recent years, however, under conditions of slowed economic growth and high unemployment, our revenues have been insufficient to meet expenditures. In the past six years there have been large deficits and our net debt has increased by $2.9 billion, almost $3 billion.

I do not propose, Mr. Speaker, to enter into a detailed discussion of the pros and cons of deficit financing. Government deficits can be justified in periods of depression or recession when the resources of the nation are underemployed, provided the expenditures and revenues are so designed as to stimulate the economy and provide more jobs. Unfortunately the budgetary deficits of recent years were not planned in this way. Because of this, and because it seemed as if the government of that day was unable to cope with our financial and economic problems, confidence in the Canadian economy was damaged both at home and abroad.

There has been a resurgence of confidence since the election.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Grafftey: He said it with a straight face too.

Mr. Gordon: But if this is to be justified and maintained it is important that we begin to put our national house in order: that we begin to move toward balancing our federal budget under conditions of high employment. We must take the first step in this direction now.

I have discussed in frank terms, Mr. Speaker, our unemployment problem, the problem of the deficits in our balance of international payments, and the problem of our federal budgetary deficits.

In seeking solutions to these problems our salvation does not lie in isolationism; it does not lie in withdrawing unto ourselves and ignoring the currents of progress and change around us. Let us remember that we are a great trading nation dependant on our relationships with our friends throughout the world. We must not at the first storm signals of economic danger simply throw up a ramshackle tariff against imported goods and imported ideas and imported obligations and seek to bury our heads in the sand. That way lies stagnation.

The way of the future, the way of prosperity, the way of national pride, involves the fullest participation in the world around us in an economic sense as in every other sense. It involves expanding our trade in conjunction with our friends. It does not involve isolating ourselves from the trend toward international co-operation and freer interchange of goods and services. Rather it involves participating to the fullest in these new movements and moulding them to our best advantage.

These are the views, the broad economic philosophy if you will, of this Liberal government. It is our purpose to see these views are translated into action.

I shall have something to say in a few minutes about efficiency and economy in government.

An hon. Member: We have not had any yet.

Mr. Gordon: Be patient. But the need for increasing efficiency and productivity is equally great in the private sector. To increase our employment and decrease our dependence on foreign capital we must compete successfully for markets, both at home and abroad. If markets are to be retained and captured, both business and government and labour must know where we are heading, not merely from month to month or from year to year, but over the years ahead. For this reason the proposed economic council of Canada will be of benefit not only to Canadian governments but also to Canadian labour and to Canadian business.

Following the review of our major problems which I have just concluded, I should like to state briefly what the policy of the government will be in a number of important fields. I shall begin with a word regarding monetary policy.

This government favours the kind of credit conditions which will encourage economic expansion. In saying this I am aware, of course, that our balance of payments situation must at all times be kept in mind. The governor of the Bank of Canada has made it clear in his public statements that he shares these views. Close and continuous consultation has been going on between the governor and myself since I became Minister of Finance. I am looking forward to a continuance of this consultation in the future.

I wish to say a further word about the relationship between the government and the Bank of Canada. In the last analysis it is the government that must take responsibility for monetary policy, as for all aspects on economic policy. There can be no misunderstanding on this score. At the same time the government recognizes that this does not relieve the bank of its own responsibilities in these matters.

I am in substantial accord with the views expressed on this subject by the present governor of the bank shortly after his appointment to that post. The royal commission on banking and finance will no doubt be considering whether the Bank of Canada Act should be amended to clarify these matters. The government will give careful consideration to any recommendations it may make. But for my part, I do not think any statutory arrangement will work satisfactorily unless there is close and continuous consultation between the government and the bank. I have already made it clear that such conditions exist at the present time.

Just over a year ago the government of the day decided on a fixed exchange rate for the Canadian dollar. I shall not discuss the causes of the exchange crisis which led to this decision, or rather I should say I shall not discuss them tonight. I do want to make it clear, however, that this government intends to maintain the fixed exchange rate at its present level.

I should now like to say a few words about federal-provincial fiscal relations. This is not a subject to be treated in detail at this time, since the Prime Minister has indicated the government's intention to propose a conference with the provinces in order that there may be a full review of it.

The summary of our financial position which I shall give shortly will make clear that the federal government is no less pressed for sources of revenue than are the provincial governments. This government assumes no rigid position on the sharing of joint tax fields. It is clear from the record of the past that readjustments of revenues and responsibilities are possible. But naturally no federal government can ignore the problems of federal finance in seeking to lighten the burdens upon provincial treasuries.

There is a further consideration that has a bearing on this subject. The federal government has a special responsibility in the matter of ensuring adequate production and employment throughout our country. Fiscal policy is an important means of achieving this objective. Most people will agree, I am sure, that if the federal government were to give up a major part of its present revenue sources, even in exchange for compensating expenditure adjustments, its ability to exert an influence through fiscal policy over the level of economic activity in Canada would be weakened.

However, despite the inherent difficulties in federal-provincial fiscal relations I believe the present arrangements can be improved upon, but always within the letter and spirit of our constitution. We shall endeavour to bring about such improvement.

I should now like to discuss the question of non-resident ownership and control of Canadian industry. The latest figures prepared by the dominion bureau of statistics show that in 1959, 57 per cent of our manufacturing industry, 75 per cent of our petroleum and natural gas industry and 61 per cent of other mining and smelting in this country were controlled by non-residents. Anyone familiar with the financial pages of our newspapers can hardly be unaware of the extent to which these figures have undoubtedly increased since that date, that is, since 1959. The Canadian Oil, Atlas Steel, Royalite and Bailey Selburn takeovers in the last 12 months alone will have had a significant effect.

Canada derives material advantages from the associations of our industry abroad. Foreign direct investment in Canada has enabled us to achieve a relatively high standard of living much more quickly than we could otherwise have done. We must never forget this. But we must recognize that the extent of non-resident ownership and control which it has produced in Canada goes far beyond anything found in other countries is a comparable stage of industrial maturity.

In view of this situation we are entitled to take pride in the harmonious relations which have been maintained with the holders of foreign capital in Canada. These relations are based on fair treatment of those who have invested their capital here in good faith. These people must, and they will, continue to be treated fairly.

We shall continue to need substantial net inflows of foreign capital for quite a few years to come if we are to avoid further exchange rate difficulties and if a reasonable increase in our standard of living is to be achieved. This is a fact of life in Canada. It would be the height of folly to ignore it. Having said that, I should add that nevertheless there has been considerable public discussion of, and public concern about, the increasing extent of foreign control of Canadian industry. Writing about Canadian-American relations in the Washington Post of May 16 this year, Walter Lippmann had this to say:

> I have an impression from talking to certain Americans with interests in Canada that they are beginning to realize how undesirable and potentially dangerous is the excessive United States control of Canadian industry. I hope nobody will fly off the handle at that remark. But the fact that more than half the capital of Canadian industry is controlled in the United States is a perpetual irritant.
> The solution of the problem is not one for legislation or treaty but for voluntary action by the United States interests in co-operation with their Canadian associates. Canada is the kind of country in which this kind of problem can be handled unexcitedly in a spirit of mutually enlightened self-interest.

In these circumstances it may be useful for me to outline the views of this government as to how harmonious relations with foreign investors here can best be preserved.

We believe that industry in Canada, wherever it is controlled, should operate with due regard to the over-all interest of Canadians and the Canadian economy. This means that Canadian raw materials should be processed to the greatest possible extent in Canada, in order to provide employment to Canadians and contribute to prosperity in this country. It means that export markets should be sought actively wherever they may be found, and should not be limited out of regard for the interests of parent or associated companies abroad. It means that industry here should make a conscious effort to purchase its raw materials, components and supplies from Canadian sources whenever these sources are competitive.

It means that industry should employ Canadian service firms wherever possible. I am thinking of Canadian engineers, architects and other professional people, Canadian insurance and advertising firms, and Canadian consultants of all types.

It means that industry should exert itself to expand in Canada all the industrial functions which can efficiently be carried on here; and I am thinking particularly of increased basic industrial research and design. It means that industry should seek to provide the fullest opportunity for Canadian employees at all levels, including managerial, scientific and technical personnel.

Above all, I am convinced that a growing partnership between Canadians and investors abroad is the best way of strengthening the harmonious relations with foreign capital which it is our object to preserve. Foreign investors can further the growth of this partnership by selling minority interests in their enterprises to Canadians; and by electing a number of independent Canadian directors to represent these interests.

I suggest that a 25 per cent equity interest is in most cases appropriate to ensure that a Canadian point of view is always available when company policy decisions are arrived at. A smaller percentage would probably not be sufficient for this purpose. A larger percentage would be neither necessary nor in many cases practicable. In fact even a 25 per cent interest in most new or existing enterprises is not something that could be realized overnight. It is an objective to be worked toward over a period of years, although I hope this period can be a relatively short one.

And now we come to the heart of the budget, which I suspect some hon. gentlemen may not like quite so well. The heart of the budget is the condition of our expenditures and revenues. We shall first review the balance for the year just closed. Then we shall look at the outlook for the current year, with some regard to the following year, on the basis of the present tax structure and tax rates.

First, then, there is the balance for the fiscal year that ended last March 31. I shall only indicate the main items; detailed figures, still preliminary and subject to change, are to be found in the budget papers.

My predecessor, in his revised budget appraisal delivered last October, forecast a deficit of $570 million. This forecast was optimistic. Revenues turned out to be $54 million lower than estimated, and expenditures $85 million higher. It now appears that the actual deficit for last year was $709 million, which together with the deficit of $43 million in the old age security fund makes a grand total of $752 million.

I should point out that this large deficit was incurred after taking credit for some $75 million of non-recurring revenue from tariff surcharges, the legality of which has been challenged. I shall have more to say about this later.

There are a number of other items that should be mentioned in any recapitulation of the financial situation inherited by the new government. These include the condition of the old age security fund and the unemployment insurance fund, the railway subsidies, and the deficiencies in the superannuation accounts.

The old age security fund, which was solvent on April 1, 1962, incurred a deficit of $43 million during the last fiscal year and was forced to borrow from the consolidated revenue fund. On the basis of the present outlook and tax structure the old age security fund would incur a further deficit of $25 million this year, and would have to borrow this additional amount.

The unemployment insurance fund contained over $900 million in 1956. When this government took office last April the fund was bankrupt and in debt to the consolidated revenue fund.

To avert a freight rate increase or a railway strike resulting from a 1958 wage award, the previous government began the payment of special railway subsidies. The initial series of payments has continued since, and we have been forced to provide $20 million for this purpose in the present fiscal year.

In light of the continuing confusion in railway matters, the previous government appointed a royal commission on transportation in 1959. The reports of the commission were tabled in this house in April 1961 and January 1962, but no action was taken. Instead, a further $50 million annually has since been provided as an "interim" measure to forestall a new change in freight rates.

The failure of the previous government to deal effectively with the railway question thus means that we are faced with special railway subsidies this year aggregating $70 million.

The previous government throughout its six years in office failed to provide for any amortization of the mounting actuarial deficiency in the superannuation accounts. As of March 31, 1957 the unamortized deficiency in these accounts had been reduced to $139 million. In his 1957 budget speech the then minister of finance, Mr. Harris, undertook to reduce the deficiency still further, to $89 million. His successor refused to do this or to take any subsequent amortization action. Consequently, and as a result of pay increases in the interim, the deficiency in the superannuation accounts has now mounted to $880 million.

Other matters could also be mentioned. There is the shipbuilding subsidy, which was reduced, effective last April 1, in such a way as to lead to a sudden irrational surge of expenditure and activity in that industry which is unlikely to be sustained. This surge of activity places a substantial burden on this year's budget without producing any continuing benefit. And then there is the Dawson city festival fiasco mentioned by my colleague the minister of northern affairs the other day. The previous government made no provision to meet its guarantees to the Dawson city festival foundation. The baby was left on the doorstep of the new administration.

The problems posed by the condition of the old age fund and the unemployment insurance fund, by the railway subsidies and the deficiencies in the superannuation accounts, can no longer be neglected. This government intends to deal with these matters and with any other skeletons that may still remain to be uncovered in our national financial closet. Nothing will be gained by delay or by trying to sweep these problems under some convenient rug. They must be faced up to and disposed of.

An hon. Member: Another book.

Mr. Gordon: No, not another book. Unfortunately it is the Canadian taxpayer who will have to bear the cost of six years of mismanagement of our affairs.

I should now like to discuss the revenue and expenditure estimates for the current fiscal year. We have built our present estimates of revenues on the assumption that our gross national product will be about 5 per cent greater in 1963 than it was in the previous year. For this purpose we have assumed a normal crop, a relatively stable price level from now on, and no external trouble. About one third of this 5 per cent represents price increases which have already taken place mainly as a result of last year's exchange devaluation and import surcharges. On this basis, and if there were no change in the tax structure, our revenues would amount to about $6,880 million including $730 million into the old age security fund. I should like, with consent, to insert a table in Hansard at this point showing our estimated revenues before tax changes and comparing them with revenues in 1962-63.

As there are one or two other tables to be presented, perhaps the house would give consent for leave to table them at the same time.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gordon: It is more difficult to estimate the budgetary expenditures for this year than to estimate the revenues.

The main and supplementary estimates for 1963-64 tabled on May 29, plus the estimated disbursements of the old age security fund, total $7,300 million.

I indicated when I tabled these estimates that we have been forced to bring forward for this budget the expenditure estimates prepared by the previous government. We are not satisfied that these estimates reflect the most efficient and economical way in which our national affairs can be run. A thorough reappraisal of government expenditures has been initiated, in the course of which all existing spending programs will be reviewed, and some will be reduced or eliminated. While the initial results of this reappraisal will be apparent in the next budget, its full effect will take some time to make itself felt.

The government is also pressing forward with a review of the recommendations made by the Glassco commission. Those recommendations that may be expected to result in greater efficiency in the public service or in useful reductions in expenditure will be implemented as quickly as possible.

As in other years, there will be some further supplementary estimates before the end of the fiscal year. They will include among others the new programs this government will be introducing, programs that will add $70 million to government requirements this year and will add considerably more next year when they are in full operation. The cost of several of these programs should fall again a year or two later when they have run their course.

Hon. members will appreciate that there are too many imponderables involved for me to make an exact estimate of what the total expenditure for this year may amount to. Subject to these cautionary remarks and qualifications I am prepared to set the total figure at about $7,600 million, including $755 million for the old age security fund.

On the basis of the revenue estimates mentioned a few minutes ago this means, if there were no major tax changes, a deficit this year of some $720 million. The deficit next year might be even greater.

It would be irresponsible for us not to face up to this situation. As I said earlier, Canada is beginning to recover from the loss of confidence resulting from the financial and economic mismanagement of the previous administration.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Tell a big lie often enough.

Mr. Lambert: You are smiling now.

Mr. Gordon: No, I do not smile when I say that. I mean every word of it. And a restoration of confidence in ourselves and in our country, a restoration of confidence both at home and abroad, is a necessary prerequisite to business expansion and the creation of more jobs.

I would like to say to the hon. member opposite that confidence is not something one can count on or measure in any concrete way. It is a state of mind. It is psychological in character. And its recovery might well be shattered if we failed to take clear and positive steps toward some reduction in present budgetary deficits.

Hon. members will appreciate from the outline I have given of the problems that confront us and of the state of our finances that our opportunities for manoeuvre are severely limited. This means, Mr. Speaker, that we have no alternative but to look to our tax structure not only with a view to providing incentives for increased employment and industrial growth, but also in a search for additional sources of revenue.

An examination of the tax structure shows clearly that taxes are already very high, but that the revenue they produce continues to fall short of necessary expenditures. It shows also that, as all of us know, our tax system is outdated, is too complex and has a disturbing number of loopholes.

A thorough review of it, which I am sure will be most valuable, is being made by the royal commission on taxation. The commission had not planned to submit its report to the government until some time in 1965. I have discussed this with the chairman, and in view of the pressing nature of the problem he has promised to revise the commission's schedule and to submit its report by the end of 1964. However, we cannot wait even that long before beginning to make changes in our tax system. I shall propose some of those changes tonight, and I hope to propose a good many others when the next budget is presented.

May I now proceed to summarize certain proposals which I shall put before the house tonight.

In order to encourage employment by reviving private capital expenditures, which have lagged so conspicuously for the past six years, I shall propose important new tax concessions. Effective on the date of enactment new manufacturing and processing enterprises located in designated areas of slower growth will be given an exemption from income taxes for three years from their inception. I shall also propose that such enterprises be entitled to write off new machinery and equipment which would otherwise fall in class 8 in as little as two years thereafter. And I shall propose that any taxpayer be entitled also to write off the cost of new buildings located in designated areas of slower growth at the rate of 20 per cent per annum straight line, or in as little as five years. If these proposals do not stimulate very marked activity in the Atlantic provinces and in other areas of slowed economic progress I do not know what will. These are major incentives to new industry locating in those areas.

I am also proposing that, effective tonight, manufacturing and processing enterprises anywhere in Canada be allowed to deduct depreciation for tax purposes on new assets which would otherwise fall within class 8 at the rate of 50 per cent per annum on a straight line basis. To encourage Canadian participation, this privilege will be restricted to Canadian residents and to companies having a minimum of 25 per cent beneficial Canadian ownership. It means in effect, Mr. Speaker, that manufacturing and processing enterprises anywhere in Canada having a fair minimum Canadian participation will be able to write off new machinery and equipment for tax purposes in as little as two years.

It is intended that the measures I have mentioned so far should provide an immediate impetus to increased activity. Accordingly, new assets must be purchased and new businesses must be certified to have come into existence in the period of 24 months following the initial date of these measures if they are to qualify.

The incentives I have just described will supersede and replace three other tax incentives which have been adopted in the past two and a half years. They are contained in section 40A of the Income Tax Act pertaining to increased sales, about which there was quite a debate in the house last fall, and in income tax regulations 1108 and 1109 concerning new products and re-equipment and modernization programs.

I shall propose that section 40A be repealed in so far as it applies to 1964 and subsequent taxation years. And the measures contained in the two regulations I have quoted, both of which expire by their terms within the next 12 months, will not be renewed.

I should now like to refer to further tax proposals of two types. One is designed to plug loopholes or otherwise improve the existing structure of taxes; the other is designed to eliminate certain anomalies.

First there are the measures designed to fill in gaps, plug loopholes and prevent avoidance of the intent of our tax law. There is a double purpose here. One is to increase our revenues and the other is to reduce the justifiable sense of inequity and frustration of those taxpayers who are unable or unwilling to engage in prolonged and often expensive efforts at tax avoidance.

We are particularly concerned about the way in which certain taxpayers seem to be able to eat, drink and entertain on a lavish scale on the basis of what is called a business expense but which is actually financed in large part at the expense of the public revenue. The government is directing the Department of National Revenue to tighten up its administration of the law and to pursue a policy of vigorous enforcement. We intend to give continuing support to this objective. I am sure that hon. members will agree that any excesses of expense account living are unfair to those who do not indulge in such practices. They should be stopped.

I shall propose one specific change in the Income Tax Act relative to a general tightening up of its administration in regard to business expenses. Hitherto a few taxpayers have been able to buy expensive cars and then recoup a large part of the cost out of the public revenue. I shall propose a measure to disallow in full capital cost allowances in respect of a passenger automobile acquired after tonight at a cost in excess of $5,000. I expect that this measure will produce some increased demand for less expensive cars, most of which are made in Canada and whose manufacture provides jobs for Canadian workmen.

Another type of tax avoidance about which the government is particularly concerned is the proliferation of methods of moving undistributed income from a corporation into the hands of its shareholders without the payment of tax. This abuse, and it is an expensive abuse to the public treasury, has become increasingly prevalent in recent years. It is time something was done about it.

I shall therefore propose that, effective tonight, the Income Tax Act be amended to give the Minister of National Revenue power to look through so-called dividend stripping transactions and to deem shareholders to have received dividends in these cases.

To eliminate another method of tax avoidance I shall also propose that effective tonight section 18 of the Income Tax Act be repealed. This section, dealing with lease option arrangements, has given rise to repeated abuses by allowing rental agreements to be cast in a grossly distorted form in order to avoid tax. Action in connection with this section has been urged by the joint committee of the Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants.

As a further measure to close loopholes, I shall propose an amendment to stop the device whereby a company that has experienced losses is purchased for the purpose of applying those losses against income from another business.

I shall also propose that the practice concerning certain annuity contracts which are converted into cash, or have settlement options other than an annuity for life, be changed and that all the interest earned on the funds invested in such contracts made after tonight shall be subject to tax.

I want to make it clear that this will not be retroactive.

Turning to the elimination of anomalies and anachronisms, the government is putting forward a number of proposals.

The excise duty on exports of electrical energy should have disappeared long ago. We propose that it be abolished at the end of this month.

The base of the sales tax on gasoline is to be altered. Wholesalers have almost entirely disappeared from this field; therefore the wholesale discount of some 25 per cent which has existed for tax purposes for many years is no longer appropriate. Its elimination will bring increased revenues of perhaps $25 million in a full year, of which $7 million will accrue to the old age security fund and the balance to general revenue.

It is also proposed that a change be made in the taxation of rebuilt or remanufactured goods. Recently there has been a considerable increase in the production of goods using old parts or materials, with or without new components. These goods compete with similar goods manufactured from new materials, and they should be equally subject to sales tax. On behalf of my colleague the Minister of National Revenue I am therefore giving notice that his department proposes to examine carefully the operations of persons engaged in such work, and, where necessary, it will license them as manufacturers under the Excise Tax Act.

I am also proposing that companies whose business is the transmission of oil or gas through pipe lines be allowed to deduct from their income the expenses they incur in exploring or drilling for oil, gas or minerals. This concession will be a useful incentive to increased exploration activity in this essential industry and should increase Canadian participation in an industry now principally owned abroad.

I shall now propose a number of changes in the Customs Tariff. There are some increases and some decreases but on balance they represent a reduction.

I shall make several proposals relating to textiles, the two more important of which give effect to the recommendations of the tariff board in its last three reports on this subject. These proposals will involve both increases and decreases in duties, and will lead to a modernized and simplified tariff schedule in this area. They will therefore be of assistance to Canadian textile producers.

The proposals I have just referred to also include certain compensatory concessions on products other than textiles which have arisen from renegotiations under the general agreement on tariffs and trade.

I shall propose further a miscellaneous group of other tariff changes providing for reductions in rates or representing merely technical alterations. I shall also propose that the level of customs exemptions given to returning Canadian tourists which was introduced on an emergency basis last June be continued by statute.

Before leaving the tariff field, I have a further word to say about the surcharges imposed last June. As I stated in the house on May 21, the legality of the surcharge on imports order has been challenged, and the matter is before the courts. This poses a difficult problem. In many cases those who paid the surcharges, and who might now be entitled to claim refunds should the order be found to have been invalid, passed the amount of the surcharges on to their customers. These customers in turn may have passed the amount on to their customers, and so on. As I said in my statement, it would not be possible to unscramble a situation of this kind. Accordingly I shall propose legislation on the surcharge order whose principal effect will be to prevent any massive attempt at obtaining refund of moneys in fact paid by people who are not now identifiable.

I should now like to propose a number of measures connected with foreign investment in Canada.

I referred earlier this evening to the need for a continuing inflow of foreign capital. To facilitate the sale of Canadian bonds and debentures to certain investors abroad, I shall propose that the Minister of National Revenue be given power to issue to any non-resident bank, company or trust which is free of income tax in its country of residence, a certificate of exemption from withholding tax on interest payable on Canadian bonds and debentures issued after tonight.

With a view to promoting a growing partnership between Canadians and non-resident investors in Canadian corporations, I am proposing some amendments in our withholding taxes on dividends paid abroad. These amendments will not become fully effective for a period of three and a half years. This will give ample time for us to revise a number of our tax treaties with other countries, some of which revisions are overdue. It will also give ample opportunity for those concerned to assess the situation and to make decisions in their own time and under no form of pressure to act quickly.

As hon. members will recall, our withholding taxes have, since 1960, stood at 15 per cent on dividends paid to all non-residents except in so far as modified by tax treaties. Prior to 1960 the rate of the withholding taxes on dividends depended on the degree of foreign ownership of the companies in question.

I am proposing two changes, one upward and the other downward, in the withholding taxes on dividends paid to non-residents. Effective from tonight a new and reduced rate of 10 per cent will apply when the paying company is beneficially owned by Canadian residents to the extent of 25 per cent or more. Effective from January 1, 1965, an increased rate of 20 per cent will apply to dividends paid by other companies including those which are the wholly owned subsidiaries of foreign parents.

If before January 1967 a company is able to bring its percentage of Canadian ownership from below 25 per cent to above 25 per cent, certain refunds of the non-resident withholding tax will be made. Any non-resident who can show that he has borne the tax will receive a refund, without interest, to the extent of the difference between the 15 or 20 per cent rates and the 10 per cent rate.

In order to avoid advantage being taken of this advance notice, a tax of 5 per cent—the difference between the present 15 per cent and the proposed 20 per cent rate—will be levied on the amount of any increase in dividends paid after tonight and prior to January 1, 1965, by companies with less than a 25 per cent Canadian participation. This will be a special tax payable by the company and not by the recipient of the dividend. It is proposed, as of tonight, to extend the 15 per cent withholding tax to management fees paid to non-residents.

As I indicated earlier, it is the policy of this government to encourage direct foreign investment in new enterprises in this country on the basis of partnership with Canadian residents. While this type of investment is of great value to Canada, it is our view that non-resident takeovers of established Canadian companies rarely confer any benefit on the Canadian economy. We shall therefore propose a measure of taxation of certain sales which might contribute to such takeovers. We shall propose that effective tonight a 30 per cent tax be levied on certain sales by Canadian residents to non-residents and non-resident controlled companies, of shares in Canadian companies listed on Canadian stock exchanges. There is to be no liability for the tax when such sales are made on the floor of a Canadian exchange in the normal trading manner and do not form part of sales exceeding $50,000 per day by any single seller. Effective tonight also, we are proposing a similar 30 per cent sales tax on the sale by a listed Canadian corporation of the whole or substantially the whole of its property to a non-resident or a non-resident controlled company.

It will be noted that this measure applies only to the shares of listed public companies. Measures are under consideration, and may be discussed with the provinces at an appropriate time, which will apply to all Canadian companies including private companies. I trust that no flood of sales of established Canadian concerns to non-residents will develop in an attempt to anticipate the further measures to which I have referred, in light of the declared view of the government that such sales are generally undesirable.

The major tax proposals which, on behalf of the government, I shall now put before the house are based on a number of guiding principles. To begin with, they must provide revenue sufficient to allow an important step toward budgetary balance. And since the increased outlays under certain new programs will be tapered off or stopped in two or three years time, provision can also be made for some revenue of a non-recurring nature.

To obtain the additional revenue that is required, there are good reasons for using the manufacturers sales tax rather than increased income taxes. While it would not be correct to describe any tax as being popular anywhere, it is the case that indirect taxes such as the sales tax are now regarded with more favour in quite a number of countries than in the past. In this connection, I would just like to say to hon. members that I made a very careful examination of the income tax schedules. I did not think that it would be appropriate, in view of the increases that have occurred in the cost of living in the last few years, to increase the income taxes in the lower brackets, but if an increase were made in all the taxable rates brackets over $4,000 of even 10 per cent, the amount would not produce a sufficient revenue for the purposes under consideration. Apart from that I was impressed by the arguments that lend themselves to this approach rather than to increase further income tax rates.

The manufacturers sales tax is not imposed on exports, and it is levied on imported goods as well as on those made here. It therefore does not have the same adverse effect on our international trade position that some other taxes do. There is, however, widespread dissatisfaction about the inequity of a situation in which many areas of industry are subject to this tax while others are exempt.

Accordingly we are asking the house to make certain changes in the tax. These changes will not alter the rate of tax and will leave untouched the exemptions covering staple food products. It is by virtue of these continuing exemptions that the tax is prevented from imposing an unfair burden on lower income groups.

We are, however, asking the house to withdraw, effective tonight, the exemptions for building materials and also for production machinery and equipment other than that employed in fishing and agriculture. This measure will produce increased revenues of some $170 million in this fiscal year and some $360 million in 1964-65. These amounts include increases in the income of the old age security fund of some $45 million this year and $100 million next year. The old age security fund is now considerably in debt to the consolidated revenue fund and would otherwise be faced with continuing deficits in years to come.

The government is anxious to ensure that the withdrawal of the sales tax exemption on building materials will not work hardship on those who purchase houses under the provisions of the National Housing Act. Accordingly my colleague the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Garland), has authorized me to announce that he will propose to the house that the National Housing Act be amended in such a way as to reduce the down payment required in connection with mortgage loans made under it. N.H.A. loans will be extended so as to cover 95 per cent of the first $13,000 instead of the first $12,000 of the value of a house, and the maximum loan amount will be raised from $14,900 to $15,600. Further, the N.H.A. lending rate will be reduced immediately from 6½ per cent to 6¼ per cent, a move that is, I am glad to say, in line with recent movements in other rates of interest.

I have mentioned tonight four measures affecting low priced housing. They include the removal of the sales tax exemption on building products, the reduction in N.H.A. down payments, the lowering of the mortgage rate, and the program to encourage house building in the winter months. The result of all of these measures will be that the down payment in connection with low priced housing will fall significantly while the monthly payments required to carry a purchase will rise only slightly. The over-all effect will be to provide encouragement to house construction and to house ownership.

The government has considered the possible effects of the removal of sales tax exemptions on firms working under fixed price contracts. Fixed price contracts are common in the construction industry, and the amounts involved are frequently substantial. Relief will be provided in cases where a manufacturer or contractor is prevented by a contract from including the new tax in his selling price.

The source of revenue which we shall seek on a non-recurring basis relates to the income tax on corporations. It is desirable that corporations should pay their income tax as their income is earned to a greater extent than they do at present.

Individuals are required to pay their income tax on a current basis through deductions by their employers or by payment of quarterly instalments starting in March. Moreover they are required to file final tax returns and make final payments within four months of the end of each year.

Corporate taxpayers, on the other hand, do not start payment until the seventh month of their fiscal year and do not have to file their return until six months after their fiscal year is ended. There is no need for this disparity. It is therefore proposed that corporations be required to move their tax payment period forward two months. This means that the final filing time for corporate tax returns will be the same as for individuals. This change will take place over two years and special rules will apply for the transitional period.

This measure will provide some $220 million in non-recurring revenue, of which about $20 million will go to the old age security fund. This will be received in the fiscal years 1964-65 and 1965-66. It will have the continuing advantage that revenue from the corporation income tax, which will now be payable sooner after earnings are realized, will reflect changes in economic conditions more promptly in the future.

I should like to insert at this point a table summarizing the revenue changes I have proposed. Estimates are given of the net increase expected for the remaining portion of this fiscal year, and for the full fiscal year following it. These estimates show a net revenue increase of $155 million this year and $455 million in 1964-65.

Estimated Changes in Budgetary and Old Age Security Tax Revenues that would result from the proposed tax changes

	1963-64 fiscal year	1964-65 fiscal year
Increases:
Acceleration of corporate tax payments	$ —	$165
Changes in withholding tax rates (net)	—	5
Sales tax changes	185	385
	185	555
Decreases:
Incentives for manufacturing and processing	30	100
Net Increase in Revenues:	$155	$455

I should also like to insert a table summarizing the revised revenues, expenditures and deficit for the current fiscal year after giving effect to all of my proposals.

It will be noted from the table that the revised deficit figure, which includes both budgetary and old age security fund figures, stands at $565 million compared with $752 million last year, a reduction of nearly $200 million. I am sure that hon. members will agree that this is a substantial move in the right direction. To do more this year would not be wise having regard to the present state of the economy. To do less would be irresponsible.

Estimated Surplus (Deficit) in Budgetary Accounts and Old Age Security Fund 1963-64 fiscal year
(millions)

	Before Tax Changes	Tax Increases	Revised Estimates
Budgetary Accounts:
Expenditures	$6,845		$6,845
Revenues	6,150	$110	6,260
Estimated (deficit)	(695)		(585)
Old Age Security Fund:
Expenditures	755		755
Revenues	730	45	775
Estimated surplus (deficit)	(25)		20
Total estimated (deficit)	$(720)		$(565)

Over and above the deficit of $565 million to which I have just referred, there are other cash requirements which must be provided for. These include cash outlays by way of loans, investments or advances to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to the Farm Credit Corporation, to the Export Credits Insurance Corporation, to the Canadian National Railways and Trans-Canada Air Lines for capital purposes, to the unemployment insurance fund and in connection with the proposed municipal development and loan board.

They also include cash advances to date to the exchange fund, slightly in excess of $100 million, but do not include any estimate of future changes in the exchange fund which are unpredictable.

There will, of course, be non-budgetary receipts offsetting in part the non-budgetary cash outlays. This year these receipts include one very large non-recurrent item of $109 million from the sale of its assets by Northern Ontario Pipeline Crown Corporation. Taking these receipts into account, our net non-budgetary cash requirements for the current fiscal year are likely to amount to about $285 million. Our net cash requirements for 1963-64, both budgetary and non-budgetary, are thus estimated to be about $850 million.

Throughout this budget address, Mr. Speaker, I have referred repeatedly to unemployment as being the most serious domestic problem before us. Before I conclude I should like to mention again some of the measures which are designed to deal with this problem.

The most effective long term method of dealing with unemployment is to expand industry and industrial production in Canada. I have referred to the proposed department of industry with its associated area development agency. I have referred to the work this department will do in seeing that more goods are produced in Canada.

I have referred to the strengthening of the Atlantic development board and to the proposed municipal development and loan board. I have referred to a series of measures to encourage industrial expansion and growth by the provision of very substantial tax incentives. I have referred to the expansion of the municipal winter works program. I have referred to measures to stimulate employment in the building industry through reducing the down payment on N.H.A. housing and encouraging the construction of houses in the winter months. I have referred to the expansion of the program of vocational training, and to a new program for training those whose jobs are threatened by industrial change. And I have referred to a new plan to encourage the employment and training of those over 45 who have not had jobs for some time.

I have no doubt that this manifold attack on the unemployment problem will be effective. As I said before, our economy is expanding and this expansion should continue into next year. The prospects look good for a substantial increase in business investment. This is due in part, as I have said, to an increase in confidence as a result of the election and to the prospect of decisive and far sighted government in Canada once again.

In conclusion may I say that I have not tried to minimize or conceal the various problems we are faced with. But in discussing them, I have been conscious of the strength of our country and of its great potential for the future. I have discussed our problems knowing that if we are to surmount them we must face them, and face them with boldness and resolution.

Our financial program has not been conceived in complacency. In bringing forward our financial proposals we have looked squarely at the realities before us. We have presented a fiscally responsible program designed to reduce unemployment and regain prosperity.

In the recent election campaign my colleagues and I undertook to give the public the facts. We said, and the Prime Minister in particular said repeatedly, that when we were faced with difficult and unpleasant decisions we would not be afraid to make them. Some of those decisions have been announced tonight. They have been made in confidence that the members of this house will support them. They have been made in confidence that the people of Canada will support them. And they have been made in confidence that all of us together, by facing the future with resolution and courage, can restore prosperity and security to ourselves, our children and our country.

I shall now table, Mr. Speaker, all the budget resolutions to which I have referred together with certain other proposals not mentioned specifically in this speech.

RESOLUTIONS

INCOME TAX ACT

Resolved that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Income Tax Act and to provide among other things:

1. That with respect to new depreciable property of a prescribed class acquired in the period of 24 months commencing June 14, 1963 capital cost allowances be computed on a straight line basis at a prescribed rate not exceeding 50 per cent per annum if the property has been acquired by a taxpayer in a taxation year for a manufacturing or processing business in Canada and the said taxpayer is

(a) an individual who was resident in Canada during a period of not less than 183 days in the year, or

(b) a corporation that on the last day of the year was a corporation with a degree of Canadian ownership and control and for the purposes of this paragraph;

(c) a corporation has a degree of Canadian ownership and control at a particular time if the corporation throughout the 60 day period immediately preceding that time complied with the following conditions:

(i) the corporation was resident in Canada,

(ii) not less than 25 per cent of its voting shares were beneficially owned by one or more individuals resident in Canada, one or more corporations controlled in Canada or a combination thereof, and

(iii) unless at least 51 per cent of its voting shares were beneficially owned by one or more individuals resident in Canada, one or more corporations controlled in Canada or a combination thereof, the number of directors of the corporation who were resident in Canada and not employed by the corporation otherwise than as directors, was not less than that proportion of the total number of directors on the board of the corporation that the aggregate number of voting shares of the corporation beneficially owned by individuals resident in Canada and corporations controlled in Canada is of the aggregate number of outstanding voting shares of the corporation; and

(d) a corporation is controlled in Canada at a particular time if at that time it complies with the following conditions:

(i) the corporation is resident in Canada, and

(ii) not less than 51 per cent of its voting shares are beneficially owned by one or more individuals resident in Canada, one or more corporations controlled in Canada or a combination thereof.

2. That a taxpayer whose business in a prescribed area of Canada has been certified to be a new manufacturing or processing business that commenced commercial operations in the period of 24 months commencing with the date on which any enactment based on this paragraph is assented to be exempt from tax on the income from that business for a period of 36 months from the date certified to be the date of commencement of operations, and that the rate of capital cost allowances for new depreciable property of a prescribed class acquired by the said taxpayer in the said 24 months period for such business be computed on a straight line basis at a prescribed rate not exceeding 50 per cent per annum.

3. That with effect for 1964 and subsequent taxation years section 40A of the act, which provides for a deduction from the tax otherwise payable by a manufacturing and processing corporation, be repealed.

4. That with respect to expenses incurred after April 10, 1962 a corporation whose principal business is operating a pipeline for the transmission of oil or natural gas be allowed to deduct in computing income the drilling and exploration expenses, including all general geological and geophysical expenses, incurred by it on or in respect of exploring for petroleum or natural gas in Canada and the prospecting, exploration and development expenses incurred by it in searching for minerals in Canada.

5. That for the 1963 and subsequent taxation years a dividend received by a person resident in Canada from a corporation that throughout its taxation year in which the dividend is paid or credited

(a) is taxable as a non-resident corporation carrying on business in Canada,

(b) derives substantially all of its income from sources in Canada, and

(c) has its shares listed on a recognized stock exchange in Canada

be deemed to be a dividend from sources in Canada paid or credited by a taxable corporation within the meaning of section 38 of the act.

6. That the 15 per cent rate of tax payable by a non-resident person on dividends paid or credited to him by a person resident in Canada be reduced to 10 per cent with respect to dividends paid or credited after June 13, 1963 by a corporation that at the time the dividend is paid or credited has a degree of Canadian ownership or control within the meaning of paragraph 1.

7. That the 15 per cent rate of tax payable by a non-resident person on dividends paid or credited to him by a person resident in Canada be increased to 20 per cent with respect to dividends paid or credited after December 31, 1964 by a corporation that at the time the dividend is paid or credited does not have a degree of Canadian ownership or control within the meaning of paragraph 1.

8. That where a corporation resident in Canada that on June 13, 1963 was not a corporation that had a degree of Canadian ownership and control, within the meaning of paragraph 1, becomes a corporation that throughout a subsequent taxation year ending before January 1, 1967 has such a degree of Canadian ownership and control, a non-resident person shall be entitled to a refund equal to

PART III

Securities Sales Tax

11. (1) In this part,

(b) "eligible purchaser" means any purchaser of shares of a designated corporation who was at the relevant time

(i) an individual resident in Canada who had been resident in Canada for a period of not less than two years immediately before that time,

(iii) a corporation resident in Canada having no share capital, a majority of the directors and of the other members of which were individuals described in subparagraph (i), or

(iv) and individual or corporation wherever resident who purchased the shares of the designated corporation as a trustee under an employees' pension plan or under any trust constituted exclusively for charitable purposes, the right of appointment or removal of whom was exercisable by one or more individuals or corporations described in any of subparagraphs (i), (ii) or (iii);

(c) "resident vendor" means a vendor of shares of a designated corporation who was at the relevant time resident in Canada;

(d) "share" as applied to any corporation means a share of that corporation of any class, other than a share

(e) "stock exchange" means

(i) the Canadian Stock Exchange,

(ii) the Montreal Stock Exchange,

(iii) the Toronto Stock Exchange,

(iv) the Winnipeg Stock Exchange,

(v) the Calgary Stock Exchange, and

(vi) the Vancouver Stock Exchange; and such other stock exchange or exchanges in Canada as may from time to time be designated by the governor in council for the purposes of this part.

(2) For the purposes of this part, the votes attaching to any share of a corporation are the votes that under any voting rights annexed to that share may, either upon the happening of a particular event or otherwise, be exercised by the owner thereof.

(3) A reference in this part to a person resident in Canada includes a person who was at the relevant time ordinarily resident in Canada, and in determining the residence of a person for the purposes of this part the provisions of the Income Tax Act applicable to any such determination for the purposes of that act apply mutatis mutandis.

12. (1) There shall be imposed, levied and collected a securities sales tax of 30 per cent on the sale price of all shares of a designated corporation sold by a resident vendor to a person other than an eligible purchaser, payable by the vendor within 30 days of such sale.

(2) No tax is payable under this part in respect of shares of a designated corporation sold by a resident vendor to a person other than an eligible purchaser through a stock exchange in any day where the total sale price of all shares of that corporation so sold by the vendor to all persons in that day does not exceed $50,000.

13. The issue by a designated corporation to any person of any shares of that corporation pursuant to a warrant, option, right or conversion privilege entitling the owner or holder thereof to purchase or otherwise acquire those shares shall, except where the warrant, option, right or conversion privilege was outstanding on or before the 13th day of June, 1963, be deemed for the purposes of this part to be a sale by the corporation to that person of those shares, and in relation thereto the sale price of those shares shall be deemed to be the consideration paid or agreed to be paid for those shares plus the fair market value, immediately before the issue of the shares, of the warrant, option or right, or of the security carrying the conversion privilege, pursuant to which the shares were issued.

14. A sale by a designated corporation to any person of all or substantially all of the property used by the corporation in carrying on its business in Canada shall, for the purposes of this part, be deemed to be a sale by the corporation to that person of shares of the corporation, and in relation to such shares the sale price thereof shall be deemed to be

(a) the consideration paid or agreed to be paid for the property so sold, in any case where that property was sold to a person with whom the corporation was dealing at arm's length; and

15. Where, by reason of the reorganization of, or the merger or amalgamation with another corporation of, a designated corporation (which reorganization, merger or amalgamation is hereinafter referred to as a "substitution" and which designated corporation is hereinafter referred to as the "old corporation"),

(a) the total number of votes attaching immediately before the substitution to all shares of the old corporation owned by individuals or corporations described in any of subparagraphs (i) to (iv) of paragraph (b) of subsection (1) of section 11 (which individuals or corporations are hereinafter referred to as "eligible shareholders"), expressed as a percentage of the total number of votes attaching at that time to all of the shares of the old corporation,

(b) the total number of votes attaching immediately after the substitution to all shares of the reorganized corporation or of any corporation formed as a result of the merger or amalgamation (which reorganized corporation or corporation so formed is hereinafter referred to as the "new corporation") owned by eligible shareholders, expressed as a percentage of the total number of votes attaching at that time to all of the shares of the new corporation, the substitution shall, for the purposes of this part, be deemed to be a sale to the new corporation of the shares of the old corporation by each of the persons who immediately before the substitution owned any shares thereof, and in relation to the shares thereof owned by any such person at that time, the sale price of those shares shall be deemed to be the fair market value at that time of shares of the old corporation, equal in number to

(c) the number of shares of the old corporation owned at that time by such person, multiplied by

(d) the quotient obtained by dividing

(i) the percentage number by which the percentage obtained under paragraph (a) exceeds the percentage obtained under paragraph (b) by

16. (1) Subject to subsection (2), every person who, being a resident vendor, sells any shares of a designated corporation other than shares of a designated corporation in respect of which no tax is payable under this part by virtue of subsection (2) of section 12 shall, within one month of such sale, file a return with the minister stating, with respect to the sale,

(a) the name of each of the parties to the sale;

(b) the address of each of the parties to the sale including, in the case of a corporation, the address of the head office of the corporation and of its principal place of business, if any, in Canada; and

(c) particulars of the sale including the date of the sale, the sale price of the shares of each class so sold and, where applicable, the number of shares of each class so sold;
together with such further or other information or particulars as may be required by the regulations.

(2) The return required by this section to be filed by the minister may, in the case of a sale of shares deemed by section 15 to have been made to any corporation referred to in that section as a new corporation, be filed with the minister by that corporation on behalf of each of the persons resident in Canada by whom the sale was deemed so to have been made, and where any return is so filed by that corporation no return is required by this section to be filed by such persons with respect thereto.

17. There may be attached to any return filed with the minister as required by section 16 relating to the sale of any shares a certificate of identification as to the purchaser thereof,

(a) signed,

(i) where the purchaser thereof is an individual, by that individual, and

(ii) where the purchaser thereof is a corporation, by a responsible officer of that corporation; and

(b) stating that, at the time of the sale, such individual was, or to the best of such officer's knowledge, information and belief such corporation was, as the case may be, an eligible purchaser within the meaning of this part.

18. Where, in any month the number of sales of shares of a particular designated corporation made by a resident vendor with respect to which a return would otherwise be required by section 16 to be filed with the minister exceeds 50, the vendor may, in lieu of filing a return under section 16 with respect to each such sale made in that month, file with the minister, within 30 days after the end of that month, a return setting forth with respect to all such sales made in that month,

(a) particulars as described in paragraphs (a) and (b) of subsection (1) of section 16 as to the vendor;

(b) the total number of shares of the corporation of each class so sold, for which the vendor holds certificates under section 17 indicating respectively that the purchaser or, in the case of a sale made to a number of purchasers jointly, that each such purchaser was an eligible purchaser within the meaning of this part, and the total sale price of those shares; and

(c) the total number of shares of the corporation of each class so sold, for which the vendor does not hold certificates as described in paragraph (b), and the total sale price of those shares;
together with such further or other information or particulars as may be required by the regulations.

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply in respect of any sale of shares in the case of which a return may be filed as provided in subsection (2) of section 16.

19. Where,

(a) in the case of any return filed with the minister as required by section 16, no certificate of identification under section 17 as to the purchaser of the shares to which the return relates is attached thereto or, in the case of a return under section 18 filed with the minister, no certificate of identification under section 17 as to the purchaser of any particular shares to which the return relates is held by the vendor, or

(b) the certificate attached to the return or held by the vendor, as the case may be, does not indicate that the purchaser or, in the case of a sale made to a number of purchasers jointly, that each such purchaser was an eligible purchaser within the meaning of this part, the purchaser or each such purchaser, as the case may be, shall, unless the contrary is established, be presumed to be a person other than an eligible purchaser.

20. A document signed by an officer of the Department of National Revenue, stating that to the best of his knowledge information and belief after examining the appropriate records of the department a particular corporation was at any stated time a designated corporation, is admissible in evidence and in the absence of any evidence to the contrary is proof that such corporation was at that time a designated corporation.

21. (1) Subsection (1) of section 43 does not apply in respect of this part.

(2) Subsection (2) of section 54 applies in respect of a certificate attached to a return filed with the minister as required by section 16, or a certificate as to the purchaser of any particular shares to which a return under section 18 filed with the minister relates, as though such certificate were a return filed as required by this part.

(3) Section 55 applies in respect of a person required by section 16 to file any return or by whom any return under section 18 is filed with the minister, as though such person were a person described in subsection (1) of section 55."

22. That any enactment founded on paragraphs 1 to 9 of this resolution be deemed to have come into force on June 14, 1963, any enactment founded on paragraph 10 of this resolution be applicable in respect of electrical power exported from Canada after June, 1963, and any enactment founded on paragraph 11 of this resolution be deemed to have come into force on June 14, 1963 and to have been applicable in respect of any sales described therein made on or after that day.

23. That the said measure further provide

(a) that where any tax under part VI of the said act has become payable by any person in respect of any goods for which exemption from tax under that part was withdrawn by any enactment founded on paragraphs 1 to 9 of this resolution, which goods were, before June 14, 1964, sold and delivered by that person, or applied by that person to a use resulting in the property in the goods passing from that person, pursuant to a bona fide contract in writing signed by the parties thereto before June 14, 1963 that provided for the sale of those goods or their application to that use for a fixed amount stated in the contract and that did not permit the adding of the tax to the amount payable to that person under the contract, a refund, or deduction from any of the taxes imposed by the said act, of the tax or such part thereof as could not under the contract be added to the amount payable to that person thereunder may be granted to that person; and

(b) that where any goods for which exemption from tax under part VI of the said act was withdrawn by any enactment founded on paragraphs 1 to 9 of this resolution were, after June 13, 1963 and before June 14, 1964, sold and delivered by any person, or applied by any person to a use resulting in the property in the goods passing from that person, pursuant to a bona fide contract in writing signed by the parties thereto before June 14, 1963 that provided for the sale of those goods or their application to that use for a fixed amount stated in the contract and that did not permit the adding of any tax under that part that became payable after June 13, 1963 in respect of those goods to the amount payable to that person under the contract, an amount equal to the tax or such part thereof as could not under the contract be added to the amount payable to that person thereunder may, where application therefor is made to the Minister of National Revenue by that person before June 14, 1966 in such form as the minister prescribes and the minister is satisfied that such tax has been paid, be paid by the minister to that person.

Resolved, that any enactment founded upon the foregoing resolutions shall be deemed to have come into force on the fourteenth day of June, 1963, and to have applied to all goods mentioned in the said resolutions imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on or after that day, and to have applied to goods previously imported for which no entry for consumption was made before that day.

Resolved that it is expedient to introduce a measure in the following terms:

1. The Order of His Excellency the Governor in Council of the 24th day of June, 1962, expressed to be made pursuant to subsection (1) of section 4 of the Customs Tariff and pursuant to section 22 of the Financial Administration Act, shall be deemed for all purposes to have had the same force and effect as if it had been validly made on that day pursuant to an Act of the Parliament of Canada that authorized the making of that Order.

2. All rates of Customs duties more favourable than those of the General Tariff, and the benefit of any tariff more favourable than the General Tariff, expressed to be withdrawn by the Order mentioned in section 1, shall be deemed to have been restored on the 1st day of April, 1963, and from and after the 1st day of April, 1963 the rates so restored and any tariff the benefit of which is so restored shall, subject to the provisions of the Customs Tariff, apply as they applied immediately before the 25th day of June, 1962.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, after the almost funereal tones, the reverend tones, with which the hon. minister commenced his address, and remembering the sanctity of the budget, one would almost be prepared to take off one's shoes and bow in reverence. However, we have had the most miserable, petty, picayune, party address that has ever been given in parliament. It has been a combination, Mr. Speaker, of partisanship and platitudes, and I am not sure which was most prevalent.

We were told about mismanagement for six years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nowlan: I do not mind, Mr. Speaker, I know that very often after a hollow budget speech the government supporters make more noise than usual. We have been told about six years of mismanagement. There has been the suggestion of the restoration of confidence following the election and that the economy was moving ahead. One needs to look at the white papers brought down by the minister the other day and study all the indices to which he referred. Look at every one of them, and what do you find? You find a tremendous expansion during this last year, expansion the year before, and expansion the year before that. Was that due to the mesmerism exercised by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) two years before he came to this house?

During that time, he was writing the book, "Troubled Canada", and now he is going to have to trouble himself with some of the things he put in it. Make no mistake about that. We were told we had to get the economy moving, the economy was on dead centre and nothing could be done about it unless we elected a Liberal government. As I said before, all one needs to do is to go through the indices one finds in the white papers in order to ascertain that there has been a tremendous improvement during the past year, and improvement during the year before that. As the minister said, undoubtedly this improvement is going to continue due to the foundations which were laid by this government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nowlan: I am not saying, Mr. Speaker, that we had any monopoly on political agility or political ability. I think sometimes we are rather politically inept. Indeed, there is a great monopoly on political ability over on the other side of the house, but I will say that what we did have in our government was administrative ability.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nowlan: I notice that the loudest and most hollow laughter is coming from one who was a member of the government that was defeated in 1957. I can tell him about a statement made by one of his former colleagues who is now in the other place. A few nights before the last election this person said that, forgetting the difference in the personalities of the two leaders, forgetting the political ability which the Liberal party always showed, when it came to ability in administration there was no question but that the government of which I was a member was definitely superior to the government of Mr. St. Laurent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: That sounds like Mr. Grosart.

Mr. Nowlan: I could tell you who he is, but I will not. He also said that, judging from the candidates selected, if the Liberal party did get elected, the government of which I was a member would be definitely superior. I would say now that undoubtedly he was a good prophet in every way, shape and form.

Then, in addition to the indices to which I have referred, the minister referred, in lowered tones, almost broke down and wept, about the balance of payments. He said how terrible this problem was. He referred to the almost $1,200 million or something of that kind with which the nation had been confronted, and the inference again was that it was the government of which I was a member which was responsible. This balance of payments problem runs back beyond 1950.

An hon. Member: He said that.

Mr. Nowlan: If he did, I did not hear him.

An hon. Member: You were asleep.

Mr. Nowlan: You better keep shouting, boys, because you know you are in the wrong.

The minister did not say that three years ago the deficit was $1,500 million, and we reduced it until this year it was less than $900 million. He did not say that. Every economist who is worth his salt would venture to prophesy that the deficit will be reduced by another $300 million or $400 million this year and will be brought down to a reasonable figure. I would not venture to prophesy myself because that is something for the minister to indulge in, and he has indulged in enough prophesies. Certainly, the record in so far as the balance of payments is concerned is one of the greatest tributes that has been paid to any government, and one which goes a long, long way towards solving the fundamental economic problems with which we have been confronted. I admit it went up, but one has to see how it ran before 1950.

It is now well on the road to being controlled and I do not believe we have to worry too much about it in the future.

There has been talk of the deficit, the huge deficit which we ran up during the years we were in power. It is true, Mr. Speaker, that we had deficits. We had substantial deficits. We took over the country from a government which was allowing our economy to go to the dogs, a government which hid the true facts from the people before the election of 1957 by hiding the record. It created an impossible situation so far as the economy was concerned. What they did to compensate for that, as you know, in their great generosity, was to pay for two cups of coffee a day for the aged people, in the hope that would rectify the situation.

I have the figures here on the deficits which we did incur. There is no question but that they ran into very substantial ones. The white papers introduced by the minister two or three days ago show the accumulated deficits, including the estimated one for this year. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, I want to make it abundantly clear that I am not accepting necessarily the estimated deficit for the past fiscal year which appears in the white papers. The Minister of Finance says quite properly, that this is only an estimate. It is a matter which will be dealt with later on by definitive legislation fixing the amount, and when that time comes we will be able to discuss that matter more fully. I am not unconscious of the fact that with the political adroitness hon. gentlemen on the other side always show, it is a fairly easy matter to adjust figures and balances one way or the other.

Mr. Robichaud: You did a good job of it.

Mr. Nowlan: We did no job of it.

An hon. Member: That is right; you made a mess of it.

Mr. Nowlan: That is a plain statement of fact; we were politically inept. We are not as good politicians as you; we are not as crooked. I will give you an example. I refer to a colleague of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) who is not here in the house now but who holds a very distinguished position and is still living in Ottawa. He was a minister of finance, and one of the most distinguished ministers of finance. He was bothered in a different way; he had surpluses. He budgeted for them. I recall one year when I was here when he budgeted for a surplus of $20 million, but he ended up with a surplus of almost $500 million. It was really a pathetic experience, but it was easy to see the little thing that was done. There were corporate assets which had been written off. He activated the assets, then distributed them and took off about $50 millon or $60 million off his surplus, and he was trying that way to reduce his surplus.

Conversely, there is a very good way of reducing deficits. For instance, if you happened to be writing off the N.R.U. reactor during this year then possibly you would decrease that deficit to quite an extent. I remember another time when there were loans to the old age security fund which were inactive. They were brought back into an active asset and they were paid off out of the surplus. Those are just two or three little things which were done by very adept and politically astute—which I was not—ministers of finance from the Liberal party, hiding the surpluses which they had incurred and then trying to get rid of them.

I am not saying it is wrong, but we are not necessarily accepting the estimated budgetary deficit which appears in the white paper as it was brought down, and we will have a full opportunity to discuss that matter, I hope in the reasonably near future, when the accounts will be validated, and we can go into detail at that time.

I was referring to deficits. We had deficits of over $3,525 million. I am not giving the odd figures. No, I beg your pardon, Mr. Speaker, I have got the wrong column here.

An hon. Member: And the wrong speech.

Mr. Nowlan: As I said, I am not very politically adept. We paid additional moneys to the provinces of $3,525 million during the years we were in office, and during the same time our accumulated deficit was $2,862 million, so if our government, which was led by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, had continued to pay to the provinces on the same generous scale at which my hon. friends opposite were paying, we would have had a surplus of over $662 million. I think it is well for the country to bear those figures in mind when we talk about the deficit, and the fact that we ran so many deficits.

We have heard talk about unemployment. There is unemployment, Mr. Speaker, and there is no question about that, but the degree of unemployment is less now than it was. I realize, and I am sure all hon. members of the house realize, that unemployment to a man or woman who is unemployed is a personal tragedy. Everyone feels that; everyone knows it, but I know of no government that did more to try to deal with the problem of unemployment than the government to which I belonged.

It is not a new problem. One would almost think, listening to the Liberal party, that it was something which grew up under our regime, but this afternoon as a mental exercise I was looking back through some budget speeches and I found that R. B. Bennett in 1930 said the fundamental problem was unemployment.

Mr. Macdonald: Did he fix it?

Mr. Nowlan: Of course he inherited from the Liberals when he took office. I also noticed that our good friend, our mutual friend, Milton Gregg, when he was minister of labour, on the same day in February 1955 when either Mr. Abbott or Mr. Walter Harris, I forget which, brought in a budget, referred to the fact that there were 613,000 people unemployed then. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, the Tories were not in power then. Hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, and there were 613,000 people unemployed as of that day in February, 1955. I have the page in Hansard where that reference can be found. As I have said, it is not a new problem, and it is not one for which we are prepared to accept any more than our share of responsibility.

The Minister of Finance became very ecstatic a few moments ago about the $400 million municipal loan fund and about what could be done to correct unemployment with that. I hope he is correct; I hope he is right. Undoubtedly it can make some improvement on unemployment for the time being, but I would point out and remind the house that according to the figures produced a few days ago by my hon. friend, the former minister of labour, during the time we were in power, under the municipal works program over $900 million was spent to try to correct unemployment; yet we were told there was nothing done, it was not worth anything and was no help whatsoever. I would remind the Minister of Finance of that situation when he is looking forward so ecstatically to what will be done under the municipal loan fund.

I am not going to deal at length with any of the provisions which the Minister of Finance referred to tonight. Some doubtlessly have some merit in them, but they are of a nature that one would not want to speak casually or quickly about them. But I am quite sure of this, that if the tax exemption on building materials is withdrawn it is going to cost a little bit more to build a house, and I do not think adjustments made under the National Housing Act will compensate for that.

Yesterday or the day before we heard the Minister of Labour talking about throwing five hundred dollar bills around during the winter to help build houses. I was reminded of the old contractor who had become very wealthy, who was a national character, who lived in Ottawa and who used to throw one hundred dollar bills and ten dollar bills around. So far as unemployment is concerned I am sure if that same gentleman returned to life today, climbed the peace tower and started throwing hundred dollar bills from it, he would do as much good as paying this $500 for the building of houses. Now having seen the withdrawal of the tax exemption on building materials I do not think this $500 subsidy is going to compensate for that.

All this will be considered when the debate is resumed again, and when it is resumed I hope we will be able to discuss it in a better mood than it has been tonight, and that there will be no platitudes and personalities interjected.

Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Mr. Nowlan the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Will the house leader inform us what is the business for tomorrow and when the budget debate will be resumed?

Mr. Pickersgill: The business for tomorrow will be first the resolution preceding the bill to establish the department of industry, and when that is completed—I hope I am right in saying "when"—we will resume the debate on the resolution preceding the municipal development and loan board bill. I would prefer to confer with hon. gentlemen opposite before announcing when the budget debate will resume or what will be the program for next week.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

PART I

ECONOMIC REVIEW OF 1962

GENERAL

The normal cyclical recovery which had begun in the early months of 1961 slowed appreciably in the course of 1962. The western grain crop was better than average, in contrast to the 1961 crop which was not much more than half the recent average and this improvement helped to offset the effects of the slowdown in the non-agricultural sector. The Gross National Product in 1962 was about 8 per cent above that of 1961, but prices rose about 1.7 per cent and consequently the increase of G.N.P. in real terms was about 6.2 per cent on a year-to-year basis. From the fourth quarter of 1961 to the fourth quarter of 1962 (which covers the course of 1962), real non-agricultural output increased by about 4 per cent.

In the seven calendar quarters since the recovery began, and for which latest data are available, expenditures on goods and services both by persons and by provincial and municipal governments rose less rapidly than in comparable periods of the two preceding upswings. Investment, while stronger than in the rather weak recovery of 1958–1959, failed to provide the continuing stimulus to the economy which had characterized the 1954–1956 upswing. Two factors contributing to the current recovery were an improvement in the current account of the balance of payments and the already-noted increase in farm output, which was reflected in an accumulation of farm inventories.

Non-agricultural employment in both goods-producing and service industries increased until about mid-1962, and then showed no clear trend to the end of the year. For the year as a whole, non-agricultural employment was 3.5 per cent higher than in 1961. Agricultural employment continued to decline. The increases in employment took place throughout the various regions of the country, but were smallest (both in absolute and relative terms) in the Atlantic Provinces. For rather special reasons, the labour force grew at a much slower pace than in recent years. As a consequence, unemployment declined from over 7 per cent in 1960 and 1961 to just under 6 per cent in 1962.

Prices and costs rose slightly more in 1962 than they had in 1961. The decline in value of the Canadian dollar and the imposition of tariff surcharges at the time of the mid-year exchange crisis were contributing factors. At the same time prices and costs in other industrialized countries increased more rapidly than did Canadian prices and costs. As a result of this and the new exchange rate the Canadian competitive position improved.

The exchange crisis which developed during the spring of 1962 was accompanied by instability in financial markets. On June 24th drastic measures were taken to deal with the situation including the introduction of a fixed Bank Rate at 6 per cent, a major reduction in the money supply, and the imposition of tariff surcharges. Massive financial assistance was received from abroad. The flight of capital was halted and, after an interval, it was induced to return. As capital began to flow back, interest rates were reduced from their summer peak and by the end of the year were not much above the rates in January.

THE NATIONAL ACCOUNTS

National Income and Product

The Gross National Product rose from the first quarter of 1961 through to the fourth quarter of 1962. The expansion during 1961 was fairly rapid, as is typical in the early months of a cyclical upswing. By the end of 1961 the expansion began to moderate and throughout 1962 was less than during the preceding year. (See Table 1 and the accompanying chart.) In 1962, there was an improved agricultural output. As a result of drought conditions in the Prairies the grain crop in 1961 was far below normal, while in 1962 the western wheat crop amounted to 540 million bushels, about double that of the preceding year. Agricultural prices in 1962 were higher, and the combination of better crops and higher prices added about $400 million to the Gross National Product, which rose by 8 per cent. Prices were 1.7 per cent above 1961, while the volume of economic activity rose by 6.2 per cent. The accompanying chart and Table 5 show that since the beginning of 1961 the gains in the value and volume of output exceeded that of the immediately preceding upswing in 1958–1959 but were below those of 1954–1955. By the fourth quarter of 1962, the volume of non-farm real output was almost 10 per cent above the low point of activity in the first quarter of 1961 and had exceeded the previous cyclical peak by 9 per cent.

In 1962, output in the goods-producing industries was about 8 per cent above 1961. The increases in output during 1962 were considerably smaller than those which took place during the initial period of the upswing in 1961. Apart from agriculture, output in 1962 in other goods industries was between 6 and 7 per cent above 1961. This gain was distributed among all major industries. Manufacturing production rose by 8 per cent with durable goods production showing an increase of 11 per cent. Part of the explanation of this is the more volatile nature of durable goods production, with this group declining more rapidly in downswings and increasing more rapidly in upswings. Nevertheless, by the fourth quarter of 1962 output in durable goods industries was 12 per cent above the previous cyclical peak in the first quarter of 1960, while, as previously noted, non-agricultural output increased by 9 per cent during this thirty-three month period.

Output in the non-durable goods sector was about 5 per cent higher in 1962 than in 1961. There was almost no change in non-durable goods output in the course of 1962. In the year-over-year comparison, the largest gains were made in rubber products, clothing, textile, paper products, petroleum products and chemical industries. Other non-durable goods industries showed more moderate gains in the same comparison.

The forestry, fishing and trapping industries also showed year-over-year increases. The output and distribution of electric power and gas utilities rose by more than 6 per cent, or about in line with total real output, in the year-over-year comparison. In the construction industry, output was about 1½ per cent higher in 1962, due mainly to increased activity in housing.

Mining output in 1962 was 8 per cent above 1961. The gains were somewhat uneven. Production of metals did not increase as much as other sections of the industry: there was some gain in copper output, while nickel output was very much higher in the first half of 1962 than in 1961, but fell below year-earlier levels in the second half in the light of inventory adjustments. Output of non-metallic minerals, especially asbestos, increased, as did output of fuels, notably natural gas and petroleum, where exports to the United States increased, along with domestic consumption. Iron ore output also increased, reflecting increasing foreign as well as domestic demand and the opening up of new facilities. Output of zinc showed some gain, while that of lead and uranium declined.

Output in the service industries rose by about 4 per cent in 1962, about in line with the average rate of increase in the past decade.

Turning to the flow of incomes in 1962, all major groups showed increases over 1961.

Corporation profits typically drop sharply during cyclical downturns and rise very sharply in the early stages of an upswing. Profits increased by 29 per cent from the first to the fourth quarter of 1961 and then maintained a fairly level rate of about $3.8 billion throughout 1962, which was 11 per cent above the average of 1961. In the fourth quarter of 1962 profits were close to $4 billion. The increases in profits may be attributed to expansion of output, relative stability of costs and the reduction in the exchange rate of the Canadian dollar.

[2]The book value of inventories is deflated to remove the effect of price changes and the derived "physical" change is then valued at average prices of the current period to obtain the value of physical change. The difference between this value of physical change and the change in book value is called the inventory valuation adjustment (see line 8, Table 1).

[3]Minor adjustments have been made to the figures of current receipts and payments shown in Table 29 to achieve consistency with the other component series.

Labour income rose to an annual rate of $20.7 billion in the fourth quarter of 1962, almost 12 per cent above the first quarter of 1961. During this period, average hourly earnings in manufacturing rose by about 5½ per cent while the length of the work week increased by one per cent. The number of non-farm employees was 5.5 per cent higher in the fourth quarter of 1962 than in the first quarter of 1961.

Rent, interest and miscellaneous investment income and net income of non-farm unincorporated business all increased in 1962.

Net farm income, which includes changes in farm inventories, showed a very large increase over 1961, due mainly to the big increase in the western grain crop. Net farm income averaged $1.4 billion, about 43 per cent above the low level of 1961. Farm cash income was maintained in 1961 by a substantial drawing down of farm stocks. In 1962 farm inventories increased moderately. Farm cash income in 1962 was 4.3 per cent above that of 1961.

National Expenditure

Since the beginning of the upswing in the early months of 1961, all of the major components of demand have shown some increase. Accompanying Tables 4 and 5 provide analytical detail of the components of Gross National Expenditure for the first seven quarters of upswing following the low points of activity in 1954, 1958 and 1961. These tables supplement and fill out the broad picture outlined in the chart on page 7. Table 4 shows how much the absolute change in the various G.N.E. components contributed to the total change in G.N.E. (and output). Table 5 shows the percentage change in the G.N.E. components for the relevant seven quarter periods.

As may be seen from Table 4, the most important contributors to the current upswing in demand have been consumer demand, exports, and outlays by provincial and municipal governments for goods and services (including large sums for capital outlays financed by the federal government). Business investment has played only a modest role so far, as the relative increase in non-farm business inventories has been smaller than in preceding upswings. Imports have supplied a much smaller amount of increase in total demand in the upswing so far, compared to earlier upswings, and domestic output has consequently been that much larger.

For the seven quarters since the upturn of early 1961, the increase in exports of goods and services has exceeded the increase in imports of goods and services. Because of this the economy has received a net stimulus from international trade since the beginning of the upturn. By contrast, in the first seven quarters of the two preceding upswings, the balance of international trade acted in the opposite direction.

Table 5 shows that the expansionary effect of the balance of payments in the current upswing has come about both from the export side as well as the import side. The increase in exports of goods and services currently has exceeded that of 1958–1959, although below that of 1954–1955. By contrast, imports of goods and services have risen less than exports in the current period, and by substantially less than imports in the two preceding periods. Some further analysis of this appears in the section on Balance of International Payments.

The role of fixed investment has varied in the first seven quarters of the three business upswings. In the current period, the increases in both housing and business investment have been greater than in the 1958–1959 period. This partly reflects the fact that, in this earlier period, adjustments were taking place following the high levels reached in the investment boom of the mid-1950's. Compared to the 1954–1955 period, investment in the current upswing has been a less dynamic force. That is to say, investment has increased at somewhat less than the rate of total output, whereas in 1954–1955, the increase in investment was substantially above that of total output.

Government spending on goods and services increased somewhat less rapidly during the current expansion than in the two preceding. The entire increase has been accounted for by provincial and municipal governments (although it should be noted that a substantial part of the capital outlays by these governments has been financed by the federal government).

The smaller relative increase in non-farm inventories in the current upswing has already been noted and is related, in part at least, to the ready availability of supplies, greater consciousness of costs of carrying excessive inventories, improved methods of inventory control and to the adaptation of business decisions to a non-inflationary environment. The larger increase in farm inventories during 1962 reflects the far below average grain crop in 1961 and the larger than average crop in 1962.

Consumer spending rose less rapidly in the current upswing than in the two preceding periods (Table 5) and accounted for a considerably smaller share of the total increase in G.N.E. than in 1958–1959 and about the same as in 1954–1956 (Table 4). In the seven quarters beginning early in 1961, consumer spending on both non-durable goods and, in particular, on durable goods (reflecting the latest upsurge in new car buying) increased more rapidly than in the 1958–1959 period, although less rapidly than in 1954–1955. In the current period increases in spending on consumer services were below those of the two preceding upswings. The slower rise in services is partly attributable to smaller price increases in the current period than in the preceding upswings.

Turning briefly to developments in 1962 alone, the same broad picture obtains as that described for the entire expansion begining early in 1961.

Consumer spending rose moderately throughout 1962, with some variation by components. Expenditures on non-durables and services increased generally throughout the year, and following an increase in the first half of the year there was a decline in durable goods spending in the third quarter, due to a shortage of new model cars. For the year 1962 as a whole, new passenger car sales rose about 15 per cent to an estimated 504,000 vehicles. Sales of North American models rose about 28 per cent, while sales of European models declined by about 26 per cent.

Government expenditure on goods and services increased in the first half of 1962 and then subsequently declined, due entirely to lower expenditures at the federal level, as provincial and municipal expenditures rose in the final half of the year.

Housing outlays were higher throughout 1962, at an annual rate of about $1,580 million, 8 per cent above the 1961 average. Housing starts rose in the first half of the year and then following some decline remained relatively stable. For 1962 as a whole, housing starts were about 130,000, compared with 126,000 in 1961. Housing completions moved irregularly within 1962, and totalled about 127,000, compared with 116,000 units in 1961. The number of single dwellings started in 1962 showed some decline within the year, while multi-unit dwellings (e.g., apartments) showed some increase. Further comments on housing are contained in the section on financial developments.

Quarterly data on business fixed investment indicate that new non-residential construction declined slightly to the third quarter and then rose to about the annual rate of $2.7 billion in the fourth quarter, approximately the same as the 1961 annual figure. Investment in new machinery and equipment increased steadily to a rate of $2.8 billion in the last half of the year and for 1962 as a whole it was about 9 per cent above the 1961 annual average.

Non-farm inventories showed a small accumulation in the first half of 1962 and then were built up rapidly at an annual rate of $800 million in the third quarter. The following table shows that the accumulation took place at the manufacturing and retail levels.

Some of the increase in inventory holdings, which affected a number of industries, took place against a rising level of production in manufacturing, although the ratio of stocks to shipments increased somewhat. However, the rate of increase was too rapid to be accounted for by production needs alone, and some of the increase was undoubtedly related to the effects of the exchange emergency, which might have resulted in some anticipatory buying. By the early months of the fourth quarter, the rapid increase in manufacturing inventories came to an end, and for the fourth quarter as a whole, non-farm business inventories were being accumulated at a more moderate rate.

Exports rose in the first half of 1962, were steady in the third quarter, then rose again in the fourth. Imports, on the other hand, rose in the first half, were steady in the third quarter, then declined in the fourth quarter. The result of these movements was that the current account deficit (on the National Accounts basis) declined throughout the year from an annual rate of $1.0 billion in the first quarter to $0.9 billion in the second and third quarters, and to $0.4 billion in the fourth. A more complete analysis of the balance of payments is given in a subsequent section.

Personal Income and its Disposition

Personal income for 1962 was 8.0 per cent above 1961, in line with the increase in Gross National Product. During the course of 1962, the expansion of personal income was slower than during the earlier part of the upswing in 1961. All of the major components showed year-to-year increases.

Among the components, wages, salaries and supplementary labour income rose throughout the year although at a diminishing rate. Farm income was very much higher in 1962 due mainly to a large grain crop following upon the small crop in the preceding year. Substantial payments by the Canadian Wheat Board raised farm income considerably in the second quarter of 1962. Income of unincorporated business in 1962 was 4.0 per cent above the 1961 annual average due to increases in net income from retail trade, construction, community services. Interest and dividend payments to persons fell slightly from the fourth quarter of 1961 to the first quarter of 1962 and then increased to the fourth quarter of the year. The increase during 1962 in transfer payments from government (excluding interest) reflected in part the increase in payments from the Old Age Security Fund, which more than offset the lower unemployment insurance benefit payments.

Personal disposable income followed somewhat the same pattern as personal income during 1962 and was 8.0 per cent higher than in 1961. Personal direct taxes at all levels of government (including, in addition to personal income taxes, succession duties, and miscellaneous taxes) were about 8 per cent higher than in 1961, while personal income tax payments rose 8.3 per cent from the first to the fourth quarter. Personal saving, i.e., personal disposable income less personal spending, increased from the first to the second quarter, and then declined to the end of the year.

For 1962 as a whole, personal saving, which includes changes in farm inventories, averaged 8.3 per cent of personal disposable income. Excluding the change in farm inventories, personal saving in 1962 was 7.8 per cent of disposable income, compared with 6.9 per cent in 1961.

Total saving, which comprises the savings of the personal, business and government sectors of the economy, rose from $5.7 billion in 1961 to $6.9 billion in 1962. As noted in the previous section, personal saving rose by about $800 million, and a substantial part of this increase reflected the higher levels of personal income which, in turn, was affected by the sharp increase in farm net income arising out of the performance of agricultural output in the two years. The counterpart to this element in personal saving is included in the accumulation of inventories in the table on Disposition of Saving.

Another part of the increase in total saving in 1962 was accounted for by business gross saving in the form of larger undistributed corporation profits and capital consumption allowances. Table 12 shows the year-to-year change in corporation profits. As noted earlier, they showed a cyclical expansion, while dividend payments were moderately higher. As a result undistributed profits were higher. Business gross saving in 1962 rose 7.1 per cent over 1961. After payments of dividends, undistributed profits increased by $201 million and capital consumption allowances increased by $216 million. The deficit on combined Government Account was lower by $135 million on a year-to-year basis.

As between 1961 and 1962, the additional savings were matched by larger outlays for housing, business fixed investment and inventories, and by a smaller deficit on current international account. In 1961, as previously noted, the low value of the grain crop reduced both personal saving and farm inventories. In 1962, the accumulation of inventories, both farm and non-farm, provided the largest single increase in the disposition of saving. Most of the increase in non-farm business inventories occurred in the manufacturing and retail trade sectors. More detailed comments on fixed investment and the current international account appear in other sections of this White Paper.

[1] SEASONALLY ADJUSTED AND AT ANNUAL RATES

Investment and Capital Expenditure

In the past few years, capital expenditures in Canada have amounted to about 22.0 per cent of Gross National Expenditure, a figure about in line with the earlier postwar years but below the levels and proportions of the period of the mid-1950's. The reasons for this changing level of capital expenditures are complex.

Canada entered the postwar era with an economy unimpaired by war damage, vastly extended in scope and depth, and capable of satisfying the needs arising from a conjuncture of factors, which led to high levels of investment. There were new industries and new skills to meet the accumulation of unsatisfied demand for consumer, social and industrial capital, as well as the needs of Europe and the rest of the world. The Korean War and the period immediately following brought with them new developments which gave additional emphasis to investment in Canada, particularly in resource areas. For example, world political developments, the increase in world commodity prices, the large scale stockpiling programmes and the high level of demand in the United States for industrial materials, all led to rapid increases in capital outlays and to the development of sources of raw materials in Canada.

The demands made on the Canadian economy led to sharp increases in imports of goods, services and know-how, and large numbers of trained immigrants entered the country to meet these greatly expanded manpower needs.

However, some investments by large scale enterprises, with strong financial positions, are often made with a very long time horizon and, because of this, some major classes of investment, over short periods of time, often tend to outstrip demand. In part this may be due to the over-optimism of some investors, at least in the short-run, and also to the excess capacity which results, from time to time, in a country growing up to its facilities. This has been the case in Canada over the past few years. Expectations have not been completely fulfilled as prices of primary products receded and alternative sources of supply were developed by other countries. Capacity was being added at a rate in excess of the current growth of markets, both domestic and foreign; as a result of all these factors, private business investment declined, both absolutely and as a proportion of G.N.E.

Adaptation to a different ratio of business investment in a country of vast spread and scattered resources requires a high degree of flexibility. The resources industries themselves were less affected, since they are by nature highly productive and, in any event, were favoured by strong market conditions. The manufacturing industries experienced greater difficulties. Their costs had risen as a result of the pull of wages and costs in the booming resource industries. Canadian manufacturing has always faced problems arising from the limited size of the domestic market. It can prosper only when it can capture larger markets by being competitive both at home and abroad. Rising costs compounded by a high exchange value for the Canadian dollar soon began to manifest themselves when the rest of the world restored its productive capacity.

Subsequent to 1957, business fixed investment declined, for reasons just described, about 15 per cent, and total investment moved downward to about 22 per cent of Gross National Expenditure. By 1962, the volume of total investment was still 7 per cent below that of 1957. On the other hand, investment in housing and social capital absorbed a fairly steady proportion of total Gross National Expenditure. (See Table 13.). Investment in housing and social capital represents between one-third and one-half of all capital expenditure and includes, in addition to housing, outlays by government departments, institutions (e.g. hospitals and schools) and municipal waterworks. Investment in housing and social capital responds to population growth and migration, urbanization, increases in educational standards, and new policies, among others.

Turning to 1962, total private and public investment amounted to $8,738 million, 6.9 per cent above the level of 1961. Increased fixed investment in agriculture, manufacturing, institutions and government accounted for most of the increase. Capital expenditures by private business enterprises rose by 4.9 per cent in 1962.

Capital investment in agriculture increased 12.6 per cent, largely reflecting additional spending from higher farm incomes. In mining, an increase in demand for durable equipment more than accounted for increased investment in that sector of 6.5 per cent. In the manufacturing sector, increases in primary metals, metal fabricating, petroleum and coal products more than offset lower investment in food and beverages, wood, chemical and chemical products.

Capital expenditures in transportation, storage and communication declined in 1962, reflecting divergent movements. Investment by telephone utilities increased by $48 million while air transport, warehousing, oil and gas pipelines were down by approximately $135 million, due, in large part, to the completion of some major projects in 1961. Railroad investment also declined somewhat in 1962.

The increased investment in institutional services was entirely accounted for by larger capital investment in educational institutions which rose by $193 million compared with 1961. Outlays for technical and vocational schools accounted for a large part of this increase. Capital expenditures on housing were up 8.2 per cent in 1962 reflecting the completions during the year of housing starts that had been made in increased numbers in late 1961, and supplemented by an increase of 4.5 thousands of units of housing starts.

Capital expenditures in government departments rose 5.1 per cent in 1962. Increases in departmental outlays of provincial and municipal governments more than offset reduced investment outlays at the federal level.

Revenue and Expenditure of All Governments*

Computed on the basis of the National Accounts definitions, expenditures in 1962 by all levels of government rose 7.0 per cent over 1961. Since revenues increased by 8.6 per cent during the same period, the deficit for all levels of government declined from $905 million in 1961 to $770 million in 1962. In the third and fourth quarters of 1962, the total deficit was running at an annual rate of $694 million, consisting of a federal deficit of $250 million and a deficit at provincial and municipal levels of $444 million.

In analyzing developments in 1962, it is necessary to keep in mind the new federal-provincial tax collection arrangements, which affected the levels of revenue and expenditure of the Federal Government and the revenues of provincial governments. As a consequence of the introduction of the new tax collection arrangements in the first quarter of 1962 and the continuation in that quarter of transfer payments to the provinces under the former tax rental agreements, the federal deficit in that quarter was irregularly high and the position of provincial-municipal governments was correspondingly affected.

* The following section discusses those government transactions relevant to the National Accounts. As a result the Statistics differ from those shown in Public Accounts. Table 18 indicates the reconciliation between federal deficit or surplus for purposes of the National Accounts and the comparable figures appearing in the Public Accounts.

To compare on a national accounts basis government expenditure with Gross National Expenditure (which measures the expenditures on goods and services), it is necessary to limit the comparison to government outlays on goods and services (as distinct from outlays for transfer payments, etc.), since the former are the government outlays directly included in the Gross National Expenditure account. Transfer payments by government are reflected, of course, in the income of the personal sector.

In 1962, expenditures on goods and services by the three levels of government represented 19.1 per cent of the Gross National Expenditure, virtually unchanged from the proportion of 19.3 per cent in 1961, and slightly above the proportions of 18.6 per cent in 1960 and 1959. The slight increase since 1960 has been attributable to provincial and municipal governments. Since 1952, when the buildup in defence expenditures raised the proportion of government expenditures to Gross National Expenditure to approximately 18 per cent, the rise in government expenditures on goods and services has been very slightly in excess of the growth in Gross National Expenditure.

Within the total, expenditures on goods and services by the Federal Government in 1962 represented a smaller share of total expenditures than in 1961. Defence and non-defence expenditures of the Federal Government were fractionally reduced while the proportion at the combined provincial and municipal levels was somewhat higher.

These expenditures on goods and services in the government sector of Gross National Expenditure include outlays by all levels of government on construction and capital equipment which, over the past several years, have represented a relative constant share, approaching one quarter of all government outlays on goods and services. In 1962 capital outlays by the provincial and municipal governments (partly financed by federal assistance) increased and accounted for some of the increase in total provincial and municipal expenditures on goods and services.

At the federal level, revenues increased during 1962, following a decline in the first quarter which reflected the new tax collection arrangements. Revenues from direct taxation on persons were generally up, in line with increases in labour income and other personal income. Tax accruals on corporations were generally level throughout 1962, in line with the movement in corporation profits following a first quarter decline which was again attributable to the tax collection arrangement. Withholding tax revenue was somewhat higher in 1962. Federal Government investment income moved irregularly during 1962, and was higher on a year-to-year comparison. Indirect taxes increased moderately in the first half of 1962 and then rose sharply in the third quarter, mainly due to increased custom duties, following the imposition of import surcharges on June 24, 1962, and subsequently levelled off in the fourth quarter.

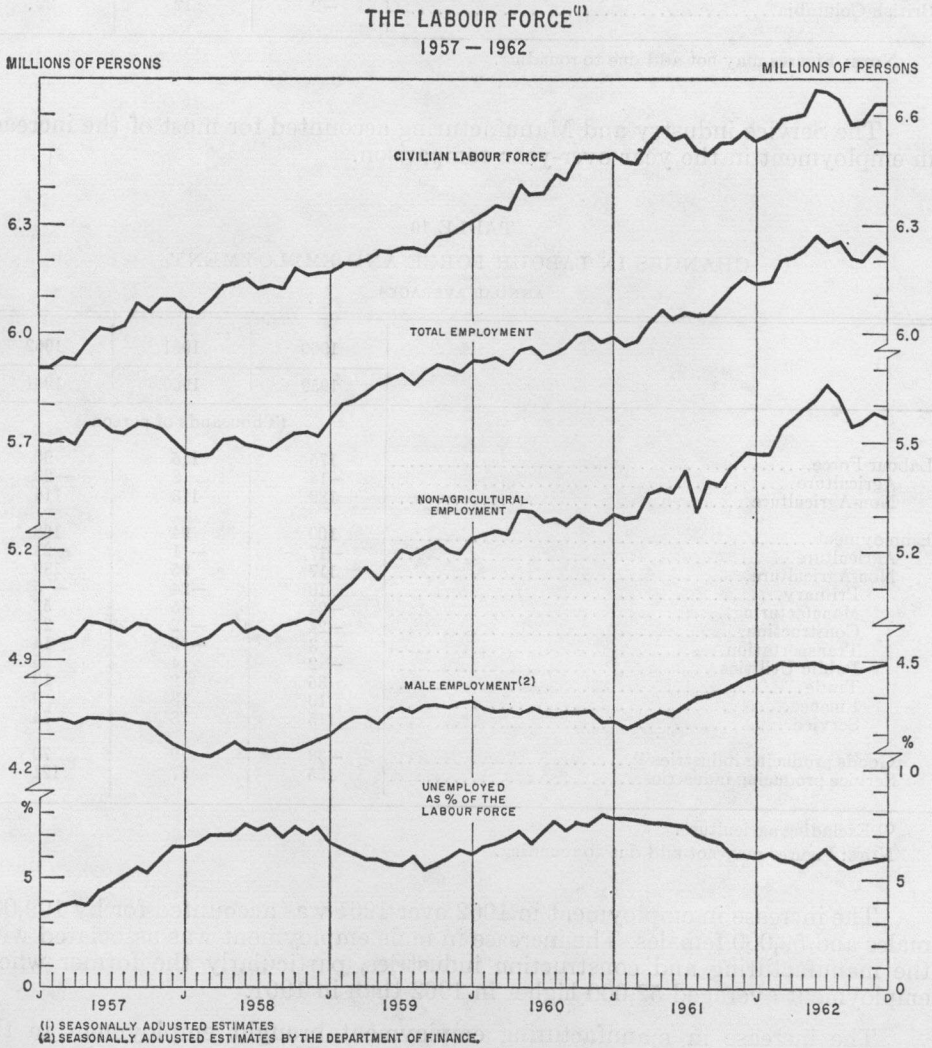
Turning to federal expenditures in 1962, there was a decline in total outlays from the second to the fourth quarter. The decline was the result of a number of different movements. Outlays on goods and services increased from the first to the second quarter due to irregularly high defence outlays. In the third and fourth quarters federal outlays on goods and services declined, reflecting in part the reduction to more typical levels of defence spending and in part the reduction in budgetary expenditures, as part of the emergency measures announced in June.

Federal transfer payments to persons rose 5.3 per cent in 1962 mainly as a result of acreage payments to western grain producers, and an increased rate of Old Age Security payments.

Transfers to provincial and municipal governments declined from the first quarter to the second, then increased again in the third and fourth quarters. As previously noted, the last payments under the former tax rental agreements were made in the first quarter of 1962. In the third and fourth quarters, increases were related to payments under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act and the Technical Assistance and Vocational Training Act. (These latter transfer payments are reflected as outlays on goods and services by provincial and municipal governments.)

Turning to provincial and municipal government revenues, these increased in 1962. The new tax collection agreement resulted in higher direct taxes received by these governments. Revenues were also higher from retail sales taxes and real property taxes.



Provincial-municipal outlays on goods and services rose substantially from the first to the second quarter of 1962, and then more moderately in the third and fourth quarters. From the first quarter of 1961 to the fourth quarter of 1962, provincial-municipal outlays on goods and services increased by $708 million, about 17 per cent. As noted in Table 5, this rate of increase was below that of the two preceding upswings. In the current period, some of the increase in outlays has been in the form of outlays on technical and vocational schools, with federal financial assistance.

Transfers to persons by provincial-municipal governments rose throughout 1962, owing to larger payments to hospitals, educational institutions, as well as for social assistance.

EMPLOYMENT AND EARNINGS

Developments in the labour market for 1962 followed a pattern somewhat similar to that of economic activity. Based on comparisons of yearly averages, there was an increase in employment in both goods- and service-producing industries. On a year-to-year basis, total employment increased by 168,000 persons, about 2.8 per cent. The increase during 1962 itself was much smaller and, as measured by the change between the fourth quarter of 1961 and the fourth quarter of 1962, amounted to 100,000 persons, about 1.6 per cent. This slowdown in employment gains after mid-year is evident from the accompanying labour force chart. At the same time, the total civilian labour force grew at a much slower rate than in recent years as many would-be entrants remained out of the labour force. As a result of these developments the rate of unemployment in 1962 averaged below that of 1961, 5.9 per cent compared with 7.0 per cent. The unemployment rate moved between $5\frac{1}{2}$ and $6\frac{1}{2}$ per cent during 1962, and ended the year at about the annual average. This high rate of unemployment was considerably above that of the earlier postwar Canadian period, and well above that of most other industrialized countries.

As in 1961, the year-to-year increase in employment was more than accounted for in the non-agricultural sectors and there was some further decline in agricultural employment. Ontario and Quebec accounted for more than half the total increase while employment in the Atlantic provinces, the Prairies and British Columbia also rose.

NOTE: Figures may not add due to rounding.

The increase in employment in 1962 over 1961 was accounted for by 109,000 males and 59,000 females. The increase in male employment was associated with the manufacturing and construction industries, particularly the former where employment averaged 52,000 higher in 1962 than in 1961.

The increase in manufacturing employment brought employment in the goods-producing industries (excluding agriculture) back to the 1957 level. Average employment in the goods-producing industries, except agriculture, had declined between the peak year 1957 and 1960. Increases in manufacturing employment since 1960 have offset lower levels of employment in forestry and mining. By contrast, the service-producing industry has shown more consistent annual increases since 1957, though the rate has slowed in the past two years.

The growth of the labour force although still larger than in most other industrialized countries has slowed down during the past two years from the rate in immediately preceding years. Two features predominate in this situation. First, the net gain from migration has been significantly smaller and second, there has been a marked increase in prolonged school attendance. From 1956 to 1960, the population of 14 to 19 years olds increased by 276,000, while the labour force in this age group rose by 61,000. In the two years ending December, 1962, when the population growth in this age bracket was 157,000, the labour force in this age group grew by only 14,000. As a result, the participation rate in the labour force (i.e. the percentage of an age group working or seeking work) for these younger people continued to decline. The drop was particularly noticeable in the participation rate for males which fell from 43.0 per cent in 1960 to 39.6 per cent in 1962. For the same reason there was a similar, though less pronounced, decline in the participation rate for males in the 20 to 24 year old group.

There was little change in the male participation rate in the group of prime working age, 25 to 64. The participation rate for females, however, continued to rise, though at a slower rate, with married women accounting for the increase.

To place developments in the labour market in proper perspective it is helpful to compare the current position with the period immediately prior to the business upswing, after removing seasonal influences. Between the first quarter of 1961 and the fourth quarter of 1962, 138,000 persons were added to the labour force, a smaller amount than in preceding periods. Non-farm employment increased by 267,000 persons, which exceeded the growth in total employment because of a decline in farm employment. Consequently, the rate of unemployment dropped from 7.7 per cent of the labour force to 5.9 per cent between these two periods.

Peak	Trough	Unemployment Rate		Comparable Periods after Peak and Trough	Unemployment Rate	Change from
		Peak	Trough			Peak	Trough
1Q 1960	1Q 1961	6.4	7.7	4Q 1962	5.9	−0.5	−1.8
1Q 1957	1Q 1958	3.6	6.7	4Q 1959	5.9	+2.3	−0.8

The change in the unemployment rate in the last two years is in contrast with the experience of the preceding upswing. As the following table shows, unemployment has fallen more since the beginning of the current business upswing than it did in 1958. After seven quarters of expansion, rates of unemployment are below those at the preceding peak of business activity in the first quarter of 1960. By contrast, after a similar period of time in the preceding upswing rates of unemployment were above those of the previous peak. The difference in behaviour of unemployment is mainly attributable to the much smaller increase in the labour force in the current period. From the first quarter of 1958 to the fourth quarter of 1959, employment increased by 4.3 per cent, and in the current comparable period, it rose by 4.2 per cent. The labour force, on the other hand, grew by 3.4 per cent in the earlier period, but by only 2.1 per cent from early 1961 to the end of 1962. Comparisons with preceding peaks were affected by the slower growth in the labour force in the current period, as well as by a larger increase in employment. An analysis of unemployment behaviour based upon its own specific turning points yields roughly comparable results.

The 1962 rate of unemployment of 5.9 per cent is high compared both with the earlier Canadian postwar period and with other countries.

It is difficult to make comparisons of unemployment figures between different countries, since the statistical measurements differ. For example, Canada and the United States take sample household surveys, which cover the entire population. Swedish statistics are based upon those relating to members of unemployment insurance funds, while British data are based almost entirely on a count of registrants at employment exchanges and youth employment offices. Accordingly, meaningful international comparisons have been hard to come by. However, since the publication of last year's White Paper, a United States Presidential Committee* has computed unemployment rates on a roughly comparable basis, according to the U.S. concept. For 1960, the year for which the calculations were made, the rate in Canada was much above that of other countries. The comparative figures before and after adjustment are as follows:

PRICE TRENDS

From the beginning of 1961 to the end of 1962 the price of foreign exchange in Canadian dollars rose by about 9 per cent. In this period, the consumer price index rose by 2.1 per cent, the general index of wholesale prices by 4.5 per cent and the implicit price index of Gross National Expenditure by 2.7 per cent.

As might be expected, the major impact of the price rise has been on goods and services with a high import content, but the domestic price of export commodities whose price is set in world markets has also risen, for example, wheat, nickel, copper, newsprint and petroleum. Apart from the decline in the exchange rate, prices after June, 1962 were affected by the imposition of the temporary surcharges. Approximately three-quarters of the 1.2 per cent increase in consumer prices in 1962 took place in the latter half of the year.

A report recently published by the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development shows that the increase in consumer prices in other Western industrialized countries over the past 10 years has generally been higher than in Canada. In the comparison found in Table 20, taken from the Report, Canada is shown amongst the countries having the smallest increase in the industrialized western world.

There has been an improvement in Canada's competitive position over the past decade. The Canadian experience, as indicated in the accompanying chart on manufacturing, has been one in which wage rate increases have been relatively modest while output per man hour has continued to rise about in line with the average rate of increase achieved in the postwar period in Canada. By contrast, wage rates in some of the Western European countries have recently been rising rapidly while productivity gains have slowed as operating rates have approached full capacity. Wage and other costs per unit of output have shown sharp advances in some of these overseas countries. Table 21 presents some of these findings. These statistics reflect only prices valued in domestic currencies. Recent exchange rate adjustments sharpen these trends.

Generally speaking, prices in the current business upswing have so far risen less than they did in the comparable period of the upswing in 1958. The following table shows changes in the price levels from the low point in activity in the first quarter of 1961 and from the previous peak in the first quarter of 1960 to the fourth quarter of 1962. It makes similar comparisons with the preceding upswing in 1958. The table shows that, except for the wholesale index, prices have risen to a lesser extent than in the preceding period.

Table 24 shows that prices in the aggregate rose somewhat more in 1962 than in the preceding year. However, apart from those categories more directly affected by the lower exchange rate (imports and exports of goods and services and the index for new machinery and equipment where the import content is high), the increases were relatively small and of somewhat the same magnitude as those which have taken place in the past few years.

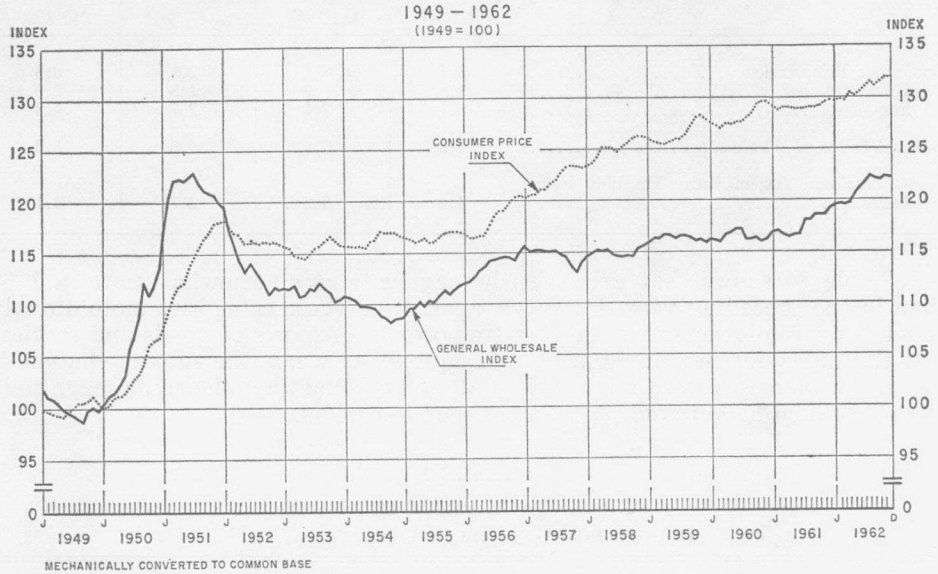
[1] Price indexes of these sectors are measured mainly by elements entering into costs (materials and labour purchased) rather than final selling prices, and generally it has not been possible to allow for changes in productivity. Over short periods of time, these cost indexes are not likely to vary to any extent from indexes of actual selling prices. Over longer periods, it may be that these cost deflators overstate price increases.



The consumer price index for 1962 averaged 130.7 compared with 129.2 for 1961, an increase of 1.2 per cent. The index moved from 129.7 in January, 1962 to 131.9 in December, with the major portion of the increase occurring between March and August. As Table 25 shows, increases in the food and services indexes were the major factor in the rise of the total index. Like the total index, food prices showed the greatest increase between March and August. Part of this rise was seasonal, particularly in the third quarter, but the lower value of the Canadian dollar and import surcharges were also moderate contributing factors.

Of more significance, however, were special circumstances affecting the price of beef, and to a lesser extent pork. Drought conditions in the western provinces in 1961 reduced the volume of feed which forced the premature sale of feeder cattle and a drop in hog production. At the same time a strong U.S. market for beef developed and, in 1962, a reduced supply and a strong demand forced meat prices up.

The increase in the services index in 1962 was of the same magnitude as the increase last year and much smaller than the increases recorded prior to 1961. As in recent years, the largest increase took place in services other than housing. In turn, higher fees for medical, dental and optical care were important factors and raised the health and personal care index by 2 per cent.

The wholesale price index, which is heavily weighted with export and import goods, responded, as was to be expected, to the lower exchange value of the Canadian dollar. The general index in 1962 was 2.9 per cent higher than in 1961 and marks the largest year-to-year increase since 1956. The largest increases occurred in prices of raw and partly manufactured goods with the other selected groupings each rising by about 2 per cent. It appears that wholesale prices reached their peak in the third quarter of 1962 and have subsequently levelled out.

BALANCE OF INTERNATIONAL PAYMENTS

General

The year 1962 was one of varied and divergent movements in Canada's balance of international payments. The current account, in the first two quarters, showed deficits of much the same amounts and much the same pattern as in 1961, although, typically during a business upswing, rather larger deficits, particularly on trade account, might have been expected. In the third quarter the trade account was substantially worse than the year before reflecting, at least in part, exceptionally large orders for imports placed in the previous quarter in the expectation of renewed depreciation of the Canadian dollar. In the fourth quarter, the trade balance improved as sharply as it had deteriorated. By this time a lower exchange rate and emergency import surcharges were exercising their effects. The trade balance for the year as a whole was about the same as it had been in 1961.

The non-merchandise account in 1962 was chiefly influenced by a change in the pattern of travel expenditures, especially in the second half of the year. The lower exchange rate, reinforced by a sharp reduction at the time of the exchange crisis in the customs-exemption for returning Canadians, was no doubt the main cause of an improvement of some $110 million over 1961. Nevertheless, the total current account deficit for 1962, at $848 million, remained very large.

While these developments were taking place in the current account, there were shifts of very large and disturbing amounts in the capital account. In the first quarter of the year the substantial net capital inflow, which for many years had financed the large current deficits, dried up. Thus the current deficit for that quarter had to be paid for by drawing on reserves. In the second quarter a substantial net outflow of capital developed which, together with the current account deficit for that quarter, had to be paid for by further drawings on reserves. The downward pressure on the Canadian dollar in the exchange market, which had been heavy in January and February but had relaxed in March, was renewed in April after the announcement of a General Election. For the rest of that month the "floating" exchange rate continued to be defended at a level of approximately 95 cents (U.S.). On May 2 a new "par value" of 92.5 cents was declared with the concurrence of the International Monetary Fund. Despite this, the downward pressure soon re-emerged and gathered strength, reaching a climax following the indecisive results of the Election on June 18. On June 24, the Government announced a series of drastic emergency measures.

Thereafter, net capital inflow started again and the reserves rose. However, in the third quarter the capital inflow was induced largely by the maintenance of stringent financial conditions which were out of keeping with the economic requirements of the country, and much of the capital came on a short-term basis. A renewed inflow of long-term capital began towards the end of the third quarter and was enlarged in the fourth so that, by the end of the year, the reserves (apart from borrowings of $300 million from the International Monetary Fund), were nearly $200 million higher than they had been at the beginning. Much of the long-term capital inflow took the form of borrowings, but a substantial part also took the form of "take-over" purchases of Canadian businesses by interests abroad.

Detailed comments on these developments follow.

Current Account

The existence of substantial current account deficits, and of appropriate net capital inflows to finance such deficits, is acceptable in a country like Canada at times when the economy is booming, when labour and plant are fully employed, and when substantial additions to the country's stock of productive capital equipment justify some recourse to outside sources to support the general expansion. But such deficits, and such net capital inflows, are clearly incompatible with a condition of high unemployment and lack of vigorous capital investment.

Table 27 shows the main structure of Canada's current account deficits from 1955 to 1962.

From the peak deficits of 1957 and 1959, of about $1.5 billion in each case, there has been a gradual improvement; but the improvement is not yet as large as the remaining deficit. Moreover the non-merchandise deficit, much of which is made up in any year of obligations arising from earlier capital imports, actually continued to deteriorate until 1962.

Turning from longer-term to cyclical patterns, it may be noted that the behaviour of the current account in the business expansion that took place between 1961 and 1962 has not been typical. Instead of deteriorating, the current account showed some improvement. Although most of this improvement was in the final quarter of the year, it is nevertheless true to say that, through the year, the business situation was receiving more stimulus from the current account than would be considered normal at such a stage in the cycle.

The following table indicates the changing proportion of imports to Gross National Product in the years from 1949 to 1962. In addition to the cyclical pattern which it suggests it also shows that the proportion of our Gross National Expenditure which is associated with imports has been showing a gradual decline.

In 1962 the price of imports rose substantially more than other items in the national expenditure because the devaluation affected the price of imports directly. Accordingly, the volume increases in imports in 1962 were less than the value increases. The accompanying chart shows the volume of imports of goods plotted against the index of industrial production, which covers a substantial part of the volume of real output in Canada. It can be seen that, apart from cyclical movements which affect both industrial production and imports, the trend of production has been upward, while the volume of imports has not changed significantly for many years. Toward the end of 1962, industrial production was more than 20 per cent above 1956, while import volume was about unchanged. Among the categories of imports contributing to the relative decline, two of the most striking were fuels and lubricants and construction materials, steel and pipe.

Merchandise exports have grown over the last six years by about the same percentage (32 per cent) as has G.N.P. The increase has been fairly well diversified, with exports of farm and forest products showing less increase than metals and minerals, chemicals and fertilizers. As the following table shows, a very substantial increase has been recorded in the category of "Manufactured and Miscellaneous" which includes machinery of all types, automotive items, aircraft, whiskey, textiles, etc.

SOURCE: Bank of Canada Statistical Summary. Data are based on Trade of Canada definitions which vary slightly from those used for balance of payments purposes.

Turning to developments in 1962, there was an expansion in both exports and imports of merchandise. In 1962 exports of goods increased by 8.1 per cent in value above 1961. Nearly one-half of the increase in the value of exports was attributable to higher prices, a reflection of the change in the foreign exchange value of the Canadian dollar. About one-half of the gain was accounted for by increased shipments of iron ore, crude petroleum, aluminum, nickel, lumber and timber and woodpulp. Declines were registered by uranium ores and concentrates and wheat. Exports of manufactured goods also showed a significant increase. The gains were more than accounted for by shipments to the United States; shipments to other countries were below those of 1961 due to inventory adjustments and other factors.

Within 1962 merchandise exports (on a seasonally adjusted basis) rose sharply from the first to the second quarter, were steady in the third quarter, then again rose sharply in the fourth quarter. From the beginning of the business expansion in the first quarter of 1961 to the fourth quarter of 1962, merchandise exports increased by 17 per cent.

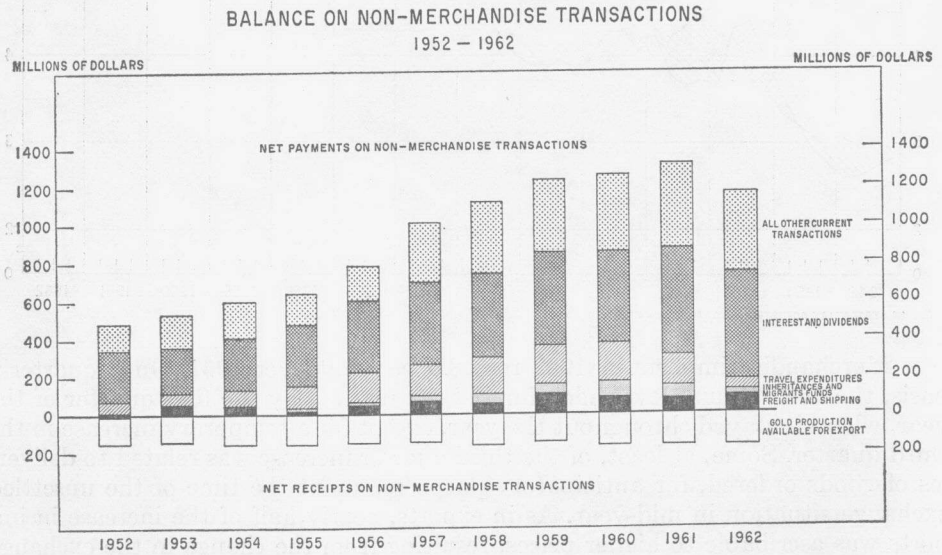
(1) SEASONALLY ADJUSTED AND AT ANNUAL RATES

Merchandise imports in 1962 rose 8.6 per cent over 1961. On a quarterly basis, the 1962 annual level had almost been reached by the first quarter of the year, where it stayed throughout the year, except for a temporary increase in the third quarter. Some, at least, of the third quarter increase was related to deliveries of goods ordered, for anticipatory purposes, about the time of the unsettled exchange situation in mid-year. As in exports, nearly half of the increase in imports was ascribable to higher prices, resulting from the change in the exchange rate.

During 1962, imports of industrial materials, automobile parts, non-farm machinery and electrical apparatus were prominent among the commodities which were higher than in 1961. More than three-fourths of the increase in merchandise imports in 1962 came from the United States.



There were significant changes in the geographical distribution of merchandise exports during 1962 compared with 1961. On a balance of payments basis, the very large trading deficit with the United States was reduced while the surplus with the United Kingdom increased somewhat and the surplus with other countries was reduced.

Turning to the non-merchandise account in 1962, the most significant development was a smaller deficit, compared with the corresponding period in 1961. Changes in the balance on most major components were relatively small, but there was substantial improvement on travel account.

The seasonally adjusted data for the non-merchandise account indicate a significant improvement in the third and fourth quarters of 1962. (The data are as defined in the National Accounts which differ slightly from Balance of Payments definitions.)

The third and fourth quarter 1962 reductions in non-merchandise payments were reflected in all categories. The sharpest reductions occurred in the outflow of interest and dividend payments which declined from an unusually high second quarter level, in payment for miscellaneous current services and in Canadian residents' travel expenditures abroad.

The improvement that took place in the travel account in the third and fourth quarters of 1962 was all with the United States. During 1962 there was a rise of $75 million in expenditures in Canada by visitors from the United States together with a reduction of $39 million in spending by Canadian travellers in the United States, following the further depreciation of the Canadian currency in May and the sharp reduction in June in the allowances for duty-free tourist purchases by Canadians.

Table 34, which shows annual totals for capital movements, tends to mask some of the more extreme developments which occurred in the course of 1962, and largely cancelled themselves out. These developments which, in the first part of the year, involved net capital outflows and were reflected in the exchange crisis at mid-year, still show some of their effects in the twelve-month totals ending December 31, 1962: the outflow arising out of trade in outstanding Canadian stocks was the first since this series has been classified separately, while the capital outflow arising out of trade in foreign securities was the largest in the postwar period.

The summary table shows that in the first quarter of 1962 the customary net capital inflow ceased and was replaced in the second quarter of the year by a substantial capital outflow. It was not until the third quarter of the year that a net capital inflow was resumed. The shift from the second to the third quarter amounted to almost one billion dollars, much of it representing a "swing" in short-term capital movements.

(1)Includes $125 million of new corporate borrowing which was applied to the refinancing of external liabilities in other forms.

Throughout 1962, the flow of direct investment remained inward. In the past ten years direct investment in Canada has varied between about $400 million and $650 million, depending upon a variety of factors including the phasing of particular new capital formation, refinancing operations, or acquisition by foreigners of existing Canadian concerns or interests. These financial operations were considerably larger in 1962 than in 1961. Inflows from direct investment declined somewhat from the first to the second quarter, then rose substantially late in the third and in the fourth quarter to the highest levels in six quarters. Industrially, the largest inflows were to the petroleum and natural gas industry and iron ore projects.

Apart from special financing by a corporation in the second quarter amounting to $125 million, and a Government of Canada borrowing abroad in the fourth quarter, new security transactions in 1962 resulted in a net inflow of approximately $150 million with most of this inflow occurring in the fourth quarter. Trade in outstanding Canadian bonds and debentures yielded a net inflow, most of which occurred in the third and fourth quarters. Net sales were made up mainly of Government of Canada direct and guaranteed issues and were on balance entirely to the United States as there were repurchases from residents of overseas countries. It will be noted that the yield spread between Canadian and United States long-term government bonds was considerably wider in the third and fourth quarters, after the exchange crisis, than before it.

Transactions in outstanding Canadian stocks, on the other hand, led to capital outflows in each of the four quarters of 1962, amounting in total to $116 million. The sales of Canadian stocks were largely accounted for by overseas investors; there was only a modest capital outflow to the United States arising out of these transactions.

Proceeds from new issues of Canadian securities sold to non-residents in 1962 amounted to $708 million. As previously noted, this includes $125 million involved in the refinancing of external liabilities, which took place in the second quarter, and the Government of Canada 25-year external borrowing. Apart from this, proceeds from new issues sold to non-residents were, quarter by quarter, somewhat below the same period in 1961 until the fourth quarter of the year.

A capital outflow of $79 million took place in 1962 in the form of net purchases of foreign securities; all but $14 million of this occurred in the first half of the year. The bulk of the outflow was in United States securities.

Official transactions in 1962 (apart from special international financial assistance) yielded a net inflow of $122 million. Most of this represented advance repayments on outstanding intergovernmental loans of $67.6 million in July by France, and of $32.1 million by the Netherlands in October.

In the course of 1962 there were some very large and very sharp movements of short-term capital. In the first quarter of the year, there was a relatively small outflow, followed by a large outflow in the second, all of which was more than offset by a very large inflow in the third quarter and was followed by a smaller inflow in the fourth quarter of the year. The shift between the second and third quarters amounted to an extraordinary $677 million, of which about $500 million represented Canadian-owned bank balances and other short-term funds in foreign currencies.

Canadian dollar holdings of foreigners yielded capital outflows in the first and third quarters of the year, and capital inflows in the second and fourth quarters. They included a small increase in foreign holdings of Government of Canada Treasury Bills and a decline in deposits as the following table shows:

Non-resident holdings of finance company and commercial paper increased in all four quarters of 1962, with inflows amounting to $28 million, $25 million, $35 million and $52 million in successive quarters.

Quarterly movements of Canadian-owned bank balances and other short-term funds in foreign currencies in 1962 were respectively +$49 million, −$245 million, +$257 million and +$17 million (plus equals an inflow, minus equals an outflow). The second quarter outflow and the third quarter reversal were unprecedented in size.

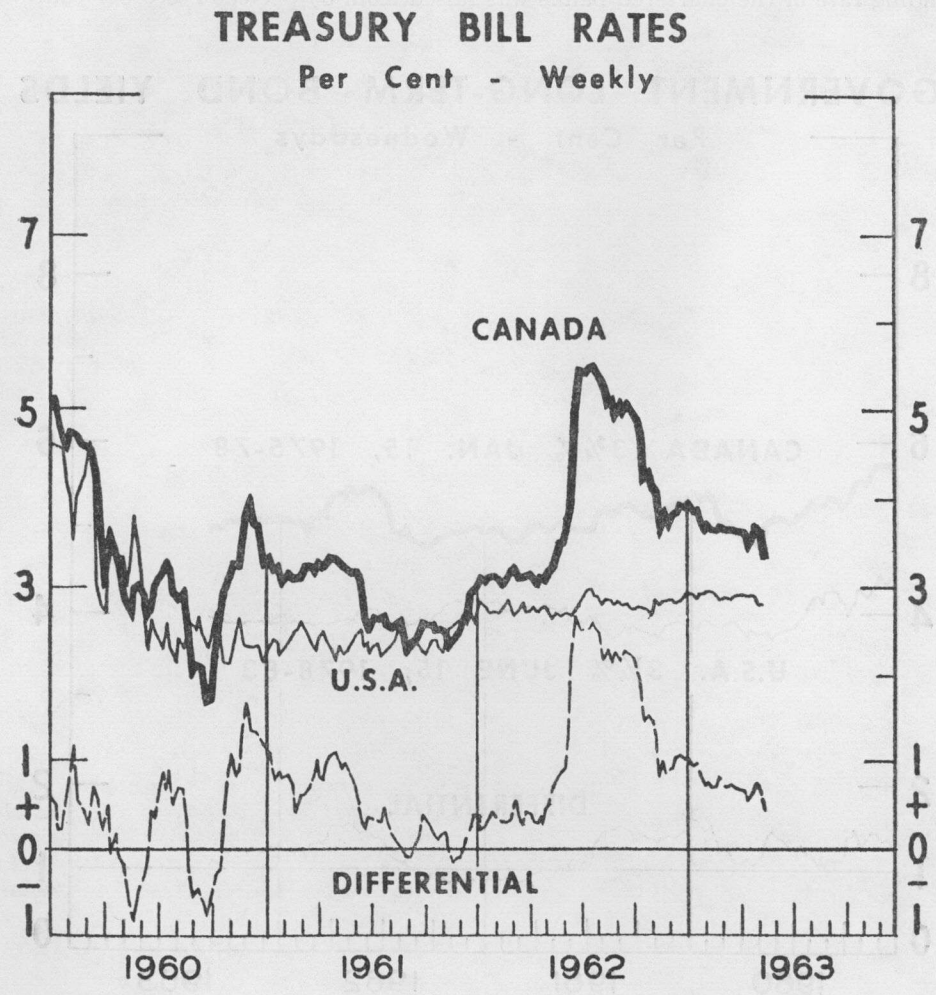
On June 24, 1962, the Canadian authorities arranged for $1,050 million in credits in foreign currency, as part of a programme of emergency measures. Of this total, $400 million represented a stand-by credit with the Export-Import Bank of Washington. The remaining $650 million of foreign exchange (equivalent in value to $707 million Canadian) was in the form of a $300 million drawing from the International Monetary Fund, a reciprocal currency arrangement entered into between the Bank of Canada and the Federal Reserve Bank of New York for $250 million, and a similar arrangement with the Bank of England for $100 million. Subsequently, as the situation improved, these arrangements were reduced or eliminated. The stand-by credit with the Export-Import Bank was reduced by $250 million in September and eliminated entirely in December. The reciprocal currency arrangement with the Federal Reserve Bank of New York was reduced by $100 million on October 31, by a further $75 million on November 30, and eliminated on December 26; as each reduction took place a similar amount was placed on a stand-by basis. The arrangement with the Bank of England was also reduced in steps on these dates and eliminated on December 26.

Official holdings of gold and foreign exchange were subject to wide movements in 1962. During the period when the Canadian dollar was under heaviest pressure there were also substantial "forward" transactions.

As for the movements in the exchange rate, it will be recalled that, from the end of June, 1961 to September, 1961, the Canadian dollar settled at about a 3 per cent discount on the United States dollar. In October, however, an upward pressure on the Canadian dollar emerged. In resisting this pressure, the Exchange Fund accumulated $186 million of foreign exchange in October. By the end of that month, the Fund held $2,111 million.

Toward the end of 1961 and in early 1962 pressures in the opposite direction developed and the rate began to move downward, reaching a 5 per cent discount on the United States dollar in February where it was held through March and April. Some $32 million of exchange reserves were used up in November, $23 million in December, $134 million in January, $175 million in February, and $35 million in March. However, following the announcement of a General Election in April, heavy downward pressures re-emerged. The official reserves declined by $114.6 million in April, while the exchange rate was still held at a level of approximately 95 cents (U.S.).

On May 2, 1962, with the concurrence of the International Monetary Fund, the Government declared a "par value" for the Canadian dollar, fixing it at a rate of one Canadian dollar equal to 92.5 cents (U.S.), with the normal one per cent margin either way. A short lull in the market was followed by renewed downward pressure on the exchange rate which gathered force late in May and through June, reaching a climax following the indecisive results of the General Election. By June 24 the "spot" position of the official reserves had fallen to about $1,100 million and in addition there were outstanding substantial forward sale contracts.

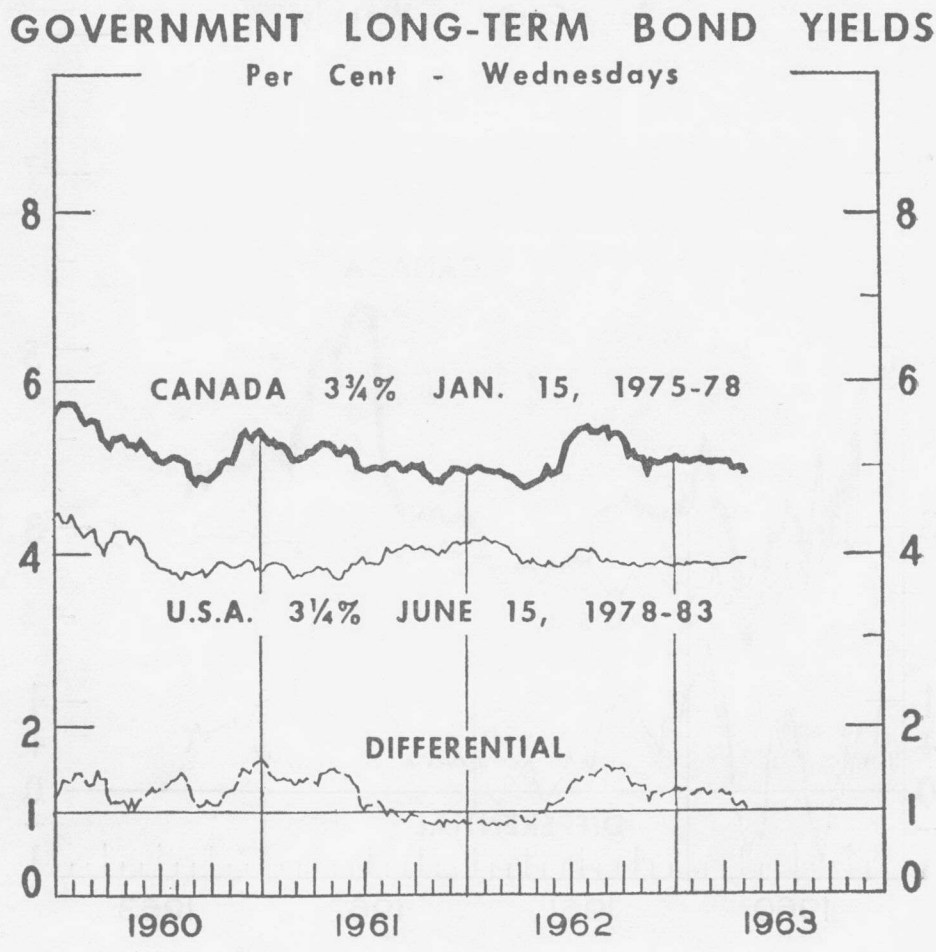


On June 24, the Government announced its emergency measures, the exchange market settled and exchange reserves began to increase. At the end of June, official holdings totalled $1,809 million, including $650 million arising out of special international financial assistance. Between June 30 and year end, reserves rose to $2,539 million, despite repayment of $350 million of special international financial assistance.

The value of the Canadian dollar in U.S. funds averaged about 91.9 cents (U.S.) in June, and then subsequently strengthened in July to 92.7 cents (U.S.). It closed the year at 92.8 cents (U.S.).

FINANCIAL DEVELOPMENTS

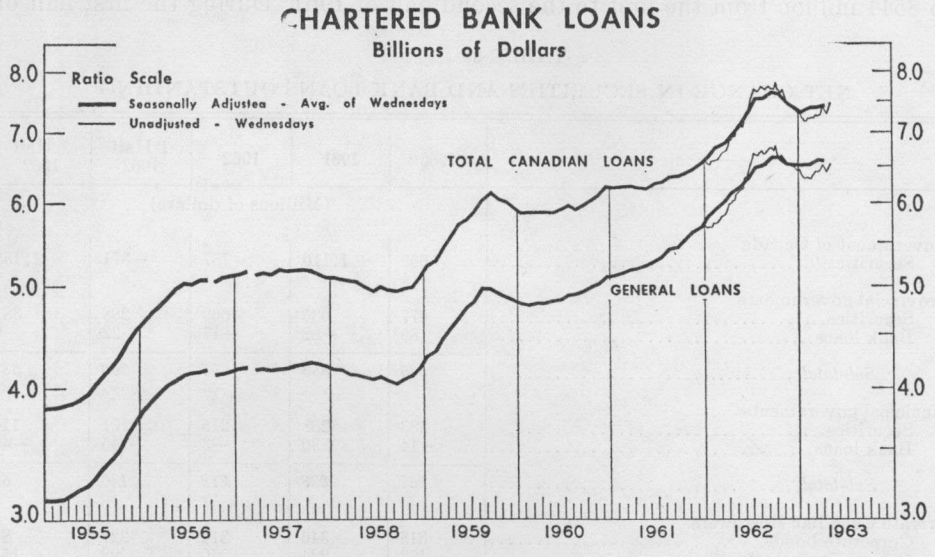
Monetary and Foreign Exchange Conditions



During the first few months of 1962 the continuing cyclical expansion in economic activity was financed without much change in general credit conditions. Yields on long-term government bonds drifted gradually lower during this period and by April, 1962 were under 5 per cent. The yield on three-month Treasury Bills rose around the end of 1961 from about 2½ per cent to 3 per cent but thereafter showed only minor fluctuations through to late April 1962. Interest rate differentials between Canada and the United States, which had narrowed considerably in mid-1961, declined somewhat further in the early months of 1962. The total volume of funds raised through net new issues of securities in this period was appreciably less than in recent years. However bank loans continued to expand. Early in 1962 the expansion began to be accompanied by a gradual decline in the banks' holdings of liquid assets.

In late April and May the wave of selling on the New York stock market initiated similar movements in other markets, including Canadian. At about the same time downward pressure on the Canadian exchange rate intensified, and on May 2 the Government announced the introduction of a fixed rate of Can. $1.00 = U.S. $0.925. Early in May Treasury Bill yields in Canada began to rise fairly rapidly and by mid-May a general upward movement in interest rates was under way.

From early May to late July the Government Purchase Fund acquired $113 million in long-term bonds to cushion the fall in prices. In a period of little more than two weeks in June, when bond prices were declining rapidly, the Bank of Canada bought some $150 million of short-term bonds for cash.



Pressure on the Canadian exchange rate came to a climax in June and emergency measures were introduced to protect the value of the Canadian dollar. These measures included re-introduction of a fixed Bank Rate at the high level of 6 per cent. During the period of the crisis and for several weeks after there was a complete absence of new security offerings and short-term yields moved to levels higher than those on long-term securities. On July 3, the prime lending rate of the chartered banks was raised from 5½ per cent to 6 per cent.

During the summer the banks were faced by a situation in which the more-than-seasonal increase in the demand for loans which had been occurring in the spring was continuing, while their cash reserves were falling. At the same time there was a strong demand by the general public, including industrial and financial institutions, for securities that, at substantially reduced prices, were offering very attractive yields. The banks sold substantial amounts of securities, and their total assets, together with their deposits, shrank accordingly. The reduction in the public's holdings of deposits shrank less rapidly, however, because the Government was using funds, accumulated from earlier sales of foreign exchange, to buy up the offerings of foreign exchange that were now being offered as "flight" capital returned to Canada.

As the emergency measures took effect, and the massive financial assistance from abroad assured the defence of the Canadian dollar at its declared par value, financial markets began to recover, monetary policy eased and interest rates declined. Bank Rate was reduced to 5½ per cent on September 7, to 5 per cent on October 12, and to 4 per cent on November 13. The total money supply declined to early September and then began to increase. Total liquid assets of the chartered banks also increased. The proportion of total bank assets held in the form of government securities, day-to-day loans, cash and other liquid assets, which declined from 37 per cent in early 1962 to about 29 per cent in September, rose subsequently to 34 per cent by early 1963 where it levelled out.

The yield on 91-day Treasury Bills, which had reached 5½ per cent earlier in the summer, fluctuated around 5 per cent from mid-August to early October, dropped sharply to about 4½ per cent in mid-October and again to about 3¾ per cent in November. The yield spread on Treasury Bills between Canada and the United States declined to around ¾ of 1 per cent compared with 2½ per cent in July. Yields on long-term Government of Canada bonds which were around 5½ per cent in the summer declined slightly in September and more rapidly in October and November to a little over 5 per cent. The difference in yields on long-term government bonds between Canada and the United States declined to about 1.2 per cent, compared with 1.5 per cent in July and 0.9 per cent in late 1961 and early 1962. In mid-November the prime lending rate of the chartered banks was reduced from 6 per cent to $5\frac{3}{4}$ per cent.

The period since September 1962 has been characterized by the reappearance, on a significant scale, of Canadian security offerings in New York. In September it was announced that negotiations had been completed for the private sale to five life insurance companies of U.S. $250 million in Government of Canada 25-year External 5 per cent Bonds. The proceeds were received in two equal instalments on October 15, 1962, and January 3, 1963, and were used to reinforce Canada's official reserves of foreign exchange. The Government of Canada's external issue was followed by an appreciable volume of security offerings in the United States market by Canadian provinces, municipalities and corporations.

Total net new borrowing by Canadian individuals, firms, and governments through the banking system and the bond and stock markets amounted to an estimated $3.2 billion in 1962. This was only slightly higher than the amount raised in 1961. The demands for particular types of funds during the course of the year were affected by the disturbances in the financial and exchange markets. Some detail for each level of government and the private sectors is provided in Table 39.

New cash raised from banks and security issues by corporations and other private borrowers in 1962 appreciably exceeded the amounts raised in either of the preceding two years. Reflecting the upward swing in the business cycle, private borrowers had sharply increased their net borrowings from $380 million to $544 million from the first to the second half of 1961. During the first half of 1962 there were special influences which caused their rate of borrowing to accelerate to a total of $1,033 million, practically all of which was concentrated in the second quarter. Private borrowing was about 25 per cent higher in this quarter than in any previous three-month period. Much of the private borrowing was in the form of bank loans.

The swollen level of bank loans during the summer was partly associated with the continued expansion in the economy. In addition there were other influences which probably contributed. In the period leading up to the exchange crisis, expectations of a further fall in the value of the Canadian dollar probably led to advance buying of imports and remittance of earnings abroad. Some corporations and governmental bodies postponed security issues because of unsettled conditions in the stock and bond markets and relied instead on bank loans. Some bank borrowers may have anticipated tighter money conditions, and engaged in precautionary borrowing.

The decline in private borrowing from $1,033 million in the first half of 1962 to $488 million in the latter half, probably reflected, in part, the reversal of the above temporary influences together with the effects of reduced business inventory accumulation towards the close of the year.

Overall borrowings by governments were sharply lower in 1962 than in 1961. The distribution of borrowings between the two halves of the year was opposite to that described above for the private sector. The uneven distribution of borrowings by the Federal Government accounts for most of the concentration of total government borrowings in the second half of the year.

The pattern of federal financing was sharply distorted by foreign exchange developments during 1962. In the first half of the year large scale liquidation of exchange reserves by the Federal Government provided it with funds to maintain unusually large cash balances at the chartered banks, and at the same time appreciably reduce the total amount of marketable government bonds outstanding. On June 24, one of the emergency measures announced was that the cash resulting from the sale of foreign exchange since the beginning of the 1962–63 fiscal year—about $600 million—would be earmarked for future purchases of foreign exchange by the Exchange Fund Account.

In the course of rebuilding the exchange reserves the Federal Government drew down its cash balances at the chartered banks from July to early November raising new cash from securities market again. In the second half of 1962 the Federal Government raised $1,158 net million from sales of Canada Savings Bonds and marketable securities to the public, and from net sales of securities held by Government accounts.

Following the mid-year financial instability the Federal Government's first public financing operation on August 1 took the form of a straight refunding. An issue maturing on June 15 had been paid off out of government cash balances, some of this issue having been handled previously by an advance refunding with the Bank of Canada. Included in the August 1 refunding was the sale of $120 million in 18-year bonds. This was the first long-term issue since the C.N.R. issue in late 1960.

In September the Federal Government raised net new money from the securities market for the first time since March. At each weekly auction of Treasury Bills from September 6 to November 1, it sold $15 million more than the amounts maturing, raising a total of $135 million in new cash. A further $82 million in new cash was raised from domestic debt operations on October 1. The debt management operations from December 1 to January 1 constituted, on a net basis, a refunding of existing government debt.

The average term to maturity of Government of Canada and C.N.R. market securities was steady at about eight years during the first seven months of 1962. It lengthened to eight years and two months in August, reflecting the issue of 18-year bonds and lengthened again in December to eight years five months, reflecting the fact that almost all the holders of the 5½ per cent Government of Canada bonds due April 1, 1963 exercised their option to exchange them by the end of 1962, into an equal par value of 5½ per cent non-callable bonds due April 1, 1976.

The yield to maturity offered on the 1962 Series of Canada Savings Bonds, announced on September 14, was high, and sales were large. The bulk of the proceeds from the sale of Canada Savings Bonds became available to the government in November, and accounted, as in previous years, for a sharp increase in government cash balances in that month. The net sale of Canada Savings Bonds during 1962 provided the Government with $540 million in new cash compared to $486 million in 1961, $382 million in 1960 and $317 million in 1959. Individual purchase orders for the 1962 Series up to March 31 numbered almost 1,667,817 of which 674,894 were made under the Payroll Savings Plan at factories, offices and other places of work. The average amount of the 1962 Series bought by each person under the Payroll Savings Plan was $343.

Housing Finance

Housing starts totalled 130,000 in 1962, an increase of 3.6 per cent from those in 1961. Expenditures on residential construction rose 8 per cent to a total of $1.6 billion. This represented 3.9 per cent of Gross National Expenditure in 1962, the same as in 1961, but somewhat less than in previous years, reflecting in part the decline in net family formation.

There were important shifts during 1962 in the composition of housing starts, by type, and in the sources of financing for residential construction expenditures. Starts of rental dwellings increased noticeably while starts of dwellings for home-ownership declined slightly. The proportion of rental dwelling starts to total starts increased from about 37 per cent in 1961 to about 41 per cent in 1962. Partly associated with this trend was an increase in conventional mortgage lending and a shift away from financing under N.H.A. (See Table 40.)

NOTE: Totals may not add due to rounding.

N.H.A. lending activity in 1962, including institutional and direct C.M.H.C. loans, was below the previous year. The decline was particularly marked from June to November and was associated with a temporary narrowing in the spread between the maximum N.H.A. interest rate of 6½ per cent in 1962 and long-term bond yields.

In 1962 C.M.H.C. conducted further auctions of insured mortgages from its portfolio as part of its continuing actions to promote a secondary market in mortgages. Sales totalled $48 million compared to $40 million in 1961. On December 6, 1962, the Government announced the establishment of a $100 million re-discount facility as a further step in the development of a secondary market for N.H.A. mortgages. C.M.H.C. will make funds available as a lender of last resort to N.H.A. approved lenders. Total loans to any one company may not exceed three times its paid-up capital or $5 million, whichever is the smaller.

Consumer Credit

Personal expenditures on goods and services increased 5.2 per cent in 1962 compared to 4.1 per cent in 1961. Sales of new automobiles featured prominently in the increase. In 1962 consumer credit extended by banks, finance companies and retail stores rose by 8.7 per cent or $296 million compared to 6.0 per cent or $192 million in 1961.

During the year there were divergent trends among the main lenders. The sharp increase in chartered bank consumer credit levelled off after mid-year, after allowance for seasonal influences, then started to rise again at the close of the year. Instalment finance company loans stopped declining early in 1962, followed a level trend during most of the year, and then towards the end of the year started to pick up. The small loan companies accelerated the previously moderate rate of increase in their loans in late 1961 and continued in this trend throughout 1962. Credit extended by retail stores rose moderately in 1962.

REVIEW OF GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTS

1. INTRODUCTION

This Part of the Budget Papers presents in a concise manner a review of the accounts of the Government of Canada for the fiscal year 1962–63. The figures used are preliminary and will vary to some extent from the final figures when they become available on the closing of the books. The government's fiscal year ended on March 31, but in accordance with section 35 of the Financial Administration Act the books must remain open for some time after that date to take into account all payments up to and including April 30, originating in and properly chargeable to the fiscal year 1962–63 and to record various adjusting entries.

When Parliament was dissolved on February 6, 1963 the Revised Estimates and Supplementary Estimates (A) and (B) for 1962–63 had not been passed by the House of Commons. At that time Appropriation Acts had been passed authorizing the expenditure of only ten-twelfths of the estimates, and the remainder of the payments for the fiscal year were made under the authority of Special Governor General's Warrants issued on February 8, 1963 and March 4, 1963 in accordance with section 28 of the Financial Administration Act. It is not expected that the books for the fiscal year will be closed until a Special Appropriation Act is passed by Parliament, covering the Special Governor General's Warrants and authorizing certain accounting adjustments that remain to be made.

2. HIGHLIGHTS OF GOVERNMENTAL FINANCIAL OPERATIONS DURING 1962–63

This section outlines the budgetary and non-budgetary transactions, the operations of the old age security fund, and the debt transactions during 1962–63, and the cash position as at March 31, 1963.

The following table summarizes the budgetary and non-budgetary transactions for the fiscal year and indicates how the budgetary and non-budgetary transactions, including changes in unmatured debt, affected the government's cash balances. More detailed explanations of these transactions are given in subsequent sections of this Part.

Budgetary transactions

The revenues and expenditures as forecast in the budget speech of April 10, 1962 and revised on October 22, 1962 and the actual figures as now estimated are shown in the following table:

(in millions of dollars)

Revenues

The budgetary revenues for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963 amounted to $5,876 million. This is $54 million or almost one per cent less than the revised figure of $5,930 million forecast on October 22, 1962, and $146 million or 2½ per cent more than the total of $5,730 million collected in the fiscal year 1961–62.

Tax revenues accounted for $126 million of the increase over the previous year. The yield from personal income tax was $48 million less than in 1961–62 due to the provincial tax collection agreements which came into effect on January 1, 1962, offset in part by a higher level of incomes during the year. The yield from corporation income tax was $19 million less than the 1961–62 collections also due to the provincial tax collection agreements offset in part by higher corporate profits in 1961. Receipts from the sales tax were $46 million more, from customs import duties $111 million more (due to special surcharges imposed by the government in order to bolster the foreign exchange reserves) and from excise duties $19 million more than the comparable amounts in 1961–62.

Non-tax revenues accounted for $21 million of the total increase in revenue. Post office revenue was $9 million higher, receipts from other non-tax revenue were $8 million higher and returns on investments were $4 million higher than the previous year.

Expenditures

Budgetary expenditures in the amount of $6,585 million in 1962–63 were $85 million or approximately 1.3 per cent higher than forecast on October 22, 1962 and $64 million or approximately one per cent more than total expenditures in 1961–62.

Expenditures for defence again constituted the largest item, amounting to $1,602 million or 24 per cent of the total expenditures, compared with $1,650 million or 25 per cent in 1961–62.

Civil or non-defence expenditures amounted to $4,983 million, an increase of $112 million over the corresponding total for the previous fiscal year. There were increases of $179 million in expenditures of the Department of Labour (including an increase of $171 million in technical and vocational training assistance) and $83 million in expenditures of the Department of National Health and Welfare (including an increase of $53 million in the government's contribution under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act) and decreases of $158 million in the expenditures of the Department of Finance (including a decrease of $266 million in fiscal, tax-sharing, subsidy and other payments to provinces due to the lapsing on December 31, 1961 of the 1957 tax-sharing agreements, offset in part by an increase of $79 million in public debt charges) and $53 million in expenditures of the Department of Agriculture (including decreases of $40 million in the prairie farm emergency fund deficit and $40 million in payments to western grain producers due to the fact that no provision had been made for such payments for the 1962–63 crop year, offset in part by an increase of $50 million in the net operating loss of the agricultural stabilization board).

More detailed explanations of budgetary revenues by source and expenditures by classification and department are given in section 3 of this Part.

Deficit

On the basis of these preliminary figures the deficit for the fiscal year was $709 million compared with the deficit of $570 million as forecast on October 22, 1962, and the deficit of $791 million in 1961–62.

Non-budgetary transactions

A net amount of $758 million was required during the fiscal year to finance non-budgetary transactions (excluding unmatured debt transactions). Non-budgetary disbursements and charges totalled $1,898 million and receipts and credits, $1,140 million. Requirements for disbursements and charges were: $943 million for advances to the exchange fund; $614 million for other loans and investments and working capital advances; $41 million for temporary loans to the old age security fund; and $300 million for other non-budgetary disbursements. Amounts available from various receipts and credits were: $385 million from non-interest-bearing notes payable on demand; $499 million from the net receipts from various annuity, insurance and pension accounts; $162 million from repayments of loans, investments and working capital advances; and $94 million from other non-budgetary sources.

Old age security fund

Pension payments from the old age security fund totalled $734 million in 1962–63 compared with $625 million in the previous fiscal year. The increase of $109 million was largely the effect of the increased rate of payment (from $55 to $65 per month) effective February 1, 1962. The full impact of the increased expenditure resulting from this increase was not reflected in the 1961–62 totals as they were in effect for only two months of that year whereas in 1962–63 they were in effect for twelve months. As there was a balance of $2 million in the fund at March 31, 1962, the excess of $43 million of pension payments over receipts was financed by temporary loans from the Minister of Finance in the amount of $41 million. These loans were outstanding at March 31, 1963.

The transactions in the account during 1962–63 compared with those for the previous fiscal year were as follows:

	1963 (preliminary)	1962
	(in millions of dollars)

Debt transactions

During 1962–63 the gross public debt increased by $1,904 million to $24,812 million due to an increase of $1,016 million in unmatured debt and $888 million in other liabilities. The increase in unmatured debt was the result of the government issuing securities amounting to $4,385 million (excluding the refunding of treasury bills which mature weekly) plus an adjustment of $10 million due to revaluation of securities (issued in prior years) payable in London and New York, and redeeming or converting issues in the amount of $3,379 million. During the same period the government's net assets increased by $1,195 million to $10,875 million. As a result, the government's net debt was $13,937 million at March 31, 1963, the increase of $709 million being equivalent to the budgetary deficit for the fiscal year.

Cash position

The government's cash position was $403 million lower at March 31, 1963 than it was at March 31, 1962. The budgetary deficit of $709 million plus the amount of $758 million required for non-budgetary transactions was financed by increasing unmatured debt outstanding in the hands of the public by $1,064 million and by drawing down Receiver General cash balances by $403 million.

3. THE BUDGETARY ACCOUNTS

Total revenues were $5,876 million for 1962–63, $146 million more than the total for the previous year. Total expenditures were $6,585 million, an increase of $64 million over the total for 1961–62. The deficit for the fiscal year 1962–63 was $709 million compared with $791 million for the previous year.

(1) TAX REVENUES

Federal-provincial tax-collection agreements

The receipts from personal and corporation income taxes and the payments to provinces were lower in 1962–63 than in the previous year due to the lapsing of the 1957 tax rental arrangements. Under the 1957 tax rental arrangements, the obligation on the renting provinces to abstain from the imposition of personal and corporation income taxes was to lapse on December 31, 1961. Under the new arrangements the former renting provinces have all imposed personal and corporation income taxes effective January 1, 1962. The Government of Canada, in place of the tax rental arrangements, offered to enter into tax collection agreements with the provinces whereby Canada would undertake to collect, without charge, the provincial personal and corporation income taxes at rates determined by the provinces, provided that the provincial personal income tax was expressed as a percentage of the federal personal income tax payable and the provincial corporation income tax employed a definition of corporate taxable income identical with the federal definition. To facilitate the imposition of the provincial income taxes, the Income Tax Act was amended in the 1961 session of Parliament (1) to reduce the federal income tax payable by individuals resident in the provinces by 16 per cent in 1962 and by a further one per cent in each subsequent year until the deduction amounts to 20 per cent in 1966, and (2) to reduce the federal tax rate on the taxable income of corporations earned in the provinces by 9 percentage points. Canada has entered into agreements to collect the personal income tax, with all the provinces with the exception of the Province of Quebec, and to collect the corporation income tax, with all the provinces with the exception of the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec. With the exception of Saskatchewan and Manitoba, the provinces which have entered into tax-collection agreements have imposed personal and corporation income taxes equivalent to the federal withdrawal. The Provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan have imposed personal income taxes at 22 per cent rather than 16 per cent of the federal tax payable and 10 per cent rather than 9 per cent of the taxable income of corporations.

Under these agreements payments are made monthly to the provinces based on estimated receipts. When the actual amounts of the returns are established, usually in the month of December following the fiscal year-end, adjustments are to be made with the provinces.

Tax on personal incomes

The personal income tax was again in 1962–63 the largest source of government revenue. The yield (excluding the old age security tax) was $1,745 million or 30 per cent of all budgetary revenue, $48 million or 3 per cent less than the 1961–62 collections. However, in addition to the federal revenue of $1,745 million, $252 million was collected on behalf of the provinces under the new federal-provincial tax collection agreements. This compares with the situation in 1961–62 when all income taxes (with the exception of $37 million which had been collected for the provinces) were credited to federal revenue and payments were made to the provinces and charged to budgetary expenditure. Therefore, although the government's books reflect lower receipts of personal income taxes in 1962–63 when compared with 1961–62, there was actually an increase of $204 million in personal income taxes collected due to higher levels of employment and incomes during 1962.

The tax on personal incomes levied under the Old Age Security Act and credited to the old age security fund amounted to $274 million.

Corporation income tax

On January 1, 1962 the system, whereby the federal government made tax rental payments to certain provinces and charged these to expenditures, was changed so that the provinces' share of corporation income taxes is collected by the federal government and is remitted directly to the provinces without being included in federal revenue or expenditure. In addition to the federal revenue of $1,183 million (excluding the old age security tax), $65 million was collected on behalf of the provinces. Although the government's accounts show lower collections of corporation income taxes of $19 million or 2 per cent when compared with those of 1961–62 there was actually an increase of $46 million in collections. The increase was due to higher corporate profits for the calendar year 1961 on which collections of corporation income taxes in 1962–63 were largely based.

Provincial corporation income taxes collected by the federal government are remitted to the provinces in accordance with agreements between the federal government and the provincial governments. A more detailed explanation will be found at the beginning of this section on tax revenues.

In addition to the above, the tax on incomes of corporations levied under the Old Age Security Act in the amount of $115 million was credited to the old age security fund.

Taxes on dividends, interest, etc., going abroad

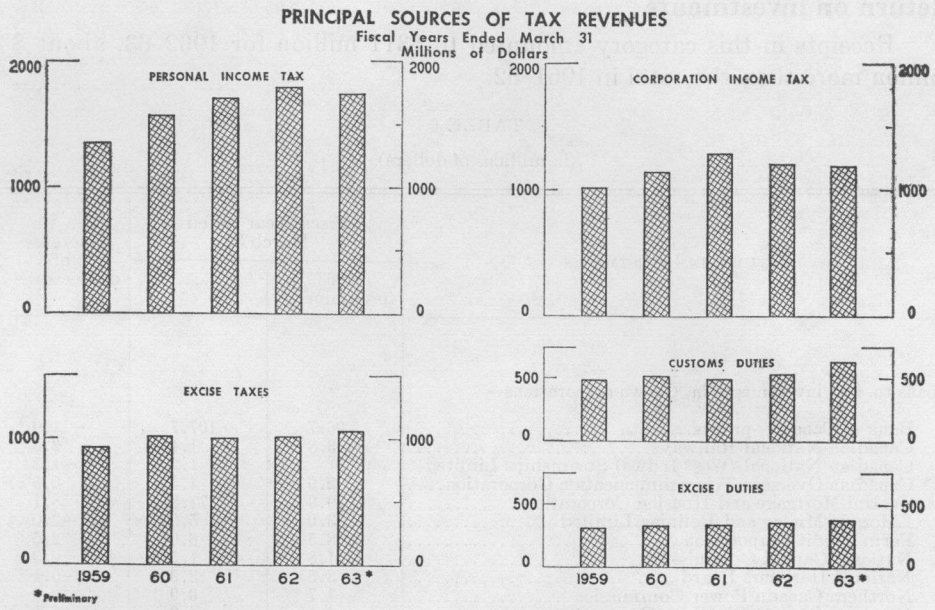
Revenue in this category is derived from taxes withheld on payments of dividends, interest, rents, royalties, alimony and income from estates and trusts paid to non-residents. Collections for 1962–63 were $129 million, an increase of $17 million over the comparable total for 1961–62 reflecting higher dividend payments in 1962.

Excise taxes

Revenue under this heading includes collections from the general sales tax and other special excise taxes.

From a revenue standpoint the sales tax was the most important tax levied under the Excise Tax Act. Receipts therefrom (excluding the old age security tax) were $806 million, $46 million or about 6 per cent higher than in the previous fiscal year.

The tax on sales, levied under the Old Age Security Act, in the amount of $302 million was credited to the old age security fund.



Excise taxes levied under the Excise Tax Act, other than the general sales tax, were $260 million, a decrease of $3 million from the 1961–62 total of $263 million. The main changes were an increase of $9 million in the excise taxes on tobacco products and a decrease of $14 million in net revenue from the excise tax on passenger automobiles. In 1961–62 the excise tax on passenger automobiles amounted to $25 million and refunds due to the repeal of the tax effective June 21, 1961 totalled $11 million resulting in net receipts of $14 million.

Customs import duties

Customs import duties were $645 million for 1962–63, an increase of $111 million over the comparable figures for 1961–62. This increase was due in large part to the surcharges which were in effect in 1962–63.

Excise duties

Excise duties are levied on alcoholic beverages and tobacco products. (Additional taxes on tobacco products are levied under the Excise Tax Act.) Net receipts in 1962–63 were $382 million compared with $363 million in 1961–62. Gross receipts of $221 million from taxes on alcoholic beverages and $166 million from taxes on tobacco products were partly offset by refunds and drawbacks totalling $5 million. Comparable amounts in 1961–62 were $207 million, $160 million and $4 million respectively.

Estate tax

Revenue from this source was $87 million for 1962–63, an increase of approximately $2 million over the total for the previous year.

Other taxes

Revenue under this heading was $100 thousand, slightly higher than for 1961–62.

(2) NON-TAX REVENUES

Non-tax revenues totalled $639 million for 1962–63, an increase of $21 million or approximately 3 per cent over the comparable total in 1961–62.

Receipts from Crown corporations were $207 million in 1962–63, a decrease of $2 million from the total in the previous fiscal year. The main changes were a decrease of $11 million in the Bank of Canada profits and an increase of $8 million in receipts from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Other loans and investments yielded $104 million in 1962–63 compared with $99 million in 1961–62. The increase of $5 million was due mainly to increases of $8 million in interest on Receiver General deposits with the chartered banks, $3 million in the earnings of the exchange fund account and $1 million in receipts from the purchase fund account that was established during 1961–62 to assist in the management of the public debt, partly offset by decreases of $4 million in receipts from the securities investment account and $3 million in interest on loans to the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

Gross post office receipts totalled $223 million but authorized disbursements from revenue for salaries and rent allowances at semi-staff and revenue offices, commissions at sub-offices, transit charges on Canadian mail forwarded through and delivered in foreign countries, etc., in the amount of $30 million, brought net revenue to $193 million. In 1961–62 gross receipts were $214 million, authorized disbursements were $30 million and net revenue was $184 million.

As costs of operating the Post Office Department during 1962–63 (excluding the $30 million charged to revenue) were $189 million, net revenue exceeded net expenditure by $4 million. However, in making this comparison, it is to be noted that the total shown for post office revenue does not reflect any payment for the franking privilege covering parliamentary and departmental mail or for certain miscellaneous services provided for other government departments and agencies, nor does the total shown for operating expenses reflect any charges for premises occupied by the Post Office Department or for certain accounting and miscellaneous services provided by other departments.

Refunds in 1962–63 of expenditures made in prior years were $22 million, an increase of $4 million over the comparable total for 1961–62.

The Department of National Defence received $9 million, of which $1 million was refunds on defence contracts resulting from cost audits and $2 million in respect of contracts with the United States Government for the supply of defence equipment under an arrangement that when Canada places contracts with the Government of the United States, payments of estimated costs are made to the United States Treasury. If these estimated costs are revised or, if there are reductions in the contracts, the United States Government refunds the excess payments. The Department of Finance received $6 million mainly due to a refund from the Province of Ontario in connection with succession duty payments under the tax rental agreements. The Department of Trade and Commerce received $1 million due to a refund from the Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited of expenditures in 1961–62 under a contract between Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited on behalf of Her Majesty and Macassa Gold Mines Limited for the purchase by Her Majesty of uranium concentrates.

Services and service fees

Revenues of $46 million were received during 1962–63, an increase of $3 million over the previous fiscal year.

Approximately 83 per cent of these fees was collected by the following four departments: $15 million received by the Department of Transport, including aircraft landing fees of $6 million and marine steamers earnings of $4 million; $13 million by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, mainly for police services to provinces and municipalities; $6 million by the Department of Agriculture, of which $4 million was for services in connection with the inspection, weighing, storage and elevation of grain and $1 million for race track supervision; and $4 million by the Department of National Health and Welfare, due mainly to reimbursement of $3 million by the provinces for treatment of Indians in federal government hospitals.

Receipts from this source totalled $26 million for 1962–63, approximately the same as the total for 1961–62.

Included in this category were receipts of: $10 million by the Department of Defence Production, of which $8 million represents amounts from the sale of surplus Crown assets (after deducting certain agency fees and transfers) and $2 million under agreements of sale of Crown assets; $5 million by the Department of Public Works representing the proceeds of the sales of properties by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation; and $5 million by the Department of National Defence, mainly from sales of materials and supplies and from sales of meals.

Privileges, licences and permits

Revenues in this category were $25 million for 1962–63 compared with the 1961–62 total of $23 million.

Included in this revenue were $10 million received by the Department of Transport, mainly for rentals, concessions and radio licence fees; $4 million by the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources; $2 million by the Department of the Secretary of State, mainly for patent fees; $2 million by the Department of Public Works for rental of public buildings and sites; and $2 million by the Department of National Defence, of which $1 million was for rental of quarters to armed forces personnel.

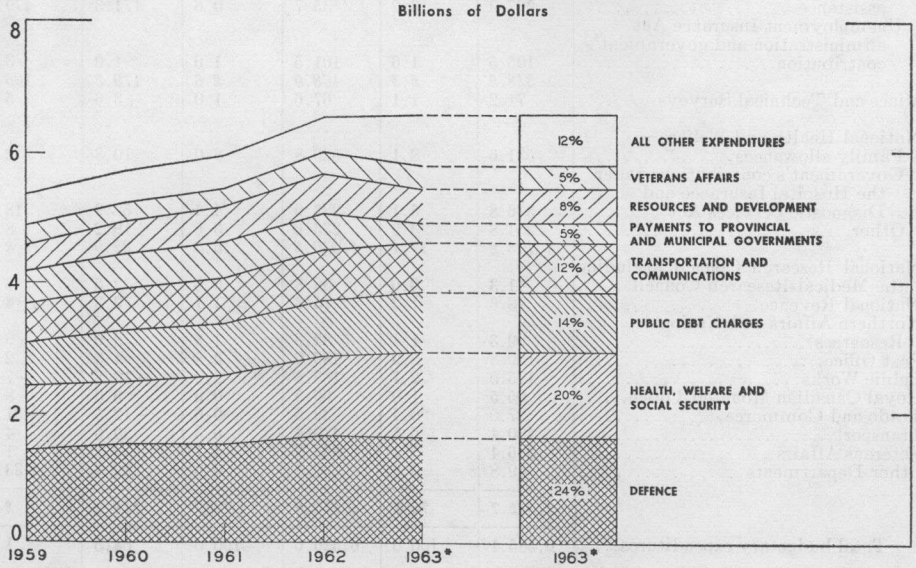
Bullion and coinage

Revenues in this category of $9 million were derived from the operations of the Royal Canadian Mint and consisted mainly of a net gain on coinage. Small amounts were also obtained from gold refining charges, handling charges and gain on gold refining.

Premium, discount and exchange

Premium, discount and exchange transactions for 1962–63 resulted in a net expenditure of $10 million, compared with a net revenue of $2 million in 1961–62.

The change from a revenue to an expenditure item was due to the change in accounting policy of revaluing securities payable in New York and London at the official parity rate rather than recording the loans in the government's books of account at $1 U.S. = $1 Can. and £1 = $2.80 Can. The official parity rate at March 31, 1963 was $1 U.S. = $1.08108 Can. and £1 = $3.027 Can.



Other non-tax revenues

Other non-tax revenues amounted to $7 million for 1962–63, approximately the same as for the previous fiscal year.

B. Expenditures

Budgetary expenditures for 1962–63 amounted to $6,585 million, an increase of $64 million over the 1961–62 total of $6,521 million.

(1) DEFENCE EXPENDITURES

Defence expenditures which consist of expenditures of the Departments of National Defence and Defence Production were again the largest category of government budgetary expenditures. The total of $1,602 million for 1962–63 was approximately 24 per cent of the aggregate budgetary expenditures of the government for the year and was $48 million less than the total of $1,650 million for 1961–62, when outlays for defence were 25 per cent of total expenditures.

National Defence

Expenditures of the Department of National Defence were $1,573 million in 1962–63 compared with $1,626 million in 1961–62.

Expenditures for naval, army and air services at $1,423 million were $72 million less than the 1961–62 total. There were decreases of $3 million for naval services and $69 million for air services.

Direct charges to mutual aid during 1962–63 were $25 million compared with $11 million in 1961–62 and consisted of procurement of equipment for mutual aid and Canada's share of NATO military budgets and infrastructure costs.

Expenditures for defence research and development in the amount of $42 million were $1 million higher than in 1961–62.

The government's contribution to the Canadian forces superannuation account of an amount equal to $1\frac{2}{3}$ times the contributions of permanent services personnel was $58 million, an increase of $2 million over the total for the previous year.

Administration and general costs were $25 million compared with $23 million in 1961–62.

Defence Production

The expenditure of $29 million in 1962–63 for the Department of Defence Production (including expenditures in respect of Defence Construction (1951) Limited and Canadian Arsenals Limited) was $6 million more than in 1961–62.

Outlays of $8 million in connection with the government program instituted in 1959–60 of supporting selected defence development programs to sustain technological capability in Canadian industry were $4 million more than in 1961–62. Expenditures of $2 million in respect of the procurement of capital equipment and works by Canadian Arsenals Limited and the programs under which assistance for the establishment of production capacity and capital assistance is given to private contractors, Crown plants operated on a management-fee basis and Crown corporations undertaking contracts essential to the defence program were approximately the same as the corresponding expenditures in the previous fiscal year.

Administration and general costs were $19 million in 1962–63, $2 million more than in 1961–62.

Cash outlays for defence

In addition to these budgetary expenditures for defence, there are certain other cash outlays which must be considered in assessing the full effect of the defence program on the economy of Canada.

Section 11 of the National Defence Act provides that materiel, not immediately required for the use of the Canadian defence forces or the Defence Research Board, may be sold to such countries and upon such terms as the Governor in Council may determine. The proceeds of such sales in 1962–63, amounting to $1 million, were credited to a special account to be used for the procurement of replacement materiel. Cash outlays from this account during the fiscal year were also $1 million. Consequently the balance in the account remained at $1 million at March 31, 1963.

The Department of Defence Production also makes cash disbursements for the procurement of materials for use in the manufacture of defence equipment which are not recorded as budgetary expenditures. For purposes of accounting and control, these amounts are charged to the defence production revolving fund and are treated as assets on the books of the government until they are billed to the Department of National Defence or sold to defence contractors for use in the manufacture of defence equipment. During the year 1962–63 purchases of $43 million exceeded proceeds from sales of $30 million by $13 million and the assets of the fund increased by an equivalent amount, resulting in a balance of $41 million in the account as at March 31, 1963.

The following table summarizes the cash outlays for defence for the past two fiscal years.

(2) NON-DEFENCE EXPENDITURES

Agriculture

Expenditures of the Department of Agriculture were $234 million for 1962–63 compared with $287 million for 1961–62.

Agricultural products board—net operating loss	0.6	4.9	−4.3
Administration and general	4.8	4.8

The increase of $50 million in the net operating loss of the agricultural stabilization board was more than offset by decreases of $40 million in the deficit of the prairie farm emergency fund and $40 million in payments to western grain producers.

The 1962–63 net operating loss of the agricultural stabilization board was $72 million compared with $22 million in 1961–62. The increase was due mainly to a payment of $42 million for the stabilization of the price of butter for which there was no comparable payment in 1961–62.

The decrease of $40 million in payments to western grain producers was due to the fact that no provision had been made for such payments for the 1962–63 crop year. The expenditure of $100 thousand in 1962–63 was for completion of payments required for the 1961–62 crop year.

The Prairie Farm Assistance Act, c. 213, R.S., as amended, provides for a levy of one per cent to be deducted by all licensed purchasers of grain, the amount so deducted to be transferred to the Board of Grain Commissioners for deposit to the credit of the prairie farm emergency fund. Awards are made under the provisions of the Act to farmers in the spring wheat area in accordance with crop failure conditions provided for in the Act and are payable from this fund. Advances by the Minister of Finance to the prairie farm emergency fund to cover the years deficit, in the amount of $7 million, were charged to budgetary expenditures. The comparable amount in 1961–62 was $48 million.

Atomic Energy

Budgetary expenditures in respect of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and the Atomic Energy Control Board totalled $63 million in 1962–63 compared with expenditures of $35 million in 1961–62, an increase of $28 million.

During the year under review $37 million was paid to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited for its research program, $3 million more than in the previous fiscal year. Of this total, $29 million was for current operations and maintenance and $8 million for the construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment.

In addition, the undepreciated capital cost of the NRU reactor will be charged to budgetary expenditure upon parliamentary approval and loans to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited were reduced by the same amount. As loans amounting to $13 million were made to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited during the year, this brought the total of advances covered by obligations or shares of the company to $53 million at March 31, 1963.

Administration expenses of the Atomic Energy Control Board and grants for research and investigation with respect to atomic energy were $1 million, approximately the same as for the previous fiscal year.

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

Payments of $81 million were made by the government to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation during 1962–63, an increase of $3 million over the total for 1961–62.

Grants for capital requirements including the replacement of existing capital assets of the radio and television services were $7 million, slightly higher than in 1961–62. Grants in respect of the net operating requirements of the radio and television services totalled $72 million, $2 million higher than in the previous fiscal year.

Outlays of $2 million for the international broadcasting service were approximately the same as in 1961–62.

Citizenship and Immigration

Expenditures of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration were $66 million for 1962–63, an increase of $1 million over the total for 1961–62.

Outlays for the Indian affairs branch were slightly higher during 1962–63 due principally to Indian welfare and Indian economic development.

Expenditures of the immigration branch were also slightly higher than in the previous fiscal year whereas outlays for the citizenship and citizenship registration branches were approximately the same.

External Affairs

Expenditures of the Department of External Affairs amounted to $85 million for 1962–63, a decrease of $11 million from the total of $96 million spent in the previous fiscal year.

Administration and general	8.6	8.3	0.3
	84.6	95.6	−11.0

The principal changes in expenditure as compared with 1961–62 were decreases of $8 million in the grant to the Colombo plan fund and $6 million in contributions to international organizations, and increases of $2 million for representation abroad and $1 million for assistance to other countries.

The decrease in contributions to international organizations was due to the fact that expenditures in 1961–62 included an amount of $6 million for the United Nations Congo Ad Hoc account for which there was no comparable expenditure in 1962–63.

Finance

Expenditures of the Department of Finance totalled $1,354 million in 1962–63, a decrease of $158 million from the 1961–62 total of $1,512 million.

The main changes were a decrease of $266 million in fiscal, tax-sharing, subsidy and other payments to provinces and increases of $79 million in public debt charges, $10 million in premium, discount and exchange and $7 million in grants to universities.

Public debt charges

In 1962–63 public debt charges were again the second largest item of budgetary expenditure. These charges, which consist of interest on the public debt, the annual amortization of bond discounts and commissions, the cost of issuing new loans and other costs incurred in servicing the public debt, were $918 million or 14 per cent of all budgetary expenditure compared with $839 million or 13 per cent in 1961–62.

Interest on public debt in 1962–63 in the amount of $882 million was $79 million more than the 1961–62 total of $803 million. Interest of $709 million on unmatured debt was $66 million higher than in 1961–62 reflecting the increase in unmatured debt and in interest rates. Interest of $173 million on other liabilities was $13 million higher due mainly to increases of $6 million in respect of the public service superannuation account and $5 million in respect of the Canadian forces superannuation account.

Other public debt charges at $36 million were approximately the same as in the previous fiscal year.

When considering the magnitude of these public debt charges and the burden they place upon the public treasury, it must be borne in mind that a substantial portion of the debt is attributable to, or is invested in, productive or earning assets. Therefore, in calculating the net burden of the government's annual interest charges, the income derived from loans, investments and other productive assets must be taken into account. For 1962–63 this income amounted to $311 million as shown in the non-tax revenue section under the heading "Return on investments". This amount deducted from the gross total of $882 million for interest as shown in the above table leaves a net amount of $571 million compared with a net of $495 million in 1961–62. Measured as a percentage of the net debt the burden of the net annual interest charges was 4.10 per cent in 1962–63 compared with 3.75 per cent in 1961–62.

Fiscal, tax-sharing, subsidy and other payments to provinces

Payments to the provinces during 1962–63 for statutory subsidies, payments under the federal-provincial fiscal arrangements and tax-sharing arrangements, and the transfer of a portion of income tax receipts from certain public utility companies were $275 million compared with $541 million in 1961–62.

Charges to budgetary expenditures in 1962–63 in respect of the above payments were $266 million less than in 1961–62 due to a decrease of $480 million in payments under federal-provincial tax-sharing arrangements offset in part by payments of $218 million under new federal-provincial fiscal arrangements.

Under the 1957 tax rental agreements, the obligation on the renting provinces to abstain from the imposition of personal and corporation income taxes was to lapse on December 31, 1961. As the Government of Canada did not offer to renew tax rental agreements, the former renting provinces have all imposed personal and corporation income taxes effective January 1, 1962. The Government of Canada, in place of the tax rental agreements, offered to enter into tax collection agreements with the provinces whereby Canada would undertake to collect, without charge, the provincial personal and corporation income taxes at rates determined by the provinces, provided that the provincial personal income tax was expressed as a percentage of the federal personal income tax payable and the provincial corporation income tax employed a definition of corporate taxable income identical with the federal definition. To facilitate the imposition of the provincial income taxes, the Income Tax Act was amended in the 1961 session of Parliament (1) to reduce the federal income tax payable by individuals resident in the provinces by 16 per cent in 1962 and by a further one per cent in each subsequent year until the deduction amounts to 20 per cent in 1966, and (2) to reduce the federal tax rate on the taxable income of corporations earned in the provinces by 9 percentage points. Canada has entered into agreements to collect the personal income tax, with all the provinces with the exception of the Province of Quebec, and to collect the corporation income tax, with all the provinces with the exception of the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec. With the exception of Saskatchewan and Manitoba, the provinces which have entered into tax collection agreements have imposed personal and corporation income taxes equivalent to the federal withdrawal. The Provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan have imposed personal income taxes at 22 per cent rather than 16 per cent of the federal tax payable and 10 per cent rather than 9 per cent of the taxable income of corporations.

Under these agreements payments are made monthly to the provinces on the basis of estimated receipts. When the actual amount of the returns are established, usually in the month of December following the fiscal year-end, adjustments are to be made with the provinces.

The additional grant to Newfoundland, which in previous years was paid under the Newfoundland Additional Grants Act, is now included in the payment under the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act.

The amount of public utility tax receipts for transfer to provinces in 1962–63 was $10 million, an increase of $4 million over the 1961–62 total. The 1962–63 payments represent the transferable portion of the income tax received from corporations whose main business was the distribution to, or the generation for distribution to, the public of electrical energy, gas or steam for the taxation year 1960.

Government's contribution to the public service superannuation account

In 1962–63 the government's contribution to the public service superannuation account (equal to the estimated current and prior service payments of individuals in 1961–62) was $51 million compared with $47 million in 1961–62.

Premium, discount and exchange

Premium, discount and exchange transactions during 1962–63 resulted in a net expenditure of $10 million, compared with a net revenue of $2 million in 1961–62.

This net expenditure was due primarily to the charge resulting from the revaluing of the government's outstanding debt payable in New York and London at the official parity rates rather than at the former rates of $1 U.S. = $1 Can. and £1 = $2.80 Can. The official parity rate at March 31, 1963 was $1 U.S. = $1.08108 Can. and £1 = $3.027 Can.

Fisheries

Expenditures of the Department of Fisheries amounted to $23 million for 1962–63, approximately the same as in 1961–62.

Payments to the provinces under the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act were $207 million for 1962-63, $171 million more than comparable expenditures in 1961-62. This Act, which received Royal Assent on December 20, 1960, superseded the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act. The purpose of the act is to provide financial assistance to vocational and technical schools, and in connection with youth training projects.

Payments to provinces and in respect of Indian bands by the Government of Canada, of amounts not exceeding one-half of the cost of labour engaged on approved winter works projects, were $27 million, $3 million more than in the previous fiscal year.

Administration and general costs were $1 million higher than expenditures of $7 million in 1961-62.

Unemployment Insurance Act administration and government's contribution

Budgetary expenditures in 1962–63 (excluding the government's payment as an employer which is included in the expenditures of the Department of Finance) totalled $105 million compared with $102 million in 1961–62.

Unemployment insurance benefit payments are not charged to budgetary expenditures but are paid from the unemployment insurance fund which is financed by equal contributions from employees and employers, by interest earned on investments, and by the government's contribution of an amount equal to one-fifth of the combined employee-employer contributions. Further information in regard to the unemployment insurance fund is given under the liability category "Annuity, insurance and pension accounts".

The government's contribution to the fund for 1962–63 was $57 million and administrative costs $48 million; the corresponding amounts for 1961–62 were $56 million and $46 million respectively.

National Health and Welfare

Expenditures of the Department of National Health and Welfare for 1962–63 were $1,123 million, $83 million more than the total of $1,040 million in 1961–62.

Outlays for the national health branch at $423 million for 1962–63 reflect an increase of $56 million over the previous year's total. The increase was due primarily to an increase of $53 million in the government's contributions under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act.

During 1962–63 expenditures of the welfare branch in the amount of $694 million were $26 million higher than in the previous year, due mainly to increases of $11 million for family allowances, $8 million for old age assistance, $4 million for unemployment assistance and $3 million for disabled persons allowances.

Government's contributions under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act

The Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, Statutes of 1957, authorized contributions by Canada in respect of programs administered by the provinces, providing hospital insurance and laboratory and other services in aid of diagnosis. In 1962–63 payments were $337 million compared with $284 million in 1961–62. The increase of $53 million was due to an increase in the cost of insured services to hospitals and the gradual increase in the number of insured persons.

The effective date of each agreement is as follows:—July 1, 1958 for Newfoundland, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia; January 1, 1959 for Nova Scotia and Ontario; July 1, 1959 for New Brunswick; October 1, 1959 for Prince Edward Island; April 1, 1960 for the Northwest Territories; July 1, 1960 for the Yukon Territory; and January 1, 1961 for Quebec.

Family allowances

Family allowances are payable in respect of all children under sixteen years of age, resident in Canada, with minor exceptions such as in the case of children of immigrants who must reside in Canada one year before an allowance is payable. The monthly allowance is $6 if the child is under 10 years and $8 in the age group 10 to 15. Children of immigrants receive family assistance at the same rate during their first year of residence in Canada from appropriations of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration if during that period they are under sixteen years of age.

Family allowance payments for 1962–63 in the amount of $532 million represented 8 per cent of total expenditures. The increase of $11 million over the previous year reflected the increase in the number of children in the eligible age groups.

Old age assistance, disabled persons allowances, blind persons allowances and unemployment assistance

Under the Old Age Assistance Act, the federal government reimburses the provinces by paying 50 per cent of the lesser of $65 monthly or the amount of assistance given by the provinces in the form of monthly pensions to eligible persons in need who are in the age group 65 to 69. (Under the Old Age Security Act, all persons 70 years and over who satisfy the residence requirements of the act may receive a pension of $65 per month from the federal government out of the old age security fund.) Similarly, the federal government reimburses the provinces under the Blind Persons Act for allowances of not more than $65 per month to blind persons in need 18 years of age or over by paying 75 per cent of the total payments, and under the Disabled Persons Act by paying 50 per cent of not more than $65 per month for allowances to disabled persons in need 18 years of age or over. Payments in 1962–63 were $38 million for old age assistance, $20 million in respect of disabled persons allowances, $5 million for blind persons allowances and $96 million for unemployment assistance. Comparable figures in 1961–62 were, respectively, $31 million, $16 million, $4 million and $92 million.

The increases in old age assistance, disabled persons allowances and blind persons allowances were due mainly to amendments to the Old Age Assistance Act, the Blind Persons Act and the Disabled Persons Act which raised the maximum pension towards which the federal government would contribute from $55 to $65 per month effective February 1, 1962.

Under the Unemployment Assistance Act the federal government contributes up to 50 per cent of the cost of unemployment assistance paid by the provinces, subject to certain deductions as set out in the act. All provinces have signed agreements with the federal government. There was an increase of $4 million in contributions for 1962–63 over those for the previous year.

National Research Council, including the Medical Research Council

Expenditures of the National Research Council, including the Medical Research Council, amounted to $41 million for 1962–63 compared with $39 million for 1961–62.

In 1962–63 outlays for scholarships and grants in aid of research increased by $2 million. Administration and general costs also increased by $2 million and with a reduction of $2 million in expenditures for construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, there was a net increase of $2 million over the previous year's total.

National Revenue

Expenditures of the Department of National Revenue totalled $79 million for 1962–63, $3 million more than in 1961–62, due mainly to increased costs of $2 million for district offices of the taxation division and $1 million for the customs and excise divisions.

The main changes were increases of $9 million in outlays of the northern administration branch and $4 million in expenditures of the water resources branch and decreases of $2 million in expenditures of the national parks branch and $3 million in contributions to the provinces to assist in the development of roads leading to resources.

Post Office

Gross expenditures of the Post Office Department for 1962–63 totalled $219 million, an increase of $4 million over the 1961–62 outlays of $215 million.

Public Works

Expenditures of the Department of Public Works for 1962–63 amounted to $175 million, a decrease of $14 million from the 1961–62 total of $189 million.

Decreases in expenditures of $9 million in development engineering services, $7 million in harbours and rivers engineering services and $8 million in outlays for public buildings—construction and services, were partly offset by increases of $5 million in payments to the National Capital Commission and $4 million for housing.

The decrease of $9 million in expenditures for development engineering services was due mainly to a decrease of $5 million in contributions to the provinces under the terms of the Trans-Canada Highway Act and a reduction of $3 million in general outlays.

The decrease of $7 million in expenditures of the harbours and rivers engineering services was due mainly to a decrease of $5 million in outlays for acquisition, construction and improvements of harbours and river works and $2 million in costs of dredging.

Expenditures for public buildings—construction and services were $8 million less than the comparable figure for the previous fiscal year, due to decreases of $6 million in costs of acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings and $2 million in costs of maintenance and operation.

Royal Canadian Mounted Police

Expenditures of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police amounted to $66 million for 1962–63, an increase of $5 million over the 1961–62 total of $61 million.

Payments as shown in the table represent gross expenditures; payments received from the provinces and municipalities for police services at $12 million were credited to revenue.

The main changes in expenditures were increases of $4 million for the land, air and training divisions and $1 million in higher outlays for headquarters administration and national police services.

Trade and Commerce

Expenditures of the Department of Trade and Commerce were $27 million for 1962–63, compared with the 1961–62 total of $40 million. The decrease of $13 million was due almost entirely to a reduction in the expenditures of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

The decrease of $13 million in expenditures of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics was due to: (1) the 1961–62 expenditures included $12 million in respect of the 1961 Decennial Census of Canada whereas the 1962–63 expenditures for this purpose were only $1 million; and (2) a decrease of $2 million in operating expenses.

Expenditures of the Department of Transport totalled $430 million for 1962–63, an increase of $20 million over the 1961–62 total.

Outlays for air services reflected a decrease of $14 million from the previous fiscal year due mainly to decreases of $7 million in expenditures by the civil aviation branch and $6 million by the telecommunications and electronics branch.

Expenditures for railway and steamship services, including charges to expenditures in respect of deficits of certain government-owned enterprises, were $89 million, a decrease of $7 million from expenditures of $96 million in the previous fiscal year.

The 1962 deficit of $49 million of the Canadian National Railways charged to budgetary expenditures was $18 million less than the comparable figure in 1961–62 and expenditures in respect of the construction of the railway to Great Slave Lake were $11 million more than in the previous year.

Expenditures of the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada increased by $13 million, due mainly to an increase of $18 million in payments under the Freight Rates Reduction Act offset in part by a decrease of $4 million in the government's contribution to the railway grade crossing fund.

Marine services expenditures were $55 million, an increase of $6 million over the previous fiscal year. An increase of $8 million in expenditures for the Canadian marine services was partly offset by a decrease of $2 million in expenditures for the ship channel services—St. Lawrence and Saguenay rivers.

Outlays of the Canadian Maritime Commission at $31 million were $21 million more than in the previous fiscal year. The change was due mainly to increased payments of capital subsidies for construction of commercial and fishing vessels.

Deficits of government-owned enterprises charged to expenditure (other than the Canadian National Railways) were $8 million for the Newfoundland ferry and terminals, $4 million for Trans-Canada Air Lines, $3 million for the Prince Edward Island car ferry and terminals and $3 million for canals entrusted to The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority compared with $7 million, $7 million, $3 million and $3 million respectively in the previous year.

Non-active advances to the National Harbours Board totalled $5 million for 1962–63, approximately the same as in 1961–62.

Veterans Affairs

Expenditures of the Department of Veterans Affairs amounted to $336 million for 1962–63, an increase of $3 million over the 1961–62 total.

The net increase of $3 million was due mainly to an increase of $7 million for war veterans allowances, offset in part by decreases of $2 million in pensions for disability or death, $1 million in war service gratuities and re-establishment credits and $1 million in treatment and welfare services.

All Other Departments

Expenditures of the departments not dealt with individually totalled $50 million, an increase of $12 million over the total for 1961–62.

A. CHANGES IN PRINCIPAL LIABILITY CLASSIFICATIONS DURING 1962–63

The gross liabilities of the government increased by $1,904 million during the fiscal year. Increases of $1,016 million in unmatured debt, $496 million in annuity, insurance and pension accounts, $410 million in current and demand liabilities and $13 million in deferred credits were partly offset by a decrease of $44 million in deposit and trust accounts.

Current and demand liabilities

This category consists of obligations of the government payable currently or on demand.

The net increase during the year was $410 million. The main changes were increases of $385 million in non-interest-bearing notes, $26 million in interest accrued, $7 million in outstanding post office money orders and $7 million in interest due and outstanding and a decrease of $4 million in matured debt outstanding.

The increase of $385 million in non-negotiable non-interest-bearing notes includes $380 million in respect of the international monetary fund.

Of this increase, notes in the amount of $12 million were issued due to revaluation of Canadian dollar balances in the international monetary fund and notes in the amount of $368 million were issued to replace Canadian dollars remitted to the Receiver General by the international monetary fund in accordance with the standing arrangements regarding the international monetary fund account No. 1 namely, that the holdings of the account in excess of one per cent of Canada's quota in the fund will be exchanged for non-negotiable non-interest-bearing demand notes from time to time as circumstances permit. This $368 million reflected two types of transaction (1) the Canadian borrowing from the fund (note issue of $325 million) and (2) the United Kingdom repayment of Canadian dollars to the fund (note issue of $43 million).

Deposit and trust accounts

Sundry funds deposited with, or held in trust by, the Receiver General of Canada for various purposes are recorded in these accounts.

There was a decrease during the year of $44 million due principally to the provincial tax collection agreements under which as at March 31, 1962 the federal government had collected $38 million, while at March 31, 1963 the provinces had received advance payments of $10 million in accordance with the federal-provincial tax collection agreements. This amount is recorded in the asset category "Other loans and investments". There were also decreases of $11 million in Canadian Arsenals Limited pension fund, $6 million in the United States of America deposit account and $4 million in contractors' securities. Partly offsetting these decreases were increases of $8 million in the Canadian National Railways account (representing that part of the 1962 income deficit paid from company funds and which will be repaid to the company when parliamentary authorization is received), $6 million in Crown corporations deposits and $2 million in guarantee deposits.

Provincial tax collection agreements went into effect from January 1, 1962 and further details will be found under the category "Other loans and investments".

Annuity, insurances and pension accounts

In this category are recorded the amounts to the credit of the various annuity, insurance and pension accounts.

Unemployment insurance fund

During the year receipts amounted to $348 million and included employees and employers contributions of $287 million, the government's contribution of $57 million and $4 million in interest from investments. As benefit payments amounted to $403 million there was a deficit for the year in the fund of $55 million compared with $118 million in the previous fiscal year.

The balance in the fund at March 31, 1962 of $78 million was reduced to $23 million at March 31, 1963 by the deficit in the fund for the year of $55 million.

As the commission's investment in bonds and accrued interest amounted to $12 million, the funds on deposit with the government were $12 million at March 31, 1963 compared with $15 million at March 31, 1962.

Government annuities account

The government annuities account increased by $26 million during 1962–63 representing the amount by which premium receipts of $34 million and interest of $47 million credited to the account by the government exceeded payments of $55 million to annuitants and beneficiaries.

Public service superannuation account

The increase of $137 million in the public service superannuation account was due mainly to the government's contribution of $51 million (equal to the estimated current and prior service payments of individuals in 1961–62) and interest of $66 million credited to the account. The remainder of the increase was due to the excess of employees' current and prior service contributions and miscellaneous receipts over benefit payments.

Canadian forces superannuation account

The Canadian forces superannuation account increased by $327 million during 1962–63. The increase included the government's contribution of $58 million which was made at the rate of one and two-thirds times the current and prior service contributions, payment of interest by the government of $53 million credited to the account and the amount of $17 million by which contributions by permanent services personnel for current and prior years' service exceeded benefit payments from the account. There was also a credit of $199 million to this account in 1962–63 to bring the balance in the account into line with an actuarial evaluation as at December 31, 1960 as calculated by the Department of Insurance. A contra entry was made to the asset account "Deferred charges—unamortized portion of actuarial deficiency in the Canadian forces superannuation account".

Old age security fund

Under the Old Age Security Act pensions at the rate of $65 per month are paid, without a means test, from the old age security fund to all eligible persons seventy years of age or over. Receipts of $691 million, consisting of $302 million from the 3 per cent sales tax, $274 million from the 3 per cent tax on personal incomes (maximum tax $90) and $115 million from the 3 per cent tax on corporation profits, were $43 million less than payments of $734 million from the fund. As the balance in the fund at the end of the fiscal year 1961–62 was $2 million, temporary loans of $41 million were made by the Minister of Finance to cover the deficit in the fund.

Undisbursed balances of appropriations to special accounts

This category records the undisbursed balances of appropriations to special accounts for which moneys have been appropriated by Parliament and from which disbursements may be made for authorized purposes in periods subsequent to that in which the appropriation was made. There was a net increase of $11 million during the current fiscal year bringing the balance as at March 31, 1963 to $126 million.

The increase of $14 million in the Colombo plan fund represented the amount by which the $42 million credited to the fund for assistance to countries in south and south-east Asia (and charged to budgetary expenditures) exceeded disbursements from the fund of $28 million.

The railway grade crossing fund decreased by $7 million during the year, representing disbursements of $13 million from the fund less an amount of $6 million voted by Parliament for this purpose which was credited to the fund and charged to budgetary expenditures.

The increase of $4 million in the national capital fund represented the amount by which the $9 million credited to the fund and charged to budgetary expenditures exceeded disbursements of $5 million.

Deferred credits

This category records amounts due the government in respect of which payment has been deferred. These are contra accounts to corresponding items under the following asset categories: "Loans to, and investments in, Crown corporations", "Loans to national governments" and "Other loans and investments". The balance at March 31, 1963 was $108 million, an increase of $13 million during the year.

There was no change during the year in deferred interest of $44 million on loans made under the United Kingdom Financial Agreement Act, 1946. This is a contra account to a corresponding item under "Loans to national governments".

Deferred interest in respect of The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, which is a contra account to a corresponding item in "Loans to, and investments in, Crown corporations", increased by $16 million during the year to $49 million at March 31, 1963 and included $19 million capitalized at March 31, 1959. In accordance with Order in Council P.C. 1961–1863 dated December 29, 1961, interest payable on December 31, 1961 by The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, as well as interest payable on December 31, 1962, has been deferred until December 31, 1963. On December 31, 1963 the total amount of interest so deferred, together with interest due on that date, will be computed as a single sum and is to be repaid in equal annual instalments calculated by amortizing the said sum, including interest at rates determined by the Minister of Finance, over a period of forty-six years.

There was a small increase in the capitalized interest on loans made to Northern Canada Power Commission. Advances are made to the Commission for various projects in the Yukon Territory and Northwest Territories and advances are also made pursuant to the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act to the Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Upon completion of a project accrued interest due is computed from, but not including, the date of each advance to the date of completion of the project and is set up as capitalized interest and added to the original amount of the advance to be repayable in thirty or forty (as the case may be) equal annual instalments.

Balances receivable under agreements of sale of Crown assets are set up as contra accounts to corresponding items under "Other loans and investments". Receipts of $2 million were in respect of outstanding agreements.

The government's equity in the agency account of Crown Assets Disposal Corporation is a contra account to a corresponding item under "Other loans and investments". This equity decreased by $1 million during the year.

Suspense accounts

These consist of balances where some uncertainty as to disposition exists.

The replacement of materiel account, established by section 11 of the National Defence Act, is credited with amounts realized from the sale of materiel that has not been declared surplus to requirements but has been authorized by the Governor in Council to be sold to other countries. The account is debited with disbursements representing amounts paid for the procurement of replacement materiel. The balance in the account at March 31, 1963 was $1 million, approximately the same as at the previous fiscal year-end.

The unclaimed cheques account is credited with the amount of treasury cheques (except those drawn on asset and liability accounts) which remain undelivered for certain specified periods subsequent to date of issue, pending claims therefor.

Unmatured debt

The unmatured debt of Canada at the close of the 1962–63 fiscal year amounted to $17,962 million, an increase of $1,016 million over the previous fiscal year-end total of $16,946 million.

B. Changes in Principal Asset Classifications during 1962–63

Total assets amounted to $11,421 million at March 31, 1963, an increase of $1,195 million during the fiscal year. As there was no change in the reserve of $546 million for losses on realization of assets, net assets were $10,875 million at the close of the fiscal year.

The principal changes were increases of $943 million in advances to the exchange fund account, $480 million in loans to, and investments in, Crown corporations, $209 million in deferred charges and $112 million in other loans and investments, and decreases of $421 million in current assets and $129 million in loans to national governments.

Total current assets amounted to $825 million at the end of the fiscal year 1962–63, a decrease of $421 million from the 1961-62 total of $1,246 million.

The main items responsible for the decrease of $421 million during the year were decreases of $403 million in cash in current and special deposits and $61 million in the securities investment account and an increase of $30 million in departmental working capital advances and revolving funds (of which $13 million was in the defence production revolving fund).

During the year government securities totalling $113 million were purchased and subsequently cancelled before the fiscal year-end. Full particulars of the securities purchased and cancelled may be found in section 6 "The Public Debt" further on in this report.

In 1962–63 the government advanced to the company $250 million for the retirement of debt in the hands of the public and $6 million for capital purposes.

In addition, to assist the Canadian National Railways to finance further capital expenditure during the year, the government purchased $19 million of 4 per cent preferred stock of the company. This stock is issued under the authority of the Canadian National Railways Capital Revision Act, 1952, in an amount equal to 3 per cent of the gross revenue of the company.

The government also provided the company with temporary loans of $41 million in respect of its 1962 income deficit. It should be noted that the 1962 income deficit of the Canadian National Railways was $49 million (of which $41 million was covered by temporary loans and $8 million paid from company funds) and on parliamentary authority will be charged to 1962–63 budgetary expenditures.

At March 31, 1962 temporary loans of $5 million were outstanding to the Trans-Canada Air Lines in respect of its 1962 income deficit. During 1962–63 further advances of $1 million were made bringing the total advances for this purpose to $6 million. Of these advances $3 million was repaid by the Air Lines and the balance of $3 million representing the 1962 income deficit will be charged to 1962–63 budgetary expenditures upon parliamentary approval. The government also advanced $5 million on account of the Air Lines 1963 income deficit which was outstanding at March 31, 1963.

Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation

Loans during the fiscal year were $249 million of which $198 million was for direct lending and limited dividend housing and $51 million for federal-provincial projects. Repayments were $153 million, of which $141 million was in respect of direct lending, $8 million in respect of federal-provincial projects and $4 million in respect of housing. The balance at March 31, 1963 was $1,798 million compared with $1,701 million at March 31, 1962.

Farm Credit Corporation

Loans to the Farm Credit Corporation amounted to $60 million and investments in the capital of the corporation to $2 million during the year. Repayments of $3 million brought the balance at March 31, 1963 to $269 million, $59 million more than at the previous fiscal year-end.

The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority

Advances to The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority were $7 million during the year resulting in a balance of $342 million at March 31, 1963. Deferred interest on these loans increased by $16 million during the year to $49 million and included $19 million capitalized as at March 31, 1959.

In accordance with Order in Council P.C. 1961–1863 dated December 29, 1961, interest of $14 million payable on December 31, 1961 by The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, as well as interest payable on December 31, 1962, has been deferred until December 31, 1963. On December 31, 1963 the total amount so deferred, together with the interest due on that date, will be computed as a single sum and is to be repaid in equal annual instalments calculated by amortizing the said sum, including interest at rates determined by the Minister of Finance, over a period of forty-six years. This single sum and the principal sum of the loans made to the Authority now outstanding, together with the deferred interest capitalized as at December 31, 1959, shall be repaid in equal annual instalments commencing December 31, 1964 over a period of forty-six years except that on December 31, 1984 the balance of the said single sum and interest thereon then owing and the principal sum, together with deferred interest and any unpaid interest thereon, shall be paid in cash or by the delivery of an obligation or obligations of the Authority bearing such rate of interest and subject to such other terms and conditions as the Governor in Council may approve.

Other Crown Corporations

Loans to the Export Credits Insurance Corporation increased by $20 million during the fiscal year, loans to the National Harbours Board by $14 million, loans to the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation by $12 million and loans to the National Capital Commission by $9 million. Loans to the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation decreased by $8 million, advances to Northern Canada Power Commission decreased by $7 million and advances to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited decreased by $13 million.

Loans to national governments

These loans totalled $1,211 million at March 31, 1963, a decrease of $129 million from the previous fiscal year-end balance.

The United Kingdom repaid $17 million of the $1,185 million loan made under the $1,250 million credit authorized by the United Kingdom Financial Agreement Act, 1946, reducing the principal to $1,013 million at March 31, 1963.

In 1957, the Government of the United Kingdom deferred the payment due December 31, 1957 of principal and interest on the above loan. The deferment was by an agreement between the Governments of Canada and the United Kingdom that was approved by a 1957 Act to amend the United Kingdom Financial Agreement Act, 1946. The agreement, which became effective April 29, 1957, permits the United Kingdom in lieu of any right of waiver hitherto existing to defer after December 31, 1956 seven instalments of principal and interest under certain conditions. Principal and interest due December 31, 1957 was so deferred. The first of any such deferred instalments is payable on December 31, 2001, and the others annually thereafter, in order. In addition, it permitted the instalment of interest in respect of the year 1956 to be deferred and provided that this instalment of interest so deferred shall be paid on December 31 of the year immediately following the year in which the last of all other instalments, including those deferred, is due. Interest at 2 per cent is payable on deferred instalments of both principal and interest.

Advances under Part II of the Export Credits Insurance Act to Belgium, France and The Netherlands to assist them in the purchasing of goods in Canada were reduced by repayments of $106 million during the fiscal year. The balance at March 31, 1963 was $131 million. In June 1962, France made an advance payment of $67 million covering eight annual instalments payable December 31, 1962 to December 31, 1969 inclusive and The Netherlands made a payment of $37 million in July 1962 covering eight instalments payable April 30, 1963 to April 30, 1970 inclusive.

Special loans to Colombo plan countries to finance the purchase of wheat and flour by them from Canada amounted to $21 million at March 31, 1963, $5 million less than at March 31, 1962.

Other loans and investments

The balance in this category was $1,105 million at March 31, 1963, an increase of $111 million during the fiscal year 1962–63.

Canada's subscriptions to the capital of international organizations increased by $34 million during the fiscal year due to further subscriptions of $8 million to the international development association, $7 million to the international bank for reconstruction and development and $6 million in working capital advances and loans to international organizations. The revaluation adjustments in the Canadian dollar balance in the international monetary fund accounted for an increase of $13 million.

Loans to provincial governments increased by $2 million during the fiscal year. This was caused by an overpayment of $5 million to the Province of British Columbia under the 1957 tax-sharing agreements due to the revisions of population figures as a result of the 1961 census. Repayment will be made by the Province of British Columbia at the rate of $175,000 per month.

As at March 31, 1963, under the federal-provincial tax collection agreements, payments in advance to the provinces exceeded the amount estimated as having been collected on behalf of the provinces by $10 million. As at March 31, 1962 the federal government had collected on behalf of the provinces $38 million which was recorded in that fiscal year as a liability in the deposit and trust category.

Under the 1957 tax-sharing agreements, the obligation on the renting provinces to abstain from the imposition of personal and corporation income taxes was to lapse on December 31, 1961. As the Government of Canada did not offer to renew tax rental agreements, the former renting provinces have all imposed personal and corporation income taxes effective January 1, 1962. The Government of Canada, in place of the tax rental agreements, offered to enter into tax collection agreements with the provinces whereby Canada would undertake to collect without charge the provincial personal and corporation income taxes at rates determined by the provinces provided that the provincial personal income tax was expressed as a percentage of the federal personal income tax payable and the provincial corporation income tax employed a definition of corporate taxable income identical with the federal definition. To make room for the imposition of provincial income taxes, the Income Tax Act was amended in the 1961 session of Parliament (1) to reduce the federal income tax payable by individuals resident in the provinces by 16 per cent in 1962 and by a further one per cent in each subsequent year until the deduction amounts to 20 percent in 1966, and (2) to reduce the federal tax rate on the taxable income of corporations earned in the provinces by 9 percentage points. Canada collects the personal income tax for nine provinces (Quebec excepted) and the corporation income tax for eight provinces (Quebec and Ontario excepted). With the exception of Saskatchewan and Manitoba, the provinces which have entered into tax collection agreements have imposed personal and corporation income taxes equivalent to the federal withdrawal. These two provinces have imposed personal income taxes at 22 per cent rather than 16 per cent of the federal tax payable and 10 per cent rather than 9 per cent of the taxable income of corporations.

In accordance with the provisions of the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act an agreement has been entered into with each of the provinces (Quebec excepted) pursuant to which Canada will collect provincial income taxes on behalf of the province and will make payments to the province in respect of the taxes so collected in accordance with terms and conditions as the agreement prescribes.

At the beginning of each fiscal year the Minister of Finance will estimate (subject to revision at any time) the amount of the payment that in his opinion is due to the province in respect of the year ending in that fiscal year and will make payments to the province, on the basis of this estimate, in equal monthly instalments. Any adjustment will be made not later than December 31 following the end of that year.

The agreements became effective on January 1, 1962 and the first monthly payment was made in April 1962.

Under the Veterans Land Act advances are made by the government for the acquisition of properties, buildings, materials, livestock, farm equipment and commercial fishing equipment for sale to qualified veterans of world war 2 and Korea under sale agreements which carry specified conditional benefits if the terms of such agreements are adhered to by the veteran. Advances during the year less the reserve for conditional benefits increased by $18 million.

Miscellaneous loans and investments were $47 million higher at March 31, 1963, mainly on account of temporary loans of $41 million to the old age security fund by the Minister of Finance.

Securities held in trust

This category records the security holdings of various deposit and trust, and annuity, insurance and pension accounts. Bonds and certified cheques held in connection with contractors' securities, included in the deposit and trust category, are also recorded under this heading. The balance at March 31, 1963 was $26 million, approximately the same as for the previous fiscal year.

Deferred charges

This category consists of the unamortized portions of actuarial deficiencies in the Canadian forces superannuation account, the public service superannuation account, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police superannuation account, and the outstanding balance of unamortized loan flotation costs. There was an increase of $209 million in this category during the year, bringing the balance at March 31, 1963 to $937 million.

Unamortized portions of actuarial deficiencies

These accounts record the unamortized portions of the actuarial deficiencies in the public service, the Canadian forces, and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police superannuation accounts which have been set up as deferred charges to be written off to budgetary expenditure upon parliamentary approval. These deficiencies are based on actuarial valuations made as at December 31, 1957, December 31, 1960 and December 31, 1961, respectively.

The increase of $199 million in the unamortized portion of the actuarial deficiency in the Canadian forces superannuation account is a contra item to a similar amount credited to the Canadian forces superannuation account. This was due to an actuarial revaluation of the account as at December 31, 1960 and brought the balance of the contra account to $525 million.

Unamortized loan flotation costs

This account records the residual balances of discounts, commissions, redemption bonuses and conversion premiums on loan flotations that have not been charged to budgetary expenditure. The balance as at March 31, 1963 was $131 million, an increase of $10 million over the previous fiscal year.

Cost of new loans issued during 1962–63 and charged to the account was $54 million, of which $15 million was in respect of treasury bill discounts to be charged to interest on public debt in 1963–64. Credits to the account were $44 million, of which $33 million was a charge to the budgetary expenditure item "Annual amortization costs", and $10 million, representing discount on treasury bills sold in 1961–62, was a charge to the budgetary item "Interest on public debt", and $1 million was an adjustment due to cancellations, exchanges, conversions and additional issues of existing loans.

Suspense accounts

The only item in this category is the cheque adjustment suspense account which reflects unadjusted balances in prior years resulting from the reconciliation of payments for redemption of paid cheques with the amount of those cheques as subsequently determined in adjustment of the outstanding cheque account.

Capital assets

Assets of the government such as land, buildings, works and equipment, etc., that are charged to budgetary expenditure at the time of acquisition or construction, are included in this category and are shown on the statement of assets and liabilities at a nominal value of $1.

Inactive loans and investments

Loans and investments which are not currently revenue-producing or realizable are recorded in this category. Included are the loans of $49 million to China under the Export Credits Insurance Act, $24 million and $7 million made to Roumania and Greece in 1919–20 and 1920–21 and advances of $15 million in respect of the implementation of guarantees (Ming Sung Industrial Company Limited).

Reserve for losses on realization of assets

There was no change in this reserve during the year, the balance of $546 million as at March 31, 1963 being the same as at the previous fiscal year-end.

C. Increase in Net Debt

The deficit of $709 million for the current fiscal year resulted in a corresponding increase in the net debt of Canada which amounted to $13,937 million at March 31, 1963.

5. THE CASH POSITION

The government's cash position is affected not only by the budgetary transactions but also by changes in the government's outstanding unmatured debt and other non-budgetary transactions. In 1962-63 there was a decrease of $403 million in the government's bank balances. This decrease was the result of the budgetary deficit of $709 million and net disbursements of $758 million for non-budgetary transactions offset in part by an increase of $1,064 million in unmatured debt outstanding in the hands of the public (after taking into account transactions in the securities investment account and the sinking fund and other investments account).

Non-budgetary receipts and disbursements relate to transactions which result in increases or decreases in the government's assets and liabilities and do not appear in what might be called the government's income account for the fiscal year nor do they enter into the calculation of the annual budgetary surplus or deficit. However, in considering the full scope of the government's financial operations and in measuring their effect on the government's cash position and their impact on the economy, non-budgetary as well as budgetary transactions must be taken into account.

The increases or decreases in the government's assets and liabilities have been described in detail in the section entitled "Summary of Assets and Liabilities of Canada". On the assets side the non-budgetary transactions consist, for the most part, of loans and advances to, and repayments by, Crown corporations and other government agencies and funds (including the old age security fund), national, provincial and municipal governments, international organizations, veterans and other borrowers. On the liabilities side they relate mainly to receipts and payments in connection with the many deposit and trust accounts, and annuity, insurance and pension funds held or administered by the government.

The preceding table summarizes both the budgetary and non-budgetary transactions for 1962–63 and indicates how they affected the government's cash position. For purposes of comparison the corresponding figures for 1961–62 are also shown.

As the table shows, non-budgetary receipts and credits for 1962-63 (excluding unmatured debt transactions) totalled $1,140 million while non-budgetary disbursements and charges (also excluding unmatured debt transactions) were $1,898 million, resulting in a net disbursement of $758 million. As the budgetary deficit was $709 million, $1,467 million required financing by an increase in unmatured debt or a decrease in cash balances. In 1961–62 there was a net receipt of $313 million from non-budgetary transactions and a budgetary deficit of $791 million resulting in $478 million having to be financed by an increase in unmatured debt or a decrease in cash balances.

Non-budgetary receipts and credits

Non-budgetary receipts and credits, as already indicated, amounted to $1,140 million in 1962–63 as shown in the following table:

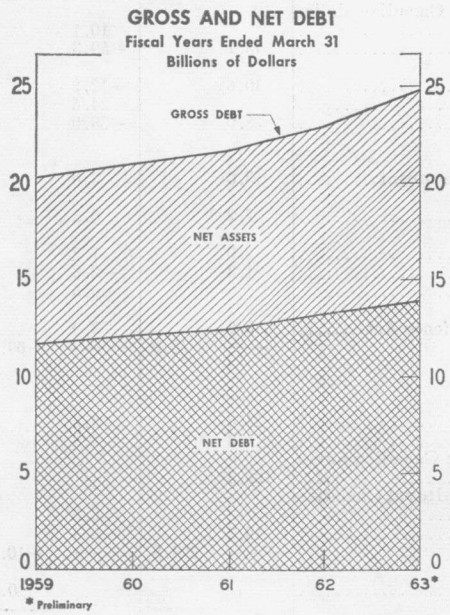
Summary



In summary, as budgetary and non-budgetary transactions required financing in the amount of $1,467 million, and unmatured debt outstanding in the hands of the public (after taking into account transactions in the securities investment account and sinking fund and other investments account) increased by $1,064 million, cash balances on deposit with the banks decreased by $403 million.

6. THE PUBLIC DEBT

Gross and net debt

The gross debt of Canada was $24,812 million as at March 31, 1963. Unmatured debt (including treasury bills) in the amount of $17,962 million accounted for approximately 72 per cent of the total. The remaining liabilities, consisting of current and demand liabilities, deposit and trust accounts, annuity, insurance and pension accounts, undisbursed balances of appropriations to special accounts, deferred credits and sundry suspense accounts, aggregated $6,850 million or approximately 28 per cent of the total debt.

The net debt of Canada was $13,937 million as at March 31, 1963, an increase of $709 million over the net debt at March 31, 1962. Total liabilities increased by $1,904 million to $24,812 million and net assets by $1,195 million to $10,875 million at March 31, 1963.

The total unmatured debt of Canada at March 31, 1963 was $17,962 million, $1,016 million more than at the end of the previous fiscal year. The government's holdings of its own securities were $54 million, comprised of $32 million in the securities investment account and $22 million in the sinking fund and other investments account. This was a decrease of $47 million from the comparable figure at March 31, 1962 when holdings were $82 million in the securities investment account and $19 million in the sinking fund and other investments account.

The decrease in the securities investment account was due mainly to the maturing of treasury bills held in the account.

Securities in the amount of $113 million were acquired for the purchase fund, which was established in 1961 to assist in the management of the public debt. Purchases during the year were as follows:

$20 million 4¼% bonds due September 1, 1972
$37 million 5½% bonds due October 1, 1975
$ 4 million 3¼% bonds due June 1, 1976
$ 8 million 3¾% bonds due January 15, 1978
$ 8 million 3¼% bonds due October 1, 1979
$35 million 4½% bonds due September 1, 1983
$ 1 million 3¾% bonds due March 15, 1998

These securities were cancelled prior to the year-end and unmatured debt was reduced by a similar amount.

Of the total unmatured debt, $17,551 million or approximately 98 per cent is payable in Canada, $376 million in New York and $35 million in London. Securities payable in New York and London have been valued at the official parity rates of $1 U.S. = $1.08108 Can. and £1 = $3.027 Can., respectively.

Summary of security issues and maturities, redemptions, conversions or cancellations

During the year ended March 31, 1963, the government issued securities in the principal amount of $4,385 million of which $4,115 million was payable in Canada (excluding the refunding of treasury bills which mature weekly) and $270 million was payable in New York. Securities issued in prior years payable in London and New York were valued at the official parity rates which resulted in an increase of $10 million when stated in Canadian dollars.

Securities payable in Canada amounting to $3,379 million were redeemed, converted or cancelled during the year.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

HOUSE OF COMMONS

DELAY IN DELIVERY OF "HANSARD" AND "VOTES AND PROCEEDINGS"

(Translation):

M. l'Orateur: A l'ordre. Je dois informer la Chambre que les copies du compte rendu officiel ainsi que celles des Procès-verbaux relativement à la séance d'hier n'ont pu être livrées à temps aux honorables députés pour l'ouverture de la séance de ce matin. Ce retard est attribuable, en partie, au travail énorme suscité par l'impression, au cours de la nuit, de l'exposé budgétaire. On m'a informé que l'on fait tout en son possible afin de distribuer ces copies le plus tôt possible aux honorables députés.

(Text):

I must inform the house that copies of yesterday's Hansard and Votes and Proceedings are not available for distribution to hon. members at this time. The delay in delivery of these publications was caused in part by the additional budget material which had to be printed overnight.

Everything possible is being done to expedite delivery of the publications, and they will be distributed to hon. members as soon as possible.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I think hon. members appreciate the fact that you are giving information to the house, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the failure of Hansard to be supplied to us at the opening of the sitting. As I understand it, the responsibility of the Speaker and his staff applies only to the distribution of Hansard when it is received. The responsibility for getting it printed rests with the Secretary of State, who answers for the printing bureau. This mismanagement should, I think, be drawn to his attention and to the attention of all hon. members.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am sure both the house and the country will treat these observations with precisely the consideration they deserve.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. I do so because, being a printer, I am always a bit sensitive when printers are blamed for delays in printing. In view of the statement Your Honour made that the delay in our receiving documents today was due in part to the budget items, could the Secretary of State say whether there were any other particular reasons for this delay?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that two hon. members—and I would prefer not to designate who they are—gave notice of something over 100 questions to be put on Votes and Proceedings last evening; that this necessitated the staff of the house working all night, and delayed the arrival at the printers of the material necessary for the printing to be done. I think all hon. members will realize that the printers do a wonderful job in producing for us, even though we sometimes sit after ten o'clock, the various papers that are necessary for the proper functioning of this parliament the next day.

I am afraid, sir, that if this practice of putting 100 questions at a time on the order paper is continued it is likely to make a mockery of parliament—

Mr. Bell: You started it.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and I would hope in the circumstances that there might be a possibility, if I can have some consultation later today with hon. gentlemen opposite who represent their parties, of reaching an understanding about the early setting up of the Speaker's committee on procedure, which seems more necessary than ever in view of this rather unexpected and, I think, unfortunate development.

PRIVILEGE

MR. NOWLAN—REFERENCE TO REMARK IN DEBATE LAST EVENING

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege, for the first time in 14 years. Last night during the course of some free wheeling remarks following the budget speech of the Minister of Finance I used the word, so I am told, "crook" or "crooked" or "crooks". Not having Hansard in front of me and not having seen my blues last night I am not certain which it was. In any event it was contrary to the rules, and I assure the house that it was entirely inadvertent. It had no personal application to any individual, group or party, and I wish to withdraw it completely at this time.

WORLD FAIR

STATEMENT TO BE MADE BY MINISTER ON MONDAY

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, some time last week the hon. member for Port Arthur asked me to make a statement on the world fair. I told him I would be ready to make a statement today but since the hon. member is not in his seat I think I will postpone it until Monday.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

EDMONTON—REPORTED INTENTION TO DIVERT OVERHAUL WORK

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. Is any consideration being given by the minister or by officials of his department in conjunction with officials of the Department of National Defence to diverting any or all overhaul work on R.C.A.F. aircraft from the strikebound plant of Northwest Industries at Edmonton, the possibility of which move is attributed to R.C.A.F. officials in today's press reports?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, I regret to say I am not familiar with the details of this particular report. However, I will take the question as notice and provide an answer on Monday.

HOUSING

LOANS IN COMMUNITIES WITHOUT SEWAGE SYSTEMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the very sympathetic and humane Minister of National Revenue. In view of the fact that many persons resident in villages and unincorporated communities without sewage systems and with little possibility of any being built for years to come are denied the opportunity to build under the present National Housing Act regulations, would the minister give consideration to modification of the present regulations to provide for loans under the act to the many thousands at present denied this opportunity?

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, just before coming into the house I received notice of the hon. member's intention to ask this question at this time. I do not think I can accept his interpretation of the present regulations. C.M.H.C. is in fact lending in rural and remote areas on single family dwellings where septic tanks are installed, but we are not approving any loans for such subdivisions for the obvious reason of the danger of contamination.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

WILL SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS EXCEED AMOUNT OF INCENTIVE BONUS?

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I have a question for the Minister of Labour which I believe is urgent in so far as the purchasers of homes are concerned. Will the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials imposed by the budget, and made effective immediately, exceed the sum of $500 which has been offered as an incentive, if one considers the average value of a home to be $13,000?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Since the announcement in the budget address last night I have not had an opportunity to make the precise calculation that would allow me to answer this question.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is it the government's intention to announce a policy in this house before rising for the recess to the effect that it is turning away from the Lamontagne theory of centralization back to the spirit of confederation? I ask this question in view of the provinces' disquiet over the disheartening federal-provincial relations section of the budget last night.

Some hon. Members: Order.

An hon. Member: Kindergarten class.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

WINTER WORKS—EXTENSION OF TIME PERIOD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In view of the very strong protests voiced by the mayor of Ottawa and other municipal authorities that the recent decision to shorten the winter works incentive program is seriously disrupting the works programs of the municipalities, would the minister say whether the government is giving any consideration to re-extending the period.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I wish to tell the hon. member that I have not personally been made aware of the representations he has in mind. In direct answer to his question I may say that since the announcement on Monday no consideration has been given to changing the time period for this program.

MR. PEARSON—IDENTIFICATION OF ORDER IN COUNCIL REFFERED TO IN DEBATE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings asked me on Wednesday if I could give him a reference to the order in council which I mentioned had not been passed until four months after the policy concerning it had been announced in the House of Commons.

I was referring to an amendment to the income tax regulations made on April 20, 1961, P.C. 1961-579, which was published in part II of the Canada Gazette dated May 10, page 638. It was the first of a series of designations of surplus manpower areas for the purpose of income tax. The announcement of the policy to be followed was made on December 20, precisely four months before the order was passed. The announcement appears in Hansard on page 1007, December 20, 1960.

I hope this information will save the hon. gentleman having to put his question on the order paper as I suggested at that time he might do.

(Translation):

BRIDGES

MONTREAL—ASSISTANCE IN CONSTRUCTION OF NEW BRIDGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the distinguished Minister of Public Works.

Has the minister received from the Quebec government a request of assistance for the construction of a bridge over the St. Lawrence, east of the Jacques Cartier bridge?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, before a province may proceed with the construction of a bridge over navigable waters, it must ask the federal parliament to pass legislation in that respect. Such a request has been received from the Quebec government, a bill has been prepared and is now under consideration in the Senate. As soon as it has been passed upon by the other place, it will be introduced in the house where hon. members will have the opportunity to examine it.

GRAIN

WHEAT—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF PAYMENT OF $2 PER BUSHEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): As a result of the remarks made in the budget speech concerning the honest campaign carried out by the present government, can the Prime Minister assure western farmers that they will be receiving $2 per bushel for their wheat?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): This is a matter of government policy, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, this particular aspect of government policy was strongly opposed by my hon. friend who has just spoken, and the policy on the matter will be announced in due course.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Seven more days.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO SECRETARY OF RESOURCE MINISTERS COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): In response to an early question of mine the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources indicated that following June 10 he would have some further information concerning the setting-up of the resources ministers council. My question is, is the minister now in a position to give this information to the house?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I can give some additional information. As the former minister knows a decision had been taken, in order to develop something permanent out of the council, to establish a secretariat in the city of Montreal and to appoint a secretary general as soon as possible. On June 10 in Montreal I met with Hon. Mr. Lévesque, minister of natural resources for Quebec and Hon. J. W. Spooner, who is the minister for Ontario. The three of us composed the executive of the resources council. We were informed that the committee we had appointed to make recommendations in respect of the appointment of a secretary general had reduced the number of applicants to four, one of whom we were privileged to meet during our visit. I understand that a definite appointment will be made by the committee one week from today.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CONSERVATION AND DEVELOPMENT OF NATURAL RESOURCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources in a somewhat more hopeful mood. In view of press reports that the present administration is supporting the germination of an idea that was part of the celebrated vision of the former prime minister, namely a national program for the conservation and development of natural resources, can the minister inform the house what action the government is taking to continue the program commenced by the former government?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I just love to reply to my hon. friend from Kootenay West, but I think substantially the answer is contained in the answer I gave to the former minister. We shall be setting up, as soon as we can, a secretariat in the city of Montreal, and a general council will be held this fall when we hope to have an agenda of interest dealing with the permanent development and conservation of resources in Canada, a subject to which my hon. friend has made a great contribution in the past.

(Translation):

QUEBEC—ADMINISTRATION OF EDUCATION FOR ESKIMOS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources a question relating to the reply he gave me recently.

Could the parliamentary secretary tell the house whether the federal government, through its department, has decided to turn over the education of northern Quebec Eskimos to the Quebec provincial government, following the conversation he had with Mr. Rene Levesque during a banquet held recently in Montreal?

Mr. John N. Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I believe I am authorized by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources to answer this question which follows an earlier one put to me by the hon. member.

The hon. member is well aware that both governments are holding negotiations at the present time respecting the education of Eskimos, and that my minister, accompanied by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, will meet shortly with Mr. Rene Levesque and one of his colleagues, to discuss the matter concerning northern Quebec.

(Text):

IMMIGRATION

RETURN OF DOCUMENTS FOLLOWING CHINESE INVESTIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, on June 5 I asked the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration about the return of documents, such as passports and the like, to people of Chinese origin, which documents had been taken from them by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I asked the minister to look into that particular question and take steps to see the documents were returned to the people concerned. Has the minister anything to indicate to us at this stage?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I will be able to report on that matter on Monday, Mr. Speaker.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REPRESENTATION BY UNIVERSITY PROFESSORS RESPECTING SECURITY INVESTIGATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the minister received a request for an interview from the Canadian association of university teachers to discuss the activities of the R.C.M.P. on university campuses? If so, has the minister agreed to meet that organization, and when will the meeting be held?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): I answered that question yesterday, Mr. Speaker, but I will repeat the answer. I did receive an invitation and I suggested a date, but unfortunately an interview could not be arranged on that date because of circumstances over which neither I nor the association had any control. I hope it will be possible to arrange a satisfactory meeting at a later date.

COLUMBIA RIVER—REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF DRAFT AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he can disclose to the house the changes agreed upon by the government of British Columbia concerning the Columbia treaty, as was mentioned in the newspapers this morning?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did not have time to look into that article but I shall do so and reply Monday.

(Text):

COLUMBIA RIVER—REPORTED ACCEPTANCE BY B.C. GOVERNMENT OF DRAFT AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the published reports that the premier of British Columbia announced in Nelson that his government had accepted the terms of a proposed draft agreement between the government of British Columbia and the federal government, could the Secretary of State for External Affairs inform the house whether the federal government has accepted the terms of this draft agreement; and if so, could he tell us when he will be able to announce its details to the house?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I cannot comment on the published reports to which my hon. friend has directed my attention. I have not seen them. I can say, however, that the federal government has been considering the subject of our discussions of a few days ago when the premier of British Columbia and his colleagues were in Ottawa. The point of view of the federal government will be relayed to the premier of British Columbia and we hope that satisfactory progress in this matter will be made.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the premier of British Columbia has indicated to the government of Canada the acceptance by his government of the draft proposals which he took back with him after the discussions of last week.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Negotiations are under way between the two governments. I think in the interests of the successful conclusion of those negotiations the hon. gentleman will agree that, while I should report the end result, it would not be desirable that I should give a running account which might interfere with the successful conclusion we all have in mind. I might say, for my hon. friend's benefit, that I hope to be talking on the telephone to the premier of British Columbia some time today.

[Later:]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works which is prompted by the questions already asked dealing with the agreement between the province of British Columbia and the government. Has the minister any knowledge of an official application made by the province of British Columbia or any agency or authority of that government under the Navigable Waters Protection Act for leave to proceed with the Peace river dam project?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I will have to inquire and I will answer this question on Monday.

Mr. Baldwin: Might I ask a supplementary question. If any such application is received, will the minister assure the house that despite any commitment which might have been made by his government there will be an ample opportunity for the many thousands of residents who live downstream from this proposed project to make representations to the government with respect to this scheme?

Mr. Deschatelets: This supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, is hypothetical. I am going to inquire and on Monday I will answer both these questions.

REPORT ON STUDIES OF LONG DISTANCE TRANSMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday of last week the hon. member for Qu'Appelle asked me if I would make a statement on the current studies with respect to long distance power transmission.

As the hon. member is aware, about a year ago a federal-provincial working committee recommended a two stage approach to the study of long distance transmission interconnections across Canada. The first stage would consist of an assessment of the problem and would indicate the lines along which solutions should be sought, the terms of reference for subsequent detailed studies, and a time schedule. The second stage would consist of the detailed analysis of all the technical and economic factors involved in a series of interconnections.

Accordingly, early this year an agreement was reached between the federal-provincial working committee and H. G. Acres and Company of Niagara Falls to undertake the preliminary studies envisaged in stage 1.

The federal-provincial working committee met in Ottawa on April 24, 1963, with the representatives of the company to receive a progress report and to discuss the scope and direction of further research work necessary for the completion of the stage 1 assessment.

I do not think that there is anything more I can usefully report at this time, Mr. Speaker, except to say that the consultants' report will be submitted to the committee by the end of August, and that the federal-provincial working committee is expected to meet some time in September to review this report and consider appropriate recommendations to submit to the full committee of federal and provincial ministers.

BROADCASTING

LOCAL PARTICIPATION IN RELIGIOUS BROADCASTS IN NORTH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gene Rheaume (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. It relates to the recent decision of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to curtail local participation in Sunday religious broadcasts throughout the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

In view of the fact that the north has no representative on either the C.B.C. or B.B.G., and in view of the complete monopoly of the broadcasting medium by the C.B.C. in northern Canada, will the Secretary of State consider reviewing this problem, as requested by every religious denomination in the north, with the support of the national religious advisory council of Canada?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be appropriate for the Secretary of State to review this, but I would be very happy to draw the observations of the hon. gentleman to the attention of the C.B.C. and ask them if they would review it.

FISHERIES

NORTH PACIFIC TREATY—REQUEST FOR INTERIM REPORT ON WASHINGTON TALKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would like to direct to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the widespread interest in the matter, particularly in British Columbia, I wonder whether the minister could give us a further interim report regarding the progress or lack of progress in the Washington talks which have been going on respecting the north Pacific fisheries.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): In reply to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that while negotiations are under way in Washington, it would not be in the public interest to make any further statement now.

SUGAR

REPORTED OFFERS OF SUPPLIES AT REDUCED PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce? Has not the minister received recently interesting offers from a certain number of friendly countries that are in a position to supply us with any amount of sugar at the price which was current before the unjustified increase in price of this commodity on the Canadian market?

(Text):

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the purport of the hon. member's question. Perhaps he could be more specific on the order paper or in a later question.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

PROVISION OF DRINKING FOUNTAINS IN CENTRE BLOCK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hastings South.

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Will he take the necessary steps to have drinking fountains installed in the centre block to accommodate the many visitors to this place, and especially the many school children who travel hundreds of miles by bus in hot weather?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): I thank the hon. member for bringing this to my attention, and as usual immediate steps will be taken.

[Later:]

Mr. Robert Temple (Hastings South): Mr. Speaker, much as I might like to take credit for the question asked by the hon. member for Hastings-Frontenac regarding drinking fountains, I bow to him.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Following his budget speech last night, could the minister tell the house how important were the nightmares he had in his sleep?

[Later:]

FINANCE

REDUCTION IN TOBACCO TAXES TO STIMULATE SALES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Rene Tremblay (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, Tuesday the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm asked the Minister of Agriculture the following question, as found in the official report of that day:

In view of the cigar and cigarette tobacco surplus in this country, does the Minister of Agriculture intend to recommend to the Minister of Finance a tax reduction on such tobacco in order to increase sales?

Here is the answer. As the tobacco tax structure is the responsibility of the cabinet, I do not intend to comment on this matter.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF SESSIONAL COMMITTEE ON RAILWAYS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, but in his absence I will redirect it to the Prime Minister. Due to the very unstable and unrestful conditions with regard to C.N.R. operations in the last month, can the Prime Minister inform the house when the sessional committee to study C.N.R.'s operations will be set up?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we hope to get these committees all set up at the earliest possible date, and I am sure this is one of the committees which will be given priority.

TRANSPORT

SASKATCHEWAN—RESULTS OF PROPOSED RAIL LINE ABANDONMENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question arising out of the question which has just been asked. In the province of Saskatchewan, under the Canadian National Railways plan some 1,275 miles of railway will be abandoned. I have received a number of communications asking whether the Prime Minister himself would communicate with the president of the Canadian National Railways and point out the serious results which will follow in these areas, served as they are at the present time by some 320 elevators. This is a matter of priority. It is one which affects people of the province as a whole, and I wonder whether the Prime Minister has been in touch with the president, or whether he would get in touch with him.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have also received a good many communications on this matter, the importance of which I appreciate. I have discussed the matter with the Minister of Transport, who is taking whatever steps are possible, and I am sure he will do his best to ensure that the Canadian National Railways appreciate the importance of the matter. This abandonment and other abandonments, I may say, have been under consideration for a good many months.

THE BUDGET

INQUIRY AS TO OUTSIDE ASSISTANCE IN PREPARATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question regarding the preparation and provenance of last night's budget speech. Can the minister assure us that he and his government officials alone prepared the budget speech without the assistance of outside consultants or ghost writers from Toronto?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that is not the type of question which we enjoy in this house.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, on the point you raise, this question is serious. I have information which was given to me which indicates that there were outside consultants brought in to assist in this matter, and I think a simple "No" answer is important because of the tradition that budget information should be privy to the minister and his officials until the very last minute. All I am asking, and asking seriously, is for a simple assurance that this was the fact and that outside consultants were not involved.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the minister would allow me to reply. When the hon. member becomes minister of finance he can bring about suggested reforms.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I put the question in another way. Was the press report of a week or so ago to the effect that this was happening correct?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as Minister of Finance I take full and sole responsibility for everything which was contained in the budget.

Mr. Bell: Answer the question.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter which affects the privileges of this house, and that answer does not meet the question that was asked. If there was in fact anything in the nature of occurrences such as have been referred to by the hon. member for Port Arthur, then an unequivocal no is the only answer that parliament should have. I think the acceptance of responsibility is no answer to a question of very serious importance indeed.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply to the response you gave me to the effect that when I was the minister of finance I could change things. The point I have been attempting to raise in all seriousness is that it is both the British and the Canadian tradition, as I understand it, that because of the importance of the changes in taxation and the consequences that advance or partial information may have, it is essential that the whole matter should be kept in secrecy. When reports are existent that the minister has brought down people from Toronto to help him in the preparation of his budget who may be outside the government service, I think I deserve a denial or an explanation of this matter.

Some hon. Members: Answer.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance. Did the outside consultants who conferred with him with regard to the budget take an oath of secrecy during the course of the proceedings?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, everyone who assisted me with the preparation of the budget took the oath of secrecy.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether there were persons who left his office prior to six o'clock last night with knowledge of the budget contents.

Mr. Gordon: I left my office before six o'clock last night and I was fully familiar with the budget, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister if persons other than the officials of his department participated in the preparation of last night's budget?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, Mr. Speaker; various officials of various departments participated in the budget discussions. I had advice and assistance from a great many other people. There were representations from people all over the country.

[Mr. Gordon.]

Mr. Knowles: I have a supplementary question to direct to the Minister of Finance. It is this. Will he give us the names of those who assisted him in the preparation—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: I hear hon. members over there saying "Oh" and "Ah". This is serious. If people outside the government service were invited to participate along with the Minister of Finance in the preparation of the budget, I suggest we are entitled to know the names of those persons.

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): I am rising on a question of privilege. The Speaker of the house told the hon. member for Port Arthur that when he became minister of finance he would be able to make reforms. I think the Speaker should withdraw that remark. It was facetious. It was totally out of place. It showed bias.

Mr. Speaker: I have pleasure in withdrawing that remark, which was not as facetious as I thought it might be.

Mr. Kindt: I accept that withdrawal.

Mr. Douglas: I wish to put a supplementary question to the minister, though my first question has not received an answer. I wish to put it in another way. I am asking now whether any persons other than officials in his department or in any other department of the government participated in the preparation of this budget. I did not ask him if he had received advice and representations from delegations. I asked him whether any persons other than government officials participated in the preparation of the budget he delivered last night.

Mr. Gordon: Certainly, I got advice from a great many people.

Some hon. Members: Weaseling.

Mr. Douglas: If the hon. minister wants to sit still and refrain from answering, I will understand; but to avoid the question is something else. I did not ask him about advice. I asked about assistance in the prepparation of the budget.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps hon. members will allow me to turn to an authority, Beauchesne, fourth edition, paragraph 181, subparagraph 3:

> A minister may decline to answer a question without stating the reason for his refusal, and insistence on an answer is out of order, no debate being allowed.
> A refusal to answer cannot be raised as a question of privilege, nor is it regular to comment on such a refusal. A member can put a question, but has no right to insist upon an answer.

Mr. Douglas: On a point of order, I am not taking exception to the minister refusing to answer. I am taking exception to an irrelevant answer which is a complete evasion of the question.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): On the point of order which the hon. gentleman has raised, I am sure that in his experience as the head of a government he must have discovered for himself that all the authorities are agreed that any minister of the crown is entitled to seek advice from any source he chooses, as long as he assumes full and exclusive responsibility for the action which has been taken. This is a well known British constitutional principle, and it applies just as much to one matter as to another. It seems to me the only point which has arisen is whether everyone who assisted my hon. friend took the oath of secrecy, and he has assured the house that this was done.

Mr. Douglas: The Secretary of State is now proceeding to argue the case instead of discussing the point of order. If that is to be permitted, I think it should be pointed out that we are not discussing the matter of seeking advice. We are asking whether any persons who are not officials of the government participated in the preparation of the budget and in the writing of the text of the budget, thereby becoming privy to information which ought not to be in the possession of persons other than government officials or ministers of the crown.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I should like to ask whether people not working for government departments have been, or will be, paid for work which they did in the preparation of the budget.

Mr. Gordon: I do not think I can answer that question. Anybody who was assisting me during the last two or three months— and there have been people assisting me—will be paid. They have been members of the department or attached to the department.

Mr. Orlikow: My question referred to people not working for the minister's department or for any other department. Will they be, or have they been, paid for work done in connection with the preparation of the budget?

Mr. Gordon: Anybody who was assisting me was working for the department.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if any of the outside persons who advised him on budget matters were informed in advance of any of the contents of the budget.

Mr. Gordon: I do not think I can say any more. I said earlier that I take full responsibility for the budget.

Mr. Knowles: Will the Minister of Finance give the house, either now or on Monday, the names of persons outside the government service who took the oath of secrecy when they assisted him in preparing this budget?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the house will allow me to read subparagraph 4 of the same citation:

> An answer to a question cannot be insisted upon, if the answer be refused by the minister on the ground of the public interest; nor can the question be replaced on the order paper. The refusal of a minister to answer on this ground cannot be raised as a matter of privilege.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO CHANGE IN TRANSLATION SYSTEM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): I have a question I should like to address to the leader of the house.

In view of the great satisfaction that members of the House of Commons who are not bilingual receive through the medium of the simultaneous translation service which is in operation in this house, I would like to ask if any conspicuous mark of thanks or appreciation will be given to those scientists and technicians connected with the Canadian army who installed the four line simultaneous translation system in the House of Commons for the use of the universal postal union congress which met in the House of Commons starting August 14, 1957. Could the minister also advise the house why the four channel translation service was removed and replaced by the present two channel system, inasmuch as the original four channel installation authorized by the St. Laurent government proved eminently satisfactory?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, if I understand the question correctly it hardly falls within the category of those questions which are urgent because the matter has arisen since we met yesterday, but I will take note of the hon. member's question and if an answer can be provided I will do my best to provide it on Monday.

INDUSTRY

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF DEPARTMENT

The house resumed, from Thursday, June 13, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Pearson—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure (a) to establish a department of industry to be presided over by a minister of industry who shall be appointed under the Great Seal of Canada, to authorize the appointment of a deputy minister by the governor in council, and to provide for the appointment to the department on a temporary basis of persons having special knowledge of manufacturing industries to assist in the work of the department; (b) to provide for the establishment under the direction of the minister of an area development agency and to provide for the appointment of a commissioner and a deputy commissioner for area development; and (c) to make a consequential amendment to the Salaries Act to provide a salary for the minister.

Mr. More: Mr. Chairman, in my first remarks this session I should like to congratulate you on your appointment to the office you hold and through you to extend my congratulations to the Speaker and the deputy chairman of committees. I have not known you personally as I have the other two officers, but I am sure all of you have the confidence of members of the house, and we look forward to this session knowing that without prejudice and without favour you will maintain the traditions of this chamber.

From the interjections and statements that have been put on the record by the Secretary of State during the debate on this resolution I presume that by rising to speak at this time I will perhaps arouse his ire to some extent and be accused of prolonging the debate unnecessarily. I point out to him that I have been here since 1958, and words of mine do not clutter up the record. Through other means rather than speaking for the record and for the press I have been able to serve my constituency in such a manner that I have been elected on three successive occasions. In 1962 the party of members opposite took full credit for my success in the election of that year. In the recent election they made an all out effort to defeat me. I do not know whether they will admit failure in this regard or whether they will blame my being here now on someone else.

I think it is a truism that each of us who come here have had the support of people who hoped that we would be sitting on the government side. These people know, of course, that the election may decide otherwise. As this has happened in my case, I am sure I am now expected to act responsibly as a critic of the government's program, to be constructive and to assist in getting the business of the country dealt with in a proper manner after the most careful scrutiny. My mandate as a member of this house is not a negative one. I think I can meet the wishes of the people of my constituency and of Canada by being careful and diligent in my work in opposition and seeing that parliament deals with the business of the country.

The resolution under consideration is in many ways far reaching. I listened carefully to the Prime Minister when he introduced the resolution. I have read and scrutinized it very carefully. As I see it, it has three sections. It has a section providing for the establishment of a department of industry. It has a section dealing with the dispersal of industry to depressed areas, and provision for commissioners to look after the area development agency.

This resolution is rather difficult for one to deal with just because it combines these features. I have strong feelings about one part of it and more favourable feelings toward another. However, in view of the way the government has put this matter before the house we have no choice in determining and showing by our vote our attitude on two very important matters.

The suggestion was made by one of my colleagues yesterday that the government should take notice of this situation and withdraw the resolution and put it before the house in two parts, so that each of the parts could be fully debated and the house could express itself on each matter. I take it they do not intend to do this. It would seem that constructive criticism, which we did not get from the opposition when the previous government was in power, is going to be ignored by the frontbenchers who now occupy the seats of government. However, I think it was the duty of members of the opposition to put forward this view.

We were led to believe, as were the people of Canada during the election campaign, that the party opposite had all the answers; that in 60 days we were going to have a great dynamic flood of new legislation that was going to be the cure-all for everything; that the reflection of the legislation was going to be almost instantaneous and we could forget about our problems because we would have none left. My observations indicate that we have had a lot of words and quite a bit of action and decision which has resulted in nothing but window dressing. A look at the window does not show very much of substance. There is nothing in the window for the Canadian people to purchase that which will give them very much benefit.

Throughout the country the great concern of the people seems to be about the growing bureaucracy and centralization. The Glassco commission made note of this in their final volume. Perhaps the government might heed some of the things they say there. I point out to the government that this is a fear of the people of Canada and one of which they should take some heed.

According to the Prime Minister's introductory statement this new department will be the focal point in Ottawa to which manufacturers may go. This great, dynamic effort of the government seems to me to be something upon which they will build more and more bureaucracy, and nothing else. The Prime Minister said the government was not building anything new, that the major part of the staff requirements and facilities for this department would come from the Department of Trade and Commerce. Why then do we need the department? Why leave ourselves open to the working of Parkinson's law? We know from experience that this seems to be the case under any government. I am not pointing a finger at hon. gentlemen opposite; this seems to be the case, as anyone knows who looks at the record, and the public of Canada are concerned.

If this new department is to be merely a focal point and is not going to develop anything, as the Prime Minister said in his speech, why do we need it? All the ideas for development are going to come from the economic board. The new department will be the focal point for information for the representatives of the manufacturing industry in Ottawa. Instead of having to go to Tunney's pasture or the Hog's Back empire, down to Sparks street or Elgin street, these representatives will go to one office in Ottawa to secure information. Then, I say, why establish a new department? It may well be that the name of the existing department is wrong in the light of changing circumstances. If that is the case, why not establish a department of trade and industry? Why not take advantage of the existing set-up which perhaps has within it the knowledge and the facilities to do this work?

If the work of the department is such that one minister cannot handle it all, then why not give it to a minister without portfolio attached to the Department of Trade and Commerce, instead of establishing a new department? I feel that such a move would give the Canadian people more confidence that the government is recognizing the need for government to control itself. This is a subject in which every element of society in this country is interested. I noticed that in the 92nd report of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association—I do not put this forward because I always agree with the Canadian Manufacturers' Association—the president said, as reported at page 5:

> The proposed establishment of an economic council of Canada and a Canada development corporation, as enunciated in the throne speech, are obviously of great significance to manufacturing industry.

Then he goes on to say this:

> I am one of those who believe very strongly that we manufacturers must take the lead and ourselves do more planning if we are not to be "planned" by others.

I believe this statement is very sound. I was not a manufacturer, but I was in business and have had some experience with the requirements of government in relation to a small business. I think my hon. friend who is heir apparent to this office knows something about the paper work connected with a small business which is perhaps only earning wages and has to try to cut costs to meet competition. It is an onerous, almost impossible task. In many cases these government requirements raise the cost of doing business to the point where the business goes out of operation.

Perhaps I can give one small example of what I mean, and I do not put it forward as any criticism of hon. gentlemen opposite. This incident occurred during the war when regulation was required. I was in a clothing business, rather a substantial business, in the city from which I come. At the time this edict went into effect we had some 10,000 or more garments in our store, men's suits, with the trousers unfinished to a length of 39 or 40 inches so we could put on a double cuff, which needs five inches. The government issued an edict that, because of the shortage of woollen imports, no more cuffs could be put on trousers. We were going to save this extra cloth. We had these garments in stock, so we proceeded to continue to put cuffs on them. We were hauled up—at least we were not hauled up but the first steps were taken to haul us up—for contravention of this edict. We said "The garments are here and they are paid for. What are we going to do with the extra goods?" They said "You cannot put cuffs on these trousers. You cut off the material and keep it, and we will tell you where to send it because we need it".

The result was that we had to spend $495 for a blind stitching machine because our volume of business was such that we could not finish these trousers by hand. We cut the cloth off, and I wish you could have seen the piles of it. What happened? We never heard from the government again. Eventually we dusted off those piles of cloth and gave them to homemakers' clubs so they could make quilts. Here was a product on the shelf, available to our customers. Anyone knows that trousers finished with a double cuff give much more wear, yet we were prohibited from giving this advantage to our customers. This is an example of government bureaucracy, and the people are disturbed about it.

Many of these programs do not produce the results which the officials who recommend them intend them to produce. The mistake in this instance, of course, was in not stating that new garments purchased from the manufacturer after a certain date should be finished shorter. In this way less material would have been used and no one could put on a cuff. There were hundreds of stores in this country that had unfinished garments in stock on which they could have put these double cuffs. We had not sold our complete stock by the time those restrictions were lifted. We had a $495 machine which was no use to us and which we sold eventually for $50 to a little tailor who had a use for it. The government lost some taxes as a result of the machine being sold at this price. This edict provided no service to the customer, in fact it denied him the wear he should have had from the garment.

This is the kind of bureaucracy of which I am always afraid, when governments decide they can be helpful to business. I am concerned, therefore, about the setting up of a new department if it is to be merely a focal point. It is not to be an investigative department, according to the Prime Minister. It will not be responsible for new ideas or the development of new ideas. The responsibility for any research that is to be done rests with the economic council. The sole purpose of the new department is that when a manufacturer comes to Ottawa and asks where he stands in this field, what are the recommendations and what are the problems, it will tell the manufacturer what he wants to know. He will not have to go to Tunney's pasture or out along the canal but will go to some central point to secure this information.

This in itself will be something new, and I am sure that Canadian manufacturers will welcome it. If you are going to stimulate industry, then industry has to sell its goods. Certainly the present Department of Trade and Commerce has a responsibility in that field. Why remove this responsibility from a department which, in the final analysis, has some influence upon the question of whether or not business can succeed? If the Department of Trade and Commerce does not do its job in co-operation with manufacturers, then industry is going to fail because its products are not saleable, and that is not going to promote any new jobs or any new wealth. Nothing will be accomplished. In all seriousness I say to the government that this resolution and this intention, under these circumstances, are wrong.

I notice further that in the speech of the president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association he says:

> The new department of industry is a concept we have long advocated.

On the one hand he says they do not want to be planned out of business, but on the other hand he says this is a concept they have long advocated. In addition he says it should assume importance for them because it is a place where they can go and get the answers.

A new department, removed from the department which is going to play such an important part in the success of the new industries we hope to establish, means one more link in the chain of bureaucracy. To avoid a new growth of bureaucracy we can do the same job by changing the name of the present department to the department of trade and industry, and setting up within it the focal point that is proposed and which will be capable of supplying all the answers for the manufacturers. If the government does that it will accomplish something and everybody will be happy, but to forge another link in a chain of growing bureaucracy is unnecessary and is neither good management nor good planning.

These are the criticisms I wish to make, based on my own experience. The owners of industry have to deal with revenue and finance. They have to know the incentive provisions of the tax laws, the penalties they may be required to pay and the length of time in which they have to pay their taxes. Forward tax advice and tax rulings are things of great importance to new industry, but they are not provided under any government agency so far as I know.

I have had experience of people coming to me and saying "We planned a new industry; we had so much money and the development would have provided so many jobs, but we had to have some forward advice on what our tax position would be and when we came down to Ottawa we could not get it. The officials said to us 'Here are the tax laws and you can get them interpreted. It is up to you to decide.' "

This growth of bureaucracy, and the government digging in every time it thinks it can help, are due to the belief that it will produce votes. That is true of all parties that hope to form governments; but the little fellow, the small businessman, unlike a large corporation which has the advice of all the experts to get the answers, can quite innocently get out on a limb, and when he gets out on that limb the revenue department does not give him any consideration. They say to him "Mister, you pay what you owe." What is needed is a focal point to provide some information and forecasting of the tax position in regard to new industry.

I must tell the government I am not in sympathy with the setting up of a new department of industry. The people of the country are greatly concerned each time a government spades new ground just for some little operation and then they have to sit back and watch it grow. They are stuck with the costs and never, never get rid of them. The job can be done more efficiently by a department within the present department. I make this suggestion constructively and I hope it will be considered. Reviewing the purposes set out in the speech by the Prime Minister, I can see no need for a new department that might nourish a new growth of bureaucracy, and I say in all sincerity to the heir apparent to the new department that I hope it will not be established.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, this is my first occasion to participate in debate in the twenty sixth parliament, and I would be remiss in political etiquette if I did not hasten to congratulate you on your elevation to the high office you hold, and ask you to express my congratulations also to the Speaker and the deputy chairman of committees. I am sure you will carry out your onerous duties to the best of your ability and to the satisfaction of all hon. members of the house.

I am very interested in this resolution, but I would like to go along with the remarks made by the hon. member for Regina City, who has just spoken, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, the hon. member for Bow River and the hon. member for Acadia, who in no uncertain terms said that as Her Majesty's loyal opposition we are opposed to the setting up of another department which would further bureaucratic control of industry in our country.

As a small businessman myself I can agree with the hon. member for Regina City that small businessmen are burdened with paper work as a result of directives from the municipal, provincial and federal governments, to such an extent that we do not feel there are enough hours in a day to carry on business and keep up with the growing demands of government.

I think it has been ably said, and I shall not labour it, that the setting up of a new department is superfluous, but I am very interested in part (b) of the resolution which reads as follows:

> —to provide for the establishment under the direction of the minister of an area development agency and to provide for the appointment of a commissioner and a deputy commissioner for area development;

This is something which gives food for considerable thought. As circumstances exist at present, we find there is wide opportunity for industrial redistribution in Canada. Geographically we are one of the largest countries in the world but the biggest percentage of our population is to be found along the southern boundary of our country, and there is a great variation in our population from east to west.

In my own province of Saskatchewan, which basically is dependant on the agricultural industry, automation has created a very great problem. This has become increasingly evident in the last 30 years, and automation in the agricultural industry has limited the number of people we can employ in the province. I have spoken on this matter before and I wish to re-emphasize it this morning.

The loss of population in our province and the lagging behind of population increase creates a very serious problem in the economy of Saskatchewan. Thirty five years ago a father and two sons would be kept fully occupied on a farm of just half or three quarters of a section in size, using horse drawn implements, but with the development of automation a farmer with no sons is not overly worked in farming that acreage now. The result is that automation takes over where families do not have reasonably sized farms, and the sons are forced to look for industrial employment.

This is due, of course, to the fact that agriculture is the basic industry out there and the population has been drained off this great province of Saskatchewan. If we look at the figures published by the dominion bureau of statistics on the growth of population we see that for the last 30 years Saskatchewan has practically stood still in this respect. Back in 1930 I believe our population was somewhere around 900,000. We have still less than one million people in our province, and with the increasing demands on the provincial government for those services which should be provided—for instance, road building, schools, hospitalization, telephone services, and so on—we find that increasing costs are falling on a relatively small population. This is creating a great hardship in our province.

I think we have had another strike against us in connection with this problem. It cannot all be laid at the doorstep of automation. I think the loss of population is possibly due to having had the wrong political environment in that province for the last 15 or 20 years. This was referred to by my colleague from Acadia, and it is still a problem out there. But we hope to rectify that in the near future. The political environment has not been conducive to the encouragement of industrial development. But if we made a concerted effort to see that the area development agency suggested in this resolution does what it is supposed to do, we would be performing a great service for Canada, particularly for those areas where industrial development has not taken place.

When one questions leaders of industry in this country as to why they are not interested in establishing industry in the west, the reply is that we have not the large centres of population to provide a readily available market for their products. I find, after looking over the economics of the problem and especially the increased cost of transportation, that in a great many cases it is easier to purchase goods and services, particularly goods, from the western United States or even import them from the Orient than it is to purchase them from eastern Canada. This is a serious matter when we think about it, Mr. Chairman. We in Canada are trying to step up job opportunities and develop industry, and we find that because of our vast geographic area it is uneconomical to buy from our friends in eastern Canada.

My suggestion is that the area development agency should look very seriously into this matter and should try to encourage industries already established in the east to set up subsidiary industries in western Canada. British Columbia, through their vast forest industry, have pretty well solved this problem but we on the prairies, because of the problems of population, automation and agriculture, need special attention. Special incentives should be offered by the area development agency to encourage the establishment of subsidiary industries in the western provinces by the mother industries in eastern Canada. These mother industries should go out to the west and establish secondary industries so that we could increase our population and development. By so doing we would be able to spread the tax load under which we are now labouring. With a larger population the tax load would be easier, percentagewise, and we could have a standard of living almost equal to that enjoyed by the people of eastern Canada. The higher standard of living in the east is due to the fact that here there is a variety or multiplicity of industries.

I think, Mr. Chairman, this more or less sums up my thoughts as far as this resolution is concerned. I naturally go along with the avowed intention of the government to create more job opportunities. This is a laudable objective. However, I doubt very much whether this legislation is going to have the desired effect. The pros and cons have been pointed out quite extensively and effectively by other colleagues of mine in this debate.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Madill: Mr. Chairman, this being my first speech in the House of Commons I should like to offer my congratulations to you on your appointment, and through you I should like to extend my congratulations to the Speaker. I have the honour of succeeding the new lieutenant governor of Ontario in this house. I refer to Hon. Earl Rowe, who served here with dignity and diligence for 37 years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Madill: I know he had many friends within our party and also many, many friends among the opposition.

This new department of industry is to be set up to provide jobs for 250,000 people coming on to the labour market. This is necessary. This is not only a laudable but a very necessary objective. How far does the Prime Minister intend to go in assisting industry? Will it be an assistance of interference, an interference of obstruction or an interference of frustration? Is the manufacturer going to be placed in a position where he literally does as the department of industry advises? It is my impression that industry in Canada has been doing a good job with the many measures the Conservative government brought in. A climate was created whereby industry, for the first time in ten years, was able to show an upward trend. This was repeated in 1961 and 1962. The Canadian manufacturer has shown his ability to meet competition in the textile industry, which was on the rocks a few years ago and has now recovered and is able to meet competition anywhere. It would rather look, therefore, as though the productivity council did a good job.

The Prime Minister has indicated that there will not be anything new or anything that has not been done by the productivity council, the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of Defence Production. Then why, in the name of common sense, appoint another cabinet minister, another deputy minister, personnel, etc.? This is more and more bureaucracy in government; it is just a little bigger load for the people of Canada to carry.

Well, Mr. Chairman, the Canadian taxpayer is just about fed up with carrying this load. To my mind it would have been much more preferable not to appoint a minister of industry but, instead, to cut the taxes that industry is now paying. This government is now an equal partner in the profits of industry. Would it not help industry a great deal more if the taxes were cut in two and industry were allowed to run its own business, which I am sure it could do if the government would only get off its back? Would it not be better also for the taxpayer, who would not have to shoulder the cost of a new department of industry?

I think the people of Canada are wondering, what next? This will be a government with more cabinet ministers than any previous government. There will be more civil servants and more people on the government payroll than ever, in spite of the Glassco report. I repeat, there are more cabinet ministers on the payroll, in spite of the Glassco report, and they are men who were previously civil servants. Will these cabinet minister civil servants give the best ideas, the best counsel, or would these come better from some men who, unsheltered, have faced the battle and the breezes of free enterprise?

I think the taxpayers of Canada would say "Give us the man who has been tested". These are all disturbing thoughts, and the public will perhaps look with misgivings at the creation of a new department which will only cost them more money.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, in speaking on this resolution to found a department of industry I do not know whether it is so much a resolution to establish a new department of industry as to find a place wherein the government can hive an area development agency. I am not going to deal with the difficulties in considering a resolution which in itself contains two principles. Other speakers before me have done this, and I think the committee must recognize that in voting on the resolution one must be able to extract a clear principle therefrom which you can either accept or reject.

In this connection we have, first of all, the establishment of a department of industry. One of the questions we might like to put to the hon. member on the treasury bench who may reply to the queries which have been put forward from members on both sides of the house is this. Who are to be, and what are to be the numbers of, the persons having a special knowledge of the manufacturing industry in this country who may be appointed to the department on a temporary basis? I think we should like to have some idea as to the government's thinking in this respect. In many instances government departments take on special advisers, but usually we get to know what are their intentions.

Before I deal with the economic implications of the resolution I should like to say that I have some difficulty in seeing the entire merit of an area development agency. What is to be its composition, its terms of reference, and what are going to be its powers other than, perhaps, to examine certain situations? Are its recommendations going to be forwarded to the minister of trade and industry? Are its recommendations to be subject to the approval of the governor in council before any area is determined or specified as one of slower economic growth? This becomes very important in light of the budget presented last night, and it is primarily for this reason that I have withheld speaking in the debate, so that I could see what was proposed in the budget with regard to development of those areas of Canada where there has been slower economic growth.

I must say that from looking at the budget and at what are its aims, the purpose of the area development agency becomes rather clearer to me. But I think there is a need for clarification as to how soon such an agency can act, what type of survey it can make, where are its recommendations going and how are they to be approved, because nothing can be done in the matter of income tax proposals and businesses taking advantage of such proposals until we get the composition of an area development agency decided upon. It is for this reason that I have some reservations as to how quickly action can be taken with regard to the proposed income tax provisions relating to industry.

As a matter of fact, I would say that even if a department of industry were set up next week—it could not be next week, but within the foreseeable future—and the members of the area development agency were named, the agency organized, the information compiled and recommendations made thereon, considered by industry and acted upon, it would be 1965 before there would be any concrete action on the part of industry to commence establishing itself in those areas of slower growth. Some may be fortuitous in that they have already taken decisions to establish themselves in such areas without the assistance of the area development agency.

I should now like to deal with the economic implications. The Prime Minister made a statement the other day when presenting the resolution concerning the economic council to the effect that the task of the new department will also be to serve as a guide to the public and the government; to give advice on what are the sectors of our economy in which we can expect strong expansion, and what are the things a growing Canada can produce in greater quantities for the nation's benefit. This is the task of the economic council in connection with which a resolution has been passed. It is then said that in order to carry out the recommendations of the economic council as far as industry is concerned a department of industry is needed.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not think for one moment that a new department is necessary. I believe that within the framework of the Department of Trade and Commerce we have the organization for dealing with industry. What has been thought of here is nothing new. Industry does want assistance. It has been coming to the government for assistance for a number of years, but during the past three or four years a great deal more assistance to industry has been given. I recognize that industry requires advice, and it has been able to get it. Granted, there is always room for improvement; but on the other hand, Mr. Chairman, how in the future may a businessman come to the government with problems concerning trade and industrial development? Would it not be much easier for him if he could deal with those people concerned with industry and industrial development within the one department? We all know how difficult it is if we have to go from one department to another. I do not blame the people in the departments; it is inherent in the system. In the same way, if you have certain financial problems and you go first to the Department of Finance and then you go to the Department of National Revenue, you are not talking within those departments to people with the same philosophy. This is one of the problems which I think the new minister will have to face, the difference in philosophical approach as between departments.

I do not think in separating trade from industry we are going to get the benefit of concerted thinking with regard to industrial and commercial development in this country. That is why I feel that this bifurcation is likely to have a negative result. I should have thought it would have been far better to accentuate the industrial sector of the Department of Trade and Commerce; rename it if you wish, for a rose under any other name smells as sweet.

Right within the core of the Department of Trade and Commerce there has been a tremendous reorganization. There are some highly capable people in that department, particularly in the industrial section and in a revitalized trade section. I have met delegation after delegation of businessmen from western Canada particularly from the province of Alberta, who have told me that within the last two or three years they have received tremendous assistance from the Department of Trade and Commerce. They come along with their problems and they receive assistance.

I feel it would be better if the people who are carrying out this work were to remain under one roof. At the present time one minister expresses the complete philosophy of his department. The deputy minister and his assistants do the same. Now we are to have two ministers with different ways of thinking. The establishments will develop along two lines of thought. I suggest we are not taking a step forward. Indeed, the step we are taking may be retrogade.

I have another major reservation to make with regard to the establishment of this proposed department of industry. In order to avoid a proliferation of ministries the government has decided to suppress the Department of Defence Production and to switch the genial member for St. Antoine-Westmount from that department to the proposed department of industry. I am wondering what will happen to defence production as a result. The other day we heard the minister expressing, in reply to questions, grave concern over the importance to Canada of defence sharing arrangements. Is the Department of Defence Production now to be merely an anteroom or a minor adjunct to the department of industry?

I think the committee should consider this further point. The purposes of the Department of Defence Production are vastly different from those of the proposed department of industry. It has been indicated that the new department is to be advisory in character. We are told it will help and advise businessmen with regard to the development of industry. On the other hand, the purpose of the Department of Defence Production is to organize an efficient unit to carry on the purchasing and procurement of military supplies for our forces in the most effective way possible.

Whether this has been entirely the case I am not sure, but in any event under the proposal now before us the work of defence production becomes an adjunct to industrial development. The new minister, in his concern for defence production sharing arrangements, may feel that he has an agreement or a deal working with whatever foreign power is on the other end of the production arrangement. This would involve the placing of orders for certain equipment for our armed forces in the foreign country concerned. He must, after all, remember that it is his prime concern to obtain the best equipment for our armed forces at the lowest cost to the taxpayer.

On the other hand he has the responsibility, as minister of industry, to encourage the rapid development of industry in Canada. Which of these two potentially conflicting objectives is likely to prevail? Will it be that of defence production, or defence production sharing, or will it be that of the development of Canadian industry? The new minister will have this problem to face. There will be recommendations from one section of his department in one basket on his desk, and in another basket recommendations possibly completely to the contrary.

Another question which hon. members might consider is this. What is to happen to the Department of Defence Production in the light of the sweeping recommendations of the Glassco report? We have these recommendations summarized in the last volume of the report, and for the information of the committee I think we might look at a few of them. First of all, the Department of Defence Production was supposed to change its name but its functions were to be greatly expanded. It was to become a central purchasing department, a general purchasing agency for all government departments other than the commercially orientated crown corporations. I refer to the fifth volume of the report at page 108. The department was to take the procurement of office machines, stationery, forms and the servicing of office equipment away from the office of the queen's printer. Then again, the crown corporation known as Defence Construction (1951) Limited was to be disbanded, its charter surrendered and its functions transferred to the Department of National Defence.

In this connection I am wondering whether the minister could indicate in the course of his reply whether there is any truth in the suggestion that with retirement of the president of Defence Construction (1951) Limited it is the intention of the government to carry out the recommendation of the Glassco commission in this respect. I know this gentleman very well. I know he has taken a position in industry, and I am wondering whether this is because he has seen the writing on the wall or whether he has been privy to a decision to be announced in the future.

What is to happen to the Department of Defence Production as far as the recommendation of the Glassco commission is concerned? I feel this recommendation is incompatible with the formation of a department of industry equipped with some sort of wing for the consideration of defence production matters. I feel too that this incompatibility means that the recommendation in the report is not acceptable to the government. It, therefore, must be taken to reject certain of these recommendations; because I do not feel that a department of industry is likely to become a central purchasing agency for the government. I feel somehow that this would be altogether incompatible with what has been set out as the purpose of this new department which, as I have said, appears to be in the nature of a planning department.

We are advised that the new department is not to have a large staff. It is to be, shall we say, the economic mastermind of the nation. Is the economic council to report to the minister of industry? Is it to report to the Minister of Finance? After all, we must also look at the recommendation of the Glassco commission as set out on page 110; that in dealing with finance, the Department of Finance should undertake the conduct of the central economic analysis for the purpose of aiding the development and co-ordination of the general economic policy. This is a matter which is closely related to the stated aims of the proposed department of industry.

I cannot help wondering where the proliferation of all this planning is going to lead. Perhaps it will lead to such a situation as is hinted in the press today. I was not able to get confirmation of this information from either the Minister of National Revenue or the Minister of Labour during the question period this morning, because the period ended rather quickly while I was absent from the house for a few minutes, but it is reported that the announcement by the Minister of Labour of the $500 bonus on houses built substantially during the winter months was made without any prior consultation with the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. If I could have obtained confirmation, and I hope we can get confirmation, that there was prior consultation—

Mr. Drury: If I may interject, I will give the hon. member that assurance now. He need not labour the point.

Mr. Lambert: That is fine. I am glad to see that the minister is able to speak for two other ministers. In any event, it is rather strange that C.M.H.C. officials, who apparently ought to be in the know, have indicated that they were completely caught by surprise and that they were not consulted with respect to this matter. If the answer is no then I am satisfied, and I think this will allay some disquiet in regard to such a step having been taken.

I use this as an illustration of the possibility of the right hand acting without knowledge of the left hand, and the possibility that we will have in the industrial development of this country the Department of Trade and Commerce going one way in its trade policies and the department of industry going the other way without this intimate interchange of knowledge and ideas which would be much more readily available if this were all under one roof.

These are the reservations I have with respect to the resolution. Frankly, while I admire and accept the motivation of assistance to industry and the co-ordination of certain plans, I still feel that the government is using the wrong vehicle to travel the right road.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Som hon. Members: On division.

Resolution reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Drury (for Mr. Pearson), seconded by Mr. Pickersgill, moves that the said resolution be now concurred in. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said resolution?

Mr. Lambert: On division.

Resolution concurred in.

Mr. Drury (for Mr. Pearson) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-74, respecting the department of industry.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

MUNICIPAL DEVELOPMENT AND LOAN BOARD

PROVISION FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO MUNICIPALITIES

The house resumed, from Tuesday, June 11, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Gordon—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to promote increased employment in Canada by the provision of financial assistance by way of loans to municipalities, the object of such loans being to enable municipalities to augment or accelerate their capital works programs subject to the approval of the provinces concerned; and for this purpose to provide a special fund in the consolidated revenue fund not exceeding four hundred million dollars to be available for the making of loans to municipalities and certain other municipal authorities for specific municipal capital works projects; to establish a municipal development and loan board to administer the fund so provided; to authorize the acceptance of municipal debentures for any loans so made; to authorize a measure of forgiveness in respect of any loans so made, depending upon the date of completion of the projects for which such loans are made; and to provide further for other related and incidental matters.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: Could we carry it before one o'clock?

(Translation):

Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Chairman, how could we not welcome the resolution concerning a municipal loan fund like the one introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) and which is in fact one of the proposals put forward by the Social Credit party for almost 30 years.

We are happy, of course, to see the present government accept our suggestions. This is not the first time that a Liberal government has agreed to apply Social Credit proposals. As I said last year, the establishment of the Bank of Canada in 1934, the socialization of the currency or bank notes by the Bank of Canada in 1935 and the abolishment of the gold reserve in 1940 were all proposals put forward by Social Credit and carried out by Liberal governments.

Several other social measures were applied by the Liberals under Social Credit pressure, but this is not the proper time to recite them in detail. However, when you consider the profound influence of Social Credit in the development of the Liberal policy, you may rightly wonder why those people fought us so fiercely with so many millions if on the other hand they cannot administer without carrying out our proposals. That should prove irrefutably to every Canadian that the Social Credit platform was the only practical one since the Liberals drew so abundantly from it for their own policy.

Therefore, I have many reasons to state that we have cause to welcome this new project put forward by the Minister of Finance and so largely inspired by our ideas, our theory and our philosophy.

Of course, the project as introduced by the Minister of Finance, that is providing for the establishment of a special fund not exceeding $400 million for municipal loans, is a far cry from the constructive proposals we put forward on many occasions in the past, but it is a step in the right direction and I am quite convinced that the Minister of Finance will soon be compelled to fully apply all our suggestions because of the huge needs of our municipal governments, which are closer to people and have a better knowledge of the social needs—

Mr. Chairman, may I call it one o'clock?

(Text):

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

(Translation):

Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Chairman, the time has come to make a distinction between capital investments for social purposes and those which are made for commercial or industrial purposes. It is in that perspective that during the last week of the election campaign, the Social Credit party put forward a financial policy the second point of which read as follows:

—a Social Credit government would set up a public credit and municipal development bank for the financing at cost of all social projects such as public works, bridges, government buildings, hospitals, etc. In addition, the bank would lend to municipalities, school boards and provincial governments for similar purposes and it would, with the approval of the provinces, refinance the compulsory debt of those various levels of government to free public capital and direct it towards commercial and industrial investments which would ensure the unlimited growth of our national economy.

Like certain economists, namely professor Jean Mehling, formerly of the University of Montreal and now of the University of Paris, we believe:

—that public works activate the economy in several ways and that they are a means to provide employment and purchasing power.

That is why we are anxious to participate actively in any legislation which could benefit the most useful of the three levels of civil government. It is the municipal government which is closer to us and which provides the most numerous and direct services. In organized communities, the municipal government provides water services and maintains a police force for the protection of our lives and property; it is also the municipality which has the equipment to fight fires, which cleans our streets, looks after sanitation and garbage removal, controls and tries to improve traffic.

For all practical purposes, municipal government is the one whose sound operation is the most important.

When the municipalities urged the previous administration to set up a municipal development bank, there was a very important reason justifying them to turn to Ottawa for that purpose, while respecting the constitution; it is that if the compact of 1867 established a division of powers and proclaimed that the provinces were sovereign in the field of civil rights and property, the same compact placed the monetary and banking system under the control or jurisdiction of the federal government. Now, nothing can be done when the monetary system paralyses instead of stimulating, as is now the case.

A sound monetary policy must automatically come from the public and private needs of the people wherever they may be, in relation to the material possibilities of providing for those needs. And since we deal with municipal bodies, they know best their needs, when to build or extend water works and sewage systems, pave streets, etc. They are aware of their needs and know very well where to find the material resources to provide for them. But here is the rub: there is always a money problem that restricts their activities.

Those are the reasons which have prompted the municipalities to ask Ottawa, as a result of the Social Crediters' unremitting efforts, the establishment of a municipal loans fund.

The purpose of the Bank of Canada at the time of its institution was:

To serve the people, all the people, by ensuring the sound economy of the entire country.

I hope that the bill which will soon be submitted to us by the Minister of Finance will not mention that these $400 million will again be levied on taxpayers who are already overtaxed and hard-pressed by our hateful taxation system which levies up to 80 per cent of individuals' and up to 50 per cent of corporations' income.

All capital needed for the proposed municipal loan fund will have to be supplied exclusively by the Bank of Canada. It will be new money, new credit created in exactly the same way as the chartered or commercial banks do when they regularly create bank money.

It would be absurd not to recognize society's right to own its credit and to use it without resorting to terms set by usurers or profiteers in the financial field, and without having to pay them a penalty for permission to develop this country's resources and wealth.

To this end, the Bank of Canada will, therefore, transfer new credit up to the indicated amount of $400 million. Only then shall we be able to say that the government really and honestly wants to help put an end to unemployment by financing municipal developments strictly at the administrative cost, through the municipal credit fund mentioned in the resolution before us.

The government would commit a very grave error if it considered taking this capital amounting to $400 million out of the consolidated revenue fund created by public taxation. Such action would be a backward step because the government would be interfering in private activities by taking the place of the stock brokers, who are quite capable of finding the necessary capital to finance municipalities on their own, and who have proved it for a very long time indeed.

On the other hand, if we set up a municipal credit fund with capital supplied by the Bank of Canada by resorting to new credit, we shall not frustrate the stock brokers who are an important class of financiers used to creating contacts between the investors and those in need of capital. The brokers could very well channel all liberated and available capital into the field of commercial and industrial stocks which on the other hand, could under certain conditions, be guaranteed by the industrial development bank, as is done in other fields. Today, in order to increase investment of capital in industry, it is necessary to give greater security to the investor.

In concluding, I repeat that the municipal credit fund should not become a sterile body, which would only be interested in displacing the conventional methods of financing municipalities, but an authority or an organization able to create and produce new financial life.

(Text):

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I would like to open my remarks on this resolution by first saying I am in agreement with any measure that will aid municipalities in providing both public works and employment, but this afternoon I would like to discuss an underlying constitutional problem different from those already raised in the debate.

There are two opposing propositions in connection with this measure. The first is that public works undertaken with a view to creating employment are often best undertaken at the municipal level because at that level the employment needs of the local residents are best known. For that reason where the work can be done in the municipality it is best done there. The second proposition is that municipalities are creatures of the provinces, and federal intervention in municipal affairs is only justified where there is a national interest involved.

I would like to point out that the British North America Act sets up two separate taxation fields. The first taxation field is the federal one, and it generally authorizes indirect taxation. The other field, the provincial one, authorizes in general direct taxation, and under this heading the municipalities levy taxes upon real estate in a direct fashion. My point is that the federal method of taxation, the federal system of taxation, is not justified in presenting taxes to a municipality which has another system authorized under the British North America Act, unless this assistance is required for national purposes.

I wish to draw the attention of the committee to the fact that in the last few years there has been intervention by the federal government into municipal works and municipal financing, but thus far in every case federal aid to municipalities has been on the pretext of a national emergency rather than on terms of helping the municipalities out on general principles. Three such schemes have been undertaken, and I would like to examine them briefly.

The first is the sewage disposal program that the former government brought in in 1960. It was a program of national urgency. The problem was marked very well by the mines, forests and waters committee of this house in 1960 when that committee undertook a complete review of the question of water resources in Canada, and particularly the question of pollution. As a result of the recommendations of that committee, and within a very few months thereafter, the federal government had taken up the question of sewage disposal and water pollution and brought into effect the very excellent sewage disposal program which followed.

I should like to read paragraph 10 on page 396 of the report of that committee, in which it made the following recommendation to the government:

> Your committee recommends that the federal government accelerate investigations of pollution problems in Canada particularly in those areas where it has legislative responsibility. In addition, at the request of the provinces it should provide information which would be useful in establishing objectives of water quality control. The committee recognizes that much progress has been made in this direction in the past. The province of Ontario is to be commended for the headway it is making in pollution control. However, as our population increases greater effort will be required in the future.

I would now like to read the last paragraph paragraph 30:

> The evidence revealed considerable overlapping of authority relating to water resources, not only as among federal departments, but at various levels of government, federal, provincial and municipal. Your committee believes that more effective development of water resources can only be accomplished by better co-ordination of the work now being done at all levels of government.

Approximately $24.5 million will be spent in the year 1963 on the sewage disposal program introduced by the previous government, according to the figures given at page 105 of the budget papers deposited a few days ago by the Minister of Finance. This is a very large contribution towards the municipalities. It is being granted as a national control measure, and not purely to help the municipalities out of their difficulties.

The second program by which the federal government came to the aid of the municipalities was the assistance to vocational schools. It was brought into effect also in 1960, in the late fall, and was one of the most effective programs ever introduced with the aim of a reduction of unemployment. I think this will be recognized, and most of these very effective measures which were introduced at that time, are now being expanded and enlarged. They formed the whole basis of the great efforts made to increase employment and to assist municipalities, and the assistance to vocational schools was introduced for the same reason.

We all understand that the government realized something that had been developing over the years, that vocational schools were required in order to train our young people for the jobs available. It was a measure to relieve unemployment, which no one would deny was and is a national problem. It became such a problem that the federal government, in accordance with the constitution, thereupon gave some assistance to the municipalities and the provinces in the vocational schools program. There again, however, I am pointing out that the federal government came into this program purely as a national matter, a matter of urgency, a measure to reduce unemployment, to help our young people train for the jobs which had become available in this age when jobs for ordinary people with no particular training were becoming fewer and fewer. The vocational schools program has done a great deal toward creating employment in the immediate sense of building the schools themselves; no one would deny that. In a matter of two or three years the results of this program will begin to show as the graduates come out of the vocational schools. But I would ask the committee to look again at the amount involved. In the budget papers at pages 126 and 80 there is an estimate, in a preliminary way, that the cost of vocational schools for one year, the fiscal year 1962-63, will amount to $207 million. That is for the one fiscal term.

I would like to turn now, Mr. Chairman, to the third instance where the federal government has intervened in municipal affairs to aid the municipalities. I refer to the winter works program. Perhaps I have taken these out of order, because the winter works program was in reality the first one undertaken. It grew out of our national problem of seasonal unemployment. On the basis of the fact that we had to do something for those who were seasonally unemployed because of our winter problems, the winter works program was undertaken. I do not want to review it because everyone knows the effect that the winter works program has had. I would like to point out, however, that here again it will result in the federal government spending an estimated $27.3 million in 1963. This is the amount of federal funds that will be used to assist in the winter works program. This estimate is found at page 10 of the budget papers. These are the three main examples of cases where the federal government is going into direct municipal arrangements with, of course, the approval of the provinces but with a more direct connection between the federal government and the municipalities than was ever envisaged before.

In all these cases there were two objectives, as I see it. There was a primary or national objective in each case, and there was also a secondary or immediate objective of creating employment. In all these cases, in the vocational schools, in the sewage disposal program particularly, we were looking to the future: we were looking to the elimination of pollution; we were looking to turning out trained students. But at the same time we were looking to the creation of immediate jobs, and these immediate jobs were in the construction of the sewage systems and the vocational schools.

With that background, Mr. Chairman, I want to come to the real point that I am trying to make on this resolution. We have not seen the bill, of course, and I may be forced to change my mind, but it is my feeling that no justification has been shown in this particular instance for moving into the municipal field. I think that we have been treading very close to the place where we should not tread and have been moving into a taxation field that is entirely different. We have a municipal taxation field and a federal taxation field, and they are quite separate. Taxes, in principle, should not be collected at the federal level on such things as income tax, corporation tax and estate tax and then returned to the provinces and the municipalities, who have another method of collecting taxes. So this basic balance is going and we must be very careful that we do not intermingle completely the two methods of taxation.

If I understand the present situation aright, any municipal project whether or not it has a federal or national objective, will be considered. Intervention by the federal authority does not necessarily mean interference. I do not mean that help is unnecessary or unwelcome. I feel that it is neither; that the federal government at the present time must intervene in municipal matters to give assistance. But I am pointing out that we are gradually moving away from what was originally intended, and if the municipalities really do need assistance—and we all recognize that they do—then before we get too far into this question of using federal funds for municipal purposes, without any recognition of the fact that national objectives should be involved, we ought to consider whether there should be changes in the taxation structure.

We know that the municipalities do need extra funds. They cannot collect the money required for their local projects out of taxation on real estate. This has become very, very oppressive. The municipalities are now getting help from the provincial governments, they are getting help from the federal government, and still their assessments and taxes are increasing each year. I am therefore bringing to the attention of the committee, that I feel we have perhaps reached the breaking point where we are not trying any longer to use any national objective or national reason for getting into the municipal taxation field. I believe that a new deal on municipal taxation or on taxation generally as between the federal and provincial authorities must very soon be considered before we get into a complete integration of the two different types of taxation authorized under the British North America Act.

I say, therefore, that this resolution appears to depart completely from the established principle that in order to use federal funds in municipalities there ought to be a national objective. I think other speakers have pointed out that the projects in this bill are very limited. Some have expressed the opinion that they are too limited and there will not be any results coming from them because most projects will be excluded. But I merely say that those projects which are authorized have no pretext or excuse for the intervention of the federal government in providing funds.

There is also another injustice and this I think we should consider carefully. All municipalities do not take advantage of these federal-municipal projects. The vocational schools program, the sewage disposal program and the winter works program are available to all municipalities. There may be some smaller municipalities which would never qualify for the sewage disposal program, but in general it is available to them. Yet there are municipalities which are qualified and do not take advantage of some of these programs. I know that if we examine the record we will find that in any given district or county only a percentage of municipalities are able to qualify for federal assistance. This is even more noticeable in the present resolution, which is bound around by exceptions, exemptions, and so on.

I particularly asked the Minister of Finance when he brought this resolution forward—and I asked him for a purpose—what type of projects would be considered, and why. I asked the question, as reported at 890 of Hansard:

> Mr. Chairman, might I ask a further question of the minister. What is the basis for the selection of the type of works that will be authorized? Is there any particular basis on which the selection has been made?

The minister replied:

> They are intended to include the main works which a municipality normally carriers out and borrows for, with the exception of the items I mentioned in my explanation; hospitals, for one thing, sewers for another, and also schools. They are the main ones.

The restrictions which appear to be bound about the present legislation will be such that a good many municipalities will not be eligible to apply, and a good many others will not financially be able to apply. Therefore there is an injustice there with regard to the municipalities which cannot and do not take advantage of the federal assistance offered. I think all this goes to prove the point I originally made, that there is no excuse for interfering holus-bolus in any or all municipal projects without any objective in mind. I think that before we proceed any further with this matter we should give it careful consideration. This present resolution is moving us further and further into this question without getting to the basic problem of the distribution of tax sources.

There is just one more point I should like to make, Mr. Chairman, with reference to the amount of money being provided under the terms of the present resolution. We were told that it was an amount of $400 million, and that this is to be spread over a period of three years. Presumably there will be available approximately $133 million per year. I noticed in the budget speech of the Minister of Finance last night that he has estimated about $70 million for the current year for the new programs. I assume that the program we are now discussing is one of the major ones, and therefore we might look for approximately $70 million to be spent in the current fiscal year. Compared to the three programs which are now in effect in Canada, this will surely be insignificant and will not bring about the results we were led to believe might be brought about. As I pointed out a moment ago the sewage disposal program amounts in one year to an expenditure of federal funds to the municipalities of $24.5 million. The vocational schools program for the municipalities involves an expenditure of $207 million, and the winter works program $27.3 million. This totals per year $258.8 million. The proposed program, which is intended to do something to assist the municipalities, to relieve unemployment and to help in capital projects, will this year involve an expenditure of only $70 million or even less, which is less than one third of the money already being spent on projects in existence. Surely we can devise, Mr. Chairman, a better system of aid to municipalities and provide a more equitable sum of money which will have some effect on the economy of the country in the coming winter.

(Translation):

Mr. Frenette: Mr. Chairman, there are certain parliamentary traditions which very often give rise to comments from new members. Among those, there is one I wish to respect in a special way, that of congratulating the chairman on his appointment, and since this is my first opportunity really to take part in a debate, well, I am extremely happy to do so.

I congratulate you and extend to you my best wishes for your continued success. You may rely on our co-operation in order to make your task as easy and as painless as possible.

Mr. Chairman, I am sure a mayor of a Quebec municipality will be allowed to express his views concerning municipal problems during this debate on the resolution now before us.

The needs of our municipalities are enormous. One has to be mayor or councillor of a municipality to realize how numerous and diversified those needs can be.

I believe that the primary duty of a municipal administration anxious to meet its obligations is to provide the people with the various essential public services. In that respect, I am conscious of the rather complex problems often caused by the provision of adequate waterworks in order to meet not only the requirements of the private sector but mostly—and this is when the situation gets complicated—the requirements of industries already established or those which indicate their intention of locating in our area.

Such waterworks facilities require, of course, very large outlays and give rise to a great many problems for municipal authorities.

We must not forget either the fire protection to which our fellow citizens are entitled. That service creates the same problems as waterworks, which are a constant headache, as I said, for those who are entrusted with the administration of the community.

As far as municipal sewers are concerned, I know that we already have legislation under which interested municipalities can secure loans at advantageous conditions.

Sewers are essential to public health, but they are just as important for urban renewal purposes and for the present and future needs of industry.

The fact remains, however, that the legislation, which is administered by C.M.H.C., I believe, creates a whole lot of problems for the municipalities which intend to take advantage of it.

I would mention in particular those medium-sized municipalities which have not yet installed a real sewage system and are at grips with this most difficult problem.

I would have liked to see in this resolution announcing the establishment of a municipal fund a further increase of the help given to municipalities for the installation of sewage systems.

Municipalities must, of course, provide other services; they have other urgent needs. Among others, I would like to mention municipal roads, construction of new streets and sidewalks, development of public parks and playgrounds, in short, all improvements likely to make life easier for those who have to live in those municipalities.

There is also another field which needs special development in the province of Quebec, and it is the tourist industry.

If our municipalities had at their disposal the financial means of carrying out the development of public parks and grounds in general, they would be able to develop tourism, that most profitable industry.

All municipalities, large cities just as well as small communities, have other needs. I am thinking now of the construction of buildings to house such services as the municipal administration, the fire station, the police station, and municipal garages or any other building to serve the needs of the community.

Naturally, Mr. Chairman, any construction project entails a problem of financing which has been extremely hard to solve up until now.

The needs of municipalities cover various fields. To name a few, there is the purchase of street maintenance and protection equipment, the salaries of the various categories of employees like the firemen and the policemen who look after law and order in our communities.

Another particularly interesting point concerns expanding municipalities or those wishing to expand. More and more, the sound policy for the setting up of an industrial fund by our municipalities anxious to develop is gaining ground.

I should have liked the minister, when introducing his resolution, to propose something new in order to promote the establishment of such an industrial fund which is of particular interest to those anxious to set up new industries in areas which are not yet

In order to meet the requirements of these industries interested in starting new factories, municipal authorities must necessarily purchase land and also erect buildings to be made available to those industries. An industrial promotion program should also be established for the provision of the required capital that unfortunately cannot be found in the budget of municipal councils.

Therefore, that list of needs compels us to say that we must find a solution to improve municipal finances because every time we are faced with a resolution about municipal affairs we are up against a wall, which is simply a problem of financing.

Our citizens, our municipal taxpayers, are already overburdened with taxes of all kinds, property tax, provincial tax, federal tax, not to mention school taxes which practically ruin our fellow citizens. It becomes almost impossible even to imagine that we could add on more taxes. Needless to say our fellow citizens, faced with this multiplication of loans and new taxes, are justly concerned about the future wondering what is going to happen.

An example is set by the municipalities whose budgets, as we know, are very often in the red. The municipalities are consequently losing that reputation for solvency they used to have.

The cost of those loans is increasing all the time. Obviously, every time we turn around to implement a public service program, we must rely on current financial means. This is why these projects must now be carried out without compelling the municipalities to pay twice for the capital investments they have to make.

Mr. Chairman, this indebtedness policy cannot be applied any longer. I believe it is high time we opened our eyes and tried to find a solution to this problem to do away with a system which unfortunately burdens future generations.

Mr. Chairman, when the party in power announced this legislation, concerning the establishment of a municipal development fund, we were expecting them to introduce something better than this. For several years, we, on this side of the house, have been advocating the establishment of that municipal development bank. We had thought the ministers were also trying, like us, to find a way to improve the lot of municipalities and, at the same time, the condition of the whole population.

Last Wednesday, Mr. Chairman, I took part in a meeting of all the mayors of municipalities in my riding. On that occasion, precisely, and in the light of what had been announced by the Minister of Finance Tuesday afternoon, we discussed this resolution and this legislation. I regret to say this, but I think it is my duty: the mayors of our municipalities are disappointed about the many restrictions provided to block, if you like, access to this municipal fund from which they expected so much.

During that meeting, Mr. Chairman, we compared the act I mentioned earlier today, with the Central Mortgage and Housing Act in respect of municipal sewage. On the whole, the bill which will follow this resolution can be considered as the extension of existing legislation.

The mayors and reeves said that they were much more interested in the development of the winter works program, because of its definite advantages, than in borrowing from that new municipal development fund.

It remains, nevertheless, that the legislation proposed by the government was much discussed during the election.

Personally, I do not hesitate to say that I am disappointed by the lack of realism which seems to pervade the resolution and the explanations supplied by the Minister of Finance.

Yet, Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate the minister for having done something right now instead of waiting for the end of the session to present that resolution which will be followed by a bill for the creation of a municipal loan office.

I am in perfect agreement with what he said in this respect as can be seen on page 888 of the official record:

> In essence, the proposed act seeks to increase employment by the creation of new jobs in the construction industry engaged in municipal capital projects. The construction industry in Canada is particularly suited to employing large numbers of persons who currently make up the ranks of our unemployed. Many without work today have relatively few skills.

I entirely agree with him when he says that the legislation mainly tends to improve the lot of workers. Since I have been one myself, I am especially sensitive every time an effort is made to improve the condition of my fellow workers. I live in an area where the building industry is prevalent; in fact, 50 per cent of its economy is dependant upon that industry.

It is also with pleasure that I recall the words of the minister who said, substantially, that it was much sounder for the money distributed among the people to be the product of work than just a mere subsidy. I support that principle and I am happy to agree with the minister in that respect.

Mr. Chairman, as I said a while ago there was in our party platform a plank regarding the availability of low cost capital for the provinces and the municipalities. In fact, it reads as follows:

> It is in the field of provincial and municipal financing that the scarcity of money is most evident. Unskilled labour that could be gainfully employed in slum clearance and urban renewal, which would make Canada a more pleasant and more attractive country, is still unemployed, because of the lack of low cost capital at the disposal of the municipalities. A resolution presented to the federal government in Ottawa on November 8, 1960 by the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities states the problem clearly.
> Municipal administrations are still burdened by the high interest rates they have to pay, and the situation has not improved in the last year, when the federation drew to the attention of the government the problems met by its members. Unless the cost of money is greatly reduced, the municipalities will have to give up all hope of development, because they already have reached the stage where they find it difficult to meet the expenses resulting from their normal growth.

My colleagues have already suggested in this house particularly efficient and logical means at our disposal, the Bank of Canada especially, and I do not intend to go over them again. However, I should like to quote once more from our election program, this time about the establishment of a municipal assistance fund. I quote:

> Financing would be achieved through a special Bank of Canada account called the "municipal development bank".
> The fund would be used exclusively for "social capital developments", that is, community projects requiring capital expenditures, such as hospitals, water systems and sewage systems, street paving, roads, etc. The money would be made available to the provinces on a per capita basis and meant to be distributed to municipalities or used on provincial projects financed by that bank, as decided by provincial governments.
> The municipal development bank would promote an immediate increase in employment, mainly in the field of construction, throughout Canada. It would greatly contribute to give jobs to our unemployed and to make Canada a good place to live.

Those are, Mr. Chairman, the main reasons why we support, though with certain reservations, this resolution in the name of the Minister of Finance, on the establishment of a municipal development bank.

We would also have liked the minister to offer us means that would have been easier and more available for the municipalities, in other words a scheme that would have been a little more withdrawn from federal activity. And this would have been more in accordance with the principle of provincial autonomy. This autonomy is seriously threatened by the draft legislation. But, under the circumstances, and because of the increased difficulties faced by the municipalities, I am of the opinion that in order to be objective we must support this measure and see to it that it be implemented as soon as possible to ensure that our municipalities may derive all possible advantages from that program this year.

Before resuming my seat, let me express a wish. I wish that the government of this country may one day understand the solution we advocate in the field of finance and that we may in a reasonably short time see the implementation of the principles advocated by our group.

(Text):

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak quite briefly, first of all to support the principle and purpose of the resolution although the purpose of the resolution is far too limited from our point of view. I know that in rising to support the resolution I am supporting a resolution that provides for a temporary economic poultice on the ills of the municipalities rather than long term economic nourishment. But it does do something to assist the municipalities and on that basis we support it.

My colleagues have outlined our general attitude toward the resolution and the problem that the municipalities face at this time and have offered numerous criticisms and some suggestions. There is no necessity for repetition and I am not going to repeat. But I do wish to make a few suggestions as the result of some knowledge and experience based on, shall I say, the experience of an old man in community affairs. I must refer to one sentence in the resolution which does intrigue me. I do like the use of language in the resolution. I find that the legislation will provide for "a measure of forgiveness". I hope that indicates that the government is facing life now with a Christian and tolerant attitude toward the opposition as well as the municipalities of Canada.

My few comments will be mostly limited to my experience with the problems of smaller towns, villages and some unincorporated communities and I make them in all seriousness because I have discussed these problems with local authorities and officials of various local organizations. First of all, I do think there is a great need for greater co-operation between government departments and government agencies to make the administration of this legislation more effective. In the past I have run into some most unfortunate blunders, I thought, as the result of lack of consultation.

To illustrate, and this is rather unusual, at the present time the officials of our glorified water branch in the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources are doing all they can to make sure that a certain very productive community in my constituency is flooded out and buried under 30 feet of water in the very near future. The Department of Labour under the winter works program granted the same community last winter financial aid to rebuild the waterworks system and this work was done last winter. Here you have one department striving to flood out the community and another department assisting to rebuild their waterworks system. Did you ever see such an illustration of lack of co-ordination? I can give the minister the facts.

In another instance I discovered a lack of co-ordination between the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Public Works. The Department of Public Works had allocated some money to lower the level of a river and make it more navigable.

I was told by one official on no account to say anything about the fact that by doing this work we would lower the water table and drain 3,000 acres of land. They said that if public works were to hear that the scheme was draining 3,000 acres of land, we would not be able to get the money to lower the river level and at the same time drain the land. I kept quiet and the $5,000 to lower the river level was granted, navigation was improved and the water table lowered. All this occurred as a result of making certain there was no co-ordination or co-operation between the various government departments.

I should like to give you another illustration, Mr. Chairman, of the need for much more co-operation and co-ordination between the department that administers this legislation, the Department of Labour, and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I think that these circumstances occur in many places, they have occurred in several communities in my constituency. There are, in my constituency, incorporated villages and unincorporated communities of, say, 1,000 or more people. Now, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will grant loans to persons living in what they call the older, established areas of the village. I will take as an example the village of Nakusp. One can obtain a loan from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to build a house with a septic tank that is considered satisfactory, as long as it is in the old area of the village. I know of one person who owns four acres of land almost in the middle of the village. Under the present regulations of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation he can obtain loans on this property, if he subdivides. He would be permitted to construct houses and build septic tanks practically in the middle of the village.

With the development of the forest industry, the village of Nakusp, unincorporated as it is, has been expanded by the provincial government to include another bench of land. These people who occupy this higher bench of land are denied loans because it is not considered healthy to construct septic tanks in this area. The whole of this village is built on a sand bar 100 feet deep. The provincial health authorities have ruled that septic tanks within the village and in any additions to the village, are quite satisfactory from their point of view. At the same time, we have the ruling that permits the building of septic tanks where possibly some would consider it unwise, that is in the centre of the village, while those who are living in the extension of the village are denied loans for this purpose from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

I suggest that there should be some co-operation between those who administer this measure and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation officials who deal with problems like these. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has advised that loans would be available when sewage systems were installed. Everyone with any knowledge of the circumstances knows that sewage systems are beyond the financial capacity of these villages and are not likely to be installed for many years to come. It is not sufficient for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to say no to these applications for loans, and let it go at that. There is a great need for co-operation and co-ordination between these various government departments and agencies. These problems are often treated on a sort of piecemeal basis without one department or agency knowing what the other is doing.

My second suggestion, Mr. Chairman, is that the minister should give consideration to amending the resolution or the bill when it is introduced to provide for loans to recognized responsible organizations in unincorporated communities. This happens occasionally now under the winter works program. It seems to me that our responsibilities should be recognized to organizations of citizens in unincorporated communities, and I am thinking of irrigation boards, water districts or something of that sort. I do urge that consideration be given to amending the act to cover these particular circumstances so that not only will municipalities be able to benefit, that is incorporated municipalities, but also local organizations in unincorporated communities.

I might say that there are various reasons for not incorporating under certain circumstances. As I say, I urge the minister to give consideration to following the practice that has been established by the Department of Labour under the winter works program. I suggest that the following types of organizations should receive some consideration: Water districts that are supplying water and irrigation to these unincorporated communities. These water districts are incorporated bodies themselves, under provincial legislation, for the purpose of water distribution. Then, there are irrigation districts that are incorporated under provincial law. There are recreation commissions which are managing parks within unincorporated communities as well as incorporated communities. They are responsible to the provincial government. There is a great opportunity here to do something for the people living away from the large centres. I recognize that the problems of the large cities require assistance. However, I believe this measure could be a means of successfully helping the smallest community in the nation.

My third suggestion, to which I have made reference before, is that there must be closer consultation with these local authorities if this measure is going to be successful. In my opinion, you must get the co-operation of the persons you are aiming to serve with legislation of this type if it is going to be successful. In some instances our civil service requires some training in public relations. It is not good enough for an official of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to be almost dragged into a small community to give a short speech to the local chamber of commerce which is replete with remarks about the restrictions imposed by the regulations. There has to be better public relations with many of these local organizations that I have mentioned.

I have received this complaint from a number of places from the representatives of organizations in the unincorporated communities in my constituency. You know, I am a rural fellow; I have what they call a rural mentality which is somewhat different from the urban mentality. Some people prefer to live in the backwoods, the smaller communities, but these are really the grass roots of the nation if people only knew it. These small communities, all through our country—

An hon. Member: Like Toronto.

Mr. Herridge: My hon. friend from Port Arthur will deal with the larger centres in which the intellectual elite usually live.

I do urge consideration be given to this and that officials be informed of the necessity for co-ordination and co-operation between departments. There should be consideration for the needs of the smallest and humblest community.

Now, my next point deals with the question of publicity. Often we adopt legislation of this kind and the people of the country do not know what can be done under it. I have had this experience in the past. One piece of legislation for which I think the former government did not get the credit that it should have received from the public was the ARDA program.

I think that was largely because of a lack of sufficient publicity and a lack of contact with the sources of information available to the public. I urge that every effort be made to let all persons interested—whether they represent cities, towns, municipalities, small villages or unincorporated communities—know what is possible under this legislation, what the regulations are, and how it is being administered. To that end the minister should seek the co-operation of the local organizations such as chambers of commerce, local unions and women's organizations, etc.

I am a great believer in getting union members interested in problems, in addition to the problems of wages and working conditions. There is nothing like getting people interested in their local communities in order to give them a sense of belonging and being needed. Towards this end I suggest contact with the weekly newspapers. There are a lot of people in smaller places who read the weekly newspapers to a greater extent than they read the large dailies. In doing that I know they miss the column written by my hon. friend in the Telegram, but possibly we will find some way of taking out community subscriptions and passing the paper around.

There should also be contact with local radio stations and with any organization or group of people that will inform the public of what is intended under this legislation and what can be obtained through its provisions.

In conclusion, in the administration of this legislation we must do everything possible to bring the administration of it as close to the people as possible if we are to have any measure of success, limited though it may be.

Mr. Gundlock: Mr. Chairman, as this is the first time I rise to take part in a debate in the twenty sixth parliament I wish to congratulate you on your appointment, and through you offer my congratulations to Mr. Speaker and to the deputy chairman of committees. It is with great pleasure I join my congratulations with those of other hon. members of the house.

The resolution before us brings some questions to my mind, particularly in regard to the lack of definition. I do not want to prolong the debate, but I have one question related particularly to my area of southwestern Alberta, and especially the irrigation part of that area. I would like to know what the definition of a municipality is. Irrigation companies were mentioned by my hon. friend from Kootenay West, and incidentally he referred to himself as having a rural mentality. Well, if his is a rural mentality, then, having listened to his use of English, I am afraid I would have trouble defining mine, inasmuch as I am a farmer born and raised in a rural area.

An irrigation company formed under the irrigation act of Alberta is considered a municipality, and I believe it has been recognized in Ottawa as a municipality for the purpose of winter works. Would this kind of rural municipality come under the definition of a municipality as given in the resolution before us, and would it qualify for loans from the municipal development fund?

At the present time these municipalities or irrigation companies are facing a very acute problem. I remind the committee that a few days ago one of the ministers said his constituents were praying it would stop raining in his district. I understand he is not in the house today and that he is back in his constituency. I only hope someone will convey to him the suggestion that we would like his constituents to change their minds because there is in fact a great water shortage, and these municipalities would find a great boon in loans from this fund. I almost hope the legislation passes quickly because there is a great need for finance and aid to capital works in particular.

Some of the irrigation companies I mentioned are 75 to 80 years old, and their need for rebuilding capital works is very great.

Another question comes to my mind with regard to municipalities that are adjacent to larger urban centres or large army camps. These municipalities have to maintain roads which are used by these other people, and their financial problems are great on that account.

I would also like the minister to explain the forgiveness clause a little more fully. It may be the saving feature of the resolution, but I wonder. The borrowing power of a municipality is limited to certain things, regardless of whether money such as this is available or not. The fact that the federal government makes additional funds available does not necessarily mean that a municipality can borrow them. It may well be that there should be a new source of funds, but the basic problem is that many municipalities have used up their borrowing power. In fact it seems to me this could lead to the rich getting richer and the poor getting poorer.

The establishment of the board itself brings another question to my mind, and I hope you will forgive me, Mr. Chairman, because we all have to have our little bit of fun. I hope the Minister of Agriculture may become a member of the board that is to be set up because, in spite of his many, many travels, and the many days he spends travelling, I think he could possibly learn something from this board, particularly in relation to the irrigation companies of southern Alberta right on his own back doorstep. You are very kind, Mr. Chairman; I hoped you would forgive me.

I do not want to be repetitious, as previous speakers have said, but I do think this is a very serious matter. I did not, indeed, expect to speak at all on this resolution until the budget came down in this house last evening and I began to wonder about these things. Here is $400 million. Just one little part of a corporation or municipality could use a percentage of that amount. I can also foresee that one municipality such as Ottawa or Toronto might well take the whole amount. These considerations raised questions in my mind. I have not yet, unlike my hon. friend from Kootenay West, been able to describe my mentality, but for what it is worth, these are big questions. I seriously question where this money is going to be used, or what is the real purpose of this loan fund. Perhaps it will be made known to us. Perhaps it is explicit and clear in the bill, and if so I am sorry to have taken up the time of the committee. But I wanted to make sure that these questions were on record, and I hope they will be answered. As I said earlier, after hearing the budget and thinking these things over, such as $500 being taken out of one pocket and put in another, and wondering where the money is coming from, I decided that I should have a question or two answered in relation particularly to my area of Canada.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I notice from the resolution that, like another resolution that was before the house, its real import is to bring in a program in order to remedy unemployment. I think the previous speaker referred to this measure as merely a poultice being put on the problem. I would describe it as merely a powder puff applied to the problem, because I recall very well that some time ago when the winter works program was implemented by the former Conservative government the then opposition called that program peanuts although $900 million, in cooperation with the provinces, was spent.

I still believe that with an unemployment problem the solution is to increase productivity. I want to emphasize, as I did yesterday, that in one year under the previous government productivity increased by 8 per cent. I believe that in order to keep productivity up we must leave working capital with industry, with the individual, so they may expand their businesses and take on people who are unemployed.

I am not going to pour cold water on the program, particularly, and say the government will not do something to help solve unemployment. I believe the Minister of Finance is quite serious when he says he thinks this legislation will in some way remedy the situation. But I say that when we are going deeper and deeper into debt it means more taxes, and more taxes means taking more working capital away from industry and individuals, which will cut down the expansion of the country. I was rather interested in listening to the hon. member for Medicine Hat a few days ago when he was speaking on the same subject. He was talking about the debt of the various provinces. This, after all, is a basic loan program and because we heard a great deal during the election campaign about debt free money and debt free provinces, it might be a good time to put on record just where we stand as far as debt is concerned, in western Canada particularly.

I am reading from page 1050 of the Canada Year Book for 1962. The debt of Alberta—that is, the provincial debt—is given as $221,504,000; Saskatchewan is $449,811,000; British Columbia is $650,707,000; Manitoba is $488,118,000. When you analyse debt you must concider that there is the debt of the municipalities and the debt of the provinces, and it is rather interesting to note that some provincial governments have been able to shift the responsibility very carefully to the municipalities. Although the province of Alberta has the lowest provincial debt, it has the highest municipal debt. I heard a lot about this during the last election campaign and the election campaign before that. As far as helping the municipalities is concerned, it might be well to keep the record straight in this regard. On page 1056 of the Canada Year Book we find that the municipal debt of Alberta is $444,754,000; for Saskatchewan, which has one of the lowest municipal debts—and I am sure the leader of the New Democratic party will be happy to hear these figures—the figure is $143,734,000; for British Columbia it is $383,210,000; for Manitoba it is $148,113,000.

In order to size up the provincial situation—because the municipalities are really a creature, by statute, of the provincial governments, under our constitution—it might be well to total these debts to see where the prairie provinces stand in this regard. In Alberta the total debt, adding together the provincial and municipal debt, amounts to $666,258,000. I might say that these two figures when added together constitute the highest debt in the prairies. For Saskatchewan the figure is $593,545,000; for Manitoba, $636,231,000; for British Columbia $1,013,917,000. So of the three prairie provinces Alberta has the highest debt when the debt of the provinces and municipalities is added together. I think the first thing to consider is that the municipalities are the creatures of government, and to finance their hospitals they rely on other governments to provide contributions.

I want to draw an analogy in this connection. The city of Calgary is the centre of a farming area and many of the rural residents come into the city and use the hospitals. So there is, I think, an obligation not only on the provincial government but on the federal government to make substantial contributions to the hospitals in that city. That is why I have always supported the Conservative program as far as hospitals are concerned, because they contributed 65 per cent of the cost. One of these hospitals is built in the city of Drumheller, which is in the riding of Bow River. I feel it is one of those institutions that serves the community from this point of view.

I would also refer to the schools program. Education has become very expensive. It is true that under our constitution education is the responsibility of the provinces, but I think it is also a responsibility of all levels of government to see that Canadians receive adequate education so they can take their place in society and, particularly, be trained for jobs. I have always said that there are not so many unemployed as there are unemployables.

The vocational training program was another program, I would remind the new government, put into effect by the Conservative government. Again, schools have been built in Alberta under this plan, as they have been built in other provinces also. Seventy five per cent of the cost of these schools was paid by the federal government. Many of these schools bear the names of provincial premiers, and we have a new school that has just been opened in the city of Calgary, which is called the Ernest Manning school. Those programs did a lot to alleviate the unemployment that existed at that time.

I now come back to my original premise, Mr. Chairman, that in order to get full employment in this country we have to train our young people for these positions, but above all we have to have a level of productivity in the country that will enable them to find employment and further the development of industries and individual enterprises. When dealing with debt it is rather interesting to note that every time we go a dollar in debt we are curtailing our ability to produce. We hear a lot about the national debt, and I have taken the trouble to do some research on the subject. I went back to 1929, because under the Conservative government from 1957 to 1962—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if, without being offensive to the hon. gentleman, I might raise a point of order and draw Your Honour's attention to the resolution before us, which really does not appear to have much to do with the national debt or the provincial politics of Alberta. I suggest that the debate should be on the resolution before the committee.

Mr. Woolliams: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, the resolution calls for a sum of money to be put up by the federal government for the municipalities, which comes out of the consolidated revenue fund and is to be paid either by the taxpayers of the country or by being added to the next deficit brought down by the next government, whoever it will be. Surely I am in order and my remarks are relevant to the subject in question.

If I may continue, the further we get into debt the more difficult it will be to bring the productivity of this country up to a high level and obtain full employment. In 1929 our gross national product was at $6 billion; our national debt was at $2 billion. The debt as percentage of gross national product was 36 per cent. By 1934, in the middle of the war years, the debt had increased from $2 billion to $9 billion, and the gross national product only increased to $12 billion. The debt as percentage of gross national product rose to 74 per cent. In 1952 the gross national product was $23.9 billion and the national debt $11.2 billion. The debt as percentage of gross national product was 45 per cent. Now, in 1957 when the Conservative government took office the gross national product was $33.8 billion. The national debt was $11 billion, and the debt as percentage of the gross national product was 34 per cent, which is 2 per cent less than the comparison between the national debt and the gross national product in 1929. In 1959 there was almost an identical comparison. Last year the gross national product rose to $40 billion, and the national debt was $13.2 billion. The debt as percentage of gross national product was 33 per cent. In other words, the debt as percentage of gross national product was reduced during the term of office of the Conservative government.

With regard to productivity, I say that this will put another charge upon the municipalities. I think the whole problem is that the municipalities, the provinces and the federal government are all striving for new avenues for revenues to meet various governmental expenditures. The federal government spends more money, which in turn means an increase in taxes. If we get down to the local level, on a home comprising 900 square feet, situated in the city of Calgary in an average area, the land taxes in 1951 were $201. Today they are over $400. On a house with approximately 2,000 square feet taxes were about $490, but today in Calgary they are $890. If we add further charges on the municipalities, this will mean higher land taxes, and believe me property owners at all levels are paying far too many taxes at the municipal level. There is also high taxation at the provincial level, and high income tax at the federal level.

The other day I asked a question in the house of the new Minister of Agriculture. I asked him whether he was still mayor of Calgary, and I throw this matter out as a question of propriety with regard to the resolution itself; because if this measure becomes law deals will be made between municipalities and the federal government. Here is a man in the cabinet holding two positions, and as a matter of propriety is there not the possibility that there could be a conflict of interest as far as this particular minister is concerned as mayor of a city and a corporation, and a minister in this government?

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, it is with a great deal of pleasure that I rise to speak on this resolution. Its purpose is to set up a fund of $400 million to be lent to municipalities in order that they may undertake public works which may be started now or in the near future but which in reality were not planned to start until next year or the year after. As I understand the wording of the resolution, the purpose is to induce these municipalities to undertake work now so as to provide employment. Whether the municipality engages in capital works projects which it had planned to undertake two or three years ago, or whether they undertake to do them now on the strength of getting a loan from the federal government, will depend on the conditions surrounding that loan. There is insufficient detail in the resolution before us to inform us of what the salient factors are to induce a municipality to take the government up on the proposition they are offering. In other words, there is no repayment schedule. Is this money to be repaid within one year, five years, ten years or twenty years? Is the loan to be amortized? Second, what will be the rate of interest? Third, how much of the loan is to be forgiven? Is there to be a flat forgiveness which would apply to all types of projects, or only on a particular project or in a particular area? Is it to be applied uniformly from one end of the country to the other, or is it to be staggered to meet new and changing conditions which are to be found in different areas? None of these matters is revealed, so we are not in a position to judge the merits of this plan and whether this proposed municipal development and loan board will accomplish the objectives stated.

Another point I might raise concerns the basis for making the loans. Are they to be made according to location, or are they to be made on the basis of the degree of chronic unemployment in an area? Are they to be made on the basis of locating projects where natural resources are greatest, in order to give the project the greatest chance of success? We are not told in this resolution whether the loans are to be made on the basis I have indicated or whether they will be made on some other arbitrary basis. It may even be that they are to be made on a political basis. Who is to get these loans? What criteria will be used by the government to determine their distribution? These are matters on which we have not been informed.

On the other hand, if such a board as this is to be created and if loans are to be made to get public works started, I think this proposition is a good one, to the degree that it will provide employment. As I see it, however, there is very little prospect of accomplishing the purpose set out in the resolution, and for this reason I prefer to withhold judgment until I have before me information on the matters to which I have previously referred, namely, the repayment schedule, the amount of forgiveness, the interest rates, the basis on which the loans are to be made and the working relations with the provinces.

With these few remarks I draw my statements with regard to the resolution at this time to a close.

Mr. Thompson: Speaking to this resolution which is to lead to legislation establishing a municipal development and loan board, I must say I am very disappointed with the resolution and with the legislation it will bring into being.

The stated purpose of this legislation is, in my opinion, wrong. One of the most severe problems in govermental financing in this country is the problem which the municipalities are facing. What we should be doing at this time is providing them with a source of capital for their capital development projects at low interest rates on a much more permanent basis than this resolution provides. With all its restrictions, this scheme will not begin to meet the needs of the municipalities as they have been expressed, now, for a number of years.

A few days before this resolution was introduced, the Prime Minister spoke about it to the convention of mayors and reeves in Toronto and it was with a good deal of fanfare as indicated in the press that he made his announcement and more or less invited the municipalities to come and get it. It was with great disappointment that some of these same men to whom the right hon. gentleman was speaking found that this fund had serious limitations and was not, in any case, intended primarily to help them in their over-all financial problems but was, rather, intended instead to bring temporary relief to the unemployment situation. Certainly, unemployment is a serious problem but the real responsibility of government is not to make jobs; rather it is to make sure that our economy is moving in such a way that there will be jobs for all our people who want to work. Therefore, the approach is backwards.

As I have just indicated, the most difficult financing problem in our country on governmental level is that which faces the municipalities. The Ottawa Journal of Thursday, May 30, reporting the speech of the Prime Minister to the confederation of mayors and municipalities used these words:

> The convention noted that municipal government today has 16.4 per cent of national tax revenue compared to 41.7 per cent in 1933.

The basic reason for this is that the tax fields which previously belonged to local and provincial governments have been so invaded by the federal government that there is not enough money left for local governments and their projects. Second, the cost of capital has repeatedly and continuously cost more to taxpayers at municipal level, adding to the expense of the projects they are concerned with.

Here, example after example occurs to me. One which came to my attention arose in Vancouver. On March 30, 1962, the city of Vancouver paid the last instalment on a $100,000 loan which had been made 50 years before in 1912. It was discovered, while checking the amount of money which had been paid in return for this loan, that the taxpayers of Vancouver had paid $345,000 in this interval of 50 years—$245,000 for interest and $100,000 for the project. What was the project? It was for the installation of board sidewalks which had rotted away 30 years before, to be replaced by stone or concrete sidewalks at a still greater cost.

In Saskatchewan the other day I was attracted by a picture in the press of the beautiful legislative building in the queen city of Regina. My eyes were drawn to a headline just below the picture which said the last instalment on the loan to defray the cost of the legislative building had been paid after 51 years. Reading more closely, I found the taxpayers of Saskatchewan had paid $9,700,000 for this building. In making up that sum, $2 had been paid in interest for every $1 put into the construction cost of the building.

We can go right across Canada and find that most of our municipal projects are in a similar position in this respect. Unless the federal government meets this problem of municipal finances our municipalities will not be able to provide the capital services for which construction they are responsible.

The hon. member for Bow River has been talking about aid to municipalities in Alberta. As an Albertan, and a responsible one, he should be ashamed of some of the things he said in this connection, because he was distorting the facts in such a way as to give another impression altogether from the true one. The government of Alberta, believing that social capital is in an entirely different category from commercial capital, has set aside a large capital sum in a revolving fund for the use of the municipalities. They thus can come to the province and borrow the money they need for their projects, repaying the sum borrowed over a period of time. The money repaid goes back into the fund and is available to be used again. The hon. member talked about the high level of municipal debt in Alberta. It is simply money owing to the province which the province could cancel at any time, and no one would be the worse for it. Furthermore, interest charges on these loans, which are far lower than commercial interest rates also go back into this revolving fund. What is the result? Every one of the towns in Alberta has sewage and water services and the vast majority of the villages have, too. This is something which is not equalled by any other province in this fair Canada of ours.

But even this is not sufficient because no province has sufficient income to provide the capital necessary for the capital development of its municipalities. Therefore a few years ago the province of Alberta set up a municipal finance corporation using the credit of the province to borrow money at a lower rate than the municipalities could in order to enable the municipalities to go ahead with other aspects of their capital development which were necessary.

This all leads us back to this very point, that unless we have a proper source of social capital the public works development of our country cannot go ahead as it should. It has been estimated that within the next 10 years we will need at least $10 billion for the public works development of this country, and if we are going to depend upon commercial capital with its tremendously high rate of interest, as we are now doing, then either we are going to go bankrupt as far as our municipal governments are concerned or we are not going to fulfil our own responsibilities in developing the country as it should be developed.

This is why the piece of legislation we have before us is so vitally important at this time although in its present scope it is entirely inadequate. Referring to the report of the Prime Minister's speech to the conference of mayors and reeves, as found in the Globe and Mail of May 30, I find that he said that the federal government—> —has no intention of competing with or replacing existing sources of finance. "Our purpose is to provide an additional source so that municipalities can undertake more capital works on terms they can afford," he said. "That will be the purpose, the extent and the limit of our involvement."

Therein is a frank admission that this legislation does not in any way meet the needs we now have in the country. Not only is this indicative of the shortcomings of the legislation but it is also wrong in that it confuses our capital needs by implying that they can be met from commercial sources as far as social or public development is concerned.

We in Social Credit have maintained for a long time that there are three different types of capital in our economy, and unless we recognize these types of capital we are never going to solve our economic problems. First of all, there is tax capital. Tax capital is money that governments legitimately take from the taxpayers in order to pay for the services which the taxpayers of the nation expect governments to supply to them. The only source of tax capital is out of the pockets of our citizens. It does not come from any other place. It cannot come from any other place, and in so far as it goes to pay for the services which the government supplies it is proper. There is nothing wrong about it.

The second type of capital is commercial capital. It can be called industrial capital or subdivided into different categories but basically it is the type of capital that goes into our economy to develop our resources and to carry on our commerce on a private enterprise basis. This should come from our savings, from our credit, and from our own investment as free citizens in a free nation living under a private enterprise system. This kind of capital goes to work and produces a profit. In the spring the farmer prepares his seedbed, sows the seed and ultimately reaps his harvest. In order to do this he goes to the bank in the spring to borrow the money necessary to pay for his fuel and seed, for the help he needs and possibly for equipment and in the fall he pays back the money out of what he has earned from that which he has produced. This is legitimate. If the private enterprise economy is going to survive in this country I maintain that commercial capital must be free to serve its intended purpose instead of being largely directed into government guaranteed bonds to carry the cost of capital development which belongs to the third category of capital.

The third category of capital is social capital. This is the meaning of Social Credit. A lot of people say to me that they do not understand what Social Credit is. Social Credit actually means social capital. Social capital is that capital which supplies our social and public needs as far as the development of the country is concerned. I was pleased to see that in the budget last night the Minister of Finance actually used the term "social capital", because this is what the capital is that we use for our public works. It builds our bridges, it builds our hospitals, it builds our schools, it builds all of those things which do not make a profit and which we will one day pay for out of our tax capital, but which we do not have the reserves for at the present time and therefore must go out and borrow the money.

To borrow this money in the commercial market with a government guarantee behind it robs the commercial market of the vital capital we need for carrying on private enterprise within our economy. We in Social Credit maintain that this social capital should be available from the national bank, the central bank, the Bank of Canada, without the high cost of interest that makes the cost of money for our capital works projects at the present time more expensive than the projects themselves. If we did provide the capital for our public needs through the Bank of Canada without the high cost of interest, but merely a service charge to pay for the administration of the funds, we would be doing more than anything that has yet been proposed and at the same time would be giving the assistance that is so desperately needed with respect to the problem of municipal finance.

Education is one of the major costs of local government and repeatedly local governments say that they cannot continue to supply the educational services and facilities that our country needs under their present set-up simply because they do not have the money. Therefore they say that the senior government must help them in this need. They forget, when they ask the senior government to supply them with money to aid in the cost of education, that the senior government has no money except that which it takes from the taxpayers' pockets. It is the same source from which local governments obtain their tax capital. Pushing the problem farther away is certainly not helping to solve it.

Therefore unless we recognize the fact that there is a need for social capital through the Bank of Canada, which is our bank—it belongs to the people of Canada—on a basis, yes, of debt free money, we will never be able to solve the basic economic problems that we face now. All we are doing is rubbing liniment on an ache or pain that has a cause which goes much deeper. Until our Minister of Finance recognizes that very point the only kind of budgets he is going to be able to bring down are Conservative budgets, as was the budget he brought down last night. Actually there was not basically very much difference between the budget we had last night, even though it was called a face the facts budget, and the budgets we have had in the last number of years which have all resulted in large deficits.

So much have these deficits accumulated today that the gross debt of our nation is practically $25 billion, and the more than $900 million that we will be spending to pay the interest on this debt is the second biggest single expenditure of the government, second only to that for defence. Therefore we in Social Credit maintain that social capital must be recognized as a separate category of capital and that it must be supplied through the national bank, the Bank of Canada, without the exorbitant cost of interest. We say that this would lower the cost of all of our public projects from at least one third to 40 per cent. Any of you who are mayors or councillors, yes, even commissioners, and who are intimate with the problems of municipal finance know that the basic reason we cannot go forward with the expansion and development of our cities, towns and municipalities is the debt load that bears upon local governments through interest charges on debt. This is because this social capital has been taken from the commercial market.

This legislation simply does not reach down to this problem. All that it does is to offer some palliatives which will be helpful for the time being. It fails to get down to the basic problems of municipal financing. Thus, Mr. Chairman, while we are willing to give our support to this resolution, we do so with very strong reservations because we realize that somewhere down the road, and not very far down the road either, there must be a different approach.

The alternative, in my opinion, would be to set up a municipal development bank as part of the Bank of Canada. This bank could be given the necessary reserves from the government with authority to expand those reserves according to what are common fiscal policies today. This capital could be used by the municipal governments, as they meet the requirements of their provincial governments, and by the provincial governments themselves. Yes, it could even be used by the federal government for its public works expansion. There would be no infringement upon provincial economy because this bank would operate in very much the same way as the industrial development bank operates today. Provided the credit record of the municipalities meets the standard requirements, and provided the provincial requirements were met as well, the municipalities could present their debentures to this bank and get the credit they need.

As this money comes back, it enters into a revolving fund. The revolving fund then puts this money out to use over again. Our capital needs will be much greater today than they would be a little later because, as this money came back, it would be there to be used over and over again. It is interesting to note what the industrial development bank has developed into. It was intended originally to provide commercial capital from public sources for hard to finance risk projects. Within the concept of that brief definition, this bank has served a very useful purpose.

However, let us look at just what is happening today. Commercial capital is difficult to obtain for practically all types of long range development. Since this is the case, we find commercial enterprises turning more and more to the industrial development bank to obtain the capital that normally they should be able to obtain in the private market which represents the private savings and investments of our citizens. The industrial development bank has actually become a bank in that it, itself, is expanding its reserves. But today it is defeating the very purpose of our private enterprise economy because it is unfairly competing with our own private savings, our own private investments. Private enterprise is compelled to follow this course because there is not an adequate source of commercial capital to meet both commercial and public needs. Therefore, the industrial development bank is used.

I noted with interest that the speech from the throne made the point that the government expects or intends to set up a corporation through which there can be investments made by our own citizens in a special fund to provide special risk capital. This fund would provide capital in a similar way to that in which the industrial development bank does now. This is a lead that was taken last year by the government of the province of Alberta and, within the scope of the definition of the three types of capital which I have just mentioned, it is a legitimate source of capital, with the necessary guarantee of the government, which many of our hard to finance projects require. If this idea were developed along the lines upon which it could be projected, then the industrial development bank would not be nearly as necessary as it is today.

What could be done, and I make this suggestion to the minister as a very practical suggestion, is that the industrial development bank could then become the municipal development bank. It could supply our municipalities with the social capital that we need. There is no doubt about it, Canada is overburdened with a heavy load of debt. This load of debt will cost us more than $900 million in interest charges this year. Consequently our country is not expanding as it should in so far as public works are concerned. We have not yet completed the first trans-Canada highway. A large portion of it remains to be initiated, let alone completed. Although it has not been completed, we already have need for a second trans-Canada highway. There are the ever increasing needs of universities and schools. So far as university education is concerned, we have not yet felt the impact of the population increase which followed world war II. We must provide in Canada the housing facilities for twice as many school children as we have at the present time.

Let us look at the hospital situation. It is a shame that in Canada, where we have people sitting around waiting for work, where we have the materials necessary, the initiative and enterprise to put these two elements together, that we cannot build enough hospitals and equip them to take care of our sick people. This is a situation that is prevalent right across the country. There are bridges, highways, schools and hospitals to be built. One could prepare a very large list of public works that should be completed before our centennial in 1967. The cost of such a project would be in the neighbourhood of $2 billion or $3 billion.

Where are we going to get the money? This is the question that faces us. If we did have the capital for these projects we would not be worried about unemployment. There would be a sufficient number of jobs for all unemployed people. The purpose behind a municipal development bank would be to supply this capital and would not be, basically, to provide jobs. If the capital were supplied, then the expansion would go forward and, as a result of that there would be jobs because the economy would be expanding.

So, Mr. Chairman, I cannot emphasize too greatly the need for the establishment of a municipal development bank which would be an integral part of the Bank of Canada and which would supply the social capital the country needs to develop the public works projects. In the meantime, since we do not have such a bank, we will have to say that this municipal development loan fund is a temporary measure which will only partially solve these pressing problems. We give it our support, although we regret that the minister has seen fit to attach so many limitations to the use of this money. Obviously, in the few days that have passed since the election, there has not been time for the minister to lay out all the facts necessary for the development of a complete program. We urge that when he has time to consider a complete program he seriously consider the urgent need for the establishment of a municipal development bank, as part of the Bank of Canada, to supply those tremendous amounts of social capital that our country requires. The adoption of this course would avoid the necessity for our citizens paying for these projects two or three times over simply because the interest cost is more than the capital costs of these projects.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, hon. members have been waiting to hear from the Minister of Finance and a great many questions have been asked. I have further questions that I wish to ask after he does the committee the honour of telling us what the situation is in answer to the various questions that have been raised. I particularly want to know what his answer is regarding consultations with the provinces, and in this connection I look back to 1958 when the municipal loan fund was referred to in a Liberal program.

In that historic document entitled "The Pearson Plan" it stated this:

> A Liberal government would establish a municipal loan fund in order to make available additional finance on a long term basis for major municipal improvements.
> Readier availability of funds would make possible an immediate start on municipal works now awaiting financing and thus quickly provide jobs throughout Canada.

But the second part is this, to which no reference has been made yet, and about which I made inquiry when I spoke on June 11:

> The exact scope and administrative set-up of this fund would be settled in consultation with representatives of the provinces and municipalities.

I would impress upon the minister that those words in the 1958 declaration were very significant. Those words represented the Prime Minister's view at that time. He made it very clear at that time that this was his particular baby, and I am now asking once more that the minister let the house know exactly what is taking place with regard to settling this matter in consultation with representatives of the provinces and municipalities.

I would also like to know the basis upon which the estimate has been made as to the number of jobs that would be available, and also the nature of the board and the powers it would exert.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. member for Red Deer as he revealed this great plan, and I would like to hear the minister's view today as to whether he still agrees with the vote he gave on November 6 last in support of the Social Credit amendment at that time in favour of debt free money.

As I listened to the hon. member for Red Deer today I would have been very interested to know the degree to which these nebulous things have been carried into effect in the province of Alberta. Certainly I could say, after listening to him, that if his plan does work nobody would, but I have never heard it explained. We have heard the same old story over and over again, but he never tells us where the money is to come from.

Mr. Thompson: Where does it come from today?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would like very much to hear where it comes from in the estimate of the hon. member.

Mr. Thompson: You tell us.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We have heard his policy enunciated over and over again. It is just a series of words without any factual background, and he does not tell us anywhere in the world where it is working. That is the interesting thing. What have they done in Alberta and British Columbia to carry out this nebulous policy?

Mr. Thompson: Where have you been all these years?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Look at the records today of the debt on those two provinces. Apparently they carry out orthodox financing, but the hon. member enunciates generalities and then comes before the house and the country and says, "I have got the solution to all these problems," and then goes on to say the same thing over and over again.

I would ask the minister to place before the committee not only the answers to the two matters I brought to his attention but also the answers to the many other questions that have been asked. I know there is a desire at this time to give the minister an opportunity to make a statement, and I do not want to say anything that will hold him up, but I do feel the committee has the right to know what consultations have taken place and whether the governments of any of the provinces have accepted this plan. I would also like to know to what degree did the ultimatum on the part of Mr. Lesage, reinforced by one of his ministers, affect this plan.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, as the Leader of the Opposition has indicated, it is the desire of the Minister of Finance, if he could have leave when the Speaker is in the chair, to make a brief statement after asking for leave to revert to motions. For that purpose I intend in a second or two to ask that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again, but before doing so, in view of the interesting queries by the Leader of the Opposition and the obvious interest there would be in having a reply from my hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, I just wonder if it might possibly be the sense of the committee, and if I might ask at five o'clock whether the house would be prepared to go back into committee so that we could continue this debate, on the understanding that the private members' hour would not of course be sacrificed, and that it could be held later on. In that way we can get the minister's statement right away, if that would meet with the general wishes of the committee. I am just indicating that now, and I will make the formal request at five o'clock.

I wonder if I might move now that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again later this day or the next sitting of the house, as the case might be.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Knowles: Does agreeing to this motion involve concurrence in the two other suggestions the Secretary of State has made? I understand there is a suggestion that the Minister of Finance be allowed to make a statement, provided opportunities are availstatement when Mr. Speaker is in the chair, and then a further suggestion that the five o'clock hour be given up. I think the committee should know what some of us think about these two suggestions.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I was wrong in assuming there would be general agreement to let my hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, make a statement which would be in government time, not private members' time. There would be an opportunity for hon. members in opposition to make comments on that statement, and that is why I am doing this at ten to five instead of five o'clock.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, we would not object to the Minister of Finance making a able for other hon. members to comment and ask questions, because I understand the minister wishes to speak about something questioned on orders of the day and we would not want to be restricted to one statement by each of the parties.

With regard to the other question of giving up private members' hour, I think it is unfair day after day to ask that private members' hour be given up.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that the committee rise, report progress and ask permission to sit later this day or the next sitting of the house, as the case may be?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

THE BUDGET

STATEMENT AS TO OUTSIDE ASSISTANCE IN PREPARATION

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, may I ask leave of the house to revert to motions in order to make a brief statement?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Does the Minister of Finance have leave to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles: Yes, Mr. Speaker, on the condition indicated a moment ago when we were in committee of the whole.

Mr. Gordon: With the approval of the house I should like to make a brief statement regarding assistance in preparing the budget. This morning some hon. members raised questions in the house concerning personnel participating in the preparation of the budget. Officials of the Department of Finance and several other departments, including justice, national revenue, labour and the Bank of Canada have participated actively both in the discussion of proposals and in the drafting. In addition I had the assistance of three special consultants who joined the Department of Finance on a temporary basis shortly after the government took office, because of the very heavy volume of work involved in preparing legislation and in minimizing delay in presenting the budget. Work on the budget was, of course, late in starting because of the general election. The objective was to furnish a national accounting at an early date.

Approval for these appointments was authorized by treasury board minute No. 610618 dated May 2, 1963. All of these special consultants took the oath of allegiance and the oath of office and secrecy. All have been working full time since they joined the department on April 22. The individuals mentioned are Dr. M. P. O'Connell, of Harris & Partners in Toronto and a former professor of the University of Toronto, who is a specialist in the field of municipal finance. Mr. G. R. Conway, C.A., who has a special knowledge of the tax system and is a doctoral student at Harvard, was asked to join the staff of the royal commission on taxation early this year. I was able to arrange for him to join the Department of Finance for a short period before he goes to the commission. Then there was Mr. D. C. H. Stanley of Wood, Gundy & Company, who has many years of experience in the investment field. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Stanley is no stranger to the public service, having been granted leave last year to serve the royal commission on banking and finance.

I regret my hesitancy this morning to reveal the names of the three individuals I have mentioned. This hesitation stemmed from my feeling that the budget is the product of the work of a great number of departmental officials and I did not think it fair to single out individuals for certain attention.

Mr. Churchill: That was not the reason.

Mr. Gordon: Since these three gentlemen had all taken the necessary oaths, it did not seem to me that there could be any special question about their status. However, it now seems desirable that their names should be made public and certainly I have no reason to make any mystery of them. In doing this I wish to express my personal thanks to these gentlemen, along with all the other people who have assisted me so greatly since I became Minister of Finance. I hope they will be able to continue to help me in the future. I should like to reiterate that I accept full responsibility for the budget and for the secrecy maintained in the course of its preparation. Subject to this principle of ministerial responsibility, it will be the policy of this government to continue to seek specialized advice and assistance from experienced people in all walks of life and all occupations whenever this may be in the public interest.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is a strange thing that the minister should have adopted so surreptitious a manner of answering questions today in the face of the simplicity of the answer which he now gives, because he certainly was a sorry figure in the manner in which he acted this morning. Parliament is entitled to information.

An hon. Member: You have got it now.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The fact that he assumes responsibility for the secrecy of the budget is no answer to the request for information that was made. However, I can only say that I hope his experience today will be a salutary lesson to him and to other ministers like-minded, that when parliament asks for information, the information should be provided, rather than a series of evasive statements which result in an accumulation of suspicion which had to be answered frankly this afternoon by the minister. It should be a good lesson to the minister and others associated with him.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I do not think this is a very satisfactory way of dealing with the question that was asked this morning by my colleague the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher). We are now simply being given a statement with very little information and I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the house leader for the government ought to provide an early opportunity for a much fuller discussion of this very serious question.

An hon. Member: Oh, no.

Mr. Douglas: Someone says "Oh, no". I would point out that it is a standard procedure in Canadian and British parliamentary life that no persons other than members of the government and officials of the government shall have any knowledge of what is in the budget. It is not many years ago that a chancellor of the exchequer in Great Britain, the Right Hon. Hugh Dalton, resigned because of the very minor indiscretion of telling a newspaperman, on his way into the house to make his budget speech, in a general way some of the contents. This is a much more serious thing. This is not someone being told in a casual conversation five minutes before the budget is delivered, but persons outside of the government who worked with the minister in the preparation of the budget.

There are some questions on which we would certainly like to have further information. Did these men continue their association with the investment companies with which they were connected? Have their services with the government now terminated? Have they gone back to work for these companies? Was there any way in which these persons could personally gain as a result of the knowledge which they secured during the preparation of this budget? The minister has either said too little or too much, and I think the house should seek an early opportunity to get a great deal more information on this question than we have secured up to the present time.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) would not wish to cast any doubts or aspersions on the character and honesty of the three gentlemen who have been helping me. As I said in my statement, they were officials of the department; they were appointed by order in council and they took the oath of secrecy. In those circumstances I think that any suggestion that they would do anything improper is something that is hardly fair to the three people in question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister if he would—

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Fisher: —give us more detail about the relationship—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the indulgence of the house generally to permit any reasonable additional questions being asked about this matter, because I feel sure the whole house wants to have full information.

Mr. Kindt: Why do you butt in all the time?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fisher: Would the minister tell us what has been the relationship between these gentlemen, particularly the two who had an active business connection with their firms during this period? Are they still on salary, for example, with their firms? Have they still been carrying out duties on behalf of their firms? It is all very easy for the minister to bifurcate their role in time, but it may be more difficult for the individual himself to do that. I should also like to know what precedents he has found within his department for this kind of action, whether it has taken place before and whether he can show us that this is an old tradition. I should also very much like an answer to the question which was asked by my leader relating to the role these men are in today.

Mr. Gordon: I will be glad to answer those questions, Mr. Speaker. The two gentlemen referred to were given leave of absence by their firms. They were paid by their firms. They have not been back to their firms but have been working full time for the Department of Finance. As to precedents, I cannot give many because I have not looked the matter up, but I can cite one precedent which occurred in connection with the 1941 budget, I think it was, when I served the then minister of finance in exactly the same way and on exactly the same terms that these three gentlemen have just been serving me. With regard to the question as to what is their status now, they are in the same position as they were on May 1; they are still serving the Department of Finance and I hope they will continue to do so for at least some weeks to come, perhaps longer than that.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, did I hear the minister correctly to say that these people were picked to work for the government while still being paid by their firms? If he did say that, I would suggest that, in my opinion at least, that is completely wrong. If the department is short of competent people to do a job and needs to bring in people from outside, even if this has been past practice and there may be a case for it, to expect people to work for any department of the government and to give their all while they are in fact being paid by outside companies to which they are going to return I suggest is completely and morally wrong.

Mr. Gordon: All I can say to that is that I did exactly the same thing myself on more than one occasion, and as far as I can remember the department and the government of the day were quite satisfied with the help I was able to give them. I think this has been true on other occasions with many other people.

I should like to say one word about this. If governments in this country particularly are to get things done and get the best advice possible, which is sometimes needed for short periods only, they must as a matter of policy feel free to call in people who are experienced in the fields in which the government seeks advice. I hope we will see a great deal more of this in Canada. It seems to me that this is what we need. For example, if the government decided to bring in legislation in the field of labour, I cannot see any harm in their consulting people in the labour movement or, if the labour movement were willing, in asking for one or two people to be seconded to them for a short period of time.

Mr. Churchill: But this is the budget.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would suggest this to the minister, that the analogy does not apply. Is it not quite different to deal with a financial matter than to deal with labour relations? When the minister has gone beyond what ordinarily takes place—I know I am speaking again and I should not, and neither should he, but we are being very free at this time in view of the peculiar circumstances. Is it not a fact that the essence of budgetary secrecy under the British system is that in the United Kingdom no one knows of the particular contents of a budget excepting the chancellor of the exchequer and those within the civil service who operate with him and the prime minister? No one else has that information; so far as the cabinet is concerned it just receives a general outline. In the particular circumstances relating to the preparation of budget matters of financial importance in respect of which illicit profits could be made, is it not necessary that under no circumstances should individuals be called in from outside, who, no matter how honest and whatever their integrity may be, are placed in an impossible position? I must say, after listening to the minister that I am more convinced than ever that it will be necessary for the house to look more fully into this matter.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister a question based on his statement that he thinks that more of this should be done. I should like to ask him what he thinks the further pursuit of this policy will do to the status of deputy ministers and other full time civil servants. I got the impression from what the minister said that these three gentlemen, whose names he has now given, took precedence over the deputy minister of finance and other top civil servants in the preparation of the budget. We have the right to assume that the work done for us by the civil service is done by people who parliament knows are employed on a permanent basis. I should like to ask whether these people were given a position of precedence over those in the department who would normally do this work, and is there any relationship between this and the request of the deputy minister of finance to be moved to another position?

Mr. Gordon: I should like to answer that question, Mr. Speaker. These three gentlemen did not have precedence over the officials in the department. Each one of them has specialized and useful knowledge in a particular field which was made available to the officials, and most certainly this has nothing to do with the change in position of Dr. Kenneth Taylor, for whom I have the very greatest regard, respect and admiration.

Mr. Martineau: Might I ask the minister whether these three special assistants had access to the final draft of the budget before delivery to the house?

Mr. Gordon: As members of the staff of the Department of Finance they and other senior officials did have such access.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I just want to say a final word at this time, although I think more should be said about it later. The minister said that he was sure I would not want to cast any reflection on the honesty and integrity of the three gentlemen in question, and that is perfectly true; I have no desire to question their motives in any shape or form. I am taking strenuous objection, however, to a departure from an established principle, namely that persons outside the government service should be privy to information to which no person outside the government service is entitled. It is not a question of whether we trust this or that individual. It is whether or not we place any individual in a position where he can have information which can be personally gainful to him. In order to remove such temptation this has been a standing rule.

I am, frankly, appalled that the minister should say we should have more of these people in, using them as advisors and leaving them on the payrolls of the companies from which they come. If the government needs to bring in advisors from time to time, surely they ought to be hired by the government, paid by the government, and wholly under the control of the government during the time they are employed. To ask any man to serve two masters, to be working for the government but receiving pay from his own company, is putting a strain on that individual to which no person ought to be subjected. When the minister tried to draw the analogy of bringing in someone to advise on legislation, surely that was drawing a red herring across the trail. Obviously, from time to time people will be brought in to advise on legislation, but that is a totally different thing from helping to prepare the budget. While we may take strenuous objection to the budget being inclined toward Bay street, we take even stronger exception to Bay street itself drafting the budget.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I might again raise a point of order in the most non-controversial way possible.

Some hon. Members: Again?

Mr. Douglas: Is the hon. gentleman rising on a point of order?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, I am. I asked the house to give consideration to extending the time for the purpose of having additional questions asked of the minister, questions to which he made an endeavour to reply. I think that was reasonable. I took no exception when the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam replied to a point made by the minister. But it does seem to me that perhaps the hon. member for Burnably-Coquitlam was right in saying there might be an occasion set aside for debating this question, though the occasion is not now.

Some hon. Members: Why?

Mr. Pickersgill: It seems to me the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam is now going beyond the purpose for which the house gave unanimous consent.

Mr. Douglas: On the point of order, the leader of the house certainly has a most elastic notion of the rules. He was prepared to give the widest possible latitude as long as the minister was making an explanation or providing an alibi for his action, but the moment someone seeks to comment on the situation he wants the rules enforced.

I do not intend to pursue the matter at this particular time, but I would say that if the minister has the right to make a statement trying to cover up what I think is an unfortunate situation, any member of this house has an equal right to reply and to comment on that statement.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): I am inclined to agree with the leader of the house. I understand that this started out as an informal statement on motions. We have a definite rule that a matter which has been debated cannot be raised again in debate. It should be made very clear by you, sir, that this is not a debate and it therefore does not preclude the matter being raised at whatever suitable opportunity may arise—and I hope a suitable opportunity does arise by arrangement, because this is one of the most important subjects which could be brought before the house. In fairness to the house, to the budget which was brought forward last night and to the people concerned, I believe it should be dealt with in the immediate future.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am in complete agreement with what the hon. member has just said. I hope no hon. member would regard what has happened up to now as constituting a debate or as being anything other than comment on a statement made on motions. There will certainly be no effort on the part of the government to prevent the fullest possible debate of this matter at an appropriate time.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps I may say a word on a technical point. I am sure the leader of the house would agree with me. I think the importance of this incident is such that the record of what has happened should appear in Hansard at this point in the day's proceedings. As the Secretary of State knows, sometimes when a subject is brought up again later in the day, Hansard uses the word "later" and places the report earlier in the proceedings. I think it should be clear in Hansard that what is happening now happened shortly after five o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: I trust the editor of Hansard will take note of what the hon. gentleman has said.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I might now make a request which I indicated earlier I intended to make. If hon. members do not wish to accede to it, that is perfectly all right. My suggestion is that we should go back into committee again to continue the debate which was interrupted at five o'clock. The government would give an undertaking that the hour, part of which is gone anyway, would not be taken away from private members during the session.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Douglas: On the question which was raised by the Secretary of State, I think it is unfair to ask hon. members from time to time to give up the private members' hour. There are a number of private members' bills, and if this hour is taken up with government business it means that all of them are put back another day. It seems to me unfair that each time private members' hour come along pressure should be put on one hon. member or another, and I think it would be better to allow whoever is concerned to go ahead with his bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: I had thought there was unanimous consent but, if not, we shall proceed with whatever is left of the time of the hon. member who, in any event, is done out of 20 minutes of his hour.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): It was my understanding there was agreement that I should now leave the chair.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): I shall be guided by the wishes of the house.

An hon. Member: Private members' hour.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills.

SMALL LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT REQUIRING STATEMENTS OF TRUE INTEREST RATE CHARGE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-9, to amend the Small Loans Act (advertising).

He said: Proposals such as I am making today have been made on many occasions to this house and by members of the other house. They have been made by members of all parties in Canada, by President Kennedy and by various governors of states in the United States.

The question has arisen continually because of the tremendous increase in credit which we are witnessing. One has only to look at statements which are issued from time to time by the dominion bureau of statistics to see what is happening in this country. A bulletin issued by the d.b.s. in June, 1962, shows that consumer credit increased from $492 million in 1954 to $772 million at the end of June, 1962. Cash loans increased from $209 million at the end of 1954 to $579 million at the end of June, 1962. Department store credit increased from $186 million at the end of 1954 to $364 million at the end of June, 1962.

The Bank of Canada in its statistical survey for September, 1960, indicated that total loans to consumers by finance companies and retailers had gone up steadily. In 1957 the total for such loans was $1,968 million; in 1958 it was $2,030 million; in 1959, $2,205 million and in 1960 it was $2,253 million.

I am not suggesting that consumer credit ought to be cut out completely, but when we realize the tremendous and fantastic rates paid by people, when we realize that they are paying anywhere from 30 to 50 per cent annually because the terms of credit they are getting have been hidden through relating them to monthly payments and by adding fees, charges and discounts of various types, then we realize that the consumer in fact finds it completely impossible to know how much he is paying.

The proposal in this bill is that the Small Loans Act be amended, therefore, to require any moneylender or small loan company, in any advertising in which the amount required by way of monthly or periodic payments in order to repay a loan is indicated, to state what the cost of such loan amounts to in terms of per centum per annum. I have in front of me, Mr. Speaker, an advertisement which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press on June 11, 1963. It is a fairly large advertisement by World Financial Systems Company Limited. The advertisement is headed up in this way: "How You Can Get A Loan Of $1,525 to $5,000 If You Can Pay Back $33.70 A Month". I should like to quote part of the advertisement.

> Here's your chance to get the money you need to consolidate all your bills, pay off a mortgage or for any other worth-while purpose. We specialize in lending money to employed men and women. We cut out all the red tape. Because we want to lend you money—
> All we ask of you is this: The ability to pay back the small monthly payments without hardship. In other words, if you can pay back $33.70 a month we'll give you $1,525 in cash. If you can pay back $44.20 a month we'll give you $2,000 in cash. And if you can pay back $66.30 a month we'll give you $3,000 in cash.
> It's as simple as that. No endorsers or bankable security required. Your friends, relatives or employers won't be asked questions.

Then they go on to give examples of loans. If you receive $1,525 you pay $33.70 a month. If you get $2,000 you pay $44.20 a month. If you receive $2,500 you pay $55.25 a month. If you receive $5,000 you pay $110.50 a month. Nowhere in this advertisement is there any indication of how many months you have to pay the small monthly payment. Nowhere in this advertisement is it indicated what the rate of interest is. I am sure that if you follow their advice and call on them they will tell you, of course, before making you a loan how many monthly payments you will have to make; but they will certainly be very careful if they can, not to tell you what the annual rate in simple interest is, because if they do many people will think twice or three times about whether they ought to take such a loan.

I am sure most members of the house will have had examples in their own constituencies of the kind of practices that are being carried on. In a very interesting memorandum presented to the government recently by the Confederation of National Trade Unions they give some examples and I want to take the liberty to quote several of the cases they use to indicate the emphasis they put on getting legislation to control the borrowing of money. Here is one case they mention. A man borrowed $1,000. In the course of two years he paid $340 on his loan. The interest for 24 months was $298 and of the $340 the actual amount paid on the original loan was only $42, so that at the end of two years, having paid $340, he still owed $958. The organization analysed the loan and pointed out that during the course of seven months less four days the man had paid an amount of $120, only $10 of which had been applied against the capital. They compare this with what would have happened if the same man had borrowed from a credit union. They point out that in the two years the man would have paid interest of $110 and $230 on the original loan and that at that time the debt would have amounted to only $770.

This is the kind of thing which is going on continuously and members who want to check loans made from the large finance companies like Household Finance, Beneficial Finance and so on will find out that this is the practice followed by all these companies. Not only those companies which lend money directly follow this practice. Companies that sell furniture and companies that sell cars follow the same practice. With the exception of a few large retailers, companies dealing with merchandise do not in fact carry the loans themselves. They sell the paper, as it is called in the trade, to finance companies, and there have been some very interesting studies made of this kind of practice.

In an article which appeared in the Toronto Star on April 12, 1951, Pierre Berton had this to say:

> In the new car field interest rates seem to run between 13 and 23 per cent. On used cars interest rates vary more widely. In a recent case a Toronto man paid upwards of 32 per cent in interest charges on a five year old Mercury sedan financed through Danforth Discount.
> A customer who had bought a new car at a true interest rate of 16.8 per cent through General Motors Acceptance Corporation decided to pay it all in the fifth month. The extra finance charges brought the cost of his loan to 25.3 per cent per annum. That's because there are certain fixed charges on these loans that can't be returned.

He went on to point out that on a loan of $1,500 six automobile firms offered the following real interest rates: Ensign Motors quoted a rate of 6 per cent if there was a 25 per cent down payment and 9 per cent otherwise, but the actual cost of the loan was 13.4 per cent for 24 months and 12.3 per cent for 12 months on the 6 per cent loan, and 18.7 per cent for the 9 per cent loan. Plaza Chev, Eglinton quoted 8 to 9 per cent but the actual loan rate came to 17.7 per cent for 30 months. Volkswagen Canada Limited, Golden Mile, claimed their rate was 6 per cent but actually it was 13.3 per cent for two years, 14.1 per cent for 30 months and 14.5 per cent for 36 months. York Mills Pontiac, Yonge street, claimed that their interest rate would be 11.4 per cent when actually the real interest rate was 22 per cent for 24 months. At Grant Brown Motors the salesman said that the interest rate would be 6.8 per cent whereas it was really 16.8 per cent over 30 months.

I could go on for a long time with cases because there have been cases reported in every newspaper in every large city across Canada, but they would all tell the same story. Legislation of this kind has been supported in Canada by some of our most influential and representative organizations. If I may name but a few, I would refer to the Consumers' Association of Canada, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the Canadian Congress of Labour, the Canadian Welfare Council, the Canadian Catholic Conference, the Anglican Church of Canada, credit unions and co-operatives as well as many others.

This is only one of about seven bills on the order paper concerning the same subject, which are to be discussed this session. I hope that these bills, instead of being talked out as happened in recent years, could be permitted to go to the committee which has jurisdiction in this field, so that we could hear representations from the interested organizations and interested people. The committee could then make a report to the house and the government could give serious consideration to the introduction of legislation which would not only require the loan companies to indicate in their advertising what the real rate of interest is but would also change the laws respecting these companies in other ways.

One need only look at the annual profits of the companies which are in this field to realize that this has been a tremendously lucrative business. One cannot complain about legitimate business, but this is a business which is taking money from people who, in many cases, simply cannot afford to pay what they are being required to pay.

Mr. Macdonald: May I ask the hon. member a question? May I take it that the hon. member has no quarrel with the Small Loans Act to the extent it permits an interest rate up to a maximum of 24 per cent per annum, and that his only objection to the statute is that it does not require disclosure?

Mr. Orlikow: That is not quite correct. I, in fact, have four different bills on the order paper, one of which proposes the reduction of the interest rate which is permitted. This particular bill which we are discussing today simply requires the loan companies to put in their advertising the actual rate of interest which is being charged.

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): The Small Loans Act, Mr. Speaker, is designed to govern moneylenders and small loan companies and was made part of the law of Canada in 1939. An amendment to the act was assented to on August 14, 1956. This amendment raised the regulated loans field from $500 to $1,500. The act licenses and controls only a segment of the country's loan business, roughly one sixth or one seventh of the total amount. In the year ended December 31, 1961 total loans numbered 1,169,699 and amounted to $605,687,740. The average loan for that year was $518. The sum of $294,495,936 was deducted from the total loans I have mentioned to repay existing outstanding balances on previous small loans made to current borrowers. Thus, the net amount of small loans made or the total of the new funds advanced to borrowers, was $311,191,804 in the year 1961. About two thirds of all loans are consistently made, year after year, to previous and current borrowers—in other words, if you wish, to chronic customers.

From 1958 to 1960 the volume of loans to new borrowers remained at a remarkably uniform level. This was no doubt due to the continued expansion of credit unions and to the greatly expanded activities of the chartered banks in the field of personal loans. There was, however, a substantial increase in new borrowers in 1961 due to many factors, including I should think the more intensive advertising by licensees under the Small Loans Act.

In considering the proposed amendment to the Small Loans Act one should realize that many licensed companies and individuals making small loans in amounts up to $1,500 under the act also do a business in the unregulated field above the $1,500 figure. Several licensees under the act also purchased conditional sales agreements through dealers, so they were carrying on businesss in the so-called sales financing field. At the end of 1961 delinquent small loans for all licensees totalled $90,874,267 or 21.3 per cent of the total. Of the balance of the outstanding loans, 4 per cent were delinquent or overdue for more than six months.

Between 1959 and 1961, the figures of the department of insurance show a growing tendency for delinquency to increase, particularly those overdue for more than six months, yet the number of new offices of licensees under the act opened at the rate of about 100 per year in the same period.

Instalment credit, the principal component of consumer credit, falls readily into two divisions which, because they are similar, are often confused. These two divisions are, first, credit advances to finance the sale of goods and, second, cash personal loans. The one common denominator is the requirement of regular repayments of equal size, but there the similarity ends. Instalment goods credit supplies the funds for purchases which people are unable to make out of their savings. On the other hand, the chief function of cash personal loans is to enable families to organize their functional affairs, to help them to cope with emergencies created by unexpected demands or through some interruption of their income. This permits families to work their way out of debt at a pace suited to their earnings. There is no doubt about it, therefore, these small loan firms or moneylenders do serve a good purpose across the nation.

Instalment goods credit is advanced directly by retailers or through sales finance companies. The credit is secured by a lien on the merchandise, and title or ownership does not pass to the purchaser until he has paid in full. The finance company which specializes in this service to dealers rarely deals directly with the purchaser in assessing his credit worthiness. In many cases, the dealers concerned endorse the notes and thereby secure the sales finance company against loss.

Consumer loan companies, in extending cash credit, deal directly with the borrowers and are fully responsible for investigation of their credit and administration, and collection of the loans. Since the majority of loans are made without liquid or readily saleable security, lenders must regard character and paying ability as the prime security and therefore must ensure that these factors are accurately assessed. Money lending has been traditionally looked upon with prejudice, and there were good reasons for such prejudice in Canada, especially in regard to consumer lending before 1940, when there was no effective legislation to protect borrowers. These reasons were particularly apparent in the larger cities where many borrowers were forced to pay as high as 400 per cent per annum for small loans. Legislation of that time was not effective in preventing lenders from making extra charges of various kinds, with the result that the cost to the borrower was often exorbitant. Because of this many borrowers were unable to get out of debt and found themselves subjected to harsh collection methods.

The lenders who did not condone such practices went to great lengths to bring these conditions to the attention of responsible people in the hope that legislative action would be taken. These efforts led eventually to a complete examination of the subject by successive parliamentary committees between the years 1936 and 1939. During these years witnesses appeared at committee hearings representative of social agencies in Canada and the United States, banks, credit unions and consumer loan companies, and the findings of these studies were:

1. Our economy creates the need for this type of loan to wage earners and salaried people.

2. The cost of making small loans is considerably higher per dollar loaned than that for larger loans, and therefore a much higher rate is necessary.

3. Existing legislation does not provide the protection that borrowers should have against excessively high rates.

The Small Loans Act, which became effective on January 1, 1940, took account of these conclusions. It is estimated by the Bank of Canada that in the year 1962 about $1,855,000,000 of retail dealer credit was extended to consumers, that loans to individuals by the banks and credit unions reached $1,778,000,000, and that instalment loans by consumer loan companies reached $644,000,000. This means that just over one seventh of the total loans of $4,277,000,000 was made under the Small Loans Act.

The business of making small loans is a retail business. Money is borrowed at a wholesale rate, usually from a parent company or a bank, and merchandised at a retail rate. About one half of the gross profits of the five small loan companies incorporated by special acts of this parliament, and licensed under this act in question, presently goes to the federal and provincial governments for corporation taxes. Therefore the federal government is already a participating partner, as well as to some extent a controlling partner in their enterprises.

The gross profits, before taxes, of these five small loan companies from their small loan business for 1961 were as follows: Beneficial Finance Company of Canada $5,721,850.08; Canadian Acceptance Company $96,217.12; Community Finance Corporation $92,677.68; Household Finance Corporation of Canada $11,349,765.00, and the Laurentide Finance Company showed a loss of $75,807.44. In the year 1961, out of 78 moneylenders who reported under the act, 30 showed losses but their gross profit over all was $3,561,941, and many of the losses were comparatively small ones. Only 10 of the losses were for more than $5,000.

I suggest to all hon. members it is apparent therefore that this business is not as risky as many, without the facts before them, might think. It is of course true, as in any other business, and even in government, that the quality of the management determines a good or poor result.

I would like all hon. members to refer to Senator David Croll's bill called the Financial Charges (Disclosure) Act. He is presenting it in the Senate for the fifth time. It is Bill S-6. It reached committee on second reading in the last session and it would likely have passed both the Senate and the House of Commons but for dissolution on February 5 last. The debate on the second reading of the bill, as reintroduced in the Senate this session, has commenced, but it is temporarily adjourned. In any event the bill will likely reach this house this fall, and it is one I am sure most hon. members will be very enthusiastic about. Because the hon. senator recently referred to the Small Loans Act when discussing his bill I should like to refer hon. members to the Debates of the Senate for Wednesday, June 5, 1963 at page 87, beginning at the last paragraph in the first column:

> Let me try to make it as simple as I can. The law has not kept up with the development of consumer credit. The law has not paralleled the progress in that field. Thus we have—and I can give it to you in capsule form—an anomalous situation which has developed in which the consumer by borrowing money and paying cash is protected by the Small Loans Act, whereas if he commences his acquisition by instalment purchase he has no protection. It is as simple as that. There it is in a nutshell. This bill is an endeavour to set right a situation that has long cried out for some kind of attention.
> It is also true that dollar disclosure is not sufficient to allow comparison of credit costs. This provides for the disclosure of dollar amounts and simple interest rates, and it is the answer to the proposition that I presented to you. I repeat, because I think it is worth remembering, that the man who borrows money from a loan company and pays cash is protected by the Small Loans Act, whereas the man who goes in and makes an instalment purchase is not protected. This would protect such a man.
> Hon. Mr. Choquette: May I ask my honourable friend a question? Let us assume a young married couple want to buy furniture, and they cannot get credit from the bank. They have no security whatever upon which to borrow from a loan company. If you say to them: "Do you know that after a year and a half you will have paid $150 more than the goods are worth?", they will answer: "So what? We need them, and we cannot borrow the money". I submit that that is the case with respect to eight out of ten users of consumer financing. What does the honourable senator say about that?
> Hon. Mr. Croll: All I say to such a couple is: "Good luck to you". As long as they are told the cost in dollars and the interest rate, then it is all right. I am one of those who believe that it is good business for the individual and for the country to have the use of the goods while they are paying for them.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, but without any malice towards the hon. member, because he is on our side. However, I believe it is a rule of the house that we are not supposed to refer to debate in the other place. This is a rather extensive reference. It is a good reference but should we not stick to the rules?

Mr. Ryan: I stand corrected, but possibly under the circumstances, and seeing it is such a good reference, I might have the unanimous consent of the house to continue it. There is only another paragraph.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Has the hon. gentleman unanimous consent to continue with his reference?

Mr. Knowles: We have broken quite a few rules today.

Mr. Lambert: He had better make his own speech.

Mr. Ryan: I think, Mr. Speaker, I got the point across. It is quite clear that Senator Croll does think there are some laudable things about the Small Loans Act as it stands. I think it is apparent that in the small loans business there is better control than in the field of retail sales credit. However, if we can strike any kind of blow for the little man and improve his position, without driving the loan companies and moneylenders out of business, I think we should do so.

If disclosure or advertising of the total cost of a small loan in terms of percentage per annum, as sought by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) will educate borrowers to be certain to try banks, credit unions, relatives, and other possible cheaper interest rate sources before committing themselves to a small loans company or moneylender, I believe that we should insist upon it.

I think we are entering a more humane age and the concept of social justice is gradually replacing the idea that the weak are fair game for the strong. Twenty four per cent per annum on a $300 loan is a high rate of interest. It sounds much better if it is stated at 2 per cent per month to the average working man, who is inexperienced in such matters. Everybody as far as possible should know, in fairness and truth, that even though the monthly repayments reduce the cost of a $100 loan to about $13.48 per year, the effective rate to the borrower is still 24 per cent per annum. I think that should be made clear to the public. If this rate per annum were advertised, the moneylenders would probably be glad to reduce their interest rates to some extent. They would, I submit, experiment and compete for better sounding rates than 24 per cent per annum, and this would at least be of some benefit to the little man.

Small Loans Act

This amending bill has been before the house for many sessions, and from reading past Hansards the main objections to it seem to be, first, that it is more difficult to present a table of scaled rates over radio and television than it is to print it in a newspaper and second, that the proposed amendment is unconstitutional. Of these arguments I think only the second one gives any real concern. For a good picture of this problem of unconstitutionality may I refer hon. members to the argument of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson), now the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, which appears in volume 4 of Hansard for the 1956 session at page 3920, the second column.

The unconscionable transactions relief act of the province of Ontario was declared ultra vires by the supreme court of Ontario last fall. This decision is now under appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. The judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada should do much to clarify the picture and may even determine whether or not the "interest" jurisdiction of this government includes "advertising" jurisdiction. If it does not do so, then the question should be resolved by a specific reference to that court from this house.

(Translation):

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) for presenting Bill C-9, an act to amend the Small Loans Act. I congratulate him in particular for his persistence although I deplore, and always will as long as I sit in the house, the uselessness of this hour reserved for private members' business, which never gives any positive results.

That bill will require finance companies to reveal in their advertisements the amount required by way of monthly or periodic payments to repay the loan, the cost of such loan in terms of per centum per annum.

What are the results of the present act? The finance companies take advantage of its lack of clarity to hide their deceit from the borrower.

And I am wondering why we should go in such a roundabout way to pass legislation when it would be much easier to take the direct approach. That may make some lawyers laugh or smile but I am asking the question in good faith. If lending companies had to account for all the charges included in their contracts, some of these institutions would be less likely to become dens of financial pirates, and would serve the public honestly.

Mr. Speaker, we have acquired proof of hypocritical and even infamous transactions based on false representations.

Do you not fear that our government, which is supposed to pass laws conceived in the people's interest, might be accused by the public of being partly responsible, through carelesness, for that state of affairs?

Indeed, we may be branded as accomplices for having left so many loopholes in the law, for having allowed usurers to take possession of properties which our workers burdened with large families have acquired through toil and sacrifices. Mr. Speaker, this legislation defends straightforwardly the small property-holder. It is perhaps the last recourse of the innocent victims, fallen prey to cold-blooded swindlers.

Mr. Speaker, I could give you a thousand and one examples to prove what I am saying. I even have notarized and registered contracts which prove that poor borrowers will have to pay twice and even three times as much as the amount they have borrowed.

Our present legislation provides indirect protection to those usurers as they are not obliged to give all the details of their transactions. So much so that the worker wonders nowadays whether the laws are conceived to defend him or to protect financiers. I call those fellows usurers because, in my opinion, an interest of 24, 30, 35 and 40 per cent on a loan is robbery.

That is why I say that such transactions are the most infamous actions that can be perpetrated against credulous people.

Yet, our business men, our small financiers as they are called, those who draw up contracts of that kind or who are called upon to defend lenders of that sort, have the cheek to speak against the exploited worker and accuse him of not fulfilling his commitments, of not meeting his obligations.

Mr. Speaker, if this government does not intervene immediately to put an end to that orgy, I feel it will become the accomplice of those exploiters by its silence. In the last analysis, it will be responsible for the serious problems of our family economy and for problems still more serious that such a tolerance could create.

I am still wondering why the federal government does not decide to fix and set interest rates once and for all—

(Text):

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I apologize for interrupting the hon. gentleman but I must advise him that the hour for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, will the government house leader advise the house as to the order of business for Monday and the following days next week.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, sir. On Monday the government would like to continue with the debate on the resolution preceding the municipal development and loan board act, to be followed by the resolution respecting the Atlantic development board. If both those items should be completed on Monday we would then take the resolution respecting the Department of Agriculture. If that business is not all completed on Monday, it would be the same business for Tuesday, though there may be a possibility of taking the department of industry bill on Tuesday. But it would not be taken on Monday unless all three resolutions got through.

In general, the government plans on the first two days of next week to proceed with the economic legislation that is on the order paper and to begin the budget debate on Wednesday. Once the budget debate begins it is our proposal that it should continue until completed. I think that is as far as I can go at the moment.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, June 17, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HARKNESS—RECEIPT BY MAIL IN CALGARY ON JUNE 14 OF BUDGET INFORMATION

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting the entire house. On Friday morning, June 14, there was delivered to a Calgary law office at 9.30 a.m., by the first morning mail delivery, a memorandum entitled "Proposed Changes in Canadian Taxes". The memorandum summarizes the budget, has a budget resolutions index and attached to it are appendices containing the budget resolutions. The whole runs to 25 pages and is under a covering letter from Clarkson, Gordon and Company of Toronto. The envelope containing this material is metered, and the meter stamp bears the date of June 14.

The question which arises is how this material could have been prepared multigraphed and delivered by ordinary mail to a Calgary office by 9.30 a.m. on Friday after evening. It may be possible that this analysis of the budget could have been prepared, the of the budget could have been prepared, the material mimeographed and the whole dispatched to Calgary, and I presume to every other city in Canada, and then delivered within the times I have given. However, it seems somewhat improbable.

I have checked the T.C.A. schedules to Calgary and find that only one plane leaves Toronto for Calgary after eight o'clock in the evening. This plane is a Vanguard which leaves Toronto at 2.50 a.m. and arrives in Calgary at 6.20 a.m. Calgary time. I have also checked with the post office as to what time a letter would need to be mailed in Toronto to catch this plane and whether it would be delivered on the first mail delivery in Calgary. I was informed that a letter would normally need to be mailed in Toronto by 10 p.m. to get out to the airport in time for this plane. If it were on the plane it might or might not be delivered in Calgary on the first delivery, depending on whether the plane arrived on time and on the volume of mail to be handled, matters which it has been impossible for me to check. In view of this the metered date of June 14 on the letter in question seems odd, particularly as the covering letter bears the date of June 13.

I believe the house is entitled to a full explanation of this matter in view of the questions which have been raised in regard to preserving the secrecy of the budget.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I am hardly in a position to speak on this matter without looking into it, mainly because I am no longer a member of Clarkson, Gordon and Company. I do know that for many, many years that firm, as well as many other firms in all parts of Canada, including all the banks and various other institutions, have received copies of the budget speech after it has been delivered in this house from the offices of the Bank of Canada in their area. I know that this particular firm, Clarkson, Gordon and Company, have in the past made a point of summarizing the main points in the budget that night and issuing them that night or the following morning at an early hour. Apart from that, I am not in a position to say anything about this matter until I make inquiries.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance respecting the matter of urgency raised on a question of privilege by the hon. member for Calgary North, which raised the question that the subject matter of the budget was made available to a legal firm in Calgary on Friday morning following presentation of the budget on Thursday evening. Could the minister explain the mysteries of the electronic age—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but questions of privilege cannot be answered on orders of the day.

Mr. Woolliams: Particularly put-up questions.

Mr. Byrne: This is a question of urgency arising from a question—

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the hon. member's concern, but I am afraid I must hold to the previous decision.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon: I wonder if I might read a telegram I have just received from Mr. J. R. M. Wilson, who is senior partner of Clarkson, Gordon and Company, and I think in fairness to him this should be read as soon as possible.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Pigeon: You refused debate.

Mr. Peters: Why do you want to do it now?

Mr. Speaker: If the minister would care to revert to motions, with the consent of the house; otherwise this is the question period, and it is my duty to keep business strictly on the question period.

Mr. Gordon: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fairness to these people I would ask the consent of the house to revert to motions.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give consent to the Minister of Finance to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Gordon: As a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Calgary North said certain things that had a bearing not only on the integrity of the members of my ex-firm but indirectly on myself, I should like to be given the opportunity to read this telegram. It is a matter of personal privilege.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I made no implications respecting the minister or anybody else. I stated certain facts which had been sent to me from Calgary because people out there were concerned over the receipt of this document at the time it was received, and in their view it brought into serious question the secrecy of the budget and the documents comprising the white papers and so on attached to the budget. Therefore I thought it was my duty to have the matter cleared up as fast as possible. I presented the facts which had been given to me, which I am absolutely convinced are correct and which I stand behind, and as far as I am concerned the sooner the matter is cleared up the better.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will realize it is my duty to abide by the rules and try to conduct proceedings according to the rules. Unless the house gives unanimous consent, this is not the time for that type of explanation.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I wonder if I might rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Again?

Mr. Pickersgill: My hon. friend the Minister of Finance said he was rising on a question of personal privilege and I believe it has always been a rule of the house that the hon. gentleman should be allowed to indicate whether he had a matter of privilege before any decision was made about it. My hon. friend also said it arose out of the question of privilege previously raised by the hon. member for Calgary North which Your Honour allowed.

Surely, sir, since the hon. member for Calgary North has now indicated that he feels the matter should be cleared up, and since my hon. friend believes he has a question of personal privilege, the house should hear what my hon. friend has to say before a decision is made by the Chair as to whether or not it is a question of privilege.

Mr. Benidickson: Be fair to both sides.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the minister has already stated what is his question of personal privilege. It seems to me quite apparent that the government, having refused to have a debate on this whole question—

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Douglas:—are now endeavouring, under the guise of personal privilege, to carry on a one-sided debate.

An hon. Member: Tell the truth.

Mr. Douglas: I would say that if the whole question is not to be discussed thoroughly, then it ought not to be discussed at all. What the hon. minister has now stated is no question of privilege at all. He is simply trying to reply to the hon. member for Calgary North. He turned down an opportunity to reply to the hon. member, and he has no right to use the orders of the day in order to present one side of the case.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would ask the hon. member to contain himself for just a minute. Hon. members will realize that the question period is a time for urgent matters to be raised. I realize how important this question is, but in the circumstances, if the house does not give unanimous consent to revert to motions in order that the minister may make a statement, I am obliged to adhere to the rules, which are that questions must be urgent, and these questions asked on orders of the day do not comprise the type of questions which the minister wishes to discuss.

(Translation):

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the comments made at the beginnning of this sitting by the hon.

member for Calgary North, could the Minister of Finance give us some explanation or clarification concerning the matter raised by the hon. member?

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to answer the question of the hon. member for Lapointe.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gordon: I have just received a telegram from Mr. J. R. M. Wilson, who is the senior partner of Clarkson, Gordon and Company, chartered accountants. The telegram reads as follows:

Budget address and resolutions released by Bank of Canada Toronto to interested parties starting about nine twenty eastern daylight time. We received two copies at nine forty five June 13 and two copies at nine fifty five. On receipt of these our partners reviewed the speech and resolutions and prepared an explanatory memorandum which was typed and multilithed. Concurrently copies of the resolution were photocopied and a copy of these together with the explanatory memorandum were mailed to clients of the firm in pre-addressed envelopes together with a covering letter dated June 13 which had also been prepared in advance after the date of the budget had been announced. First completed memoranda were ready by twelve midnight and first mailing left our office at one fifteen eastern daylight time and delivered to the Malton post office in time to catch flight No. 501 which stops at Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary and Vancouver, leaving Toronto at two fifty a.m. eastern daylight time. This flight due in Calgary at six twenty a.m. mountain standard time. Procedure followed by our firm was consistent in every respect with that followed for the past several years.

That is signed by J. R. M. Wilson.

(Translation):

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

I should like the house to know that I raised the question because I believe the Minister of Finance, after having risen on a question of privilege, was entitled to it.

MR. PIGEON—ARTICLE IN MAGAZINE "AGRICULTURE"

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which concerns all members of the house.

It has to do with an article which was published as an advertisement by the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay) in the magazine Agriculture edited by the corporation of agronomists of the province of Quebec. I should like to read now the article, which is very short and which is a message from the minister of (eastern)—that word is between brackets—agriculture, the Hon. Rene Tremblay:

Message from the minister of agriculture for (eastern) Canada, the Hon. Rene Tremblay; to the members of the corporation of agronomists of the province of Quebec, on the occasion of their 1963 annual convention.

As minister of agriculture for (eastern) Canada, I rejoice at this first opportunity I have to offer you my best wishes on the occasion of your annual convention.

First of all, I should like to say that if I had been free to choose a portfolio in the new cabinet, I would have taken agriculture. Indeed, an economist and professor of social sciences cannot but be interested in the agriculture of his country since it is the backbone of the economy. I fully agree with you that the problem of agricultural recovery is becoming more and more important and that the preservation and development of farming in Canada, and in the eastern part of our country especially, calls for our closest attention. Our government has acknowledged the fact since it has, for the first time since confederation, appointed two ministers to look after agriculture. Need I point out that my appointment acknowledges the French fact in Canada?

In order to carry out this enormous task, we need the co-operation of all parties concerned, especially experts in that field such as you, agronomists. Your knowledge, your work and the advice of all agricultural experts of the province of Quebec will be invaluable and necessary to me.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but is it actually necessary that he quote the whole article? What is the point of the question of privilege?

Mr. Pigeon: There is only one more paragraph, Mr. Speaker. It will take only a minute.

I shall read the reports to keep in touch with the activities of your convention. You can rely on my help to promote our common cause. As for me, I shall rely on your co-operation. Together, we shall succeed.

It bears the signature of Rene Tremblay, minister of agriculture for (eastern) Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this article signed by the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane infringes upon the privileges and rights of this parliament, since the hon. member is not the minister of agriculture for (eastern) Canada. I feel that action should be taken by the house against the hon. member, because I consider this as arrogance.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane following a question of privilege raised at the beginning of the sitting. Can the minister answer the following question of privilege and tell me whether that article was paid for by himself or by the Department of Agriculture?

Hon. Rene Tremblay (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I do not see the urgency of such a question. If the hon. member will put his question to the order paper I shall be pleased to answer it.

World Fair

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am entitled to ask such a question and the minister has the responsibility to answer it in a straightforward manner. This is dictatorship and arrogance.

(Text):

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, surely the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is not going to be allowed to raise a question of privilege when the Minister of Finance was denied that right?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

(Translation):

WORLD FAIR

STATEMENT ON PROGRESS OF ORGANIZATION

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, some time ago the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) asked me for a statement in connection with the organization of the universal exhibition of 1967, and I want to make such a statement today, as I promised him last Friday.

On April 27, 1963, I was, as federal minister, entrusted with the responsibility of organizing the world exhibition of 1967.

Before April 27, 1963, the former administration had taken various steps in this respect.

(1) The house passed, on December 20, 1962, a bill in view of setting up the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation. The legislation provided that the corporation would plan, organize and administer the exhibition which was to be held on Montreal island, for a period of six months during the year 1967. A commissioner and a deputy commissioner were appointed to that effect.

(2) Apart from this legislation, a three way agreement was reached in order to choose a site for the exhibition, which basically imposed upon the city of Montreal the responsibility of supplying that site to the World Exhibition Corporation. The site was also to be approved by the federal government in agreement with the city of Montreal and the province of Quebec.

(3) Under the three way agreement concluded on March 25, 1963, Mayor Drapeau recommended, on behalf of the city of Montreal, a site in the St. Lawrence river which would comprise the island of St. Helene, Round island, as well as an enlargement of those islands obtained by dumping fill in the river. A third island would, moreover, be built along the seawall of the St. Lawrence seaway, and would be known as Notre Dame island. The total acreage thus created would be 600 acres. The mayor informed the former administration that the provincial government approved the site.

(4) On March 28, 1963, the former prime minister of Canada advised the mayor of Montreal that the federal government would accept his proposal on condition that the legislation establishing the corporation which stipulated that the exhibition be held on Montreal island be amended, and, second, on condition that the proposed work be approved under the terms of the Navigable Waters Protection Act when detailed plans were available.

Unofficial discussions, which began on April 24, were then held between officials of the federal government and representatives of the city of Montreal and their consultants on a complete study of the proposal.

On April 25, the Department of Public Works received from the director of public works of the city of Montreal a request for a preliminary agreement regarding the filling up of the "A" area, which is that section of the site connecting Round island to St. Helen's island.

Following that request, a meeting took place in Montreal on May 1, which was attended by federal officials of the Department of Public Works, of the Department of Transport, of the St. Lawrence seaway authority, of the national harbours board and their consultants, in order to reconsider the proposition.

During the meeting, some technical questions were directed to the representatives of the city of Montreal about the possible effects of the planned construction on the chosen site. The city provided information on the program of studies of scale models and other technical studies being carried out. Together with federal officials, the city has established a plan of action in order to be able to supply as soon as possible the technical data and a detailed plan.

It was imperative to reach a prompt decision, even if only temporary, so that the international bureau of exhibitions might receive by May 14 a plan elaborate enough to enable it, if it saw fit, to choose Montreal as the site of the 1967 exhibition.

Meetings were held on May 9, in Ottawa, with Mayor Drapeau, who told the federal government that the city of Montreal would be able to prepare the site and to give it over to the corporation on June 30, 1964.

During those discussions with the mayor of Montreal it was clearly established that, should the proposed site be accepted, the city of Montreal would see to it that the work would not impede navigation on the river and would fully comply with the regulations set out in the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

After that meeting and other discussions, and in view of the fact that a report had to be submitted to the international bureau in Paris on May 12, 1963, I advised Mayor Drapeau, on behalf of the federal government, on May 10, 1963, that we accepted the site on the conditions mentioned in the telegram sent by the former prime minister on March 28.

I attended the meeting of the international bureau in Paris with the commissioner general and other members of the corporation as well as Mayor Drapeau, at which time the project concerning the site of the exhibition was submitted.

On May 17, we agreed to grant the city of Montreal prior consent concerning the filling up of section "A", between St. Helen's island and Round island.

It is important to note that the prior consent granted in connection with section "A", bears on works that the city of Montreal had thought of carrying out before the world fair, and it was established that such works would not become a hazard to navigation or have any effect on the water level.

Federal officials and municipal representatives met to examine the results of model and other engineering studies undertaken by the city. The last meetings were held on June 11 and 12. It is yet too soon to tell the final results of those studies. The city of Montreal is at present considering the whole problem and we shall shortly receive, I hope, a detailed plan covering not only this site but also work connected with the site, such as source of backfilling materials, various items of required machinery and equipment etc., in order to ensure that the site will be ready by June 30, 1964 and that such works will not be a hazard to navigation on the St. Lawrence river or the seaway.

I intend to call a general meeting of all parties concerned with the 1967 world fair, such meeting to be held here in Ottawa in the first week of July; the parties concerned are the federal government's departmental committee, the provincial minister responsible for the fair, the mayor of Montreal, and the fair commissioners. At that time we shall have received additional information from the consulting engineers.

Once the preliminary work is completed, I intend to report to the house from time to time on the progress of the project, because this undertaking is national in its scope and concerns all Canadians.

I hope, if and when it is possible, to invite a group of members to Montreal to see the works and the master plan for the fair.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Defence Production a question arising out of the statement made to us today by the Minister of Public Works regarding the location of the world fair in Montreal. In view of the fact that the Minister of Defence Production is quoted in today's papers as giving a much more definitive position with regard to the location of this fair, would he tell us whether he has issued a statement relating to a cost of $80 million for the Isle Notre Dame site and whether he has also indicated to Montreal newspapers that it is almost a sure thing that site will not be proceeded with?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, I have issued no statement nor given any formal interview. The remarks which appeared in the newspaper were as the result of a few off the cuff and, I may as well admit, ill advised observations. As I mentioned to another hon. member a few moments ago, the spokesman for the federal government is the Minister of Public Works, and what he says stands.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production.

Is it true that the minister stated, during an interview over the week end, that the project calling for the establishment of the world exhibition on the St. Lawrence might have to be called off because of the excessive costs involved?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no. In my opinion, the Minister of Public Works is, generally speaking, the only spokesman of the government in that respect and he has already made a statement in that connection today.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Defence Production.

Does the minister agree with his colleague's statement made this afternoon regarding this question?

HEALTH AND WELFARE

SMOKING—CONFERENCE ON MEASURES TO REDUCE HEALTH HAZARDS

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have been impressed with the evidence which has been presented to me in numerous reports concerning the increasing lung cancer death rate in Canada and the serious health problem that is posed by this disease. There is scientific evidence that cigarette smoking is a contributory cause of lung cancer, and that it may also be associated with chronic bronchitis and coronary heart disease.

Health agencies, including the Department of National Health and Welfare, have a duty to inform the public about the risk to health connected with cigarette smoking. It seems to me that special efforts should be made to dissuade children and young people from acquiring the habit.

In initiating a program directed to the reduction or elimination of this health hazard it will be essential, if the best possible results are to be achieved, for the Department of National Health and Welfare to work in close co-operation with provincial health and other departments, voluntary health agencies, professional associations and other groups concerned with this problem. It has therefore been decided to call an early conference to consider this matter, and I am writing to interested groups inviting them to meet with me in Ottawa. Invitations will go to the provinces through the provincial ministers of health. In addition, professional and voluntary health agencies interested in this matter will be invited to attend, as well as representatives of the tobacco industry and growers.

It is hoped that at this conference there will be a full discussion of the evidence linking cigarette smoking with lung cancer and other conditions, and that proposals can be made for a positive and effective program regarding this problem.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the lady Minister of National Health and Welfare and I apologize for not giving notice. My question is based on the statement the hon. lady made to the house this morning with respect to the conference concerning the unhealthy habit of cigarette smoking. Is the minister in a position to assure the house as a result of conferences with her officials that pipe smokers can continue to enjoy their pipes without any damage to their health?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, may I assure my hon. and well-beloved friend that he may continue to live in that particular form of sin to which he has been accustomed.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it the intention of the lady minister to join this group?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, I assume my hon. friend is speaking of the group which smokes pipes. I suggest to my hon. friend that there are still other ways in which one might use this noxious weed, but it is my intention so far as my resolve will support me, to do away with the use of tobacco entirely.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): May I ask a supplementary question on another aspect of the use of tobacco? I should like to ask the hon. lady if she eschewed all these aspects or if she was an admirer of Rawhide on the radio in the mornings?

TOBACCO

POWER TO REGULATE ADVERTISING, LABELLING, ETC.

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-75, to restrain the use of tobacco.

He said: If I may say so, I think it is a good omen for the possible acceptance of this bill that its introduction should follow so closely on the statement just made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In my opinion that statement was a very fine one. Not only that, but the bill is being introduced into the house on the very day on which, I understand, the hon. minister has given up smoking for life.

The purpose of this bill is to protect the consumer from being deceived or misled as to the character or safety of tobacco products. The effect of the measure would be to repeal the present act of 1908, an act to restrain the use of tobacco by young persons, and to make the provisions of that act part I of this intended new act.

Part II of the new act will give the governor in council power to regulate the labelling, packaging and advertising of tobacco products. It is intended as a basis for the compulsory and, I hope, bilingual listing of tobacco product ingredients on all packages of tobacco products.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

EXPORT AND IMPORT PERMITS ACT

AMENDMENT EXTENDING DURATION FOR FURTHER THREE YEARS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-3 (from the Senate), to amend the Export and Import Permits Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

SUGAR PRICES

Question No. 94—Mr. Thompson:

1. What has been the average price paid for sugar (a) to the producer (b) by the consumer, during the past six months?

2. Does the government contemplate taking action to prevent Canadian domestic food prices being unduly influenced by world market trends?

Questions

Mr. Pepin: 1. (a) Final information is not yet available on payments to producers for sugar beets delivered from the 1962 crop. Sugar companies pay an initial payment per ton of beets at delivery time and interim payments as the crop is processed and sold. The total payment is based upon sugar content of the beets and the amount sugar companies receive for refined sugar. In addition the agricultural stabilization board of the Canada Department of Agriculture is authorized to make payments to bring average prices up to previously announced figures.

(b) Price of sugar in Canada, by months, November 1962 to April 1963:

(All prices in Canadian dollars)

Month	Sugar, Raw, c.i.f. Montreal $ per cwt.	Sugar, Granulated f.o.b. Refinery $ per cwt.	Sugar, Granulated Retail Stores c. per lb.
1962:
November	5.12	8.10	9.7
December	5.74	8.75	10.3
1963:
January	7.22	10.20	11.1
February	7.86	10.95	12.7
March	8.20	11.29	13.2
April	9.61	12.55	14.2

2. This is a matter of government policy which will be announced if and when such a situation arises.

TENDERS FOR LAND LEASE, MOUNTAIN PRISON, AGASSIZ, B.C.

Question No. 148—Mr. Douglas:

1. Is any land of the mountain prison at Agassiz, B.C. at present on lease for haying, pasturing or other purposes, or are any such leases in process of negotiation?

2. If so, was all the land leased or in process of being leased put up for public tender?

3. If public tenders were not called or are not to be called, why is the policy of calling tenders not followed?

Mr. Macdonald: 1. (a) No land is at present on lease.

(b) In 1962 $200 was paid for the standing crop of hay on the land. The payment was accepted rather than allow the hay to be wasted.

(c) Negotiations are now going forward for the lease of this property for pasturing.

2. No.

3. Public tenders were not called and are not to be called for two reasons:

(a) Under part XIV, section 07.1 of the treasury manual of financial authorities and procedures, the Minister of Public Works has a blanket authorization to execute leases on behalf of the crown in respect of such property not immediately required for public purposes.

(b) The farm of the person with whom the Department of Public Works is currently negotiating for the lease of the land, abuts on the property in question. The prospective lessee has been carefully screened as to the purposes to which the land is to be put and, also, as to any possible connection with, or sympathy for, the Sons of Freedom movement. The penitentiary service feels, in any case where land becomes surplus to requirements, and particularly in the sensitive area adjoining the Doukhobor prison, that it must reserve the right to decide who will be allowed to lease such land.

The penitentiary service has therefore requested the Department of Public Works to negotiate the proposed lease agreement on this basis.

GRAIN STORAGE COSTS

Question No. 196—Mr. Howard:

Since 1940, how much money has been paid by what departments or agencies to grain companies for the storage of grain?

Mr. Pepin: Since 1940 the Canadian wheat board has paid $617,947,638 for the storage of grain. Of this total, the board recovered from the consolidated revenue fund under the provisions of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act the sum of $187,947,909. During the period 1939-45 a program under the authority of the agricultural supplies board was administered by the Department of Agriculture which made available reserve stocks of feed grains in eastern Canada for distribution during the winter and early spring. Storage charges during the holding periods were paid, but these cannot be identified, as a breakdown of expenditure for the complete program is not available from the records.

MAK TAK KING—ARREST UNDER IMMIGRATION ACT

Question No. 197—Mr. Howard:

Was one Mak Tak King, alias Wong Doo Chung, (a) arrested and (b) charged under section 16 of the Immigration Act and, if so, when, what was the nature of the charge, and the disposition thereof?

Mr. Macdonald: (a) Yes, arrested by the R.C.M. Police at Vancouver, B.C., on August 20, 1962, under the provisions of section 16 of the Immigration Act for the reason that he was an illegal entrant.

(b) No charges were laid but he appeared before a special board of inquiry held by the immigration branch at Vancouver, B.C., on August 21, 1962, which was adjourned until September 11, 1962 and Mak Tak King was released. On September 11, 1962 the inquiry was reopened and adjourned sine die.

CASES CONSIDERED BY IMMIGRATION INQUIRY BOARDS

Question No. 225—Mr. Mather:

How many cases have been considered by immigration branch boards of inquiry since January 1, 1960, and of these (a) how many cases were appealed (b) how many persons were allowed to remain in Canada (c) what are the usual reasons for deportation?

Mr. Munro: From January 1, 1960, to December 31, 1962, 2,862 persons were ordered to be deported from Canada following an inquiry under the Immigration Act. This number represents only those persons who were within Canada at the time of the inquiry and does not include persons ordered deported on their arrival at a port of entry seeking admission to Canada.

(b) Deportation was not carried out in the case of 889 of these persons; some were allowed to remain permanently, others temporarily under surveillance and others because deportation in their case was impratical.

(c) The most common causes for deportation in these cases are: (i) ship desertion (ii) criminality, (iii) illegal entry, (iv) violation of duration or conditions of stay as non-immigrant.

Question No. 254—Mr. Stefanson:

1. Did the B.B.G. approve a C.B.C. application for an increase in the effective radiated power, a change in channel, and a change of antenna site, of station CBWT, Winnipeg, Manitoba?
2. If so, when was approval given and what changes are proposed in regard to video, audio, channel and antenna?
3. What site was chosen for the location of the new antenna; when was the property purchased, from whom, and at what cost?
4. Were any other sites considered?
5. (a) What is the total estimated cost of the project? (b) what is the estimated cost of the building proposed at the new site?
6. When is this work scheduled to be completed and change of channel to be effective?
7. What is the estimated cost to viewers for changes of antenna resulting from change of channel (a) on a per house basis (b) total cost for the interlake area (c) total cost for Manitoba?
8. Is there any guarantee that these changes will improve television service for the interlake area especially for areas like Riverton, Arborg, Fisher Branch, Hodgson, Eriksdale and Ashern (Ashern, at present, gets neither Winnipeg nor Yorkton)?
9. Should these changes fail to bring about an improvement in television viewing for the interlake area, what action will the B.B.G. or the C.B.C. take?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am informed by the board of broadcast governors and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. Yes.

2. The application was for an increase in effective radiated power from 57,800 watts ERP (video), 34,700 watts ERP (audio), to 100,000 watts ERP (video), 50,000 watts ERP (audio), a change in channel from channel 3—to channel 6—and an increase in the effective height above average terrain from 196 feet to 1,027 feet. The board's recommendation for the approval of this application was contained in its public announcement of April 18, 1962.

3. L.S.D.I., section 27, township 9, range 1, W.P.M. near Starbuck, Man., acquired by certificate of title dated March 5, 1963, from Gordon Miller Livingston and Ann Livingston for the sum of $8,000.

4. Yes, and the most suitable site acquired.

5. (a) $1,267,000. This estimated amount covers the combined move and change of channels for CBWT and CBWFT.

(b) As tenders for construction of the building are about to be called it could be prejudicial to the public interest to disclose this information at this time.

6. The target date for service on the new channel is October 1964.

7. In areas where outside type antennas are used it is unlikely that changes will be required, other than reorientation in some cases, (a) one service call, (b) statistics are not available to the corporation, on the number of homes with T.V. antennas, (c) same as part (b).

8. It is anticipated that some areas of the interlake region will receive an improved service, but it is not possible to guarantee reception in specific areas.

9. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation intends to conduct a survey of reception in the area following the completion of the proposed changes to CBWT. The results of this survey will be used to determine what action if any should be taken.

QUALIFICATIONS FOR SHIP INSPECTOR, CIVIL SERVICE

Question No. 279—Mr. Smith:

Was it considered necessary that a ship inspector, civil service competition No. 63-238, should possess a certificate of competency "valid in the United Kingdom or any other certificate recognized by reciprocal government agreement as being equivalent", and, if so, for what reason?

Mr. Cantin: It is considered necessary that a ship inspector 2 (machinery) possess a Canadian certificate of competency valid in the United Kingdom or any other certificate recognized by reciprocal government agreement as being equivalent.

In the performance of his duties as outlined in the Canada Shipping Act, a ship inspector 2 (machinery) is required to inspect internationally registered vessels, and to examine candidates for marine engineer's certificates. The ship inspector must, therefore, possess the highest Canadian certificate himself.

A Canadian first class certificate valid in the United Kingdom is granted under conditions of examination and qualification required for a comparable certificate issued in the United Kingdom. Such certificates are accepted by both countries under a reciprocal agreement embodied in the commonwealth merchant shipping agreement. These certificates are of the highest grade issued in Canada and candidates for them must have comprehensive experience and a sound technical education in order to qualify.

C.B.C. TELEVISION STATION, FLIN FLON, MAN.

Question No. 282—Mr. Simpson:

1. What is the amount of the annual budget of the C.B.C. television station in Flin Flon, Manitoba?
2. What is the amount of the operational maintenance costs?
3. What is the amount of the operational program costs?
4. What were the proposed rental fees of the Manitoba telephone system?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1, 2, and 3. The C.B.C. television station at Flin Flon is coupled with that at The Pas. They were planned as a complex and are operated jointly using television recordings. The cost of television recordings for non-connected stations is a national program charge, and is not included in the operating cost of these stations. There are no local program originations at either station.

A staff of four people is based at Flin Flon to handle the television recordings and to provide maintenance service for both stations. Aside from the salaries of these four employees operating costs are confined to those for tube replacements, light, power, etc.

4. As to the amount proposed to be charged by the Manitoba telephone system to the corporation for microwave network service to Flin Flon, the provision of this information could adversely affect the corporation in the competitive business in which it is engaged. It can be stated, however, that the proposed annual rental was substantially higher than the annual costs involved in the present system of operation.

MAINTENANCE OF PUBLIC WORKS VESSELS, PORT BURWELL, ONT.

Question No. 352—Mr. McBain:

Is the government giving immediate consideration to maintaining in operation after 1963 public works dredge No. 116 and the tug Hercules now operating out of Port Burwell, Ontario?

Mr. Badanai: No. The department is planning to dispose of dredge No. 116 and the tug Hercules in the fall of 1963. This is in accordance with our policy of gradually reducing the number of federally owned dredges in operation and increasing the proportion of federal dredging carried out by private contractors. This unit is 58 years old and there would be considerable risk in keeping it in operation. It has been used only in safe waters for some time.

I should mention that disposal of the dredge is being delayed until the fall so that the community of Port Burwell and the crew of the dredge will have had advance notice of one full season in order to make other plans.

*PUBLIC SERVICE FACILITIES IN NATIONAL PARKS

Question No. 381—Mr. Mather:

Has the federal government any program respecting the construction and operation of suitable motels or other public service facilities in the national parks of Canada located on the route of the trans-Canada highway?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, this department is, of course, concerned to see that suitable motels and other public service facilities are available for visitors to the national parks of Canada, whether located on the route of the trans-Canada highway or not. It is the general policy that motels, hotels, cabin developments and restaurants be provided by private enterprise. These will in future increasingly be located in visitor service centres in order better to serve both park visitors and the general travelling public. As the need arises for such facilities the normal procedure is to advertise sites for public bidding, although some exceptions are made; for example, to accommodate businesses displaced by other park development.

Other public service facilities—notably camp grounds, where the demand has grown very greatly in recent years—are provided by the national parks administration. The policy here is simply to attempt to provide facilities as and where required, keeping in mind the importance of keeping inviolate the amenities which brought the visitors to the park in the first place.

I might remind hon. members here, Mr. Speaker, that the enormity of this problem and its importance can best be illustrated when I tell the house that the number of campers in our national parks has increased in the last ten years from 91,000 in 1952 to 634,000 in 1962.

APPOINTMENTS TO REVENUE POST OFFICES

Question No. 389—Mr. Korchinski:

What is the criterion under which an appointment of a postmaster is made in a revenue post office?

Mr. McWilliam: The Postmaster General appoints revenue postmasters where the annual revenue of the office does not exceed $3,000. The criteria for selection are: (1) Canadian citizenship, (2) residence in the locality served by the post office, (3) adequate educational and other qualifications to perform the duties of the position, (4) ability to furnish accommodation, centrally located (5) priority to applicants who are entitled to the veterans preference and who are otherwise qualified as per 1, 2, 3, 4.

Appointments of postmasters in revenue post offices where the annual revenue exceeds $3,000 per annum are made by the civil service commission as the result of either closed or open competitions.

In the closed competitions, only postal employees may apply and the selection is based on the merit system. For the open competitions, in most cases, only residents of the area served by the post office may apply. However, if it is unlikely that a successful candidate can be found in the area served by the post office the competition would encompass a wider area. The appointment is made on the basis of merit and subject to the statutory preference for veterans.

On occasion there will be an assistant to the postmaster who will have sufficient knowledge and experience to merit the appointment without the necessity of a formal competition. The deputy head will make this request to the commission which, if satisfied as to the equity of the case, will make the appointment subject to the appeal of other employees of the post office concerned.

*EXPORT OF AUTO PARTS TO RED CHINA

Question No. 425—Mr. Mather:

Has the federal Department of Trade and Commerce received during the first five months of 1963 any applications for export permits for the shipment of auto parts to the Peoples Republic of China and, if so, (a) how many applications were approved, and of these (i) how many applications related to auto parts wholly manufactured in Canada (ii) how many applications related to auto parts manufactured in Canada by U.S. controlled companies (b) how many applications were rejected, and of these (i) how many applications related to auto parts wholly manufactured in Canada (ii) how many applications related to auto parts manufactured in Canada by U.S. controlled companies (c) were any export permits issued subsequently not used because U.S. controlled companies refused to supply goods?

Mr. Pepin: This question has to do with sales of auto parts to mainland China and the answer is as follows:

Sixteen applications for export permits for shipment of auto parts to mainland China have been received since the 30th of April, none previously. While none of these permits has yet been approved, it is expected that 13 of these permits will shortly be issued. Two applications require further supporting information. One application has been refused because the goods involved were of U.S. origin. The source of manufacture in Canada of the parts covered in these permits is not a consideration in the issue or refusal of a permit.

Naturally, there is no information yet with respect to the utilization of the permits but in any event this part of the question concerns a private matter between supplying firms and exporting houses which does not concern the administration of export control.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION—TENDER METHOD

Question No. 444—Mr. Valade:

1. Did the Minister of Defence Production cancel the open tender method used by his department at the time he assumed responsibility for it?

2. Has he awarded contracts by direct negotiation since he took office?

3. Does he intend to use this method in the future for matters which in the past were usually dealt with by public tender?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, the reply is no to the first part of the question and yes to the second part. As for the last part, it has always been the policy of the Minister of Defence Production to use the system of public tenders for purchases whenever possible. In actual practice, however, there are cases where this is impossible. We enter into contracts by means of direct negotiations when:

(a) conditions to call for public tenders do not exist; (b) reasons of security are involved; (c) sufficient sources of supply are not available; (d) there is military urgency; (e) delivery must be made in an isolated district or community; (f) the needs are so great that the usual sources of supply would be overloaded.

LEGAL PAYMENTS, C.M.H.C. OFFICE, FORT WILLIAM, ONT.

What were the total fees paid for each year since 1958 by the C.M.H.C. office in Fort William to each lawyer who was engaged for work relating to title search and preparation of mortgages covering direct loans made by C.M.H.C. under the N.H.A.?

Mr. Garland: Under normal mortgage practice, legal fees in connection with arranging of the mortgage are paid by the borrowers, and not by the lender. C.M.H.C. follows this general practice and, therefore, has no necessary records of the amount paid by borrowers.

4. What is done with the insurance fund in terms of how it is invested and its fluidity?

CONVERSATIONS RESPECTING TELEVISION STATION, NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 471—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has the Secretary of State or any other member of the ministry held conversations of any kind since April 8 with Mr. Don Jameson of CJON-TV Newfoundland regarding the intention of the C.B.C. to establish a T.V. outlet in Newfoundland?

2. If so, what representations did Mr. Jameson make regarding the C.B.C. venture in terms of enthusiasm or objection to the proposal?

3. Did Mr. Jameson ask specifically that this project not be proceeded with and, if so, what reply was given him?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I propose to answer this question orally but before doing so I should like to raise a question of order because I would not wish my answer in this particular case to constitute a precedent.

I have always understood that questions on the order paper were for the purpose of seeking information about the administration for which the minister is responsible to parliament and did not extend to private conversations the minister may have had with private individuals.

Having made that reservation of the principle, sir, I wish to give voluntarily the following answer.

I have had one or two conversations with Mr. Jameson both before and after April 8 in which the application of the C.B.C. to establish a television outlet in Newfoundland was discussed. Mr. Jameson never asked that the project not be proceeded with and, in fact, he told me that he believed that it was desirable to have alternative television programs available in St. John's.

SUNFLOWER SEED SUPPORT PRICE

Question No. 475—Mr. Jorgenson:

*POLITICAL BROADCAST ON ELECTION DAY, STATION CKAC

Question No. 478—Mr. Valade:

Questions

1. Was an article of a political nature read over station CKAC on April 8, 1963, that is on the regular polling day, and, if so, what was said in this article?

2. Was a protest made to the B.B.G. in this connection and, if so, by whom?

3. Is the government of the opinion that the incident constitutes a violation of the Broadcasting Regulations or of the Elections Act, 1962 (or of both)?

4. What disciplinary measures is the B.B.G. in a position to take against station CKAC with regard to this matter; has the government called the B.B.G. to account about it and, if so, what explanations were received?

5. If not, is it the intention of the government to ask for a report on the matter?

6. Has the B.B.G. investigated the incident and, if so, when and what was the B.B.G.'s decision?

7. If not, when does the B.B.G. intend to look into the matter?

Mr. Pickersgill: The B.B.G. advises that the answers to questions 1 and 2 are as follows:

1. Yes. The text of the article is attached.

2. Yes, a telephone call from le Siege Social, l'Association du Crédit Social du Canada, Montréal; a telegram from Rod Bourdages, le Parti Progressiste Conservateur, Montréal; a telegram from Georges Valade, Candidat, Progressiste-Conservateur, Comté Montréal, Ste. Marie, P.Q.

3. This is a request for a legal opinion which it is not customary to provide in answer to a question.

4. The B.B.G. advises that it could take action in two ways; first, a suspension of licence under section 15 of the Broadcasting Act and, second, by summary conviction under section 18 of the Broadcasting Act. Under section 15 a suspension of licence could be for a maximum period of three months. Under section 18, the maximum sanction for a summary conviction offence is a fine of $500 or imprisonment for six months or both. The government has not called the B.B.G. to account on this matter, and therefore no explanations have been received from the board.

5. This is a matter for the B.B.G., not the government.

6. I am informed that the B.B.G. has investigated the incident but has not yet made a decision on any course of action to be taken.

7. This question is not applicable as the board has investigated the incident.

The fate of French Canada

When he has considered all other problems which made the headlines during the election campaign, the Quebec voter is bound to ask: "What fate do the various parties calling on me to vote for them reserve for French Canada?"

It was noticed during the campaign which is now almost over that more than ever the people of Quebec are concerned over the great problems of Canada. Despite the importance of provincial matters and the passionate concern they arouse, despite the separatist upheaval which tends to concentrate attention on the sole interests of our group, public opinion in Quebec has just the same shown an increased curiosity and interest in matters of Canadian scope, such as nuclear arms, unemployment and economic planning.

What must be emphasized, however, is that the vast majority of French Canadians never will accept any solution where the bicultural character of Canada is overlooked, no matter how beneficial or immediately practical the solution might be. When we are fighting for a truly bicultural Canada, it is to ensure our very existence and collective development. And there is nothing to be gained, no reasonable compensation to be had in return which can justify a people to surrender those values.

Therefore, just before going to the polls, we must ask ourselves what promise and what dangers the coming election holds in store for us in that regard. The answer is not simple, far from it. One has the impression that the programs and positions of the respective parties give reason both for greater hopes and greater fears than ever for the French Canadians.

Let us look at the theoretical program and the concrete position of each party before the cultural reality of Canada.

There is no doubt that the Conservatives show, in this respect, the strangest contradictions. Never, in my opinion, has Mr. Diefenbaker managed to utter one convincing word on that question. One feels that neither the prime minister nor his ministers have ever given it much thought. When they are asked for their opinion, they are almost proud of the fact that they have nothing to say on that matter. They waste no time in stating that the Conservative government has taken positive action instead of being satisfied with idle talk. And when they mention the measures taken by the Conservatives with regard to provincial autonomy, they are convincing. But when they start talking about bilingual cheques, simultaneous translation in parliament and other trifles of the same kind, one has the impression that they are fifty years behind the times.

If, in addition, we keep in mind that Mr. Diefenbaker has never succeeded in five years in ensuring within the cabinet an appropriate French Canadian representation, there is definitely more cause for concern than for hope.

As for Social Crediters, they use every means to play up the Quebec issue. It is unquestionable that their presence in Ottawa has put French Canada in the limelight. Have they conveyed a faithful picture of us, however? Have they strengthened the moral stature of Quebec throughout Canada? I do not think so. That we should suddenly become the champions of an untenable monetary policy could not, in my opinion, prove beneficial in any way to the situation of French Canadians within confederation, even though the supporters of such a doctrine make a lot of fuss over nationalism.

The positions taken by the Liberal party and the N.D.P. are obviously clearer and more progressive. They open up more encouraging vistas for the future. To repeat, both parties have adopted platforms which, if carried out, will constitute an important step towards the achievement of true equality between the two cultures in Canada. Only ten years ago, the Liberal party and the N.D.P. would have been strongly against such programs.

Naturally, certain separatist tendencies of the Quebec wing of the N.D.P. are a source of concern. On the other hand, it is to be feared that the Liberals might shelve their program after the election. However, on the eve of the election, if all other considerations but that one were to be forgotten (God forbid!) it is most certainly with the N.D.P. or the Liberal party that we stand the best chance to improve the lot of French Canada within the next four years.

Questions

QUORUM OF FEDERAL CABINET

Question No. 578—Mr. Mather:

What is the required quorum, if any, to constitute a meeting of the federal cabinet?

Mr. Davis: The cabinet is an informal body which discusses and decides questions of policy. Its organization and procedures are nowhere prescribed by law, but are matters for its own determination and are not normally disclosed. In its composition, however, the cabinet is identical with the committee of the privy council which exercises the right of the privy council for Canada "to aid and advise in the government of Canada" under section 11 of the British North America Act, 1867. It is the committee, then, and not the cabinet as such, which formally tenders advice to the Governor General when action by the governor in council is required. It has been the custom for many years that the committee of the council does not advise the Governor General to approve an order in council without the presence or concurrence of at least four ministers. This practice originated in the Queen's instructions to the Governor General at the time of confederation.

An order in council of 25th October, 1935, P.C. 3374, which has not since been varied or rescinded, states that "the quorum of the council being four, no submission for approval to the Governor General can be made with a less number than the quorum". This does not apply, however, to the deliberations and decisions of the cabinet as such, when it is not acting in its formal character as the committee.

Certain actions are taken by the Governor General, such as the appointment of ministers and the dissolution of parliament, on the basis of advice tendered by the Prime Minister alone, and no question of a quorum arises in such circumstances. It should be noted that the letters patent approved by the King in September 1947, and in effect since October of that year, constituting the office of Governor General of Canada state in paragraph II:

And we do hereby authorize and empower our Governor General, with the advice of our privy council for Canada or of any members thereof or individually, as the case requires, to exercise all powers and authorities lawfully belonging to us in respect of Canada, and for greater certainty but not so as to restrict the generality of the foregoing to do and execute, in the manner aforesaid, all things that may belong to his office and to the trust we have reposed in him according to the several powers and authorities granted or appointed him by virtue of The British North America Acts, 1867 to 1946 and the powers and authorities hereinafter conferred in these letters patent and in such commission as may be issued to him under our Great Seal of Canada and under such laws as are or may hereinafter be in force in Canada.

[Mr. Haidasz.]

OUTSIDE ASSISTANCE—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan), that the house be adjourned to discuss a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the admission by the Minister of Finance on Friday, June 14 of facts relating to the preparation of the budget, which facts constitute a flagrant departure from constitutional budgetary practice, imperil the traditional and essential secrecy of the budget, and which have had an unsettling effect on this house and on the country.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair would appreciate any comments any individual member would care to offer by way of assistance in arriving at a decision.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member for Peace River would like to speak first.

Mr. Baldwin: No, I would be quite happy to follow the Secretary of State.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Well, Mr. Speaker, I may say at the outset that the government is ready, and indeed is in every way willing, to have the matter referred to in the notice of motion debated, and debated just as early as the house wants to have it debated. I indicated on—

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I might be permitted to proceed, Mr. Speaker. I indicated on Friday that I was in complete agreement with what was said by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, and that there would be no effort on the part of the government to prevent the fullest possible debate on this matter at an appropriate time.

At six o'clock on Friday evening when I was asked the business of the house for today and the rest of this week, I indicated that the budget debate would begin on Wednesday, and no exception was taken to that order of business which was prescribed. However, if it is felt that this matter should be debated today, I want to say right here and now that the government is only too ready to have the budget debate begin this afternoon—

Mr. Diefenbaker: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: —since the matter to which the motion refers deals directly with the budget, and since the budget debate would provide an opportunity for the house to pronounce itself on the matter. The government would be very ready indeed to have this procedure followed if it meets with the wishes of hon. members.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, standing order 26 provides for debate of matters concerning which there is urgency of debate. I submit that even before we debate the budget that has been presented to the house, there is urgency of debating the circumstances under which this budget was prepared.

I submit that the Secretary of State is trying to lead us down the garden path when he suggests that we should start debating the budget and that in the course of that debate we could deal with the particular matter covered in the motion presented by the leader of the official opposition, a matter concerning which the leader of my party has a similar motion. The Secretary of State knows that if this is left to be discussed in the house of the budget debate then this particular issue, namely the assistance that the Minister of Finance had in the preparation of the budget, will be smothered and spread through the budget debate.

It is this issue that should be debated first, and I submit that the point of privilege raised earlier today by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness) adds to the concern, and to the unsettled condition in this house and in the country, which is referred to in the motion. I submit there should be no confusion between debating this issue, namely the assistance the Minister of Finance had from outside sources and the budget itself. Every argument calls for separating these two issues, and the Secretary of State should not make the suggestion he made just now.

He said that on Friday evening he announced that the debate on the budget would begin on Wednesday and there was no objection to that. But, Mr. Speaker, he knows that announcement was made after agreement among the house leaders of the four parties, and he knows this issue was a completely separate one. He indicated on Friday that the government would not object to debating this particular issue pinpointed by the motion before us, and I suggest that Your Honour should rule on this matter concerning which there is urgency of debate before the house starts the debate on the budget itself.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I want to say I am quite in accord with what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has said. This is a matter which should be treated as a condition precedent to the launching of the budget debate. The announcements which were wrung from the Minister of Finance in this house last Friday are of so grave a nature that the house is entitled to make full inquiry into them, so that before the budget debate is launched next Wednesday we may be in a position to judge, from the results of this debate, the course of action which the house should take.

To the extent that there was implicit in the remarks of the Secretary of State a suggestion that because there is going to be a budget debate on Wednesday we should not now proceed with this matter, which I think involves a question of urgency of debate, I would feel—

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the hon. gentleman would not want to misrepresent what I said. I said the government was quite ready to call the budget debate this afternoon.

An hon. Member: A red herring.

Mr. Baldwin: It is my submission that the gravity of this situation is such that the house should lose no time in launching a debate on this issue now.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the matter which is before us at the present time, I think we must be careful to consider it in the true light of the principle that is involved. I do not think that all the brains in Canada have been funnelled into this house, let alone into the Liberal party, and it seems to me it is not a bad practice to bring in the advice of experts in order to help.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Thompson: However, Mr. Speaker, provided that the oath of secrecy has been taken.

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, we are not dealing with the question of whether this is right or wrong. We are dealing with a particular motion—

Mr. Thompson: Order, please.

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I submit with the greatest respect that the hon. member for Red Deer is discussing the merits of what happened, whether it was right or wrong, and he is not on the point referred to in the motion itself. It is the question of public importance and urgency that is before the Chair at the present time, and I suggest with the greatest respect that the leader of the Social Credit party be brought to order.

Mr. Thompson: This is the very thing I am talking about, whether or not this is an urgent matter, and it is my opinion that so long as these precautions have been taken then the practice which has been followed is a good one in principle. However—

Mr. Knowles: I rise on a point of order. Mr. Speaker, what you have asked for is that hon. members contribute on the question as to whether this matter should be debated now. What is being discussed at this point is a point of order, and not the substance of the issue itself.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, with due respect to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that is the very thing I am getting to.

Mr. Nowlan: No, it is not.

Mr. Thompson: In our opinion this is not a matter of urgent importance and it should be dealt with in due course, as it has been agreed by the government that it will be. Therefore it is not a matter of immediate importance now.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in dealing with this request for leave to set aside the normal business of the house to deal with the matter raised by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, it has been made clear very frequently that it is one issue and one issue only that must be dealt with by Your Honour, and that is stated in Beauchesne's fourth edition in citation 100, which I will read:

"Urgency" within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but it means "urgency of debate", when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the house do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.

We have had other occasions when former Speakers have elaborated upon that basic citation. May I refer to comments made by His Honour the Speaker on Wednesday, February 18, 1959, as reported at page 1133 of Hansard:

The question that concerns me is whether there will be an opportunity to discuss this important matter, such that we do not need to interrupt the proceedings to deal with it today,—

The request being made, Mr. Speaker, is that the ordinary proceedings of the house be set aside and that resort be had to a very extraordinary device under standing order 26. Normally it might be argued that opportunities are not available to discuss this important matter, and that therefore it would be justifiable to ask that the normal proceedings be set aside. It is accepted that the government normally is in charge of the agenda for the house, and the leader of the house has just stated that the budget debate can be brought forward today to provide an opportunity to discuss this matter.

In the light of the information conveyed by the house leader it seems to me unnecessary to have resort to this extraordinary device and that Your Honour, armed with the knowledge that the budget debate can be brought on today, has very little latitude in determining the matter of urgency because an ordinary opportunity for dealing with this matter can be provided this afternoon.

It would seem to me that this procedure ought to appeal to hon. gentlemen opposite because it will enable them, if they so wish, to place a motion before the house as an amendment and have the matter finally disposed of in the way the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said it ought to be disposed of. Any debate under standing order 26 would be inconclusive, and no final determination could be made of the issue itself.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Minister of Labour has himself given the best reason for this debate proceeding now, namely the urgency of the subject matter of the motion. The budget was presented here on Thursday night. On Friday it was made clear that three individuals, while on the payroll of investment companies in the city of Toronto, were privy to all the documents—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Douglas: —connected with the budget itself. Then today it has been made clear that a firm with which the Minister of Finance was formerly associated sent out a 25 page summary of the budget which arrived in the city of Calgary the morning after the budget was delivered. Surely if there is anything urgent it is that public confidence should be restored in the government and in the Department of Finance with the least possible delay. Surely there is nothing more urgent than that this matter, which has caused a good deal of concern and distress across the country—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Douglas: —ought to be dealt with, and dealt with properly.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Douglas: Those who say no have only to look at a good Liberal newspaper like the Toronto Star—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Douglas: —which has made it very clear that the public is concerned about this subject.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, hon. gentlemen applauded when the hon. gentleman from Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) objected to the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson)—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Pickersgill: —debating the substance rather than the question of urgency, and it seems to me the same principle should also apply to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. What we are now considering is not whether the subject is urgent in itself, but whether there is urgency of debate.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the point I am making.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Douglas: This is a matter which ought to be debated with the least possible delay, and to wait until there is a general debate on the budget is to leave the public, the people of Canada, and this house in a state of uncertainty; it is to leave the Minister of Finance in a position where he has no opportunity to clear up some of the matters that were raised by the hon. member for Calgary North. I submit that there is urgency of debate; that there is nothing more urgent than that this matter be dealt with, and dealt with today, so the Canadian people may hear whatever explanation the minister has to make regarding this matter.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the point of urgency of debate to which my hon. friend has just referred, may I suggest very respectfully that Your Honour give your ruling, and if your ruling is adverse—as in my view it should be, under the rules—we will, right after the orders of the day, go on to the budget debate and there will be no delay of any kind.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lambert: That is a real red herring.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, that is the very point I wish to raise as to the urgency of debate. As has been said, the budget came down Thursday night, and on Friday there was an agreement worked out among the various leaders of the parties in this house that the budget debate would be resumed on Wednesday. That is a short enough period for preparation for a debate on the budget. If one goes back through the years one sees that usually that number of days, if not more, has elapsed before a budget debate has taken place.

The house leader was the one who, after consulting the leaders of the other parties, suggested this course, and it would have worked out. Now this afternoon the house leader is suggesting that we should short circuit the agreement that has been made in this respect; that we should begin immediately a budget debate. If we are going to change the program which has been laid down after consultation among the house leaders; if we are going to shorten the time for the preparation of a debate on the budget by this device, I suggest to Your Honour that this is the very best argument in the world as to the urgency of debate, and therefore you should accept the motion which has been made before you this afternoon.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might say a word.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I hope I will have the same attention that we on this side of the house have given to hon. members on the other side. The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings has said, quite rightly, that the program prescribed for today and this week was agreed to among the parties in the house. That is quite true. But I did suggest today—and I did not say that the government was going to impose this or seek to impose it on the house—that if the house was agreeable, and if this matter was deemed to be an urgent matter to be debated, we could debate it on the budget this afternoon. I repeat that statement, that if hon. members opposite consider this to be an urgent matter to be debated today, rather than on Wednesday, the government is only too ready to bring on the budget debate so that it can be debated.

What I rose particularly to point out was that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said I knew perfectly well that in the budget debate this matter would get mixed up with all kinds of other questions and there would be no way of getting it clearly resolved. Well, there is no way of getting it clearly resolved by having a debate under standing order 26, because such a debate would lead to no conclusion whatsoever. But if hon. gentlemen sincerely regard this matter as important, as they say they do, surely this should be the subject of an amendment, as my hon. friend the Minister of Labour correctly pointed out, which would bring it into focus and allow the house to reach a decision on the matter which hon. members profess to want.

The government is making an offer to the house, not only to have the debate begin today but to have it begun in a way which will lead to a determination by a vote of the house tomorrow, under the rules. That is the position taken by the government.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, in replying to the Secretary of State, I think he has missed the most important point when dealing with the question of urgency of debate. There are two points here. First of all, there is the question of secrecy, which might lead to some indiscretion and from which very important results could follow. In the second place, the debate on the budget is primarily a debate on the contents of the budget. We had only to hear what the hon. member for Calgary North had to say to realize there may be some indiscretion. If, as a result of the debate, some indiscretion followed, serious ramifications might ensue. I say this is a distinct and separate fact which should be debated before we proceed to debate the budget itself.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): I have just one word to say on this point of order. I think we are all in agreement that the motion conforms with the rules and precedents which this house has to follow. The only aspect which has led to discussion is whether or not there is urgency for immediate debate. I submit that the Secretary of State has himself clearly established that there is such urgency. He has done so by offering to change the entire schedule of the business of the house for this week, bringing the budget debate forward from Wednesday to today because he deems there is urgency attached to this matter.

If there is urgency of debate, the motion which has been proposed by the Leader of the Opposition is entirely within the rules, and that is the only aspect of this question which has led to any discussion. The Secretary of State has said, in effect, that this is an urgent matter and one which must be debated immediately by bringing the budget debate forward. In these circumstances I say the motion should be granted.

Mr. Knowles: I regret it, but I simply cannot let the Secretary of State get away with this show of magnanimity when he offers us the budget debate for today. Last Thursday night, after the budget presentation had been made and after the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings had spoken briefly, the leader of the house was asked what the business would be for the next day and when the budget debate would be resumed. He said, as recorded in Hansard at page 1032:

> I would prefer to confer with hon. gentlemen opposite before announcing when the budget debate will resume or what will be the program for next week.

The hon. gentleman knows, and he has freely admitted it, that the representatives of the four parties met on Friday to discuss this matter and that it was at his request, on behalf of the government, that we postponed the budget debate until Wednesday in order that the government might proceed with legislation on Monday and Tuesday. It was at the request of the government that the budget debate was delayed and, accordingly, those on the opposition side of the house who had to prepare speeches on the contents of the budget governed themselves accordingly. For the Secretary of State to suggest now that the budget debate should start today, and that the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, the hon. member for Red Deer, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands and others should be ready now to debate the contents of the budget is, I suggest, not so magnanimous an offer as the hon. gentleman and his colleagues make it out to be.

On the question of urgency of discussion, I maintain we are entitled to know the kind of assistance which was given in the preparation of the budget—an answer to the question "whose budget is it?"—before we resume the debate on the budget itself. The Secretary of State said that if we want to discuss the kind of motion which would deal with this matter we should welcome the debate on the budget being brought forward in order that the appropriate amendment might be made. I suggest that before anyone could decide whether an amendment of that sort ought to be made we should have the debate we are asking for today, so that we might find out what the situation is in this respect. The Minister of Labour, among others, has told us that if there were a debate today on a motion under the terms of standing order 26, it would not decide anything. By virtue of that fact, that it would not decide anything of substance, it would be open to the house if it wished to put down an amendment of substance when the budget comes up.

But before the house is asked to decide whether such an amendment should be moved, we ought to have a debate along the lines of the one we are now seeking in order that the Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister and other members of the house could get this point cleared up. This is in the same category as the motion moved by the Liberals on January 31, when there was clearly a case for urgency of debate. This whole situation should be cleared up before we get into a debate on the budget itself and I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear what your ruling should be.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): The Minister of Labour mentioned that this was an extraordinary device. I am going to agree with him immediately but I should like you to consider, when you are preparing your ruling, Mr. Speaker, that if this is an extraordinary device, what we are dealing with is an extraordinary departure from the practices of this house.

Mr. Speaker: I should like to thank hon. members for helping me with brief statements on the question of urgency under this standing order. The matter is a very important one, we all recognize that; but may I also say in passing that it is not the duty of the Chair, as I understand it, to give lectures in procedure but to decide matters as they arise. I do want, once again, to thank hon. members for helping me come to a conclusion.

After reading the Hansard report of the discussion relating to this question which took place last Friday afternoon, and listening to the remarks made this afternoon, it would seem to me that no agreement has been reached to the effect that a discussion on this matter would take place today. Therefore, in the absence of any agreement, it is my duty to deal with this request in the ordinary manner.

According to section (3) of standing order 26, when a written statement of the matter proposed to be discussed is handed to the Speaker, he reads it out if he thinks it is in order and of urgent importance.

As hon. members know, it is well established in our practice that "urgency" within rule 26 does not apply to the matter itself but it means "urgency of debate".

Paragraph 3 of citation 100, Beauchesne's fourth edition reads as follows:

> "Urgency" within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but it means "urgency of debate", when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the house do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.

As long ago as March 31, 1931, Mr. Speaker Black stated:

> The reason for allowing such a motion is to afford members an opportunity of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance which they could do in no other way.

The matter proposed to be discussed today relates to the budget. As reported at page 1208 of Hansard of last Friday, the hon. Secretary of State announced that the budget debate would begin next Wednesday and that it was proposed that it should continue until completed.

When the budget debate is under way, it would seem to me that any question including any or all of the circumstances relating to the machinery followed in the preparation of the budget proposals would come within the ambit of debate. I suggest that it could not be otherwise.

In effect, then, there is a period of 48 hours between now and Wednesday—the period of ordinary notice as prescribed by standing order 41—before the rules and practice of the house will provide an opportunity to discuss every question relating to the preparation, presentation and/or implementation of the budget.

Under these circumstances, I must regretfully inform the house that I do not think that the hon. member's request is a matter of urgency of debate today within the meaning of standing order 26.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Douglas: I must regretfully appeal from your ruling.

Mr. Speaker: Before the ruling is appealed, may I make one further short comment. My predecessors have many times in the past expressed the view that there is no appeal of a decision taken by the Speaker under standing order 26.

In this regard, I refer hon. members to a ruling made by my immediate predecessor on January 31, 1963, which appears at page 3297 of Hansard. Therefore, I am making a similar ruling.

Mr. Knowles: That ruling to which you have just referred, Mr. Speaker, was reversed by a vote of the house, and I submit that a decision of the house stands over the decision which was made by Mr. Speaker Lambert.

Mr. Speaker: The house has heard the decision of the Chair, and the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam now appeals that decision. Those in favour of sustaining the decision of the Chair will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those against will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

> The question is an appeal to the house from the ruling of the Chair. The right hon. Leader of the Opposition, having asked leave to move the adjournment of the house to discuss a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely, the admission by the Minister of Finance on Friday, June 14, of facts relating to the preparation of the budget, which facts constitute a flagrant departure from constitutional budgetary practice, imperil the traditional and essential secrecy of the budget, and which have had an unsettling effect on this house and on the country.
> The Chair decided that in his opinion the proposal was not a matter of urgency of debate as understood under the terms of standing order 26 as the said proposal could be discussed and voted upon during the budget debate which will be under way on Wednesday next.
> Whereupon the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam appealed to the house from the decision of the Chair.
> The Chair then stated that his predecessors had on many occasions decided that there could not be an appeal to the house under such circumstances and referred to a precedent to be found in Hansard for January 31, 1963 at page 3297.
> Whereupon the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre raised a point of order to the effect that the Speaker's decision on the 31st of January, 1963 had been appealed and reversed.

The house divided on the question: Shall the Speaker's decision be sustained? And the decision of the Chair was sustained on the following division:

During the taking of the vote:

(Translation):

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Since you read the motion in English, I did not quite understand what it was all about.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but there is no question of privilege when the vote is being taken.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I merely wanted to know on what matter we were called to vote.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: The question has been put and the vote is in progress. The hon. member will have to wait until after the vote is taken.

After the taking of the vote:

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I was paired with the hon. member for Fort William Had I voted, I would have voted nay.

Mr. Nesbitt: I was paired with the hon member for Dollard. Had I voted, I would have voted against sustaining Your Honour's ruling.

Mr. Nicholson: I was paired with the hon member for Okanagan Boundary. Had I voted, I would have voted to sustain Your Honour's ruling.

Miss Jewett: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Stenson). Had I voted I would have voted to sustain your ruling.

Mr. Cashin: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). Had I voted I would have voted to sustain your ruling.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the Postmaster General (Mr. Denis). Had I voted, I would have voted against the decision.

Mr. Chretien: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere (Mr. Paul). Had I voted, I would have voted for the upholding of the decision.

(Text):

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I was paired with the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Granger). Had I voted, I would have voted against Your Honour's ruling.

Mr. Roxburgh: I should like to ask Your Honour's permission to speak to a point of privilege. I did not realize I was paired when I voted, and I want to bring that to the attention of the house. I was paired with the hon. member for Regina. I certainly express my sincere regret in the matter.

Mr. Pearson: Before the orders of the day are called may I state that a proposal has been made to the effect that if the house so desired the order of business could be changed to permit a discussion of the matter which has been under consideration now for some time, and which is considered serious and urgent by so many. This discussion can be agreed to for this afternoon.

Mr. Diefenbaker: So far as the Prime Minister is concerned, he had no right to speak at all at this time. However, since he has been allowed to speak may I say that when an offer such as this is made one can fully understand the reason for it. We gave the government every opportunity, and it refused to allow this very serious matter to be discussed today. The Prime Minister cannot get out of it now by this explanation.

Mr. Pearson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman said that the decision was made by the government as to whether this should be debated under the rules. Mr. Speaker, of course the decision was made by you.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ORAL ANSWER TO QUESTION NOT STARRED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called I want to rise on a point of order. The Secretary of State today in answering question No. 471, which was not starred, did so orally. The rules do not provide for an oral answer to a written question unless it is starred. Rule 39(2) states that the answer shall be handed to the Clerk.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Aiken: I am raising the point in spite of some objections from hon. members across the way because there should have been unanimous consent of the house before such a procedure was followed. I think that we departed basically from a practice for other than straightforward purposes. I suggest the answer might have been properly given, but it was not in accordance with the rules. I am not making any motion, but I am raising the question now before orders of the day are called, so that there will be no suggestion I concurred in this particular procedure.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Since the hon. gentleman has raised the point I am sure if he would peruse the records of parliament he would find many occasions when questions that were not starred were answered orally, and it seems to me there is no doubt both the practice and the rule have been that when a minister wishes to give an oral answer he is perfectly free to do so. But there is no obligation to give an oral answer unless the hon. member asking the question puts an asterisk before it, and then the minister does have an obligation to answer orally. I believe that will be found to be the practice.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think the record should be set very clear. Rule 39(2)(b) states:

> If a member does not distinguish his question by an asterisk, the minister to whom the question is addressed hands the answer to the Clerk of the House who causes it to be printed in the official reports of the debates.

That is the rule and the practice that has been followed in the past.

THE BUDGET

METHOD OF APPOINTMENT OF OUTSIDE CONSULTANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the clear and express provision in section 5(2) of the Financial Administration Act that the treasury board does not have powers of appointment, will he explain how the gentlemen who were named the other day were appointed temporarily to the Department of Finance by action of the treasury board?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the minutes of the treasury board are submitted to council and passed by council, and that gives them the authority that the hon. gentleman asked for.

Mr. Knowles: As a supplementary question—

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance respecting the matter of urgency—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Knowles: In view of the fact that the information I was able to obtain this morning was that there was no order in council approving these appointments, can the minister say when an order in council was passed approving them?

Mr. Gordon: In the normal course the treasury board minutes are submitted to the next meeting of council. I will look into it and make sure that took place in this particular instance, but I am informed that it did.

[Later:]

Mr. Knowles: I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Was the minister present at the meeting of treasury board on May 2? Did he know, when he agreed to the minute, that the gentlemen concerned would be privy to the secrets of the budget?

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Knowles: Does the minister not propose to answer my question?

An hon. Member: He doesn't have to.

Mr. Knowles: May I direct a question to the Secretary of State? Was he present at the meeting of treasury board on May 2?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I would not be able to answer the hon. member's question without breaking the privy councillor's oath, and I have no intention of doing so.

[Later:]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister indicate to the house why, when he was giving certain names on Friday, he did not happen to give us the name of Mr. R. J. Anderson, who was also taken into the department for this special work. Could he now give us Mr. Anderson's connections in the same way he gave us the connections of the other three gentlemen?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to do that. On Friday I was asked who had helped with the budget, and there was a good deal of reference to ghost writing and one thing and another. Mr. Anderson came in for a period of nine days to assist with the preparation of the estimates presentation—the figures—and that is all he did. It did not seem to me on Friday that he should be included in the answers to the questions submitted to me. Mr. Anderson is a partner in Clarkson, Gordon and Company of Toronto.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question. Was Mr. Anderson shown a final copy of the budget, as were the other three, before it was presented?

Mr. Gordon: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Herridge: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the minister. Could the minister assure the house that these consultants were Canadian citizens?

Mr. Gordon: To the best of my knowledge they are, Mr. Speaker. They have lived here for many years; but I cannot say in answer to that direct question whether they are or not, without further inquiries. I would be glad to answer that tomorrow.

Mr. Douglas: Can the minister tell us whether Mr. Conway, the doctoral student of Harvard University, is a Canadian citizen?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Conway comes from Vancouver and as far as I know is a Canadian citizen, although I have never actually asked him. My hon. friend the Minister of Forestry tells me he is a Canadian citizen, but I will check that.

Mr. Baldwin: A further supplementary question. Could the Minister of Finance advise the house what is the statutory authority for the administration of an oath of secrecy to the consultants about whom he has advised us?

Mr. Gordon: I am not in a position to give a legal opinion, but I would be glad to make inquiries and answer the question tomorrow.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question, and it is not a facetious one. Could he tell us if any of the three consultants put on contract without salary to help him with the budget were on a similar leave of absence from their own firms between February 6 and April 8 to assist him?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the exact dates.

Mr. Fisher: Between February 6 and April 8.

Mr. Gordon: These gentleman were not helping me at that time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Douglas: Might I ask whether they were helping the prime minister at that time?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the prime minister at that time was the present Leader of the Opposition, and I do not think they were helping him. If they were taking part in an election campaign, then I hope my hon. friend will not think that that would be an inappropriate activity on the part of these gentlemen.

[Later:]

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the Minister of Finance if he has yet been able to ascertain the date and number of any order in council validating the treasury board minutes that presumed to appoint the consultants to whom reference has been made?

Mr. Gordon: I am not certain, but I will try to give an answer to that question tomorrow morning. I have not got the answer as yet. I hope to be able to give a clear reply tomorrow.

[Later:]

(Translation):

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Further to the many questions he has been asked concerning the advisers who, at his request, took part in the preparation of the budget, did the minister also think of seeking advice from somebody from eastern Canada or the province of Quebec, to bring out the autonomist point of view of the province in the budget?

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: We tried to get advice both from within and without the government service that would apply to all parts of Canada.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did the minister ask Mr. Lesage to recommend someone in order to get a more autonomist budget?

(Text):

FINANCE

PROTESTS AGAINST APPLICATION OF SALES TAX TO BUILDING MATERIALS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, and ask him whether he received a communication from the Ontario retail lumber dealers association and also from the greater Windsor homebuilders association protesting against the application of federal sales tax to building materials and pointing out the serious results which will flow from its imposition. If so, is he now giving consideration to withdrawing the measure?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have not personally received those telegrams as yet but I am sure they are in the departmental office and I expect I will receive them later today. At that time I will be able to decide what course of action should be taken.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. J. A. McBain (Elgin): This is a supplementary question to the question put to the Minister of Finance by the Leader of the Opposition a few moments ago. Perhaps the minister would just pay a little attention.

Has the hon. gentleman received a telegram from the Elgin and St. Thomas branch of the national home builders association or telegrams from other home builders across Canada requesting relief on contracts already committed which will be affected by the increased 11 per cent sales tax as imposed in his budget on home builders' supplies?

Mr. Gordon: I must give the same answer, I am afraid. The telegram is probably in the departmental office and I expect to receive it when I am back in my own office. I would point out, though, that in the budget speech I made a clear statement that refunds would be made in all cases where there were fixed contracts.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): A supplementary question. I wonder whether the minister would also take into consideration a telegram which he likely has received from Mr. C. D. Wilson, president of the Calgary householders association, making a similar statement.

Mr. Gordon: I shall be glad to.

[Later:]

Hon. H. J. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Will the minister consider the question of exempting building materials used in the construction of schools and hospitals from the application of the 11 per cent sales tax?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I presume that is the sort of thing that will be discussed during the course of the budget debate.

[Later:]

Mr. Gordon: I was asked some questions this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, concerning telegrams from various builders associations across the country. I should like to say that I have those telegrams and that I hope to be able to reply to all of them tomorrow.

I think one of the misunderstandings, perhaps, has to do with the refund that will be paid under fixed price contracts. I would draw the attention of hon. members who asked these questions to this paragraph in the budget speech:

> The government has considered the possible effects of the removal of sales tax exemptions on firms working under fixed price contracts. Fixed price contracts, are common in the construction industry, and the amounts involved are frequently substantial. Relief will be provided in cases where a manufacturer or contractor is prevented by a contract from including the new tax in his selling price.

This was provided for in section 13 of the resolution under part III of the Excise Tax Act which appears in Votes and Proceedings for Wednesday last.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask a supplementary question? Will this be for contracts entered into prior to June 13?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

UNITED NATIONS

DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING ADMISSION OF EAST AND WEST GERMANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the minister, or any of the officials of his department at the United Nations, had discussions with the representatives of other governments in Ottawa or at the United Nations with respect to the admission of the two German states to the United Nations?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have had no such discussions and I am advised by my officials that they have had no such discussions.

GRAIN

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO $3 PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. It arises out of an omission in the budget of last week. When can the house expect an announcement regarding the government's decision against implementing the Prime Minister's pledge to western grain growers of $3 per bushel for the first 300 bushels of grain delivered in any crop year?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That was a commitment.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a question of policy which, as I have already said, will be announced in due course, a question of policy which was strongly opposed by my hon. friend during the election.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

VANCOUVER—THREATENED STRIKE OF LONGSHOREMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. The minister is, I assume, aware of the fact that the longshoremen's and warehousemen's union in Vancouver voted over the week end in favour of a strike. Would the minister use his good offices to bring about a settlement of the grievances of the union, since a strike on the west coast would hold up all shipments of wheat to China and other Asian countries. This would be a serious blow to the agricultural economy of the three prairie provinces.

Mr. Smallwood: They are not selling any wheat to China.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman's question refers to the dispute I have in mind, and I think it does, I understand that there is some move by the parties to come together today for further discussions, for the purpose of resolving this dispute. I assure the hon. member that the offices of the Department of Labour are standing ready to make their services available at any time if such services might be helpful.

Mr. Rapp: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister is aware, is he, that they voted in favour of a strike?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

REQUEST FOR INTERIM REPORT—REPLACEMENT OF COMMISSIONER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Webster (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the Prime Minister regarding the centennial celebrations. First, when may the house expect a progress report on plans of the national centennial administration, and second, is there any substance to the rumour that John Fisher, commissioner of the centennial administration, may be replaced at an early date?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend the President of the Privy Council, who is dealing with these matters, can answer the questions if Your Honour considers them in order.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): I expect to be in a position to table the commissioners' first annual report before the end of this month. As to the second question, the answer is, of course, in the negative.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HOUSING

WILL SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS EXCEED AMOUNT OF INCENTIVE BONUS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I have a question for the Minister of Labour. On Friday I asked the minister whether the cost of the new 11 per cent sales tax on building materials would exceed the $500 incentive bonus for winter construction. Has the minister had an opportunity to make the calculation?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Upon considering the hon. member's question, it seems to me that assessing the exact impact of any particular tax is the responsibility of the Department of Finance, and in this case particularly Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation would be involved. The question is certainly of a statistical nature and I suggest the hon. member would get fuller information by placing it on the order paper.

AGRICULTURE

REPORTED CRISIS IN DAIRY INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Is the minister aware of the crisis building up within the dairy industry with regard to the smaller take home pay for small farmers? If so, what is he prepared to do about it?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): I am not aware of this information.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): A supplementary question. I have been talking to a number of dairy farmers in the Ottawa valley over the week end and they inform me that if changes are not made in dairy policy they will be going broke and selling their herds. Is the minister prepared to offer a free auction service to all dairy farmers who are forced to go out of business?

Mr. Hays: I should like the house to know that since the new dairy policy has been in effect the price of milk is up by 10 cents a hundred and 29 cents a hundred, higher than it has been for a number of years.

TRADE

POLICIES OF U.S. COMPANIES RESPECTING CANADIAN SUBSIDIARIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. This morning's Globe and Mail under an Ottawa dateline says:

> The Department of Trade and Commerce has quietly shelved plans to question U.S. parent companies about policies governing their Canadian subsidiaries.

In view of the fact that the proposed questionnaire sought the removal of restrictions by United States companies on their Canadian subsidiaries to facilitate the increased sales of Canadian products abroad, will the Minister of Trade and Commerce tell the house why this questionnaire has been dropped?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I should like to thank the hon. gentleman for giving me notice of this question. I also saw the article in the Globe and Mail this morning, and it was news to me. I made inquiries and I found the original report regarding the proposed questionnaire arose from some tentative ideas discussed at the recent export trade promotion conference. No recommendation was made to me as minister, and I understand the officials have decided not to make a recommendation to me for the time being.

I can assure the house, however, that we in the department are always seeking the removal of restrictions imposed by parent United States companies upon their Canadian subsidiaries which in any way limit their exports.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question. May I ask the minister if he shares the feeling of his officials that this questionnaire should be dropped?

Mr. Sharp: Until the item appeared in the paper I had not heard of the proposed questionnaire. I intend to have some discussions with my officials, but I wish to make it clear that no decision which was made has been reversed in any way. This matter is under consideration among the officials and they have not yet brought it to my attention.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

D.E.W. LINE—DISMISSAL OF CANADIAN EMPLOYEES BY U.S. COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Can the United States company operating the D.E.W. line dismiss Canadian personnel on 24 hours notice because they refuse to accept a unilateral pay cut imposed by the company? I should also like to ask whether, in such a case, the company has authority to fly these people out by Department of Transport planes to a city like Winnipeg, where they are deposited with little money although the company may owe them anything from $500 to $1,000 in back wages?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): The form in which the hon. member has put his question is hypothetical and I cannot answer it according to the way in which he has worded it. However, I have been aware as of Thursday last that trouble has arisen between the company operating the D.E.W. line and the Canadian civilian personnel. On inquiring I have found that according to an exchange of notes between Canada and the United States, the relationship between the United States company and Canadian civilian personnel is established under the authority of the Department of Labour. I understand that my colleague the Minister of Labour has had a complete investigation made into this matter.

Mr. Orlikow: I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. Is he aware that this difficulty has arisen because of the demand of the workers there to join a union, and that part of the reason for their dismissal is their union activity?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I should like to have more information on this particular matter before replying on that aspect of the question. I realize that part of the difficulty stems from a proposed change in the wage rates by the company concerned. These rates must, in the ordinary course of events, be approved by the Department of Labour. I can assure the hon. member that the fair wages legislation will be applied in this particular case.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON THREATS FROM MANNED BOMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gene Rheaume (Northwest Territories): My question is directed to the Minister of National Defence and it relates to information that has been elicited from the minister and his colleagues during the past two weeks about the phasing out of United States air force strategic air command bases at Frobisher Bay, Northwest Territories, Churchill, Manitoba and the possible closure of some or all of the distant early warning radar installations. Has the minister anything to tell the house at this time about Canada's defence posture in the face of the obviously diminishing threat of attack by manned enemy aircraft?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I have nothing further that I could add on orders of the day, particularly at this late hour of the evening. I will be glad to go into a full discussion of this matter when the defence committee meets, if that is their wish.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions.

FAMILY ALLOWANCE ACT

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO DOUBLE RATE OF PAYMENT, ETC.

Mr. Speaker: Before calling on the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Belanger) to speak, may I suggest to him that he consider amending his motion to read:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government—

—and these are the words I would suggest——should consider the advisability of amending—etc., rather than

—should amend—

I suggest this, because in its present form it is almost in the form of an order.

Mr. L. P. Antoine Belanger (Charlevoix): I will accept that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Belanger moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Family Allowance Act to provide:

(a) for the doubling of the present rate at which family allowances are paid;

(b) for the payment of allowances up to the age of 20 years if recipients continue their studies;

(c) for an increase in allowances after age 20 if the recipient goes to university and to be, in effect, an anticipated salary during university attendance.

(Translation):

He said: Mr. Speaker, I took it upon myself to submit this notice of motion, because I believe that it is not only very important, but of extreme urgency. On the other hand, I think I shall find much goodwill among the Liberal members, as family allowances were part of their platform in the last general election. I trust that they will be only too happy at the opportunity I am giving them of voting for the fulfilment of their promises. Indeed, they are boasting, and rightly so, of having initiated that legislation. That is another argument against letting those allowances become inefficient.

On the other hand, the Conservatives who were in opposition in 1944, when the legislation was enacted, all voted in favour of it and they too seemed to give their entire support to the basic principles of the measure. Those principles were very ably expounded by the Right Hon. Mackenzie King himself, as can be seen on page 5538 of Hansard dated July 28, 1944, and I shall quote his very words, because I agree with the principles he announced at that time:

> By the measure on family allowances before this House of Commons today, we are seeking to further the law of peace, work and health.

It also should be said that the legislation was intended to cope with what actually was a social emergency; it had been shown up by the 1941 census, when it was discovered that 84 per cent of all children under 16 were dependant on only 19 per cent of the gainfully employed. And I have no reason to doubt that this percentage has changed now.

No better argument could be found in favour of legislation whose object was to provide our future citizens with care, food, clothes and adequate housing, as well as other necessities of life. As I said, I have no reason to believe that conditions are very much changed today and that the reasons which were valid at that time are no longer so, because those allowances have lost about half their value.

During that same speech he made on July 28, 1944 and quoting the great Pasteur, Mr. Mackenzie King stated:

> —two contrary laws seem to be wrestling with each other nowadays: the one, a law of blood and of death, ever imagining new means of destruction, and forcing nations to be constantly ready for the battlefield—the other, a law of peace, work, and health, ever evolving new means of delivering man from the scourges which beset him. Which of these two laws shall ultimately prevail, God alone knows.

I think this is an opportunity for hon. members to show which of these two laws they favour.

Another reason to ask for a raise of family allowances is provided to us by the Right Hon. Mackenzie King himself when he stated, again in the same speech:

> It starts with the natural resources which have been the gift of the Creator to mankind. The natural resources of any country have not been given to individuals; they have been given to the entire community, to the entire people. That, I think, we must realize as a fundamental truth, and all our efforts at the improvement of social and industrial conditions must be based upon that knowledge. But what has come to be the accepted view as we have developed the institution of private property? Not industry as existing for the good of all—but industry as a means of private profit and gain. Are we then to throw aside all belief in the nature of private property because of some evils which have grown out of that system? Before we do so, we would do well to examine the position of private property as to what it means in the way of initiative, in development of resources and making them available for service and use, what it may also mean in the betterment of the masses.

Of course, I could quote many more passages from that speech in favour of family allowances but I shall merely read another paragraph because it disposes of the objections which could be put forward against the proposal now before the house. Indeed, Mr. Mackenzie King stated:

> My own belief is that the measure itself is going to create so much in the way of employment that the national income will be so increased that we shall find it possible not only to have this class of social enactment self sustaining but be able as a consequence to have as well a reduction of debt and taxation.

Those are words which could fill with joy the heart of a good Social Crediter and would have no false ring in the mouth of our leader.

As for the Conservatives, I should like to recall what was their stand on that matter when this legislation was passed.

Mr. Diefenbaker rising in his place, as reported on page 5460 of Hansard for July 27, 1944 said:

> With the objective provided for in this bill, there can be no disagreement; for if I understand it aright it means that through this measure an endeavour will be made to achieve equal opportunity, particularly for those in the lower income brackets, and to give many who today are denied freedom from fear and freedom from want the hope of something better in the future than this world and this country have seen before.

And further on, he quotes the report of the national resources development for 1943 which was placed before the president of the United States in January of that year. The report said:

> There must be the fullest possible development of the human personality, in relation to the common good, in a framework of freedom and rights, of justice, liberty and equality and the consent of the governed, as the means of protecting justice, freedom and democracy.

We, in the parliaments of the empire, must recognize that the state must guarantee and underwrite equal access to security, to education, to nutrition and to health for all.

Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as all those reasons I quoted as given by those hon. gentlemen were true and accurate in 1944, they are still true and accurate today for the simple reason that after creating family allowances, we have not been cautious enough to upgrade them gradually to cope with the cost of living which continued to rise and is still rising nowadays. Furthermore, when we talk about doubling those allowances, we are not exaggerating, since countries much poorer than Canada, countries like France, for instance, actually give twice as much as we do.

In other words, due to inflation born of the present system, which is not a Social Credit system, family allowances have lost more than half their purchasing power; consequently they render slightly less than half the services they were meant to render, services we boasted about so much in 1944.

This is why, to widen their scope and to give them their true meaning, we first of all suggest that the present family allowances be doubled, in order to permit young people of this country who have the necessary aptitudes to go through the primary and high school systems and we suggest that family allowances be paid until age 20, provided the recipients stay in school and that after age 20, should our future citizens attend university, that they be paid an allowance in order that they may be enabled to attend university without always having to wonder what their parents are denying themselves and the other children in the family to enable them to stay in school. This would equalize opportunities for children of large families and others. This would also give our country an opportunity to take advantage of the many talents lost from day to day because parents do not have the means to keep their children at school, for everyone knows that children with the required intelligence and qualifications to benefit from higher education are not found solely in wealthy families.

It is for all the reasons I have already mentioned that I have the right to expect support from the two old line parties in this house, for I refuse to believe that the government will dare to break its word and try to shirk its responsibilities to the children of this country. To do that, it would have to go back on its word and prove disloyal to the memory of its most revered leaders, the Hon. Mr. King and the Hon. Mr. St. Laurent. That would be especially true in the case of the latter who, during the last years he was active in politics, had managed to become known as the great protector of Canadian children, so much so that in Quebec he is still called Uncle Louis.

It is hard to understand why the two old line parties have been so picayune in the matter of family allowances. They have recognized, up to a certain point at least, the principle that all social legislation should be geared to the cost of living. That principle is generally accepted in industry and it is even considered natural that salaries should be geared to the cost of living.

But as far as family allowances are concerned, practically nothing has been done. Would it be that powerful secret forces are opposed to it because it would be to their advantage to destroy that main cell of the life of our nation which is the family? And please let us not hear again the old argument to the effect that we have no money, because there are many more appropriate areas where we could save for example, the field of nuclear weapons which will be obsolete in a year or two, and even the whole defence system where the Glassco report shows us cases of extensive and important waste.

I hope that members of all parties will vote for this motion so as to put a stop to what is said about them among the people. They find all the money they want when it is a matter of planning destruction and death but they cannot find any money when it comes to planning for life and construction.

(Text):

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the resolution of the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Belanger) has three parts to it. First, it would double the present rate of family allowances. Second, it would authorize continuation of payment to 20 years of age while the child on whose behalf the allowance is paid is attending school. Third, the resolution proposes an increase in the allowance after the age of 20 if the recipient goes to university, to be in effect an anticipated salary during university attendance.

The hon. member for Charlevoix quoted very convincingly from the statement of the prime minister of the day at the time the allowances were first established. As was indicated, the measure was passed in August, 1944 and payments were made effective the first week in July, 1945. When the program began payments were made on behalf of 2,956,844 children at an annual rate of $232,700,000. For the present fiscal year the estimated expenditure is $542,900,000 on behalf of close to 6,700,000 children. Payments are made on behalf of more than one third of the population of Canada who are within the age group up to 16 years of age.

When the program was first introduced the payments were on a graduated scale starting with $5 a month up to 6 years of age, then $6 up to 9 years of age, $7 up to 12 years of age and $8 between the years of 13 to 15 inclusive. At that time the rates were reduced in the case of large families. For the fifth child $1 less was paid, for the sixth child $2 less, for the seventh child $2 less and for the eighth child $3 less. The changes which were made in 1949 abolished this discrimination against larger families which it was difficult, it is true, to justify.

In 1957 further changes were introduced and at the present time the rates are $6 a month for children who have not yet attained their tenth birthday and $8 a month for children between their tenth and sixteenth birthdays. Estimates for the 1963-64 fiscal year show an increase of not quite $11 million, or of the order of 2 per cent of what was paid before. For previous years the rate of growth of our child population has been in excess of this percentage.

In viewing this resolution I think it is useful to review very briefly another program that exists in every province of Canada. I refer to the provincially maintained programs of payments for needy mothers and I should like to do so for two purposes. First, it shows roughly the order of magnitude of these payments which are made generally speaking, as the result of investigation of need, to widows, deserted wives, women whose husbands are in penal institutions or mental hospitals, separated mothers and in some cases unmarried mothers.

I should like to refer to a study made by the deputy minister of the department for the year 1955 which showed that the order of magnitude—

(Translation):

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Speaker, I draw your attention to the fact that the hon. member is speaking about provincial laws instead of dealing with the motion under consideration.

(Text):

Mr. Francis: It is my intention to refer to this to show the order of magnitude of payments under a program which is designed to meet certain tests of need. Roughly $8 million in family allowances was paid in 1954 to mothers in receipt of mothers' allowances while under the provincial programs roughly three times that amount or a little under $24 million was paid to these same people. I am referring to this because the latter part of the resolution of the hon. member in particular anticipates a considerable extension of the role and purpose of family allowances and I have cited it merely as an indication of the order of magnitude of expenditure related directly to need requirement.

I think that in judging family allowances you cannot ignore the fact that this program is in existence and represents a fairly substantial welfare program of which Canadians are proud. When the case for family allowances was argued, and many worthy people in Canada and in other parts of the world advocated the adoption of the program, roughly four general arguments were put forward. The first one relates to criteria for a rational wage policy. We had the experience of a majority report of the national wage stabilization board in 1943 which recommended family allowances as a reasonable method for providing for need where circumstances dictated that the economy had to exercise a maximum of restraint on other fronts.

Most employers have a problem in setting out a wage. When they find that they have to pay the same amount to a single person on their payroll as to a married person with dependants, this frequently creates a number of anomalies in the wage structure and variations that cannot be justified purely in terms of the contribution of that individual. The family allowance movement was early recognized as an orderly approach to a wage structure and it was advocated among others by the late Lord Keynes for that purpose, and also persons in Canada including Father LeBel who published in 1929 one of the earliest Canadian documents setting forth—

(Translation):

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. The hon. member is wandering away from the subject matter now under consideration. Could he be reminded to stick to the motion now before us, that is whether or not family allowances will be increased.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have listened carefully to the remarks of the hon. member who, at the present time, is discussing the principle of family allowances. I think that the hon. member is perfectly within the rules.

(Text):

Mr. Francis: If the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) would pay attention he might ascertain my purpose is to indicate the grounds that were put forward by the earliest proponents of family allowance, what they hoped to achieve by such measures. We, on this side of the house, were responsible for putting this legislation on the statute books. To suggest that we are in any way unsympathetic towards this is a gross distortion. We know what the purpose of the family allowance program is. There will be a measure put before this house which will deal, in part, with the resolution which the hon. member has in mind. I hope that by the time I am through with my remarks the hon. member will have some second thoughts concerning some aspects of the resolution.

The question of the development of a wage policy, I said, was one of the grounds used in the debate on this issue and was one to which the government of the day gave a good deal of attention. This was also a measure to stimulate post-war prosperity in the forties, toward the end of the war. The advisers of the government were very much concerned with a measure which would provide a large amount of consumer purchasing power in the anticipated slackening off which would be part of the story of the adjustment from wartime to peacetime. The family allowance measure was put forward with the full support of the fiscal advisers of the government who felt it was an appropriate piece of legislation for Canada at that time.

The third reason which is often advanced, and which I do not think carries as much weight with us, is the suggestion that this is a positive instrument of population or demographic policy. In many parts of the world this is true. Many countries have adopted family allowance measures with a very different approach from the Canadian approach. They feel in France, for example, that an equalization fund for private employers should have a set objective to build up family allowances to something like 25 per cent of wages. Under those circumstances, there is some evidence that family allowance policy has had some effect upon family formation.

People who have studied our program, or attempted to draw comparisons with other parts of the world, had concluded that our program has had no significant effect upon the Canadian birth rate or family formation. For instance, our neighbour to the south does not have a family allowance program. During the ten years subsequent to 1946, the birth rate per thousand in Canada rose 10.4 points and in the United States 12.4 points. True it rose from a lower base in the United States in the first instance. The general picture of demographic trends and those who have advanced demographic purposes for family allowance legislation, usually suggest that in the case of a country such as Canada the most significant factors are the general level of employment and income. Thus, the effects are very much greater than anything that can be traced to family allowance purposes.

The resolution, Mr. Speaker, I think has to stand on the basic purposes for which it was advanced by the government of the day. This relates to a measure of social justice for which we all have the very greatest sympathy. I listened to the hon. member for Charlevoix when he started to quote the Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King in the debate, and to suggest correctly that 84 per cent of the children were supported by 19 per cent of the wage earners, one fifth of the wage earners of the country. This is a proportion which seems to be borne out in widely different circumstances and cultures. The basic inequality of such a thing is the real reason for family allowances. They are, fundamentally, an attack on poverty which is associated with large families. They represent a measure of equality of opportunity for Canadian children, and under such circumstances they have been the bulwark, fundamentally, of our entire structure of social security.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I said the resolution had three arms to it and I have indicated the general grounds which the measure was implemented and defended not only in Canada but in other parts of the world. I give full credit to the people who have consistently taken an interest in this legislation, an interest that goes beyond the superficial. However, we must bear in mind that the question of the extension of family allowances to meet the purpose of higher education calls for further examination.

Our party is committed to extending family allowances to children at school to the age of 18 years. At the appropriate time, I am sure legislation will be brought before this house to implement the commitment which we firmly made during the course of the election campaign. However, I presume one of the purposes of this measure would be to extend family allowances and make them the basis of a salary for students attending university. It is significant that in one of the early literature or the statements made at the time was there such a purpose indicated. Our party is on the record as supporting a program of national scholarships, which I am certain is a more logical, more satisfactory approach towards permitting worthy students of modest circumstances to achieve a higher education. I do not believe that the extension of the family allowance to $18 per month is going to give the person attending university a large salary. I do not believe the hon. member seriously believes for one minute this sum would be adequate for the purpose which the hon. member has outlined.

Then, Mr. Speaker, we have an aspect of this matter which I am sure the mover of the resolution will want to consider very carefully. We have had a budget placed before this house on which there will be a debate in the near future. We noted that budgetary expenditures were in the area of $6,500 million. I have indicated that the estimated costs of the family allowances for the present year exceed $530 million. The effect of the proposed measure would be to add over $530 million to the budget deficit which would have to be faced by this house. The hon. member has indicated that he is in favour of economy in many other areas of government operation. I wonder if he has given thought to the implications of continuing the federal government in the field of fiscal relations to this magnitude at a time when a question has been raised concerning the appropriate share of various tax fields for the provincial, municipal and federal authorities.

Certainly, the raising of this sum of money through federal taxation, and the spending of it in the form in which family allowances are now spent, would have some interesting redistribution effects. Very few people have studied the regional effects of the redistribution of family allowances. One of the gentlemen who did attempt a very good study is the man to whom I referred earlier, the present deputy minister of national welfare. In an article published in International Labour Review for March, 1957, he cited some facts to which I should like to refer.

For the fiscal year 1954-55 the four Atlantic provinces provided 3.8 per cent of the direct tax revenues of the federal authority and received 12.8 per cent of the family allowance payments. The prairie provinces were the source of 11.4 per cent of direct tax revenues and received 17.7 per cent of family allowance payments. The province of Quebec was the source of 26.1 per cent of direct tax revenues and received 31.7 per cent of the family allowance payments. B.C. was the source of 9.6 per cent direct tax revenues and received 7.5 per cent of family allowance payments. Ontario was the source of 49 per cent direct tax revenues and received 30.2 per cent of family allowance payments.

I think there is a great deal of evidence that this redistribution is a highly desirable form of income redistribution. It goes from the wealthy areas to those with less capacity to support the general level of welfare and educational services, and to provide such basic things as food, clothing and shelter. This is one of the very good aspects of the program.

The program uses the federal authority directly as a source of raising funds and dispensing funds, and when we come to look at the redistribution within families we find some very interesting things. The study to which I refer covered the year ending August 31, 1948 and I have been unable to find any subsequent studies. In fact I think it is time another was undertaken, but the study showed that for all families receiving family allowances the allowances amounted to 4.9 per cent of net income.

Families with three or more children, and with incomes below $3,000, benefited to the greatest extent. Generally speaking the real impact of the family allowances program is found on families earning more than $3,000 and with no more than three children, and here the percentages of income tend to become significant. In the case of families with five and more children, family allowances were something like 12.8 per cent of family income.

This is a very significant redistribution measure, and when we review the program today I think we recognize that the impact that was feared in 1944 by two of the three major organized labour bodies has not come to pass.

There is a wide degree of support, almost unanimous, from all parties to the program. The program itself is basically a measure of social justice—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

(Translation):

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I only wish to say a few words in support of the bill introduced by the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Belanger), and I hope that government members will allow it to be adopted in the best interests of Canadians.

We, on this side of the house, included in our program during the last election campaign, an item designed to extend family allowances to children up to 18 years. I was very surprised to note that in the budget introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon), there was no mention of family allowances. It would have been better to deal with this matter rather than increase defence expenditures and purchase nuclear weapons—against the wish of the Canadian people—which will cost taxpayers several million dollars more.

In my opinion, the present government would have been better advised to convince the Minister of Finance to announce an increase in family allowances, and to extend their application so as to include children up to 18 years, which would only constitute a normal adjustment in view of the exorbitant cost of living.

Family allowances should also have a greater social character and be more in line with Christian principles. It would be advisable, in my opinion, that the tenth child get more than the ninth, and the ninth more than the eighth.

The hon. member refers in his bill to the question of education. I believe he is wrong, because education matters come under provincial jurisdiction and, as I have always advocated, we should return to the provinces their taxation rights and they will be able to provide for the education of children. Family allowances should be increased instead, according to a graduated rate, so as to encourage Canadians to raise their children in better conditions.

I support this measure unreservedly in all respects and, as I said earlier, there was an important item in our program during the last election campaign concerning family allowances.

I hope that members of the house, especially those from Quebec and Ontario, will not take up the rest of the time to kill this very important bill, likely to provide great assistance to our Canadian families.

(Text):

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I only wish to say a few words on this motion and to congratulate the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Belanger) for bringing it forward. During the recent election campaign all political parties supported the idea of supplying more equal distribution of wealth through social justice, or whatever term one wishes to call it. The matter of family allowances was also supported by all parties.

Like the speaker immediately preceding me I was surprised to see this was omitted from the budget, and unlike some of the previous speakers I am not so convinced that the government will introduce measures along this line, unless it is prodded into doing so. I have always felt family allowances were to provide for the education of young children, and when the act was originally introduced the age of 16 years was the average age at which children finished their education and went to work. However, we have moved very rapidly in the educational field, and 16 years is no longer the age at which children go to work. In many cases their education continues for another four or five years, and rather than stipulate the age of 20 I believe these allowances should be continued to the age of 21.

I have children in that category myself and I have found no lessening of their expenses after the age of 16 years. As a matter of fact it seems to be more expensive to outfit children after the age of 16; and so not only do I think the age limit should be extended but payments should be on a graduated scale, rising with the age of the recipient.

The question of raising the allowance, or doubling it, is one for the house or a committee of the house to discuss, but no matter what decision is reached I believe we should include a new provision gearing family allowances to the cost of living so that we will not continuously have to raise this matter in parliament. The country has watched the gymnastics that have taken place in social security, particularly in relation to old age pensions, with one political party trying to outdo another. I only hope this does not happen in the field of family allowances, and that allowances will be brought into line with the purchasing power that was originally intended. That would probably increase them by at least 50 per cent, and with the new provision that they be geared to the cost of living they can be taken out of the realm of political promises at election time.

I am not too well informed as to what has been done in other countries or in what way social security programs have been applied relating to this matter of student salaries. To my mind this is a new area and is one which I think many people in Canada in the educational field would want to consider before we adopted in a family allowance bill. There would probably be those who would want to discuss the constitutionality of this problem. I am quite sure there would be some who would think that if the federal government were to pay a salary to students attending university, some of the provincial autonomy in the field of education would be superimposed on the federal government. I am not sure that this is true, but I think there are those who would argue this way. This might be a limitation to our passing an increase in family allowances at this time, and I hope the mover of the resolution will indicate either that this question will be considered or he is willing to consider an amendment that would allow us at another time to discuss the question separately from family allowances.

I believe family allowances have been used to great advantage by Canadian families. I know personally of hundreds and hundreds of cases where children who are now attending school would not have been able to do so if it were not for the limited assistance that is given by the family allowance. In many cases this amounts to a very large portion of the cash income of the family. I believe this measure has served a need and that governments are being very slow in waiting for the push that is sometimes given by elections in regard to legislating family allowance increases. I hope the government will consider sending this subject to a committee, as they have other subjects, where it can be discussed. The merits of the two proposals, which are fairly separate in my opinion, could be discussed in committee. There would then be no delay in the implementing of a large increase in the family allowance and the extension of that allowance to take into consideration the changes which have been made in our educational system in allowing our children a longer period of education before they enter the labour market.

(Translation):

Mr. Jean-Pierre Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, before making a few remarks about this motion, I wish to point out how unfortunate it is that some members take part in the debate on such an important matter solely to make political capital.

I am of the opinion that an act should be adopted to make it impossible to treat in such a way social legislation.

Mr. Speaker, it must be admitted that the Family Allowances Act is certainly, and we are all agreed on that, one of the best pieces of social legislation ever passed by the house.

I do not want to take up the valuable time of the house to praise the benefits of that act. I only want to make humble suggestions which, if they were implemented, would make this act much more effective and more profitable for the many families who benefit from it.

At the end of March 1962, 2,649,317 families were in receipt of family allowances for 6,562,287 children, that is for more than a third of the total population of Canada. Net payments for the year were $520,781,193.

In actual fact, what did the Family Allowances Act cost the country the amount of $520,781,193 during the fiscal year ended March 1962?

No, Mr. Speaker, because even though that sum was paid through the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Department of National Revenue, by virtue of the same act, has collected many thousand dollars, the exact amount being impossible to estimate. This statement may astonish many members but you will easily understand what I mean after the following explanations.

On page 2 of the income tax return T-1, paragraph 2, we can read: Exemption for children qualified for family allowances—$300, and for each child not qualified for family allowances—$550.

If you figure it out, here are the results you will get. A person with an annual income of $3,000 and who has a child is entitled to an exemption of $2,350 if the child is eligible for family allowances; so his taxable income will be $650, which represents an income tax payment of $80. If the child were not qualified for family allowances, his exemption would then amount to $2,550 and his taxable income would be $450; consequently, the amount he would have to pay as income tax would be $56, that is $24 he must pay as additional income tax because he receives $72 in family allowances. We may conclude that that person must pay as income tax a third of the amount received in family allowances.

We see also that with an income of $5,000, a family of four children will receive $288 in family allowances, but the father will have to pay $113 more in income tax, which means that the family allowances in this case come to $175 for the year. So, for each child, the government does not grant $6, but in fact $3.60 a month.

Let us consider the case of a father of eight with an annual income of $8,000. Because he receives an amount of $648 in family allowances, instead of paying $182 in income tax, he will have to pay the Department of National Revenue the amount of $442, that is a difference of $260 in additional income tax.

And the same arithmetic can be repeated for the 2,649,317 families receiving family allowances.

Mr. Belanger: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the house be adjourned because there is no quorum.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, may I go on?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No.

(Text):

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Speaker, might I ask that those hon. members from the Social Credit party who just left the chamber be returned?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand there are 20 members in the house. If hon. members leave the chamber it becomes difficult to count. Some hon. members come in and walk out, which makes it difficult to ascertain the number present. Perhaps those hon. members who are standing would sit down. That would help us make an exact count.

I declare that there is at this moment a quorum in the house.

(Translation):

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): So now, you see what I mean, Mr. Speaker. Having withheld part of the family allowances on the father's revenue the government pays it back to the children. This may be a good thing for certain families, but for most of them I do not think it is really useful.

In 1944, when this legislation was enacted, the amount of the family allowances was certainly chosen from several amounts after a careful study of the cost of living. In 1963, the cost of living has gone up again, going from 74.6 per cent in 1944 to 132.3 per cent in 1963, an increase of 57.7 per cent. Now, family allowances were increased by 11 per cent in 1957 and have remained at that level since then.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that when a piece of social legislation is enacted it should provide that the amounts paid will be reviewed every five years and, if necessary, adjusted to the cost of living index of the current year, on the basis of the cost of living at the time the legislation was first enacted. In that way it would be possible to avoid, during an election campaign—

Mr. Pigeon: I move the adjournment of the house.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not see on what the hon. member bases himself to rise in the middle of a speech to move the adjournment of the house. The hon. member for Longueuil has the floor at present and I fail to see how he is transgressing the rules of the house.

Mr. Pigeon: Again I rise on a point of order and on a question of privilege. A short while ago, we did not have a quorum and the adjournment was delayed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declared that we had a quorum. There is certainly no question of privilege nor a point of order.

The hon. member for Longueuil has the floor and I would ask him to continue his remarks.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Thus, we would prevent politicians of all parties from promising during an electoral campaign that they will raise family allowances, old age pensions, etc., and it would force them to find something new to talk about.

Should family allowances be doubled or tripled? I would not know, but after a review of the situation, we should set the amount of the allowances on the basis of the change in the cost of living. To further improve this legislation, we should not tax family allowances.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that if these few suggestions were put into effect, they will restore to the act the full purpose for which it was enacted.

Mr. Gerald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to take part in this debate on the motion submitted by the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Belanger)—or is it Charlevoix-Montmorency—to amend the Family Allowances Act.

However, I must express my disapproval of what happened here a short while ago when a step was taken to prevent a member from expressing his views—

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In my opinion, the hon. member has no right to impute motives to a member who tried to exercise his rights in the house as he saw fit.

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, may I say that I was not speaking of any member in particular but of what happened in the house.

Mr. Martineau: It is against the rules.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask the hon. member to come back to the resolution under consideration.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the hon. member has attacked a certain hon. member, could I—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It did not seem to me that the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry was attacking anyone. He had treaded on somewhat delicate ground but as a point of order was raised, I called him to order and I feel that the matter is closed.

Mr. Laniel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

In intended to deal with the over-all question of family allowances and to find what would be the proper time for a complete study of that proposal, especially in view of the fact that this country now has a government which made it clear to the Canadian people that the legislation to be introduced in the house within its four year term would include a bill to extend family allowances to students.

However, Mr. Speaker, there is one aspect of the problem which has not been touched upon during this debate and I should like to discuss it briefly. It has been said—and the hon. member for Charlevoix mentioned this point—that the cost of living index has gone up while family allowances have remained practically unchanged since their introduction in 1944.

But they forgot to mention that during the same period, there has been a general increase in the income and salary of Canadians. In fact, Canadians get a much higher income now than in 1944.

Mr. Speaker, I am not at all against the increase of family allowances but I really think that the question should be fully studied, that we should not accept only the favourable arguments but that the whole question should be analysed, and that perhaps we should go beyond the ideas put forward by the hon. member for Charlevoix.

Inquiries of the Ministry

It is possible that we may have to review all the aspects of the present social security program to determine clearly in which field the needs are greater or more urgent, so as to achieve a better distribution of the public funds available, which would be more profitable to all heads of family in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, in 1944, the average salary in Canada was $31.85. In 1949, it was $42.96 and now it has reached $80.55, which represents an increase of over 150 per cent while the cost of living index has gone up by only 80 per cent.

AIR TRANSPORT

USE BY MOUNTED POLICE OF STRIKEBOUND PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I would not want the Minister of Finance to get the impression that he is the only minister who is being favoured with questions today. Earlier today I did send notice to the Minister of Transport of my intention to ask him a question. My question is this. Has it been brought to the minister's attention that members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are using strikebound Pacific Western Airlines planes between Calgary and Edmonton and, if so, is it the intention of the minister to take steps to see that government personnel use the alternate means of transportation available, so as to avoid their participation in strike breaking activities?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. I must tell him that it seems to have a good many assertions in it and I hope he will not expect me to accept all the assertions. The answer to the first part of the question is no. As to the second part of the question, since it has to do with the R.C.M.P. I will draw it to the attention of my colleague the Minister of Justice.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

INQUIRY AS TO PURCHASE OF CARAVELLE PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

Could the minister confirm the purchasing of Caravelle jet aircraft by Trans-Canada Air Lines?

(Text):

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there has been no such purchase made and I would expect that it would be some considerable time before any purchase of planes is made by Trans-Canada Air Lines.

(Translation):

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, following the answer given by the Minister of Transport, I should like now to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

Would the Minister of Finance exert pressure on the Minister of Transport in order that he may buy Caravelle aircraft; for, if one considers that these planes will be built in Canada, this means, from the point of view of our trade balance, that an additional amount of about $200 million, a substantial amount, would come to Canada.

(Text):

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure there is no necessity for me to exert pressure on anyone.

HISTORIC SITES AND MONUMENTS

BATOCHE, SASK.—DISMISSAL OF ASSISTANT CARETAKER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Would he inform the house on what date and for what reason Mr. Placide Pilon, assistant caretaker at the Batoche historical site, was relieved of his duties?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take that question as notice and I will try to let my hon. friend know tomorrow.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY BRANCH LINES—MORATORIUM BY C.P.R. ON APPLICATIONS FOR ABANDONMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the announcement by the management of the Canadian National Railways of their intention to study the question of the discontinuation of service of more than 1,000 miles of track as a first step in a reasonable approach to this problem before any further action is taken, would the minister consider consulting with the management of the Canadian Pacific Railway with a view to that company taking a similar attitude prior to any action being taken with respect to abandonment of lines or discontinuance of any passenger service, particularly the Kettle Valley Railway?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I regret I am not familiar with all the details of the operation of the Kettle Valley Railway, but I can assure my hon. friend that with regard to the question of railway line abandonment, about which he has been reading in the press in the last few days, the applications or notices of intention filed by Canadian National Railways were being given in pursuance of an arrangement made at a meeting with the government in January of this year. The arrangement was that the notices of intention with regard to the prospective branch line abandonments in western Canada and the three prairie provinces would be filed but no action taken to commence the hearings until they had all been filed, and no abandonment action taken subsequent to that until there was an opportunity for the government to determine policy and the legislation arising out of the MacPherson royal commission.

The further question he has asked today refers to the Canadian Pacific Railway, in an attempt to obtain the same information from them. In his question today he has spoken about the Kettle Valley Railway in British Columbia, and I will have to look into the matter to see whether that railway is included in the category of railways which was dealt with in the arrangement made with the government in January last.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

REQUESTS FOR CONFERENCE RESPECTING MUNICIPAL LOAN LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Could he advise the house whether he has received letters from any provincial premier or minister of any provincial cabinet requesting a federal-provincial meeting or consultation before further consideration of the municipal loan fund legislation?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not recall receiving any such representations but I shall be glad to look into the matter and if any have arrived I will let my hon. friend know tomorrow.

[Later:]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Royal asked me a few minutes ago whether any communications had been received from the provinces regarding a request for postponement of consideration of the municipal development fund legislation. I am reminded that one such communication has been received, which I had forgotten about when I gave my tentative answer before, from the premier of Quebec, and it requested postponement of the consideration of the bill until the provinces had their meeting, which I believe is to take place in August.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

EDMONTON—REPORTED INTENTION TO DIVERT OVERHAUL WORK

On the orders of the day:

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Edmonton West asked a question in relation to the strikebound facilities of Northwest Industries Limited and whether there had been a transference of the work load from Northwest Industries Limited to other areas. Regarding plant airframe requirements, the answer is in the negative. No requirements which were actually placed with the company prior to the strike have been moved elsewhere. Northwest Industries Limited has maintained a skeleton staff of about 40 employees who are completing as best they may the necessary urgent work of the R.C.A.F. In respect of certain instruments a transfer of intended work was made from Northwest Industries Limited to another firm, and one reason for this was that the instruments were urgently required on aircraft about to be shipped out to India. These were Harvard aircraft.

IMMIGRATION

RETURN OF DOCUMENTS FOLLOWING CHINESE INVESTIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, last Friday

Inquiries of the Ministry

I promised to give an answer today to a question put by the hon. member for Skeena on June 5, 1963, about the return of documents such as landing papers, passports and citizenship certificates seized in the case of Chinese people who are alleged to have entered Canada illegally.

There are two types of occasions on which documents have been or are obtained either by officers of the R.C.M.P. or immigration officers in matters of illegal Chinese immigration. First, there are the cases of direct investigation by the R.C.M.P. of illegal immigration activities, such as the one made some three years ago. I am advised that the documents seized on these occasions have been seized in each case under the authority of search warrants and that they have been or are returned to the persons from whom they were taken on completion of the R.C.M.P. investigation.

Then there are the occasions when an individual has made or has indicated an intention to make a statement as to his identity to an immigration officer. On these occasions such documents as landing cards, citizenship certificates and passports are retained from the immigrant by the immigration officer. They are not returned to him but are sent to the Department of Citizenship and Immigration for retention pending the adjustment of status. There is, of course, no point in leaving these documents in the possession of these immigrants in the meantime, inasmuch as the status purported to be certified by them is false. However, once the immigrant's status has been adjusted these documents are reissued under the changed identity and remitted to the immigrant.

If my hon. friend will let me have the name of any Chinese whose documents have been taken from him and not returned or replaced, I shall certainly look into this.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

RIGHT OF MEMBERS TO PUT QUESTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. As witnessed by page 1163 of Hansard for last Friday, the Secretary of State mentioned the fact that a series of questions have been put on the order paper. He stated first that this could become, for many, a way of making a mockery of parliament. A little further, he said that was a rather unexpected and, in his opinion, unfortunate development.

First of all, I should like to say that it is the privilege of hon. members to ask any questions they want. I should like to add that the series of questions had been prepared in advance and that we had asked the minister whether he would prefer to answer them directly or whether he would like us to put them on the order paper. That question was addressed to the minister as follows:

(Text):

I have a series of questions on bilingualism in your department. Would you prefer that I send these questions to you directly in order not to have too many questions on the order paper?

(Translation):

The Minister of National Defence replied as follows:

(Text):

Whatever you wish.

(Translation):

Then, we sent him the questions directly, without putting them on the order paper.

However, the Minister of Trade and Commerce made this suggestion to us:

(Text):

May I suggest that your questions be put on the order paper in view of the interest of all hon. members in the matter of bilingualism.

(Translation):

And it was signed "Mitchell Sharp". Out of four ministers, two expressed the wish that we put those questions on the order paper and two, the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and the Minister of National Defence, would rather have us proceed directly in order not to overload the order paper even more.

I still have further questions to ask, and I shall continue to send them directly to the ministers, if they are willing to answer them, in order not to overload the order paper. However, I feel it is the privilege of members of this house to put all questions they see fit on the order paper.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF DRAFT AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Chapdelaine) asked me a question to which I promised to give a reply today.

I presume that the report to which he referred was a dispatch from the Canadian Press in Creston, B.C. which appeared in the newspapers on June 14.

I looked into that news report and I really cannot add anything to what I said that same day in answer to a question put to me by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, that it is not proper to make details public while negotiations are still going on.

[Later:]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Privy Council.

As the so-called "commissioner" has proved he is unable to hold an inquiry, is the President of the Privy Council ready to tell the house that no public money will be spent for the financing of the "Gregoire commission?"

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to point out that when a government inquiry lasts two whole years, the one I am conducting cannot be considered inefficient after only two weeks. Before passing judgment the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency would be well advised to find out about the time usually allotted to inquiry commissions.

MUNICIPAL DEVELOPMENT AND LOAN BOARD

PROVISION FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO MUNICIPALITIES

The house resumed from Friday, June 14, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Gordon—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to promote increased employment in Canada by the provision of financial assistance by way of loans to municipalities, the object of such loans being to enable municipalities to augment or accelerate their capital works programs subject to the approval of the provinces concerned; and for this purpose to provide a special fund in a consolidated revenue fund not exceeding four hundred million dollars to be available for the making of loans to municipalities and certain other municipal authorities for specific municipal capital works projects; to establish a municipal development and loan board to administer the fund so provided; to authorize the acceptance of municipal debentures for any loans so made; to authorize a measure of forgiveness in respect of any loans so made, depending upon the date of completion of the projects for which such loans are made; and to provide further for other related and incidental matters.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): In rising to speak on this resolution, I do so with some hesitation because of the extremely active debate which has ranged in this house for the last day or so as a result of the irregularities in the preparation of the budget. One's mind has wandered far, but I shall endeavour to get back to this resolution dealing with loans to municipalities. I noticed that the fund will be established out of the consolidated revenue fund and will be $400 million. The resolution proclaimed that the main objective of this measure was to increase employment. I must say that I am doubtful the objective will be achieved, and I will explain my reasons for this as I go along.

First of all, there has been a limitation placed on the use of this money. The minister stated that he estimated this measure might cover half the normal borrowings of the municipalities and might cover two thirds of the cost of the projects. He went on to explain the rate of interest and the forgiveness features.

In so far as the $400 million is concerned, the other night it was pointed out that in the last five years the previous government made $900 million available to the municipalities through the winter works program.

This was directly for use during winter time when unemployment is highest, but here are $400 million to be spread over three years and to be used any time of the year. This is one of the basic differences.

The last time something like this was attempted was in 1938 when an act was passed called the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act. Under it money was to be lent at 2 per cent interest, and there was a definite regulation clause written into the act dealing with the amount of money that could be lent to any particular municipality. It may be such a provision will be written into the bill that will follow this resolution. Section 6 of the 1938 act stipulated that loans to municipalities should relate to the percentage their populations bore to the population of the country, but I fear that under this legislation loans will be made on a wide open basis to the larger municipalities, and that they will gobble up the greatest part of the $400 million, possibly within the first year.

Hon. members should keep those remarks in mind, and should also consider what has taken place here during the last couple of days with the government showing a definite favouritism to Toronto, Bay street interests, and to investment brokers. It is quite conceivable that most of this fund will be channelled into the larger centres. This is one of the greatest fears I have in regard to the proposed bill.

I believe the money should be lent on a per capita basis, giving each municipality a chance to borrow for projects which would give a long term return. To set up a municipal loan fund for three years is not enough. It cannot possibly begin to become a revolving fund in any sense of the term because most municipal loans are taken out for 20, 25 or 30 years. I might add that the interest rate is not particularly appealing either.

I hope the forgiveness clause in the proposed bill will be as good as the forgiveness clause with regard to sewerage projects undertaken under Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation during recent years, when 25 per cent was written off if capital works projects were undertaken within a specified time.

These are things which should be considered with regard to this municipal loan fund before it is held up to mayors, reeves and councillors all across the country as the answer to their hopes and prayers for money to develop their municipalities. We in the province of Alberta do not look forward to this fund with any real interest because we have one great fear that loans may be made without any great deal of judgment with regard to their efficiency. By that I mean there is no real objection towards making a 20 year loan to a municipality for a capital works project that will continue to give employment, but there is towards making loans for structures which will be outdated within that time and will require to be replaced by more modern structures before the original loans are written off.

Municipalities in Alberta are also notable for the heavy debt load they carry already, and this loan fund cannot be held up as the answer to their hopes. This subject has been dealt with already during the debate and I do not want to put the figures on record another time; but what the municipalities need are more generous grants towards capital works projects, and not necessarily more loans which will place them further and further in debt.

The Alberta legislature has set up the Alberta Finance Corporation which makes loans to municipalities. When it was first set up it made loans at 2.5 per cent interest. Now the interest is up to 4.5 per cent, and even 5 per cent in many cases. Municipalities in Alberta have taken great advantage of this act and many improvements have been made in both the smaller and larger centres.

One principal necessity is for government at all levels to look ahead and plan ahead in the financing of capital works projects. Municipalities must gauge with reasonable accuracy their estimated population growth before determining the need for loans. This holds true for municipalities, towns and cities, and they must be able to gauge their needs 10 and 20 years from now.

While I hesitate to agree that this loan will solve the unemployment problem, I think that loans made to municipalities for the construction of works which will continue to create employment in the years ahead would be much more beneficial than undertaking projects which provide jobs while they are being built, but after they are completed do not provide any more jobs. With the limiting factors placed upon loans under the proposed legislation, no loans will be made to municipalities for sewerage, water, and many other types of projects which would be more beneficial and helpful in curing unemployment.

We have heard considerable talk about whether a municipal loan fund should be established out of the consolidated revenue fund or as an arm of the Bank of Canada. I do not think it makes any difference, but we have to have close co-operation between the federal, provincial and municipal governments because the provinces, through their direction of road programs and water development projects can control and regulate the growth of municipalities, towns and cities. For that reason I think the federal government in setting up the proposed board should keep close liaison with the provincial authorities.

That is an important point to consider at this time because we have just heard an answer on orders of the day to the effect that one of the provinces has asked the government to slow up, and perhaps not to pass the bill that will spring out of the resolution we are now debating, until after the provincial governments meet in August. That is important to consider because the success of the proposed act will be based upon the co-operation achieved between the federal, provincial and municipal governments.

The remarks made by the hon. member for Red Deer, with regard to the loan board which it is proposed to establish, were very interesting. He said there were three types of capital available to municipalities, namely tax capital, commercial capital and social capital, and he implied that social capital was the same thing as social credit. As I am from Alberta I was glad at least to find out what social credit was; apparently it is social capital. "Social capital" is a nice phrase. I do not know who first coined it but we hear the New Democratic party lamenting about social capital from time to time. I know the Conservative party has dealt with social justice on many occasions. I do not know whether they are one and the same thing.

I was interested in the hon. member's remarks as reported at page 1194 of Hansard, in which he suggested, referring to the province of Alberta, that they have a revolving fund from which the money is made available at all times and it just revolves around and around. I wonder why, if the money is continually turning around and around in that revolving fund, they have to charge an interest rate which is higher than the cost of actually making those loans from the revolving fund. We are told that Social Credit is against interest rates; that interest rates are the ruination of the country. Here we have a revolving fund, with money being paid out to municipalities and coming back in from the municipalities, but the interest rate is far higher than the cost at which Social Credit in Alberta tell us money can be loaned. It is an amazing thing that if this is social capital working at its best in the province of Alberta, the interest rates have to be 4½ per cent to 5½ per cent. The hon. member went on to say with regard to social capital, as reported at page 1195, that it should be used for building bridges, hospitals, schools and all those things which do not make a profit and "which we will one day pay for out of our tax capital". I want to underline the words "which we will one day pay for out of our tax capital". Even social capital must be paid for eventually out of our tax capital. This is quite a concession from the leader of the Social Credit party in this house. I have lived in Alberta for a number of years and have been trying to find out what Social Credit is. We have finally figured out what social capital is; it will one day be paid for out of our tax capital. This is what the hon. member for Red Deer explained in his speech as reported at page 1195 of Hansard.

Mr. Thompson: You will find out what it is tonight when the votes are counted.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The hon. member talks about votes being counted. That is fine. I can remember some votes being counted in the constituency of Red Deer not so long ago. The hon. member must have found out a lot of things that particular night too.

On this point it is interesting to bring to the attention of the committee, with regard to social capital and municipal loans, that on February 28, 1961 a similar debate took place in the Alberta legislature. That legislature was at the time debating the question of whether or not they should ask the federal government to set up a municipal loan fund. Mr. Manning, the premier of the province, entered the debate for the first time in the session and explained that a distinction should be drawn between social capital and those funds belonging to private individuals or corporations. I would like his government to produce a Hansard so that, rather than reading a report on the debate, I would be able to follow him verbatim and perhaps get a better idea of just what is meant by social capital as applied to municipalities.

Premier Manning went on to say that this social capital should be made available to municipalities to borrow at the going rate of interest. This is the premier of the Social Credit government in Alberta talking. He said they must expect to pay the going rate of interest. That is an interesting remark coming from a party which believes in no interest rates, or interest rates which are not greater than the cost of administering the loan. He suggests that a bank be set up under the Bank of Canada, something similar to that which the hon. member for Red Deer suggested in the debate on June 14. He also admitted, and I think this is very interesting, that if the money is made available through the Bank of Canada—I suppose he did not like to use the phrase "print it", but I suppose this is what he implied—that the plan would produce inflationary pressures. This is also quite an admission coming from the Social Credit group which over the years has said that the money supply has nothing to do with inflation. It is quite an admission coming from the premier of that province, who admitted that such a plan would produce inflationary pressures. He suggested that the Bank of Canada could control this by increasing the percentage of cash chartered banks must have on deposit in proportion to the amount on loan. This was his explanation of how inflation could be controlled, by making more money available from social capital and limiting the amount of money available through commercial channels such as the chartered banks. This would be the result of this action, to increase the percentage of cash the chartered banks must have on deposit in proportion to the amount on loan. This would be the security held against the amount loaned. This again, is a surprising thing coming from a party which advocates, and advocated on June 14, that this was one type of capital which should be expanded in order to promote free enterprise. How can you promote free enterprise by limiting commercial capital? Is that promoting free enterprise? I hardly think so. On one hand they want to increase social capital and on the other they want to limit commercial capital and promote free enterprise. This is an impossibility.

Mr. Patterson: I am afraid you are all tangled up.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am not as tangled up as the hon. member would like me to be and as his party tangled up the voters when they led them through a tangled mess of haze for a great many years. Now they are getting straightened out to some extent with regard to elections.

Mr. Thompson: Count the votes tonight.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I would like to do just that and I would like the hon. member for Red Deer to count the votes in the riding of Red Deer tonight. But I realize, Mr. Chairman, that these hecklers are drawing me away from the subject under discussion and I want to get back to it. I think one of the important things we must bear in mind is that loans should be made for no longer than the useful life of the project. If the credit is extended beyond the useful life of the project it is a very inefficient type of loan. It is an inefficient type of loan because it will cost the municipality far more money than the interest rate; it will cost three or four times the amount of the interest rate. The hon. member for Red Deer referred to several projects which were constructed for 50 years —and we have read about these—where the loan has recently been paid off, long after the project had gone. In many cases they had been torn up years ago. I think this must be guarded against in making freer capital available to municipalities instead of, to quote the hon. member for Red Deer again, rubbing liniment on an ache or pain, and continuing the life of the ache or pain. Such a remedy might eventually do more harm than good. Applied in another way, in the field of finance, it might eventually cripple the whole provincial tax structure.

This is one of the great dangers with which the municipalities of Alberta are faced today. There is a danger that their tax structure will be crippled because of the high municipal debts in the province. In no province in Canada is municipal debt higher than it is in Alberta; there is no province where land taxes are as high as they are in Alberta. This is because money has been made available to the municipalities through loans, but not enough has been made available by means of grants. The former federal government made grants of money to the provinces in larger amounts, by way of direct grants, than ever before. Something like $3.6 billion was made available to the provinces across Canada during the last five years so that they might better meet their requirements.

We in this house all realize that the municipalities have, as their main sources of revenue, the taxes imposed on property and on land. It is true that some provincial governments make grants available to the municipalities out of revenue from sales taxes, gasoline taxes and so on. But by far the greatest amount of their revenue comes from land taxes. As a farmer, and as one who is, possibly, closer to the land than some others in this house, I realize the danger which the municipalities across Canada are facing when they must impose high rates of taxation in order to meet the cost of their municipal borrowing. This is why great care must be taken in applying for these loans. It is well and good for the government to say it intends to pour out money in order to do away with unemployment.

Mr. Lloyd: Would the hon. member permit a question? Is he aware that the mayors federation of Canada, through its executive, presented a request for consideration by the royal commission on banking and finance that a municipal loan fund should be established? This request was representative of all the mayors and municipalities of Canada.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I was aware of that, and lest the hon. member be mistaken with regard to my remarks, let me say that I am in favour of a municipal loan fund.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Nothing pleases a speaker more than to know people are listening to him, and I am glad members opposite have been paying attention to what I have been saying. It does my heart good. I may go on for 20 minutes longer.

I am aware that the mayors and municipalities at their meeting in Toronto recently wanted a municipal fund set up from which they could borrow money. But I wish to give this warning and say that such a fund may not be the answer to their desires. If not properly used, it may lead them further into debt. And who would have to pay this debt? The land owners throughout Canada would have to do so, whether they own property in a city or a farm in the province of Alberta. It would come from taxes on land, because this is where the municipalities acquire the greatest part of their revenue.

Lest there be any doubt about it, let me say that I am in favour of the bill, with certain reservations as to how the loans should be made. I am against the limitations placed on the use of this fund because they seem to me to be applied in such a way as to encourage capital projects which will not provide for continuous employment. Jobs will be produced, it is true, while the capital projects are being built, but the money invested will not continue to produce jobs in the years ahead. If loans were made available in respect of water development, for example, there would be a continuous multiciplicity of jobs becoming available each year as a result of the initial capital expenditure. I know of many municipalities in my constituency which are constantly handicapped by the lack of ample water supplies and I wonder why loans in connection with water development projects could not be made available under this scheme.

Without doubt, loans to municipalities would help in getting them over the hump. But loans should be made in respect of projects capable of creating jobs as a result of which more money would flow into the coffers of the municipality concerned. I do not want to see this $400 millions lent out and spent on projects for capital works which would, in the end, increase government employment, for example. We all realize at one time or another that, to an extent, we are serving the people; we are working for the people. But the people are paying the cost of this administration, so we do not want the cost of administration of government to increase, whether municipally, federally, or provincially. That is why I say this fund must be spent in such a way that eventually more money will go back to municipal coffers.

I have tried to deal with some of the reservations I feel with regard to this loan project. I should like to deal with one more which particularly affects the smaller municipalities across Canada. This is the fear of being left completely out of participation in this $400 millions which is to be made available. They are in fear that the Bay street interests of the present government may control and funnel this $400 millions into the larger cities throughout the country and that the smaller rural municipalities will have none of it made available to them for the betterment of life in their areas. I hope the bill when drafted contains a provision similar to that which was written into the act to assist municipalities which was drawn up in 1938. I am told this measure was in effect only until 1939 when it got too hot for the government of that day to handle. I should like to see the present measure enjoy a longer life, longer even than three years, and make money available on a per capita basis to municipalities across Canada.

Mr. Gordon: I do not intend at this time to speak at length or in detail on the provisions of the municipal loan and development bill. The resolution placed on the order paper on May 20 stated the main purpose of the statute and indicated some of its principal features.

In my earlier remarks to the committee I affirmed the intention of the loan program to stimulate the economy and provide new jobs while at the same time assisting municipalities to construct basic capital facilities. In the debate on the resolution so far questions have arisen with respect to the detailed operation of the program. For the most part, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that further discussion on matters of this kind can be carried on more usefully perhaps after hon. members have had the chance to read the bill itself. I think it is rather difficult for hon. members to discuss the bill when they have not seen it, although I must say they have been doing very well under this handicap. In many instances answers to the questions which have been raised will be found in the provisions of the bill when it comes before the committee. However, in the course of the debate a few points of a more general nature arose on which I should like to comment now.

Let me first refer to the place of the proposed municipal loans programs in the over-all policies of economic expansion and new employment being developed by this government. The municipal loan program constitutes action designed to produce new jobs in the intermediate term. Among other measures announced by my colleague last week, were some designed for short term effects while others are intended to have their major impact over a longer period of years. All are integral parts of a national program of action. Each has its essential place in a plan of national development. The municipal loans in particular will have significant effects this winter—that is, of course, if the legislation is passed in time—and major effects in the two years following. They thus play an important role in the intermediate term.

The authorized amount of the program is $400 million—or that is what is being asked for. If fully utilized it will assist in the construction of some $600 million worth of additional municipal projects. Some hon. members have suggested that this amount seems small in view of the capital needs of the municipalities. The government does not hold this view. These are large sums, Mr. Chairman, and when we take into account the time of nearly three years, together with the range of eligible projects and the fact that the loans are to be applied to additional projects, then the $600 million of assisted projects constitutes a very substantial effort on the part of the municipalities.

In this respect I would ask hon. members to consider for the moment the demand for sewage treatment loans under the National Housing Act. This program has been in effect now for two and a half years. It has an authorized limit of $200 million. What has been the experience under that program? As of June 7, 1963 some 442 loans were made aggregating $100,285,000. Thus almost $100 million of loans remain available after two and a half years of operation. Against this amount there are now outstanding 14 applications aggregating approximately $4 million. The rate of utilization of this program may give some hon. members assurances as to the adequacy of the proposed new program, and I respectfully ask hon members to reserve judgment as to its scope until they have seen the bill. They can then relate it to the other programs being developed under the National Housing Act. For some of these older programs the government intends to propose amendments and improvements.

I also want to emphasize, Mr. Chairman, that loans will be available to all municipalities, large and small. Indeed, it is to be expected that the smaller municipalities will participate fully in the new program. The eligible projects are such that they will find ample opportunity to participate. Once again, if I may say so, this has been the experience under the sewage loan program, where, for example, more than one fifth of the loans were made to small communities in Saskatchewan. Loans to municipalities of all sizes were made throughout the country and there is every reason to expect that a similar pattern will emerge under the proposed municipal loans plan.

The other night, Mr. Chairman, the Leader of the Opposition asked whether the proposed program of municipal loans had been placed before the provinces before being presented to the house. This has not been done. It is the government's view that it is the right of parliament to have first opportunity of discussing this plan on the resolution stage, and then when parliament has expressed its views it will be appropriate to discuss the plan with the provincial authorities. As I have indicated, the proposed loan plan has been developed with full regard for the constitutional rights of the provinces.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the Minister of Finance a question. Does he mean that there will be a meeting between the federal authorities and the provincial authorities between the resolution stage and presenting this bill to the committee or to parliament?

Mr. Gordon: No, Mr. Chairman, and if the hon. member will allow me to finish what I was about to come to, I think it will be quite clear to him. As I have indicated, the proposed loan plan has been developed with full regard for the constitutional rights of the provinces. When hon. members see the proposed legislation I am sure they will appreciate that the program cannot proceed and that loans cannot be made until appropriate procedures have been discussed and worked out with the provinces. Loan applications must not only be approved by the provinces; they must also be transmitted by the provinces to the proposed loan board. The co-operation of the provinces will thus be required and they will be consulted. The government is confident, Mr. Chairman, that the same co-operation which has existed under past and similar programs will continue under the proposed plan. I repeat, however, that the government's position in this matter is that parliament's views should first be ascertained. Approval of the plans should first be sought in the house and this is the course we propose to follow.

Let me point out that the course proposed is not an unusual one. Indeed, there are many precedents. Several of these relate to the procedures followed by the previous government. Let me cite the sewage loan program under part VI B of the National Housing Act initiated by the previous government in 1960 without, to the best of my knowledge, any prior consultation with the provinces of the kind suggested the other evening by the Leader of the Opposition. This program broke new ground in the field of assistance to municipalities by way of loans, but as I say I believe there was no prior consultation. A similar course was followed, so far as I am aware, in the case of the winter works incentive program. Here was a program of grants to municipalities decided upon by the government of the day without prior consultation with the provinces. The same was true, I understand, with the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act passed by this parliament under the former government, but before consultations took place with the provinces who were vitally affected.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the course we propose to follow is clearly not a departure from established practice. I noted with interest the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition which appear on page 892 of Hansard, where he stated that his reading suggests to him that:

> —public works have been ineffective as a means of meeting unemployment on any economical basis or standard, the cost is too great, and they do not provide jobs.

This is not the economic philosophy of this government and I doubt that it will appeal to members of the committee. We on this side of the house are confident that the proposed plan will produce many thousands of new jobs and we have every confidence that it will operate with the co-operation of the provinces and within the framework of the constitution. To that end, Mr. Chairman, I ask the co-operation of members of the committee in expediting passage of the proposed legislation.

Mr. Pascoe: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance in his brief outline has cleared up some of the points I had in mind in rising to speak, so as a result my speech will be much shorter. However, he still has not established in my mind that this plan is exactly what the municipalities desire and expect from the government, I am not an expert in municipal finance or in administration, but one does not have to be an expert in these matters to see that the program oulined in the resolution before us does not meet the present requirements of the municipalities and certainly does not provide for their future plans.

Like other speakers I am in agreement with the principle of a municipal loan fund, but the proposed loan arrangement does not come near fulfilling the great Liberal promises in the last election campaign. There are very few signs of the much-publicized, bold, imaginative program to end unemployment. The Leader of the Opposition emphasized the weaknesses and shortcomings of this municipal loan plan and other speakers have also dealt with particular points. As I said, the Minister of Finance has dealt with some of these points so that I do not need to repeat them now, but they will certainly be brought up again when the bill is considered in detail.

The resolution states that this is a measure to promote increased employment in Canada. We all agree with this objective, although we do not think that this plan will meet that objective. The objective of meeting the problem of unemployment is an objective with regard to which the former government had made and was continuing to make remarkable progress when its program of national development was obstructed by the opposition and the government was voted out of office.

I am sure we all agree that a municipal loan fund is necessary. Such a fund has been requested by the municipalities, as has been brought out by other speakers. But lending $400 million over the next three years to municipalities cannot be regarded as the full answer to their needs. A loan fund of $400 million seems like a tremendous sum and it is a tremendous amount especially when, as our leader pointed out, there is no indication just where or how the government intends to obtain this money.

How far will $400 million go in fulfilling the government's promise of full employment especially when, as other speakers have pointed out, the government gives with one hand and takes away with the other hand? In connection with the matter of giving and at the same time taking back I am thinking of the imposition by the budget of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. I am not sure how many hundreds of millions of dollars the Minister of Finance expects to receive from the 11 per cent tax on building materials but I imagine it will take a large slice out of the $400 million set aside for municipal programs.

What I am attempting to point out is that the larger part of any loan to a municipality under this program will have to be spent on building materials, leaving only a smaller portion of the loan for employment payrolls. The production of the building materials will, of course, provide jobs but I am thinking of smaller centres where building materials are not produced locally. In these smaller centres the increased building costs already imposed by the new government which has been in office for less than 60 days will do little to encourage or help building by municipalities.

There is another aspect of the proposed loan fund which will be of common concern to smaller centres. It has been made clear by the government that the fund will not be made available for the construction of hospitals, schools, university buildings or sewage systems. In the smaller centres the exclusion of these items will leave very little in the way of capital works that can be undertaken. As has been pointed out by other speakers, especially by the hon. member for Acadia, this means that the larger centres will receive nearly all the benefit from the proposed loans. This was indicated by the headlines in a Toronto paper following the announcement of this program. There were several stories about major projects in Toronto that would likely be eligible for loans from the $400 million fund. The cost of these proposed projects would take almost one third of the entire loan fund.

I am not blaming Toronto for trying to get all it can. We all know the city's reputation and the name it has been given because of its acquisitive habits. What I am trying to point out to the government, as others have pointed out, is that there must be some limit on what one city or one area can receive. I hope this will be made clear in the bill when it comes before us for consideration. I know the Minister of Finance touched on the subject but I think it should be brought out in more detail and, as the hon. member for Acadia said, there should be a definite limit on the amount for any one centre. I have no idea what plans the municipalities in my area have but I am sure they will want their share and I am here to see that they get their share, and that all the money does not go to the large centres.

The Leader of the Opposition pointed out the difficulties likely to arise in securing dominion-provincial agreement with regard to the administration of the loan fund. These difficulties need not be repeated now. Perhaps I could ask the government one question with regard to the provinces. I know that some of the provinces have municipal loan arrangements of their own, but does this particular loan program envisage any contribution to the municipalities from the provincial governments? I am thinking of the winter works program of the former government under which Ottawa paid 50 per cent of the labour costs and the provincial governments paid 25 per cent. Under the former government there was a scheme of technical and vocational training, and Ottawa paid 75 per cent of the building cost and the province 25 per cent. I could cite another example from my own province of Saskatchewan. Ottawa is paying 75 per cent of the cost of constructing the south Saskatchewan dam and the provincial government is paying 25 per cent. Will there be provisions under which the provincial governments will participate in these municipal loans?

One reason for asking this question, Mr. Chairman, is the surplus of nearly $10 million reported by the Saskatchewan government for the last fiscal year. While the municipalities were cutting their works programs in an attempt to balance their budgets, the Saskatchewan government built up a surplus of nearly $10 million. I do not believe the government at Regina should take such pride in a budget surplus when this $10 million could have been used to help the municipalities.

This is not the whole story, Mr. Chairman, with regard to this surplus. The Saskatchewan government received from Ottawa, among other items, and I am not going to mention them all, over $30 million under certain tax sharing agreements, subsidies and so on. Ottawa also paid the Saskatchewan government about $18,300,000 under hospital insurance during the last fiscal year. All provincial governments received federal financial contributions on a similar scale. This was made clear by the official opposition financial critic, the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, in his brief reply to the budget last Thursday. He gave figures to show that under the former government the provinces received $3,525 million more than would have been paid under the Liberal government's schedule. If these payments had not been made there would have been a federal surplus in the last five years.

These remarks are by way of commenting on provincial financial responsibility. As I said earlier, they are made to emphasize my question concerning possible provincial participation in this municipal loan plan. It may be of some interest to refer to some of the comments made by the mayor of a Saskatchewan city. These comments were made before the announcement of the $10 million surplus by the Saskatchewan government. At that time he said that the Saskatchewan municipalities were in urgent need of some financial assistance from the provincial government to ease the increasing burden of municipal taxation. He hoped that the Saskatchewan government would share the increased revenue from tax rentals from Ottawa. As I say, these remarks were made before the announcement of the $10 million surplus. At that time, he said the Saskatchewan provincial government might be able to claim a reduced provincial debt, but that the debt reduction was due to a shift in the tax load from the province to the muncipal government.

As I said, Mr. Chairman, I am making these comments in order to ascertain if there is some way by which the provincial governments can be brought into this plan. The Minister of Finance referred to the sewage projects which were introduced by the former government and which were a great success. He gave the figures in respect of this program. I hope he meant it, and I imagine he did, when he said that this loan program would fit in with the sewage program and would also fit in with the winter works program. Hon. members have pointed out that $900 million was paid under that winter works program, and I mention it in contrast to the $400 million available under this program.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, these comments have been cut short because the Minister of Finance explained some of the points I had in mind. However, these remarks result from inquiries I have received following the introduction of this resolution. I trust that these further questions will be cleared up by the Minister of Finance either now or when the bill is before us.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Gordon thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-76, to promote increased employment in Canada by financial assistance by way of loans to municipalities to enable municipalities to augment or accelerate municipal capital works programs.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING MEMBERSHIP, FUNDS, ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (for the Secretary of State) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Atlantic Development Board Act to increase the number of members of the Atlantic development board from five to eleven; to establish as a separate account in the consolidated revenue fund an Atlantic development fund to which shall be credited the sum of one hundred million dollars to be used for the purpose of financing or assisting in financing programs or projects that would contribute to the growth and development of the economy of the Atlantic region and for which satisfactory financing arrangements are not otherwise available; and to provide that the said act shall expire on the 24th day of January, 1969; and to provide further for certain changes in connection with the administration of the said act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Mr. Pickersgill: Judging from the applause, Mr. Chairman, with which my entry was greeted, I take it that my little stratagem worked and that hon. members opposite thought when I went out that I had left the building and the government would be caught napping.

An hon. Member: We knew what you were doing.

Mr. Pickersgill: I may say, sir, that if my absence from the house upon occasion will stimulate the same kind of progress I will try to stay away as much as possible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: I know of course with what eagerness certain hon. members, particularly the hon. member for Cumberland and the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton, have been awaiting the introduction of this resolution. In fact some of them have spoken in anticipation of what was going to be said. I think therefore it would be desirable if I read the resolution itself and comment very briefly. I can assure the committee it will be very briefly because I hope we might get first reading of the bill by ten o'clock, in which case we could go right on and pass the bill tomorrow, and that would speed up the work of the board, which I know many hon. gentlemen opposite, as well as those on this side of the house, would like.

Mr. Fairweather: Would the hon. minister permit a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly.

Mr. Fairweather: Is it not a fact the board is now constituted and set up, and cannot its work proceed immediately?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman is just anticipating a point I was going to make in my speech, and I will make it at the point I intended to make it, and not seek to anticipate myself. The resolution reads:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Atlantic Development Board Act to increase the number of members of the Atlantic development board from five to eleven; to establish as a separate account in the consolidated revenue fund an Atlantic development fund to which shall be credited the sum of one hundred million dollars to be used for the purpose of financing or assisting in financing programs or projects that would contribute to the growth and development of the economy of the Atlantic region and for which satisfactory financing arrangements are not otherwise available;—

I stress those words "which are not otherwise available" because it is not intended that the Atlantic development board, in the expenditure of the fund, will be doing things that would be done by any other agency of the government. It is not to substitute itself for the other programs of the government; it is to supplement them, and I think that point should be emphasized on every possible occasion.

—and to provide that the said act shall expire on the 24th day of January, 1969; and to provide further for certain changes in connection with the administration of the said act.

The hon. member for Royal asked whether the board was now functioning. Of course it is quite true the board is functioning. The board has been functioning, or at least has been in existence since January 24, and I cannot forbear—I do this in no partisan spirit, sir—I cannot forbear to remark that the legislation was passed by the previous parliament before Christmas, and it was one of the 17 items of legislation that the previous government was able to get passed in the first 60 days of that parliament.

An hon. Member: How many have you got now?

Mr. Pickersgill: There were 17 government measures passed in the first 60 days of that parliament, and that was when the opposition was supposed to be obstructing the government. I just draw attention to that fact, that there were 17 measures passed, and one of them was this measure which hon. gentlemen opposite have claimed was a very important one, and which I agree was a very important one. I think that parenthetical observation of mine is just a demonstration of how ridiculous are many of these observations that have been made from time to time about obstruction in the last parliament. Those 17 measures would not have been passed in those 60 days without co-operation of the opposition, which was forthcoming.

Mr. Gregoire: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, if the minister wants this resolution to be passed before ten o'clock I think the should come down to the subject.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, so long as the hon. member for Lapointe will not ask me a hundred questions about it, I will try to get on with the subject very rapidly.

When the board was set up on January 24, which was over a month after the act passed, it was to set to work immediately. There has been a great deal of questioning in a good many minds as to what the relationship of the board, as it now exists, would be to the board as it is proposed to be enlarged and, in our opinion, strengthened. I think perhaps the best and simplest way I can explain that is to read a letter which I handed, after showing it to him, to the chairman of the board on May 23, 1963.

I told the chairman at the time I gave this letter to him that I intended to read it in parliament because I thought it would provide a very succinct explanation of the idea of the present administration as to how the existing board should function in the meantime, and how it would dovetail with the new arrangements that we were proposing to parliament, if those arrangements were accepted by parliament.

I was very anxious, as hon. members will see when I read the letter, to make sure any of the work the board had already embarked upon would not be interrupted pending the passage of the amending legislation. The letter reads:

May 23, 1963.

Brigadier Michael Wardell,
Chairman,
Atlantic Development Board,
Ottawa.

Dear Brigadier Wardell:

About a week ago, I told you I would advise you of the proposed amendments to the Atlantic Development Board Act as soon as my colleagues and I had reached a decision as to the form in which we proposed to recommend them to parliament.

This stage has now been reached and the appropriate resolution has already been placed on the order paper of the House of Commons.

There are two proposed amendments of a substantial character. One of these would establish an Atlantic development fund of one hundred million dollars. The board will have the responsibility of recommending the expenditure of this fund and of supervising such expenditures, but the final approval of each capital project rests with the government. The effective use of the fund will clearly require a close harmony of view between the government and the board and especially the chairman.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

The other important amendment affects the membership of the board and the tenure of the members. There would be a normal tenure of three years with a provision for one renewal for a second term and with provision for staggering the initial appointments.—

Something that is quite normal in legislation of this kind.

—The four existing members of the board, apart from the chairman, would be continued in their membership by the amendment itself for one year and the present chairman would be continued for a period of two years as a member of the board. The chairman would, on the coming into force of the amending legislation, be appointed during pleasure from among the members of the board.

I would like particularly to stress the last paragraph:

Until the new legislation comes into effect it would be the hope of the government that the present board would continue to pursue any activities already undertaken and to initiate any new activities consistent with the spirit of the legislation exactly as they would have done had there been no change of government.

I may say, sir, that in proposing these amendments the government takes the view, which the previous government took in introducing the original legislation, that the board's main function is to stimulate the development of the Atlantic provinces through all kinds of existing agencies, federal, provincial, municipal, private and corporate in the Atlantic area. We believe that this is the more important of its two functions, but we indicated when we were in opposition, and we take the view now that we are in office, that the board should have at its disposal a fund which can be used to supplement its other activities.

The fund is not intended to be the sole means—even the sole means in a federal sense—of promoting development in the Atlantic provinces. I go on and say it is not intended to be the main means because it is my view that the activities of the Department of Transport, the Department of Public Works, the Department of Fisheries, the Department of Agriculture, the department of mines and, above all, of the new department of industry, will contribute mightily to that development.

What the Atlantic development board will do with its fund is to fill in the gaps, I hope; that is, do those things that none of these agencies has the specific function of doing and at the same time promote the development and emphasize the development which each of these agencies can make to the goal which I am sure all parties in the house share. I refer to the goal of bringing the level of income, the level of employment, the level of activity and the standard of living in the Atlantic provinces as rapidly as we can and as near as we can to the level in other parts of the country. That is the objective, and I do not believe there is any quarrel with that objective—I am sure there is not —in any quarter of the house. I should be very surprised if there is.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that when we were in opposition we were critical of what we thought were some deficiencies in the legislation brought forward by the previous government. The hon. member for Victoria-Carleton will recall that on the day the membership of the board was announced in this house by him I rose at once and welcomed the prompt appointment of the board at that time, in January. I said we hoped they would get to work quickly and we wanted to do everything we could to see that their work was fruitful and effective. I hope that in introducing amendments which we believe will strengthen the board and will give the board an opportunity to take a direct initiative to do certain things that no other agency of the federal government is equipped to do as a part of its normal operations, we will have the same spirit of co-operation from the other side of the house that we tried to manifest once the legislation had been adopted and brought into force in January of this year.

There are a great many more things that I would like to say on the bill itself. However, I would prefer, if it were possible, to have the resolution adopted and to have hon. members see the provisions of the bill itself, so we may carry on the debate in the full knowledge of what it is the government is proposing to the house. For that reason, Mr. Chairman, I do not intend this evening to make any more extended observations.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question. Will any of the members of the board be full time; and if so, how many?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is not contemplated that there will be any full time members of the board. The present board has appointed a full time director and one or two other officers, and they have selected one or two consultants. But it is contemplated that the board will as far as possible employ existing agencies of government to carry on the work, even the work of spending the money in the fund, in order to avoid needless expenditure in building up another so-called department of government, or agency of government. It is felt the board should be more fully representative, and that is why we are adding to the membership. Perhaps I should have said this earlier. I think the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, if I remember rightly, and certainly some of his friends in the house in the last parliament suggested that the board should be more representative of the various industries and economic interests in the Atlantic provinces. We share that view fully. We do not think that a board of five members can be adequately representative of all those interests. It is in order to provide for a reasonable representation of the main economic interests that we are suggesting this increase in membership.

Mr. Douglas: Does this part time employment apply equally to the chairman?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, before proceeding with some remarks I should like to ask the Secretary of State if he would comment on the fact that the resolution contains a declaration of intent, if you like, that the board shall cease to exist on January 24, 1969.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should really have mentioned that point in my explanation, Mr. Chairman. Hon. members will recall, I am sure, that the first forecast of this particular kind of measure was made in the report of the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects in 1957, a royal commission of which the chairman was my hon. friend the present Minister of Finance. It was recommended—and I believe I have the report among my documents here and perhaps at a later stage when I speak on the bill I will put the actual recommendation on the record—that a massive effort of capital investment be made with a view, not simply to adding a little each year to the capital structure but really to add rapidly to the capital structure in the Atlantic provinces with a view to raising the level of income. This was not with the idea of having a new, permanent agency of government, but really to take a big leap forward quickly. It is that concept that we are seeking to embody in this amendment. It is for that reason it was thought that a six year period would be an appropriate one.

I think I might just add this about it. It does seem to me that if there is a short period there will be an added incentive to do as much as possible in that period. If we find that really effective results are being obtained and that this technique has not completed the work at the end of six years, I feel quite sure that whatever government may be in office in this country at that time —and none of us can tell for sure what that government will be—they will not want to stop that advance. On the other hand, if this device does not work, there is no use having another piece of governmental machinery lying around. It is for that reason that after very careful consideration this six year period was picked.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Chairman, may I ask one other question related to this very interesting observation by the Secretary of State. Is $100 million in his view the massive assistance that is contemplated for the period? Is that the entire amount until January 24, 1969?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, it is not, Mr. Chairman. I thought I had made that point clear, but I think the hon. gentleman is quite right in suggesting that I should emphasize it. I think I used the phrase that this was to be a gap filler. I have mentioned various departments, and I probably did not mention all that I should have, because there are other projects and my hon. friend the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, through the national parks and in other ways will, I hope, be contributing very materially to that capital investment in the Atlantic provinces, and it will not come out of this $100 million. Indeed, I have a lot of schemes for spending his money myself. I know that my hon. friend the Minister of Fisheries who has just returned from Newfoundland, where he has been to see the main fishing province of Canada, also has plans to contribute to the capital development of the Atlantic area.

I am hoping that as soon as the site of the world's fair is settled, my hon. friend, the Minister of Public Works will have an opportunity to make a tour of the coast of Newfoundland with me, especially the northeast coast, so that I can show him all the marine improvements which are necessary in order to accomplish something. I also have some plans for my hon. friend the Minister of Transport, but perhaps I have gone far enough to indicate to the hon. member for Royal that the $100 million is, in my view, a gap filler.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I enjoyed the remarks of the minister but he has not fully clarified the situation in my mind. He mentions the sum of $100 million. Is this to be for one year, for two years, for a longer period, or for every year? All these other departments carry on with their work and we are looking forward to great decisions by them. Parks have been mentioned. Is the hon. gentleman including any of these works which would be carried on by the different departments as part of their duties? Surely we are to have $100 million over and above such sums. Will it be for the next six months, the next year, or two years, or six years?

Mr. Pickersgill: I had thought that would be clear, but I will be glad to repeat what I said. This $100 million, which is a capital fund and therefore is, of course, not for six months, is over and above the normal appropriation and it is intended to do things which in their normal course of operation the departments of the federal government would not be doing.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Does the minister feel that this $100 million will give us this great leap forward of which he spoke? When will this leap forward begin, and how long will it carry on? Will it be over at the end of six years, say?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the short answer is that $100 million is $100 million more than nothing. But to answer the question a little more fully, this $100 million is not intended in any way to be substituted for any other program. It is to be an addition to what would otherwise be done.

Mr. Coates: I wish to ask the minister one question. I was entranced by his kindly approach to the subject. He suggested in the last parliament that the Minister of National Revenue of that day was seducing the house in bringing forward a bill. I want to say the hon. gentleman is certainly proving to be a tremendous seducer himself. The minister has explained about the work of the different departments over and above the $100 million. What I should like to know is whether all these different departments are themselves going to inject a large extra amount of revenue into the Atlantic area as well. If not, all we end up with is $100 million, plus what we are getting today.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the present government has given a good indication of what it intends to do in other ways. The hon. member was in the house the other day when we voted a slice of the new vote for the trans-Canada highway. The present government has already indicated that in the four Atlantic provinces it intends to pay 90 per cent of the cost of completing the trans-Canada highway. I think that is good evidence of the attitude of the present government toward capital development in the Atlantic provinces. I migh say that 90 per cent of this expenditure will in itself be a sizeable sum even in comparison with the $100 million for the Atlantic development fund. As the hon. member for Cumberland knows, as the hon. member for Pictou knows, and as the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough certainly knows, in their constituencies the trans-Canada highway could stand a great deal of improvement, and the sooner the better.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. There will be a number of opportunities for hon. members to ask questions but they will remember that a few moments ago I recognized the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton. I do so again.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I had wanted to ask another question, myself. Do I understand from the Secretary of State that the government would be willing to delete that portion of the resolution having to do with the expiration of the board at the end of a certain period, that is, on January 24, 1969? Do I understand that the government would consider deleting that feature, if it seemed to be the feeling among hon. members that it should be done?

Mr. Pickersgill: As the hon. gentleman very well knows, we are at the resolution stage. The bill has not been introduced, and even after bills have been introduced governments have sometimes been known to make changes in them. I am not sure whether or not the hon. gentleman made one or two in the original bill.

If arguments were put forward in debate which I thought merited serious consideration, I would certainly be glad to bring them to the attention of my colleagues and I would not close the door on any reasonable suggestion for amendments, no matter from whatever quarter of the house it came.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I take it, then, that even if it came from me it might be acceptable.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman knows that when we are not facing each other across the floor of the house there is no one whose suggestions I find more seductive.

An hon. Member: Better call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if you would consider it appropriate to call it ten o'clock.

Progress reported.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the leader of the house what changes he proposes in the program for Tuesday?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not propose any real changes from what was suggested on Friday. I indicated that the resolution respecting the Atlantic development board would be the second item of business for today, and we have got on to it, and I am grateful to hon. members for having let us make a start on this measure. We shall continue with it tomorrow and, I hope, get first reading of the bill, because I think it would be helpful to have the bill for study between now and the time when it could be taken up again after the budget debate.

I indicated on Friday that there would be two possibilities after that. One was the department of industry bill and the other the resolution preceding the measure respecting the Department of Agriculture. I think it will probably be more satisfactory to take the second reading of the department of industry bill, because we would probably want to start a fresh day on the Department of Agriculture measure, if we could. The department of industry has already been debated a great deal. However, should we get second reading and the committee stage of the department of industry through, then we would, perforce, start on the resolution respecting the Department of Agriculture. I hold out that bait to hon. gentlemen opposite. On Wednesday we shall begin the budget debate and carry on until it is completed.

It being two minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, June 18, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. KNOWLES—APPOINTMENT OF TEMPORARY CONSULTANTS IN FINANCE DEPARTMENT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege that has to do with the relations between the executive and parliament and therefore is of concern to all members of this house.

On Friday last the Minister of Finance informed the house that certain gentlemen had been appointed on a temporary basis to the Department of Finance. The minister gave the number and date of the treasury board minute which was supposed to have effected these appointments.

Yesterday I asked the Minister of Finance if this treasury board minute, and another one, had been validated by order in council. He expressed the opinion that this had been done, but said he would look into it. My searches have revealed no such order in council. I was in communication again today, as is my right, with the privy council office, and I was informed then that there still are no orders in council supporting either of the treasury board minutes to which reference has now been made by the Minister of Finance.

My point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, is twofold. On the one hand, we were misled by the Minister of Finance when we were told that these gentlemen were appointed to the Department of Finance, because their appointments are completely irregular. On the other hand, we have a point of privilege in that a section of the Financial Administration Act has been violated. I refer, as I did yesterday, to section 5, subsection 2, of the Financial Administration Act which reads as follows:

> The governor in council may authorize the treasury board to exercise all or any of the powers other than powers of appointment—

May I repeat those words, which are very clear:

> —other than powers of appointment, of the governor in council under the Civil Service Act, the Civil Service Superannuation Act, the Defence Services Pension Act, and parts II to VI of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act.

It is very clear, Mr. Speaker, that one power the treasury board does not have, a power that cannot be given to it even by the governor in council, is the power of appointment; yet by treasury board minutes T.B. 610618 dated May 2, 1963 and T.B. 610952 dated May 17, 1963, first three and then a fourth person were presumably appointed to the Department of Finance on a temporary basis. In view of the fact that the treasury board had no such authority, and in view of the fact that appointments could only be made by the governor in council, this means that when these four gentlemen were working with the Minister of Finance on the budget they were not properly attached to the Department of Finance because the treasury board had no authority to make any such appointments.

As I have indicated, my point of privilege is twofold. First, we have been misled in being told that these gentlemen were attached, even temporarily, to the Department of Finance. Such was not the case. They were complete outsiders, just as anyone else might be, because their appointments were not regular.

The second aspect of my point of privilege is that just as in the last session the Financial Administration Act was misused—and hon. gentlemen now on the government side complained about its misuse—so it is now again being misused because the clear provisions against the treasury board making appointments have been violated.

If an order in council is now produced trying to make this validation retroactive it will not change the fact that during the time these gentlemen were assisting the Minister of Finance in the preparation of the budget they were complete outsiders.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in the first place I certainly had no intention of misleading the house, nor do I think I did so. If I did I apologize, but I do not think I did.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked me the other day what authority there was for the appointment of the special consultants in question. In my reply I said the treasury board minutes are submitted to council in the normal course, and I promised to look into the matter and to report what had actually taken place. Now, very little time has elapsed. I looked into the matter this morning, and this is the answer I was going to give to my hon. friend on orders of the day.

The answer is that the special consultants were employed by service contract, approved by the treasury board, pursuant to the government contracts regulations. These government contracts regulations were themselves established by the governor in council under the authority of section 39 of the Financial Administration Act.

The government contracts regulations require that service contracts in excess of $1,000 be approved by the treasury board. I am informed by the secretary of the treasury board and by the solicitor in the Department of Finance that section 5(2) of the Financial Administration Act, to which my hon. friend referred, does not apply in these cases, and that no other authority was required other than the treasury board minutes referred to previously. I am informed that this is the practice that has been followed by successive governments for many years.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I point out to the Minister of Finance that every previous statement he has made to the house about this matter has included the word "appointment". He has told us these gentlemen were "appointed" to the Department of Finance. Now he shifts his ground; now he plays with words and tells us they were employed under contracts of service. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this playing with words is not an answer to the affront to parliament.

Mr. Gordon: With great respect, Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Resign.

Mr. Gordon: —I suggest it is the hon. member who is playing with words.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege that has just been raised—

An hon. Member: Another forged letter?

Mr. Churchill: —on page 1200 of Hansard for June 14 the Minister of Finance is reported as saying:

> As I said in my statement, they were officials of the department; they were appointed by order in council—

If that is not misleading the house, in view of the statement just made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I do not know what misleading the house is.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Finance indicate to the house how, under section 39 of the Financial Administration Act which has to do only with contracts, persons can be engaged or appointed?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that if there is any doubt in the hon. member's mind about this matter, the Department of Justice be asked for an opinion—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: —on the legality of the appointments, and the opinion be tabled in the house.

PRIVILEGE

MR. TREMBLAY—EXPLANATION OF ARTICLE IN MAGAZINE "AGRICULTURE"

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Rene Tremblay (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), rising on a question of privilege, told the house yesterday about the publication, in a Montreal magazine, of a message bearing the signature of Rene Tremblay, minister of agriculture for eastern Canada.

I have been in touch with the Minister of Agriculture to find out what had happened. It is obviously by mistake that such a message was published. It was to be held back until the act regarding the department had been approved by the house and the office of the second minister of agriculture had been entrusted to me, as stated by the Prime Minister in a press release dated April 22, 1963, which read as follows:

> The government intends to ask parliament to approve the appointment of two ministers of agriculture, one for eastern Canada and the other for western Canada, and His Excellency has accepted and sanctioned the proposal that Mr. Tremblay, new Minister without Portfolio, become one of the two ministers of agriculture when covering legislation has been adopted.

If in your opinion, Mr. Speaker, such a message violates the privileges of the house, I beg you to accept my apologies.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

Mr. Maurice Sauve (Îles-de-la-Madeleine) presented the first report of the special committee on defence, and moved that the report be concurred in.

THE BUDGET

OUTSIDE ASSISTANCE—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION BY HOUSE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I would direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask him whether, with a view to securing the facts connected with the extraordinary and dubious action of the Minister of Finance and the government in bypassing the highly trained officials of the Department of Finance and securing the services of persons outside the civil service in the drafting of the budget; and, in the light of the contemptuous disregard revealed today for the house when it asked for information, the right hon. gentleman would consider having a preliminary investigation made into the whole matter by submitting the question to a standing committee of the house or to a special committee to be set up for that purpose so that the minister and the said three persons and other witnesses might be called to give evidence, including the firms with which the three selected individuals are now, or have been, connected.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Notwithstanding the fact that the right hon. gentleman used adjectives in the course of his question which were altogether out of order and improper, we shall naturally give consideration to the suggestion he has made. Making that statement does not mean any decision has been taken by the government on this matter. I hope if the right hon. gentleman has any further questions to ask on this subject he will put them in a more proper way.

Mr. Diefenbaker: My question was put in perfectly proper language having regard to the contemptuous attitude shown by this government toward the house.

[Later:]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I wish to take this opportunity to reply to a question asked last night by the hon. member for Kootenay West. I should like to state I have now verified the fact that Mr. Anderson, Mr. Conway, Mr. O'Connell and Mr. Stanley were born in Canada and are Canadian citizens.

I should also like to take this opportunity to answer a question which was asked yesterday, I think it was, by the hon. member for Peace River with regard to the statutory authority for the administration of the oath of secrecy. I stated at the time that I would be glad to make inquiries and answer the hon. member's question today.

Section 66 of the Civil Service Act requires:

> —that "every deputy head and employee shall, before any remuneration is paid to him, take and subscribe the oath of allegiance and the oath set out in schedule B" (the oath of office and secrecy).

Section 75 of the same act states:

> The governor in council may authorize any person to administer oaths and take and receive affidavits, declarations and affirmations for any of the purposes of this act or the regulations.

Order in council P.C. 1680 of November 4, 1953 gave treasury board the power to authorize, on behalf of the governor in council, any person to administer oaths. In respect of the Department of Finance, treasury board minute T.B. 594178 dated March 22, 1962 authorized the personnel officer and the chief administrative officer to administer oaths for any of the purposes of the Civil Service Act.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask the minister a supplementary question. How could these oaths be administered to these gentlemen if they were contractors rather than appointees?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, the oaths were administered to these gentlemen. They took them, and as I have said before I have every confidence in their integrity and their honesty.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question. A few minutes ago the Prime Minister said that he was prepared to request a legal opinion as to whether persons could be appointed under section 39 of the Financial Administration Act.

Mr. Howard: Which provides only for contracts.

Mr. Douglas: This section, I understand, provides only for contracts for the purchase of goods.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is wrong on two counts. I did not make the statement he has indicated, and he is wrong about the act. I said we would be glad to get a legal opinion from the Department of Justice as to the legality of the appointments in question, a suggestion which seems to have been sneered at by the other side.

Mr. Douglas: I am now asking the Prime Minister whether he is prepared to secure a legal opinion as to whether under section 39 of the Financial Administration Act it is possible to make appointments such as those made by the Department of Finance.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to ask for a legal opinion on this matter and to table it on the terms indicated by my hon. friend. Indeed, I am glad to go further than that.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS—APPLICATION TO CONTRACTS SIGNED BEFORE JUNE 14

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the extreme hardship which has been imposed upon building contractors, manufacturers, and suppliers of building materials by the imposition of the 11 per cent sales tax on all building materials, will the minister give consideration either to the waiving or the refunding of the sales tax on all building materials involved in contracts let prior to midnight, June 13?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I thank the hon. gentleman for his courtesy in giving me notice of his question. Generous provision has already been made in paragraph 17 of the excise tax resolutions for relief for persons who are unable by reason of fixed price contracts signed before June 14 to add the amount of the tax in question to the selling price.

PROTESTS AGAINST APPLICATION OF SALES TAX TO BUILDING MATERIALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday in response to questions from various members the minister indicated that he had received telegrams from a number of builders' groups across the country outlining the dangerous effects on the building industry of the 11 per cent tax, and he said then that he hoped to be able to reply to all those today. Is the minister in a position now to so reply?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I meant that I would reply to the wires individually. When I went back to my office last night I asked for a draft to be prepared. It has not yet gone out.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the minister said in connection with this matter that exemptions or rebates would be granted with regard to contracts entered into prior to June 14. Many of the companies who are sending telegrams are complaining that applications for rebates will present accounting problems. Would the minister give consideration to granting exemptions rather than rebates for completion of contracts which were entered into prior to June 14?

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Gordon: I hesitate to raise the question of accounting skills and problems, but I do not seriously believe that this will create any great accounting problems.

(Translation):

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the Minister of Finance intends to answer personally the telegram of protest, can I send him the telegram of the Saguenay house builders' association, in order that he may answer both at the same time?

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: If he wishes to, Mr. Speaker.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Minister of Finance a question in connection with this matter, and pointed out that very strong representations were being made by building organizations across the country as to the very detrimental effect of the application of the sales tax on building materials. As found on page 1244 of Hansard I concluded with these words:

> If so, is he now giving consideration to withdrawing the measure?

In the course of his reply the minister said that he had not personally received the telegrams and went on to say:

> At that time I will be able to decide what course of action should be taken.

In view of the very widespread nature of the objections being taken and the very cogent arguments that the application of the sales tax on building materials will have the effect of reducing building and reducing employment, has the minister given final consideration to whether he intends to pursue this detrimental course?

Mr. Gordon: I was not too clear whether that was an argument, a speech or a question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It was not an order in council, anyway.

Mr. Gordon: However, the proposals presented in the budget on this matter were designed for a variety of excellent reasons, and there is no suggestion of changing them.

[Later:]

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): May I ask the Minister of Finance if he will agree to accept another telegram, one which came from the builders of the Grey North society back home, and give it the same treatment as the others he has on his desk?

PROTESTS RESPECTING IMPOSITION OF SECURITIES TAX

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Did the Minister of Finance receive from executives of the Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver stock exchanges representations protesting against, and demanding clarification of, the 30 per cent securities tax included in the budget speech and, if so, what action does the minister intend to take in this regard?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first part of the question. To the second part of the question may I say that the budget proposals will be debated starting tomorrow and, as far as the government is concerned, we propose to go ahead with that tax.

(Translation):

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. Could the Minister of Finance tell us whether he is going to meet with the president of the Montreal stock exchange, Mr. Kierans, who expressed that desire?

(Text):

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker; at 5.30 this afternoon.

(Translation):

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would it not be wise to warn the finance minister against the false theories of the president of the Montreal stock exchange?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member well knows that is not the type of question that we enjoy at this time.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Finance said earlier that he would meet with Mr. Eric Kierans at 5.30 p.m. today, and in view of the fact that Mr. Kierans is seeking to have abolished the 30 per cent tax on sale of Canadian shares to foreign interests, could the minister tell us whether he is ready to confer with any individual who would like to make representations about the present budget, or whether he only welcomes those who come to protect substantial foreign interests?

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: I have been receiving representations from anybody who wanted to see me over the last two months to the extent of the time available and I shall be glad to continue that practice.

(Translation):

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Minister of Finance be willing to confer with Mr. Lesage if the latter expressed such a wish?

Mr. Gregoire: A further question, Mr. Speaker. Could the Minister of Finance tell us whether other persons interested in the present budget have asked to meet with the minister?

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: Plenty of them, Mr. Speaker.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have tried to be generous to the hon. member, but I do think the wishes and time of other members in the house should be considered.

INQUIRY AS TO TAX ON MANAGEMENT FEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. M. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. I wonder whether the minister could tell the house how many management consultant firms there are in Canada, what revenue he expects from the taxes on the help that was coming from the United States consultant firms—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): —and whether he will extend this privilege to other companies in Canada which are providing a similar service?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I presume that the hon. member is referring to the proposed tax—

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Section 12.

Mr. Gordon: —on management fees. That does not include fees paid to outside consultants.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): I was referring to those in the United States.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR DELAY IN CONVENING CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's answer to a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Royal, could the Prime Minister tell the house whether he has accepted Mr. Lesage's request to delay the enactment of the municipal loan fund legislation until it has been examined by a federal-provincial conference?

Inquiries of the Ministry

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in reply, the letter from the prime minister of Quebec is now under consideration.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ELIMINATION FROM TELEVISION INTERVIEW OF REFERENCE TO SMOKING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Secretary of State. Some of us saw last night an interview with the Minister of National Health and Welfare being filmed for the C.B.C., in which a C.B.C. reporter said that he too was definitely going to stop smoking. That statement did not appear on the national T.V. news. My question is, Mr. Speaker, was this omission or deletion due to concern by the network over the possible reaction of cigarette advertisers?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I do not imagine that the hon. member for New Westminster, having regard to the views about broadcasting, which have been expressed by the members of his party over the years, would expect a minister of the crown to be a censor of news broadcasts of the C.B.C., but I will be very glad to direct the question to the attention of the C.B.C. and no doubt they will be willing to take proper note of it.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

ELECTION RESULTS IN ALBERTA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Has he noticed that all Social Crediters here present are wearing a green boutonniere? If so, does he know that it is a symbol of the overwhelming victory of the Social Credit in Alberta?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have noticed that, and I am surprised that some of them have not turned red.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—ESTIMATED COST OF HIGH ARROW DAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources if he can unveil a mystery concealed to date by the water resources branch. In view of national interest in the development and renegotiation of the Columbia river treaty and the particular interest in the technical details on the part of numerous engineers and technical people, can the minister inform the house of the latest official estimate with respect to the construction of the high Arrow dam and all related costs?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, some information with regard to the cost estimates for the high Arrow dam and other Columbia treaty projects was supplied in a reply to question No. 875 in the last session of parliament, and appears in Hansard for December 3, 1962 at pages 2226 and 2227. The answer was given by the then minister of this department, the present member for Brandon-Souris, in reply to a question asked by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano. I might tell the hon. member that within our department we have no official estimates that would in any way alter the figures then supplied.

PEACE RIVER—APPLICATION FOR CONSTRUCTION OF DAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works if he is in a position yet to answer the question I asked on Friday last with regard to the Peace river dam, to which he said he would reply yesterday.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I was about to answer this question. On Friday the hon. member for Peace River asked if an official application under the Navigable Waters Protection Act for leave to proceed with the Peace river dam had been received by my department. The answer to this question is no.

In reply to the second part of the question, I pointed out the other day that this was a hypothetical question. However, if it should occur, the act provides for a 30 day public advertising period by the applicant of intent to apply to the minister for approval of plan and site. Any objections or representations received during this period would be thoroughly investigated.

Mr. Baldwin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that work is actively proceeding on this project, would the minister seek advice from the Minister of Justice to ascertain whether this work is proceeding in contravention of the act and, if so, would he consider taking suitable action?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the matter has already been referred to the Department of Justice for an opinion.

FORESTRY

CAPE BRETON—INQUIRY AS TO IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Forestry. In view of the urgency of putting men to work, can the minister advise whether an agreement has yet been reached between the Department of Forestry and the government of Nova Scotia in regard to the forest stand improvement program in Cape Breton?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his question. Technically I could answer by saying no, but I think a word of explanation is in order. There has been a useful and constructive exchange of ideas between officials of my department and the department of lands in Nova Scotia. Conclusions have been reached, and as other departments of government are affected these conclusions are being studied. I hope to be able to make an announcement at a very early date.

TRADE

RUSSIA—INQUIRY AS TO RENEGOTIATION OF TREATY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Have any difficulties arisen in the renegotiation of the trade treaty between Canada and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman is probably aware, this treaty expired during the term of the previous government. It was extended at that time, and the extension continues in effect.

RED CHINA—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has he a statement ready for the house on the negotiations with China concerning grain sales, or can we expect one in a few days?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): As the hon. gentleman knows, and I know the former minister of agriculture knows very well, these negotiations with China are carried on by the wheat board. All contracts with China are signed by the wheat board.

I just want to say that these negotiations are now proceeding. I am sure it is the wish of all hon. members that we should sell as much wheat to China as is possible on the best possible terms, and that being so I really think it would be inappropriate for me to discuss the terms that are now under negotiation.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Following that answer by the minister, I should like to ask him whether he, on behalf of the government, has still the same policy about making public contracts signed by the Canadian wheat board.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I think it would probably be inadvisable to reveal these contracts, because that might interfere with negotiations for sales.

Mr. Churchill: Tell that to your colleagues.

Mr. Sharp: But I do believe, sir, that it should be possible, after the contracts have been made, to reveal as much information as would not in any way inhibit the activities of the wheat board or their successful negotiations.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask the minister how soon he hopes to be able to announce whether the balance of the contract which expires at the end of this year for sales of wheat to China will be filled?

Mr. Sharp: Although the terms of the contract have not been revealed to this house, there has been enough information made available in one way or another to indicate that the minimum quantities China had undertaken to buy have now been purchased.

Mr. Douglas: There are still, however, some 40 million bushels of wheat, 20 million bushels of barley, and 1½ million bushels of wheat flour which could be sold under that agreement within this year. Is there any announcement likely to be made regarding that sale in the near future?

Mr. Sharp: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it is possible to sell a good deal more wheat than that to China. What the hon. member is referring to are the maximum quantities. The undertaking of the Chinese government to purchase has been fulfilled. We will be doing our best to sell as much wheat and as much flour as we possibly can.

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette): May I ask the minister what concessions the government of the day is making to the Chinese people's republic in order to induce them to continue with this wheat purchase contract?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Sharp: No concessions have been made, because we have not yet entered into any new contracts.

Mr. Mandziuk: May I ask another supplementary question. Have the Chinese asked that Canada accept more Chinese textiles and rubber goods, as reported in the newspapers?

Mr. Sharp: As I said in answer to the first question, I really do not believe it will assist Canada to sell wheat to China if I discuss, in the course of negotiations, the particular positions that the respective parties have taken.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION OF MASTER AGENCY PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. M. Horner (Jasper-Edson): As a member from the province that recently elected a Social Credit government on the admission that they were sorry they had helped to defeat the Conservative government in Ottawa, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport which is concerning a lot of us right across the country. Has the minister had any discussions with Canadian National concerning the master agency plan, which will cause so much economic hardship in the small communities across Canada?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): The answer to the first part of the question is yes.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister ask the Canadian National to withhold the implementation of this master agency plan until after the select committee has met and discussed this matter with the officials of the Canadian National?

Mr. McIlraith: I would want to give that matter some consideration because, as the hon. member probably does not know, at the start of this session I put forward a proposal that membership of the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines be reduced to the same number that is usually decided upon for the select committee established each year. This proposal, for one reason or another, was not acceptable to the opposition, and this is of course a matter for them. I did indicate at that time that there was a great deal of business to be referred to the committee, and I had given some outline of what it was.

Now, that course not having been followed, and there being a tremendous amount of business now before the house, I am not sure whether the matter could properly and appropriately be delayed until there is an opportunity to set up a committee to deal with these matters. In any event I will take this suggestion under consideration.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): May I ask a further supplementary question. Can the minister tell us when we can expect the select committee on railways and steamships to be set up?

Mr. McIlraith: The short answer to that would have to be no, but perhaps that is too short an answer. As I indicated, the scheme I had put forward was not agreeable to the opposition. It is in the hands of the opposition.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE—REQUEST FOR COPIES OF REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I hope the government will not faint if, before I put my question, I extend congratulations to the government on the reception accorded this morning to the delegation from Manitoba with respect to the retention of the T.C.A. maintenance and overhaul base at Winnipeg. I am sure all members from Manitoba appreciated the attendance of the Prime Minister and the members of the cabinet forming the subcommittee on transport. The Prime Minister's statement was also most welcome.

I should like to ask the Minister of Transport if he has been able to ascertain, since this morning, whether it would be possible to make available to those concerned the report of R. Dixon Speas and Associates, when it is obtained?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): No; I regret that I have not had an opportunity of considering the matter further since this morning.

INCOME TAX

OIL AND GAS—DEDUCTION OF DRILLING AND EXPLORATION EXPENSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance which arises out of a statement in an article in the Toronto Globe and Mail of Friday, June 14, to the effect that oil and gas pipe line companies will be allowed to deduct from income expenses incurred in drilling for oil and gas. This proposal would be backdated to April 10, 1962, according to the newspaper statement. Is this true?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): This provision, Mr. Speaker, is set out in paragraph 4 of the income tax regulations on pipe line companies and exploration extensions. The proposal that companies whose principal business is operating a pipe line be allowed to deduct drilling and exploration expenses is a logical extension or rounding out of provisions in the Income Tax Act concerning the deduction of exploration expenses. Some of these existing provisions of the act have been there for many years; others were added only last year.

In 1947 provisions providing tax credits on account of exploration and drilling expenses were changed to the present method of allowing these expenses as a deduction from income. Since that time this right of oil and gas companies to deduct exploration and drilling expenses has been gradually broadened.

In March, 1957 a change was announced, effective for 1957 and subsequent years, which permitted companies whose principal business is processing mineral ores for the purpose of recovering metals therefrom, or processing metals from the ores so processed, to deduct all expenses incurred in searching for minerals in Canada or exploring or drilling for petroleum or natural gas in Canada. The purpose of this amendment was to permit companies engaged in processing ores into metals, such as steel companies, to deduct the cost of exploring for supplies of the raw materials used in their business.

In June, 1961 the budget speech announced an extension of this provision to include companies whose principal business is fabricating metals. This permitted companies that take prime metal, such as copper, and manufacture or process it into finished goods to deduct the expenses of exploring for minerals or oil or gas in Canada.

In April, 1962 the budget speech announced further concessions for the oil and gas industry and for those interested in exploring for oil, gas or minerals. These concessions included a provision which permitted any individual or company to deduct expenses incurred in drilling or exploring for oil or gas in Canada from the income of that person from the operation of an oil or gas well in Canada. These concessions were made available to all individuals whether or not they were residents of Canada, and to all companies irrespective of any degree of Canadian ownership or control. These 1962 concessions probably benefited foreign owned and controlled companies to a much greater extent than Canadians.

In May, 1963 representatives of six pipe line companies made representations to the government urging that pipe line companies be allowed to deduct from income the expenses they incurred in drilling and exploring for oil and gas reserves in Canada. At this meeting I was represented by Mr. Benson, parliamentary secretary to the Department of Finance, and a permanent official of the department.

These companies already were permitted under the 1962 legislation to deduct exploration and drilling expenses from any income they had from the operation of an oil or gas well in Canada, or from royalties in respect of an oil or gas well, but they pointed out that they had very little such income. They also pointed out that the existing law denied the same right of deduction as oil and gas companies only because of a technical interpretation of the law which held that transportation of oil or gas did not qualify as marketing of these products.

It was pointed out on behalf of these companies that they are virtually dependant upon a supply of oil and gas to keep them in business, and it was represented that they had as good a reason to be allowed to deduct the cost of hunting for the raw materials upon which their business is based as companies engaged in fabricating metals.

These representations appeared to the government to be reasonable and worthy of favourable action. Most important of all was the fact that the majority of the companies to benefit from this further concession would be Canadian residents, and have a high degree of Canadian ownership.

The representations made in writing by the pipe line companies did not ask that any legislation be retroactive, and so far as those who represented the government at the meeting can recall this matter was not discussed. It was the general understanding that the companies were looking forward to the deduction of expenses they planned to make in the future and that they had no expenses incurred in the past which they hoped to be able to deduct. The decision to have the proposed amendment date from April 10, 1962 was made following a recommendation made entirely on technical grounds by those engaged in drafting the resolution.

Because of the nature of the extensive amendments made in 1962 to section 838A of the Income Tax Act to implement the 1962 budget proposals related to the oil and gas industry, it was necessary to divide exploration and drilling expenses into those incurred before April 10, 1962 and those incurred after that date. The division is made in subsections 3, 3b, 3c, 3d, 4a, 4b, 4c, 5a, 5b, 5c, and 6a of section 83A. It was believed that to add a new date from which exploration and drilling expenses would be measured would seriously complicate an already complex section of the Income Tax Act. For this reason, and for this reason only, paragraph 4 of the income tax resolution proposes that the change related to pipe line companies date from April 10, 1962.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): I appreciate the minister's interest in the oil industry and pipe line companies and, as a supplementary question, could he tell the house the names of the six companies which made representations in this regard?

Mr. Gordon: I will be glad to do that, but I will have to get the names.

[Later:]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question to that asked by the hon. member for Acadia. When the minister is giving a list of those who were present would he advise whether Mr. D. C. A. Stanley was also present on that occasion?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, I certainly will.

[Later:]

Mr. Gordon: If I may reply now to the question put by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, I am informed by Mr. Benson, who conducted these discussions, that Mr. Stanley was not present.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I would like to follow the line of questioning that the hon. member for Acadia started with a question to the Minister of Finance. Has any action been taken to deal with the national energy board to ensure, once you give this new right to the pipe line companies, that the right of ordinary producers of gas to these pipe lines as an ordinary common carrier is protected?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to look into it and answer the question when this matter is up for debate.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NUCLEAR COMMITMENT—STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR DOCUMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to give the government's answer to the motion which appeared on the order paper of Wednesday, June 5, 1963 in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), and the reservation thereto.

In accordance with the undertaking given, without commitment, in the house to give careful consideration to the request of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and others, the government has re-examined the documentation in question. As a result the conclusion has been reached that the answer originally given must stand, namely that the documents relate to the security of the state and to that of allied countries and cannot be produced in whole or in part without prejudice to national and allied safety.

[Later:]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs arising out of the remarks he just made? Will the government consider permitting the special committee on defence, perhaps in camera, to examine these documents so that members of this house can determine for all of us whether or not the commitments and the documents referred to actually exist?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I cannot add anything to what I have already said.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the house is left with privy councillors on both sides of the chamber saying opposite things, how are we going to find out, as members of this house, what is the truth?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I say to my hon. friend that the answer to his question is clear. That is, to do what the Canadian people will do, that is, to accept the statement of the government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman should not get into the field of fiction when we are trying to obtain information.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I thank the prime minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —of the period before the last general election—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —but if he has any doubt about the correctness of my reply a few moments ago to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, perhaps the Leader of the Opposition would consult the former minister of national defence.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The house passed a motion to table these documents. The minister at the time indicated there would be a possibility of taking extracts from the documents and tabling them. Now he tells us that he cannot even table the extracts or a summary of them. I think, far from the Canadian people accepting this, they will come to the conclusion which many of the rest of us are being forced to come to, namely that these documents are non-existent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, since you have allowed the hon. gentleman to make his observations and I do not quarrel with this, perhaps I may be permitted to say in reply that the motion was accepted by this house without any commitment being made, there being added to the motion a reservation that the request made by hon. gentlemen opposite would be looked into. That request has been looked into and the government, on its responsibility, now affirms that it is not in the interests of the security of the state to divulge this information. Under our practice, and having in mind the interests of this nation, I believe that answer must be accepted.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. That does not apply to the defence committee—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must remind the hon. member that his line of questioning is taking the form of a debate, and this is the question period. I think we have gone far enough. The hon. member has had a long answer from the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and I think the matter should be left there.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Would he consider having extracts of these documents submitted to the defence committee in camera, if the committee decides that is the best way to have these documents examined?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will not do anything which will violate my oath of secrecy, the security of the state or the inviolability of cabinet conclusions.

HOUSING

SUGGESTED WITHDRAWAL OF SUBSIDY AND TAX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the new complications arising from the budget, does the minister intend to withdraw his offer of a $500 subsidy in exchange for the withdrawal of the 11 per cent tax on building materials, with a view to reducing the administrative and collection costs of taxes which fall on the shoulders of the Canadian citizens? Giving with one hand and taking away with the other; why not take everything away?

(Text):

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): You voted for it.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the particular incentive payment to which my hon. friend refers is intended to encourage winter construction of houses, and nothing has happened since the original announcement was made to alter that particular objective.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): It will cost twice as much.

(Translation):

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Minister of Labour tell the house approximately how much that subsidy of $500 will cost the present government for the building of houses in winter?

(Text):

Mr. MacEachen: It certainly will depend on the response to the incentive payment and the number of houses that will qualify.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Minister of Labour or the Minister of Finance expect that the cost of the $500 subsidy for home construction will exceed the $170 million which the Minister of Finance expects to gather from the tax on building materials? Which one will be higher?

(Text):

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): You voted for it.

Mr. Gregoire: No answer?

Mr. MacEachen: If the hon. gentleman insists on an answer he can make ordinary calculations and discover the total cost of this winter incentive program by multiplying the $500 by his estimate of the response to the program.

Inquiries of the Ministry

(Translation):

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. With respect to the subsidy of $500 for the building of houses during the winter, is the minister aware that it may cost up to $2,000 more to build during the winter season?

WORLD FAIR

COST OF CREATING ISLAND FOR SITE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, could I ask a question of the Minister of Public Works, who is responsible for the world fair? Could the minister inform the house whether the works on Notre Dame island will amount to approximately $80 million or whether that is merely a figure that has been arrived at by engineers and architects?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the question should be directed to His Worship Mayor Jean Drapeau since the city of Montreal has taken upon itself to provide an island within a year and to bear the cost of all related works.

(Text):

TRANSPORT

TORONTO-OTTAWA—REMOVAL OF SLEEPING CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. E. Cardiff (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the general public is having difficulty obtaining sleeping accommodation between Toronto and Ottawa, I wonder whether the minister could tell the house why they took two sleeping cars off that pool train.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I was unaware of that having been done, but I will bring this matter to the attention of the railway concerned and obtain the information.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

B.C.—DESIGNATION OF NO. 3 HIGHWAY AS PART OF SOUTHERN ROUTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the eulogies being showered on the head of the Prime Minister by the premier of British Columbia, I do so in a very hopeful mood. Has the government of British Columbia requested the federal government to designate B.C. highway No. 3 as a section of the southern trans-Canada highway. Also, have any discussions been held by the minister or officials of his department with any minister or officials of the government of British Columbia with respect to this proposal?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would first of all thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his question. The answer is that the province of British Columbia has for several years been requesting federal participation in the cost of constructing highways other than the present trans-Canada highway. However, no provincial government request to designate No. 3 highway as a southern trans-Canada highway has been received. Therefore the answer is no.

[Later:]

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Public Works, one which I overlooked asking at the time he replied to my question. Can the minister inform the house whether any arrangement has been made, or whether he has made any arrangement, to meet any minister of the government of British Columbia with respect to highway problems?

Mr. Deschatelets: Not yet, but it is my intention to make arrangements for a meeting in the very near future.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF VOTE ON JUNE 17

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a point of order with regard to the Journals of the house in order that a matter which has already been drawn to Your Honour's attention may be cleared up. The Journals are in conflict with Hansard with regard to the vote which took place yesterday. As will be seen from page 1240 of Hansard for yesterday, Mr. Speaker made two rulings. With regard to one of Your Honour's rulings the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) appealed. I refer to the ruling that there was no urgency of debate with regard to the matter then before the house. Subsequently Mr. Speaker said:

> —I refer hon. members to a ruling made by my immediate predecessor on January 31, 1963, which appears at page 3297 of Hansard. Therefore, I am making a similar ruling.

If one looks back to January 31 of this year one sees that a very similar type of motion and discussion was being dealt with. The question put by Mr. Speaker, as the Journals for that period state on page 462, was this:

Shall the decision of the Chair, on the appeal to the house of the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), be sustained?

The hon. member for Essex East appealed to the house from the ruling that there could be no appeal from a ruling by the Chair under standing order 26.

I do not wish to labour the point, but the Journals do not indicate the subject matter on which the house made its decision. I myself thought it was similar to the point raised by the hon. member for Essex East last session. I wonder whether Your Honour could clear that up for the record.

Mr. Speaker: In reply to the hon. member may I say at the outset, especially with regard to this final point, that the Journals reflect what took place in the house yesterday. However, I realize the general interest in this matter and I should like to make a short statement which I hope will be of interest and of use to the house.

It has come to my attention, especially through the hon. member who has just spoken, that some doubt has arisen with respect to the terms of the question upon which the house divided yesterday. Obviously we cannot turn back and alter any proceedings that took place yesterday, nor should any discussion in relation thereto be permitted at this time. However, as mentioned in paragraph 4, citation 70 of Beauchesne's fourth edition:

A point of order against procedure must be raised before the question has passed to a stage at which the objection would be out of place.

And further on, standing order 35 states:

No member may reflect upon any vote of the house, except for the purpose of moving that such vote be rescinded.

However, by consent of the house I could say a few words in an effort to dissolve any confusion with regard to yesterday's proceedings which may now exist in the minds of some hon. members; that is, if the house so desires.

Yesterday, as hon. members will recall, the right hon. Leader of the Opposition asked leave to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 and stated the matter which he proposed for discussion.

A discussion then arose with regard to the urgency of the matter to be discussed. After contributions from several hon. members the Chair decided, in effect, that, as the matter could be discussed and voted upon in the course of the budget debate which would begin Wednesday next, the proposal was not a matter of urgency of debate under the terms of standing order 26 as understood and accepted by the practice of this house.

At this point in the proceedings the following is recorded at page 1240 of yesterday's Hansard:

Mr. Douglas: I must regretfully appeal from your ruling.

Mr. Speaker: Before the ruling is appealed, may I make one further short comment? My predecessors have many times in the past expressed the view that there is no appeal of a decision taken by the Speaker under standing order 26.

In this regard, I refer hon. members to a ruling made by my immediate predecessor on January 31, 1963, which appears at page 3297 of Hansard. Therefore, I am making a similar ruling.

It is at this stage in the proceedings that the difficulty arises.

It was my opinion that I had given a second ruling, namely, that there was no appeal of a decision taken by the Speaker under standing order 26. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, as recorded at page 1240 of Hansard, then used the following words:

That ruling to which you have just referred, Mr. Speaker, was reversed by a vote of the house, and I submit that a decision of the house stands over the decision which was made by Mr. Speaker Lambert.

Since it is a well established rule that no debate is permitted on any ruling, the Chair interpreted the interposition of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre as an appeal to the house from the second ruling.

It would appear to me that, in effect, the house yesterday was confirming a ruling that there could be no appeal of a decision taken by Mr. Speaker under standing order 26 and that such a decision of the house would be valid for the duration of the current session. However, in putting the question to the house the Chair stated that the appeal was from the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, and thereby hangs our difficulty.

Some hon. members may feel that they might have voted otherwise had the question been stated in other terms and, in reviewing the records, there may be justification for the taking of that position. Notwithstanding the fact that it is not open to the Chair or to any other member to review, alter or even to interpret any prior proceedings, I would like however to proffer a suggestion for the consideration of the house at this time. Since the question, as put from the Chair, may have been interpreted differently, it is my suggestion that yesterday's vote be considered as not being binding should a similar situation arise later in this session.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Are we to interpret your remarks then, Mr. Speaker, as meaning that the division yesterday was taken upon the second aspect of the matter rather than on the original one as to the urgency of the question?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I might suggest to the hon. member that he read the statement I have just made. I think the situation would then be clear. I do not think it would serve any purpose at this time to make a further explanation.

LABOUR RELATIONS

NORRIS COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour and ask him what the hold-up is in providing us with the report of the commission of inquiry into certain labour troubles on the great lakes.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): The short answer to that question is that the delay stems from the fact that Mr. Justice Norris has not yet delivered the report to the Minister of Labour. It had been my information, based on a conference between the officials of the department and Mr. Justice Norris some two weeks ago, that the report would be available at an early date, but the latest information I have is that the report is not ready and the judge is still working on it.

Mr. Fisher: Does the minister intend to make himself privy to the report when it is presented in order to be in a position to initiate legislation or take regulatory action before the report is actually distributed to us from the printers?

Mr. MacEachen: I will take that matter under consideration when the time comes for the judge to present the report to the Department of Labour.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING MEMBERSHIP, FUNDS, ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

The house resumed from Monday, June 17, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Pickersgill—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Atlantic Development Board Act to increase the number of members of the Atlantic development board from five to eleven; to establish as a separate account in the consolidated revenue fund an Atlantic development fund to which shall be credited the sum of one hundred million dollars to be used for the purpose of financing or assisting in financing programs or projects that would contribute to the growth and development of the economy of the Atlantic region and for which satisfactory financing arrangements are not otherwise available; and to provide that the said act shall expire on the 24th day of January, 1969; and to provide further for certain changes in connection with the administration of the said act.

[Mr. Thompson.]

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of the whole on a certain proposed resolution to amend the Atlantic Development Board Act. Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the resolution now before the committee is one in which we who are here representing various communities in the Atlantic provinces have a great deal of interest. It was my understanding—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I am finding it difficult to hear the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton. I wonder if we might have order in the house.

The Chairman: Order. Perhaps hon. members would hasten their departures from the chamber and those remaining would observe silence so that we can hear the hon. member.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, all could hear if the Secretary of State would only exercise a little more discipline over on his side. I was observing that this was a resolution in which we from the Atlantic provinces have a tremendous amount of interest. Prior to the speech of the Secretary of State yesterday I was under the impression that some phases of it, for instance the increases in membership of the board, were contemplated for the purpose of securing representation for groups of people who, in the opinion of the government, might not be represented. However, since his speech yesterday I find that it is contemplated that the present membership are not to be continued in office for any great length of time. The members of the board are going to be continued in office for the period of one year. The chairman presumably will be demoted to member, and he is going to be continued for two years; and that will be the end of his actions and function as a member of the board.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the hon. gentleman does not want to misrepresent the situation. The situation is that their present terms, if the house accepts the bill, will be continued by legislation for that period, and they will be eligible for reappointment in all cases.

Mr. MacEwan: What a chance.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is quite clear, I think.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, it is my opinion that we are going to find that this is a gimmick to get rid of the present members of the board.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is exactly what it is.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I think in that connection it might be well if we examined the present personnel of the board.

As was pointed out yesterday, very properly, by my hon. friend from Royal this board has been set up. This board is prepared to function. This board has a full membership. This board has a membership representing every province of the Atlantic provinces. This board is composed of men who are outstanding and who were selected for that particular reason and not for any narrow, partisan consideration.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Hon. members may laugh but they do not understand that language. Our friends opposite, Mr. Chairman, do not understand it, especially those from the Atlantic provinces. We have on the board an outstanding executive director from the civil service of Canada, a most outstanding man. The selection of official personnel for this board, which was not large, was an attempt to get a representative from each province, and as my hon. friend the Secretary of State knows, that was done. I am sure he will be the first to agree that the officials of the board are very capable people. I submit that the members of the board are also outstanding in every respect. There is no need for any resolution to come before this committee to introduce a measure to amend the Atlantic Development Board Act, because the Atlantic Development Board Act does not need any amending. The Atlantic Development Board Act should be continued in the form passed by the previous government last December. It should be allowed to function.

In the course of some remarks, a few weeks ago I made this observation: why does not the government allow the Atlantic development board to function for at least a year, and then if the government find there is something which might be improved they could bring forward legislation and ask for an amendment, but, Mr. Chairman, the government are asking us to amend something which has not even started, which I submit is a ridiculous situation.

Coming back to the personnel of the board, we have as its vice chairman Mr. Frank Sobey, of Nova Scotia, one of the most outstanding industrialists not only in Nova Scotia but all Canada. I might call the attention of the committee to an article written in the Montreal Gazette of May 24, which was only a few days ago, by Mr. John Meyer, the financial editor, in which he compares the Industrial Estates, of which Mr. Sobey is president, with the proposed set-up for the Quebec government. Then Mr. Meyer goes on to say:

> Industrial Estates, in the six years since it was set up by the Nova Scotia government, has assisted in the establishment of 31 new industrial plants in the province. Seven of these have been established since the beginning of the year. They include Volvo, the Swedish automobile manufacturer, J. F. Crossley, the British carpet manufacturer, and, the most recent, the aluminum can plant for Reynolds International. Negotiations are in process with a number of other companies——for more industrial establishments. Those last four words are mine. Now, Mr. Chairman, this is the gentleman who, according to this legislation, is going to have notice served on him that his services are required only for a period of a year and then he is through. That is what is contemplated by the resolution, as explained by the Secretary of State yesterday.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have already contradicted that once. Does the hon. gentleman not accept my word that Mr. Sobey will be eligible for reappointment for another three-year term?

Mr. MacEwan: Eligible. The people of Nova Scotia will love to hear that.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I will tell you what will change my attitude towards this resolution. If the Secretary of State wants to get up and say that Mr. Sobey will be continued for his full term, all right. I am surprised that members on the Liberal side from any part of the Atlantic provinces would ever subscribe to this type of resolution. If it went through the caucus of members on the government side representing the Atlantic provinces, then I am very much surprised. I am quite surprised that the Secretary of State would sponsor it. After all, he does represent an Atlantic province. He has adopted one of the Atlantic provinces. Therefore I am surprised that he should bring this resolution forward because it contemplates that six new members will be appointed to the board. At present there are five.

I have referred to Mr. Sobey, the outstanding contribution he has made and the high respect in which he is held in the Atlantic provinces. No one will dispute that, I am sure. The government apparently has decided that it does not want his services for any length of time. With that I do not agree.

Let us go to some of the others. When I occupied a position of some responsibility in connection with this matter not once did I hear any criticism of Mr. McQuaid of Prince Edward Island, the former attorney general. Oh, some of my hon. friends may say that he is a defeated cabinet minister. In my book that is a compliment so far as his performing service is concerned, and if he was unsuccessful in one election I am sure there are many of us who will understand that that is no particular disgrace. It is simply a trend of political fortune. But never once did I hear from anyone any objection to him from the point of view of his ability. Quite the opposite was the case. Every comment in connection with Mr. McQuaid's appointment was complimentary, and I might say that even in such a happy family as the Conservatives comments are not always complimentary. There never was any objection to Mr. McQuaid.

The same thing applies to Mr. Fred Ayre, the representative from Newfoundland. I have heard no adverse criticism of his appointment from my friends from the province of Newfoundland who sit in this House of Commons. He is an outstanding man in every respect. The gentleman who represents New Brunswick, Mr. Lalande, enjoys a tremendously good reputation in that province. The only criticism I have heard of him is that he comes from the province of Quebec. That is the only adverse criticism, if it is a criticism, I have ever heard in connection with Mr. Lalande. He is a banker. He is a supervisor for the Provincial Bank of Canada located at Moncton and he enjoys a most excellent reputation.

These are the gentlemen who are affected by the resolution which says that we should amend the Atlantic Development Board Act by increasing the number of members from five to eleven. I have said that I consider this to be a gimmick by which the government is going to put an end to the services of the people now occupying these positions. The Secretary of State takes issue with that statement. He says they are eligible but he does not say they will be reappointed. He does not say they will be continued in office. In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, if the government wanted to do what is best for the Atlantic provinces and for Canada they would let the membership of the board continue as it is for a certain length of time anyway, because they cannot get better men. I am one of those who do not say that one man is better than another. I say you would not get better men than those who have been selected.

The publisher of the Fredericton Gleaner and the Atlantic Advocate is a personal friend of mine. There is no question about that. I have great personal regard for Brigadier Wardell. Over the last 11 or 12 years he has adopted the Atlantic provinces. He has proclaimed the gospel of the Atlantic provinces from one end of Canada to the other. He has carried the torch. If you will refer to previous copies of the Atlantic Advocate you will find that he suggests that his interest is entirely unselfish and objective and that he is simply anxious to make a contribution to our part of Canada. I do not believe anyone will take exception to that proposition. I think we in the Atlantic provinces are anxious to have influential people from all over the world come and take an interest in our part of Canada. I am sure that is the feeling of most of us. This is what we have in the person of Brigadier Wardell.

Those are the members of the board that this legislation is designed, I say, to get rid of. I do not think there is any need for this resolution. All that the government needed to do was to continue the board in office and allow it to function as it was intended to under the direction of a minister, of course. So far as the selection of a minister is concerned I find no fault with the selection of the Secretary of State. As a matter of fact, I was quite happy when that selection was made because I felt that he would bring to the four provinces a somewhat detached interest of any one province compared with another. I hope I am right about that.

An hon. Member: The height of optimism.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Perhaps it is the height of optimism. A question was asked in the house before as to the disposition of the money. I will come to that in a few minutes. So far as the official duties of the Secretary of State are concerned, I suggest to him that he extend his horizon beyond the narrow partisanship of the Liberal party. I would ask him to look towards development and progress in the Atlantic provinces and accept his new responsibility as an instrument by which he can render a tremendous service to those provinces and the region which has adopted him. He has been re-elected time and time again and I find no particular fault with that. That is the right of the people of every community. But I do think it brings with it a degree of responsibility not only to his constituents but also to the region which in this case the minister represents. Therefore I ask him to use his position not in a narrow and partisan way but for the general good of that part of Canada. May I say that I think he is probably somewhat less partisan than some of his colleagues.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Some members may laugh but I still think that is the case. I refer now to the board, its personnel and the first few words of the resolution which say that "it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Atlantic Development Board Act". I am opposed to this. I do not think it should be amended. I think the board should be continued as is. Even if the members of the board to whom I have just referred continued in office any length of time they would be outvoted for sure and it is my opinion that they would be voted out.

I have said that the board is just getting started and there is no record to discuss. There are no actions to examine. There are no results to analyse. However, there has been a change in government and someone has decided to make a change in the board. I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that that is not in the best interests of the Atlantic provinces, nor is it in the best interests of Canada as a whole.

Now, perhaps they think that this is a politically expedient thing to do. I submit they are wrong if they think it is politically expedient. It is not the politically expedient thing to do. The political expedient thing to do is to have this board function in order that it can perform the services for which it was established and clothed with the legislative authority by the previous parliament. The board should be allowed to examine things.

May I, at the risk of being repetitious repeat what I said in this house a few months ago when the board was set up? These remarks applied then and they apply now. I am quoting now:

> So I point out, Mr. Chairman, the need of addressing ourselves to the problem of creating job opportunities in our own region—

Mr. Pickersgill: Can the hon. member give the page in Hansard?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): This is not Hansard, it is the Atlantic Advocate and contains a condensation of Hansard. I think the hon. member will agree with me that it is a correct report. I am sure it is, and I am sure he has no reason to believe otherwise. It is much easier to get at, and our research facilities are somewhat limited. If I quote incorrectly I will be the first to acknowledge it.

> —and then, looking at the transportation problem and also paying some special attention to the possibilities of cultivating markets where we may have natural advantages compared with other parts of Canada by reason of our location on the Atlantic seaboard.

Anything wrong with that, Mr. Chairman? Is this not what we have been harping about ever since this session started, job opportunities?

> The Atlantic development board will inquire into and report to the government suggesting measures with respect to projects which promise to accelerate the growth of the area's economy.

Anything wrong with that, Mr. Chairman?

> It will consider and report after investigation on projects suggested by provincial governments and other parties. This is in accordance with the statement of the Prime Minister in April last.

The reason I mention these things, Mr. Chairman, is simply this: That was the concept of the Atlantic development board, and in my opinion that is still the concept in the hearts and minds of the members of this house.

An hon. Member: What about the money?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): My hon. friend talks about money. He sold the people of his constituency a bill of goods on that proposition. Since he has reminded me of this aspect in the matter, I may say there never was any question about funds being available to this board. During the election campaign our opponents tried to convince the public that there was no money. Well, the whole resources of Canada were behind this board. I have just read from my own remarks, and it is clear that after investigation the board, under the old legislation, made its report to the minister responsible. In this case, it would be the Secretary of State. If the Secretary of State were favourably disposed towards the recommendations, he carried them to his colleagues in the government. I submit, therefore, that the whole of the resources of Canada were behind the board as it was constituted under the legislation.

There was no limit; but there is a limit now unless the minister will tell me that this $100 million fund that has been set up is only a beginning. I submit that there are many situations in the Atlantic provinces deserving of examination and investigation. These investigations could result in the processing of raw materials presently imported into the country. From the point of view of our balance of payments position, therefore, this plan has a good deal of merit. In so far as the $100 million is concerned, I want the minister to say that the $100 million is mentioned purely as an amount to draw against. The time allotted for this board to be in existence under this legislation is six years. After that, it is going to die. We have four provinces, so the unit is 24 and if we divide that into 100 we find that there will be $4 million per year for each province.

I am one of those who believes that the Atlantic provinces, or for that matter any other province, do not want to build up their economy at the expense of the rest of Canada, except in unusual circumstances. These unusual circumstances might be the securing and processing of certain materials which are strategic and which are presently being imported.

Let me come back to the question of the amount of money that will be available to the board. It seems to me that we are rather attaching altogether too much importance to figures. The Secretary of State answered a question yesterday from the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria and said that the $100 million is much better than nothing. It has been suggested that there was no money available. I am suggesting now, in all seriousness, that that is not a proper inference because all the resources of Canada were behind this board. They would be under the present government too, I am convinced, if they would just allow the board to continue.

You recall what happened, Mr. Chairman, in connection with the legislation which was passed by the federal government to assist in the Beechwood development. I have mentioned this before. The previous parliament was only asked to vote the amount necessary to pay for the project, but that is being repaid each year. It makes no difference what government is in office in New Brunswick, the money will be repaid. This was the concept at that time, and still is the concept so far as that is concerned. We needed someone to endorse our note, and it was as simple as that. Then, we were able to borrow the money on a more attractive basis, thus enabling us to deliver electricity at a cheaper price to the public and attract industry into that part of the country.

Let us take the Atlantic provinces power development program, a measure adopted when a good many hon. members were here. They voted for it. I suggest there has been something like $25 million to $30 million spent on transmission lines and in building plants in the Atlantic provinces. The electric power commissions purchase them and have a 30-year period to make payment for plants and a 40-year period in connection with transmission lines, so in the long run it costs the federal government nothing in so far as these two projects are concerned.

I am sure every hon. member from the Atlantic provinces will agree with this. They have contributed tremendously to the economic development of our part of Canada.

The reason I mention these things is simply because this is what we envisaged when the act was passed, and we received support from the then opposition. We appreciated that support at the time, and still do; but why our hon. friends opposite should now do a right about face, and first of all provide that they are going to nullify the work of these able people I have mentioned, then, second, provide that the act go out of existence on January 24, 1969, is surprising. Why they set a date for this act to die is something I cannot understand. That is something they should leave to the next parliament to decide. This parliament should not be legislating categorically for something that is going to come up in 1969. That is basically wrong, particularly when it affects the lives, activities and the general standards of people in one part of Canada. However, that is what the resolution calls for and I am sure, you, Mr. Chairman, can quite understand my objection to it.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I apologize for interrupting the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton but his time has expired.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, since the hon. gentleman is the main spokesman for the opposition I hope unanimous consent would be given to him to say what he wishes to say at this time.

The Deputy Chairman: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I also wish to thank the Secretary of State. I am sure the things I am saying are so pleasant that he would want me to continue. Surely those of us in this house who represent the Atlantic provinces should be able to agree on objectives. We might disagree on the way to achieve those objectives, but surely the objectives must include the betterment and improvement of all the citizens of the Atlantic provinces who have honoured us in electing us as their representatives?

I wonder if the Liberals have had a caucus on this matter. I wonder if they all voted for this resolution which is going to sound the death knell of the Atlantic development board. Yes, Mr. Chairman, this resolution sets the date when it is going to die.

Mr. Rideout: Gloom and doom.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): They do need to shake their heads. All they need to do is read the resolution. On January 24, 1969 it dies. There is no question about that. Yesterday we had an explanation given to us by the Secretary of State in connection with this matter, but rather than reassuring me it disturbed me. He said that the suggested change would have significance on the effectiveness of the board for the short duration of its lifetime. The short span that is contemplated is six years and the resolution then provides for the death of the board. If the government gives the matter second thought I do not think it will continue with a resolution such as that.

I would also like to ask what are to be the qualifications of the six additional members? Last year hon. members who now sit on the government side were very worried about whether or not some defeated Conservative candidate might be appointed. Well, Mr. Chairman, to me a defeated candidate is a man of ability. He just has not been able to get enough votes, and that is all. It could be a temporary situation.

Mr. Lambert: The Minister of Labour subscribes to that.

Mr. Pigeon: That will be his position in the next election.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Will these six men to be appointed be employers of labour, manufacturers, industrialists, representatives of organized labour or representatives of the provincial governments?

The chairman of the Atlantic development board has said the members will carry on with their work. I am not going to transgress on the good will of the house by dealing at length with the speech which he made the other day, but in that speech he said he had been in consultation with the Secretary of State and he proposed to carry on. He also said that the job they had to do was greater than any personal attributes of any kind. I submit that is a very fine, broadminded attitude to take.

Before this debate finishes the Secretary of State might tell us whom he proposes to put on this board.

Mr. Pickersgill: In making that suggestion is the hon. gentleman suggesting that I follow the precedent he set last December?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): With reference to what?

Mr. Pickersgill: Who was to be put on the board.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Well, it would be all right, if you can get men as capable.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the same request was made of the hon. gentleman last December when we were debating the bill in the house and the hon. gentleman said, I think quite properly, that until parliament had passed the legislation it would not be proper for him to make any suggestions as to who would be appointed. I think I should follow that precedent and take the same position he took.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I hardly expected the Secretary of State was going to suggest they come from the Conservative party. With regard to the $100 million, I am one of those who are very jealous of the rights of parliament. I understand that this $100 million will not be automatically placed in an account for the board to throw here and there to provide some jobs, so that the defeated candidates might get elected at the next election and those of us who are here now may be left at home. I think the board has to come back here for final approval before the money is spent.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is quite clear in the letter.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): As I say, Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who is jealous of the rights of parliament and I think when the taxpayers money is going to be spent it should be voted by parliament, and when there are a few million dollars to be spent in my constituency I would expect the board to come to parliament to get authority before starting a project.

I have one more point to make, and perhaps we may get a chance to have a few words on the bill itself in committee. But at this stage, I would like to speak about the need for those of us who come from the Atlantic provinces to indicate to the rest of Canada that we are no longer going to be subject to the rule of divide and conquer. For years they have taken very outstanding people from the Atlantic provinces and brought them to Ottawa. This applies to both sides of politics, and for years they threw an odd breakwater to us, and an odd wharf to Newfoundland. They made us smile and like it, and that was about all we ever received prior to 1957. But, since 1957 a new dispensation has been ushered into the Atlantic provinces and no longer is the uniform application of an over-all principle considered good enough.

The principle of the Conservative party is that special situations demand special attention and consideration. That is something I hope we could all agree on, and so I am going to make an appeal to those on the opposite side who represent the Atlantic provinces, and especially to the Secretary of State, that they just forget about this whole question of making changes to the act; that they just allow it to stand as it is, and let it succeed or fall on the things that it is able to accomplish for the Atlantic provinces.

But give it a fair chance and do not condemn it immediately by an amendment that would really put it out of business so far as the original board is concerned. Let us go ahead and try it out. If one year hence it is decided that some improvements can be made, well and good; let the minister bring it back to this parliament. But to condemn something that has never yet had a chance to function or perform any service for this part of Canada is, in my opinion, unfair and getting quite close to being absolutely dishonest.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Just look at your dictionary and see what "dishonest" means.

Mr. Clancy: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question. Would all the members from the Atlantic provinces on the government side of the house please stand up?

Some hon. Members: Order.

(Translation):

Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Chairman, last year I took part in the debate on the legislation concerning the creation of the Atlantic development board, and it is with pleasure that I now find myself, once again, on familiar ground. I have always taken a keen interest in the maritime provinces, partly because of the spiritual bonds which tie us to the maritime provinces, and partly because those provinces carry the burden of an underdeveloped economy.

On the other hand, the people of Saguenay region are closely linked with the Acadians. After one of the first Acadians was deported, his son left Philadelphia and crossed the border to found the colony around lake St. John. His name was Nicolas de Tolentin Hébert. So that we have yet another reason to think of the future of that part of Acadia and of the maritime provinces.

In addition, the people of the province of Quebec recently subscribed $150,000 to save a French newspaper, L'Evangeline, from extinction. I made a contribution and I am glad I did because we wish to maintain French culture in that part of the country.

On the other hand, Mr. Chairman, when I think that the government is considering an amendment to the legislation we adopted last year to increase from five to eleven the number of members who sit on the board, I wonder if that is not merely to check the action of the five Conservatives—if they are all Conservatives—who were appointed by the previous government. If that were the case, it would be petty politics, and I hope that is not the government's aim when it proposes to increase the number of commissioners from five to eleven.

I do not want to impute motives to anybody but I find this attitude of the government rather odd. Of course, without knowing personally the present members of that board, I do believe they were appointed because of their qualifications and I think they should be able to do their job.

However, if the number of commissioners is raised to eleven to allow for a more efficient representation of each of the Atlantic regions, that is of each county in particular and especially those which are the most economically affected, the idea might have some sense.

Last year, we set forth definite ideas on the matter in this house, and I am pleased to call the attention of the house to what our national leader, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) stated, as shown in Hansard. I quote:

(Text):

One word that Social Credit will never use in connection with its policy for the maritimes is the word "welfare". Nor will it refer to the eastern provinces of Canada as a "depressed area". The truth is, and all of Canada should realize it, that the maritime provinces are potentially the richest and the most prosperous in the whole of Canada. The maritimes are not a "depressed", they are an "emerging" area.

If one looks, not at the problems of the Atlantic area, but at its resources, these are amazing. Prince Edward Island is one of the richest farming areas in the dominion. Nova Scotia has big reserves of coal, is excellently placed as a centre for shipping, and for the fishing industry. New Brunswick is not only the centre of a new base metal mining industry, and a major source of timber, but it is the site for some of the leading universities on the North American continent—an asset without price in an age where the "baby boom" coupled with a growing demand for higher education has put a premium on higher learning. Newfoundland and Labrador have immense and undeveloped potentials in hydroelectric power, fishing, lumbering and mining. All this is without mentioning the possibilities of the area for tourism, and the fact that the vast market of New York state is highly accessible by land and sea.

The basic problem of the Atlantic area is not one of resources; it is one of markets. Particularly, it is one of trade to the natural outlet of the area—the eastern United States, hampered by Canada's high tariff policy ever since the end of reciprocity in the years before confederation. Were this barrier removed, iron ore from Labrador would be smelted in Nova Scotia before being shipped to New York—instead of going directly and filling the furnaces of the middle west. Prince Edward Island farm products could break in on the American market—something that might also make undertaking the Chignecto canal worth while.

Power and raw material resources could be developed. In terms of development, the Atlantic provinces could become the British Columbia of the eastern seaboard.

(Translation):

Those are the very sensible words that were spoken here by our national leader, the hon. member for Red Deer, and I am pleased to endorse them at this time.

Now, Mr. Chairman, on reading the resolution, I note that the government intends to establish a $100 million fund in order to foster a real development in the Atlantic area. Of course, this is a most commendable and realistic purpose, because it is not with next to nothing that the development of the maritime provinces can be promoted, but with capital. But, Mr. Chairman, what good can $100 million do for the development of the Atlantic provinces when one considers their needs? In my opinion, an amount of $100 million is only a drop in the ocean.

In order to develop the maritime provinces, at least $1 billion is needed, that is, at least $100 million every year. Therefore, $100 million are not enough. Provision should be made for that when the bill itself is introduced so that a worth-while program may be established in that regard.

I also noticed that this government is again considering, as it does for other projects, taking this money out of the consolidated revenue fund, which comes from taxation. I wonder how anyone can have such old-fashioned notions in 1963 and how anyone can, from an economic point of view, want to establish anything by taxing individuals again.

We already know that the people in the maritime provinces, as those in other areas of Canada, are overtaxed. It is no use taking money from Joe to give it to Henry. New capital must be created, as we explained during the debate on a measure concerning the municipal development and loan board. We need new capital to satisfy the needs of Canada. We cannot be satisfied with old capital that is capital already existing. We do not have enough capital. Therefore we must create new capital. Now, the Bank of Canada is the only organization capable of creating such capital, because it is the people's bank, the bank of the Canadian people, and consequently the bank of all the people in the maritime provinces. The people in the maritime provinces expect their government, if it really wants to make an effort to be of assistance to them, to participate in a vast maritime development, so that these provinces may have their own industry and keep their population at home.

Therefore, it is absolutely necessary to create new capital, and this new capital will have to be supplied by the Bank of Canada. The Bank of Canada will have to be entrusted with the responsibility for creating this capital to finance the expenses necessary for the development of the Atlantic provinces.

Those, Mr. Chairman, are the few remarks I wanted to make in this debate. I hope that the government will consider them, because if we take the trouble to make suggestions or comments, it is because we wish to play a part in the preparation of the government legislation. In fact, we are all members of this government, each and everyone of us, and when we make suggestions, they should be considered.

(Text):

Mr. Stewart: I want to begin by reiterating a statement made by my hon. friend the Secretary of State concerning the amount of money which it is envisaged would be expended on the rehabilitation of the economy of the Atlantic provinces. The Secretary of State certainly did not wish to imply, and neither did any other member of this party wish to imply at any time, that the $100 million set forth in the present resolution would be the total sum to be expended for this purpose. As the Secretary of State said, rather repetitiously, I thought, this was merely to be a stopgap fund. Various departments of government were to be especially active in relation to the Atlantic provinces. This particular fund would be supplementary to the increased activity of the ordinary departments of government.

My main purpose in rising is to make a comment on the basic argument put forward this afternoon by the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton. As I understood it, this argument was: we have before us an act of parliament, an act which was passed in the last parliament, and the present parliament should give that legislation a trial run. That was the plea made by the hon. member. Well, he was here in the last parliament and he knows what took place. He knows that those of us who were then on the other side of the house believed that though the program embodied in the act which is now under consideration moved in the right direction, it did not move far enough or emphatically enough in that direction. We argued that it was not strong enough. We argued that the board should be strengthened. However, in that parliament, our arguments did not prevail.

Then an election took place, and in the course of the campaign leading up to April 8, certain persons now members of this house delivered speeches which were made seriously by them, and taken seriously by many of their constituents. For example, in my own constituency of Antigonish-Guysborough I occasionally made reference to a pamphlet entitled, "A Better Break for the Atlantic Provinces". From that pamphlet I read a paragraph stating that Liberal policies would include "providing a stronger Atlantic development board with a capital assistance fund to promote basic development projects and to encourage the expansion of industry to provide jobs and income".

I am sure the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton can scarcely object to my taking the position in this parliament, which meets here as a result of the election of April 8, that the commitments made during that election should be honoured.

After all—and I say this without boasting—the electorate of the Atlantic provinces elected 20 members, out of the 33 from those provinces, to support the policies of the present government.

It would seem to me to be something of an affront to the electors in those provinces if those policies were now forgotten. I think the argument put forward by the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton simply will not stand up. In the Atlantic provinces, we have had a decision of the supreme court of public opinion; and it is a pretty emphatic decision. I think that the resolution placed before this house by the Secretary of State will have to be supported.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask my hon. friend one question. Would he permit a question?

Mr. Stewart: Yes, of course.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): The question is: Did he promise to his constituents in the election that the board would die on January 24, 1969?

Mr. Stewart: No, Mr. Chairman, I did not discuss that particular point. I did discuss ways in which the board could be strengthened. As the Secretary of State pointed out, I thought rather persuasively, one of the times something never gets done is when you have an eternity in which it can be accomplished. As I understand it, the purpose of the Secretary of State and of this government in setting a terminal date is to give the board a deadline in which to produce. I think that is a salutary measure with regard to most individuals and organizations. I certainly find that I work better when I have a deadline; and I suspect that the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton finds the same true in his own case.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to detain the committee very long, as I am sure hon. members will be pleased to hear, but I do wish to say that we in this party support, in a general way, the resolution before the house. We think the proposed amendments are in the right direction, perhaps hesitant steps but nevertheless going in the right direction; and as they tend to follow suggestions made in this house in the last session by members of this group, we are in favour of them.

Before I proceed to make the few observations I intend to make, perhaps I should say something about my status, even to discuss questions which affect the maritime provinces. My constituency is in the middle of the industrial section of Toronto and it might be doubted that I should even dare speak on this subject. However, I learned to swim at the age of four in the bay of Fundy and I have vivid recollections of that. My grandfather happened to be the prime minister of one of the maritime provinces, so I think I should speak. I regret—and I say this without any disrespect to the present member for Cape Breton South—that the former member for Cape Breton South is not here so that his stentorian tones could be heard in this debate.

To return to the resolution: as I say, I think these are steps in the right direction. For example, the enlargement of the number of the members of the board was moved as an amendment in the last session of parliament by the former member for Cape Breton South and was opposed by all members of the house then present, with the exception of the members of this party. I am very happy to see that the government have studied what was then said and have adopted this suggestion. I commend to them that process as a general way of improving their legislation.

I think the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton is wrong in suggesting that the proposal to enlarge the board in some way destroys its usefulness or significance. The purpose of enlarging the board, as we suggested in the last session, was to make it more representative not only of the different provinces but of the different economic groups in the maritime provinces. We are not particularly interested in whether the members are Liberals or Conservatives. All we hope is that they will be representative of business, labour, the professions and other groups who will be able to do an effective planning job. That is why we welcome this particular measure. We criticized the last bill because there was no capital fund made available. It is true that the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton said that the whole resources of Canada lay behind the implementation of the last bill, but we think it is a step forward to ensure that at least some of the $100 million is set aside for the purpose of seeing that this board can function effectively. Because it is absolutely ridiculous to talk of planning boards and to give them no means of operating. I heard the Secretary of State and the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough point out that this $100 million is only supplementary, but we feel that it is inadequate in any event.

I should like, Mr. Chairman, to refer to what my leader said in the last parliament when this suggestion was made. He said that if expenditure of money helps to provide full employment and take people off the social welfare roll and off unemployment insurance, it will be the best investment the people of Canada ever made; so let us not begrudge expenditure of money like this. Those sentiments were expressed in answer to the suggestion that there be a fund of a billion dollars for the next five years. We suggested that that might not be adequate. What we fear is that the funds available to carry out the planning proposed under this board will prove to be inadequate to carry out the task.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether I have any more time before five o'clock—

Mr. MacInnis: Would the hon. member permit a question before he resumes his seat?

Mr. Brewin: Certainly.

Mr. MacInnis: As the member for Cape Breton South, just to identify myself, I should like the hon. member to be aware of the fact that I recognize a needle when I see it, and I would be only too happy if he took the time to explain the activities in toto of the former member for Cape Breton South when he was in this house.

Mr. Brewin: I will leave that to you. As far as the former member for Cape Breton South is concerned, if the present hon. member does half as good a job as he did he will do a lot better than the other members of his party.

Mr. MacInnis: I asked the hon. member whether he would take the time to explain all his activities within this building.

Mr. Douglas: It would not take long to explain yours.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I apologize for interrupting the hon. member for Greenwood, but it being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

STANDARD TRUST COMPANY

Mr. Ian Grant Wahn (St. Paul's) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-13, to incorporate Standard Trust Company.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, does the sponsor of this bill not intend to indicate something about its nature? As I understand it, there should be some explanation given as to why this bill has been brought before parliament for the second time.

Mr. Wahn: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to incorporate Standard Trust Company. As has been indicated by the hon. member, Standard Trust Company was incorporated by parliament several years ago. Under the law a company so incorporated is required to commence business within two years. Standard Trust Company was not satisfied that it had been able to find within that period the management which it thought was desirable for the company and accordingly it did not commence business. It is now satisfied that it has both the capital and the management which are required and accordingly it is necessary to apply for the incorporation of the company again.

The bill has passed through the Senate and, of course, is now before this house. These trust companies provide a wide range of useful services to the community. They are subject to public regulation and control under the very detailed conditions and restrictions set out in the Trust Companies Act. The provisions of the bill now before the house are the usual. I believe they are self-explanatory and require no detailed explanation. However, if there are any questions I will be happy to do my best to answer them.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, it appears that in 1959 this bill, or a similar one, was introduced and we were led to believe that some of the problems to which the hon. member has referred were resolved at that time and the company was not only prepared to start operations then but was anxious to do so. We have noted that since that time the company has not begun operation and we also notice that there are a number of changes in the bill now before us from the one that was previously brought before parliament.

Before we go into some of those changes, and whether or not they are advantageous, I should like to refer to a broader matter that has to do with companies of this nature. It is one that has been widely discussed by the Liberal party in recent months and has to do with the Canadian composition of such companies and the Canadian element, so far as the shareholders, directors and money involved in the operation are concerned. You will note, Mr. Speaker, that in this case the company incorporated in 1959 had two directors on its board who are not among the board of directors set forth in the bill now before us incorporating Standard Trust Company. They were Mr. Harry Willis residing at Belfountain, Ontario, a lawyer, and Mr. Murray Axmith, an executive, chartered accountant and director of a number of companies in Ontario.

I would presume that these two people were the executive officers who were going to administer the company and I am surprised that they have been removed without any replacements being suggested to us. We agree with those in the Liberal party, and I think they are in the majority, who believe that there should be greater control of a Canadian companies by Canadians, that we should have available to us Canadian trust companies that will provide the services this company is seeking to provide and that we should be assured that the shareholders and directors are Canadians and that the shares are owned by Canadians.

I am aware of the fact, of course, that the statutes of Canada make it mandatory that in any company of this nature incorporated under the Trust Companies Act the majority of the board of directors must be normally resident in Canada and be either Canadian citizens by birth or by naturalization. I suggest that we should be assured and that it should be set forth in the bill that all the directors of this company must be Canadians normally resident in Canada. I suggest we should also go further and ascertain whether or not the shareholders are Canadians and whether or not the stock is under the control of Canadians.

I question that this is true in this case because I am aware that one of the proposed directors of this company is also a director of a number of companies whose shares are widespread, and it is difficult to ascertain from a quick perusal of these companies whether or not they are actually controlled in Canada. If we are going to do as the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) and former adviser on the economic development of Canada has said, and buy Canada back, I suggest it is essential before starting to do so that we direct that any company incorporated under the Trust Companies Act should meet these requirements in the initial stages. I suggest that we should be told, not only with regard to this company but other companies as well, that this matter has been considered with the result that these companies are truly Canadian.

We should like to suggest to the members of the other place that when these bills are referred to their committee a great deal of advantage could accrue to this house if their proceedings were recorded. In that way the discussions and deliberations of the banking and commerce committee of the other place would be made available to members of this house. It may be repetitious for us to have to ascertain facts that may have previously been made known in the other place, and for what it is worth I make the suggestion that the banking and commerce committee of the other place keep a record of its proceedings so that this information will be available.

It will be noted from the bill that the company will have a capitalization of $5 million whereas in the 1959 bill the amount sought was only $3 million. This money will be contributed by subscription, I presume, and no doubt very large sums will come from some of the companies with which the proposed members of the board of directors of this company are connected. This raises a very difficult problem. I will only refer to the director who I know is connected with the mining industry. Many of the mining companies are holding companies which delegate their authority down the line and as a result it is very difficult to ascertain where the ownership of this company will really lie.

I suggest that the committee should give very serious consideration to ascertaining the facts in relation to the Canadian composition of this company before we give any consideration to the passing of the bill. I am sure that other bills of a similar nature will be brought before the house in which similar powers will be sought. Parliament in the past has seen fit to enact the Trust Companies Act and I should like to refer particularly to section 19 where I find these words:

> The majority of the directors of the company shall at all times be persons resident in Canada and subjects of Her Majesty by birth or naturalization.

In my view this was a very forthright and forward step, and having in mind that we are having difficulty in controlling our own economy from the point of view of the companies that operate in Canada I think that this kind of commitment should be made to the house when the incorporation of any such company is sought. I think the sponsor of the bill has an obligation to the house to give us some information with regard to why this company did not proceed to operate. The bill incorporating this company was passed in 1959, and I feel there is an obligation on the sponsor of the measure before us to tell us why the company did not proceed to operate in the normal manner during the last four or five years.

A limitation of two years was set by parliament as the time within which such a company should commence operations. This provision was enacted for the protection of the general public. I believe that there has been a circumvention of this provision and the members of the house should be made aware of the reasons this company did not proceed with its intentions. I believe that in setting up the original board of directors there was an attempt to obtain men with business administration ability. There was a lawyer appointed; but it may be debatable whether or not this is any protection to the shareholders of a trust company in the province of Ontario. However, I believe that was the intention. Then, too, there was the appointment of an accountant to the board of directors, a man of whom it was said at the time that he was a chartered accountant, an executive and director of a number of companies in Ontario and a resident of the township of Etobicoke. These two gentlemen, it would seem to me, formed the business side of this trust company. The other people were well known figures, including several cattle breeders, a well known grain operator in the province of Ontario and a well known real estate operator in the city of Toronto, as well as a former member of the Ontario legislature and a former cabinet minister.

These people are members of the new board of directors, and personally I can see nothing wrong with that. I do believe that these people may lack the business sense that was associated with the establishment of the original board of directors. However, on the earlier occasion a point was made of establishing a board containing people of administrative ability such as a chartered accountant or practising lawyer.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that these are questions that should be answered. Why was this company unable to raise the necessary money to commence operation? We were told that they would be able to do so in the very near future. A statement to this effect will be found on page 863 of Senate Debates for June 18, 1959. I quote:

> In the bill it is proposed that the capital stock of the company shall be $3 million, which may be increased to $5 million if such an increase is found necessary.

It is interesting to note that before this company ever starts operations, the new company has found it necessary to ask for $5 million, even though the old company did not obtain the $3 million necessary to commence operations. I continue to quote:

> Honourable senators will note from clause 4 of the bill that $500,000 must be subscribed before the provisional directors can call a general meeting of shareholders for the purpose of organizing the company. This, I understand, conforms with the provisions of the Trust Companies Act.
> Furthermore, the bill provides that even after the sum of $500,000 has been subscribed the company shall not commence business until $1 million of capital stock shall have been subscribed and at least $1 million paid thereon.
> From information furnished to me I understand that it is the present intention of the sponsors of this bill to provide that $1,100,000 shall be paid for the first $1 million of capital stock which shall be subscribed for and issued, the purpose of this being to immediately provide this company with a capital surplus of $100,000. As all honourable senators well know, a trust company loses money when it first commences to do business, and the sponsors feel that rather than have the capital of the company impaired by a loss which the company will incur when it commences business, the company will be provided with a capital surplus of approximately $100,000, and any loss which may be incurred can be charged against the capital surplus account.
> I understand from the sponsors that they are in a position to immediately provide the trust company with stock transfer business which should produce an annual income of approximately $100,000 for the company.

This statement, Mr. Speaker, was made by the Hon. Senator Brunt during his remarks when he introduced the bill which was subsequently passed by the Senate and this house. However, four years later this company has not been able to raise the original million dollars. They have not been able to form the company and an indication has been given to the house that they have not even raised the $500,000 necessary before a meeting of the shareholders can be called.

I feel these matters are of prime concern to the house in the establishment of a trust company. It would seem to me that if this company cannot live up to the trust we have already put in it when the bill was before us in 1959, then it should not be called a trust company at all. There is an indication that if the name of the company is not suitable to government officials and the banking and commerce committee decides to change it, the company would be agreeable. If that is so, we could call it something other than a trust company.

I believe that this is a matter of great importance. If we are given to understand that certain things will be done, certain responsibilities carried out in an area over which we have complete jurisdiction, then I believe we are entitled to a full explanation as to why these things have not been possible. We should be told why the company did not proceed as it originally intended, why certain people have been dropped from the board of directors, why the board of directors does not now contain persons of recognized ability in certain fields such as accounting and law.

I should like to see the house consider this bill, if that is its wish, but I should like to see the bill considered on the basis of the fact that the company has already failed to live up to the obligations it assumed upon obtaining its original charter. Then, too, we should give consideration to the argument that a trust company incorporated in Canada should have a provision in its charter to the effect that Canadian ownership of that trust company will be maintained. This provision should apply not only to the board of directors but to the shareholders as well.

Certainly the day has now arrived when we are in a position to do something on our own behalf about some of these companies. I believe there is a growing desire for us to have companies that are completely Canadian, that will concern themselves with Canadian problems and with meeting Canadian conditions. I suggest this will not happen if the majority of the money is brought in through mining companies that may not be controlled in Canada, or through other organizations most of whose stock is held outside Canada.

There can be an acceptance of the principle of Canadian ownership and operation of companies only when we in the parliament of Canada are willing to amend our own legislation to that effect. I suggest that the bill be not read now and that it be referred back, not to the committee but to the sponsor himself, so that he can give further consideration to some of these problems, and later present it again to the house, having taken into account some of the problems that are very important to the passing of this particular bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Before we proceed to come to a conclusion about this bill there are some points I would like to mention, following along the general tenor of the remarks made by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). We believe that all necessary steps should be taken to ensure that the corporate structure in Canada is Canadian owned all the way across the board and all through its operations, and that lip service alone is not sufficient, such as has been the case in the past few years.

The hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Wahn) introducing the bill indicated that this company is different in so far as the members of the initial board of directors are concerned, and different in one other aspect about its capitalization; but he also said the company was in fact incorporated by private bill some four years ago in 1959. So far as the Senate was concerned it was incorporated again during the last session of parliament, but with the intervention of dissolution it did not proceed through this chamber.

[Mr. Peters.]

I gather that the persons who are listed as being the petitioners, and who in fact will be the provisional directors of this company, are at the moment Canadian citizens ordinarily resident in Canada. Their names are given in clause 1 of the bill, and also their occupations and addresses, which I understand are all in Ontario. This in itself is laudable. This is something we all like to see, Canadian citizens participating in the formation of companies and the development of our industries. But while they may be at present Canadians there is no guarantee anywhere in the bill that such will always be the case, except in so far as the provisions of the Trust Companies Act apply, which requires that all such companies shall have Canadian citizens as the majority of their directors. Actually "British subjects" I think are the words in the Trust Companies Act, and this has been dealt with by the hon. member for Timiskaming.

To us this is the key point we should be looking at in so far as the incorporation of this particular company is concerned. We should be looking at this and other similar companies from the point of view of Canadian ownership so far as capital is concerned, and as members of parliament we should be seeking to give full effect to the desire that rests in all hon. members to develop and promote Canadianism, and Canadian ownership and control of corporations in Canada, using our resources and finances.

Two years ago we had quite a lengthy debate in parliament concerning a similar subject matter. It was a pipe line company, Aurora Pipe Lines Limited, and at that time it took a considerable amount of discussion, debate, crossfire and argument to get the sponsor of the legislation and the company which was to be incorporated to agree that all directors of the company should at all times be Canadian citizens ordinarily resident in Canada. It took many weeks of debate to achieve that, and I hope such will not be the case in this parliament. I hope that principle and concept will be readily agreed to by the people who are petitioning for the incorporation of this company, and that they will be agreed to by the sponsor of the bill.

For many years our predecessors in politics, the C.C.F. party, advocated and campaigned on the concept and principle of Canadian ownership and Canadian control of our industry. It was not too many years ago when that idea was ridiculed and pooh-poohed by other political parties, and especially by people in the business world. But gradually, arising from the principle advocated by the C.C.F. party, there has come to be an understanding and appreciation on the part of all political parties that we must do something to regain control of our own industry and our own economic destiny.

Ours is no longer a lone voice arguing this particular principle of Canadianism. Four or five years ago we were joined by the Conservative party. Admittedly at that time it was bent solely and simply on getting into office, regardless of how it got there through promises; but nevertheless in 1957 it did embrace the concept of Canadian ownership and control. It is true also that following its attainment of office it did not do very much to put that concept into effect. Now we have the Liberal party in office. At one time it objected strenuously to the ideas we expressed and which we promote now. But we do have articles written and comments made by the present Minister of Finance, before he became minister, about the objectives we must have and the steps we must take to develop Canadian ownership of industry and other economic activities in this country. In fact, there appeared in the Weekend magazine published during the election campaign a very extensive article written by one Walter Gordon. The article was entitled "We must buy back Canada", and the subtitle was, "The Liberals' expert on business gives his recipe for independence". I might add as an aside that it did not give his recipe for independence from Toronto businessmen and financiers, but none the less I presume it gave his recipe for the economic independence of Canada. The article indicates who Walter Gordon is; it gives his background in so far as being chairman of the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects is concerned, and similar information.

In this article the Minister of Finance—of course, he was not then the minister—goes into great detail, although not as great as one would wish, about the degree of foreign investment in Canada dating back to 1900. He shows the tremendous growth, in billions of dollars, of total foreign investment in Canada since that time, from just a little over $1 billion in 1900 to something more than $22 billion in 1960. He indicates the percentage of foreign ownership and control of selected industries in Canada, going back to 1954 in this instance. But throughout this article—and I do not intend to quote sections from it—the person classified as the Liberals' expert on business who is giving his recipe for Canadian economic independence, presumably, talks about the degree of foreign ownership and control of Canadian industry, the damaging effects this has upon our economic growth and the steps which are necessary to overcome this situation. We agree with what the Minister of Finance wrote in that article in so far as the damaging effects of foreign ownership and control upon Canadian industry are concerned.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a brief reference to a governmental publication in support of the attitude expressed by the Minister of Finance in that article. The publication from which I quote was referred to in a previous parliament. It is the Canadian Balance of International Payments, 1960, and International Investment Position, a publication of the dominion bureau of statistics. I quote from page 58 of this official government publication on the growth of foreign control and investment in Canada:

> Perhaps the most striking feature of these series,—

This is referring to the series of statistics:

> —viewed in the perspective of a third of a century, embracing depression and boom, war and peace, is the consistency of the direction of the changes. Foreign ownership of Canadian manufacturing has inched up from 38 per cent in 1926 to 51 per cent in 1959 and control has gone from 35 per cent to 57 per cent. Foreign ownership of mining and smelting has also reflected an almost uninterrupted growth from 37 per cent in 1926 to 59 per cent in 1959 and control has risen from 38 per cent to 61 per cent. Apart from these industries there has developed a substantial petroleum and natural gas industry which is 63 per cent foreign owned and 75 per cent foreign controlled.

The dominion bureau of statistics figures are from 1926 which, as I understand it, was the year the d.b.s. started to compile statistics of this sort. These statistics show that from 1926, at least, until 1959, which is the last year for which I have the figures, there was a steady, uninterrupted, year by year increase in the degree and percentage of foreign control and ownership of Canadian industry. What it does not say, and what I am sure everyone realizes, is that from 1926 until this very day, unfortunately, we have had either a Liberal or a Conservative government in office in Canada and it did not particularly matter in those years who was in and who was out, the growth was the same; the give away of our resources to foreign interests was identical whether there was a Liberal or a Conservative government in office. It was during the later years to which these statistics refer that, as I said earlier, those in the C.C.F. party were campaigning both at election time and in this house—I refer to my predecessors here in the C.C.F. party—for a return into Canadian hands of the control of our economic destiny. It was during those years that the Liberals and the Conservatives, whether in government or in opposition, turned a deaf ear and refused to listen. This was the situation up to a couple of years ago. As a result, we are now stuck with the inheritance of the blindness of each of these old line parties on this question of owning and controlling our economic activity and destiny. This economic independence is what we are trying to accomplish.

As I said, Mr. Chairman, at one time both the old line parties objected to this course of action. At one time they refused absolutely to concern themselves with whether the growth of foreign ownership was damaging or otherwise to Canadian interests. They refused absolutely to even study the question, and only in the last four or five years were any public pronouncements made by either the Liberals or the Conservatives about this all important question which now confronts us. It confronts us in the bill that is before us; it does not only confront us as a general proposition. It does not only confront us in so far as our manufacturing industry is concerned, the mining and smelting industry, the petroleum and natural gas industry or any other industry. This question of foreign ownership and control confronts us perhaps even more in the field of finance, in the field of control over interest rates, the operation and issuance of currency, credit and the like. I refer to the field of banking, the financial structure of Canada, the trust and loan companies field, the mortgage field and the like.

We have before us just one small part of the problem which concerns us. That small part is Standard Trust Company, an act to incorporate this body. While it may be a rather small company, only one company, and some may consider that it is just a small part of the total trust and loan company picture in Canada and an even smaller part of the total financial interests in Canada, nevertheless we must start to deal with this problem at some point. I suggest this is the point at which to start, when the issue comes before us.

The capital stock of the company is established as being $5 million. I have here the report of the superintendent of insurance for Canada for the year ending December 31, 1961. In it there are listed 15 trust companies in Canada. I presume there are only 15 trust companies in Canada, although I may be inaccurately informed—I may have been misreading the information in this report. The report is not particularly voluminous, it is true, but none the less it is filled with statistics.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret I must interrupt the hon. gentleman, but I have to advise him his time has expired.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): I should like to say one or two words on the bill. We certainly do not wish to hold the bill up in any way because we think it should go to the committee where it could be studied in detail and where the interested parties could appear and give evidence.

We want to get on with the business of the house so that this measure may be referred to the appropriate committee for more careful consideration. I understand, in any case, that in sending such a bill as this to a committee we are not, really, endorsing the principle of the measure; I think we were told that in the last parliament. Bills such as this are allowed to go forward on a second reading for a more detailed study. However, there are some doubts I wish to express at this stage in order that the sponsors may give consideration to them before the bill is considered by the committee.

Previous speakers from this party have stated that our main concern in these matters is to try to build into the bill itself sufficient safeguards to ensure that these various financial companies which we are incorporating shall not at some later date pass into the hands of people who reside outside Canada. I have read over the names of the provisional directors. These are, of course, only provisional and they will change at a later date. Some of these names are familiar and they appear to belong to excellent individuals. At the same time, it is not sufficient to have as a majority of the directors people who are normally resident in Canada. This ensures, of course, that the Canadian point of view is available to the company at all times. We are more concerned however with the idea of Canadian control, and this does not necessarily follow merely because the majority of directors will be people resident in Canada.

It is more important to build into the bill some safeguards attached to the actual stock of the company, its eventual distribution and the hands into which it will finally pass. We are making these observations at this point to suggest to the sponsors of the bill that some consideration be given to revising the capital stock of the company so that the majority of the common shares will always be held by Canadian citizens. If this is done we need never fear that control of the company will pass into hands outside our borders. This is in no way discourteous or unfriendly to people outside Canada. They are probably all good businessmen. But we feel that as a matter of the good, practical running of the country, institutions of this type should always remain under Canadian control.

As other hon. members have pointed out, these institutions are often small in the beginning—though I notice that this one has a capital of $5 million. As they continue to operate in the community they acquire substantial assets. Trust companies, in particular, are now spreading out into the banking field in Canada and taking deep root in the monetary community. I recall that in the last parliament we had a measure before us seeking to incorporate the Allstate Life Insurance Company. Objections were raised then to the effect that this company, from its inception, would be 87 per cent owned by a United States company. We objected to this at the time and asked that consideration be given to revising the capital set-up so that the controlling shares would remain in Canada. This suggestion was enthusiastically received by the sponsor of the bill, and I understand consideration was being given to that proposal. However, parliament dissolved and we were not able to revive that measure. I know this is a reasonable proposal, and perhaps it would find favour with sponsors of the present measure.

What we are discussing here goes to the root of the Canadian economy and to the main problem facing it, which is the continuing drift of Canadian resources into hands outside our borders. It is not necessary, I am sure, to repeat the difficulties which this creates for a community—the problems of planning and the handicaps to the intelligent running of our economy. I think it is true to say there is no country in the modern world which has permitted as large a proportion of its natural resources to be controlled from outside its borders as has Canada. That is why we are trying to serve notice that in all these bills we are anxious to see that safeguards are built in to see that at some time in the future control of policy and shares will not pass into hands outside Canada. It is often said that by taking this attitude we are limiting the desire of people outside our borders to invest in Canada. Of course, no one wants that to come about, because capital from outside sources is still needed. However, examination of the capital available in Canada indicates that this fear is exaggerated. Many sources of development capital are available within our own borders, but no real attempt has been made to marshal this capital. We are told that a measure will be brought before the house designed to meet this difficulty. If that is true, and if the necessary capital funds are made available, we need have no fear about building into measures of this kind the safeguards which spokesmen for our party are suggesting this afternoon. If the capital is available in Canada there need never be any fear of getting into difficulties with groups outside the country.

These are all the observations I have to make at this time. As I say, we do not want to delay the measure unnecessarily, though we do wish to emphasize to other members who are sponsoring these pieces of legislation that we intend to do every thing we can within the rules to ensure that financial institutions and corporations set up by this parliament will be so established that the control of their policy and assets will remain in the hands of Canadian citizens in perpetuity.

Mr. Basford: I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question?

Mr. Scott: Certainly.

Mr. Basford: In line with the principles he has been enunciating, would the hon. member favour the control which prevents international and United States trade unions controlling Canadian locals by way of the trusteeship provisions in the constitutions of these international trade unions?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, I trust that if I can take half an hour to answer this question you will not rule me out of order on the ground my observations are not pertinent to the bill under discussion. It is another question entirely.

Mr. Cashin: I suggest that the hon. member would not be able to last half an hour, as it is now eight minutes to six. I think that is obvious.

Mr. Scott: If the hon. member is challenging me to do so I will certainly make the attempt.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Scott: No, Mr. Speaker, I am answering the hon. gentleman's question.

Mr. Clancy: Hurry up; time is running out.

Mr. Scott: The hon. gentleman asked me some time ago, having regard to our submissions on the bill, whether I would comment on the degree of control exercised over Canadian unions by United States counterparts. In answer to him my first submission would be that this degree of control is greatly exaggerated; that Canadian unions over the years have increasingly developed their own autonomy within the international structure; that the actual degree of control exerted over Canadian unions is exaggerated out of all proportion to the true situation. There are, of course, some international unions which exercise a very marked degree of control over their Canadian counterparts. Speaking for myself, I would be just as opposed to that as I would be to Canadian companies being controlled by outside companies. I do not think you can blow hot and cold; if you are asking that the business community be freed from exterior influences, I think it follows that other sections of the community must similarly be freed from exterior influences.

Mr. G. D. Clancy (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I have spoken in the house. I will dispense with the usual formalities; you can take them as read.

I have listened with great interest to preceding speakers talking about something which I am not too sure they know anything about. When they were pinned down on the difference between unions and private business they were not too sure of themselves. A budget has been put before this house and in the budget we have control over foreign investment. I suggest we report the bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to speak on this bill to incorporate the Standard Trust Company, but sitting here and listening to the lucid arguments of the handsome members for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) and Skeena (Mr. Howard), and the very intelligent presentation by the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott), I am moved to speak on the bill. It is not good enough for the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Wahn), in introducing the bill, simply to say that he is willing to answer questions, or to sit there with a bland and beatific expression on his face while debate takes place on this bill. This bill is of such importance—it is only a small bill but we are discussing a principle—that the members of this house are entitled to a full explanation of the historical background, which was dealt with at some length by the hon. member for Timiskaming, the developments since, all the circumstances surrounding the incorporators of the company, and the ownership, the purposes and the motives behind its incorporation. I am sure we are not going to be satisfied until we have had a complete explanation from the hon. member for St. Paul's with respect to all the problems and questions raised by the preceding speakers from this group.

I notice, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member who preceded me is looking in this direction, and I thought I heard him say something to the effect that we did not know what we were talking about. I am a little under the impression that at this time the hon. member himself does not know quite where he is.

Mr. Clancy: Mr. Speaker, I am quite willing to withdraw that remark, but you cannot stop me from thinking.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Herridge: No, Mr. Speaker, I had not concluded. I have not had my 20 minutes yet.

[Mr. Scott.]

This is an important bill. Mr. Speaker, I looked up the record—I got some material hurriedly as the debate went on—and I found that this company, if it is incorporated, will have the third largest capital of any trust company in Canada. The bill provides for $5 million, and there are two other companies which have a capital of $10 million. This sum represents a very considerable corporation which will do a considerable amount of business if its incorporation is secured.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, it is our responsibility to make certain that all is in order with this incorporation and that we in this house begin to practise what we preach, which is to make certain that there is Canadian ownership and control over this corporation. In this connection I want to quote from a book I have been reading recently called: "How they sold our Canada to the U.S.A.", written by Mr. Andrew Lamorie. On page 49 I find a very interesting comment. Paragraph 12 says:

> Newest American device is to set up "investment trusts" in Canada. Such a trust does no real investing or developing itself, but purchases large blocks of stock in Canadian producing companies. American owners of the trusts, no matter how much profit they make, pay no taxes. They are even permitted to take their profits and buy up more Canadian holdings—on and on, indefinitely, building a pyramid of Canadian wealth owned entirely by Americans.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, the house will resume the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING MEMBERSHIP, FUNDS, ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Pickersgill—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Atlantic Development Board Act to increase the number of members of the Atlantic development board from five to eleven; to establish as a separate account in the consolidated revenue fund an Atlantic development fund to which shall be credited the sum of one hundred million dollars to be used for the purpose of financing or assisting in financing programs or projects that would contribute to the growth and development of the economy of the Atlantic region and for which satisfactory financing arrangements are not otherwise available; and to provide that the said act shall expire on the 24th day of January, 1969; and to provide further for certain changes in connection with the administration of the said act.

The Chairman: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, before the house took up private members' business at five o'clock I was explaining the reasons why members of this party support the resolution and why they will be particularly interested to see the actual legislation proposed. I explained that the first amendment to the act provided for by the resolution followed in effect an amendment proposed by this party in the last parliament, and that in our view the increase in the size of the board from five to 11 members would enable the board to be more representative and therefore a more effective planning instrument.

I also said that the other proposal in the resolution, namely that a fund of $100 million be used for financing projects approved by the board, in our opinion filled a gap in the former legislation. I pointed out, however, that even though the Secretary of State and the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough both said that the fund of $100 million was only a supplement, we in this party seriously doubted its adequacy. After all, this sum of $100 million apparently is to be spread over approximately six years and to cover four provinces and we think the amount is small enough.

It is our view, Mr. Chairman, that adequate capital expenditures are essential if the economic planning for the maritimes is to be on a scale that will enable these provinces to reach permanently a situation of economic welfare on a parity with the rest of Canada. To put it another way, what is needed is not just a minimum sum for some sort of bailing out operation but a considered estimate of the full resources needed to finish the job. Perhaps the board itself in the course of time will make a report to be brought back to this house showing what the scale of such capital expenditures should be in order to do the job, because it is our view that it just is not good enough to do half a job. Half a job is very little better than no job at all and we want to ensure that when this economic planning is carried out it is carried out on a scale that will be genuinely effective. If we are not going to do a real job, let us not even pretend that we are going to do it at all.

In our view there are other gaps in the resolution that we hope will be repaired in the legislation or in the course of the passage of the legislation through the house. For example, we feel that there should definitely be a full time chairman at least, and perhaps other members of the board should be full time. The proposal to have a major planning instrument composed of, be it five or 11 or 15 busy men who only meet occasionally, is in our opinion to ensure—and this, I think, was the view expressed by the member for Antigonish-Guysborough in the last session—that the board will not accomplish very much. I have a passage in Hansard where he expounded his views on this matter and I should like to read it, because his views then express the views that we have now. I regret that he does not seem as yet to have persuaded the government to accept them. He said, as found on page 2382 of Hansard for December 6, 1962:

> —I for one would be less than frank if I did not express the mixture of uncertainty and disappointment which I felt when I first studied the bill. In the first place the government—

He was referring, of course, to the previous government.

> —does not seem to have appraised accurately the seriousness of the problems of the Atlantic area, or to have appraised accurately the scope of action that will be required to deal efficaciously with these problems. It provides for an unpaid board which is to meet once a year. It is true the chairman is to receive an honorarium of $3,000, and it is also true that the board can meet more frequently, but that is what is laid out in the bill itself, and to me this suggests that this board is not expected to accomplish very much.

It is still our view, Mr. Chairman—whether it is still the view of the member for Antigonish-Guysborough I am not sure—that it is essential if this board is to function effectively that at least the chairman and probably some other members should have full time jobs. I recall that in the last house the former member for York South referred to another planning measure that was introduced, and which provided for part time voluntary membership on the board, as a cocktail time planning board. We feel that if this task is to be tackled seriously, then indeed it should be a full time board; or if not all of the 11 members, then at least a substantial number of the members should be on the job full time and devoting their whole energies to it.

I more or less apologized, Mr. Chairman, when I started to speak on the resolution this afternoon for getting into the debate when I do not represent a maritime constituency. If I did apologize, I wish to withdraw any such apology because my constituents, although they are in Toronto, are deeply concerned about the economic welfare of all Canada, and I think we have to look at this matter as Canadians. We have to be ready to take whatever effective steps by way of economic planning are necessary, and I may say that we in this party will do all we can to ensure that the legislation when it is brought in is given effective consideration. We will very likely suggest amendments to make it more effective, and we hope that it will turn out to be a worth-while planning instrument in order to give a long overdue measure of fairness and economic justice to the maritime provinces.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Chairman, in my opening remarks may I say to the hon. member for Greenwood that as a member from the Atlantic provinces I certainly welcome any remarks he may wish to make that may be of assistance in making our area a better place in which our people can live. Certainly we welcome remarks by any member from any part of Canada. We hope that all Canadians are aware of the problems of our area and are interested in eliminating them as quickly as possible.

In this regard I think you have to look at the proposed amendments to the Atlantic Development Board Act very carefully. I may say that I looked forward with anticipation to the remarks made by the Secretary of State last evening, when he outlined in his short dissertation what he felt would be the result of the amendments to the Atlantic Development Board Act.

May I say that I was amazed, truthfully amazed, when the Secretary of State put on Hansard last evening the letter he had written to Mr. Wardell, the chairman of this board. It was, in my opinion, a tremendous affront to the chairman of a board established by the government of this country during the last parliament. Even more than that, Mr. Chairman, I was amazed, knowing the great ability of the Secretary of State when it comes to political strategy, at the inept effort to destroy the effectiveness of the outstanding men we appointed to this board during the last parliament. Usually one of the great tributes paid to the members from the Atlantic provinces is their ability to know practical politics as well as any group of members in any part of Canada.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one did not even have to be a member of this house to see through the amendments the Secretary of State has placed before this house. All one has to do is to read the article by Charles Lynch in tonight's Ottawa Citizen which carries the headline, "Atlantic board chairman gets ouster with finesse". Well, I do not know how much finesse the Secretary of State used, but I thought it was about as blatant an act as could possibly be perpetrated on a citizen who is so highly regarded in the Atlantic provinces, a man who has given his all and who has asked for nothing from our area.

I understand that there are some members of the Liberal party who are not very happy with Mr. Wardell. They say that he is a political partisan. Well, Mr. Chairman, here is the latest edition of the Atlantic Advocate and all may see the picture of the gentleman on the cover. He is sitting in the gallery now, and I do not believe he could be pointed out as a Conservative.

Mr. Stewart: Could we have the name of the publication and the date?

An hon. Member: What is the name of the person?

Mr. Coates: It is Premier Smallwood. When you look inside, you find a very lengthy story about this gentleman from Newfoundland.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, there must be some other reason the Secretary of State wants to cut off the head of the chairman of the Atlantic development board. It cannot be merely because he is a partisan Conservative. I am sure he would be willing to recognize that. Perhaps the reason can be found in the article, something that Brigadier Wardell had to say about the former government and what they anticipated when they appointed him. Perhaps it was this expectation that was the reason for the suggested enlargement in the membership of the Atlantic development board. This is what he had to say:

> Indeed, I always felt that the very fact of my appointment was evidence of the previous government's intention to go the whole way in the application of the remedies—

The remedy he is talking about here is not this $100 million. He is talking about $4 billion. I say that $100 million is a piker's approach to the problems of the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Rideout: Why did you not say so last year?

Mr. Coates: Because I did not have to say so; we had the treasury of Canada behind us. Brigadier Wardell went on to say this:

> I have campaigned for years to demonstrate the formidable scale of attack. I, and the publications I control, have always been completely independent politically. I should have been the last person the government would have chosen if they were not meaning to carry the policy through to its ultimate conclusion.

What better evidence, Mr. Chairman, than the words of the man we appointed to be the chairman of the Atlantic development board that we were going to spend a billion dollars in the next ten years if we had remained the government?

Mr. Rideout: Why did you not put it in the bill?

Mr. Coates: We did not have to put it in the bill. We had the federal treasury available to the Atlantic provinces, all the money for all the projects that you could possibly anticipate. Since the hon. member is talking about money, I might ask him: what is $100 million going to do for the Chignecto complex when it would take $350 million to build the dams alone? Are you willing to support the construction of the Chignecto complex and the Chignecto canal? The hon. member is shaking his head. He does not support the construction of the Chignecto complex.

Mr. Rideout: Not out of these funds.

Mr. Coates: I am glad to hear the hon. member for Westmorland say he does not support it.

Mr. Rideout: Not out of these funds.

Mr. Coates: That is quite a revelation; it will be quite a revelation to the people of Westmorland. This is all the more reason for feeling that the Chignecto canal committee should meet, and meet early to find out what this government is going to do with this project, now that Liberal members are standing up and saying they are opposed to it.

Mr. Rideout: Why did you not do something about it?

Mr. Coates: I should like to know what more I could have done, unless it was taking a spade and going out and digging the ditches myself. I would have been willing to do that if I thought it would have accomplished anything.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have had some very helpful remarks from the members on the opposite side. I hope we will have some more. I look forward—

An hon. Member: Speed it up a little.

Mr. Coates: The gentleman says, "Speed it up a little". I say to him that he will not say, "speed it up a little"—

Mr. Rideout: Yes, we will.

Mr. Coates: If you can speed up anything that would accomplish something for the Atlantic provinces, rather than the destruction of the Atlantic development board, then I will be happy to hear from you. Until then, I suggest perhaps you should stand on your own two feet, do your own talking and put your own proposals before this house.

Now, I should like to make a few comments on this letter the Secretary of State wrote to the chairman. I quote from it, in part:

> The board will have the responsibility of recommending the expenditure of this fund and of supervising such expenditures, but the final approval of each capital project rests with the government.

I would like to ask the Secretary of State just how these projects will finally be approved? Will it be by the cabinet or the House of Commons, or by the premier of Newfoundland? If it is to be by the cabinet, then let's face it: all we are doing is providing a patronage fund of $100 million for the Liberal party in the Atlantic provinces, and I do not think anybody in the Atlantic provinces wants that sort of set-up.

There are other questions I would like answered. I would like the Minister of Labour to say whether he approves of the demotion of Frank Sobey, who was vice-chairman with a four year appointment, to an ordinary member for one year? I would like to know whether the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough approves of Frank Sobey's dismissal from the board, because that is what it is. I would like to hear from the other members from the Atlantic provinces to know if they approve of such actions.

This is the lowest type of political partisanship that could possibly be found anywhere, and I feel that the Atlantic provinces deserve something better than that. If that is what we are to look forward to receiving from the Liberal government then, while the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough pointed out that they had 20 Liberals from the Atlantic provinces last time, I venture to say they will have none when the next election comes around.

There are many other aspects of the measure that are of particular importance to hon. members from the Atlantic area. I should like to know whether the Secretary of State has consulted and personally written the various members of the board to tell them their term was going to be reduced to one year. I realize he has written the chairman, and the chairman is aware of this, but I would like to know if the other members have been advised.

I would also like the Secretary of State to inform me whether he is planning on advising the provincial governments about the six further appointments that are to be made to the board, something which he suggested in the last parliament we should do. I would also like to know if the Secretary of State really believes the gentlemen we appointed, the ablest men available in the Atlantic provinces, are not just remaining on this board because they do not want to get into a public fight with the government of the day over its political partisanship. I believe they are too fine a group of gentlemen to say to the government just how contemptible an act this is. You, know, Mr. Chairman, I find it hard to think of a word sufficient to describe how low an act it is and still use parliamentary language.

Mr. Bell: How about the word "Liberal"?

Mr. Coates: The word Liberal probably describes it just as well as any that could be found. Fifty or sixty years ago this type of attitude might have been acceptable, but it is not the type of approach we look forward to in the Atlantic provinces now. We look forward to the type of approach that will get us the ablest men it is possible to find, no matter what their political beliefs might be, and band them together to do the very best they can for the area. And, Mr. Chairman, it is quite a job, even when we do find the ablest men.

We have a big task before us. It has been indicated it will take $4 billion to bring the Atlantic provinces even close to the level of the richer provinces of the country. It is felt that $1 billion should be injected into the maritime economy within the next 10 years, and if this $100 million which the Secretary of State suggests as a fund were available each year, then I would say we would have a pretty satisfactory fund and we could not do very much arguing about it.

I do not like the principle of giving moneys to boards. I do not like the principle of taking the power away from parliament, of selecting the means by which public money is spent, even if it were $100 million a year. But, Mr. Chairman, it is not $100 million each year for the next 10 years. It is $100 million for six or seven years, and it will probably be five years by the time they get the board working. After that time the government will kill the board, as the former minister of national revenue said. The Liberals are going to bury it, and now they will have six Grit pallbearers to go along to the funeral.

One hundred million dollars is an infinitesimal amount of money when one looks at what the former government did when it was endeavouring to lift up the economy of the area. In Atlantic adjustment grants alone we provided $275 million. There were many other acts by the former government. The hon. member for Victoria-Carleton mentioned the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act, and there was the Beechwood act. There are many examples where we poured millions of dollars into the economy of the Atlantic provinces, but it still requires hundreds of millions of dollars more. It will not get them from this board.

There has to be some other approach to this matter if we are really going to get the type of incentive, the leap forward, which the Secretary of State spoke about last night. We are in low gear with $100 million, and we will never get out of low gear if we only have $100 million. Last night the Secretary of State told me that the government is providing more money under the Trans-Canada Highway Act. I think that is just great. Certainly I am not against it in any way, shape or form.

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not think you would be.

Mr. Coates: But at the same time, Mr. Chairman, this is available to every other province in Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, it is not. The hon. gentleman surely knows that the 90 per cent is available only to the four Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What about B.C.?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is available only to the four Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What about B.C.?

Mr. Coates: He says no.

Mr. Pickersgill: Evidently hon. gentlemen opposite did not even bother to read the supplementary estimates that they passed a fraction of the other day.

Mr. Coates: It has always been my understanding that there were other provinces that were going to receive this assistance other than the Atlantic provinces, but I am very happy to hear this, and I am very pleased to hear it. I only wish that the Secretary of State would come in and make concise statements to the house on these matters, rather than having to provide the information through interjections.

This is wonderful. We will accept the assistance no matter how it comes. But it would be much better if the Secretary of State made statements that were not so mixed up and people could understand them. Certainly British Columbia is going to be surprised at not obtaining this assistance. If this money is only available to the Atlantic provinces, that is wonderful; it is another example of the way in which we are going to be helped. But what province is really going to be helped? We all know the answer to that question. It is the province for which the Secretary of State happens to be a member. Is it also going to be that way with the Atlantic development board? Is all the $100 million going to be funnelled into the province of Newfoundland? Is the minister going to see that this money is broken down on a per capita basis? Perhaps he could answer that question later. I hope, since we were able to work out a very amicable agreement between the four Atlantic provinces with regard to the distribution of the money under the Atlantic adjustment grants, that similar grants will be forthcoming which will be helpful to all four provinces on a per capita basis.

I think the Secretary of State owes the Atlantic provinces an explanation with regard to these six new appointments. The hon.

member for Greenwood mentioned the fact that last year the Secretary of State and the Liberal party voted against an amendment proposed by his party to enlarge the Atlantic development board. He says he is glad to see they have come around to his party's way of thinking and are going to enlarge the board. Let me inform the hon. member for Greenwood, if he is so naïve as to think that the suggested amendment of the last parliament is the reason for the amendment that will now enlarge the board, that the only reason for the proposed amendment is that the Liberal party is the government of the day and they are going to look after six of their followers. There is no better reason than that.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman seems to have patronage on the brain.

Mr. Coates: There is a very good reason for my having patronage on the brain, because I know who will appoint and who is going to be running the Atlantic development board. There is no better reason in the world than the examples we have had that the hon. member has patronage on the brain and is in a position to do something about it.

Mr. Bell: Where is the brain?

Mr. Coates: The hon. member for Saint John-Albert is less kind to the Secretary of State than I am. I think he has some brains, but he thinks the people in the Atlantic provinces have fewer brains than they in fact have, otherwise he would not have brought in this type of resolution to enable him to do his political partisan work. I think I have said enough on this occasion, Mr. Chairman.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Coates: I can well understand that they do not like it when they hear the truth. It is too bad the Minister of National Health and Welfare is not here to lead them on another crusade for the truth, but unfortunately it is the type of truth that has the political partisan bias that we are getting in sufficient amounts in the legislation that has been proposed today.

Mr. Lloyd: Mr. Chairman, during the debate this afternoon and again this evening a number of official opposition members have challenged Atlantic provinces members to make known their position on the proposed amendments to the act which established the Atlantic development board. I trust that in making known my position I can do so with the dispatch that I am looking forward to and that I am sure all hon. members would like to see attend the passage of these amendments in order that we may get on with the job. My opinion can be expressed in this way, and I think it is one that is widely shared in the province of Nova Scotia. The composition of the present board does not provide the practical representation of areas and skills—despite what hon. members opposite may have stated in this house today—essential to a balanced development program throughout the entire Atlantic region. By increasing the number of board members we provide an opportunity to correct this existing weakness which is apparent to anyone who is knowledgeable about the skills available in the Atlantic provinces. Indeed, it is only making invidious comparisons, which contribute nothing to this very essential undertaking at this time, to indulge in loud protestations about the skills of this or that individual.

We know how Industrial Estates operate in Nova Scotia; we know it is supposed to be and is in fact a non-political organization. We would like to see this board maintain itself in the same way. I think we can ensure this by increasing the number of members on the board. The provision of funds is the other essential feature of these amendments. This action inspires confidence that the social capital investment recommended by the board from time to time will not be sidetracked or delayed for some alleged austerity program or some other reason. The $100 million fund is a bond of good faith to encourage the maximum effort of the strengthened board in accomplishing its objectives within a reasonable time, and I trust that time will start within a few minutes this evening.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I am happy to speak on this measure, the first move designed and put forward by this government to cope with the special problems of our Atlantic region. I am happy to have heard those who have spoken. I would like to say to the hon. member from Greenwood that we maritimers welcome very much the contribution he made and the interest he showed. I welcome, too, the penchant for alacrity which the hon. member for Halifax has displayed this evening. Knowing his party, and being one familiar with its dealings with the maritimes for a quarter of a century, I find this a wholesome change.

I think the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton this afternoon, set a fine tone for this debate. He avoided partisanship, and indeed I think he went to extreme lengths in revealing the faith which he held for some of his fellow men who were not of his political party. I refer to his statement about the non-partisanship of the Secretary of State and his confidence that he would not even be partisan in a geographic sense, let alone a political one. The hon. member for Victoria-Carleton is older and wiser than I. He may even be right. But I still commend him for his faith. If any argument had to be advanced to indicate that the maritime region was grossly and shamefully neglected by the party in power between 1935 and 1957 in this country I would call as my first witness the leader of the Liberal party in the province of Prince Edward Island, a former premier of that province, who said "The St. Laurent government did not give us half a deal; Prime Minister Diefenbaker could do it. Why couldn't he?" Premier Matheson will remember very well the time when our little province was facing acute problems. The legislature was adjourned to allow him to come up to Ottawa to talk to his friends in the Liberal government and appeal to them for aid. He found that aid was not forthcoming. It would not be accurate to say he returned empty handed, because he did not. He returned with a bill for something like $1,250,000 which our little province owed to the dominion government because of some miscalculation in the dominion bureau of statistics—they had predicted we would be more fruitful and prolific than in fact we proved to be. The generosity of the dominion government was shown to this extent—that instead of having to pay the $1,250,000 in one fell swoop they allowed our little province to pay it back in five instalments. It reminds me of the farmer who, when advised by a veterinarian that he must cut off his dog's tail said he could not bear to do it all at once but would cut off a little bit every day.

Through the years this house has heard the pleas of the maritime representatives calling for a better deal. At times some of our political leaders became extreme in their views. They became so disturbed by the injustice of the situation that they suggested a political course of action which would have brought about the departure of certain parts of the country from confederation had that been possible. A notable example was when a former Liberal premier of Nova Scotia, the Hon. W. S. Fielding, rose to power in a repeal movement in 1886. He ended, of course, as a member of the dominion cabinet.

We in the maritimes have seen the fulcrum of economic power and advantage move ever further from us. I agreed with the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton when he said this afternoon that we do not want anything at the expense of the rest of Canada. I think, however, we can say that the prosperity of other parts of this country has in some measure at least, been derived from the disadvantages which we have had to endure for so long.

One has but to look over the record of the debates of this house and to have a mere nodding acquaintance with history to know that on many occasions the needs of the maritimes have been bypassed. I was reading not long ago the record of the debates of 1912 when there was a great discussion about the northern territories, the resources of those territories and the extension of the boundaries of certain provinces. And Mr. Robert Borden, the leader of the Conservative party, reminded the house that there were other provinces which did not have northern territories but which had rights and claims.

We know how down through the years we have educated our youth and they have gone elsewhere. The story of maritime rights and maritime claims is not a new one. I shall not put it on the record again tonight. It is not for us here to relive past agonies and rekindle old grievances. Positive action and advancement to redress old wrongs is what is needed. I say with the greatest sincerity and with the greatest pride that no government ever moved so swiftly or so effectively to strengthen the maritime economy as did that government which took office in 1957. The Atlantic Provinces Adjustment Act was the first measure of aid and it was enacted within months and followed a commitment given by the Conservative candidates of the Atlantic provinces when they met in May, 1957, in Moncton. These commitments were honoured by the government in power. It is little wonder that at that time the leading Liberal organ of the province of Prince Edward Island, The Patriot, said about the adjustment grants:

> The truth of the matter is that this belated recognition of this island's fiscal need was long overdue by the government of Canada and that this province and the other Atlantic provinces as well are only now being treated a little more like the part of Canada that they are and less as poor relations.

This, I think, expressed the sentiment of the whole region.

Mr. Fisher: What about term 29?

Mr. Macquarrie: If the hon. member on my extreme left wants to look at the history of Newfoundland he will find that it was well treated by that same government.

After this measure of redress, and many others, the former government set up the Atlantic development board. There were improvements in our transportation system, new developments in our national parks and many other aspects of justice—I will not say generosity—on the part of a sympathetic and understanding government. We were given a new opportunity to engage in a program of self help. This was accomplished especially through the Atlantic development board, a fine piece of legislation which greatly cheered the people of the Atlantic region and offered us new hopes and brought before us new vistas of opportunity.

I am not one who will say that because of the great things which were done between 1957 and 1963 all the ills of the maritimes have been cured. Far from it. We still have grievances. We have an average income lower by one third than the rest of Canada, double the unemployment and half the capital investment per capita. Therefore it is not surprising that even this government should take a special look at the problems of the Atlantic region, the oldest part of the dominion.

Someone said tonight that it was vain and futile talk to be assessing the personalities on the board. Leadership in the maritime provinces as elsewhere results from the human potential. The board which was set up was a fine board. For years, we in the maritimes have exported our able people. We have educated some of the finest scholars in the world and because of the lack of opportunity at home they have had to go elsewhere. It used to be a saddening exercise to look over the calendars of the universities in this country, in the United States and Great Britain and find hosts of maritimers there. A short while ago we had a reversal of the process. In Brigadier Wardell we found a man who came into the Atlantic region, saw these problems were solvable by united and vigorous action, and used the power of the press and the power of his own magnificent command of language to galvanize the thinking of people in the Atlantic region. And when he found a sympathetic response in a government which saw the facts of the maritimes clearly and was prepared to do something about them, he was given an opportunity to render great service. Now we discover that this man with his great comprehension of our problems, with his dedication to the solutions of these problems, is to be allowed to stay on the board as a member of the board for a couple of years. The hon. member for Cumberland, one of the outstanding members from the Atlantic region, referred to this famous letter from the Secretary of State. I will not read it again but I should like to refer to just one sentence:

> The effective use of the fund will clearly require a close harmony of view between the government and the board and especially the chairman.

Thinking back, Mr. Chairman, over some of the events of the last few years I say that that is an ominous sentence, not only for Brigadier Wardell but for the Atlantic region.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. gentleman think that a lack of harmony between the board and the government would be a good thing?

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, knowing the Secretary of State I would be very cautious of the suggestion that a lack of harmony would be innocent. I will read the sentence again.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is always a good idea.

Mr. Macquarrie: If I were commanded in such a way as to the virtues of close harmony between the Secretary of State and myself I would be very leery.

Mr. Pickersgill: I can promise the hon. gentleman that if he will resign his seat I will be delighted to recommend to my colleagues that he be appointed to the board.

Mr. Macquarrie: If the hon. gentleman is after my seat I think he would have to offer me at least a senatorship. I thought he was going to say that if I resigned my seat he would contest it, and I think without the protecting armour of the premier of Newfoundland he would not do too well. If he wants to make the try I will make the resignation.

We have also on the board, Mr. Chairman, a distinguished representative from Prince Edward Island, Mr. Melvin McQuaid, the former provincial treasurer. When it is considered that he became provincial treasurer of a government which followed 24 years of Liberal administration and made a magnificent job of his task, I would say that he is pretty special and that a man like that would be a distinguished member on any such board. Mr. McQuaid would have to be classed, I would think, as a Conservative. The rest of the members of the board are Conservative appointees, that is true, and for this sin they are to be overwhelmed and smothered by six others. I will not refer to Mr. Sobey. His reputation in the industrial field and the progress achieved in Nova Scotia needs no adornment from any orator in this house or any member of either side of it. We are very proud of the director, the economist from Prince Edward Island who was brought in, Dr. Weeks.

You will have heard, Mr. Chairman, in recent days about the Bay street irregulars who have been assisting the Minister of Finance. I have not heard any mention of a specialist in the Atlantic economy or its problems being brought in, and having read some of the writings of the Minister of Finance I would have thought that this was the very area in which he most needed assistance and guidance. Having read the budget I am more convinced of that than ever. However, it is not for me to discuss the budget tonight. I will say only this, that the type of people appointed to the Atlantic development board did not deserve the kind of treatment they are about to receive through the enactment of the legislation, the resolution of which is before us.

I do not think anyone will be greatly comforted by the assurance of the Secretary of State that Mr. Sobey, and I presume even Mr. McQuaid, will be eligible for reappointment under the tender mercies of this government. I should have thought that such able men who were prepared to take on this important duty on behalf of the Atlantic region should have been encouraged and told to carry on and go forward in their good work regardless of the political complexion of the government which appointed them. These men are taking on, and were prepared to take on, a major task, a task which has been challenging the Atlantic region for years and years, and I deplore this eager anxiety to smother, not a Conservative board because you could not call it that, but a Conservative-appointed board. And no one has yet advanced an argument which has convinced me that six more will make the board more representative. It will, I admit, make it larger, but not necessarily more representative.

My colleague from Cumberland and others have discussed this figure of $100 million. This sum of $100 million is offered as against nearly 100 years of neglect and injustice. If anyone feels that this will make a monumental impact upon the shrewd people of the Atlantic provinces, he is harbouring a dangerous delusion. A more realistic figure would be $4 billion. The former government was realistic and so deeply interested in the region that they did not lay down any ceiling on the amount. Not only is there a ceiling on the amount but there is a limitation on time as well. The limit is 1969, which gives five or six years to do the job. I do not think anyone will be taken in by this. I do not think anyone seriously believes that the great problems of the maritime provinces can be met, even if all these six people came from Bay street, in so short a time with so small an amount of money. All I will say—and like the Secretary of State I like to be non-partisan about these things—is that while I am deeply disappointed, and I am afraid the people I represent will be discouraged, I will have to concede, considering the record of this government when it was in office before, that this is better than nothing, that is true. But it is not as good as was done before, and I submit, Mr. Chairman, it is not nearly good enough.

This strikes me as further evidence of the approach to great problems in this country which has already begun to characterize this government. It is a mere tinkering with the problem. The budget which will be discussed is another exercise in tinkering. A tremendous façade is built up suggesting that a great new Atlantic board is being set up. I predict that after careful examination it will not only be revealed as tinkering but as bothersome and unhelpful tinkering as far as the economy of the maritime and Atlantic provinces are concerned.

Perhaps this is not too surprising. We never expected too great a kindness in the Atlantic region from this government because we remember some of the books written by the Minister of Finance and the statements he made before he wrote "Troubled Canada". We remember his recipe for maritime prosperity in those days—a little assistance to move us up to some other part of Canada. That was the recipe for the maritimes. This is not, nor never was, the attitude of this party. In 1956 the problems of the maritimes were discussed in this house. The leader of the Conservative party said at that time that "a full recognition of the moral obligation due to the Atlantic provinces, and a just arrangement with those provinces, is long overdue merely as a recognition of what was said at the time when those provinces came into confederation." This is where we stand, Mr. Chairman, and while I have no intention to obstruct, delay or hamper this tinkering effort, I will say again that in order to come close to their predecessors the government of the day will have to do much more.

(Translation):

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Chairman, in the speech from the throne of September 27, 1962, we find on page 8 of Hansard a paragraph which reads:

> You will be asked to authorize the establishment of an Atlantic development board to advise on measures and projects that will promote the economic development of the Atlantic region of Canada.

On November 19, 1962, the minister of national revenue of the day moved:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to establish an Atlantic development board and to define the duties thereof, to provide for the appointment of the chairman and other members of the board and for the payment of certain expenses of the members thereof, to provide for the appointment of an executive director of the board and for the payment of his remuneration, to provide further that the board may engage the services of such advisers and staff as may be necessary to enable it to carry out its duties and to provide further for other related and incidental matters.

And in December 1962, Bill C-94 received royal assent and became the Atlantic Development Board Act.

The resolution before us today is the sequel of appropriate legislation passed during the last session. This provision was invoked at the time as resulting from the report of a commission of inquiry on the economic prospects of Canada, which had been submitted in 1957. This was followed by five years of indecision, or even resistance, with regard to the protection and welfare of the Atlantic area.

Under defining clause 2, the term "Atlantic region", means the region comprising the provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland.

I admit that this area requires special attention and study, particular measures and care. To this end, every one of us must give conscientious thought to the projects needed to increase, as far as possible, the standard of living of the people of that area which has been neglected for too long. I feel bound to point out at this time that the population of the lower St. Lawrence river, of the north and south shores and of the Gaspe peninsula should be considered without hesitation as part of the Atlantic area, when Bill No. C-94 is being amended and when some changes are being made in the administration of that act.

We, on this side of the house, do not believe in and are not obsessed with out-and-out industrialization. However, our area is considered by too many as a mere supplier of labour for industrial production.

Mr. Chairman, I endorse the words used by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) at the close of the speech he made in the house in that connection on December 4, 1962. Here is what he said on that occasion:

> I would say again that the greatest need of this Atlantic area is for public capital that will bring to pass those particular public development projects which are necessary and which will assist in laying the climate and clarifying a situation that will attract our own capital in order that this country can go forward and that this area will not remain the depressed area, not the area which is the recipient of charitable welfare from the rest of Canada but the area which can and will lead the economic recovery our nation needs as it goes forward to fulfil our obligations not only to ourselves but to the generations which are to come after us.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that some day, the Bank of Canada will have a social capital service to provide, to supply the capital necessary to meet the requirements of the Canadian people, and in such a way that there shall be no inflation nor deflation and that unemployment, which is the lot of a startling proportion of our labour force in the lower St. Lawrence, in the Gaspe peninsula and in the maritime provinces, shall be done away with forever through the good will of Canadian legislators. Do you not think that an economic problem, resulting from political policies, can receive a solution from the action of men animated by a constant desire to settle that problem?

The government has thought it necessary to raise from five to eleven the number of members on that board. I hope that all reasonable and equitable means will be taken to maintain the best men in their positions and that the increase in the number of members on that board will prove to be a refutation of political interference in the discharge of duties which go far beyond the temptation to make a political body out of such a board.

I wish that in the end we may come to a sound and healthy alliance between the various social elements in order to raise the people of the Atlantic area above their present financial and economic situation. It is our responsibility—all of us here share that responsibility and are aware of it—to change, transform or eliminate situations which aggravate the local people.

For a long time, as we all know, a complaint has been coming from the Atlantic area addressed to those who look after the business of the nation, and it is time now to act and to achieve the purpose of confederation.

As far back as 1926, the average income in the Atlantic area was 38 per cent lower than in the other Canadian provinces.

In 1955, our average income was still 37 per cent under the average for the other Canadian provinces.

To this date, in 1963, this problem has not yet been solved, even though I must admit that some individuals and institutions have to be commended for their efforts to solve it.

Is the economic development board determined to find a solution to those aggravating problems?

We certainly hope so.

(Text):

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Chairman, I can think of no better occasion on which to enter the debates in this chamber in this twenty sixth parliament than this one, when consideration is being given to a resolution providing for amendments to be made to the Atlantic Development Board Act. As a member from Cape Breton island, the industrial heart of the Atlantic provinces, I may say that we looked upon this board as holding forth the promised stimuli that the economy in our area must have if we are to maintain that degree of growth that will provide sufficient employment for our citizens.

I listened with interest last evening to the explanations of the Secretary of State as to what he hoped the proposed amendments would accomplish. He did this in a very nice way, I must say, but I can only assume from his explanations that we will materially impair the operations of the board if the amendment to establish a fund of $100 million becomes a reality. One must compare this proposed fund with what is available to the board today. What we actually would be doing by establishing the fund is selling the resources of the federal treasury now available to the board for a maximum of $100 million, which is in effect placing a ceiling on the amount of federal participation in the Atlantic provinces over the next six years.

Even more alarming is the fact that the board is to expire forthwith on January 24, 1969, as has been mentioned by previous speakers and as indicated in the resolution. It is to expire, regardless of the fact the moneys in this fund may not be expended. This, however, is not a real danger. It is quite obvious that the funds that would be made available would easily be expended in a year and still not make the impression on the economy which, in the words of the Secretary of State, would result in a great leap forward. Indeed, experts who have made a close study of the needs of our area estimate that $4 billion would be needed over a period of ten years, with the federal treasury responsible for $1 billion of that amount.

If we were to use these figures as a guidepost, we would conclude that $100 million would be sufficient really for about one year. Instead, we find that the board has a fund of $100 million which will have to do for five years. Since it will take a period of time to determine which project should be proceeded with, and then a further period of time for this government to decide which project should be undertaken, we do not feel very hopeful.

The enlargement of this board obviously indicates a partisan approach to the selection of the members on the board. It can be expected, therefore, that this same partisan approach will apply in deciding which project will be approved.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I could ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman, like his predecessors on the other side, has made a great play of this partisan approach to the appointments to this board. Is this a reflection of a guilty conscience? Surely, the hon. gentleman would admit that if he thinks the appointments made by the previous government were not partisan there is no more reason to think our appointments will be partisan. What is more, I can assure him that they will not be.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Actually, the very brilliant and amiable member for Bonavista-Twillingate did not ask a question, he made a statement. Certainly, I have no guilty conscience, and I am sure the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton who guided this legislation through the last parliament has not a guilty conscience, either. Could it not be that there was a little urge pushing the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate? Could it not be that his conscience was bothering him? No, we do not have any guilty conscience. However, I was glad to hear from the minister that there will be no partisan appointments. This is a good commitment, coming from the Secretary of State.

If I may continue with my remarks, I should like to say that we can look forward to the $100 million as the maximum amount to be spent in the Atlantic provinces over the next five years. This will mean about $20 million per year divided amongst the four provinces. Compare this, Mr. Chairman, with the Atlantic adjustments grants which provide $100 million over a four-year period and will provide $175 million in the next five years. This program was instituted by the previous Conservative administration. The Atlantic provinces finally received some recognition after 22 years of neglect. We hope this recognition will continue unless the present government reduces or eliminates the assistance now available to this area from those grants.

The other day we heard comments in this house from the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister which indicated that perhaps we can look forward to a reduction in the subvention on coal. I hope there will be a clarification of this situation in the near future. I do not wish to go into that tonight, but I will deal with it on another occasion. Incidentally, I believe, if my memory serves me correctly that the subventions paid on coal by the Liberal administration during the fiscal year we came into power were in the vicinity of $8 million or $9 million. This year they will be $17 million. We have a little bit of stability in the coal industry today as a result of what has been done in that field by the previous Conservative administration.

Compare what you plan on doing with the announcement by Industrial Estates and the Stanfield government a few days ago concerning the location of a $12 million cement plant in Nova Scotia. Compare it with the $40 million pulpwood operation located in Nova Scotia. I wish the hon. member for Halifax would speak a little louder if he has anything to say.

Mr. Lloyd: May I direct my question to the hon. member? I thought the Industrial Estates was cited as being associated with Mr. Sobey and a non-partisan board. What has this got to do with the subject under discussion?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): What has this interjection got to do with it? Is not Mr. Stanfield the premier of the province of Nova Scotia, or are you aware of that? Is not Industrial Estates Limited a board set up by that government?

Mr. Lloyd: That is where it stops so far as the government is concerned.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Oh, yes, but there has been great co-operation between this independent board, Industrial Estates, and the Stanfield government. They have done an excellent job. I will go on to explain to the hon. member for Halifax, who apparently has not got his hearing aid turned up or apparently is not getting through, that he should compare this with the Volvo car manufacturing plant located in Nova Scotia by the Stanfield government or the carpet factory which was mentioned by the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton this afternoon. One certainly does not have the feeling that the injection of this small amount of money is going to work economic miracles in the Atlantic area.

Mr. Lloyd: We compared these.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): The hon. member for Halifax made his great contribution for about two minutes, so I should like him to now sit on his brains and relax a bit.

I should like now to refer to Nova Scotia's representative, the vice-chairman of the board, Mr. Frank Sobey. I wonder if the hon. member for Halifax has anything against Mr. Sobey? I am glad he has nothing against him. If that is so, why did the hon. member not object in caucus to the Secretary of State because this legislation is practically giving this great man a year's notice, giving him a kick in the bottom. This is about the size of it. Why did the hon. member not object? Mr. Sobey is a man who has a deep love for his native province, Nova Scotia? Here is a man who is dedicated to advancing the economic interests of Nova Scotia. He is giving freely of his time and his great ability to promote industry for that area. He was successful in his own business, and has used a businessman's approach towards encouraging the establishment of new industries in Nova Scotia and the expansion of existing industries. This man is a member of the Atlantic development board, but if this legislation is implemented we are going to get rid of him. He has made a tremendous contribution to the welfare of his native province. Without any doubt, he undertook his duties as a member of the Atlantic development board in order that he may, in the future, give even greater service than he has in the past. The very fact that this man was a member of the board gave the people of Nova Scotia confidence that its operations would be a success.

Now, however, the services of this eminent Nova Scotian will be dispensed with. I can tell the government that this will not only mean a loss of confidence on the part of the people of Nova Scotia, but this board will be severely shaken. I have no doubt that if it were not for Mr. Sobey's dedication to the area he would have rejected, and with scorn, the proposal to limit his tenure of office. To the people of Nova Scotia this proposed action is contemptible and cheap.

Last night the Secretary of State, in his own inimitable fashion, spoke in grandiose terms of what the different departments of government will do in the Atlantic provinces over and above what the Atlantic development board might do; but, Mr. Chairman, for 22 years the provinces by the sea were neglected by a Liberal administration. However, after 1957 we were given greater attention than ever before, by a Conservative government. More expenditures by all departments of government were carried out in our area than ever before, and let me serve notice on the present government that we expect this to continue, and in fact increase, in addition to what the Atlantic development board may accomplish. To use the vernacular of the Secretary of State, that is to be a great leap forward. I did not know he was such an admirer of Mao Tse-tung until he used that phrase, but if this is not done it will not be a great leap forward. Rather it will be a great leap backward.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I have been watching the clock and I realize that if I do not say something now it will be at least a week before there will be an opportunity to do so. Some things have been said this afternoon that I think deserve a reply, and there are one or two questions to which I want to make a reply.

With respect to the first point made by the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton I want to say with respect to the device used by the government—which of course I need not have revealed until the bill came up had I not wanted to be completely frank with hon. members at the start by making my letter to Brigadier Wardell available to the committee —if the government had been so minded we could have done what the previous government did with the federal district commission when they substituted the national capital commission for it, and that was to legislate the old commission out of existence and the members with it, and appoint an entirely new slate. I may say no more partisan appointments were ever made by any government in the history of this country than were made to that commission by the right hon. gentleman who is now Leader of the Opposition.

Or, we could have done what the government did in 1960 at the time of the revision of the Canada Elections Act when, by a complete revision, it got rid of every returning officer in the country. But we did not choose to do that because we did not want to make this a partisan issue. We wanted to preserve continuity. I am sure the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton would admit at once, that when he came into the house and announced the appointment of the board in January, I welcomed the appointment of that board and I have never said one word at any time in criticism of any member of that board; and I have no criticism whatsoever to offer of any of them.

It is true that they were appointed by hon. gentlemen opposite; but that, in my view, is nothing against them and I would not hold that against them at all.

Mr. MacInnis: Would the hon. minister permit a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: When I have answered the questions I have already been asked; but I have things to say and I would like to say them with a certain continuity, in fairness to the hon. gentlemen who have already spoken.

I have never at any time made any adverse criticism of any of the members of the board. The hon. member for Cumberland, who seems to be even more obsessed with this matter of partisanship than other hon. members opposite, asked me whether I had communicated with the other members of the board in addition to Brigadier Wardell. I have not communicated with them directly by letter, but I did give the letter I quoted last night to Brigadier Wardell, the chairman of the board, whom I have seen several times since I became minister and whom I have tried to keep completely informed of what was going on. I may say, Mr. Chairman, I was very careful to observe the proprieties.

I did not discuss what we were proposing to do until the resolution was put on the order paper, but as soon as it was, I saw Brigadier Wardell at once and told him precisely what we were planning to do, because I thought it was only proper, fair and courteous to do that.

I read my unsigned letter to him, and after he had read it I signed it. If Brigadier Wardell had taken any exception to that letter I am sure any exception he would have taken would have been reasonable, and I would have done my best to modify it to suit him. Now, Brigadier Wardell has spoken publicly, and the hon. member for Cumberland has quoted an article in a recent issue of the Atlantic Advocate. Brigadier Wardell was good enough to let me have a copy of the speech he made to the maritime board of trade on June 4, before it was delivered. He discussed the speech with me before he delivered it, in a general sort of way, but he never showed me the text until just before it appeared, and I made no suggestion as to what he should say in any way whatsoever. I think we can fairly assume Brigadier Wardell, being an adult and a highly respected member of society and a highly self-respected person, meant what he said in what he said; and I would like to put on the record what he said in part:

> First, let me summarize the resolution placed before the House of Commons on May 21 by Mr. Pickersgill.
> This announced that the board's members would be increased from five to eleven; an Atlantic development fund of $100 million would be created for financing or assisting to finance programs or projects that would contribute to the growth and development of the economy of the Atlantic region and for which satisfactory financial arrangements are not otherwise available; that the board's life would end on January 24, 1969; and that the administration of the act would be changed.

Then he went on:

> To comment briefly on these proposals, and I believe that I speak for the other members of the existing board—

I shall say a word about that in a moment.

> —we shall warmly welcome the new members, and we shall do our utmost to work with them to the limits of our powers and in furtherance of the aims of the board.
> As to the new terms of our appointments, we shall be glad to fall in with the government's proposals, whatever they may be, in substitution of the act of parliament by which we hold our appointments today. Personal considerations have no place in our minds. We are ready and happy to serve in any capacity.

I think I should pause here to say that when I gave my letter to Brigadier Wardell I asked him if he would send copies to other members of the board and point out to them I did not mark my letter confidential because

I thought I would want to read it to parliament; but I said in fairness to me as a member of parliament and so that I would not be accused by any member of contempt of parliament, I hoped he would not make it public until the matter came up for debate. He agreed to that very readily, and I said it was only fair he should send copies of the letter to the other members of the board so that they would know precisely what the conditions were, and I felt sure that if any of them wanted to communicate with me through him or directly they would do so.

The only member of the board I have met apart from Brigadier Wardell was Mr. Sobey, who called on me at my office in the House of Commons, and we had a very frank conversation indeed. He had not got the letter from Brigadier Wardell, and in fact I read it to him in my office and he said—you know he is a very frank fellow—"Would you like me to resign?" I said "No, I would not; I would like you to stay on the board; I want to preserve continuity. I want to keep this thing above partisanship. However, if we find at the end of the year that we do not like one another we do not need to continue this arrangement. If we do, we will."

He accepted that in the same spirit in which I gave it, and I do not think there was any misunderstanding of any kind between us. As the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton very properly pointed out, we as ministers have to take the responsibility for the expenditure of this $100 million, and whatever other hon. members think, such as the honourable and wealthy member for Queens, I still regard $100 million as a very large sum of money indeed, and I think most Canadians do. When we have to take the responsibility for the expenditure of $100 million it is absolutely essential that the agency through which it is expended shall have a harmonious relationship with the government. I am sure the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton would feel exactly the same way if he were standing in this position.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Yes; but may I ask the minister a question, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Does my hon. friend have any doubts about the harmonious relationship that this group of men would have with the present government, if they were continued in their present office?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, Mr. Chairman, I have no doubts at all at the present time. But, as every hon. member knows, and certainly every hon. member who has served in a cabinet, one may have the greatest possible feeling of respect and regard for another person and it may turn out that you cannot work well together. That often happens.

Mr. Crouse: Would the minister permit another question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mr. Crouse: Is this to be the attitude of the present government toward all boards?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I would not think so. In the case of boards which have a statutory and quasi-judicial function. I would not think so. But this board is to exist for the purpose of spending public money for which the government in general, and I in particular, have to answer in this house. I think if anyone understands responsible government at all, it is essential that there be a relationship of harmony and confidence, and continuing harmony and confidence between the board, and particularly the chairman, and the government. I have no reason to think that this will not exist, none whatever. I am not suggesting there is any reason not to think so. There was the most complete frankness between myself and Brigadier Wardell, and a thorough understanding about the matter.

As to the question—and I might just as well deal with it now—of the additional membership on the board, Brigadier Wardell is a publisher. Mr. Sobey is fundamentally, as I understand it, a merchant, though he has many other interests; he is the director of a number of companies and is a man of very great substance and obviously of very great ability. The member from Prince Edward Island is an enforcedly retired politician, and I am sure all of us would feel sympathy for him. He was the provincial treasurer for a while until the electors decided they would rather have someone else for that particular seat. That is a risk we all run, but I do not think it makes him any less competent to serve on the board.

An hon. Member: That has happened to members from that side too.

Mr. Pickersgill: There were a number of people in the party opposite who are not here now. They fall in the same category.

Mr. Lambert: Then let us not be so pious.

Mr. Pickersgill: The member of the board from Newfoundland is a merchant in Water street. But when one looks at the economic complexion of the Atlantic provinces I do not think I could agree with hon. gentlemen opposite who say that the board should not be enlarged. I might mention that the fifth member is a banker. When you look at them, I do not think this group is very representative of the whole economic spectrum. There is no one from the fishery; there is no one from the great timber industry, which is the biggest of all the industries of the Atlantic provinces; there is not a coal miner or anyone representing the mining interests, and there is no one representing agriculture.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Chairman, would the minister accept a very small question on that point? I would like to ask him whether he would appreciate receiving recommendations from members of the opposition. For instance, would he like to have a member from Cape Breton island? Would he be prepared to accept such a recommendation?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I have always prided myself on having an open mind.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure that if the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria recommended a person who was in his opinion the best qualified person in Nova Scotia to serve on this board, he would be a person of eminence, integrity, and a good citizen. I do not think the hon. gentleman would recommend anyone otherwise, and I would of course be glad to have a recommendation from him. I cannot promise that I would accept it—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —but I would be glad to have it. However, I can assure all hon. members that in the recommendations I make to my colleagues and in the appointments, my colleagues see fit to make this board, the political complexion of the persons appointed will not be a factor at all.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: What we will seek to do is get people who are representative of the main economic groups in the Atlantic provinces who are, in our opinion, best qualified to assist in the very important work of this board. I hope that the work of the board, notwithstanding some of the things that have been said this afternoon and this evening, can be lifted above partisanship and kept above partisanship. That is what we have every desire and every intention of striving to do.

I was asked whether we would communicate with the provincial governments about the persons to be appointed. I made a suggestion of that sort, perhaps a little sceptically, to the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton when he was piloting the original legislation through the house. Perhaps this will be another precedent set by him that I will be inclined to follow. He is a pretty good example of the constitutional proprieties in these matters. But there are, of course, four premiers in the Atlantic provinces; two of them are political friends of ours and two are political friends of hon. gentlemen opposite. I hope this board will work just as well with the Conservative governments as with the Liberal governments and that the co-operation will be just as good with the one as with the other. It is my intention, just as soon as the legislation has been passed, to write to the four premiers of the Atlantic provinces and ask them whether they would designate someone in the provincial administration, either a minister or an official, to act as liaison with the Atlantic development board, precisely so there may be that co-operation which we believe will be essential to the proper functioning of the board.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton in the main objected to any amendment being made to the existing legislation. I can understand that position being taken by the hon. gentleman because he was the sponsor of the present act. It was his act, and I do not blame him for having pride of authorship. I think there is a lot of good in the act, and I said so at the time. We did not think it was as good as it could be and we said in opposition and during the election campaign that we thought we could make it better. As my hon. friend from Antigonish-Guysborough pointed out before dinner, we said we would do two things, strengthen the board and give it a capital fund. That is what we went to the people and asked them to support us on. Does any hon. member on either side of the house expect us, having been elected and having elected 20 of the 33 members from the Atlantic provinces, to ignore that undertaking, not to carry out that commitment, to break that promise? We intend, if the house will agree—and of course we are in the hands of the house—to do precisely what we told the electors we would do, and we intend to do it in this session of parliament.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Whether it is right or wrong?

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, we thought it was right or we would not have advocated it, and we advocated it in this house at the time the original legislation was put through. We considered it a deficiency, as the hon. member for Greenwood indicated he and his friends did, when it did not do these things. I feel sure that the hon. member for Greenwood is perhaps approaching the measure more objectively and in a less partisan spirit than are some hon. gentlemen opposite.

I say we are doing this in 1963, right after the election. The hon. member for Victoria-Carleton was not elected to this house in 1957 but many of his friends were here. The hon. member for Cumberland was here. They were elected on a promise made at Moncton. In those hopeful days in May or June of 1957, the spring of the great promises, they promised a capital projects program to provide federal capital assistance for provincial projects designed to enlarge the basic economy of the area. That was in 1957. Three elections later, in 1962, as a deathbed effort they produced the Atlantic development board bill, without any capital fund. We do not intend to follow that example. As soon as this parliament will agree to it, we intend to do what we undertook to the electors to do. It seems to me that that is the only honourable course to take in the matter.

There has been a good deal of talk about a hundred million dollars being inadequate. The hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria said it was a ceiling. It is the exact reverse. It is a floor. I think I should go back and quote Brigadier Wardell's speech further on that precise point—his speech to the maritime board of trade.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? Does he mean that if the hundred million dollars is used up in ten, 12 or 14 months parliament will provide another $100 million or $200 million?

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, I am not parliament. I would not attempt to substitute myself for parliament. But I would hazard the guess that if we could get a board which was so dynamic and which could find enough projects to use this hundred million dollars up in six months it would be a lot better than the hon. gentlemen opposite did in six years. What is more, if the projects on which it was being spent were of the kind which this house and the people of Canada felt would contribute to the raising of the whole level of the economy of the Atlantic provinces, no government would have any trouble about getting more from this parliament, if more were needed to carry on that task. I have no doubt about that whatsoever. But $100 million, I suggest, is $100 million more than nothing, and it is a good start.

Here is what Brigadier Wardell said on June 4 on this point:

> As to the $100 million fund and the limitation of the life of the board to five and one half years, the amount is but a tenth of the billion dollars previously envisaged for a ten-year period, but which, of course, was never actually specified.

An hon. Member: Read on.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, I will read on.

> Mr. Robert Coates, member of parliament for this constituency, has drawn attention to these facts in the House of Commons.

As a matter of fact, in the same speech the hon. gentleman talked about a funeral. He talked about a funeral again tonight. He seems to be the new apostle of gloom and doom.

Brigadier Wardell went on to say:

> The tidal power element in the Chignecto project alone, so near and dear to this area, would cost $350 million and take ten years to complete. The $100 million fund would only provide $4.5 millions per province per year during the life of the board.

I might say that as far as the Chignecto project is concerned, I do not think there is any doubt that this particular project of what the hon. gentleman calls the complex, will be investigated by the board, but I do not think for a moment that a project as large as this will be undertaken by the board in the ordinary course of its operations. An undertaking of that magnitude would be so important that I am sure any government wishing to support it would want to go to parliament to ask for authority on its own merits as a separate undertaking. I can envisage the board investigating the feasibility of the undertaking, but the board itself, with the capital fund available to it, could not possibly attempt a project of that magnitude, nor is there any thought that they would.

Mr. Coates: Would the Secretary of State give an assurance that the board would carry out an investigation into the feasibility of the scheme?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will give an assurance that the minister will suggest to the board that this is a project which should be investigated if the members of the board, having looked into such evidence as is already available, think, it merits the further expenditure of public funds on a more detailed investigation. I will certainly see that the matter is drawn to their attention with a view to a serious examination of the matter. I say that without hesitation.

Mr. Macquarrie: May I ask a question about the Prince Edward Island causeway? Does the hon. gentleman think the board will be involved in a study of the feasibility of that project?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am astonished to think that the hon. and learned member for Queens must have been asleep, like Rip Van Winkle, for these last few years, because his own leader announced that the feasibility studies were all over and that the causeway was being built. Surely, the hon. member for Queens is not going to say his leader was talking through his hat when he made that announcement.

Mr. Macquarrie: Did not the hon. gentleman's own leader speak about this feasibility study continuing?

Mr. Pickersgill: We can have a debate on this on some other occasion but I must remind the hon. member not to repudiate his leader, fashionable though that is becoming on the other side.

Brigadier Wardell went on, in his letter, to say—

Mr. Knowles: Would the Secretary of State permit a question? My question is based on my desire—and I have maritime antecedents —to see this bill. I wonder if the speech which the hon. gentleman is now making is designed to get this resolution through before ten o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, I am willing to make a deal with the committee. I will sit down right now if the resolution can pass immediately.

Mr. Knowles: We will take the minister up on that.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): After a speech such as we have listened to from the Secretary of State, he need not think he is going to get this through on that basis.

Mr. Pickersgill: If that is the situation, I would certainly prefer to talk the resolution out rather than permit someone else to talk it out.

Mr. MacInnis: I was just going to ask if the minister would stop practising discrimination long enough to let me ask the question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sorry, I did not hear the hon. member.

Mr. MacInnis: It is no wonder; the monkeys are noisy enough. I just want to make sure the minister can hear me. I would ask the minister if he could vouch for the earlier remarks he made in regard to the national capital commission and the election act. Yes or no is all that is necessary.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, Mr. Chairman, I made certain statements believing them to be true. I have never made a statement in this house which I did not believe was true and I hope I never will, and if it should prove that anything I said was not true I think hon. members know well enough that I have always been willing to make amends. I do not see that I can go beyond that, and the hon. member's question does not seem to me to be very relevant to the debate.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. MacInnis: I wonder if the minister would check the accuracy of his remarks before he makes them in future.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I will leave that to the hon. member. I think my remarks were accurate and I think the ordinary principles of British justice should operate and that I should be considered innocent until I am proven guilty.

Mr. MacInnis: Does the minister think I would bring the matter up if I did not think I could prove him wrong?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, a moment ago I was about to read a further paragraph from Brigadier Wardell's letter, but before I do so I do not think I can let pass the observation made by the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton. I do not think it was characteristic of the hon. member, who is usually not among the more partisan members opposite—I reciprocate the compliment he paid me earlier today—but who I think in this case was really extraordinarily unfair. There seems to be an impression in this house that anyone on the opposite side of the house is able to make as partisan and strong a speech as he likes, and that everyone on this side has to sit and like it and enjoy it without complaint, and if any reply is made in kind hon. gentlemen at once suggest that is unfair and is an excuse for prolonging a debate which they would not otherwise prolong. I am sure that on reflection the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton will realize that the purpose of debate is not to run a sort of Sunday school; that the purpose of debate is to debate, and that surely we should be able to debate in this house like adults without getting sore about it.

Mr. Lambert: Your memory is too short.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I must advise the minister that the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should just like to read this one other paragraph from the letter of Brigadier Wardell because it seems to me it should be part of the record.

But my understanding is—

Mr. Lambert: Are you looking for inspiration?

Mr. Pickersgill: When the former Speaker has called me to order once more perhaps I may proceed.

But my understanding is that the $100 million does not at all limit the special aid to the Atlantic region to that amount in the next five years.

I would draw that to the attention of hon. members. This is Brigadier Wardell speaking.

The qualifying phrase in the resolution is in the following words: "financing or assisting in financing programs or projects ... for which satisfactory financing arrangements are not otherwise available."

The Atlantic development board's special fund will be used as a special supplement to the funds provided by the activities and programs being carried out, or to be carried out, in the Atlantic region by other government departments and agencies. It will be used as a stopgap to fill needs which could not otherwise be provided for.

That is exactly what I said last night.

The special fund will not be used for financing projects which would be the normal or general responsibility of an existing department or agency. In every case, projects to be assisted or financed by the fund will require the approval of the governor in council. In this the working of the new board will be identical with the old.

Mr. MacEwan: I wonder if I could give the minister a moment to catch his breath, although I doubt that he needs it. I recall in the last parliament that he stated the Atlantic board was not going to report to the public, and also that it would be a lot closer to parliament if a minister of the crown were appointed chairman of the board. I wonder if it is the intention of the government that a minister should be chairman of the board and if so, will it be the Secretary of State?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think on reflection I came to the conclusion that it would be harder to get my legislation through the house if I made that suggestion. I was a little afraid that hon. gentlemen opposite might be a little inclined to suggest that if such a recommendation was made the board would not have that non-partisan character which I am very anxious it should have and, what is more important, that it would not appear to have the non-partisan character I want it to appear to have as well as to have.

Mr. Bell: What about the Minister of Agriculture?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. MacEwan: May I call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. MacEwan: Very well. I have only a few remarks.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. member for Pictou is the only other speaker, I wonder if hon. members would agree to hear him so that we could see the bill. We cannot come back to this for at least a week and I think it would be a great help to have the bill available for study in the Atlantic provinces and elsewhere.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): If I might say a word on that, we on this side have various speakers who want to contribute to this debate. Before I sit down I want to say, in connection with the observations of the Secretary of State about Sunday school that when a man implies to this house that the previous government did so little in six years, then we submit we need a chance to present the facts to this house and the country.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could not the hon. gentleman do that just as well on the bill as on the resolution, and not hold up the resolution just for that? The hon. gentleman would have unlimited time on the bill, not just half an hour.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): We have two speakers at least who want to contribute to this debate.

The Deputy Chairman: It being ten o'clock shall I rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, everyone is aware that the budget debate commences tomorrow and lasts for six sitting days without interruption unless some unforeseen emergency occurs. I was wondering if the house leader, the Secretary of State, would just like to record the fact in Hansard for the benefit of hon. members who may not be here tonight?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has stated the position correctly.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

FINANCE

WITHDRAWAL OF PARAGRAPH 11 OF EXCISE TAX ACT BUDGET RESOLUTION

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, certain administrative difficulties have arisen respecting the immediate application of the proposed 30 per cent tax on takeovers, announced in the budget speech on June 13. One of the difficulties is in connection with new financing now under way for the expansion of existing businesses. This cannot be allowed to lapse or be deferred until detailed regulations have been formulated.

It may take a little time to work out satisfactorily the difficulties referred to. Pending a solution, the government proposes to withdraw paragraph 11 of the budget resolution respecting the Excise Tax Act.

Since the budget was delivered I have had a number of conversations about this matter with people familiar with the administrative side of the securities business, including the presidents of the Toronto and Montreal stock exchanges, and a senior officer of the investment dealers' association of Canada. I have also heard by telegram from the president of the Vancouver stock exchange. Most of the people I have talked with have pointed out the administrative difficulties I have referred to, but are anxious to find a solution that will be consistent with the government's statement of disapproval of takeovers of Canadian concerns by non-residents.

This attitude is not shared by the president of the Montreal stock exchange. In a letter to me dated June 18 he states that "a non-resident takeover confers great benefits on the Canadian economy". Either before or just after an interview with me yesterday, and without informing me of his intention to take such action, the president of the Montreal stock exchange handed copies of his letter to members of the press. The letter is intemperate and irresponsible in tone and content.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gordon: It is a strange communication coming as it does from a man who holds the position of president of an important Canadian stock exchange. I want to make it clear that this government disagrees completely with the interpretation of the national interest expressed by the president of the Montreal stock exchange. Our attitude to the desirability of maintaining and increasing Canadian ownership of Canadian assets was clearly set out in the budget speech. It remains unchanged.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that there was reference to a letter which apparently contains some very interesting statements, would the minister table that letter so those of us who have not been privileged to read it with the same care that he has might have the same opportunity?

Mr. Gordon: I will be glad to table the letter, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the letter was commented upon by the minister under motions, which seems to me a rather questionable procedure, I suggest that the letter be included in Hansard as an appendix.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For letter referred to above, see appendix "A".]

Mr. Cantin: In response to representations received, investigation was made earlier into a possible ferry service between Nova Scotia and Massachusetts, and this indicated that the proposed service would not be economically justified.

LOW POWER REPEATER TYPE STATION COST

Question No. 345—Mr. Fisher:

1. In establishing low power repeater type stations, what per capita cost formula does the C.B.C. use?
2. What is the per capita cost for establishment, and for service, for each of the present or planned LPRT stations?
3. What is the C.B.C.'s estimated per capita cost to establish and service a LPRT station in Manitouwadge, in Terrace Bay and in Pickle Crow?

Mr. Dupuis: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. The per capita cost formula is based on the annual operating cost in relation to population situated within the proposed coverage area. Dominion bureau of statistics census figures are used to estimate the population.

[Mr. Cantin.]

2. There are 100 LPRT's in operation across Canada at present, some of them established over 15 years ago. Detailed per capita cost information on all these stations is not immediately available and to obtain it would require a large expenditure of man hours by the corporation.

A further 89 possible LPRT locations have been given preliminary study as part of the corporation's future planning. The corporation feels that it would be misleading to make the per capita estimates for these locations public as the list is a tentative one and subject to substantial modification in the light of changing conditions and further study. To spell out in detail a list which is intended for general planning purposes only would give an impression of finality in planning which is not justified and which, further, by appearing to be a commitment could limit the corporation's freedom to adapt to the changing conditions already mentioned.

Generally it can be said that the estimated annual cost per capita ranges from less than 25 cents for the early established stations to over $30 for the most costly of the 89 possible locations, the amount being chiefly determined by the cost involved to provide for the transmission of the network program service.

3. Manitouwadge—A low power transmitter has been authorized and will begin operation at Manitouwadge, late this year. The estimated per capita cost is $1.73.

Terrace Bay—The corporation has no per capita cost estimated for this location as it is included in the anticipated coverage area of a new LPRT of increased power that will be installed at Schreiber, Ontario shortly.

Pickle Crow—This area is included in the long range coverage planning program. The corporation's position with respect to disclosure of estimated per capita cost is explained in (2) above.

C.B.C. TELEVISION PER CAPITA COST FIGURES

Question No. 346—Mr. Fisher:

1. At the present time, what is the C.B.C.'s estimated per capita cost figure to supply television service to the Geraldton-Longlac area, to Hornepayne, to Terrace Bay-Schreiber, to Manitouwadge, or any other estimates relating to one or combinations of these areas?
2. How do these estimates compare with estimates of costs for stations being presently established by the C.B.C.?

Mr. Dupuis: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows. 1. It would be misleading to make public estimated per capita cost figures for locations that are still in the initial planning stage. Alternative plans for the areas in question have been studied, and are still under study, in an attempt to find a solution which would bring the per capita cost down to a lower figure.

Until studies are complete and estimates are final, the corporation feels it would not be desirable to make public preliminary estimates of per capita costs.

2. The cost estimates of the plans studied are appreciably higher than those of stations at present being established.

TESTS FOR STRONTIUM 90 AND IODINE 131

Question No. 433—Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands):

1. What period elapses between sampling of milk by the Department of National Health and Welfare and publication of levels of strontum 90?
2. Are analyses made on pooled samples and, if so, what steps are taken to detect very "hot" lots of milk?
3. Are the results of testing for iodine 131 forwarded to medical health authorities before the strontium 90 results are obtainable as a warning of possible strontium 90 levels?

Mr. Haidasz: 1. The regular monthly reports of the Department of National Health and Welfare are published six to seven weeks after the month in which the samples are taken.

2. Yes, at each sampling station three samples a week are obtained from among the dairies supplying the area and a pooled sample is analysed each month for strontium 90. Strontium 90 levels within a particular sampling area do not show local variations of such magnitude as to require the separate testing of individual lots of milk.

3. Iodine 131 tests are carried out weekly and the results are sent to the provincial health departments immediately. However a high level of iodine 131 does not indicate that a high level of strontium 90 is to be expected.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF BEEF CATTLE RAISING, CHAPLEAU CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 446—Mr. Laprise:

1. Does the government contribute in any way to beef cattle raising in the province of Quebec?
2. If so (a) since when (b) what is the amount of its contribution (i) for Quebec (ii) for the constituency of Chapleau?
3. Are tests being carried out for possible encouragement of beef cattle raising in the constituency of Chapleau and, if so (a) where (b) who is responsible for these tests (c) what results have been obtained to date?

Mr. Beer: 1. Yes. The government operates the following policies that are designed to contribute to beef cattle improvement in the province of Quebec.

(a) Sire loan policy (bull loaning policy). Under this policy, bulls are available on loan to groups of farmers who have been officially organized as bull loaning associations consisting of not less than three members.

(b) Record of performance for beef cattle. A joint federal-provincial program designed to provide purebred beef breeders with a herd test that will facilitate "within herd" improvement based on individual performance of animals in the herd, which in turn will have an influence on the quality of the breeding stock of the commercial cattle industry.

(c) Beef carcass grading.

Government inspectors grade beef carcasses on request at all federally inspected plants across Canada. These carcass grades may be used as a basis of settlement between producer and processor. Carcass grading can indirectly influence the quality and conformation of beef cattle and consequently can assist producers to market a quality product.

In addition experiments conducted at the Lennoxville, the Ste. Anne de la Pocatiere and the Normandin experimental farms are providing new information on forage crop varieties, and pasture and hay crop management which is basic to the production of feed to maintain a beef cattle industry.

2. (a) (1) Records indicate that the bull loaning policy has operated continuously in the province of Quebec since 1914.

(2) The record of performance for beef cattle program has been in operation since 1956 with only one purebred herd in Quebec participating to date.

(3) The beef grading policy was inaugurated in 1929.

(4) The experimental farm at Lennoxville was established in 1914.

Questions

(b) (1) (a) bull loaning policy operations in the province of Quebec 1914-1962:

Breed	No. Bulls Placed	Total cost
Aberdeen-Angus	31	$ 13,149.00
Hereford	134	$ 47,165.00
Shorthorn	738	$162,677.00
	903	$222,991.00

2. (b) (1) (a) Total number of bulls on loan in the province of Quebec at June 14, 1963:

Dairy	70
Beef	35
Total	105

(b) With only one Quebec herd participating in the record of performance beef program at the present time, the cost is negligible.

(c) The actual costs of the various grading programs are not identifiable, but the estimated cost of the beef grading program in Quebec for 1962 is $40,000.

(d) That portion of the cost of the research program which is directed toward beef cattle, as such is, not identifiable.

(2) Records do not show bull placements by constituency but as far as can be determined no beef bulls have been placed in the constituency of Chapleau since 1955. The cost of the other programs, insofar as they benefit beef cattle raising, are not identifiable by constituencies.

3. No tests are being carried out for the specific purpose of encouraging beef cattle production in the constituency of Chapleau. The information available as a result of experimental work conducted in connection with beef cattle is available to all; it is particularly available to provincial agronomes, and through them to all farmers in Quebec.

PUBLICATION OF 1961 CENSUS MATERIAL, PORT ARTHUR—FORT WILLIAM

Question No. 483—Mr. Fisher:

Is it the intention of the census division of the d.b.s. to publish material from the 1961 census dealing with the lakehead cities of Port Arthur and Fort William as it is doing for such cities as Sudbury and Windsor, and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Pepin: All statistics of the 1961 census which are published for cities of 30,000 and over include the same data for Port Arthur and Fort William as for such cities as Sudbury and Windsor. However, there is one set of data which is compiled and published for cities when they reach 50,000 population that would not be available for Fort William and Port Arthur from the 1961 census. This refers to the basic population and housing data which are being published for 23 of Canada's largest cities on the basis of census tracts. These census tracts are statistical areas delineated within cities of 50,000 and over, and the tracts average usually from 4,000 to 8,000 population in size. When a city reaches the foregoing level, the appropriate municipal authorities are asked if they would be interested in census data on a tract basis, if they have not already requested it. They are then asked to delineate the tract boundaries for use by census authorities in compiling these data in following censuses.

SOVIET OR CUBAN DIPLOMATS DECLARED PERSONA NON GRATA

Question No. 494—Mr. Balcer:

Since 1955, have any members of embassies of Soviet bloc countries or Cuba been declared persona non grata by the Canadian government as a result of improper acts affecting the security of Canada, and have been requested to leave Canada; and, if so, how many, and in what years?

Mr. Stewart: Yes. It is a matter of public knowledge that three individuals were declared persona non grata and left Canada as a result of official requests that they be recalled. These were Mr. G. F. Popov of the Soviet embassy in 1956, Mr. Stanislas Michno of the Polish embassy in 1958, and Lieut. Colonel A. F. Loginov of the Soviet embassy in 1961. There have been other cases involving personnel of the embassies of Soviet bloc countries in which the recall of personnel was requested but to which no publicity was given. In these matters it is not always in the public interest to provide information, and I am conscious that my predecessor faced these same difficulties when he decided on April 26, 1961, in response to a similar question, to decline to provide details about such cases.

Mr. Pickersgill: I understand that the hon. member for Port Arthur has had some discussion with one of the civil service commissioners about this motion and that there was some understanding between them. I wonder if the motion could stand today?

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

Motion stands.

CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING MUNICIPAL LOAN BOARD

Motion No. 19—Mr. Grafftey:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the federal government and the gov-thereof and any of the provincial governments or agents thereof since April 30, 1963, concerning the establishment of a municipal development and loan board.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, there appears to be a regrettable misprint with regard to the hon. member's motion and, as far as I can gather after a great deal of deciphering, motion No. 21. In the circumstances I wonder if the hon. members would both agree to have the motions reprinted so the house can see what they really are?

An hon. Member: And rewritten, too.

Mr. Valade: I think the Secretary of State is referring to motion No. 21 which is in my name. I think it is clear enough—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but we are dealing with motion No. 19.

Mr. Valade: I understood the Secretary of State to mention motion No. 21.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I might make the request that both motion No. 19 and motion No. 21 should stand. In view of the misprinting of them, hon. members on this side of the chamber have not had a real opportunity to consider what the motions are.

Mr. Grafftey: Will the minister please indicate, in order to facilitate my thinking on this matter, what he considers to be the misprint?

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I could read line 3:

—and other documents exchanged between the federal government and the gov-thereof and any of the provincial governments—

After a great deal of working on it I came to the conclusion that the last line of the motion of the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi was put after motion No. 21 and that two or three lines which belong to the motion of the other hon. gentleman were put after this one. However, it is so mixed up that I think new ministers should not be blamed for not being able to understand them. I am sure everyone will agree that we ought to have them reprinted.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I wish the Secretary of State would take these motions one after the other as they appear on the order paper so that we can discuss the merit of the argument about the matter of mix-up.

Mr. Pickersgill: I shall be very happy to do that. I believe the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi is good enough to comply with my request.

Mr. Grafftey: Yes.

Motion stands.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, with the leave of the house, I should like to point out to the Secretary of State that on reading the French version of my motion in the order paper, I note that it is printed correctly in one of the official languages of our country, the French language. For that reason, could the Secretary of State or his parliamentary secretary tell the house that he is willing to accept my motion?

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. Mary made the same discovery about 10 minutes ago that the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi has now made, but I think in view of the fact that debate on the budget is to start today and we are holding up the financial critic of the opposition, and in view of the additional circumstance I mentioned to the hon. gentleman that the minister had not had a chance to consider it, I hope the hon. member would not seek to withdraw the acquiescence he gave.

(Translation):

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize the fact that the minister has a French speaking parliamentary secretary at his service. It seems to me that I have introduced my notice of motion in a completely correct manner in one of the two official languages of this country, and all I am asking the Secretary of State is whether or not he is ready to accept my notice of motion.

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think that the motion relates to my ministerial responsibilities at all.

Mr. Speaker: I may say at this stage that there is no debate on this type of motion, and the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi did agree to have the motion stood.

Mr. Grafftey: On a question of privilege affecting all hon. members of the house—and I think this is a very serious point—I admit that in the English language in orders of the day there was a mistake in my notice of motion, but I also brought to the attention of the minister that in the French language my notice of motion was correct. I think his party, who said they were going to save confederation and sweep the province of Quebec, should indicate their good will by accepting immediately my notice of motion.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member will permit me, did not the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi raise a question of privilege?

Mr. Grafftey: Yes, Mr. Speaker, a point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member will refer to citation 104(5) of Beauchesne he will see the matter must be raised at the earliest opportunity, and of course that is so here.

Mr. Grafftey: Well, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member will allow me to finish. I think it is important for the general good order of proceedings in the house that the record be kept straight, and I do not see any basic urgency about this motion, particularly after the hon. member has agreed to allow it to stand. It is important that both languages correspond as fully as possible with regard to this type of motion. Therefore I suggest that the interesting discussion we have had and are having should be delayed a few days until the matter has been cleared up.

Mr. Grafftey: Could I just mention one thing, Mr. Speaker. In Votes and Proceedings for the last number of days my intention to move this motion was correctly printed in both languages. I examined Orders of the Day today as soon as possible when I came into the house, and unless this is a subterfuge on the part of the government of the day trying to delay this question, they should deal with it in a spirit of good will immediately.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thought I was dealing with it in a spirit of good will, and if the hon. gentleman had done what the hon. member for St. Mary did—to discover that the French version was correct at once and not 10 or 15 minutes later—it seems to me he might have had a point like the hon. member for St. Mary, who graciously accepted the request from the government that since it had been misprinted we should wait until it was correctly printed in both languages.

I suggest if bilingualism is to mean anything it must be bilingualism, and that the order paper should be correct in both languages and comprehensible to all hon. members at the time the motion is put. It seems to me, sir, you have quite properly ruled that this matter cannot be reopened at this stage.

Mr. Grafftey: I would like to bring it to the minister's attention that the Orders of the Day I had in front of me when I came into the house was in the English language, and I brought this question before the house at the earliest possible time in all good conscience.

I would also like to point out to the government side that they were fully seized of the import of my question in both the official languages for the last number of days because it was included in Votes and Proceedings. I am just bringing an important principle before them. When a question in Votes and Proceedings or Orders of the Day is brought before the house in either one of the official languages, then the house is seized of the question. For that reason I would like a spirit of good will to be shown, and I would like the Secretary of State to indicate today whether my notice of motion is going to be accepted or not.

Mr. Pickersgill: I suggest that if the rules of the house are properly complied with we make the best possible progress in the house, and that is the best way to have a spirit of good will.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): I think it is absolutly wrong to suggest that anything written in French on the order paper should have to be delayed a week. I think it should be the same for both languages, and I think the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi has a proper right to have this correct in both languages.

[Mr. Grafftey.]

Mr. Speaker: May I point out to all hon. members that a decision of the house was taken, and now 15 minutes later this matter has arisen. The matter of course is very important, but when the house has taken a decision I would like all hon. members to get on with the further business before the house. If, on the other hand, hon. members feel so keenly about the matter and the house is prepared to give unanimous consent, then the Chair has no objection.

Mr. Valade: On the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State said motions 19 and 21 were badly drafted. When the Secretary of State said that I think he found an excuse not to comply with the requests of hon. members of parliament on this side of the house. It was not Your Honour who said that. It was said by the Secretary of State, and I think a decision should be given by the Chair with regard to what the Secretary of State said.

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not say they were badly drafted at all.

Mr. Valade: You did.

Mr. Pickersgill: The record will show that I said what is a fact, that they were badly printed, and I made no criticism whatsoever of the drafting. When my statement was challenged by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi I read part of it to show it was badly printed. I explained it was badly printed. I therefore made no criticism whatsoever of the drafting, but I confess I did not read the motions a couple of days ago when they first appeared on Votes and Proceedings. Perhaps that is a sin, but when I looked at the order paper this morning it took me five or ten minutes to decipher what I think is the correct explanation of it. But all ministers are busy doing other things than finding misprints in the order paper, and it seems to me we are making a mountain out of a molehill over this whole business. So far as I am concerned I think if the hon. member is so anxious to get this correspondence about lotteries, then possibly the government would not have any objection to having the motion passed so we can proceed with the business of the country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me we have spent far too much time on this point of procedure. The whole question concerns a misprint. The hon. member has agreed to allow his motion to stand, and unless we have the unanimous consent of the house to go back on that agreement, I suggest we proceed with the business before the house.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, you have just ruled on my question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry, but the hon. member has had a generous allowance of time.

Mr. Grafftey: —but there was unanimous consent to accepting my motion.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to reverting to this motion?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION—CORRESPONDENCE WITH STEWART GEDDES

Motion No. 20—Mr. Orlikow:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence between Mr. Stewart Geddes and the Minister of Defence Production and any other officials in his department.

He said: I have talked to the minister and I am prepared to withdraw this motion.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING LOTTERIES

Motion No. 21—Mr. Valade:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the federal government or any agency-ernment of the province of Quebec relating to lotteries.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the hon. gentleman willing to comply with my request?

Mr. Valade: I will accept the suggestion, but I do not see that there is any trouble in reading this motion.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then may I read the last two lines of the motion: —and other documents exchanged between the federal government or any agency-ernment of the province of Quebec relating to lotteries.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the minister and because of the bicultural interest he has shown, may I ask him to read the French version of the motion? There is no misunderstanding the French translation.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am only too happy, Mr. Speaker, to pay tribute to the superiority of the French version.

Mr. Valade: Then perhaps the minister could give a superior answer to the one he has given.

Motion stands.

WORLD FAIR—CORRESPONDENCE WITH MONTREAL MAYOR

Motion No. 22—Mr. Valade:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all telegrams, letters and other correspondence exchanged between the mayor of Montreal and the federal government since April 8, 1963, relating to the Montreal world fair.

Mr. Deschatelets: I was ready to answer this motion, Mr. Speaker.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, this motion can be entertained on the understanding that personal and confidential documents will be considered as privileged.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I am willing to accept the minister's reservation, but in view of the fact that this matter is extremely important to establish if the exhibition will be held or not, I wonder what reservation the minister has in mind. In my opinion, we should have more information on that matter.

Mr. Deschatelets: It is the customary reservation, Mr. Speaker. If there are confidential documents, it goes without saying that we cannot produce them, but we will produce all the others.

(Text):

Mr. Valade: There was no reservation indicated by the minister in connection with this motion.

Mr. Pickersgill: This is No. 22.

Mr. Valade: I am sorry; I thought we were on 23.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

(Translation):

NEW ROUTE FOR TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY, MONTREAL

Motion No. 23—Mr. Valade:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of the correspondence exchanged between the federal government, the government of the province of Quebec and the city of Montreal, relating to the new lay-out of the trans-Canada highway on the island of Montreal.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, with the reservation made for the previous motion, this motion is acceptable provided the personal and confidential documents be considered as privileged and also that agreement be obtained from the provincial government.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion subject to the reservation made by the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

(Text):

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL JOINT PLANS

Motion No. 24—Mr. Martineau:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the government, or any agencies or departments thereof, and any provincial government, since April 21, 1963, relating to joint plans.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am asking the hon. gentleman if he would mind allowing this motion to stand today. I should like to discuss the wording with him because we are not quite sure what he means by joint plans.

Mr. Martineau: I am always very pleased to have a discussion with the minister.

Motion stands.

OUTSIDE ASSISTANTS IN BUDGET PREPARATION

Motion No. 25—Mr. Aiken:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all letters and correspondence that, since April 8, 1963, passed between the Minister of Finance and any companies, partnerships or persons respecting the securing of the services of each of the three persons named by him in his statement to this house on June 14 as having had knowledge of the contents of the budget speech before delivery.

Mr. Gordon: I would be quite willing to agree to this motion, but there is no such correspondence.

Mr. Aiken: In the circumstances I will withdraw the motion.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

WHEAT AGREEMENT WITH CHINA

Motion No. 26—Mr. Fisher:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of the long term agreement signed by the Canadian wheat board and the China resources company covering the period June 1, 1961 to December 19, 1963.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the hon. member for Port Arthur would agree, in the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, to allowing this motion and the next one to stand? The minister has not had a chance to consider them.

Mr. Fisher: I regretfully agree, in view of the fact these motions are so familiar to the government.

Motion stands.

WHEAT CONTRACTS WITH CHINA

Motion No. 27—Mr. Fisher:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all contracts entered into between the Canadian wheat board and the China resources company for the sale of grain under the long term agreement between the Canadian wheat board and the China resources company.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: I understand this motion also stands.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion stands.

EXPENSES OF CANDIDATES, 1963 ELECTION

Motion No. 28—Mr. Knowles:

That an order of the house do issue for a return showing the total amount of election expenses on behalf of each candidate in the general election of April 8, 1963, by constituencies, as indicated in the return respecting election expenses submitted by the official agent of each candidate, as required under the provisions of section 63 of The Canada Elections Act; and showing also the names of any candidates, by constituencies, on whose behalf election expense returns have not been submitted.

Mr. Pickersgill: In this case, I wonder if I might be permitted to raise a question about this motion. I understand that the final date for some of these returns has not yet arrived, and that strict compliance with the motion might involve indicating that some candidates had not made returns which they were not yet legally required to make. I am quite sure we all understand what the hon. gentleman wants from this motion, and if it were clearly understood that it could be complied with as though it had been passed after the date when each of these returns should legally be made, then it seems to me no such misunderstanding could arise.

Mr. Knowles: I think the minister's reservation is satisfactory. We all understand that, for most of us, the date is past, but for those very distant areas there might be a week or so to go.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion subject to the reservation previously expressed by the minister?

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING RAIL LINE ABANDONMENT

Motion No. 29—Mr. Horner (Acadia):

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before the house a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, projected plans and documents between the federal government or any agency or branch thereof and any provincial government, persons or organizations since January 1, 1961, with regard to rail line abandonment.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I have spoken to the mover of the motion and I understand he is not requesting correspondence concerning every individual case of abandonment, but rather that there should be produced the correspondence relating to the implementation of the recommendations of the MacPherson commission on the subject of branch lines. Subject to this reservation and to obtaining the consent of the provincial governments regarding correspondence with the provincial governments, there is no objection to the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any objection to the reservations as stated by the minister?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion subject to the reservations stated by the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

FINANCE

WITHDRAWAL OF PARAGRAPH 11 OF EXCISE TAX ACT BUDGET RESOLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a couple of questions to the Minister of Finance. I am sure they will be received in that good spirit which is apparent here today. Did the minister advise Mr. Kierans last night that resolution No. 11 of the budget was going to be withdrawn; and did he so advise anyone else today?

I ask him these questions because the stock market reacted so quickly this afternoon. Was it as a result of his having given second thought to this important matter and not being entirely dependant on the three budget tinkers?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I gave no information to Mr. Kierans, and I did not make any statement to anybody else until I came into this house, other than the Prime Minister and certain members of the cabinet.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of this announcement does the minister consider it advisable to delay the budget debate while he revises his budget or brings in a new one?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Are any other items of the tax proposals in the budget under consideration for being withdrawn by the government?

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance in view of his announcement on motions. Will he also consider withdrawal of the tax on building materials, with regard to which there has been much criticism?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, in view of the condition of the country's finances I am not considering that suggestion.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Minister of Finance give the same consideration to representatives of small business as he did to Mr. Kierans and others?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, the short answer to that is, certainly—

An hon. Member: Then give it.

Mr. Gordon: —but I would like, in addition, to say that the change or the deferment that I announced on motions today would be made in this particular tax was done despite Mr. Kierans.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Despite him?

Mr. Smith: To spite him?

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO STOCK MARKET TRANSACTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question that arises from a previous question concerning the use of outside contractors, being paid by their companies, in the preparation of the budget. My question arises from an examination I have made of the accelerated selling pattern in stocks, particularly in certain oils, in the weeks immediately before the budget. Would the Prime Minister consider having the officials of the Montreal and Toronto stock exchanges investigate the share trading pattern in terms of what companies, agents and brokers handled it, in order that we can be sure there has been nothing more than intelligent anticipation?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to submit the hon. gentleman's request to the officers of those stock exchanges, over which the government has no control.

Mr. Baldwin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Douglas: I have a supplementary question also, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): In view of the statement made earlier by the Minister of Finance that the government will continue with the practice of obtaining the assistance of outside government sources, will the Prime Minister give consideration to introducing legislation to provide an oath of secrecy which will be legal and binding, as distinct from the methods used in the preparation of the budget?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the oath of secrecy given in the case to which my hon. friend refers was legal and binding.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, while the government may have no control over the stock exchanges, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he himself is prepared to have a study made of the trading pattern? Will he make such inquiries as are necessary, to see that there have not been any leaks with reference to the budget, because of the prior drop in oil and pipe line stocks?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, in so far as this is a matter of governmental and ministerial responsibility I will be very glad indeed to make inquiries.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in that connection—

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. prime minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —could I repeat the suggestion I made to the Prime Minister yesterday, when I asked him whether he would consider having this whole question referred, either to a special committee of the house or a standing committee. In this way it would be possible to call these people and have them brought before the committee and ascertain something of the dealings that took place during the period of some days prior to the budget being brought down. There would then be no intrusion of governmental responsibility, but we would have an opportunity of calling these various people before the committee in a completely non-partisan way—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —and would be able to secure the most objective information. It would reveal that nothing happened, or it might reveal something else.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, if the right hon. gentleman has any evidence on which to base the suspicion he has indicated, he can produce it in the budget debate. Then the government will be able to consider whether the procedure which he recommends would be useful in the circumstances.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: At least the Prime Minister has the support of the Secretary of State; one can see that. I simply ask, will the Prime Minister give parliament an opportunity to get the facts regarding these tinkers who were brought in in connection with the budget?

Mr. Pearson: Once again, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the right hon. gentleman to put his questions properly. When he refers to gentlemen outside this house as tinkers, that is not the proper way to put a question, and I would—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Who is the Speaker?

Mr. Pearson: —also like to tell the right hon. gentleman that I do not believe in guilt by innuendo or insinuation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure hon. members will appreciate the fact that the proceedings are now taking on the nature of a debate rather than questions across the floor. I wonder whether we could proceed with urgent business.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There was no insinuation; there was no innuendo: there was a request for information, and the Prime Minister is trying to hide behind a smokescreen.

REPORTED HEAVY BUYING OF BUILDING MATERIALS BEFORE BUDGET PRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but in his absence perhaps I could ask it of his parliamentary secretary. Would the minister be good enough to tell the house whether it is true that fabulous orders for building materials were placed immediately prior to the budget. Will the minister investigate and give the house particulars?

Mr. Jean-Luc Pepin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am sure that on behalf of the minister I can say he will investigate.

INCLUSION IN BUDGET OF PROVISION FOR DEBT FREE MONEY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): Due to the fact that during the last session of parliament this government, when in opposition, supported a Social Credit amendment in favour of debt free money, and due to the fact that the Minister of Finance called in outside consultants—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Smallwood: I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: And, if I may say so, I am rising on a question of privilege, too. It is this. Would the hon. member kindly state his question in as succinct a form as possible; and the question should be an urgent one.

Mr. Smallwood: I am just leading up to my question. Ever since this government came to office it has refused to answer questions, and now hon. members opposite refuse to listen.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, the hon. member was quite properly asked by Your Honour to put his question, not to make a speech. It seems to me that if any progress is to be made in this house at all, and if we are to get on with the budget debate which hon. members seemed to think was so urgent two days ago, the rules of this house should be observed.

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, this lecturing of the house by the Secretary of State is becoming a disgraceful practice. He is lecturing, not speaking to the point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we could have a little order and then my modest remarks might be listened to. Questions must be urgent in character. We have had considerable indulgence, liberty, leaning to the left and to the right. I would urge upon hon. members that we are here to do business. The length of the question period has increased during the past four weeks to an hour and periods which are sometimes longer than that. It used to be that the question period was reserved for urgent questions and took about half an hour. Hon. members must discipline themselves. The Chair can only attempt to apply the rules under standing orders. It is up to each hon. member to take upon himself the responsibility of making sure when he asks a question that it is urgent and that it has arisen within the last 24 or 48 hours. I appeal to hon. members to assist me to try to get a little order and cut down the time spent on questions. The questions asked must be necessary questions, topical questions, urgent questions. Again I appeal to hon. members to assist the Chair.

Mr. Smallwood: I will try to assist the Chair by shortening my question. Since the Minister of Finance called in outside consultants, would he explain why he did not consult also with one or two of the Social Credit leaders in order that he might include debt free money in the budget instead of increasing taxes?

INQUIRY AS TO ISSUANCE OF BILINGUAL CHEQUES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, since one of my constituents has just returned to me a cheque issued by the treasury board and drawn up in English only, could the Minister of Finance tell the house whether the publicity made by the former government about bilingual cheques has become a reality—and, if not, whether the present government intends to do something about it?

(Text):

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I thank the hon. gentleman for having given me notice of this question. I am informed that an announcement was made in the house in February 1962 by the then minister of finance that the treasury board had directed that, upon the depletion of existing stocks of cheque forms, and of those on order at that time, forms printed in both English and French would be adopted in the case of all cheques drawn on the account of the receiver general.

Over 90 per cent of the five million or so cheques issued each month by the federal treasury are in bilingual form at the present time, and the remainder will all have been converted to bilingual form before the end of the current fiscal year.

PROTESTS AGAINST APPLICATION OF SALES TAX TO BUILDING MATERIALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): May I address a question to the Prime Minister, of which I have not given notice. Has he received a telegram from eight lumber companies in the county of Pictou, Nova Scotia, protesting the 11 per cent sales tax, expressing concern for the 268 employees involved and urging a reconsideration of this step? If so, would he give serious consideration to the representations of these firms which are so important to the economy of the area, in spite of what the Minister of Finance has already said this afternoon?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Overlooking the last part of the question, I cannot say whether I have received this particular telegram. If and when I do receive it, I shall certainly give it consideration.

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Finance. Will the minister comment on a telegram, a copy of which I sent to him, which protests the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials, sent by the metropolitan Hamilton house builders association? This association does 85 per cent of the building in the Hamilton area—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understand the hon. member is stopping at the end of that first paragraph. Is that right?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I thank the hon. member for having sent me notice of this question. I have received a number of letters and telegrams, including one from the president of the metropolitan Hamilton house builders association, referring to the withdrawal of the sales tax exemption for building materials. These are all receiving careful attention.

I would like again to refer to the statement in the budget speech that relief will be provided in cases where a manufacturer or contractor is prevented by a fixed price contract signed before June 14 from including the new tax in his selling price. Provision for this relief is made in paragraph 13 of the excise tax resolution, and details concerning its application will be available from the Department of National Revenue.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if he has made arrangements to meet with the president of the national housebuilders association to discuss this matter and see if there is any possibility of extending the same treatment.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister. Has he considered the serious effects of the imposition of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials, which will result not only in a sharp rise in rents, but also in an increased cost of living?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, these matters have all been considered.

[Later:]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Finance and I regret that I have not had the opportunity to give him prior notice of it. In view of the fact the excise department has notified manufacturers of prefabricated homes that the 11 per cent sales tax applies to the total retail package and not just to the material content, is the minister considering a change in these regulations which will correct this inequitable situation?

[Mr. Howe (Hamilton South).]

Mr. Gordon: I will be glad to look into that matter, Mr. Speaker; I am not familiar with it.

VOCATIONAL TRAINING

SUGGESTED CAMPAIGN TO INCREASE ENROLMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Webster (Vancouver-Kingsway): I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that 70 per cent of Canadian youth never complete high school, and leave without adequate preparation for entry into business or industry, has the department any plans for a campaign this summer to persuade more students to enrol next fall for training in one of the vocational or technical institutions maintained by federal grants?

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but that is a question for the order paper.

SHIPBUILDING

REPORTED CONSTRUCTION IN JAPAN OF SHIPS TO CARRY CANADIAN ORE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister received a telegram from Mr. René Barras, secretary of the Union of Shipyard Workers of Lauzon, Inc., protesting the construction in Japan of 18 cargo ships at the cost of one billion dollars for the transport of Canadian ore, and requesting a government representative at the next union meeting to explain the downward movement of their contracts? If so, what reply has been made?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): No such telegram was received by the Minister of Transport. However, one was received at noon, sent to his parliamentary secretary. I have seen it, but no reply has been prepared as yet.

Mr. Douglas: Would the minister care to make a statement regarding this action by the Canadian Javelin Company in placing this order in Japan for these cargo ships?

Mr. McIlraith: Not at this time, other than to say that this appears to be a private transaction between two private corporations over which the government has no control. However, I want to have the matter looked into. I am not sure that it is one exclusively for the Minister of Transport; other departments may be concerned. I will have the whole matter looked into, and a fuller reply will be given at a later date.

INCOME TAX

ROUYN, QUE.—INVESTIGATION INTO CHARITABLE DONATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Could he tell the house whether the income tax office in Rouyn has been directed to scrutinize very closely the receipts for charitable donations? An investigation bordering on hysteria is being carried out at present in that district.

(Text):

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for his courtesy in advising my office that he intended to ask this question. I should like to tell him that in the ordinary course of verifying the tax returns filed by taxpayers residing in the district, the Rouyn district office and indeed other district offices throughout Canada have been examining and verifying the authenticity of supporting documents such as charitable donation receipts, medical receipts, etc., filed by taxpayers in support of deductions for income tax. There have been cases where the receipts filed in support of charitable donations have been questioned, and those organizations which issued the receipts have been visited to establish the authenticity of the receipt. There have been no special instructions issued to the Rouyn office of the taxation division in this regard, but the staff there have been performing their duties according to the usual procedure followed each year for the checking of tax returns.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REQUEST FOR ESTIMATE OF COST OF DAMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources based on my question yesterday and his reply to it. I ask it because it is of national, current and urgent importance, Mr. Speaker.

In view of the continued requests from many interested organizations across Canada, engineers and other persons, for the latest information with respect to the estimated costs of the construction and related costs of dams proposed in the Columbia river treaty, and particularly the high Arrow dam, has the minister any unofficial figures he can give us or any other information that will answer these inquiries, which are streaming in every day?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the hon. member on his diligence in this matter. Yesterday I replied to him that the only official estimates that we had in respect of the construction costs of the dams were those which were included in an answer that was made on December 3, 1962. He will recall that in respect of the three dams which were mentioned in the entire project at that time there had been a constant upward curve of costs to the extent that I think the involvement of the three dams increased by some $54 million in one year. I think there is a certain feeling in the country that that percentage of increase will continue. But he will agree with me, of course, that we cannot go by conjecture.

I want to tell the hon. member that I have been informed that more recent studies and investigations have been undertaken by the province of British Columbia through agencies which they employed, and I think he will agree with me that since they employed these agencies the findings are their property. Therefore I think it would be highly improper for me to attempt to obtain those figures or to take responsibility for them before this house.

Mr. Herridge: A supplementary question. Has the minister heard from some reliable sources or from conversations that the cost of the high Arrow dam has now increased from $72 million to $124 million?

Mr. Laing: No, Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the latter figure.

Mr. Herridge: The figure was $124 million.

Mr. Laing: Yes, I heard the hon. member, but I have not heard that figure mentioned.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

CENTRE BLOCK—AIR CONDITIONING OF ELEVATORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a pedestrian question of no national importance whatever for the Minister of Public Works. He will recall that I wrote to him some time ago asking if he would investigate the possibility of installing some ventilating or air conditioning device in the elevators of the building, because in the hot weather it becomes an intolerable task for those who operate the elevators. I wonder if he is in a position to answer now.

Mr. Howard: Especially with people smoking.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): No, Mr. Speaker, but the matter will be looked into and I will report in the next few days.

(Translation):

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

USE OF WARRANTS IN BOTH LANGUAGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask a question of the Minister of Justice but, in his absence, I will direct it to the Prime Minister. Is he aware that a resident of Hull is being sought by the R.C.M.P. and that he refuses to submit to the warrant for his arrest because it is written in English only?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the case. If the hon. gentleman would give me details I will be glad to look into it. I am sure the man in question is reluctant to be imprisoned on a warrant in any language.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, may I explain the meaning of my question? It deals with a traffic violation which the said individual committed on parliament hill. Afterwards, a summons and a warrant for arrest, drawn up in English only, were delivered to the R.C.M.P. to be served to the accused. Could the Prime Minister tell us whether the warrants of the R.C.M.P. are drawn up in both languages?

(Text):

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, but I will be glad to look into it.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO SALARY INCREASES FOR CERTAIN CLASSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is the minister now in a position to indicate when the overdue pay increases will become effective for certain categories of the public service?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I seem to have been a little busy in the last few days and I have not had a chance to get down to that matter, but I am very anxious to do so.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question. Is the minister in a position to make any report to us on his meeting with the representatives of the civil service organizations?

Mr. Gordon: We had a meeting on Friday the 14th. It was a very good meeting, but I think it would be inappropriate to discuss what went on at that meeting until we reach a conclusion.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO NOTICE OF FURTHER LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. This being day No. 59 in the life of the government, can the Prime Minister indicate whether the other pieces of legislation to which he referred last week will appear on the order paper by tomorrow, and will they include the pension legislation?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman will look at Votes and Proceedings for tomorrow he will find some additional resolutions which will be of interest to him.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Thursday, June 13, consideration of the motion of Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, in resuming the adjourned debate, before dealing with the budget proper I should like at the outset to comment briefly on the situation which was disclosed in the House of Commons last Friday respecting the participation in the preparation of the budget of alleged experts from outside the public service. This is in no way an attack on any individual and certainly not on the minister or those associated with him. If there were any wrongdoing, this debate would not be necessary as, of course, the minister would have resigned and the ones who are responsible and who are associated with him would have earned the dishonour and disrespect of their fellow Canadians. In this connection there is no such development at the moment and I am sure, as I hope and believe, that there will not be any. However, the fact that integrity is not one of the issues at the moment does not make the matter any less serious. It is not the integrity of the minister but rather his judgment or his lack of it that is under attack, a mistake in judgment which goes to the very root of our system of government. In this connection I would suggest that everyone should read—and I am sure most hon. members have done so—the article by I. Norman Smith in the Ottawa Journal of Monday last. It is not necessary for me to tell this house that Mr. Smith is no Conservative partisan in any way, shape or form.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nowlan: It would be a great tribute to him if he were. However, I am afraid he does not deserve that tribute. In very moving, forceful and eloquent language he has expressed his contempt for a wrong done to our system of governmental financial control and the reflection on and the insult to our civil service.

There are those who suggest that it is perfectly proper for the Minister of Finance to receive advice on matters affecting the budget. I think those who attempt to defend this action on that ground have missed the point entirely. Of course, there is no objection to the receiving by the Minister of Finance of advice in connection with the budget. Even if he did not desire it, he could not help but get it, as for weeks beforehand he is deluged with delegations and representatives of all sorts of associations and groups who are putting their proposals before him, and properly so. During the year he receives scores and, I presume, hundreds of letters, some of which are wise and some not quite so wise, making suggestions as to changes which should be made in the tax system. To receive such advice, to listen to it, to consider it and even to request it is perfectly proper conduct on the part of the Minister of Finance. He could and should do no less. However, that is an entirely different thing from not only having received advice but having brought into his office employees of a financial house not only to give advice but to prepare and to help to write the budget while still on the payroll, as at least some of them were, of these financial houses that obviously are directly concerned with the provisions of the budget.

This is so contrary to our tradition, our practice, and our principles that it seems absolutely incomprehensible that it could have happened. However, it did happen. I suggest with all deference that it can be explained only by the fact that it was done by a minister who has not been in this house so long that he has acquired the traditions and the background of this house, or the principles under which all governments have operated in the past. I do not think the public generally realize the way in which secrecy has always been a traditional part of the making of a budget. The drafting is done in various sections, no one of which can be connected with another so that one can understand what is being done. Gradually after draft upon draft have been prepared, these are finally brought together and in the office of the deputy minister of finance and possibly one assistant deputy and two or three of the senior private secretaries, the final work of compiling the draft of the budget is done. That is the accepted practice arising out of a long history and a long tradition indicating the absolute necessity of avoiding a leak, consciously or unconsciously and of assuring the public that the Minister of Finance, like Caesar's wife, is above suspicion. As hon. members well know, we take the precaution of locking up the press gallery until the minister of finance delivers his speech, as today it has an impact on every man and every woman in all walks of life and upon all the facets of our economy.

May I refer to the budget proposal which I understand has been withdrawn this afternoon. I have here a memorandum which explains the statement which I could not quite hear when the minister read it. If that budget proposal were still in effect or is to be renewed, it would have applied to the sale of shares worth over $50,000 on the stock market in any one day. To you or to me, Mr. Speaker or at least to me, $50,000 is a fairly substantial sum of money. However, I know that to a good many people it is not a major expenditure. If on Thursday morning or Wednesday there had been negotiated a sale of, shall we say $1 million worth of shares of a certain corporation,—and I am told that is a fairly frequent practice on many days—there would have been no tax. On Friday, if that were done, under the wicked legislation which has just now been withdrawn there would have been a tax of $300,000. One can easily see the impact that this budget might have had without any question of any relief whatsoever.

I am saying again that we are not questioning the integrity of any individual. However, our whole system of government is under attack as all hon. members in this house know. We hear altogether too many insinuations, suggestions, and references to the fact that the big shots, those on the inside, are able to make the money and that the little fellow, the ones on the outside, are being exploited by those on the inside. Sometimes there may be some merit in that criticism, but often I suggest it is without foundation. However, action such as this which has been carried out in this particular connection will certainly add fuel to those suggestions. All one needs to do is to walk up and down the streets of Ottawa during the days after the budget was disclosed. All one had to do was to ride in a taxicab in the city, in order to find that feeling being expressed bitterly and affirmatively.

Just as important as are all these matters is the effect this action has had or might have had—and I believe to some extent has had—upon our senior civil servants. I can speak, I think, with a little bit of authority, of the service in the Department of National Revenue where I spent several happy years, and also with the civil servants of the Department of Finance with whom unfortunately I could not spend as much time as I should have liked to do. One cannot speak too highly of the quality of these civil servants. It is a well known fact that the officials of the Department of Finance have always been responsible for the final preparation or drafting and the discussion which ended in the culmination of the budget.

May I again refer to that article by I. Norman Smith which appeared the other night. As he says, and I am now not quoting but merely paraphrasing his language: the top men in the Department of Finance bring to the preparation of the budget a knowledge and instinct of where we have come from and where we are going. There is a process, a progress in governing a country which the brightest of "outside" minds cannot be expected to understand or even see. That statement, in my opinion, very succinctly expresses the opinion of the department. Through years of practical experience and through their association with many brilliant minds which have gone before them—one could name them but I will not do so now; I refer to ministers and deputy ministers—these persons, with their knowledge of the problems, and particularly as perhaps we have had a clear example today, of the pitfalls, which confront a budget maker or the manufacturer of a budget, bring to the minister assistance in the preparation of a budget which is next to perfection. This perfection is apparently lacking in the budget presented by the minister last Thursday night. As I said, no greater proof of that could be brought forward than the amazing retreat that took place here this afternoon.

As I said the other evening, this budget is a confusion of platitudes and partisanship. On reading it, I can see where there are some matters of substance to it, but that is on a hit and miss basis. It only underlies the lack of experience of the minister's new braintrust which was substituted for his civil servants. Now, from the knowledge I have of what has gone on in the past in the preparation of budgets, and from the reading of the form and content of this budget, and knowing something of the style and manner of writing of these senior officers of the department, I think I can say without any question whatever that the senior officers of the department had very little, if anything, to do with the final drafting of this budget.

The minister says he takes full responsibility for the preparation of the budget. Of course, he does. All of his cabinet colleagues have to do likewise because that is a matter of cabinet responsibility. The minister had better take responsibility for it because, having disregarded the reputation for efficiency of the senior officers, having disregarded what his actions could have done or may have done to the morale of these officers, I doubt if he could expect them to accept too much responsibility for the other provisions which are probably just as vulnerable as the one which was withdrawn this afternoon.

I should like to quote from Mr. Smith's article again, and with this I will complete my remarks on this aspect of the matter.

> That is why the opposition parties in the Commons have a duty to denounce the wrong in the strongest terms and demand from Mr. Gordon a full apology in such unequivocal terms that the precedent that has been set will be a precedent to ensure it never will recur.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will turn to the budget itself, or what is left of the budget. I do not suppose any official critic was ever in this position. Perhaps no official critic ever had such a tribute paid to his prowess. Having spoken for some 15 or 16 minutes the other evening, before he gets an opportunity to speak again he finds that the main elements of the budget have been withdrawn. One wonders whether that is a tribute to the prowess of the member of the parliament or the stock exchange. It is certainly an amazing development. If this were a resolution which had been brought forward, I feel, sir, you would have to take a look at the rules to ascertain whether or not the house had been seized with this resolution and whether it could be withdrawn at this stage without unanimous consent. I do not believe that, technically, this is a resolution, per se. This was a draft section of a bill of which notice was given, and on a future date the Excise Tax Act would be amended by adding certain sections to it.

I feel it is a rather interesting question, Mr. Speaker, as to whether or not that practice is one which is in accordance with our rules. I am not raising any objection to it at the moment. However, I wanted to mention it because if one is confronted with the responsibility of speaking on matters on the assumption that the house has been seized with them, and yet before one has had an opportunity to complete his speech on these very critical matters he finds they have been withdrawn, great difficulty is created. This matter, upon which one might have devoted a great deal of time has now been removed, for my present purpose at any rate. This may be a good thing for the house. I shall not speak at as great a length as I had intended to speak, not that I had intended to speak at any great length. Conversely, of course, I would not have had to burn the midnight oil studying that section, had I known this action was going to take place this afternoon.

It is a good thing it did because I hope this is the first step toward various other retreats that the minister should make. Just before coming into the chamber, and before I heard about this retreat, I received a note to the effect that the stock exchange had gone off 9.95 points up until 2.30 this afternoon. Then at 2.40 after the announcement was made in the house, the stock market started climbing again. How far it has climbed, I do not know. I assume that fortunes have been made on this rise this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Nowlan: I think some reference should be made to this matter. I am making no suggestions whatever, but tomorrow morning we will see what the figures are in respect of the stock exchange transactions. According to what I have heard, the stock market is boiling and the inference is fairly obvious.

An hon. Member: Smears.

Mr. Nowlan: There is no smear whatever. One does not have to smear when you see stupid procedures taken from which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) has had to retreat.

As I have said, there are many comments I should make about the budget, but they have certainly been shortened by what has happened today. I had intended to spend a considerable part of the time on this particular matter. There are other matters I could have developed, such as the withholding tax, the club and the carrot which are held out at certain times. I could have developed other aspects but I will have to leave them for other speakers. I have not sufficient notes in front of me to develop these points satisfactorily this afternoon.

As I have said, the budget was a confusion of partisanship and platitudes. There were also gimmicks in it. There were some good points as well. I had a telephone call yesterday, as a matter of fact I had a great many telephone calls. I have never been the financial critic before, Mr. Speaker, so I do not know how many calls a financial critic usually receives. I received scores of them yesterday from all over Canada, from St. John's, Newfoundland to Vancouver, criticizing the various sections of the budget. There was criticism not only of the provision which was withdrawn this afternoon but others as well. One person suggested that this budget should be called "government by gimmick". There are a lot of gimmicks in it, Mr. Speaker, a lot of window dressing. If one reads it carefully, he sees so much window dressing and so much difficulty in administering any sort of positive program set forth, that he wonders if it is not all window dressing. In fact, after one examines all the various provisions he finds the budget creates a picture of speedy dissolution and an election before the people find out how difficult it would be to administer.

There are some positive notes, of course, like the disallowance of the $5,000 car capital cost. This certainly is a concrete proposal and one which I think is worthy of commendation, certainly by all of us who do not own $5,000 cars. I do not believe our revenue position will be improved very much by this provision, but I am sure the minister was not expecting that. However, it would go to some extent towards redressing the adverse balance of payments. I think it is one definite program, and a good one. Then, in the next breath, you get this reference to the cost of living, to expense accounts and the general expressions of piety and being against sin.

Then it goes on to say that the government is directing the Department of National Revenue to tighten up its administration and enforce the law. I suggest if the government has to direct the deputy minister to that end, then it should ask for his resignation. If he is inefficient, if he is not carrying out the law, it should ask for his resignation. But it will not do that because members of the government know the administration is efficient.

Looking around the house I can see a good many faces, not all on this side of the house, who came to me on more than one occasion when I was Minister of National Revenue, sometimes with tears, sometimes with imprecations, condemning the tightness of the administration of the department and suggesting it should be relaxed rather than tightened. I know my predecessor, the former hon. member for Eglinton, made some reference to this a couple of years ago. I am sure whatever could be done was done at that time with respect to these expense accounts but, if there is going to be an enforcement of the law, then let the Minister of Finance bring forward regulations. Let him say, for instance, that you Mr. Speaker, as Speaker of the House of Commons, are entitled to a meal of a certain quality and a certain cost, and that I, as a poor, down-trodden member of the opposition only have the right to charge up a meal in a Childs restaurant.

Officials in the United States have a set of regulations governing expense accounts. As a matter of fact I think they run to three or four volumes, but I am not advocating that here. I think our system is somewhat better, but I do not like to see references to enforcement or tightening up the administration, which reflect on officials who have carried out their very difficult work in the best possible manner.

Is there anything they can do other than what they are doing? How do you deal with expense accounts? The assessor brings in a person whose account looks suspiciously large. If it is big enough and the case is bad enough I presume it comes before the deputy minister or the assessors here in Ottawa, and the parties sit down and discuss it across a desk. The officials say they think it is too large, and the person replies no. After the discussion is over, then the assessment is made, and the person has to go to the appeal court or the exchequer court if he wants to take the matter further. That course of procedure is followed every day in the week by the departmental officials and I think their efficiency is very good indeed.

As I said before, because of the statement made by the minister earlier, I can now dispose of half my notes; but there are several other matters I wish to deal with. The provision which was withdrawn this afternoon is not the only one causing concern to the business community, and to our trading partners and friends in the United States and throughout the world at large.

During the days since the budget came down, and particularly yesterday and today, I have received telephone calls from various businessmen throughout Canada, men who are engaged in large enterprises and who are engaged in big underwritings. That is to say, they are financing capital projects, and the underwritings run into scores of millions of dollars. In many cases these underwritings are being negotiated in the United States, and in several cases everything was closed except for the signing of the documents.

One particular underwriting for $15 million was to be signed on Monday, but now the firm advancing the capital in the United States has telephoned and said the deal has to be indefinitely suspended. He said the people they were associated with had to review their whole policy towards lending and advancing money. That particular deal may be renewed some time in the future, or it might not.

These are only a half dozen cases which have been brought to my attention by telephone, and I accept the word of the people who called me. There is no reason that they should be misleading me. It may be that the withdrawal of the provision this afternoon will ameliorate that situation, but in the statement given to me by the parliamentary secretary a little while ago it says that the matter is under review. I am not going to read the statement into the record. I presume the minister did that, although I was not in the house at the time, but the statement says:

> It may take a little time to work out satisfactorily the difficulties referred to.

This is confusion worse confounded. At present we have an almost impossible section so far as administration is concerned, but at least you know the devil you are facing. Now, however, he is obscured in brimstone and you do not know what devil is going to emerge from it. You may be swapping the devil for a witch. There may be more doubt, confusion and hesitancy on this matter than ever before.

If this suspension and cancellation of underwritings continues, running into scores and perhaps hundreds of millions of dollars, the government will create unemployment, and this, Mr. Speaker, is the government which was dedicated to providing full employment. It is going to create unemployment and it is going to bring on, possibly bring on at any rate, a recession, and maybe a depression which will make those of the immediate past seem very small indeed.

I have just received a note from a colleague behind me. I am not sure whether this is an original thought or is something somebody told him, but it has a great deal in it. Why withdraw the provision 20 minutes before the stock markets in Toronto closed today? Why withdraw it at that time and have the markets boiling again? It was a rather injudicious act and due notice should be taken of it.

As I have said, I have not got my notes in front of me dealing with the clubs, carrots, threats and promises contained in the budget with respect to withholding taxes because I did not expect to have time to deal with them. Many of these are based on renegotiation of treaties that are not yet renegotiated and which we might not be able to renegotiate. This is the first time I have seen prophecies coming down in a budget, saying what the government is going to do one, two and three years from now. If this administrative efficiency and if this is the correct presentation of a budget, then I am very glad I did not have to present one.

I have one quotation from an editorial, and I know the opening line will cause a laugh from my hon. friends opposite. It is from yesterday's New York Times, which as we all know is a pretty responsible, well-read paper, and one which is usually entitled to, and receives the respect of everyone. As I say, the opening line will cause a laugh across the aisle, but not the end of the sentence. It reads:

> Mr. John Diefenbaker, who campaigned on a frankly anti-American platform,—

I deny that.

> —can make the valid complaint that the first budget drawn up by Canada's Liberal government has stolen his thunder. The Liberals new anti-foreign tax proposals—

Not one proposal, Mr. Speaker, but proposals.

> —may appear somewhat more palatable coming from Prime Minister Lester Pearson, an avowed friend of the United States, but they are no less disturbing. In setting up barriers against foreign investment, Canada is adopting a form of protectionism that represents a retreat to economic nationalism.

I commend this editorial to all hon. members. It is fairly long and I know, Mr. Speaker, you would not want me to read it all. I am reading only one or two short excerpts, but for the edification of hon. members opposite, particularly those on the treasury benches, I suggest they go down to the reading room and read this editorial in full, and also in today's issue the dispatch of the New York Times reporter in the gallery, giving in some detail the, let us say, friendly discussions which took place last night between the president of the Montreal stock exchange and the Minister of Finance.

This article in a United States newspaper is very interesting. I am glad to see that at least the Minister of Finance has been able to get some editorial comment on this news story, which is normally sadly lacking. The editorial says:

> But waving the flag of nationalism will not accelerate Canada's development. For though Canada is independent, its growth is intimately connected with the course of the American economy. Its new discriminatory measures appear calculated to alienate and disrupt this relationship, with adverse effects for Canada. American firms already established in Canada cannot move their plants, but they may be less inclined to continue reinvesting their profits; and prospective investors cannot be expected to risk their capital if they are placed at a disadvantage.
> The Canadians have every right to choose their own way to control their destiny. But the way Mr. Pearson has chosen will hurt the Canadian economy and the Canadian people.

That, sir, is a statement which I think is not a partisan Conservative one. It comes from the New York Times, which is recognized all over the world. As I said, the cancellations and suspensions which have already been made may result in tremendous unemployment and cancellation of financial arrangements. That is, of course, a matter for the future and we will watch it carefully.

The application of the tax to compel the acquisition by Canadians of 25 per cent of foreign corporations is going to be most difficult, if not impossible, to administer. The desire is very laudable. I suppose one would like to see all corporations in Canada controlled by Canadians, but we know that is very, very difficult. Indeed, it is impossible today. We have gone a long way along this road of control by outside interests. I am not criticizing the philosophy, shall I say, that underlies this measure, but I am criticizing the measure itself which is proposed.

Mr. Meyer, the financial editor of the Montreal Gazette, points out that you have to get 25 per cent of the shares of a corporation. If they are controlled by bona fide Canadians who are resident in Canada, then certain benefits are going to flow from that. If they are not, the government is going to use a club rather than a carrot. How do we know where the 25 per cent share which was here yesterday is going to be tomorrow. Canadians can buy a 25 per cent control of a corporation; they can have their shares registered and they can be sold either surreptitiously or directly on the market, and instead of having 25 per cent you may be down to 20 per cent or less. I am sure there are occasions where this does happen.

We have a provision with respect to Canadian directors. It is that we shall have Canadian directors who are resident in Canada and are Canadian citizens. As I have said, that is laudable and desirable. I hope it works. But every hon. member of this house who has had any connection with business at all knows that you can have directors who are representing, not their own interests but the holders of securities who are somewhere in the background and do not want to have their identity revealed. There are many cases, as we know, of men who are perfectly reputable and honourable, and good Canadian citizens, who are to all intents and purposes nominal directors representing some other interests in some other place. To suggest that you can achieve the desired end by simply having a Canadian citizen become a director of a corporation is, I suggest, with all due respect to the minister, window dressing and a sham; it has no reality or meaning whatsoever.

I read the budget speech on a couple of occasions. It did not grow on me as I read it, but I thought there were several things missing. I am not going to deal today with the problems of education and finance with which the minister told us he is confronted, because one could argue on these matters one way or the other. But I was rather amazed to find there was no reference at all in the budget speech to the Canada development corporation. I thought this would be the stick, the carrot or the club when you are talking about Canadians taking over corporations controlled in the United States and other foreign controlled operations. The minister has been very proud and has boasted of his ideas. They are his ideas, he having been chairman of a royal commission years ago and having advocated some steps for the takeover by Canadians of United States controlled corporations. I do not think he found in his other colleagues in the royal commission the support that he expected. But he has been talking about it and one of his ideas was brought forward in his book "Troubled Canada". I refer to the setting up of the Canada development corporation to purchase shares, because without such a corporation I think we all realize there is not enough equity money here to do anything like what is needed to make this objective a reality. There was not a mention of it in the budget speech. The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) said this afternoon that when we look at Votes and Proceedings for tomorrow we find a reference to a resolution coming forward dealing with the Canada development corporation. However, I was surprised that it was not in the budget. I think it would possibly strengthen the reaching of this objective; at least, it would have balanced it out if there were other factors which go hand in hand with this proposal.

There are people here who are not too far away from the sound of my voice—I refer to some of the representatives in the press gallery—who, as my old friend Jim Macdonnell used to say, are very knowledgeable fellows. I wonder whether this omission from the budget speech was due to the modesty of one of the speech writers employed to do the job, because according to reports one of those speech writers is to become the head of the Canada development corporation. Perhaps that is one reason for him not wanting the matter included in the budget speech which he helped prepare. I suggest it is a rather peculiar situation if that did not happen.

Dealing further with the takeover by Canadians of corporations in this country, the argument is advanced that if they are controlled from outside, in the end our whole industry may be controlled from outside. That is the philosophy, of course, underlying this whole approach. I doubt whether that philosophy holds good. I think you have to distinguish between one corporation and another. Some of us from the maritime provinces at least, I am sure, have at times heard the opinion expressed that the greatest damage done to our own local economy was the takeover practised by corporations, not from the United States but from other parts of Canada, which came down to the maritimes, purchased the plants and then closed them up and moved them somewhere else. This might have been in the interests of efficiency—it probably was—but there is certainly a feeling in some places that this caused a great deal of our difficulty. Therefore there is not an entirely unanimous feeling with respect to takeover.

There are many United States corporations, and corporations controlled by other interests as well, which are doing a remarkably good job in this country. I have in my own constituency two such corporations, one that was brought in last year and one the year before. They are employing hundreds of people and are contributing tremendously to the economy of the country. Certainly if there was any suggestion in this area that these corporations should be penalized or punished because they are not wholly or partly owned by Canadians, I think the reaction would not be very favourable.

This is a shotgun approach. Perhaps it has to be. All are either good or they are bad. I suggest there are good corporations which are not entirely Canadian owned or even 25 per cent Canadian controlled. I think if the hon. gentleman suggested to anyone in this house or in Canada during the winter time that Imperial Oil on hockey night was a bad Canadian citizen he would be likely to get his eyes blackened, because, undoubtedly, Imperial Oil in that sporting facet, as in many others, has been a remarkably good Canadian citizen. As I understand it, Imperial Oil has about 20 per cent of its ownership in Canada, about 8 per cent outside the North American continent and the rest in the United States. So it would not be easy for that corporation, even if it saw fit to do so, to become a technical Canadian citizen of the kind suggested. It seems to me it is just as good a Canadian citizen now as it would be after it had found 2 or 3 per cent more stock for sale to this country.

There are pension funds galore. There is no danger about the purchase of pension funds. Pension funds do not seek control; they seek only an equity interest in various corporations across the board and I suggest that even though we should try to restrict the outright purchase by corporations of controlling interests or even of huge minority interests in Canadian companies, this problem does not arise with respect to pension funds which are widely diversified and have only a relatively small proportion of their money invested in any one corporate fund. There are scores of them—I could name them, but I am not going to put the names on the record—which cannot comply because they do not have 25 per cent ownership in Canada. One wonders, again, which are the good boys and which are the bad boys. Is Imperial Oil bad? Is C.I.L. bad? I could go down the list but I do not intend to go into it now. I think I have made my point, for the moment, in connection with this matter.

Of course, we all realize we are dealing with the subject at a preliminary stage only. The resolutions will come before the committee in detail at a later date—if the government is still here; if it does not have to withdraw all of them—and we shall have the opportunity of discussing them on an analytical basis as compared with the more rotund manner in which I am dealing with them at the moment. It has to be remembered, when we are talking about these companies, that this is not a one way street. One would think, to hear some people talk, that no one in Canada owned corporations outside at all. But I need not remind some hon. members within the sound of my voice that there are a number of Canadian corporations which wholly own and operate subsidiaries in the United States. This is a two way street, and if we put pressure on United States subsidiaries here, what is going to be done to Canadian corporations operating profitably below the border at the present time and giving employment not only to Americans but to many Canadians?

I understand it was with the encouragement of hon. gentlemen opposite in the days when they were in power and, certainly, of one prominent frontbencher in those days, that General Motors parent company sold shares to Canadians so as to show its Canadianism. But it has not got 25 per cent; it would take a lot of money to buy 25 per cent of those shares. Therefore, it is not a qualified corporation and will not be able to come within the ambit of these provisions, even for its pension funds.

There is another matter. In his budget speech, the Minister of Finance referred to what he called the proliferation of methods of moving undistributed income from a corporation to the shareholders without payment of tax. The usual method, as some lawyers within the sound of my voice know, the historic one, is commonly called dividend stripping. There is no doubt that this practice has greatly increased within the last few years. It is one which, I think, should be controlled and there is a great deal of revenue being lost to the nation as a result of the techniques which have grown up. Dividend stripping is only one of these devices. As the Minister of Finance well knows, there are others which can be used to accomplish the same end. They are more cumbersome, perhaps, and they take longer, but this is a cumbersome and expensive procedure, anyway.

The minister intends to deal with these practices. He intends to give power to the Minister of National Revenue—and I quote him in outline—to look through so-called dividend stripping transactions and to deem shareholders to have received dividends in certain cases. Let us look at the relevant part of the resolution which the minister put on the record the other night. It is long and involved. It says that with respect to amounts received after June 13 which in the opinion of the minister had been received, or would be received thereafter, by reason, in whole or in part, of such transactions as I have mentioned, they shall, if the minister sees fit—and here I am simply sketching this part of the resolution—be deemed to be a dividend either in whole or in part. Have you ever heard, Mr. Speaker, of a more arbitrary power given to a minister, even to our genial friend the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Garland)? Just consider what decisions he will have to make in this connection. This is power to tax, with a vengeance.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Administrative lawlessness.

Mr. Nowlan: My right hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition, says "administrative lawlessness". I think that is probably the most apt way of describing it. It is the most outstanding example of arbitrary power being vested in a minister that I have encountered since I first came to this house. You may remember, Mr. Speaker—the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) certainly remembers—that two years ago a great debate took place in this chamber about giving to the minister of national revenue a little power to deal with a very small fragment of the economy—power to declare goods to be of a certain class or kind, thereby helping to develop the economy of this country. For days and weeks we were subject to vituperation, abuse, and criticism of our proposal. It was said this was taxation without parliamentary authority. It was said this was taxation by the arbitrary acts of the minister of national revenue. We went back to the days of George III and before, and the high screams of the opposition were such that they finally reached gentlemen in the other place and the proposal died there. We were trying to decide whether items in a limited category were of a class or kind made in Canada. Here we are dealing with vast sums amounting to many millions of dollars, yet we give to the Minister of National Revenue the power to rule as to the financial operations of scores of corporations.

It will involve scores and scores of corporations and he himself will have to determine, in whole or in part as he deems fit, whether or not it is a dividend. Mr. Speaker, have you ever heard a more far-reaching taxation measure? Talk about taxation without representation.

I can think of another example. Mr. Speaker, I am sure my hon. friends opposite remember the spring before last, and remember the surcharges and taxation by order in council, how wicked it was, and how we were deemed to be trespassing on the rights of parliament. If we pass this measure parliament will give the Minister of National Revenue greater power than any we sought to exercise. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the amounts involved will run into millions and millions of dollars. The minister will find himself in the position of having to read the taxpayer's mind—because there is no other way of dealing with the matter—and determine whether a certain action was taken, in whole or in part, for the purpose of avoiding reduction in or elimination of certain taxes. Mr. Speaker, I have very great respect as an old, long time friend, for the Minister of National Revenue, but I doubt whether even he would profess to have tremendous ability in the art and skill of mind reading. There is an old classic saying in the English common law which I think all English common law lawyers learn straight away when they first go into law school. It has come down from the ranks of judges of 200 years ago, and it is that the devil himself knoweth not the mind of man. Apparently in this case the Minister of Finance is paying the Minister of National Revenue the compliment, by inference, that is smarter than the devil, anyway.

Now, the minister may argue that there is an appeal. I do not know whether he will, but he could make that argument. There is undoubtedly an appeal at any time from an assessment made by the minister, but in this case his assessment is based on his opinion, on the exercise of his discretion. As far as I can discover—and I have sought the advice of tax lawyers on this too, people who have had far greater experience than I and other lawyers—during the whole course of Canadian jurisprudence, from its beginnings until today, where a discretion such as this has been exercised honestly, as of course it would be, the courts have, rightly or wrongly, refused to interfere with it. So to all intents and purposes there is no appeal whatsoever from this arbitrary power. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this is one proposal which parliament should not pass either at this session or at any other.

This section is evil for another reason, and I use the word "evil" advisedly. In the days before I came here, back in 1947, although I was here in 1948, there was a complete revision of the Income Tax Act. At that time the act was replete with discretionary powers. One deputy minister of that day spent most of his time writing decisions on the exercise of discretion, and it became a matter which attracted the attention of the then minister of finance, hon. members here and members in another place. A great deal of study was given to this problem of discretion, Mr. Speaker, and you will find a very interesting report of the matter in the proceedings of another place. As a result, all the discretions of the minister which were then in existence, with possibly one exception, were removed from the act because it was recognized that it was a bad policy and should not be continued. So the discretions went out of the act and the minister administered the act and the act alone. If the taxpayer had any complaint or any trouble, he went to the appeal board. This was the theory of it: the income tax appeal board was set up at that time so that, in the event of a dispute with the minister, one could go to the board cheaply—although cheapness did not always materialize.

Now it is proposed to have incorporated in the Income Tax Act a discretion which I think is greater than any discretion ever previously in the act. I say that this proposal is wrong and is one which should not be passed by this parliament.

Mr. Garland: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Nowlan: Certainly.

Mr. Garland: In his comparison of the class or kind legislation which was introduced by his administration, or the administration of which he was a member, does he not recognize the fact there was no appeal there.

Mr. Nowlan: That was the basis of the argument I am attempting to make, although apparently I have not done it very well, to establish in the mind of the Minister of National Revenue the fact that to all intents and purposes there is no appeal here. There cannot be any appeal. There is only a technical appeal from an assessment. Any lawyer who has had anything to do with income tax matters knows what that means. With an assessment based on the exercise of a discretion, to all intents and purposes there is no appeal. This situation is therefore exactly on all fours with the problem we had two years ago when dealing with class or kind, except that then we were dealing with relatively minor and small matters of machinery and equipment, reference to which might come before the minister from time to time. But in this case we will be dealing with millions and millions of dollars, and I must say that I feel very sorry for the Minister of National Revenue. Just think, Mr. Speaker, of the pressure which is going to be brought to bear on him by all sorts of interested parties, lawyers, accountants and other people, claiming that theirs is a case where he should exercise his discretion. And that may or may not be correct. The lines may be blurred, they may be confused. There are not too many blacks or too many whites in these cases. They are often confused, and I would hate to see anybody for whom I cared put in this position or to be there myself as minister of national revenue. As I say, I think this provision should be withdrawn.

As I said at the beginning, the government is trying to achieve a purpose which I think is desirable. It is trying to achieve the avoidance of income tax payments. But there are other methods, as the minister knows full well, which could be used, particularly in clearing up this great reserve of undistributed income which is perhaps at the root of it all. The minister said the other day that he was sorry to hear that the royal commission on taxation was not going to report until 1965. I did not know that until he said so the other night. I have no doubt that problems have arisen, illness and so on, which have slowed down the operations of that commission. I am very happy to have had some part in constituting the commission. I personally persuaded Mr. Carter, rather against his will I think, to accept the very onerous task of chairman, and the country owes him a debt for accepting that. The government of which I was a member set up this commission because they realized that there had to be long term changes made in the act and that it was high time they were made. But in the very order in council by which we set up that royal commission, Mr. Speaker, we provided that they would be dealing with taxation law as it then existed and thereafter existed. In other words, we gave scope to the government of the day to amend the act and to take such action as they saw fit, regardless of the fact that the royal commission was sitting at the time. I suggest that there are other procedures in this particular case which the Minister of Finance could have taken which would have accomplished substantially the same thing and which would not have involved the minister in this terrible position in which he will find himself, as well as involve us in going back to provisions about discretions.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have gone over several of the resolutions. Perhaps the most important one of all from the standpoint of the average Canadian citizen is the one dealing with the application of the sales tax. The minister gave notice the other night that the sales tax act was going to be amended by lifting certain exemptions which heretofore had applied. With very few exceptions all building materials and productive machinery and equipment would be subject to an 11 per cent sales tax. This is a very ironical situation. We talked about efficiency of administration. We talked about mismanagement the other night. The minister spoke about the mismanagement of the Conservative government. If you wish to see a really good example of efficiency in administration look at this one. I think we should have had a photographic reproduction. If this had happened in Hollywood no one would have believed it. We had the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) standing up one day and offering to the house builder $500 for building a house in the middle of the winter while two or three days later we had the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) standing up and saying that he is going to tax that same man more than $500.

An hon. Member: Ring around the rosy.

Mr. Nowlan: That certainly is efficiency for you; there is no question about it. I must hurry on. We must remember also that building material not only applies to houses but also to all sorts of construction. The tremendous cost which is going to follow on this proposal is something which I do not think any of us can completely envisage at the moment.

An hon. Member: Hospitals and schools.

Mr. Nowlan: Yes, hospitals, schools and bridges possibly. We have seen representations already from hydro construction in British Columbia applying for exemptions. Not only is there the matter of building material. However, the emphasis has been laid there because, of course, the building material people were well organized and I do not criticize them for that. That is their function. However, production machinery and equipment come under this imposition as well, and the cost of production machinery and equipment is not chicken feed. It runs into hundreds of millions of dollars. The increased tax on that amount, as the minister pointed out in his preliminary estimate, is going to be very substantial indeed. All of this is to be added to the cost of construction and the cost of development, including not only the building of the houses, but repairs.

Since the budget came down the other night I have had two telephone calls from my own province from two relatively small contractors who said they did not build houses in the wintertime but had accepted the advice of the minister of labour in the past and adopted the slogan of doing it now and that they had arranged for a substantially big business in repairs and renovations, painting and all the rest of it, and that the interior work was done during the winter months. All of that will be subject to 11 per cent sales tax and there is no $500 handout for painting the kitchen sink or anything of that kind. One could go on and on in speaking of these matters.

However, I do not wish to labour the point. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that this increased burden of taxation is serious. Last night an economist told me that he figured that now a family man with two children and with $5,000 income was paying out more in taxes indirectly than he would be paying in direct taxation, and probably it would be higher in the $5,000 bracket. That shows the scope of the proposal. As I said, the matter has been mentioned in the press. We all get representations in connection with it. That is a usual thing. We expect them. But I think these representations have real merit, as I suggest to you that this proposal is going to result in reduced employment in the wintertime instead of increased employment, something which is absolutely contrary to what is required. Allan gives and Walter taketh away: blessed be the name of Michael. What sort of administrative set-up is this? If anyone can tell me that, I should like him to do so. What they do not withdraw, they put in a crib and I think we are going to get widespread unemployment because of it. The budget of course, recognizes that fact. I think the minister recognized it. You will notice, Mr. Speaker, that it was said we were at dead centre, that the economy was lagging, and that we had been guilty of mismanagement. However, his white paper showed that the increase in the gross national product last year, the one just closed, was 8 per cent or a little bit over 8 per cent. If you discount what he termed the cost of living you get an increase of only 6.5 or 6.6 per cent in the national product, a figure greater than it had been for years. In the budget this year, what does he say? He is budgeting for a 5 per cent increase in the gross national product, with 1.5 per cent cost of living. Hence the minister himself admits that we are going to have a decline in the economy, that instead of an increase or expansion in the economy we are going to get a reduced one and he puts that in his budget. When we read the budget we realize what is in store for us.

An hon. Member: A Liberal budget.

Mr. Nowlan: I could go on, Mr. Speaker, but I do not wish to trespass on the time of others. It is now five o'clock. Because of these and many other factors which I could bring forward I move, seconded by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker):

That all the words after "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

This house regrets that the Minister of Finance by failing to maintain the constitutional practice of the essential secrecy of the budget has seriously weakened public confidence;

That in general his proposals will endanger and curtail the expansion of the economy;

That the imposition of a sales tax on certain building materials and machinery and apparatus to be used in manufacture or production is to be condemned as a retrograde and inexcusable action; and

That the proposals purporting to bring about desirable control by Canadians over the Canadian economy will fail by their very nature to achieve that objective and will result in deterioration of Canada's international relations.

Mr. Caron: It being five o'clock, may I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to say that it is not necessary for the hon. member to rise in his place. It being five o'clock p.m. the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUGGESTED FORMATION OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East) moved:

That, in order to promote the development of the highest degree of morale amongst federal civil servants through removal of obstacles to settlement of fundamental grievances and to enable official spokesmen to appear before a standing committee of the House of Commons, standing order 65 (1) be amended by adding a paragraph (o) to read as follows:

"(o) on civil service affairs, to consist of 35 members, 10 of whom shall constitute a quorum;"

He said: Mr. Speaker, the motion which I am sponsoring at this time is concise and, I think, is self-explanatory. I am not too much concerned about the details as to the constitution of the suggested committee, the numbers or the quorum. What I desire to speak on this afternoon has to do wholly and solely with the principles and the suggestion that the standing order be amended so as to provide for a committee on civil service affairs. I can assure you, sir, that this motion was placed on the order paper only after a great deal of consideration and after consultation with a number of the executive officers of the civil service association and after having been invited to sit in on meetings of the rank and file members of the civil service.

This is the fifth parliament of Canada, Mr. Speaker, of which I have had the privilege of being a member. During every session of the five parliaments that I have been here I have heard the members of all parties speak in the highest possible terms of the federal civil service of Canada. Time after time, the members of all parties have spoken, and spoken truly, of the high quality of our civil service. Members have referred to the sincerity of civil servants, their integrity, their ability and their loyalty. I agree with all these expressions about our civil service. Unfortunately, however, it has been our experience that these are only words, only platitudes, only generalities, because no action has been taken over the years either by Liberal or Conservative governments to express approval of the civil service in the form of regulations or procedures whereby their fundamental grievances or problems could be tackled. I am convinced, sir, that the time is now long past when we should express our gratitude to those who have the responsibility for carrying out the laws that are adopted by the House of Commons. These people are the public relations officers of parliament itself in dealing with the people. We should express our appreciation by showing them that we want to assist them in resolving their problems and difficulties. By our policies and decisions, we should make it clear to the civil servants that everything possible is being done by the members of parliament who, you might say in the final analysis, are almost their employers. By doing these things, we would maintain the highest morale amongst the 300,000 or 400,000 civil servants who come within our jurisdiction.

I regret having to say, sir, that as a result of the many matters brought to my attention by civil servants, as a result of my attendance at meetings of the rank and file, particularly the lower echelons of the civil service, the esprit de corps, the morale of the civil service is perhaps at the lowest ebb in many years. It is at a low ebb because of the failure of the House of Commons in general, and governments in particular, to take action to resolve the difficulties of the civil service or to lay down policies that would give civil servants a clear insight as to how they could handle negotiations, how they can get grievances settled, how they can achieve a basis of understanding as between employer and employee.

I want to admit, sir, that amongst the civil service associations in Canada on a federal basis there is not complete unanimity. However, I think I might say there is a desire amongst the memberships to be first class citizens, and not second class, as employees of this country. They desire collective bargaining, but admittedly there may be some differentiation between associations as to whether collective bargaining should mean the same rights as other organized workers in Canada or whether it should be similar to the negotiations policemen and firemen have, that is compulsory acceptance of an arbitration award.

However, sir, those are matters which could undoubtedly be resolved and, from my point of view, might perhaps be resolved if there could be a discussion between a committee of the House of Commons and the official spokesmen of the various associations within the federal civil service. I go beyond that basic principle of collective bargaining. I say that the time has now arrived when, because of the inaction of governments both now and in the past to deal with fundamental grievances in the interests of the efficiency of the public service, there should be a change in our standing orders to enable us to have a standing committee before whom the official spokesmen of the civil servants could appear and to whom they could present any fundamental grievances. Then the committee, in its wisdom, after consideration could make a recommendation to this House of Commons and through the House of Commons to those who have the responsibility for the final agreement with employees of the federal government.

Without any question, they have grievances. Undoubtedly, one of their grievances has to do with working conditions and pay. Those of us who have been here over the years, and who have been here especially during the past two years, cannot help but reach the conclusion that there has been a government policy to the effect that to those who have more shall be given, and to those who have not, moonlighting. No official statistics are available in Canada on any of the categories of workers in our country, but perhaps there is more moonlighting amongst civil servants than any other group. This is not because they desire it but because in the lower echelons, and this covers thousands upon thousands, it is the only way they can provide for themselves and their families the standard of living to which they are entitled in Canada. This requires moonlighting by the head of the family or requires the husband and wife both to work. I was amazed, sir, to find, and to find conclusively, that many of those who work eight hours a day for the federal government then work four to six hours a night as janitors in supermarkets or office blocks. This situation exists amongst civil servants not only because of the neglect of this parliament in general, but in particular because of the attitude of those responsible for wage policies as they apply to the civil service. As I said a moment ago, to those who have more shall be given, and to those who have not, that is the lower echelons, the lower pay categories, only faith and hope.

I would like to give just one example, although I could give many. It is not directly a civil service matter, but the principle is the same. Take the most recent increases to the armed forces. They became effective on October 1, 1962. An ordinary seaman in the navy, a private in the army and an aircraftsman second class in the air force got a $48 annual increase, but if you were a captain in the navy, a colonel in the army or a group captain in the air force you got a $1,080 annual increase. And that, Mr. Speaker, was supposedly based on a policy to take care of the increased cost of living.

When you see policies of that nature applied throughout the entire civil service it is no wonder there is a breakdown in esprit de corps and morale.

This house has become very concerned when it sees any possibility of industrial disruption because of long drawn out negotiations. Just now longshoremen in Vancouver have taken a strike vote, and I believe around 95 per cent of them voted to strike. Over 14 months of negotiations they could not reach a settlement, and now this will disrupt the waterfront industry in Vancouver. But what about the situation of our federal civil servants, many of whom have been taking part in negotiations for two years and there is still no decision? The most damnable feature of all is that it applies mainly to those who need an increase most. As members of parliament we are to be indicted if we allow certain situations to carry on.

Take the case of postal clerks and postal carriers. Postal clerks have to have some education and undergo examinations twice a year, and sometimes three or four on-spot examinations. They must know hundreds of thousands of post offices and how to direct mail by the fastest route, but yet we pay them less than the pay of a street cleaner. I am not deprecating the importance of street cleaners. They are vitally important to all of us, but take the case of the postal clerk and what he has to do. How can we justify paying him less than a street cleaner? Then take the position of postal carriers.

[Mr. Winch.]

Take also the case of those who are employed in this building as sessional staff. Even today the Minister of Finance stated he is not in a position to state what is going to be done. There are many fundamental grievances of this nature.

I have been making a study of some of the regulations that apply to employees who come under the authority of some bureaucrats in various departments. I maintain that a few of these regulations are contrary to the bill of rights. They are definitely contrary to provincial legislation as regards holidays with pay, as regards monetary penalties on being late for work, and as regards using a car at the end of a postal carrier route to get down to a district post office in order to check out.

It is quite obvious no action has been taken to correct many of the fundamental grievances that exist. There is not any definite policy. Take the question of wages. All the executive officers of the various associations to whom I have spoken just do not know where they are at. A few years ago, by authority of this house, we established a special branch on job evaluation, on a basis of civil service salaries compared with those of outside workers. A report was brought in, but what happened to it? The civil service might be prepared to accept it, but when it reached the treasury board they did not like the basis of the orientation and they brought in their own, based on nothing. And so the civil servants do not know where they are. I believe that was the main reason for the meeting on June 14 between the Minister of Finance and the executive officers of the federal civil service association.

I am just trying to outline our views that for the maintenance of the esprit de corps and morale of the civil service we should amend our standing orders so that, through official spokesmen, fundamental grievances that could not be resolved in any other way could be placed before a committee of the House of Commons for its consideration. I believe this would give a lift to the administrators and those men and women in charge of the public relations of the government.

There is one other point of this suggestion. The appointment of such a committee would serve a very useful purpose in that hon. members of the house who have things brought to their attention that should be handled by civil servants themselves, but for varying reasons are not so handled, could bring these matters to the attention of the committee.

Take, for example, our own security staff right here in this house. How can they bring up basic problems themselves? It is pretty difficult. The majority of hon. members can get away over week ends, but we who come from the maritimes and British Columbia are in the House of Commons seven days a week. We see what goes on, and it is a disgrace that we have a security staff which I maintain is undermanned by at least 10 men.

These buildings are the property of the people of Canada. We want the public to come here, to see the buildings and learn all about them. They do come here in their thousands. Have you ever been in the house on a holiday, a Saturday or Sunday, Mr. Speaker? Some days there are 3,000, 4,000 and 5,000 visitors, but we have a security staff so undermanned that instead of explaining the buildings to groups of 35 or 50 I have seen them having to cope with groups of 100, 125 and 150. It is not right; it is not fair.

It is important to let the civil servants know that we mean what we say about their sincerity, integrity and loyalty, and by our decisions we must show we believe they should be among the first of the first class citizens of the country, and not second class citizens denied rights and opportunities that are open to others. That is why I moved this motion. I hope it will be carried; but even if it is not, I trust it will be an indication to the government now in office, to the people responsible for policies and negotiations, that we are vitally interested in our civil service and we are not going to rest content until they get a square and decent deal.

Mr. D. G. Hahn (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is proposing that a standing committee of the house be set up to deal with problems and grievances relating to the civil service. When looking at any of these resolutions or proposals for legislation, I think we have to first of all ascertain whether there is a problem that needs to be solved. Second, we must decide whether this is the correct way to solve the problem we have uncovered. Let us look at this particular proposal in that light.

First of all, in talking about the civil service I am sure all of us would agree with the hon. member when he describes in the highest possible terms the quality, integrity and ability of our civil service. We all know that the civil service in this country has done and continues to do an outstanding job in carrying on the business of government. I think we must also realize that in addition to being a group of people of high quality, they are a very important group carrying out the business of government. From the straight point of view of dollars, looking at the estimates for this year we see that civil service salaries and wages amount to some $875 million. So we are not dealing with a small group of people who are easy to get together; we are dealing with a very large group of people. We are dealing not only with a very large group of people, but with a very large sum of money.

The civil service are important because they are in daily contact with the citizens of this country. Through their actions, ability and skill the public either have or lose confidence in the democratic process, in the government, because civil servants are the last outposts of government; they are the only contact that many of our people have with government. For this reason I think it is vital that the civil service be not only the best people we can attract, but that also in their dealings with the public at large they demonstrate that they are satisfied, well treated and happy in the service of the government.

The hon. member has suggested that our civil servants are second class citizens. I do not agree with him on that point. I believe they are first class citizens, but I also believe they have second class privileges. The hon. member discussed the problem of civil servants having to moonlight, not being able to earn enough in their jobs to support their families. I know this is a problem. I know people in the service of this government who are not able to maintain their families and have to seek outside jobs. This reflects on the efficiency with which they carry out our business, the business of the government. I know also that in the civil service there are grievances and that sometimes grievance procedures are cumbersome and difficult. I know it is difficult to get resolution to some of these problems. I know also that in bargaining for proper pay and salaries it has been a continuing complaint of the civil service that they have second class rights. The bargaining is difficult; it goes over a long, protracted period of time. They do not have the strength that outside employees have; they do not have the strength of pressing their demands to the ultimate through strike action. It is for this reason that something has to be done in this area. I agree wholeheartedly with those who support the idea that there should be proper collective bargaining for people in the civil service and that there should be compulsory arbitration in settling disputes that arise.

There are many, many problems for the civil servant, but I do not intend to outline them all. I am sure I cannot bring tears to the eyes of hon. members of the house, as the hon. member who preceded me may have done, in outlining these problems. I think it is sufficient to say that the civil service, as it is now constituted, has problems in getting first class rights that go with their position as first class citizens. There is a problem, and

I think it is a problem that we must recognize. What, then, is the solution to this problem? There are many possible alternatives that can be adopted. We could have a royal commission and shelve the problem for a couple of years. We could set up, as was suggested by the hon. member, a standing committee which would deal with these problems from time to time, and not only from time to time but over a permanent period of time; in other words, as future problems arise a mechanism would be there to look at and deal with them. A third method would be to introduce little bits of legislation one at a time, here and there as we see problems arising. It would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that of these three solutions the one with most merit is that suggested by the hon. member.

I think it would be a very, very sound idea to have a committee of this house on a permanent basis continually reviewing and listening to the problems of the employees, in effect, of this house, of the people who are carrying into practice the policies and legislation that originate in this chamber. I believe this might be considered to be a proper parliamentary responsibility, to carry out our legislation not only through the stage of printing the bills but to also make sure that the civil service do have a place where they can properly present and air their problems. I therefore commend the hon. member for bringing forward this resolution and wish to state that I support it.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to support this resolution. The dilemma confronting every private member at this time is whether to remain silent and refrain from making remarks, in an effort to accommodate the passage of a measure in the limited time available, or make remarks such as I should like to make at this point. I was for some nine years a civil servant; I had the honour of being a national president of one of the three largest staff associations of civil servants in Canada. I believe this resolution is a good one. There is a similar resolution, No. 65, in my name, which is designed to achieve substantially the same purpose as this resolution. There are some differences, notably in terms of the size of the committee and whether it should be a standing or special committee. I personally support the right to independent arbitration, which I think should be spelled out in specific, legislative terms.

As a member of this house I have on occasions had to listen to the type of intemperate attack which the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) makes from time to time. I will forgo the pleasure of replying to that hon. member at this time because I hope to be able to do so when he is in this house.

A new act came into effect in April, 1962 which was designed to do certain things for the civil service of Canada. As a member of this house I have received a large number of representations concerning inequities in the application and administration of this act. For example, a group of geologists engaged on an 18 months term prior to their getting Ph.D. degrees who did field work for a specified period were classified as temporary employees. That classification has been abandoned, but the effect is that this group of civil servants is deprived of substantial fringe benefits, which represents a severe cut in remuneration to them for no good reason.

I had an example brought to my attention the other day of a civil servant who got a promotion without an increase in pay. It was a reclassification. When the pay increases were announced they were made retroactive and the net result was that he got $210 a year less than he would have got if he had not been promoted, because of the way in which the salary increases were applied. The staff associations have carried these cases as far as they can within the machinery available, but then they get stumped. They meet a stone wall. I believe there has to be some type of machinery to permit an orderly examination of situations of this kind, and the establishment of a committee as envisaged in this resolution is a step which I can wholeheartedly support.

In the United Kingdom there is machinery for dealing with situations such as this. It has evolved over the years and it is usually termed the Whitley council. I have read the reports in Hansard of previous parliaments. Representatives of the party sitting opposite in the house—not of the group putting forward this motion—spoke on many occasions to say they were in favour of a Whitley council, but they did nothing to bring such a council into being. I think the time has come when we should proceed to a more developed stage of dealing with employees of the government of Canada and crown corporations by offering them machinery for more advanced collective bargaining, including the right to independent arbitration. To make this work we have to determine the proper bargaining agents and units, and this is not easy.

The association I represented includes various professional categories in all areas of government service. Other types of organization take everyone in a department and cut across professional lines. In some cases the bargaining units will have to reflect the patterns in which civil servants have, in fact, been organized. This will call for elaborate examination in one case after another. I think it would be an appropriate task for a committee of the kind suggested to sort out the kind of rules which would be appropriate to Canadian civil servants. We cannot follow blindly the experience of the United Kingdom or of other nations, because we have evolved here a fine civil service with its own traditions of staff organization, posing some unique problems.

The committee should set itself the task of examining the inequities which exist under a new act which created a number of difficult situations, and it should attempt to provide an orderly channel for the review and correction of the regulations under the present act. Orderly amendments could be prepared which would spell out the means by which proper units could be established, and representation could be determined by those units. This would be the basis of independent arbitration procedure. I am confident this will meet with the support of all staff associations representing major groups of civil servants in Canada.

I think it would be a fine thing, if at all possible, for hon. members to give serious consideration to the establishment of a committee to deal with these matters. I cannot see any other way of dealing with them unless we can arrive at a broad measure of non-partisan agreement in terms of the objectives we hope to secure. We have taken great steps forward on the industrial front in the development of collective bargaining procedures. We have made progress, also, in dealing with employees of the crown. But here we have lagged behind, and private industry has led the way. Legislation has been more appropriate in the case of private industry and there has been a reluctance, traditional in many respects, to deal with this matter by legislative authority. I think, also, there has been a certain amount of timidity on the part of staff associations and the civil service itself.

We have a fine civil service in Canada, one of the best in any modern country in the industrialized world. We have some of the most dedicated men and women serving Canada in circumstances in which, sometimes, they take abuse in silence; they serve because they believe in what they are doing. They are truly Canadians and they are proud of that fact. They are in no way second class persons. Some of the ablest men and women it has been my pleasure to meet are in the public service of Canada today, and in many cases they remain in this employment at considerable personal and financial sacrifice. I think we are under a real obligation to take steps to see that we do better than we are doing now to bring about a situation in which the rights of civil servants are much more in line than they are at present with those enjoyed in private industry.

(Translation):

Mr. Yvon Dupuis (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate, because as parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State I am interested in the welfare of the civil servants. I therefore commend the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) for having put this motion on the order paper.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to make the house realize the civil servants have not always had the opportunity of stating their grievances. I read very carefully the proposal to have the house form a permanent committee which might meet the spokesmen of the civil service commission and study the civil servants' grievances.

I listened with great interest to the mover of the resolution; he submitted grievances which really deserve consideration. Moreover, I think that we should examine the lot of federal civil servants who are not getting a reasonable salary on which to support their families as they should.

I know also, that several grievances have been vented in various divisions but were never submitted to the responsible authorities.

As a matter of fact, civil servants are, in some cases, afraid to complain about certain conditions or to express their dissatisfaction in a certain matter, because they fear reprisals or loss of advancement within their branch if their denouncing of certain conditions ever were known.

Mr. Speaker, since my appointment to the secretary of state department, I have had the privilege to receive, from several hon. members, complaints made to them by civil servants, and I must say that, after having studied some files, I found that several of those complaints were justified. I discovered an attitude which, under certain circumstances, indicated certain trends that should be studied seriously, and more particularly with regard to competition notices for civil service positions.

As a matter of fact, I received representations to the effect that some notices of competition seemed to have been prepared to measure. I also noticed that this did not take place with the coming into power of the new government but seemed to have been going on for some years. One gets the impression that in the case of some vacancies, the qualifications required are so well spelled out that it is a foregone conclusion that Mr. So and So will be appointed.

Mr. Speaker, I am not afraid to tell the house that this situation was brought to my attention on several occasions, first of all by civil servants in my riding and then by hon. members or civil servants from other regions. In brief, I think that a serious survey of the situation should be made in order to see how things are done in the civil service administration, because we must see to it that the government employees have better safeguards than at the present time.

Also, the matter of bilingualism raises some difficulties in the province of Quebec. For instance, federal civil servants of good faith go to various regions in the province of Quebec to put French speaking candidates through oral exams. But those so-called bilingual civil servants do not always know the full significance of French words or do not always know the meaning of French phrases which would allow them to exert a fair judgment in such competitions. I think that is another reason why we should study very carefully what is going on and try to improve the situation.

Mr. Speaker, I see that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) seems anxious to ask me a question.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Dupuis: Certainly.

Mr. Pigeon: Does the parliamentary secretary think that the government intends to put forward this year an amendment to the Civil Service Act in order to allow federal government employees to take advantage of arbitration procedures, as it has been requested?

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, for the information of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, I can assure him that under a Liberal regime government members will call upon the government to take the matter under serious consideration. I could add that my hon. friend has missed fine opportunities of doing so when his party was in power and I am glad to see that he rises more often now that he is in the opposition.

[Mr. Dupuis.]

Mr. Speaker, we will certainly look into the situation of federal civil servants. In fact, I was just saying that since my appointment as parliamentary secretary, I noticed gaps that we will try to fill, because, when they are faced with problems, Liberals do not try to bury their heads in the sand like ostriches or like the Conservatives did when they were in power.

Mr. Pigeon: You neglected them for 22 years.

Mr. Dupuis: I know that my friend, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), is very touchy. He never had and never will have the opportunity to be on the government side during 22 years, but he has surely missed the opportunity to make suggestions to the government over the last five years. However, on referring to the index of Hansard, one may note that as far as the civil service is concerned, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm was less talkative when his party was in power than he is now as a member of the opposition.

Mr. Speaker, in connection with deficiencies in the civil service, in all fairness, I would ask the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm and all members of other parties who have grievances, to bring them to our knowledge and they will receive our favourable consideration.

I can assure hon. members that the secretary of state department is already considering the means of improving the lot of civil servants. We shall look fully into this matter and submit an appropriate report in due time.

We are aware of the fact that many improvements could be made. The resolution under consideration is very sensible and we shall probably end up by setting up a standing committee to hear grievances.

It would be premature, in my opinion, to appoint this standing committee of the house before seeking the views of the civil servants and learning whether they would be interested in the establishment of such a committee or prefer some other procedure more beneficial to members of the house and to civil servants.

I am sure that we shall be able in a short while to take the appropriate steps to give our civil service employees the opportunities they lack at present. The civil service has existed for a number of years and has on the whole operated quite well. We may say that the civil service is quite well organized and our civil servants, as mentioned by previous speakers, have proven that they were competent, honest, sincere and distinguished workers. For all those reasons, because we have an adequate civil service and because the members of our civil service are reputable people who have all those qualifications, we feel it is our duty to look after them and to consider their problems and improve their lot.

As member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville and more particularly as parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State, I can assure the hon. member that we shall favourably consider all the grievances they will submit.

The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is welcome. We would like to see him regularly; and if he were to talk about other things than politics we would be surprised but most pleased.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I support without reservation the motion presented by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch). Besides I have had many opportunities to praise and congratulate the civil servants in the house.

It is true that many improvements could be made in the civil service. We agree that the civil service is not perfect—the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis) said so himself.

We would like to see the recommendations of the Glassco commission implemented as soon as possible. It would be unfortunate to undertake a study that would last five, six or seven years. The facts are there and are well known. Besides, if the recommendations—

Mr. Francis: Is the hon. member making a speech?

Mr. Pigeon: If the hon. member wants to ask me a question, I will be pleased to answer if I can.

To go on with my remarks, Mr. Speaker, the report of the Glassco commission contains interesting suggestions. That commission made inquiries into every federal department, including crown corporations.

I think that the trouble lies mainly with the crown corporations which have an important job to do. The Civil Service Act should be improved. The members are not even aware of what goes on in the crown corporations. When we ask a question in the house, that is to the ministers who are responsible for those corporations, they answer: I am only responsible for the money spent by the crown corporations. It is a known fact that the members, representatives of the people, know absolutely nothing about the duties of so and so who works for a crown corporation. Whether it be Canadian Arsenals—

Mr. Yvon Dupuis (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

I do not think that this motion has anything to do with crown corporations. It deals with the civil service and the advisability of setting up a standing committee to hear the complaints of the civil servants. It does not mention the crown corporations at all and the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) must know it as well as the other members in this chamber.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, even if there is no mention made of the crown corporations, I am of the opinion that the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) intended to include them also.

Mr. Dupuis: I feel, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has no right to impute intentions to the hon. member for Vancouver East and he is intelligent enough to know that there is no mention made of crown corporations in the motion under study.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I have the right to make suggestions but I think that the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville has no right to take over the prerogatives of the Speaker.

Mr. Dupuis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I do not permit the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm to pretend that I take over the prerogatives of the Speaker. However, I draw the attention of the Speaker to the remarks of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm and I would ask him to call the member to order.

Mr. Pigeon: I do not recall that the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville was addressing you; he was addressing your humble servant, the member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

Mr. Dupuis: The word "humble" is superfluous.

Mr. Pigeon: I thank you for your complimentary remark.

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think that the word "competent" should be added to the word "humble".

Suggested Committee on Public Service

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere (Mr. Paul).

Coming back to the subject under discussion, I sincerely believe that the hon. member for Vancouver East intended also to include the crown corporations, which also employ Canadian people. The crown corporations' employees are also denied certain rights—

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to have your ruling—

(Text):

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order.

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, I should like you to tell the house whether the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is in order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Up to this point I think the hon. member who now has floor has been referring to the resolution before the house. However, if he wishes to suggest that it should be extended to some other body, I think he has a right to do so.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: I wish to thank you, Mr. Speaker.

(Text):

Mr. Dupuis: I will not appeal your ruling.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: I have never questioned your ability, Mr. Speaker. I would rather question that of the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville.

(Text):

Mr. Dupuis: I said I would not appeal Mr. Speaker's decision.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: And, I would hate to see the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville question your ability. On this side of the house we are convinced of your integrity and of your keen sense of responsibility. We know that your decisions are in the best interests of hon. members.

Coming back to the motion of the hon. member for Vancouver East, if there is any uneasiness at all, it is most likely to be felt among the employees of crown corporations. It seems to me that the hon. member would be well advised to submit this measure some other year, for I fear that the present government members are neither men enough nor conscious enough of their responsibilities to accept without more ado this motion, which would allow civil servants, to whom at present the right of appeal is denied, to obtain redress of their grievances.

I ask the government to awaken to its responsibilities. I ask the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville, who is a parliamentary secretary, to see to it that in the few minutes left, his colleagues do not kill this resolution which defends the rights of the civil servants. I wish to point out that not only is the motion of the hon. member for Vancouver East excellent in itself, but that it also is in the best interest of the public service and of all Canadians. In fact, this motion should be adopted forthwith.

Mr. Dupuis: Why have you not done so yourself?

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville has asked me a question. The answer is that when we were in power we had a comprehensive program, but we were defeated through the concerted efforts of Liberals and Social Crediters.

(Text):

Mr. Gerald A. Regan (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I just wish to take a brief moment in which to say I wholeheartedly support the principle of this motion and also to compliment the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) on the manner in which it is drafted. The only thing I should like to add is this. I feel that prevailing rate employees, so-called, should also be included in this matter. Civil servants certainly need a better and more effective grievance procedure. One would hope that when this government introduces a system of collective bargaining with arbitration procedure soon, it is my great hope—

An hon. Member: Be careful.

Mr. Regan: I am being careful. It is my great hope that at that time it would also include in the arbitration procedure a very effective grievance procedure. That step would take care of this problem. Something is necessary in order to give to civil servants the opportunity to have their grievances effectively dealt with. Again I would urge that in this resolution the question of prevailing rate employees should also have been considered.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, it is very pleasing to note—

Mr. Knowles: A friend of the civil service.

Mr. Byrne: —that the hon. member for L'Assomption-Montcalm—

Mr. Pigeon: Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

Mr. Byrne: I stand corrected. I am glad the hon. member has brought that omission to my attention. I am pleased to note that he has again recovered his voice. We sat for several months in which we felt that he just roosted rather than spoke, and we are very pleased to note this recovery of his voice.

My purpose in rising is—

Mr. Knowles: To talk the motion out.

Mr. Byrne: —to support this motion, inasmuch as it is a worthy resolution. I wish to draw the attention of the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) to the fact that we have an industrial relations committee of this house. It is a standing committee set up under standing order 65. This committee provides a forum for discussions dealing with industrial relations, labour relations and so on. I have been a member of that committee, with but a short recess, since 1949.

Mr. Pigeon: Two minutes to go.

Mr. Byrne: I am pleased to note that the hon. member has recovered the use of his arms as well as his voice.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Byrne: Having been a member of this committee—

Suggested Committee on Public Service

Mr. Pigeon: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

(Translation):

The hon. member is going to kill an excellent motion.

(Text):

Mr. Byrne: I regret that I did not have the benefit of the facility for simultaneous translation and therefore I did not understand the words—

Mr. Pigeon: I mentioned that you will kill this motion and that is all.

Mr. Byrne: —so well spoken by my hon. friend. Hence I do not know what his question of privilege was if, in fact, he had one. This I doubt, having in mind the actions of the hon. member in the past.

I was about to say—

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. Byrne: —that I have been a member of the industrial relations committee since 1949 with but a short recess. In those years, however, we sat very few times, perhaps once or twice a session. Sometimes we went through a complete session without having sat at all. Would it not be possible to incorporate what the hon. member's intention is into this resolution?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. It being six o'clock I must advise the house that the hour for consideration of private members' business has expired.

Mr. Knowles: The end of the 59th day.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX "A"

MONTREAL STOCK EXCHANGE
453 St. Francois Xavier street
Montreal 1, P.Q.
Office of the President

June 18, 1963.

The Honourable Walter L. Gordon, F.C.A., Minister of Finance,
Parliament Buildings,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Mr. Minister:

The financial capitals of the world have just about had enough from Canada. Last Friday, the initial reaction to the budget was one of bewilderment and dismay. Yesterday, it was anger and scorn. Today, our friends in the western world fully realize that we don't want them or their money and that Canadians who deal with them in even modest amounts will suffer a 30 per cent expropriation of the assets involved. And their reaction? If that is what Canadians want, let them have it.

May I offer a few general comments.

1. The entire series of measures aimed at discouraging non-resident investment is based on a serious error. In the budget address you stated:

"As I indicated earlier, it is the policy of this government to encourage direct foreign investment in new enterprises in this country on the basis of partnership with Canadian residents. While this type of investment is of great value to Canada, it is our view that non-resident "take-overs" of established Canadian companies rarely confer any benefit on the Canadian economy."

This is complete and utter nonsense. A non-resident take-over confers great benefits on the Canadian economy. We may not like it but that is not the point. The new owners bring the advantages of new technology, new research and development, new products and ideas which can immensely benefit the Canadian consumer and which will be denied him otherwise. The former owners receive funds which become available for investment in new Canadian enterprises or in government undertakings which contribute to the expansion of our economy. Even if they invest the funds abroad, we reduce the balance of our international indebtedness and the income in dividends and interest from such investment improves our balance of payments by reducing the net outflow on current account. All this is elementary.

2. Underlying this series of measures is a misconception about the part played by shareholders. I quote:

"I suggest that a 25 per cent equity interest is in most cases appropriate to ensure that a Canadian point of view is always available when company policy decisions are arrived at. A smaller percentage would probably not be sufficient for this purpose. A larger percentage would be neither necessary nor in many cases practicable".

Presumably, you are counting on the Canadian shareholder demanding a larger raw material content, a certified list of fees and expenses paid to management, detailed statements of the subsidiary's export efforts, prices of intercompany transfers of materials and components, etc. A not very proud role is assigned to the Canadian shareholder. His contribution will be to badger, to harass and to torment management and the 75 per cent controlling interest. How futile and how unrealistic. Today, the shareholder does not care that much. If he does not like a company or its management, he sells his stock and quietly goes his way. A greater Canadian voice in the direction of subsidiaries will not be obtained in this manner. The success (?) of the budget depends on Canadian shareholders imposing their will on the majority interest, which cannot be done.

Canadians have been given the opportunity many times in the past to purchase shares in Canadian subsidiaries but the record has not been a happy one as the attached table, which the Montreal stock exchange filed with the royal commission on banking and finance, shows. If subsidiaries do make 25 per cent available and Canadian shareholders do not respond, are we going to solve the unhappy dilemma by forced payroll deductions?

3. The burden of the 30 per cent capital levy falls, naturally enough, on those who have saved, have invested and have so managed their affairs that they possess property and investments of a reasonable size. It falls on listed corporations by virtue of the amendment to the Excise Tax Act and it falls on unlisted, privately held and family owned enterprises by virtue of the following paragraph from the budget address:

"It will be noted that this measure applies only to the shares of listed public companies Measures are under consideration, and may be discussed with the provinces at an appropriate time, which will apply to all Canadian companies including private companies. I trust that no flood of sales of established Canadian concerns to non-residents will develop in an attempt to anticipate the further measures to which I have referred, in light of the declared view of the government that such sales are generally undesirable."

In effect, a family or individual, forced to sell a private enterprise to provide liquidity to meet estate taxes and succession duties, cannot sell in the best market if that market happens to be non-resident. In many instances, there may be no offer from Canadians or an offer far below a non-resident offer. The owner has to compare a non-resident offer minus the 30 per cent confiscation demanded by Ottawa with the best domestic bid. A family, unable to obtain a satisfactory offer from Canadians and reluctant to accept a non-resident offer with the attendant 30 per cent Federal confiscation, may, in the end, lose everything if an untimely death forces the liquidaton of their enterprise. There are interesting implications here.

Skipping the semantics, we can see that the securities sales tax is not fundamentally a sales or excise tax,—it is a tax on wealth, a capital levy. It is far worse than 30 per cent capital gains tax because a capital gains tax falls on an increase in wealth between two points in time,—between the value of the asset at time of purchase and the value at time of sale. This new tax simply expropriates 30 per cent of the asset at the moment of transfer. It is not a sufficient defense to say that the tax applies only in the special circumstances of sales of assets to non-residents. It exists and the levy can be extended in its application at the will of the federal authority.

Second, if the government is not concerned here with revenue (the unbelievable rate is evidence of this), the purpose of the budget must be to destroy (prevent) certain activities engaged in by its citizens. In other words, the government is using the power to tax really to prohibit the sale, by Canadians of assets for money to citizens of the United States, United Kingdom, France or other friendly powers. I am not a lawyer but it seems to me that legislation of this nature respecting property and civil rights comes under provincial jurisdiction and is beyond the competence of the federal government.

Premier Lesage, Rene Levesque, Paul Gerin-Lajoie and other members of the Quebec cabinet have repeatedly referred to the gradual erosion of the autonomy of the provinces. The creation of the new securities sales tax, without prior discussion with the provinces would be difficult to justify at any time; it is unthinkable in the present atmosphere of strain and suspicion. It is a perfect example of the manner in which a new tax 'gimmick' can reduce existing sources of provincial revenue or invade a sphere of provincial authority, namely property and civil rights.

The forcing of increased Canadian ownership by the use of federal taxing powers creates two distinct sets of problems,—(a) the effect on existing subsidiaries and (b) the capital levy on future share transactions.

(a) By doubling the withholding tax on dividend payments and by refusing certain tax concessions to companies with less than 25 per cent Canadian ownership, the government is in effect describing 'good' and 'bad' subsidiaries. This raises certain questions in the applied art of discrimination.

1. Are Dupont and C.I.L. 'bad' Canadian companies? Less than 20 per cent of their stock is in the hands of the public.

2. If they raise public participation to 25 per cent, will they become 'good' Canadian companies and qualify for reduced taxation?

3. If Canadians hold 25 per cent of the shares of these companies one month and then reduce their holdings by 5 per cent to buy bonds, do these companies become 'bad' companies through circumstances beyond their control?

4. Abitibi and many other Canadian corporations, operate wholly owned subsidiaries abroad. Will foreign retaliatory legislation force these companies to spin off ownership?

5. Does the government intend to offer 25 per cent ownership in the subsidiary of Polymer Corp. to citizens of France? Holland?

6. Does the government expect further direct investment (which it approves, see page 18) to be encouraged to come into Canada by these dipsy-doodling and discriminatory methods of taxing profits and repatriated dividends?

7. Does the government not expect other nations to retaliate?

8. Will these discriminatory measures improve Quebec's chances of attracting capital from Europe?

9. Will we not, in the final analysis, find our capital in the Ottawa printing presses rather than the capital markets of the world?

10. etc., etc.,

b. The 30 per cent capital levy is designed to discourage take-overs but makes no distinction between ordinary portfolio investments in the country and actual take-overs.

As a result:—

1. The liquidity, depth and breadth of our security markets will decrease sharply and we can look for a decline in the market value of Canadian securities. The Canadian investor will be the first casualty of the proposed legislation.

2. Supply and demand forces on Canadian markets become distorted. Foreign buying will be discouraged and Canadian owners of securities will face a 30 per cent confiscation if they offer shares to a value of more than $50,000 in one day. This is not a large amount.

3. The tax will create two markets and two prices for Canadian securities—one in Canada where the tax is applicable and liquidity reduced and the other in New York where transactions can take place among non-residents free of tax. Thus the New York and London exchanges will grow at the expense of the Canadian exchanges.

4. Arbitrage houses, which operate between Canada, the United States and Europe and bring great depth to the market, will disappear. They cannot operate on one side of the market only.

5. Hundreds of millions of dollars of Canadian shares held abroad overhang the Canadian market. The Canadian exchanges will now provide restricted and discriminatory markets for these investors. The liquidation of even a small portion of these holdings would be disastrous to the Canadian equity owner.

6. The budget measures will encourage Canadians to invest in American securities where the markets are free and non-discriminatory. Exchange controls are clearly the next step.

7. Funds, trust companies etc. will hesitate to buy Canadian equities because the markets in which they deal will be reduced and restricted.

8. etc., etc., etc.,

We will not lay the foundations of a greater Canada on a budget such as this. Since the days of the Marshall plan, the nations of the west have been working toward a greater economic and political unity. This budget will turn back the clock as we Canadians shut ourselves up in our own tight little corner.

Foreign ownership is a problem in Canada. You are quite right in this but this investment is not financed by foreign governments or inspired by desires to impair our political sovereignty. It is financed by the savings and investments of friends in other nations and is successful because of the initiative and enterprise that accompanies and manages their capital. The antidote lies in our own private sector as we strive to accumulate the savings to invest on our own account and to find within ourselves a similar energy and imagination. This is a long and hard road but we must remember that we have sought, relied on and lived with foreign capital for generations and cannot now suddenly take an axe to murder the record of trust and confidence that has grown up over the years.

Some day, a political leader will rise up in Canada and say to the Canadian people that the solution to the problem of non-resident ownership does not lie in the vote getting arena at all; only then will Canadians have found true leadership and only then will our friends abroad breathe more easily and be happy for us.

Sincerely,

ERIC W. KIERANS,
President.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, June 20, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

MEASURE TO INCREASE CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN INDUSTRIES AND UNDERTAKINGS

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Finance seconded by Mr. Pickersgill, moves:

That the house do go into committee of the whole at its next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to further Canadian participation in the development of industries and undertakings in Canada—

Shall I dispense?

Some hon. Members: Dispense.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Knowles: No, Mr. Speaker; this should be transferred to government orders.

Mr. Pickersgill: We did dispense.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Knowles: What is the motion?

Mr. Speaker: I will read the motion:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to further Canadian participation in the development of industries and undertakings in Canada, to increase Canadian participation in the ownership of undertakings in Canada, and generally to further the development of the resources and industries of Canada; and for such purposes to establish an investment company, to be called the Canada Development Corporation, with a share capital structure whereby the largest possible numbers of Canadians may directly and indirectly invest capital in and profit from the ownership of Canadian industries and undertakings and the development of Canada; to authorize the guarantee by Canada of certain obligations of the corporation; to provide for the approval by the Minister of Finance of issues of guaranteed obligations of the corporation; to provide that the total liabilities of the corporation outstanding at any time shall not exceed one thousand million dollars; and to provide further for other related and incidental matters.

Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My point of order, Mr. Speaker, was not a request that you should read the whole motion. It was that under standing order 21(2) the calling of this motion merely means that it is transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders in the same or at the next sitting of the house. We do not debate it at this point, we just transfer it.

Mr. Speaker: May I be permitted to call the attention of the hon. member to standing order 21(1), which reads as follows:

Government notices of motions for the house to go into a committee of the whole at the next sitting of the house when put from the Chair shall be decided without debate or amendment.

The next subsection reads:

(2) When any other government notice of motion is called from the Chair, it shall be deemed to have been forthwith transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders in the same or at the next sitting of the house.

Is the motion carried?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Motion agreed to.

FINANCE

INQUIRIES RESPECTING TAXATION PROPOSALS IN BUDGET

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance and ask him something he did not explain yesterday. Why was this 30 per cent tax on securities suspended so suddenly and precipitously, and why did the government not wait for the closing of the stock exchanges before making this announcement? The minister will have noticed there were tremendous dealings yesterday and large amounts were made and lost. Why was there a departure in this case from the regular course which has been followed in this house throughout the years?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): The government thought that as soon as a decision had been reached it should be announced as early as possible.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I can well understand the desire of the government to do something to meet the zero hour of the 60 days of decision, but I ask the minister this. Is he now prepared, in view of the fact that there were very large windfall profits made on stock exchanges, to permit the setting up of a committee or an inquiry to be made into this whole transaction so that the people of Canada may understand the reason for such action which, to numbers of us who try to follow constitutional principles, is entirely inexcusable and unwarranted?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I certainly do not enjoy intervening at this stage, but I think I must if the rules of the house are to be applied. May I call the attention of all hon. members to Beauchesne, paragraph 171, where it says:

> The purpose of a question is to obtain information and not to supply it to the house.

If hon. members will read on further they will find examples given of questions which should not be asked or things which should not be done. Subparagraph (v) says:

> A question oral or written must not . . . anticipate an order of the day or other matters.

I understand the great interest in the matter under discussion, but I wonder whether in the question period we could avoid debate as far as possible and stick to pointed, topical and urgent questions.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I could not be more in agreement with you. Therefore I say to the minister, why did you do it?

An hon. Member: Resign.

Mr. Gordon: I have already answered that question, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if he will give the house an assurance that there will be no further changes made in the budget during this session until the doors of the stock exchanges have been closed?

Some hon. Members: Answer.

(Translation):

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

Can the minister tell us whether he arrived at his decision prior to or after Mr. Kierans' visit at his office?

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: As I said yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I took the decision despite the visit of Mr. Kierans to my office.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question.

My question was as follows. Was the decision taken prior to or after Mr. Kierans' visit?

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I do not know whether the hon. member heard the reply of the minister, but I did and I thought he replied to the hon. member for Lapointe.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think that Hansard will prove tomorrow that my question has not been answered. In fact, my question was as follows. Did the minister make his decision prior to or after Mr. Kierans' visit?

(Text):

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether he did consult or receive representations from Senator Louis Gelinas, a prominent investment broker and leading collector for the Liberal party in Montreal—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understand the hon. member was looking in front of him, but on the other hand he must know by now that off the cuff remarks and that type of question are really extending the rules beyond all comprehension.

Mr. Balcer: It was for pure identification. However, hon. members opposite know full well who Senator Louis Gelinas is as far as their party interests are concerned. My question is, did the minister consult or receive representations from Senator Gelinas before taking the decision to withdraw the 30 per cent take-over tax?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, Mr. Kierans was accompanied on his mission by eight or nine—I do not know the exact number—members of the Montreal stock exchange, of whom Senator Gelinas was one.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): A supplementary question. I should like to direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of reports circulating in financial circles that there was a leak of information in advance of the important announcement by the Minister of Finance yesterday, would the Prime Minister assure the house immediately that there will be a complete and judicial inquiry into the activities on the stock exchange yesterday?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have received no evidence that there was any such leak, and if the hon. gentleman has any such evidence it is his duty to produce it.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? Does the Minister of Finance—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. There are a few other hon. members on my list and there must be a certain order of precedence. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Finance, and ask him whether Mr. Kierans and the eight or nine other gentlemen who accompanied him received any indication from the minister of his intention to withdraw the take-over tax?

Mr. Gordon: No.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They certainly guessed.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, and it is one of urgency, not political expediency. Will the minister advise this house whether he has received a letter from the Vancouver metropolitan housebuilders association in the name of the president, K. R. Beedie, informing him that if clarification is not forthcoming immediately on the application of the new 11 per cent federal sales tax on construction materials, there has been unanimous agreement by the house building association to stop all construction projects in Vancouver and lay off some 5,000 men? In view of the urgency in this matter, will the minister comment on this situation?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, the letter may be in my office, but I have not seen it if it is.

Mr. Balcer: I should like to ask the minister if he did consult with his three outside experts before the withdrawal of the 30 per cent sales tax.

Mr. Gordon: I did not consult anybody except the Prime Minister before making this decision.

An hon. Member: That is not what you said yesterday.

Mr. Gordon: I should like to add that, as I said yesterday, I consulted the Prime Minister and the members of the cabinet.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Gregoire: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker? Could the Minister of Finance tell us what are the administrative difficulties which have compelled him to withdraw that tax?

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to go into that but, although I am not an expert in the rules, I suggest that is a matter that should be taken up in the debate.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the hon. member for Lapointe that his last supplementary question was in the nature of an argument. It was not a question at all, and the Minister of Finance was quite right in rejecting it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would point out that yesterday the minister told us that in view of certain administrative difficulties he was not withdrawing this tax but suspending it. Certainly the house has the right to know what were the reasons for the withdrawal or suspension. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that is a very proper question, and there is going to be no other opportunity to find out.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: With the greatest respect I suggest that the question was proper and the minister should answer because there are circumstances that ought to be clarified in connection with this matter.

Mr. Pearson: In so far as the point raised by the right hon. gentleman is concerned, he may have forgotten that we have a six day debate on the budget.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have not forgotten the six day debate, but we are trying to get information. We know this is the 60th day of decision, but we have not had very many decisions.

Some hon. Members: Order.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As a matter of fact, if we wish to take part in a debate on the budget, we have to be informed. That is why we are asking questions today, and we are entitled to get answers.

(Text):

Mr. Douglas: May I ask a supplementary question. May I ask the minister if the administrative difficulties to which he has referred were brought to his attention by the Montreal stock exchange or the officials of his own department?

Mr. Gordon: They were drawn to my attention by a number of people, including a delegation from the Montreal stock exchange and the officials of my department.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): I have a question for the Prime Minister. In order to allay the state of uncertainty prevailing in financial circles and generally throughout the country because of widespread rumours prevalent this morning—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I have said at least twice this afternoon that long statements leading up to what I hope will be short questions should not be permitted. The hon. member I think understands that.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Martineau: I thank you for your remarks, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask a very simple question of the Prime Minister. I should like him to give the house the assurance, in view of the rumour that has prevailed, that should the Minister of Finance hand in his resignation—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martineau: —it will be announced in the house.

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is not a question asking for information; it is giving information. It is completely out of order.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the provisions of the budget concerning the extension of write-off provisions for exploration purposes to pipe line companies is running a collision course with the principles and terms—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Hamilton: —of the National Energy Board Act, will the minister postpone this section of the budget until the action contemplated can be reconciled with existing legislation?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The last time I intervened I was not too successful, and I hope I will have better success this time. I did refer to Beauchesne, and I did mention that under section 171(v) oral and written questions should not anticipate orders of the day; and the order of the day, of course, is to discuss the budget. It seems to me that while a great many of these questions are of great interest, the proper place to raise them and discuss them is at the time the budget is being debated.

Mr. Heber E. Smith (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Speaking in Chicago at an American hemisphere dinner very recently the minister is reported in today's Globe and Mail as having said that "higher sales by Canadian subsidiary companies could mean increased profits for United States investors". Does that indicate that we may expect a further change in the budget by the removal of the discriminatory withholding tax on dividends of United States subsidiaries in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This again is exactly the type of question I was referring to two and a half minutes ago.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, can the Prime Minister inform the house whether official or unofficial representations have been received from the United States government regarding any of the proposals in the budget on the ground that they are discriminatory, anti-American and the like?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I have not myself received any representations from the United States government on this matter. Whether any such representations have been received in the Department of External Affairs I do not know, but I will make inquiries.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance which may be supplementary or related to the one asked by the hon. member for Vancouver East a moment ago. I would like to ask him whether his department, or the Department of National Revenue, has issued a clarifying statement respecting the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials so that those in the construction industry in Canada will know where they stand and where they can go from here?

Mr. Gordon: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Finance. In view of the imposition of the 11 per cent tax on ready-mix transit companies, which form a prominent part of the construction industry across Canada, is the minister prepared to take another look at it and, if he will not bring in relief for this 11 per cent sales tax, does he realize some of these companies will qualify for bankruptcy?

(Translation):

[Later:]

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Had he received a note of protest from the secretary of state, Mr. Luther Hodges, concerning the 30 per cent tax on foreign take-overs, before the Minister of Finance announced its withdrawal in the house yesterday?

(Text):

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, Mr. Hodges is not secretary of state of the United States. I believe he is secretary of commerce. I answered that question when I replied to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition that I had received no representations from the United States government in connection with this matter.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the number of telephone calls we have been receiving about the application of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials, could the minister tell the house how, for instance, a plumbing contractor who signed a contract prior to June 14, but has not yet purchased the required materials—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I must tell him that his question is out of order.

(Text):

Mr. Valade: A supplementary question to this one, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: There can hardly be a supplementary to a question which is not in order.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he is aware that some investment houses in the United States are advising their customers to sell Canadian shares because of the "on again off again Finnegan"—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry. Order, please.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Girouard: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: One moment, please.

(Text):

Just a moment. Is the hon. member asking a question or is he giving information?

Mr. Balcer: He is asking a question.

Mr. Fairweather: I am going to ask the minister will he soon make an announcement designed to restore Canada's image abroad?

Mr. Gordon: I would just like to say that I think the Prime Minister has done that.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Girouard: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the Minister of National Revenue whether he will reply to the question of which I sent him notice?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have explained on three occasions this afternoon that that type of question deals with the debate under consideration this afternoon, and in my humble opinion it should not be asked at this time.

(Translation):

Mr. Robert Beaule (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of the fact that the Minister of National Revenue was ready to answer the question which was put to him by the hon. member for Labelle, would you allow him to give an answer?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the hon. member that no minister is obliged to reply under our rules.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Does he intend to secure legal advice from the Department of Justice on the constitutional character of the 30 per cent tax on industrial take-overs, the enforcement of which has only been postponed, according to the statement made yesterday by the Minister of Finance?

(Text):

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker. No question of the legality of that tax has arisen.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Pigeon: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the statement made at 2.45 p.m. yesterday by the Minister of Finance, could the Prime Minister tell the house how many new millionaires, in his estimation, have been made as a result of the speculations on the stock exchanges yesterday?

(Text):

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the many wires that most hon. members are receiving, and in view of the administrative difficulties that are being run into with respect to the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials, will the government consider withdrawing this tax?

Mr. Gordon: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Winch: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I have been waiting a long time to put it, but this gives me the opportunity. If I cannot get it one way maybe I can get it another. As a supplementary to my previous question and to the one just asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, in view of the minister's answer to my question some time ago, the seriousness of information from the Canadian Press, and the letter which I presume he will have on his desk stating that 5,000 people by unanimous decision of contractors in Vancouver are going to be laid off unless they get clarification of the 11 per cent tax, will the minister tell us what consideration is being given to handle the situation and prevent lay-offs in the construction industry?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly at the very first opportunity this afternoon find that letter, examine it and consider it.

Mr. Olson: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Finance inform the house when he expects this clarifying statement to go forward respecting the application of the new tax?

Mr. Stuart A. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Will non-profit or charitable organizations engaged in the construction of housing projects for senior citizens be required to pay the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I will have to get a legal opinion on that.

Hon. H. J. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Does the minister think that the application of the 30 per cent security sales tax will be considered as being anti-American?

Mr. Gordon: In answer to that question, Mr. Speaker, may I say that this tax has been withdrawn subject to a review of the administrative difficulties involved in its application.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works.

Could the minister tell the house whether the construction projects for the world's fair in Montreal will be carried on in spite of the 11 per cent tax imposed by the Minister of Finance on building materials and machinery?

(Text):

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, this is a matter of great importance to Montreal.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member please resume his seat. I do not see any question of privilege in the hon. member's statement.

Mr. Valade: The minister does not want to reply, then?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I have a question arising out of the statement made by the Minister of Finance a moment ago with respect to his statement of yesterday. I understood it to be that there was a decision not to decide, that the matter was simply under suspension. Is the 30 per cent tax—I have forgotten the number of the section—definitely withdrawn, so we can be assured that it is withdrawn, or is it simply suspended pending, as the minister said yesterday, further consideration, thereby creating further uncertainty?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to the statement I made yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, surely the minister can clarify the atmosphere with respect to this matter. Either it is withdrawn or it is suspended. The confusion engendered becomes worse every day when we hear this kind of comment from the minister.

Mr. Balcer: I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether the minister can tell us precisely for how long this tax is going to be suspended. Would he give us the precise period?

Mr. Gordon: In my statement yesterday I said that the resolution had been withdrawn.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Gordon: Surely that is clear enough.

Some hon. Members: You said "suspended".

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Will the minister tell the house how he intends to deal with the building contracts signed prior to the application of the 11 per cent tax on building materials, and when he intends to do so?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is one of several questions we have had this afternoon on this matter, and I think the hon. member by now understands the attitude of the Chair with regard thereto.

(Translation):

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): With due respect, Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to comment on the ruling you just made for the fourth time this afternoon. There is nothing on the order paper to indicate that the hon. member who put the question will have an opportunity to take part in the debate. He is asking for information of an urgent nature, and nothing indicates either that the Minister of Finance will have an opportunity to answer those questions or that he will be in the house.

I submit with respect, Mr. Speaker, that the various questions which were put are urgent and that the greatest latitude should be given hon. members to obtain necessary and urgent information. In making your ruling, you are depriving hon. members of information of an urgent character.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I have listened with a great deal of interest and respect to the arguments of the honourable and learned member, but would he be kind enough to assist the Chair by referring to Beauchesne, citation 171, where the author deals with annotations, comments and precedents? To reply directly to his suggestions, let me say once more that a question, oral or written, must not anticipate an order of the day or other matters. These are the words of Beauchesne.

I was basing myself on this recognized authority, not to prevent hon. members from getting information but in an effort to control the course of asking for information. It does seem to me that if we could get on with the orders of the day and come to the business which lies ahead, a great deal of information could be supplied and a good many of the questions which are now being asked could be answered.

(Translation):

Mr. Paul: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but there is nothing on the order paper to indicate that the hon. members will get the information they ask for today, because nothing indicates that they will be able to take part in the debate or that the Minister of Finance will then be able to supply the requested information.

I respectfully submit that Beauchesne citation 173 you just quoted does not apply to the nature of questions which are being addressed to the Minister of Finance.

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: I had understood that Your Honour had made a ruling, and I had also understood that the rulings of the Chair could not be debated.

Mr. Knowles: I rise on a question of privilege. A moment ago the Minister of Finance told us he had nothing to add to what he said yesterday. Then he said the provision was withdrawn.

Mr. Gordon: The resolution.

Mr. Knowles: The resolution was withdrawn. Paragraph 2 of the minister's statement as reported in yesterday's Hansard at page 1321 reads as follows:

> It may take a little time to work out satisfactorily the difficulties referred to. Pending a solution, the government proposes to withdraw paragraph 11 of the budget resolution respecting the Excise Tax Act.

I submit there is considerable difference between a statement that it is withdrawn and a statement that it is withdrawn pending a solution.

Mr. Gordon: That particular resolution has been withdrawn. Whether or not there will be another resolution depends on government policy, and it also depends on whether these difficulties are subject to being resolved.

Mr. Nowlan: Indecision.

Mr. Valade: On the point of order which was raised earlier, I wish to refer Your Honour respectfully to citation 178 of Beauchesne, which states:

> Questions addressed to ministers should relate to the public affairs with which they are officially connected, to proceedings pending in parliament, or to any matter of administration for which the minister is responsible. Within these lines an explanation can be sought regarding the intentions of the government, but not an expression of opinion upon matters of policy.

I asked the Minister of Public Works what the intention of the government was with regard to the world fair. I respectfully suggest that my question was in order and that the refusal of the minister to reply is another sign that this government is arrogant.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): I refused to answer this question on one ground alone. The hon. member was not asking for information, he was asking for a legal opinion. That is the only reason I did not answer. If the hon. member wishes to have any information on matters within my jurisdiction I ask him to go ahead, because I shall be pleased to answer him at any time.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Will the Minister of Finance give the house an assurance that if a new resolution is brought in, as he has suggested, it will be announced after the stock market is closed for the day?

(Translation):

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. Can the minister explain why, after instructions were given in this house, the letter from Mr. Kierans was printed only in English and does not appear in today's French edition of Hansard?

(Text):

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): It may be that Mr. Kierans' letter was untranslatable, but I am neither the editor of debates nor have I any constitutional responsibility for the editor of debates. However, I have no doubt the hon. gentleman's question will be taken notice of by the editor, and that any deficiency will be remedied.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: I should like to ask a supplementary question. In my opinion, I would say rather to the Secretary of State that it is true that false theories are hardly translatable in French.

(Text):

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is really supplementary to the one asked of the Prime Minister by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi a while ago. In view of the Prime Minister's reply to the effect that any member having evidence in connection with an inquiry should bring it forward, do I take it that the government will only institute that inquiry if somebody brings evidence forward, and will the government institute an inquiry if evidence is presented?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, if any hon. member has any evidence of substance to bring forward in this matter we will certainly institute an inquiry.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I think I have evidence. I think the visit of Mr. Kierans to the office of the minister before he announced the withdrawal of this tax is evidence.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have the greatest respect for the hon. member, as he well knows, but his statement at this time is really out of order.

Mr. Gregoire: On a point of order, the Prime Minister asked whether some members of this house had some evidence, so I think I am completely in order in answering the Prime Minister and giving the evidence that I have. I maintain the visit of Mr. Kierans is evidence that we should have a committee of inquiry into the matter.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's information is very interesting if given at the proper time.

Mr. Gregoire: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry; the hon. member must resume his seat.

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of Finance give the house a revised figure of the over-all budget deficit, considering the withdrawal of the 30 per cent tax? Will it exceed the billion mark now?

Mr. Gordon: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nugent: I have a supplementary question to that asked by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi. Was not the purpose of the inquiry which the hon. member asked about to see whether there was any evidence, and if there was not, to restore the confidence of the people in budget security?

Mr. Pearson: Apparently the hon. member would convert the inquiry into an inquisition.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: May I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker? Does the Prime Minister consider that Mr. Kierans' visit to the office of the Minister of Finance may constitute a basis for the establishment of an inquiry committee on the withdrawal of the 30 per cent tax?

(Text):

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Nugent.]

(Translation):

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance? How could the government yield to a man like Mr. Kierans, who insulted the Liberal government by writing in his letter:

> Will we not, in the final analysis, find our capital in the Ottawa printing presses rather than the capital markets of the world?

Mr. Vincent Drouin (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, further to a question asked a little while ago by the hon. member for Lapointe, could the Secretary of State tell us if the government intends to have a translation made of Major Douglas' books which constitute the misleading doctrine of the Social Credit, in order to enable certain Social Crediters to be conversant with Social Credit.

(Text):

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the question by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert to the Minister of Finance a few moments ago was not answered, I wonder whether I might ask the Prime Minister if he can assure the house that any new resolution which may be brought down in conjunction with this 30 per cent tax would not be announced until after stock market hours?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, these matters will be done in the proper way.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Comox-Alberni.

Mr. Bell: May I ask the Prime Minister what he thinks is the right way?

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member wishes to ask a question would he kindly address the Chair first? Otherwise we cannot have any order in our proceedings.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. A few minutes ago the hon. member for Royal asked a question of the Minister of Finance which I believe he was prepared to answer but in the confusion did not do so. I wonder whether he could answer it now.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox.

Mr. Nasserden: Would the minister answer that question put by the hon. member for Royal?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member well knows that the minister is the best judge of his own actions.

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. According to a statement appearing on page 1006 of Hansard the 30 per cent tax on $50,000 stock sales by Canadian residents to non-residents went into effect last Thursday night. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance how much revenue this tax yielded during its brief life?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman would put the question on the order paper I will be very glad to get the information for him.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance, or if he does not care to answer perhaps his parliamentary assistant who sits beside him might do so. Were the visitors to the minister's office, Mr. Kierans and the several others, obliged to take an oath of secrecy before they left?

(Translation):

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works, and I hope that the Secretary of State will not answer in his place. Could the minister tell us whether the construction work for the world exhibition will continue in spite of the imposition of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials and machinery?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that the hon. member put this question to the mayor of Montreal who will give him an answer.

Mr. Valade: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister intend to indemnify the authorities of the city of Montreal for the outlays resulting from the application of this measure?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member must know that is a question that must be put on the order paper.

Mr. Olson: I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance or the Minister of National Revenue. I do not wish to transgress any ruling that you have made, Mr. Speaker, so I refer you to citation 178 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, wherein it is stated:

> Questions addressed to ministers should relate to the public affairs with which they are officially connected, proceedings pending in parliament,—

And so on. What I should like to know is whether one or the other of the ministers would inform the house when they expect to issue a clarifying statement on the application of this new sales tax. I think it is a matter of urgent public importance. Furthermore, I have no assurance that either the Minister of Finance or the Minister of National Revenue is going to take part in the debate today. I would appeal to you, therefore, to allow this question so the construction industry across Canada can obtain some information as to when they can expect a clarification of this newly imposed tax.

Mr. Gordon: I must say that I think this is a very reasonable question. I will discuss it with my colleague the Minister of National Revenue at five o'clock, and I hope we will be able to accommodate the hon. gentleman at that time.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a question for the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. Are we to take it from what has been said today that the people of this country must assume the government is in doubt as to whether the recommendation contained in section 11 of the budget resolution, in the same or other form, will be reinstituted?

Mr. Gordon: No, Mr. Speaker.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—INQUIRY AS TO EXTENSION OF AGE LIMIT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, since this is a rather important day I would like to direct a question to the determined, non-smoking Minister of National Health and Welfare. When will the government take action to extend the family allowances beyond the present age of 16 years for children attending school, as was promised during the election campaign?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this being a matter of government policy, an announcement will be made when the government deems it expedient.

INCOME TAX

OIL AND GAS—DEDUCTION OF DRILLING AND EXPLORATION EXPENSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday the Minister of Finance promised an answer to a question I put to him asking for the names of six companies which sought exemptions with regard to income tax. Is the minister now in a position to give that information to the house?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I apologize to the hon. member. I have been occupied. I have not got the answer to his question. I will try to get it and give it to him tomorrow or the next day.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REFERENCE OF TREATY TO HOUSE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: Before the hon. member for Kootenay West puts his question, has it to do with the Columbia river?

An hon. Member: What else?

Mr. Herridge: I confess it has, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Well, I must say it gives me a great deal of pain to make these remarks, especially to the hon. member who has been a close friend for many years, but he was kind enough to send me notice of this question as well as sending the original to the Prime Minister and I must say first of all that the question is a page and a half long. The first part is a long statement and the latter part begins, "Does the Prime Minister think".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: That is a matter of opinion, and the purpose of a question is to obtain information and not to supply it to the house. In the circumstances I wonder whether the hon. member could quickly rephrase his question if he still desires to give information rather than ask a question.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, as a result of your admonition I shall try to revise the question but it is owing to the particular circumstances surrounding the question that I considered it had to be somewhat lengthy. I ask this question of the Prime Minister at the request of quite a number of people in my constituency and the Kootenays, including some prominent Liberals. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister during the election campaign informed audiences in British Columbia and Alberta that the Columbia river treaty was a bad treaty and in view of the fact that he promised various groups—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is doing something indirectly that I ruled against directly, and I do think he should make his question short, crisp and to the point.

Mr. Herridge: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will come to the question. Does the Prime Minister consider he has lived up to the expectations aroused by his criticism of the treaty, and kept his promise to these various organizations and people by undertaking to have the revised treaty referred to the external affairs committee after a Liberal government —mind you, not parliament—has made a decision with respect to agreement with the government of British Columbia and the government of the United States?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is the intention of the government, as already indicated, to bring about changes to the Columbia river treaty in accordance with statements made by myself and others during the election campaign and prior to it. It is our intention to try and do that. When those changes are made and are in the form of an agreement with the province of British Columbia and the government of the United States it is our intention, as it is our constitutional responsibility, to bring that agreement before parliament and submit it to the committee on external affairs where the agreement can be considered. If parliament does not agree with it, then parliament can reject it.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

INCREASED SALARIES FOR RURAL MAIL CARRIERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. W. Weichel (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Postmaster General, and I am sorry I have not been able to give him notice of it. Has the Postmaster General given further consideration to pay increases for the rural route mail carriers?

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, as this concerns government policy it will be announced in due course in the house.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY BRANCH LINES—IMPLEMENTATION OF ROYAL COMMISSION REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. O. Cooper (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the rising concern on the prairies over the plans of the government concerning railway line abandonment, would the Prime Minister indicate the approximate time when legislation dealing with the MacPherson report can be expected; and will he make a more definite statement of the government's intention toward the understanding reached by the Conservative government with the railway companies, the provincial governments and the elevator companies?

Right Hon L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, so far as the question of legislation is concerned with regard to the MacPherson report, that is a matter of government policy and will be announced in due course. So far as the other part of the question is concerned, my hon. friend the Minister of Transport may wish to repeat what he has already said two or three times in the house on this matter.

Mr. Cooper: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the government given any undertaking to the other parties to that understanding that they stand by commitments made last January?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, some days ago I made a statement on that matter in this house in answer to a question, and the statement still stands.

P.E.I. CAUSEWAY—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I have a one sentence question relating to the intentions of the government on a matter of urgent importance, namely the Prince Edward Island causeway. I direct my question to the Prime Minister. Noting the lack of any announcement in this house beyond that of the Minister of Public Works to the effect that the matter was under consideration, may I ask the Prime Minister if the government is now in a position to give an assurance that its predecessors' commitment to build the causeway, as given in the House of Commons on April 17, 1962 by the then prime minister, will be honoured and the construction of the great project speedily commenced?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we hope to act more effectively and speedily in this matter than the government which preceded us.

FISHERIES

NORTH PACIFIC TREATY—REQUEST FOR INTERIM REPORT ON WASHINGTON TALKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Fisheries has been having a rest and I would not want him to feel neglected. Therefore I would ask the minister whether he can tell us what has been happening recently in respect to the conversations concerning the North Pacific fisheries commission. Can the minister give us an up to date report as to the stage these conversations have reached at the present time?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, as there is a possibility that the convention now taking place in Washington may recess today or tomorrow, I expect to make a statement to the house probably on Monday.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

AIR POLLUTION—RESEARCH INTO RELATION TO LUNG CANCER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Huron): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It arises out of an article in last night's Toronto Telegram entitled "Invisible—but it kills". My question has to do with the direct relationship that has been proven to exist between the number of pounds of pollutants in our air and the number of deaths due to lung cancer. In the increased research that is taking place in relation to cigarette smoking, is added emphasis also being given to research into air pollution.

Miss Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am not certain of the answer, and with my hon. friend's permission I would take this question as notice.

REQUEST FOR TRUE STATEMENT RESPECTING RADIOACTIVE FALL-OUT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of a report in yesterday's Montreal Gazette that Dr. Gatthard Stehr of the Ontario department of lands and forests has stated that national health and welfare officials are "whitewashing the truth about atomic fall-out", would the minister assure the house that the unvarnished truth will be forthcoming?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The hon. member knows my propensity for seeking out the truth at all times. I hasten to assure him and all hon. members that now having seen the clipping to which he has referred, I shall take the matter up with representatives of my department and give him an answer at the earliest opportunity.

TRADE

WHEAT—EXTENSION OF FURTHER CREDIT TO RED CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the government considering extending further credit to communist China so that China can continue to buy Canadian wheat, particularly after the commission has returned from Hong Kong?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): As I said in reply to a similar question the other day, Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would help in the sale of wheat to China if I were to discuss the respective positions of those who are engaged in the negotiations. I am sure my hon. friend would agree with this.

GRAIN

WHEAT—STATEMENT AS TO DELIVERY QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, may I reply to a question that was asked of me on June 10 by the hon. member for Lisgar concerning delivery quotas on grain. I indicated at that time that the wheat board was conducting a survey among country elevator operators across western Canada to determine how much additional grain farmers had available for marketing prior to the end of the crop year.

On the basis of this survey the wheat board has decided to raise the general delivery quota to 12 bushels per specified acre effective Monday, June 24, at nearly half the delivery points. The board will make every attempt to equalize quotas at that level throughout western Canada by the end of the crop year. I have also been informed that the wheat board will raise the quota on Durum wheat to 15 bushels per seeded acre.

Hon. members will appreciate that this quota level will enable the vast majority of producers to deliver all the grain they wish to deliver with the exception of Durum wheat. In the case of Durum wheat, production during the last crop year was at an all time high and, rather than congest the grain marketing facilities with supplies of Durum wheat far in excess of market requirements, the board has decided to limit the Durum quota to 15 bushels per seeded acre.

AGRICULTURE

TURKEYS—REMOVAL OF QUOTA ON IMPORTS FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture; I would not want him to think we have been neglecting him lately. Will the minister advise the house whether, as a result of the decision by the European common market to raise tariffs on United States poultry by more than 200 per cent, he has decided to change the quotas on turkeys entering Canada from the United States?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): I had lunch with one of these gentlemen at noon.

An hon. Member: Did you have turkey?

Mr. Hays: We had lobster. We have these things under consideration. While I am on my feet I would like the hon. member to know that conditions in agriculture are good. The price of milk is up. Crops are good. Butter stocks are disappearing.

Mr. Hales: I should like to ask the minister what that has to do with turkeys.

Mr. Hays: We will have lots of wheat to feed them.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ATTENDANCE OF PRIME MINISTER AT MEETING IN LONDON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question about something which is not domestic and relates to his reputation as a diplomat of peace. In view of the precedent of his predecessor in joining the Bermuda conference of Messrs. Kennedy and Macmillan, is he giving consideration to joining these heads of state in London next week?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not been invited. No doubt my hon. friends at this conference know that I am very busy here.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO ACTION RESPECTING FUND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether, in view of the very serious situation in respect of the financial condition of the unemployment insurance fund, his department has taken any other steps than that of the announcement in the Canada Gazette that the unemployment insurance advisory commission is asking to have any representations made to them on this question prior to an early date in July.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this government has taken action to see that the fund is supplied with resources to meet its obligations. As the hon. gentleman realizes, the fund was in the red to the extent of approximately $23 million at the end of April and the speech from the throne indicated, pending presentation to parliament of proposed changes in the act, that the government will continue to provide the fund with the necessary resources.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR DELAY IN CONVENING CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Has the Prime Minister any comments to make concerning the request Mr. Jean Lesage, premier of the province of Quebec, made to him in a letter dated June 7 of this month for the adjournment of the discussion of the federal aid to municipalities program until after the interprovincial conference which is to be held in Halifax at the beginning of August?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. A reply to this communication is now under consideration.

(Translation):
[Later:]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister, following the answer he gave to the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere.

Does the Prime Minister intend to table the letter in which Mr. Lesage asked that the loans to municipalities bill be postponed until the interprovincial conference which will take place this fall?

(Text):

Mr. Pearson: I will be very glad to table it, Mr. Speaker. I believe Mr. Lesage has already made it public.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION RESPECTING COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the statement of the Prime Minister on May 17 that the government was committed to legislation providing for collective bargaining in the public service, can he say how long it will be before this legislation is introduced?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): As soon, Mr. Speaker, as we have been able to make progress with legislation on the order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL PARKS

CAPE BRETON HIGHLANDS—CONSTRUCTION OF CLUB HOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I have a question for my good friend the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I hope you will bear with me, Mr. Speaker, because whatever decision is reached on this matter has a bearing on whether some of my constituents will be working, and that is important and urgent.

Since it was the intention of the previous administration to construct a golf club house—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a question which should be put on the order paper.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I may say that I have been in communication with the minister's office by letter and by telephone. How do I get this information? I should like to know why a contract has not been awarded since the tenders have been closed.

Mr. Speaker: There may be similar questions to the one the hon. member has asked which every member would want to ask for every constituency in the house. Obviously, therefore, this is a question for the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to a fellow Cape Bretoner, the Minister of Labour. Will he use his influence to urge the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources to get on with projects pending within Cape Breton Highlands park?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I will be glad to do that, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR RELATIONS

VANCOUVER—STEPS TO PREVENT STRIKE OF LONGSHOREMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether, in view of the desperate situation which has arisen following the failure of 12 months of negotiation in Vancouver and a strike vote of 95 per cent of the people affected, any special attention or consideration of mediation is in the mind of the minister to prevent a work stoppage on the Vancouver waterfront and prevent the loss of some $3 million a day.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): The officials of the Department of Labour are keeping in close touch with this situation, and the latest information I have is that all parties are contemplating intensive negotiations with a view to the resolution of this dispute. It would seem to me that while the parties are preparing to undertake negotiations the Department of Labour ought to stand ready to assist if assistance would be helpful.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

COMPOSITION OF COMMITTEE ON DRUGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. It relates to a notice of motion by his colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but I think it is appropriate that I put the question to the Secretary of State. I am not neglecting the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Indeed, I am glad to see her motion on the notice paper with regard to pensions, but my question relates to the establishment of the committee on drugs. May I remind the Secretary of State that we were told, during the meetings of the striking committee, that this committee would consist of 15 members. We sent in the names of our group accordingly, but the motion says 24 members. Could this be clarified?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I must confess I was taken as much by surprise as the hon. gentleman. I shall make inquiries and endeavour to give as much clarification as possible.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to hon. members that the time has come when we should proceed with orders of the day.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Wednesday, June 19, consideration of the motion of Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Nowlan.

(Translation):

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I think that today's discussion on the budget will remain unforgettable because of some accompanying circumstances. As far as I am concerned, I have no intention of trying to raise a scandal where there is none. I would not in any way like to question the honesty and sincerity of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon). Indeed, I think that there can be no doubt in that respect. Neither would I like to create a scandal around the fact that the Minister of Finance may have some advisers or experts in attendance when preparing his budget. All I want to do is to point out that in the past, the Liberal party, to which the minister belongs, has probably been the political party in Canada which specialized more than any other in stirring up scandal where there was none, or to distort the truth as much as possible, while raising unjustified doubt. And, today, the Liberal party is caught at its own game. Indeed, it taught others well enough how to create a scandal, and that is why it has to bear the consequences today.

As far as we are concerned, Mr. Speaker, we never wanted such a policy. We did not accept it in the past, when applied by the Liberals. Neither shall we accept it when the same happens at the expense of the Liberals, and the proof is that, just a few days ago, I did not hesitate a moment to give a chance to the Minister of Finance himself to clear up any doubt that might have existed, whereas some hon. members wanted to prevent him from explaining a point raised by the hon. member of Calgary North (Mr. Harkness).

Mr. Speaker, we think that politics should have higher standards. If the Minister of Finance is to be blamed for anything, it is not because he consulted some advisers, but because he chose the wrong ones. People realize it today, because we see that the Minister of Finance has to take out of his budget some proposals and even some words which the wrong advisers put in his mouth, so to speak.

What is most important is that today we are living some hours of great significance for our country, when it appears without doubt that Canada is ruled by a government which kowtows to international finance.

The Minister of Finance submits a budget. Afterwards, protest is raised by the humble folk everywhere, by those who are employed in house construction, in the production and sale of building materials. Indeed, the Minister of Finance stated himself that he received letters and telegrams of protest from all sorts of organizations and societies. But nobody bothered. Not a single answer has been received with regard to those protests. The legislation itself is not clear and nobody bothers to explain it. The little man is left in complete ignorance of the nature of that legislation and the way it will be administered.

But now we have protests flowing in from the president of the Toronto stock exchange and the president of the Montreal stock exchange, from the American under secretary of state, from investment brokers, from big financiers, one of whom was named a while ago, from the president, vice president or director of a large Montreal brokerage house. They come from big men of finance, not from ordinary Canadian citizens who make up the majority of the people, but from big financiers in Canada and especially from outside Canada.

It did not take long, Mr. Speaker, just a few days. The present government and its finance minister bowed, accepted, gave way before the protests of the big financial interests and withdrew the legislation under which a 30 per cent tax was imposed on the sale of Canadian corporations' shares to foreign interests. Mr. Speaker, I say this is a serious matter.

We see that the very same man, Mr. Eric Kierans, who during the last election campaign went from one end of the country to the other, spreading lies, distorting the Social Credit doctrine the better to fight and destroy it, I repeat, distorting it and lying shamelessly the better to fight Social Credit, that same man who stood up for American financial interests at that time, paid a visit to the Minister of Finance and, just 12 or 15 hours later, the tax on the sale of Canadian shares to non-residents was cancelled and withdrawn from the budget. So, Mr. Speaker, I maintain it is a shame to bow like that before the big men of finance in this country.

Please note, Mr. Speaker, that they put on quite a show. The Minister of Finance seemed annoyed by the tone of Mr. Kierans' letter, but he accepted Mr. Kierans' claims. He said that Mr. Kierans was wrong, but he accepted his claims.

Here we witness the greatest performance, I would even say the best show of hypocrisy ever seen. The president of the Montreal stock exchange and the Minister of Finance seemed to have daggers drawn, but the latter bowed before the president of the Montreal stock exchange who is the direct link with the American financiers, as president of the Montreal stock exchange and the Canadian stock exchange. That is, Mr. Speaker, the situation.

Faced with facts, Mr. Speaker, as I said a few moments ago, I do not want to doubt the honesty and sincerity of the Minister of Finance. I believe him to be a gentleman, polite and amiable but after what happened I think that if he has any pride or decency, he will admit that it is his duty, today, to resign as Minister of Finance of Canada.

When we see that the person responsible for controlling the budget bends and crawls before the big financiers, then, Mr. Speaker, in view of the circumstances, I think that he has no other alternative but to leave honourably the post which he now occupies. He will show greater courage and strength than he has in the last 24 or 36 hours, if he resigns those functions that require its incumbent to be much more Canadian than he has shown himself to be in these last hours.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I would like now to get to the heart of the debate. First of all, I notice—and I will use the speech of the Minister of Finance himself—that there is nothing new under the sun.

One remembers very well that the Liberals, when they were in opposition—and, here, it is spelled out—were against railway subsidies with regard to freight rates. The Minister of Finance said:

> The initial series of payments has continued since—
> 1958—
> —and we have been forced to provide $20 million for this purpose in the present fiscal year.

Forced. What forced him, Mr. Speaker? One fact only: there is nothing new under the sun.

Then he added:

> In light of the continuing confusion in railway matters, the previous government appointed a royal commission on transportation in 1959.

And there, it says:

> The failure of the previous government to deal effectively with the railway question thus means that we are faced with special railway subsidies this year aggregating $70 million.

"We are faced with", as if this were an obligation. It is just that two governments, the two old parties, have always travelled the same road. There is nothing new under the sun—things go on as they were.

And that is not all, Mr. Speaker. Here are other examples:

> I indicated when I tabled these estimates that we have been forced to bring forward for this budget the expenditure estimates prepared by the previous government.

Forced by what? There is always the same motive being invoked, and the more it changes, the more it remains the same.

And a little further on:

An examination of the tax structure shows clearly that taxes are already very high, but that the revenue they produce continues to fall short of necessary expenditures.

And it still goes on—our tax structure "shows clearly that taxes are already very high". But taxes are increased again. The more it changes, Mr. Speaker, the more it remains the same. Going still further, I find other instances. I quote the Minister of Finance:

Taxes must provide revenue sufficient to allow an important step toward budgetary balance. And since the increased outlays under certain new programs will be tapered off or stopped in two or three years time, provision can also be made for some revenue of a non-recurring nature.

Now, he says—

While it would not be correct to describe any tax as being popular anywhere—

Those are the words of the Minister of Finance—

—it is the case that indirect taxes such as the sales tax are now regarded with more favour in quite a number of countries than in the past.

Exactly as it was before. There is an attempt to hide taxes so that they should go unnoticed, and that Canadians would swallow them more easily. It is all the same thing over again—the more it changes, the more it remains the same, Mr. Speaker.

I heard the Liberals, when they were in the opposition, complain about deficits, claiming it was a shame for the country when the Conservatives had deficits. But today I notice that we have a deficit of $585 million, not counting what will be added, since the 30 per cent tax on the sale of Canadian securities has been abolished. Formerly, we had deficits of $600 or $700 million, but this year we have one of $585 million. The more it changes, Mr. Speaker, the more it remains the same.

And further on we find this:

Our net cash requirements for 1963-64, both budgetary and non-budgetary—

And this will increase it even more—

—are thus estimated to be about $850 million.

This is worse than last year. Here, we may say that the more things change, the worse they get.

Mr. Speaker, I can go on and find in this budget endless facts which prove that the more it changes, the more it remains the same.

But, what we would have liked to see, for instance, is the carrying out of the Liberal platform, because it had some good points.

[Mr. Gregoire.]

We see, among other things, that the Liberal party will see to it that there is full employment, Mr. Speaker. I received yesterday from the Minister of Labour a word, a letter or rather a message, about the employment and unemployment situation for the week ended May 18, 1963, that is 30 days after the beginning of the 60-day period. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, it ends today and I wish the Prime Minister a happy anniversary for his 60 days of decision, specially since he has not decided anything apart from increasing the taxes.

Mr. Pigeon: May I put a question to the hon. member for Lapointe?

Mr. Gregoire: Certainly.

Mr. Pigeon: Would he be willing to grant them three days of grace?

Mr. Gregoire: Would it bring some special sanctifying grace to the Canadians? I do not think so.

So, Mr. Speaker, the Liberals were talking—it is to be found at the very beginning of their platform—about full employment. Let us see what the situation is today: on May 19, 1962, that is a year ago, there were, according to statistics, 336,000 unemployed; on May 18, 1963, there were 346,000 unemployed or 10,000 more.

We should have liked to see the platform of the Liberal party carried into effect but we see the reverse. And what else do we see? "Slums clearance to make room for better houses".

The Minister of National Revenue said: We shall give $500 to everyone who builds a home during the winter months, while we know that in winter the cost is increased by more than $500. The following day or a few days after, the Minister of Finance announces his tax.

Now, Mr. Speaker, here are some figures to show if the Minister of Finance with his tax has really encouraged home building and the clearance of slums. I have before me a book which I received yesterday morning, in English only, from the dominion bureau of statistics, which comes under the Department of Trade and Commerce. I have not received the French version. It bears the catalogue No. 64002. I only have it since yesterday. It points out that in 1962, 104,279 houses were built; at $500 per house, it comes to $52,139,500.

Now, the Minister of Finance expects that by adding his tax on building materials during the six remaining months of this year, it would yield $170 million, which for a complete year, that is for 1964-1965, it would bring in $365 million and he would only have to spend $52 million.

He is actually taking back seven times more than what he is giving us. That is exactly the opposite of what was announced in the program of the Liberal party. It is not through such action that the Minister of Finance will promote home building.

Mention was also made in that program of improved health care. However, the matter is not even mentioned in the budget. This is what we would have liked to find there, but it is exactly the opposite that happens.

There had been some talk about increasing to $75 the allowances paid to blind and disabled persons. Yet, no such reference is made in the budget. We had been promised an increase to $75 in the old age pensions paid to widows and unmarried women at age 60. We are unable to find anything to that effect in the budget, in fact, we find exactly the opposite.

All that was very useful before the election. But afterwards, I bet that the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) have never even thought of it. Those were only election promises, Mr. Speaker.

With respect to the budget properly, one can notice that the Minister of Finance is concerned about several important questions, the main one being unemployment. I shall come back to this later on.

One of his major concerns besides unemployment, Mr. Speaker, has to do with the excessive outflow of capital to foreign countries. The Minister of Finance mentions that our balance of payments deficit on current account has averaged $1.2 billion in the past six years. One notices also a little further that the Minister of Finance mentions that while unemployment is the major problem, we must not overlook other problems, the most serious being the continuing deficit in our balance of international payments, with the budgetary deficits of the federal government being next. The most serious problem then is the continuing deficit in our balance of international payments.

I have received yesterday, or the day before, another booklet in English only, also from the dominion bureau of statistics, entitled "National Accounts and Balance on Payments of Dividends". What is it about? It concerns our international trade for three months, that is the first quarter of 1963, which shows a deficit of $243 million. For the exchange of goods there is a surplus of $62 million for a three-month period. On the other hand, there is a deficit in the matter of payments, capital transactions, of some $305 million in three months. This is due to dividends of $154 million and interest of $60 million and other short term capital transactions which form a total of $305 million.

So, when the Minister of Finance says that the most serious problem is still the balance of payments, the cause is inevitably the outflow of our capital by way of interest and dividends.

But what does the minister say then? Let us see what the Minister of Finance has to say on that subject.

> There is a clearly recognized danger that if deficits continue at this rate, they will lead to a growing measure of control of our economy passing abroad.

In that respect, we certainly agree with the Minister of Finance; he is perfectly right.

But a little further he says:

> In view of this situation we are entitled to take pride in the harmonious relations which have been maintained with the holders of foreign capital in Canada.

Mr. Speaker there is certainly a mistake there, either in the translation or the drafting, because the Minister of Finance warns us against too large a control by foreign capital and, the next moment, that is a few pages later, he tells us that we can take pride in the harmonious relations which exist with the holders of foreign capital.

He did not say it only once but he repeated it about two pages further in his budget address. I quote:

> Above all, I am convinced that a growing partnership between Canadians and investors abroad is the best way of strengthening the harmonious relations with foreign capital which it is our object to preserve.

There you have another inconsistency, Mr. Speaker. But there is no end to inconsistencies in the field. About 12 pages further, the Minister of Finance said:

> I referred earlier this evening to the need for a continuing inflow of foreign capital.

And I repeat what he said:

> —the need for a continuing flow of foreign capital.

And there you have yet another inconsistency.

A little further, Mr. Speaker, the minister said:

> As I indicated earlier, it is the policy of this government to encourage direct foreign investment in new enterprises in this country.

But in the very same paragraph—and this is when I began to think I had not been given a true copy of the budget address—he added:

> It is our view that non-resident take-overs of established Canadian companies rarely confer any benefit on the Canadian economy.

Mr. Speaker, those are the contradictions we find in the address of the Minister of Finance. On the other hand, I found in it a rather encouraging passage—at least I hope we shall feel encouraged before long. On page 2 of his address, the Minister of Finance, speaking about our very heavy international balance of payments deficit, said:

> This has meant that we have been importing goods and services which we should have produced at home—

But what are the most important services which we have imported from abroad? Foreign capital of course.

However, we heard the minister state that we should have produced at home services which we have been importing.

Mr. Speaker, why does the Minister of Finance not use an institution which is at his command, I mean the Bank of Canada? Why does he not use the Bank of Canada to find at home the services, or in other words the funds which are required?

This is but one of the measures we suggest to the Minister of Finance. If he were willing to put it into practice, he might solve some of the current problems, more particularly the problem of our international balance of payments deficit.

Mr. Speaker, I am not too surprised that the budget should give the results we have seen today considering especially that the Minister of Finance has based his whole argument and the budget on the confidence that the government of the day has created in Canada. Listen to this carefully:

> As I say, our country is just recovering from the loss of confidence that was engendered by the poor financial and economic administration of the previous government.

The minister adds the following:

> However, confidence is not an element on which you can rely or which can be measured physically. It is a state of mind, a psychological phenomenon.

I do not have to go any further since that gives us an idea of the financial policy the government advocates. We all know that the best music teachers are not always the best singers. The best professors of economics are not always the best economists.

[Mr. Gregoire.]

Mr. Speaker, I am sure the members for Outremont-St. Jean, Drummond-Arthabaska and Matapedia-Matane (Messrs. Lamontagne, Pepin and Tremblay) will agree with me when I say that political economy could be defined as the science which deals with the production, exchange and consumption of the natural and industrial resources of a country. Indeed, that is the very definition that my hon. friends learned and taught. Political economy is a science—that word is most important—which is based on statistics, facts and figures just like physics is based on accurate figures.

When a rocket is launched in the atmosphere it is with the help of facts and statistical data, not through a state of mind or thanks to a psychological phenomenon.

If American physicists were to administer their interplanetary program through a psychological state of mind, they would not get their rockets off the ground.

The economists of the Liberal government have never considered economics as a science. In their opinion, it is a state of mind, a psychological phenomenon. That is why we are not getting anywhere. We have not even started off. That is also why the Minister of Finance stated: We could have procured commodities and services at home but we went abroad to get them.

If we are in such a pitiful situation today, it is because the government fails to realize that economics is a science based on statistics and accurate data and that economists should analyse the latter and use the Bank of Canada to provide credit in accordance with the possibilities and resources of the country. It is also because our economists are only concerned with states of mind and psychological phenomena.

With one hand, we give $52 million to go and get $360 with the other. This a psychological phenomenon. We maintain the deficit budget as before; these again are psychological phenomena.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that our economists should go back to school and become scholars in economics and not people who believe in chance, chance of the seven fat cows and the seven lean cows. I have heard before the President of the Privy Council speaking about progression and regression cycles, just like the seven fat cows and the seven lean cows. At that time, he lived on a psychological phenomenon.

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the hon. member that his time is up, unless he proposes an amendment.

(Text):

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I have the impression that the hon. gentleman did not realize he was limited to 30 minutes. If the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), or whoever is going to speak on his behalf, does not object, I would hope there would be unanimous consent to let the hon. gentleman continue briefly.

Mr. Douglas: There is no objection, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands would like to begin his speech in time to have his half hour before five o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would hope, Mr. Speaker, it would be agreeable to the hon. member not to go beyond 40 minutes.

(Translation):

Mr. Dupuis: I should like to point out the fact that during the debate on the budget, last year, my hon. friend was against my being granted a few more minutes, but nevertheless it is a pleasure for me to give him a little more time.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Is it the intention of the hon. member to propose a subamendment? If not, his time is limited to 30 minutes unless he secures the consent of the house to continue.

Some hon. Members: Let him go on. Agreed.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: I must thank the hon. members for letting me continue my remarks.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the second serious problem, second only to the problem of international trade balance is the problem of the national debt. The budget speech mentions the debt, but it is mainly concerned with the interest aspect of it, namely $918 million, which caused the heavy deficit of this government.

I believe that this is a most important matter. It has been raised on several occasions previously, therefore I will certainly be permitted to come back to it and ask the Minister of Finance to consider—it is true that I do not represent a large financial group, I am only a member of this house—but I would suggest to him that he consider the proposal I made to him in connection with refinancing the national debt through the Bank of Canada. This way, we could pay the nation's debt and at the same time the service charges in the amount of $918 million.

Mr. Speaker, I shall refrain from dealing with one or two problems and, since my time is running short, I shall come to a point the Minister of Finance raised in his budget speech, and I quote:

> I shall begin with a word regarding monetary policy.

At that point, the Minister of Finance dealt with this government's monetary policy. You will see what great monetary policy we have.

> This government favours the kind of credit conditions which will encourage economic expansion. In saying this I am aware, of course, that our balance of payment situation must at all times be kept in mind.

Then we come to the policy which, to sum up the three paragraphs dealing with monetary policy, mean simple weekly visits to the governor of the Bank of Canada.

A little further in the speech we find the following statement:

> The royal commission on banking and finance will no doubt be considering whether—

In other words he repeated that he shall meet almost continually with the governor of the Bank of Canada. This is the only element I seem to be able to find in the present day monetary policy of this government.

There was another Minister of Finance, some 20 years ago, who had very advanced ideas on the nation's monetary policy. In 1942, the Minister of Finance in the Liberal administration of the day implemented an important monetary reform. He eliminated the small five cent coin to replace it with a large nickel.

Another point on which I would like to insist today is that again and again, during his budget speech, the Minister of Finance talked about the take-over of our economy and indicated that Canadians must take over the economy of the country. In fact, here is what he said on that matter and there again inconsistencies can be noted.

> But we must recognize that the extent of non-resident ownership and control which it has produced in Canada goes far beyond anything found in other countries in a comparable stage of industrial maturity.

So, the minister recognizes that there is a problem in that respect. And he added immediately:

> —we are entitled to take pride in the harmonious relations which have been maintained with the holders of foreign capital in Canada.

And even if the minister recognizes that foreigners hold a very substantial ownership of our economy, he suggests provisions or at least makes observations with a view to encouraging foreigners to acquire a greater part of our economy.

And when the minister proposes to reduce the taxes in a proportion of 5 per cent for corporations, when 25 per cent of their shares are held by Canadians, he really thinks he will assist Canadian industry. For that matter, I can foresee that Canada will no longer be a country in which 75 per cent of the industry is controlled in a proportion of 100 per cent by foreigners, but a country in which 100 per cent of the industry is controlled in a proportion of 75 per cent by foreign interests.

For the information of the minister, I must tell him that when you require only 25 per cent Canadian ownership, you want to leave nothing but crumbs to Canadians so that the greater proportion of 75 per cent is left to foreign interests because it is a known fact that the one who owns 51 per cent of the shares of a company is still the one who controls the company and not the one who owns only 25 per cent. On that occasion, the Minister of Finance gave us evidence that instead of being 100 per cent Canadian, the present government is only 25 per cent Canadian.

Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to say more about the new taxes, but since my allotted time forbids me to do so, I shall talk about the federal-provincial fiscal relations.

In my opinion, the budget speech of the Minister of Finance has put an end to the hopes of those who believed that the relations between the central government and the government of the province of Quebec would be improved, thanks to a better distribution, and even through the return to the province of her sources of revenue.

In his budget speech, the Minister of Finance seemed to bring to an end the hopes of the government of the province of Quebec for the recovery of 25 per cent of personal and corporate income taxes. But when we consider that the objective of the province of Quebec is not only to recover 25 per cent but indeed 100 per cent of her sources of revenue, we may rest assured that from now on we shall have to fight a battle which will result in the victory for the ideas of the province of Quebec in this field, despite the ideas put forward by the Minister of Finance.

The Minister of Finance stated that the government would be able to have more influence on the economic activity through fiscal policy; I must tell him that he is completely wrong, because we cannot influence the economy by keeping all fiscal policies. On the contrary, we impose restriction on the economy of a country, because taxes increase steadily instead of decreasing, and as taxes increase steadily, they always result in restrictions. Now, if the government reduced taxes in a substantial way, then we might say that a certain amount of influence could be felt, but in our country, taxes have always increased and never decreased.

Mr. Speaker, before resuming my seat, may I say that the present budget is stagnant and shows that the government is lacking in imagination, in daring, in energy and in vigour. Indeed, I suggest that the government should be more confident in the future of Canada, in the Canadian people and in the capacity for development of our country.

(Text):

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I began preparation of this speech some time ago and today I find myself somewhat inhibited as to the remarks I had proposed to make on this occasion. Possibly it is a sign of old age, a certain mellowing of my disposition, but I have a certain reluctance about kicking somebody who is already down, and when one sees the government which came into office with such a fanfare of trumpets a few months ago in such complete disarray today, it is a saddening sight.

There are, after all, elements of Greek tragedy about this and I cannot help thinking that the unfortunate Minister of Finance is a victim of what the old Greeks called the sin of hubris, overweening pride, which invites the furies, of course, and the inevitable punishment. I am not competent to go into the vexed question of the legality or illegality of the hon. gentleman's use of unorthodox aid, or advisers, in the preparation of his budget. In view of recent revelations, I am not quite sure whether we should regard this as anything very sinister but rather in the nature of an old-fashioned quilting bee in which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) gathered around him an assemblage of people to help him patch together a patchwork quilt made out of a lot of scraps of pre-Keynesian economies, tattered attempts at modern economics, and in the end producing a bed cover that is not going to keep us very warm in the forthcoming cold weather. I do not think this is too sinister now in that regard, but I do say that this house has a right to ask the government to make sure that if it is going to get unorthodox help from outside, that that help should be competent. Because unfortunately the events of the last two days have proved that the help the minister relied on was grossly incompetent and should never have been permitted near the budget-making, not for fear that they would reveal secrets but because they were hopelessly incompetent to perform the tasks that the minister expected of them. I have no particular tears to shed over those in our society who failed to make a fortune yesterday, and I hold no brief for those who did. But I do suggest that if the minister is going to conduct our economic affairs on the basis of some sort of equity, then we should allow all thieves to have a licence at the same time.

In the course of his long address the minister mentioned on a number of occasions that to him the overriding problem in Canada today was that of unemployment, and with that estimate I am sure very few of us would disagree. He also said something else in the course of his long address on the budget, and when I read it today I wondered if this was the sentence that the furies were listening to. You recall, Mr. Speaker, that he told us that there has been a resurgence of confidence since the election. We would all agree with him that unemployment is the major problem of today, but I would suggest that it is possible to overestimate the power of words, and that unless they are translated into action and into reality they tend to become blown away by the winds of time. Our finance minister made a bow, I may say a much less pronounced bow than he made in his volume which dealt with a former troubled Canada, presumably a different one from the Canada that is troubled today, a very slight bow in the direction of acknowledging the role that deficit financing has in periods of economic stagnation and high unemployment. I was relieved to hear him say that, but then astounded a few minutes later to hear him produce a complete non sequitur and to proceed to chase a "will o' the wisp" of a balanced budget when he told us that we must begin now to move towards balancing the budget under conditions of high employment. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that the 500,000 or however many unemployed there are today will be completely stupefied by this statement of the minister and will be asking themselves, what high employment is the man taking about? This move in the direction of a balanced budget is, of course, well calculated by every respectable economic opinion in the country, and indeed in the world, to prove a complete obstacle to attaining that period of high employment and economic activity towards which the minister is looking.

I looked up some of the minister's earlier statements before he was promoted to his present position. He was a private member of this house on October 22, 1962, and on that date, as reported at page 817 of Hansard, he had this to tell us:

> Our kind of economy works best in circumstances where responsibility for economic decision making is decentralized and in so far as possible is kept in private hands. However, it has been necessary in the past to invest some public capital in large undertakings and developments when sufficient private capital was not available. I think we should be perfectly willing to do the same thing again when it is necessary to get industrial developments going.

I am interested in that statement when I compare it with what the minister has been telling us in the last few days in his budget address. I wonder if he has decided that our economy was not in such a perilous condition as he was telling us eight months ago, and that he was mistaken; or can he possibly be telling us that in the course of these magic 60 days this government has solved all these problems and that they are now no longer with us? Because obviously if large capital expenditures of public funds were necessary eight months ago, one would assume that they were necessary today. But the minister seems to have changed his mind.

Admittedly the government came into power with stars in their eyes, and even though those stars have become a little tarnished in recent days no doubt there is enough glitter in them yet to blind them to some facts in this fact-finding budget. Fact number one, and it is one of which I would have thought the Minister of Finance would be aware, is that you do not cure depressed economic conditions by a hold-the-line policy. Yet that is what he outlined in his budget address. This was to be a hold-the-line policy, and he took great pride in the fact that he was going to reduce by some $200 million the deficit that had been anticipated by his predecessor in office.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this strikes me as rather peculiar when we compare the situation with things which happen in other parts of the world. For instance, in Sweden, which is a country of high economic activity at the present time, they have been prepared to maintain over a very long period of time, and are maintaining it to the present day in conditions of almost complete full employment, a deficit of somewhere in the neighbourhood of 2.9 per cent of their gross national product. Our Minister of Finance, in the face of unemployment and a stagnating economy, takes pride in the fact that he hopes to reduce this ratio between our deficit and our gross national product to some 1.5 per cent. I suggest to you that this indicates a complete lack of understanding of the role of modern economics in solving these problems. He has, of course, a number of measures in addition to the budget which he intends to use as incentives to economic stimulation. One of them is the old one which has been brought up year after year by both Conservative and Liberal governments—the idea that the way you get prosperity is to give tax incentives to private entrepreneurs. They persist in doing this even to the present day and even in the face of authoritative statements on the part of such organizations as the Canadian tax foundation, which reveal the real relationship between tax levels and levels of investment.

Between 1955 and 1957, as I am sure the Minister of Finance must know having come across this in the operations of his private business, there was a booming investment in Canada. At that time levels of corporation taxation ran from 45.9 per cent on profits over $500,000, 41.6 per cent on profits over $100,000, 36.2 per cent over $50,000, and so on. In 1962 the rate on profits of $500,000 and over was reduced to 39 per cent, on $100,000 and over to 30.9 per cent, and on $50,000 and over to 20.7 per cent. I suggest to you that this is clear proof that tax incentives are not what is required to stimulate private investments. What is required, of course, is effective demand.

This brings me to another of the items in this government's extraordinary incentive program. The Atlantic development board is going to be encouraged in its operations by providing a three-year tax holiday for firms which will enter that particular part of the country. In fact, it is being suggested to them that they will have a tax exemption for three years in which they could have no hope of making profits, because if there had been that hope they would have been there. The records show that if there were profits available, then firms would be there.

The minister has some rather curious method by which he plans to stimulate the economy. One of these has been discussed at intervals or attempts have been made to discuss it, and you have been hard put, Mr. Speaker, to head off a debate on it. I refer to the extension of the sales tax to building materials. This, in my opinion, is one of the most extraordinary combinations of measures ever presented by a Minister of Finance. We are told on the one hand that the government intends to stimulate building activity, particularly in the winter, by making a miniscule reduction in interest rate, by reducing the down payment and by providing a $500 bonus to those who undertake building in the winter. Then, in order to completely offset that the minister is going to extend the sales tax to all building material. Of course, the building of houses is only a part, perhaps a very small part, of the economy that is going to be battered by this expansion of the sales tax.

One can readily see what is going to happen when we read the report from the Ottawa city council last night. As a result of the minister's decision to extend the sales tax to building materials, they are going to sharply reduce their capital expenditures in the forthcoming year. This will be a great help to employment in the capital city. This action, of course, will be repeated in every city in Canada. It will find its reflection also in other major construction projects. We have, in my own province of British Columbia, some major construction projects which are in the wind, one at least of which it is contemplated will be undertaken. The added cost now provided by the minister's expansionary measure may stall proceedings on these projects.

What does he expect to get out of it? Here is the amazing part of it. The most he hopes to get out of it is $170 million. I am going to suggest he will not even get that because he will find that the quantities of materials on which the 11 per cent tax would be paid will sharply decline. In addition to that, the government's expenditures are going to go up as a result of coping with the consequent unemployment. Nothing could have been more spendthrift and irresponsible than this ridiculous method of pretending to stimulate the economy.

Then, we come to the municipal loans provision. I have mentioned the city council of Ottawa, and I should like to mention some comments in general terms about it. I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is all inextricably mixed up with the budget. The loans to municipalities are going to exclude the very things that are the great problems of municipalities, the provision of such things as schools, hospitals, sewers and public housing. In fact, one is almost at a loss to know upon what a municipality is supposed to spend the money. Perhaps it could be used to raise aldermen's salaries or something of that sort. It is a very difficult thing to know what they could possibly do.

Then, we have the Canadian development corporation which is going to solve all our economic troubles by bringing some order into the investment field. However, this is not an expansionary measure at all. It is a measure that is only going to pool existing savings unless the government is contemplating that it will have to make good on the various guarantees it is going to give. Otherwise, this will not be expansionary at all. This will merely be changing existing capital, existing savings, from one field to another.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the minister has—I will not say fallen from grace because he has not fallen yet—been under considerable fire over another of his measures to rectify the errors in the Canadian economy. I am very sympathetic to his idea that it is time Canada, the Canadian people and the Canadian government took a very long, serious look at this growing development of foreign ownership of our resources and our industry. But what an extraordinary way he went about trying to achieve that laudable purpose. I will not go again into the tizzy he caused in the stock market which set it bouncing around like a yo-yo. I am glad to find that some of the millionaires are in Vancouver. After all, it is time we had our share of the millionaires. However, this strikes me as typical of the methods by which this government, this Minister of Finance, proposed to solve the problem of foreign ownership.

They also have something which I think might be called the Liberal party's apostles creed. In the budget address we find a paragraph which starts with, "We believe":

> We believe that industry in Canada, wherever it is controlled, should operate with due regard to the over-all interest of Canadians and the Canadian economy. This means that Canadian raw materials should be processed to the greatest possible extent in Canada ... It means that export markets should be sought actively wherever they may be found—> —a conscious effort to purchase its raw materials, components and supply from Canadian sources whenever those sources are competitive.
> It means that industry should employ Canadian service firms wherever possible—
>
> It means that industry should exert itself to expand in Canada all the industrial functions which can efficiently be carried on here—
> It means that industry should seek to provide the fullest opportunity for Canadian employees at all levels, including managerial, scientific and technical personnel.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, our Minister of Finance would have our national economy organized on the basis of categorical imperatives. Unfortunately, the categorical imperative does not apply. No doubt these people should do this sort of thing, and no doubt they would have been doing it today had it been the profitable thing for them to do. Our finance minister does not suggest how we are going to persuade or convince them that this is the most profitable thing for them to do.

Then, of course, at the tail end of this curious group he has here, I was very interested to find this statement. It is rather ironic to read it today in the wake of yesterday's events:

> Above all, I am convinced that a growing partnership between Canadians and investors abroad is the best way of strengthening the harmonious relations with foreign capital which it is our object to preserve. Foreign investors can further the growth of this partnership by selling minority interests in their enterprises to Canadians—

Again, this is something they should do, but there is no indication of just how we are going to get them to do this. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Finance, like all previous ministers of finance in Canada, in trying to deal with this problem is trying to deal with something that is insoluble within the framework of our traditional economic and social relationships. For one thing, we have a constitutional problem in Canada to be considered because the provinces have complete control over the bulk of the natural resources on which foreign corporations have built their industries.

To my mind, Mr. Speaker, there is only one sort of solution for this problem, the solution of public investment to regain control of the resources on which these industries are based, and if the federal government were to embark on a program of financial assistance to provinces prepared to embark on such a recovery of their natural resources I think this would be the sensible way to go about the problem of foreign ownership. Certainly none of the methods provided by the minister are anything but derisory in their nature.

We have also heard quite a bit in the budget debate about the question of liberalizing trade. Our Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) has gone through the world, and he is hoping he did something at GATT that will help our problems. I should like to ask him and also ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) this. It is asked quite seriously and I hope they have given some consideration to it. About a month ago the Right Hon. Harold Wilson, speaking to the United States chamber of commerce in London, pointed out the dangers of merely liberalizing trade without taking some steps in regard to international liquidity. I have no doubt whatever that the Minister of Trade and Commerce noted this speech and the proposals that were made by Mr. Wilson at that time, proposals, incidentally, that have been made before by economists. Dr. Triffin was one, and in a much earlier time, of course, a similar proposal was made by the late John Maynard Keynes. The proposal was that the international monetary fund should be established in effect as an international central bank.

Mr. Wilson points out that in the world as a whole we are now facing exactly the same problem that national economies were facing at the time they were tied to gold and which required increases in the volumes of gold before there could be economic expansion. He points out that we are in virtually the same position today internationally and that sooner or later we have to take steps in that regard in establishing the international monetary fund or a similar international body as, in effect, an international central bank enabled to create credit for the development of the undeveloped areas, and also in order to enable developed countries to avoid the recurring exchange crises which the present situation always imposes upon them when expansionary policies are embarked upon. I should like to hear at some time from the government whether they have taken part in any such discussions, whether they have advanced any of these ideas at international gatherings and what their views on this matter are.

I have been criticizing the government's budget, but I do not think that is enough for a member of the house to do. I think we should also present our ideas of what sort of things the budget should have attempted to do and I have attempted in very rough terms to present some projects that we should be understaking in Canada, with their probable costs or possible costs, shall we say. For instance, I understand that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) has today announced an increase in the old age pension of $10. I would suggest on behalf of this party that this is not going nearly far enough, that there has gone on for long enough in Canada the pathetic picture of people who reach the age of 65, who are forced into retirement by their employers and have five years to wait before they can draw the old age pension. We claim that we shall not be dealing with this problem until we bring the 65 to 69 group under the old age pension at the rate of $75 a month. With the increase granted today there will be a total there of some $500 millions.

Then we have something that has been promised to the people of Canada year after year by successive Liberal governments, and more recently by a Conservative government, and that is a comprehensive national plan of health insurance. It is very difficult to estimate what the cost of such a plan would be. Some estimates run as high as $500 million and suggest that the federal government's share would be some $300 million.

Then we have the question of the municipal loan fund which the government is proposing. I suggest to you, sir, that $400 million spread over three years will have the most minute effect in stimulating the economy and that the amount should be something more in the order of $300 million or $400 million a year, once the municipalities get under way on this project. Then there is the question of the difference in the interest rate on these loans.

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

I do not think we have been told what that is to be. Certainly unless the government is going to shoulder quite a bit of the cost of the interest rate the municipalities are not going to be in a position to borrow from the fund, as the government apparently hopes they are going to do.

I suggest to you. Mr. Speaker, that these suggestions for very great increases of governmental expenditure, with their consequent deficits, are in no way out of line with the experience of countries which are at least as progressive as Canada and which are at least as economically efficient as Canada, and that we should be considering taking a leaf out of their books. I mentioned earlier and I repeat now that in Sweden there has been for many years a deficit carried by the government of anything up to 3 per cent of their gross national product and that today in a time of full employment in Sweden it is still 2.9 per cent of the Swedish gross national product; whereas the deficit so proudly announced by the minister, unless he is adding to it today or tomorrow—we do not know and we will never be sure—amounts to some 1.5 per cent of the gross national product. That in itself in my view condemns this government and this budget and, as I said on budget night, "presented as a means of stimulating the economy, it is nothing but a fraud".

I would beg the government and hon. members in all parties not to be frightened by the sort of suggestions I have made, with their large deficits perhaps running up into billion and a half figures, because these are the sort of figures that progressive countries are now adopting. I would remind you, sir, that without blinking an eye we are prepared to spend very much more than that on defences which so far have proved rather dubious.

These things will not, of course, solve our problems permanently. We in this group do not think they can be solved permanently within the terms of our present economy but they will give it a breathing spell in order to lay the groundwork for those sweeping social and economic changes which are obviously on the horizon. With the ever more collective world of which the eloquent and charming lady member for Northumberland spoke in the first speech to this twenty sixth parliament—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time is up.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I have a couple of minutes?

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the hon. gentleman proposing to move any motion? If so he would have another ten minutes.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): No, I am not. I will only be a couple of minutes.

Mr. Douglas: He has only two or three sentences.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could we have agreement to allow the hon. gentleman to finish?

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): As I was saying, in the ever increasingly collective world referred to by the lady member for Northumberland these proposals I am making, while not a permanent solution, would give us a breathing spell to make the adjustments that are going to be required of us in the very near future. Finally, Mr. Speaker, let me say that as a Canadian, as one who has lived nearly all his life in Canada, as one whose children and grandchildren have been born here, it affords me no pleasure to see the government of my country in such hopeless disarray as it is today. I would conclude as my final word to the government on this occasion: For heaven's sake, pull yourselves together. We cannot afford any more of these follies, any more of these ineptitudes, because all the rest of we Canadians have to cringe along with you at the ridiculous spectacle you are presenting to the rest of the world.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will proceed to private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

STANDARD TRUST COMPANY

The house resumed from Tuesday, June 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wahn for the second reading of Bill No. S-13, to incorporate Standard Trust Company.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, here is one occasion when you are inviting me to speak, after dampening me down a bit this afternoon. When debate on this bill ceased last Tuesday I had suggested that it was not good enough for the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Wahn) to introduce the bill and then say he would answer questions, which I understand is all he did. I am looking around to see if I can locate him in the house. I do not see him, but I wish to say it is our view that we are entitled to a full explanation and history of the development of this company, since a similar type of bill was introduced some time ago and we should now like to know the need for this new bill.

We want some assurance that this company will be Canadian controlled, and this is in line with our party policy.

Since the sponsor is absent it is rather difficult for me to raise certain questions I intended to raise, and so because of his absence I would at this point conclude my remarks.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

COASTAL FISHERIES PROTECTION ACT

PROVISION FOR EXTENSION OF FISHING ZONES

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-11, to amend the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act (twelve mile fishing zone).

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to extend the present three mile fishing limit to 12 miles off our shores. It would also provide a year for negotiations to that end. I hope for its passage today, or at least for its referral to committee where it might be discussed in line with other pending legislation of a similar nature.

I am very well aware of the fact that the government has announced its intention of introducing legislation to establish the 12-mile limit, and I have earlier congratulated the government on that intention. However, I have left my bill on the order paper because I am not yet just sure what kind of 12-mile limit the government has in mind, and I am not sure whether the government knows exactly itself. It may be, that, as in some other departments, there are changes to be made, or that the policy is not quite clear on that point.

Another reason for leaving the bill on the order paper is because I think it affords a timely example of how the passage of time enables the administration to catch up with the policies of the party I represent, because this bill was introduced last session and also in the session of 1961. In both sessions it either failed to reach second reading or was talked out. However, it is still here today, and the bill states clearly what it means. It represents the views of the great bulk of the fishing industry, particularly in the Pacific area with which I am most familiar, and it would give those rights to Canadian fishermen which fishermen in so many other countries enjoy.

It calls for:

—a declaration by the Queen in parliament that Canada within those twelve marine miles seaward of her coasts has, to the sole use and benefit of her nationals, the right to fish exclusive of all others: as well as an affirmation of Canada's obligation to protect and conserve the live resources of those seas to that same end.

The bill would repeal section 2(b) of the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act and substitute the following therefor:

(b) 'Canadian territorial waters' means a fishing zone extending seaward to a limit twelve nautical miles from the baseline from which the breadth of the territorial seas of Canada are measured headland to headland and includes inland waters of Canada.

The bill is in geographical line with the stand taken by the Fisheries Council of Canada and such organizations as the united fishermen and allied workers' union of B.C. It represents the feeling of the great bulk of the fishing industry on both coasts.

The fisheries council, for instance, presses for the 12 mile limit and also proposes the straight headland to headland baseline which would enclose national waters. In the Pacific this baseline would go from headland to headland along the west side of Vancouver island and the Queen Charlotte islands, and the 12-mile exclusive area would extend seaward from that line. In the Atlantic it would connect at the international boundary and enclose the bay of Fundy and gulf of St. Lawrence.

It may be worthy of note that a special committee of the B.C. legislature has endorsed the 12-mile limit, and has urged also that Canada take unilateral action, if necessary, to establish the baseline and declare exclusive fishing rights for a distance of 12 miles from this baseline, and "be prepared to enforce such measures".

In other parts of the world the 12-mile limit for territorial waters has been established by Iceland, Norway and Russia since the 1960 Geenva conference. Denmark has set the 12-mile limit around Greenland, and Iceland has successfully established her 12-mile zone even against active opposition. I think, Mr. Speaker, that Canada, like so many other countries, should now take the perfectly reasonable step of staking out her 12-mile limit and offering time to others to negotiate to that end. Over 50 countries have now established their fishing limits and one country, Peru, has actually established a fishing zone of 200 miles exclusive to itself.

However, I think that with respect to allowing the United States to continue to fish inside the 12-mile limit in the Pacific we had better understand at once that it is almost solely the United States who fishes there now. There will be little change in the betterment of our Canadian fisheries industry if there is to be no change in who fishes in that zone. We look to the government, if it proceeds with the 12-mile legislation or brings forward other similar proposals, to do so upon the basis of putting Canada's interests first. We have no desire to injure our United States friends or their fishing interests, but we believe it is a reasonable proposition that Canada should establish her own rights and limits and be willing to negotiate to keep them. We can undertake to respect the 12-mile fishing limits of other lands on the basis of their respecting ours.

Mr. Speaker, Canada needs to have the reasonable protection this bill can provide. On the east coast the large Canadian trawlers are by law kept 12-miles out so as not to destroy the inshore nursery grounds with their heavy trawls. Big trawlers of numerous nations, however, fish right up to our three-mile limit and on occasion have had the gall to call up the Canadian patrol boats upon seeing Canadian trawlers fishing closer than 12 miles and have asked that they be arrested. The bill before us also follows along the line of the former administration's ideas as expressed in the proposal of the Canadian government at the end of 1959 by the then secretary of state for external affairs at the United Nations conference on the law of the sea. We agreed with the position taken by the government at that time, but we did not agree with their failure or inability to bring about the establishment of this 12-mile zone. The present government, as I understand it from what has been announced, has decided upon the establishment and adoption of the principle of the 12-mile limit and has probably worked out some details for putting this decision into legislative form. So that in the view of those in this party, the former administration and the present government we have a very large measure of agreement in the house on the need for such legislation. I think this agreement is shared particularly by all hon. members from British Columbia, no matter to what party they belong.

I think we should realize, however, that the mere establishment of this zone will not solve our fisheries problems. British Columbia salmon, for instance, are caught as far as 1,000 miles from shore; sometimes they are found 2,000 miles out from their home in the Fraser river area. The 12-mile limit will assist in conservation but it will do little to improve Canadian salmon harvesting. But bottom fish will be protected by the 12-mile zone, and this will certainly be a benefit to Canada.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I personally am very much impressed by the views of Senator Reid who comes from my own constituency of New Westminster. He is an authority of many years and has a great deal of knowledge on this question. He has stated that in the protection of our fisheries Canada cannot ignore Russia. Russia has large and efficient floating cannery fleets heading down the Pacific coast which are much more modern than our own fishing units. They are not doing anything illegal but they interfere with our nets. This is a problem for us because of the present lack of efficient or effective regulations to control them. This also applies to Japan. If the United States, Japan and Canada are to come to some agreement regarding their share of the conservation and harvesting of the Pacific fisheries they must, in my opinion, bring Russia into such an agreement and make her subject to the over-all Pacific fishery regulations. Our fisheries could be put in a very grave situation, whether or not we establish a 12-mile limit, if Japan drops out of the Pacific agreement, because she may well ask why she should hold her hand while Russia does not.

The situation in the Pacific is that of a pool of water in which four people are fishing, three of them under some form of co-operative agreement and the fourth is not. This produces an embarrassing situation and makes it most difficult to proceed with any advantage, whether or not we obtain a 12-mile fishing limit, although this would certainly remove some part of the problem.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to put on the record, so we may get a proper perspective of the matter, the fishing catches of the major Pacific fishing nations for 1961. These figures are in metric tons, which are 240 pounds more than our own. We find, for example, that in 1961 Japan caught 6,711,000 tons; the U.S.S.R., 3,250,000; the United States, 2,874,000; and Canada, 1,000,400. I would urge all hon. members to support this measure, which I think is timely. If it should not be approved, I would hope that at least it might be referred to the appropriate committee for further detailed consideration.

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): I wish at this time, Mr. Speaker, to rise in support of the principle of the bill of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather). I am somewhat surprised that it has been left on the order paper, in view of the government's declaration of June 4, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) announced that they had decided to establish a 12-mile limit on a headland to headland basis and would be entering into discussions and negotiations with those countries which have historic or treaty rights in our waters. It was said that we would declare this limit one year from the time of the Prime Minister's announcement. However, the presence of the bill on the order paper will allow for a valuable discussion this afternoon in the house, and in committee, for a careful examination of the whole subject of a 12-mile fishing limit.

I have one small, technical objection to the bill as it is drawn. I have brought this to the attention of the hon. member privately, and I see no difficulty in having it rectified. If hon. members look at section 2(b) of the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act they will see envisaged in that section two methods by which Canada can acquire territorial waters. One is by designation by act of parliament or the governor in council, and the other is in any event those waters contained within three miles of our coasts. The amendment the hon. member proposes strikes out one of those methods that by which we can acquire territorial jurisdiction by act of parliament or declaration of the governor in council. This is a rather small point, but I think it is a very important one. Either now or in the future Canada's sovereignty in certain sections of our far north may be called into question, and I think it should be very clear in our statutes that we are entitled by act of parliament to declare sovereignty and jurisdiction over those areas. No doubt that is something which can be cleared up in committee.

The hon. member for New Westminster made reference to some of the aspects of the fishing industry in British Columbia. I should like to add to those remarks in order that hon. members who are not from the west coast may realize the tremendous importance which the fishing industry is to us. The industry employs some 14,000 independent fishermen. In 1961, the department, as will be shown in its annual report, issued 21,898 commercial fishing licences. About 6,000 plant and packing boat workers are directly dependant on the industry and some 75,000 are indirectly dependant upon it. Production on a five-year average totals some $71.5 million worth of fish, fish products, oil and meal, 60 per cent of which is exported, a most important consideration to the economy of our country.

Our fishing industry operates up and down the whole coast, from the United States border in the south to the Alaska Panhandle and the Bering sea in the north. Many areas in British Columbia are entirely dependant on the fishery. This is particularly true of our Indian population which is scattered up and down the coast in isolated bays and inlets in small communities on reserves. Their well-being is totally dependant on the fish they catch. The cultivation and maintenance of our fishery resources is vitally important to the province, not only because of the economic advantages the industry brings to the country but also because thousands of our fishermen, their wives and their children, are looking to the resources of the sea for their future livelihood.

The hon. member for New Westminster mentioned that there are several ways of protecting our resources. I am sure many in this chamber are familiar with them. All the work of the Department of Fisheries is connected with the protection of our resources. The establishment of artificial spawning beds, catch limits, restrictions on gear and so on are ways in which this protection is afforded, but the two most important means of protection were those mentioned by the hon. member, namely, the means provided in this act and by the government in its declaration with regard to the establishment of a 12-mile limit to protect our coastal and inshore fisheries, and membership in international agreements to protect our resources on the high seas.

It is important to point out that the provision of a 12-mile limit is not a complete answer to the protection of our resources. Canada in the past has always shown a great willingness to co-operate with other nations in the protection of her resources on the high seas. At the present time we are members of some seven international agreements relative to fishing and the resources of the seas. These are the international Pacific salmon fisheries commission, which deals with sockeye and chum salmon on the Fraser; the international Pacific halibut commission; the international north Pacific fisheries commission; the international commission for the northern Atlantic fisheries; the great lakes fisheries commission; the north Pacific fur seal commission, and the international whaling commission.

It is essential that we should protect our fishery resources by maintaining our membership in these international agreements. This is the only way in which we can protect our resources on the high seas. I say this particularly because there are elements in British Columbia, some of which I think I can properly call irresponsible, which are now pouring scorn on the fact that Canada is a member of some of these agreements and issuing propaganda to the effect that we should pull out of them. If we are to protect our own interests on the high seas we must take all possible steps not only to preserve but to strengthen the terms of these agreements because, without them, foreign fleets could fish right up to our territorial limits.

Mr. Barnett: Would the hon. member permit a question? As he knows, I am one of the members from British Columbia. If I heard the hon. member rightly he said certain interests or organizations in British Columbia were suggesting we should pull out of our international agreements. That remark puzzled me because I am not aware that any such suggestions have been made in British Columbia. I wonder whether the hon. member can be more specific.

Mr. Basford: I can assure the hon. member for Comox-Alberni that I was not referring to any members of this house. I was referring to material which I have received advocating a policy which would, I think, destroy the north Pacific salmon agreement. Certain organizations are advocating a policy which, if adopted by the government, would in my opinion result in the members forsaking this agreement and leaving us without any agreement at all. The importance of this agreement to the west coast fisheries cannot be overemphasized.

As the hon. member for New Westminster said, the salmon is the truly important fish on the west coast. This is a fish which spawns in the rivers, goes down the river as a fingerling and makes its way thousands of miles into the mid-Pacific to grow to full size before returning to the river of its birth. Under the NORPAC agreement our salmon are protected as they go out into the Pacific. To illustrate the importance to British Columbia of maintaining this agreement, I should like to quote briefly from the concluding observations of the fisheries association of British Columbia to the special committee on fisheries of the British Columbia legislative assembly:

> The one salient fact that cannot be ignored, regardless of all emotional appeal designed to arouse a pseudo-nationalistic bravado, is that the north Pacific treaty and the abstention principle is all that is preventing the Japanese from exploiting the fishery resource of British Columbia within three miles of our shores.

To turn now to the bill itself and what it will mean for Canada, may I say that it involves two things. It involves the establishment of a baseline drawn from headland to headland. This means that the line from which we draw the 12-mile limit will not run parallel to the coastline but from one principal head land to the next. This, on the west coast, will mean the inclusion of such huge bodies of water as Queen Charlotte sound, Hecate straits and Dixon entrance.

On the east coast it will include the bay of Fundy and the gulf of St. Lawrence which will be of great benefit in protecting the eastern fisheries. Thus, when we talk of a 12-mile limit, it is important to remember that it is the intention of the government as stated in its declaration on June 4 to establish a territorial limit, to be drawn from headland to headland, for which there are important precedents, as the hon. member pointed out. There are many nations which have already established their limits according to that principle, following the Anglo-Swedish case in 1951.

There are two ways of declaring a 12-mile limit. It is possible to declare such a limit for all purposes, or a government can establish what is called a divided territorial jurisdiction. Under such a system the limit would, for example, be divided into two distances of six miles each, or it could be divided in a different proportion. The first six miles, say, would be territorial waters for all purposes including defence, pollution, the enforcement of customs regulations, and so on. The additional six miles would be an exclusive fishing zone.

The bill before us provides for a 12-mile fishing or territorial limit for all purposes. I support the six by six formula by which we would draw our baseline from headland to headland, and from that baseline have a territorial jurisdiction for the first six miles and a fishing zone for the next six miles, giving a total fishing zone of 12 miles. The reason I suggest that the six by six formula would be better is because that was the formula involved in a resolution supported by Canada and the United States at the international conference on the law of the sea which received almost enough, but not quite enough, support to carry. It was sponsored jointly at the second United Nations conference on the law of the sea in 1960 by the United States and Canada. I should like to read the first two paragraphs of the resolution which we sponsored:

> 1. A state is entitled to fix the breadth of its territorial sea up to a maximum of six nautical miles measured from the applicable baseline.
> 2. A state is entitled to establish a fishing zone contiguous to its territorial sea extending to a maximum limit of twelve nautical miles from the baseline from which the breadth of its territorial sea is measured, in which it shall have the same rights in respect to fishing and the exploitations of the living resources of the sea as it has in its territorial sea.

I would support a six by six formula of territorial jurisdiction because it has been widely supported at this international conference. If we adopt that method of measurement those nations, including the United States, which supported our resolution at the international conference are going to have a far more difficult time now opposing Canada's declaration of this 12-mile limit. If they supported us at the international conference I suggest they can hardly oppose us now and say we are not entitled to make this declaration.

In the negotiations which must follow a declaration of a 12-mile limit outlined in the bill before us which comes into force in July 1964, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) having said the declaration would come into force one year from the date of his announcement, in this interim period we will have to negotiate with the United States and countries which have historic or treaty rights to fish in the additional nine miles area we are now claiming. I understand that on the east coast quite a number of nations are involved. On the west coast only the United States is involved. While our fisheries are possibly threatened by Russian and Japanese fleets, and maybe in years to come by others, at the moment they have acquired no historic or treaty rights in this area. I would urge that in negotiations with the United States we should remember we have always tried to maintain close and friendly relations with them, and it is important to maintain those relations.

One very important aspect of this, Mr. Speaker, if we are going to make a declaration of this sort and tell United States fishermen that they cannot fish in that area, is that it is likely to result in drastic repercussions on our own fishermen. Much of the halibut caught by our fishermen is caught in an area of the Bering sea which conceivably could become United States territory, if they made the same kind of declaration we hope to make. If Canada were to take a very hard line now with the United States, we could end up with our own Canadian fishermen being cut out of much of the Bering sea halibut grounds which they now fish. Therefore in negotiations with the United States we must be careful not to jeopardize the rights of our own fishermen who fish in the Bering sea. In the future the United States may make a declaration similar to this, which would include much of this area off the coast of the Aleutian islands. I think the government now in office—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret interrupting the hon. gentleman, but I must inform him that his time has expired.

Mr. C. R. Granger (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, the matter under consideration is one of great interest to my province, and as a matter of fact to all the east coast area. It is a matter on which I have spoken in support on previous occasions. The proposal in the bill to extend fishing limits to 12 miles is one in which, as has been said already, there is a great deal of agreement. Such a proposal is long overdue, because if my reading of history is correct the problem of other nations utilizing our waters began almost as soon as Canada was discovered. In 1497 John Cabot discovered Newfoundland and Canada, and at the same time discovered that the waters of the area were full of fish. He began the real industrial development of this nation. According to history, two years afterwards not only were the English fishing the area but the Basques, the Portuguese, and others, many of whom have fished there ever since. The problems which were created around the year 1500 have accumulated and multiplied, until it now becomes important to us to decide what we really mean when we say that Canada extends from sea to sea, whether our jurisdiction stops at the sea shore, or does in fact include Canadian territorial waters.

I agree with the sponsor of the bill that we must put Canada's interests first, and in doing that we are only doing our duty. We are not unmindful of the rights of others, but we must be mindful of the fact that the waters of Canada and what they produce are just as much Canadian as the soil of Canada and what it produces. It is unthinkable that the land of Canada should be exploited to the advantage of our competitors and those who are not Canadians. Is it not just as logical for us to assume that the waters of Canada and the fish contained therein belong to Canadians first, and that they should be looked upon as a great Canadian resource? We have not only to recognize this ourselves but to convince others as well.

The 12-mile limit in itself is not a cure-all. But it is a great help, and if it is applied on the baseline principle it will do two things. It will reserve for Canadians sections of waters to fish. At the same time it will contribute substantially toward conservation. Unfortunately that is not an answer in itself. If the 12-mile limit simply followed the contour of the coast and somewhat widened that thin fringe around our coast it would not be effective. If the baseline principle is observed and the line is drawn from headland to headland, waters within 12 miles from the coast would be considered Canadian and would become Canadian. We will have preserved for our fishermen that which is essential, if the fisheries of Canada are to be exploited as they ought to be, if the fishing industry is going to give the fishermen the living it ought to give them and if the productivity of the sea is going to give to Canada the income it ought to give. All these things will be accomplished by the institution of a 12-mile limit which is founded on the baseline principle.

Perhaps nothing is more evident than the fact that our waters are being exploited. Everybody knows it. The three-mile limit gives too narrow a fringe around the coast. It can easily be infringed upon over night, and often it is. It is a known fact that during the night ships do move inside the three-mile limit. Such a narrow strip of water is very difficult to police. Despite the fact that the declaration of the 12-mile limit will mean there will be greater areas to police, it will be easier to protect this greater area of water than it is to protect the three-mile limit.

Figures show that Canada's production of fish is poor, and that in comparison the production of fish by other nations is rather alarming. We began the fishing industry in the western hemisphere. We have the wealthiest fishing ground in the world. We have allowed our competitors to take the fish away from us, and what is worse they have taken it away from within sight of our shores. These Canadian waters should be preserved for the use of Canadian fishermen. In my personal opinion the gulf of St. Lawrence ought to be a Canadian sea. I believe the same statement applies to the inland seas formed by the islands of the west coast. These, I believe, are vital to the survival of Canada as a great fishing country. These I believe to be vital, if our fishermen are going to have the use of the productive grounds much longer, because at the present time fish are being taken from within sight of our shores at such a rate that our fishermen will not have a chance to survive.

If our oldest industry goes it will adversely affect many thousands of people directly and indirectly, and will affect all of Canada. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I have often thought that because our fishing industry is so old it has, like a lot of old industries, accumulated the problems of centuries. We have been inclined not to look upon it in the light in which it ought to be viewed. Although the fishing industry is old, the production of the fishing industry is being used in ever greater amounts every year. Despite the fact that, like other ancient industries, it does have problems that have grown over the years, none of these problems is insurmountable. There is nothing wrong with the fishing industry which cannot be solved. The biggest problem facing the fishing industry is the fact that we look upon these problems as insoluble. However, in reality, we are faced with a group of small problems which, if attacked individually could be solved and the industry could be made much more profitable.

Figures prove, I believe, that there is more salt codfish being consumed today than there was 30 years ago. Salt codfish production is the oldest part of the industry. The fresh fish industry has been expanding rapidly. The problem is not that the world is using too little, although that might well be the case, of the products of the sea, but that we in Canada have not been getting our share of the world market. This is one problem that has to be tackled and it can be tackled effectively, just as any other problem that affects the fishing industry can be attacked separately and solved.

Keeping in mind the existence of other problems, this is one that is basic, the establishment of a 12-mile limit founded on the baseline principle. This is necessary if we are going to reserve for Canadian use the sections of water along our coast which are highly productive of fish, waters which can be utilized by our fishermen in order that they may enjoy a better livelihood and make Canada's place in the world markets more secure than it is today.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): There are three reasons, Mr. Speaker, why my intervention will be very brief this afternoon. The first is that the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) has already announced that the government is going to proclaim this 12-mile limit. The second is that the case has been very ably presented by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather) in his address this afternoon. The third reason is that I do not want to be charged with talking out this measure that I believe is of vital importance to us.

However, I do rise at this time to indicate our support for this particular bill. I believe that the principle is very sound and, furthermore, I believe that its necessity has been established without any question. The need has been indicated from two particular points of view: one, the saving of this particular resource for Canadian fishermen and, of course, the Canadian consumer as well; second, the principle of conservation and that representations have been made to the various parties in this house by those associated with the fishing industry. I do not believe anyone would question the importance of these two principles.

Not only have we had the presentation of this bill this afternoon, but we are reminded, of course, of the many other representations that have been made in connection with the establishment of the 12-mile limit. We have, for instance, the presentation that was made by a delegation from the united fishermen and allied workers' union during the last parliament. It was also reinforced by a delegation that was heard just recently and met, I believe, representatives of the various parties in the house. I should like to take one short paragraph from a publication that was issued by the united fishermen and allied workers' union headed, "Urgent appeal for action." Under the heading, "British Columbia fishermen strongly urge decisive action". I find this in paragraph number 4:

> Declaration of a 12-mile territorial waters limit by the Canadian government. Our waters would extend 12 miles outside of a "headland to headland" baseline drawn in such manner as to include the waters of Queen Charlotte sound, Hecate strait and Dixon entrance.

We also have a reference to this matter in a communication to the minister of fisheries under the former government from the amalgamated conservation society, which is made up of 12 associations and organizations. Paragraph 3 of their letter states:

> The law of the sea conference held at Geneva in 1960 found Canada's proposed 12-mile limit defeated by only one vote. An acceptable agreement for a 12-mile limit had been worked out beforehand between the United States and Canada, why did these two nations not ratify an agreement on the 12-mile limit between themselves? Smaller nations in order to conserve their fisheries were forced to establish such a limit which they have enforced and for which they are to be commended.

Reference has also been made today to the report submitted by the special committee appointed by the British Columbia legislature to inquire into certain matters affecting the commercial fishing industry in British Columbia. I should like to read a paragraph from this report presented on March 26, 1963.

> Your committee also noted basic agreement by all segments of the industry with the pressing need to amend the now obsolete three-mile limitation of Canada's territorial waters. All submissions advocated a straight baseline drawn from headland to headland of British Columbia's outer coastline, and to provide protection for Canadian fisheries for a distance of 12 miles to seaward in support of the arguments offered. As a result thereof your committee further recommends that another resolution containing this request be forwarded to the government of Canada, as follows:
> Whereas precedent exists whereby nations have established the width of their territorial seas; and
> Whereas the present 3-mile limit is inadequate for the protection of Canadian fisheries;
> Therefore be it resolved, that Canada take unilateral action to establish a headland to headland baseline along its outer coastal shoreline as recommended jointly by Canada and the United States of America at the 1960 United Nations conference on the law of the sea; and
> Be it further resolved, that Canada, while recognizing reciprocal fishing rights with the United States of America, declare exclusive fishing rights for a distance of 12 miles to seaward of that baseline; and
> Be it further resolved, that upon such declaration, Canada be prepared to enforce such measures.

I think that these statements from the various organizations and from the British Columbia legislature point up the necessity of action on the particular bill that has been presented by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather). There is reference, of course, to historic rights, but I would suggest that we cannot allow our Canadian resources to be depleted or destroyed, nor can we deprive Canadian fishermen of their rightful first claim to those resources. As has been pointed out, and I mentioned this previously, from the two points of view of conserving our resources for Canadians and also conserving fishery resources as a whole I believe that this action is very essential.

We appreciated the reference in the speech from the throne to the effect that a fisheries program for Canada was going to be worked out in co-operation with the provinces. I do not know just how far this is going to go, but perhaps it will have some effect and influence on this particular matter.

Once again I would remind the house that representations have been made to the effect that the committee on marine and fisheries should be set up and all these matters referred to it for consideration. I do not know just when that committee is going to be established or when it is going to have its first meeting. However, in view of all these problems, including the one mentioned today, I believe it is absolutely essential that the fishermen and those who are concerned have ample opportunity to make their representations to that committee and to the house. Therefore I am happy to speak in support of the principle of the bill that is now before us.

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, unlike the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson) I have no fears at all about being found on my feet at six o'clock speaking on this bill, because the house has already been given a clear indication by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) that the question of a 12-mile limit is under advisement, that talks have already taken place between the Prime Minister and the President of the United States and that Canada is moving rapidly in that direction. Therefore, while all of us in the house are in agreement in respect of the main principle of the bill of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather) his bill is to a certain extent redundant, however much it may provide an opportunity to the house to discuss a measure of the utmost importance to Canada.

On that score I might remind my hon. friend of the statement made by the Prime Minister in respect of a 12-mile limit, as found on page 621 of Hansard for June 4. In concluding his statement he said:

> It may be recalled that in my discussions with President Kennedy at Hyannis Port I informed him that the Canadian government would shortly be taking decisions to establish a 12-mile fishing zone. The president reserved the longstanding American position in support of the 3-mile limit. He also called attention to the "historic" and treaty fishing rights of the U.S.A., and I assured him that these rights would be taken into account. Discussions will be held with the United States with a view to determining the nature and extent of the U.S.A. rights and interests which may be affected by the action which Canada is taking. Discussions will also be opened as soon as possible with other countries affected, and it is our hope and belief that we will be able to reach agreement with such countries on mutually satisfactory arrangements.

[Mr. Patterson.]

I think that to proceed in this way with regard to the rights of a neighbour to whom we are exporters of fish is the correct manner in which to proceed in relation to a 12-mile limit for our own fisheries on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock and the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Nowlan.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I am always very happy to follow my great friend, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) although I cannot say I can rise to the heights of oratory which he did this afternoon. He mentioned in his opening remarks that he did not believe one should kick anyone when he is down. I think he was referring to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon), but I do not think there is any question in the minister's mind that he is down in any way.

However, there is a different atmosphere in the House of Commons tonight from the one which prevailed on the evening of June 13 when the minister brought down his budget. On that evening the minister breathed an air of confidence. Looking at the minister I was reminded of a new actor performing in the theatre for the first time. He thought he was good. Many of us felt he looked good. However, I am sure he did not appreciate that by Friday, through his actions in presenting the budget, the manner in which he presented it, the general tone, and above all through what it contained, that a storm would break out in the House of Commons and throughout the country as a whole.

I could not help thinking then, as I do now, of the occasion when I heard the minister speak as a minister of the crown in this parliament for the first time, when he was asked a question with reference to one fact—and that fact was practically the whole issue in the 1962 election—as to whether he was going to keep the dollar pegged at 92½ cents. In his reply to the interrogator, he said that you never ask a question about the Canadian dollar, because you may break confidence in it not only inside Canada but outside.

I said in my opening remarks a few moments ago that the main issue in the 1962 campaign was the pegged 92½ cent dollar. There are newspaper records full of evidence that the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Pearson) and no doubt his colleagues and associates, went across the country warning people that when the Conservative government pegged the dollar at 92½ cents it would mean a higher cost of living to Canadians and less profits to all primary producers in the country, including farmers, manufacturers and others.

I have in my hand tonight a clipping which I saved of a report of the first time the then leader of the opposition, now the Prime Minister, spoke in reference to this particular problem. This was on May 22, 1962. The headline in The Albertan, the Calgary morning paper, was this, "Pearson fears big price rise result of devaluation."

The facts, of course, are very clear. There was only a very small increase in the cost of living and it meant more money to all primary producers of the country, not only farmers and manufacturers but to those engaged in all enterprises. Those facts can be borne out now by the record which has been listed by the Conservative financial critic, the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan). Of course we could ask tonight: who told the truth in that election; or putting it mildly, who was right? Time heals a lot of wounds meaning political wounds, but time in politics sits in judgment as to who told the truth or who was right.

In 1962 the economy in Canada had a tremendous upsurge. There was a growth in gross national product of 8 per cent, and even taking into account, as the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings said the other day, a slight increase in the cost of living, the gross national product increased more than 6¾ per cent. There was a big boom in the tourist industry. Canada had never seen the like of it before in the tourist trade. I represent the riding of Bow River, Mr. Speaker. I say it is the most beautiful riding in Canada. It has in it, Banff national park, and all my constituents in Banff enjoyed that tourist expansion which took place as a direct result of economic factors and measures implemented by the previous government. I will say this, that the new Liberal government inherited a great legacy from the Conservatives. They inherited an economic boom in Canada. Compare that to what we inherited, the legacy in 1957 of unemployment rampant and low gross national product, and you will see that what the Ottawa Journal said recently is correct, that the house was in good order when the Liberals took over.

Against this background no wonder the Minister of Finance was confident. No wonder he said there was a new air of confidence in the country. I have always believed, and I am sure all hon. members would agree, that the Minister of Finance is a man of integrity; but I cannot believe he was serious when he said in his introductory remarks delivering the budget that this confidence was a result of the new government that had just taken over. If he was serious on that occasion, then I cannot believe, with the new atmosphere tonight that he is as serious now.

However, since his theatrical performance on the night that he delivered the budget, a storm has broken out. It has been brought about because the Minister of Finance has been grievously in error on two counts. On the first count, there is a cloud of suspicion around the whole budget because of the manner in which it was drafted, drawn and prepared, and on the second account because of the contents of the budget itself. Never since I became a member of the House of Commons in 1958 have I received so many telegrams and letters complaining about the new taxation which the minister is placing on building materials. This was to be the budget to conquer and master unemployment, but I make a prediction tonight that when the budget is fully felt by the economy of the country, there will be more unemployment than there was at any time between the years 1958 and 1962.

I have mentioned suspicion and the manner in which the budget was drawn. I want to refer to this because hon. members of the opposition had some difficulty in getting out of the Minister of Finance the fact that he actually brought in three ghost writers, outside of government officials, to draw and draft the budget. Let us take a look at some of the questions asked on orders of the day before he made his famous statement at five o'clock on the afternoon of June 14 after talking to the captain of the Liberal ship, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill).

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) put this question:

> Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance. Did the outside consultants who conferred with him with regard to the budget take an oath of secrecy during the course of the proceedings?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, everyone who assisted me with the preparation of the budget took the oath of secrecy.

He did not answer the question unequivocally. He did not come clean with the facts at that time until he was pressed further by other hon. members of the opposition. The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) then asked this:

Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether there were persons who left his office prior to six o'clock last night with knowledge of the budget contents?

Mr. Gordon: I left my office before six o'clock last night and I was fully familiar with the budget, Mr. Speaker.

Then the leader of the New Democratic party said:

Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister if persons other than the officials of his department participated in the preparation of last night's budget?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, Mr. Speaker; various officials of various departments participated—

But he did not say at that time that three consultants were brought in, outside of government officials. Then there was a question by the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau). I do not know if I would have put the question at that time because it was such that if he had got the opposite answer it would not have been such a good answer, because it was such a direct question; but I admire the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue who put the question to the minister and finally put his finger on the problem we are now debating:

I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if any of the outside persons who advised him on budget matters were informed in advance of any of the contents of the budget?

Mr. Gordon: I do not think I can say any more.

He wanted to remain silent, but he did not remain silent too long because he knew then there was a storm brewing, not only in the House of Commons and across the country, but in the ranks who form the front of his party. Then the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) said to the Minister of Finance, "I think under the circumstances, with this type of interrogation, you must make a clean breast of the situation".

Mr. Pickersgill: Is that mind reading?

Mr. Martineau: Crystal gazing.

Mr. Woolliams: I do not know whether it is mind reading or even crystal gazing that the Secretary of State often practises. I would ask these questions, and these are the questions we wanted answered at that time. Who were these people? What are their connections? What special interests do they represent? Like other previous speakers in reference to this matter, I want to make it quite clear that nothing I say in this regard means that I am at this time, from the facts that are before us, suggesting that any of these men are not men of integrity, nor am I making any reflection on the integrity of the Minister of Finance. But facts are facts and the Canadian people are entitled to know how and in what manner this partisan document known as the budget is put together. Who were these people? What firms were they connected with? There was Dr. M. P. O'Connell, of Harris and Partners in Toronto, chartered accountants; there was Mr. G. A. Conway, a chartered accountant from Toronto, and Mr. D. C. H. Stanley of Wood, Gundy and Company. Two of these people are agents, employees, connected with, or owners or shareholders of the companies in question. These are two large financial institutions in the city of Toronto. After further interrogation it was suggested that these men had taken an oath of secrecy. Then there was a question as to whether or not there was an order in council. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said he had checked and there was no order in council. Then we had the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) saying, "Oh, well, it was not an order in council after all. We used a special act. They were actually hired by contract", like you buy and sell property. These are some of the things we want to find out. I suggest, first of all, that we should have a select committee composed of hon. members of this House of Commons. All the people connected with this matter should be brought before that committee, under oath, to give evidence. In this way we could determine the facts and this house would be in a position to come to a decision and pass judgment.

I ask this question: What precedent exists in reference to conduct such as having outsiders prepare the budget, such as having ghost writers prepare the budget? At first one was prone to ask: What is wrong with getting outside help? In fact, some of the newspapers asked this question. It was also asked: What is wrong with getting the most experienced brains to assist in the preparation of the budget? I think the Minister of Finance asked that himself. On the face of it there would appear to be nothing wrong; but what does precedent say about this, and what is the principle behind this precedent? The answer is clear in this regard, for it is based on a very sound principle and tradition, which is that the contents of our budget must be kept secret. Any violation of this principle, any indiscretion which might affect and undermine the principle of secrecy has in Great Britain, as well as in other countries which have the same parliamentary system as our own, brought about the immediate resignation of the minister of finance who might have been guilty of such indiscretion. The principle is a very simple one. It is to avoid evil and the appearance of evil. I would point out also, as some other hon. members have done, that it is the standard procedure in Canadian parliamentary life that no persons other than members of the government and officials of the government shall have any knowledge of what is in the budget.

It must be remembered that these consultants were employed and attached to certain financial institutions which stood to make millions of dollars if they had prior knowledge of what was in the budget, and probably stood to lose millions of dollars if they did not have that knowledge. No one is suggesting—I repeat this—that these outsiders brought in as ghost writers actually informed their employers of the new tax structure as far as its affecting the sale of stocks and bonds was concerned. But to ask these people, these human beings, to carry this kind of load and not to use the information that they have now, and had at the time, when they are transacting business deals, is asking too much of any Canadian or any other person. I say that only supernatural men could be expected to toe the line in that regard, and I do not think anyone would suggest that these men are supernatural. I put this forward as an illustration of my point.

Anyone who has practised law before the bar of justice knows that sometimes in a most serious criminal case, such as murder, inadmissible evidence gets before the jury. The jury hear it and the judge hears it. The judge may advise the jury to overlook what they have heard, but we who are defending these people before the bar of justice profess that it is very difficult to clear one's mind of what one has heard. The jury may draw inferences from the facts, or what they think are inferences, because they had that knowledge deep-seated in their own minds.

There are two interesting precedents as far as secrecy of the budget is concerned. One concerns a cabinet minister in England by the name of the Hon. Mr. Thomas, who was the colonial secretary in 1936. What did he do? He merely remarked something about the price of some commodity, tobacco or tea—

An hon. Member: Beer.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, it was beer. That may be a better commodity. He made some small remark as to the price of this commodity to a Mr. Butt, who was also a member of parliament. Mr. Butt then made some remark to someone else, and there was a leak of the budget contents. What happened? Mr. Thomas resigned in 1936. I repeat, he was the colonial secretary and he resigned because of that indiscretion. I might mention there are some authorities in this connection. There is Keith's book on the British cabinet system, which says that the most fundamental thing in the preparation of the budget is secrecy, to avoid evil and the appearance of evil. I should like to quote from page 89 of this book, Mr. Speaker. It was said by the writer, who was dealing with this question, that even the closest cabinet colleagues should not have absolute knowledge of what is actually in the final draft of the budget; that only the minister of finance should have this knowledge, and the officials of the minister of finance in the government. Then he said this:

> There are clear disadvantages in this procedure—

The Minister of Finance admits that; he said there were some disadvantages in not getting outside help, because apparently he did not feel he had the kind of officials who could do the job:

> —necessary though it may be in the interest of secrecy in so far as the chancellor is allowed to prepare his plans without the valuable aid which is naturally provided by examination by a committee of the cabinet.

In effect, Mr. Speaker, what Keith said in his book was that although, as was pointed out by the present Minister of Finance, there may be some disadvantage in not getting outside help or even help from a special committee of government officials, that disadvantage is overshadowed by the necessity that the facts in connection with the budget must at all times be kept secret, because otherwise individuals stand to enrich themselves, or could enrich themselves at the expense of their fellow men in society. Putting it in more simple terms, why should—and this is what Canadians across the country are asking tonight—three or four Canadians have this information prior to the budget coming down, when 18 million or 20 million Canadians must stand the rap of extra taxation when the budget is brought down? There is the fundamental principle behind the doctrine of secrecy that prevails when the budget is drafted. What happened? Mr. Thomas resigned. I do not know what ramifications may follow in reference to the present Minister of Finance. That is a responsibility he must assume himself and make his own decision on.

Let us for a few moments look at a second illustration. The second interesting resignation to which I refer is in reference to Sir Hugh Dalton. This is discussed fully in his memoirs which are called "High tide and after". These are his memoirs for the period 1945 to 1960. There is a chapter called "My resignation". What did he do? When he left his office on the night he was going to deliver his budget he spoke to a fellow by the name of John Carvel, who was a correspondent for the Star, who was standing in the lobby.

He made a little remark to him in that regard. It was only some passing remark. Then he went to his place to deliver the budget. The next morning, when the cabinet ministers were attending a cabinet meeting, he got a note saying there had been some leakage of the contents of the budget. Immediately, he said he recalled making that statement and although there had been no harm done to the state, because very few newspapers had reached the public before the budget speech was delivered, he felt it was his duty to resign. And he did resign. These are his exact words used in the House of Commons. He said on that occasion in 1947:

> I very much regret to tell the house that the publication to which the hon. member refers arose out of an incident which occurred as I was entering the chamber to make my speech yesterday. In reply to questions put to me by the lobby correspondent of the Star newspaper, I indicated to him the subject matter contained in the publication in question. I appreciate that this was a grave indiscretion on my part, for which I offer my deep apologies to the house.

This is the point: No real harm had been done to the state, because no knowledge had leaked out in time for fortunes to be made. But because there had been an appearance of indiscretion, the minister resigned. This was the principle involved. Let us compare those facts with the situation we have before us now in this house. I say again that it is the minister's responsibility; it is his decision. This is what Mr. Dalton said in his letter of resignation:

> My dear Prime Minister,
> In view of the incident which was raised today in the house I think it is my duty to offer you my resignation. If you accept it I shall continue, though now outside its ranks, to do my utmost to support the government—

He goes on to say he will continue to support the party. To that letter, the prime minister replied, expressing again the same old tradition in succinct words in the second paragraph:

> I realize that this indiscretion in itself did not result in any action detrimental to the state, but the principle of the inviolability of the budget is of the highest importance and the discretion of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who necessarily receives many confidential communications, must be beyond question.

Those were the feelings of the prime minister about the matter. Sir Winston Churchill had this to say:

> In the circumstances we all regret that you have to resign but I must acknowledge with frankness that because of the indiscretion there was no alternative.

What was the result? The debate on the budget proceeded but a select committee was set up to inquire into the circumstances of the case. That committee made certain findings as to the facts. What were those findings? They were:

> 1. Mr. Dalton made a premature and unpremeditated disclosure to Mr. Carvel of the contents of his budget, which disclosure he had no right to make.
> 2. Mr. Dalton did not make his disclosure for premature publication and believed there was no possibility of such publication.
> 3. Mr. Carvel disclosed that information to his newspapers in the guise of a forecast, believing at the time that he was at liberty to do so. That belief was mistaken—

The report goes on to point out that no harm had been done to the state but that there had been an indiscretion.

I say, briefly, this: who are these people? What are the backgrounds of these people whose advice he sought? I say the minister has not only done harm to the economy of the country, he has not only upset confidence in financial circles but he has undermined his own people, because Mr. Harris is the majority owner of a millionaire company called Harris and Partners Ltd. I say the hon. gentleman is undermining the position of the Prime Minister himself. For who is Mr. Harris? He is married to a lady called Ethel Bowles who is first cousin to the Prime Minister. That is the spot on which the hon. gentleman has put his own leader. That is the spot on which he has put his own government. I say that the indiscretion here is far greater than anything that happened in the cases of Thomas and Dalton.

I could say the same about the expert who came from Wood, Gundy and Company. The basis for success in the government bond business is the ability to predict with some accuracy the future decisions of the government, because they affect tremendously the market. In making this statement nobody is implying dishonesty—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: I hear hon. members saying "Oh". Well, if they have other evidence let them come forward and tell the House of Commons. As I said, in making this statement no one is implying any dishonesty, but everything about these facts is contrary to traditions of budget secrecy here in Canada, as well as in the old country. The worst part is that whatever steps the government may take in the future, long after these experts have returned to advise their own firms, the suspicion always will be present in the public mind that both those firms have benefited.

I say that the indiscretion which has taken place in this case is the type of indiscretion which should be examined by a select committee of the House of Commons where we could question witnesses and find out the facts. Members of the House of Commons are entitled to these facts. The people of Canada are entitled to them, because there has been some indiscretion.

Now I wish to deal with the contents of the budget itself.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, I said I would be indicting the government and the minister on two counts. This is the second. Let me draw attention to what the building contractors have to say about these proposals. The government told us it was going to create employment. It was going to cure unemployment. That was the major problem, and the government intended to solve it. Well, this is what they have been saying in the city of Calgary:

> Hard to believe that the new budget re sales tax on building materials can be of any use to our construction industry. It will create at least a 27 per cent drop in starts this year.

This is how this government intends to cure unemployment.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Right across Canada the same.

Mr. Woolliams: That telegram was from one of the officers of the building trade. One of the ministers—I think it was the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen)—said: We are going to be very gracious; we are going to pay upwards of $75 a month in certain circumstances. The hon. gentleman himself said the government intended to give everybody $500, who wished to build a house. But take ten per cent of $15,000, which is the average price of a new bungalow today. Make that calculation and hon. members will find the government has taken away $1,500. That is $1,000 benefit to the Department of National Revenue. And this is the kind of budget which was intended to help cure unemployment.

I said at the beginning that this government got to office not as a result of the last election but because of the fraud they perpetrated across the country on the issue of the pegging of the dollar and on the question of unemployment, as well as on account of another question which they added during the last campaign. We said: Canada for Canadians. We said: Canada should own its own industry. When we came forward with a program along those lines and took some imaginative steps in that regard, what did they say, those people who now sit on the government benches? They said: Anti-American. Well, they have learned now, the Americans, to beware of gifts and, sometimes of friends who offer gifts. This budget is going to do more to destroy investment from foreign lands than any which has been brought to this house in the last 15 years.

An hon. Member: What about our image abroad now?

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, that was the big thing. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) said we had lost our image abroad. What about that image, now? In West Germany they rushed to the stock markets to unload Canadian stock yesterday. There were sales all over Europe and the United States. There were very few sales in Canada until—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret I must interrupt the hon. gentleman but I must advise him his time has expired.

Mr. Woolliams: I should like to finish that last sentence.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member's time has expired and he can continue only with unanimous consent of the house.

Some hon. Members: Closure.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I distinctly heard a number of nays.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): They did not like what they heard.

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, those of us who are new members in this house I know are dismayed by the cynical attitude which some hon. members take toward the basic integrity and intelligence of other hon. members of the house. We have guilt by association. There is a fundamental lack of courtesy in recognizing that a man should not be judged guilty till he is proven guilty. We seem to lack the basic manners which the public at large expect of Canadians living together, and living democratically one with the other. I think epithets like "rogue" and "fool" are wrong and beneath the dignity not only of parliament but of the hon. members of parliament.

We are here tonight to discuss the budget and we have heard very little about the budget. We need to discuss the details, but before doing so we should have before us the findings of a national economic council, one which would show us basically where we have been and where we are going. We lack a good deal of that information now. We need to be able to agree on the facts, and having agreed on the facts we can then argue about the policies which we should adopt in order to correct the trends we see ahead of us.

In recent years we have had some wide swings in production and employment. We had in the late 40's and early 50's a very fortunate set of circumstances for this country. Our competitors abroad had been damaged by war. We did not have to compete as effectively then as we do now for our markets at home and elsewhere. We also had looking to this country, investors who were interested in raw materials for the industries, not only of the United States, but overseas. We had a tremendous amount of capital flowing into this country and it created a good deal of excess capacity. This excess capacity resulted in a slow down in investment in industry in the late 50's. Now we are witnessing some sort of upturn, perhaps towards a more normal state of affairs, but we are still investing only in the order of 22 per cent of our total output in new plant, equipment, buildings, homes and so on. A few years ago, in the middle 50's, this figure was more like 27 per cent. This is one of the fundamental reasons why employment has sagged in recent years and why unemployment will continue to be one of the most difficult problems we face in the years immediately ahead. Accompanying this sag in employment has been a drop in investment in industry. Industry which formerly invested as much as 17 per cent of our gross national product is down around 13 per cent.

The investment trends, particularly in respect of foreign ownership, are very important, and I should like to outline a few of them. Foreign ownership and control is a matter of great concern to those of us Canadians concerned with our survival as an independent political entity north of the 49th parallel. Here are some figures which come from an indisputable source, the dominion bureau of statistics. Direct foreign financing of our gross capital formation in this country rose from 19 per cent in the late 40's to 25 per cent in the early 50's, and has gone on to about 33 per cent in the late 50's. In other words, the participation of foreign investors in the growth of this country, in the installation of new plant and equipment, has been growing. It was large in the 40's, growing in the early 50's and has been increasing steadily ever since. We have witnessed in parallel an increasing foreign ownership of our manufacturing, mining and other basic industries. It has risen from the order of 55 per cent foreign ownership in 1944 to 61 per cent in 1957 and on to 63 per cent in 1959. I would venture to guess that perhaps two-thirds of the ownership and control of the industry of this country is now in the hands of people who do not normally reside within our borders. In other words, they own the most dynamic elements of our economy and the total amount of this ownership is in the vicinity of $25 billion. This is their book value.

If the assets were put on the auction block tomorrow they would undoubtedly fetch prices considerably in excess of this figure, perhaps $30 million, or more. This figure is in the order of magnitude of the total personal income of this country. In other words, every one of us would have to work for a year to buy out this foreign ownership. It is equal to something like $1,300 for every man, woman and child in the country, or more than $4,000 for every wage earner or salary earner in Canada. Obviously it will take us a long time to save up enough to buy out the foreigner, if we had the desire so to do. We have to set aside something in the order of $250 per year per wage earner in order merely to pay a reasonable rate of return on that investment, something in the order of 5 or 6 per cent. Many of these industries are capable of earning a good deal more, and therefore I suggest our annual bill in interest and dividends alone could well be upwards of $250 per person.

The character of this foreign ownership has changed to some degree. In this country it has largely taken a form of equity ownership, ownership which means real control over our destiny. It is not in the form of debt. It is not in the form of bonds, for example. It is not the type of financing done by foreigners in the early growth year of the United States. Even in the years immediately before world war I when the United States was still heavily dependant on the United Kingdom and western Europe, the great majority of the investment consisted of bonds, the fixed debt obligations paying fixed rates of interest and with a fixed life. As the lives of these bonds ended they were retired, and that indebtedness was extinguished.

This is not the type of indebtedness which we have in Canada today. In the last dozen years some 250 Canadian owned firms of substance have been bought out by residents of other countries. This tempo has been increasing. The rate at which these firms have been bought out has been doubled in the last half dozen years, compared to the rate for the previous six years. There has been an acceleration in this trend, and therefore it is a matter of some considerable concern to those Canadians who want to have some say in the destiny of this country, in the ownership of its resources, and more particularly in the management of the basic industrial activities which take place here.

Mr. Martineau: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Davis: I do not expect to be speaking for the full 30 minutes and would be glad to entertain a question at the end of my remarks. I do not want to infer that these outside investors have in any way been unfriendly to Canada. We have set the laws. We have set the ground rules. We have welcomed them in. They have invested in industries where they expected the industries to grow, where they expected them to pay dividends. We would certainly not be doing ourselves any good to reverse this attitude towards foreign ownership or foreign investment in this country.

However, foreign firms do not always behave precisely as do Canadian-owned firms. For example, while most foreign owned companies make tremendous contributions to every aspect of our life, particularly taxation, a few are not good citizens. One important area where these firms hurt us is in the service area. Insurance agents who have served a company for generations while it was Canadian-owned find the new foreign owner giving all his business to agencies outside the country. It is often found that these firms employ consulting engineers from, for example, a United States firm with whom they are familiar. Understandably they turn to these firms that they know. They turn to foreign firms to carry out market surveys, and foreign firms to do their advertising for them. All of these people are their friends and well known associates in other countries. This is not always to the good of Canada because it means that these foreign owned corporations tend to look abroad for services and for other things which, initially at least, we might expect them to find here in this country.

Then, too, in respect of charitable donations it is frequently found that foreign firms do not behave as Canadian firms do. Agencies which have long been dependant upon support of Canadian firms suddenly find this type of contribution for educational or other charitable purposes is not available for collection here.

The question now arises as to what we do about this situation. We can do nothing and allow the trend to continue towards even greater foreign ownership. Or we can release one of the great driving forces for socialization in this country. Governments, national, provincial or even municipal, could take over some of these activities. This was one of the main driving forces half a century ago, behind the formation of Ontario hydro. It is not exclusively a Canadian attitude towards foreign ownership. But, we have more government ownership and control of some industries because there is no other way to Canadianize industry or ensure that Canadians generally participate in their ownership and operation.

There is a Liberal answer as well to this question. It was foreshadowed by the report of the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects back in 1957. I merely read a summary of the recommendations of that report. It is as follows:

1. Wherever possible, such concerns—

—this is foreign-owned concerns—

—should employ Canadians in senior management and technical positions, should retain Canadian engineering and other professional and service personnel, and should do their purchasing of supplies, materials and equipment in this country;

2. They should publish their financial statements and make full disclosure of the results of their Canadian operations;

3. They should include on their boards of directors a number of independent Canadians and they should sell an appreciable interest in their equity stock to Canadians.

The commissioners said that they had in mind something of the order of 20 per cent to 25 per cent.

I should like to summarize the contents of the present budget which follow, quite logically and consistently from these recommendations of a half dozen years ago. I will itemize several of the most important:

1. A withholding tax, a tax holdback on dividends. This is to be reduced from 15 per cent to 10 per cent for companies which are 25 per cent Canadian-owned. In other words, companies which are at least one quarter owned by Canadians do not have to pay as substantial a tax when the dividends are remitted out of the country as others which have a lesser extent of Canadian ownership.

2. The withholding taxes on dividends to be increased to 20 per cent on January 1, 1965, for companies which are not 25 per cent Canadian-owned.

3. Accelerated depreciation in areas of high unemployment, and only available to companies with at least 25 per cent Canadian ownership.

On the other side of the coin, and this applies to bonds, the withholding tax on interest is removed for non-taxable investors abroad. These are the basic considerations in the present budget.

Now, I should like to move on from foreign ownership and control, which I believe to be one of the principal elements of this budget and certainly an element which addresses itself to fundamental Canadian problems with which we have been living for some time, and about which we have done next to nothing, to certain other details of the budget.

In so far as the budget deficit is concerned, we have not been taxing to the extent that we have been spending in this country. Our expenditures have, however, risen sharply. They have risen from roughly 26 per cent of our total national output in 1956 to something like 33 per cent currently. We will have, roughly, to match this increase in the proportion of our national wealth that comes back to the government in the form of taxes, or this vast budget deficit which we have continued to live with in recent years will grow with the passage of time. We will cause other people to lose faith in this country, to reduce their investments and cause simultaneously an increase in unemployment and a lack of confidence at home amongst Canadians.

One small item in the budget which I believe goes in the right direction is a reduction in the tax in respect of the export of electric power. This is of interest to me and to my province. I should like to focus on it for a moment. I concentrate on this tax because it is the one last remaining export taxes that is in effect in Canada. It has been in effect since 1925. Roughly speaking it amounted to about 10 per cent of the selling value of the power moving out of this country. It continued to be levied although the power was only circulated in and out of the country, out at one point and in at another, making a balance of the total amount in energy terms. The tax was merely applied to the outgoing amount. We need connections with adjoining areas to reduce the amount with standby capacity. This can account for a tremendous saving, and also could provide additional employment by actually providing power to the neighbouring areas of the United States.

I should like to indicate something of the magnitude of the power industry. Roughly 10 per cent of all the investment in this country, one out of ten of all the dollars that go into new construction goes into power plants and transmission lines. Some $5000 million of these assets exist in Canada today, but roughly $1,000 million worth of these facilities stand idle. We do not need all of this excess capacity to look after breakdowns or emergencies or exceptional upsurges in demand. We could get by with half as much. If we could sell the other half to the United States on a short term basis, this would currently return us something in the order of $50 million. Within six or seven years it could be $100 million. It could be a substantial item going towards balancing our presently unfavourable external account.

One item I hope to see in the budget next year is an extension of the concessions to research and development. Research and development is really the industry of ideas. It is the industry which, on this continent and elsewhere, has been growing far faster than the rest of the economy. It has doubled during the last five or six years. I believe we would do well in this country, because we have very little research, to declare Canada a tax heaven. In other words, the earnings, royalties, the yield on research and development, should be declared, for a substantial period of years at least, income tax free. This would cause firms not only at home but abroad to look upon Canada as a place in which to reduce costs, a place where they would encounter lower costs for research and development, and this would keep many of our own people at home. It would provide jobs for some of our younger people who expect exciting new job opportunities in fields like research which look ahead towards the shape of things to come. It would help us in respect of new products, in respect of cost cutting processes and would not only cause our economy to be better rounded but would also improve the efficiency of the industry we have here.

I think that even more important is the ownership aspect. When men are in a position of knowing what the forward thinking of a company or industry is in the area of research and development they are better able to invest more intelligently in the future of their company or firm. We do very little of this in Canada. We do about one fifth or one sixth as much as do the British and the Americans, and less still compared with West Germany and certain other countries. We must provide this sort of job opportunity for our people, both to give them the satisfaction of working in wonderful industries such as research and development and to improve the efficiency of our economy and to buy back some of the ownership in our own nation.

Finally, I should like to stress again that this budget, as I see it, has faced up to several substantial realities in Canada. One I have highlighted has been ownership and control. I think any other country would do the same. In fact, no other country in the world that I know of has done so little about this nagging and difficult problem of outside investment within their own country and particularly within the most dynamic segments of their industrial make-up.

In this government we are not anti-American and we are not anti-big business or anti-stock market. We are pro-Canadian and we are pro-enterprise, private and public. We are all for Canadians being able to buy more of the stocks in enterprises in this country, whether the majority of ownership is held outside of Canada or here. Confidence, I think, is the real key and Canadians fundamentally are a confident people. They want a little less talk and a little more action. I am sure they want us here tonight to concentrate on the budget, on fundamental ideas in the budget and to take a positive attitude toward the future by being positive in our criticism and positive in our suggestions as to how to run the financial affairs of the country.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would be kind enough to answer a question at this point? As a matter of fact, I have two questions. First of all, does the member believe that the 30 per cent securities tax proposed and then withdrawn by the Minister of Finance is a practical formula for regaining control and ownership of our industry? Second, when he suggested a tax haven for Canada was he speaking on behalf of the government?

Mr. Davis: In respect of the first question, may I say there are undoubtedly many measures which are required and they will have to dovetail together in order to ensure a substantial measure of Canadian ownership and control. I believe that the 30 per cent tax, or something of that type, is one of the essential ingredients necessary in order to arrest at least the substantial swing to foreign ownership and control. In respect of the second question, may I say I have a few ideas of my own. Certainly a budget cannot encompass everything. Research and development happens to be one of my pet enthusiasms and I believe that sooner or later I will be able to convince not only some of the members of this party but also other members of the house that the suggestion I made is a good one.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, yesterday this house was informed that the 60 days of so-called decision are now to be known as the 60 days of revision. The other night, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) leaped from point to point like an overweight gazelle in his speech, the house was treated to a budget speech laced with partisan platitudes, a budget speech unprecedented in this house since confederation, I am told. Today hon. members of the party I support in the House of Commons have demanded a committee of inquiry. We are not pointing the finger of accusation but we are saying that because of the unprecedented action taken by the Minister of Finance, suspicion has been cast around the budget.

I believe it was Lord Haldane who said that justice must not only be just but must also seem just. So as a Canadian I say to the minister, in the name of goodness give us this committee of inquiry and show the people of Canada and members of the house his good faith.

There is one special item I want to deal with in the budget which relates to federal-provincial relations. During the election campaign we were told in the province of Quebec that a Liberal government in Ottawa and a Liberal government in Quebec would solve all our problems. Oh, Mr. Speaker, the climate was wonderful in those days in the province of Quebec. The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) embraced Mr. Lesage and then Mr. Lesage embraced the Prime Minister.

What have we seen subsequently? We have seen senior members on the treasury benches opposite not even let on that they know of Mr. Lesage or his ultimatum. Within a few short weeks the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) turned his back not only on Mr. Lesage but on all ten provincial premiers in Canada. The Liberals told us in the last election that they were going to sweep French Canada. But now, whoosh, in four paragraphs of the budget address they have swept French Canada under the rug. Sir, this is not a new broom which is sweeping clean. It is not even a new broom that is passing over lightly. It is a broom that is passing over completely.

I am speaking as a Canadian interested in provincial rights. This is not a problem that is concerning Mr. Lesage alone, but one that is concerning all the provincial premiers. The Liberal party created a high degree of expectancy in this area; but now, as I say, in four paragraphs of the budget speech the Minister of Finance has turned his back on the provincial premiers.

I am talking as a Canadian, not as a Conservative and certainly not as a Liberal, when I say that I am most concerned with what is going on between Quebec and Ottawa today. What is going on today between Quebec and Ottawa is the culmination of years and years of Liberal divide and rule policy.

Another item of the budget that interests me is the $500 prize for those who decide to build their houses in winter. How charming this is, Mr. Speaker. The citizen is rewarded for his industry with this sop to his home-loving spirit. He is conscious, of course, that the house is going to cost at least $2,000 more when he has finished paying the taxes on building materials, but no doubt he will touch his forelock in gratitude for the crumb. Let him eat cake is out; let him eat crumbs is in. There is no improvement here for the average Canadian homebuilder.

There is an old Scottish song which goes, "A Gordon for me, a Gordon for me". I am told it is usually sung by a young lass in a kilt. She can have her Gordon, and I think she had better take him back to the bonnie banks and teach him something about banking. I was staggered to hear a minister of the crown, in a speech like the budget sink to what can only be described as sheer, arrogant hop-scotch with the past, and then produce a tired haggis of a budget.

Mr. Dupuis: Sing another song.

(Translation):

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Mr. Speaker, you have recognized the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) and I wonder what right have the hon. members opposite to constantly interrupt him, without your leave?

(Text):

Mr. Grafftey: I am not going into the political gaucherie which the Minister of Finance displayed in getting outside help. Other hon. members of the house have already pointed out to him something he should have learned in childhood. I am not questioning that; but what I am questioning is the fact that when he gets someone else to do his homework for him, in the name of goodness please let him get someone who knows what he is doing.

We have seen the withdrawal of the 30 per cent tax. If the minister had the simple courtesy to consult with officials of the Department of National Revenue it would have become easily and quickly apparent that this measure was impossible to administer. Again I say I am not so much concerned with the fact that he sought outside advice. What I am concerned with is that apparently the advice he got was bad advice.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, today I propose to deal with a single aspect of the budget, but, before doing so, I want to call your attention briefly to one or two points which have been raised by several hon. members earlier in the discussion.

First of all, hon. members know that the first and foremost task of the government does not consist in creating or in starting an economic system, but in pursuing the progressive trend which has already been given to this country's economy.

I shall not be presumptuous enough to say that the administration which I have supported for several years in this house has settled all economic problems in Canada. But we should never forget that the present government inherited a house in good order. Most of the basic indices of our economy were rising when the present government took over.

Under our administration, i.e., since 1956, the total increase in our exports of manufactured goods has reached 84.5 per cent. Second, the annual increase in living costs between 1958 and 1961 was 1.1 per cent, which means a smaller rise than in any other country in the world save one.

Those are the basic figures of a sound economic development.

Mr. Speaker, all hon. members will realize that for the welfare of our great young country, Canada, we should settle several problems as soon as possible, and pass legislation thereon. With that in my mind, I sincerely regret, with the whole Canadian people, that the speech the hon. Minister of Finance made before the house last Thursday night had such a partisan flavour. Indeed, his budget speech was one of the most partisan speeches ever made in this house by a minister of finance since confederation. His remarks, as I pointed out a few minutes ago, were full of partisan platitudes.

Once again, the leaders of the Liberal party are thinking that the welfare of their party is more important than the welfare of this country.

Hon. members, the return to power of the party I support in this house will be based on responsibility and principle. We are offering Canada a definite program. We shall not let systematic reflection be cast on the high office of the prime minister in power, nor allow that our country's prestige be diminished here, or abroad.

(Text):

A few moments ago I said that I wanted to discuss one of the principles that is very close to the party I support in the House of Commons. Burke, one of the fathers of Conservative principle, had a high regard for the notion of "local self-agency." In Canada today this merely means that our federation only works when our provinces, cities, towns and municipalities are strong and able to carry out their constitutional responsibilities.

When the party I support in this house came to power in 1957, total federal contributions and payments to all provinces amounted to $689,352,000 for the fiscal year 1956-57. In the year 1962-63, for the same purposes, the figure amounted to $1,794,-061,000. In the fiscal year 1956-57 total grants to the province of Quebec amounted to $177,463,000 while in the fiscal year 1962-63 the amount was $491,608,000 for the same purposes.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, hon. members will excuse me for quoting statistics at such great length, but these figures demonstrate our administration played a positive role in strengthening the position of our provinces from coast to coast. At the same time I fully realize that many problems touching upon federal-provincial affairs remain to be solved. To this end I wish to discuss the federal-provincial relations section of the budget. Hon. members opposite on the treasury benches are burying their heads in the sand if they do not realize that a healthy confederation and a healthy spirit of biculturalism will only continue if the Minister of Finance understands that the taxing powers of the provinces mean a lot. I am sure he not only got no outside advice in relation to the federal-provincial relations section of his budget, but that he got no advice at all.

It was with great dismay I noticed the apparent lack of understanding by the Minister of Finance of some basic issues which face our people today within the general framework of the question of federal-provincial relations and biculturalism. During the past election campaign the Prime Minister and the premier of Quebec got together. I am not quite sure what they talked about. It must have been about something; and then we were told in Quebec that in order to save confederation all we had to do was elect Liberal governments in Ottawa and Quebec. But, Mr. Speaker, what have we seen since a Liberal government has taken office here in Ottawa? On the one hand they talk of co-operative federalism, while on the other hand their throne speech and plans indicate a degree of centralization unprecedented in the history of Canada. Intricate legislation, such as loans to municipalities, was proposed and, after continued questioning of the ministry, we learned that none of the provinces was consulted in general or specific terms. While provincial premiers speak out for a thorough re-examination of our constitutional approach, the budget clearly demonstrates that unless the federal government acts immediately, and not tomorrow, the provinces will be faced with a fait accompli at the next federal-provincial conference whenever it is decided to be held.

Liberal spokesmen have created by their campaign tactics a high degree of expectancy in this house. One program in Quebec, another program in the rest of Canada; they have been at their old game. I suggest that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) turns around and faces Mr. Lesage and the other ten provincial premiers. After sitting in this house for a number of weeks and after hearing, especially, the budget address, it has become apparent to me and it is my firm belief that the problem of federal-provincial relations and biculturalism has received no serious thought on the part of the present government. New, not old, approaches must be used and many of the problems, sir, cannot wait for the findings of royal commissions. We were criticized, when we were in office, when we set up royal commissions. This government is now setting up a royal commission for one of the most important problems that is facing Canada today. I see the government whip laughing. He would not laugh in his constituency. His constituents are looking for a solution to the problems in the province of Quebec that this Liberal government, this centralizing government, said they would bring about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There was not much applause there.

Mr. Grafftey: I am not looking for applause, like the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin). Conservative thinkers fully realize that in a confederation such as Canada, where the federal government has distinct powers and responsibilities, decentralization can be carried too far. We know that the federal treasury is not like a munificent cow with an endless supply of milk. But we all recognize that since confederation the provinces—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Grafftey: Hon. members opposite laugh, Mr. Speaker. They do not realize that today the provinces of Canada are looking to them for an answer to this problem. The Secretary of State for External Affairs laughs. I say to him: Laugh in front of your people. That is cynicism not worthy of the minister. While the Minister of Finance turns his back on the provincial premiers, the Secretary of State for External Affairs laughs. But this is the question of saving confederation; it is not a laughing matter.

(Text):

An hon. Member: Laugh that one off.

Mr. Grafftey: Here in Ottawa our basic thinking must change, and within the spirit of co-operative federalism, sir, I wish to make some specific suggestions. The motion—

An hon. Member: Where did you get that phrase?

Mr. Grafftey: It is a phrase that hon. members opposite think they initiated. But the motion of co-operative federalism constitutes by no means a novel approach. The ARDA legislation, initiated by the previous administration, and progress made in the resources field basically involve a high degree and a high notion of co-operative federalism. A similar concept must also involve fiscal relations and, in fact, all federal-provincial relations. If such were the case, no longer would the federal authority propose legislation involving the provinces without prior consultation; no longer would the provincial and federal governments approach the summit of federal-provincial conferences at opposite ends of the pole without previous attempts at negotiating points of view and without any basic consultation since the last conference. Fiscal relations are at the heart of many of the problems facing the healthy continuance of our federal union, and true biculturalism. Immediate changes are imperative.

For some time now, sir, I with other hon. members in this house have advocated the creation of a secretariat for federal-provincial relations. Such a secretariat would increase the efficiency of separated powers, whether exercised alone or in a common endeavour. In many areas the provinces and federal government have consulted merely on a disorganized, ad hoc basis in relation to problems that need to be planned and executed only on the basis of continued and detailed communication and co-operation. Long and short term planning is involved here, and immediately our attention is drawn to the legal, financial, tariff, tax and resources aspects of the question. Today we see a no man's land of waste authority. We see as well the need for a continued review of the British North America Act and joint planning and administration of fishery, forestry, farming, housing, urban redevelopment, employment, human rights and other joint programs. We also see the need for joint action in the field of automation and the location and development of industry and secondary industry.

An hon. Member: Faster.

Mr. Grafftey: When we consider that economic factors never seemed to be the most important considerations which contributed to confederation in the first place, such a proposal for the establishment today of a federal-provincial permanent secretariat, when economic and fiscal matters are of such great importance, is of such vital concern to my way of thinking and to the way of thinking of many hon. members, that it must be acted upon immediately.

Not long ago, when the provincial premiers met in Victoria, British Columbia, Premier Lesage of Quebec mentioned the strong possibility that the provinces might join together to form their own permanent secretariat. He noted that many areas require co-operation simply among the provinces themselves, without mentioning the necessity for co-operation among the provinces and the federal government. This is most notable, perhaps, in the resources field. The first steps to be taken seem to involve the immediate necessity for the provinces and the federal government to set up their respective general secretariats. We need not fear the idea of competing secretariats if we carry the whole idea one step further and look at progress already made with the joint national resources council which came into being under the last administration. This was the first concept of true co-operative federalism.

All provinces, under this system, and the federal government are represented and we see here the idea of a super-provincial-federal organization. Nothing is imposed on the provinces. They are never presented with a fait accompli. Working formulas are negotiated and evolved on a continuing basis. Surely, Mr. Speaker, this concept must be widened to include at least fiscal arrangements. Perhaps there are those who feel the provinces and the federal government should not set up separate secretariats before one general joint secretariat is set up. For this reason I have purposefully not entered into details. On the other hand, I do hope these broad proposals may play some small part—I am addressing these words to the Minister of Finance—in solving a problem which Canadians of all political parties fully realize must be dealt with immediately. The Minister of Finance of this Liberal party would not, I am sure, be too pleased if he saw the behaviour of his party in the province of Quebec. But the province of Quebec, with the other provinces, wants action now because of the way the Liberals behaved during the election campaign. This is the party that was going to save confederation. Therefore I say to the government, show the people of Quebec and all provinces of Canada your good faith.

With the people of my province, Mr. Speaker, I am optimistic about the future of confederation. Yet I am a realistic optimist, and realism dictates that the Minister of Finance and his colleagues indicate that they are doing some positive thinking and are ready to act. Such an approach to the question of dominion-provincial relations and to the question of biculturalism will help to ensure that 1967 will be a true celebration for all the provinces of Canada and for all Canadians.

Mr. Jack Roxburgh (Norfolk): I intend to to deal tonight with a subject which is very controversial, one which is possibly as controversial as the budget itself.

An hon. Member: That's for sure.

Mr. Roxburgh: One thing is for sure: at least, I sincerely hope we shall not be battling each other back and forth, because this is a subject above that. The controversial subject with which I intend to deal is tobacco.

I think hon. members will agree with me that anything which would cause our lovely lady, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) to change her mind at this time of life is really quite important.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Roxburgh: Wait for it, boys; we are coming to the subject. I feel sure we all acknowledge that the stand taken by the minister with regard to cigarette smoking has been motivated only by her keen and sincere concern for the future health of the youth of this country. I think we must all commend her for her ideas in that direction. It is not my intention in any way to dispute the findings of the medical authorities. But I want to say this: if the medical authorities are truly sincere in their efforts to protect the health of this nation, they had better take a really long look in some other directions and at some other products. Let us take one such product, for example, tranquillizers. Tranquillizers are being used today not only by adults but increasingly by the youth of our nation. I think hon. members will have to realize that these drugs are going a long way towards breaking down the mental and moral health of our young people.

Then, of course, there is that likeable and friendly old fellow, old John Barleycorn. In fact, I like to get friendly with him once in a while. And when I talk about friendly old John I hope the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) will not think I am referring to him. I would like to take dear old John and cut him up into three pieces. The first one has to do with health. I think everyone knows that there is a great deal of evidence about the effect of dear old John on the health of the nation in more ways than one. Indeed, medical men are beginning to think of too great an indulgence in alcohol as being a disease. They are actually contemplating putting up institutions to handle people suffering from this disease. This is where the comparison with tobacco comes in. I think that if comparable experiments were made the adverse effects on health caused by dear old John would easily outweigh those of tobacco.

Then there is the effect of alcohol in relation to our mental institutions. I often wonder whether the medical authorities know anything about the mental institutions which exist in the Dominion of Canada today. I am not blaming dear old John for putting the majority of the present inmates into these institutions, but I think every hon. member here will realize that he is responsible for a great number of these people finding themselves in institutions.

Then there is the moral angle. There are the broken homes. Let us face the fact that the effects of too much alcohol go a long way towards breaking down the moral fibre of this country. Again, I should like to say that if the medical men in Canada want to take a look at some of these things they had better take a long, hard look at some of these other products, because the tobacco situation is nothing but peanuts compared with them.

We grow it in good old Norfolk county—between $40 millions and $50 millions worth. Tobacco in Ontario today is a multi-million dollar business. It is an established business and a proven business. Are we going to sell it down the drain? I should like to bring a few facts to the attention of hon. members. I know they will smile when I refer to a certain product and compare it with tobacco. Believe it or not, that product is wheat, and wheat is the lifeblood of Canada, grown of course by those great farmers out in western Canada. Wheat returns to those farmers something like $500 million a year, but even so the government has to subsidize the wheat growers of western Canada through the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, through grants in respect of unharvested crops, acreage payments, storage payments, and so on to the tune of about $100 million a year. The tobacco industry returns to the growers of Ontario around $100 million a year. It has returned to the government by way of excise duty and taxes hundreds of millions of dollars over the years. On the average it returns every year approximately $400 million in taxes. This is derived from somewhere between 120 to 130 thousand acres of land in Ontario. This area produces the highest grade tobacco in the world. Hon. members will say it is a new industry, 35 to 40 years of age. But any new industry needs help from older industries, and from the United States came the boys from North and South Carolina and other places, and they taught us how to grow tobacco. When the season was over they went back to their homes in the Carolinas and Virginia, taking with them hands of tobacco grown in Ontario. What did they do with those hands of tobacco? They thought they would have a little fun and gave them to their relatives and friends to enter as exhibits in tobacco shows in the United States. And what happened? They just walked away with the prizes.

Mr. Speaker, this is an industry that has not been living out of the pockets of the country. Tobacco growing is an industry which has been putting money back into the country's pockets, not taking it out like some other industries within the dominion. If ever there was an industry which needs adjustment assistance and help in the research field, it is the tobacco industry. I am sure every hon. member here will agree that this industry has earned its right to expect some help, because as I say, for years it has been pouring hundreds of millions of dollars into the pockets of Canada to help keep other industries going ahead. Are we going to kill an industry? Are we going to cut the head off the goose that laid the golden egg?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Roxburgh: Good. I realize there has been a lot of unwarranted publicity given to this subject recently. Suggestions have been made that programs are to be worked out to reduce or even eliminate the habit of smoking cigarettes. If such is really the case then this government should take a forward step in stopping expansion of the tobacco industry and leave it where it is now. It is a stabilized industry, and if this obnoxious weed is so obnoxious and if these statements are correct, as I expect they are, then its growth should go no further and the people responsible for the industry and who have invested money should be protected. The government of the day should give certain protection to this industry, which has proven itself. This could be done by making a sincere effort to bring about national marketing board legislation. This should not be delayed. I think we all realize it cannot be done without the co-operation of the provinces. That is also true of portable pensions, contributory old age pensions and so on, and I know the present government will take immediate steps to put this legislation before the house. I ask the present government to do this on behalf of a $100 million business returning, as I say, $400 million a year to the government in tax.

A substantial effort should also be made to export this product. Many hon. members will smile and say that it has been tried but we have not had very much luck. The United States has already put forward ideas to expand their export trade. We have some of our own which we intend to carry out, but we can always learn from others. I think one of the best ideas which has come across the line is this. They have employed men—call them, if you like, good relations officers—who are sent to countries to which the United States exports a great deal. They work in conjunction with the United States embassy, and when any product, whether it be tobacco, machinery, or what have you, is exported to that country they are there to give advice. Suppose we export tobacco to a country and it does not arrive there in the condition it should. Naturally the importer is perturbed and will not pay the price. Or suppose for some reason or other the product is in good condition but the importer thinks he can pull a fast one and says it has not arrived in good condition. The men employed by the United States would follow up such a complaint. If it concerned an export from that country they would talk things over. This would bring them closer together and get them to forget their differences. The United States has proven that by this method they have not only kept their export trade but have increased it.

The hon. members may ask what are the possibilities of exports? A lot of people say it is no use going to a different country to export because the United States exports to that country, or somebody else does. Well, if we all took that attitude no new industry would start up either in this or any other country. Speaking as a fruit grower, when we have a large crop of apples or peaches, or whatever it may be, if we sat on our fannies all the time we certainly would not sell very much fruit. We have to get out and work for it.

Now, I should like to point out to you that Great Britain imports from Canada 11 per cent, from the United States 50 per cent. Belgium imports from Canada one third of 1 per cent, and 28 per cent from the United States. West Germany imports 1 per cent from Canada, and 40 per cent from the United States, and so on. One could go on so far as this part is concerned, and talk about this industry and the return it has made to this country in the form of taxes. We can, without taking one cent in the form of taxes from any other product, take some of the $400 million to help this industry while it is fighting for its life. After all, this is an industry that has poured money into the governments of Canada for the last number of years. We can spend money for experimental purposes. We can spend money for marketing. We can spend money for research in the interests of the tobacco industry. This money will come from the tobacco industry itself.

I know that a number of salesmen and other people will say that the subsidies paid by the United States government represent the reason their tobacco is selling overseas and ours is not. I know that at the mention of subsidies everybody will throw up their hands and say, "Oh, not another subsidy for an agricultural product". I should like to say to my hon. friends opposite that this money can be taken from the industry itself. Surely an industry that has poured the money into our pockets that this industry has over the years deserves some consideration. We are not asking that money should come from any other product to help subsidize us. Surely, we can use some of this money to subsidize the industry now.

In summing up, I should like to say that I think one of the most important factors is to stop further expansion of tobacco growing. I should like to repeat that tobacco farmers in Ontario produce 99.9 per cent of the tobacco Canada uses. If all these facts that the medical profession claim are true, and I am not denying them, then why should this or any other government allow the Farm Credit Corporation and other corporations to lend money to people to grow more tobacco? It just is not sensible. We have all we need at the present time. In other words, the present tobacco farm marketing board is being backed to the tune of millions of dollars to try to help sell this surplus tobacco.

Then, there should be a subsidy given for assistance in research. Here is an industry which, if it is not looked after, not given just a little bit of help, might go down the drain. No one is saying that in five months or five years the research people will not make it possible for everybody to continue to smoke cigarettes without any detriment. In my opinion it might be possible for the Department of Trade and Commerce to have people work through the embassies to sell our tobacco.

Let me point out again, Mr. Speaker, that this is a proven business, a business that is going to need some form of protection while it adjusts itself to the new problem facing it today. In my opinion at least, it is only good common sense that such a business should be protected because, in the long run, it is going to return millions of dollars to governments now and in the future, and is going to be of value in other ways and do more good than we will ever realize.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, in joining in this debate I must first of all congratulate you on your appointment as Deputy Speaker. Of course, I must congratulate the Speaker as well. This traditional honour, I think, falls on very worthy shoulders. Before commencing my remarks this evening I must say that I have been a friend of the Speaker for some time. He was one of those who assisted me when I first came here in 1957.

I want to make my remarks on the budget under three main headings this evening. The first one is the tax incentives as they are applicable to northern development. The second is the budget as it applies or does not apply to the mining economy of the north. Third, I want to state some facts for the record in connection with the Dawson city festival which has received so much lampooning and so many unkind remarks from the government side of the house.

Before doing this, however, I want to comment very briefly on the manner in which this budget was prepared. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the charges that were levelled at the former government now the official opposition, last year and the year before in connection with fumbling and bumbling, in connection with lack of decision, are applicable now with more force than ever to the members of the treasury benches. This is particularly true when one views the panic into which the stock exchanges of this country were thrown as a result of the premature announcement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) yesterday.

Another thing upon which I should like to comment before going into the matter of the budget as it affects northern development, is the question of tax incentives about which the Minister of Finance had written for so long, and which the Liberal government had promised for so long for the encouragement and development of industry in Canada. Representations have been made for a long time to the government, to the officials of the Department of Finance, the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, to northern affairs and national resources, to the effect that new mines in the north should be granted an increased tax exempt period. As we all know this period is three years for new mines. This is not enough. Over the past decade representations have been made repeatedly that this exempt period should be increased to at least five years. Out of the Northwest Territories Council have come resolutions to this effect. Out of the northern resources conference in Edmonton and from the associated boards of trade of the Pacific northwest meeting in Whitehorse has come the same sort of recommendation.

We do not see any mention of this in the budget, and this is supposed to be a budget to induce the development of Canada's resources and to induce the development of secondary industry. So it would appear that the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Benidickson) either is not familiar with the problems that confront the mining industry and has not impressed upon his colleagues the need for this added incentive in the north, or his representations have had no effect on the Minister of Finance. In this regard, when I speak of the north I do not mean merely the north above the 60th parallel but the northern portion of Canada which comprises about 80 per cent of the nation.

I think the same observation can be made pretty well with regard to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) because certainly he has had sufficient time now to have become familiar with the problems of the north. He has made a visit there and I have no doubt he has spoken to many people in the mining industry. As a matter of fact, he has made speeches in this connection. Yet even his influence has had no effect in impressing the Minister of Finance with the need for this type of incentive for the development of the mining industry in the north.

When this country was developing from east to west it was the resources of the west that finally made that contribution to national development which made the west what it is today. If the Minister of Finance and his colleagues, the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys and the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, had projected their thoughts in the creation of the budget along the same line of thinking that made for success in Sir John A. Macdonald's time, we might have had more incentive to encourage risk capital to go into the north for the purpose of developing the resources there.

Many people have no idea just how extensive the resources of the north are. If I were to tell hon. members that in the Yukon river basin alone there is a potential of 50 billion kilowatt hours of hydroelectric power and contrasted that with the total potential of the nation, it might impress them. If I were to say also that the oil and gas reserves in Canada above the 60th parallel total 50 billion barrels compared with 4.77 billion for the known reserves in the rest of Canada surely that might be some ground for the Minister of Finance to offer these incentives to the development of Canadian resources in the north.

I intend to say a word or two about the mining economy of the north a little later in my remarks, but I will pass now to the question of directing people into developing the industry of the north from the point of view of the budget that the Minister of Finance has presented. Along with the representations that have been made for tax incentives to the mining industry that would develop industry in the north, there have been hand in hand representations made by several organizations, both industrial and labour, for an increased personal tax exemption in the north. As recently as last year a delegation from the international union of mine, mill and smelter workers presented a brief to several members of the cabinet calling for an increase in the basic income tax exemption of individuals in the north to help to compensate for the higher cost of living there.

Obviously the government recognizes the principle that it is desirable to offset the difference between the cost of living in the north and that in the more southerly portions of Canada. They do this by offering what are known as isolated post allowances to civil servants who are required to go to the north for the purpose of discharging their responsibilities and duties. Isolated post allowances vary from a maximum of $2,600 a year for a married man who happens to be stationed in the more remote areas of Canada's north, such as Alert, to a low of $750 for a single man who happens to be posted in any area of northern Canada. Again I should like to draw the attention of the house to the fact that in this sense northern Canada includes those portions of northern Canada below the 60th parallel.

The government does this for the purpose of compensating the civil servant for the difference in the cost of living between that experienced by him if he performs his functions in the south and the cost of living in northern Canada. If it is a right principle to offer civil servants a cost of living bonus, which in essence is what it is, in the form of isolated post allowances, then the organizations that have made these representations to the government from time to time feel that it is just as right in principle that some sort of compensation should be offered to other citizens in the north in order to assist settlement in northern Canada and in order to eliminate what amounts to a discriminatory fiscal measure which is applicable only to civil servants and not to ordinary citizens in the north.

The government of Canada, which subsidizes wages for its civil servants through isolated post allowances because of the high cost of living in the north, should make provision for income tax allowances for other citizens. Representations have been made several times in this regard and I am rather surprised that the Minister of Finance has so forgotten Canadian citizens in the north as to have overlooked these representations, or even mention of them. Just as the government of Canada and the governments of the provinces and territories build roads to facilitate industry, which has been carried on in the last six years to a degree that has brought about development of resources in the north, and in the northern portions of the provinces, more than at any other time in Canada's history, there should be special recognition of this factor of the higher cost of living. We propose that it should be done by granting to all taxpayers in the Yukon and Northwest Territories an increased basic exemption, and if not based on a formula comparable to that used in calculating isolated post allowances then it should be on a flat rate.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, June 21, 1963

The house met at 11 a.m.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY ACT

AMENDMENTS TO PROVIDE FOR SECOND HIGHWAY

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-77, to amend the Trans-Canada Highway Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, this bill seeks to put into effect the 1958, 1962 and 1963 promise of the Liberal party to allow the building, among other things, of a second trans-Canada highway. It seeks to amend the Trans-Canada Highway Act to that end by permitting the act to speak in the plural rather than in the singular, as it is at the moment.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

IMMIGRATION ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING STATUS OF PERSONS RECOVERED FROM MENTAL ILLNESS

Mr. D. G. Hahn (Broadview) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-78, to amend the Immigration Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to make an amendment to the Immigration Act which will grant permanent status to people who have at some time in their lives suffered a mental illness. Under the present act if a person has ever suffered a mental illness he cannot have permanent status in this country. On the other hand, certain criminals after they have been rehabilitated are allowed permanent status. This amendment will allow people who have suffered from mental illness the same rights as criminals.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

TECHNICAL AND VOCATIONAL TRAINING ASSISTANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES, ETC.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient, as a means toward the further development of manpower in Canada and toward increasing employment opportunities for Canadians, to introduce a measure to amend the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act:

(a) to provide that in respect of the costs incurred by a province as training allowances for unemployed persons, the contributions payable by Canada to the province be increased from 75 per cent to such percentage, not exceeding 90 per cent, as may be specified in the agreement made under the act between the Minister of Labour and the province;

(b) to provide in respect of the costs incurred by the province for such part of the program for training employed persons in industry as may be specified in the agreement, the contributions payable by Canada to the province be increased from 50 to 75 per cent thereof;

(c) to extend, until such date as may be specified in the agreement made under the act between the Minister of Labour and the province, the period during which the contributions payable by Canada to the province will be 75 per cent in respect of costs incurred by the province for capital expenditures on training facilities; and

(d) to increase the number of members of the technical and vocational training advisory council from 23 to 28 and to provide an honorarium for the chairman thereof.

Motion agreed to.

PENSIONS

PROVISION FOR CANADA PENSION PLAN, INCREASED OLD AGE SECURITY PAYMENTS, ETC.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to establish a comprehensive pension program to be known as the Canada pension plan and to provide among other things for the payment of pensions on an adjusted scale commencing, at the option of the pensioner, at any age between 65 and 70 years; for the payment of pensions to surviving spouses commencing at any age after 65 years; for the progressive establishment of such pensions over an initial period averaging ten years in order to facilitate the adjustment of existing pension schemes to the new plan; for the payment of an additional pension of ten dollars a month to all persons to whom a pension may be paid under the Old Age Security Act; for the adjustment of pensions payable under the Old Age Security Act to co-ordinate such pensions with the new plan; and for the appointment and remuneration of such officers, clerks and employees as may be required for the due carrying out of the new plan; and to provide further that all expenditures under the new plan, additional to those required under the Old Age Security Act, shall be paid out of or reimbursed from contributions by employees, employers and self employed persons.

Motion agreed to.

(a) to provide further assistance to municipalities carrying out urban renewal programs by authorizing Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation (hereinafter referred to as "the Corporation") to make loans to municipalities to assist them in meeting the costs of such programs, and for this purpose to provide for the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund of amounts not exceeding in the aggregate one hundred million dollars;

(b) to authorize the corporation to make loans and to insure loans made by approved lenders to owners of existing houses in areas included in urban renewal programs;

(c) to authorize the corporation to make loans and contributions to provincially or municipally owned housing agencies for constructing or acquiring public housing projects and operating such projects, and to authorize the corporation to contribute a portion of the operating losses on any such projects that provide subsidized housing accommodation to individuals or families of low income;

Motion agreed to.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE ON CHEMICAL FOOD CONTAMINATION AND DRUGS

On the order: Government notices of motion:

June 19—The Minister of National Health and Welfare—The following proposed motion:—That a special committee be appointed to consider and report on (a) the hazards of food contamination and insecticides, pesticides, and other noxious substances; and (b) the safety and cost of drugs; that the committee consist of 24 members to be designated later by the house; that the committee be empowered to send for persons, papers, records, and to report from time to time, and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be deemed advisable; and that the provisions of standing orders 66 and 67 be suspended in relation thereto.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21 this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

UNITED NATIONS

NUCLEAR TESTING—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON POSSIBLE BAN

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he has any information to give the house regarding the possibility of success being attained in ending the testing of nuclear weapons?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question of the Leader of the Opposition—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: It has taken you 60 days.

An hon. Member: Sixty-one days.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My only comment on that is that the government has been so busy making decisions—

Mr. Diefenbaker: And retreats.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —that the answer is obvious. But to deal with the question of the right hon. gentleman I would like to point out, as he knows, that between June 22 and July 30, the 18 nation disarmament committee will not be in session. The three great powers are taking advantage of this recess to hold important talks in Moscow. It is hoped that these talks, with regard to the proposal for a ban on nuclear tests, will result in agreement. Whether this eventuates will be seen. If such success should attend these three power talks the effect on the resumed disarmament discussions would, of course, be very great.

In the meantime the United States has announced its intention not to carry on atmospheric tests, and the United Kingdom has made a similar announcement. It is hoped that these initiatives taken by the United States and the United Kingdom will have a salutary effect. I can only say I am sure all of us in this house hope that the discussions in Moscow will prove valuable and useful.

FINANCE

INQUIRIES RESPECTING TAXATION PROPOSALS IN BUDGET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, on June 19 as recorded at page 1342 of Hansard for that date, the Prime Minister agreed to undertake an inquiry into the trading patterns immediately preceding and immediately following the budget. I would like to ask if such an inquiry has been undertaken; and in view of some of the very serious patterns which have developed by the block trading of certain companies, whether he would be prepared now to set up a special committee of the house to look into this matter to see whether there have indeed been any violations of secrecy with respect to the budget.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I said I would bring this matter to the attention of the exchanges and in the light of the information we received from them then we would know what steps, if any, should be taken by the government and the house. I have not yet received a report on this matter.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in that connection I would like to ask the Prime Minister, while emphasizing support for what has been suggested previously by hon. members on this side of the house, whether he could secure, when he is making this investigation, a record as to the number, kind and nature of transactions on the trading market in Toronto of Harris and Partners Limited on the Tuesday and Wednesday prior to the budget; also any transactions in respect of pipe line stocks of Wood, Gundy for a period of one week prior to the budget. Would he be able to secure this information?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether it would be proper to single out two companies of this kind for information of this kind. I will look into the matter.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the question just asked by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and the inquiries which the Prime Minister said he would have made, will the Prime Minister ensure that this investigation determines the extent and the source of the reported heavy short selling of the shares of independent Canadian oil companies in the week before the budget was presented, with particular reference to companies which would have been available for take-over by American interests and whose stock dropped substantially in value upon the budget resolutions being made public?

Mr. Pearson: I will be glad to include that matter in the consideration being given.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Was anyone other than a cabinet minister or a top official in the Department of Finance informed of the decision to withdraw paragraph 11 of the Excise Tax Act resolutions after the decision was taken and before it was announced in the house?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Finance tell the house who outside of these people were so informed?

Mr. Gordon: The deputy minister, the senior assistant deputy minister who was working on this particular tax, Mr. Stanley, Mr. Conway and Mr. O'Connell.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask a further supplementary question. Did any of these gentlemen—I refer in particular to the outside gentlemen, the contractors—assist the Minister of Finance in the preparation of the statement he made to the house concerning the withdrawal of that resolution?

Mr. Gordon: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. It is in the same field but I should like to direct it to the Prime Minister. When he is considering his investigation would he inquire whether there is any truth in reports I have had from press offices in Toronto that simultaneously with the announcement by the Minister of Finance in the house that he was withdrawing paragraph 11 of the budget resolutions dealing with excise tax, there were telephone calls coming into such offices from floor traders on the exchange asking if it had yet been withdrawn?

Mr. Pearson: I will be glad to look into that, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Does the minister intend to act upon the suggestion made today by the Montreal Gazette financial editor, Mr. John Meyer, that the government, having withdrawn the 30 per cent take-over tax, should now withdraw the adjustments in withholding taxes intended to force procurement by Canadians of equity participation?

Mr. Gordon: I have not read the article, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Martineau: A supplementary question. In light of the minister's answer I wonder whether he would take notice of the article and advise the house as to his decision in view of the grave uncertainty existing in financial circles.

Mr. Gordon: It would seem to me this is a matter for the debate.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to ask the minister how he justifies such an astounding admission as the one he has just made, that before an announcement in the House of Commons these three individuals to whom criticism had been directed were brought in and made aware of so important a change. What is behind all this?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: We know what is behind it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Answer. Mr. Speaker, the house has a right to this information.

Mr. Gordon: Before I make any announcement in this house, even though it has been drafted by myself and approved by the cabinet, I usually show it to senior officials of the department so that if there is any small change that needs to be made in it they will inform me.

Mr. Knowles: Was it part of the contract made with these three gentlemen that they were identified as senior officials of the Department of Finance? In spite of what I hear of members over there advising the minister not to answer, I think he should answer this question.

Mr. Gordon: They were not hired as junior clerks. They were senior individuals who were working with senior permanent officials and in that capacity, for the time being, they were acting in that way.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): In view of the fact that these three gentlemen had shown their incompetency by not having recognized the administrative difficulties—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member please rephrase his supplementary question? He is giving an opinion, not asking for information.

Mr. Douglas: In view of the fact that these three gentlemen had failed to recognize the administrative difficulties, does the minister not think it was inadvisable to consult them any further?

Mr. Gordon: I would think that was a question that might better be brought up in debate.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask a supplementary question. After completion of the budget were these three gentlemen still retained in government service, or was their contract terminated upon completion of the budget?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, they were.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Are they on now?

Mr. Knowles: The contract was for six months.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if he would assure the house that he would consult knowledgeable page boys before making any further statements likely to influence the stock market.

Mr. Charles J. M. Willoughby (Kamloops): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that fixed contracts are exempt from the 11 per cent sales tax, will the same exemption apply to municipalities that have passed fixed sum bylaws for the construction of public buildings although tenders have not yet been let?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Medicine Hat asked me a question yesterday and I said that either I or the Minister of National Revenue hoped to make a statement covering a number of these points, including the one the hon. gentleman has just raised, either today or Monday. I have no doubt that the matter will be raised again in the course of this question period.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Revenue in the light of what the Minister of Finance has just said. I would ask the minister when he expects the clarifying statement will be ready respecting the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials.

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): Monday, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance. The minister just intimated that he had discussed with the three gentlemen who were associated with the preparation of the budget the fact that he was going to change section 11, or whatever it was—he was going to withdraw it, at least, pending—

Mr. Churchill: Suspend it.

Mr. Monteith: The minister said he had discussed this matter with them prior to the announcement being made in the house. According to reports these men had left Ottawa and had presumably left their association with the government. Did he call them back specifically for this purpose?

Mr. Gordon: I know nothing of the reports, Mr. Speaker. They had not left the government service and they had not left Ottawa.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which relates to the matter just now under discussion. I appreciate the honesty of the minister's answer a few moments ago that he did inform these three gentlemen of the changes, but my question of privilege is that this house was misled by the minister on June 19, the day the statement was made.

The minister was asked a question by the Leader of the Opposition and his reply, as reported at page 1341 of Hansard, was this:

> Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I gave no information to Mr. Kierans, and I did not make any statement to anybody else until I came into this house, other than the Prime Minister and certain members of the cabinet.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Some hon. Members: Resign.

Mr. Knowles: We have now had the minister's own word that these three gentlemen who were taken on as special consultants were informed of this decision after it was made and before the house was so advised. If they were not informed directly by the Minister of Finance, they were informed with his knowledge, with his consent, and I submit that we were misled by the minister in the statement he made to the house on Wednesday of this week.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I daresay that people can twist words. I do not mean that my hon. friend did that at all, but I think you can misread these things. It has been my understanding that ministers were entitled to, and usually did, speak to the senior members of their departments, and I certainly included these people in that category.

Mr. Knowles: I rise on another question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Any suggestion that I am guilty of twisting words is completely without foundation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: I have read the minister's own words of Wednesday, which were to the effect that he told no one but the Prime Minister and certain members of the cabinet. There was not even any mention of officials then, but I would not have thought that was out of place. Of course he would tell the deputy minister of finance; at least I would hope he would. But now we are told that three people who were not officials of the department, who were outsiders and were taken in on so-called contracts under a treasury board minute of doubtful validity, were informed. I suggest that the whole story is a sorry affront to the rights of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister say whether any tax was actually collected under section 11 of the Excise Tax Act during the four days it was in force; and if so, will such collections be refunded?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that is the type of question for the order paper.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister received complaints from universities, school districts or municipalities that the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials will seriously curtail their projected building programs?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I have received a great many representations. As the Minister of National Revenue said a few moments ago, he will be in a position to give a clear answer on Monday of the way this tax will apply.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): I wonder when the Minister of Finance will be in a position to announce a decision with respect to the excise tax which is now suspended, uncertainty with regard to which is overhanging the market, causing uncertainty and lack of confidence.

Mr. Gordon: In my statement on June 19 I said the government proposed to withdraw the budget resolution respecting the Excise Tax Act pending a solution of the administrative difficulties involved in its application. If the difficulties referred to cannot be resolved the resolution will not be re-introduced, and other means will have to be found to prevent the takeover of Canadian firms by non-residents. I am not in a position to answer, directly, a question as to whether I am certain the difficulties can be overcome.

Mr. Nowlan: Does the minister realize—I am sure he must—that this uncertainty is creating severe dislocation in the financial markets of this country?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): I have a question for the Prime Minister. In yesterday's Montreal Gazette it was reported that the right hon. gentleman intends to replace the Minister of Finance. Is this report true?

Mr. Pearson: That report, Mr. Speaker, is untrue.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he consulted with his three outside experts—I called them "tinkers", but experts they were—before the withdrawal of this tax; and when did he advise them, the three of them, of his intention to make the announcement he did on the evening of the 19th?

Mr. Gordon: I did not consult them, Mr. Speaker. After the cabinet meeting I informed the deputy minister, the assistant deputy minister and those three gentlemen who had been helping me with these matters.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The question, is what time in the afternoon.

Mr. Macdonald: At what time did you become honest?

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is very important, having regard to the transactions which took place on the stock exchange. At what time were these three men advised?

Mr. Gordon: It was just before I came into the house, but I do not know the exact time.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, a question of privilege, an hon. member opposite has just directed a remark from his seat to the Leader of the Opposition, and if he was honourable he would get up from this seat and withdraw immediately.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Grafftey: I am not going to point an accusing finger or identify him, but if the hon. member has any honour he will get up now and withdraw his remark.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the excitement of the hon. member, but there is no question of privilege.

Mr. Smallwood: I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a supplementary question. In order to restore Canadian confidence abroad, why wait till spring? Why does he not resign now?

(Translation):

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I regret to have to return to the charge against the Minister of Finance, but I think that he is expecting it.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Why did he fustigate Mr. Kierans and his recommendations immediately after having complied with the demands of this person?

(Text):

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I do not know whether that remark appears in Hansard, but if it does I want it clearly understood that it will be withdrawn. If the statement made by the hon. member opposite is on Hansard I do not want Your Honour to say afterwards that we did not object at the time. A remark such as that allegedly made by the hon. gentleman is contrary to the rules of this house.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to say that I did not hear any remark. Perhaps there was so much noise going on that I could not hear it, and I do not know to what the Leader of the Opposition refers.

(Translation):

Mr. Yvon Dupuis (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as I have been pointed at by the hon. members opposite, I must say that I have used, with regard to the former prime minister, no word whatsoever that might be objectionable. I do not know whether someone heard words that came from elsewhere, but as far as I am concerned, I have spoken in the most courteous way. What I asked personally to the former prime minister was: "At what time were you born?"

(Text):

Mr. Nielsen: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is one way to get the attention of hon. members. The hon. member for Yukon has a question of privilege.

Mr. Nielsen: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, perhaps now the seatmate of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken will get up and say something to the house as well.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the question which I addressed from my seat was "At what time did you become honest?". Now, if the hon. gentleman is in any doubt with regard to that he will find an epithet in it. If he is in no doubt at all then there is no epithet.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, this young and juvenile member of the house cannot get away with that statement, and I ask for its immediate withdrawal.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest, as I am sure he will agree, that if the hon. member intended any offence he will certainly withdraw the remark.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not at all, Mr. Speaker. I want that statement withdrawn.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macdonald: If the right hon. gentleman finds the statement—

Some hon. Members: No, no; withdraw.

Mr. Macdonald: Wait a minute. If the right hon. gentleman finds the statement—

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Macdonald: If the right hon. gentleman finds the statement objectionable I will withdraw it.

Mr. Grafftey: No "ifs".

Mr. Diefenbaker: No qualifications. An absolute withdrawal is what I want. I have been in this house a long while, Mr. Speaker, and will not tolerate such impropriety.

Mr. Speaker: If I may make an off the cuff remark here, which perhaps I should not, we seem to be doing very well for early Friday morning. May I suggest to the hon. member, getting down to the business at hand, that he withdraw the remark.

Mr. Macdonald: With respect to you I will comply with your ruling and withdraw.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a question of privilege with respect to the records of the house. Would the right hon. gentleman, the hon. member for Prince Albert, withdraw the remark which appears on Hansard which he made during the budget debate, as reported at page 1003, and which reads as follows:

> Tell a big lie often enough.

Will the right hon. gentleman withdraw that remark?

Mr. Martineau: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely obvious that the suggestion made by the Secretary of State is not within the rules, because any such question of privilege must be drawn to the attention of the Chair immediately. This is an incident which took place several days ago.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman is right that this remark was made about a big lie, it was directed to me, but I did not think it important enough to take notice of it.

Mr. Speaker: I think we have had sufficient information on this subject, and I will call upon one of the quieter members of the house to ask a question. The hon. member for Lapointe.

(Translation):

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Can he tell us on what administrative grounds he based his decision to withdraw section 11 of the Excise Tax Act?

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to take this up in the course of the debate.

(Translation):

Mr. Chapdelaine: Mr. Speaker, the question which I asked earlier has been lost in the beating about the bush on some frustrated honours, and I understand that the Minister of Finance was ready to answer. I am therefore rephrasing my question.

Why did he fustigate Mr. Kierans and criticize his suggestions immediately after complying with the individual's demands?

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: I do not think I have anything further to say on this question.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to reply to a question by the hon. member for Macleod in my absence on Wednesday, when he asked:

> Would the minister be good enough to tell the house whether it is true that fabulous orders for building materials were placed immediately prior to the budget?

I have made some investigations. I am not of course in a position to say exactly what was happening at that time but I would direct the attention of hon. members, and particularly of the hon. member for Macleod, to two facts which I think help to explain a great deal of what was going on. There was in fact in the month of May an increase in housing starts of 25 per cent over the same month a year ago, and an increase in the value of all non-residential construction contracts of no less than 54 per cent in the same period.

Mr. Nowlan: We sure had the economy moving.

Mr. Pearson: But that was May.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I have a short question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs arising from the report of a speech he made to the annual convention of Lions International at Miami, Florida, in which he is reported to have said that we—presumably the government—want to provide for effective and harmonious participation by foreign investment in Canada. Does the minister think that the take-over tax of 30 per cent, which was later withdrawn by the Minister of Finance, was of assistance in achieving this objective?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the question. During the short time that I was in Miami I found there that the people of the United States recognized that under this government a new chapter in Canadian-American relations has opened.

An hon. Member: They sure do.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister, and ask him whether he has received a telegram from the East Asiatic Company (Canada) Ltd. in which they point out that they have some one thousand employees, that they are opening up one million acres of timberland on Vancouver island, and that their projected pulp mill will have its cost increased by some $2 million thereby endangering some 800 permanent jobs in that area. In the light of this telegram from the company, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government is prepared to give any reconsideration to the imposition of the sales tax on building materials and machinery used in construction work?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I do not recall having received that telegram, but I will look into the matter when I get back to my office. When I do, and if it has arrived, I would certainly want to take a very close look at the figures which my hon. friend has quoted.

Mr. Douglas: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, is the right hon. gentleman suggesting the figures are not accurate because of my quoting of the figures or the company's quoting of the figures?

Mr. Pearson: I said I would certainly want to look at the figures put on the record by my hon. friend, for which he takes responsibility. On the terms given by him there would be an extra cost of $2 million on the building of the mill.

Mr. Douglas: On a $40 million or $50 million pulpwood mill it is not hard to see how this would be.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt, but this is becoming a debate and this is the question period.

Mr. Douglas: I am rising on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: What is the question?

Mr. Douglas: If the right hon. gentleman is calling in question the figures I quoted he is putting an implication on my interpretation of the telegram.

[Mr. MacEwan.]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member well knows it is a rule of the house that if he quotes figures in the way he has done he takes his own responsibility for the correctness of the figures. That is all the Prime Minister indicated.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Douglas: On the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I quoted the figures exactly as given in this telegram, and if the Prime Minister wishes I can send him a copy of the telegram so that he can check the figures with Hansard.

Mr. Pearson: The hon. gentleman quoted figures, and by quoting them took responsibility for them. All I have said is that when the telegram arrives in my office I would certainly want to examine those figures very carefully before reaching the conclusion he wanted me to reach about withdrawing this tax.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, on the point of privilege raised by my leader, the Prime Minister has suggested, and you yourself appeared to suggest, that when an hon. member quotes figures in this house, figures which he has received in a document, telegram or letter, he accepts responsibility for the correctness of those figures. The only responsibility is in the correct quotation.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Douglas: This is not a telegram to me. This is a copy of a telegram to the Prime Minister, and the Prime Minister would do very well to examine the figures and compare them with this copy.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is what he said he would do.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is somewhat supplemental to the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs regarding this new chapter in American-Canadian relations. I would like to ask him whether included in that is the concept that we should enter into negotiations with the United States for the purpose of relocating the boundary between Alaska and northern British Columbia along the Panhandle?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I only had a few hours in Miami and that question was not one of the subjects under discussion.

[Later:]

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister directly related to the question which was asked him by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether, in view of the fact that the stated purpose of the proposed department of industry to promote the establishment and growth of industry appears to have been negated by these proposals for a sales tax on construction materials, the government is considering the withdrawal of Bill No. C-74 from the order paper.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the hon. gentleman's premise. Therefore I cannot answer the question in the way he has put it.

(Translation):

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct to the Minister of Finance a very short question which is not controversial. Can the minister assure the house that by Monday he will have considered the possibility of excepting from the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials the purchaser of a low-priced home?

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I have already said that a statement will be issued on Monday, and I do not think that I should go further than that.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Can he tell us if the three gentlemen taken on as senior advisers are now in the process of assisting in drawing the regulations to implement the various measures outlined in the budget?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, various members of the Department of Finance and the Department of National Revenue are drawing those regulations.

Mr. Nasserden: A supplementary question. Are we to take it that these gentlemen are not charged with that particular responsibility?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is customary for ministers to indicate who is doing the actual drafting.

Mr. Pearson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam took exception to my reference to the nature of his question a moment ago, in that I suggested that under the rules he should take responsibility for the figure that he put on the record. I want to make it quite clear that I was not questioning his honour or sense of responsibility in any way. I was indicating the rules as I thought they should be applied, and the basis of my statement is found in Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, section 177, which reads as follows:

> Reading telegrams, letters or extracts from newspapers as an opening to a question when the orders of the day are called is an abuse of the rules of the house. It is not good parliamentary practice to communicate written allegations to the house and then to ask ministers either to confirm or deny them. It is the member's duty to ascertain the truth of any statement before he brings it to the attention of parliament.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of the statement he made with regard to the large number of housing starts in May. In view of the fact that it generally takes some months of planning before a building is commenced, does the minister consider that the large increase in starts in May was attributable to the policies of the present government? If so, would the minister confirm that the government needs all the credit it can get even though not deserved?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Was the making of the announcement concerning the withdrawal of paragraph 11 of the excise tax resolutions at about 20 minutes to 3 on Wednesday made at that time by deliberate decision or through inadvertence?

An hon. Member: No answer.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, in view of the serious implications that flow from this can we not be told whether this was deliberate or inadvertent?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member raising a question of privilege?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer that question. As I said at the time, it was the view of the government that as soon as a decision was reached it should be announced.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question. Was it a deliberate decision to make the announcement at that time despite the fact that the stock markets were still open?

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Could he tell us if he intends to remove all taxes which could entail administrative difficulties? For example, I could point out that the levy of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials seems to give rise to many administrative difficulties.

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, since we are the only party who has not directed a question to the Minister of Finance and since the minister has given consideration to advice coming from outside, could he assure the house that he will take into account suggestions that will be offered by the hon. members during the budget debate?

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: I am delighted to assure the hon. gentleman that I shall do so.

(Translation):

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct to the President of the Privy Council a question that he could consider as advance notice and answer next Monday.

Could the minister tell the house what senior appointments have been made by order in council within the Department of Finance, since April 21 of this year?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): I definitely feel that this question should be put on the order paper.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not wish to stop anyone—it is not my right to stop anyone—asking questions, but I would call the attention of hon. members to the fact that it is now twenty minutes or more after twelve o'clock on Friday morning. I do think if further questions are not really urgent perhaps they could be postponed until Monday.

Mr. Knowles: I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a supplementary question. Could we be assured that the precedent he set on Wednesday is one that will not be followed?

An hon. Member: What precedent?

Mr. Knowles: The precedent of making announcements of this kind while the stock exchanges are still open. Who are these advisers who are telling the minister "Don't bother"?

Mr. Gordon: I am quite prepared to answer that question. It will depend on the circumstances.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO INVITATION TO U.S. PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister intend to invite United States President Kennedy to Canada?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No invitation has been extended to him, Mr. Speaker, but Mr. Kennedy as President of the United States knows he would always receive a very warm welcome in this country if he could make a visit to Canada.

TRADE

PULPWOOD—REPORTED INCREASE IN PRICE FOR EXPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Has the Minister of Trade and Commerce been informed of an increase in the price of pulp for export by a number of firms, and is he aware of a general move in this direction in a commodity which contributes so much to Canada's export trade?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker. I had not heard of it before, but if this information is accurate I thank the hon. member for it.

U.S. REQUEST FOR SUPPORT FOR TARIFF REDUCTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the minister taken notice of the appeal made last night in Montreal by Mr. Christian Herter, personal representative of President Kennedy, for Canadian support to lower trade barriers by cutting tariffs? If so, what response will the government make in this regard, especially in view of the fact that the budget is remiss in making any mention of the subject?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the second day I stood up in this house I gave a complete report on the response Canada had made to the American initiative for a further round of trade liberalization. At that time Mr. Herter acknowledged the great support Canada had given, and so far as I know this continues to be government policy.

Mr. Martineau: I have a supplementary question for the minister. I thank him for the information given but he really did not answer my question, because in his reply he did not state whether he is aware of the recent pronouncements by Mr. Herter in which he asked that Canada adapt to changing times.

Mr. Sharp: I thought I was answering it. Mr. Herter in his speech was, of course, carrying on from the negotiations that we participated in at Geneva, and Mr. Herter knows the attitude of the Canadian government on this matter. He was appealing for the support of all Canadians in this trade liberalization program which the Canadian government believes in, which it is supporting very strongly and which my colleague the Minister of Finance supports as well as I do.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

INQUIRY AS TO REDUCTION IN PREFERENCE TO CANADIAN CONTRACTORS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. In the light of reports that Canadian defence contractors may face a reduction in the preference granted in orders placed by his department, would the minister advise the house whether there has been a change in that if Canada gets larger defence orders from the United States he must reduce the preference granted to Canadian contractors?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Defence Production): I am not sure, Mr. Speaker, that I quite understand the full import of that question. There is no question that there will be any reduction in the preference now granted to Canadian contractors.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REQUEST FOR ESTIMATE OF COST OF DAMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am going to abide by the rules, because I am not going to include the words "does the minister think".

In view of the fact that the information given to the house on Wednesday by the hon. member for Kootenay West, to the effect that the estimated cost of the high Arrow dam had increased from $72 million to $124 million has been proven correct by the confirmation of the figures in a statement issued yesterday by Hon. Ray Williston, minister of water resources for British Columbia, would the minister provide hon. members of the house with revised estimates of the cost of the dams relating to the Columbia river treaty so they will be correctly informed and can study the situation?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member and myself seem to be carrying on exercises in procedure. I should like to point out to him that he is asking for estimates, and I am sure he would receive a much more satisfactory answer if he put his question on the order paper.

(Translation):

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO SALARY INCREASES FOR CERTAIN CLASSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Can he inform the house as to the recommendations made by the civil service commission concerning salaries of employees in group D and when these recommendations will be implemented?

(Text):

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I hope to continue with the discussions about pay raises for members of the civil service next week, or just as soon as I can. Until that is done I think it would be inappropriate for me to give a reply in advance.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROPOSED EXTENSION OF RUN-THROUGH PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of my genial friend the Minister of Transport. It is relative to the dispute between the Canadian National Railways and the brotherhood of railway trainmen concerning the two division run-throughs. Will the minister use his influence to prevent Canadian National Railways making this unilateral alteration in conditions of employment before the expiration of the present contract?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the adjective used in reference to me. However, I did give an answer to a similar question asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on June 13, and I do not think there is anything I can usefully add to that answer. It will be found at page 974 of Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Acadia.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, my question was similar to the one asked by the hon. member for Melville.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION BY DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I wonder if I might direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask whether his government is taking any steps to make arrangements for a dominion-provincial conference on Indian affairs.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): There will be a federal-provincial conference, in the early autumn, I hope. The agenda for that conference has not yet been decided on.

Mr. Howard: Would the Prime Minister consider favourably the idea that Indian affairs should be placed on that agenda?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, I think that is a good suggestion.

GRAIN

WHEAT—STATEMENT AS TO DELIVERY QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Yesterday, in answer to a question by the hon. member for Lisgar concerning delivery quotas on grain, the Minister of Trade and Commerce indicated that on June 24, at approximately half the delivery points in the west, wheat quotas would be raised to 12 bushels. My question is this. In view of the fact there are many points in northeastern Saskatchewan, and in the north particularly, where they have 6 and 7 bushel quotas which still cannot be delivered, will the minister assure the house that every effort will be made to see that space and box cars are available to these points so they may deliver at least a 10 bushel quota before the quota is raised still higher for other points?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I can give that assurance to the hon. gentleman. Perhaps I ought to illustrate the extent of the problem in order to show the progress which has been made. On June 24 the quota position will be this. There are 1,942 points, of which 950 will be at 12 bushels. The number of points at 6 bushels will be only 5, and the number at 7 bushels will be 95. I hope we can make further progress in clearing up these relatively low quota points as rapidly as possible.

Mr. Korchinski: Can the minister assure the house that there will be box cars and space available before the quotas are raised at the other points?

Mr. Sharp: I will bring the representations of the hon. member to the attention of the Canadian wheat board which, of course, has responsibility for this.

Mr. C. O. Cooper (Rosetown-Biggar): Will the grain be moved out of the country elevators to make room for the initial quotas of the new crop year?

Mr. Sharp: That certainly will be the endeavour of the wheat board. I hope they are successful because, as the hon. gentleman knows, we have a very large crop in prospect.

WORLD FAIR

APPROVAL OF WORK AT RONDE ISLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works who is responsible for the world fair.

Has the government in Ottawa granted approval to the city of Montreal for the work it will carry out shortly around Ronde island, since tenders have been or are about to be called to this effect?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would be prepared to give an answer dealing broadly with the whole matter of the world fair. Yesterday afternoon, I received a report from the experts of LaSalle laboratory, whose services have been retained by the city of Montreal for scale model studies of the ice movements and navigation in the harbour of Montreal. The hon. member is aware that I contacted the city of Montreal authorities and the other interested parties in order to hold a meeting and I will be in a position, I hope, at the beginning of next week, to give the date, place and time of that meeting.

I am taking this opportunity to state that as far as the federal government is concerned there has not been a single day's delay, no delay can be charged to the federal government—

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Deschatelets: Don't you like my answer?

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, in my opinion the Minister of Public Works is not entitled, when replying to a question, to make a statement on government policy, and that is exactly what the hon. member is doing now. I respectfully submit that he has no right to make such a statement.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I was listening very carefully both to the question and to the answer, and I think the answer was an attempt to answer the question.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Public Works.

Can the minister also tell the house, further to my question—I am not talking about the long speech he made thereafter—whether the road projects proposed by the provincial government, in respect to the throughway, have been definitely approved by the federal government?

Mr. Deschatelets: No, Mr. Speaker, officials of the provincial government met with the officials of my department last week, and we hope that we will be soon able to take a definite stand following the request we received from the provincial government.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR EARLY ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE ON RAILWAYS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the widespread concern expressed by Saskatchewan C.N.R. agents and their families this past few days with respect to the master agency plan, would the Minister of Transport consider setting up the house committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines at the earliest possible date to consider railway abandonments, this master agency plan and the problem mentioned by my colleague from Melville this morning?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in answer to somewhat similar questions some two or three times already this session, I put forward a suggestion which would make it possible to refer the annual report of the C.N.R. to the standing committee on railways. That suggestion was not acceded to by the official opposition, as was indeed their right; but the consequence of that is that a special motion is required, and I am quite prepared to have the report referred to the committee when it is set up. However, it is not possible to see an early opportunity of setting aside the current business before the house, or other important business, in order to have this motion brought forward.

CRIMINAL CODE

SUGGESTED AMENDMENTS RESPECTING CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, as a lover of animals I wish to address a question to the Solicitor General. Is the government giving consideration to amendments to the Criminal Code along the lines suggested by the Ontario society for the prevention of cruelty to animals? I know that quite a lot of persons in Canada are interested in these proposed amendments.

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the honourable and humane member for Kootenay West for having sent me notice of his intention to ask this question, and I should also like to commend him for his continued interest in the welfare of animals. I can assure him that the officials of the Department of Justice will give every consideration to the recommendations of the Ontario society for the prevention of cruelty to animals, and if amendments to the Criminal Code are found necessary they will be announced in due course.

AGRICULTURE

ALBERTA—REQUEST FOR USE OF PASTURE AT SUFFIELD DEFENCE BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture arising out of a press release this morning indicating that southern Alberta farm lands are critically in need of moisture. Would the minister take immediate steps to help these farmers get more pasture at the Suffield defence base? I notice that the minister is not here. Would the self appointed minister for eastern Canada draw this matter to his attention?

Mr. B. S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of the hon. member's question and bring it to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PICTOU COUNTY, N.S.—INVITATION TO MEETING ON UNEMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the very serious unemployment situation in Pictou county, Nova Scotia, has the minister received an invitation from Mr. Robert MacNaughton, president of local 1231 of the united steelworkers of America, to attend a meeting to discuss the unemployment situation; and if the minister is unable to attend will the government be officially represented at this meeting?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the hon. gentleman's question is yes, I did receive an invitation from the president of the local union and replied that if I could be in Nova Scotia at the time I would be glad to attend the meeting. No arrangements have been made to send a representative, but I will consider that in the light of the hon. gentleman's question.

LABOUR RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO CHAIRMAN OF BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should also like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. It relates to Mr. Justice C. Rhodes Smith who was appointed by the government to the court of Queen's bench in Manitoba. Is the government of the opinion that Mr. Justice Smith can adequately discharge his duties as chairman of the Canada labour relations board at the same time that he is a justice of the court in Manitoba, and are any steps being taken to appoint someone to the position of chairman of the Canada labour relations board?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the question raised by my hon. friend is an important one. It is at present under consideration in the Department of Labour. It may be that the services of the new justice will be required for an interim period, but no final decision has been reached. The decision will be taken in the light of ensuring the efficiency of the Canada labour relations board.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Thursday, June 20, consideration of a motion of Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Nowlan.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, when we rose last night I had made two points in connection with the budget. The first one concerned the increased tax exempt period for new mines in order to encourage industrial and mineral development in northern Canada, including that part of Canada below the 60th parallel. I also made the point that it is high time some consideration was given to increasing the basic income tax exemption for residents of northern Canada in order to stimulate the development of these areas of this country.

I want to pass now to a discussion of the effect that the 11 per cent sales tax on building material is going to have in the north. Since the passage of the National Housing Act in 1935, and until 1957, in a period of some 22 years there were only two homes built in the Yukon under the National Housing Act. Obviously it was not working. As a result of amendments and enlargements made in that act by the previous administration to encourage home building, building has surged ahead in the north. I submit that building has a very direct bearing on the rapidity with which the north is going to develop. Well over 100 homes have been built in the Whitehorse area alone as a result of the enlarged provisions of the National Housing Act. I can tell the minister, without any doubt whatever, that the imposition of this 11 per cent sales tax on building materials will so affect house construction in the Yukon as to virtually bring it to a standstill. The 11 per cent tax is damaging enough in the southern areas of Canada when it is applied to home construction, and I think the minister will soon see how the number of starts will diminish as a result of this burdensome tax, but it is absolutely killing so far as home construction in the north is concerned. I would urge the minister to consider the suspension or removal of the sales tax on building materials in so far as these areas of Canada are concerned.

Certainly it is a tax that should not be imposed at all, because it is going to be so burdensome on those who are attempting to build their own homes in Canada that house construction will be seriously diminished indeed. I do not believe I am alone in these views, because some of the national press comment has been severely critical of the imposition of this tax. For instance, the June 15 issue of the Globe and Mail had this to say:

> Look at the whole thing carefully, and it is clever, if not particularly scrupulous. Rather like a store that offers two articles for the price of one, having first thoughtfully doubled the price of the one.

This, of course, is a reference to the $500 bonus for winter home construction that the Minister of Labour announced the other day in the house. The Globe and Mail in the same issue went on to say:

> It could work; but is it the kind of economic philosophy that is reassuring in a finance minister?

The president of Belcourt Homes in Montreal had this to say:

> The manufacturers' 11 per cent sales tax on building materials will automatically bring with it a $700 to $1,500 increase in the price of new homes and knock a lot of small builders out of business.

I think we all agree that one of the needs of this country for many years has been the supplying of a sufficient number of homes in order to raise the standard of living of our citizens throughout the nation. I think there cannot be any serious argument advanced but that some of the most aggressive measures in Canada's history were taken by the previous administration under the terms of the National Housing Act to bring about an accelerated home building program in Canada that has heretofore not been matched. It will certainly be difficult to equal the record for home building in the last five years. Surely we should be looking not toward the imposition of a tax that would curtail home building in Canada, as this one will, but rather toward incentives to build more homes. It seems to me that the Minister of Finance, perhaps in his desperation to find sources of revenue in order to pay for election promises, has had to penalize one of the areas of our economy that could least stand these penalties.

I want to pass now, Mr. Speaker, to a brief reference to the Carter commission on taxation. Perhaps as a result of representations made by my colleague from the Northwest Territories, I understand the commission will be sitting in Yellowknife, Whitehorse and Yukon. I believe the Whitehorse sitting is going to be on July 23. Perhaps, therefore, any further representations which people have in respect of taxation in the north can be brought before that commission and the minister might have an opportunity to consider them when the commission reports.

I wish to deal now with another sector of northern economy, that of the mining industry. The future of the north is essentially a mining future. However, I do intend to make a few remarks in order to set the record straight concerning the Dawson city festival and the tourist industry in the north. The mining economy in the north also is one which, if it is to develop at all, needs special incentives in order to induce risk capital to come to that area. Mining capital is high risk capital. It is capital that is invested at approximately a ratio of 20 to 1.

If we stop for a moment to consider, we will realize that before any mine can go ahead it has to develop a community; it has to develop housing, schools, roads and communications. If we consider for a moment the effect that the 11 per cent sales tax will have on the development of the mining industry, having regard to these facilities I mentioned, homes, schools, and the like, we can see immediately that this statute is going to reach its tentacles into this area to throttle or seriously set back the development of the mining industry in the north.

Instead of taxation measures such as these proposed in the budget, surely there should be measures which would, first of all, induce high risk capital, Canadian or foreign, to come into the north, and measures which will encourage the development of mines. I see no such measures in this budget, despite the repetitive statements that were made by the present minister in his book "Troubled Canada". I suggest, in keeping with editorial comment, that Canada may be just as troubled after the budget as it was before.

One of the most important things in the north, of course, is communications, the building of roads and land lines. The establishment of communications is very essential to the development of the whole of the nation. Without adequate communications the Canadian west would not have developed. Similarly, without adequate communications the 40 per cent of Canada lying above the 60th parallel and the northern portions of the provinces will not be adequately developed. Under the last administration there was a very dynamic roads to resources and development roads program which encouraged the development of the resources throughout the whole of northern Canada, including the northern portions of the provinces. I do not see any mention at all of this in the budget; as a matter of fact I see a serious lack of reference to it in the current estimates.

I am told that one of the commitments the Prime Minister made while on a visit to Whitehorse was that when a Liberal government was elected a road would be constructed from Whitehorse to Skagway. This is what the Liberal candidate in my riding quoted the Prime Minister as having promised him, and it was one of the things on which he campaigned. I certainly hope this is so and that the Prime Minister and his government will construct that road to Skagway, because it will of course give us access to Tidewater through the Alaskan Panhandle and is essential to the development of our resources in the Yukon.

The Liberal candidate in my constituency also quoted his leader, the present Prime Minister, as promising that when a Liberal government was elected the Alaskan highway would be paved. There were no ifs, ands or buts about it, and as there is no indecision in this government I assume that the Alaskan highway paving program will be proceeded with immediately. However, I was rather disappointed not to see any reference in the budget to these projects. We, in the Yukon, would certainly like them to be proceeded with, at the earliest possible moment. We have no doubt whatever that the Prime Minister will adhere to his word and proceed with them with the least possible delay.

Mr. Speaker, before I proceed to a discussion of the festival matter I wish to say a word about patronage. Before 1957, not affected by the tradition which seems to exist in Quebec and certain portions of the maritimes, I thought that the conduct of the previous Liberal administration in the Yukon was something less than fair in dealing with the disposition of public works and services to those who wished to perform them for the government. In some cases tenders were not called at all and in a good many other cases people were selected to carry out undertakings for the government because of their political partisanship. After 1957, quite apart from any feelings which I think existed (perhaps not exclusively in any one political party) with respect to patronage but because of a feeling that I did not think this was fair, I caused correspondence to be sent to all departments of government—any minister who sits opposite now may verify this simply by checking his departmental files—requesting that in all cases public works and services of all kinds should be called for by public tender.

I am very disappointed to see that despite six years under the Progressive Conservative administration, where the previous policy of patronage had been eliminated there has been a resurgence of his ugly and dishonest practice. I say that it is crooked; in fact I would say that it is corrupt, because all that it indicates is a pay-off to political friends for assisting a political party. Patronage is being employed once again in the Yukon territory in order to pay off political friends. I say to the government benches, let us get back to the fair practice of calling for tenders for all public works and services and completely eliminate this ugly practice of patronage. There is no reason for it, and in my view every Canadian has an equal right to bid for every public work or service that the government requires.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word about the Dawson city festival. I am very sorry to see that the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources is not in his seat, because these words are applicable to his department more than to any other; his departmental officials had a great deal to do with the planning of this festival. It has been referred to by the Secretary of State and sometimes parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance as one of the reasons for the deficit. I believe in his most recent remarks it was referred to by the Minister of Finance himself as a fiasco. Yet when I asked the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources on two separate occasions in this house to produce the other side of the picture in order to let the house judge on a fair basis, upon production of all the facts, he refused to do so. I telephoned his office last week in order to obtain figures, and these have not been supplied to me.

It seems to me only fair to put on the record both sides of the picture. Certainly the festival suffered a deficit of $80,000, but I do not see any difference between the federal government bailing out the Dawson city festival to the tune of that figure, or even to the tune of much more, and what was done, if I recollect accurately, during the time Mr. St. Laurent was prime minister, when $250,000 was granted to the Stratford festival in order to bail it out, and this was matched by a like sum from the provincial government of Ontario.

I do not think it is wrong to invest in festivals if this is going to attract tourists to this country. Tourism from the United States to Canada last year produced a revenue of over $550 million; for the first time we had a favourable balance of tourist dollars with the United States. If it was wrong, surely the government of Ontario would not be going ahead with Upper Canada village to the tune of an investment of $2½ million, and surely the federal government would not be going ahead with the restoration of Louisburg. The preliminary cost estimates of the partial restoration of Louisburg amount to over $10 million.

Mr. Speaker, an hon. member has just asked a question which I did not hear. I am told by my colleague that it referred to Canadian players appearing at the Stratford festival, and I am sure that not only Canadian players have appeared at that festival, as the hon. lady would know if she has ever attended it. Surely it cannot be wrong to invest over $2 million in Barkerville in British Columbia. The fact is that the Dawson city festival was a financial success if it is viewed not in terms of revenue from the festival itself but in the proper terms of including the revenue from those people who came to see the territory as a result of the festival being there.

I have here a summary that I managed to obtain, quite apart from the assistance of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, in connection with the festival. There were a total of 18,545 visitors to Dawson city during the festival. They chose Dawson city itself, quite apart from the Yukon. They all had to go through British Columbia and Alberta to get there. Six thousand of these visitors stayed in Dawson city an average of three days, 5,000 stayed an average of two days and 7,545 stayed an average of one day. The estimated daily expenditures per person is figured at $25, which would include accommodation, meals, tours, theatres, gasoline and car maintenance. The estimated gross revenue for Dawson city alone was $888,625 as a result of the festival. The number of visitors in 1961 was estimated at between 6,000 and 8,000, almost three times as many as the usual number. A total of 3,904 cars came to Dawson during the period, and between July 1 and August 18 the average number of visitors per car was 2.5, totalling 14,510. The estimated tourist revenue from the festival was $1,200,000.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to have to tell the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Richard Cashin (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I have had an opportunity to speak in this twenty sixth parliament. Some hon. members may recall that I had the honour of sitting briefly in the last parliament. At that time I did make my maiden speech. However, as the election was subsequently declared void ab initio, I wonder if I am now in the unique position of making my second maiden speech.

I should like to say it was a pleasant change to see the government bring in a budget, and I hope we have returned to this practice. No doubt an awful lot of the fussing and fuming we have heard from hon. members opposite stems from the fact that this is, for some of them, a very novel experience. Those six years of frustration while they were attempting to govern the country have suddenly burst forth; they have been relieved of responsibility. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, and all members of this house to bear with them in the great transformation which has come over them. We should not take all their remarks too seriously, because I am certain they are not meant too seriously. Surely the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) could not have meant all those things he said; and I am sure the little lecturer who spoke last night, the former parliamentary secretary to the minister of finance, did not mean them either. We enjoyed his lecture last evening. The philosophy he used must be this; do as I say, not as I do.

This was a bold budget and an imaginative one. As we have seen, it was obviously beyond the scope of certain members. All the things which this government advocates may not meet with the desired measure of success, but the fact remains that we have a government in Canada willing to take the action necessary to solve some of the chronic problems which have caused so much debate here. I am pleased that we have a government with the courage to act, with the imagination to cross new frontiers and with men and women capable of bringing these aims to fruition.

Certain hon. members of this house have amused me by their reactions to some of the things which have happened. I refer particularly to those hon. gentlemen sitting opposite me and to my right. It seems they have now become the new champions of strict adherence to custom, tradition and precedent. Evidently they do not approve of reaching for outside help. I must confess that I for one totally disagree with this most narrow view. I feel that far too often governments in their deliberations have been too cautious and too concerned about doing things in a particular way simply because this was the accepted way of doing things, the way which they had been done for years and years.

If progress is to be made by doing something differently, then we should do it. This generally is in keeping with good Liberal and good reform thinking. It would seem in light of their recent statements that hon. members opposite to my right have emerged as the new champions of the status quo. Fortunately for Canada, the populace decided they needed a new and vigorous government capable of adjusting the role of government to changing times and capable of using whatever brain power is needed in order to give the people who elected us their money's worth. I would like to think that the Canadian people have at long last a government which is not afraid to make departures from the ordinarily accepted way of doing things.

One of the most important departures we must make, it seems to me, is in the field of economic planning. This is a phrase which has been bandied about a great deal, and one which would seem to have different meanings to different hon. members. The former government felt that by setting up a number of sterile boards they had launched Canada on a great forward path. Their actions showed that not only were they unaware how to begin planning, but that they did not know what it was that needed to be planned.

There has always been a notion that private enterprise can function more efficiently than public enterprise and that consequently it is only in areas where private capital will not venture that it is respectable for public investment to operate. Yet we have seen, in the experience of other countries more rapidly developing than ours, the wisdom of energetic planning. I suggest that if we in this country are to make proper use of our natural resources, raise our national productivity, reduce unemployment and generally improve the living standards of the average

Canadian, then our government must be prepared to venture forth with daring into hitherto unexplored areas.

I heard some hon. gentlemen opposite criticize the Minister of Finance for making statements in the budget address relative to matters three or four years hence. I do not criticize him for this; I praise him. Surely it would be a most backward step if the budget of a nation were brought down without long range proposals and if those responsible for its introduction regarded it in terms solely relative to the fiscal year in which it was introduced; that is to say, if they saw it as meaning merely an intention to raise so many dollars in a particular year and spend them in a certain way.

I suggest that in recent years the successive governments of our country have been too shortsighted. We must not only plan for our national development in terms of our present needs but we must be able to foresee as far as possible the consequences of our actions, and they must not be stop gap measures but part of an over-all plan. Some people feel that the change in the role of government since the thirties has gone too far. Others are content as long as no emergency arises. Still others point with pride to the fact that the welfare society in which we are supposed to be living has made great progress in the past 30 years as reflected in the lives of average Canadians. They would like to forget the fact that when one looks at the gap existing between people in low income groups and those in higher income groups, relatively little has changed.

I do not believe socialism is the answer. I think that with proper thought and study and by making available to our government and to parliament the best brains in this country and, indeed, in any other country, then and only then can we move forward at a faster rate. I think we have the means within our system to provide equal opportunities for all Canadians. While we have no doubt made progress, there is still a long road before us. I suggest that every young man or woman has a right to free educational opportunities at all levels, and that every family should be free from the torment of medical bills. I am not the first to advocate such things, but there is always the cry about the cost. The answer to that is, if this country is governed properly, and if we take the necessary measures to expand our economy, the money will be available. We shall not achieve it if we follow the narrow approach always taken by the hon. members in the Conservative party, an attitude which seems now to be expressed by our friends in the New Democratic party.

[Mr. Cashin.]

As hon. members are aware, I come from the newest province of the Dominion of Canada and, as a result, I am concerned about the treatment given by the government to primary producers in various fields. I suggest that up to now there has been unequal and unfair treatment. Yet if this country is to develop and all Canadians given a fair chance, not only to make a living but to make a better living than that made by their forefathers, this government will have to adopt a broader view than that adopted by previous governments.

I refer particularly to the primary producers in the fishing industry. In the past they have not received attention commensurate with that received by agriculture. Mr. Speaker, Canada is the only important fish producing country in the world without a national fisheries development program. The individual fish producing provinces are obviously limited in what each of them can do. Fortunately we already have the assurance that a conference to discuss such a badly needed policy will be called shortly, and I think it is a significant omen for the success of this conference that the Prime Minister has already made an important announcement relative to the 12 mile limit which will, of course, be of considerable importance to the fishermen of this country. Mr. Speaker, this establishment of the 12 mile limit is just one of the steps to be taken by our government if anything constructive is to be done for our hitherto neglected fisheries. This does not answer the gnawing question of the great disparity in price between what primary producers and consumers have to pay.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are major obstacles created not by a lack of fish resources but which arise instead from the difficulties which are basic to primary industries. These are a deficiency in marketing development, in orderly marketing and price stability; inadequate insurance against yield uncertainty; the need for quality improvement; inadequacies in credit and in programs designed to help fishermen to adopt the latest in equipment and technology; and the need for development programs for communities attempting to adjust to changes in the fishing industry. If these problems are to be met at all they can only be solved within the context of a renewed program of national development.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in a house with such heavy representation from agricultural areas it may seem a little unusual to find speakers advocating the implementation of certain basic measures to reduce price uncertainty. However, at the present moment the fishermen of this country operate without a substantial degree of price assurance, yet without this price assurance fishermen cannot effectively plan their operations prior to the opening of the fishing season, nor can they plan or even afford a longer term investment program to raise their productivity.

Despite this need there is an amazing contrast between price stability measures available to fishermen and those available to farmers. Between 1944 and 1962, when you adjust the difference in the number of people in agriculture and the number in fisheries, the fishermen received only one seventh of the price stabilization support given to farmers. The experience in agriculture suggests that price support for fishery producers can be substantially strengthened without detriment to exports.

The comparison between agricultural and fisheries support programs does not end with stabilization measures. The gap in fisheries policy creates an urgent problem for fishermen concerned with salt fish products. The solution here, I suggest, would be the creation of a national marketing board similar to the Canadian wheat board, to provide fishermen with the price assurance and market organization they now lack. The deficiencies are far more appalling when we realize that the number of fishermen, particularly in Newfoundland, is decreasing. Another of the major deterrents to a sound and planned investment by fishermen to increase their productivity is the risk of yield uncertainty. The availability of technical knowledge and improved equipment will reduce this risk. Nevertheless measures providing for some form of catch insurance or compensation are also needed.

In the field of agriculture, crop insurance since 1939 has cost the government $185 million, a sum 1,000 times greater than the federal costs under the fishermen's indemnity plan for loss of boats and gear; and no program exists to compensate fishermen for poor catch. I also might add that I believe in the vicinity of $123 million has been paid out in acreage payments to western farmers.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not unaware of the differences between these two primary industries, but the great disparity between the government's concern for agriculture and its concern for fisheries must make it clear to all hon. members that the time has come to give equal treatment to our primary industries. In this regard I might mention that the Minister of Fisheries recently visited my province, and I can say made a tremendous impression there. I hope when this matter comes up for study it will have the support of all hon. members of this house, because I am sure it is in keeping with our thinking that if we can do this for one primary producer then surely primary producers in other fields are deserving of the same treatment.

In the earlier part of my remarks I commended this government as one which I believed would venture forth into—I believe these were the words I used—new and unexplored areas. Although I am not, and I do not think many hon. members here are, a financial or economic expert, when it comes to economics I am consoled somewhat when I look at the spectrum and see so many learned men in that field having such opposite views. I do not suppose that there is anything likely to cause so much disagreement. But I am inclined to support those who favour the concept of planning. This may, of course, mean that governments will get bigger; it will depend on how efficiently it is done.

Then on the other side of the coin we have people who in their overzealous regard for the freedom of the individual would drive our thinking back 20 or 30 years because they cannot comprehend this kind of government of which I am speaking operating in a society which permits the fullest freedom to the individual. I suggest that if there is a challenge to our time—there are, indeed, many—to me I see it as this; to be able to move forward in this new direction; to be able to have this more active participation by government yet at the same time preserve the freedom of the individual.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock?

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Cashin: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying before we adjourned for the noon recess, I am concerned about the direction which this country will take, and I expressed the view that we must approach its problems in a more imaginative way than we have hitherto been doing. I believe I also made reference to my concern about the freedom of the individual. Indeed, there are some hon. members who are concerned about this to such a degree that they are blind to all else.

One of the challenges before this government will be to move in the direction that requires more economic planning and, if you like, more government regulation and yet at the same time preserve the freedom of the individual. But even under our present system, with the way the Canadian government has been going over the past 10 or 20 years, there are those who have criticized and based their criticism on an outmoded approach to the free enterprise system and a narrow concern for the freedom of the individual. I think this is unimaginative because if we cannot accomplish both these things, that is, more government action and maintain the freedom of the individual, then our system has failed.

Also this morning I made reference to the reaction—and I use that word in its fullest and broadest sense—of hon. members opposite. As I have said, they have been loud and it is a very great pity that the wisdom of their words has not equalled their volume.

I have in my hand an article which recently appeared in the Hamilton Spectator. I do not say I read always this newspaper, but I am glad I did on this particular occasion. It contains an article by Mr. Charles Lynch of the Spectator's Ottawa bureau.

Mr. Fisher: He is a bit of a hero around here.

Mr. Cashin: It says:

> Throughout their time in office, the Conservatives had trouble getting experts to come to Ottawa to work, and this may account in part for their rage over the way Finance Minister Walter Gordon pulled his pets into the finance department.

I think that is just what it is. We cannot take all this to be serious because after all the poor fellows now in opposition had a hard time of it during six years in government. They had an overwhelming majority and they failed the mandate that was given them. It just goes against the grain a little for them to see a government getting down to the job of running the country, and doing it very well.

When I was a little boy, and Mr. Speaker, as you can imagine, that was not so long ago as some other hon. members, I was told by my dear old grandmother to be always mindful of the guy who shouts loudest because he is the fellow who has least to say.

An hon. Member: Why shout it so loudly?

Mr. Cashin: I shout it so loudly because as a young man, fresh from two Canadian universities, one of the greatest disillusionments I experienced in this session of parliament was the reaction of hon. members to my right. They like to show themselves off to be something which I have now discovered they are not. They like to talk in highfalutin phrases and like to think they are looking in a forward direction; but when they too are confronted with the spectacle of a government getting down to the business of a country, they show we have now a second Tory party in Canada. They too object to making available to the government the best brains in the country.

All of the measures we have set out will not be successful. The important thing, however, is that most of them will be successful, and that we have a government that will venture into hitherto unexplored areas.

An hon. Member: The wilderness.

Mr. Cashin: Some hon. member mentioned the wilderness. We spent six years in the wilderness. I also heard another opposition member say during the course of his speech that this government was not equalling the record of the previous one. I certainly hope he is right, for the sake of our country, because we had six years of mismanagement. Now that they are in opposition I think we ought to bear with them in their new experience and in their relief of being free from the responsibility of government. In answer to the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) I say that the philosophy of the opposition should be, "Do as we say, not as we do".

(Translation):

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) introduced his famous budget which was prepared by outsiders, that is persons who had no mandate from the people to prepare such a budget.

As can be seen in the speech, the changes put forward in this budget do not favour the classes of society that built Canada and made it one of the most beautiful and one of the richest countries in the world as far as production is concerned.

In preparing this budget, the Toronto vested interests made sure that it was to their own advantage and to the prejudice of the worker and the farmer. But they overlooked an item which was detrimental to them. I refer to the 30 per cent tax on foreign investments in Canadian companies. And as soon as they realized their oversight, the present nightmare of the Minister of Finance began. The president of the Montreal stock exchange who is also the president of the Canadian stock exchange, Mr. Eric Kierans, the Liberals' great friend who campaigned against Social Credit in the April election, that socialist millionaire, as he liked to call himself during an interview with the press, that socialist and liberal millionaire who is interested in socializing everybody and everything except himself, soon came to the rescue of high finance, and that without the slightest embarrassment, in a jiffy, during an interview he had at 5.30 on June 18 with the Canadian Minister of Finance, he made the Minister of Finance change his mind and suspend the enactment of the 30 per cent tax on foreign investments in Canada. And the Liberal party complied, obeyed, bowed and said: "Yes, boss", when faced with the demands of high finance to which it is much indebted since April 8 last.

Since the last general election, the Liberal party is more than ever forced to submit to high finance, to kowtow to it, to attend to its needs, to nurse it; and that, at the expense of the people, of the workers and of the farmers, because the election of the Liberal party and the campaigning against Social Credit in this country have been an expensive venture for the high finance.

The Liberal party committed a sin against high finance in its last budget, and the financiers soon called it to order, causing a turnabout, a political somersault, so that the bankers might go on abusing the people.

"Let us free the banking world from taxes and shift them upon the poor, upon those who have not the means to defend themselves," thought the Liberal party, because the more we shall free the financiers from taxation, the more they will be allowed to take advantage of the poor; the more poor people, the more rags; the more rags, the more paper; the more paper, the more dollars printed; the more dollars printed, the more capital created; the more capital created, the more cartels, trusts and banks that can be founded. The more banks you open, the more loans you promote with credit; the more loans, the more debts, and the more debts there are, the greater the number of poor people. And the poor are in rags and the vicious circle goes on with the old parties.

Those are the effects of a false, dishonest and crooked economic system which, in order to last brings about cycles which are called crisis, restriction and unemployment.

And to get out of unemployment in our economic context, we need war or a state of war or preparation for war or a national defence budget as the one we have this year.

Because with war you get destruction, and with destruction you get peace, and with peace re-employment comes back, and employment leads to prosperity, and prosperity leads to overproduction, and with overproduction there is unemployment, and unemployment leads to poverty and hunger, and when there is poverty and hunger people give up hope and wish for war, and that vicious circle goes on with the old parties and with an unrealistic financial system.

In this twentieth century, when we boast of the fact that we have harnessed water power, as well as all kinds of power, also that we have put water, air, machinery and atoms at the service of man, and when billions of dollars are spent in the world to conquer space and visit other planets, after all those achievements by man, we have not even succeeded in taming money, in putting money at the service of production and production at the service of man.

Because money, Mr. Speaker, is only a means of exchange and we of the federal government continue to give free rein to a financial system which makes for the exploitation of man by man.

The indignation of Social Crediters at such a system has been going on for more than 30 years, Mr. Speaker. Our system leads to stagnation, depression, extreme poverty, while millions of potential consumers are still waiting for a minimum living wage.

During the last ten years, for instance, what did the two old parties do to escape the disastrous fate of a crisis of which there are already many signs? What did they do to permit a fair distribution of those goods which machinery is ready to produce in quantity and in quality?

Our financial system is like a youth who would have outgrown his child clothes and whose blood circulation would be affected by the pressure of his clothes on his arteries.

As soon as a war or some disaster rips his clothes, he comes to life again. When will we get rid of that financial strait-jacket which is choking our country? Surely, we will not do so by following the steps of the two old parties which believe that we can bring back prosperity to Canada by borrowing and imposing more taxes on Canadians.

In 1957, before the general election of March 31, the Conservatives gave the Canadian people the impression that if a Conservative government were elected, a big fight would be started against the Bank of Canada and the tight money policy of the Liberal party.

That comedy was a true repetition of the promises made by Mr. Mackenzie King in 1935 and which he consigned to oblivion once he was in power with a large majority.

Instead of fighting tight money, the Conservative party gave us a little more of all the things the Liberal party had been giving us before 1957.

And now that the Liberals are back in power they are preparing to give us a little more taxes than the Conservatives had given us after 1957.

The 1963 federal budget indicates that it will cost almost $1 billion in interest, merely to finance our public debt. We see no trace of financial reform in the budget.

Taxes are boosted for the small wage earner, the worker, the farmer, the small industrialist. They are overburdened. They are investigated. They have to pay fines. That is all they are given: taxes and fines.

As a result of all those taxes, a smaller number of rich people will become richer and a larger number of poor will become poorer. Then some people will be surprised one day when the taxpayers rebel against the tax-gatherers.

Coming back to the budget, Mr. Speaker, I believe that it clearly indicates that it has not been prepared with an election in mind, because we know quite well that should that have been the case it would have probably been more advantageous for the people.

Family allowances would certainly have been increased, taxes reduced, no 11 per cent tax would have been imposed on building materials, a tax which affects the poor more than the rich.

It is claimed that unemployment will be reduced, but politicians pay only lip service to this objective, because with an 11 per cent tax on building materials, the only result will be an increase in the cost of construction, and, therefore, construction in Canada will decrease and unemployment will consequently increase and so will the price of houses, rents and the cost of living.

Taxes create unemployment, the unemployed require unemployment insurance and unemployment insurance requires increased taxes, this is the vicious circle of a ridiculous regime.

Having had the opportunity of sitting in this house when the Conservatives were in office in 1962, and having been re-elected to this twenty sixth parliament, I have been able to see to date what I believed for 20 years: both old line parties act exactly the same when in office.

They are the offspring of the same financial sire, and I am scandalized, Mr. Speaker, to see the negligence and the lack of seriousness of both old line parties when they consider the problems of a nation of close to 20 million.

They beat around the bush without ever finding a solution to the problem; they pretend to try and solve the problem, they launch surveys, they appoint boards, they create new departments, they shift taxes, but they always make sure that they are raised at the same time.

And all the time, farmers and workers are living with the hope that a solution may be found, but they can be sure that they will never see the day when a solution is found and implemented.

To prove my remark to the effect that the people are sinking deeper into indebtedness, because of the inability on the part of the government to find a solution, I wish to quote a Canadian Press release published in La Presse of Montreal on June 7, 1963. That item was entitled:

Canadians' debts tripled since 1954.

—Canadians at the present time owe the banks, in personal unguaranteed loans, about three and a half times as much as they did in 1954.

Accounts in departmental stores, both current and revolving budget accounts, have doubled during the same period.

The dominion bureau of statistics estimates that the total outstanding amount of consumer's credit as at March 31 was $3,664,000,000, an increase of $301,000,000 in a year.

There are no figures available for unpaid accounts due doctors, dentists, hotels, transport companies and public services or concerning loans among individuals.

One of the most important increases which has taken place within one year relates to loans made by banks to individuals and payable at fixed dates. They have increased by 13 per cent, amounting to $1,206 million while the corresponding figure was $1,067 million on March 31, 1962. By the end of 1954, those loans amounted to $351 million.

While they amounted to $65 million on March 31, 1962, loans for home improvements made by the banks under the National Housing Act have only increased by 3.1 per cent in one year, to reach a total of $67 million.

Cash loans made by small loan companies went up from $572 million to $658 million within a year, an increase of 15 per cent.

Conditional sale agreements underwritten by loan companies for current consumer goods had reached a total of $771 million by the end of March, 1963, while the corresponding figure a year earlier stood at $732 million.

Accounts outstanding in department stores increased within a year from $324 million to $383 million. At the end of 1954, the corresponding figure was $186 million.

Three and a half times more debt than in 1954, that is to say a debt increase of 350 per cent, and that within eight years.

Why did the Canadian Press not mention that before the federal election, that is about two months before? If the aim of the Canadian Press is to guide the public and keep the people well informed, it would have been well-advised to publish that communique before the election, to put voters in a better position to judge both old line parties.

Three and a half times more debt than in 1954, and still the old line parties brag about prosperity. Who is crazy?

When the Conservatives were in power in 1962, they said everything was going fine under their regime, much better than under the Liberals.

They were defeated, and now they think everything is going wrong. As for the Liberals, when they were in opposition, they said everything was going wrong under the Conservatives, but now that they are in power, according to them, everything is going fine and people abroad have regained confidence in our economy.

When they are seated on your right, Mr. Speaker, the two old line parties both say everything is going fine, and when they find themselves on your left, both say things are going wrong. The only difference between your right and your left for the two old line parties, Mr. Speaker, is that the pork barrel is on your right, and it is then that things are going well. Bunch of jokers. The old line parties are the docile servants of financiers who pay for their elections and pay themselves back afterwards.

The Minister of Finance consults financiers to draw his budget in order not to displease them, and when he finds that part of it is not to their liking, he removes it to suit the wishes of the sharks of high finance, who have shown themselves in their true light at the last election and who now prove that only Social Crediters were right, because we were the only ones to denounce them.

The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) follows the dictates of the Americans with regard to nuclear arms because they gave so much to the election fund of the Liberal party to help them fight Social Credit, that they must now be paid back.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) sees the price of sugar rising to a scandalous height and that is also to pay back election expenses.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) penalizes the farmers for their plentiful milk production by cutting off the 25-cent subsidy per hundredweight as well as the lime subsidy. Everyone will pay many times over the election expenses of the Liberal party.

The budget of June 13 does not mention the farmers and the workers, except to increase their taxes.

Produce more, workers and farmers, and we will tax you more, because you are the two most productive social groups in the country? We must keep you poor, the two old line parties seem to say, because we want to be able to keep on exploiting you.

They can make pretty speeches, tell you that they will study your problem, that they are anxious to solve them, that you must be patient and they will help you, but these are only words and talk is cheap. And all this is rather easy. We will repeat those encouraging words at the next election and we will tell you again that farmers and workers are the cornerstone of our society. But after the election, we will put you a little deeper into debt, burden you with taxes and exploit you, as is the case since the last federal budget.

Our system is wrong, absurd and unhealthy, and it will lead us inevitably to ruin, because the Canadian parliament has surrendered its responsibilities in the most important field, that of money and credit.

Those who control money and credit have become our masters, to such an extent that "without their consent, one can no longer breathe", as stated by Pius XI in his encyclical Quadragesimo Anno.

The federal parliament reminds me somewhat of the owner of a car who would give it to his neighbour. When he needs it, he gives his neighbour 15 cents an hour to use his own car.

It is possible for the federal parliament, through the Bank of Canada, to obtain the credit it needs without borrowing this money or credit from private companies known as chartered banks.

Why pay 15 cents a mile to a neighbour in order to use one's own car? Why pay $1 billion in interests to chartered banks to supply our own credit, when we can do it ourselves through the Bank of Canada? It is just as stupid to pay $1 billion in interests to chartered banks than to pay 15 cents a mile to a neighbour for the use of one's own car.

Social Crediters are not against chartered banks as such. They are private institutions and it is only normal that they be authorized to lend their capital. But what we condemn, is that the federal government should allow chartered banks to create money under the form of credit and to lend it to individuals, provincial governments and school boards and, what is even more shocking, to lend that credit which is after all only figures, to lend those figures to the federal government, which should be the only one to have authority in that field.

The function of the banks is to lend money, not to create it. Now, when the federal government gives the banks authority to open a credit account of $100 in favour of someone when all they have is $8 in available cash or in securities or in reserve funds, this means that the federal government gives the banks authority to lend $92 which they do not have. They can do it and as a matter of fact they do, by giving credit to the borrower who, after having signed an acknowledgement of indebtedness, can circulate $92 in cheques drawn on a new credit, which will be transferred from one bank account to another.

And the bank makes all those transactions without giving a single dollar and without even reducing the account of anybody.

Moreover, it will charge 6 or 6½ per cent interest on 92 per cent of the money it lends, without having to disburse anything. That is creating money out of nothing, or creating credit money.

The creating of money is the responsibility of the supreme authority of a nation, which is the government. The issue of credit, which represents 92 per cent of all money today, should also be the responsibility of the federal government, which would control it through the Bank of Canada.

Why does the federal government borrow its money or its credit, when it can create it?

The bankers who had conferred upon them this power to create credit instead of the government, get such fabulous sums from this fraudulent transaction that, by means of their election funds, they easily control the politicians of the two old parties who could change those conditions if they were not bound hand and foot.

The politicians of the two old parties disagree as to colour, but they are the products of the same paint firm.

I would like to quote here some evidence submitted to the banking committee in 1954, by Frank O'Hearn, director of the office of valuation and exchange in Toronto, as printed in volume 2 of the minutes and evidence of the standing committee on banking and commerce.

Concluding a very long and interesting statement, he declared:

> That on behalf of the 16 million Canadians who, without their knowledge, are deprived of $10 billion of savings in cash earned with great effort, and that to their greatest detriment.

And he added:

> The chartered banks have at this time (in 1954) accumulated securities of all kinds, which amount to an approximate total of $10 billion. As strange as it may seem, they acquired all those assets from the Canadian people and the federal government, while paying absolutely nothing for it. What has come about because, first of all, banks have accumulated those holdings, without risking a single cent of their own money; they obtained everything by trickery. It is time for them to give back those ill-gotten gains or to pay for them.

[Mr. Rondeau.]

Other statements along the same lines, and quite as interesting, have been made one after another, not by members of the Social Credit, but by people who could see through our stupid banking system. The difference between those people and ourselves, is that they saw what was wrong, as we see it, but they did not suggest any remedy, whereas we are advocating one.

It would only be a matter for the Bank of Canada of setting up an accounting system which would make it possible for Canadians to exchange their products between themselves. Because money, Mr. Speaker, is but a medium of exchange, simply a legalized measure of exchangeable values, work and wealth.

Money is a monetary measure just like other measures such as a cord of wood, a yard of cloth or a gallon of syrup. Wealth is the wood, the cloth or the syrup. The measures are the cord, the yard and the gallon.

Social Crediters would like to see the federal government through the Bank of Canada create as many measures as there are things to be measured in Canada, that is as much money as there is wealth.

I am pleased, Mr. Speaker, to quote here a news report from the Canadian Press dated July 22, 1958 and published in a newspaper of southern Alberta, the Lethbridge Herald, which was founded and owned by the Liberal Senator Buchanan. This report was entitled: "Money, what it means", and I quote:

(Text):

> To understand how borrowing money from the banking system can create money, it is necessary also to remember that money has more forms than currency and cents. While money exists in the form of currency, it also exists in the form of bank deposits, which are literally nothing more than entries in bank books. But they are transferred from one person's bank account to another's through the simple means of writing out cheques.
> In the case of the last government's loan what the banking system did, in effect, was to create $400 million in bank deposits out of the air in exchange for the government's promise to pay back this amount in five months. Every time a bank makes a loan to anyone, new money is created in the same way. It's a kind of magic carried on with paper and bookkeeping entries.

(Translation):

To summarize, Mr. Speaker, you just have to look up the Bank Act, section 71, chapter 48, where it is clearly stated that:

The bank shall maintain a cash reserve in the form of a deposit with the Bank of Canada and of Bank of Canada notes held by the bank and such reserve shall be not less on the average during any month than eight per cent—

Consequently, for every $8 of money or values deposited with the Bank of Canada, chartered banks can lend $100.

In other words, they can grant credit at interest to anyone to the extent of $92. It is this power of the chartered banks to make credit which is not fully guaranteed, that the Social Credit party wants to take away from the banks to give it to the Bank of Canada which is the rightful property of the Canadian people.

The Bank of Canada would create credit for Canadians without borrowing or adding to the national debt; it would make social capital available for Canadians.

As evidence of the fact that the creation of credit by the chartered banks is highway robbery, you just have to refer to the combined annual reports of the eight chartered banks as of December 31, 1961. You will see that their net assets total $19 billion, whereas their paid-up capital is only $275 million.

By what feat have the banks succeeded in building up $19 billion of assets with only $275 million worth of paid-up capital. It is precisely this paid-up capital of $275 million that corresponds to the true liquid assets of the banks, nothing more. The rest is made up of whole cloth.

According to the Bank Act, chartered banks can lend up to 12½ times the amount of their reserves or deposit liabilities, which means that for every dollar that they deposit with the Bank of Canada, they can lend $12.50 at 6½ per cent which amounts to 81¼ per cent profits on the paid-up capital, not to mention the profits they make from management fees, exchange charges, etc. That is how they have been able to build up assets of $19 billion with a paid-up capital of $275 million.

Our financial structures would bring about any nations ruin. They will certainly lead us to bankruptcy, and stifle all our efforts, for they are geared towards a centralization of wealth, which necessarily results in the exploitation of man by man.

Why does the federal government not use its own bank, the Bank of Canada, for the necessary financing, instead of looking for loans, sinking deeper into debt, and increasing the taxation burden to pay the interests on that debt? The federal government could easily ask the Bank of Canada to finance its various transactions.

The government could use the Bank of Canada like a man at the wheel, and through careful steering, keep a straight enough course.

By wisely directing the bank along the right financial road, the government could lead this country's economy into the proper channels, do away with debts and interests on debts, and clear up the confusion brought about by our topsy-turvy financial system.

When on June 18 the president of the Montreal stock exchange addressed himself in such a threatening fashion to the Minister of Finance, and in view of the fact that foreign investors wanted to withdraw from Canada because of the 30 per cent capital levy on foreign investments in this country, why did the Minister of Finance not reply: Well, in that case we shall use Canadian funds, through the Bank of Canada. We shall thus allow Canadian shareholders to buy shares back from you, and we intend to manage our own resources with our own credit.

As for capital—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I am sorry to have to interrupt the hon. member, but his time is up.

(Text):

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): On rising to participate in the budget debate let me say I do not wish to spend any time on the circumstances surrounding the drawing up of the budget and its presentation. I think too much time has been spent on that already. It is more important, in my opinion, to try to analyse the budget itself rather than the circumstances surrounding it. I do not want anything to distract from an examination of some of the aspects of this budget. While attempting to do so it is not my desire to urge upon the government any of our philosophical beliefs which it may not be able to accept. This budget, like all budgets, is part good and part bad. There are some good measures in it and we should be unfair if we did not admit it immediately. I do not want to mention them. Indeed, there is no necessity for me to do so since government speakers are notoriously not reluctant to publicize their own virtues.

There are three aspects of the budget that I should like to examine particularly. The first is the attempt to increase employment and stimulate the housing and construction industries. The second aspect I should like to analyse is the attempt to deal with the problem presented by foreign control of our economy and the degree to which countermeasures are likely to be successful. The third matter I should like to consider might be called an omission from the budget. How is this budget going to help Canada get into the trading blocs which are forming in the world? To what degree do these proposals support the work of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp)?

In discussing the budget in relation to the housing and construction industry it becomes clear that the intention of the government is to stimulate this section of the economy. The proposals put forward by the Minister of Finance seek to do this in two ways. First, a sales tax of 11 per cent is imposed on building material acquired in Canada. This is expected to produce revenue of some $370 million. First of all, let me say it is widely accepted that a sales tax is the most regressive type of taxation possible. It affects all wage earners in Canada to the same extent, regardless of their actual income. The imposition of such a tax has already had a catastrophic effect on the construction industry. Yesterday, the halls of the House of Commons were flooded with people who had come from all over Canada to protest the imposition of this tax and to outline to hon. members and, presumably, to hon. members in the government, and those who support the government, the serious effect this tax will have on the construction industry. A roar of opposition is coming from coast to coast. In my own constituency, one of the largest manufacturers of furnaces and air conditioners has given everybody in his plant a week's notice and told them all he does not intend to carry on. He says this tax is the last straw and that costs have now become prohibitive. Well, that is an excellent way of expanding the economy.

The second thing the government is attempting to do in the field of the construction industry and housing is to change the National Housing Act regulations around. For these efforts, the government honestly deserves the booby prize. It is almost impossible to understand how they could have brought down such a proposal. They hope, by changing these regulations, to have more homes built and to reduce the amount of the down payment. I suggest that neither of these aims will be achieved. First, the government brings in a measure to give a bonus of $500 to anyone who buys a new house built during the wintertime. All the construction experts tell us that the extra cost of building a house in the wintertime is $600. This will be added to the end price of the house, so the first attempt to stimulate building will have no practical effect because the price of the house will increase by more than the amount of the bonus.

The second provision is a reduction by one quarter per cent in the interest rate paid under the N.H.A. mortgage. Well, if that is amortized over the life of the mortgage it will save the purchaser approximately $450. The 11 per cent tax on building materials will increase the price of a house by $600. Thus, the two measures presented to us as a stimulant to the housing industry will be totally ineffective. As I said earlier, it is hard to understand why a government would bring in such a provision. I would be interested to know if it was ever discussed with anybody in the construction industry or with anybody in the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I ask this because, to my mind, the proposal is completely impracticable. I predict with complete confidence that it will have the opposite effect to the one which was intended. It will lead to higher prices, higher mortgages, larger carrying charges and increased down payments. For one thing, the granting of a $500 bonus in respect of houses built during the winter is already discouraging people from having houses built in the summertime. People are waiting in order to get the grant. What this demonstrates is a lack of knowledge on the part of the government with regard to the housing industry, the same absence of knowledge that it showed in another field when it sought to bring in a 30 per cent tax on share transfers of Canadian companies.

We are really missing the boat in housing. If we examine income tax returns in Canada, we find that in 1961 there were 2,500,000 people in Canada who were earning less than $4,000 a year. In that same year, the number of people earning less than $4,000 a year who were able to buy homes under the National Housing Act was 2,293. So the provision made in the budget is directly contrary to the trend we should be trying to encourage in housing today, that is to say, lower prices and lower interest rates so that a larger number of Canadian wage earners can buy their own homes.

In summary, it is hard to understand why a government which claims to be really interested in an expansion of the construction industry would single out for the lash of new taxation the one sensitive industry in the country which has the greatest potential for providing employment. Why would the government take this particular industry and handicap it and cripple it in the way these two proposals must do? I hope that at some stage an explanation will be forthcoming from the minister, and that he will tell us the reason for this surprising step.

The other aspect of our affairs with which I should like to deal for a moment is the section of the budget which purports to deal with the problem of foreign ownership. The aim expressed in the budget is an admirable one, namely, that we in Canada must at some stage regain control of our own economy. This question has been discussed in the house many times. It is well known there is no other country in the world whose resources are controlled in so large a part by residents outside its shores. In the beginning, the need for foreign capital was a very real one. However, in the course of time extensive difficulties have been created as a result of the entry of foreign capital in such large amounts. We know that important decisions by many companies in Canada are made outside our borders. We know that decisions affecting exports by Canadian companies are made by parent companies elsewhere, and this complicates our whole export program. We need a decision as to expansion and relocation, and the hiring and firing of our men south of the border under other companies' control. We know that the outflow of dividends is creating financial strains on our economy. If the dividends are not paid to companies in the United States they are reinvested in Canada to buy up more of our country and accentuate the problem.

What has the government proposed in this regard? There seems to me to be two objectives. First of all the government told us that its long run objective on this important subject is for us to acquire 25 per cent interest in foreign controlled companies. It is hard to understand the reason for this 25 per cent. The minister in his speech said that this will provide a voice for the Canadian people. It will also provide a point of view, but it will provide absolutely no control whatsoever. It is hard to understand why the government says 25 per cent interest is a long run objective. What has really happened is that the "six buck boys" have turned into 25 per cent Canadians. The objective of a 25 per cent interest is not good enough if we are serious about meeting this problem over the long run.

The methods the government has proposed are twofold. First of all they propose this 30 per cent tax on the transfer of shares. This lasted for about four days, has now disappeared in a roar of opposition from stock exchanges both here and in the United States, and probably will not appear again. Its disappearance is highly significant, because what it points out is that the degree of foreign ownership of the Canadian economy has become so strong and extensive and powerful that this type of attempt to deal with the problem is doomed to failure. The exterior influences which can be exerted on our economy are so strong that this type of limited measure simply will not work. That to me is the real significance of the attempt to impose this tax, even though it was unsuccessful.

The second method adopted has been the attempt to fluctuate the withholding tax depending on whether or not the company has a 25 per cent Canadian owned content in it. This again will undoubtedly turn out to be just as unworkable and impracticable as the other scheme. A day or two ago a New York investment company did a survey of what it would cost to acquire a 25 per cent interest in 37 of the major companies which are now foreign owned. It was estimated that it would take a minimum of $4 billion and that the share capital required if unloaded on the market would demoralize and paralyse every stock exchange in Canada. So that of the two methods being used by this government to cure the problem of foreign ownership, I suggest one is already out of the window and the other will prove to be impracticable and unworkable.

The reason for this is because you cannot deal with the problem of foreign control over the economy by assessing penalties and imposing restraints upon foreign investors. The solution to a problem of this magnitude lies, I suggest, right here in Canada, because first of all we have to begin to generate as much of our own developed capital as we can within our borders. Second, we have to convince Canadians that Canada is worth investing in and have to urge them more and more to put their savings into their own country. So that the solution to foreign ownership does not lie in imposing bludgeoning penalties against investors.

In trying to deal with the problem we must accept the idea that foreign investment is still needed, and will continue to be needed for some time. We cannot take some action which is going to restrain this and suddenly cut it off. We can only do that after we have generated our own capital. But if we are to borrow abroad to develop our Canadian companies let the government do it by way of floating loans in the United States or elsewhere, bring the money to Canada, and through the Canadian development fund lend the money to our businessmen here. Then let the businesses use those funds to expand their growth, and when they pay the money back to the government the government can pay it back to the exterior force from which they borrowed it. In this way the expansion is kept within our own borders and we can avoid this continual alienation of our own resources. We in this group hope that the development fund which the government has proposed will turn out to be something with teeth in it to provide the capital we need to expand our economy.

We should also interest our trust and loan companies in the business of lending and get the government itself to invest in our own resource industries. That is another aspect which has received too little attention here. If at some date all the methods of stimulation of capital in this country fail and it is necessary in the long run to reacquire control of some of these industries, we still have available to us the technique of public ownership where these industries which have been alienated abroad can be made responsible to the Canadian people once again. It seems to me that somewhere along this line lies the solution to the biggest single problem facing Canada today, namely foreign control. You cannot meet the problem by this kind of discriminatory taxation. All you are doing is helping the Canadian capitalist at the expense of the United States capitalist and it will not work. We have had the example where already the first proposal made by the government has been rescinded and the second is just as impracticable. In short, the government has set out on the road and they are just playing with the problem in restricting themselves to these sorts of measures.

Another matter is the lack in the budget of any type of financial help for the building of hospitals. I know we have been told by the government that we have to wait four or five years for the medicare plan, and we will have to accept that. But in the interval surely something could be done to deal with the scandalous hospital shortage in this country. In the area of Scarborough, which is part of my riding, we have 99,000 children under the age of 15 years. We have exactly 22 children's hospital beds to accommodate them. We have no isolation beds, beds for mentally disturbed children, for chronically ill children or for adolescents. The hospital shortage is reproduced, I am sure, from coast to coast and is a scandal which should be looked into. I do not understand why the government is not prepared to increase the grants which it is making for the construction of hospitals. The municipalities simply cannot afford to do it, and the biggest joke of all is that one of the institutions exempt from assistance under the municipal loan board is a hospital.

The last aspect of the budget upon which I wish to comment concerns the problem of trade. A great deal has been said in the house about the need to expand our export markets, to participate in the Kennedy round of trade proposals, and for Canada to make the fullest possible contribution in this regard. One thing which is missing in the budget, among many others, is a declaration of a fiscal and monetary policy for world trade. I have reviewed the budget and can see nowhere any indication that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) intends to give financial and fiscal support to the proposals of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp). Without those proposals, and that backing, all of the minister's efforts to expand trade and to participate in trade negotiations will be wasted and useless.

What we really need in Canada, and need desparately, is a trade adjustment act of our own. This would enable negotiators to be sent to trade conferences to bargain for tariff concessions, which are going to have a troublesome effect in the short run on our economy.

We must have a trade adjustment act in this country so that our negotiators will know, if they make any concessions that are going to hurt our industries over a short time, the government is prepared to back up those decisions with regard to trade by assistance to industry, and by assistance to help workers move from place to place during the transition stage. But there is not a single thing in the budget which indicates that the government is prepared to do this.

The real tragedy of it all is that time is running out for Canada. Anyone at all conversant in any way with trade problems realizes that the negotiations which will take place over the next year or two will have a highly vital bearing on our future, and our negotiators must go into them armed with all weapons possible. I am suggesting that the absence of a trade adjustment act and any real monetary and fiscal policy to back up the Minister of Trade and Commerce will result in all this activity proving fruitless and unsuccessful.

Those are the three aspects of the budget on which I want to comment, and in closing I just want to say what I said at the beginning. There are good measures in the budget, but in at least three fields the government has failed very badly. In the field of housing it simply does not understand how the house market works, and if the government would only talk to its backbenchers, a lot of whom are conversant with it, it would realize the difficulties that will arise.

In the field of foreign ownership the government is just playing around the subject because the measures it has introduced simply cannot and will not be effective. Finally, in the field of trade relations we must at some stage have a strong, firm policy, with monetary and fiscal backing, when we enter trade negotiations. In these three fields the government has failed in the budget now before us.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, in presenting his budget the Minister of Finance remarked, as is recorded at page 996 of Hansard for June 13:

> —it is my further duty to indicate the kind of measures which are needed to put our national affairs in order once again.
> This then will be a "face the facts" budget.

Since then developments have proved that the Minister of Finance was quick to realize that the so-called facts are very hard to face, especially by himself.

During the election campaign the Liberal party cried much about the need for stable government. I am reminded of the remark made by the leader of the New Democratic party about a stable government. I must agree with his reference—the smell is definitely with us. Outside experts were brought in to work on the budget, and the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Cashin) who spoke earlier this afternoon, referred to the fact that the previous government had difficulty in getting experts to come to Ottawa. Does he not realize that our government departments are filled with experts for the express purpose of looking after the affairs of the country, and particularly so in the forming of a budget? If he had in mind outside experts then all I can say with reference to the fact that we failed to get them is: weren't we lucky?

With regard to the use of outside experts, in terms more familiar to me and the people of my constituency, it is quite evident that the Liberal party supports the use of moonlighters, because any man who is employed by a company, who receives pay from that company and then makes himself available for other work is nothing less than a moonlighter. It surprises me that my colleague from Cape Breton, the Minister of Labour, did not in some way point out to the Minister of Finance what a serious mistake this was.

These moonlighters are creating a serious situation within the civil service. Their employment could involve job security, and there is no doubt that it will be detrimental to future administration. There is every reason to believe that the pride of our senior civil servants has been injured, and I believe that in a lot of cases they are staying on only because of their dedication to the country in spite of the fact that they bypass jobs in outside industry which hold more potential and greater advantage for them.

I should like to refer for a moment to a report in this morning's Montreal Gazette which reads as follows:

> Prime Minister Pearson came to Mr. Gordon's defence Thursday by saying after a cabinet meeting that there is no question of Mr. Gordon's resignation.

There is only one interpretation to be taken from that statement, and it is that the matter of the resignation of the Minister of Finance was discussed by the cabinet. We appreciate the fact that the cabinet only discusses very serious matters and, if the matter was so serious as to be discussed in the cabinet, why should it not be passed over to a special parliamentary committee to be examined further? The government is reversing the trend. Usually matters go forward from parliamentary committees to the cabinet level, but that is being reversed in this instance. I can only hope the government will let a committee have an opportunity to go into the very serious violations of budget secrecy that have taken place in the last few days.

The Liberals talk about indecision. There was certainly enough indecision during the last two days. As yet we are not aware whether there has been a suspension or withdrawal of the 30 per cent take-over tax. It surprises me that Liberal backbenchers have not spoken about this because I am sure they have received representations from industries in their own constituencies about the effect of it.

They also have not mentioned the 11 per cent tax on building materials, and in replying to the hon. member for Vancouver East, who stated that 5,000 workers were to be laid off in Vancouver as a result of that tax, the minister had the audacity and arrogance to give a flat no when asked to reconsider it. One can only contrast that attitude with the attitude he must have adopted to the committee led by Liberal Senator Gelinas, which met with him very recently. The minister backed down at the request of that committee, and I cannot understand the arrogance of a government refusing to listen to the representations of hon. members in opposition. In fact, I am quite sure government backbenchers share some of our views on this matter.

It is interesting to recall the attack made on the pegged dollar by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) last year. I am sorry the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is not in his seat as there are a few things I would like to call to his memory, but there is no reference to altering the pegged Canadian dollar in the budget. One remark made about the pegged dollar by the Minister of Finance was to the effect that he was the first person to state publicly that devaluation caused a stagnation of the economy. That is a quotation from the Minister of Finance who attacked the pegging of the Canadian dollar and yet he has left the situation unchanged in the budget.

No doubt the detrimental effects of the budget are being brought to the attention of every hon. member of the house, including the backbenchers of the Liberal party and some members of the cabinet. I have here a letter received today from Nova Scotia and for the benefit of hon. members I should like to bring to their attention the results of the budget in my own province. It reads as follows:

> We are enclosing a letter... that expresses our feelings exactly regarding sales tax on building supplies, especially lumber. Complying with government regulations makes so much extra work and expense, combined with 11 per cent increase in price to our customers, which has made a major decrease in our volume, has caused us to close down part of our manufacturing business, which means five men unemployed. This factory has run continuously for approximately 50 years but cannot struggle along any longer under these conditions.
> The economy... has been struck hard, for we have been advised of quite a number of cancellations already by people who planned to put up new buildings, and many workers are being laid off at what should be the peak of the construction season. We are bringing this to your attention so that you will know in which direction the 60 day economy is rolling.

And further, in another letter:

> The application of the federal sales tax to lumber is practically without precedent, and there will be many unforeseen developments throughout our industry, as well as allied industries. In the writer's opinion this is the greatest backward step taken by any government in so far as this industry is concerned in the last 50 years. We hope that all associations connected with the building trades will voice their disapproval of this matter through the proper channels in Ottawa.

The disapproval voiced by many opposition members is naturally falling on the very deaf ears of the Minister of Finance. It appears that the minister only has an ear for delegations led by senators recently appointed by the Liberal party.

I should like for a few moments to make some remarks about the Atlantic development board. I have not had too much to say on this matter so far. In my view the information given to us recently by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) was most welcome, and I refer to the fact that the $100 million made available for the Atlantic development board has turned out to be a floor and not a ceiling, to use his exact words. It is my hope that everybody throughout the Atlantic provinces will take notice of this statement and, rather than allowing the committee to be set up to report back to the government, will make known to everybody in their own localities what their hopes, plans and projects are so that we who have the responsibility can watch very closely with the hope that any project will get the rightful consideration due it and that this will in some way or other prove beneficial.

I might also refer to something else that is very favourable so far as the Atlantic development board is concerned and I trust that the government will follow through on it. I have in mind the fact that there are six more appointments to be made to that board and it will be very interesting to see from what fields they will come. I trust the government will follow through and I will be only too happy to see what their intentions are in this matter. I am not concerned about the party or political background of these people. The fact is that if they come from these particular categories it will be most welcome. I do not know whether the Prime Minister realizes it but he stated in Fredericton, New Brunswick, that the personnel of the board should be expanded to include representation from labour, from fishing, from mining, from agriculture and from lumbering. That leaves just one appointment over and above these five categories. It will be very interesting to see if he follows through on his commitment to appoint a representative of labour, a fisherman, a mining man, a man from agriculture and somebody from lumbering. If this is brought about I am quite sure that the Atlantic provinces will have representation across the board and we will look for very active participation inasmuch as they will have come from fields such as labour, fishing, mining and so on.

The problem of spending $100 million should not be a difficult one. It is not too long ago that there was a provincial election in Newfoundland brought about by the idea that something had to be done for the fisheries, and the fact that Mr. Smallwood wanted $70 million for the fishing industry. After Mr. Smallwood was successful in the election he wasted no time in coming to Ottawa to the previous government to look for the $70 million. Let us hope that the present government, with which he is very closely associated through the Secretary of State, will see that Mr. Smallwood gets his $70 million for the fisheries. I look at it this way, Mr. Speaker, that if it is good for Newfoundland it is good for the maritime provinces generally and if it is good for the Atlantic provinces it is good for Canada. If the present government can get away from the arrogant attitude they have recently adopted and realize that fact Mr. Smallwood should get his $70 million before too long.

While I am on the subject of Newfoundland may I say that, while I have not heard anything, I imagine representations are being made by Newfoundland and especially by the Secretary of State to restore term 29 of the terms of confederation which was a bone of contention for some time in that province.

The three year incentive to industries in slower moving though not depressed areas is a welcome one, but I would remind the Minister of Finance, being the brain or expert that he is—I will have something to say about that later too—that he must realize that no company of any consequence will look only three years ahead. Any company of any consequence establishing anywhere is going to look far beyond three years and in all probability will not look for a taxable profit in the first three years in any case. Any company establishing in any area on the basis of this inducement only will not and cannot contribute too much to the economy of any slow moving area.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): One year.

Mr. MacInnis: I might say that along with the legislation passed by the previous government the crown owned, independently operated Industrial Estates Limited in Nova Scotia has made tremendous strides in that province and in this calendar year alone 10 or 11 new industries have been established.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs made some kind of interjection. He did not quite get it across but if Hansard got it possibly I will have an opportunity to raise a question of privilege. The Secretary of State this afternoon figured that he had a question of privilege with regard to something that happened a few days ago, but I think there was a precedent established yesterday that there was a time limit of 15 minutes so far as raising questions of privilege is concerned. One of our members raised a question of privilege and he was told that 15 minutes had passed during which he had the opportunity to bring it forward. So, keeping in mind a possible question of privilege, I will follow the example set by the Secretary of State and not the example that was forced upon my colleagues in the house.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to continue my remarks about the arrogance of this party which has been carried forward from previous years. An example of this arrogance is the attitude towards the house taken by the Minister of Finance. There is plenty of it, I am told about $12 million worth. This is the same minister who, not too long ago during a television broadcast told the nation that the Liberal party had the platform and, "we think we have the leader." In this case, I think he shares a problem with the Secretary of State for External Affairs as the only members in the house who recognize that the prime minister sits across the floor and the leader sits on their side.

Again, I should like to cite the Secretary of State as a prime example of the arrogance, not only that the members of the official opposition have had to bear, but which has been extended to the members of his own party. Someone in our party referred to him as the actual leader of the party, and he may be right. I refer to him as the guardian angel, and if you do not believe me I refer you to what the Secretary of State said. This arrogance is applied not only to the members of the opposition, but it is applied to the members of the Liberal party. In this connection, I would just reread this passage of Hansard so that hon. members would fully understand what one of the ministers had to say about his own members. I quote from page 1267 of Hansard:

> Mr. Pickersgill: Judging from the applause, Mr. Chairman, with which my entry was greeted, I take it that my little strategem worked and that hon. members opposite thought when I went out that I had left the building and the government would be caught napping.

Well, if that is not arrogance, I do not know what is and it is applied not only to the opposition. There is arrogance applied to the members of the Liberal party. He is saying that the only hope you have of not getting caught napping is for the Secretary of State to be present in the house or for somebody on this side to make sure you are kept awake.

Dealing further with this question of arrogance, I should like to cite the attitude of the government towards the setting up of the special defence committee. The Prime Minister stated at the time the committee would look into all aspects of defence. A question was raised as to whether or not there would be an opportunity of inquiring into previous commitments. The Secretary of State for External Affairs informed the house that this would not be possible because of security problems. Here is a conflict. The Prime Minister tells us we will look into all aspects and the Secretary of State for External Affairs says we cannot because of security problems. I do not believe it is the fault of the members of the opposition that there is such a thing as a security risk in this instance. If there is a security risk at all it is because of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer).

Why do I say this? I say this because of the minister's own statement in this house not too long ago. This is another indication of the arrogance of this party. Here is what the present Minister of National Defence had to say in the House of Commons on February 4, 1963, as recorded on page 3426 of Hansard:

> We were briefed by Admiral Smeeton, deputy commander of the Atlantic fleet, by General Calmel, deputy chief of staff of supreme allied headquarters . . . A number of questions have been asked as to what our commitments to NATO are. I realize that this information is presumably classified, but I could never understand why it was, so I am going to take the responsibility tonight of saying what they are.

He realized this information was classified. It could be, therefore, that the security risk in this house is our present Minister of National Defence and perhaps the allied chiefs of staff realize this. Furthermore, if there is a possibility of a breach of security relating to commitments of this former government, why is it that the Liberal candidates have so much to say about previous commitments? If, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs says, this question cannot be opened up because of security risks, why is it the Liberal candidates have had so much to say on this question? Have they been made aware of what these so-called commitments are? On what authority have they been stating that there are commitments? This house is still seeking that information. I think it would be the responsibility of the defence department to indicate exactly what the government intends in this particular committee.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would my hon. friend permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MacInnis: Yes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would he mind telling the house whether he has discussed this matter with the former minister of trade and commerce, the former associate minister of national defence and the former minister of national defence, all of whom belonged at one time to the same party as my hon. friend, and with the former minister of national defence being a member of the same party and sitting in this house. Did not all of them say that there was a commitment?

Mr. MacInnis: I cannot agree with that. The hon. member will have to realize that I was absent from the house for some time at the request of my constituents. I have not kept abreast of developments. Naturally, since coming back I have had the opportunity of sitting in this house and hearing the former minister of national defence reply to a question by the present Minister of National Defence, but his answer never indicated to me that was the case.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Why did he resign?

[Mr. MacInnis.]

Mr. MacInnis: I am happy that the intervention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs will probably give me an opportunity of winding up my remarks at this time. The intervention of the minister gives me an opportunity to congratulate him. I never thought that I would do so in the house. Nevertheless, since he has seen fit to enter the debate, I think this is the appropriate occasion. I should like to congratulate him on the possibility that he may go down in history as "Paul the Prophet". I should like to call his attention to certain remarks he made not long ago. You will recall the pitch your party made about stable government. I would remind you of this particular statement you made—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I take the liberty of reminding the hon. member that he should address himself to the Chair.

Mr. MacInnis: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I should like to bring to the attention of the house in a proper manner a particular statement made by the present Secretary of State for External Affairs:

> If we elect a government that does not command a majority we will spell the disaster of our government.

There is not much doubt about that, in the light of what has developed within the last few days. On that note, I congratulate the prophet.

(Translation):

Mr. Yvon Dupuis (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): Mr. Speaker, my first remarks will be to commend very sincerely the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon), who, last Thursday, introduced in this house a very realistic budget speech. I can assure him that the majority of the people—

An hon. Member: Praise, praise.

Mr. Dupuis: —in the province of Quebec and all across Canada, except the few Socreds that may be left, are quite satisfied with the decisions taken by this government.

An hon. Member: Some are not satisfied.

Mr. Dupuis: Of course, among our hon. friends opposite, for instance, some do not realize that the heritage they left us was nothing to rave about.

The new government could not make improvements or miracles at the present time, but in spite of the dire situation in which we were left by our friends opposite, we already feel that confidence is coming back all across the country. We feel that the Canadian people trust in the future.

Mr. Gregoire: The feeling is not too obvious.

Mr. Dupuis: I think it would also be appropriate to congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) who, the very day after the election of April 8, set himself to work in order to give a new stimulus to our staggering economy and to make up for the five years of Conservative indecision by implementing quickly new measures, which are successful because of Liberal decision.

The dazzled Conservatives and Social Crediters dare ask the question: "What have you done about the 60 days of decision?" It will be a great pleasure to answer that question but before, I should like to recall very briefly the main events during the years of Conservative administration and what my friends opposite have done during those five years of indecision. On two occasions—

Mr. Martineau: Order.

Mr. Dupuis: I think that the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue, who was elected by a charity vote, should keep quiet and let others speak.

Twice, their minister of finance refused to submit a budget to parliament and to the Canadian people.

During five years, the deficits piled up, year after year, and yet the government did nothing to solve any of the important problems which existed. In five years, our friends opposite managed to accumulate a deficit exceeding $3 billion.

Mr. Gregoire: It is $600 million this year.

Mr. Dupuis: I feel that the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) is not qualified to teach anyone anything about budgetary administration.

During five years, unemployment remained at a level comparable to the one that existed during those Conservative years between 1930 and 1935, under the leadership of Mr. Bennett.

For five years, Canada saw its prestige deteriorating abroad; its relations with our friends to the south, the Americans, became very strained.

For five years, the value of the Canadian dollar kept on going down. In five years, those people who are accusing us, managed to drain the unemployment insurance fund in which we had left $1 billion, accumulated during the years we were in office.

For five years, the prime minister of the Conservative government avoided the numerous problems which were piling up before his eyes, instead of trying to solve them. He behaved like an ostrich before a stranger, which buries its head in the sand and thinks it is safe although its rear end is sticking out.

In five years, the members of the Conservative cabinet showed total confusion and a pitiful lack of solidarity which resulted in the resignation of several members of the Diefenbaker cabinet: confusion at national defence headquarters, confusion in the famous Coyne case, confusion with regard to unemployment, pitiful confusion with regard to the Columbia river, confusion, indecision, insecurity, deficits, waste, that is what we got from five years of Conservative rule from 1958 to 1963. And then, on April 8, 1963, on election day, the people of Canada gave to the Liberals and to the present Prime Minister a clear mandate to restore some order in the affairs of the country which had been neglected for five years.

The Prime Minister lost no time in getting to work. He announced that parliament would meet for a regular session as early as the middle of May. He superseded Conservative indecision by a Liberal program of 60 days of decision.

During those 60 days of decision, the Liberal government drew up a long list for anyone to see, a long list of important proposals designed to straighten out the affairs of the country. It will now be up to our friends opposite to help us pass the legislation required for the enactment of those measures that are essential to the future of our country.

Among government's decisions, let us mention the following: proposed royal commission on biculturalism, setting up of a standing committee of the house on national defence, creation of a department of agriculture for the east, establishment of a department of industry, setting up of a Canadian economic council, federal aid to municipal work in order to fight unemployment through the creation of loan funds for municipalities, and numerous other important measures with the sole purpose of stemming the economic depression resulting from five years of Conservative administration.

Mr. Speaker, the present Prime Minister of Canada is known all over the world as a man of decision; the energy he has shown in the last two months has won him the admiration of all the Canadian people. While our eminent Prime Minister works to rebuild the finances and business of this country and the Minister of Finance introduces a budget filled with worth-while measures, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker)—who is now entering the house—and the remainder of his famous team of 210 members in 1958, are engaged in the worst kind of witch-hunt.

Thus, just a few days ago, namely on June 17 last, the right hon. Leader of the Opposition stood up and proposed with a quaver in his voice the adjournment of the house. Why? Here is what he said, as recorded on page 1235 of Hansard:

> —adjourned to discuss a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the admission by the Minister of Finance on Friday, June 14 of facts relating to the preparation of the budget, which facts constitute a flagrant departure from constitutional budgetary practice, imperil—

That is according to the Leader of the Opposition.

> —the traditional and essential secrecy of the budget, and which have had an unsettling effect on this house and on the country.

And even if he was very vehement in making that charge the Leader of the Opposition took good care not to substantiate it. He wanted to put on a big act. So, putting out his chest to impress people opposite in the galleries and again taking the tone he was using in the good old days of 1957, the Leader of the Opposition, eyes left and then right, made charges. He wanted to throw the facts at his audience. He made charges and, in the name of British tradition which is so dear to him and which he felt was threatened by the present Minister of Finance, he pointed his finger and made charges.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) offered to launch immediately the budget debate. And what did the Leader of the Opposition do? He refused his offer. The great man refused. He fulminated, he protested, he rebelled.

And what prompted that big act?

Just think that the Minister of Finance consulted people who did not belong to the federal civil service. What a terrible think to do. In so doing has the Minister of Finance violated a law? We asked the members of the opposition that question and they answered that he did not violate any law.

Has the secrecy of the traditional budget speech been violated? Was the secret known before the minister made his speech? Not at all. Had the three persons involved been sworn in as required by law? Are they loyal subjects of Her Majesty? Yes.

Therefore, if the Minister of Finance did not take any illegal action, if secrecy was not violated, in short if he has not broken any law, what are the Leader of the Opposition and the members of the N.D.P. complaining about?

It has been said that by consulting advisers who were not federal civil servants, he violated the hallowed tradition or the darn tradition.

And that is all. That is the crime, that is the tragedy. The Minister of Finance violated a tradition which was so dear to the heart of the hon. member for Prince Albert, the former prime minister and the present Leader of the Opposition for some time yet.

The people of Canada will not be misled by tactics of hon. members opposite. The Canadian people understand that we finally have a Minister of Finance who can take advice. It pleases them to see that the present incumbent does not think he knows it all as his predecessor did for several years. The hon. member for Davenport does not think he is another Macdonald, another Napoleon Bonaparte or even another Donald Fleming.

The present Minister of Finance has just done what our friends in the opposition should have done during five years. He sought advice from competent people.

Mr. Lambert: Can you prove that they are competent?

Mr. Dupuis: Naturally, if the minister had sought the counsel of the member for Edmonton West, the former speaker of the house, I would have told him that he was making a mistake, but he consulted competent people.

We finally have a Minister of Finance who does not take himself for Don Quixote nor for Mr. Gilles Gregoire. He admits that he might need advice, that he can be mistaken and that he can change his mind on occasion as he did this week. He proved it and we are glad to see that the Minister of Finance can change his mind. That is how the Liberal party remained in power for 22 years; it was flexible enough to change its mind when necessary.

What a contrast, Mr. Speaker, with the present Leader of the Opposition who, when he was the head of the government, thought that he could teach a thing or two to Mr. Coyne in economics. He also thought that he knew better than the minister of national defence did in his own field, that he knew better than everybody else and would accept advice from no one, not even from his best ministers like George Hees, Davie Fulton and others.

Those are facts. Where is the Leader of the Opposition today? He is in the opposition party pending a congress of the Conservative party.

If consultation of Canadian citizens is contrary to the Conservative tradition, well, the present Minister of Finance has put an end to such a sad tradition which has turned the traditional Tory party into a party of bad administrators, a party which has always governed badly each time it has had the opportunity to work out the destiny of this country since confederation.

As I was saying, for the Minister of Finance to take the advice of experts outside the federal civil service, was no violation of any law. And our friends opposite have not proven at all that the minister transgressed any law whatsoever. He assured himself that the secrecy concerning the preparation of the budget would be safely guarded until the very last minute when it was presented in the Commons. Nobody can prove that the secrecy was betrayed.

The Minister of Finance had those three advisors sworn in, as required by law. He did nothing, absolutely nothing which was illegal. I would rather say that he behaved very well.

We shall leave the Conservatives to carry on their witch-hunt. We shall leave the Leader of the Opposition carry on his performance and as for us on this side of the house we shall keep on working in the best interests of our country, Canada.

The future will tell that the brilliant member for Davenport was right. History will recognize the Liberals of today as men of decision, as truly efficient administrators.

We do not pretend to accomplish miracles. We do not propose to remove all taxes, to print money as some of our friends would. If we are not now as happy as we would like to be, it is just because we had to endorse for a few weeks the actions of our friends opposite. We had of course to endorse, in order to administer the country for a few months, the decisions taken by our hapless predecessors.

You will see, Mr. Speaker, that the situation will change very rapidly in our country.

Before concluding, I should like to deal briefly with a matter that is making the headlines at the present time: the future of Canadian federalism.

I was listening last evening to the very congenial and gentle member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) who gave us in this house a circus performance worthy of his master, the Leader of the Opposition.

My great friend from Brome-Missisquoi was worrying too, in a quavering voice, about what the Liberals were going to do for national unity and for biculturalism. It is strange that nothing of the kind, not even the refusal of his leader to establish a commission on biculturalism, seemed to worry him last year when he was sitting on the government side.

I wish to reassure him and all our hon. friends; with the present Prime Minister, we can look to the future with confidence as far as national unity is concerned. It is worth while reminding the house and the country that the present Prime Minister was the first English speaking political leader to request an investigation on biculturalism in Canada. We commend him for it and we appreciate his courage and sense of dignity.

Hon. members opposite know that the present Prime Minister will set up shortly a royal commission of inquiry in that respect.

I should also like to remind the house that our leader has promised to provide Canada with a distinctive national flag and to recognize "O Canada" as the official national anthem within two years after the Liberal take-over.

That is what we call a government of action, and a Prime Minister of decision.

We will have our flag and our national anthem. We will have our inquiry on biculturalism. We will have our federal-provincial conference which will enable us to renegotiate the details of the confederative pact. We will hold a dialogue with the provinces. We will make Canada over. We believe in the unity and greatness of our country. Canada must be strong and united.

The present government will do everything to make people regain confidence in a Canada that is found neither in the state of Quebec nor in the province of Ontario but from coast to coast, from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

(Text):

As promised, one of the first acts of our Prime Minister will be to form the royal commission on biculturalism to examine, not only the past, but the present situation and report the true facts to the nation. The words "unity" and "biculturalism" are very important words to all Canadians. Most of us have always considered our country as one, indivisible and firm; it is important to remember that two great races, two nations, worked together to achieve that united country.

Our English speaking compatriots will remember that when our French ancestors suffered defeat at the battle of the Plains of Abraham, it was a break with their past, with their traditions and their roots. Later, Quebec made a great and voluntary decision in refusing to throw in its future with what is today the United States, and made another great decision, 96 years ago, when it became part of the confederation. These were two great steps very important to the Canadians of the French heritage, and now many feel that yet another step should be taken which, in a different but equally important way, will make them a greater or more vital part of Canada's destiny. This is something to be appreciated not only by the Canadians in the brackets of high education, but by all Canadians who respect our country as a united and indivisible one.

It is important for all Canadians to study immediately our mutual problems, and this during what I call the waiting period so that those problems will not suddenly spring on all Canadians in a few years as something quite unknown to them. Such a surprise could only create unfortunate resistance. A proper presentation of Quebec's viewpoints can only be of service to our national unity.

Each day we pick up the newspapers and see large headlines, radios give us short and somewhat frightening news bulletins, and commentators review serious aspects of our national life. Sometimes it seems that matters are very black and the problems are overwhelming. The reason is that good things, good news and the wonderful aspects of life do not really make big headlines, do not make the hot news bulletins and do not provide good material for the commentators. Bad news is often big news and good news is often no news at all. This is an important thing for everyone to remember in these days, because from the Atlantic to the Pacific there are many, many happy, constructive and wonderful things happening to help our nation grow, be healthy and to develop.

Our duty and responsibility as elected representatives in the House of Commons is not only to help those constructive and pleasant aspects of life, but to go to the heart of the troubles and problems and do the best we can to cure and clear them up. To aid in embarkation upon such a course, there should be a clear statement of our views, policies and of what we are trying to do within the limitation of our responsibilities here in Ottawa, because we must not only recognize what is our duty, but also the boundaries over which we must not step so as not to offend, trespass upon or damage the spirits, acts and works of the provinces. To help mutual understanding between English and French speaking citizens in Canada we do not have to wait until the commission on biculturalism produces its report; we can do so in great measure now.

Immediately following the recent election I took upon myself to do what I believe others should do. I went with my wife across Canada to the west coast for a journey. Our trip was an inspiration to us and I recommend it to every resident of the province of Quebec. I remember that the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) suggested we should visit western Canada, and I am happy to have done so. I have some very strong convictions and opinions on this subject. I think it is a delight to visit these places, but I, like the hon. member for Edmonton West, think also you will find it just as wonderful to know Canada better. The glories of our Pacific coast, of the breathtaking Rockies, of the cities of Vancouver, Edmonton and Calgary, the vast expanse of our prairies, and the huge inland seas of the great lakes are things that every Canadian should see.

I do not know how travelling in Canada can be encouraged more than it is now, but I do feel that our government and every provincial government should do all within their power to get Canadians to visit Canadians. While I was in Vancouver recently it was my pleasure and privilege to discuss with many people the principle of exchanging students between British Columbia and Quebec. I would welcome any suggestions on "exchange," because I feel it will not only aid the education and the culture of these young Canadians who are exchanged between Quebec and other provinces but will move us closer towards national unity. Greater understanding must be the keynote. Canadians of French lineage must deal with citizens of other provinces and exchange speakers, visitors, residents, athletes, artists, and students. By friendly persuasion and by personal contact the friendships, the viewpoints, the associations between Quebec and the other provinces will be strengthened.

Travel within Canada must be accelerated at a speed never before considered or contemplated. I am convinced that this is one of the most urgent requirements. What is the cost of this great travel? What will it cost to transport people at perhaps reduced fares, or on special scholarships from school to school, or event to event, or city to city? I venture that it will cost nothing in relation to the price of unity, for Canadian unity is beyond all price.

Many years ago when our wheat crops on the prairies were threatened with disaster from manpower shortages, it was possible to travel from Montreal to the prairies to work in the wheat fields for $25. This comes to my mind when I think of the tremendous value now of travel from west to east, and east to west. Would it not be a wonderful thing for Montreal students to be able to view Vancouver's beauty at such a small cost for transportation, and for young westerners to brush up on their French by a visit to "la belle province" of Quebec at the same cost from their homes?

It is my feeling that a message must be directed through all possible media to all Canadians. That message should reach them by television, radio, newspapers, magazines, meetings and other means. It should communicate the very spirit of the province of Quebec, which summed up is something like this: When the 13 colonies broke away from the empire, it was the decision of the Canadians of French lineage to stay and make today's Canada possible.

(Translation):

Thereupon, Mr. Speaker, I shall conclude my remarks, and I hope that all hon. members will as best they can co-operate to make a success of this survey on biculturalism, which will take place in the near future.

I know that each hon. member has definite views and quite a few representations to make. I hope that they will play their part vigorously and sincerely and contribute to the effort of this government with a view to uniting this country for the benefit of each and every Canadian.

Mr. Speaker, next week, we will have to vote on the budget. I hope that our friends in the opposition will let us have a strong majority vote to express their confidence in the Minister of Finance, who knew how to resort to expert advice. I hope that they will also support the Minister of Finance and the party now in power so that we may take the action needed to strengthen this country, our Canada.

The other day I heard the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire)—who is unfortunately not in his seat right now—blame the Liberals for having said, during the last election, that they would find a solution for unemployment. Obviously, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Lapointe, who is a man in a hurry, wanted the Liberal party to settle in 60 days, in one fell swoop, the whole unemployment problem.

Well, obviously we have four years before us, and by means of the legislation we shall enact, we shall solve the unemployment problem.

Incidentally, while we are speaking of promises, the hon. member for Lapointe might have remembered that, between a promise and reality there is often a difference, coming more particularly from the Social Credit side.

We promised to put an end to unemployment. We shall certainly manage to do it within four years, and we can count on that many years.

During the last session of the previous parliament, the hon. member for Lapointe predicted that the Liberals would be huddled together with the Conservatives in a little corner of this house on the left of the Speaker, while Social Crediters would be seated on his right. But, what happened actually? Exactly the opposite. Moreover, we have four years to keep our promises, but he has only four years to prevent those who stayed with him from crossing over to this side of the house.

We found, on the evening of April 8, that the Social Credit party was down to 20 members in the house, and that some time after one of them came over to this side of the house, while others shed tears and still others went their own way.

This is what the promises made by the hon. member for Lapointe brought him.

As far as I am concerned, I wish him the longest tenure in this house, because he amuses us a lot, but without any intention of disheartening him I must tell him that after the next election Social Credit will have become a thing of the past.

Mr. Clement Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis). Could the hon. member tell me, for my information and for the information of the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Tremblay), if he agrees with the establishment of a department of agriculture for eastern Canada as he said this afternoon and as he repeated so many times during the last election campaign in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Dupuis: I am most happy, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member asked that question for his information because he certainly needs information.

I say that I agree with the appointment of the present Minister without Portfolio as minister of agriculture for eastern Canada, and I can tell you that this wish will be fulfilled in a near future.

Mr. Vincent: But the hon. member this afternoon stated he was in favour of the establishment of the department of agriculture. Is he in favour of the establishment of a separate department of agriculture for eastern Canada or is he supporting the mere appointment of an eastern agriculture minister?

Mr. Dupuis: I believe my hon. friend understood perfectly that I meant both.

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville?

(Text):

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. The time allotted to the hon. member has expired.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, this being the first opportunity I have had to participate in formal debate this session may I first congratulate you, sir, the Deputy Speaker, and the deputy chairman of committees who comes from the Atlantic provinces, on your election to the high offices you hold.

I listened with interest to the speech made by the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State. My speech will not be as rapid, but I note he ended his remarks with a reference to his favourite subject, the Social Credit party.

Mr. Dupuis: It used to be my favourite subject.

Mr. MacEwan: As I mentioned to him at one time the translation into French is not quite apt, but I understand that during the last election he out-Caouetted Caouette, and the result of that is that he is now parliamentary secretary.

As a maritimer I want to say that we in the Atlantic provinces are a little bit leery about the budget and about the fact that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) is Minister of Finance. Only time will tell, but we will watch what happens. We know the Minister of Finance visited us. We know he wrote a report. We know he was chairman of a royal commission, and on many occasions reference has been made to his remarks about maritimers leaving the Atlantic provinces, especially coal miners in whom I am very interested.

He also said that if we in the maritimes wanted to stay there we would have to accept a standard of living lower than that in other parts of the country. I know he has since said that he really did not mean to say that. In fact he returned to my constituency some time ago and made a very good speech there, a copy of which unfortunately I left at home. However, I have little doubt he had assistance in the preparation of it from another Liberal hon. member. I am not certain, but I have been told that, and I refer to the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Even though the minister has said he did not mean to say those things, nevertheless we will watch what happens so far as the Atlantic provinces are concerned.

We in the maritimes thought we had a good set-up which would help us, in the fact that during the last session of parliament we had as minister of finance the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan). He did an excellent job and we wanted to continue that. The minister of finance is a very important man in any government. In addition to that we had as the minister in charge of the Atlantic development board the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Flemming), former minister of forestry and former premier of the province of New Brunswick, who is very close to us in the maritimes.

Now we have the Secretary of State in charge of that board. He has been a representative of Newfoundland for some time, but after all he is not a native born Atlantic province member, and if we were to have a change of government I wondered if perhaps we might not have the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen), the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) or the genial Solicitor General (Mr. MacNaught) in charge of that board. However, the result is that we have a complete change, in a minister of finance from Ontario and a minister in charge of the Atlantic development board who is not a native born of the Atlantic provinces. We will have to watch very closely what occurs.

I should like to deal with the budget as it affects the maritimes. Resolutions have been introduced regarding the new department of industry and the area development agency that is to form part of it. I am not completely sold on this. I believe the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) dealt with this matter when he spoke on the resolution stage, and I do not intend to repeat his arguments. But in order to help labor surplus areas—and my constituency in that respect is one of the worst in Canada—I believe this further division that is proposed will not help at all, particularly with regard to my own area.

During his budget speech the minister said:

> The full effect on the economy of the important measures I have been discussing—

He was referring to the measures being introduced for the labour surplus areas.

> —will not be felt for a few years.

That is not what we were told during the last election campaign. In my area the Liberal candidate said that all that had to happen was a change of government and there would immediately be no unemployment. Now the minister says the effect of these measures will not be felt for a few years.

Since 1957, many steps have been taken to help the economy of the Atlantic region. Among them were the subsidies to shipbuilding. They were important to my area and many other parts of Canada. The hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) and hon. members from the west coast know what these subsidies meant. However, I was a little distressed when the minister had this to say about the shipbuilding subsidies—and I am not going to quote him. This is to be found on page 1002 of Hansard for June 13:

> Other matters could also be mentioned. There is the shipbuilding subsidy, which was reduced, effective last April 1, in such a way as to lead to a sudden irrational surge of expenditure and activity in that industry which is unlikely to be sustained.

Then he went on to say this:

> This surge of activity places a substantial burden on this year's budget without producing any continuing benefit.

I do not know whether I agree with that. I believe that the benefits will be continuing, and I only hope, despite the words used by the minister, that there will be no move whatsoever to remove these shipbuilding subsidies. They have meant many more jobs, and the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) former minister of transport has estimated the total at 50,000. If the Minister of Finance is thinking of removing these subsidies I would ask him to check first with the Minister of Transport and the Canadian maritime commission. During the last few years many of us pressed for such subsidies in order to help our shipyards compete with foreign shipyards, and if these subsidies are taken away it will mean the loss of a great many jobs and will be a great blow to the shipbuilding industry. For that reason I hope those words used by the minister are not words of warning.

The previous administration also introduced an important measure with regard to vocational training. In fact, I believe the government I supported led by the Leader of the Opposition did more in regard to vocational training than any other government in the history of the country. I do not want to burden the house with references that are too long, but I can look back to the time when coal mines were being closed down in my area and the miners had no trade or skill to use in other work. That was a time when a very strong vocational program should have been introduced. But now I am very pleased to say that as a result of the action taken by the previous government in providing 75 per cent of the cost of vocational schools, through agreement with the provinces, a new school will open in my area in the fall. The young people who take vocational training in it, with the additional advantage of their high school education, will be fine citizens and they will be equipped to stay at home and work in the area. This is something that should have been done before, but I point out that these are matters that will take a little time. The results are being felt in Canada now and, of course, hon. gentlemen across the way will probably get the credit for it.

The Atlantic development board has been referred to also and I should like to point out that the minister said that the Atlantic development board was being strengthened by setting up a fund. I am not going into that. Others of my colleagues from the Atlantic area have done so. However, I would point out that the vice-chairman of the board, Mr. Sobey, who was to sit for five years, will be gone in a year. This is not strengthening the board. This man has been president of Industrial Estates Limited, the crown company in Nova Scotia and I looked upon him as the liaison between Industrial Estates Limited and the Atlantic development board. But when the year is up I suggest that this man, regardless of politics, be re-appointed to the board. He is necessary especially for my native province of Nova Scotia.

Next week an unemployment meeting will be held in my area. Mention was made of this today and there are various things that will probably come up. A local committee has been set up to look into the matter. It is a non-political body known as the Pictou county research and development association. This association has been doing a lot of work in the last two years and carrying out research into various things. I think this will be of assistance to the area. A labour surplus area such as mine should be the first problem attacked by the Atlantic development board.

There is one matter in the budget which has been referred to by the financial editor of the Montreal Gazette and it might be worth while mentioning it here. I refer to the question of accelerated depreciation. I will not quote at length but it is a matter which was missed in the budget and it is something which should be referred to at this time. Tax incentives are good and we welcome the three year tax holiday. We also welcome accelerated depreciation but I want to point out what Mr. Meyer said on June 14:

> One would wish he—

The Minister of Finance.

> —might have been more imaginative. His purposes are clear enough. The increase in capital investment which the accelerated write-offs can be expected to persuade is certainly desirable but might he not be overdoing it? The problem is not entirely one of encouraging new investment; there is also the need to encourage more efficient use of existing investment.

Here is the important part.

> For all the pick-up in business which has taken place over the last year, idle plant can still be readily found. In a good many instances, it is the market that is lacking, not the production equipment to serve that market.

I think that is something which the minister missed, the matter of markets. There should have been something to stimulate markets not only in our country but abroad. The former government of which I was a supporter set a record in the exporting of manufactured goods to other countries through the Export Credits Insurance Corporation. They were always willing to help companies. I submit to the present government that they should go ahead on this basis. It means a lot to the manufacturers of this country. There are many areas which are open including the South American area. Let the government go ahead. Apparently they are not looking to this too much because it was not mentioned in the budget speech. I might also refer to this comment on the budget:

> It offers no stimulation for exports. In fact, it could be regressive in this field because it imposes a sales tax on manufacturing machinery and will almost inevitably add to the cost of production in Canada and consequently make Canadian goods less competitive at home and abroad. Mr. Gordon has tried to do a Roman ride on horses galloping in opposite directions.

I bring this to the attention of the minister. Export markets are important to Canada and we cannot hope to use all the products that we manufacture in this country.

Going on from there, sir, may I refer to the 11 per cent sales tax. I have spoken to my colleagues on this side of the house from the Atlantic provinces, which have a very high rate of unemployment as we all know, and they tell me unequivocally that they have received many submissions on the matter of the sales tax which may be vital to many companies, especially smaller companies in our area. One thinks of the lumber firms and the contractors in their bidding. One thinks of people buying small homes and of people making repairs to their homes. The sales tax will certainly be detrimental in that regard. I know that submissions have been made to the minister from many parts of Canada and I hope that he will take them into consideration.

We have also heard about the $500 incentive with regard to the purchasing of homes. The Kingston Whig-Standard of June 15 had this to say:

> With regard to the housing industry, the new budget announces the removal of the 11 per cent sales tax exemption on building materials and this appears to offset the $500 bonus. What the government has actually done is to add 4 per cent to the price of new houses by this action.

Therefore this will be a very serious matter throughout the country. Another matter has been mentioned which has been brought to the attention of members of the official opposition. In my riding there is a company which manufactures prefab houses and I know there are others throughout the country. I understand that the 11 per cent sales tax will apply on the total cost or over-all package deal with regard to prefabs. Many times prefab manufacturers, especially on the east coast and the west coast, are required to move these houses long distances. I know that from my own area many of them have been shipped north to the lake Janine and Port Cartier area, and Eskimo homes have also been shipped to the far north. This tax will add to the cost. I doubt very much that this company will be able to compete with the companies in Ontario and Quebec. This all adds up to lack of jobs.

The hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis) referred to the matter of the pegging of the Canadian dollar and I will not belabour that now. He always deals with these things very delicately and much more easily than I do. However, I know that during the June, 1962 election campaign much was made of the pegging of the Canadian dollar. I do not have the page here but I believe that the Minister of Finance said that the dollar would continue to be pegged because it had been helpful especially with regard to exports. We know that in our own province products such as fish and lumber have been stimulated by the pegging of the dollar, and now the truth will indeed be told.

There are other matters in the budget I could go into but I do not intend to repeat what other speakers have said. May I end by repeating that as members from the Atlantic area and representatives of the people of that region we are watching the Minister of Finance. The minister said that if the tax holiday did not help the Atlantic provinces he did not know what would. He had other things to say originally about that area because at one time he thought it would help to move people from Cape Breton and my area. He put forward various things but now he thinks that this tax write-off will help us and he said that if it did not do so he did not know what would.

As was pointed out by my hon. member for Cape Breton South, anything that stimulates the Atlantic area will help the rest of Canada. Certainly we do not intend to be the doomsters and gloomsters that members of the former opposition were. If this will help, and this was said by my colleague also, we will certainly be pleased but it will definitely have to be proven to us.

Finally, sir, in so far as outside people assisting in the preparation of the budget is concerned, that is a matter with which I am not going to deal. It has been dealt with by other members. The same is true of the withdrawal of the 30 per cent tax on stocks. The people of Canada, as well as the people in the Atlantic area, are disturbed today. I should like to conclude by again referring to the Montreal Gazette in which there was this article by Mr. Meyer:

> What is so disturbing here is that Mr. Gordon's bungling has cast an early pall over the initially successfully efforts of the new government to clean up the smudges put upon Canada's image abroad by the previous government.

I am not accepting that.

> Few governments have entered office with such sincere foreign good wishes—sentiments which were admirably justified by Mr. Pearson's appearance in London and Hyannis Port and Mr. Sharp's hard-headedness at Geneva. The budget, which should have put a capstone to these efforts to rebuild foreign confidence instead brought the whole structure tumbling down.

We accept the budget, therefore, as it is. We are watching to see whether or not it will bring about the solution of the unemployment problem in Canada to which reference was made by the previous speaker. We do not believe it will. If it will help out, we will buy it. We will see how these people who sit in their ivory towers bring about full employment in this country. We do not believe they can. We will be watching them closely during the days and months ahead.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, many questions have been raised about the budget and the purposes that it attempts to achieve. While I have not very much time this afternoon before five o'clock I hope, at the first opportunity on Monday, to review the main purposes of this budget and to remind hon. members of the limited number of things that could have been done to achieve the main objectives, which were to stimulate the economy, and in the process, to provide more jobs.

Mr. Fisher: Which were?

Mr. Gordon: Which are; this, at least, would be agreed by all hon. members, that certain facets of the Canadian economy need to be strengthened and certain of our industries stimulated and made more efficient if we are going to overcome some of the basic difficulties with which we are confronted.

Perhaps I might just remind hon. members what these basic difficulties are. In the first place, there is no disagreement in this house, I think, that unemployment is a scourge; that it works not only a great hardship on the people concerned but it is a source of fear to others who are afraid that they, too, may lose their jobs. We have to do something about this in Canada. We must tackle it, it seems to me, on a variety of levels. We must, if we are going to be successful, look at the long term as well as the short term. I do not believe, myself, that merely dealing with the short term problems as they arise will work in this field or any other. It was for that reason—it is for that reason—that we on this side of the house attach so much importance to the work of the proposed department of industry. This department, working with the industries concerned, and as I have said before, working with the trade unions concerned, will be responsible for bringing about some major reorganization of the industrial structure of this country. It will take time, working at it one industry at a time, if our industries are to become strong enough to compete with competitors from abroad and if they are to be in a position to expand their exports. When I say that I am thinking of manufactured goods as well as primary products.

Now, I do not think there is much disagreement either that our balance of payments problem, the imbalance in our current accounts which has been running at the rate of about a billion dollars a year, is at the root of many of the problems that we face in Canada. I think the year before it was a little less. Several hon. members have discussed very helpfully and well some aspects of our economic problem. I hope that during the remainder of this debate many hon. members will focus their attention on this particular aspect of the problem, this imbalance in our current account transactions, and will say what they think should be done about it. As I said, I believe this is at the root of our problem and is one of the reasons we have had so much unemployment in this country in recent years.

May I call it five o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills.

THE INTEREST ACT

AMENDMENT TO PLACE CEILING ON INTEREST RATES

On the order:

> Second reading of Bill No. C-10, an act to amend the Interest Act—Mr. Orlikow.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I understand, Mr. Speaker, that discussions are now under way with a view to sending all the bills dealing with the various aspects of interest to a committee. I understand there are approximately 12 of these bills. I should like permission, therefore, to stand this bill and the next bill which appears in my name on the order paper.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is it agreed that we should stand Bills Nos. C-10 and C-12, both standing in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT

AMENDMENT TO ADD REMEMBRANCE DAY AS HOLIDAY

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-13, to amend the Civil Service Act (Remembrance day).

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill reflects the feelings of the members of the Royal Canadian Legion, other veterans groups in Canada, relatives of veterans and many other Canadians with respect to the recognition of remembrance day.

Before dealing with the content of my bill I wish to give a brief historical review of the legislation with respect to the recognition of what was first termed armistice day and later remembrance day, November 11, a never to be forgotten day by veterans of the first world war and their relatives, who will always remember the great sigh of relief that was raised throughout the world when that war terminated. I find the first reference to recognition of this day was during 1919, and I quote from Hansard of May 23, 1921, when a Mr. Pedlow speaking in this house said:
