THE GRAHAM GIRL.

BY MARY S. BROWN.

Well, it was not a very long time, I am glad to say, as I live in the same place as the Graham girl. To think what a lovely time we had anticipated, with Tracy Loring, the greatest catch of the year, along with only dear, fat, stupid Mrs. Bartlett for our chaperon! There's no knowing what might have happened had it not been for that Graham girl. She was governess to Mrs. Bartlett's two children, Tom and Tina (the worst young ones that ever breathed) and Mrs. Bartlett said that the woman's possibly of trusting herself and precious little ones into the wilderness unless her dear, faithful Helen went along. So, of course, Helen Graham went, and so did Tracy Loring, Cara Murray, the two Avery girls, their collegian cousins, Max and Will Collins.

It was July 1st, at first, for during the journey on the cars Cara and I managed to secure Tracy's carriage. Then we went by stage ten miles to a lonely farmhouse—a "jumping off place," as Tracy called it—where we were to get the guide and boat which were to take us up Lake Moosic—dear me, I can never remember those horrid Indian names! But never mind, Tracy said that he didn't just like the looks of our guide, but that he thought him real romantic. His name was Francisco, and he was kind of highland-looking, with a pair of flashing, black eyes, a swarthy complexion and long black hair. And he wore a sort of picturesque Indian costume. He talked a good deal to us girls, and he said, and made up jingling bits of poetry that he had written. Tom Bartlett said that he smelled of onions and poor whiskey, but Tom was always making horrid speeches. However, this time, he wasn't so far out of the way, for if you'll believe it, we hadn't been coming out a week before that rascally guide went off and left us in the midst of a howling wilderness fifteen miles from any living soul. Took our boat! Took our things! Took our own fires, and took our own meals, and all that which which we had paid him to do. Mrs. Bartlett is over forty, but she doesn't know a thing about cooking, for her husband's sister, who lives with her, sees to everything. As for the Avery girls, they were as good as lost, and I, as Tracy Loring knew more than we did, for he could make delicious coffee as well as anything else. It was late in the afternoon, with a cold rain and wild storm coming on, so that it wouldn't have been prudent for the gentleman to undertake the long tramp through the woods back to the Giles farm house. Cara and I felt wretchedly, in the first place, we were conscious of looking dabbled and shabby, and in the second place, we were conscious of looking like two women's spirits. You see, we had no idea what a wild crazy place the woods were, and we had worn dainty flimsy suits, whose ruffles and puffs had soon become crushed and crumpled. Then Mrs. Bartlett came. As for that Graham girl, she wore plain blue navy band gown, with short skirt and bloomers, and she had all made fun of her behind her back, but after a day or two we were forced to acknowledge that she looked very fresh, and as if she had been with Cara and I, and she laughed and talked as freely as she did. Never seemed to mind the least bit, not even when one day Cara threw out something about working people looking their places. As for that Graham girl, she drew herself up rather stately (she had a fine figure) and looked Cara straight in the eye as if to find out what she meant, then a smile began dimpling the corners of her mouth, and she sang out merrily:

"When Adam delved and Eve span, Who then was the gentleman?" But to go back to the time the guide left us. We had to have supper, of course, but what and how? "I've got some fat," said Tracy, "and see that Max has picked some fine blackberries. I can make the coffee, but the rest of the culinary affair I'll have to leave in the hands of my ladies."

"Oh, my goodness gracious!" groaned Mrs. Bartlett, "I never cooked a meal in all my life." We all echoed her words, except Helen Graham, who jumped up briskly, saying: "I'll try to fix something, though it won't be very artistic. I've got my resources limited. Tracy, Mr. Loring, what does our larder contain?" "Humph! Mostly canned goods, I believe. There are some loaves of bread, but with a sniff, they look kind of queer. Miss Graham—she has a pair of very neat-looking, to be sure, but it doesn't smell good."

"Heat and moisture have made mold. Bread molds easily in August weather, and this is over a week old. But I can cut off the crust and toast the inside."

"That'll be famous! I am so hungry I could eat my boots almost! It rejoices my soul to see a genuinely capable woman—my 'baked'!" And now, Madame Cook, I'm at your service—with a low bow. That Graham girl didn't seem a bit surprised when she only giggled, and said coolly, "You may clean the fish, if you want to," and Tracy Loring, the hair of one of the richest and most aristocratic families, danced a big bow for an apron, and went out to obey her commands.

Then how she flew around! I rather liked to watch her. She had a deft, handy way of doing things. Both Cara and I wished that our mothers had taught us something of these fancy things. She made a roasting fire in the fireplace—you see, we had taken up our quarters in a log cabin, that, years before, had been occupied by a hermit trapper. It was a rough affair, but just then we were very thankful for it, considering the rain outside. It had turned out so chilly, too, that the fire felt very comfortable, and what with the light, warmth and good supper, we had a very pleasant time. The supper was especially nice. Helen had opened a couple of cans of chicken; this she warmed in the saucepan, and poured it over the toast, gravy and all. Then she roasted potatoes in leaves and roasted them in the hot ashes; and these, with the fish, coffee and other things, made a meal fit for anybody. The gentlemen praised it up, at any rate, and they paid the Graham girl so many compliments that she actually blushed. It made her look rather pretty, too, and the freckles falling on her brown hair gave it a golden glow that we women couldn't help envying.

Now, what's to be done? I said young Max Collins, after supper, "Some of us have got to tramp back to Giles' farm and get another boat." "You and I will go," said Tracy. "Will can stay here and guard the ladies. We'd better start to-morrow morning, if it's clear." The weather was fine next morning, and after an early breakfast (that Graham girl made splendid corn porridge), Tracy and Max left us. Poor Mrs. Bartlett actually wept when they went off. "It seems so awful to be left alone—ship-wrecked in this howling wilderness," she said. "That's rather a mixed metaphor!" exclaimed Will; "and not at all complimentary to my brother! You know my dear madam, that I will defend you as long as I have a drop of blood left—if these wretched circumstances leave me any to begin with."
