MONTREAL, MONDAY, MARCH 20, 1837.

Since our notice of the arrival of the ship Oxford, in our last, and the news brought by her, intelligence has been received of the arrival at New York of the ships Toronto, 1st February from London, and Poland, 8th from Havre. The latter brings London dates to the 4th, and Paris to the 7th February. There is no news of particular moment; and what there is on English affairs having come through a foreign and circuitous channel, us, as might be expected, very scanty.

from ex-President Jackson's Farewell Address to the people of the United States. We advert again to this document, and if we are to view it simply in the light of a means to and failing health warn me that before long in must pass beyond the reach of human event and cease to feel the vicissitudes of human st purely democratic institutions: we must award to it the praise of being both able and patriotic. The General is a thorough democrat, and he acts consistently when he enunciates the most levelling principles, when he shews a decided hostility to every thing in the shape of monopoly, and when he attempts to clear away every intervening impediment between the "sovereign people" and the legis-lative and executive bodies, that are intended to reflect the wishes of the people and by delegation to wield their power. Whether it possible to carry out such views to their fullest extent and with advantage to the country, is quite a different matter, from the fact that Andrew Jackson believes that it is, and that the framers of the United States Constitution did so too. Regarding his address in this light, it is entitled to all the praise we have bestowed upon it. It is the legacy of a stern and aged democrat, who has holorale, Annauw Jackson's democratic wholesale, Ambauw Jackson's democratic loctrines, and insist upon their perfect applicability to this colony, (although they have proved to be only paraially practicable even a the United States) ever ask themselves he question, if the inhabitants of the two countries are precisely similar in point of insiligence, virtue, &c. It is obvious that the haracter of a people is the first thing which ught to be considered in chilking out for hem a constitution of government. Our nem a constitution of government. Our beoretical democrats seem entirely to over-lock this necessary and intimate connection of tween the nature and extent of the foundaion, and the superstructure they would rear ion it. omission on her part, of preparing, cording, pasting and basting, when he invades her premises on a visit of inspection.

For our third or fourth attempt at night fishing, we prepared by pulling our skiff a couple of miles up the river by daylight, and when night came on, to use the sporting phrase, we lighted up, and falling down the stream with excellent athosement, had taken about thirly salmon, whose being driven at a spanking rate by a smart current, we discovered, (but alas? too late) that a tree had fallen across the river, against which the staff of the lightjack having struck, the skiff wheeled broadside to the stream, and the guiwale coming in contact with one of the branches, the capsize was as adden as disastrous—every acticle on board, our dear solve—the numerous salmon—magazine of firewood—axe—rife—brandy bottle—light jack—all—in a moment committed to the deep!!—Most fortunately; however, we were not past our depth, but pretty nearly so. Floundering about in our blanket coats for some time, and having at last gained the bank, our first look out was for the skiff; having hauled her on shore, and with much groping recovered one of the spears, our next exertion was to kindle a fire, the night being too dark from the overhanging trees, to venture forward a thout a light. In our dripping state this was project of very dubious result; but having between us, luckily a fiint and steel, at the sore expense of our knuckles in the dark, we attength succeeded in setting fire to an old tree; and forming a torch with some birch-bark, we resolved on walking home, and returning in the morning for the recovery of our apparatus.

Here, however, the idea of being laughed
