The early stages of the road's operation proved that the road can be operated at a profit provided sufficient business is available. The difficulty is that the road is in more or less of a starved condition so far as traffic is concerned, but physically it is kept up in A-1 condition. The position is this: We need more business, and the statement of the manager of the road is that it could handle three times the business it now handles if the traffic were available. In that case, of course, the overhead would be spread over a larger tonnage, and consequently it would be much easier to make the road pay.

This is not the first time that competition has been offered to the London and Port Stanley railway. The Southwestern Traction Company started in business in 1906 or 1907. It inaugurated a line from London, through Lambeth to Port Stanley, and did a considerable business in its early years, but it failed to make profits, and was taken over in 1910 by the London and Lake Erie Transportation Company. That company had charters for building roads to various towns and villages in western Ontario—Port Burwell, by the way, was one of them—but after operating about five years it was forced into liquidation, and those who had invested their money in it, including many farmers and others residing along the line of the road, lost large sums. This is proof of the fact that there is not enough business in that section of the country to keep two roads operating at a profit.

There was another line which proposed to come into competition with the London and Port Stanley railway, and that was the Erie, London and Tillsonburg railway. A charter was granted for that railway in 1906, and although five or six extensions of time were granted, no work was done and the charter finally expired in 1916, those who had taken out the charter evidently not being convinced that there was a prospect of sufficient business even to start operations.

The proposed charter is opposed by the London railway commission. In a resolution, after reciting the circumstances, they state:

It is the wish of the commission that the council write the member for the city of London and ask him to do everything possible to oppose the granting of a charter to the London and Port Burwell Railway Company.

The London chamber of commerce are also on record in the following resolution:

This civic institution therefore supports the London and Port Stanley railway commission of the city of London in the protest against the granting of the charter to the proposed Port Burwell-London Railway and desires to register this decision with the member for London.

The city council of London are also on record in the same direction in the following resolution:

Be it therefore resolved that the federal government be petitioned to refuse the application, and the clerk instructed to furnish every member of the federal parliament with a copy of this resolution, and the member for London and the several members of the federal parliament urged to oppose the granting of the said application.

Then it is opposed by the city council of St. Thomas in a resolution which reads as follows:

That Mr. M. F. Hepburn, M.P., be advised that the St. Thomas city council are opposed to the proposed London and Port Burwell Railway Company as set forth in the application dated at Tillsonburg January 26, 1928, a copy of which was sent to this council by Donald F. Gibson, solicitor for the applicants.

Mr. HEPBURN: Is not the hon. member well aware of the fact that since that time the city council have passed a second resolution in which they state that the city of St. Thomas is content to leave the matter of the London and Port Burwell Railway charter to my judgment?

Mr. WHITE (London): I was not aware of that fact. I did hear a statement made by the member for West Elgin (Mr. Hepburn) that the mayor of St. Thomas had sent him a telegram in which he said something of the kind; but it was a private telegram, and inasmuch as the hon. member did not quote any communication from himself to the mayor, it is pretty hard to tell what circumstances brought about that message. But this resolution is dated May 3, and so far as I know is the last official record on the books of the city council of St. Thomas. It might be of interest too to the hon. member for West Elgin to look up some of the press notices in which it is stated that the people of Port Burwell will boycott the people of London and St. Thomas because of their objection to the London and Port Burwell Railway charter. So while the mayor of St. Thomas and the hon. member are in agreement, there are probably other people in St. Thomas who will have something to say about that a little later on. This application is also opposed by the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National Railways. I shall have something to say about the railway situation a little later.

According to clause 16 of the bill, it is proposed to install a coking plant at Port Burwell with a daily capacity of 675 tons. We contend that such a coking plant might very well be located at Port Stanley, for the reason that it would put the producers of coke in closer proximity to St. Thomas and London, and I have no doubt an arrangement might be arrived at with the London railway commission whereby the gas, a by-product of the coking process, could be piped to those two cities along the right of way of the London and Port Stanley railway. The London and Port Stanley railway is well able to handle all the coke that may be turned out by the proposed plant at rates fixed, of course, by the Dominion railway commission. The London railway commission is ready to talk business with the promoters of the coking plant and we contend that a daily output of 675 tons is not sufficient to warrant the building of another railway line.

I oppose the bill for the reasons that I have enumerated, and also on account of the increased losses which will be incurred by the city of London if the proposed railway is built. The city of London has invested roughly about two million dollars in cash in the London and Port Stanley railway, and any division of the existing business must of course result in further loss to the city.

I contend, Mr. Chairman, that there is no demand for increased railway facilities in the district to be traversed by the projected line. It is already served by the Canadian Pacific railway running from Port Burwell to Ingersoll and thence to London, Port Burwell being served by this railway and Port Stanley by the London and Port Stanley railway. The proposed line starting from London will cross the Canadian Pacific railway running from St. Thomas to Ingersoll; it will cross the double-track line of the Michigan Central railway, running from St. Thomas to the Niagara district; it will also cross the Canadian National railway at Aylmer, making these three crossings in a distance of less than ten miles. The district is well served with railways. There is no influx of population, there is no increase in manufacturing, there are no new industries to any marked extent, and from a very careful scaling of the map I find that no section of the district is more than eight or nine miles from a railway; in fact I am quite within the mark when I say that ninety per cent of the people live closer than five miles to a railway. I repeat, the district is well served with railways and does not need any more trackage.

The sponsor of the bill stated that this coking freight would be all new business, but, as I have stated, there is no influx of population, and consequently no increased demand for fuel and things of that kind. The present business will have to be divided among all the roads already operating there, and if one more is built it means that there will be so much less business for each road. May I have the attention of the Minister of Railways for a moment?

Mr. DUNNING: Certainly.

Mr. WHITE (London): I want to direct his special attention to the objections of the London and Port Stanley Railway in opposition to this proposed charter. The matter of granting promiscuous charters to promiscuous companies is one which this house should take into its serious consideration. We all remember the circumstances of the taking over by the Canadian National Railways of many lines which originally were built to compete with one another, and the minister will bear me out when I say that if he had succeeded to a number of lines that had been built in the first instance to co-operate rather than to compete he would have a much easier task now in making the Canadian National railways a paying proposition. These roads have been installed in various places and this one may be installed if the house sees fit; but in time it may have to be taken over by the Canadian National Railways or someone else. I want to direct the attention of the minister to the fact that the Canadian National holds one-fifth of the stock of the London and Port Stanley Railway.

Mr. DUNNING: It has not been worth much up to now.

Mr. WHITE (London): Considering the figures I put on Hansard as to the paying qualities of the London and Port Stanley Railway it has probably paid a little better than the Canadian National.

Mr. DUNNING: We have not had dividends from the London and Port Stanley Railway.

Mr. WHITE (London): Nor from the Canadian National. I wish also to direct the minister's attention to the fact that this proposed line crosses the line of the Canadian National railways at Aylmer, coming into direct competition in that district with the Canadian National. It is therefore bound to affect freight to some extent. I suggest that he consider this question of direct competition with the Canadian National railways.

I would also appeal especially to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott). He is a resident of London; he is a taxpayer of London; and he has heard what I have said. He is well acquainted with the circumstances and knows the history of the London and Port Stanley Railway from its inception. I appeal therefore to him to use his good business judgment in this matter. The same appeal I have made to the Minister of Railways is applicable to every member of the house. It seems to me that in the interests of good business the house can do no better than reject the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN: The hon. member has given, with respect to the London and Port Stanley Railway, an argument which has no relevancy to the bill before the house. Certain statements have been made with regard to the attitude of the people of the city of St. Thomas, and as the representative of that city I feel it my duty to spend a few minutes explaining the situation. The people of that locality realize that new developments have taken place in the transportation of coal into southern Ontario. Instead of taking it by freight around the lake they are now inaugurating cross-lake shipment in bulk. They must therefore provide proper facilities. This new company first approached the London and Port Stanley Railway with a view to buying the road but it was not for sale. Then they turned to Port Burwell harbour, where the government has spent $1,500,000. They bought a piece of land there on the assurance that there would be no opposition from the city of London. They then propose to build from Burwell to London a line which does not parallel the London and Port Stanley railway.

The present objection coming from the London and Port Stanley railway is hard to understand especially in view of the fact, not only that they are in financial difficulties today, but that the crown attorney of the county of Middlesex is investigating charges of corruption and bribery against the London and Port Stanley Railway. In fact, the mayor of London was elected on an issue which involved the operations of the London and Port Stanley Railway. That railway is claimed to be a political enterprise. As a matter of fact there is very little sympathy for that railway and its present management.

In regard to the opposition of St. Thomas, it is true that they passed a resolution opposing the railway unless it came through the city of St. Thomas. At the same time the city of London was opposing the same railway on the ground that it was proposed to build the railway to the city of London. This only shows the anomaly of the situation. Later on the city council of St. Thomas passed a resolution to the effect that they were content to leave to my judgment the matter of the railway charter, and that is the present position so far as St. Thomas is concerned.

I have here several letters, one in particular from the reeve of the township of Yarmouth, in that locality, who states that after making a careful investigation with regard to the proposed line he finds that the people of that district are very much in sympathy with the new railway, and that no doubt it will be connected with one of the biggest industrial developments now pending in southern Ontario. As a guarantee of good faith in the matter, these people are willing to build an $800,000 coking plant and to spend several millions in the construction of their railway. They have made a careful survey of the whole situation and have definite plans establishing the feasibility of the project. I will not take up the time of the committee further, and in view of the fact that we have only a few minutes left for the consideration of private bills, I move that this bill be reported.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

National Revenue — salaries, including appointment of Miss Ellen Kerr at $1,860, notwithstanding anything contrary in the Civil Service Act—contingencies, $793,870.

Mr. CAHAN: As this is a vote in respect of the Department of National Revenue, perhaps I may be allowed a few moments to call attention to the fact that the customs and excise enforcement officer at Notre Dame des Bois was dismissed for partisanship. In the reply to an inquiry which I made of the minister I find that this officer, who was dismissed on December 6, 1926, had been for seven years and seven months an efficient officer of that department, and that during that time he had paid 5 per cent of his salary as a contribution to the superannuation fund.

No inquiry was granted; in his reply the minister stated that an inquiry was asked for by the service bureau of the Canadian Legion of the British Empire Service League and I am informed, although I have not the documents here, that this official also asked for an inquiry. Whatever may happen in regard to the Post Office department, I say that an officer who has served for seven years, who has paid several hundreds of dollars into the superannuation fund, and has been an efficient officer without any complaint being made against him during that term of years, should not be dismissed without an inquiry, on the word of any member of parliament or any supporter of the government.

If I am not mistaken, the alleged political partisanship of this officer—I trust I am not confusing him with another dismissal, but unfortunately I have not the documents of the file in my desk to-night—took place when he was not at the office at Notre Dame des Bois, but when he was absent performing a special duty at the border. I am informed that the office of the customs department at Notre Dame des Bois is in a building which is used in part for the customs office, another part being rented for other offices, and the upper portion of the building being used as a residence. During the election campaign when this officer was absent, not in town at all but miles and miles away, the proprietor of this building allowed the Conservative candidate, who had his campaign quarters in a building on the opposite side of the street, to stretch a line on which he put a flag indicating to the passers-by on the street where the Conservative headquarters were. I am informed that this official had absolutely nothing to do with that. As I said, he was away on special service at the border, and if the facts as reported to me are correct an inquiry should certainly be granted, and I am surprised that none was granted.

He was dismissed on the complaint of partisanship made by a member of parliament. If the government are going to dismiss officials of long standing, with competent and efficient service, without an inquiry when asked for, they at least should have the sense of justice to hand back their contributions to the superannuation fund. I think the matter is one that should be inquired into carefully, and I trust that the minister, despite the fact that he has taken action on the word of a member, will inquire further. I am not imputing any dishonesty to the member, but I know that in my own constituency I have often received information by word of mouth which I found to be utterly unreliable. There should be some ways and means of getting behind mere gossip and inquiring into the facts to ascertain whether this man has really been a political partisan during the election.

For my own part, I entirely disagree with the practice that has been followed by both political parties with regard to dismissals for partisanship. I have felt that way ever since I was a young man in Nova Scotia. I went to address a political meeting in Tusket, Yarmouth county, and my mother was lying ill at the village where I was born, some four or five miles out. I went to see her and had dinner with her, and when I got off the train, it being a small village, I had difficulty in finding someone to drive me across country. I asked a relative of mine, who happened to be the village postmaster, to drive me to the place where I was to meet Sir Charles Tupper and address the meeting, and the result was that that relative was dismissed because he had done me the kindness to drive me across country from my mother's place to the village of Tusket. As a young man, the thing rankled in my mind for many years, and ever since I have been opposed to dismissals of that class for so-called political partisanship.

Mr. EULER: I will admit that the matter to which the hon. member has just referred has given me some little concern. The dismissal took place entirely in accordance with the principle that has been observed by all parties. The complaint of a member of the house that an individual has been exercising partisanship in elections has always been accepted by the minister as a reason for dismissal. I have followed that principle, but I am glad to say there have not been many instances in my own department. I am not going to express an opinion as to whether that is a good practice to follow, although perhaps I might be just so bold as to say that I have a good deal of sympathy with the position taken by my hon. friend. Although many members may differ with me, I can see no particular reason why, where a man happens to be in the service of the government, he should not be allowed to exercise any influence he may have on behalf of any political principle in which he believes. However, I will have to take any responsibility there may be in following out the practice that has always been followed.

So far as the complaint of the man is concerned, I do not recall that he himself made an application for an investigation. So far as my memory serves me, an application for an investigation did come from some soldiers' organization. A reply was sent to the effect that an inquiry would be granted, but I understand that no further application was made, and that the man disappeared entirely from the neighbourhood in which he had been employed.

Mr. CAHAN: I am informed that he had to go to another district to earn a living for himself and some others who were dependent on him.

Mr. EULER: If the man has returned and desires an investigation I shall certainly comply with his wishes. I will be quite frank and say that once an officer has been discharged in accordance with this particular custom—I am referring to the word of a member—if it is found that he has not been guilty of such practices, I do not know just how he could be restored. The Civil Service Commission, of course, would have to reappoint him.

Mr. JACOBS: Supposing it were found on investigation that the man was a Liberal, what would you do then?

Mr. EULER: I will say very frankly, to my hon. friend, and I think he will believe me, that it would not make any difference. The Civil Service Commission is the body entirely in control of that matter.

Another point was mentioned in regard to this matter—the return to the discharged employee of the sum which he had paid into the fund. Personally, I am of the opinion—I am not speaking for the government—that no matter what the reason might be for discharging an employee, he is entitled to receive back the actual amount of money he has paid into the treasury.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Surely it would be a comparatively simple matter to reimburse a man the amount he has paid in, and surely a man is not to be turned out without even the semblance of a trial. That, I understand, is what the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) is contending. If this house is to accept as a guiding rule in the future that the government is going to act upon the basis of turning men out without an investigation to get the particulars, let us know it, and let us be guided by it, but let the position be definite.

Mr. EULER: I would say to my hon. friend that it has been very definite in the past, as the member for St. Lawrence-St. George stated a moment ago, and the practice that was followed in this case has been the practice for many years under all governments. If the practice is wrong and the house decides so, it might be well to change it.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): That is what I am asking the minister. It being wrong, let us change it.

Mr. JACOBS: I agree entirely with the hon. member for West Hamilton and with the remarks made by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George. The fact that a rule of this kind was established by a Tory government does not mean that it is right. I believe in following the Tory party when they are right but certainly not when they are wrong. This seems to be a flagrant case of injustice in dismissing a man from his employment on the mere statement of a member of parliament. Sometimes even members of parliament make mistakes. After all I do not consider that the word of a member of parliament is to be looked upon as Holy Writ. This case is unusual and it seems to me that it behooves the Liberal party, which always claims to be a little better than the other parties, to change the rule and to see that justice is done to this man, be he Liberal or Conservative or even Progressive. My good friend the Minister of National Revenue is not bound by rules which he found in the department when he came in, whether they were laid down by Liberals or by Conservatives. He is a man of pretty independent views and I am surprised that, having a case of this kind before him, he would be willing to follow in the footsteps of former ministers who were not quite so punctilious as he is in matters of this kind. If this rule was wrong, I do not care whether it was inaugurated by Liberals or by Conservatives, surely we ought to have manliness and independence enough to set it right. An investigation ought to be had into the case and if the facts are as stated by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, the man ought to be reinstated.

Mr. HANSON: I should like to ask the minister whether under the regime of this government, if not under himself, it has not been the practice to take the word of a defeated candidate and to have a man dismissed without investigation. I am not at all sure about the matter and I am asking for information only.

Mr. EULER: I can speak only for myself. It has never been done so far as I am concerned. The word of a defeated candidate or anyone else is not taken, but a commissioner may be appointed who makes an investigation and upon his report an official may be dismissed. So far as I know a dismissal never takes place except on the word of the sitting member. I presume the theory of taking his word is that an hon. member is responsible to the house for his actions.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Is the defeated candidate's word not taken just as readily as that of the sitting member?

Mr. EULER: No.

Mr. CAMPBELL: It has been done regularly in post office positions in my district.

Mr. SHORT: It has been in the Post Office department in my constituency in a number of cases. It was done in the case of a candidate who was defeated three times in my constituency. He ran four elections and won one, and his word is taken as gospel in regard to positions in the Post Office department. I do not know about the Department of National Revenue. While I am on my feet I should like to ask the minister why the recommendation from the Civil Service Commission for an appointment to the Digby customs house a year ago this month was not accepted. The minister will remember that we had a conversation last year with reference to an assistant in the Digby customs house and he stated to me that an appointment would be made, but that it would have to come through the Civil Service Commission and that he would ask the Civil Service Commission to ask for candidates. A competition was held in Digby a year ago this month and eight competitors wrote the examination. Three of them passed the examination and the one who passed with the highest marks was a returned soldier. He was recommended by the Civil Service Commission for the appointment, but he was turned down; no appointment was made and the collector has had to do his own work there for the past year and a half, being overworked all the time. This spring, only a few weeks ago, an assistant from the Halifax customs house was sent to Digby, while a local man, a returned soldier, was turned down. I should like to have the minister's explanation.

Mr. EULER: The explanation is very simple. Very serious charges were made against the first two of those who had passed the examination. An investigation is being held and in the meantime a relieving officer is being placed in the port.

Mr. SHORT: The young man who was turned down was afterwards employed by the Dominon Atlantic Railway as an employee in their station at Digby and he is serving the public there. This is a private corporation. There is absolutely nothing against his character or his ability. He is well qualified for the position and he was so recommended by the Civil Service Commission; but I can tell you why he was not appointed. The defeated candidate in Digby-Annapolis was the man who said that he should not be appointed. That is the whole and sole reason. It is all very well for the Minister of National Revenue to say that his department is free from politics, but in my constituency they have been playing politics in regard to every appointment that has been made.

Mr. EULER: If the investigation shows that there is no ground for the complaint, the Civil Service Commission, so far as I am concerned, will be allowed to go on and make the appointment.

Mr. SHORT: It will not be a non-partisan investigation that will take place.

Mr. HANSON: That is a point that ought to be cleared up. Who is to be the investigator and who raised the charges against this returned soldier? What are the facts?

Mr. EULER: It is not going to be a partisan investigation at all. The investigation will be made by officers of the department, not by any partisan commissioner.

Mr. SHORT: Why has the minister taken a whole year to look into the matter? He has known for more than a year that the collector of customs at my port has been overworked. He has had no assistance whatever since his appointment some two years ago, while other officers that have no more business, and indeed not as much business to deal with as there is at my port, have two or three assistants. This man was not appointed simply because he was not satisfactory to the defeated candidate in the constituency. That is the whole reason. There is nothing against his character or ability. He is qualified in every particular for the position.

Mr. BROWN: I have been greatly interested in some of the discussion to-night. Personally I have never been in favour of the principle of dismissing men for partisan reasons. Had I taken that position I could certainly have had a number of men dismissed following the election of 1921. In that respect I have differed with many of my friends at home, men who have voted for me. They say that the Liberals do not take as good care of their friends as the Conservatives do. When I went home at Easter I had some criticisms made of myself just on that score.

In communications that I have had with the Minister of National Revenue in relation to some complaints that have been made, reasons were urged why certain officials should be dismissed. I may say that the Minister of National Revenue was very careful about the investigations he made and he did not show any willingness to dismiss men without cause.

I am glad to hear these protestations of high principle coming from the opposite side and I hope they will be followed in the future. Certainly I know the condition of things in the past, particularly in regard to the election of 1911, were different because the Conservative candidate during that election campaign carried around in his pocket dismissals and appointments. The practice then was very different from the principle which has now been proclaimed as the proper one to follow. Personally, I agree absolutely with the principle that has been enunciated that men should not be dismissed simply because they have seen fit to exercise their privileges as citizens. I hold to that, and I have held to it both in opposition and when I was supporting the government of the day.

Mr. MANION: When was the hon. member in opposition?

Mr. BROWN: That is not the question at the present time. I have been in opposition to governments of the day, and I have supported governments of the day, just as the hon. member has, and I have always advocated that principle, thereby bringing upon myself the displeasure of some of my friends who took the ground that the Liberals had not taken as good care of their friends as the Conservatives had done in the past. I hope the protest that has been made by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George will have some weight, and that the principles which he has enunciated will be applied impartially by all parties in this house, and by this as well as and by successive governments.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): In connection with the case mentioned by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, is the minister going to make the investigation asked for, or is he not?

Mr. EULER: I have answered that. If a man makes an application to have an investigation, he will certainly have it.

Mr. SHORT: What is the minister going to do about this case? He must certainly remember the conversation we had last year, in which he stated that he would ask the Civil Service Commission to hold examinations, and that he would have a local man appointed. The examinations were held, and the one that passed the highest—and only three out of the eight passed— was a returned soldier, who was well qualified in every respect for the position. The Civil Service Commission recommended his appointment, but he has never been appointed, and an outside man has been sent there instead. The people of Digby resent that, because we have hundreds of well qualified people capable of filling the position. I want to know what the minister is going to do in connection with that position.

Mr. EULER: I am not sure that I can add anything to what I have said. Complaints did come—

Mr. SHORT: From whom?

Mr. EULER: If the hon. gentleman will permit me, I will answer him. Complaints were made, and they were of a serious nature. If they are true, whether the Civil Service Commission recommends that man or not, he will not be accepted by this department. If they are not true, and the investigation is going to be made by men who are not partisan, then the commission may make the appointment, and I shall not interfere.

Just one other word. The man who has been sent there has not been sent there as a permanent official at all, but merely as a temporary official to take the office until a permanent appointment can be made.

Mr. SHORT: I have known this young man for twenty years, and there is absolutely nothing against his character. I have never heard a word against him, unless the fact that he may have voted for me is against him. If that is going to be the excuse for keeping him out of the position to which he is entitled, it is time this house knew it.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Would the minister be good enough to inform the committee when these complaints were made, and by whom?

Mr. EULER: I have not the data here.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Approximately, how long is it since they were made?

Mr. EULER: I think they came in some months ago, speaking from memory—last fall, the commissioner tells me.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Then why has not the investigation taken place long before this?

Mr. EULER: The place was not filled because during the winter the officer was not required.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): But why was not the investigation of these complaints held sooner?

Mr. EULER: It is being held now.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Why is it being held now, and not months ago?

Mr. EULER: We have lots of work to do.

Mr. KAISER: I am not going to enter into a discussion regarding the dismissal of officials. I was amazed at the statement of the minister that his predecessors had dismissed officers on the recommendation of the members. I know that that is not true so far as the Conservatives are concerned.

Mr. EULER: I said nothing about my predecessors at all.

Mr. KAISER: The minister said that that was the habit and custom of the ministers holding portfolios in the government.

Mr. EULER: I was speaking of all governments, not of my predecessors in this particular office. I made no reference to them whatever.

Mr. KAISER: Well, predecessors in other departments. I for one object to allowing that statement to go unchallenged. I know it is not correct. I know Conservative ministers who were asked to dismiss men on the Liberal side because of their interference in politics in my riding, and the government of the day refused to dismiss them, and in some cases I think they were right. But I did not rise to discuss that feature at all. I rose to say one word in support of a remark that was made by the minister. He claimed that there is something wrong and something unjust in allowing a civil servant to contribute to a fund for a number of years, and then to be dismissed and receive no refund of his contribution or any part of it. I have in mind the case of a man who had paid into this fund for fifteen years, and was dismissed a year or so ago. I am not going to complain because he was dismissed; I am not going to discuss that at all. He committed an offence which most men would regard as a pardonable offence, and this government dismissed him. My point is that having paid into the fund for fifteen years he applied to have his contributions returned. It took one year to get the government to agree to make this refund of his contributions. Probably they had some justification for the delay; I am not going to discuss that point, but in refunding his contributions nothing was allowed by way of interest on what he had paid in. I think that is wrong. I claim that that provision in the act should be amended, and I hope the minister will bring in an amendment next session to provide that no matter what a man may be dismissed for, if he has contributed for a number of years to the superannuation fund he shall get his money back. The minister himself spoke somewhat to that effect, and not much attention was paid to it. I consider that it was a very important declaration, and I desire to commend the minister for it, and I hope that he will carry out that idea. There is something absolutely wrong in deducting five per cent of a man's wages for five, ten or fifteen years, and then dismissing him for some simple offence and not refund to him what he has paid in. I trust that an amendment will be made to the act next session to wipe out that injustice.

Mr. McGIBBON: I want to reinforce, if I may, the remarks that have just been made by the member for Ontario. I raised this question the other night when the estimates of the Postmaster General were up. I am not concerned now so much with the man who is dismissed as I am with the man who voluntarily resigns from a position in the civil service. I was told by the Postmaster General that if a man had been in the service two years, he would get his money back if he resigned, but upon inquiry I find that that is not the case. I was talking only yesterday to a man who had been in the employ of the government for four years and had been paying into the superannuation fund. He resigned to go into another business. There was not a single thing against him, but when he applied to have the money refunded that he had paid in, it was refused. Now for the life of me I cannot see how any government can justify an action of that kind. I should like to ask the minister whose statement is correct.

Mr. EULER: Under the act the man has to have ten years' service before we can pay back what he has paid into the fund. The law would have to be changed to meet my hon. friend's wishes.

Mr. McGIBBON: That is the information I got from the man himself. The deputy of the Postmaster General also told me that the other night. But surely this parliament cannot justify such a thing. You take the man's money while he is serving the people of Canada, and then when he resigns to go into another occupation you keep his money. It is absolute robbery.

Mr. CANTLEY: It is legalized robbery.

Mr. McGIBBON: What does the minister think about it?

Mr. EULER: I have expressed my opinion upon the point already, Mr. Chairman. I am in agreement with what the hon. gentleman says. I do not think that even the limitation of ten years should apply, but it is so provided in the act evolved by a committee of this house. I say quite frankly that I think any man who has paid out of his wages towards the superannuation fund, and is dismissed from the service, no matter for what reason, has a good moral claim for the return of his money.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Chairman, it is only fair to say that the matter has been before the treasury board on numerous occasions, and always we have been referred to the report of the committee which evolved the present Civil Service Superannuation Act. I think the act came into force before the present government took office, but that has nothing to do with the matter, because the whole house interested itself in that legislation. It has been pointed out to us that if the principle of giving back contributions to the superannuation fund in the case of resignations up to the ten-year period were recognized, it would operate to change the scale of the contributions generally, and that scale would have to be increased to make up for those refunds. I am not arguing the question, I am merely putting before the committee the information conveyed to the members of the present treasury board as to the origin of the practice under the Superannuation Act. Personally, I hold the view that as a matter of justice it is pretty hard to take away from a man the contributions which he makes to such a fund. I draw some distinction between the man who is dismissed and the man who voluntarily resigns.

Mr. McGIBBON: So do I.

Mr. DUNNING: He resigns voluntarily to better himself; but for the man who is dismissed and is thereby deprived entirely of the opportunity of benefiting from his contributions to the superannuation fund, a good deal is to be said in favour of some further consideration being given to him. But I am sure some members on both sides of the house will recall that the actuarial basis of the fund was very carefully examined by the committee at the time the act was drafted.

Mr. McGIBBON: I appreciate, Mr. Chairman, the frankness of the minister's opinion. But surely this parliament cannot hide behind the excuse that because some committee made a wrong recommendation to this house on one occasion this injustice is to be continued. That used to be the policy of the insurance companies; a man who quit after paying premiums for three or four years lost everything that he had paid in. But that is not so to-day; he gets a refund. I agree with the Minister of Railways that there is a distinction between the man who is dismissed and the man who voluntarily resigns. But surely those who stay in the service should not be content to profit by the honest contributions of the man who steps out of the service with a clear record. I am sure there is no justification whatever for this parliament perpetuating an injustice on honest servants of the state. I hope the government will see to it that the law is changed in this respect.

Mr. GEARY: May I ask, if the member for South Toronto, on his responsibility as a member, were to lay a complaint against some Liberal partisan, would that partisan be dismissed?

Mr. EULER: Yes.

Mr. GEARY: Well, the member for South Toronto could cause a great flutter in the dovecote if he wanted to. How the member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) is in a position to do it I do not know. Is he a Liberal member?

Mr. BROWN: The member for Lisgar has never made any recommendation for the dismissal of a partisan.

Mr. GEARY: But the member for Lisgar has been blamed for not doing so. He mentioned that some Conservative candidate in 1911 carried appointments in his pocket. That must have been a smart candidate—the Conservative party was not in office at that time.

Mr. BROWN: Figuratively speaking. The appointments were made after the Conservatives were in power.

Mr. GEARY: After all it might not be so very difficult, for even cabinet ministers in the last election were known to be carrying around wharves and post offices in their pockets.

Item agreed to.

National Revenue—$13,473,506.

Salaries and contingent expenses of the several ports in the Dominion, including pay for overtime of officers notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act,—and temporary buildings and rentals, $7,538,460.

Salaries and travelling expenses of inspectors of ports and of other officers on inspection, and in connection with the Board of Customs; the latter including $500 for the secretary and amount required to create positions, make appointments and pay salaries and expenses of Dominion appraisers, notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act, and the said positions and staff so appointed to be wholly excluded from said act, $1,137,725.

Miscellaneous—Printing and stationery, subscriptions to commercial papers, flags, dating stamps, locks, instruments, etc., for various ports of entry, express charges on samples, stationery and legal forms, legal expenses, premiums on guarantee bonds, and uniforms for customs officers, $600,000.

To provide for expenses of maintenance of revenue cruisers and for preventive service, including $6,000 salary F. W. Cowan and an amount required to create positions and make appointments, by the Minister of National Revenue, of officers for the prevention of smuggling, and to investigate reported frauds against the revenue, notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act and the said positions and staff so appointed to be wholly excluded from said act; also to provide for expenses of such officers and for the purchase or charter of vessels and for the purchase or hire of automobiles to be used in the prevention of smuggling or other offences against the revenue laws, $1,896,821.

Amounts to be paid to Department of Justice to be disbursed by and accounted for to it, for secret preventive service,—amount required to create positions and make appointments of officers for the prevention of smuggling and to investigate reported frauds against the revenue, notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act, and the said positions and staff so appointed to be wholly excluded from said act, $100,000.

To provide for the administration of the Business Profits War Tax Act, 1916, and the Income War Tax Act, 1917, and amendments thereof, and authority for this purpose to create positions and make appointments, notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act, and the said positions and the staff so appointed are hereby wholly excluded from the operation of the said act; and salary of $7,000 for the Commissioner of Income Tax, $2,200,000.

To pay Mrs. Turner Ingalls, widow of the late Turner Ingalls, a Customs Excise Enforcement Officer who was accidentally killed while on duty, $500.—Total, $13,473,506.

Mr. STEVENS: This item, Mr. Chairman, really comprehends the total vote of the National Revenue department. There are one or two things I desire to bring to the attention of the minister, and perhaps I might as well do so now in a general discussion, for we will probably get into such a discussion in any case. By the way I notice that there is an increase of something over a million dollars in the vote, presumably made necessary by the increased service. Just in passing I should like to say to the minister that it seemed to be pretty well established during the investigation by the royal commission, as well as by the inter-departmental and by the parliamentary committee of 1926, that a very substantial reduction might be made in the ports of entry, and thus reduce very largely the cost of administration, and the number of employees so released might be used in the enlarged preventive service. I simply point that out at this stage in reference to this increase, which perhaps might have been obviated had such a course been followed.

But what I wish to bring to the attention of the minister particularly is a reference made at pages 10 and 11 of the final report by the Royal Commission on Customs and Excise, dealing with the enforcement of the laws relating to national revenue. One of the problems disclosed in the two major investigations was the difficulty of securing the proper enforcement of those laws. Various reasons were assigned, but one of the reasons which seems to stand out more clearly than others explains a failure that can perhaps be most readily corrected, that is, the failure of those who were appointed, on the part of the Justice department, to deal in efficient and proper manner with the cases given to their charge. Let me read from the report of the royal commission at page 10. Under a subhead, "Enforcement of Laws Relating to National Revenue", the following statement is made:

> Closely allied to preventive work is the enforcement of the laws and regulations. We see no reason why parties committing frauds on the revenue should not be proceeded against with the same degree of promptitude and efficiency as usually characterizes prosecutions for enforcement of the provisions of the criminal code. This, according to the evidence, has not been so in the past.

I emphasize that.

> This, according to the evidence, has not been so in the past.

Then it continues:

> For this purpose competent counsel should be retained by the department throughout the Dominion to act in such matters. They would thus become familiar with the national revenue laws and regulations and be prepared to act promptly when called upon, and could be consulted by the preventive officers and other officials having similar responsibility in making seizures and in instituting and conducting prosecutions.

The report closes thus:

> It would also appear advisable, at least so far as smuggling is concerned, that instructions from the chief regional preventive officer for prosecutions should be sufficient.

Those are extracts from the final report of the royal commission. I have also a report from Messrs. Clarkson, Gordon and Dilworth dated February 9 respecting the reorganization of the Department of National Revenue. I shall read from this report just a brief extract which will at once be recognized as very similar to the one I have given from the royal commission's report. This extract reads:

It is very desirable that wherever possible the legal representative should be familiar with the customs and excise act and regulations and that where one case has been handled to the satisfaction of the department it should be free to use the same legal agent in other cases; and that where the outcome of one case has indicated the unsuitability of the agent the department should be able to secure promptly a more suitable representative.

I pause to ask the committee to note that it refers here to the department—that is, the officers in charge of the responsible work of this very important branch of the national service. The report suggests that the department should be free to act as indicated; while in the royal commission's report it is recommended that instructions from the chief regional preventive officer should be sufficient.

Now I desire to direct the attention of the committee and of the minister to a report presented and adopted at a meeting of the Commercial Protective Association, Ottawa, Tuesday, May 15, 1928. This is the report of an association of business men of the Dominion and contains a reference to the enforcement of law. At page 4 the report states in part:

It has always been the practice of all governments to select lawyers to prosecute in these cases on the basis of past political services rather than on competency to conduct these important prosecutions. All four reports referred to condemn this practice;—

That is, the two reports I have read and two others to which refeernce is made.

—and yet there never has been a greater abuse of it than at the present time. Cases which should have been prosecuted in open court are known to have been settled secretly. Firms and individuals who have defrauded the revenue out of many thousands of dollars are able to escape altogether, or make monetary settlements and escape the publicity of court procedure, which is such an important factor in the prevention of this type of offence. Cases are allowed to drag through the courts for years; in many cases, even when prosecutions are entered, no serious effort is made to obtain convictions. Certain incidents of recent months reveal shocking conditions in this regard. Responsibility for this condition of affairs rests with the Department of Justice and not with the Department of National Revenue. The whole question of the administration of justice in regard to customs frauds continues to be far from satisfactory and should be the subject of immediate investigation.

Then there is the statement of an eminent lawyer, a man of very high repute at present occupying a seat in the other chamber. The Hon. N. K. Laflamme, K.C., described in this report as one of the most eminent criminal lawyers in Canada, and now a senator, who appeared as counsel in a recent very important prosecution under the Customs Act, describes the court proceedings as:

A melancholy burlesque, carried on for the last eighteen months in three courts of justice.

It must be clear, from the report of the royal commission, the report of the parliamentary committee, the report of Clarkson, Gordon and Dilworth on the reorganization of the department, and the supporting statement of the Commercial Protective Association, that there is something seriously and radically wrong with the method of procedure against violators of the law. I know full well the tremendous task that has been laid on the shoulders of the Minister of National Revenue. There is undoubtedly a very difficult and complex duty imposed on him in enforcing the law. I shall in a moment make another reference as to how, in my judgment, some relief might be secured in the way of minimizing the incitement to violate the law. That is another question, however.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Lower the duties.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend from Weyburn treats it rather as a joke; I do not think it is. The point I am making at the moment is this: There are very serious infractions of the law; this is recognized. But it is abundantly clear from the reports that the present system through the Justice department is not a success. In other words, in the language of one of these reports, these solicitors are chosen more from the standpoint of political patronage, using that term in its real sense, than for any other reason; and all these reports indicate that this practice should be abandoned and that solicitors or counsel should be otherwise selected and appointed for the purpose of prosecuting these cases. I happen to know of one instance where one individual was retained for a number of years by the income tax branch. I am not referring to the last two or three years but to a time four or five or six years ago. This gentleman became very proficient in his duties—

Mr. EULER: Still there.

Mr. STEVENS: He was in my city, I think, and was very efficient. He was on the outside. But generally the practice is to spread this business amongst lawyers in different localities. I submit to the minister that that practice should be changed, and that the committee and also the government should take notice of the very serious charge made by the Commercial Protective Association, and also the reference of Hon. N. K. Laflamme in dealing with this matter, that cases are allowed to drag through the courts for years and that very often secret adjustments are made rather than have the person charged exposed to prosecution in the courts. One of the most important and most salutary deterrents to crime is the danger a person faces of being exposed in open court. If it is made possible and indeed customary to escape prosecution for an offence for which a person should be prosecuted, through monetary considerations or through the surrender of certain sums to the department, then it becomes merely a question of what it is going to cost him to escape the penalty for a practice which is exceedingly remunerative to him. Nothing will deter these people more than to face prosecution and exposure in the courts, with a possible sentence other than that of a mere fine. I place these facts before the minister, and I think we should hear from him and from the Minister of Justice in this regard. I think we should also have a statement from the minister as to what prosecutions have been already undertaken. I hold in my hand the interim reports of the royal commission, and I find that there is one series of prosecutions recommended, which I do not think have been carried out as yet.

Mr. EULER: Which ones?

Mr. STEVENS: I am quoting directly from the report, under the heading "Bronfman Interests". I will just read what the commission have to say:

> We have dealt in this report with the activities of several firms, syndicates or companies owned or controlled by members of the Bronfman family, so far as the scope of our inquiry warrants. It would appear, however, to be incumbent on us to consider matters of a general character not related specially to any one concern, but arising out of the combined concerns.

Then I will just refer to the recommendations of the commission, and I am not now making any comments on them:

> It was admitted by Harry Bronfman in his evidence that none of the firms or companies in which this group of individuals was interested had made any returns or payment of taxes under The Business Profits War Tax Act, 1916, which was in force . . . .

Then they go on to say:

> Recommendations: (1) That the income tax branch review the whole matters involved and take action to recover all arrears due by the parties interested;
> (2) That the department take action to recover any arrears of taxes due by the parties mentioned . . . .

Referring to one of the subsidiary companies, the report proceeds:

> This report is to be used in conjunction with the report on other concerns owned or controlled by the Bronfman interests.

With reference to another company, the report has this to say:

> As already stated the evidence indicates that this company or syndicate was guilty of many infractions of the Excise Act, but apparently the limitations respecting prosecutions for such offences would bar convictions, and in view of that we make no recommendations but merely cite the facts as part of the history . . . .

Then they go on and refer to one of the principals in the case, and recommend:

> That prosecution be instituted against Harry Bronfman for the allgeed bribery of Inspector Knowles.

With reference to another company, the Atlas Shipping Company, they say:

> That the same action be taken as is recommended in the report on the Dominion Gresham Guarantee and Casualty Company.

That is one of the previous companies referred to. Then, in connection with still another company, they recommend:

> That the same action be taken as recommended in the report on the Dominion Gresham Guarantee and Casualty Company.

In other words, there are eight companies enumerated in the report in connection with which prosecutions are recommended. I do not know whether these prosecutions have been begun.

Mr. EULER: Every one has been begun.

Mr. STEVENS: With what result?

Mr. EULER: They are still in the courts.

Mr. STEVENS: When were they started?

Mr. EULER: Some months ago.

Mr. STEVENS: That bears out the point I mentioned a moment ago; the minister says these prosecutions were started months ago, but they are still in the courts. It would be interesting to get the history of these cases, as to how they are proceeding, in what courts they are being tried, the counsel in each case, and what progress has been made; these facts should be laid before the committee. As I say, this illustrates the point brought out in the report, that these prosecutions are not being dealt with satisfactorily. This is a serious matter, after all; if our courts functioned properly and if the cases were handled properly I think we would see a vast difference in this very difficult problem facing the country to-day, namely the problem of smuggling.

Mr. EULER: I am not sure that I can recall all the points brought out by my hon. friend, but if I miss any of them I should be glad to have him remind me. With regard to the prosecutions, I would say to the committee at once that in every one of those cases reported upon by the parliamentary committee action has been taken. I think seventeen of the cases are in the courts.

Mr. STEVENS: I was not referring to the parliamentary committee; I just want to set my hon. friend right. I was quoting from the interim reports of the royal commission.

Mr. EULER: Then perhaps my statement can be taken to cover those reports as well. Every recommendation with regard to action against any concern—and there are over one hundred in the report of the royal commission —has been acted upon; there are no exceptions.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Does the minister mean that civil action has been taken?

Mr. EULER: My hon. friend referred to the Bronfman case, and I explained to the house as long as two or three months ago that criminal action had been taken with regard to that individual, and that the only reason why the action had not been proceeded with was the fact that one witness, who was absolutely necessary for the prosecution of the case, was ill. He is an officer of our own, and in his absence it was not possible to proceed.

A statement also has been made, I think by Mr. Sparks rather than by the Commercial Protective Association, that secret settlements have been made. I want to deny that statemen in the most emphatic terms possible. There has not been a single secret settlement of any kind; as a matter of fact there were only two settlements made, and that action was taken on the recommendation and advice of the solicitor acting for the department, of the auditors, Messrs. Clarkson, Gordon and Dilworth, of the departmental solicitor and of the commissioner himself. They were for small amounts.

Mr. STEVENS: What were the two cases settled?

Mr. EULER: The Royal Cloak Company and the Alco Dress Company. The reason settlements were made was because our solicitors assured us that there was no possibility of our succeeding if we maintained an action. There are some five or six other cases from which the lawyers have withdrawn because they believe there is no possibility of our succeeding. Perhaps that may be a complete answer to those points; there is not a single recommendation in the report of the royal commission which has not been dealt with in one way or another. I will admit that I am not satisfied with the way prosecutions have been delayed, but I do not think the blame rests upon the department; no blame rests upon the Department of National Revenue or upon any other department. I think some blame rests upon the courts themselves, and possibly there would be cause for dissatisfaction with the lawyers. Without intending to be offensive to my hon. friend, in a number of cases a certain lawyer was appointed by himself, and those cases have not yet been proceeded with. I have urged that solicitor time and time again to proceed with these cases, and I have a letter from him in which he takes all the blame for the delay. I admit, Mr. Chairman, that I am sometimes discouraged at the delay in prosecution.

Mr. STEVENS: The minister is not suggesting that I am to blame simply because a lawyer appointed three years ago to prosecute cases has not done so?

Mr. EULER: I am not laying any particular blame, I am merely pointing out the circumstances. The thing is pretty general and it is very difficult to get action. If I may say so in this parliament, which is the highest court in the land, some of the blame is to be placed on the courts themselves. I just received a notice this week of one case which was postponed thirteen times, the offender was finally found guilty, but sentence has not been pronounced and the case has been further adjourned three times.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Where is that case being prosecuted?

Mr. EULER: In the city of Montreal.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What is the name of the offender?

Mr. EULER: Giroux.

Mr. STEVENS: Who is acting for the government in that case?

Mr. EULER: I have not that information before me. The statement has been made that the government has not proceeded with prosecutions. We have had some three hundred prosecutions within the last year?

Mr. GUTHRIE: How many convictions?

Mr. EULER: Some two hundred of those were successful, I think, I thought I had the correct figures before me, but I cannot find them just at the moment. In some provinces —I need not enumerate them—it is very difficult to obtain convictions in certain cases, in fact it is almost impossible. Then again, we had a case in the city of Montreal where a certain official was found guilty of stealing something like $26,000, and the judge gave him one day in gaol.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What judge was that?

Mr. EULER: I do not recall. There was another case in western Canada, where I personally ordered prosecution of an officer of our own who had taken some $1,200. He had not even made restitution, and there was no doubt of his guilt, but the judge dismissed the case and rather censored the department for being so harsh in prosecuting a matter of that kind.

I am quite willing to take responsibility so far as it falls upon me. It may be that we can make some changes that will help this condition, and I think we will, but we are working along as well as we can. We have given our officers in the preventive service instructions that in cases of direct smuggling, where the man is caught and they can proceed summarily, they are to prosecute without any instructions from the head of the department.

Since my hon. friend has mentioned the Commercial Protective Association, I would like to make a reference to it. I think this can be described as the organization of a certain Mr. Sparks. I am not in the habit of making any offensive reflections upon any person, but I would say that the report or the statement that was given to the press by that association through Mr. Sparks, is either a betrayal of the most colossal ignorance, or sheer malice.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Both.

Mr. EULER: I rather think that it is both. Among other statements he referred to the report made by Messrs. Clarkson, Gordon and Dilworth. This firm was employed in the department for a very considerable length of time. Mr. Sparks reported that 135 recommendations had been made by that firm and that only 19 of them had been proceeded with. I am citing this matter, although it is a relatively unimportant one, because of the impression which may have been given to the house or to the country that we have taken no action. Mr. Sparks mentioned the 19 out of 135 as being five per cent, which anyone can see is mathematically incorrect in the first place. There were really only some seven definite recommendations in the report of Messrs. Clarkson, Gordon and Dilworth, and I will refer to them a little later. One hundred and thirty-five more or less unimportant recommendations are made, and just to give the committee some idea as to how relatively unimportant they are—I use the term "relatively" advisedly, because practically all the recommendations are of some value, but most of them have to do only with the internal administration and perhaps the bookkeeping of the various branches of the department—I will give some examples. One was that there should be a rearrangement of offices to give the chief clerk visual control over the staff. I suppose that would mean tearing down the interior walls of the customs buildings and putting in windows. Another one was that the work re customs duty stamps and franking notes should be transferred to the stamp branch and accounts branch respectively, and travelling or other appraisers should be consulted in unusual cases. Nothing very definite about that. Just to show that I am not selecting special cases, I will take the accounts branch and give the entire list of the recommendations covering that department, and the members of the committee can judge for themselves whether they are of supreme importance in the carrying on of the work of the department and the reorganization work of the department.

Mr. STEVENS: What page is that?

Mr. EULER: I am reading from a typewritten copy of the report. For instance, it says:

> Certain records should be transferred from the expenditures to salaries section.

That perhaps is of some value but it is not of very great importance. Then they mention taking over certain accounting work from the preventive service, and certain changes which should be made in that regard. Then there is a question of reverting to monthly payment of salaries instead of paying every two weeks. I leave it to the committee whether that is of supreme importance. Then there is the question of the payment of salaries through a chartered bank and the payment of refunds and drawbacks by departmental cheque direct to the claimant instead of through the collector—a mere mater of routine. Then:

> Receipts for salary payments not necessary. Customs and excise seizure sections to be consolidated.

Those are all the recommendations made in regard to one branch.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend surely does not suggest that that is correct. He has read a very brief summarized statement at the end of the recommendations.

Mr. EULER: I said for one branch.

Mr. STEVENS: The recommendation covers six pages for one branch.

Mr. EULER: I was giving a summary, I did not pretend to read the whole report. I gave the gist of every one.

Mr. STEVENS: I will have a word or two to say about that. That is not a fair statement and does not do the minister credit.

Mr. EULER: I am open to correction if my hon. friend can show me to be wrong, but I was honestly giving the gist of every recommendation in regard to one particular branch, namely the accounts branch. It may be another matter as to whether the recommendations are more important than I think they are, but I wanted to deal with the lack of knowledge or veracity, whichever you want to call it, on the part of the man who made that statement. In the first place, the report of Messrs. Clarkson, Gordon and Dilworth was not submitted until February of this year. The house was then in session and, as the members know, the minister of any department is very busy during the session, as well as the officers of the department. As soon as we had this report I had placed in the hands of the chief of every branch a copy of that portion of the report which referred particularly to his own work. I asked them to make such changes as they saw fit after examining the recommendations, and later on these were all to be reviewed, and if they have not made the changes that we think should be made, they will be made later on. Mr. Sparks assumes that, because at the time the report itself was submitted only nineteen of these had been made, now, three months later, only the nineteen have been made, having no knowledge whatever of the work that has been done in the intervening three months.

What has been done? I have gathered these from the officials of the department. In the customs department seventy-two of the recommendations that have been made have actually been carried out. In the excise department fourteen have been carried out; only one is disagreed with and three are still under consideration. In the customs department we do not agree with eighteen of the recommendations; four require legislation; fifteen are under consideration; five are matters of policy; one is a matter for the Civil Service Commission and two would be matters of reconstruction of the Connaught building. The point I want to make is that, instead of nineteen of the changes recommended, we actually made eighty-six out of one hundred and thirty-five. I am correct in what I say—and I am correct—I say that the report made by the Commercial Protective Association, or rather by Mr. Sparks, is just about as unfair in the other criticisms as it is inaccurate in this particular matter.

A good many other matters are referred to. Perhaps I have not dealt with all the questions raised by my hon. friend. It is not my desire to delay the committee but if there are any other questions they desire to ask I should be glad to answer them so far as I am able.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): I am sure every member of the committee must be well aware of the fact that when the Minister of National Revenue took upon himself the office that he now holds, he addressed himself to the work of dealing in a very whole hearted and enthusiastic way with the abuses that then existed. I do not think any member of the house would wish for one moment to deny to him that credit which is rightly his for the work that he has done or the reforms in which he has been successful. It seems to me, however, that on the question brought up by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), we are dealing with something more than that. The matter before the committee now for inquiry and decision is the extent to which existing abuses have actually been remedied and the position in which we find ourselves at the present time in regard to them. The minister has said that out of a certain number—I do not recall with certainty the exact number—there were some seventeen cases that had been dealt with which had been specially reported by the Royal Commission on Customs and Excise.

Mr. EULER: The parliamentary committee of inquiry.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Yes. Let me deal with that for a moment. I do not know exactly just what those seventeen may be, but surely it must be of importance to the committee that so long ago as June 18, 1926, the report of that committee was made and that at page 4696 of Hansard of that year we find that there were in one paragraph alone, beginning at the bottom of the page, the names of some twenty-six firms which were reported for action by either the Department of Customs and Excise as it was then, or the Department of Justice. I would be interested in knowing which out of those twenty-six the minister had reference to to-night. I find that that list is headed by the John Gaunt Company and that the second on the list is the Dominion Distillery Products and Associated Enterprises. There are then no fewer than twenty-four companies which stood before that committee convicted of fraud in connection with their operations at Rock Island. It would be interesting to the committee to know at this time what claims have been prosecuted against those twenty-four firms, to say nothing of the two first mentioned, in connection with those frauds which, it will be remembered, were represented to the house in 1926 as causing to the Dominion of Canada an annual loss of more than $10,000,000. I should like to know which of these firms thus recommended for summary dealing, have been sued, what proceedings have been taken and what are the results of those proceedings. The minister will agree with me that in making this request I do not take him by surprise because I asked for this information across the floor of the house upwards of a month ago. I would like to ask the minister to inform the committee whether or not the recommendations of the special committee reporting on the Department of Customs and Excise on the same page in regard to J. A. E. Bissaillon, the former preventive officer, have ever been acted upon in any way. In connection with the report of the committee of the same date, namely, June 18, 1926, I find this:

> The committee recommends that the evidence of J. A. E. Bisaillon given before this committee with reference to his bank account for the amount of $69,000 be transmitted to the Attorney General for Quebec, for the purpose of comparison with the evidence given by him on the same point at preliminary inquiry at Quebec, P.Q., in the case of Rex vs. Symons et al, and for such action by the said Attorney General as the evidence may warrant; and further that the evidence in connection with the Morris Delage motor car case be transmitted to the said Attorney General for such further action as the said evidence may warrant.

Those were direct charges of falsification, theft and forgery. I have followed as carefully as I can the proceedings in the house down to this hour and so far as I can discover we are without a reply to any inquiry we have addressed to the government as to what has been done in connection with those matters. It may be said by the minister that the recommendations to which I have just referred were made to the Attorney General of Quebec, but surely the matter would not rest there. Surely a committee of this house, having reported, through the medium of the house itself, to the Attorney General for Quebec that proceedings on those very grave and serious charges should be taken, was at least entitled to feel that if that attorney general took action, it should be advised of that action and if the attorney general refused to take action, it should be advised of his refusal.

That leads to another point which the minister mentioned in reply to the hon. member for Vancouver Centre a moment ago. The minister, having in mind doubtless the difficulty that is sometimes experienced in having the law properly enforced, said that although the process of the courts had been invoked in a number of instances, the courts apparently did not co-operate with the department in carrying out their own duties as they should have done on what was reported. The minister instanced a very extreme case in which a man who had been convicted was sentenced to but one day in gaol. I do not know whether the minister wishes us to conclude from that that the Justice department is so helpless that when a court goes on such lines as these that are here under criticism, it throws up its hands and surrenders, but I cannot imagine what other construction can be placed upon what the minister has said. Let me suggest to him that if the Justice department of the Dominion of Canada is as helpless as all that, it may well take pattern by the Justice department of Ontario presided over by the Hon. W. H. Price. In that department during the last two or three years there have been ten or a dozen cases where it was felt that the courts were lax, were overly lenient in the way they dealt with the cases, whereupon the Attorney General demanded that these cases should be remitted to the courts, that other charges might be laid and the cases properly considered. It may be suggested that the Department of Justice of this dominion is not as powerful as the department of the Attorney General of Ontario. I would with reluctance accept that rather humiliating confession, but even if it were so I would like at least to have it shown to this house that an attempt was made by the Department of Justice of this dominion to see that the law really was enforced, even if the previous attempts had failed. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that before consideration of this item has been concluded, we be informed authoritatively from the Department of Justice why it is that that which the minister himself has pointed out as being a ridiculous farce in the administration of justice was not at least sought to be corrected.

The suggestion is further made that:

> The department is rendered helpless in the efforts that it makes by reason of the fact that there are repeated postponements of cases.

When the question of appointing a committee of this house to investigate the Department of Customs and Excise was first broached in 1926, one of the things that was brought before the house was the fact that those who had charge of prosecutions had entrusted them to counsel who did not press them to a conclusion, and that the department had sat down under the laxity of these counsel and had not attempted to make them do their duty. Apparently, notwithstanding the revelations before the special committee investigating that department, notwithstanding the revelations before the royal commission that followed that special committee, we are to-day confronted with the same condition of laxity, the same unwillingness to do their duty on the part of counsel whom the government appoints. Surely it does not lie in the mouth of a minister of the crown charged with the duty of administering this department to say: We retain counsel to prosecute violators of the law, and we are helpless because they are not successful in doing so. It seems to me elementary that those who find that their instructions are not carried out should at least have the enterprise and the courage to retain counsel who will do what they are required to do, and bring before the courts the matters with which they are entrusted. So I say that the explanation which the minister has been good enough to give, while it does indeed testify to the energy he has shown and to the good he has accomplished, shows that we have but begun to remedy the abuses that existed in that department, and that we are very far from being able to congratulate ourselves upon having made any real progress down to this date.

Mr. EULER: I think the hon. member for West Hamilton is hardly fair when he intimates, as I understood him to do, that we had refused to answer any inquiries made from the other side of the house.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): I did not say that. I said that I had asked my hon. friend if he had not had plenty of time to make those answers. He should be in a position to give the list asked for.

Mr. EULER: It was a misunderstanding on my part. My hon. friend has asked with regard to the status of the cases recommended for action by the parliamentary committee of inquiry. I have a record of them all before me. It is a lengthy list, but if the committee desires I am quite prepared to read it. I have already summed it up in this way, that seventeen of these cases were in the courts; in two other cases we have settled on the advice of our solicitor, the departmental solicitor, also Clarkson, Gordon and Dilworth, and the commissioner of customs himself. There were five or six cases in which it was absolutely impossible to proceed. Perhaps I might read those.

The O. B. Earle Company case was placed in the hands of counsel, who reports inability to effct service upon any representative of the company, which has disappeared leaving no trace and no visible assets.

Mr. STEVENS: Who was the solicitor in that case?

Mr. EULER: Mr. Spence, of Toronto. The Royal Cloak Company, of Toronto; that case was settled. The Miracle Dress Company; this case was placed in the hands of Arthur Geoffrion, K.C., who finally reported that he could see no prospect of successful action. The available evidence is now in the hands of Paul Ranger, Esq., advocate, who reported that the firm wound up its business in 1925. We were not quite content with Mr. Geoffrion not going on with the case, and we gave it to another solicitor. The case of Hollinger and Packer is in the same position as that of the Miracle Dress Company. The Payanner group of companies is in liquidation, and it is not deemed advisable to proceed pending the result of the liquidation proceedings. The case of Woollens Limited was placed in the hands of Mr. Geoffrion, who reported that he could do nothing in the matter. That case was then placed in the hands of Mr. Ranger, who has issued a writ for the recovery of $25,000. Perhaps that will dispose of the case to the satisfaction of the committee.

Mr. STEVENS: Will the minister give the cases that have been proceeded with, and the state they are in?

Mr. EULER: I am willing to do that. I can go into it at considerable length.

Mr. GARDINER: Can the minister give us the reasons why Mr. Geoffrion did not proceed with the cases?

Mr. EULER: The company was defunct. He thought there was absolutely no chance of successful action.

Mr. SPENCER: And yet somebody else was engaged to take his place?

Mr. EULER: The first on the list is the John Gaunt Company. It is in the hands of R. L. Calder, K.C., who, as I mentioned before, was appointed by my hon. friend, I think.

Mr. STEVENS: Just on that very point, Mr. Calder certainly was appointed by me, but surely the minister does not take refuge behind the fact that Mr. Calder was appointed by me nearly two years ago. If the case has not been proceeded with, and if it is Mr. Calder's fault, then the minister has it in his own hands to remedy the matter.

Mr. EULER: I think nearly all the cases were placed in the hands of Mr. Calder by my hon. friend himself, and I have no fault to find with that at all.

Mr. STEVENS: By the way, Mr. Calder was not chosen by me, but he was chosen by the parliamentary committee of which my hon. friend from St. Henri was chairman.

Mr. EULER: He prosecuted the cases.

Mr. STEVENS: No, Mr. Calder was engaged by the parliamentary committee, not by me; he was not even named by me. I had nothing to do with it except to sit in the minority in that committee.

Mr. CANNON: After the committee had sat you appointed him.

Mr. STEVENS: He was chosen by the parliamentary committee of which I was a minority member, and carried on that investigation. He was not—I want to make this clear—a choice of my own. When the question of prosecutions came up, I simply said, as minister of the department for the time, "Let Mr. Calder carry this on, because then there can be no possibility of suggesting that I am indulging in any political expediency in connection with this matter."

Mr. CANNON: No one would ever suspect that.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Not when Mr. Calder was a Liberal.

Mr. EULER: I have no fault to find with that. According to my information, my hon. friend I think designated Mr. Calder to prosecute all the cases.

Mr. STEVENS: Not all, I think.

Mr. EULER: Practically all the cases, and I think he had begun only three of them. He was acting with the royal commission as their solicitor, and he went to British Columbia in connection with his duties with the commission, and I felt that it was utterly impossible to get any action if he was kept in charge of all those cases, so I withdrew all the cases from him except three, which are still in his hands, and none of which I think has been finally settled.

But to proceed:

The John Gaunt Company. The firm was wound up. John Gaunt is personally insolvent and beyond the jurisdiction. The case is in the hands of Mr. Calder.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Dominion Distillery Products. In the hands of Mr. Calder. Information laid in the exchequer court for the recovery of $830,855.52. Defence filed and litigation proceeding under direction of the Minister of Justice.

B. B. Glove Company. In the hands of Emile Marcotte, K.C. Writ issued in the Superior court of Quebec for $41,612, July, 1927, representing customs duties and penalties under Customs Act. Action defended and litigation proceeding. Case will go to trial at an early date.

James A. Gilmour. In the hands of Emile Marcotte, K.C., as above. Writ issued claiming $29,947.41. Defended. Litigation proceeding.

Globe Suspender Company and Eastern Apparel Company. In the hands of Emile Marcotte, K.C. Writ issued for $59,836.29. Mr. Marcotte reports that he has obtained judgment by default. Mr. Marcotte reports Marois' whereabouts unknown and unable to discover any assets belonging to him within the jurisdiction of Canadian courts.

Mr. STEVENS: When was that last report made?

Mr. EULER: Perhaps I shall be able to find it later.

Mr. STEVENS: It would be well to have it where you make the statement.

Mr. EULER: I have so many papers that I cannot keep them all under my hand.

The Perfecto Garment Company. In hands of Emile Marcotte, K.C. Writ issued for $8,511.21. Case defended. Litigation proceeding. May be advisable to obtain commission evidence in the United States.

Peerless Overall Company. In the hands of Emile Marcotte, K.C. Writ issued for $55,321.20. Case defended. Litigation proceeding. May be advisable to obtain commission evidence in the United States.

R. G. Manufacturing Company. In the hands of Emile Marcotte, K.C. Writ issued for $96,101.01. Defended. Litigation proceeding. May be advisable to obtain commission evidence in the United States.

The same with regard to the Reliable Garment Company. Writ issued for $33,357.40.

The same with regard to the Stanstead Manufacturing Company. Writ issued for $15,366.31. May be advisable to obtain commission evidence in the United States.

W. M. Pike and Standard Manufacturing Company. In the hands of Emile Marcotte, K.C. Writ issued for $67,803.01. Case defended. Litigation proceeding. May be advisable to obtain commission evidence in the United States.

Telford Bros. Garment Company. In the hands of Emile Marcotte, K.C. Writ issued for $30,099.08. Case defended. Litigation proceeding. May be advisable to obtain commission evidence in the United States.

Telford and Chapman. In exactly the same position. Writ issued for $23,691.15.

Jenkins Overall Company Limited. This is the third case of those remaining with Mr. Calder. Writ issued and returnable. Trial probably in June.

Mr. GEARY: When was the writ issued? Mr. Marcotte just says that it may be necessary to get commission evidence in the United States. He puts it in that vague way.

Mr. EULER: I would ask my hon. friend to wait a moment or two; I am almost through.

Snag Proof Company Ltd. In the hands of Emile Marcotte, K.C. Writ issued for $9,517.01. Case defended. Litigation proceeding.

Rock Island Overall Company. In the hands of Emile Marcotte, K.C. Writ issued for $37,206.76. Defended. Litigation proceeding. Probably necessary to obtain commission evidence in the United States.

Also Dress Company. Case settled.

The O. B. Earle Company. Case placed in the hands of J. H. Spence, K.C., who reports inability to effect service on any representative of the company, which has disappeared, leaving no address and no visible assets. Matter dropped.

Royal Cloak Company. Claim was set up by Clarkson, Gordon and Dilworth, for customs duties and penalties for $8,758.93. Settled on their advice and that of solicitor for crown, the departmental solicitor and commissioner of customs.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Settled for how much?

Mr. EULER: For $4,000 odd, and about $3,000 sales tax. The others I have already dealt with.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Mr. Chairman, in view of certain statements that have been made, I may be allowed to say to the committee what is the practice in regard to these cases. As the committee is aware, the legal work of all the departments of the government extends throughout the Dominion. It has always been the practice to have legal agents in all parts of Canada, because almost every day some department asks for the name of a legal representative in some district to institute proceedings. This is done for the Department of National Revenue as well as for the other departments. It is indeed under those circumstances necessary that there should be in the department a list of legal men who could be employed in any part of Canada for this sort of work. When I became the head of the Department of Justice I found there a list of legal men practising in all parts of the Dominion to whom legal work of the various departments could be entrusted. Obviously that list had been prepared by my predecessor in office, and I had no reason to doubt the qualifications of those legal men; indeed I knew many of them personally. The names of the men who were suggested or recommended or given to the various departments were always taken from that list, and as far as possible those who were more especially qualified for the kind of work which had to be done were always selected.

Now, that list existed in the deparment until 1926, when we went out of office for some time. When two or three months afterwards I came back again as the head of the department I found that that list had disappeared altogether and had been replaced by another list which I now have in my hand. There was a list for every one of the provinces, and not one of the names that were there three months previously appeared in this new list. It may be interesting to my hon. friend from Vancouver—

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): May I ask the hon. minister a question.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Had not those names been changed before? They had been in my constituency.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Probably; but not during my time, because I became head of the department in 1923, and accepted the list as I found it. But, as I said, on my return to the department three months later I found a new list altogether. Starting from the extreme west of the Dominion I have before me a list of legal men to be employed in the province of British Columbia, bequeathed to me by my immediate predecessor in office. There is in the margin preceding the name of the legal gentleman the name of the person who recommended that he be employed as a lawyer for the department. There is the name of my friend from Vancouver Centre, Mr. H. H. Stevens; there is the name of Doctor Tolmie; there is the name of Doctor J. W. Rutledge. I think those are the only ones for British Columbia. I have a list also for Alberta, and the legal gentlemen were recommended during that short time by Hon. R. B. Bennett, Mr. J. B. Stewart, Hon. R. B. Bennett, Hon. R. B. Bennett, Hon. R. B Bennett, Hon. R. B. Bennett. I have the list for Prince Edward Island, but as the gentlemen who recommended the names are perhaps not so prominent as those I have mentioned, perhaps it is not necessary that I should name them.

An hon. MEMBER: Who are they?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I see the name of the Hon. J. A. Macdonald anyhow. Now the Manitoba list was recommended by Mr. Ahern; he was private secretary to the Minister of Justice at the time. And I see

Colonel Anderson and the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen. Then H. A. Mullins, H. A. Mullins again, Colonel Anderson, W. W. Kennedy, Right Hon. Arthur Meighen. Then New Brunswick: the New Brunswick list was prepared and recommended by Mr. Culligan. I see the name R. B. Hanson, P. T. Ahern, O. B. Price, Charles Fish, P. T. Ahern, Charles Fish, R. W. Grimmer, the Hon. G. B. Jones, the Hon. J. K. Flemming—

Mr. McINTOSH: What about Saskatchewan?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am coming to Saskatchewan. I find this peculiar condition in Saskatchewan, that although a new list was prepared for the entire province it was recommended wholly and exclusively by the Hon. Doctor Tolmie. For Nova Scotia I find a full list of new recommendations. I find these names: R. K. Smith, H. B. Short, M.P., the Hon. J. C. Douglas, P. T. Ahern, F. MacDonald, M.P., Doctor J. A. Macdonald, the Hon. W. A. Black, H. B. Short, I. D. Macdougall, A. de W. Foster, P. T. Ahern, Thomas Cantley,—I am pleased to see the hon. member's name—J. A. Macdonald, L. W. Johnstone, the Hon. W. A. Black, A. de Witt Foster—

Mr. QUINN: Are thees recommendations for canonization?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Canonization? I don't know. Now I come to Ontario—

Mr. KAISER: Read all; don't miss any in Ontario.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The list is a voluminous one.

Mr. QUINN: Take your time.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The recommendations come from R. Preston, W. E. Tummon, Doctor P. McGibbon, R. E. Ryerson, G. H. Pettit, M. E. Maybee, H. A. Stewart, M. C. Senn, A. D. Chaplin, the Hon. R. J. Manion, R. K. Anderson, the Hon. Mr. Chaplin, the Hon. Mr. Guthrie, C. W. Bell,—

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): If the minister is reading that as a name, it is false, for I never gave one.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am sorry, but the name of my hon. friend was evidently unlawfully and miserably put there by some of his friends.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): I give my assurance it is false; I recommended no one.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am sorry for my hon. friend but I am not responsible for the name being there.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Nor am I; it is false.

Mr. LAPOINTE: In justice to my hon. friend I will tell him whose name is there as being recommended by him; it is S. C. Arrell.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): I repeat, I know no person by that name and I recommended no one. If it is in the record, the record is falsified.

Mr. SHORT: I want to make the same statement; I never recommended a single person. What does the minister expect to make out of it? Kindly read the names I recommended.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I expect—

Mr. QUINN: The whole thing is a fairy story.

An hon. MEMBER: A bed-time story.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This is what I find in the department.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): It only shows you how inaccurate the records are.

Mr. LAPOINTE: They were not kept by me.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Nor by me.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No; by someone in the department while hon. gentlemen were in power.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Is the minister accepting my statement that I made no recommendation?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Absolutely. Not only do I accept my hon. friend's statement, but I sympathize with him.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): My hon. friend can keep all the sympathy; he needs it, after having read a false record to the house.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is rather hard on my hon. friend's minister at the time—

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): I can't help that.

Mr. LAPOINTE: —who was in charge of the department when these recommendations were made. Now, as the hour has almost expired—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. LAPOINTE: All right.

An hon. MEMBER: Finish it.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): You can't get yourself out of it that easy.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am quite willing to read it all, but it will—

Mr. KAISER: Read all of it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The Hon. Hugh Guthrie—

Mr. MacDONALD (South Cape Breton): As the time is short now it would be far more interesting if the minister would read the present list.

Mr. LAPOINTE: A. E. Ross—

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Right, right, right. I will tell you the reason.

Mr. LAPOINTE: P. T. Ahern; R. K. Anderson; Colonel Lennox; G. H. Pettit; John Ferguson, defeated candidate; M. E. Maybee; P. T. Thompson; Doctor T. E. Kaiser—

Mr. KAISER: What name did I recommend, please?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Mr. D. J. A. Swanson, Oshawa.

Mr. KAISER: You lost a good man when you turned him down.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have no doubt he is an excellent man. I do not say that any one of these gentlemen who were recommended was not perfectly qualified to conduct proceedings for the department.

Mr. THOMPSON: The Minister of Justice has mentioned my name, so I might say that some man had not paid his income tax and the department wanted to know of a lawyer to handle the case.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have no doubt about that.

Mr. KAISER: I do not think it is fair to these men to ridicule their names in this way. I want to say that Mr. Swanson was recommended by me and his name should be received by this government with respect, because he is one of the best criminal lawyers in our section of the country. I do not think it right that the Liberal party, or any other party, should take so much amusement out of the mention of his name.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): I think the minister should go on.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am in the judgment of the committee. I do not blame anyone; I am merely stating the practice. I said there was a list in the department which was used by me prior to 1926; I had found that list when I came there and I had used it, but when I came back two or three months later the list was altogether changed. I started to say that it included new men all over the country, and if I am reading all these names it is just because my hon. friends opposite are asking me to do so. I do not attach any blame to them; I quite agree that any one of the gentlemen recommended by my hon. friends was quite qualified to act as the legal agent of the department.

Mr. MANION: Might I ask a question? I suppose the list the minister is using at present—because of course he is not using this one—is made up in exactly the same way, on the recommendations of his friends?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Let me tell my hon. friend that when I found that new list, largely composed of men I did not know, I rather reinstated the old list, and surely my hon. friends will not criticize me for using that list which I left there when we took that little holiday of two or three months.

Mr. MANION: I do not criticize my hon. friend at all; I just wanted to show the house that my hon. friend is doing exactly what his party are laughing at us for having done.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am using the list which I had prior to July, 1926; that is quite true, and let me say right here that I do not think there are not enough Conservative lawyers all over the country to act as legal agents of the government in a proper way and to carry on the cases of the department in a dignified and reliable way, but there are Liberal lawyers all over Canada who are equally qualified. The idea that because a man is selected by one party he is not qualified, does not appeal to me. As I say, I do not criticize the recommendations which were made by my hon friends or even the list which was prepared; I am quite sure that most of these men were qualified to do the work.

Mr. SHORT: Then why take so much amusement from it?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The amusement is caused by the attitude of my hon. friends opposite.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Does not the minister understand that the criticism which has come from this side of the house has nothing to do with the recommendation of people to do that work, but arises rather out of the fact that when they were appointed they did not do their duty, and the department took no action?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I beg my hon. friend's pardon; it was stated in the famous report by Mr. Sparks that under the present administration the Department of Justice is employing lawyers only because they are Liberals.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): We are not saying that.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I think my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre said that it never had been worse than under the present minister. I am simply showing what the practice always has been; as soon as my hon. friends opposite took charge of the government they did the same thing, and I am amazed that they had time to prepare a list covering all Canada in the short period during which they held office.

Mr. CANTLEY: Will the minister do me a kindness? Will he be good enough to read the names of the gentlemen I recommended, because I would like them to know I was looking after their interest.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I will do that with great pleasure.

Mr. GEARY: Are there as many new lawyers as new postmasters?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No, fortunately. Now I will conclude the names of the Ontario list, unless the committee think I have read enough.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. QUINN: Answer the question.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have been answering questions all the time.

Mr. GOTT: I want to ask the minister a question. Will he consider—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, May 30, 1928

The house met at three o'clock.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Tenth report of the select standing committee on banking and commerce.—Mr. Jacobs (for Mr. Hay).

Eighth report of the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization.—Mr. Kay.

CONCRETE WALKS ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): I desire to lay on the table information asked for by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) in regard to the sidewalks on parliament hill.

NEW EDINBURGH MILLS PROPERTY

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): I desire to lay on the table the additional information regarding the Sussex street property which was asked for by my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens).

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest) moved, seconded by Mr. Thompson:

That on Friday, June 1, Bill No. 63, to amend the Railway Act (Investigation of subsidiary of telephone or telegraph companies) now under public bills and orders, be given precedence over all (a) private bills; (b) public bills and orders; (1) during the hour devoted to private bills and (2) over all other business until disposed of on that evening.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I am sorry that the Prime Minister is not in his seat at the present time, but I have to take the stand which he has already taken with regard to similar matters. I think it would be unfair to other measures which have precedence over this to accept the motion of my hon. friend. If the bill comes up in due course at its proper stage, it will certainly be considered, but we cannot agree to give it precedence over other measures.

Mr. CHURCH: It is not being unfair to other members to give precedence to this bill which has been on the order paper since February. I have a bill which has been standing on the order paper since early in February. This is not a free parliament unless we can bring these questions before it.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion is out of order. The other day I ruled that according to May and Bourinot any motion concerning the order of business of the house should be made by the Prime Minister or the leader of the house.

Mr. CHURCH: I rise to a point of order. I gave due notice of the motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: It matters not whether the hon. gentleman gave notice or not. The question is: Is the motion in order? I contend, and May supports my contention, that any motion concerning the order of business of the house must be moved by the leader of the house. I have so decided and I now so rule.

INDUSTRIAL AND INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

MOTION TO REFER BACK REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Mr. C. R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with your ruling of yesterday which took place when I was unavoidably absent from the house, and for the purpose of giving the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) another portion of a week intellectually to grasp the numerical section of the report presented to the house two weeks ago—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. McINTOSH: If you have any more to say, go on. I have the floor at the present time.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I would ask the hon. gentleman to make the motion properly.

Mr. McINTOSH: I am just about to make it. I made the preliminary part of it and this is the latter part. I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Neill:

That the third report of the select standing committee on industrial and international relations, presented to the house on May 16th instant, be referred back to the said committee with instructions that they have power to amend the same by substituting the following for paragraph 8 thereof:

Your committee further recommend that 750 copies in English and 250 copies in French of this report, and the evidence upon which it is based, be printed in blue book form, and that standing order No. 64 be suspended in relation thereto.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (South Wellington): Just on a point of order, I understand that this committee has made its final report and has presented it to the house. The committee has ceased to exist for the present session if it has made a final report. In Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, at paragraph 664, I read:

If a committee at the conclusion of their inquiry, make a final report to the house, the sittings of the committee are assumed to have been closed, and if further proceedings were desired, it would be necessary to revive the committee.

There has been no motion to revive the committee, and there is no committee, practically, to which to refer the matter.

Mr. SPEAKER: Does anyone else desire to speak to the point of order?

Mr. SHORT: What about the intellect now?

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that this is a standing committee, and therefore it does not need to be revived. Also the committee is not trying to do anything at the present time; it is the house that is asked to recommend that the report be sent back to the committee.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Fort William): The rule distinctly says that the committee having made its final report, if further proceedings are desired, it is necessary to revive the committee. In other words, the committee is dead, and I do not know how we can possibly send something back to a committee that does not exist.

Mr. McINTOSH: I submit that the point of the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) is not well taken. The committee that has made its report is a standing committee of the house, and I would like to ask my hon. friend from Fort William how it is that a standing committee should need to be revived. That is great logic.

Mr. MANION: As the hon. gentleman asks me a question, I would say that I prefer to take Beauchesne's ruling rather than that of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SPEAKER: I will take the point of order into consideration and give my ruling later.

VIOLATIONS OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE ACT

Mr. QUINN:

1. Of the twenty-seven firms charged with violations of the Customs and Excise Act recommended for prosecution by the parliamentary committee of 1926, how many have since been prosecuted?

2. In each case who was the prosecuting attorney representing the interests of the department?

3. How many of the cases have actually come to trial?

4. How many of the cases have been settled by mutual agreement out of court, and if any, what are the names of the firms or persons with whom settlement was so made?

5. What are the total legal fees paid by the department in each case?

Mr. EULER: See statement attached.

1. The parliamentary committee of 1926 did not recommend for prosecution 27 firms charged with violations of the Customs and Excise Acts.

Said committee recommended that certain firms and companies, 25 in number, be proceeded against in the proper forum to recover the sums, if any, then owing by them to the crown.

The following are the names of the said firms and companies: John Gaunt Company; Dominion Distillery Products and Associated Enterprises; B. B. Glove Co.; Jas. A. Gilmore Co.; Globe Suspender Co.; Perfecto Garment Co.; Peerless Overall Co.; R. & G. Manufacturing Co.; Reliable Garment Co.; Stanstead Manufacturing Co.; W. M. Pike & Sons, Standard Manufacturing Co., William Flint Pike; Telford Bros. Garment Co.; Telford & Chapman; Jenkins Overall Co. Ltd.; Snag Proof Ltd.; Rock Island Overall Co.; Alco Dress Co.; O. B. Earle Co.; Royal Cloak Co.; Miracle Dress Co.; Hollinger and Packer; Klover Dress Co.; Poyaner Group of Companies; Woollens Limited. 17 of these cases are in the courts. Two of them have been settled, and for status of balance see explanation.

2. The following is a list of the cases with the name of the solicitor representing the department in each:

Dominion Distillery Products and Dominion Distillers Ltd., Jenkins Overall Co. Ltd. Departmental agent, R. L. Calder, K.C.

B. B. Glove Co., W. A. Gilmore et al (carrying on business as Jas. A. Gilmore Co.), C. J. Marois (carrying on business under firm names Globe Suspender and Eastern Apparel Co.), H. S. Pocock (Perfecto Mfg Co.), Alfred J. Bissonnette (Peerless Overall Co.), J. H. Gauthier & H. G. Duncalfe (R. & G. Manufacturing Co.), Reliable Garments Ltd., Stanstead Manufacturing Co., W. M. Pike & Sons and Standard Manufacturing Co., (William Flint Pike), S. B. Telford (Telford Bros. Garment Co.), Telford & Chapman Ltd., Snag Proof Co. Ltd., Mrs. H. Fregeau (Rock Island Overall Co.). Departmental agent, Emile Marcotte, K.C.

Woollens Ltd. Departmental agent, Paul Ranger. Since the issue of the writ this company has made an assignment under the Bankruptcy Act. Claim has been filed with the trustee.

3. Judgment has been obtained by default against C. J. Marois for $59,836.29 with interest from 10th October, 1927, but it has not been possible to realize upon the same, the judgment debtor having left the jurisdiction and no assets being found.

4. Two cases have been settled by mutual agreement out of court on the advice of Messrs. Clarkson, Gordon and Dilworth, the solicitor for the crown, the departmental solicitor and the commissioner. The names of the firms with whom settlement was so made are as follows:

Alco Dress Co. and Royal Cloak Co. Departmental agent, James H. Spence, K.C.

The status of the remaining cases is as follows:

O. B. Earle Co. Agent reported no person could be found to serve with process. Departmental agent, James H. Spence, K.C.

Miracle Dress Co. First placed in hands Arthur Geoffrion, K.C. Agent reports this firm wound up its business in 1925. Hollinger & Packer. Agent reports this firm defunct. Klover Dress Co. This firm liquidated in 1926 and all its assets disposed of. Poyaner Group of Companies. No claim established against these companies by Clarkson, Gordon and Dilworth with the exception of a possible claim of approximately $1,000 against Dominion Dress Co. Ltd., a subsidiary of Poyaner Ltd. The Limited Company is in liquidation and the agent reports that he is awaiting result of liquidation proceedings before instituting action. Departmental agent, Paul Ranger.

John Gaunt Company. Firm wound up and John Gaunt personally insolvent and beyond the jurisdiction. Departmental agent, R. L. Calder, K.C.

N.B.—The reports upon Miracle Dress Co., Hollinger and Packer, Klover Dress Co., Poyaner Group of Companies and Woollens Limited were originally placed in the hands of Arthur Geoffrion, K.C., of Montreal, who finally reported that he could see no prospect of establishing any claims against any of the firms concerned. The cases were then placed in the hands of Mr. Paul Ranger.

5. Nil.

MAJOR A. L. NORMANDIN

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac):

1. Is Major A. L. Normandin employed in the Printing Bureau?
2. If so, how long has he been so employed and what is his present salary?

MR. F. G. BRONSKILL

Mr. BELL (Hamilton):

1. What are the duties of Mr. F. G. Bronskill, accountant, Department of Public Printing and Stationery, as provided by chap. 162 of the revised statutes, 1927, Public Printing and Stationery Act?

2. On whose authority does Mr. Bird of the civil service commission deal with Mr. F. G. Bronskill in arranging for all promotions, employment and transfers in connection with the clerical staff of the printing bureau?

3. Has the king's printer made recommendation to the civil service commission to have the position of accountant changed to that of financial controller?

4. If so, has this proposed change in title received the approval of the Secretary of State?

[Mr. Rinfret.]

Mr. RINFRET:

1. The duties of the accountant of the Department of Public Printing and Stationery as provided by chapter 162, section 25, R.S.C. 1927, are as follows: The accountant shall, under direction of the minister and the king's printer, audit all accounts for any of the services under the control of the department, keep the accounts of the department, receive and deposit all cash paid in, and render statements of accounts to the clerks of the two houses of parliament, and the deputy heads of the several departments, as and when the same are required by this act or by regulations made by, or instructions received from the minister.

2. All departmental dealings with the civil service commission are under the control of Mr. F. A. Acland, King's Printer, with whom Mr. Bird deals direct.

3. In January, 1927, the king's printer requested the civil service commission to review the duties and compensation of all officers from the director and superintendent of printing down to foreman, with suggested changes of title in some cases, and the title of financial controller was suggested in substitution for that of accountant.

4. The usual procedure was followed—the minister being made aware of the action taken.

PUBLIC PRINTING AND STATIONERY—EMPLOYEES

Mr. BELL (Hamilton):

1. On page 99, civil government estimates, 1928-29—Department of Public Printing and Stationery—the number of officials and clerks is given as 32 and total salaries as $80,190 annually. As there are over 250 officials and clerks employed, permanently, with annual salaries aggregating $450,000, what reason exists for not placing these salaries and positions in the estimates so that they may be voted by parliament?

2. On whose authority does the stationery branch add a tax of 15 per cent and 20 per cent to the actual cost of all stationery supplied to other departments of government?

3. What amounts were the Post Office, National Defence, National Revenue and Public Works departments called upon to pay for the year ended December 31, 1927, as a result of this method of managing the stationery branch?

4. Does the Secretary of State propose to have this practice discontinued?

5. If not, why not?

6. Are moneys which are paid to the king's printer's advance account being used to increase or affect the salaries of new permanent clerks, or paid to them on any basis whatever?

Mr. RINFRET:

1. Under the accounting system of the department as confirmed at the reorganization effected under P.C. 562, March, 1918, the salaries of officers and clerks in question are in effect charged back to other departments in the accounts rendered, and it has not been deemed proper to include such salaries in the civil government appropriation; the question whether or not these salaries should be placed in the estimates and voted in civil government or other appropriation has been for some time under consideration but no conclusion has been reached.

2. The regulations framed for the government of the department by the authority appointed under P.C. 562, March, 1918, contain the following instructions on this point:

> (3)—stationery supplies: The price charged departments for stationery supplies shall include the original cost of the supplies, the freight and transportation charges and an added percentage to cover the cost of operating the stationery supplies divison.

The tax is not 15 per cent and 20 per cent, as stated, and is collected, not on all stationery supplies, but on certain classes, and ranges from 5 per cent upward, the principle followed being to grade the tax in proportion to the margin secured at purchase; when supplies are purchased in large quantities an ample margin is usually obtained, and an addition may be made to the selling price for small quantities without increasing the cost above the level of the retail charge for similar quantities.

3. The cost of maintainng a record which would show the difference between the selling prices of an infinite number and variety of articles in a turnover of between two and three million dollars and the purchase or cost price of the same in bulk would be disproportionate to its value. Such a record is not kept and the information is not available.

4. The practice is related to points raised in question No. 1 and is similarly receiving consideration.

5. Answered by reply to No. 4.

6. All moneys paid to the king's printer by the house of parliament or government departments for services performed or goods supplied, or by the public for official documents sold, are deposited to the credit of the Receiver General. The kings printer's advance account consists of advances authorized by the Minster of Finance, under Chap. 162, Sec. 38. R.S.C. 1927. All officials of the department, whether paid from civil government or king's printer's advance account or otherwise, are under the jurisdiction of the civil service commission and the pre-audit of the Auditor General as to increases and salaries, and the salary of any official paid out of king's printer's advance account is not increased or affected except by the civil service commission and the acceptance of such by the Auditor General.

MR. G. FRED PEARSON

Mr. MACDOUGALL:

How much did the government pay Mr. G. Fred Pearson for his legal services in connection with the recent fishery commission?

Mr. CARDIN: Amount paid for legal services to Mr. G. Fred Pearson, $16,300.

PORT HOOD HARBOUR

Mr. MACDOUGALL:

1. When did the federal government commence work on what is locally known as "The closing of the northern entrance of Port Hood harbour"?
2. How much money was spent on this work?
3. When was it commenced?
4. When was it abandoned?

Mr. ELLIOTT:

1. 1904.
2. $133,653.68.
3. Answered by No. 1.
4. Work discontinued 1912.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

CONVEYANCE OF MAILS IN 1927

Mr. ARTHURS:

1. How many contracts were made for the conveyance of mails in Ontario during the calendar year 1927?
2. How many renewals were made: (a) at suggestion of department; (b) by the contractor?
3. In how many cases were tenders advertised for?
4. In how many cases was the lowest tender, as originally received, accepted?
5. Did the department decide that in certain cases the tenders were not satisfactory?
6. If so, in how many cases?
7. Were new tenders called for when those received were not considered satisfactory?
8. If not, why?
9. Have contracts been concluded in some of such cases, and if so, how many?

SEVEN SISTERS FALLS

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest) moved:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams, orders in council, between the government of Canada or any member thereof, or officials and any other person or persons in reference to the development of water-power on the Seven Sisters site and Slave Falls, including all correspondence with the government of Manitoba, the city of Winnipeg and all other private companies seeking to control power sites on the Winnipeg river in Manitoba.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): A great deal of correspondence would have to be brought down if the motion was passed as it stands, and I am informed that a great deal of the correspondence is not material to anyone. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would let the motion stand until I have had an opportunity of discussing it with him. I think we can reduce the order very materially.

Motion stands.

UNOPPOSED MOTION FOR PAPERS

BLACK POINT BREAKWATER

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond-West Cape Breton):

For a return showing a detailed statement of expenditures on Black Point breakwater, Richmond county, together with a copy of all correspondence relating thereto, from March 15, 1927, to March 15, 1928.

FISHING LICENSES IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin), or possibly the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), to the decision recently given by the Supreme Court of Canada on a question that was referred to it some months ago regarding the jurisdiction of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries under the Fisheries Act, in relation to the issuance of certain fishing licenses in British Columbia. In view of that decision, I would ask if it is the intention of the government to amend the Fisheries Act to meet the situation that has arisen, or how is it proposed to deal with the situation, because this is a matter of very great importance to British Columbia.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I may say that the judgment is of very recent occurrence. As a matter of fact, I have not yet had the opportunity of seeing a copy of it; I do not think that an official copy has been received by the department, but it may have been. In view of the importance of the matter, we shall certainly consider the advisability of appealing this judgment to the Privy Council.

Mr. NEILL: And in the meantime continuing to enforce the law as it stood prior to the decision?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MORNING SITTINGS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): As hon. members are aware, the house will not sit on Monday of next week. My attention has been drawn to the fact that a number of hon. members will desire to leave the city early on Saturday afternoon or evening for the week end. Before the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) left for the west, I had a word with him with respect to having morning sittings begin next Saturday, and I understood the hon. gentleman was agreeable to that. I have just learned from my friend the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) that he understands that will be satisfactory to the members of his party. If it is agreeable to hon. members generally, I should like to move the necessary motion at once, so that hon. members may arrange their plans accordingly; if there is any desire to debate the motion, I would let it stand as a notice. If the house is agreeable, I move that we return to Notices of Motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: By leave of the house.

Motion agreed to and the house reverted to the order "Notices of Motion."

Mr. MACKENZIE KING moved:

That on and after Saturday, the 2nd of June instant, until the end of the present session, the house shall meet at eleven o'clock in the morning of each day, except Sundays, and that in addition to the usual intermission at six o'clock p.m., there shall be also an intermission from one to three o'clock p.m.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Do I understand there is a sitting arranged for Saturday of this week?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, Saturday morning.

Mr. GUTHRIE: And Saturday afternoon?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. BOURASSA: Does it mean that we shall adjourn from one to three, or from one to two on Saturday?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: From one to three.

Mr. GEARY: Does the house sit Saturday evening?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think it may be understood that the house will not sit Saturday evening. We may adjourn early in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

APPLICATION OF DUMPING DUTY

BRITISH COLUMBIA STRAWBERRY CROP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. K. ESLING (West Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, on Monday last the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) stated that council would act on the advice of the Minister of National Revenue the very moment that the minister gave to council reasonable grounds for restricting importation—referring probably to natural products. Now, I am in receipt of a telegram from Preston stating that the 1928 strawberry crop to the value of $65,000 will be ready for the market in a few days, and that the growers will be subject to serious loss if they are compelled to market this crop in competition with surplus berries from the United States. May I ask the Prime Minister if this will be considered a reasonable ground for passing an order in council to restrict the importation of surplus berries?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING: I may say to my hon. friend, Mr. Speaker, that while I might have one view of what is a reasonable ground, some of my colleagues might have another. I would not be able to say what view council as a whole would take until the matter comes before us there.

STRUCTURAL STEEL WORKERS' STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the Acting Minister of Labour (Mr. Elliott) what has been done or will be done to adjust the very serious strike of structural steel workers employed on an important public work in Toronto. A week ago the minister stated he would have a reply ready. What is the situation?

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Acting Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as far as I am aware, there has been no change in the situation since my hon. friend asked the question the other day. At that time he seemed to be under the impression that a request had been made by the steel workers of the city of Toronto for action by the Department of Labour. I have made inquiries, and I find that while there was a communication from the mayor of the city, there has been no such request for intervention as the act contemplates. I shall be glad to make inquiries as to what is the situation this afternoon, but that was my information this morning.

CHICAGO DRAINAGE CANAL

PRINTING OF PAPERS TABLED RESPECTING DIVERSION OF WATER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) to Hansard of Monday, April 30, 1928, when he presented a motion for the printing of a portion of a return tabled on April 19, being documents respecting the Chicago drainage canal. On that occasion the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) urged upon the minister that the report should be printed as a whole, and the latter said he would take it under consideration. Subsequently, on May 2, 1928, page 2596 of Hansard, the minister made a motion with regard to the printing. When he was reading it I found it difficult to understand the purport of what was a rather complicated statement, and I asked him this question:

Mr. Cahan: May I ask what is included in this present motion? For instance, the earlier documents brought down have been printed, but they are not available; it is impossible to obtain copies of them although I have applied to the printing bureau and to the distribution office.

To which he replied:

Mr. Stewart (Edmonton): This covers the reprint of all those documents, so we will have everything together.

I think the minister's statement has not been carried out, because the documents which have been printed and placed at the disposal of members contain simply a list of the recent correspondence between Canada and the United States. I would ask the minister to consider whether this promise of his—may I call it?—will be carried out.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): Mr. Speaker, I may tell my hon. friend that the previous documents were simply out of print, and we have ordered that they be reprinted for distribution.

Mr. CAHAN: That is satisfactory.

SUPPLY—SALARIES OF PROFESSIONAL AND TECHNICAL OFFICIALS

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I desire to bring to the attention of the house and the government a matter which is of supreme importance to the basic industry of this country, and which I think should be dealt with before this house prorogues. I refer to the salaries being paid to men engaged in research work in the Department of Agriculture. A study of the salaries paid to the scientific and professional men in the Canadian government service, and a comparison between these salaries and those paid for exactly similar positions in the United States federal government service, make it evident that salaries in the Canadian technical and professional service are in most cases far too low, and, moreover, that they are relatively much lower in some parts of the service than in others, notably in the Department of Agriculture. It is a well-known fact that during the last few years many well-trained scientific men have left our government service to accept much higher salaries elsewhere, and that great difficulty has been experienced in replacing satisfactorily many of those men.

I should like to give the house a comparison of the salaries paid in this service in the United States with those paid in Canada. In grade 1 of the United States service the salary range is from $1,860 to $2,400. This is the exact equivalent of the Canadian first professional grade, or junior grade, $1,620 to $1,920. The qualifications and duties are the same in the two services. Examples: Junior cerealist, junior entomologist, junior plant pathologist.

In grades 2 and 3 of the United States service the salary ranges from $2,400 to $3,000, and from $3,000 to $3,600. They are the exact equivalent in qualifications, responsibilities and duties of Canadian second professional or assistant grade, with salaries ranging from $2,040 to $2,400. Examples: Cerealist, assistant entomologist, assistant plant pathologist.

In grade 4 of the United States service the salary ranges from $3,800 to $5,000, and this grade is the exact equivalent of our third professional grade with salaries ranging from $2,520 to $2,880, with a few senior research positions at $2,760 to $3,240. Examples: Cereal specialist, entomologist, plant pathologist.

In grade 5 of the United States service the salary ranges from $5,200 to $6,000, and this grade is the exact equivalent of our fourth professional grade, with salary ranging from $3,000 to $3,480, and fifth grade with salary ranging from $3,420 to $3,780, which includes chiefs of divisions in our service.

In grades 6 and 7 of the United States service the salary ranges from $6,000 to $7,500, and $7,500 and up, and they are the equivalent of our highest grades with salary ranging from $4,020 to $4,620, and in a few positions with a maximum of $4,920 or $5,120, including heads of branches in our service and heads of bureaus in the United States service.

I am informed that the United States president has recently signed what is known as the Welsh bill, which has increased the salaries for scientific positions very considerably, as the following statement shows:

Grade
1	$2,000-2,600
2	2,600-3,200
3	3,200-3,800
4	3,800-4,600
5	4,600-5,400
6	5,600-6,400
7	6,700-7,500
8	8,000-9,000
9	9,000 and up

You will see that the maximum salary for these positions in the United States is $9,000 compared to $5,120 in Canada, for exactly the same sort of work. Our professional service must compete with the professional service of the United States. In many lines of scientific work our young men, after receiving their initial training in college in this country, must go to the United States for post graduate courses, and many of these men in the last few years have remained in the United States, accepting higher salaries offered there. So that their services are not only lost to this country but go to assist our competitors.

Next I want to deal with the discrimination shown in the classification as between different departments in this country. First as an example I would make a comparison between the geological survey branch and the cereal division of the experimental farms branch.

Geological Survey

Assistant geologists: minimum, $2,220; maximum, $2,580.

Associate geologist: minimum, $2,700; maximum, $3,600.

Geologist: minimum, $3,720; maximum, $4,620.

Chief geologist: minimum, $4,440; maximum, $4,980.

Cereal Division

Junior cerealist: minimum, $1,620; maximum, $1,920.

Cerealist: minimum, $2,040; maximum, $2,520.

Cereal specialist: minimum, $2,520; maximum, $2,880.

Senior cereal specialist: minimum, $2,760; maximum, $3,240.

Dominion cerealist (with house allowance $360): minimum, $2,880; maximum, $3,480.

Mr. SPEAKER: The Chair cannot hear.

Mr. COOTE: I cannot hear you very well, either, Mr. Speaker; I thank you for asking for better order. As I say, the Dominion cerealist may receive a maximum of $3,480 and house allowance of possibly $30 or $40 a month. I want to say a few words regarding the work of the cereal division.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask hon. members kindly to be silent; I cannot hear the hon. gentleman at all.

Mr. COOTE: One of the most important activities of the cereal division is that of evolving and developing varieties of wheat capable of producing maximum yields of high quality throughout the various wheat growing districts of western Canada. The world famous marquis wheat is the most outstanding contribution of this division to date. According to conservative estimates we now realize in Canada at least $100,000,000 more from our wheat crop annually than would have been possible had we still to depend on the varieties of wheat grown prior to the introduction of marquis. Many districts however require varieties that have earlier maturing qualities than marquis, and the introduction of garnet wheat in 1926 and reward wheat this year seems to have filled that want. Both these wheats are the work of men engaged in the cereal branch. The breeding of rust-resistant varieties, which is largely concentrated at the rust research laboratory in Winnipeg, where it is being prosecuted by officials of the cereal division co-operating with Dominion plant pathologists, is an immensely important undertaking. As is well known, rust has exacted a toll of as high as $100,000,000 in a single year. Indeed, many farmers in Manitoba and parts of Saskatchewan have almost been compelled to abandon their farms as the result of the frequent occurence of this dread disease. The solution of this problem, would appear to be possible, providing the personnel of the staff be held intact. Unfortunately a serious depletion in the staff has already taken place through the resignation of one of the most outstanding officials, and I understand that other resignations are pending unless salaries are adjusted.

I wish to quote a few sentences from the Grain Growers' Guide in regard to the discrimination which seems to exist so far as the Department of Agriculture is concerned. The statement is made:

> As for younger men the situation is well illustrated by an incident referred to in the March issue of Scientific Agriculture. Recently the commission advertised for two men. For an assistant superintendent for an experimental farm, who must be an agricultural college graduate, with a post graduate degree and special training in histology, genetics and physiology, it offered a salary range of $1,620 to $1,920. For an assistant chief of the narcotics division, who is required to have only a high school education and two years' clerical experience, preferably police experience, with some knowledge of drugs, it offers a salary range of from $2,400 to $2,880. It is little wonder in these circumstances that Canada is losing some of her best scientific agriculturists.

We cannot afford to lose these men. I think it is generally admitted that agriculture is the basic industry of Canada, and wheat is certainly the greatest item in our agricultural economy. I want to quote briefly from an article entitled Wheat is King, published in MacLean's Magazine of April 1st:

> The stupendous Canadian wheat industry totally eclipses all other Dominion enterprises in the number of men employed, in the amount of machinery utilized and in the quantity of money involved. When talking of Canadian wheat we now speak in terms of billions. . . . Wheat, and wheat alone, augments the national treasury annually by $100,000,000 more than the total annual income from our forests. It brings into Canada twice as much money as our mines, and ten times as much as our fisheries. No other single commodity produced in the Dominion has a chance in the race for national importance. It is so far ahead of all others that it has no competitors.

The greatest enemy of our wheat producers to-day is rust. In this connection I want to quote from an editorial which appeared in the Alberta Farmer:

> Because the future success of western Canada's wheat harvests is seriously threatened the Dominion government, under pressure of public opinion, organized two years ago a Dominion rust research laboratory. It is not necessary to explain to prairie farmers the seriousness of the rust menace. A year ago 55 per cent of the wheat crop of the west graded No. 3 northern or better; this year only 35 per cent of the crop graded that high. The cause for the most part was rust. Thus far this year only one and one-half per cent of the wheat graded in western Canada has been classed No. 1 northern and only 10 per cent No. 2 northern. The cause for the most part has been rust. Rust is responsible for the fact that in 1927 Manitoba, which was at one time an exclusive bread wheat area, produced over 50 per cent of durum wheat. Rust was almost entirely responsible for the reduction of 20,000,000 bushels in Manitoba's wheat crop last year from the year before. Absence of rust in Alberta during 1927 made it possible for this province to raise as much wheat on six and one-half million acres as Saskatchewan, where rust was rampant, raised on thirteen million acres. Stem rust caused a loss of approximately two hundred million dollars to prairie farmers in 1916.

Even if that statement is exaggerated it should cause some concern to this house. It seems to me that this is the proper time to place before the house a resolution passed by the Canadian Council of Agriculture at its annual meeting, which was held in Winnipeg last March:

> Whereas grain rust is costing the country millions of dollars annually, which loss can only be prevented through the agency of scientific research, which demands the services of the most highly trained experts;
> And whereas Canada is losing many agricultural scientists to other countries where the scale of remuneration is considerably higher than prevails here;

And whereas the civil service salary classification sharply discriminates against scientific men engaged in agricultural research work as compared with men requiring no higher standard of training engaged in other branches of the civil service;

And whereas the future prosperity of Canada depends in a large measure upon scientific research in the various branches of agricultural development;

Therefore the Canadian Council of Agriculture recommends to the federal government that immediate steps be taken to remove the discrimination against agricultural scientists now existing in the civil service salary classification;

And further that nothing be allowed to stand in the way of prosecuting rust research work as rapidly as possible to a successful conclusion.

At present the obstacle in the way is the insufficient salaries which are being paid to men engaged in this work; according to the press we have been losing quite a number of men who were formerly actively engaged in this work at Winnipeg. The first of these of whom mention is made is Doctor D. L. Bailey, who had charge of the laboratory; he has been asked by the university of Toronto to accept a position as head of the department of pathology. Next is Mr. J. R. Craigie, who has accepted invitations from the United States Botanical Society at Washington and from Harvard university to present his paper and to consider opportunities they have to offer. I understand that he has accepted one of the offers. After nine years of intensive training, he started work at the rust laboratory for $2,400 per year, and his maximum salary under the present classification would be $2,880. The next is Doctor Margaret Newton, who has a standing offer from the university of Saskatchewan. Doctor C. H Goulding also has received offers from the United States. It is unfortunate but true that during the last few years many highly trained scientific officers have left our service to go to the United States or other countries because they have been offered higher salaries; our Department of Agriculture alone has lost over 75 professional officers in the last five years. Many of these men go to the United States and enter either the federal service or one of the various state services, and unless these salaries are increased we will lose many more of these trained investigators and professional officers. When these men leave the service they take with them a wealth of knowledge and experience which in many cases cannot be replaced.

Among those who have left the service within the last few years are two highly trained scientific officers, each holding a doctor's degree. These men resigned from the entomological branch of the Department of Agriculture three years ago, one to accept a position in the United States federal service at $4,500 per year and the other to accept a position in the Fiji islands at $7,500. It does seem a strange thing to me that this country cannot afford to pay our men salaries equal to what they can get in the Fiji islands. These men were each receiving $2,760 in Canada, and the maximum of that class since has been raised to $2,880. One of these positions is still vacant; it has been advertised several times but no suitable person has applied. These gentlemen were investigating the injury done by the spruce bud worm in the forests of eastern Canada, with a view to devising methods of preventing similar outbreaks. It is stated that in our eastern forests the spruce bud worm has killed fir, balsam and spruce within the last twenty years to the amount of from 150,000,000 to 200,000,000 cords, worth between one and two billion dollars before being manufactured into pulp.

A few months ago we were informed that a highly trained technical officer in charge of the tobacco division at the experimental farm had resigned from our service to accept a much higher salary under the Australian council for scientific research. Our scientific branches are just as important as those of the United States, Australia, or the Fiji islands; our problems are quite as difficult to solve. It is necessary that our scientific investigations be maintained at a standard of efficiency equal to that of any other country, and this can be done only by retaining these highly trained men in our service. Doctor Charles Saunders, through his discovery of marquis wheat, is credited with having increased the value of our wheat crop to the extent of $100,000,000 annually; this parliament has seen fit to grant Doctor Saunders a pension in recognition of his services, but who knows whether by losing men of this character to other countries because of the inadequate salaries we are paying, we may not have lost men who could have rendered to agriculture in Canada services equally valuable to those rendered by Doctor Saunders?

Mr. ADSHEAD: Would my hon. friend tell me the pension given Doctor Saunders?

Mr. COOTE: I am sorry, but I cannot give that; I do not expect that it is equal to the pension given some of our judges, however.

I do not wish to take up the time of the house unnecessarily to-day, Mr. Speaker. In closing I wish to say that I have brought this matter up for discussion because I believe it to be very important in a truly national sense that the salaries of these men should be put on a more satisfactory basis before this parliament prorogues. I hope we may have a promise from the government that this will be done and that the supplementary estimates will provide for such increases in these salaries.

Mr. JAMES STEEDSMAN (Souris): I feel grateful to my hon. friend for having introduced this subject. I was under the impression that it might be discussed on another occasion, but now that it has been introduced I would like to say a few words with reference to it. I am not going into a comparison of the salaries paid in the different branches here with those paid in other countries for services of a scientific character; my hon. friend has done that already, and in presenting what I have to say I wish to be as brief as possible.

We have been alarmed by the fact that we have lost many of our best scientists because we have been unable to offer them salaries sufficiently large to induce them to stay here. The question introduced to-day by my hon. friend is one of the most important which will come before this parliament this session. We realize that the prosperity of this country depends to a very great degree upon the success of agriculture, and the invasion of the grain fields of western Canada by rust is threatening the whole prosperity of the country. We find the area affected spreading from year to year; a few years ago the ravages of this disease were confined to Manitoba, but now we find it spreading considerably farther afield. It is almost certain, unless some means are found to control or combat this menace, that the whole area of western Canada will be more or less affected. I will be pardoned if I confine my remarks chiefly to the effect it has had in Manitoba, the province from which I come.

As the hon. gentleman has just said, the wheat crop in Manitoba last year amounted to only 30,000,000 bushels, and of that amount 15,000,000 bushels were durum wheat. The remainder was of a very poor quality, so low in fact that much of it was almost unsalable, being little better than feed wheat. The introduction of new varieties and the propagation of rust-resistant varieties has done something to relieve the situation. Great areas in southwestern Manitoba, from which I come, have had to change from marquis to durum wheat. While this has proven very satisfactory for that particular locality, at the same time we can readily understand that it is out of the question that any one variety of wheat will be satisfactory for the whole of western Canada. Climatic and soil conditions make that impossible, and the question of markets has also been mentioned by my hon. friend. While there are those who suggest that the introduction of new varieties and the propagation of rust-resistant varieties may be the solution, I am not prepared to go that far, for the reason that no one or two varieties of wheat can be suitable for such an extensive area as we have in western Canada to-day.

Other kinds of grain are being affected as well. Not only was the wheat crop of Manitoba affected last year by rust, but the oat crop also suffered, and to a greater degree. The oat crop of Manitoba last year was cut down by two-thirds from the previous year, due largely to rust, aggravated, of course, by weather conditions. The balance of the crop was of very poor quality, scarcely any of it fit for feed. Great quantities of feed and seed oats have had to be imported into Manitoba this year as a result of the attacks of rust on the oat crop last year.

So you will see that it extends ever farther than wheat. When it comes to affect the feed grains of our province or our country, you will see that our whole agriculture is affected. As a result of the condition I have outlined with regard to oats, you will find that very few cattle were fed in Manitoba this last winter. A great number of stock which would otherwise have stayed there has been shipped out as the result of the failure of that crop, owing to rust.

I do not wish to detatin the house but I want to point out to the government the importance of securing the very best men available, the most highly trained scientific men that it is possible to find anywhere, to take on this work. And having secured them we should pay them such remuneration as will induce them to stay with the job. At the present time Canada cannot afford to lose one man who can do anything towards the solution of this problem, by not paying him sufficient money to keep him at his post. Therefore I would suggest to the Minister of Agriculture and to the government not only the advisability but the necessity of paying sufficient wages to induce these men to carry on this work which means so much to the prosperity of this country..

Hon. S. F. TOLMIE (Victoria, B.C.): I have much pleasure in agreeing with what has been said by the two previous speakers. I do not think there has been anything of greater importance brought up in this house during the whole of this session. We are dependent very largely on our agriculture; it is one of our greatest industries, and more people are interested in it than in any other single line. Anything that we can do to further agriculture, to place it on a sound basis, to remove any disadvantages that it is suffering will do as much towards adding to the general prosperity of the whole of Canada as anything else I know of.

I quite agree that our technical experts in the civil service, and particularly in the Department of Agriculture, should be remunerated adequately to enable them to remain here and to give us the advantage of their knowledge in the development of this great country. I do not know of any worse form of economy than to pay a man small wages after we have educated him for a special work, and then have him taken away by some other country for the sake of an increase in remuneration of one or two thousand dollars. I think we should keep these men here because , as has already been said, every one of them is necessary in this great work we have before us—the development of Canada. The increase in these diseases in the cereal and other crops make it absolutely necessary that we carry on this research work and make every effort to combat these diseases. Otherwise, as has already been pointed out, we will have a falling off in production which will be very serious indeed.

The ground has been pretty well covered in this regard by the previous speakers, and I propose to adhere strictly to the health of animals section, and the technical work performed in the Department of Agriculture.

Owing to the fact that horses are not used as much to-day as they were a few years ago, the field for the veterinarian is more limited than it was some time ago. The result is that the inducement is not there, and we find our young men going into other lines of work. About the only field left for the veterinarian is in the health of animals branch, in connection with the treatment of other animals such as cattle, dogs, etc.

To qualify as a veterinarian requires the passing of the matriculation examination, then four years in college, and the passing of another examination before entering the health of animals branch. We must offer such remuneration to these men who have graduated and passed these examinations as will enable them to make a reasonable living in comparison with what can be earned in other lines of activity. In order to give the house an illustration of how the passing of the horse has affected the veterinary profession, let me say that while the medical colleges have increased the number of their students since 1919 to the extent of 40 per cent, there has been a falling off in the veterinary colleges of no less than 25 per cent. We have in the livestock industry in Canada the immense investment of $800,000,000 and this livestock must be protected not only from ordinary diseases but from contagious disease. We must also protect our milk supply and the animal products that are produced through our abattoirs. Further, there is research to be carried on and investigations of various kinds to be made for which the veterinarian is especially trained, and it is his special responsibility to carry on this work. Therefore, it must appear to all that it is imperative that we should pay sufficient wages to retain in the service the best men we can secure to perform this important wark.

Let us look at the working conditions of the ordinary veterinary inspector. In the first place the field man has to do his work in corrals, stockyards, barns and generally outside under very unfavourable conditions. The meat inspector, working under cover, is working in an atmosphere charged with steam, operating on a wet floor, handling and incising viscera for hours at a time in the packing house. Very often the man who is carrying on this important work, looking for disease, rejecting carcasses that are unfit for human food and in this way protecting human life, is rendering this valuable service for less money than the foreman butcher operating on the same floor receives.

With regard to what the veterinarian has done for Canada in the past, let me point out that we have an exceedingly proud record. In the first place Canada is to-day freer from animal contagious diseases than any other country in the world. Surely that is a great asset to this country. We have never had an outbreak of foot and mouth disease in the history of Canada. Six outbreaks have occurred in the United States since 1902 necessitating the slaughter of 313,906 domestic animals at an appraised value of more than $11,000,000 and in addition to this it was necessary to slaughter some 22,000 deer in the national forest at a very heavy expense. Moreover, there was a great loss of breeding animals interfering with the general business of breeding livestock. There was restriction in the movement of cattle from one part of the United States to another and other general interference with the business. In 1912 no less than twenty-three states in the union were affected, some of them bordering right on the Canadian line, and it is much to the credit of health of animals branch that not a single case of foot and mouth disease crossed the line and became established in Canada. As to what has been done in connection with other contagious diseases I might point out that in 1904-05 more than $147,000 was paid in compensation for horses destroyed for glanders. In 1914-15 this was reduced to $35,000 in round figures and in 1926-27 the compensation was reduced to $1,852. Surely that is a very excellent showing for the work of the branch. In 1904-05, $5,412 was paid in compensation for hogs destroyed for cholera. In 1914-15 there was an epidemic of hog cholera and compensation amounting to $196,000 was paid. In 1926-27 this was reduced to $5,771. In regard to dourine, a disease affecting horses in the southwestern section of Saskatchewan and the southeastern section of Alberta, in 1904-05, 292 horses were destroyed and compensation paid to the extent of $16,000. In 1913-14, 471 horses were destroyed and compensation paid amounting to $48,743. Shortly after this Dr. Watson, chief patholgist of the health of animals branch, who had charge of this work, discovered a blood test whereby diagnosis was possible before any physical symptoms were shown in the animal. The result of this very useful discovery was that six years afterwards the disease was reduced to only two horses destroyed with compensation paid amounting to $70 and there has never been any dourine in Canada since. What is a man like that worth to the live stock industry of Canada? I do not know what he is worth, but I know he is paid the very modest salary of $3,780 a year and a house. I suppose a house is necessary in this climate.

With regard to tuberculosis eradication the restricted area plan includes about 11,000 square miles with approximately 240,000 cattle. In one area 52,000 cattle have been tested with a first test showing a reaction of 7.95 per cent of infected animals. This was reduced in two years to four-fifths of one per cent, and the compensation was reduced from $150,000 to $12,000. In another area including about 23,000 head of cattle the percentage of infection was 6 per cent on the first test. This was reduced to three-tenths of one per cent and the compensation was reduced from $43,000 to $2,819. This clearly indicates that the veterinary inspector of Canada is paying his way in handling the diseases of this very important industry.

Let me compare the salaries paid in Canada with those paid to men in the United States doing similar work and without the same record that we are so proud of, namely, that of possessing the freest herds in the world from infectious diseases.

In Canada we have the following officials:

Salaries

269 veterinary inspectors, $1,920 to $2,520.
6 district veterinary inspectors, 3 district supervisors of the meat and canned food division, 1 supervisor of bovine tuberculosis control, $2,640 to $3,000.
9 animal pathologists, $2,700 to $3,120.
1 travelling veterinary inspector, 2 divisional supervisors meat and canned food division, $2,820 to $3,240.
1 chief animal pathologist, $3,420 to $3,780 and house.
1 chief meat and canned foods division, $3,420 to $3,960.
1 chief veterinary inspector, $3,420 to $3,960.
1 veterinary director general, $4,440 to $5,160.

The Veterinary director general is in charge of all the work. Veterinarians carrying on similar work in the United States are remunerated as follows:

250 junior veterinarians, $1,860 to $2,400.
920 assistant veterinarians, $2,400 to $3,000.
90 associate veterinarians, $3,000 to $3,600.
22 veterinarians, $3,800 to $5,000.
1 chief bureau of animal industry, $7,500.

The chief of the bureau of animal industry, who holds a position similar to that of the veterinary director general, receives for the work a salary of $7,500 plus various other emoluments, in connection with supervisory duties, which bring his income up to about $15,000 a year. Action is now being taken by congress to increase the salaries of these men because they are feeling the same pinch as we are in Canada, namely, that there is not a sufficient supply in the offing to take care of the work. Under date of February 27, 1928, Dr. U. G. Houck, acting chief of the United States bureau of animal industry, writes me as follows:

It has been the bureau's intention that its varied activities call for men of education and experience, and it has been agreed generally that our field veterinarians are underpaid and that their salaries are not on a par with other scientific employees of this department. A marked result of these conditions is a serious shortage in the number of young men pursuing veterinary courses in the colleges.

So it will be noted that the United States veterinarians are paid considerably more than Canadian veterinarians for doing the same work, yet even under those conditions, Dr. Houck states that there is distinct evidence of a serious shortage of veterinarians in the near future unless special inducements can be offered.

With regard to the remuneration paid for the same service in Great Britain, unfortunately I have only the maximum of the salaries paid. In Great Britain the figures are as follows:

Maximum Salaries

65 inspectors, including bonus, $2,965.
30 divisional inspectors, including bonus, $3,772.

8 superintending inspectors, including bonus, $4,836.

1 chief superintending inspector, including bonus, anl also including a special allowance of £100, $5,322.

1 deputy chief veterinary inspector, including bonus, $5,857.

1 chief veterinary inspector, including bonus, $6,829.

The bonuses run from about £160, on salaries of £450, to a bonus of £205 on salaries of £1,200. The chief veterinarian of the city of Liverpool receives $7,000 per annum, and his assistant veterinarian receives $6,000.

The British government has maintained an inspector at Montreal for the inspection of cattle shipped alive to Great Britain from Canada, and they have paid this man $5,000 per year. So it is quite evident that they are paying more money for the same work than we are paying, and they are not doing any better work because, as I said a moment ago, our record is the best in the world, yet we pay less money for similar work than is being paid in the two countries I have just mentioned. Again, the falling off in the attendance of students at our veterinary colleges is a clear-cut indication that we are not paying sufficient money to interest enough young men to enter this particular profession.

Let us take a glance at what might happen in the event of an outbreak of foot and mouth disease occurring in this country. We have been very fortunate indeed in the past in this regard, but in the event of an outbreak of foot and mouth disease occurring among the cattle herds of Canada, we would find that the whole business would be paralyzed to a very great extent. Quarantines would be placed on certain areas, on stock yards, and so forth, so that the interference with our business would soon run into a very great deal of money indeed. Breeding operations would be interfered with, and general demoralization of the whole industry would take place. In addition to that, and let me point this out very clearly to those men from the west who are interested in the breeding of cattle and are looking for the best market obtainable for the selling of their live stock when they are ready to sell, no matter what arrangement you may make with the United States as to the trade in live stock between the two countries, no matter how much you might profit from any such arrangement you might make, the whole thing would be upset and tied up overnight in the event of an outbreak of foot and mouth disease occurring in Canada. A quarantine would immediately be placed against this country. That will indicate how necessary it is for us to take hold of this situation while yet there is time, so that we can develop men to carry on this very important work. We must be careful to see that we do not have an inefficient service. In one outbreak in the United States to which I referred, owing to inefficiency, owing to failure to make a proper diagnosis when the disease first appeared in the state of Michigan, I think it was, the disease was scattered through several other states, stock yards were infected, and the final loss amounted to millions of dollars.

The work of a veterinary inspector is of a contentious nature. You require a man who is above the average to carry on this work His duties are not appreciated by the average man, but very much appreciated by those who are thinkers, and who realize the importance of healthy herds in this country. In addition to the field work he has to do, he has to condemn many live animals, often pure-breds, which are very valuable. Then in the abattoir he has to destroy the carcasses of many valuable animals, the whole running into a great deal of money in a year; so with the wrong kind of man, with a man who is inefficient and does not thoroughly understand his business, or has not backbone enough to carry out the regulations, a very unsatisfactory service will result. We must realize at once that to obtain men who will carry on the work in a proper and efficient manner, we must pay them at least as much as does the United States. Let us realize that we cannot run the civil service of Canada satisfactorily simply on low salaries and love of country. If we attempt to do that, we are not going to retain in this country the very best men and women who can be used in the service. We must realize, too, that it requires four years to prepare a veterinary to carry on this very important work, and with the vast investment in our live stock, and with the present shortage we are suffering from, it must be obvious to all that immediate action is necessary, and the responsibility is the government's. I want to say, in conclusion, that Canada cannot afford to take any chances with this vast investment of $800,000,000 by tolerating any carelessness in this connection.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): My hon. friend from Victoria closed his remarks with the statement that the responsibility was the government's. I beg to submit on behalf of the government that we realize the importance of this question, and we are sympathetic to the idea of retaining within the service the very best men and women obtainable at the salaries provided. But may I point out at once to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the house that it is the Civil Service Commission that fixes the salaries for the employees of the Dominion of Canada. We have in the Dominion of Canada many departments of public service, and the Civil Service Commission, like the government, must always keep in mind when adjusting salaries, how any proposed increases or decreases in one department will affect other departments. I believe that all parties entrusted with the responsibility of office have always endeavoured to keep in the public service competent and industrious employees who were interested in the affairs of the country. But we have lost excellent civil servants. I can recall that we have lost from the public service of Canada two or three men who left many years ago to go into private business, and I admit frankly that one or two of the three I have in mind are much better off, in a monetary sense, to-day than if they had remained in the public service. But as I said a moment ago, it is not the government that fixes the salaries generally all along the line in the departments. In the first place, recommendations come from the Civil Service Commission to the treasury board. It may interest the house to know that we did receive from the Civil Service Commission on the 23rd day of May last, just seven days ago, just three days before the supplementary estimates were tabled, certain recommendations regarding the technical and professional men and women in the public service. I have read that recommendation carefully, and I observe that even the Civil Service Commission, having given considerable study to this question, and realizing, as I believe they do realize, the importance of an increase in the salaries of the technical and professional staff, but realizing also the difficulties, are not yet quite clear in their own minds what should be done. For the information of the house I will just read a summary of the recommendation of the Civil Service Commission:

> The recommendation is that the minimum and maximum salary rates for professional and scientific classes and for other classes with a maximum salary of $4,000 or more be revised, and increases according to a general plan, subject to such modifications as the committee consider warranted—

That was the view presented to the government by the Civil Service Commission only seven days ago, and as I said, they are not yet quite clear in their own minds, because to summarize:

> The commission is as yet none too clear what classes should get increases. In one paragraph they comment on the fact that if increases are given to the scientific men only, it may result in cases where the heads of branches might be receiving less than their assistants, so that increases would have to be made not only in the salaries of the scientific men, but also like increases for all positions where the salary is over $4,000.

But if the commission had any doubt in their own minds as to what classes should be increased, they had no doubt as to what the cost would be to the taxpayers of the Dominion, because in this memorandum they state that on the basis of the estimated increases which they are now considering it would involve an additional outlay of $750,000 a year. I am not sure that that would be sufficient to keep in the service the scientific men that have been referred to this afternoon, because the Civil Service Commission say that upon this basis the increases vary from $240 for classes with maximum salary rates of less than $2,400 per annum, to $420 for classes with maximum rates greater than $4,000.

Those increases might be considered by some of these officials who have been offered other positions insufficient to retain them in the service. When my hon. friend says that the responsibility is the government's, I say that we are willing to take all the responsibility that is coming to us, but we have a Civil Service Commission that revises and recommends the salaries to be paid to civil servants, and if we increase the salaries and come back next session with an increased vote of $750,000 for carrying on the business of the country, I wonder if we shall be attacked.

The government welcome this discussion and the co-operation of all classes to assist us in retaining in the service those who are most useful to the country. But before going further may I say this? Taking them generally, the Dominion of Canada has a pretty good staff of civil servants. The men and women are devoted to the national service, and the Dominion provides very well for them. The civil service—and I am speaking generally now—receive in remuneration a return that compares most favourably with their brothers' and sisters' who are paying the taxes and paying their salaries. Not only do they receive pretty good salaries, but once a man or woman is on a permanent basis he or she has the assurance of continuing a civil servant, no matter what government may be in power, so long as the service rendered is loyal and efficient. And civil servants have the further advantage of being entitled to a pension when they reach a certain age limit, and in case of death a certain proportion of the pension is continued to their widows. So those who have the responsibilities of bringing up a family are fairly well provided for.

It will be found that the salaries of our professional and technical civil servants compare very favourably with the salaries earned by other technical and professional men outside the service.

Mr. COOTE: Would the minister permit this question: In regard to the duty of the Civil Service Commission to revise salaries, have the commission authority to revise any salaries until the matter is referred to them by the government or by the heads of departments?

Mr. ROBB: I am speaking from memory, and subject to correction, but my understanding is that the head of a department suggests to the Civil Service Commission the desirability of reclassifying certain employees. The Civil Service Commission pass on that suggestion. They have to endeavour to maintain uniformity throughout the service, always keeping in mind that when they increase the salaries in one department, the next day the head of another department will ask for a similar increase for his staff.

Mr. TOLMIE: May I ask this question: If the number of able veterinarians continues to reduce at the rate of 25 per cent, as it has done since 1919, where in the future are we going to get our supply of professional men for the health of animals branch?

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend is better posted on that than I am, but my principal difficulty with veterinarians is to find them government jobs. If any vacancies occur I think I could find a few veterinarians ready to fill them. Allow me to read part of paragraph 2 of the recommendations of the Civil Service Commission to council, so it may be on record for the information of the house:

> The Civil Service Commission find that the distinction between the professional and scientific positions and other positions of the service is that for all professional and scientific positions the basic qualification requirement is education equivalent to graduation from a university or college of recognized standing. Therefore, in determing what classes should be included in this revision, the controlling factor considered has been whether or not the work of an employee, to enable him to carry on properly the duties of his position, requires university graduation or its equivalent. It therefore follows that it is those classes for which university graduation or its equivalent are essential qualifications, which will now be subject to revision.

That brings up another question of possible difficulty. There are men and women who have been many years in the service, and their long experience makes them peculiarly useful in attending to the country's affairs. Is it fair that they should be discriminated against because they did not have the advantage of a college education? They have been through what is perhaps the best of all universities—the university of experience within the service.

I do not wish to detain the house any longer. I repeat, the government is sympathetic in its attitude to the civil service, and is just as desirous as any former government to retain the services of those who are useful in carrying on the business of the country. But I ask the house: The government having received this memorandum from the Civil Service Commission just seven days ago, and three days before the supplementary estimates were tabled, is it reasonable to expect that ministers—who work as long hours as many civil servants, that is, about eighteen hours a day—could give this matter in the closing days of the session the consideration which it deserves. The government will go carefully into the question of salaries, not only of those engaged in the Department of Agriculture but in all departments. May I say in passing that the Civil Service Commission recognize the importance of the Department of Agriculture, for I notice in their memorandum this statement is made:

> There is urgent need for an immediate special review of all scientific and professional classes in the Department of Agriculture. Such review should be supplementary to any increase granted to such classes hereby and will be reported to His Excellency the Governor General in council at the earliest possible date.

We have not had that yet, but when it does come to us we will look into it carefully.

Only one word more in conclusion. My hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Tolmie) made a comparision between salaries paid to our civil servants and those paid in the United States. I submit that, generally speaking, our civil service is remunerated just about as well as that of the United States. But if my hon. friend is going to compare salaries in the United States and Canada, perhaps it would be interesting to some of hs own friends, from whom I have heard whispers in this regard, if he would compare the salaries of congressmen and senators in the United States with indemnities paid members of parliament and senators in Canada. He might compare the salaries of the judiciary in the United States with salaries paid judges in this Dominion.

The government are charged with the responsibility which my hon. friend has just indicated. But we have a responsibility not only in taking care of our professional and scentific men in the service but, as well, in seeing to it that there shall be such uniformity throughout the service as will be satisfactory to all classes. I repeat, we are sympathetic to increases in salaries where they are deserved by those doing useful scientific work, and we welcome this discussion, which will be carefully considered during the recess.

Mr. JOHN MILLAR (Qu'appelle): The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Tolmie) and the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Steedsman) well said that no more important matter has been brought to the attention of the house this session than the question introduced by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote). I am not going to cover the ground already covered so well by the hon. member for Macleod and others who have spoken, but I want to add a word in support of what they have said.

The losses which Canada is sustaining at the present time through the lack of research are so enormous that this matter must be looked upon very seriously. The hon. member for Macleod spoke of rust. I want to stress this because it is one of the greatest enemies which the western wheat grower has to face to-day. In Manitoba, a province already referred to by the hon. member for Souris, the acreage under wheat in 1925 or 1926 was only the same as the acreage of 1903. That is a rather remarkable statement. The greatest factor in bringing about that state of affairs, forcing Manitoba into the growing of course grains and compelling that province very largely to go out of wheat production, has been rust. That disease has spread over Saskatchewan also, permeating almost the entire province. Last year it was pitiable to see crops of wheat which ordinarily should thresh forty bushels to the acre reduced by rust alone to such a condition as to yield only about seventeen or eighteen bushels. There was a heavy crop of straw to be handled and tied with twine and yet the yield was very low. And not only was there a low yield, but the quality of grain was not as high.

It is no good exaggerating the losses sustained in this regard, but it is a very conservative estimate indeed that the loss annually from rust is $100,000,000. That is putting it low indeed. We have had some very excellent scientific men at work on the rust question. Until a few years ago scientists believed there was only one variety of rust; about the year 1916, however—I am speaking from memory—it was discovered that there was not one variety but there were forty. Twenty of these are found in western Canada. The little spores we see on wheat and other grain plants, falling on the plant work their way into it, cutting off the supply of food, and they develop in such large numbers that they break out on the plant much the same as a rash on the human body. Then they go through a process whereby they multiply by hundreds of millions. The fact that there are twenty different varieties in western Canada makes it most difficult to find a remedy. Scientists tell us that the different spores—the different varieties—cannot be distinguished except by means of research, to discover the kind of plant on which they will feed. One will feed on one variety and another on some other variety, and that is the only way to distinguish them. So that now instead of having to fight, as formerly it was believed, merely one enemy, there are twenty to cope with. You can see therefore how difficult the problem becomes.

In the course of the session there has been considerable discussion about the loss to Canada through the importation of strawberries from the United States as well as other fruits from various places and eggs from China. I assure you that in the rust disease you have an importation infinitely worse. It comes from the United States, from the south, and it is a million times more harmful than any strawberries that come into this country. These spores travel in the air at a rapid pace, finding their way into the extreme north as far as Norway House and York Factory. They travel high as well as low in the air, two or three miles. To build a fence to keep them from coming up from the south is an impossibility. They must be fought by other means.

These research men in the service of Canada have made splendid headway, having found out a great deal about rust during the last ten or fifteen years, and it does seem to be most unfortunate that we should lose their services which means so much to the country. The evil is worse now than it was five or ten years ago and to lose these men because of insufficient remuneration, allowing them to go elsewhere, is a very grave mistake.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) suggests that the result of an increase in the salaries paid these men—at least I inferred as much from his remarks—would be something like $750,000, for the reason that if the salaries of the scientific men were increased this would have its effect all along the line. I agree with the minister that generally speaking our civil servants are very well paid. But when we have in our employ a man whose efforts mean not hundreds of thousands but millions of dollars to Canada, I contend that he is in a class that should be taken entirely out of the civil service. Such a man should not be in the civil service but should be paid according to the service he is rendering to the state. And this should have no effect on the various classes in the civil service. I do not see any reason why scientific men such as those referred to by the hon. member for Macleod should not have their remuneration increased in order that we may retain their services, without that affecting the men who run elevators in our public buildings or elsewhere.

We have had a committee working for some months on the question of immigration; I think immigration is linked up with this matter, although very few of our students of immigration seem to realize that the reason we cannot get immigrants as easily as we would like is because conditions on the farm are not as attractive as they should be. I remember that on one occasion the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) remarked that these same hard conditions obtained thirty or forty years ago. The farmer has seen hard conditions; he has managed to weather them successfully, but that hardly applies at present. Now the farmer has more of class consciousness; he realizes that during the years gone by he has not enjoyed that share of the good things to which he was entitled. If he is going to work long hours and spend his time in an employment which is very risky, which might be called almost a gamble, then he wants some remuneration to compensate him for that hard work and the lack of an opportunity to enjoy the good things which our city friends enjoy. We have arrived at a time when farmers' sons are not going to stay on the land unless conditions are made more attractive. If the amount of money we lose through rust alone could be saved, farming would pay so much better than is the case at present that it would become attractive, and some of the millions of dollars we are spending to bring immigrants into Canada could be saved.

I am very glad the hon. member for Macleod brought up this question; this may or may not be the best time for it, but I am not worrying about that. There is no wrong time to bring up a matter of such vital importance as this question of retaining the services of our scientific workers. Perhaps the government may not be altogether to blame for the situation, but I hope that something may be done, either by taking these men out from under the Civil Service Commission or in some other way, to retain their services which we so greatly need. The best are none too good for us, and I do not want to see good men lost to us after they have spent years at their work which means that new and untried men must be employed, who require years to reach the same point in their work. This is a matter of very great importance, and I hope the government will give it the most serious consideration.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion that I do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of supply was made by the Minister of Finance. Before the motion was carried one hon. member brought up a question, under the old practice of airing grievances before going into supply. He was followed by two or three other hon. members, after which the Minister of Finance rose to reply. Under our rules the mover of a substantive motion has the reply, and when that reply is made the debate is closed. I should have stopped the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Millar), but I thought he was bringing up another matter. Under the rules of the house the debate is now closed and I should leave the chair.

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): It is usual for the Speaker to call attention to the fact that when the mover of a motion replies the debate is closed. On this occasion Your Honour did not do so, and under these circumstances I submit that the debate should be allowed to continue.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am in the hands of the house, if hon. members desire to continue the debate.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. M. N. CAMPBELL (Mackenzie): On the point of order, I would like to know if there is anything to prevent me, as a private member, from airing any grievance I may have before the motion is carried?

Mr. SPEAKER: No. The practice is that grievances are aired before the house goes into committee of supply, but I thought that when the Minister of Finance spoke the particular grievance which had been brought up was disposed of; when I saw the hon. member for Qu'Appelle rising I thought he was going to bring up some other question. Hon. gentlemen may bring up other points, however.

SUPPLY—HIGH COMMISSIONER'S OFFICE

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I wish to say a few words in connection with the discussion yesterday regarding the High Commissioner's office. I regret to say that a statement made by the Prime Minister on that occasion escaped my notice. At page 3507 of Hansard the right hon. gentleman is reported as having said:

. . . . at a subsequent session the government may ask parliament to approve of the appointment of a financial comptroller. . . .

I entirely disagree with the suggestion that any such officer is needed; I should have noticed the statement yesterday and spoken about it at the time. Ordinarily the High Commissioner's office in London is simply a spending office, although it is quite true that at present there are accounts still open with foreign governments. During the war the High Commissioner's office had to deal with a great many large and important financial questions; these we had to talk over and settle with the British treasury and the British war office. The High Commissioner attended to these questions throughout the war, with the assistance of his office staff, without having to call in any expert assistance. That is all I have to say on the subject; I wish to take this opportunity of expressing my appreciation of the faithful and effective service given by the whole staff of that office during the war.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

INDUSTRIAL AND INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

RULING OF MR. SPEAKER ON MOTION TO REFER BACK REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Mr. SPEAKER: Before I leave the chair I would like to give my ruling on the point of order raised a short time ago by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), with reference to the motion presented by the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh). The point of order was to the effect that when a committee made a final report, that report could not be amended unless the committee were revived.

I think under the present circumstances the word "final" should mean that the report should be considered final only when it is adopted by the house, because the house can always refer a report back to a committee with instructions to amend it in any particular. The hon. member has cited May, page 440, but it was the twelfth edition. In May, thirteenth edition, at page 488 appears the following:

Motions also may be made that the report be recommitted; or recommitted, with minutes of proceedings, so far as they relate to a certain paragraph; or recommitted, and the order of reference amended;

There apears to be a difference between the later and older editions of May. Bourinot says, at page 479:

A report may be referred back to a committee for further consideration, or with instructions giving them power to amend the same in any respect. In this way a committee may regularly reconsider and even reverse a decision it has previously arrived at.

In the present instance there is no question of reversing the conclusions of the report; it is simply a technical change in the number of printed copies to be published. There is a recent and very clear case in point—the famous report of the customs committee some two years ago. A final report was brought before the house on the 18th June, 1926. The following appears on page 4694 of Hansard, June 18th, 1926:

The special committee appointed to investigate the administration of the Department of Customs and Excise, beg leave to present the following as their third and final report:

That was not a standing committee, it was a special committee. The revival of a committee should take place when it is a special committee, if it should take place at all, but when it is a standing committee it is different. A few days afterwards, on June 22, I find that an hon. gentleman well versed in the rules of the house, Mr. Stevens, seconded by Mr. Doucet, moved:

That the report be not now adopted, but that it be referred back to the special committee with instructions to add thereto the following clauses as subclauses to paragraph 6:

So that the practice in the Canadian parliament does not prevent a report, even if it is a final report, of either a special or, better still, a standing committee, being referred back to be amended. The hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) quoted from Beauchesne. But Beauchesne, paragraph 672, says:

A report may be referred back to a committee for further consideration, or with instructions giving them power to amend the same in any respect. In this way a committee may regularly reconsider and even reverse a decision it has previously arrived at. B. 479.

Under these circumstances, my ruling is that the motion is in order, and if it is the desire of the house we will revert to motions and decide if it should be carried or not.

Is it the pleasure of the house to revert to motions, and that the motion presented by the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh) be carried?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: There must be unanimous consent. The motion will therefore stand until to-morrow.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

National Revenue—$13,473,506.

Salaries and contingent expenses of the several ports in the Dominion, including pay for overtime of officers notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act,—and temporary buildings and rentals, $7,538,460.

Salaries and travelling expenses of inspectors of ports and of other officers on inspection, and in connection with the board of customs; the latter including $500 for the secretary and amount required to create positions, make appointments and pay salaries and expenses of Dominion appraisers, notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act, and the said positions and staff so appointed to be wholly excluded from said act, $1,137,725.

Miscellaneous—Printing and stationery, subscriptions to commercial papers, flags, dating stamps, locks, instruments, etc., for various ports of entry, express charges on samples, stationery and legal forms, legal expenses, premiums on guarantee bonds, and uniforms for customs officers, $600,000.

To provide for expenses of maintenance of revenue cruisers and for preventive service, including $6,000 salary F. W. Cowan and an amount required to create positions and make appointments, by the Minister of National Revenue, of officers for the prevention of smuggling, and to investigate reported frauds against the revenue, notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act and the said positions and staff so appointed to be wholly excluded from said act; also to provide for expenses of such officers and for the purchase or charter of vessels and for the purchase or hire of automobiles to be used in the prevention of smuggling or other offences against the revenue laws, $1,896,821.

Amounts to be paid to Department of Justice to be disbursed by and accounted for to it, for secret preventive service,—amount required to create positions and make appointments of officers for the prevention of smuggling and to investigate reported frauds against the revenue, notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act, and the said positions and staff so appointed to be wholly excluded from said act, $100,000.

To provide for the administration of the Business Profits War Tax Act, 1916, and the Income War Tax Act, 1917, and amendments thereof, and authority for this purpose to create positions and make appointments, notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act, and the said positions and the staff so appointed are hereby wholly excluded from the operation of the said act; and salary of $7,000 for the Commissioner of Income Tax, $2,200,000.

To pay Mrs. Turner Ingalls, widow of the late Turner Ingalls, a customs excise enforcement officer who was accidentally killed while on duty, $500.—Total, $13,473,506.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. CAHAN: I called the attention of the Minister of National Revenue last night to a matter on which I did not have the file, and I suggested to the minister that I intended to refer to that matter again on this vote.

The minister said last night that he was not aware that any letter had been received by him or his department from Mr. Dumoulin. You will remember the circumstances, Mr. Chairman, this being a case regarding J. W. Dumoulin of Notre Dame des Bois. Dumoulin is a French Canadian who volunteered at the outset of the war. He served with distinction in that regiment which brought fame and honour to the province of Quebec, the 22nd regiment. On his return when he had been wounded and partly incapacitated, through the instrumentality of some friends, he was recommended for appointment as a preventive officer of customs at Notre Dame des Bois. His appointment was made on or about the 23rd of April, 1919, and he served until the 25th of November, 1926. On that date he received a letter from the Department of Customs and Excise, marked file B.2589-11, as follows:

J. W. Dumoulin, Esq.,
Customs Excise Officer,
Notre Dame des Bois, Que.

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that an order in council was passed on November 19, 1926, dispensing with your services as customs excise enforcement officer at Notre Dame des Bois for political partisanship in the last election contrary to section 32 of the Civil Service Act, and your services will therefore require to terminate immediately upon receipt of this letter.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
G. W. Taylor,
Acting Deputy Minister.

Immediately on receipt of this letter Mr. Dumoulin wrote a letter to the Minister of Customs and Excise, of which letter I have a duplicate copy. It will be remembered that the present Minister of National Revenue was appointed to his office on September 25, 1926, and this letter is dated November 29, 1926. In reading this letter you will notice that there are some discrepancies in construction of language. The mother tongue of Mr. Dumoulin is French, and he has written this letter in English, but I wish that I could write French as well as he writes English. The letter is as follows:

The Hon. Minister of Customs and Excise.
Ottawa, Canada.

Sir,

I am in receipt of a letter from the Department of Customs and Excise, dispensing with my services as a customs and excise enforcement officer at the preventive station of Notre Dame des Bois, Que., for political partisanship in the last election.

I absolutely deny the accusation; and not only as a Canadian citizen but as a disabled veteran of the great war, I should be given a chance of appeal and face my accusers.

I have been employed in the customs service for nearly eight years, and if my dismissal is carried on by your department as intended to, I will come to a conclusion that a man who is doing his duty without doing favours to nobody, creates enemies that will constantly try to ruin himself.

All I want is fair play, and that is the reason why, I anticipate your opinion on the subject, before going any further.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

J. W. Dumoulin.

Of that letter Mr. Dumoulin has not to this day received any acknowledgment. Not having received any acknowledgment, he wrote on December 16, 1926, to the president of his branch of the Great War Veterans' Association asking that the matter be brought to the attention of the government through the branch of the veterans at Ottawa. On the same date, December 16, 1926, he wrote the following letter from Notre Dame des Bois, Quebec:

Secretary-Treasurer, Civil Service Commission,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir:—

Enclosed please find the following copies of letters:

Departmental letter dated November 25 dispensing with my services as customs and excise enforcement officer;

Letter to Minister of Customs and Excise dated November 29 for which I have received no reply;

Letter to President of G.W.V.A. Standstead branch.

Owing to the fact that I have been discharged from the service under false accusation, I appeal to the Civil Service Commission to grant me an inquest to find out if I am not the victim of some violators of the customs laws.

Wishing that my request will meet your approval.

I remain,

Your obedient servant,

J. W. Dumoulin.

Under date of December 23, 1926, the Civil Service Commission replied as follows:

Dear Sir:

I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 16th instant enclosing copies of a letter addressed to you by the department under date of November 25, 1926, advising you that your services as customs excise enforcement officer at Notre Dame des Bois, Que., had been dispensed with by order in council; a letter which you then addressed under date of November 29 to the Honourable the Minister of Customs and Excise, and a letter dated the 16th December to the president, Stanstead branch, G.W.V.A.

I regret that the Civil Service Commission is unable to give you any assistance in this matter as removals are entirely in the hands of the heads of departments. The Civil Service Commission is not in a position to institute any inquiry, or to take any steps towards your reinstatement.

Yours very truly,

W. Foran, Secretary.

J. W. Dumoulin, Esq.,
Notre Dame des Bois, P.Q.

The matter went on. Mr. Dumoulin received no reply from the department, but as the correspondence, which I will not read in full, shows oral communications were made by representatives of the soldiers' association to some officers in the department.

Mr. EULER: I think I should correct my hon. friend there. My recollection is, I think, fairly accurate in this regard, that the officers in the soldiers' organization sent a letter to the department, indeed, I think, to myself. Last night I concluded that the matter was closed and I have not since looked up the file, but I think a letter was received by myself from the organization on behalf of this man and a reply was made.

Mr. CAHAN: I do not wish to go into the correspondence, but it will show, as I proceed, that J. C. G. Herwig, adjustment officer, Canadian legion of the British Empire Service League, of the service bureau at Ottawa, says that he had placed certain representations before the department. I am not, however, insisting upon that at the moment.

Mr. EULER: I have a letter from Mr. Herwig himself acknowledging receipt of a letter.

Mr. CAHAN: Perhaps the matter was dealt with by correspondence. In order to show the good faith of Mr. Dumoulin, I may say that under date of January 10, 1927, he writes to the veterans' association as follows pointing out his case:

In regard to my discharge from the customs service, it looks now as if the complaint was made upon a Conservative committee sign, which was hung across the road from the Conservative committee room to the house where the customs office is only rented. It is easy to understand that this complaint is ridiculous. I cannot be held responsible for what has been done in Notre Dame des Bois, during the last election as I was on relieving duty at the ports of Beebe Junction and Rock Island, and this can be easily found in the customs records.

I accept the minister's statement unreservedly, but I had understood that that fact was further communicated to some officer of the department.

Mr. EULER: I have no knowledge of that.

Mr. CAHAN: If the minster says he has no knowledge of it, I accept his statement unreservedly. Under date of February 10, 1927, Mr. Herwig, who was the adjustment officer of the legion at Ottawa, wrote this letter:

It may not be necessary for Comrade Dumoulin to come to Ottawa at this stage to make his representations, but in order to open the case will he please forward to the Minister of Customs immediately a statutory declaration covering all the points which he wishes to bring forward?

As far as we can ascertain the specific charges against him relate to the streamer across the street from the customs building, and to active participation in the election by canvass, as we understand that certain statements have been made affecting him in this regard.

Having received that, Dumoulin made an affidavit himself and had made by his friends some affidavits which he forwarded to the Department of Customs. I have duplicate copies of some of these and I intend to read them to show his good faith in the matter. The first affidavit is as follows:

To Whom it may concern:

I, J. W. Dumoulin, do solemnly and truly swear, that I did not attend any political meeting or taken any part whatever in the last election.

Signed J. W. Dumoulin.

Province of Quebec,
District of St.Francois,

Sworn before me at Notre Dame des Bois, this seventeenth day of February, 1927.

Signed L. Lavigne,
Justice of the Peace.

Another affidavit is as follows:

To Whom it may concern:

I, J. C. Goudreau, proprietor of the building in which the customs house is rented, do solemnly and truly swear that J. W. Dumoulin then customs officer, had nothing to do with the streamer that was laid across the road from my house to another, furthermore the above mention officer was not in this locality during the election campaign.

Signed J. C. Goudreau.

Province of Quebec,
District of St. Francois,

Sworn before me at Notre Dame des Bois, this seventeenth day of February, 1927.

Signed L. Lavigne,
Justice of the Peace.

Another affidavit:

To Whom it may concern:

I, Edgar Dumoulin, do solemnly and truly swear that J. W. Dumoulin was not responsible for the Conservative committee sign that was laid across the road from the building in which the customs office is located as he was absent during the last election.

Signed Edgar Dumoulin.

Province of Quebec,
District of St. Francois,

Sworn before me at Notre Dame des Bois, this seventeenth day of February, 1927.

Signed L. Lavigne,
Justice of the Peace.

Then there is this further affidavit which I regard as most important:

To Whom it may concern:

I, the undersigned, do solemnly declare and swear, that J. W. Dumoulin was not here during the last political campaign.

That the Conservative committee for this locality was held in my house.

That the Conservative committee sign was hung across the street from my house to Mr. J. C. Goudreau's house, my neighbour.

That one end of the said sign was tied up to my neighbour's house under my instructions after having obtained his permission.

That neither J. W. Dumoulin nor the customs department had anything to do with this committee sign.

That I have seen a document bearing the name of the Liberal leader from this locality, Mr. Ludger Lavigne, stating that he had no knowledge of political activities from the part of Mr. J. W. Dumoulin during the said political campaign; and which document is supposed to be in the Liberal member's hands for Compton county, for his information.

Signed T. Goudreau.

Sworn before me at Notre Dame des Bois, Que., this 21st day of February, 1927.

Signed L. Lavigne,
Justice of the Peace.

I thought that this had been communicated to the department, but I believe, in view of the minister's statement, that it was not. To show his good faith, Mr. J. C. Goudreau wrote also to the president of the soldiers' association under date of Februay 21, 1927, in which letter he says:

It has come to my knowledge that Mr. J. W. Dumoulin, former customs officer of this port, has lost his position on account of a streamer that I personally permitted that one end of the said streamer be tied up to my house.

He is the proprietor of the house mentioned before. He goes on:

I regret very much that such an ordinary action from my part had been imposed upon the above mentioned veteran.

Here is the case: I am the proprietor of the building in which the customs office was located. I have rented to the Canadian department only three rooms of this building that contains four tenements in all. I occupy myself the first tenement, so when they call this the customs building, it's wrong! It's only the customs office in my own building in which I live constantly. This being said, whoever is the customs officer, how can he be responsible for what I may do in such occasions? It's evident, that all these reports are false as the said officer was on relieving duty at the time.

Then later, on April 12, 1927, Mr. Herwig wrote from Ottawa, after, as we supposed, having had communication with the department, but I withdraw that because I have not definite knowledge. He writes:

It would seem that in order to clear him it will be necessary to have the member retract.

That is the member of the House of Commons representing Compton county. He goes on to suggest that Mr. Dumoulin should see the member and have him retract. Then on April 16, 1927, Mr. Dumoulin wrote to the Department of Finance, as follows:

Notre-Dame des Bois, Que.,
April 16th, 1927.

Department of Finance,
Ottawa, Canada.

Sirs:

As I have been dismissed from customs service in November last, for alleged political partisanship, (accusation I have denied and could not get inquiry), I apply to your department for refund of my superannuation funds.

Having waited five months for the said inquiry, no need to say that I expect this refund at once.

Yours truly,
(Sgd) J. W. DUMOULIN.

On April 21, there is a statement which I am going to read, not because it involves the department, but because it is a matter that should be brought to the notice of the hon. member for Compton. Mr. Dumoulin writes the president of the soldiers' association under date of April 21, in which letter he says:

I have seen the member for Compton county at his home last Monday, and there before witness, he declared that he simply transferred complaints he had received from individuals to the Minister of Customs which caused my destitution without inquiry. There is the wrong! As you know, it is necessary that the member has seen personally a civil servant making politics and a declaration made to that effect, before such an employee can be dismissed without an inquiry, otherwise it is necessary to summon witnesses and give an inquiry. The member cannot fulfil that condition as he did not know me.

I am afraid that perhaps he was in error as to the procedure in such cases, but I call that to the attention of the minister again because Dumoulin is, I think, a splendid example of the young men growing up in our province. He had a splendid career overseas. I was in France behind the lines, where I was in perfect safety, and, time and time again, I have heard men speak in the highest words of praise of the splendid bravery of the French-Canadian corps. I have seen them in hospitals, and my heart bled for them at times. I am proud of them, and proud to represent a constituency from Quebec that was associated with such splendid bravery and valour, and therefore I take this dismissal very much to heart; and because I believe that this young man has been wrongly treated, because I believe that he has been wrongly condemned, I think the government and parliament of this country should make the utmost restitution to him that lies within their power.

Mr. EULER: As I said yesterday, Mr. Chairman, in connection with this matter, it had already given me very considerable concern. That concern is somewhat increased by the remarks just made by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George. I do not know that I can add a very great deal to what I said yesterday in connection with the matter.

The dismissal took place in exactly the way I stated yesterday, in accordance with the practice which has been observed for many years, and with which I may say now, I am not in very great sympathy.

Replying at once to a statement said to have been made, that no distinct charge was made to me by the member for the constituency that this man had exercised political partisanship, I want to say, as emphatically as I can, that such a charge was made on the part of the member that he had personal knowledge of the activities in a political way of Mr. Dumoulin. That letter is here. It is written in French, but my hon. friend is at perfect liberty to see it. It was following that, and in accordance with the established practice, that the dismissal was made. Perhaps where I may have been at fault, and I must accept any responsibility that fairly comes to me, was in this connection: A letter, I understand, was received by myself from Mr. Dumoulin taking exception to his dismissal and denying the charge. That no reply was sent to that letter, I must say is a matter of great surprise to me, because if there is one thing which I think I always do, it is at least to acknowledge any communication that is sent to me. Later on, however, another letter was sent to myself by the soldiers' association. That letter I did reply to, as is shown on the file, agreeing to an investigation if the man asked for it. That the affidavits were later on sent to myself appears to be quite true. I was not in Ottawa at the time, as is shown by the file, and I did not even know the file was here until I saw it a moment ago. The receipt of those affidavits was acknowledged by my secretary who says that he submitted them to me later, which statement I do not for one moment doubt. If I at that time took no further notice of these affidavits, and no acknowledgment was made, it must have been, I say quite frankly, because of the pressure of work due to my absence, and possibly supposing that the man had been dismissed in the usual way and that nothing probably could be done. But this does stand, that I expressed myself as quite willing to have an investigation made, but also, as I said last night, I could not see exactly what remedy could be applied, because the man was out of the civil service and could only be reappointed by the Civil Service Commission itself. This may not be satisfactory to my hon. friends opposite, but last night I said I was quite willing to have another investigation made. Now I say to the committee that this morning I directed that such an investigation be made. I further directed that an order be prepared that the sum paid into the superannuation fund by Mr. Dumoulin should be refunded to him. Of course this repayment will depend on the action of the treasury board. I do not know, Mr. Chairman, that I can say any more. It is an unfortunate affair. If the investigation discloses that this officer was entirely innocent of the charge made against him, so far as I am concerned I shall do all I can to have him restored to some place in the service, if he cares to come back.

Mr. CAHAN: I may say to the minister that, as I understand it, at the time this young man was dismissed there were, as we are all aware, all sorts of rumours and suspicions, due to the hiatus in the customs examination, and various firms who could have given him employment refused to do so unless he could produce a certificate of character from the department, to which he had no access. The impression went around that in some way he had been mixed up with the customs scandals, and he had to go across the border to get employment. I am instructed that the customs department should have in its records information to the effect that during the time of that campaign he had been taken away from his own office at Notre Dame des Bois and assigned to special service on the border, and was so engaged during the whole time that he was alleged to have been acting as a partisan in putting out this flag across the street. I think the minister might well examine into that fact. It is so stated in the man's affidavit, and I believe it to be true.

Mr. EULER: This man was sent on relief duty at some time near the election, but the charge does not say that he was active just at the time of the election, but during the campaign.

Mr. CAHAN: I can well understand how the minister might be misled, but at the time this banner was put out that is made the basis of the local charge he certainly was not there; I am sure of that.

[Mr. Euler.]

Mr. EULER: At the moment I have no real knowledge of the details. If the facts are as stated, the whole matter is regrettable, and I can only take the action that I have indicated.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Mr. Chairman, we have a statement from the minister that if an investigation is held, and this returned man is proven innocent, the minister will do what he can to get him a position. I ask the house; should not that man be returned to his job, if this investigation proves that he was unfairly dismissed? All returned men will demand an answer to that question, because any of them might be treated similarly. The minister admits that it was an unwilling act on his part, that he was taken by the throat by some person.

Mr. EULER: No.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Well, the minister must admit that he did it willingly or unwillingly. He said he did not do it willingly, so he must have been forced by some influence behind the throne to treat this man in an unfair way by dismissing him from his job. I am in sympathy with what the minister has said. I may add that I commanded a unit in the first division, and in it were at least fifty or sixty French-Canadians, who could not speak English, but I am ready to declare here or in any part of the Dominion that I had no more loyal and no more efficient soldiers than those men. If this investigation is held and the man is found innocent, I am confident that the returned men from one end of the country to the other will demand that he be put back on his job.

Mr. EULER: I may say to my hon. friend that so far as I am concerned, I have absolutely no power whatever—and he knows it—to restore the man to the position he held; the Civil Service Commission has that power, fortunately or unfortunately as it may be in this case. I also want to assure him in absolute sincerity that neither he nor anybody else can take me by the throat and force me to do anything that I do not desire to do.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I take your own words.

Mr. JACOBS: Mr. Chairman, the airing of this matter before the committee this afternoon ought to do some good. It seems to me that this vicious practice of accepting a statement from one partisan that another partisan has been guilty of taking an interest in politics ought to stop.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. JACOBS: Dismissing a man and trying him afterwards is what is known as Jedburgh justice. We should do away with that. I do not think the government ought to fear an investigation of any kind in these matters of alleged partisanship. There is no reason to be afraid of an investigation. There is no more independent man in the house than the Minister of National Revenue, and I am sure that if at the time he felt there was an attempt to put something over on him he would have been the very first to look carefully into the matter. The trouble is he is merely a cog in the wheel. It is a vicious practice, which arose, I think under some Tory administration.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. JACOBS: I may be wrong.

Mr. STEVENS: Don't spoil a really good speech.

Mr. JACOBS: As I said last night, we Liberals should do better than the other fellows. Here is an opportunity of doing something to correct an abuse which is clogging the wheels of the administration. If the Liberal party cannot remain in power except in this particular way, the sooner it goes out of power the better. I do not like to give my adherence to any party that will knowingly agree to any such injustice as has been related by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan). I think I have as much independence as the Minister of National Revenue, and I certainly would not want to agree with anything of this kind. If it is found that wrong has been done to this man, Civil Service Commission to the contrary or not, some way should be found of giving him relief. The old saying, it is easy to find a stick if you want to beat a dog, is applicable here. If the man cannot be put back in his exact position, why, give him a better position, give him something which will compensate him for the injustice which has been done. There are lots of positions in the departments of state, and if I were a member of the administration I would be one of the first publicly to acknowledge that a wrong has been inflicted, and to declare that we are big enough and broad enough to correct it.

Mr. STEVENS: I do not know, Mr. Chairman, whether it is desired to continue the discussion on this matter. My hon. friend (Mr. Jacobs) who has just taken his seat has very largely voiced my views. I have been in parliament a good many years, and I never recommended the dismissal of anyone.

Mr. JACOBS: You were not long enough in power.

Mr. STEVENS: I came to parliament in 1911, when we had an excellent opportunity to do that.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): They did not wait for your recommendation then, they did it automatically.

Mr. STEVENS: In my constituency at that time there were six or seven hundred government employees who had been appointed by the preceding administration. I did not recommend the dismissal of any, and none were dismissed, for partisan or any other reasons. I think we ought to bear this in mind: the different sections of the house are partisan in their views. We know that. But in 1918 we passed the Civil Service Act and erected a Civil Service Commission to administer the civil service. Personally, I am quite willing to join with hon. gentlemen opposite or in any other part of the house in an endeavour to get away from the old-fashioned partisan system. I grant it is difficult. We are all human, and undoubtedly there will be a tendency to favour recommendations presented by friends. I would make just one suggestion to the minister. Here we have an instance of an obvious error, that is, if the facts presented by my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George are borne out by a further examination by him, an obvious error has been made. That is not a question whether partisan recommendation is good or bad; it is a question of injustice to an individual; and I would suggest to the minister that if it is shown that an error was made, and he and the government are satisfied that it was made, surely there is nothing in the Civil Service Act to prevent the rescission of that order in council which was passed, we might say, upon an improper basis so far as information is concerned. I suggest that to the minister as the way out of the difficulty and in order that justice might be done to this man.

Now I want to pay tribute to the Minister of Justice for the very excellent smoke screen he threw out last night over the question under discussion. I think he played his part very ably and very well. But I might call his attention and the attention of the Minister of National Revenue to this fact: I was not discussing this list or that list or the lawyers or counsel who were represented on those lists. I was reading to the minister a section of the report of the royal commission, and I wish to read it again, in order to bring the Minister of Justice and the Minister of National Revenue back to the point I was making.

Mr. EULER: I never got away from it.

Mr. STEVENS: We did get a long distance away from it. The report states:

We see no reason why parties committing frauds on the revenue should not be proceeded against with the same degree of promptitude and efficiency as usually characterizes prosecutions for enforcement of the provisions of the criminal code. This, according to the evidence, has not been so in the past.

Mr. EULER: That is referring, of course, to the past.

Mr. STEVENS: Quite so. But the point I am coming to is that the royal commission was directing the attention of the government and of parliament—because this is a document of parliament—to the fact that the system followed in the past had not brought satisfactory results. And they make this suggestion:

For this purpose competent counsel should be retained by the department throughout the Dominion to act in such matters.

The minister may take the list he has had prepared and under which he is now acting; I am not complaining about that. Out of that list select, as the royal commission suggests, competent counsel. And, as the report states:

It is very desirable that wherever possible the legal representative should be familiar with the customs and excise act and regulations and that where one case has been handled to the satisfaction of the department it should be free to use the same legal agent in other cases.

Let the Minister of Justice take his list, about which I have not a single complaint to make so far as his personnel is concerned. Out of that list select counsel for the Department of National Revenue, and where such counsel give good service let them be continued in that particular work, because they become familiar with the technique of the customs and other laws appertaining to the department. The report proceeds:

—and that where the outcome of one case has indicated the unsuitability of the agent the department should be able to secure promptly a more suitable representative.

In other words, if the person appointed from his list does not proceed with the cases, shows a lack of competence or energy, or inattention to business, then drop him from further cases. That is my point. I wish to make it clear that I am not complaining about the list or about the source from which the minister gets the list of names to be selected. But I do call attention to this—and the Minister of National Revenue gave us evidence of it last night—that in the past, according to the report, the results have been unsatisfactory; because very frequently, if not almost entirely, these cases were farmed out to different counsel instead of care being taken to select those who would prosecute them effectively.

We might as well face this fact also. During the last two years the act has been so amended as to provide more severe penalties; the act is a much more important statute than it was two years ago. The first amendment was made, I think, in 1925 and subsequent amendments were introduced in 1926, I think, and 1927, strengthening the act and making the penalties more severe; so that prosecution under the act is to-day a different matter from what it was prior to 1925. There again I call the attention of the Minister of Justice particularly to the necessity of selecting such counsel as will prosecute these cases vigorously. The Minister of Justice will acquit me of seeking to suggest any partisanship in the selection; that is not my point. The point is that, according to these reports, we have not had the results which we might reasonably expect; and the reports suggest that selection should be carefully made among those who are offered for appointments to this particular part of the service.

Mr. JACOBS: Does it occur to the hon. member that what he calls strengthening the law, with regard to penalties and so on, has defeated its own object?

Mr. STEVENS: I will meet my hon. friend in one respect. In 1922 I think, or possibly 1923, we did increase the duties. I am glad my hon. friend has brought this matter to my attention because it is very important, and I am a firm believer in reducing the duties, both excise and import, on liquors.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. STEVENS: I did not say that frivolously; I am sincere about it. In 1923—I am speaking from memory—we raised the tax from $2.40 to $10.

Mr. EULER: In 1920.

Mr. STEVENS: In 1920? It does not matter; it was some years ago.

Mr. VENIOT: It was $6 and then was increased to $10.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes; we increased it from $2.40 to $6 and then to $10. Now $10 a gallon constitutes such an enormous margin of difference between the original cost and the actual selling price that, in itself, it is a most attractive profit for the bootlegger or the smuggler. My hon. friend from Maple Creek last night interjected the suggestion. "Lower the duties"—

Mr. McINTOSH: The member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) said that.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes; and the suggestion was that protection was causing the difficulty. I would remind the hon. member that the two rates are about the same: $9, and import $10. In other words, in the liquor business we are following the strictly taxation-for-revenue principle. That is, we impose a duty of $10 on imports, and $9 excise. But the difficulty lies here: So high is this rate of duty that it offers a strong inducement, in the excessive profit that can be made, for both smugglers and evaders of the excise law. I therefore suggest this for the consideration of the government—and I have no hesitancy in asserting my own views on it—that we should consider the reduction of the duty on these liquors. If we reduced the duty on liquor I believe we would largely remove the incentive to bootlegging, as far as excise duty is concerned, and smuggling as far as import duty is concerned, and further I think it would be conducive to the distribution of a better quality of liquor, while the revenue would suffer very little. From that standpoint the law amendment has been an injury rather than a help. Undoubtedly my hon. friend had in mind the excessive penalties to which reference frequently has been made. I confess that I have an open mind on that subject, but I would not be prepared to support a repeal of these rather severe penalties, because when we get into that realm we are not dealing with liquor. By the way, just here I might interject, that the same argument which I applied to liquor applies equally to cigarettes, and perhaps more so. In regard to the law amendments to which my hon. friend has referred, the stiffening of the penalties, these deal largely with the smuggling of valuable merchandise such as silk goods and the cheaper forms of jewellery, such as ordinary gold-plated articles.

Mr. SMITH (Stormont): Would not the same argument with regard to the reduction of duty on liquor apply to these articles?

Mr. STEVENS: I do not think that is the point there. The point is that my hon. friend referred to the penalties, which I believe are a fine of $100 in certain cases, and in other cases where the value of the goods is above a certain sum it is obligatory that offenders be sentenced to a term of imprisonment. The difficulty is that there has grown up in Canada and in the United States, but I think particularly in Canada, a certain class of very adroit smugglers dealing almost exclusively in these valuable but more or less light articles such as silk goods, dress goods, jewellery and other articles. So perplexing has become the problem of enforcement of the law against this class of smugglers that I think the officers of the department have been a unit in asking for a more severe penalty. I may tell my hon. friend at the moment I am not prepared to agree with the suggestion that those penalties should be reduced.

Mr. POULIOT: May I ask a question? The hon. member said he was in favour of a reduction of duty on alcohol and spirits; does he mean the excise or the customs duty?

Mr. STEVENS: They both go together. At present the excise duty is $9 per gallon and the import duty is $10. I would reduce them both; I would not fix a figure, but I would not object to going back to where we were eight or ten years ago. These liquors could stand duties of $3 and $4 per gallon, but $9 and $10 is altogether too high. I think in the interests of temperance itself, and I care not what view one may hold, it would be a very sound move and certainly would lessen the urge for immorality in the way of violations of the law.

Mr. EULER: Perhaps I might reply just here to what my hon. friend has said in connection with the retention of lawyers for the prosecution of our cases. I am free to admit that perhaps there might be some further improvement in the method now used, but to a very considerable extent we are following the practice of using the same lawyers. For example, within the last two months in the city of Montreal, and in the city of Toronto we have arrested some seventy persons for defrauding us of sales tax. In the city of Montreal I believe the same lawyer has been retained to prosecute all these cases, and I think two lawyers are handling nearly all the cases recommended for prosecution by the parliamentary committee. In connection with the prosecutions against the brewers and distillers for sales tax—and I am sorry to say most of them are in the province of Ontario—we have retained the same solicitor in all cases, and we have been very successful. In the income tax branch we have one income tax specialist, who is known to most hon. members; I refer to Mr. Elliott, who takes all the important cases for the department. In some of the more distant towns and cities we have other lawyers who prosecute cases; that is the case in the city of Vancouver, where my hon. friend resides.

Mr. STEVENS: And he does very well.

Mr. EULER: With regard to the securing of convictions, I must admit that that is very difficult, even in cases dealing with self-confessed smugglers. I have in mind at the moment one case which happened not very long ago, that of a man who smuggled jewellery. He was caught in the act and confessed his guilt, but sentence has not been passed upon him as yet.

Mr. STEVENS: Would the minister pardon me if I ask what was the reason? It strikes me that this is a most appalling condition.

Mr. EULER: That is beyond me; I do not know, but I will give the opinion that there is an impression or an idea in certain sections of the country that smuggling is not really a serious offence; if the offender makes restitution they think that is about sufficient. So long as that idea is prevalent among most of the judges and juries of this country we are not going to have the prevention of smuggling we should have.

Dealing with smuggling itself, however, I will say to the committee in all sincerity that at present there is not a great deal of commercial smuggling in Canada. That statement is borne out by the royal commission, and I believe it to be true. If I had time I could read a good many letters, particularly from merchants in Quebec, where there was a good deal of smuggling formerly, in which they say that the smuggling of silks to which my hon. friend has just referred seems to have stopped almost entirely.

Mr. STEVENS: Would the minister agree that the law, to which reference has been made, has had a salutary effect in that regard?

Mr. EULER: I believe it has, and I will say further that representations were made by the royal commission suggesting that the penalties were so great that the judges and juries in certain parts of the country would not convict, because they would not send people to jail. However, I did not accept that recommendation; I brought in no amendment to the act in that regard. I believe this is a deterrent to some extent, and I am going to try it for another year, to see whether or not it is the proper method. If I should then decide, in the light of experience, that we fail in our purpose and that juries will not convict people because they must go to jail, and if I am convinced that we will not attain any good result by following this method, I will be ready to consider going back to some milder form of punishment, or providing some alternative punishment. As the law is now, in some instances when a man is found guilty by a jury the judge has no alternative but to commit him to jail.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): May I ask if any of the following lawyers are employed as counsel by the minister: Newton Wesley Rowell, R. L. Calder, R. B. Law, G. C. Lindsay or W. F. O'Connor? I presume they are not being so employed, because if they were I think the estimates of the minister would be one or two million dollars higher. I notice that the first-named gentleman, who assisted the royal commission, drew $44,060 as fees, $3,230 for living allowances—it must have cost him more for meals than it costs in the parliamentary restaurant—and $3,140.84 for travelling and other expenses. I presume the 84 cents was for tips. That makes a total of $50,430.84 paid this one gentleman for work lasting less than a year. He can wear socks the year round on that, no doubt about it. The sum of $112,535.82—they did not forget to put in the 82 cents—is what the counsel got, and the commissioners got $28,559.48, or a total of $141,095.30. I hope the minister will be wise enough to steer clear of these gentlemen as advisers or counsel. If he does not we can look for much higher estimates next year.

Mr. EULER: The hon. gentleman has asked me whether Mr. Rowell is retained by the department. He is retained by the department in the prosecution of the cases against the brewers, and he has been very successful.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): He ought to be.

Mr. EULER: I hold no brief for him, but he is receiving less in the employ of the government than he would in his private practice, or so I am informed. He has obtained verdicts against the brewers and distillers by excellent work, which I think will pay this government in dollars and cents.

I stated last night that Mr. Calder was employed now. I hope my hon. friend does not mind my mentioning it again, but Mr. Calder was first employed while the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) was Minister of the Department of Customs, and we have retained him since that time. Mr. Lindsay is employed at the moment on a special mission of investigation in the province of British Columbia, and Messrs. Law and O'Connor are not now in the employ of the department.

Mr. MANION: The tone in which the minister has mentioned Mr. Calder so often since yesterday makes one wonder if he is apologizing for him.

Mr. EULER: The question was asked by the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards).

Mr. MANION: The minister has so continually alluded to the appointment of Mr. Calder by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre that I wondered if he was apologizing for him.

I wish to mention something in a few words which was brought up by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, and I do it because, as the house knows, I have had some experience during the last year with the liquor question on the Ontario commission. Now that I am no longer associated with it I can speak, which I could not do in the past. I wish to support entirely the position taken by the member for Vancouver Centre—of course, this is more for next year than for this year—that it would be a good move on the part of the government, when they are considering the duties and excise on liquor, to take up the question of reducing both the duty and the excise in the future. If I may be permitted to take a couple of minutes, with the consent of the committee, I would like to give one or two reasons. In addition to the smuggling which was mentioned by the member for Vancouver Centre, there is the further fact that a large portion of the people in our country, and in other countries, insist on sometimes drinking liquor, and it is far better that they drink good liquor than poor liquor. If the duties and excise are so high that these people cannot afford to buy good liquor, they are then forced to drink home made liquor, or home brew as it is called, and also alcohol. I might tell the minister that both through my experience in the past year, and my experience as a medical man, I do know that the use of diluted alcohol as a beverage is becoming very general among a certain class of people in this country. There is a very large consumption of diluted alcohol for beverage purposes. It is split three or four ways, as the expression is, making three or four bottles for one bottle of alcohol. I repeat that if we are going to have people drinking liquor, it is far better to have them drink good liquor. While alcohol, perhaps, is not as bad as some of the home brew that is made, at the same time it is not considered a good drink by those who are experienced in the business. I am not speaking of those who are experienced in drinking, but those who are experienced in the business itself. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the government will be well advised to consider seriously this whole question with a view to the downward revision of the excise on liquor produced in this country, and the duty on liquor brought in. I have no desire to increase the consumption of liquor, but I believe in this way while the consumption of good liquor might be increased, the consumption of bad liquor would be materially decreased.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. POULIOT: I have just a few words to say regarding what was said in the latter part of the afternoon about the Dumoulin case. The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) made a very eloquent plea on behalf of Mr. Dumoulin. I do not know anything about the case, but it should not be taken for granted that the minister has made a mistake in regard to it. He has granted an investigation and the investigation will show whether or not a mistake has been made. It would be improper to decide the case before the investigation is held by stating now that the minister has made a mistake. I do not know who has been appointed to conduct the investigation, but I will ask the minister to give to the investigator strict instructions to present the report only to the minister himself and not to give it to the members opposite as occurred when Mr. Boivin was Minister of Customs and Excise. At that time hon. members opposite were told everything that was done by the officials of the department before the minister knew a word about the matter, and I am sure the present minister, who is an energetic man, will give instructions accordingly. It is the proper way to act and no one will blame me for making this statement.

I have a word to say about commercial smuggling. It is a fake but it is a fake that was used to kill the predecessor of the Minister of National Revenue. During the election of 1926 we heard that there was a great deal of commercial smuggling, but afterwards the evidence was given before the commission and the report was that the smuggling was chiefly in liquor and cigarettes.

I come to the third question on which I wish to say a word, and that is the reduction in the duty on spirits. I asked the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) if he thought a reduction in the excise and customs duties would be proper, and he said he thought so. That tax was imposed about eight years ago by another government. I think it is a sound method of taxation. Naturally, opinions may differ in that regard but I believe, as I have already said in the house, that the excise duty should be reduced and that the customs duty should be left as it is. My reason for saying this is that it is just as well to encourage Canadian distillers. If they are encouraged, people, as the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) has very wisely said, will not drink more but they will drink better liquor. I make a distinction between wood alcohol and grain alcohol. I do not know whether the hon. member for Fort William, when he spoke of alcohol, meant wood alcohol or grain alcohol. I have seen in the drug stores wood alcohol which is used for rubbing purposes and for heating purposes.

Mr. MANION: I meant grain alcohol. Wood alcohol is deadly poison.

Mr. POULIOT: As for grain alcohol I am not a medical man, but if it is well distilled it is hardly worse than any other kind of liquor, and I know that doctors very often prescribe for sick people white wheat whiskey, which is a kind of grain alcohol.

Mr. MANION: May I suggest to my hon. friend that good doctors do not?

Mr. POULIOT: If some of my friends ever get a prescription for white wheat whiskey I will tell them to be careful on account of what my hon. friend has just said. But to conclude, I notice with pleasure, but also with astonishment, that my hon. friends opposite advocate a reduction in duty even on alcohol, and I wonder if this is because Mr. Ferguson is doing a very good business as his friend from Quebec is doing from the sale of liquors.

Mr. McPHERSON: Just in reference to the remarks made in connection with the customs and excise duties on spirituous liquors and tobacco I should like to draw to the attention of the committee the fact that the matter is in a rather peculiar position. If my recollection is right, the increase from approximately $2 to $10 a gallon on spirituous liquors was imposed by a government at a time when eight out of nine provinces of the Dominion allowed it to be sold only on prescription. In other words a medicinal article was highly taxed for the purpose of revenue. I rather think that was about the proportion of the Dominion which was under the so-called Temperance Act. If it was necessary on behalf of raising revenue to tax that, then at the present time when the Dominion is coming back to using spirituous liquors as a beverage, it would appear to me that it would take some arguing to show a reason why what is practically an amusement should be relieved of taxation whereas a medicinal article should be highly taxed. If on the other hand the contention is that the tax is not needed now because the revenue is not needed, I would suggest that there are coming into the Dominion many necessaries on which the duty could much more readily be lowered. I have no objection to the principle of the thing, but the revenue is there; we need it yet and tobacco and liquors are logical articles to be taxed to the utmost.

Mr. BOURASSA: But my hon. friend is forgetting the reason given by the Minister of National Revenue, that too high a tax defeats its own object. Therefore, if he is considering the question of revenue, he should take into consideration the experience of every country. The moment you raise the duty to a point where the premium to fraud and smuggling is such that it induces many people, so-called honest and decent people, to trade in it, because it is the most profitable trade to engage in, from that moment your revenue goes down. That has been the experience in France, in England, everywhere; so that as regards revenue there is not the slightest doubt that the high figure at which both the excise and customs duties stand on liquor and tobacco, especially cigarettes, as the hon. member for Vancouver Centre pointed out this afternoon, did not increase substantially the revenue of the country but increased tremendously the process of smuggling and thereby helped other kinds of smuggling. Because people who make of smuggling a trade smuggle not only liquor and cigarettes, but something else besides. So it not only deprives the country of revenue upon these very articles, but helps the smugglers to carry on their trade in other articles as well. The minister would certainly be well advised to give heed to the expressions of opinion given here this afternoon and prepare for a substantial reduction next year in the duty on these articles; then everybody will find, after a little while, and if the law is properly enforced, that the revenues will increase, and that drunkenness will certainly not increase.

An hon. member has spoken of alcohol being used for some years as a medicine. Then something very extraordinary must have happened in those virtuous provinces which adopted prohibition; there was a tremendous amount of illness in the fifteen days around Christmas and New Year's in various cities in prohibition territory. The government liquor store in Montreal, near what is called Pied du Courant, received orders from Toronto alone for two or three carloads of liquor at Christmas time to fill doctors' prescriptions.

Mr. MANION: When was that?

Mr. BOURASSA: I think it was two or three years ago, not while my hon. friend was on the commission.

Mr. MANION: The reason I ask the question is that it has been against the law to get liquor into Toronto from Quebec.

Mr. BOURASSA: That did not prevent it. There was such an epidemic of sudden illness, and such a number of doctors' prescriptions required at Christmas time, that the druggists of Toronto and many other towns could not supply the demand; and they immediately applied to the liquor store in Montreal to get that very helpful medicine and fill up the drug stores at that time.

Mr. SANDERSON: An epidemic of flu.

Mr. BOURASSA: I presume so, and I think that is one of the things which have induced Mr. Ferguson, very properly and very sensibly, to adopt a new law, upon which I take this opportunity of congratulating the Ontario government.

Mr. BROWN: On the question of the reduction of the excise duties on liquors, I know that I hold views on liquor that are not universally held in this house. With me, liquors are not classified as good and bad but as bad and worse. If revenue were the only question to be considered, all well and good; but I hope that when we come to consider this question, it will be considered not from the standpoint of revenue only, but from the standpoint of how we can bring about a greater condition of sobriety among our people. Just at the present moment I would not like to express an opinion one way or the other as to how it would affect our revenue. To me that is not the all-important question, nor is the matter of the illegal sale the important question. Granted that the liquors are of the same kind, illegally sold liquor is no worse and no better than liquor that is legally sold. I should be very glad to consider the question from the standpoint of its influence upon the consumption of liquor, and for my part, before sanctioning the proposal to reduce the customs and excise duties, I should like to be thoroughly convinced in my own mind that such a measure would tend towards greater sobriety, and towards a reduction in the consumption of liquor rather than towards increased consumption. In reasoning on other matters we naturally feel that to make things cheaper and more accessible leads to increased consumption, and if there is any reason that can be pointed out why that seemingly natural effect would not result in this particular case, I for my part would be willing to give consideration to it. I say this, not simply to foist my views on the house at this time, but to emphasize what we know to be a very widespread sentiment throughout the country, and that is that the handling of liquors for the sake of profit is not a business we like to see our governments engaged in, whether directly through the revenue or through any measure of government control. I know that these sentiments are not popular in all corners, but they are held very widely by people in this country who would like to see our nation above everything else a nation of sober people.

Mr. BOURASSA: There is another matter I should like the minister to consider. What are the measures taken now by his department to prevent the entry into Canada of the filthy literature which is flooding this country in such quantities, coming from the United States and elsewhere, but mainly from the United States?

Mr. EULER: I am not sure whether my hon. friend has reference particularly to what enters the province of Quebec.

Mr. BOURASSA: No, generally.

Mr. EULER: The department has authority to prevent the entry of immoral or seditious literature, personally I am not very much attached to the office of censor. I am of opinion that a good deal of freedom, reasonable freedom, in these matters should be permitted to the people. I am not a very great advocate of paternalism, but at the same time I would say this, that where we are clearly convinced that books or papers or literature, if you can call it literature, of an immoral character or that is seditious or indecent is coming into this country, we will take the necessary steps to prohibit its entry into Canada. I have not had any complaint for three or four months until just within the last few days with regard to such importations, and for the information of my hon. friend from Labelle, I would say that instructions have been issued by the department within the last few weeks with regard to this very matter. I will read a copy of a letter which has been forwarded to every collector and sub-collector in the province of Quebec. It says:

Dear Sir:

The attention of the department has been drawn to the fact that there are many books and other publications printed in French and imported from France into the province of Quebec, which are of an undesirable character.

Four sample copies of publications have been submitted to the department recently, entitled—

I am not going to take the responsibility of pronouncing these names; they are in French; the names of these publications are given:

These have been examined and are found to be immoral or indecent and prohibited importation by item 1201, schedule "C" of the customs tariff.

You are instructed to keep a close watch on all importations of books from France, and seizures are to be made of those which are obviously immoral or indecent. If any doubt exists, sample copies are to be sent to the department for examination.

Please give this matter your personal attention and acknowledge receipt of this letter.

These instructions are now in the hands of every collector and subcollector in the province of Quebec. If we have complaints from any other provinces, we shall take such action as may be deemed necessary.

In addition to the publications named in this circular, some fifteen or sixteen books whose names I cannot pronounce have been seized at the port of Montreal during the last year.

Mr. DUNNING: None of the classics, I hope.

Mr. EULER: I am not sure; I am not so well acquainted with the French classics, or perhaps the classics in any language. The commissioner informs me that in the rest of the country there is an average of fifteen seizures a month. A number of seizures have been made from booksellers in the city of Montreal.

Mr. HOCKEN: Is any person appointed to examine the flood of literature that comes in from the United States, to discover its character?

Mr. EULER: We have a man in the department at Ottawa to whom is committed the duty of examining any literature of that kind.

Mr. HOCKEN: Notwithstanding that, these very objectionable publications come in right along. I wonder what his idea is. As long as there is no absolute profanity I presume he allows the publications to circulate. But magazines are coming in from the United States so suggestive that they should not be allowed on the bookstands where young girls and young boys can view them.

Mr. EULER: If the hon. gentleman will send us copies of those magazines they will be dealt with. I would not entertain the practice of having a man at every port to examine every book or publication that comes in; but if citizens will send to the department copies of any objectionable books or magazines they will be carefully examined, and if found unworthy of circulation they will not be allowed to come in to this country. It seems to me absolutely inconsistent to expect this or any other department to keep out such objectionable literature when we have in our picture shows and our theatres at least as indecent things as we find in certain magazines and books.

Mr. HOCKEN: With the picture shows and theatres my hon. friend has nothing to do; with this objectionable literature he has, and he cannot evade his responsibility by calling our attention to other objectionable things.

Mr. EULER: I am not trying to evade any responsibility.

Mr. HOCKEN: I say without hesitation, Mr. Chairman, that there is an enormous flood of literature of the most objectionable character coming in from the United States.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Have you submitted a list of that to the department?

Mr. HOCKEN: I do not consider it my duty to do more than draw the attention of the department to the facts. If my hon. friend had been here the last four or five sessions he would have heard me speak on this question. Last session I brought here an armful of publications, none of which I think should be allowed to be sold in this country on the ground of their suggestiveness. Such filth should not be put within the reach of the young people of Canada. I am not exactly a puritan, Mr. Chairman, I can appreciate good literature, but when we find magazines produced for the sole purpose of appealing to the most vicious traits of humanity, I think we should exclude them. I know that in the United States magazines are published under a certain name, and when the Post Office department of the republic puts a ban upon the first issue, the publishers change the name and get out another issue so that sales may not be interrupted. That practice is carried on right along. Magazines are allowed entry here which are banned in the country where they are printed. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that a person of good judgment, and one who realizes the dangerous character of these filthy publications, should be appointed to go over them, say, once a week, and if an issue is found to be objectionable the magazine should be excluded perpetually.

Mr. BOURASSA: Hear, hear.

Mr. HOCKEN: The publisher who errs once by circulating that kind of literature should not be given another opportunity to offend. I submit to the minister that he select a person for this work with the qualifications that I have stated. If that were his whole duty the country could well afford to pay him three or four thousand dollars a year to guard the morals of our young people. Let him examine these magazines one after another, and in my opinion it would not take him long to weed out these objectionable publications. That is the responsibility of the minister.

Mr. EULER: Perhaps my hon. friend was not present when I stated that every week we are excluding these objectionable books and magazines. If he has knowledge that others are coming in that should be excluded, and he will submit them to the department, the necessary action will be taken. The hon. gentleman says that I ought to get a suitable man, a man of judgment, to censor these publications. I think we already have such a man. He sat in the press gallery for years. I have never had any complaint as to his qualifications for the work that he is doing.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): I congratulate the hon. member for Toronto West Centre (Mr. Hocken) on the stand he has taken. I remember very well the day he brought into this house a few of these objectionable magazines, and I think at the time we had an exchange across the floor. Unfortunately he suggested then an increase of the duty on such magazines to check their entry. I was of the opinion that they should be excluded altogether, and I am glad that in this respect at least the hon. gentleman has changed his view.

Mr. HOCKEN: Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend is not quite accurate.

Mr. GEARY: Far from it.

Mr. HOCKEN: When I advocated a duty on magazines it was for an entirely different purpose. I argued then, as I am prepared to argue now, that some protection should be accorded to Canadian publishers. I know a large number of Canadian magazines have had to suspend publication because of the unfair competition from American magazines, there being no duty imposed on them. A little relief has been given to our publishers by a drawback on the paper they use, but that is a mere trifle I asked the department to put into operation the item in our tariff and impose a duty of 25 per cent upon all magazines entering this country. There is such an item in the tariff, but by an arbitrary and absurd interpretation by the department that duty is not imposed. The department resolutely refuses to apply that item of the tariff.

Mr. EULER: It is being done now in regard to a large number of so-called magazines.

Mr. HOCKEN: That is the aspect of the argument to which my hon. friend from Saskatoon (Mr. Young) has referred.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Will the minister explain to the committee the nature of the change in the regulations under which an increased duty is imposed on many of these American magazines—not the objectionable ones at all, but such magazines as Needlecraft, for instance, which many Canadian women desire to have in their homes?

Mr. BOURASSA: Mr. Chairman, if my hon. friend (Mr. Campbell) will allow me, I do not think we should let the first question pass out of sight. Let us deal with the kind of literature that I agree entirely with the hon. members for Toronto West Centre (Mr. Hocken) and Saskatoon (Mr. Young) should be excluded. A couple of points were raised by the minister which had better be dealt with now. First, he says he is not in favour of paternalism, but of freedom. He seems to be much more in favour of freedom of filth and obscenity than freedom of trade.

M. EULER: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I take objection to that remark.

Mr. BOURASSA: If the hon. member will permit me, there is nothing insulting—

Mr. EULER: Mr. Chairman, I object to the statement.

Mr. BOURASSA: What I meant—

Mr. EULER: He stated the minister was apparently more in favour of filth and obscenity than of something else. I object entirely, and ask that he withdraw the statement.

Mr. BOURASSA: I withdraw entirely the form of the statement if the minister takes it that way. What I meant was this: if we are to have strict laws in favour of trade it seems to me we should have some laws in favour of morality. On that point the minister objects to paternalism; he does not think his department has any responsibility. And he cites some of the Canadian filthy literature and pictures that are put up for sale in book stores and elsewhere. There the responsibility obviously is not his; the responsibility rests with the representatives of the local authorities. The attorney general of each province has the right to have prosecutions instituted against people who deal in such things. The police of each city can deal with the matter. But when it comes to the importation into Canada of foreign matters of this nature, this is something that comes under the department over which the hon. gentleman presides, and there the responsibility of his department is in question. This the minister himself admits when he says that there is someone in his department to look after it. But how is supervision exercised? The minister says that the attention of the department should be called to these things before authority is exercised. To a great extent he is right. It is obvious that the official charged with this duty cannot take cognizance of all the filthy publications that come into the country and are sold on every bookstall in every city. But when the attention of the department is drawn to any particular case, action should be taken promptly. When the hon. gentleman's predecessor was in office I myself submitted to him several of these publications printed not only in French but in English as well—because Montreal is flooded with much more filthy literature coming from the United States than from France. I congratulate the minister upon his decision with regard to French literature. But I am also concerned that the young people who read filth imported from the United States should be safeguarded, whether these young people be French, English, Scottish or Jewish. They are all children of Canada and we have a duty towards them. I am glad the hon. gentleman is doing something to protect the youth of my race, but I want him to protect all young people. Some of these magazines I submitted to the minister's predecessor; he realized at once their abominable character and issued instructions prohibiting their entry into Canada. But a crisis came, and hon. gentlemen on the other side, during their short stay in power, rescinded the order. Then the Liberal party came back to power, and some time after, my hon. friend (Mr. Euler) was appointed. But most of these publications continued to come in. And they are still coming in. Their character has been denounced several times by organizations of men and women in Montreal, Catholic, Protestant, French and English. May I read an opinion which apeared in a Liberal paper, printed in English, supporting this government, the Montreal Herald, which called the attention of the government and of all thinking people to this matter. I will quote a few extracts:

> Tabloid Newspapers published in the United States, successors to the "yellows" of a decade or so ago, and far surpassing their worst efforts in the dissemination of salacious filth, are permitted to enter Canada without hindrance, adding thousands of Canadian readers to their swollen circulation among the illiterate and the sensation seekers. This condition has been in existence for some time.

Then there is an analysis of the character of the papers, giving titles, et cetera. Here I follow the example set by the minister; I will not advertise them. But I have a number of these publications in my desk and they are to be found in any bookstore or in any newspaper stall in Ottawa, Montreal, Toronto or any other city in Canada. They are still sold, notwithstanding that the attention of the department has been directed frequently to the matter. Without naming any of these publications, I may say that one of them—I have it here—purports to give what is considered the last word of cleverness in this sort of thing. An agent of this particular newspaper received permission from the executioner in the state of New York to witness the last minutes of life of a poor woman sentenced to death there. He had a kodak in his pocket and took several pictures of this wretched creature. The result was that readers in Canada and the United States were able to get some idea of the last seconds of this unfortunate woman's life on the executioner's chair. What does the decent element in the United States press say about the matter? Of course, the outrage was condemned; it was considered one of the most degrading performances on the part of newspaperdom in the United States. Nevertheless that publication continues to come into the country and at present is sold on the streets of Ottawa, Montreal and other cities. But it is not the only one; I have several here just as bad. May I quote from the Montreal Herald its characterization of these publications:

> Sex is their highest standard of news, with murder, divorce, suicide and scandal following in due order. They dismiss matters of world importance with a few flippant phrases; but they devote columns to exploiting the latest unfortunate woman, the newest rich fool, and the most recent divorce case. Their existence and their habits are deplored by decent folks in their own country: but they are an American product and they represent one phase of contemporary American life in the big cities. A regrettable phase but one which exists in the United States. The problem of their publication in the country of their origin is one with which Canada can have no concern. But Canada can, and should, protect her own people from the contamination of such salacious foreign filth...

There is in Montreal a growing public opinion against the entry into this country of salacious tabloid publications printed in the United States. The government at Ottawa has full authority under the law to act, in the protection of public morals. That such action would have the support of all right thinking people in the country is obvious from expressions of opinions made during the past day or so to the Montreal Herald.

Then follow expressions of opinion from representatives of various races and denominations, men and women. I can scarcely reveal the testimony that has been given me by some physicans, very serious men, who have a consciousness of their responsibilty and who know the facts. Not later than this week one of the most respectable and best informed persons in the city of Ottawa told me of girls and boys of the public schools in another city being carried to the hospitals with venereal disease and who were found to have in their beds, for solace during illness, some of these very publications which enter this country under the regime of freedom which is recommended to us as the proper thing. I believe in liberty as fully as does the minister. There is no country on the face of the earth in which liberty of the press is enjoyed more proudly than it is in England. Yet this problem has reached the stage there where publications of this kind are seized by the police. Everyone knows that if there is a country on earth in which there is no impediment to the dissemination of literature of every variety, that country is England. I do not think we should be very far wide of the mark if we followed liberal England in this respect, especially when it comes to publications that are printed outside this country and which we can control far more easily than we can those published in the Dominion. In a sense, the press of Canada is largely responsible for this. If you take a very large proportion of the daily newspapers, you will find that their so-called funny pages are practically all contracted for in the United States. I have frequently put forward this, both in this house and outside, as an example of the moral and intellectual penetration of Americanism in Canada. Let us at least stop what we can stop. I do not think it is an excuse to say that some people in our country do wrong, and therefore we should encourage the foreigners in their wrong, and let them contaminate the minds and hearts of the youths of our country. I am quite sure the minister, who is a man of sense, of conscience and of energy, will look at it in that way. Of course, in his position he cannot get all these facts, because he is busy with his department, but he has been informed of them. The hon. member for Toronto West Centre (Mr. Hocken) sent him information, as I and others have done. Unfortunately, he is right when he says that too few people take the trouble to inform ministers of the crown of what is going on, but I am expressing the views of a large number of those people who have been writing me and speaking to me in this regard for the last two years. I am voicing the disquieted thoughts of thousands of fathers and mothers of families, who hold themselves responsible for their children, and who do not like to see those children coming out of school and purchasing such literature on their way home. If you travel in the street cars of any large city in Canada to-day, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, or Vancouver, you will find that kind of literature in the hands of school boys and school girls; and I am sure no one will think that that makes for better citizenship and higher morality in our country.

The matter is worthy of the serious consideration of the house, the government and the department, and if the minister reflects a moment he will instruct that official in his department to be on his guard, not to delay matters and not to repulse the initiative of the people who take the trouble to gather up and forward this information. It is no pleasure to go to a news stand and purchase that kind of filth in order to form a record; I know numbers of these periodicals have been sent to the department; I have sent some, and I am sure the hon. member for Toronto West Centre has sent some. But we cannot keep on purchasing them. No one desires to increase the circulation of these publications for the sake of forming a record. It seems to me that the few samples sent to the department should be sufficient to inspire the official charged with this duty with sufficient energy to bring about results so that, at least, some of the book stalls of this country will be purged of this filth, if we cannot abolish it all at once.

Mr. THOMPSON: Before this item is carried I should like the minister to give some information as to the practice pursued in his department in chartering boats for the service. I find that the steamship Vigilant formerly belonged to the government; almost their first official act after coming into power in December, 1921, was to sell this boat to a then Liberal member of parliament for $18,000. Last year, after six years of wear and tear and depreciation, I find that the Department of National Revenue chartered this boat for seven months; it is chartered for nine months in 1928 and for nine months in 1929, and though the boat was sold for $18,000 they are paying for it $2,250 per month. In other words, in the twenty-five months during which this boat will be in their possession the fortunate owner will receive $56,250. For the last ten or twelve years this boat has been up in the Georgian bay, lying tied up to the dock for the greater part of the time, but in 1927 she was sent down to the coast of Nova Scotia. Still more remarkable is the fact that in spite of this high rental, in 1927 the department also expended $1,565.18 for repairs; what they will spend this year and next year no one knows. I suppose the fact that the present owner of the boat is the chief Liberal worker in my riding did not stand against him in any way when he came to make this good bargain for the charter of his boat.

I might also say that up around Georgian bay, where this boat was formerly kept, the marine men, who know what they are talking about, regard this as a gross example of political favoritism, but until I heard the speech made by the minister this afternoon I was under the impression that he personally had been very loath to make this bargain. I had understood that the very strongest pressure had to be brought to bear upon him, but he said this afternoon that no man could bulldoze him into making a bad bargain, so I understand he will take the responsibility for this charter. To my mind the whole thing savours of graft; it cannot be defended or justified, but I would like the minister kindly to explain it to the house, if he will.

Mr. CHURCH: Now we will hear from the admiral of the fleet.

Mr. EULER: I want to say to my hon. friend that he is in error at the very outset; this boat was originally owned by the Department of Marine and Fisheries and was not sold by the Liberal government. That makes no particular difference, but it was sold by the Union government for $18,000. As I say, I do not attach any particular importance to that. I understand that at that time, shortly after the war, boats were pretty much of a drug on the market, and this boat passed into the hands of Mr. Chew of Midland. Later it was sold to a gentleman named Payette, from whom we chartered the boat after he spent about $30,000 on it. I am not a seafaring man myself, but I am assured by the chief of the preventive service, in whom I think everyone has confidence—I know I have—and upon whose recommendation the boat was chartered, that it was extremely difficult to get boats of a character suitable for this service. They are not very plentiful, and since we chartered the boat we have paid for it at the rate of $2,250 per month. I am assured that there are other boats in the government service which are paid for at an even higher rate. The boat will be used nine months this year and nine months next year, when the charter will expire.

Mr. STEVENS: Does the department pay $2,250 per month?

Mr. EULER: Yes. I might also add, for the information of the committee, that the policy of the department, is to dispense with all privately owned vessels.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Who owns the Vigilant?

Mr. EULER: Mr. J. T. Payette, of Penetang. I was merely going to add that parliament itself, and the country also, were very anxious that immediate steps be taken to cope with the smuggling which was going on; it was necessary to organize a preventive service more or less hurriedly and more or less imperfect, and in that service was included a number of vessels. It was absolutely necessary either to purchase or to charter vessels; we did purchase some and we are building others. We have a few under charter, and this is one of them. That is the whole story.

Mr. THOMPSON: The minister has said that this boat was sold by the Union government. It was sold on December 29, 1921, immediately after the Liberal government took office.

Mr. EULER: On what date?

Mr. THOMPSON: December 29, 1921.

Mr. EULER: I have not the facts before me, but I do not think it makes any difference who sold it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Now that we are on the subject of a vote for the preventive service,

I would ask the minister a question. I understand that some boats are being built at Gravenhurst at the present time for the Customs department; is that correct?

Mr. EULER: They are finished and delivered.

Mr. GUTHRIE: And some were either built or overhauled at St. John, N.B.?

Mr. EULER: No.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Does the minister know of the boat Bay Hound?

Mr. EULER: Yes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is in the Customs service?

Mr. EULER: Yes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Was she not overhauled at St. John?

Mr. EULER: I am informed that the boat was purchased at Montreal and a power plant was put in at St. John this winter.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What power plant was put in?

Mr. EULER: Diesel engines.

M. GUTHRIE: Where were they procured?

Mr. EULER: The Union Foundry & Machine Company.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Where is that?

Mr. EULER: This sounds like a pretty categorical examination by a lawyer.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is information I desire.

Mr. EULER: The Union Foundry & Machine Company of St. John were the lowest tenderers, I am informed.

Mr. GUTHRIE: About the fifteenth or sixteenth of March it was stated in the house by the minister that no patrol boats were being built by the department outside of Canada, and the inference was that all parts of the boats would be of Canadian construction.

Mr. EULER: Diesel engines are not made in Canada.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, but they are made in Great Britain and they can be procured there cheaper than from the United States.

Mr. EULER: I understand that the smaller sizes cannot be obtained in Great Britain. These were purchased from the Canadian Fairbanks Morse Company.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The minister informs the committee that the size used in these boats cannot be purchased in Great Britain. I am satisfied if that is the fact.

Mr. EULER: The chief of the preventive service so informs me.

Mr. CANTLEY: That is not correct.

Mr. GUTHRIE: May I ask the minister whether any effort was made to secure these engines in Great Britain? Were tenders asked for there?

Mr. EULER: No.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Were Diesel engines used in those built at Gravenhurst?

Mr. EULER: Those were small gasoline patrol boats.

Mr. GUTHRIE: And not Diesel engines?

Mr. EULER: No.

Mr. SHORT: I was speaking last night about the appointment of an assistant at the customs house in Digby, and the minister made the statement that serious charges had been made to the department against the young man recommended by the Civil Service Commission for that appointment. In justice to that young man, and in fairness to this house, when the minister makes a statement like that the information should be given. Was there anything against the morals of this young man? Was there any charge against his honesty? Or was he not of the right political faith? I should like an answer to that question, and then when I get that I have another matter to bring up. But I want an answer before we go any further.

An hon. MEMBER: The resolution is carried.

Mr. SHORT: It is not carried; don't be in such a hurry.

Mr. EULER: I am quite willing to give the hon. gentleman all the information he asks for if I have it at my disposal. I have some information regarding this matter. On the 6th of May of last year a requisition was made by the department to the commission for the appointment of a customs excise examiner at this point. On the 16th of May, 1927, the position was advertised by the Civil Service Commission. On the 4th of June examinations were held and the oral rating sheets were forwarded to the department by Inspector Lovett on the 5th of June. On the 22nd of June the oral ratings were forwarded to the Civil Service Commission, and—observe there is a lapse of time here for which neither the department nor myself is responsible—on September 1, 1927, no appointment having been made by the Civil Service Commission and the summer season being almost over, the commission was requested that no assignment be made for the winter. Information then reached the department that the two candidates who were in first and second places at the examination would not make suitable officers for the department, in consequence of which the inspector for the district was requested to assign a relieving officer temporarily to duty at Digby. On the 10th of May directions were given to have a suitable officer make careful investigation into the charges preferred against the two candidates. As I said last night, if these charges are groundless I shall have nothing more to say.

Mr. SHORT: What is the nature of the charges? You have stated in this house that there were charges and you have done these two men a serious injury.

Mr. EULER: If they are innocent I would be doing them more serious injury by stating the charges in the house. If my hon. friend will come to me I will give him the nature of the charges.

Mr. SHORT: You can tell us who made the charges—that is public property.

Mr. EULER: I will give you the name at the same time.

Mr. SHORT: I have another matter I want to bring to the attention of the minister. Last evening when this matter was under discussion the minister stated that dismissals were made on a charge being laid by a member, and he was asked if it was not done on the advice of defeated candidates, and he said, absolutely no. In my constituency there is a subcollector of customs who was discharged, and an investigation was held. The minister says that he does not take the advice of defeated candidates, but this is what happened. A man by the name of P. A. Saulnier, subcollector of customs at Church Point, in Digby county, was dismissed after a small investigation held by and presided over by one of the most partisan Liberal lawyers in the province of Nova Scotia. The evidence was most flimsy, and I am going to read it to the house. The newspapers all over the country credit the minister with being absolutely nonpartisan; they say that he has tried to make the Department of Customs absolutely free of politics, that everything he has done has been in the public interest and that he is getting the very best officers he can. First we have a letter from the defeated candidate in my constituency, Doctor Lovett, who was a member of this house from 1921 until 1925. That is the only time he ever sat in the house. As I said last night, he has contested the constituency four times and he won it once when the solid sixteen came back. The advice of this man is taken by both the Department of National Revenue and the Post Office department. I have not come into contact with any other department, but if I do I will bring the matter up in the house. This is a letter which reads as follows:

Bear River, N.S., Aug. 8, 1927.

Hon. W. D. Euler,
Minister of National Revenue,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir:

I am asking that an investigation be held in the case of Philip Saulnier subcollector of customs at Little Brook, Digby Co., N.S.,—

The man lives in Little Brook but the customs house is at Church Point.

—on the ground that he is an active Tory partisan having attended Tory committee meetings during the campaigns of both 1925 and 1926.

Yours respectfully,

L. J. Lovett,
Ex-M.P., Digby-Annapolis.

The next letter is from C. B. Patten, for Commissioner of Customs, Ottawa, September 17, 1927, to J. F. Outhit, Esq., Barrister, Kentville, N.S.:

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to departmental letter of the 15th ultimo, on which you are requested to have the charges of political partisanship against Mr. Philip Saulnier, subcollector of customs and excise at Church Point, N.S. investigated, and your full report submitted to the department.

No reply appears to have been received in this connection, and it is requested that your report be furnished as soon as possible.

C. B. Patten,
For Commissioner of Customs.

Then comes a letter from Mr. J. Frank Outhit:

Kentville, N.S. Sept. 19, 1927.

Commissioner of Customs,
Ottawa.

Re Philip Saulnier. B. 1507-54-1

Dear Sir:

In reply to your letter of the 17th inst., I beg to say that the delay in this matter has been wholly due to the difficulty that I have experienced in getting names of witnesses and other information from Dr. Lovett, ex-M.P. and others interested in this matter.

It even became necessary for me, at the suggestion of the Honourable J. L. Ralston, Minister of National Defence, to make a special trip to Digby concerning this matter. I succeeded on Friday last in getting certain information and on that day issued the necessary notices for the investigation to be held at Little Brook on Thursday, the 22nd instant.

As soon as I can complete the investigation my official report will be immediately made.

Yours very respectfully,

J. Frank Outhit,
Commissioner.

The next is a notice to Mr. Philip Saulnier as follows:

To Philip Saulnier of Little Brook in the county of Digby, Nova Scotia, sub-collector of customs and excise at Church Point, N.S.

Whereas a charge has been made before the Minister of National Revenue of Canada alleging against you a charge of political partisanship contrary to the Civil Service Act 1918 and amendments thereto.

And whereas I, the undersigned, have been duly appointed a commissioner under the great seal of Canada, and have been duly designated to hold an enquiry concerning said charge.

Therefore take notice that I hereby appoint Thursday, the 22nd day of September A.D., 1927 at the hour of four o'clock in the afternoon at the hall at Little Brook in the county of Digby, in the province of Nova Scotia, to be the time and place of such enquiry, at which said enquiry you will be allowed full opportunity to be heard.

Dated at Kentville, N.S., this 16th day of September A.D., 1927.

(Sgd) J. Frank Outhit.

Commissioner duly appointed under the provisions of the Inquiries Act of Canada.

Then comes the evidence and I want the committee to listen to this:

Enquiry opened at four o'clock p.m., pursuant to notice duly given, copy of which is hereunto annexed marked "A" "J.F.O."

Present: Philip Saulnier, subcollector of customs, the accused; William LeBlanc, sworn:

I live at Church Point. Know Philip Saulnier for forty years or more. He is subcollector of customs and excise at Church Point for last fifteen years. I know Peter Doucett, postmaster at Concession, and he Doucette told me in the presence of others that Philip Saulnier the accused came to him and told him that if he voted Liberal he would lose the post office of which he was postmaster. He did not tell me just when this was. Mr. Saulnier has the reputation of being a strong Tory. No Cross-examination.

Vincent Genette, sworn:

I live at Little Brook. Know Mr. Saulnier, have known him since I was a boy. I know of there being Conservative meetings held at John Fournier's at Little Brook. I know of Mr. Saulnier being there. Both at the 1925 local and Dominion and 1926 Dominion elections. I was there when they appointed delegates to go to the Conservative nominating convention. This was in 1925 when the local elections were on. They held meeting there at the Dominion elections 1925 and also 1926, at this same place. It was the general place to meet for such political purposes. At this election (local) 1925 I was working for Mr. Robicheau, Conservative candidate. After the polls closed on the night of election we were celebrating the Conservative victory at my house. Mr. Saulnier said "We have won" and he took part in the celebration with the rest of us.

No cross-examination.

Omar Comeau sworn:

Mr. Saulnier is my brother-in-law. I am not in good health. I have been at John Fournier's often. Philip Saulnier was there with me often. We often talked politics. Have heard him talk politics there, the same as in a private assembly. These were not meetings called especially for political purposes. Fournier's house was a general meeting place for the village. Fournier was a Conservative. Mr. Saulnier was also a Conservative. When Mr. Saulnier talked he talked on the side of the Conservatives.

No cross-examination.

Prosecution closed.

The commissioner stated to the accused Mr. Saulnier that he had the privilege of calling witnesses or of being sworn to give evidence on his own behalf.

Mr. Saulnier declined to be sworn but wished to make the statement that he admitted that he had said to Mr. Peter Doucett, postmaster at Concession, that he would lose his position as postmaster if he voted Liberal but that so far as he could remember this statement to Mr. Doucett was before he (Saulnier) was appointed to the office of subcollector.

Hon. J. W. Comeau, being present—

He was a member of the legislative council of Nova Scotia.

Hon. J. W. Comeau, being present, questioned Mr. Saulnier:

Question: Did you not say that at the last local election that Premier Armstrong had stated in Boston that a head tax would be put on persons going to the United States?

Answer: I do not remember of saying anything of the kind.

Question: Did you drive Mr. Robicheau, Conservative candidate, from Little Brock to the railway station and stop at Philip Doucett's and other places to canvass?

Answer: When I drove Mr. Robicheau to the station I do not remember of stopping at Doucett's. I stayed in my team, I do not remember of being in the store. I do not remember whether or not it was after the nomination of Mr. Robicheau as a candidate or whether it was before that. I have been to Mr. Robicheau's house since his election, have been there and stayed all night.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Does the record show that any witnesses were called?

Mr. SHORT: None whatever. Now I wish to read the report of the commissioner, James Francis Outhit, in connection with the investigation. His report reads:

In the matter of the Enquiries Act and amendments thereto.

In the matter of the Civil Service Act, 1918, and amendments thereto.

In the matter of an enquiry under said Acts into the conduct of Philip Saulnier of Little Brook, in the county of Digby, Nova Scotia, subcollector of customs and excise at Church Point, N.S.

Report of Commissioner

To His Excellency the Governor General in Council:

I, James Francis Outhit, K.C., of Kentville in the county of Kings, a commissioner duly appointed herein by commission under the great seal of Canada, dated March 3rd, A.D. 1927, and designated to hold an enquiry herein, beg to report as follows:

Under the powers vested in me under said commission and at the request of L. J. Lovett, Esq., Ex-M.P. for the county of Digby, and under instructions from the Honourable J. L. Ralston, Minister of National Defence of Canada, I proceeded on August 3rd, 1927, to Weymouth in the county of Digby to take instructions with regard to this matter and to confer with the Honourable J. W. Comeau and Dr. L. J. Lovett and Dr. Fred Hogan.

All three prominent Liberals.

I met these gentlemen at Weymouth and had a consultation with them regarding procedure—

Here is a lawyer, a member of the bar of Nova Scotia, who had to go and consult laymen regarding procedure:

—and other matters relative to the prosecution of Philip Saulnier and others in the district.

Consequent on said interview and consultation the information and complaint herein was laid and the necessary notice and supboenas issued herein as referred to in the evidence herein submitted, and at the time and place mentioned in the said notice, namely, on September 22, 1927, I proceeded to Little Brook for the purpose of this inquiry.

The accused Philip Saulnier appeared at the time and place mentioned in this notice and the evidence was taken in this matter in his presence, and I enclose a certified copy of the said evidence.

The evidence of Vincent Guenette, who was himself a Conservative worker, clearly establishes partizanship in behalf of Philip Saulnier as charged, in relation to the local election in 1925 and at other times while Mr. Saulnier held the office of subcollector at Church Point.

The evidence of Omar Comeau, who reluctantly gave evidence and who is a brother-in-law of the accused, establishes beyond doubt that the accused Philip Saulnier attended gatherings at the house of one John Fournier and openly talked politics in the interests of the Conservative party while holding office of subcollector at Church Point.

The evidence of William Leblanc as to the activities of Philip Saulnier is direct, and the only answer thereto is given by Mr. Saulnier in saying that so far as he can remember this instance took place before his appointment as subcollector.

It is worthy of notice that Philip Saulnier, subcollector, charged herein would not allow himself to be sworn but preferred to make his statements without the sanction of an oath; and that even under these circumstances his statement was evasive rather than direct.

From the evidence taken and the attitude of the accused and the whole circumstances surrounding the inquiry, I have no hesitation in finding the accused Philip Saulnier guilty of the offence of political partisanship as charged, and that he did engage in partisan work within the meaning of section 32 of the Civil Service Act of Canada.

Dated at Kentville, N.S., this 24th day of September A.D., 1927.

Commissioner.

Here is the commissioner's bill. This inquiry has cost the country $124.75. Then follows a letter from Philip A. Saulnier to the Minister of National Revenue, Ottawa, reading:

Dear Sir:

In regard to a charge alleging against me, a charge of political partisanship before J. F. Outhit, commissioner by commission at Little Brook, Digby county, N.S., on September 22nd, 1927, I wish to ask you a fair chance to defend myself against the accusations made against me and of which I am not guilty.

The notice was given me on the evening of September 20th at the same time that the inspector of national revenue was inspecting my office.

So evidently they expected to discharge him, and they sent an inspector to inspect the office before the trial took place. The letter continues:

The following day the inspector was again at my office so that it left me a very short time to prepare myself to meet my accusers, and defend myself then.

I am therefore enclosing my contradictions and hope it will be considered.

Yours respectfully,
(Sgd) PHILIP A. SAULNIER,
Subcollector of Customs and Excise.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Louder!

Mr. SHORT: Oh, take the cotton wool out of your ears.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): I think that on a matter of such supreme importance to the country, the hon. gentleman should speak loud enough for us to hear.

Mr. SHORT: Will the hon. member sit down? It does not become him to be funny, not a bit.

Then here is the declaration made by P. A. Saulnier before E. Stehelin, J.P.: To the Commissioners of Civil Service,

Ottawa.

In the matter of inquiry held at the Hall at Little-Brook, in the County of Digby, N.S., alleging against me a charge of political partisanship, I hereby declare:

1st re Mr. Vincent Gennet's charge—that he saw me at Mr. John Fournier's place, the night that a political meeting was held there.

I do not deny that Mr. Gennet saw me there that night, I went in that night on my way home from the post office but after the meeting was closed.

2nd. re Mr. Omer Comeau's charge:—viz. that he heard me talk politics at Mr. Fournier's house.

I do also hereby declare that I did not wish at the time to contradict Mr. Comeau's statement on account of his very weak condition due to heart trouble, inasmuch the doctor told us that the least excitement would cause his sudden death, and Mr. Comeau is my brother in law, but I do solemnly declare that Mr. Comeau never heard me talk politics since the Civil Service Act and amendments thereto, 1919.

(Sgd) P. A. SAULNIER,

Sworn before me at Church Point, this 24th day of September, 1927.

(Sgd) E. STEHELIN.

J. P. in and for county of Digby.

An hon. MEMBER: Was my hon. friend at that meeting?

Mr. SHORT: When hon. gentlemen are through laughing, I will proceed. I have all the time in the world. It does not make any difference to me if I do not get home until July. I can stay here as long as you can.

An hon. MEMBER: Time!

Mr. SHORT: Mr. Chairman, have you any authority over this committee? If you have not any authority, get the Sergeant at Arms to work.

That, Mr. Chairman, is all the evidence they had against this man, that somebody told somebody else that he told a postmaster he would be discharged if he voted Tory in a local election. The next charge is that he attended a public meeting. He denies that in toto, that it was not a public meeting, but a gathering in a home in the village where everybody met and talked over matters of all kinds. Is a man who has held a little position as subcollector in an outport, drawing a salary of $200 a year, not to be allowed to open his mouth on questions of the day simply because he is an employee of this government? The thing is ridiculous. The most serious charge against him was in connection with the provincial election of 1925. I think we have come to a pretty pass if a collector of customs or a postmaster cannot go to the polls and vote without being pulled up before a most partisan commissioner, and on such flimsy evidence as that discharged. We are told by the minister that he is keeping politics out, that he does not take the advice of defeated candidates. There was no other advice could come to him than from the defeated candidate in my constituency. I say that this man has been most unfairly dealt with; he has been discharged on the most flimsy evidence. You can get evidence like that against every officer in your department if you are small enough to go and dig it up. It is about time this country knew what was taking place in the small offices occupied by these underpaid officials. This man was getting $200 a year. If he was getting $250 a year you could not touch him.

Mr. EULER: The salary paid to this man was $560 a year, I am informed.

Mr. SHORT: That makes it so much the worse. Some friend must have wanted a job. A friend of Doctor Lovett was afterwards promised the position, and I presume he has been appointed. I should like to know whether the minister read the evidence that was submitted to him, and if he is as fair as I think he is, does he believe this man was fairly dealt with?

Mr. BOYS: If the minister wishes to reply to my hon. friend from Digby-Annapolis (Mr. Short) I will wait.

Mr. EULER: I quite appreciate my hon. friend's assumption that I would not care to reply to what has been said.

Mr. BOYS: That is up to you.

Mr. EULER: It seems to me to be hardly necessary. I think the committee is in a position to judge from the evidence submitted by my hon. friend himself (Mr. Short) that the action of the government was justified in this case. I should not like the impression to go abroad, as apparently suggested by my hon. friend, that in this case there was any departure from the practice followed. No one is ever dismissed except on the statement of a member. Otherwise a commissioner may be appointed on the complaint of a defeated candidate, or any person, and when that commissioner finds the offence has been committed dismissal takes place.

Mr. BOYS: The minister stated that the Vigilant was sold to Mr. Manley Chew by the Union government. He did intimate he might be mistaken. I do not think the matter should rest there. I take it for granted the minister never made that statement without being told by the officer who sits beside him that that is the fact. I ask if the officer will tell the minister that it is the fact. I should also like to know whether tenders were advertised before the order in council was passed in connection with the sale to Mr. Manley Chew.

Mr. EULER: Is the hon. gentleman referring to tenders that were asked for at the time of the sale by the government in 1921?

Mr. BOYS: I am referring to any tenders whatsoever which led to the sale of the Vigilant to Mr. Manley Chew, as referred to a moment ago by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Thompson).

Mr. EULER: I should be very glad to give my hon. friend the information, but we were not particularly concerned with that. We were merely dealing with the boat last year. The sale took place away back in 1921. It is not at all material to the case whether the sale of that boat was made by the Union government or the Liberal government.

Mr. BOYS: The minister now is making a speech upon something else. My question was: whether an order in council was passed, and on what date; and were tenders asked for or not? When I get the minister's answer I wish to make another observation or two.

Mr. EULER: I do not know.

Mr. BOYS: Then the minister was not joking, I suppose. He seemed to think he was scoring a point, and his supporters all applauded him when he said the hon. member for East Simcoe was wrong, and the Vigilant was sold by the Union government to Manley Chew. Let us have that confirmed or taken back.

Mr. EULER: I still think I am entirely correct, but I am perfectly willing to verify my statement. My hon. friend speaks of his fairness. I credit him with a good deal of fairness, and surely he hardly expects a minister can be absolutely familiar with the thousand and one different matters that come before him in the course of his departmental duties. I am perfectly willing to look up the information if he thinks it is material. I tell him frankly I do not know. I am still of the opinion the sale was made as I said in the beginning, but I do not think it makes a particle of difference whether it was or not.

Mr. BOYS: Then I think the minister would be pretty sure of his ground before making such a statement.

Mr. EULER: If you have proof that I am wrong I wish you would produce it.

Mr. BOYS: I am asking the minister to substantiate his statement. He has wavered a little, but he does not yet take it back. I will give him a fact which I think will enable the house to judge whether this boat was sold by the Union government to Mr. Manley Chew. The parliamentary guide indicates that the government of the Right Hon. Mackenzie King took office on December 29, 1921. We are told by the hon. member for East Simcoe that the sale of this boat took place on that date. There is the further fact that the elections were on December 6, 1921, and upon December 29, 1921, Mr. Manley Chew was member-elect for the riding of East Simcoe. Does the minister think under those conditions the Union government sold the Vigilant to Mr. Manley Chew for the price named or any other price?

Mr. EULER: The boats were available for anybody.

Mr. BOYS: What surprises me is the rapidity with which this transaction was completed. Apparently the member for East Simcoe was right. On the very day the Liberal government took office, December 29, 1921, the sale took place to Mr. Manley Chew, the member-elect for East Simcoe. I do not think the matter should stop at that point. Let us get the facts. If the Union government made the sale to the newly elected Liberal member who had been elected four weeks before, let us know.

Mr. DUNNING: It was not the Union government, anyway.

Mr. EULER: I am willing to say I was in error; it was not the Union government. It was the Meighen government.

Mr. DUNNING: It was the National Liberal and Conservative government.

Mr. BOYS: If that will help either the Minister of Railways or the Minister of Customs I will read from the Parliamentary Guide—the National Liberal and Conservative party.

Mr. DUNNING: Where has it got to?

Mr. BOYS: Up to December 29, 1921, it had been in office. I should like to know whether the National Liberal and Conservative party on December 29, 1921, sold this boat to Mr. Manley Chew, member-elect on December 6, for the riding of East Simcoe. I think in view of what the minister said we should get that information. If we cannot get it now, I ask the minister to allow this or some other item to stand. After all, there is something in what the minister said, it is not so vital as to which government was in power. The point of the story is, the price at which the boat was sold to Mr. Manley Chew, and the price at which it was subsequently rented to Mr. J. T. Payette of Penetanguishene, just across from where Mr. Manley Chew lives.

Mr. EULER: I certainly have no objection to letting any item stand; I am not trying to suppress information. I must say however, that I cannot for the life of me see the bearing of this particular bit of information on this particular question.

Mr. BOYS: Why did you introduce it?

Mr. EULER: If the point is that we are paying too much for the charter of the boat, that is fairly debatable. But I may say, on that particular point, that this boat at the moment is insured for $75,000, which is only 70 per cent of her value. I submit in all commonsense that it does not make any difference what that boat was sold for five or six years ago. As I stated before, $30,000 was expended on her. To-day, under different conditions altogether, she is worth more than $75,000. We have chartered that boat at $2,250 a month. If the committee thinks that is too much to pay then there is fair ground for argument. But beyond that I cannot see why it should make any difference whether a government of Canada, headed by a Liberal or a Conservative, sold that boat to whoever purchased it.

Mr. BOYS: One of the reasons is that it was sold a little too cheap, and sold to a supporter of the government at the time, which in itself invites criticism. The hon. member for East Simcoe has gone so far as to suggest that the whole transaction savours of graft.

Mr. EULER: If the hon. gentleman desires to make a charge of that kind it would not rest with me; I had nothing to do with the boat six or eight years ago.

Mr. BOYS: I am not trying to make a charge of graft against the minister.

Mr. EULER: Why insinuate?

Mr. BOYS: I have not insinuated it.

Mr. EULER: The hon. gentleman also knows that immediately after the war, boats were a drug on the market. The United States government were willing to give theirs away and could not. The mere fact that this boat was sold for $18,000 at that time is no indication of its value at the present time, especially when you consider that large sums have been expended on the boat in the meantime.

Mr. BOYS: Will the minister give us the information so that we shall know who put through the sale, when the order in council was passed, and whether or not tenders were invited.

Mr. THOMPSON: How do you know $30,000 was expended on it?

Mr. EULER: Because the alterations were made under our supervision.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think the matter is of sufficient consequence to entitle us to get the papers. The item might stand over until a subsequent occasion. My suggestion would be that if the present item has been sufficiently discussed we might pass it and allow the question of the Vigilant to be discussed when the papers are brought down later on; we could discuss it on another item in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. EULER: All right.

Mr. GUTHRIE: No. 516, if the minister is agreeable, and if he would bring all the papers, the order in council, and so forth, we could have a full discussion then. It looks rather a serious thing that on the very day when the King administration is sworn in a boat should be sold to a member of parliament. I am not sure that the law prohibits such a transaction when the member has not actually been sworn in, but it is a pretty narrow point and will require some examination. The minister will oblige the committee by bringing all the papers, the contract, the tenders, the order in council and so forth. I have a distinct recollection that a few days after the general election of 1921, the Right Hon. Mr. Meighen, who had been defeated on that occasion, announced his willingness to resign immediately and the request was made by the incoming prime minister that he continue to hold office until the cabinet had been officially named and arranged. I am satisfied —I was a member of the defeated government at that time—that little or no business was transacted by that government after the general election in question.

Mr. EULER: I do not desire for a moment to evade any responsibility in the matter, but this boat was not sold by the Department of Customs; it was sold by the Marine department.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It does not matter.

Mr. EULER: It was sold by the naval department, and it seems to me, while I do not wish to throw any unnecessary work on one of my colleagues, that this information should more properly be obtained from the department which made the sale, and not from the Department of National Revenue, which was not in any way concerned with the matter.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The Department of National Revenue is now concerned because it is renting the identical boat and is paying a handsome rental for it. In that way the question of the sale price and all the circumstances may now be inquired into.

Mr. EULER: In an emergency we have paid as much as $4,500 a month for similar boats. If the charge or the suspicion is that we are now paying too much, that is fairly debatable; otherwise it seems to me that something going back a matter of seven or eight years is hardly to be charged to this department at the present time. It does not seem to me to be fair.

Mr. MANION: Nothing is charged at all; the only thing is that the committee wants the information. Perhaps I might point out something that has escaped other hon. gentlemen. When a government takes charge on a certain day it usually does so in the morning; the other party goes out the night before. The party of my right hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie King) took charge on the 29th December and without a doubt the previous government went out on the 28th. At any rate the question is of sufficient importance that the committee should have the information. No charges are made against anyone.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): Did I understand the minister to say that that boat was sold for $18,000 and that she is now worth over $100,000?

Mr. EULER: I did not say over $100,000; I said she was insured for $75,000.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): You said she was insured for $75,000 and I am perfectly satisfied that she was valued at $100,000, because she could not get full insurance. The minister also said that at that time boats were cheap. I want to tell him that boats are no more expensive now—they are just as cheap today—than they were when she was sold for $18,000.

Mr. EULER: We have not purchased the boat.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): That transaction savours of graft and wrongdoing and someone has put money in his pocket. I do not hesitate to say it.

Mr. EULER: Do you suggest that we are paying too high a rental?

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): Yes, absolutely.

[Mr. Euler.]

Mr. EULER: Could you suggest where you could get boats at a lower figure? I will say frankly that I am not a seafaring man and I do not know what the prices should be I am entirely dependent on those who know, and I am assured that the price is low and reasonable. Some hon. gentleman on the opposite side could bear me out.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Some gentlemen on your own side can tell you otherwise.

Mr. CANTLEY: Will the minister give us the terms of the contract?

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): Let us see a copy of the charter.

Mr. CANTLEY: What does the department supply and what does the owner supply?

Mr. EULER: It was a three-year contract, seven months the first year and nine months each of the succeeding years. We supply whatever is needed on the boat.

Mr. CANTLEY: The rate per month?

Mr. EULER: $2,250.

Mr. CANTLEY: What do you supply and what does the owner supply?

Mr. EULER: The owner pays the ordinary insurance and we pay the extra rate of one per cent which is necessary in such cases; and we supply the boat otherwise.

Mr. CANTLEY: Do you supply fuel?

Mr. EULER: Yes.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): Crew?

Mr. EULER: Yes.

Mr. CANTLEY: Keep?

Mr. EULER: Yes, everything.

Mr. CANTLEY: Port charges? Pilotage?

Mr. EULER: Yes, everything.

Mr. CANTLEY: Everything except the hire of the boat? What about repairs?

Mr. EULER: I am informed that we repair the ordinary wear and tear, and I suppose accidents are covered by insurance.

Mr. CANTLEY: Who pays the insurance?

Mr. EULER: I explained that a moment ago; the owners pay the ordinary insurance.

Mr. CANTLEY: I think you are paying a pretty stiff price.

Mr. EULER: Too high?

Mr. CANTLEY: Much too high. How old is the boat?

Mr. EULER: She was built in 1904.

Mr. CANTLEY: Then she is twenty-four years old. I understand the minister to say that she was sold for $18,000 and that $30,000 was spent for repairs, making a total of $48,000. Does he not think that is a pretty good return on the money invested, when the department pays for repairs?

Mr. EULER: As I said before, necessarily I am dependent upon the opinions of those who know more about these things than I do, but I am informed that high officials of the naval department stated that that was a very fair rental.

Mr. MANION: Does my hon. friend think the officials who chartered that boat know more about it than he does?

Mr. EULER: Certainly; with regard to the rentals I do not profess to have a technical knowledge, and I do not think my hon. friend would expect it.

Mr. BOYS: Would my hon. friend give us an idea, perhaps from his officers, of a fair rental for a boat sold for $18,000 and on which $30,000 has been spent for repairs? In one year alone the department pays over half that total cost. Does my hon. friend think that is a reasonable rental, and did he not go into that point before he approved of the transaction?

Mr. EULER: My hon. friend knows very well that he may buy a property cheaply, but he will not give the benefit of that fortunate purchase to anyone else; he will charge exactly what the market will allow and that is the case here.

Mr. BOYS: Then supposing it is worth $75,000, to take the figures given by the minister, what would be a fair rental to pay for the use of such a boat for nine months?

Mr. EULER: I am informed that very careful examination of the whole situation was made; we tried to get boats and we could not get anything like that. I am told that even to-day if any hon. members opposite have any suggestions to make, we would be glad to get similar boats at a similar figure. Some of our marine friends on the other side of the house may have something to offer.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We will allow this item to pass on condition that when the item in the supplementary estimates comes up we will have the papers in connection with the Vigilant, and the discussion will be re-opened then.

Mr. EULER: That is quite satisfactory to me with this provision, that I will obtain all the papers I possibly can.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is there any doubt about our getting the papers?

Mr. EULER: I think not; I see no reason why there should be.

Mr. QUINN: Under this item I want to bring to the attention of the house the case of—

An hon. MEMBER: McConachie?

Mr. QUINN: No; I should think hon. gentlemen opposite would have heard enough of the McConachie case, because the treatment of that family is no credit to the Liberal government. This is the case of Charles F. Longley, with which the minister and his officials are well acquainted. I am forced to bring this matter to the attention of the house because Charles F. Longley is a gentleman who has been in my constituency all his lifetime; he is a man noted for his honesty and integrity. The case to which I refer is in connection with a schooner called the Admiral Beatty, which he leased to a native of France for the purpose of carrying a cargo of liquor from this country to the West Indies. Under my hand I have voluminous documents, and I think most of the members of this house have copies of them. They tell the whole story, which is rather lengthy; I am not going into detail, but perhaps I might give it in brief by a few extracts from these documents:

> This vessel left Halifax in July 1926 in perfect condition, a regular little yacht that was affectionately referred to by the waterfront fraternity as the Little Queen. I received her back in October, 1927, a complete wreck, her sides smashed in, her hull rotten and covered with the fungus of rot, her decks rotten, her foremast and main completely gone, her anchor chains eaten up with rust, and her big lot of stores eaten up and gone completely. . . .
> It absolutely ruined and wiped me out, my credit absolutely gone, my business wrecked, my home broken up and destroyed, and my mother killed at the hands of this dirtiest transaction that I know of. . . . .
> Had I been treated with such devilishness by a foreign state I would have expected my country to have demanded reparation for it. I can cite a particular case where Great Britain spent £8,000,000 in settling with an expedition a far lesser wrong done one of their subjects than has been done me by my own country. I have been so reduced in circumstances as to be compelled to get relief from my society, one of the worst humiliations an independent man can ever face.

This ship was purchased by Longley at Chatham, New Brunswick, being a pilot boat used by the Miramichi pilots. She was entirely arranged for the accommodation of a number of men, and was therefore an ideal craft for a cruising or scientific party. This man goes on to say:

> . . . . in fact I purchased her for the express purpose of reselling her to a party of American scientists who were going on a professional expedition to Greenland. She arrived in Halifax from Chatham May 24th after having been on fire at sea and badly damaged. It took a few weeks to repair the damage and by the time she was again in commission the prospective purchasers had proceeded on another ship.
> I then tried advertising her for sale, and this brought a French citizen, Camille de la Combe, into the foreground, who wanted to charter her with the privilege of purchasing.

To make a long story short, Mr. Longley chartered this vessel to Mr. de la Combe for the purpose of carrying a cargo of liquor to the West Indies. He points out that this is a perfectly legitimate business, notwithstanding the opinions of the Prime Minister or the Minister of National Revenue; that the Canadian National Railways are carrying liquor every day, so it must be a legitimate business. Longley chartered his boat for the same purpose, and a series of accidents happened to it. She then sailed away and a few miles from Halifax overtook a small schooner Lacombe which had proved unseaworthy, and some 1,100 cases of liquor were taken on board. She then proceeded on her voyage but sprung a leak and had to return to Halifax. She went on the marine slip, was repaired and sailed again, but did not get very far when the leak began again. She had to put back to Halifax and it turned out that the rudder post had been broken. They had not discovered this on the first visit to the slip, but on the second visit they had the repairs made. She then sailed away on her voyage and after proceeding 150 miles or so her engines became disabled, and she made for the nearest port, which happened to be Shelburne, to which he refers as a good port to keep away from. Shelburne is in the constituency of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston). She put into Shelburne but the repairs could not be effected and the defective parts of the engine had to be shipped to Liverpool, some fifty miles away. Overtime work was carried on at the foundry in order to rush the vessel away, time being a prime factor of this trip. The parts arrived back at Shelburne early Friday morning, and the engineer wanted to start at once and he would set up the engine as they went along. There was, however, a local holiday that day, and the offending members of the crew persuaded the captain to stay for a day to see the show. They were for the first time striking the high lights of civilization. Being off a liquor laden ship they became the lions of the village with a certain class. Among the latter were two of Yarmouth's worst characters, one taken from gaol for the purpose and brought to Shelburne as a stool pigeon by the local officials. They induced those three men to go back aboard the vessel to bring some liquor ashore, which they promised to buy. The appointment was made and the trap carefully laid. The customs and local dry officials carefully hid themselves and waited, filled with the hopeful joy of the expected spoils, which would be divided between them if they got the ship. Captain Nickerson's report to Ottawa, making a proud boast of the scheme, is interesting reading.

The next morning they were haled into court and the mate was charged with having liquor in his possession and fined $200 and costs or six months in gaol, and the other two men were fined $400 and costs each, for having liquor in their possession and offering it for sale—a total of nearly $1,100, and the goods involved consisted of five flasks of liqour, about thirty ounces.

They seized the ship on the grounds that there were eleven cases short in the cargo. This can be easily explained, for in transferring the cargo to the Admiral Beatty, which was done during very heavy weather lying some fifty or sixty miles from shore, it would be very easy for some of the cargo to slip overboard or be broken. The supercargo was making his first trip to sea on a sailing ship, and he was very sick and could not check up the cargo.

This vessel was seized in July, 1926, and was handed back to her owner in October, 1927. The case was brought to trial before Mr. Justice A. K. Maclean of the Exchequer Court of Canada, and this was his decision:

> I am therefore of the opinion that the seizure of the Admiral Beatty and her cargo had not been justified, and they should be discharged from the custody of the crown, and delivered to their owners, and free of any charges or expense incident to the detention.

Thus, after seizing and holding the vessel at Shelburne from July 30, 1926, against the reiterated protests of her owner, made continually from the moment she was detained, and of her absolute innocence of all wrongdoing, it was finally upheld as one of the most extraordinary and astounding cases that has occurred in Canada.

In justice to the minister I would say that in the few dealings I have had with him I have always found him to be very fair. He told me quite frankly that there was no fund out of which restitution could be made to Charles F. Longley, and that is why I am bringing it before this committee. If a man's property is seized by the government, and after being held for fourteen months is returned to him in a disgraceful condition, there should be some restitution made. He suffered the loss, during that detention for fourteen months, of the thing to which he had looked as a means to pay off some of his liabilities, such as the fitting up of the vessel, supplies bought from different merchants in Halifax, the money borrowed for those purchases, and so on. The vessel was finally returned and she is lying there simply a wreck in the harbour of Halifax. He cannot realize a dollar on her and his creditors are looking to him for payment for their goods supplied to this ship.

As a result of this action by the government Mr. Longley is to-day reduced to the position of a pauper, and in view of the judgment handed down by Mr. Justice Maclean, in which he says he is of the opinion that the seizure of the Admiral Beatty and her cargo was not justified and that they should be discharged from the custoday of the crown, dellivered to their owners, and free of any charges or expense incident to the detention, I would ask the minister if this is not a case where he should extend himself to see that fairness and justice is done. I believe an appeal should be made to the treasury board of the Dominion of Canada, or the matter placed before the Prime Minister. The minister is a fair minded man, and I ask him if, in all fairness, restitution should not be made to Charles F. Longley.

Mr. EULER: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman has me somewhat at a disadvantage, as I did not know he was going to bring up this matter, and I have not a very clear recollection of it. This seizure took place prior to my coming into the department, in the summer of 1926. The boat was engaged in the rum business, and it was seized by our officers because the crew were suspected of having sold liquor to Canadians in Canada; I think that was the charge. They were prosecuted, and finally the case went to the exchequer court under Justice Maclean and a decision was given out that the boat should be returned to the owner, but costs were not assessed against either party, each side paying their own.

Mr. QUINN: The judgment handed down by Justice Maclean, which I read, was to the effect that the cargo and boat were to be delivered free of any charges or expense incident to the detention. I am not a lawyer and so I cannot interpret that decision.

Mr. EULER: I have not the judgment before me, so my hon. friend has that advantage over me. He could perhaps tell me this, whether the judge expressed the opinion that there was sufficient reason for the officers making the seizure.

Mr. QUINN: He used the word "probable."

Mr. EULER: I suppose that was the reason he did not assess cost against the department. The boat, after all, was engaged in that business, and its crew were suspected of doing an illegal business in Canada. Because of that, we were justified in seizing the boat. although the decision says that the property should be returned.

Mr. QUINN: This boat was engaged in a legal business just as the Canadian National Railways are engaged in a legal business in transporting liquor from one end of Canada to the other.

Mr. EULER: If the crew of that boat were engaged in an illegal business while they were members of the crew, that would put a little different complexion on the matter.

Mr. HANSON: That would have nothing to do with the owner at all. There must have been a separate charge against the ship or it would not have been in the exchequer court. The gravamen of the charge is not only the detention of the ship but the return of the ship in a dilapidated condition. What has the minister to say about that?

Mr. EULER: The minister has really nothing to say about that. It may be an unfortunate situation, but so far as the minister is concerned there is no provision anywhere for making a refund on a score of that kind. My lawyer friends know very well that many instances occur where supposedly in the interest of the general public the crown brings a man to trial. I am giving this by way of example. A man spends probably all his money in defending himself and he is declared not guilty, but he has no recourse for the money he lost. It does not seem quite fair to me, I admit.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): I should like to call the minister's attention to what seems to be an unnecessary limitation of the authority of local steamboat inspectors. They can make no alterations—

Mr. EULER: That does not come under this department.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): I think this item includes the salaries of steamboat inspectors.

Mr. EULER: That is under the Marine and Fisheries department.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): Notwithstanding the assurance of the minister I am sure that the inspection of hulls and boilers of steamers comes under the Department of National Revenue, formerly the Department of Customs—

Mr. EULER: Not at all.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): —and that the inspectors are in that department.

Mr. EULER: I am assured by my officials that they are not. I can say no more. There is nothing in this item for that.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): Salaries of inspectors of ports and of other officers on inspection, and in connection with the board of customs, are included in this item. The minister can convey the information to the government that inspectors of hulls, boilers and machinery on steamboats have not the slightest authority of themselves. If it is necessary to make even a trivial alteration in the arrangement of a steamer, the matter has to be referred to the department at Ottawa. Notwithstanding the fact that ultimately the local inspector's recommendation is accepted, a great deal of time has to be taken up in correspondence concerning an unimportant transaction. There is no necessity for this. The local inspectors are probably better qualified in regard to the matter than the authorities at Ottawa.

Mr. EULER: I do not like to interrupt the hon. gentleman and I would be willing to do almost anything to oblige him, but after all what he is speaking of is entirely within the estimates of the Department of Marine and Fisheries and I do not think the debate should take place on this item.

Mr. GEARY: May I give the minister a little more information in regard to the matter which the hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. Quinn) has just brought to the attention of the committee? The case came before the exchequer court and it was finally disposed of in this way. The last paragraph of the judgment reads:

> While perhaps not altogether free from doubt, I certify there was probable cause for the seizure. There will be no order as to the costs of this proceeding.

It was with a good deal of doubt that his lordship determined that there was probable cause for the seizure. There was no order made as to the costs of the proceeding, but the order that was made is as follows. I think I am reading correctly from the judgment, but the minister will see it:

> The decision of the court was that the vessel was to be returned to her owner free of all charges and expense incident to the detention.

That order still stands. The claim for damages is dismissed because there was reasonable cause for the seizure and no costs of the proceeding in the court are awarded. But the order as to payment of charges and expenses incident to the detention, I take it, still stands. If that be the case, would the minister listen to what the owner has to say in regard to the matter? I do not know the man, but his letters have been sent to me and they all have the ring of truth and sincerity in them. I do not think this is a misplaced claim, a matter that is not without some justification at least in the mind of the man who makes it. It is not a trumped-up thing. He states:

> This vessel left Halifax in July 1926 in perfect condition, a regular little yacht that was affectionately referred to by the waterfront fraternity as the Little Queen. I received her back in October 1927, a complete wreck, her sides smashed in, her hull rotten and covered with the fungus of rot, her decks rotten, her foremast and main completely gone, her anchor chains eaten up with rust and her big lot of stores eaten up and gone completely.

Those are damages that attach to the detention and if the department will consider the matter from that standpoint, I think it will find it is justified in paying under the judgment something on that account. It seems a case of hardship and I know the minister will interest himself in the matter and get the file and the correspondence. I am sure the hon. junior member for Halifax will assist him in any of the matters that he has under his advisement, and what I have are, I expect, copies of what my hon. friend has. This communication from the man sounds right and if all that damage were incurred between the date of the seizure and the date the ship was returned to its owner some eighteen months afterwards, then under the judgment I have read I think the department is responsible for the cost of the detention.

Mr. EULER: I agree with a good deal of what my hon. friend has said. I have not an absolutely clear recollection of the matter, but I seem to recall that following the receipt of a letter similar to the one in the hands of my hon. friend, I ordered an investigation with a view of discovering whether during the detention the damage was caused by reason of any negligence on the part of our own officials. If that could be established, I am quite free to say to the committee I think the man has a moral claim for some recompense. I am going to make some inquiries with regard to the matter.

Mr. GEARY: Will the minister consider whether he is right in that interpretation? It would not necessarily be negligence; if the department took and kept the ship and the damage arose during that time, it would seem prima facie that the department was responsible for what occurred to the ship.

Mr. EULER: There might be deterioration or depreciation of which I would not feel like taking so much cognizance as I would of damage resulting from negligence, not looking after the vessel properly. Perhaps persons would go on the boat and destroy the property in one way or another. If we were in charge of that boat, as I suppose we would be during seizure, then I think we should have some sort of duty to see that it was not unnecessarily damaged. If the damage took place in that way, then I admit we would have some responsibility.

Mr. GEARY: I know from the correspondence the minister will be satisfied after careful investigation.

Mr. CANTLEY: This is the situation. You seize the vessel. You allege that the crew have been in correspondence with the shore and have been smuggling. The case goes to trial. You are defeated. You are not able to prove your claim. You have kept the vessel for a year and a half. You have deprived the owner of her services. Is it not incumbent upon you to protect the property that you have seized, particularly when you are proven by your own court to have had no case?

Mr. EULER: The judge said our officers had sufficient reason for making a seizure.

Mr. CANTLEY: No.

Mr. EULER: I regret if I am wrong, but I think that is what he stated.

Mr. CANTLEY: Then why was the case dismissed?

Mr. GEARY: The court held that you had probable cause for making the seizure.

Mr. CANTLEY: That does not relieve the department of taking proper care of the property after it is seized. You keep the vessel for nearly a year and a half. There is no question as to the facts of the case. The facts are that you acted in a very high-handed way. You suspected parties of doing what you were not able to prove they did do, and now you say that the man will obtain no redress whatever. That is not fair. That is not British justice. That is not what we expect from any government in this country.

Mr. EULER: The hon. member knows very well that the crown is in a peculiar position, in an entirely different position from that of a private individual.

Mr. CANTLEY: I understand that it is said that the crown can do no wrong, but we expect to get justice from the crown, and always have done so hitherto.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): The officials of your department took that vessel from a safe mooring and put her at a wharf that was unfit to moor anything alongside of. A breeze came up and the wharf was knocked to pieces, and the vessel very, very badly damaged. That was done by your officials. The owner had nothing whatever to do with it, and then you return the vessel to the owners and say, "There she is. You can take her." If there is justice in that, I want to know where it is. I feel that this man has been most wrongfully treated by the department, and the department will make no recompense and refuses to consider the case at all.

Mr. EULER: I can add nothing further. I shall make inquiries, and if I find that the officials of the department did not exercise due and ordinary care, I think the man would have a claim against the government, a moral claim that could not be enforced, but I think in that case there should be some compensation given. As for a storm, that is an act of Providence for which we cannot be held responsible.

Mr. CANTLEY: That is not a fair answer. The vessel was taken from her owner, and she was moored, as the hon. member for Halifax has said, at a wharf that was in no condition of repair at all, a place where it was not possible for any vessel to lie safely, and when there was any bit of sea running at all she was damaged. This case was disposed of by the judge a year ago or more.

Mr. EULER: No, last October, I am informed.

Mr. QUINN: In August, 1927.

Mr. CANTLEY: That is nine months ago. Has the minister made any inquiry or made any effort to obtain the facts and see that justice is done to the man? Because injustice has been done and some recompense ought to be made.

Mr. EULER: I stated some months ago—I am speaking from memory—that I was under the impression that I had some sort of inquiry made, and I will inquire further when I get back to the office in the morning. There must be something on file in regard to it. I can say no more at the moment.

Mr. CANTLEY: I do not think the minister disposes of the matter simply by saying that he will make some sort of inquiry. Injustice has been done, and it becomes the government to see that it is rectified.

Mr. EULER: That has not yet been admitted.

Mr. CANTLEY: I am saying that injustice was done, ad I say that the government must make some recompense.

Mr. EULER: "Must" is a strong word.

Mr. CANTLEY: Must is not one bit too strong a word to use when injustice is perpetrated by any officer of this government

Mr. EULER: Once you have established the injustice, I quite admit that, but it has not yet been established to my satisfaction.

Mr. CANTLEY: You failed to establish your charge, and it is incumbent upon you to put the man back in as good a position as he was in before you made the charge.

Mr. EULER: I made no charge.

Mr. CANTLEY: Your officers made a charge. What is the use of quibbling?

Mr. EULER: This boat was seized before I came into the department.

Mr. CANTLEY: That does not make any difference. The office is hereditary. I am not holding the minister personally, but the government, responsible.

Mr. EULER: Be reasonable.

Mr. FRASER: I would like to ask the minister what he is doing in the matter of carrying out the recommendations of the several committees and other bodies that were appointed to investigate the customs department a year or so ago, and which recommended reducing the number of customs offices throughout the Dominion. What line can the minister give us on the policy that he proposes to follow in closing up a number of the ports throughout Canada?

[Mr. Cantley.]

Mr. EULER: There were some four or five different reports made by various organizations and committees with regard to customs, and I think almost all of them recommended the closing of some of the ports in Canada. We have nominally something over seven hundred ports, that is including outports and preventive stations. The word "port" is a misnomer in connection with some of these offices. In seventy-three of them no revenue whatever is collected, absolutely none, and in something like two hundred and sixty of them less than $500 is collected. Some capital was made out of the fact that in comparison with the United States we were away out of proportion in the number of ports throughout the country. We are; that is perfectly true, but the conditions are not exactly parallel. In the United States they have a number of stations, as they call them, in which they do make collection of revenue, but which are not classified as ports at all.

The reasons given for closing the ports are two: One is in order to save expense; the other is in order to obtain proper appraisals. It is represented, and quite rightly so, I think, that in the smaller ports it is quite impossible to have appraisers who are sufficiently skilled to make proper appraisals. The answer to that is that the frauds that were exposed during the various investigations invariably occurred in the larger ports, ports which we would not close in any case, and the remedy there is that we should have a better system of appraisals and a better staff of appraisers in these large ports. That is one of the difficulties with which we have to contend now, and that was one of the reasons why the bill was passed in the House of Commons this session, which I think will enable the department to get a better appraisal system and a better appraisal service. As a matter of fact, in about one hundred ports in this country about 96 per cent of the total customs revenue is collected. In the other six hundred ports appraisals are not much of a factor because the importations are very small. It seems to me, then, that it becomes a matter for consideration whether these small ports should be closed in order to save a very moderate expenditure, or whether they should be maintained for the convenience of the public. It seems to me that it comes down to a decision on that point. I also think, Mr. Chairman, that the convenience of the public is a factor that should be considered.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. EULER: Now, various suggestions have been made. One, made I think by Messrs. Clarkson, Gordon and Dilworth, was that the amount of revenue should be taken into consideration, and ports with a revenue of less than fifty thousand dollars a year should be closed. If that were done it would create a somewhat serious situation. I have here a list of ports with the revenues attaching to them. If we closed all ports with a revenue of less than fifty thousand dollars, we would have to close such places as Amherst, Glace Bay, Sorel, St. Mary's, Georgetown, Hanover, Kincardine, Perth, Listowel, Barrie—my hon. friend from Barrie is not in his seat—Newmarket, Swift Current, Yorktown, Carleton Place, Renfrew, Bracebridge, Grimsby, Orangeville, Banff,—to which my hon. friend the leader of the oposition (Mr. Bennett) objected the other day—Sydney Mines, Clinton, Wingham, Kamloops, Arnprior, and a host of others which I need not mention here. It might be advisable to close some of these ports. It might also be thought advisable to close for importation purposes some of the smaller ports, leaving them open for such services as might be rendered in the clearing of vessels or for preventive purposes. As a matter of fact, many of the ports, especially in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, are really preventive stations rather than ports for the receipt of customs duties. Most of these ports are on the border. Now I think it is the desire of parliament that we keep the most careful supervision of importations from the United States. Then we have a great many ports, as I have stated, in the maritime provinces—a tremendously long coast line, a good deal more extensive than that of the United States itself. In fact, in the maritime provinces we have one hundred ports or more with revenues less than the expenditures involved in their maintenance. That would seem to be, as the lawyers say, a prima facie case for their closing; but it does not necessarily follow, because for the convenience of the public vessels have to be entered and cleared, and, as I have said, these ports do a great deal of preventive work, and they are also necessary for the promotion of the fishing industry. In western Canada we have great distances in sparsely settled country. In some instances our people are living very close to the international line but far from a customs port. On the American side there may be a town just across the border, and quite naturally and legitimately our people go over there, and it is hardly reasonable to expect them to go forty or fifty miles to reach a port of entry.

It is not easy to decide which ports should remain open and which should be closed. We did gather our inspectors together some months ago in order to canvas the whole situation and try to arrive at some tentative decision as to what ports might be closed. The tentative list comprises some two hundred or more ports that we think might be closed, but we have not made a final decision. As a matter of fact, while the house is in session it has been very difficult to deal with matters of this kind, but this question will be taken up again as soon as parliament prorogues. Hon. members are familiar with the situation in their own constituencies, and I credit them with a desire to help put the Department of National Revenue on a proper basis. I invite them—not only those on this side, but on the other side as well—to suggest to me right now if they like, or by letter or otherwise, the ports in their own ridings—not in the other fellow's—which they would like to see closed.

Mr. SHORT: Will you take our advice?

Mr. EULER: In conclusion I may say that when the matter is receiving consideration all these factors will have to be very carefully gone into before a definite decision is made.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Perhaps the minister can now give us some particulars of the regulation put into effect last fall under which magazines then on the free list became dutiable.

Mr. EULER: The ruling was made by the customs board—over which, by the way, the minister has no control whatever—on an appeal by certain parties whose names I do not recall. The board ruled that certain publications, which the ordinary layman would call magazines, were really only works of fiction. I think that ruling was quite correct. They were of the opinion that a magazine to come strictly within that designation should have a series of articles, varied in their nature, comprising current literature, reviews, essays, perhaps some poetry and illustrations, and usually a certain amount of advertising. The board of customs therefore ruled that those so-called magazines which contained absolutely nothing but fiction, and much of it not very valuable as literature, were not strictly within the technical meaning of the word, "magazines" and were rather novels. An appeal was taken to the governor in council, and the ruling was sustained.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I am glad to have the minister's explanation, because my information is that many magazines which would not come under the class stated by him are being subjected to duty.

Mr. EULER: No.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Tariff item 184, under which these magazines previously came in, reads:

Newspapers and quarterly, monthly, and semi-monthly magazines, and weekly literature, papers unbound, tailors', milliners' and mantle makers' fashion plates, when imported in single copies, in sheet form, with magazines or trade journals—free.

Until August 18 last all these came in free, but then by this ruling of the customs board they were classified under tariff item 169, which reads:

Books, viz.; novels, or works of fiction or literature of a similar character, unbound or paper-bound or in sheets, but not to include Christmas annuals commonly known as juvenile or toy books: 15, 22½ and 25 per cent.

I may say that Good Housekeeping, the Ladies Home Journal, Needlecraft, the Woman's Home Companion and the American and other very excellent magazines are now dutiable. That is my information. I have received a complaint from my constituency signed by a considerable number of people who find themselves affected by this ruling. It is pointed out to me that some of these magazines now cost them a dollar a year more than before, making the price unduly high.

Mr. EULER: The Ladies' Home Journal and simlar magazines are not subject to duty. The magazines which come under the ruling are those published in the interests of some particular concern, which is really advertising its own product in the form of a magazine.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Am I to understand that the duty should not apply to those magazines?

Mr. EULER: Not to some mentioned by my hon. friend, but I am not quite sure which. I have not a list of those magazines before me. If I had known the matter would come up I would have had the information at hand. Generally speaking, the magazines subject to duty are those the contents of which are designed for the purpose of advertising the product of some particular concern. I might suggest to my hon. friend that if he would come to the department he could get the information much more readily than he can here, unless he desires to make a protest.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I wish to make a protest if these magazines are classified under item 169. The former item 184 is rather ambiguous.

Mr. EULER: I am informed that they are not so classified

[Mr. Euler.]

Mr. CAMPBELL: If the duty has been levied in some of these cases and if we can prove that to the officers it will be adjusted?

Mr. EULER: If any mistakes have been made they will be adjusted.

Mr. CANTLEY: Will the minister tell us who the present collector of customs is in New Glasgow?

Mr. EULER: There has been no change. The collector is Stanley MacCurdy.

Mr. CANTLEY: Is it not intended to make any change? I understand the gentleman is over seventy, and has been retired; at least it was proposed to retire him a year ago. Will the minister give us the facts?

Mr. EULER: I understand he is seventy and a report has been called for as to whether he should be continued. I am sorry I have not the information but I will get it.

Mr. CANTLEY: What is the custom in regard to the age limit?

Mr. EULER: Ordinarily officers are retired at the age of seventy. In many cases however, if the men are peculiarly fitted to continue in work, we extend the time from year to year. There is no absolute rule in the matter but they must retire at seventy-five.

Mr. CANTLEY: I do not know any reason why he is not fitted to continue.

Mr. EULER: I do not know that I should convey to the hon. gentleman mere impressions held by the commissioner, but the commissioner tells me it is his impression, that steps have already been taken to continue his services another year. That is not absolute; it is merely an impression.

Mr. CANTLEY: I understand locally, judging from reports I see in the press, that the opinion is that Mr. MacCurdy would have been retired normally in July last year but his term was extended six months and then extended another six months.

Mr. EULER: It was extended a year.

Mr. CANTLEY: Well that is a little different. What is the intention of the minister when the year is up?

Mr. EULER: I cannot say; I have no information before me.

Mr. CANTLEY: I suppose the minister or his department has a policy?

Mr. EULER: We get a report on the capabilities of the man, and if we think he is physically and mentally still fit to go on we probably extend the term another year. If not he will be retired

Mr. CANTLEY: If you will take my opinion I will give it. I think he is fit.

Item agreed to.

Mr. EULER: There is another item of mine, in the supplementaries, which I should like to have carried.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is only one item in the supplementaries.

Mr. EULER: There are two; one on the first page, and one on the last.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have no objection to 415 being carried.

National Revenue—contingencies—to provide for the installation of calculating machines in the statistical branch, $10,000.

Mr. EULER: It is understood that this item is agreed to while 516 stands.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF MARINE AND FISHERIES

Ocean and river service—maintenance and repairs to Dominion steamers and icebreakers, $1,650,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: This is the same amount as voted last year. It is the ordinary annual vote?

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): Absolutely the same.

Mr. CANTLEY: Where is the Stanley, what is her condition, and what is proposed to be done with her?

Mr. CARDIN: The Stanley is at Quebec. Certain repairs were made in the winter.

Mr. CANTLEY: They have been made?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, during the winter.

Item agreed to.

Examination of masters and mates, $20,000.

Mr. CANTLEY: How many navigation schools are maintained in the maritime provinces?

Mr. CARDIN: There is one in each of the following places: Halifax, Yarmouth, North Sydney, St. John and Charlottetown.

Item agreed to.

Inspection of live stock shipping, $4,500.

Mr. CANTLEY: Will the minister tell us how much was spent under this vote last year?

Mr. CARDIN: We spent $3,709.

Mr. CANTLEY: I thought the shipment of cattle was almost a thing of the past.

Mr. CARDIN: There are no shipments of cattle at present, but we are maintaining two inspectors in Montreal because we do not know whether or not there will be any shipments in future, we have to keep the officers there in case of need. I am also informed that we are using them as night men in the pilot office at Montreal; we are keeping them busy although there are no inspections made.

Mr. CANTLEY: That is a very comfortable position for them; I hope they will be able to keep it, but only about three-fifths of the vote was spent last year while the same amount is being asked this year. I do not think there is very much likelihood of that trade being resumed in the near future.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous and unforeseen expenses, $5,000.

Mr. SIMPSON: I suppose I should have asked this question under item 201, but I would like to inquire of the minister if the Dominion steamers, the light tenders and so on, are now equipped with wireless?

Mr. CARDIN: They are not all equipped with wireless but twelve are so equipped. Does my hon. friend desire the names of those vessels?

Mr. SIMPSON: I think not. Are the steamers operating on the great lakes equipped with wireless?

Mr. CARDIN: No, they are not.

Mr. SIMPSON: I think they should be.

Mr. CARDIN: I am inclined to agree.

Item agreed to.

Life saving service, including rewards for saving life, $80,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Will the minister give us the details of this item?

Mr. CARDIN: This proposed appropriation is for the maintenance of stations on the Pacific and Atlantic coasts and on the great lakes for rendering aid to vessels in distress, for saving lives endangered by marine casualties and for rewards for saving lives on the high seas under conditions of difficulty and great danger, requiring a display of exceptional bravery. No change is made this year. For example, in the province of Ontario there are stations at Cobourg, Goderich, Long Point, Point Pelee, Port Stanley and Southampton.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What stations are located on lake Ontario?

Mr. CARDIN: There is the station at Cobourg, where last year the expenditure was $300; that is a volunteer station. The same amount, $300, was expended at Goderich; Long Point is a seasonal station and the expenditure amounted to $5,000, the same amount being spent at Point Pelee. The expenditure at Port Stanley and at Southampton was $300 in each case.

Mr. GEARY: Are there no stations on Georgian bay?

Mr. CARDIN: There is Southampton.

Mr. GEARY: No, that is lake Huron. Southampton and Goderich are both on lake Huron, but I am talking about the upper part of the lakes.

Mr. CARDIN: I think those are all.

Mr. GEARY: Then I am sure the minister would like to know that towards the end of the last navigation season there was a good deal of dissatisfaction over the lack of facilities for life saving on the upper lakes. There was a bad storm; the ice came on, and as the minister probably saw in the press there was some loss of life and a large destruction of shipping property. Would it not be advisable to consider the situation along the north shores of Georgian bay, lake Huron and lake Superior? One would think there would be need for these stations.

Mr. CARDIN: I shall be glad to look into the situation, but representations have been made to us that we should dispense with most of these stations. However, I am quite prepared to look into the particular case mentioned by my hon. friend.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It does look in some cases as though this money has not been expended where it is most necessary. Cobourg is on a coal route, but at the end of the lake we have had wrecks of these coal boats running from Oswego every year, and it looks as though something further might be done. If a station were put on the islands or somewhere towards the head of the lakes it would be more in proximity to a great many wrecks. I think that should be kept in mind, as at certain points there are always wrecks. Most of the wrecks at the head of the lake occur during the fall, and I think one is more necessary there than even at Cobourg. Around the Thousand Islands a number of wrecks are always occurring among the coal running boats.

Mr. ROBINSON: What expenditures have been made during the last two or three years at the Point Pelee life saving station? I was down there two or three years ago and I understand that recommendations had been made that the track should be extended to the inside of the bay so that the lifeboats could be launched on the calmer side of the point in case of storm. There have been times when it has been very difficult to launch the boats during a storm.

Mr. GOTT: I should like to add just a word here. There are very poor facilities for getting to the shore and back to the light house station. I think application was made to the department for better equipment, and I should like to ask the minister if he would not give serious consideration to providing better equipment for that crew. There should be some kind of launch provided rather than a rowboat. They have some distance to go, and sometimes the storms are very severe.

Mr. CARDIN: These representations have been considered, and I will be prepared to look into the situation in that particular place.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Is it the intention of the government to place anything in the estimates this session for the life saving station at Scatarie island?

Mr. CARDIN: According to the information which I can obtain, this station is adequately equipped. We have provided practically everything we can provide, but in view of the interest my hon. friend is taking in this matter I shall be pleased to consider the suggestion that he has made.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): I am pleased to note that the minister is interesting himself in the condition of the life saving station at Scatarie island. I visited Scatarie island in 1926, a short time after the ship Ringhorn grounded off that coast and five lives were lost. I had a conversation with the captain and he told me that he remained on the ship all night. He could see the people on the shore as they built fires, and he waited all night for some method of bringing his people ashore. I claim that we should at least have a gun on this island in order that a line might be fired on board ship. Had such provision been provided for the island at that time, these five lives would have been saved. I also visited the life saving station at that time. I understand that the members of this station are volunteers, only receiving pay when they go out on a life saving trip. I looked over the boat, and it was not seaworthy. It had been in the quarters for years, and I know that no man would risk his life in ordinary weather in the lifeboat that was provided for Scatarie island, let alone go out in a storm to take a crew off a ship. I am bringing this matter to the attention of the department because more lives have been lost on Scatarie island during the last ten years than on any other part of the Atlantic coast. It is known to-day, like Sable island, as one of the graveyards of the Atlantic. I bring this matter forcibly to the attention of the government, that human lives could have been saved if the proper equipment had been installed at that point.

I also wish to bring to the attention of the government the question, and inquire whether they have any additional information regarding it, as to the fog whistle or signal on the western coast of Scatarie island. I brought this question up some time ago.

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that inquiries were made regarding this matter, and our information is that everything is in good order, and that the fog alarm is functioning regularly. That is the information we have in the department, having made inquiries.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): We know that the fog alarm is functioning regularly, but the point is that ships sailing in a westerly direction cannot hear that fog horn two miles from the light. The fog whistle is at the lighthouse at Scatarie island. I have an article here from the Halifax Chronicle, the Liberal organ of my friends from the province of Nova Scotia I will read a paragraph:

> Scatarie has been the graveyard of many a staunch ship, and according to seamen of Main-a-Dieu, this barren coast will claim many another victim, unless a new system of signals is inaugurated.

The fishermen claim that when approaching that island in a westerly direction, sailing from Louisburg to Scatarie island, they cannot hear that fog whistle two miles from the station. On the eastern side they can hear it for ten or twelve miles, but every wreck that has occurred on that coast during the last ten years has occurred on the western side of the island, as a result of thick fog, and not being able to hear the fog whistle. In view of what has happened during the last few years I think the minister should make a very thorough investigation, and should at least inquire of the fishermen on that coast, who are the people concerned.

Mr. CARDIN: I will do so.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, May 31, 1928.

The house met at three o'clock.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Twelfth report of the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.—Mr. Parent.

INDUSTRIAL AND INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

MOTION TO REFER BACK REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Mr. C. R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): I beg to move the following motion, which is practically the same both in form and content as the one I moved yesterday:

> That the third report of the select standing committee on industrial and international relations, presented to the house on May 16th instant, be referred back to the said committee with instructions that they have power to amend the same by substituting the following for paragraph 8 thereof:
> Your committee further recommend that 750 copies in English and 250 copies in French of this report, and the evidence upon which it is based, be printed in blue book form, and that standing order No. 64 be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS

REFUND OF FEES

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar) moved:

> That in accordance with the recommendation contained in the twelfth report of the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills, and with the usual practice in such cases, the additional charge paid on the following private bills from the Senate be refunded, namely:
> Bill No. 342, for the relief of Frank Deering.
> Bill No. 343, for the relief of Mary Mabel Jenny Potten Impey.
> Bill No. 345, for the relief of Myrtle Adelia Baker Knauff.

Bill No. 347, for the relief of Hilda Evelyn McDowell.

Bill No. 348, for the relief of Catherine Ellen Mobbs.

Bill No. 350, for the relief of Henry Frederick White.

Bill No. 356, for the relief of Florence Anne Salmon.

Bill No. 358, for the relief of Mary Walton Smith.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

BRITISH COLUMBIA RAILWAY BELT

Mr. TOLMIE:

1. How much money has been received by the Dominion government from sale of: (a) lands; (b) timber; (c) minerals; (d) grazing; (e) water-power; (f) foreshores, and any other sources of revenue in the railway belt in British Columbia during the last thirty years?

2. What amount has been received by the Dominion government in connection with or arising out of taxes, licenses, ground or other rentals, forestry, rebates or any other sources of revenue in the railway belt in British Columbia during the last thirty years?

3. What has been the cost to the government of Canada of the administration of these lands and resources during the above period?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton):

Answers as far as the Interior department is concerned:

1.

Lands	$ 555,536 05
Forests	4,979,673 42
Mines	305,150 56
Parks	46,443 37
Water power and reclamation	5,838 22
		$5,892,641 62
Less refunds to March 31, 1927		309,615 29
		$5,583,026 33

2. Answered in No. 1.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—MONCTON OFFICE

Mr. SHORT:

1. Has Sir Henry Thornton an office in Moncton?

2. Where is it located?

3. When was it assigned to Sir Henry Thornton?

4. How often has Sir Henry Thornton occupied this office, and for what length of time?

Mr. DUNNING:

1. There is at Moncton an office marked for the use of the president and executive officers of Canadian National railways. There are similar offices at other points on the system and they are intended for the general use of the president, vice-presidents, and other officers when visiting the respective regional or other offices. When not so used, such offices are employed for local purposes as and when required.

2. In the regional headquarters of the railway.

3. In the autumn of 1926.

4. October 1926, April 1927, and October 1927; for not more than one day in each instance.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON FISHERIES

Mr. SHORT:

1. How many commissioners were appointed to act on the royal commission to investigate the fisheries of the maritime provinces?

2. What are their names?

3. How much has been paid, or is to be paid, each commissioner for salary and how much for expenses?

4. How many lawyers were employed?

5. What are their names?

6. How much has been paid, or is to be paid, each lawyer for services and how much for expenses?

7. How many secretaries and other employees were there in connection with the commission?

8. How much has been paid, or is to be paid, to the secretaries and other employees for salaries and how much for expenses?

9. What has been, or is to be, the total cost of the commission?

Mr. CARDIN:

1, 2 and 3.

Commissioner	Salary	Expenses
1. Hon. A. K. Maclean	Nil	$ 2,772 78
2. J. G. Mombourquette	$ 3,725 00	1,940 75
3. J. G. Robichaud	4,025 00	2,170 15
4. H. R. L. Bill	4,000 00	2,097 40
5. Dr. C. Macmillan	3,600 00	1,325 00

Questions

4, 5 and 6.
G. Fred Pearson, counsel	$ 16,300 00	$ 2,416 72
W. P. Potter, assistant counsel	2,400 00	688 75
7 and 8.
1 Secretary	$ 3,340 00	$ 2,107 92
10 different stenographers employed at various times	1,165 14	446 08
Reporters—Butcher & Co	7,200 00	1,532 70
1 Machine operator	427 59	389 05
4 Departmental officers	Nil	3,782 43
	$ 12,132 73	$ 8,258 18

In addition to the above there were unclassified railway and other transportation charges, which amounted to $5,934.37.

9. $85,427.42 paid.

SOLDIER SETTLER FARMS—FORECLOSED OR SURRENDERED

Mr. CAMPBELL:

1. How many soldier settler farms have reverted to the board since January 1, 1926?
2. How many of these have been (a) foreclosed on by the board; (b) voluntarily surrendered?
3. How many of these farms have been sold or leased to (a) settlers under the empire settlement scheme; (b) to any other farmers or settlers?

Mr. CAMPBELL: The officials of the board, Mr. Speaker, have pointed out to me some practical difficulties in the way of securing an answer to this question, but they have given me information which will suffice, and therefore I ask that this question be dropped.

Question dropped.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

SUPPLIES FOR HUDSON BAY

Mr. BLACK (Halifax):

1. How much was paid A. S. MacMillan or MacMillan Construction Company by all departments of the government for all material supplied by them on account of Hudson bay or Hudson straits during the year 1927?
2. How much was paid to Halifax firms by all departments of the government during the year 1927 for all supplies to Hudson bay or Hudson straits?
3. Were supplies by tender?
4. If so, give details of tenders?

PRIVILEGE—SIR GEORGE PERLEY

On the orders of the day:

Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Argenteuil): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. Yesterday I made a few remarks in reference to the important financial questions which the High Commissioner's office in London had to deal with during the war. Among other things I said, as appears in the first column of Hansard, at page 3563.

The High Commissioner attended to these questions throughout the war, with the assistance of his office staff, without having to call in any expert assistance.

I find that in a press despatch which received general circulation this morning, I am stated to have said:

The High Commissioner had attended to them—

Referring to these financial questions:

—without the assistance of an office staff throughout the war.

The difference between these two versions is a very real one, and while that would not matter much so far as the people here in Canada are concerned, I do not want any of the High Commissioner's staff to think that I am unmindful of the splendid work which they did during the years when I was in London. No body of men and women ever gave more loyal service. I certainly could not have carried on without their united support and I again take this opportunity to express my appreciation of the same. The representatives of the press, Mr. Speaker, have always been so fair to me that I regret having to call attention to this error, which I am sure they will be glad to rectify.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) kindly give the house the actual situation which now prevails with regard to the powers of the Dominion government in granting fishing licenses on the west coast?

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I take that as a notice of the question. May I refer the hon. member to paragraph 350 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms where May is quoted as follows:

The expression of a legal opinion cannot be sought by a question, nor the solution of an abstract legal case or of a hypothetical proposition.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, I was not trying to secure a legal statement, but merely an answer with regard to the practical situation that now exists as to the expiry of certain fishing licenses on the west coast.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That would be for the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin), if my hon. friend does not seek a legal opinion.

HON. VINCENT MASSEY

REPORTED ATTENDANCE AT REPUBLICAN NATIONAL CONVENTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Northwest Toronto): Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the government to a despatch from Kansas City which appears in this morning's issue of the Montreal Gazette. It reads:

Kansas City, Mo., May 30.—Two representatives of foreign governments, Hon. Vincent Massey, minister for Canada to the United States, and Jan Ciechanowski, Polish minister, will attend the Republican national convention here, beginning June 2, Lafayette B. Gleason, secretary of the convention, said to-day.

I desire to ask if the government will make some inquiries as to the right of our minister at Washington to attend a convention of the Republican party.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CHURCH: Am I to have an answer from the government to a perfectly proper question?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: With pleasure.

IMMIGRATION PERMITS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac-Addington): Mr. Speaker, in yesterday's Journal appears a list of the names of members of parliament and of the Senate, and of other individuals who, according to that paper, received special permits to admit ineligible foreigners into Canada. I do not accuse the Journal of wishing to misrepresent but I think the word "ineligible" is badly chosen—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): —and its ambiguity might leave a wrong impression. I desire to say that the Journal is not correct in using that word; no ineligible foreigners were admitted into Canada by so-called "permits." These permits would be more properly termed "letters of admission." The letters of admission were to bring in the relatives of persons already in Canada, and their entry was subject entirely to the approval of the department.

The second point that I think I should call to the attention of the house relates to the number of so-called permits credited to each person. More properly the return should have been divided into the number of permits and the number of persons included in those permits. For instance, an individual who obtained three letters of admission might bring in eleven persons. He is credited with obtaining eleven permits, when as a matter of fact he obtained only three. Several hon. members have spoken to me about this, and I think it is only fair that the public at least should have a correct impression of what the return means.

STEAMER VIGILANT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, last night during the discussion of the estimates of the Department of National Revenue, the minister (Mr. Euler), intimated that he would lay on the table to-day, if possible, all the papers in connection with the sale or purchase of the steamship Vigilant and its subsequent chartering to the government, and the correspondence connected therewith. Will the minister be able to lay those papers on the table to-day?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I understand that in the discussion of the estimates yesterday one item was held over in order to consider the matter to which my hon. friend refers—the Vigilant, is it not?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If it would be agreeable to hon. gentlemen opposite we might continue with the estimates of the Department of National Revenue as soon as we go into supply, and so give the minister an opportunity to make a statement.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I understand there is a considerable file of papers. We do not know what they contain. I should like to have a day at least before we discuss them.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am aware of some of the circumstances. I think it is a matter of sufficient importance to give us an opportunity to look through the file before we are called upon to form an opinion.

Hon. W. D. EULER (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, in reply to my hon. friend the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie), I may say that last night it was understood that upon a resumption of a consideration of the supplementary estimates the matter of the Vigilant should be discussed. The item was held for that one purpose. There were two reasons in particular, as I recall them; they were these—

Mr. GUTHRIE: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I am asking for papers, not for a speech. This is on the orders of the day, and I submit the hon. minister is out of order. We have a right to the papers.

Mr. SPEAKER: According to Bourinot:

> No discussion should be allowed when a minister has replied to a question, nor after a member has made his personal explanation.

It is well understood that all questions on the orders of the day should be brief, and that the answers thereto should also be brief.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, the question asked by the hon. acting leader of the opposition is that we should have these papers laid on the table. This is the privilege of any hon. member. It is a question of pure routine, and we are simply asking—

Hon. LUCIEN CANNON (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman is out of order altogether. He did not put the question; he has no reply to make.

Mr. SPEAKER: A point of order is always debatable. The hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) has asked a question, and I presume the hon. Minister of National Revenue is answering it. This may be done very briefly.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I suppose, Mr. Speaker, my colleague has the right to say what is the nature of the documents he intends to table.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, I am rising, if I may so state, to assert a right of hon. members—the right to request the government in matters pertaining to items of the estimates or otherwise to lay on the table of the house certain documents.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is what the Minister of National Revenue is trying to do.

Mr. STEVENS: We have asked for certain documents to be laid on the table of the house. The Prime Minister intimated a moment ago that the intention of the government was to discuss the matter when the item was again called. This is not in accordance with the request of members on this side of the house.

Mr. EULER: Mr. Speaker, it is merely my intention to say that I propose now to lay on the table for future discussion, if the opposition prefer to postpone the discussion, the papers asked for to show that the Vigilant was sold by the Conservative government, not by the Liberal government.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. STEVENS: Those tricks do not work.

Mr. EULER: Mr. Speaker, may I request leave to lay the papers on the table?

IMMIGRATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL

DESIGNATION, "CANADIAN CITIZEN" IN SENATE AMENDMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. L. BEAUBIEN (Provencher): Yesterday Your Honour read a message from the House of Lords—I mean the Senate—in regard to Bill No. 187, which was amended in the other chamber. I wish to read one of the paragraphs of the amendment, and to ask the Minister of Justice a question thereon:

> Whenever any person other than a Canadian citizen advocates in Canada the overthrow by force or violence of the government of Great Britain or Canada, or other British dominion, colony, possession or dependency, and so forth. I desire to ask the Minister of Justice where the senate gets the term "Canadian citizen".

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I beg my hon. friend's pardon.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: What is a "Canadian citizen"? I thought the proper term was "British subject".

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have just told my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) that on the orders of the day he cannot ask the Minister of Justice or any other minister to express a legal opinion on an abstract legal case or a hypothetical proposition.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GOTT (South Essex): I have a very brief question that will require but a brief answer. I do not know whether to make inquiries of the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of National Revenue, the Minister of Justice or the Prime Minister. I have under my hand a telegram from Leamington, Ontario, dated May 30:

Government permitting United States products to nullify our best efforts by glutting and swamping our market. This condition did not exist last year—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have already ruled that according to Bourinot telegrams should not be read to the house because, first, the signatures cannot be ascertained and, secondly, no outsider may give his opinion to influence the house.

Mr. GOTT: I would ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) whether it is the intention of the government to give any assistance to the early vegetable and fruit growers of western Ontario or of the Dominion at large?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I am not in a position to make a statement at the present moment

Hon. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac-Addington): I wish to ask the Prime Minister a question. Yesterday the Prime Minister said in answer to a question asked by the hon. member for West Kootenay (Mr. Esling) that he could not say whether there were reasonable grounds for passing an order in council until he had consulted his colleagues, who might differ on the matter. That was his answer. May I ask the right hon. gentleman whether in the meantime he has obtained the views of his colleagues on this question, and what is the result of their collective wisdom?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think what I said was that I might have one view as to what was a reasonable ground while some of my colleagues might entertain a different view; but that what the collective opinion would be as the result of an exchange of views I could not say until there had been an opportunity to exchange them. Up to the present time there has been no occasion to exchange views on the matter.

Mr. GOTT: I should like to ask—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF MARINE AND FISHERIES

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Marine—life saving service, including rewards for saving life, $80,000.

Mr. CHURCH: I wish to direct the attention of the house to a disaster that overtook shipping on the great lakes last fall, and to another disaster that occurred on lake Erie a month ago. Only a miserable $8,000 out of this vote is provided for the great lakes to safeguard the interests of 5,000 seamen, who are exposed to very grave danger during the months of October, November, December and January. These men are engaged in carrying the grain crop of Canada on the great lakes and although operating Canadian vessels, they have to trust to the mercy of an American life saving station in the event of accident. This is not creditable to Canada. On the great lakes we have a life saving system which is nothing but a relic of the days before confederation. That is all it is. You can spend millions of dollars on railways and canals but only $80,000 in life saving, and only a miserable proportion of that on the great lakes. I wish to protest on behalf of these brave seamen who are left to the mercy of Americans when they are in danger. There is not an icebreaker to help these men or a decent life-saving station on the great lakes except the one at Toronto maintained by the local taxpayers.

There are ten Liberals in this house representing Ontario and maritime seats; only two or three of them are present to-day to speak for their constituencies. Where are these gentlemen who represent maritime cities around lake Superior, Georgian bay, lake Huron and lake Erie? Canada is proud to call herself a nation and yet in time of disaster these brave seamen are left, I repeat, without any help at all. We are thinking more of trade than we are of human life. Something should be done by this government to safeguard the lives of these men, but instead of that all the government is voting for their protection on the great lakes is a miserly $8,000. The government can afford millions of dollars for breakwaters and wharves and other material things, but not a dollar to protect these men, blood brothers of the men who fought at St. Julien, and scaled the heights of Passchendale. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) talks a lot of nonsense about equality of status. I do not see the hon. gentleman in his place this afternoon, but if he would spend more of his time in an endeavour to solve economic problems and to promote the welfare of these brave men it would be far better than all the academic talk we hear from him in season and out of season. What does he care about these sailors? He talks about nationalism. It is a sham nationalism; that is all it is. If we had a proper spirit of nationalism we would do something to protect these brave men who night and day are doing their utmost to advance the prosperity of the country. Many of these men who serve as seamen on the great lakes, transporting our grain, have applied to the government for consideration, and in this regard I have a huge pile of papers brought down as a return to an order regarding this question and asking for relief. In addition to this I myself appeared before the minister with a deputation of lake mariners and the Masters and Mates Association, the year before last and the year before that asking that something be done for these men. This country is following a penny-wise-pound-foolish policy—spending millions of dollars on breakwaters, wharves and the like and absolutely neglecting these poor men.

It is the duty of the government to protect the lives of its citizens whether on the great lakes or on the ocean, but what is this government doing? All they have is a little bit of a life-saving boat on the great lakes. There are no stations at Port Dalhousie or at Hamilton; the city of Toronto spends $60,000 of the taxpayers' money to protect the shipping on lake Ontario, and that life-saving crew has been called to Muskoka, to Georgian bay, to lake Huron, to lake Erie and to the Niagara river. On behalf of the taxpayers of the city of Toronto I wish to protest against this added responsibility to their already heavy burden. If there is a disaster on these lakes what does the department do? A wreck commissioner is sent for, a man who knows something about salt water but who knows little or nothing about the great lakes, and he holds an inquiry. The wreck may have been the fault of the owners of the ship; it may have been caused by the fact that the captain did not have proper assistance, but the wreck commissioner comes along and takes away the captain's license, putting him out of a position and preventing him from earning his living. Canada has a government at Ottawa which chatters about our new status but which does nothing to help the poor sailors. Some years ago a parliamentary inquiry was held in England, and it was determined among other things that each ship must have a Plimsoll mark on the hull, but so far as shipping is concerned Canada is still a colony. There are ten members in this house whose constituencies border on these great inland waters; I refer to the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Fansher), the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Goodison), the hon. member for North Huron (Mr. Spotton), the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan), the hon. member for East Essex (Mr. Odette), the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. Malcolm), the hon. member for South Bruce (Mr. Hall), the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Telford), the hon. member for South-east Grey (Miss Macphail) and the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Bowman). With the exception of one, these ten members support the Liberal government, yet we do nothing in this regard.

The government should vote a large sum of money for this work; we should have proper ice crushers and other equipment. They have this equipment on the St. Lawrence river and in the gulf, and modern aids to navigation, but apparently these upper lakes are to be left unprotected during the early winter and fall storms. The canals are open until early in December, yet our sailors on the great lakes are left to the kindness of the Americans if life-saving assistance is needed. The Department of Marine and Fisheries should be up and doing something, instead of spending all this money in the lower St. Lawrence. In one particular disaster which took place on the great lakes more lives were lost than in the battle of Queenston Heights in 1812, yet all this parliament does is to spend a large part of its time discussing academic questions. I am surprised that my hon. friends to the left, who have done a great deal of good work in connection with questions respecting public rights, do not take some action in this regard, since these sailors play an important part in advancing one of our great basic industries and in keeping trade in Canadian channels.

What is the situation in the United States? The War department has a life-saving station at the port of Buffalo consisting of 250 men, who go out over lake Erie in that district to protect the millions of people travelling up and down in the large steamers. They have other stations at Erie, at Cleveland, at Toledo and at Detroit; all along the lakes they have companies of naval reservists, some of them composed of as many as 300 and 400 men and assisted also by volunteer reserves. They are on the lookout all the time; they have a wireless system, aids to navigation, they have up-to-date fast boats, and in many cases they have on the upper lakes large ice crushers with which to assist these brave men instead of leaving them at the mercy of the waves and fall storms.

I wish to protest against this condition on behalf of the lake sailors' associations, and the Masters' and Mates' Association; ever since I have been in parliament these men have been coming to Ottawa with memoranda in connection with this matter, only to have their data filed away in cold storage. It is all very well to say that $80,000 is being spent in this service, but nothing has been done on the great lakes; large numbers of Canadian boats are lying idle in Canadian ports while American hulls are carrying the grain of this country. In addition to that, these captains have many other grievances arising out of the lack of aids to navigation such as lighthouses, beacon lights, wireless apparatus, and many other things of that kind. All the money has been spent in the lower St. Lawrence, and I protest on behalf of the taxpayers of Ontario, who pay 42 per cent of the taxes of Canada.

I have brought up this question for four or five sessions of parliament without being able to accomplish anything. There should be one or two large life-saving stations on lake Superior; one should be located at Port Arthur, Fort William and the Soo. The hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) is not afraid or too proud to fight for his constituents or for the people in other parts of the country; some day he will have a great port at the head of the lakes, but there is no sign of a proper life-saving station being located there, with ice crushers, wireless equipment and the other necessary aids to navigation. If there are to be no life-saving stations let the minister declare that after November 15 or to December 10 no more grain shall be carried, but if the men are to be sent out on the great lakes in the storms which prevail during late fall, they are entitled to all the protection and assistance it is possible to give.

No doubt the minister will get up and say that nothing can be done, that we are spending all we can or as much as the previous government did. This is an example of the way these estimates are considered. We only hold post mortems on the estimates; a great deal of the money has been spent by the time we come to consider them. I venture to say that if we held a parliamentary inquiry into this question many members would be horrified to find the true state of affairs on the great lakes. The man who has some freight to be carried will charter an American hull rather than a Canadian boat because he knows he can get a better insurance rate when the insurance company learns that the boat will have the life-saving protection afforded by the United States government in the bad weather of November and December. In the dangerous waters of lake Superior, Georgian bay and lake Huron there is no life-saving equipment.

There is a large sand shoal off the Niagara river, and the attention of the minister has been called to it many times. What is the government going to do about it? Are they going to wait until one of these large boats founder with two or three thousand people aboard and have the disasters of the upper lakes occurring also in lake Ontario? I wish the Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan) were here to tell us something about deep-sea diving, and what it feels like to go down to the bottom of the sea. But he is over in Europe now trying to pacify that country, and I see he is riding around in aeroplanes. He represents one of these maritime constituencies on the upper lakes, adjacent to the scene of one of these disasters and he could tell of the necessity of getting something done.

Petitions have been sent to the government but they are doing nothing, and they will do nothing as long as there is an opposition to put up with it. I am going to move, as a censure of the government, that the item be reduced. It is the only weapon I have in committee. I do not wish to delay the house by moving an amendment to the motion to go into supply, but will simply move that this vote be reduced in committee although I would like to see the vote half a million.

If we had a great lake disaster it would wake up the whole country, and as a member of the opposition, representing a maritime constituency, I wish to protest against the continuance of the present indifference and neglect. I protest against the taxpayers of the city of Toronto having to expend about $60,000 to maintain a life-saving department for the whole lake when the government fails. They are called to Port Dalhousie, Hamilton, Georgian bay, the Muskoka lakes; they went to the Moon river to drag for five or six boys who were drowned there. They go all over the lakes, simply because we have a so-called Liberal government that will not make the expenditure to protect these brave men on the lakes.

As I say, I do not wish to take up the time of the house, but I am going to move that this item be reduced by $15,000, as a censure of the government for the lax way it has treated these brave men on the lakes. I, therefore, move as follows:

That item No. 211 be reduced from $80,000 to $65,000.

Mr. SPOTTON: As one of the Liberal-Conservative members from a maritime constituency bordering on lake Huron, where many a home is mourning for the loved ones who have found a watery grave in lake Huron and the other lakes, I wish to say "amen" to everything the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) has said. Mr. Chairman, I am utterly amazed that the Prime Minister of Canada and his colleagues in the cabinet not only lend an unsympathetic ear, but entirely disregard, the pleadings we have heard this afternoon. Only one member of the government, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm), who comes from a neighbouring county, has given any attention whatever to these remarks. We are accustomed to read and hear the Prime Minister's speeches where he says in almost every paragraph that he wants this house and "the country" to understand so-and-so. His efforts and remarks are all to the country. I have never known of such a self-centred and self-satisfied bunch of men in my life as the present administration. They have drunk deep of all kinds of knowledge and they apparently cannot learn anything from any private member who may rise in his seat.

It is only a short time ago that they showed great concern for the people residing in the vicinity of these lakes. I am not going to take up the time of the house further than just to say "amen" to everything the hon. member for Toronto Northwest has said, regarding some effort being made to protect the lives of the brave boys from my county and neighbouring counties who traverse the lakes and keep open these great arteries of trade and commerce. I would like the house and the country, and the men who have shed and will shed tears again, when addressing citizens of Canada to understand that these pleadings have been entirely disregarded by the members of the government, with the exception of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I want the people in my county and the neighbouring counties to understand that it has been practically a joke, so far as the present administration is concerned, and if they want any relief I suppose the only thing to do is to change the complexion of the administration.

Mr. CARDIN: I have no hesitation in saying that I sympathize most heartily with the representations which have been made by the two previous speakers. If we are not doing more than we are doing at the present time, it is not on account of a lack of sympathy or consideration for these navigators on the great lakes. This vote is put through year after year. It started long ago when the boats navigating the great lakes were not what they are to-day, and the life-saving service was established to cope with that situation. But with the great developments which have taken place regarding navigation on the great lakes, it is impossible to cope with the situation with the very limited amount which is voted year by year. With the sum we are asking for this year, we could not prevent such accidents as the hon. member has just referred to.

It must be remembered that the majority of the accidents which do occur on the great lakes happen towards the close of the navigation season, and the navigators themselves and the proprietors of the ship take a certain amount of risk in running their boats at this late period of the year. It would help very materially if some sort of an understanding were arrived at between the shipping interests whereby navigation would cease when it was not considered to be safe on the lakes. It would be impossible to stop all the accidents which occur on the lakes. We are doing the best we can with the votes we are getting, but I am free to admit that we could do more if we had a little more money. But even if we spent double the amount we are asking for this year, we could not cope with the situation.

Reference has been made to the United States, it being claimed that they have a more adequate system. As far as the number of accidents is concerned, I think we compare very favourably with the United States. They have had as many accidents as we have had in Canada on the great lakes or anywhere else, and to say that we should provide life-saving stations and life-saving apparatus at every point where there is navigation, or where there is danger, would mean that we would have to come to parliament and ask for several millions of dollars. We would need that amount to cope with all the representations made by certain gentlemen. We are in sympathy with those who sail the lakes, and we sympathize with the families who have lost loved ones, but we must admit that with the best system possible we will never be in a position to prevent all accidents and casualties in navigation.

I cannot agree with my hon. friend when he asks us to reduce the item. If we are not doing enough with the appropriation of $80,000 that we have at present, we shall certainly do much less if we reduce this small appropriation. Good service has been rendered by the small stations that we have, with their limited means and apparatus, and it would be a mistake to do away with them even if they are not as effective as they would be if we were spending millions instead of thousands of dollars as we are doing now. I might express the view of the officers of the department, after having studied the matter. They are of opinion that it is almost impossible to cope entirely with the situation which has been revealed and the prevention of accidents. The technical men of the department are of the view that the best safeguards in regard to navigation and shipping are those which they have enumerated in a short memorandum which has been given to me, as follows:

1. By the provision and maintenance of modern aids to navigation, including accurate and reliable charts and sailing directions.
2. By providing that all vessels shall be properly equipped with lifesaving apparatus.
3. By providing that only certified and fully qualified officers shall be employed in the navigation of vessels.
4. By the dissemination by radio broadcast and by the display of land signals of information relating to conditions of navigation, weather conditions generally and particularly of impending storms.

I may add to that that the regulations in regard to seaworthiness of vessels are applied most strictly. If we could apply in practice all these suggestions, we would help to solve the problem and give valuable assistance to the shipping interests. Indeed, if all these suggestions were put into practice and accepted with good will on the part of the shipping interests, we would do more than we could ever do by maintaining or developing the life-saving system that we have at the present time. Personally I would not object to spending a larger amount of money on a bigger scheme for life-saving; I admit it is worth the money that we might spend on it; but we are not quite sure whether we would be in a position even then to cope with the situation as it exists. My sentiments in the matter are just as good and strong as those of the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) and the hon. member for North Huron (Mr. Spotton) who has just taken his seat. We are ready to do everything we can for the safety of the mariners and up to the present time with the limited means and appropriation granted to us we have done pretty well even in comparison with what has been done in the United States. We ought to retain this appropriation. If we do little, let us do what we are doing at present and do not let us do away with the existing services which have proved, generally speaking, their efficiency and benefit to navigators.

Mr. CHURCH: This amendment is the only weapon I have. I would be willing to withdraw the amendment if the minister would increase the appropriation to half a million dollars, but I object to the minister telling the committee that his system compares favourably with that of the United States. The department have not enough life-saving stations on the great lakes. They have only small lifeboats at Cobourg, Goderich, Pelee Point, Port Stanley and so forth. These boats cannot go out to a ship at all owing to the waves raised by the storms. I have seen these small boats at the stations on the lakes and they are little lifeboats, that cannot get out of the port in a storm. How are they going to get out in the month of December? I am sorry I have not with me a couple of hundred pictures that I have of disasters on the upper lakes. I have one here which shows the ice on the great lakes when our brave sailors were out there battling with the storm. The minister has not an up-to-date life-saving station on the entire great lakes; he has to protect these men who are carrying our grain on the great lakes, only a few lifeboats like those that are found on the top of a big vessel. I have here a picture of a tug at Owen Sound. It could not get out at all. This is a picture of a freighter covered up to the third deck with ice. A little rowboat cannot deal with a situation like that. It is almost comparable with the government's contemptible little navy in time of war. I have visited the life-saving stations at Detroit and Buffalo. They have a company of 250 naval reservists stationed at Buffalo, Detroit, and up the lakes, and in the summer time they have a volunteer company ready to go round the lakes when called upon and to give help if necessary. It was due to these United States men alone that our men were rescued. Just last month a disaster happened at Port Dover and they had to wait for a week to get a life-saving tug from Bessemer or Erie, Pennsylvania, to come to the rescue. Hon. Forbes Godfrey wired Hon. J. S. Martin, Minister of Agriculture, congratulating him on having got the United States life tug; and in seven days the men were brought into Port Dover.

I contend that this item ought to be increased to more than a million dollars for proper lifesaving stations to help the grain trade on the great lakes and to protect the travelling public and sailors. Are we to be at the mercy of American life-saving stations for our protection on the great lakes? More than 5,000 sailors are left at the mercy of the few small boats and there is not a modern, up-to-date station except the one at Toronto which is maintained by the taxpayers of that city at a cost of $60,000 a year. The government should have ice-breaking tugs, modern marine equipment, wireless, fast tugs, lighthouses, sirens and other modern aids to navigation on the great lakes, the same as they have on the St. Lawrence and down in the gulf. A sum of $80,000 is not sufficient to establish one station. The department could not secure a proper tug for that amount. Such boats would cost as much as $100,000. Why does the Department of Marine and Fisheries not borrow some of the ships of the merchant marine which cost from a million to a million and a half dollars and which were sold for $50,000? They could have been converted into proper tugs to handle the situation on the great lakes. To-day it cannot be handled at all, and nothing will be done by the department. I do not really intend that $15,000 should be struck off this item, but an amendment of this kind is the only weapon I have in committee of supply. I could have brought up the subject on the motion to go into supply but I did not wish to delay the business of the house. I think it would be a good thing for the taxpayers if the session were closed up to-night before the government bring down any more supplementary estimates running into eight or ten million dollars. The Department of Marine and Fisheries is incapable of doing anything in regard to taking care of the situation on the great lakes. Until some members of parliament and government officials happen to be on some of these boats in a storm on the great lakes nothing will be done and the department will continue having little bits of rowboats at Cobourg, Goderich and other places and such contemptible small boats to rescue lives.

An hon. member from one of the Essex constituencies called attention to this matter a year ago in the house when there was a debate on this very item. The week after, at Pelee island, three or four men were drowned owing to the fact that there was no life-saving station there. Since then a station has been installed, but what is the use of a station and of a small life-boat on a stormy December night, with high seas running? I had a report—I am sorry I have not got it here—showing what the United States government is doing in the matter of life-saving in its various harbours and ports. They have organized a permanent life-saving corps. At the city of Detroit, for instance, there is a corps of over two hundred men, and a life-saving station at the Detroit Boat Club. They have also naval ships right at the port and and all along the river ready to go out on the lakes to the rescue of any large passenger boats that may be in distress. All we have is a life-saving boat about the length of a row boat and about as long as this table. Talk about $80,000! That is not nearly enough to spend on this vitally important work of life-saving. I have been down to Ottawa with the marine association representatives and with lake captains, and I know that they are left at the mercy of the politicians. Talk about Liberalism! There is no Liberalism at all in this country to-day. We have on the government benches the most moss-backed form of Toryism that there ever was in the history of the world. We have a government that lets these men drown in the lake storms. I withdrew my amendment, but I shall consult with the leader of our party with a view to moving an amendment on the motion to go into supply, because I should like a vote taken on the principle whether or not these men working on the lakes are entitled to protection.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think there is much to be said in favour of the position that has been taken by my hon. friend who has moved the amendment, but I think that under all the circumstances he will be wise in withdrawing the amendment on the present occasion. An amendment to reduce the amount which has been placed in the main estimates for the purpose of life-saving would, I think, be probably misunderstood in the country, because the real object of the hon. member is to increase that amount, not to reduce it.

I must say, having regard to the situation on the great lakes, that the sum of $80,000 appearing in the estimates for the purpose of life-saving throughout the whole Dominion of Canada seems exceedingly small. I understand that at places like Goderich and Southampton on lake Huron, there is only an allotment of some $300, and that for the Georgian bay waters there is no allotment whatever. We all know that scarcely a season passes without some serious misfortune occurring, involving loss of life in the waters which comprise our great lakes system. The amounts which we now vote are entirely inadequate for the purpose for which we are voting them. When one looks at the estimates and finds that we can afford to vote annually for topographical surveys, $400,000 odd, for geodetic surveys, $265,000, for geological surveys, $205,000, and so on, surely we should be able to afford in this country a very much larger sum than $80,000 for the purpose of life-saving, and I think the minister would do well before this house meets again to reconsider this whole question. The money which he spends now in many of these places is practically wasted money; it is of no avail in case of accident. The $300 at Goderich, the $300 at Southampton, the $300 at Cobourg, is practically a worthless expenditure. I do not advocate any tremendous or unwarranted expenditure in this respect, but I think that the minister and the government would do well before the house meets again next year to see that there is appropriated an amount that will be commensurate with the difficulties which we have always to face in the autumn on these waters.

Mr. GOTT: I do not seek a reduction in this vote. What I do seek is more efficient service and dispatch from some of the life-saving stations that we have. I refer particularly to the Point Pelee life-saving station. When the committee rose last evening, the hon. member for West Essex (Mr. Robinson) had spoken of the life-saving station at Point Pelee, and my reference was to the southeast shoal lighthouse. I think the minister misunderstood my question at the time, I hope to have an opportunity to deal with the matter which I started to take up last night under these estimates, and I propose now to bring to the attention of the minister the most deplorable conditions that exist at Point Pelee life-saving station.

During the last session of the house I put a number of questions on the order paper, some twenty-five in number, in connection with the operation of the Point Pelee life-saving station. One was:

What was the total cost for maintaining the station for the year 1926?

The answer to that question was:

$7,378.76. (Up to date for fiscal year 1926-27) (Covers wages, board, repairs and labour supplies, clothing, and so forth.)

Another question I asked was:

When was the station first established?

I also asked:

14. What has been the cost of maintenance: (a) total cost; (b) each year since it was established?

15. What training or practice is participated in by the crew under the present coxswain?

The answer to question 15 was:

Drills performed twice a week. (Include managing the lifeboat and other duties connected with the station and an exercise of four or five miles in the boat.)

The cost of maintaining this life-saving station has risen each year. In 1903 the cost was $730; in 1911, $1,838.25; 1912, $4,125.97; 1916, $10,626.26; which included $5,500 for the erection of a boathouse; 1918, $5,252.54; 1924, $7,670.55; 1926, $11,412.87. I also asked this question:

Did the government receive the following resolution passed by the Pelee park patrons on July 21, 1926:

"That we call the attention of the Department of Marine and Fisheries to the fact that though the tug Peter Pan 2nd was in distress and blowing continuously on the morning of January 21st, a short distance from the Point Pelee life-saving station, no effort was made by the crew stationed there to reach her until after six in the morning, and then owing to inefficiency they were unable to do so in weather so moderate that all the fishermen were attending their nets as usual; and we ask that this matter be investigated at once to prevent another such accident as the Pelee Island mishap of a year ago."

The answer that was given to question No. 18 that I asked was this:

No. (Extract from a letter received from clerk of the peace, Windsor, Ont.) "Although this took place within three miles of the life-saving station no one there knew of it, although the boat could be seen floating bottom up quite clearly from the shore and the whistle was blown hard before the boat turned turtle."

The answer I received to question No. 19 was as follows:

The coxswain in his report of the accident states: "When the man on the beach reported ship aground made ready to go out. Saw fishing vessel Flossie G. which had been lifting nets close by proceeding to assistance, so waited their report. Survivors landed by fishing boat and taken care of at station. Survivors stated no danger whistle blown—engine room whistle blown by Captain—two short blasts."

Captain Demers in summing up his evidence of investigation states: "Even if the lifeboat had been manned it could not have rendered any help as the turning over of the vessel was so sudden that the crew was trapped and perished within a few minutes. The distance from the station to the place of casualty is estimated to be three miles, and when the crew searched the place on the following morning, Sunday, May 3rd, when the weather and wind had subsided, this distance was covered in one hour and ten minutes. In view of this, I am of the opinion that the life-saving crew would not have rendered help and saved other lives."

Then, Mr. Chairman, I asked:

Did the government receive the resolution dated July 21, 1926?

The answer given me was:

The department contemplates a complete reorganization of this station.

I want to know from the minister:—what steps have been taken to reorganize the Point Pelee life-saving station; who is going to be put in charge of it; and what kind of service does the minister propose this station shall render to shipping in general?

Mr. CARDIN: Mr. Chairman, according to the information in the department from our officers, this station is operated properly and satisfactorily. As to having a reorganization towards efficiency, I need not say that we are always striving to get the best results obtainable on the part of our employees. If necessary, I am quite ready to make further inquiries and to remedy any evil which an investigation might disclose.

Mr. GOTT: I think the minister and his officials agree that this station was not properly operated a year ago, otherwise they would never have given me the answer that the department contemplated a complete reorganization of the station. What did they mean by that? They simply meant that the station was not properly operated and that they proposed to reorganize it from the ground up. I desire to know if the station is going to be operated properly and properly manned. It is not at the present time, and was not a year ago.

Mr. CARDIN: I think the word "reorganization" which has been applied to the Point Pelee station applies to all our life-saving stations. We contemplate improving the conditions everywhere. We are trying to get the best results obtainable from this and all our other life-saving stations.

Mr. GOTT: Who is the coxswain at the Point Pelee life-saving station?

Mr. CARDIN: Unforunately I have not the name.

Mr. GOTT: I do not expect the minister to have all these details in his mind, but I should like to know what was meant by "reorganization". I believe this life-saving station should be completely reorganized and re-manned.

Mr. CARDIN: That may be the case.

Mr. GOTT: Then will the minister in the near future take steps to inquire thoroughly into the operation of this life-saving station?

Mr. CARDIN: Certainly.

Mr. GOTT: Thank you.

Mr. MALCOLM: Mr. Chairman, I should not like this discussion to close with the implication of the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) that those of us representing constituencies on the great lakes have not taken an interest in navigation. I do not think there is any member in the house more familiar with navigation conditions on the upper lakes than I am. The acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) observed that he did not believe in any unwarranted expenditure. That is where he is entirely wrong. This expenditure for life-saving stations must remain as it is, or it must be extremely large. There is no use in the member for Toronto Northwest criticizing the government for what he thinks is the inadequacy of this vote. The vote has been drifting along at about the same amount under several governments, but every government has been increasing the appropriation each year for aids to navigation. Every man who knows the class of boats engaged in the grain trade—and my hon. friend from Toronto Northwest professes a great interest in the grain trade—knows that these boats follow each other down the centre of lake Huron, and could not be quickly reached by any life-saving station located on the shores of the lake. True, we have bad storms, but no man can say at what point on the shore, either Canadian or American, a big vessel will land if she loses her rudder or propeller and gets off her course. To thoroughly patrol the Canadian side of the great lakes would mean a tremendous expenditure on life-saving stations and powerful tugs standing by the whole season long ready to respond to any emergency.

Now, when do the accidents occur to the grain boats? Never in the summer. Not until late in the fall when the navigators are anxious to make the last trip against the storm signals set by the Marine department and against the advice of more cautious men. I have known sea captains to pay high insurance rates and take chances against the storm signals put up by the Marine department. Under those conditions there is no possibility of a life-saving crew reaching a boat in the night in zero weather and in a blinding snowstorm. No patrolling boat could give relief under those conditions. Personally I feel that the small life-saving stations on lake Huron are doing good work. I have seen volunteer crews in action from my home town and from Goderich and Southampton, and they have performed very fine services in life-saving. These small stations do very valuable work, but once a large grain boat gets adrift in bad weather, not even a large life-saving station could help her.

With regard to the marine men in the various ports, I think almost without exception the captains of fishing and towing tugs at Midland, Owen Sound, Southampton, Kincardine and Goderich have always stood by ready to render all the service they could in case of a wreck. I do not speak of lake Erie as I am not so familiar with it. But the committee has to consider not an increase of, say, one hundred thousand dollars. It has to consider one of two things: whether to continue the small life-saving stations and leave to the installation of wireless on all the boats, storm signals, and so forth, the protection of the large vessels; or whether to install sufficient stations with the necessary equipment and boats, which expenditure will run into millions of dollars. It is absolutely unfair for the member for Toronto Northwest to say that this government is doing nothing to protect the lives of the sailors on the great lakes. The government is doing what the past three or four governments have done—it is spending more money every year to protect those men.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Chairman, I desire to express my entire sympathy with the object aimed at by the member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) to improve our means for life-saving on the great lakes. I agree with some of the remarks made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) that a good deal of the loss of life occurs after the ordinary navigation period closes in the fall. I suggest to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin) that he might well consider calling a conference between the ship owners, the Lake Carriers Association and the lake captains to formulate a plan for lessening the loss of life in the last few weeks of navigation between, say, the 1st and 15th of December, and sometimes later in the month. I do not wish to make the statement frequently heard on the street, that there is too much hazard taken with the lives of these men. I do not wish to condemn the steamship companies; I have no desire to be put in that position. But I do believe that something should be done in co-operation with all these different bodies, the steamship owners, the insurance people, the Lake Carriers' Association, the captains and the men. After all it is the captains and the men who lose their lives. The insurance companies may lose a little insurance, but it is the men and the captains who suffer the loss of life. They suffer as the result of chances taken, whether under orders from headquarters or not, I do not know. At any rate I suggest that a conference might be held. The minister might consider the question of holding such a conference with the object of either shortening by law the number of days or seeing whether some other method might not be worked out whereby the loss of life could be lessened. I do not wish to suggest what should be done, because I am not an expert. But having lived all my life at the head of the lakes, where a large proportion of the shipping is carried on, I know that there is a feeling that something should be done to lessen this hazard to the lives of the seamen.

Mr. CARDIN: The very suggestion my hon. friend makes is contemplated by the technical men of the department, and in the notes they have handed to me cognizance is taken of it.

[Mr. Malcolm.]

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the hon. member have leave to withdraw his amendment? Carried.

Amendment (Mr. Church) withdrawn.

Mr. NEILL: I wish to transfer the debate now to the Pacific coast, but before proceeding to what I have to say I desire to acknowledge gratefully the fact that the department expended a good deal of money last year in certain very much needed repairs to the two life saving stations on the west coast. This will undoubtedly lead to a greater efficiency in the service.

I wish to put in a plea for better pay for these men who man the small lifeboats. In my opinon they have both a moral and a legal claim. As regards the moral claim—or, if you will, the claim of necessity—I would suggest that these men are not being paid a sufficient salary. Their salary is $65 a month, and $65 a month in British Columbia, especially in the remote parts, bulks very small as compared with the same sum in Quebec; not that we have higher standards of living, but our expenses are higher. It is true they also receive a board allowance of $25 a month, but that and more than that goes in their living expenses, because of course they must live at the station. For a single man this may not appear so unreasonable because he gets board, lodging and $65 a month. In the case of a married man, however, it is very inadequate. We presume that it is the desire of the government to stimulate immigration, and you cannot get better immigration than that which comes by way of the stork. I contend therefore that we should not discriminate against married men in the employ of the government, but should rather encourage them. Lest I be accused of putting forward a merely hypothetical case, I desire to cite two actual cases within my knowledge; one is that of a man with a wife and five children and the other a man who has a wife and a family of four. These men must maintain private homes, pay rent, and provide fuel, clothing and all other expenses involved in the upkeep of a family; the only exception is that their own actual food is provided. These places are remote. Suppose one of these men with a family of four or five—is expecting an addition to his family. He lives in a remote district and by the time the woman goes to the hospital, 100 or 150 miles away, the expenses will run up considerably. Some help has to be hired to look after the children while she is away because the husband is away at work day and night. When the bills for the hospital, the doctor and so forth are also paid that means very nearly $500; one is quite safe, at any rate, in putting it at $400. I want to ask hon. members this question: By what method can a man receiving $65 a month pay house rent and provide clothing, fuel, food and so forth for a wife and four children and lay aside a sum of approximately $40 a month against future arrivals? Sixty-five dollars a month does not provide very much in the way of savings for that or any other unforeseen contingency.

It has been suggested that if the pay cannot be increased the department might at least encourage these married men by building small houses for them; that would represent in some measure an increase in their remuneration. I might quote one sentence from a letter I have received on this subject—not from one of these men, because it is not they only who are complaining. This letter comes from an outsider with no interest in the matter other than that of a good citizen. He concludes his letter thus:

> Canada requires good citizens and in my opinion the best will be those born in Canada of healthy parents who have passed the acid test of Canada citizenship.

He might have said Canadian pioneering as well.

> The foregoing is an example and there must be thousands more and they cannot exist on a cup of rice per diem.

So much for the moral side of the question. Now I turn to the legal phase of it. Perhaps it is not legal, but it is very nearly so. I suggest that these men should have received the $10 increase voted by the House of Commons last year. In the supplementary estimates of last year vote 535 read:

> To provide for flat increases to the civil service both inside and outside.

And the sum voted was $2,700,000. I understand that the increase was determined this way. The government asked the Civil Service Commission to submit an estimate of the amount required to provide a $10 a month flat increase to government employees with certain named exceptions. There were one or two grades to whom, in council, it was decided not to give the increase, and those grades were named. Apart from those, however, the government asked the Civil Service Commission to state how much would be required to give the whole outside and inside civil service $10 a month flat increase. The Civil Service Commision went into the matter thoroughly and finally named $2,700,000, and the money was voted by parliament.

Now to anticipate the answers which I know will be given to this argument. It will be suggested that these men do not come under the Civil Service Commission. I am aware that they do not. But there are a great many other people who got the $10 raise who did not come under the Civil Service Commission. And it never was intended either by the government, by parliament or by the Civil Service Commission that the increase should be limited to those under the commission. If it was to be limited to those under the commission why was it that the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, and many others I could name, all received the $10 increase? They all got it. The fact is that the money was voted for the whole civil service, inside and outside. Let me take another argument. How was the money spent? How did it reach the office holder? In the case of ordinary men coming under the commission, the civil service, at the end of the following month, after the money had been voted, made out the pay checks for $10 a month more, and that was the end of it. I inquired as to the method that was adopted with regard to those entire departments that were not under the Civil Service Commission and I was informed that what was done was this. The heads of the departments were notified that the money was available, they put in a requisition, got an order in council passed and then they paid the money out to their respective employees, those who came under that particular branch. That was all they did. There is no doubt about it; that has been done, and that is the procedure by which it was done. In cases where they came under the Civil Service Commission the commission did it; where the employees did not come under the Civil Service Commission the head of the department did it, and as far as I can see the only thing necessary in this particular case is for the head of the department concerned to put this into effect. The money is there; parliament voted it, and surely they must have intended the money to be used. It was not a lump sum voted blindly, because the Civil Service Commission presented a detailed report to the cabinet earmarking every dollar of that sum, within reasonable limits, for each department and for each branch of the different departments. There is no doubt that sufficient money was put aside to take care of these particular employees.

Then I have another bit of evidence. On the basis of the general raise which took place at that time the Civl Service Commission, either instructed by the government or on their own initiative, thought it was necessary to prepare a new classification. As everyone is aware, all employees of the government are classified. I have seen this classification and it specifically allows to this class of employees wages based on the $10 increase last year. The civil service schedule in force prior to April 1, 1927, before the $10 raise was given, gave the coxswain of a power boat from $100 to $120; that is, he began at $100 and went up to $120 by increases of $5 per month per annum. Under the new schedule prepared after April 1, 1927, and in consequence of that increase voted by parliament, this same class received from $110 to $130. So we have this anomaly, since these men have not received this increase; a new man coming into the service would start off at $110, while the man who joined up previously would only start at $100. It may be said that those who enter the service now do not get this increase, but I say they should get it, because the Civil Service Commission has so classified them. When the government is asked why this man or some other man does not get an increase we are always told that he is paid according to the schedule prepared by the Civil Service Commission, so I repeat that this is the schedule prepared by the Civil Service Commission, and I only ask that these men be paid accordingly.

Here is the matter stated concisely by the Civil Service Commission:

> The amount voted by parliament last year towards salary revision is sufficiently large to cover the increases to employees not coming under the Civil Service Commission, and all that is necessary is an order in council on the recommendation of the head of the department to put the increase into effect.

That is the case in a nut shell, and all I ask is that this money be paid to these men both on the ground of necessity and justice and because it was the intention of the government that they should receive it.

I will anticipate the reply of the minister; he will say they do not come under the Civil Service Commission, because they are in the same category as the men working on Dominion government boats, who are specifically excluded from the control of the Civil Service Commission. That is quite so, but that applies equally to the employees of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment and several other branches of the government, and I know they received the increase. Why should not these men get it also? Surely if an increase can be justified at all it should be given to a man getting only $65 a month, and all I ask is that the increase be granted or that some plausible reason be given why it is not granted, in order that I may tell these men why they are not getting it.

[Mr. Neill.]

Mr. GOTT: The hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. Malcolm) has given a very fine synopsis of the difference between a volunteer service and a service under the control of the government. I am sorry he is not in his seat, because I want him to know that I substantially agree with his remarks.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I have just a word to say in addition to what I said last night; perhaps I will be repeating what I said then, but a remark made by the minister compels me to do so. He said that a review of these stations would be made. I do not know whether I interpreted his meaning correctly, but I was led to believe that he was only going to deal with the stations already in existence. Last night I pointed out to him that consideration should be given to strategic points along the lakes, such as the end of lake Ontario. Just as an example, because I do not wish to say this is more important than other points, let me recommend to his consideration a point such as the Main Ducks, where a great deal of trouble has arisen and where a great deal of volunteer assistance has been given in the past.

Mr. CARDIN: I think my hon. friend may be assured that it is not my intention to confine the study of the matter to the stations already established. We are quite ready to examine any other points where a station might be of some use.

In reply to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) I may say that if any injustice has been done these men and if there is any possibility of giving them the increase which he has mentioned, I am quite prepared to do so.

Mr. GOTT: I think the minister will agree that the sum voted is not too large.

Mr. CARDIN: No, it is not. Next year I may come with a larger request, if I am here.

Mr. COWAN: May I direct the attention of the minister to the necessity of establishing one of these stations at the head of the lakes, at either Port Arthur or Fort William? I know the records of the department will show that a great many of the serious marine disasters occur at the northern end of lake Superior; that was brought to my attention again within the last few days by reason of the finding of the bodies of some of the sailors who were lost with the steamer Kamloops last fall. Apparently that boat went down at Isle Royale, within about thirty miles of the head of the lakes, and if a station of any kind had been in existence there I think something could have been done at least to save the lives of those sailors. It might not have been possible to save the boat itself, but some of the sailors might have been rescued.

May I further suggest that I think all boats plying the great lakes should be equipped with wireless. It was unfortunate that this particular boat possessed no wireless, and I think one of the conditions of operation should be that wireless must be installed on every lake-travelling boat, and there should be a wireless station at the head of the lakes in order to ensure rapid communication. Moreover, I think there should be at the head of the lakes a fast salvage boat. Thirty miles is not a great distance to cover, and most of the disasters take place among the islands at the head of the lakes. If a wireless station existed there such boats could be reached within two or three hours; that would largely help in the saving of lives, and so I think the minister should give special attention to the conditions which exist at the head of the lakes.

Item agreed to.

Hydrographic and tidal and current surveys, and to provide for the maintenance and repair of hydrographic steamers, $530,000.

Mr. NEILL: I have one other small grievance to bring up; perhaps this may not be quite the appropriate item, but I think it will do. It appears that some thirteen years ago, I think in 1914, regulations were adopted by the department providing for the issuing of uniforms to the captains and some of the men on board government steamers. The custom adopted was, in the case of boats only working for a short time each year, that they would get one suit, and, in the case of the boats working the whole year round, they would get two suits. This went on for thirteen or fourteen years, and when a man has been getting two suits a year for fourteen years he might consider, or at least anicipate, that it would continue. Apparently without any notice—I am speaking subject to correction—last October the rations, so to speak in the shape of clothing, were discontinued. This practice was started by an order in council, and I asked the other day what order in council it was which had discontinued it, and I was told that it had been done by departmental authority. I asked the question why the remuneration of these men should be reduced in this way, and the reply I received was that the supplying of uniforms had never been regarded as remuneration. I submit that it is a very substantial part of a remuneration, the supplying of two uniforms per year. Some years ago I had occasion to write the department asking what the pay of these captains and officers was, and in the reply I received it was stated as being so much money, so much board, and uniforms, it being clearly indicated that the uniform was part of their remuneration. I think this would apply both in the opinion of him who gives and him who receives. A uniform furnished twice a year is certainly a considerable item in a man's remuneration. It may be argued that this is not direct pecuniary payment, but certainly it is an inducement to the man to go into the service and stay there.

Perhaps I did not word my question properly, but I have not received the explanation I would like to get. It seems to me that this is a small matter with which to discontent a number of people. These men work very hard and under very trying conditions, especially during the winter time. If they had been given six months' notice, they would have had time to adjust themselves, and if they were not satisfied they could have quit the service. But it was done without any notice, and so far as the men know, and so far as I know, without any justification. I would like the minister to give us an explanation as to why this was done.

Mr. CARDIN: I am not in position to say positively, but I believe the regulations to which he referred are themselves confirmed by order in council, and it may be that the order in council to which he referred is one giving authority to make certain regulations. I am not in a position to state exactly what the fact is regarding that.

As far as the discontinuancy of the practice of supplying uniforms is concerned, I may say that the decision was arrived at as a result of comparing our practice with what is being done by private companies. Neither the Canadian Pacific nor the Canadian National, nor any other private shipping company, supply uniforms to their men at the present time.

Mr. NEILL: None at all?

Mr. CARDIN: None at all. I understand that they only supply the braid which goes on the sleeves, and something to place in front of their caps. We were the only people giving uniforms to employees, and we thought we would practise economy by reducing the number of uniforms given out. I would say to my hon. friend that requests are always being received to supply uniforms to men on government ships. For example, the lightship employees have requested that they be supplied with uniforms. These ships do not move from place to place, but the men ask that uniforms be supplied so that will be well dressed when they receive visits from inspectors of the department, or when other boats are passing. Requests of this kind are numerous, and we thought we would economize, always keeping in mind that we were doing more than the private companies in regard to that.

Mr. GOTT: As this vote is six and a half times larger than the previous vote, it is only natural to expect that it will be passed much quicker, but I would like to have the minister explain the reasons for the increase of $190,000 over the vote of last year.

Mr. CARDIN: I expected that question, and I proposed to give the explanation. It is stated that this proposed appropriation is to provide for the continuation of hydrographic surveys and tidal and current surveys; the maintenance of automatic gauges for the determination of water levels in the St. Lawrence and on the great lakes; the operation and maintenance of permanent tidal stations and equipment of temporary stations during the summer months; the preparation and publication of hydrographic charts and tide tables.

Provision is made additional to that of the last fiscal year for reconditioning the steamer Lillooet at a cost of $35,000, and for new equipment and launches for the steamers Acadia and Cartier, at a cost of $10,000; all made necesary by wear and tear. Also for the maintenance and operation of the steamer Bayfield at a cost of $35,000; for work to be done in lake St. Clair, at a cost of $15,000, and for operations in Great Slave lake. Provision is also included for surveys to be made of the approaches to Fort Churchill as far east as Cape Churchill in the Hudson bay, at a cost of $75,000. The inshore work around the Magdalen islands, under way for several years, has been completed, and it is proposed to proceed with the offshore work immediately, necessitating the use of a steamer and the consequent recommissioning of the Bayfield. Operations in lake St. Clair were started last season, and it is necessary to complete them with the least possible delay. Great Slave lake is the connecting link between the Slave and Mackenzie rivers on the mainline of communication with the Northwest Territories. This lake is 110 miles long and 50 miles wide. Necessarily, through communication is by shallow river steamers, and these steamers are always in danger when passing through the lake in time of storm. The proposal is to make a chart of the lake and to indicate where these vessels may find safe refuge in such case.

[Mr Cardin.]

Mr. GOTT: What is the nature of the work in lake St. Clair?

Mr. CARDIN: It is to ascertain the depth of water at different places.

Mr. GOTT: With a view to deepening?

Mr. CARDIN: Not necessarily, but with a view to supplying accurate information to the navigation companies.

Mr. NEILL: I can heartily support this vote, although I may have wished that the minister would not practise the somewhat petty economy in connection with the matter I spoke of a minute ago, because I do not think discontented men will give very good service. This vote is very badly needed. The east does not appreciate how the west is growing in the necessity for work of this character. It is practically all new territory, and while charting was done many years ago by Vancouver, the work he did was done on a very large scale. That is to say, he would sound in a certain place, and then might not take another sounding until he reached another point five miles away. That is impossible for the present day use of navigators. On the west coast of Vancouver island alone in a very small area there has been a big development in the last few years owing to the establishment of twenty-three or twenty-five plants in connection with the reduction of pilchards. That is an entirely new industry with an output running into millions of dollars every year. It has been in existence for some eighteen months only; but the point I want to make is that every one of those plants is established in a new and unknown portion of the coast where no captain dares go in with his boat and it is essential that it be charted in order to let the boats go in or otherwise they cannot get the product out. I am not blaming the department because it is impossible for this work all to be done at once, but in one case the inability of the department to chart a certain place at the time the charting was asked for resulted in a loss of $1,000 to the man who owned the plant, because he had to lighter his product to somewhere else and it cost him $1,000.

While I am on my feet I should like to say a word of commendation of the gentleman who is in charge of the work on the coast. I refer to Mr. Parizeau, who is doing good work, who is entirely devoted to it, and who makes every dollar bring forth a dollar's worth of efficiency. The only trouble is that he has not the equipment to do what he would like to. He hopes, and I hope the department will be able perhaps out of the extra money provided for in this item, to provide an auxiliary steamer on the coast. There are portions of the coast in enclosed waters such as Nootka sound, Esperanza inlet and Kyuquot sound, where important works are going on and much charting is needed. That can be done by a small auxiliary steamer and it is not good economy to take the Lillooet out of the rougher waters into a small confined piece of water like that. The smaller boat could do good work there and the Lillooet could go into the rougher waters. I heartily endorse this appropriation and I do not think it is a nickel too much.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the establishment of a patrol service to investigate the conditions of navigation in Hudson strait and Hudson bay, $500,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Would the minister give some explanation of this appropriation and also state what the experience of last year was in regard to investigation?

Mr. CARDIN: This is necessary to complete the work that we undertook last year to make a survey of Hudson strait with a view to ascertaining the possibilities of navigating it, how long it can be navigated and what aids to navigation will be required for this particular place. The amount voted last year was $850,000, and this year we are asking for $500,000 which we think will be sufficient to complete the work that we have already undertaken. As has been stated in the report which has already been tabled, we have established in Hudson strait three points of observation and from those points officers are surveying the condition of the strait in regard to ice and storms. We have at each of those points a flying machine which is used in surveying the strait.

As regards the operations of last year, it is apparent from the report which has already been tabled that conditions are satisfactory, and that the ice was not very abundant during the course of the year. In fact the ice appeared only in the month of November. To give a proper resume of the work which has been done there, it would be necessary to read the report which has already been tabled. Generally speaking I may say that the observations that we made during the course of last year are very satisfactory and encouraging.

Mr. ADSHEAD: The minister mentioned an aeroplane service. Are the aeroplanes under his department, or are they acting in conjunction with the Department of National Defence?

Mr. CARDIN: The machines were bought with the money which was voted last year, but they are operated by men of the Department of National Defence.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Has the minister any idea of bringing the civil aviation branch under the Department of Marine and Fisheries?

Mr. CARDIN: I have no information on that.

Mr. GARDINER: I presume these men are under the instructions of the minister's department?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. FRASER: What was the total expenditure under this item last year?

Mr. CARDIN: Last year we spent the entire amount of $850,000, plus a certain amount which was voted in the supplementaries at the opening of the session.

Mr. KELLNER: How many months was the strait open for navigation last year?

Mr. CARDIN: According to the report, if I am not mistaken, the ice appeared only in the early part of November.

Mr. KELLNER: There is ice now, I suppose?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Radio telegraph service and to provide for the construction and maintenance of radio telegraph ship to shore stations and the general administration of the provisions of the Radio Act and regulations throughout the Dominion, $560,865.

Mr. STEVENS: This is the item under which we should have some declaration from the minister regarding the policy directing the control of radio throughout the Dominion.

Mr. CARDIN: That is the next item. This particular item refers to navigation.

Mr. GOTT: Is this appropriation being substantially increased year by year?

Mr. CARDIN: The present appropriation is increased by $61,000, and in view of the importance of the system as an aid to navigation, the increase is not very large.

Mr. GOTT: What was the appropriation in 1926-27?

Mr. CARDIN: $448,000.

Mr. GOTT: Will the minister go back one year more?

Mr. CARDIN: In 1925-26, the amount was $500,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: According to the statement provided us, this vote covers the administration of the provisions of the Radio Act.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, generally speaking, but since last year or two years ago we have divided this vote into two. The next item provides for the broadcasting and it will cover the point which my hon. friend has in mind.

Mr. GARDINER: Is the minister extending the service under the item under discussion?

Mr. CARDIN: Certainly.

Item agreed to.

Radio service—to provide for the general improvement of reception conditions to licensed broadcast listeners, $190,000.

Mr. STEVENS: This is the vote we desire to discuss. I have but little to say on this subject, but I shall, however, raise a point which to my mind is important. I am not for the moment prepared to criticize the action of the minister in any given case, that is, from any knowledge I have of the fairness or otherwise of his action, but what I do criticize is the assumption by the minister—I do not say that offensively, but I cannot think of another word at the moment that will convey my meaning—of authority to determine whether this man or that man or this company or that company shall be granted a license. What I do suggest to the minister is that before taking any such action as was taken against the International Bible Students' Association in the cancellation of their license, there ought to have been formulated definite regulations controlling or directing the whole system of broadcasting. I submit to the minister that his action in cancelling that license appears to have offended a very large number of people. I am not in a position, without having before me all of the facts, to express any definite opinion whether the action taken was fair or unfair, but I do say that it has the appearance of unfairness; it has the appearances of being an arbitrary decision against this association. As far as their religious views are concerned, I am not interested in that phase of the matter at all, but I do submit that whatever their views may be, they are entitled to the right to disseminate their views unless there is some general regulations which simply takes them in along with all other persons holding various views on religious and other subjects.

My whole point, therefore, is that the action taken by the minister has the appearance of being arbitrary, and should not have been taken in the absence of some well defined policy and fixed regulations governing the issuance of licenses to all these broadcasting companies or associations.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like to protest against what seems to me to have been the very arbitrary action on the part of the department with regard to the cancellation of these licenses. It seems to me that there are two matters that ought to be sharply distinguished. First of all, there was the cancellation of the license of the Universal Radio of Canada, Limited. That organization secured on January 18, 1926, a license from the Department of Marine and Fisheries, radio branch, to erect a radio broadcasting station, and it was assigned the call letters CJYC. This organization may have been, and I think is, closely associated with the International Bible Students' Association, but it is a distinct organization, a commercial organization. As their memorandum states:

The Universal Radio of Canada, Limited, believing that the phantom license issued to the International Bible Students Association under call letters CKCX permitted the said association to broadcast religious lectures, and in view of this permission, contracted with them. Outside of this, the activities of CJYC have always been confined to purely commercial programs.

Having received a license from the department, Universal Radio of Canada, Limited, invested in a complete broadcasting station and equipment costing upwards of $50,000. This organization takes the ground that it is unjust to hold them responsible for any of the complaints that the Department of Marine and Fisheries may have received from radio listeners in reference to the programs broadcast by the International Bible Students' Association. That is the first matter on which I think the minister ought to give us very full information. Supposing for the moment that there is a legitimate complaint against the Bible Students' Association. I ask why this other organization, a commercial organization, should be penalized in this way? That seems to be a very arbitrary action.

Now I come to the second organization, that of the International Bible Students' Association. We asked some weeks ago that there should be laid upon the table the correspondence which formed the ground for the action of the department. That correspondence has been tabled. I have gone through it, and let me point out, first of all, that a very considerable proportion of what was tabled consisted of newspaper clippings containing comments after the cancellation had been made. We had asked that the letters and other documents that led to the cancellation should be tabled, but the minister put in a number of letters and newspaper comments concerning the cancellation, and these statements were sent broadcast across the country as the ground upon which the department had taken action —an absolutely unfair thing to do.

So far as the complaints themselves are concerned, most of them came from Toronto. One of them was from the Rev. W. A. Cameron, the minister of Bloor street Baptist Church. He complained that this organization cut in on his service. The International Bible Students' Association have made a statement with regard to this complaint, in which they say:

> The International Bible Students were not at all to blame for the cutting short of the Reverend Cameron's sermons as the arrangement then existing allotted to station CJYC the time from 8.15 p.m. until midnight on Sunday evenings, which time in turn was given by agreement to Station CKCX. Mr. Cameron's sermons, which usually concluded at 8.30 instead of 8.15 were, therefore, cut short by the operator of the station over which he broadcast, CKCX coming on the air immediately thereafter. As a consequence, the impression gathered by the radio listeners was that the cutting off of Mr. Cameron's sermons was done by station CKCX, and considerable unjust criticism was directed against the bible students —of which they were quite unaware—and which later resulted in a petition being sent to Ottawa.

So much for the complaint of Rev. W. A. Cameron.

Another correspondent claimed that the Bible Students' broadcast interfered with the Dempsey-Sharkey fight. I leave that complaint, but undoubtedly it weighed very heavily with the department.

Another correspondent complained that the programs of the Bible Students' Association were too American, and then he went on to say in the very same letter that they prevented the receiver getting American stations, which again is rather a curious statement—the Bible Students' programs were too American, and in the very same letter he says they prevented the receiver getting large American stations.

There is another complaint, that on account of the change in the wave length there was considerable confusion. It does seem that in all fairness to the Bible Students they should not be saddled with the confusion arising out of a change made by the department itself. Again, quoting the statement furnished by the Bible Students' Association:

> With reference to the wave length, it is a well-known fact that when the Universal Radio of Canada Limited was placed, at the suggestion of the department, on a wave length of 475 metres, their broadcasts interfered with those of certain high-powered American stations, and there were consequently many complaints, relating especially to Sundays, on the part of Toronto fans who had hitherto been able to get these American stations without the interference that then resulted.

It would seem as if these people were not primarily responsible for that confusion. There were other complaints. One from Saskatoon stated that the Bible Students took too much time on the air and interfered with dance programs. There again, Mr. Chairman, I submit it is a question for adjustment as between the various people who are anxious to use the air, and that one particular group should not have its license cancelled. Other complaints came from the city of Edmonton. One of the correspondents stated that the Bible Students had interfered with the Dempsey-Tunney fight. It was also stated that the public health officer complained that some lecture had been broadcast in which there was opposition to vaccination.

Mr. KENNEDY: Was there not a complaint that the Bible Students' Association had interfered with the advertising of Gooderham and Worts whisky?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think the hon. gentleman is correct. With regard to vaccination, unless I am mistaken, I have seen certain editorials in the Ottawa Citizen objecting to that particular treatment. I do not know that the Ottawa Citizen ought to be suppressed because of its peculiar ideas in that respect; and I do not quite see why that should be a ground for cancelling the license of the Bible Students. From Vancouver came a complaint, this time from the radio association, that there were too many stations. I would consider it strange if the complaint of rival organizations should be listened to, and should form the ground for this action by the department.

Classifying these complaints, some had to do with religious teaching. Now, I am not a member of the Bible Students' Association. It does seem to me that a great deal of their theology is positively grotesque. But I should like to ask, when did we appoint a minister of this government as censor of religious opinions? All down through history religious bodies have criticized other religious bodies. I think the great Roman Catholic church has sometimes spoken very harshly concerning heretics; I think the Anglican church in its Athanasian creed utters some very strong things against those who do not believe in that creed; I think the Westminster Confession contains some very strong words against people who do not accept that particular creed; and I have heard evangelists telling the people generally where they will go unless they believe the doctrines then being preached to them. But when did we say that any of these bodies were to be silenced because other citizens did not agree with them? It is stated that the Bible Students condemn other religious bodies. Of course, that is true of nearly all religious bodies. Why should we penalize the Bible Students simply because they follow in the footsteps of other bodies? The Catholics have condemned the Protestants. Sometimes I read the Orange Sentinel which is sent to me. It bitterly criticizes Roman Catholics, yet I do not see that the Orange Sentinel is being suppressed because of its views. If the Bible Students are to be put out of business because they condemn alike Catholics and Protestants, I do not see why the Sentinel and the Catholic Register should not be suppressed.

Seriously, Mr. Chairman, I think we are on very dangerous ground. It has been stated that the Bible Students declared there was one law for the rich and another for the poor. Well, some of us have been trying to say that as loudly as we could for some years past, and if we can have any assistance from the Bible Students in saying that, some of us feel we ought to have it. Some hon. members may take the ground that the law is equal. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) declared recently that our laws in Canada apply equally to rich and to poor. I recall a statement by the late Anatole France, which I would commend to the hon. gentleman if he were in his seat. Anatole France said:

> The law in its majestic equality forbids the rich, as well as the poor, to sleep under bridges, to beg in the streets and to steal bread.

I think perhaps those who take the abstract academic position, that the law applies equally to rich and poor, may very well ponder these very incisive words. We have also been told that the Bible Students have broadcast tirades against capitalism.

Mr. GEARY: According to what we hear.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Well, I am inclined to think there have been some very great teachers who pronounced woe upon those who were rich. If you are going to exclude all who have inveighed against the rich and the oppressors of the poor, you will have to exclude not only a good deal of Christian teaching, but a great deal of teaching that has come down from the great sages throughout the history of the world.

Mr. KAISER: Including some members of parliament.

[Mr Woodsworth.]

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, including some members of parliament. Another complaint was that the Bible Students were opposed to military service. Remember, Mr. Chairman, these are the grounds on which the Bible Students had their license cancelled. The minister himself said so when he tabled these letters. It is true that the Bible Students were opposed to military service. Well, let me say there are a great many people outside the Bible Students Association who are opposed to military service. Permit me to read this paragraph from a front-page article which appeared a few years ago in one of our recognized church papers. It was headed, War and The Future, and proceeded:

> There is surely not an intelligent, civilized man left in all the world who thinks that there is any virtue or goodness or saving grace in war. And most of us have been driven far beyond that negative position to the very positive and inescapable belief that war is, for our day and time, a hideous, utterly unchristian, unforgivable crime. And in so far as we did not quite feel that way about it just a few short years ago, some of us—many of us—are ready to acknowledge our fault in truest humility, and seek pardon for our ignorance and our lack of the spirit of our Master. And for the future many of us are ready to say that, if God will grant us grace to live up to our present determination and ideal, never again, under any condition, will war have our sanction or our blessing. And we have come to that place knowing full well that a time might come when very subtle temptations would come to us to feel otherwise about it, or when to announce and live up to our faith might bring its cross and suffering. But very humbly, yet very determinedly, we have made up our minds that in this matter we must try to be Christians, whatever else we are, for if we are not ready now at long last to put our seal to our Christian faith in this way, then we surely are not worthy to bear the Christian name at all. In the name of Christ we would set our face for ever against war.

That was published in the Christian Guardian, February 20, 1924. This paper is now called The New Outlook and is the recognized organ of the United Church of Canada.

It seems to me, in view of the growing sentiment of opposition to war, that it is absolutely preposterous that the license of the Bible Students should have been cancelled on the ground, among others, that the Bible Students were during the war opposed to military service.

Another complaint was that these Bible Students "hogged the air," and I am inclined to think that this is the strongest reason that has been adduced. Yet the radio inspector in Saskatoon bears this testimony:

> They are a friendly lot to deal with and never give the slightest trouble whatever so far as keeping strictly to regulations is concerned. But they have an insane desire to be continually broadcasting religious matter and the public get thoroughly fed up with this class of material when handed out in large doses.

I sympathize with the public, but I submit that the action the department ought to have taken was to regulate the length of time these people should have been on the air, and not to have undertaken to cancel their license. Further than that, the minister makes the statement for the department that only on one occasion was there a complaint from Saskatoon with regard to trouble of this kind, and that the difficulty was adjusted. It seems most extraordinary that months and months should have gone by without the department intimating in the slightest way to the Bible Students that they were doing anything not in the general interests, and then suddenly, out of a clear sky, they should take drastic action of this kind. It is most arbitrary and unfair.

We are facing large questions in connection with this matter. Our forefathers won to a considerable extent freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of assembly; surely it is strange that a Liberal government should seek to deny people freedom of the air. Strange indeed. A new element has come into practical politics—the air. The use of the air is now so important in a variety of ways, it would seem as if we would be compelled to fight over again the old battles in regard to this new matter. We must have freedom, not merely along the old lines, but in the use of the air whether in flying or in broadcasting. I would urge that since this matter has come so prominently before the public it is high time that we should adopt what the minister himself has barely suggested to the house, that is, some scheme whereby the government itself should own and operate broadcasting stations in this country.

May I quote a paragraph from the Manchester Guardian in which the new policy of the British government is commended. As most hon. members are no doubt aware, in Great Britain the control of radio is in the hands of the government—a Conservative government, as an hon. member suggests. The Conservative governments in England are in some ways a great deal more progressive than Liberal governments in Canada. However—

Mr. DUNNING: Does my hon. friend know that both the Liberal and the Labour parties in England are to-day complaining about the discrimination shown by the Conservative government in the allotment of time for political addresses?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, I have heard that and for a time there was real ground for that complaint. But recently there has been, I understand, a change in the regulations with regard to such matters, and it is concerning this that I wish to read the following paragraph from the Manchester Guardian:

> The danger of propaganda always lies in one-sided information, in suggestion and in anonymity. As long as facts are freely disclosed there is nothing to be apprehended in open discussion of any topic. If the public always knows what individuals are speaking and proper opportunity is given to various opinions, the more controversial the subject matter of discussion the better. It is the business of the British Broadcasting Company to be impartial as between rival views, and not to heed the objections of those who think all opinions they do not like "dangerous". No subject of public importance and interest should be banned because its discussion annoys some people. If the orthodox may state their case, so may the unorthodox. If there are to be political debates, socialists should be given a hearing side by side with Liberals, and communists allowed to state their case as well as Conservatives. Many sedulously guarded myths may be dispelled by open discussion, and intelligent opinions take the place of hoary superstitions. There is no way of arriving at truth or of cultivating sound judgment except through the clash of opinion.

I fancy the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) will agree with that article. I know there are dangers associated with the control of radio by the government. I know there would be great danger with radio in the hands of the Baldwin government, and I imagine there would be dangers with radio in the hands even of a Canadian Liberal government.

Mr. DUNNING: Or in my hon. friend's own hands.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Possibly, although I had hardly stretched my imagination to believe that our little group would ever have power. However, I thank the minister for the suggestion. There are always admittedly dangers in any one group controlling such an agency, but there are even greater dangers in allowing things to drift along as they are at the present time in Canada. In practice under present conditions the minister cannot help taking the responsibility for censorship. He says, "I am no censor"; but he must exercise the most extreme censorship when he cancels licences on the ground of certain opinions having been expressed.

I am inclined to think that before very long we shall be faced in Canada with a serious situation in relation to broadcasting south of the line. That is perhaps the most dangerous feature of all. It is only a comparatively short time before these small broadcasting stations will be bought up by big American companies. I may be afraid of handing power to any one government, but I would rather trust our own Canadian government with the control of broadcasting than trust these highly organized private commercial companies in the United States. For that reason I would do my utmost to urge upon the government the adoption of a new policy with regard to radio in this country. The government itself, having gone so far in equipping stations for certain departmental purposes, should take the next step and equip stations for general use throughout Canada. I notice that in the supplementary estimates provision is made for the appointment of a commission to make certain investigations regarding this matter. Personally I do not see why we should have another commission. It seems to me the government is already in possession of the main facts and that the government itself should take the responsibility and decide upon a comprehensive national policy. The present difficulty would not be without its value if it would lead to public ownership and control of this new industry.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I agree with the concluding remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that it is time the government brought forward something in the nature of a policy in regard to this very important question of radiotelegraphy. The only policy which we have to-day is one of absolute autocracy and dictatorship in regard to the use of the air for radio services. It used to be said in this country that such and such a thing was as free as the air, but in the Dominion of Canada the air is no longer free; to a very large extent it is under the direct and positive control of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. He is an autocrat in regard to air service, and he is given that autocratic position or power under an act of this parliament known as the Radiotelegraph Act.

Mr. DUNNING: Would my hon. friend give the reference?

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is chapter 195 of the revised statutes. Under that act, by section 4, the minister is empowered to make regulations, of which I will only read two:

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

(c) defining the different kinds of licenses that may be issued, their respective forms and the several periods for which they shall continue in force;

(d) prescribing the conditions and restrictions to which the several licenses shall respectively be subject.

Under these two subsections practically the whole control of the air of this Dominion is placed in the custody of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I think, for his own good and for the good of the country, at the very first opportunity he should endeavour to lay before parliament and the country some definite policy which will considerably broaden out this matter and allow all classes in this somewhat spread-out country of ours to receive something like fair and even treatment in regard to that air which was formerly so free to everyone in this country. It is not free now, and I think in many respects the actions of the minister and of the government have been exceedingly harsh, arbitrary and autocratic, and not at all in the interests of the general body politic.

I refer, as did the last speaker, to the manner in which the Universal Radio of Canada, Limited, was dealt with by the minister or by officials of his department. This company was duly organized and incorporated with a heavy subscribed capital; it complied with all the formalities of our law and obtained from the Department of Marine and Fisheries, under the Radiotelegraph Act, a license known as a physical license for the purpose of erecting a plant and broadcasting in the Dominion of Canada. I agree that a license is only a permission, and that a man who obtains a license for a year does not have exactly a vested right in the license, although he may have a reasonable expectation that the license will be continued from year to year as long as he complies with all the requirements of the law. This Universal Radio Company subscribed its capital, erected its plant, obtained its license, complied with all the regulations of the department and started as a commercial concern in the business of radiotelegraphy. During the month of March last a most peremptory letter or notice was sent to this company, notifying them that at the end of the then current year the license would not be renewed, and giving no reasons for the refusal to renew that license. Perhaps I might read to the committee the actual letter, which is dated at Ottawa, March 8, 1928:

Sir:

You are hereby advised that private commercial broadcasting license No. 63 for the year 1927-28, issued in favour of Universal Radio of Canada, Limited, will expire on the 31st March, 1928, and the department does not propose to renew the same after that date.

To my mind that notice constitutes a most arbitrary and autocratic act on the part of the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Was there nothing before that warning?

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is the first warning. The department knew that this company had invested a very large amount of money and that they were complying with all the requirements of their license. There may have been something in the mind of the minister or of some of the officials in his department adverse to the Universal Radio Company, but the company knew nothing of it and the public knew nothing of it. The peremptory notice was sent out, saying "notwithstanding your license and your investment I, through the autocratic powers given me by a statute of Canada, refuse to renew your license on the 1st April next". I submit, Mr. Chairman, that such a proceeding is more than improper; courtesy demands that reasons be given under conditions of this kind.

Had the government a policy, a considered policy, nothing of this kind could arise, but here a very large amount of capital is jeopardized. This company is threatened with the loss of its whole investment, and now it transpires, since the House of Commons met, that the reason for the cancellation of this license was that through some subarrangement the International Bible Students' Association occupied some of the time at the disposal of the Universal Radio Company, and the matter broadcast by the International Bible Students' Association did not suit the opinions of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries or of someone in his department.

Mr. CARDIN: I desire to deny this statement the hon. gentleman is making now, and I will not permit him to make any capital out of it. All the facts and the documents are there; let him analayze those documents.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am giving my own view and my own opinion; the minister may differ from that view and that opinion as he may see fit. Something that was being broadcast by this association did not meet with the approval of the powers that be, whether those powers were the minister himself or someone in his department. So far that is the only reason which I have been able to gather as the real cause of the difficulty, and so far as I know it is the only reason that has been ever advanced for the refusal to renew the license of the Universal Radio Company for the current year.

I hold no brief for the International Bible Students' Association, but I have received a number of communications from residents of my consitiuency protesting against the action of the government. From what has transpired in this house during the present session, I realize that many hundreds of thousands of Canadians have signed petitions, if not to this parliament, informally addressed to the Prime Minister of Canada, protesting against the action of the government and the minister in refusing to renew that license. It is a matter not of small or petty concern but of very general concern, and it looks to one who has no interest in the matter, financially or otherwise, as if the government and the minister had acted in a thoroughly autocratic and unnecessarily harsh manner in dealing with this corporation.

But the whole subject will bear some investigation. The minister or someone under him, seems to have disarranged the whole air service in and about the city of Toronto and the province of Ontario. In this disorganization and disarrangement which have taken place they seem to have been playing into the hands of their own friends. They seem to have been playing into the hands of a radio equipment in the city of Toronto which is the poorest operating in that city to-day, to the exclusion of the up-to-date installations.

Now, what was the situation prior to the 1st of April? There are certain technical aspects to this question which I do not thoroughly understand, but no doubt the minister understands them. The old wave lengths were as follows: 517 metres, CJYC, one-half time, and CFRB, one-half time; 357 metres, CFCA, one-third time—note that—CKCL, one-third time, and CKNC, one-third-time; 312 metres, CKGW, full time. These were the old wave lengths which pertained in the city of Toronto prior to the 1st of April last. The new wave lengths are as follows: 517 metres, CKCL, one-half time and CKNC, one-half time; 357 metres, CFCA—note this one—full time; 312 metres, CKGW, full time formerly but now half time, and CFRB half time. I am informed by men who say they know, that the cheapest and most antiquated installation in the city of Toronto to-day, doing public broadcasting, is that known as CFCA.

An hon. MEMBER: Who is that?

Mr. GUTHRIE: This station is supposed to operate in connection with the Toronto Star newspaper, and has been given full time whereas it enjoyed only one-third time up to the 1st of April last. The statements I make in regard to these installations are based on facts supplied to me by others, as I am not very familiar with the technicalities. My information is, and the minister or the department can correct me if I am wrong, that the whole Toronto Star installation is worth less than $3,000. They claim to be the pioneers in broadcasting, and that claim is probably well founded; I believe their station was the first in that city. That claim has some merit, as we always honour our pioneers, but it is not sufficiently meritorious to entitle that indifferent installation to full time at the expense of many costly and up-to-date installations which have been sidetracked. If mere pioneering is the degree of merit which is necessary to get full time, that station probably would be able to maintain its claim. But there are installations in the city of Toronto running into a cash value of $150,000 in equipment, broadcasting throughout half the world, and they are sidetracked under the present arrangement while preference is given to the system run in connection with the Toronto Star newspaper, a newspaper which has always been very strong in its support of the present government.

Mr. ROBB: They should not be penalized for that.

Mr. GUTHRIE: They are not being penalized for that; they are being patronized.

An hon. MEMBER: What is wrong with that?

Mr. GUTHRIE: The Toronto Star installation is what they call a 500-watt installation, while the CKGW is what they call a 5,000-watt installation.

Mr. DUNNING: To whom does it belong?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I could not tell you; I really do not know. I am informed that the capital of the CKGW station is $150,000 paid up. This station is heard in parts of Canada where only United States broadcasting was heard before, and has been showing clear and consistent reception of its programs from London to Wellington, New Zealand. This installation has been sidetracked.

Mr. DUNNING: What does my hon. friend mean by sidetracked—cut out altogether?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, not cut out altogether, but reduced in its time. This large commercial installation which could operate, as a commercial venture, at a profit under the time it formely enjoyed, must face a loss of from $50,000 to $60,000 if it continues to operate upon the present basis.

I mention these things, Mr. Chairman, not because I have any direct interest in them at all, but because of the tremendous body of people in this country who are very much interested in radio. The number of listeners-in, so called, is increasing every day, and it is a serious blow to the tens of thousands of listeners-in in the province of Ontario that the most poorly equipped station, and the one which can give the poorest service, is the one that will practically control the air for full time on its circuit. Complaints are heard on every hand, and I am told that some people are obtaining special radio receiving sets of a kind that will exclude the Toronto Star's broadcast, for no other reason than that the broadcasting system of the Toronto Star is so inferior as to be practically useless in comparison with the other stations in the city of Toronto.

Surely the government will see the necessity of broadening out its policy in this matter. Surely it should take into consultation some of more representative bodies throughout the Dominion of Canada. Radio has become a commercial matter to a very large extent; boards of trade, chambers of commerce, large manufacturers, large wholesalers, they are all interested in this venture, and they are entitled to be consulted, as well as the tremendous public body which comes under the heading of listeners-in. Surely a conference of those most interested could be called, and I should think that the minister, for his own protection, would have such a conference, and a broadening out policy could be laid immediately before the parliament of Canada. If we are going to continue as we are now, we are continuing under a system which is nothing but hypocrisy pure and simple. I will grant you that parliament, when it passed the act, gave that autocratic power to the minister. We regret it now; we see the difficulty in which we have placed ourselves; but that is no reason why we should leave the act as it is or why the government should simply rest on its oars and use that arbitrary power with which parliament at one time clothed it. Radiotelegraphy is but in its infancy. It is growing every year; it is growing, one may say, every month. Next year it will be far more extensive than it is this year. It is a matter that has come to stay and to increase, and it will be worse than folly if parliament allows the act to remain unaltered and all the powers of the air, the property of every subject in Canada, are under the thumb of a single minister of the crown as the situation is to-day.

Mr. LADNER: I have a few observations to make in connection with this matter, but as it is nearly six o'clock perhaps I might continue after recess.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

Supplementary estimates, 1928-29—National Revenue—to provide for remission of excise tax paid on automobiles remaining in the hands of dealers and unsold at the time when such tax was repealed by order in council, December 18, 1920, P.C. 1/3163, $165,000.

Mr. ADSHEAD: With regard to the last item in vote 516, is $500 the whole amount that was awarded to the widow because of the death of her husband while on duty?

Mr. EULER: I would like to ask first, Mr. Chairman, whether if the items as they stand here are carried, I shall have an opportunity of making a statement on the subject that was under discussion last night.

Mr. STEVENS: Go on now. This item was held for the purpose.

Mr. EULER: This vote was held up last night in order that we might discuss the matter of chartering the vesel Vigilant by the National Revenue department, and also to discuss the matter of the purchase of that vessel in the year 1921 by Mr. Manley Chew from the Dominion government.

In the discussion last night two phases of that subject were developed, to which I would like to make reference. The first was that the steamer Vigilant was chartered at so high a price that it savoured of graft. That statement was made by the hon. member for East Simcoe, was a little more than hinted at by his colleague from the same county, and I may say was resented by myself, as the head of the department which chartered that boat, and I think ought to be resented by every member of the house unless better evidence is offered than was offered last night of the truth of that charge.

The second phase of the question was the claim that was made also by the hon. member for East Simcoe that the Liberal government had sold this boat to a Liberal member of parliament on the very day that the Liberals had taken office in 1921. The senior member for Halifax stated that the price of $18,000 which was paid for that boat by Mr. Chew to the government was so low that it savoured of graft. He borrowed the phrase from his colleague from East Simcoe, and he added to it, for good measure, I suppose, that someone had put money into his pocket, and then, to make it still stronger, he said that he had no hesitation whatever in saying so. I may say in passing that I should think he might possibly have hesitated in making a statement of that kind if he had thrown his mind back to an incident not so long ago when a colleague of his in a former parliament made a statement about my hon. friend the Minister of Justice also with regard to a boat in the preventive service, which statement, I think, had about as much to do with the defeat of my hon. friends opposite as any other one thing. Both those charges, and they are charges I submit, Mr. Chairman, are very serious charges. The senior member for Halifax and the hon. member for East Simcoe are both men of maturity, men of standing who ought to realize that they have a responsibility in this parliament in making charges of this kind, and that responsibility is not lessened in any way by the fact that the senior member for Halifax was a member of the former government.

I wil deal first and very briefly with the matter of the charter itself, the charter given by Mr. Payette to the Department of National Revenue. The hon. member for East Simcoe, speaking on this particular subject last night, made this statement, as reported in Hansard:

> I find that the steamship Vigilant formerly belonged to the government. Almost their first official act after coming into power in December, 1921—

He was referring to the King government:

> —was to sell this boat to a then Liberal member of parliament for $18,000.

The hon. member also said:

> That up around Georgian bay, where this boat was formerly kept, the marine men, who know what they are talking about, regard this (the leasing of the boat) as a gross example of political favoritism.

He intimated that the charter price was altogether too high. I would submit that the price at which the boat is chartered is almost directly dependent upon the value of the boat itself, and in making his reference to the people of the Georgian bay district, whom he should know better than I, I was reminded of the fact that I had been rather careful at the time we entered into negotiations for the chartering of this boat. I am free to say that I felt at the time—and perhaps this explains the expression of my hon. friend that I was perhaps reluctant to sign that charter —I remembered that the boat had been sold by the government to a former member of parliament, and I thought possibly there might be room for criticism if we were not satisfied that the transaction was in every way a sound one from a business standpoint. I took the precaution not only to get the opinion of the officials of the naval department, but I had some of them sent there to examine the boat. The head of the preventive service, Mr. Cowan, also went up there. In addition to that I secured letters and opinions from some of these very marine men in that neighbourhood of whom my hon. friend speaks. I will read a few of them, because they bear directly on the value of the boat, which I think is pertinent to the question. Here is a letter addressed to myself from Barrie, Ontario—and I am sorry that the hon. member (Mr. Boys) coming from that town is not present, for he was very active in the discussion last night. This letter is written by Mr. Hugh Calderwood, Barrie, whose business it is to give expert evidence on all matters relating to design and construction of vessels and who makes damage surveys, reports and valuations. He was the valuator of the Playfair boats when they were taken over by the Canada Steamships. He says:

Dear Sir,—

Twin Screw Steamer Vigilant

Referring to your enquiry through Mr. J. T. Payette as to the present-day value of above vessel.

Would say that after taking into consideration the replacement cost of a vessel of this type, and on making due allowance for depreciation, etc., I would place her present-day value, as of this date, at One Hundred and Thirty-six Thousand Dollars ($136,000).

The second letter is from Midland, probably the home town of my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Thompson).

Mr. MANION: Who is Mr. Calderwood?

Mr. EULER: A naval valuator. I am informed he was employed by the Canada Steamships when they took over the Playfair boats. This Midland letter was written by Mr. R. S. McLaughlin, in charge of costs and estimates for the Midland Shipbuilding Company, Limited, which company, I am informed, is of good standing in that town. He says:

Dear Sir,—

S.S. Vigilant

Confirming what I indicated to you in our recent conversation, a vessel of the dimensions and speed of the above, with the machinery installation similar and with accommodations for twenty-two persons, would cost, under present conditions, $210,000 to build and equip for service.

The present value of the vessel to-day would be about $140,000, and it should easily be worth that figure to anyone requiring the particular type of service of which this vessel is capable, equipped as she is with machinery installation capable of driving her at a sustained speed of around twenty knots.

I have been aboard this vessel several times while afloat and have inspected it since being docked and can affirm that the hull and machinery are in excellent condition, in fact much better than the average in a vessel of its age. With thorough brushing and chipping and a good coat of proper paint this vessel would remain in a good state of preservation for many years.

Then I have a letter from the Midland Shipbuilding Company, Limited, written by Mr. J. Wilkinson, the manager. It is as follows:

Dear Sir,—

In regard to your inquiry as to what we would consider replacement value of the S.S. Vigilant, would say that to the best of our knowledge a duplicate would cost, to-day, $200,000, ship to be fitted in every respect same as Vigilant, and built under government supervision. As to the present value of the Vigilant think that to anyone who has need of a ship of her class the ship is worth $130,000.

Trusting this is the information you require.

So much for opinions from the neighbourhood of Georgian bay, to which my hon. friend referred, with regard to the value of the vessel. The cost of the boat to Mr. Chew when sold by the government was, as I stated last night, $18,000. Mr. Chew himself informed me—and I have no reason to doubt what he says—that he spent some ten or twelve thousand dollars after he purchased her. Mr. Payette, before we would take the boat over, expended another $30,000. As a further indication of value, she is insured now for $70,000. Last night I stated, from information given to me by the chief of the preventive service, that she was insured for $75,000. I made a slight error; the figure is $70,000. As my hon. friend from Halifax remarked last night, that indicates a probable value of at least $100,000.

Now, to get some idea of whether or not we are paying too much for the boat, it is fair to consider just what advantage the lessor can obtain. He pays an insurance premium on the boat of $3,850 a year. I am informed there is depreciation—perhaps my friend from Pictou (Mr. Cantley) knows more about this than I do—of ten per cent per annum. That, I suppose, would indicate a depreciation of eight or ten thousand dollars a year. The boat was constructed for lake patrol service. She cannot carry cargo to any extent, and she is not equipped for passengers.

Mr .ARTHURS: Will the minister say why she was sold in the first instance?

Mr. EULER: I stated that last night. Probably my explanation will give my hon. friend entire satisfaction as I go on, if he will allow me to proceed. In the opinion of those who know, the owner will have very little opportunity of getting the money that he expended on this boat after the charter with us expires. We obtained the opinions of various gentlemen with regard to the proper price to pay. Commander Phillips, of the naval department, and others expressed the opinion that $2,250 a month was a very fair price. In some quarters I am informed it is a low price. I say frankly that we have ourselves for a very short period paid in excess of that for a boat which is not worth any more than the Vigilant. For the steamer Hochelaga, when it was very urgent that we should have a boat on the Nova Scotia coast, where rum-runners were particularly busy, we paid at the rate of $4,500 a month for the limited period of six weeks.

I come now to the second part of this matter, as to which government, Liberal or Conservative, sold the boat to Mr. Chew. That was the question.

Mr. KAISER: You said last night it did not matter anyway.

Mr. EULER: It mattered to my friends last night, because this very vote was held up at the instance of the acting leader of the opposition in order that that information might be obtained.

An hon. MEMBER: That is what the minister said.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Why make so much noise about it now?

Mr. EULER: I think my hon. friends should be glad to get the information that they were so anxious to get last night. On page 3580 of yesterday's Hansard the member for East Simcoe said—I have read this before, but I will repeat it now:

I find that the steamship Vigilant formerly belonged to the government;—

That is true.

—almost their first official act after coming into power in December, 1921,—

That is, the first King government.

—was to sell this boat to a then Liberal member of parliament for $18,000.

Hon. members will recall that I contradicted that statement, and I said that the boat had been sold by the Union government to Mr. Chew. Later I corrected my own statement and said that it was not the Union government, but the Meighen government which followed the Union government. I think that is not very material, for certainly hon. gentlemen opposite will admit that they were practically one and the same thing.

Mr. ARTHURS: Mr. Chairman, is it true that this boat was offered for sale many times, month after month and year after year?

Mr. EULER: I will come to that.

Mr. ARTHURS: I happen to know something of this boat. She lay in the harbour of Parry Sound for years waiting for a buyer—

Mr. LAPOINTE: Why didn't you say that last night?

Mr. ARTHURS: —and the department—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. ARTHURS: I asked the minister the question, whether it is true or untrue—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. ARTHURS: If he does not want to answer it, all right.

Mr. EULER: If my hon. friend will have patience I will give him exactly the information he is trying to give the committee.

Mr. ARTHURS: You are a long time getting around to it.

Mr. EULER: No. But my hon. friend will have an opportunity to give the information, if I do not. Perhaps he will let me continue. In the course of the debate, following that, the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Black) then made the charge that the whole thing savoured of graft and that someone had received money out of it. I will give his exact words:

Mr. Black (Halifax): That transaction savours of graft and wrongdoing and someone has put money in his pocket. I do not hesitate to say it.

The committee adjourned in order that the facts might be obtained, that the order in council bearing on the transaction might be produced, and the correspondence, the charter and other documents laid on the table or submitted to my hon. friends opposite. I have these facts. The sale of the vessel was of course authorized by order in council, and I have under my hand certified copies of the order in council. I have also the recommendation made for the order in council. This recommendation, I might say for the information of my hon. friends who do not know, is signed by the then Minister of Marine in the Meighen government, the Hon. Mr. Ballantyne. I shall not read the recommendation because the order itself is in the exact words of the recommendation. I shall read the order:

P.C. 4695:

At a meeting of the privy council held on the 28th day of December—

Mr. DUNNING: What date?

Mr. EULER: The 28th December. I should like hon. members to note that.

—1921, the following minute of council was passed and was approved by His Excellency the Governor General on the 29th day of December, 1921.

His Excellency approved it on the following day. Then this follows:

The committee of the privy council have had before them a report, dated 25th November, 1921, from the Minister of the Naval Service, submitting that the steamer Vigilant is no longer required by the crown. Endeavour was made to transfer this vessel to one of the several departments of the government, but owing to her type and the cost of maintenance she is not required.

The minister states that tenders for the sale of this vessel were advertised for in March, 1920, to be received up to noon of the 14th day of April, and in response the following offers were received:

Messrs. Keenan Bros., Owen Sound, Ont., $5,000.

Mr. Frank W. Callaghan, Toronto, Ont., $6,600.

The Anglo Coal Co., Ltd., New Campbellton, N.S., $10,500.

Captain W. L. Curry, Toronto, Ont., $12,000.

As these offers did not represent fair value they were rejected.

Since that time every endeavour has been made to effect disposal of the Vigilant by the distribution of particulars regarding her in all the maritime centres of Canada, as well as by direct solicitation. In November, 1920, Mr. Thomas M. Kirkwood, Montreal, offered $25,000 for this vessel payable 10 per cent cash, 15 per cent at the end of 6 months, 25 per cent at the end of 12 months, and 25 per cent at the end of 18 months, with interest accruing annually at 6 per cent to be guaranteed by mortgage and insurance made payable to the department, which offer was approved by order in council of the 19th November, 1920, (P.C. 2789). Mr. Kirkwood, however, did not complete the purchase.

Thereafter the department made further endeavour to effect sale and advised all parties interested that offers would be received up to 1st March, 1921, and in response, the following offers were received:

Mr. M. J. Shaw, Toronto, Ont., $4,100.

The Anglo Coal Company, Ltd., New Campbellton, N.S., $10,500.

Lt. Col. Joseph M. Syer, D.S.O., Midland, Ont., $24,200.

The highest offer as submitted by Lt. Col. Joseph M. Syer, D.S.O., was recommended for acceptance and approved by order in council of the 11th March, 1921 (P.C. 767). On the 24th March, Lt. Col. Joseph M. Syer, D.S.O., informed the department that owing to circumstances beyond his control, he was unable to complete the purchase of this vessel. Further endeavours were again made by the department to effect sale and as a result Mr. Thomas Mulvey Kirkwood on the 13th June submitted an offer of $18,000 payable $100 in cash, the balance to be spread over a period of 14 months with interest at 6 per cent per annum, to be guaranteed by mortgage and insurance made payable to the department. This offer was rejected as the terms of the payment were not considered satisfactory.

On the 9th July, Mr. Kirkwood submitted another offer of $18,000, payable $300 in cash and the balance in equal instalments every 6 months, to be spread over a period of 5 years, with interest at 6 per cent per annum, to be guaranteed by mortgage and insurance made payable to the department. This offer was likewise rejected.

On the 1st September, Mr. Kirkwood submitted an offer of $18,000 cash for the Vigilant, subject to inspection, which offer was recommended for acceptance, and approved by order in council of the 16th September, 1921, (P.C. 3429). Mr. Kirkwood, however, did not complete the purchase.

Now Mr. Manley Chew, Midland, Ontario, has submitted an offer of $18,000 for the vessel, payable $5,000 cash and the balance on or before the 1st July, 1922, without interest, to be covered by his promissory note and an insurance policy made payable to the department.

The technical officers of the department consider that in view of all circumstances, the government would be well advised in accepting Mr. Chew's offer, and they recommend its acceptance accordingly.

The minister, concurring, recommends that authority be granted for the sale of the steamer Vigilant to Mr. Manley Chew, Midland, Ontario, for the sum of $18,000.

The committee concur in the foregoing recommendation and submit the same for approval.

I am almost through, but I want the committee to remember one or two points. First, the Liberal government took office on December 29, 1921. Secondly, the Meighen government had passed three orders in council to sell the boat some months prior to the Liberals coming into power. Thirdly, the recommendation made by the Hon. Mr. Ballantyne, minister in the Meighen administration, to sell to Mr. Chew, was on November 25, 1921, at least a month before the Liberal government came into power. Fourthly, the order to sell to Mr. Chew passed council on December 28, 1921, the day before the Liberals came into power, and it is signed by Sir James Lougheed, president of council in the Meighen government, as I have already indicated. It was signed the next day, December 29, 1921, by the Governor General, the very day that the King government came into power.

The senior member for Halifax, whom I have already quoted, made this statement—I repeat it:

That transaction savours of graft and wrongdoing and someone has put money in his pocket. I do not hesitate to say it.

In view of the order in council which I have just read, and in view of those who passed it, I should like to ask the house whether it wishes to accept the accusation of graft against the government then in power which was made by the hon. member for Halifax. I wonder whether he would like a royal commission to ascertain whose were the pockets into which this money went.

Mr. MANION: I have not been able to catch the words the minister read. Would he be good enough, in fairness, to read again the statement of the senior member for Halifax, not just the one sentence but the context as well?

Mr. EULER: Very well; it is at the bottom of page 3588 of Hansard. I will read a little more, if you like:

Mr. Black (Halifax): You said she was insured for $75,000 and I am perfectly satisfied that she was valued at $100,000, because she could not get full insurance. The minister also said that at that time boats were cheap. I want to tell him that boats are no more expensive now—they are just as cheap to-day—than they were when she was sold for $18,000.

Mr. Euler: We have not purchased the boat.

Then follows the statement to which I referred before:

Mr. Black (Halifax): That transaction savours of graft and wrongdoing and someone has put money in his pocket. I do not hesitate to say it.

Mr. MANION: Read the next few lines.

Mr. EULER: I followed with this statement:

Do you suggest that we are paying too high a rental?

Mr. Black (Halifax): Yes, absolutely.

Mr. MANION: That is exactly the point; that is exactly what the hon. member for Halifax was referring to.

Mr. EULER: I will pay my hon. friend the compliment that he is very fair-minded. There is a direct statement that there was graft and that somebody put money into his pocket, inferentially money which did not belong to him.

Mr. MANION: I know my hon. friend wants to be fair; the hon. member for Halifax is not here.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Why?

Mr. MANION: Knowing him as well as I do I am certain he is not afraid to be here.

An hon. MEMBER: Get him here.

Mr. MANION: I am not speaking to that hon. gentleman; I am speaking to the minister. He asked the question:

Do you suggest that we are paying too high a rental?

To that question the hon. member replied:

Yes, absolutely.

It seems to me, subject to the opinion of the house, that there is no doubt that the hon. member for Halifax was referring to the rental and not to the sale of the boat.

Mr. EULER: Then the charge is directly against myself, and I shall have to accept responsibility. However, the context shows that the transaction to which he refers was the sale of the boat in 1921, and not the chartering of the boat. My hon. friend from East Simcoe made a direct charge against myself, or against the department of which I am the head, when he said that something savoured of graft in the chartering of that vessel, but the hon. member for Halifax was referring to the sale of the boat in 1921. I will just read again what the hon. member said, and I will leave it to any fair-minded man whether this paragraph does not refer to the purchase and not the chartering of the boat. Let me read a little more of the context. The hon. member for Fort William said:

Nothing is charged at all; the only thing is that the committee wants the information.

Mr. MANION: Hear, hear.

Mr. EULER: I am not charging my hon. friend with making the statement complained of. He continued:

Perhaps I might point out something that has escaped other hon. gentlemen. When a government takes charge on a certain day it usually does so in the morning; the other party goes out the night before.

Mr. MANION: I have no apology to make for that.

Mr. EULER: I am trying to be absolutely fair, and the hon. gentleman will have an opportunity to reply. Just here I would like to ask my hon. friend whether that is not a reference to the time the Liberal government came into power in 1921 and the time the boat was sold, not when it was chartered?

Mr. MANION: Certainly, as far as I was concerned; but I brought out the point a few lines further down that all we wanted was the information, and we were not making any charges at all.

Mr. EULER: I hope my hon. friend understands very clearly that I am not attributing to him any charge of wrongdoing on the part of anyone; I am attributing that directly to only one person with regard to the purchase and sale of that boat, and that is to the senior member for Halifax.

Mr. MANION: I differ with the minister's interpretation, that is all.

Mr. EULER: I think there is no escape for this fact, that the reference with regard to graft and wrongdoing and money going into someone's pocket is made directly in connection with the sale of that boat in 1921, and that it cannot be interpreted in any other way. The hon. member for Fort William has admitted very fairly that the reference he made was to the time in 1921 when the Liberal government came into power. The remarks of the hon. member for Halifax followed immediately after that statement, and had reference to it.

Mr. MANION: I think not; the hon. member for Halifax had no reference to my remarks at all.

Mr. EULER: Very well; I will leave myself in the judgment of the house in the matter. If I may just summarize it, this is the situation: This transaction described by the hon. member for East Simcoe and the hon. member for Halifax—perhaps I should leave out the hon. member for East Simcoe—but described by the hon. member for Halifax and implied by the hon. member for North Simcoe as savouring of graft was completed by the Meighen government just one day before they went out of office. That is the fact. I do not believe for a moment that there was graft, even though the sale was made by the Conservative government, but I say if there was graft then my hon. friends opposite are condemned out of their own mouths. I have not very much fault to find with the remarks made last night by the acting leader of the opposition, but he did say that little or no business was done by the Meighen government after the election. I think that is an entirely proper attitude to take, but I think it is also in point to consider whether it was proper to make contracts of this kind three weeks after the defeat of the government.

I said a moment ago that I do not believe for one moment that there was any graft at all in connection with the transaction; of course there was no graft, although the hon. member for North Simcoe said that the vessel was sold for a price that was too low. I would not have spoken at this length—and I am almost through—but for the fact that I very strongly resent the remarks made by the hon. member for Halifax and the hon. member for East Simcoe with regard to graft, corruption and wrongdoing. I suppose perhaps one should have more sympathy than censure for men who are so unfortunate as to suspect their fellow men without cause. I hesitate to give advice to my friend from Halifax, who has lived in this world a little longer than I have, but I would say to him and to his colleague from East Simcoe that I think they would be happier men if they would just try to believe that other men are as honest as they are. I believe that in the parliament of Canada we should observe the decencies and amenities at all times. At the beginning of this session I was pleased when the leader of the opposition and the Prime Minister exchanged some admirable courtesies, and the leader of the opposition pleaded that in conducting the business of parliament the amenities should be observed. I think every member should be in favour of that attitude, but I do deprecate insinuations of scandal and graft by members of parliament and members of political parties against each other. It is not necessary; it is no credit to parliament and I think it is nothing less than disgusting to the people of Canada. Men in public life are constantly under the closest scrutiny and are always in the glare of newspaper publicity. We cannot expect the public to have a higher opinion of us than we have of ourselves and of each other.

I say this with some reluctance, but I do think the hon. member for Halifax, the hon. member for East Simcoe and the hon. member for North Simcoe owe this house an apology for what they said last night. Members should not insult parliament by making serious charges and creating misgivings in the public mind without being reasonably certain that they have grounds for so doing.

Mr. STEVENS: Mr. Chairman, there are certain features in connection with this matter to which I think we should pay some attention. The minister has given a very fair and partial statement—perhaps as full as is necessary—of the first part of this question, namely, the history of the purchase of the boat. Roughly, it is simply this; the vessel was purchased and the first payment made by Mr. Manley Chew on November 21, 1921, I think it was. The final order in council was passed on December 28, 1921, and approved of by His Excellency the Governor General on December 29, 1921. As the minister has indicated—I will not refer to it further than just in passing—several efforts to sell the vessel were made by the department of naval affairs during the preceding year or years. Whether the vessel was ultimately sold at a price that was satisfactory or should have been satisfactory is, I suppose, a question which we could wrangle over for quite a while. But in any case it was sold and, as far as I can see from the records, it was sold quite fairly. My hon. friends need not laugh; I am simply reciting the facts as the file discloses.

It will be recalled that one of the points at issue last night was the securing of these papers. The minister seemed, in a rather unusual manner for him, to have some reluctance to give out the papers.

Mr. EULER: None at all.

Mr. STEVENS: He repeatedly suggested that as it was a matter for the marine department, later changed to the naval department, he had not control of the papers. However, he promised to bring them down and has brought them down, and I wish to thank him for the opportunity of looking over them.

There are one or two things about this that the committee ought to take note of and consider. This vessel was sold to Mr. Manley Chew by order in council dated December 28th. There is this feature about it; at the time Mr. Manley Chew bought the vessel he was not a member of this house, but he was elected a member of the house on December 6, 1921.

Mr. EULER: He was a candidate.

Mr. STEVENS: He was a candidate probably, but he was elected.

Mr. EULER: It does not matter anyway.

Mr. STEVENS: That does not matter. He was elected on December 6, 1921, and whatever note may be taken of it the fact is that, as a member of the house, he carried on all the subsequent negotiations to which I am now going to make reference.

The purchase called for a down payment of $5,000, which was paid at the time, November 21, I think it was 1921, and the balance, $13,000, to be paid on the 15th July, 1922. He was to have deposited, and did deposit, a note covering the balance of $13,000, without interest to July 15th. I think he was supposed to deposit, and I presume he did so, a chattel mortgage on the property, and he was also to insure the boat, which the documents before me show was done. On July 1, 1922, Mr. Manley Chew intimated to the government—mark you, at this time he was a member of parliament—that he did not find it convenient to pay the balance of the money on the due date, namely, July 15th. He tendered a further note of renewal for three months, which, I gather from the documents, was accepted. But to cut the story short, and not follow all the details, the amount of the final payment, namely, $13,000, was not paid until July 23, 1924, or two years later. I will read a brief summary of the case as I find it on the file, placed there by the officers of the department. I do not think it is a signed document, but it has certain initials on it in the usual way. It is a chronological statement regarding the sale of the Vigilant to Manley Chew, M.P. I would like to read these brief paragraphs, which summarize the transaction:

November 9, 1921: Mr. Chew informed his offer accepted, requesting that certified cheque for $5,000 note for $13,000.

November 21, 1921: Mr. Chew forwarded certified cheque $5,000.

November 25, 1921: Mr. Chew's request granted. Promisory note for $13,000 forwarded to him for completion.

November 30, 1921: Mr. Chew requested forward insurance policy $13,000.

December 2, 1921: Mr. Chew enclosed note $13,000 payable July 1st, 1922.

December 5, 1921: Above letter acknowledged.

January 16, 1922: Mr. Chew requested to hasten insurance policy.

January 23, 1922: Reply regarding insurance policy.

May 1, 1922: Mr. Chew forwarded insurance policy.

May 6, 1922: Above acknowledged.

June 27, 1922: Mr. Chew advised his note for $13,000 due 4 proximo.

June 27, 1922: Mr. Chew enclosed renewal note at three months from July 1 for full amount $13,000.

June 30, 1922: Mr. Chew informed above settlement not satisfactory and requested to make payment $3,000 cash and forward note 3 months for $10,000 at 6 per cent.

July 6, 1922: Mr. Chew's office acknowledged above.

July 26, 1922: Hastener sent by department to letter of June 30.

August 16, 1922: Hastener again sent to letter of June 30.

August 12, 1922: Mr. Chew advised unable to make payment.

August 18, 1922: Department advised prepared to grant further period not more than six months in which to make final settlement, providing Mr. Chew forwards cheque $3,000 not later than September 1.

September 7, 1922: Hastener sent letter August 18.

September 13, 1922: Above acknowledged by Mr. Chew's office.

September 19, 1922: Copy department's letter August 18, enclosed.

And so it goes on with a chronological statement showing that the department repeatedly conferred with Mr. Chew regarding settlement, and asked him to hasten the adjustment of this claim. It went on until finally Mr. Chew paid the $13,000, presumably after making some sale to Mr. Payette. All this was two years after.

Then we find a letter on the file from the Justice department. They had evidently been asked whether interest could be collected. No interest had been paid by Mr. Chew, and the aggregate amount of the interest was $1,650. On July 30, 1924, R. J. Orde, Judge Advocate General, stated in a letter to the deputy minister:

> While the question is not free from doubt, yet I am of opinion that, having regard to the terms under which the vessel was sold to Mr. Chew, the deputy minister's letter to him of the 18 August, 1922, and Mr. Chew's action subsequent to the receipt of such letter, a claim for interest on the amount of Mr. Chew's indebtedness which remained outstanding subsequent to the 1st of July, 1922, might be successfully prosecuted, and such being the case there seems to be no legal reason why Mr. Chew should not be called upon to pay interest on such indebtedness.

As far as I can discover from the file, no interest has been paid to date. It may have been, but I ask the minister if he will make a note of it and let me know later.

Mr. EULER: Of course I would not know that. It was purchased from the naval department, not from the customs department.

Mr. STEVENS: I am simply going by the file as I have been able to read it. Of course it is a departmental file.

Mr. EULER: A naval department file.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes.

Mr. EULER: So the collection of that has nothing to do with the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. STEVENS: I will ask the minister to take note of the fact that, according to the Justice department memorandum which I have just read and what I have been able to see on the file, Mr. Manley Chew has not paid the interest on that deferred payment for two years and I would suggest to the minister that inasmuch as the Dominion of Canada is now paying Mr. Chew these sums of money, this interest might very well be deducted from them. Those are roughly the facts in regard to the sale of the vessel.

Mr. EULER: In order to keep the record straight it would be fair for the hon. member to make it clear whether the department is paying money to Mr. Chew or not. The department is not paying Mr. Chew; the department is paying Mr. Payette, from whom we chartered the vessel.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. STEVENS: I think the minister is quite right in asking an explanation of that. The other file shows that Mr. Chew is interested in the vessel.

Mr. EULER: Not at all.

Mr. STEVENS: I do not want to get into a controversy with the minister over what might be a technicality. Would the minister note that this amount is outstanding, and, if possible, see whether there is any way of collecting anything against the vessel? We will leave the matter at that for the moment. Roughly speaking, that is the history of the sale or disposal of the vessel by the government. I will summarize the matter by saying this. Unquestionably very lenient treatment was accorded Mr. Chew in regard to the payment under his agreement of the $13,000 which was allowed to run for two years after the last due date, namely, July 1, 1922.

In regard to the so-called charter of the vessel, the question naturally arose in the minds of all of us, when it was indicated that the vessel had been sold for $18,000, whether $2,250 a month for a vessel that had been sold previously by the government for $18,000 was not almost an outrageous price to pay.

Mr. DUNNING: Or else the sale price was too low.

Mr. STEVENS: Quite so, or else the sale price was too low. It was indicated that the new owners had spent quite a large sum, some $30,000, on the property.

Mr. EULER: Approximately.

Mr. STEVENS: When the minister speaks about the vessel being worth $130,000 to-day, the fact is, according to the file, that the vessel cost the Dominion of Canada $124,400 in 1904. That was the contract price. I take this from a letter written and signed by Mr. William Kearns for the Auditor General under date of May 15, 1924:

> S.S. Vigilant, built by Polson's Iron Works, total cost, $124,400.

Mr. EULER: There were extras, I am informed, amounting to another $12,000, making the amount $136,000.

Mr. STEVENS: Possibly. I am just quoting the Auditor General's report, which is on this file dealing with the disposal of the vessel, so that I cannot go beyond that. The minister a moment ago appealed to the committee in regard to the fairness of his statement that it was proper to allow a ten per cent per annum depreciation; that is, that in figuring the rental rate paid to these people, it was fair to allow them a ten per cent depreciation. If we apply a ten per cent depreciation to the vessel from 1904, the year in which it was built, down to 1921, there would not be very much value left. If we are going to allow a ten per cent depreciation in order to make up a rental of $2,250 a month, it is only reasonable to allow that depreciation from the cost of the vessel down to the time of its sale.

Mr. EULER: An appraisal was made of the vessel before it was sold.

Mr. STEVENS: But the minister cannot have it coming and going. He cannot allow Mr. Manley Chew and Mr. Payette ten per cent depreciation as a justification for paying $2,250 a month.

Mr. EULER: Would the hon. member admit there was a certain value placed upon that vessel at the time we chartered it? We have had various figures given ranging all the way to $136,000 or $134,000. He will admit that is the value of the boat or was the value at the time we chartered it. He will also admit that from that time on there must be a depreciation each year.

Mr. STEVENS: The minister read—and I will only take his own statement—a valuation, and if he will read it again he will find that it stated that it was a replacement value.

Mr. EULER: $200,000 and then, with depreciation off, $136,000 or $140,000, as the case may be.

Mr. STEVENS: We will accept the minister's reasoning. It amounts to this; that a vessel built in 1904 and sold in 1921 for $18,000, although it is now depreciating at the rate of ten per cent per annum and that depreciation should be allowed as a justification for the rental, is still worth $136,000. I will leave it at that.

Mr. EULER: Is it not true that it costs a good deal more to build ships now than it did twenty or twenty-five years ago?

Mr. STEVENS: I agree with that. I think it costs more although I am not too sure on that point. I notice that on the north of Ireland and on the Clyde they are building ships to-day at prices very nearly as low as they did in pre-war periods.

An hon. MEMBER: A hundred per cent more.

Mr. STEVENS: Not a hundred per cent more. I turn to the question of the charter. We submit—and I think there is justification in the file for our contention—that altogether apart from what value may be placed on this vessel, a rental of $2,250 per month with the charterer to supply all the crew, expenses, supplies and everything except insurance, is too high a price to pay.

Mr. EULER: She was not on service for all the year.

Mr. STEVENS: No, according to the terms of the charter she was on service seven months in 1927 and she is to be on service nine months in 1928 and nine months in 1929. But during the period she is to be tied up the government pays all expenses of taking care of her, watching her and keeping her in repair. After I have completed my observations I am going to ask the minister to be good enough to tell us all that he has spent on operation, upkeep and repairs. We asked for that last night and those figures ought to be furnished to us.

There is a letter on the file dated April 18, 1927, having to do with the chartering. I want to direct this particularly to the attention of the minister because he stated that Mr. Manley Chew had nothing further to do with the vessel. I want to say very frankly that I gather from the file with which I have been dealing, although some letters that ought to be on it are apparently not there—and I am not complaining about that although it makes it rather difficult to get a connected understanding of the matter—that when Mr. Payette took possession, it was under some arrangement made between Mr. Chew and Mr. Payette. It looked to me as if Mr. Payette and Mr Chew went into partnership in regard to this vessel, and that Mr. Payette put up the balance of the purchase money, $13,000, in order to join with Mr. Chew in the ownership. Then the negotiations were carried on almost entirely between Mr. Chew, the minister and Mr. Cowan, acting for the department. The correspondence—there is a lot of it and I am going to read very little—shows that Mr. Chew was a very important party in the matter. For instance, we have Mr. Cowan asking when Mr. Chew will be back, and Mr. Chew wires:

> Please have officer arrive Tuesday next. Will start Monday to open boilers and machinery and have help to assist in examination of hull.

Mr. Cowan wires to Mr. Chew:

> Your wire received. Do not make any arrangements to open boiler.

That was in 1927, just before the charter was entered into. This was during the negotiations for the chartering of this vessel. Then in March, 1927, Mr. Chew wires Mr. Cowan:

> Six hours after notice boat will be delivered to dry dock. Cost two hundred dollars.

There is a lot of correspondence and memoranda of that character passing between Mr. Cowan and Mr. Chew. Mr. Chew writes on March 9, discussing the question of the chartering of this boat. Mr. Cowan writes to Mr. Chew on March 12 on the same subject. There is another letter from Mr. Chew on March 15, 1927—all this correspondence takes place in 1927. Mr. Chew writes again on March 23 to Mr. Cowan on the same subject. Mr. Cowan on March 26 wires to Mr. Chew. Then from Mr. Chew's office comes a letter signed by one of his staff to Mr. Cowan, dated March 24. Then we come to the letter which I desire to read, dated April 18, 1927. The negotiations had proceeded regarding the chartering of this vessel, and Mr. Chew, not on behalf of his firm, but in his own name, writes to Mr. Cowan, the chief of the preventive service at Ottawa, as follows:

Dear Mr. Cowan,—

I was talking to Mr. Euler, in Kitchener, over 'phone. He said you had brought in to him a draft of a charter and the price was $2,000 per month. I felt this was a small price. However, I would like you to let me know as soon as you arrive in Ottawa by wire so I can go down there. We can get with Mr. Euler and complete the charter.

I might say for your information that I am having all the work done on the bottom of this boat that the report calls for, and I expect this will be completed and she will be out of the dock in two or three days' time. This will leave her in the position that by putting on a good force, the work that is necessary to do could be completed in a very short time. I won't do any further work after she leaves the dock until arrangements have been made with you for the charter.

Now I ask the minister to note that Mr. Chew states that he had discussed this with him in Kitchener.

Mr. DUNNING: Over the phone.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, and he says this:

I felt this was a small price. However, I would like you to let me know as soon as you arrive in Ottawa. We can get with Mr. Euler and complete the charter.

And the figure mentioned in this letter is $2,000 a month. That is the point I am desirous of bringing to the attention of the minister.

Mr. EULER: Shall I give the explanation now?

Mr. STEVENS: Interrupt me, if you like.

Mr. EULER: I was a bit reluctant to add anything to the question of the financial difficulties that Mr. Chew had, as recited by my hon. friend, but the simple explanation of the connection of Mr. Chew with Mr. Payette, so far as the negotiations are concerned, is this: Mr. Chew did have an interest in the boat at the time the negotiations began. He was in partnership, I understand, with Mr. Payette, and it was necessary for them to spend $30,000 to put the boat in shape so we could use it. They started out to spend $15,000, but they found it cost them nearly $30,000, and Mr. Chew was not in a position to put up his share of that and Mr. Payette insisted that he take over the whole boat, and he made the charter with us. That is the explanation. In regard to the $2,000, we did offer then $2,000 at first. Mr. Chew thought that the amount was too low, and they demanded $2,500. A compromise was made. We split the difference, and gave them $2,250.

Mr. STEVENS: I am not disputing what the minister says at all. I am merely citing what is disclosed in the correspondence. The point is fairly well established, which is what I suspected, that Mr. Chew and Mr. Payette joined forces and became partners. Later on, the minister says they made a settlement, and Mr. Chew left the matter entirely to Mr. Payette. As to that, I do not know.

On May 2, following this letter of Mr. Chew dated April 18, Mr. Cowan, chief of the preventive service, writes to Mr. Chew as follows:

On my return to the department this date after an absence in the east of a few weeks, I discussed the matter of chartering the Vigilant with the minister, and I am now instructed to advise you that the department will be interested in chartering this boat on a long term charter providing the price is fair and reasonable, with provision in the charter for the purchase of the boat by the department at any time before the charter expires.

Then there follows this paragraph, which I submit to the minister and to the committee:

I am still of the opinion that a fair price as a basis of charter for this boat would be in the neighbourhood of $2,000 per month, the department to supply the crew, also fuel, deck supplies, water, food, etc.

We have the obvious willingness of Mr. Chew on April 18 to enter into the charter for $2,000 a month—

Mr. EULER: I wish my hon. friend would read where he says so.

Mr. STEVENS: I say obvious willingness, because he is anxious to close the charter.

Mr. EULER: He says the amount offered is too low and asks for an interview, which followed, at which interview they asked $2,500, out of which came the compromise agreement to split the difference. I do not think is is fair to assume that Mr. Chew was willing to accept the $2,000.

Mr. STEVENS: I think it is obvious from his letter.

Mr. EULER: If he had said to me that he was willing to take $2,000, that is all he would have received; I can assure my hon. friend of that.

Mr. STEVENS: It is a little unfortunate that this letter was not in the minister's hands when he was negotiating for the charter.

Mr. EULER: I cannot take out of it what the hon. member does.

Mr. STEVENS: The letter speaks for itself. It says:

I was talking to Mr. Euler, in Kitchener, over phone. He said you had brought in to him a draft of a charter and the price was $2,000 per month. I felt this was a small price. However, I would like you to let me know as soon as you arrive in Ottawa, by wire, so I can go down there.

Mr. EULER: What for?

Mr. STEVENS:

We can get with Mr. Euler and complete the charter.

What charter? The draft charter which had been sent to him by Mr. Cowan.

Mr. EULER: Not at all. The hon. gentleman must remember that Mr. Chew was in partnership with Mr. Payette, and Mr. Payette had to be dealt with in the negotiations as well.

Mr. STEVENS: I am simply taking out of this correspondence what is in it.

Mr. EULER: I am very sure the hon. gentleman would not think of me or say of me that if I were offered that boat at $2,000 a month, I would deliberately offer $250 a month more than was asked for.

Mr. STEVENS: I would not.

Mr. EULER: That is the inference from your remarks.

Mr. STEVENS: It seems rather strange when we read the official documents on this file, which is the official property of the government and of the house—

Mr. EULER: But they do not bear out what you say.

Mr. STEVENS: I say this: Here are the words, and I will leave them to the house to take out of them whatever meaning it wishes. Here as the letter from Mr. Manley Chew to Mr. Cowan, chief of the preventive service, dated April 18, 1927:

I was talking to Mr. Euler, in Kitchener, over 'phone. He said you had brought into him a draft of a charter and the price was $2,000 per month. I felt this was a small price. However, I would like you to let me know as soon as you arrive in Ottawa, by wire, so I can go down there. We can get with Mr. Euler and complete the charter.

Mr. EULER: It does not say at that rate.

Mr. STEVENS: Very well. That is what Mr. Chew says on April 18. This is what Mr. Cowan says on May 2 in a letter to Mr. Chew:

I am still of the opinion that a fair price as a basis of charter for this boat would be in the neighbourhood of two thousand dollars per month—

Mr. DUNNING: "In the neighbourhood."

Mr. STEVENS: Wait a moment.

—the department to supply the crew, also fuel, deck supplies, water, food, etc.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. STEVENS: I cannot see why hon. members should become excited over that.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. STEVENS: It is a statement of fact from this correspondence.

Mr. EULER: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? I know he wants to be fair, as I do.

Mr. STEVENS: Certainly.

Mr. EULER: For the information of the committee, I may say that I have a great deal of confidence in the chief of the preventive service, Mr. Cowan, who carried on most of the negotiations. Has the hon. member there the recommendation from Mr. Cowan to pay $2,250? Because I followed his recommendation.

An hon. MEMBER: He cannot find that.

Mr. STEVENS: I can find it if I have time. Here is a letter from Mr. Cowan about a week later. It is a long four-page letter, but I will read the part that is desired by hon. members opposite.

An hon. MEMBER: Read it all.

Mr. STEVENS: No, I do not think it is necessary:

I have the honour to report that I have this day had a conference with the owners of the Vigilant re the matter of chartering this boat for patrol duty in Atlantic waters. As an outcome of this conference the owners of the Vigilant have made an offer to charter this boat for patrol duty on the basis of a letter addressed to me this day as follows:

That is May 9. This is a quotation now from the letter from the owners:

With reference to your favour of the 2nd instant, I am prepared to charter the steamer Vigilant to your department under the following terms and conditions:

(1) Price per month, $2,250. The department to supply the crew, fuel, deck supplies, water, food, etc.

(2) Months under charter as follows: 1927, seven months; 1928, nine months; 1929, nine months.

(3) Vessel to be reconditioned according to specifications or detailed report as rendered by your Mr. Pearson, copy of which to be furnished to us without delay.

(4) The present owners will insure the vessel for $70,000.

(5) Any coal at present in the boat your department will pay for at market price.

(6) The monthly charter payments to be paid for in advance.

(7) We feel satisfied that inside of thirty days of date of notification of charter we can have this boat ready for commission.

(8) Should the department wish to purchase this vessel at any time before the end of 1927 it is understood the purchase price will be $65,000.

(9) It is also understood that should the government purchase this vessel before the expiration of 1927 they will remit us the total cost of the insurance premium for 1927.

(10) It is understood that your department at the termination of the charter will hand over the boat to us in the same condition as received.

It is not signed, but I presume it is the Payette letter. Then Mr. Cowan proceeds:

The terms asked as the basis of the charter, namely, $2,250 for the neat vessel, is in my opinion fair and reasonable, and therefore I would recommend that the Vigilant be chartered for a period of three years on the above basis of actual service.

Then he recites again the general terms that I have already indicated.

Mr. EULER: That is what I wished read. The recommendation came from the chief of the preventive service.

Mr. STEVENS: I think we were justified on those letters in calling into question the amount being paid for this vessel, namely $2,250 a month. The point at issue between the minister and ourselves is simply this: Is the charter of this vessel at $2,250, or $56,000 for three years, plus all expenses except insurance, a fair price to pay to the owners? That is the whole question at issue.

An hon. MEMBER: Is it?

Mr. STEVENS: I submit that the price paid is very, very generous; in fact I am inclined to think excessive. The minister may justify it on the score of emergency or the difficulty of securing vessels, but I venture to say that a boat as suitable as this could have been secured at a lower rate.

Mr. CAHILL: Where?

An hon. MEMBER: On the Clyde.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, I expect you could, but I am not suggesting that you should go to the Clyde. I say that is the issue. I do not think that the facts which I have recited will be disputed. Will the minister now tell us what has been spent by the government in operation, upkeep and repairs on this vessel since the charter date, namely, May 20, 1927?

Mr. EULER: At the outset let me say that it was extremely difficult to get a boat. There was an emergency; we had no boat on the Atlantic coast; a great many rum-running vessels were operating there; we had to do something speedily. Owners of boats of a similar type demanded as high as $4,500 a month. I merely leave it to the committee whether $2,250 is a fair and reasonable amount. The question has been asked, what it has cost to operate this boat. It cost in the neighbourhood of $5,500 a month. In my opinion that is too much. As a matter of fact, as I said last night, we are getting rid of all the privately-chartered boats, and within a very short period we will have only our own boats, properly equipped. One of the reasons why we do not propose to purchase this boat is because it costs us too much to operate it. We can build one of our own and operate it at 50 per cent less. A boat that we own, the Margaret—it is known to everybody—actually costs us $13,500 a month to operate. It costs something to protect the customs revenues on the coast. I am not sure whether my answer is sufficient.

Mr. STEVENS: No. Will the minister be good enough to tell me how much has been spent since the date mentioned, May 20, 1927, in operation, upkeep and repairs—the total amount?

Mr. EULER: I am informed about $6,500 for the annual overhauling. It was done last winter at Halifax in the navy yard.

Mr. STEVENS: What has been the cost of operation?

Mr. EULER: At the rate of $5,500 a month outside the charter.

Mr. STEVENS: Does that $5,500 a month include the months the boat was tied up?

Mr. EULER: No, that is the cost of operation during the months she is in actual service.

Mr. STEVENS: How much did it cost when she was tied up?

Mr. EULER: About $200 a month—two watchmen on the boat; that is all.

Mr. ARTHURS: How many months was she tied up?

Mr. EULER: Three months in each of the last two years.

Mr. STEVENS: From May 20, 1927, to May, 1928, she has cost $38,500 for operation, $6,500 for repairs, and $2,250 per month for charter. Now one other question. Is the insurance kept up? I know they are obligated to pay it, but have the owners kept up the insurance or has the department paid it?

Mr. EULER: It has not expired yet. I might say also with regard to costs that we have a boat called the Bayfield, loaned by the Department of Marine, which costs almost as much for operation as does this boat we have under charter. And it is our own boat, costing nothing for charter fee.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): I understand that the minister rather indicated that what I said last night applied to the purchase of the boat.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): My remarks—

Mr. EULER: I didn't indicate it; I said it.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): My remarks applied to the charter of the boat particularly. If I said anything improper or that should be retracted with regard to the minister I am perfectly willing to withdraw it. I did not of course make any charge of graft or anything of that kind against the hon. gentleman himself. There are many points in connection with the boat which I could discuss but I will not take up the time of the committee doing so, because I feel it would be useless; the item would carry under any circumstances. But I will say this with regard to the charter: First of all I believe that the department that sold the boat got all she was worth when they sold her. She was twenty-four years old, useless for anything except for yachting purposes. If you tell me that any sane man would buy a boat for pleasure, an antiquated yacht twenty-four years old, then I say such an individual cannot be found. And that was the only purpose she was fit for. I will say further that in order to make her seaworthy I am almost certain, from my knowledge of shipping, that the engines were not fit to operate the boat; they had to be taken out and new ones put in. And unless some arrangement were made for chartering the boat no sane man, in my judgment, would spend $30,000 equipping her unless for some special purpose.

Mr. EULER: The naval department said they were in first-class condition.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): If that boat were for charter to-day I would defy the owner anywhere to get $1,000 a month for her, on the terms of the charter under which she is at present employed. That is an excessive amount for the boat. I believe $750 would be a much more equitable and fair arrangement.

Mr. EULER: I want to ask a fair question. Could the hon. gentleman give me information—knowing about ships as he does—where in Halifax or anywhere else we can get two boats at $1,000 a month—boats similar to this? If we can get them and they are seaworthy we will take them at $1,000.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): I cannot at the moment, offhand. There are not many such boats afloat. She was built for a yacht.

Mr. EULER: She was built by the government of Canada for patrol on the lakes.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): Where is my hon. friend from Antigonish-Guysborough? He is not here. But will anyone acquainted with shipping say that a boat of 243 tons, twenty-four years old, is worth $2,200 a month, without expenses, not even the lay-up expenses in the time she is off charter? The thing is absurd.

Mr. THOMPSON: Last evening, speaking on this subject, I said:

> I find that the steamship Vigilant formerly belonged to the government; almost their first official act after coming into power in December, 1921, was to sell this boat to a then Liberal member of parliament for $18,000.

The Minister of National Revenue says this is incorrect. If it is incorrect then the government themselves are to blame, because they took power on December 29, 1921. On March 22, 1928, certain questions were submitted to the government in connection with this boat:

> Mr. Ernst:
> 1. Is the patrol boat "Vigilant" now engaged in the customs preventive service?
> 2. If so, where?
> 3. Is the "Vigilant" owned by the Department of National Revenue, or under charter?
> 4. If under charter, from whom, and what are the terms of the charter party?

5. Was the "Vigilant" formerly owned by the government?
6. When was the "Vigilant" sold, to whom, and for what amount?
Mr. Rinfret:
1. Yes, under charter.
2. Atlantic waters off Nova Scotia—base Halifax.
3. Under charter.
4. John Thomas Payette, Penetanguishene, Ont. $2,250 per month for period of seven months, 1927; nine months, 1928; nine months, 1929.
5. Yes.
6. 29th December, 1921 to Manley Chew, Penetanguishene, Ont., for $18,000.

Exactly what I said. This government came into power on December 29 and this boat was sold on December 29.

Mr. EULER: Did my hon. friend hear me recite the order in council under which the boat was sold by the Meighen government?

Mr. GUTHRIE: He said that if he was misled your answer misled him.

Mr. EULER: If he was mistaken he ought to make amends.

Mr. DUNNING: The answer did not mislead him.

Mr. THOMPSON: The Secretary of State, in answer to a question, said that this boat was sold on December 29, 1921.

Mr. EULER: That is the day the Governor General signed the order in council.

Mr. THOMPSON: I do not know about the Governor General signing it, but here is an answer to a plain question.

Mr. EULER: If the hon. member admits he was mistaken I am willing to accept his statement.

Mr. CLARK: He believed the information you gave him.

Mr. THOMPSON: If the Secretary of State gave an incorrect answer—

Mr. DUNNING: He did not.

Mr. THOMPSON: From the papers produced on the floor of the house, the negotiations were entered into prior to that date, although the sale was not completed until after this government came into power. I never found any fault in my remarks with the price obtained.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

Mr. THOMPSON: Some gentlemen are laughing. But turn to page 3580 of Hansard and see whether you can find any remarks of mine finding fault with the price paid for the boat. It is true the minister read certain letters from personal friends of Mr. Chew and of Mr. Payette giving their ideas as to the value of the boat. A boat is worth what you can get for her, the same as a house. The figures read by the minister to-night are very interesting as to the value of the boat, showing what practical men were prepared to give for her—men who were in need of a boat. Take the firm of Keenan Brothers, Owen Sound, who wanted a boat of this type. They examined her, and what were they prepared to give for her? Five thousand dollars. Mr. Callaghan of Toronto made an offer of $6,600 for the boat.

Mr. EULER: I gave those figures before.

Mr. THOMPSON: Certainly. These were practical men who wanted a boat and this is what they were prepared to give for this one. The Anglo Coal Company, Limited, of New Campbellton, N.B., offered $10,500, and Captain Curry of Toronto offered $12,000. The government refused to accept these offers, considering them too low. As the minister has said, she was advertised again and some man offered $25,000, but his terms of payment were so unsatisfactory that they could not be accepted. Then this same man who offered $25,000 offers $18,000 at a later date, this time all cash subject to inspection. Apparently he inspected the boat and found her unsatisfactory, because he withdrew his offer. Then Mr. Manley Chew came along and submitted an offer of $18,000, payable $5,000 cash and the balance on or before July 1, 1922, without interest, and the government accepted that offer. I am satisfied that the price paid by Mr. Chew was satisfactory.

Mr. EULER: May I tell my hon. friend that the price was never criticized by myself or anyone else from this side of the house; it was criticized by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. THOMPSON: I did not criticize the price received for the boat, but I criticized the rental being paid. Here is a boat sold by this or by the then government for $18,000.

Mr. EULER: Not by this government.

Mr. THOMPSON: By the government of the day, and it is claimed that $30,000 was spent in repairs. The papers are not brought down and there is nothing to show how this amount is made up. I would like to know in whose machine shop these repairs were made, it would be interesting to know how that amount was spent. But even taking the figures of the government as correct, we have a total of $48,000. This boat is chartered; she cost $48,000 altogether and the government will pay $56,250 for twenty-five months' use. If that is not extravagance I do not know what it is. Another point on which I would like a little information is this: I understood the minister to say to-night that it cost $6,500 for repairs. Is that correct?

Mr. EULER: For the annual overhaul.

Mr. THOMPSON: When was that paid?

Mr. EULER: It was last winter's overhauling in our own yards at Halifax.

Mr. THOMPSON: Was there any amount paid?

Mr. EULER: Approximately $6,500.

Mr. THOMPSON: When was that paid?

Mr. EULER: I have not the exact date at the moment; it may not be paid yet, but that is what it is going to cost.

Mr. THOMPSON: I think that is correct, because the impression I got from the minister was that this money had been paid already. Now I understand him to say that it may not have been paid as yet.

Mr. EULER: I am not certain, but it is going to cost us that much anyway. The work was done in our own yards by the Dominion government, without profit. Whether or not it has been actually paid I do not know, and it does not matter particularly because we will have to pay it anyway.

Mr. THOMPSON: The reason I am asking is because the question was asked as to how much the government had spent on repairs for this boat, and the answer was that they had spent $1,565.18. I assume that is in addition to the $6,500 which the minister now says it will cost to overhaul the boat annually.

Mr. EULER: At the time the question was placed on the order paper these repairs had not been made.

Mr. THOMPSON: I gathered that that amount had been already paid; however, in 1927 the department paid $1,565.18 for repairs. All I have to say is that the statements I made last night were based on the answer of the government to the question I asked, and therefore my statements were substantially correct. I have nothing to withdraw and I still stand by the statement that the government are paying an extravagant rental for this boat.

Mr. EULER: If, as the hon. gentleman says, he was misled by an answer given to a question on the order paper as to which government sold that boat to Mr. Chew, does he still persist in the charge that it savoured of graft and wrongdoing?

Mr. THOMPSON: I did not say it was graft; I said it savoured of graft.

Mr. EULER: Does the hon. gentleman adhere to that statement?

Mr. THOMPSON: I say that the price paid is so extravagant that one is forced to that conclusion.

Mr. DUNNING: Why not make a charge and pledge your seat on it like a man, instead of making insinuations?

Mr. ARTHURS: As far as I have heard, no charge has been made from this side of the house that there was anything wrong with the sale of the boat. I know something about this boat; she was taken up to Parry Sound by the then government and advertised for sale after being repainted and refitted. She was advertised as being in first class, seaworthy condition. She lay there for many months and I understand that tenders were called for on two or three occasions.

Mr. EULER: Three orders in council were passed accepting offers which were never carried out.

Mr. ARTHURS: Offers were made, none of which were carried out, because there were no buyers for that class of boat. This boat was built for the Department of Marine and Fisheries twenty-four years before she was sold; she was built for the lake service and was absolutely no good for carrying cargo or passengers. Her general lines were more those of a yacht than anything else. She was of no use for visiting the various resorts on the great lakes or taking the inside channels on account of her great draft; in proportion to her size she was too deep for that part of the country. The result was that she was unsalable, and I believe that when the government secured $18,000 for her they got twice what she was worth in the ordinary market. If we consider the sale of other boats, about which there is no question of what government sold them, we can show some horrible examples of prices obtained. I hold in my hand the answer given to a question on May 3, 1926, regarding certain boats sold by the present government. The question was:

Are the following ships: Emperor of Havana; Emperor of St. John; Emperor of Fredericton; Emperor of Montreal; Emperor of Midland; carrying on a service between Canada and Cuba?

Were these ships formerly the property of the Canadian Merchant Marine? If so, what were the respective names at that time?

What was the cost of each, and the price at which each was sold?

I will not go into the details; I will just give the cost of these boats and the price for which they were sold by the present government. They were not twenty-four years old, but were in seaworthy condition. The Canadian Sailor, afterwards the Emperor of Havana, cost $690,409.84 and was sold for $40,000.

Mr. DUNNING: Will my hon. friend say what government built that boat, and what government paid for it?

Mr. ARTHURS: We are not talking about what government built it; we are talking about what it was sold for. This government sold those boats.

Mr. DUNNING: Last night my hon. friends insisted on knowing who sold the other boat, and if there is any question of value, let my hon. friend say who built the boats.

Mr. ARTHURS: My hon. friend can talk afterwards; I am going on with this list. The second boat was the Canadian Warrior, later changed to the Emperor of St. John.

Mr. DUNNING: If you want to rake up a scandal in the merchant marine—

Mr. ARTHURS: The Emperor of St. John cost $819,671.26 and was sold for $40,000, less than five per cent of her original cost. This was an up-to-date boat, absolutely seaworthy in every respect, and not twenty-four years old as was the Vigilant.

Mr. EULER: I would like to know what point there is in this discussion with regard to the estimates.

Mr. ARTHURS: The whole discussion this evening, Mr. Chairman, has been regarding the price of the Vigilant, and I think I am perfectly justified in making a comparison. The next boat, the Canadian Sower, afterwards known as the Emperor of Fredericton, cost $716,856.63 and sold for $40,000. I could go on with the other two or three boats, but they were all sold for an average of less than six per cent of their cost. They were practically new boats and they were sold to the president of the Liberal association, I am led to believe, in a certain county in the province of Ontario.

Mr. DUNNING: Which boats?

Mr. ARTHURS: Sold for the purpose of going into direct competition with our own boats on established routes on the Atlantic.

[Mr. Arthurs.]

Mr. MANION: Better not ask that again, or we will tell you.

Mr. ARTHURS: So far as the Vigilant is concerned, the minister has stated that this boat was sold for $18,000. He has stated that repairs amounting to $30,000 were put upon her, but he has only the word of the charterer for those repairs. I am confident that my hon. friend from East Simcoe (Mr. Thompson) would know if any material repairs were made on a boat located in Midland harbour during all the ensuing years. As a matter of fact we are paying the owners of this boat more than the entire cost of the boat every season, and keeping it in perfect condition in addition to that. We have agreed to return the boat in the same condition as we got it. The boat was twenty-four years old when it was chartered, and I think the whole question is whether we are paying a reasonable price for the services of this boat. We have been told that there was an emergency, but this emergency has been there right along. The rum runners were down on the coast last year as they are this year, and they were there the year before; they have been there all the time. If there was an emergency, why charter a boat for three years at an excessive cost? That is what we are questioning.

Mr. EULER: It would be quite impossible to get them to charter the boat unless it was taken for a period of time, because large expenditures had to be made.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): I want to quote from Hansard, page 3588, so that we will have the whole thing on the record.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Louder.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): I am going to read this if it takes half an hour.

Mr. SHORT: You started it last night; go to it.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): If the hon. member is through with his foolishness, I will begin. If that is his usual behaviour, I am surprised at anyone sending him as a member to this house. Hansard reads as follows:

Mr. Black (Halifax): Did I understand the minister to say that that boat was sold for $18,000 and that she is now worth over $100,000?

I want to draw the attention of the house to the fact that this is the first remark made by the hon. senior member for Halifax. I will read it once more:

Mr. Black (Halifax): Did I understand the minister to say that that boat was sold for $18,000 and that she is now worth over $100,000?

Mr. Euler: I did not say over $100,000; I said she was insured for $75,000.

Mr. Black (Halifax): You said she was insured for $75,000 and I am perfectly satisfied that she was valued at $100,000, because she could not get full insurance. The minister also said that at that time boats were cheap. I want to tell him that boats are no more expensive now—they are just as cheap to-day—than they were when she was sold for $18,000.

Mr. Euler: We have not purchased the boat.

Mr. Black (Halifax): That transaction savours of graft and wrongdoing and someone has put money in his pocket. I do not hesitate to say it.

Up to that point there is not one word in the whole speech except—

Mr. SHORT: Read what Mr. Euler says in regard to that.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): There is not one word in the discussion last night with respect to the leasing of the boat.

Mr. SHORT: What did Mr. Euler say?

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): I will read that:

Mr. Euler: Do you suggest that we are paying too high a rental?

I rise only for the purpose of putting this whole thing on Hansard, so that anyone reading it will have it all together.

Mr. MANION: I am sure my hon. friend wants to bring the whole matter out, but on page 3588, just a few lines down, the following appears:

Mr. Black (Halifax): Let us see a copy of the charter.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): That does not matter.

Mr. MANION: It just shows that he was talking about the charter.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): I rather sympathize with the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Thompson) to-night. Apparently when he asked a question in the house some time ago as to the date of the purchase, he came to the conclusion that it was a Liberal government which sold the boat to a Liberal supporter, and he immediately concluded there was something wrong with the sale.

An hon. MEMBER: It would naturally make you suspicious.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Unfortunately I must say that there are some hon. gentlemen opposite who suspect everything, and I have my own suspicion about anyone who suspects everything of being wrong. I think he made as plausible an explanation to-night as he could under the very embarrassing circumstances, but I would like to quote what the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Boys) said last night—page 3587 of Hansard:

Mr. Boys: One of the reasons is that it was sold a little too cheap and sold to a supporter of the government at the time, which in itself invites criticism. The hon. member for East Simcoe has gone so far as to suggest that the whole transaction savours of graft.

I merely quote that to show this; at least one hon. member, from a constituency very close to the other hon. member, construed the remarks of the hon. gentleman that way. All the circumstances have been related to-night by the Minister of National Revenue. The boat was sold for $18,000, and it would seem that the government got all the boat was apparently worth at that time, or at least all they could get for it. It is apparent that the hon. gentleman put a wrong interpretation on the whole transaction.

Mr. CANTLEY: I should like to get the discussion around to a point rather more harmonious. I refer to a remark made by the minister that we on this side of the House are inclined to attribute dishonesty to all our opponents. I am not making any particular claim for honesty myself and I will take the committee into my confidence and say that my forebears on my father's side were originally and for generations, pirates on the coast of Aberdeenshire. My mother's progenitors were, I know, cattle lifters from Inverness. Both these occupations were counted the professions of gentlemen at that time.

To return to the subject matter of debate, this vessel, the Vigilant, is an old boat. I remember distinctly when she was built in Polson's yards at Toronto in 1904. Indeed I think we forged the main shafting for her as well as the stem stern post and recorder frame, at New Glasgow.

Mr. DUNNING: It was a good shaft too.

Mr. CANTLEY: Certainly it was a good job and she is afloat yet. The question comes up of the value of the boat at the time she was sold. I think she was well sold when she was sold for $18,000. That is proved by the circumstances. Mr. Chew paid $18,000 for her and two years after was content to sell her to Payette for $13,000, dropping $5,000 on the transaction. That, I think, is disclosed by the papers laid on the table.

Mr. EULER: No.

Mr. CANTLEY: If the Minister will look over them I think he will find I am correct. Mr. Chew was evidently not able to complete payment of the balance due for the vessel and deposited with the government Payette's cheque for $13,000, in settlement of the balance due on the purchase price of $18,000. Payette's cheque of $13,000 was given Chew in payment of the purchase of the vessel from him for that amount. Chew was evidently content to drop $5,000 on the transaction. Chew paid Payette's cheque over to the government so that he could get title to the vessel and turn same over to Payette, who had bought her from him. The minister has made a comparison between the hire paid for the Vigilant and that paid for the Hochelaga. I should like to point out to him one or two pertinent facts: The Vigilant has not classification at Lloyd's. Her name does not appear in Lloyd's register at all, having simply been wiped off the register books when she failed to comply with the requirements as to classification and registration at Lloyd's. The Hochelaga on the other hand is classed "100 A1", and her record is clean and complete up to the last issue of Lloyd's register, 1928. The Hochelaga was built by one of the most celebrated firms in Great Britain, as a yacht for one of the royal personages of Europe, built under Lloyd's special survey with extra heavy scantlings and platings, for navigation in northern waters, and was a beautifully finished, high-powered craft.

Mr. EULER: We obtained a first class certificate from the marine inspector for the vessel when she left Midland after she was overhauled.

Mr. CANTLEY: Probably the department did, the owner had to get that or she would not have received a clearance from customs, but that was only a temporary certificate and to the effect, in short, a certificate that her boilers were fitted to carry a certain steam pressure. The fact remains that the vessel has no classification at Lloyd's, whereas the Hochelaga, built years after the Vigilant, maintains her class.

The minister referred to myself when discussing the matter of depreciation and insurance. A vessel of her class,—I mean a steel vessel—should be insurable for, say, ten per cent per annum with a return in the premium clause to the effect that if she has no casualties during the year, one per cent shall be returned. making the net insurance nine per cent per annum. The vessel's depreciation should not run to more than five per cent, which would wipe off her value in twenty years.

[Mr. Euler.]

Mr. EULER: She is old and she would surely depreciate more rapidly.

Mr. CANTLEY: According to the minister they spent $30,000 on her.

Mr. EULER: That will depreciate.

Mr. CANTLEY: She cost originally $124,000, and if five per cent had been written off yearly, her costs would have been reduced to $18,600 or within a few hundred dollars of the amount for which the government sold her to Chew.

Mr. EULER: I think we are forgetting entirely that Mr. Chew himself spent some $10,000 or $12,000 on her before the $30,000 was spent by himself or Mr. Payette.

Mr. CANTLEY: Possibly he did, and all I have to say is that any man or group of men who would spend $30,000 on that old craft, then over twenty years of age, built on the upper lakes a quarter of a century ago with light yacht scantlings and platings in proportion, would be very foolish.

Mr. EULER: I am inclined to agree with my hon. friend, but the supposition on the part of Mr. Payette was that it would not cost him more than $15,000. He found, when he got at the work, that it cost him nearly $30,000, and this is one of the reasons why Mr. Chew dropped out.

Mr. CANTLEY: Evidently he did not know what he was doing.

Mr. EULER: That might be true.

Mr. CANTLEY: That is the general experience of most men who pick up old vessels and try to make new ones out of them. I have endeavoured to show what would be written off the hire for insurance and depreciation, which I think, would amount to $8,100. This, deducted from the season's hire of $20,250, leaves $12,150 for the owner, or about thirty-two per cent or close to one-third of the cost of the investment. The man who has his vessel insured up to its full value, with five per cent depreciation and thirty-three per cent on his investment, is doing very much better than the average ship-owner. I think a hire rate of $1,500 per month, which is much more than the hon. member for Halifax would allow, would be a pretty generous rate to pay for that craft.

I turn now to the so-called charter party. It is not really a charter party at all, but an agreement for hire with an option to purchase. I do not know who wrote it—probably Mr. Cowan—but it is evidently gotten up by somebody who has had little experience in shipping

Why such an agreement was adopted by the minister, rather than the ordinary charter form, I do not know. There are several charter forms in general use and well known in the trade,—the "Baltic" form, the "A.B.C." and several others to which I do not need to refer because they deal with special trades. As to clause 5 of the agreement which reads:

Any coal in the bunkers of the vessel at the time she goes into commission shall be paid for by the party of the second part at market price.

May I ask the minister why this clause was inserted?

Mr. EULER: I presume because it was their property and we were going to use it. We bought it. That is all.

Mr. CANTLEY: I understand this vessel is now driven by internal combustion engines, and not by steam.

Mr. EULER: No.

Mr. CANTLEY: Who made the statement that she was?

Mr. EULER: I do not know.

Mr. CANTLEY: The statement was, I think, made last night that this vessel had been fitted with internal combustion engines.

Mr. EULER: That was another vessel altogether.

Mr. CANTLEY: A discussion arose as to whether they could be bought abroad.

Mr. DUNNING: That was a different vessel.

Mr. CANTLEY: If it was, I beg the minister's pardon. I misunderstood him. The minister made a comparison between this vessel and the Bayfield. The Bayfield is practically forty years old. Will he make any comparison between the Hochelaga and the Bayfield? He paid $4,500 a month for the Hochelaga, a pretty stiff hire, but he was getting a good vessel, and the question arose in the maritime provinces why the Hochelaga was taken off the service.

Mr. EULER: She did no more work I am informed than the Vigilant.

Mr. CANTLEY: She did no more work?

Mr. EULER: No.

Mr. CANTLEY: How much work did the Vigilant do? How many captures did she make? I understand that nothing from nothing leaves nothing, so they are about even. But one vessel has been on the route for something over a year, and the other vessel has been on for only two or three months.

The other curious fact in regard to this transaction is this: Instead of the vessel being delivered where she was to be employed, as is the usual custom, delivery of the vessel was taken at her home port in the lakes, and the department bore the entire cost of transferring her from Midland down to the Atlantic coast, where she was intended to operate, and then, after taking care of her over the winter while not in the government employ, they undertook on the completion of her hire period to return her again to Midland to her home port. That is fine for owners but it is not business.

Now I refer to the question of the department looking after the vessel during the time she was laid up. That is an obligation of the agreement; I will not call it a charter. Some reference was made last night to another vessel that for some time was in the custody of the government, under this same department, —the Longley case—but there they were not so particular as they bound themselves to be under this agreement in regard to this vessel.

A good deal more might be said in regard to the matter. I do not think the minister acted very wisely in leaving this matter to the gentleman who carried on the negotiations and concluded the agreement for hire to which he refers. I think the minister would have been better advised if he had turned the matter of chartering the vessel over to somebody in the Marine department who was acquainted with business of this character. This is more like a farmers' agreement than a charter party. It is not a charter party, and by no stretch of courtesy could it be called a charter party. However, such as it is, it will be sufficient to call for very considerably more by way of hire than I think the vessel is worth.

Mr. ROBB: May I say to the committee that we have now spent two hours discussing this interesting question, and possibly it is about time that we returned to the item under consideration, and attempted to make some progress.

Mr. IRVINE: I was just about to make the same remark, and I wish the minister had made it an hour ago. If we spend as much time discussing approximately $200,000,000 as we have spent discussing this amount of $2,000 per month, we shall not only need higher indemnities, but our funeral expenses as well. I think that hon. gentlemen to my right have established that perhaps we are paying too much rental for the vessel, but it is under a contract that does not expire for another year, and I cannot see that we can do anything to alter it. I think also that the minister has done justice to himself in answering the charges of graft in respect to the chartering and sale of the vessel. It is only a small boat of two or three hundred tons, and after all this discussion, if it had been a sailing boat it would have been blown off the seven seas long ago.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF MARINE AND FISHERIES

Ocean and river service—radio service—to provide for the general improvement of reception conditions to licensed broadcast listeners, $190,000.

Mr. LADNER: I share with the Minister of Finance the desire to expedite the business of the house, and normally I would have hesitated to make some remarks with respect to this item, but when I find that 458,026 persons, citizens of Canada, have signed a petition, addressed inadvertently to the Prime Minister of this country when it should have been addressed to the members of the House of Commons, protesting against the arbitrary manner in which the radio licenses in question had been cancelled, I think it is a subject matter for consideration by hon. members of this house.

It appears that of the 458,000 citizens who signed this petition, which has since been presented formally to the Prime Minister, making two or three cartloads, 82,468 were owners of radio sets. Why have these people registered such a vigorous protest? That is a question which enters my mind. I have taken occasion to examine the official data as well as the data supplied by the International Bible Students' Association with regard to this matter. I have no brief for the International Bible Students' Association. I am not identified with that organization in any way, and I believe that I can in a dispassionate manner, therefore, make some observations which should be pertinent to the controversy.

In my judgment there has been hasty action. Knowing the minister as I do, I cannot believe that either he or his deputy were apprised of all the facts before this arbitrary step was taken to cancel the license of this organization. I find upon examination of the official and other documents that since August, 1926, a radio license has been granted to the International Bible Students' Association; that the Universal Radio of Canada, Limited, is a commercial organization, "to sell time on the air," to use their expression. Their call letters are CJYC. They received on January 18, 1926, a license on certain terms. The terms were that that organization would build a broadcasting station some eleven miles outside the city of Toronto. In compliance with that condition of the license, that radio station was built. These licenses—they are several in number—were, according to the record I have seen, cancelled on three weeks' notice, and practically no reasons were given for the cancellation. This organization had radio licenses almost four years ago. In November, 1924, a license was issued to them for broadcasting at Saskatoon. On April 1, 1926, licenses were issued to Edmonton and Vancouver.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is apparent that the International Bible Students' Association, and the organization known as the Universal Radio of Canada, had been established in this country for a considerable time, recognized by governmental authorities, and granted the licenses or privileges to broadcast their ideas. I am not contending that the views so broadcast were good, bad or indifferent; I do not know anything about them; I never heard any of their programs and I have read very little about them. But I do know that whatever they were broadcasting had the approval of the government for four years, and that when those rights were cancelled the organization, having enjoyed those privileges for four years, was not told: Now, complaints have been registered against you; come before this department and justify your broadcasting or satisfy the complaints which have been made, otherwise we will cancel your license. That course of action, I consider, would be the fair and square way to deal with the situation. I submit there is a serious responsibility upon the minister to explain why this arbitrary action was taken. The minister stated that certain complaints were made.

Now, a gentleman by the name of Walter Frederick Salter, whom I happen to have known for over sixteen years, and whose integrity and standing are beyond reproach to my personal knowledge, has made a statutory declaration dealing with this question. He is the vice-president and general manager of the International Bible Students' Association of Canada. The minister will recall that he tabled a return of the correspondence that had passed between the Department of Marine and Fisheries and certain people throughout the country. Mr. Salter in his declaration, which was sworn to on May 12, 1928, declares in paragraph 2:

I have examined carefully the correspondence tabled by the Department of Marine and Fisheries in the House of Commons in response to the request for said correspondence by J. S. Woodsworth, member of parliament for North Centre Winnipeg; on behalf of A. A. Heaps, member of parliament for North Winnipeg, and find the letters of divisional radio inspector S. J. Ellis of Toronto contain statements which I declare are incorrect, viz.:

one; that all the work was done freely and voluntarily by workers throughout Canada, some of whom were members of our association; some of whom were citizens indignant at the action of the government; and some of whom were returned soldiers, but the number of returned men working in Toronto could not at the outside number more than half a dozen. No one received payment for securing names to the said petition.

Then he answers several other accusations and reviews the nature of the complaints, and in paragraph 3 declares:

Considerable of the correspondence—

That is, in the return.

—refers to the activities of the said association prior to the issuance of radio broadcasting licenses and is therefore not relevant; three items refer to Vancouver, five to Edmonton, six to Saskatoon, and the balance of the correspondence to Toronto, which may be divided as follows:

(a) as to programs, 14; (b) interference, 44; (c) miscellaneous, 22.

So you will find from these facts, Mr. Chairman, and from the further analysis which is made of the correspondence, that the objections are comparatively few in number. On the other hand, when the license was cancelled it will be observed that over twenty thousand letters expressing appreciation of the programs were forwarded to the Department of Marine and Fisheries and duly acknowledged. Then large meetings were held in various parts of the country.

Now, I shall be interested in learning from the minister why these licenses were cancelled without the parties directly concerned being given an opportunity of modifying their programs, shortening their wave length or reducing the time; in other words, why were they not allowed to do something to meet the objections raised, or why were not some means suggested by which they could satisfy those objections? The fact is, as I have stated, no opportunity was afforded them. Arbitrarily the department wiped them off the air and thus deprived nearly half a million people of the right of listening to programs which they claim they enjoyed.

I appeal to the minister to act in the spirit of British fair play and in the spirit of true British justice, which we find prevailing in our courts. In this case an established right had been granted by the government and exercised for years. As we have seen by the return, the objections to the programs broadcast by the Bible students' association were comparatively few, while those interested in their continuance number nearly half a million. In view of these facts I submit to the minister that it is not too late for him to right the wrong which appears to have been done to a very large number of people. From my knowledge of the minister, I believe he is broad enough and big enough and in his outlook so statesmanlike that with all the facts now before him he will not hesitate to wipe out this injustice and introduce a policy which will meet with general approval. In my judgment it does not matter whether the government intends to formulate a national policy for the control of radio. I observed that when the subject was discussed this afternoon a large number of members on the government side expressed disapproval because of the difficulties involved in the carrying out of such a policy. But whatever the future policy of the government may be, it seems to me only fair and reasonable at this juncture that these people should be restored to their original rights. Then the department will be in a position to follow the usual procedure, that is, allow the parties a hearing so that the matter may be gone into fully before final action is taken. This is the only just and reasonable course to pursue. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that I have no special interest in this matter beyond my sense of duty as a member of this house to see justice done to Canadian citizens, no matter from what part of the country they come, no matter what creed they adhere to, no matter what political views they entertain.

Mr. IRVINE: Mr. Chairman, before making a few remarks on this item, I desire to ask the minister if any other denominations at the present time hold licenses similar to the license cancelled by the minister and to which cancellation hon. members have taken objection.

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed there are two: one is held by the United Church of Canada, operating a small station in Vancouver; the other by the Christian Missionary Alliance, operating a small station at Edmonton.

Mr. IRVINE: I think the hon. gentlemen who have already spoken on the question of the cancellation of the license of the Bible students' association have presented all the facts necessary to be brought to the attention of the committee or the minister. The hon. acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) and the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Ladner) have, I think, covered the ground thoroughly in respect to the facts. I wish the minister would tell us now that he is prepared to reconsider the question and to place the Bible students on the same basis as any other denomination in Canada. If he would do that he would save a lot of discussion and hon. members would get home earlier. I do not wish to censure the minister for his action. I can understand that he would receive information of a kind on which possibly he might have acted hastily. No doubt there were people interested sufficiently to use whatever means were available to obtain the cancellation of the Bible student's license, and they, acting without the knowledge of the Bible students, were able to present to the minister a strong reason why the license should be cancelled. Now that the other side of the question has been investigated and information is at hand, I feel that the minister in his fairness will be prepared to reconsider the matter.

The committee is aware of the great stir which this cancellation has created throughout Canada. I discuss the matter now not only because there are involved certain principles which I wish at all hazards to safeguard, but also because the people of my own riding have taken a very decided interest in the matter. I have received numerous letters from all sections of the constituency, as well as resolutions passed at a great many public meetings, and I have been urged to do what I can to induce the minister to change his attitude in respect to the cancellation of this license.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre sets forth the reasons given for the cancellation. He lays emphasis on the fact that a very considerable investment had been made both by the Bible students and by Universal Radio of Canada, Limited, and he points out that by the action of the minister these investments are practically lost. He also advanced reasons why the reconsideration which I am asking for should be given. Along with the other hon. gentlemen who have spoken, I wish to urge the minister to reconsider his decision. I make a plea on behalf first of all of toleration. I do not necessarily agree with the Bible students; I do not know whether I agree with them or not. I do not know enough about them. Indeed, I do not care whether I agree with them or not. I know I do not agree with a great many other people but that does not trouble them at all, and it troubles me less. But there is certainly no good reason why we should attempt to shut off in any way organizations or individuals with whom or with which we do not agree. As was pointed out by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, we fought this battle for so-called liberty long ago; our forefathers, we had hoped, had decided the question. We do not wish to have to fight it over again. Now, the question here involved is this: discrimination has been shown in respect to radio licenses merely because an organization criticizes other people and differs in its religious views from others. Is that the slightest shadow of a reason why they should be prohibited from using the air with the same liberty as any other organization? Toleration, then, is the first principle on which I make my plea to the minister to reconsider his attitude. To suggest that religious teaching must be censored by anybody is to go a long way indeed; and merely because this organization has been objected to by other denominations is no reason why its license should be cancelled. If that were a reason for the cancellation of the license, what should be done in this parliament? Have we not heard condemnation and counter condemnation this evening on the part of both major parties? Yet there is no censor to come along and muzzle either opposition or government; they go on forever, like Tennyson's brook. The principle is the same with respect to radio.

I say with regard to the Bible students' association that if they have said things about competitive bodies—if I may put it that way—if they have criticized other religious organizations, then the Bible students themselves will lose thereby. We are not the guardians of their faith, neither are we the judges as to who is right or wrong. We must leave the responsibility with these bodies concerned and give them all equal liberty. I repeat if the Bible students have said things about the Presbyterians or the United Church or any other religious body, which statements are considered by these bodies as improper, it will not hurt them; it will reflect on the Bible students. It will ultimately bring its own reward. We can safely leave that to take care of itself. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre referred to the charge that they had hogged or monopolized the air. That is a matter for the discretion of the department; the department should be able to regulate these matters without difficulty.

I ask for the Bible students' association equal liberty in the case of the air. A few minutes ago I asked the minister the question whether there were other organizations of similar character now holding licenses to broadcast. I am informed there are. If that is the case I submit that the minister must either cancel those licenses or allow the Bible students to go on the air also. I am not very much interested which he does. If he wishes to cancel the licenses of all religious bodies that would suit me perfectly well. There is plenty of room on the platform for everybody. I understand that the air is a limited avenue after all, and it has to be controlled. I am not offering any criticism on that score. But I do criticize the selection of one group for treatment of this sort while the others go free. If the minister will cancel all these licenses of religious bodies and say that henceforth we shall not have religion on the air—I am not sure whether you have it anywhere else anyhow—if he will say that from now on we shall keep the air clear of religion, that is a logical position to take and I have no criticism to offer. But when he says that he is going to shut out these particular users of the air, then I take issue. We cannot lay that down as a principle. It is unsafe, unsound and unfair; it cannot be justified. I insist therefore that all religious bodies shall have the same opportunity to broadcast, or, in the alternative, that all shall be prohibited absolutely. As I say, I am not interested which of the two courses the minister follows.

With regard to the policy which may sometime be evolved respecting the control of radio, I have this to say. I favour government control; individuals and corporations have controlled everything on the earth and everything beneath the earth; I hope they are not going to control the air. I would suggest that the government now take charge of the air while there is an opportunity to do so, and I suggest that when they lay down their policy they use the air for two things, education and entertainment. I hope they will not put politics on the air at all, because that is propaganda and certainly is not educational, especially when the two parties are in conversation with each other.

Mr. McMILLAN: And the third party wants to clear the atmosphere.

Mr. IRVINE: I am afraid the party who has just spoken has not cleared it very much; he has befogged it a little more. If we are going to have the politicians on the air I am afraid we will have many more recriminating remarks than were made by the Bible students; I am afraid we will have much more inaccuracy, and I would certainly insist that I have a right to the air equal to that of the Prime Minister or the leader of the opposition, because I suggest that the matters I talk about are to my mind equal in importance to the matters they talk about.

I would confine the air to educational and entertaining features, particularly scientific matters. I would put the best scientists in Canada on the air to teach the people the latest achievements in the realm of science. Then let me insist that we cut off all advertising, whether it be the advertising of cigarettes or of booze. I even think it might be a good job to cut off the newspapers as well, because the kind of news they send out over the radio is not enlightening; it is the cheapest sort of scare headline material and it is unfit for children to hear. Why should we want to know about a murder in Shanghai or a robbery in New York? That is rubbish. If we are to have news come over the radio I suggest that the government see to it that we have real news, news about life and about the great problems of the modern world instead of reports of the robberies which take place from day to day.

An hon. MEMBER: How can we control New York?

Mr. IRVINE: We are not worried about New York; let New York control itself, because we are having all we can do to control Canada. I insist that we take charge of our own radio and control it, and that we lay down the principle that only education and entertainment shall be broadcast. There should be no advertising whatever and no political talks, and certainly much of the news which is now on the air should be either severely censored or cut off entirely.

I want the assurance of the minister that the present discrimination against the International Bible Students' Association will be removed immediately. I notice that in the supplementary estimates there is an item for a commission to investigate the question of radio. I do not know whether that is to deal with this particular problem, but I suggest to the minister that it is not necessary for a royal commission or any other kind of a commission to carry on an investigation in order to find out whether discrimination should be practised against one religious body. I think at this moment parliament is perfectly capable of dealing with that question. If the commission is to be appointed, let it investigate the broadcasting problem in general and lay down a general policy for the government, by which we may have proper control of the air. I maintain that parliament must settle this point as to the principle of equal opportunity, and I believe parliament is prepared to settle it now. I urge that the minister now give us the assurance that this discrimination which I have indicated, which has come about either by mistake or by haste on the part of the department, shall be immediately removed.

Mr. CAMPBELL: If the minister is prepared to give us such an assurance as the hon. member has asked for I shall be glad to sit down, because I presume the debate will end, but since I do not see the minister making any move to do so I have a few remarks I should like to make. I have received letters from many of my constituents with regard to this matter, not merely from members of the International Bible Students' Association but from very many people who belong to other churches. These are people who, in their religious life, do not accept the teachings of this association; they have very little use for the doctrines enunciated and the principles laid down by that body but they have a respect for the principles of free speech, of toleration and of liberty, principles for which our forefathers fought and for which they shed their blood. These are the reasons why many of my constituents belonging to other denominations have sent protests to me, which I feel obliged to place before this house.

In November, 1924, a broadcasting license was issued to the International Bible Students' Association at Saskatoon; in 1926 similar licenses were issued to these people in Edmonton and Vancouver, and later on in Toronto. Until recently there was no complaint whatever about the operation of these stations. In my own home I am able to tune in on their programs, but if they do not suit me I can tune out and try something else. However, I want to say that when I have the choice of having my children listen to some of the stuff which the hon. member for Wetaskiwin characterized as rubbish, and for which I would use a stronger adjective if I were not in this house—stuff that can be hardly dignified with the name of music, consisting of the poorest type of jazz; if I have to choose between having my children listen to that sort of thing as against some of the elevating and enlightening programs broadcast by the Bible students, I prefer that some of this other material be taken off the air and that the Bible students' programs be allowed to remain, even though I may not agree with their religious views. Indeed, I think the question of religion should not enter into this matter in any way; the principle of religious freedom and religious toleration was supposed to have been settled centuries ago. Who is to be the judge of whether or not these doctrines are offensive? Are we going to leave it to a member of the Roman Catholic church to say whether or not the doctrines of the Protestant sects are offensive, or to a Presbyterian to judge whether the doctrines of the Roman Catholic church are right or wrong? I think we can hardly recognise any such principle as that, and therefore I say that the government, representing the people of Canada, have no right to interfere in a question of this kind and to allow any prejudices against this religious organisation to determine their action.

As far as the records show, any complaints made to the department previous to the cancellation of the licenses were adjusted immediately by the association. I think the minister will admit that one of his inspectors states in his report that these people were very fair and always ready to adjust any complaints. On January 16 last the deputy minister of Marine and Fisheries at Ottawa granted an interview to an official of the association from Toronto. Perhaps I might quote from a memorandum placed in my hands with respect to that interview:

> —the deputy minister gave the representative of the association to understand that there were no complaints in regard to the stations generally, but informed him of one specific complaint in regard to a station in the west. As it proved, the complaint was not in connection with any of the programs of the International Bible Students' Association—

This refers to Saskatoon.

> —but in connection with a feature broadcast on behalf of another organization. Immediately steps were taken to cancel the contract made with this organization.

If that had anything to do with the final action of the department, it seems to me to be very unjust, because immediately this complaint was mentioned the contract with these other people was cancelled, and certainly no blame is to be attached to the Bible students.

Some time ago, at the department's own suggestion, station CKCX at Toronto was shifted from 291.1 metres to 475. This increased the power of the station to a very large extent and therefore interfered with American and other stations. You will find a great many complaints to the department in connection with that, but the people making the complaints did not know that it was something the department had requested; surely the association is not to blame for a thing of that sort. Then there was a complaint from a certain church in Toronto that the latter part of their service was cut off, because the time was then allotted to the Bible students' association. Again I say that is a matter for the department and the department only. The department regulates the time these stations are on the air, and that is not a question for the Bible students' association at all.

Of course there have been many protests, some of them justified, and a great many of them made under misapprehension—complaints that should have been directed to the department and undoubtedly would have been had the complainants understood the exact situation. I would ask the minister if it is not fair to place side by side with those complaints all the letters of approval that have been placed in his hands by the Bible students' association themselves, and all the other protests, by petition and otherwise, that have been placed in the hands of the department since their refusal to renew the license. Surely, if a representative of the people of this country wants to act in accordance with public opinion he should weigh the complaints on the one side and the approval and satisfaction on the other. If he would do that, I say to him in all seriousness that there is only one conclusion he could arrive at, and that would be to leave the situation as it was and allow them to continue their programs. Perhaps if certain adjustments had been made by the department these complaints would have been entirely eliminated.

There has been discrimination against a certain religious sect. I am not holding a brief for the Bible students' association; I would be just as ready to take the stand I am taking if the discrimination was being made against the Roman Catholic church, the Anglican church, a Jewish synagogue, the Baptist or United church, or any other religious body. If I were a member of the Bible students' association I think I would rather welcome the action of the government. The minister and his colleagues know very well that intolerance and oppression are the very things which have lifted the Christian church up. Persecution and intolerance are the very things that will strengthen any religious body; it is the very thing that will propagate it and make it stronger in this country.

May I quote from a speech delivered by Mr. James Simpson, vice-president of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada, made in the Pantages theatre at Toronto on May 6. He says:

I am pleased to have the honour of appearing upon the platform to-night to join in the protest against the cancellation of the licenses granted to the International Bible Students' Association. As one of the many radio owners of Canada, I have had the pleasure for the past two years of listening in when lectures were being delivered by the representatives of the association, and when their musical and choral programs were being broadcast.

Having regard for the fact that there are so many sharp divisions amongst the religious denominations of the world upon fundamental and minor questions of doctrine and of theology, I cannot see any reason why discrimination should be practised against the International Bible Students' Association.

Further on he states:

If Judge Rutherford did no more good during his visit here than expose the wrong done to the children and workers in the southern cotton fields by the bill passed by congress, and the injustice suffered by coal miners, awakening in the minds of some such thoughts that would eventuate in a measure of relief to these unfortunate ones, his visit was well worth while.

And then again:

I would regret to think that we had reached the stage in the development of religious thought when ministers of the gospel could not longer endure criticism and attack.

I would direct the attention of the minister and his colleagues to that statement. Surely no other religious sect has arrived at the position where it cannot endure criticism and attack. The Christian church certainly must survive that; that is the very thing that will build it up if it is on a sound basis, as it should be. Mr. Simpson continues:

This experience makes me appreciate more than ever the necessity of labour being vigilant in the defence of the three greatest rights that have been handed down to the British people: the right of free speech; the right of free assembly; and the freedom of the press.

I feel that in their fight to recover the licenses which have been taken from them, the International Bible Students' Association are merely continuing the struggle which has been fought in this country upon many occasions. I am not unmindful of the fact that right here in the city of Toronto the labour movement has had to fight for the right of free speech, and that victory was only won by continual vigilance.

And further down he says:

I am not satisfied that there has been the opposition to the association's broadcasting as has been represented to us. In fact I think the government of this country owes it to the people of Canada to report fully the nature of the protests which have been made against the broadcasting of the International Bible Students' Association.

Then, in dealing with the charge levelled at the association that its doctrines, or some of its speakers were un-British, he says:

The mere charge against the International Bible Students' Association that their teaching is un-British does not satisfy me, as I have personal knowledge of many instances where men who have been guilty of honestly criticizing the governments of their nations, and who, for the time being, were regarded as disloyal and unpatriotic, have had monuments erected to their memory. One remarkable instance of this character was when the Hon. David Lloyd George had to escape from the town hall in Birmingham dressed as a policeman, to save himself from the attacks of an infuriated mob because he dared to express sentiments disapproving of the Boer War, and yet, later in British history, he was regarded as the man who saved the mother country during the great war.

Further on he states:

from the viewpoint of labour in this country, it is establishing a very dangerous precedent to discriminate against any organization because their views might be, to a certain section of the population, unpopular.

And again:

I have not the slightest doubt but that there will be strenuous objections to a broadcasting station being used by organized labour to disseminate their thought and advocate their principle.

I should also like to quote from a speech delivered by Arthur Black Farmer, at the same meeting; he said:

I am a Baptist. I am a son of a man who for forty years trained men for the Baptist ministry. I have been steeped in Baptist doctrines and traditions and I may say that I am more proudly and enthusiastically a Baptist to-day than ever before in my life.

Also I am a Canadian, born of Canadian-born parents, and on one side of Canadian-born grandparents, all of British stock. I am deeply conscious of the privilege and of the responsibility of my British citizenship.

Because I am a Baptist I must take my stand for freedom of speech whenever intolerance by whatever name it may call itself places freedom of speech in jeopardy. Because I am British I must take my stand for British justice and liberty when the traditions of British justice are threatened.

Further on he says:

Neither truth nor error may be combatted by force or law. "Truth struck to earth will rise again." Error driven into darkness by means of force multiplies like mushrooms in a dark cellar.

You have here an unwarranted and unjustifiable interference with free speech on the part of a government presided over by the grandson of William Lyon Mackenzie, that great exponent of liberty. The Prime Minister's grandfather was not afraid to risk fortune, reputation and even life itself in the interest of free speech, and it is not too much to expect of a government presided over by his grandson in a position of power that he should at least apply to a small body of citizens the principles for which his grandfather was prepared to sacrifice his life.

Mr. SPENCER: I should like to have some explanation from the minister.

Mr. DUNNING: You have prevented him all day.

Mr. CARDIN: I do not see really that I can add very much to the statement which I made in good faith on the 12th of April last, and in which I still believe regarding the whole situation. There is a certain amount of misapprehension on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite as well as of a certain number of the people. The statement is made that we have cancelled the license. That is not exactly the case. We did not cancel the licence which these people enjoyed in the past. The law specifically and clearly states that all these licenses are yearly licenses and that they expire on the 31st March of each year. That means that the minister has power to renew or to refuse to renew any license. There is no vested or acquired right because a company or an individual has operated under a license for a year. If that were the case, it would be no use stating in the law that these licenses are yearly licenses.

Mr. LADNER: May I ask the minister a question on that point?

Mr. DUNNING: Let him make his statement. The hon. member has made his.

Mr. CARDIN: I do not mind. Go on.

Mr. LADNER: How would the minister make a comparison with licenses granted to banks for ten years? Would it be argued that the government could simply cancel a bank's right to do business practically without any grounds? The licensing system is generally recognized.

Mr. CARDIN: What is the use of any limit being stated in the law if it is not to be observed? What is the use of stating a limit for the duration of a certain thing if you do not observe that limit? If there is to be no limit, there is no reason for stating in the law that it is to be for five or ten years. I submit that, according to the law as it stands to-day, the minister, provided that he has certain reasons to justify his action, has a right to refuse to renew any license. Nobody will contend that I am bound to renew a license simply because it has been in operation for a certain number of years.

Hon. members may ask that I give some reasons in justification for my refusal to renew. I have given certain reasons; I have produced certain documents which to my mind justify the decision of the government in the matter. Those who have spoken do not accept the strength of the reasons which I have advanced, the strength of the evidence which has been given. Are those hon. gentlemen not placing themselves in the position of a loser in a case before a judge, contending that the judge was not right in adjudging the way he did; that the reasons he advanced were not good reasons; that he should have considered other facts that he did not consider? Is that not the situation to-day? The minister, the department and the government are placed in the position of a judge examining a case which is submitted to them.

Mr. LADNER: They have heard only one side.

Mr. CARDIN: We have heard both sides of the case.

Mr. LADNER: Not before the department cancelled the license.

Mr. CARDIN: There is no cancellation.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is a notification equivalent to a cancellation.

Mr. CAMPBELL: What is the difference between a refusal to renew and a cancellation?

Mr. CARDIN: When I did not renew the licence I exercised the power given to me by a law enacted in 1913—a long time ago. This is a power which is given to the minister. He may be criticized and the government may be criticized if the reasons given are not good ones. That may be a source of dispute, but clearly I have the power to refuse to renew a license even if it has run for ten or fifteen years. According to my hon. friends my reasons are no good; but they are really, as I said, in the position of a loser in a case who says that the judge is not right in his judgment; that he should have taken into consideration certain things that he did not consider; that he did not adjudge the case properly; that he did not take cognizance of the law as it stands, and that he did not appreciate as he should all the facts of the case that were placed before him. That is the whole situation. Is any hon. gentleman ready to say that I am not to take into consideration complaints or representations made to me by the listeners? I submit that the main principle in connection with this question of broadcasting is to take care first of all of the listeners-in.

Mr. GARDINER: The minister places himself in the position of a judge. Did he take evidence from both sides before he made a decision?

Mr. CARDIN: We knew the situation.

Mr. GARDINER: Did the minister take evidence from both sides before he made a decision?

Mr. CARDIN: What evidence would my hon. friend require? I had complaints before me.

56103—231½

Mr. GARDINER: In all cases before a judge there is a complainant and a defendant.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: Would he not take evidence from both those parties?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, but most of the things which have been represented to us are not denied. They are not denied to-night by those who are advocating freedom of speech. They are admitted under the general plea of freedom of speech. Everybody admits that. The representatives of the International Bible Students' Association did not deny most of the charges which were made against them. They contended they had that right.

Mr. HEAPS: In the correspondence that was brought down you had complaints going back to 1919 or 1918. Did you take that into consideration when you cancelled the license?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes. This proves that we were rather lenient. If we started having complaints in 1919 and we did not act then, we cannot be accused, as we have been accused to-day, of acting too hastily.

Mr. HEAPS: There was no radio in 1919

Mr. CARDIN: Certainly if there was no radio there were no complaints.

Mr. HEAPS: I am endeavouring to point out to the minister that there were complaints in the correspondence brought down for 1918 and 1919.

Mr. CARDIN: I think my hon. friend is mistaken.

Mr. HEAPS: I am not.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Friday, June 1, 1928

The house met at three o'clock.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Eleventh report of the select standing committee on banking and commerce.—Mr. Jacobs.

Fourth report of the select standing committee on industrial and international relations.—Mr. McIntosh.

ATHABASKA ELECTION

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Mr. J. J. DENIS (Joliette) presented the second and final report of the select standing committee on privileges and elections as follows:

The select standing committee on privileges and elections beg leave to present the following as their second and final report:—

(1) On the 29th of March, 1928, the house adopted the following resolution:

That the interim and final reports respectively of the Hon. Mr. Justice Clarke, commissioner appointed to inquire into the alleged existence of corrupt or illegal practices in the election held in the electoral district of Athabaska, in the province of Alberta, on the 29th of October, 1925, which reports were laid on the table of the house on December 15, 1926, be referred to the select standing committee on privileges and elections.

(2) Your committee have held ten meetings and examined several witnesses including the following: Jules Castonguay, Chief Electoral Officer; George Gonthier, Auditor General; E. J. Lemaire, Clerk of the Privy Council; W. Stuart Edwards, Deputy Minister of Justice.

(3) In the course of their deliberations your committee have examined in detail the said reports of Commissioner Clarke and the evidence taken before him.

(4) Your committee is of the opinion that the cause of corrupt and illegal practices in the election held in the federal constituency of Athabaska in 1925 was the partisanship, ignorance and incompetence of certain election officials and your committee recommend that the Auditor General should submit to the Justice department a full statement of the payments made to the aforesaid officials with a view to instituting proceedings for the recovery of the amounts so paid to such officials if the law provides for such action.

(5) Your committee is further of the opinion that the Chief Electoral Officer should recommend to the proper authorities that prosecutions should be taken against all violators of the Dominion Elections Act.

(6) The committee recommend that a special committee of the house should be appointed at the next session of parliament to examine into the evidence and deliberations of this committee this year and to study the Dominion Elections Act 1920 and the amendments thereto, and the Corrupt Practices Inquiries Act, and to suggest to the house such other amendments to the said acts as they may deem advisable, such committee to give special attention to the method of selecting returning officers and the preparation of voters' lists.

(7) The committee is also of the opinion that under the circumstances the deposit of Charles Henry Gauvreau, one of the candidates at the election of the 29th of October, 1925, in the electoral district of Athabaska, should be refunded.

(8) Your committee submit herewith for the information of the house their minutes of proceedings and the evidence taken by them.

All of which is respectively submitted.

REPORTS AND PAPERS

Correspondence between the Civil Service Commission and the Postmaster General regarding classification of postal employees. —Mr. Rinfret.

Report on the agreements made pursuant to the Old Age Pensions Act, and the moneys of Canada paid to the provinces thereunder. —Mr. Robb.

INTERNATIONAL PEACE

MULTILATERAL TREATY PROPOSED BY THE UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. B. ADSHEAD (East Calgary): Mr. Speaker, once more I should like to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) if there is any hope of getting the reply of Canada to the Kellogg invitation to sign a peace treaty laid on the table.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before the house adjourns this evening I shall ask permission to lay on the table not only the reply of Canada but the correspondence with reference to the invitation extended by the United States in relation to this matter. The reason our reply has not been given to the house before is that it was felt desirable to arrange for publishing it simultaneously in the United States and Canada. The reply will be published to-morrow morning, but it will first be presented to parliament.

SALES TAX

CANCELLATION OF WHOLESALE LICENSES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Acting Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) if there has been any change in the attitude of the government with respect to the proposed cancellation of wholesale licenses under the Sales Tax Act. Notice has gone abroad that these licenses are to be cancelled on July 1. An impression prevails that there has been a change in the attitude of the government, and I have received a good many inquiries as to this.

Hon. W. D. EULER (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the administration of the act is under the Department of National Revenue. There has been no change whatever in the attitude of the department in regard to the matter. It is proposed to cancel certain licenses—not all.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is there any distinction made between those which will be cancelled and those which will not be? The hon. minister said that he proposed to cancel certain licenses.

Mr. EULER: This is the principle upon which certain licenses will be cancelled. Those wholesalers who sell almost exclusively to manufacturers will be allowed to retain their licenses; those who do not sell to any great extent to manufacturers will have their licenses cancelled.

SALARIES OF PROFESSIONAL AND TECHNICAL OFFICIALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the Prime Minister whether he will be good enough to table the report recently made to the government by the Civil Service Commission with regard to the salaries of scientific men in the civil service.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I have not the report in my possession, but I understand from my colleagues that it will be possible to have it tabled.

APPLICATION OF DUMPING DUTY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GOTT (South Essex): I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister is now prepared to answer the question that I asked him yesterday.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I am afraid I have forgotten my hon. friend's question.

Mr. GOTT: I will ask it again. What nature of evidence, or statistics or other definite information would be required by the government before action would be taken conducive to the resuscitation and the implementation of the dumping duties on fruits and vegetables that were in force until recently?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There would have to be sufficient in the way of information to convince the council that a reasonable case had been made.

Mr. GOTT: It can be proved.

NATIONAL THANKSGIVING DAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): May I ask the Prime Minister, in view of the statement made the other day that we are apt to adjourn early to-morrow, whether he could not give half an hour to a consideration of order No. 14 on page 13 of the order paper, which is the resolution standing in the name of the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Gershaw), to the effect that in the opinion of this house the day to be observed hereafter as National Thanksgiving day shall be Armistice day, November 11. This is a non-contentious motion and would take only a few minutes.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): My hon. friend is asking for special consideration of a resolution out of its order. Thus far the government has refrained from making such a concession to any hon. member. The resolution in question urges the desirability of having Thanksgiving day observed on the same day as Armistice day, namely, November 11. It so happens that this year each of these days falls on a Sunday, so that so far as this year is concerned there will be no difficulty in giving effect to the purpose of the resolution. Early next session, I hope, there will be an opportunity to consider such a resolution, and possibly at that time the house will pass upon it favourably.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. W. D. EULER (Minister of National Revenue) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 291, to amend the Department of National Revenue Act.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain the amendments.

Mr. EULER: The Senate has inserted an amendment to the effect that the minister shall annually lay before both houses of parliament, within two weeks of the opening of the session, a return giving the names of persons appointed under the act by order in council, also the time for which they are appointed, their salaries, the class of work for which they were appointed, and their previous occupation. I have no objection to the inclusion of this clause in the bill.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

IMMIGRATION ACT AMENDMENT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice, for Mr. Forke) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 187, to amend the Immigration Act.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister please explain.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The Senate has amended the bill by repealing the section which was added in 1919 and replacing it by the section which was in force prior to 1919—that is to say, the section in the act of 1910. This, I think, is satisfactory in so far as it does away with the discrimination against British born persons who must qualify for Canadian citizenship by five years' residence in Canada. Now all British subjects are on an equal footing whether they are naturalized or were born in Canada, or were born in other parts of the empire and have become residents of Canada.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF MARINE AND FISHERIES

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Radio service—to provide for the general improvement of reception conditions to licensed broadcast listeners, $190,000.

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): When the house rose last night I was trying to establish that, under the law and regulations as they stand at present, the minister had the authority if he saw fit to cancel a license which had been issued. There is no doubt at all that this power exists and that on certain occasions when the reasons justify his doing so the minister may exercise it. Some hon. gentlemen have contended that there is not very much difference between the cancellation of a license, as the word has been used, and the non-renewal of it. I submit there is a great difference. Cancellation means the confiscation of something which exists; the cancellation of a license may take place in the course of the year for which the license has been issued. The renewal of a license, on the other hand, implies the reviving of something which has ceased to exist. All licenses expire on March 31 and they must be renewed; and they are renewed if the minister and the government are satisfied that they should be. It is quite proper that this power should rest with the minister because it can be invoked effectively and advantageously to reduce the number of broadcasting stations in the country. As we all know, the United States are having considerable difficulty in reducing the number of their broadcasting stations. They have too many stations there, it is admitted, and an effort is being made to reduce the number. The situation is somewhat similar in Canada. Personally I am inclined to think that we have too many broadcasting stations here. The proper way to reduce the number of broadcasting stations would be to make use of the power which is given to the minister to not renew licenses when they expire.

Mr. LADNER: Was that the reason this license was not renewed?

Mr. CARDIN: No. That may be considered in part because it may be advantageous to the department and to the public at large to have the opportunity of accommodating other firms or companies which may ask for licenses to broadcast. In fact, up to the present time we have refused almost one hundred applications for broadcasting licenses because we felt that the circumstances did not justify the department in granting those requests. The number of wave lengths at our disposal is not very great, and it is always to the advantage of the general public for us to have a certain number of wave lengths free, which we can grant to important companies or organizations upon application being made by them.

One might say that in not renewing the licenses we may be damaging persons or associations or companies who enjoyed these licenses the previous year. When these people make application for licenses they know that these licenses are good for only one year; they enter into those contracts knowing all the facts of the case and knowing that the licenses granted to them state very clearly that they are issued for only one year. It may be that this period is too short and that we should extend the time in order to give the company or association an opportunity to secure some return on the expenditure made in putting the station in operation.

Mr. LADNER: Just on that point, does the minister seriously suggest that any company is going to spend $150,000, as I understand this Toronto company did, on the understanding that the license may be cancelled in one year? Is it not the practice in connection with these licenses, as in other matters, to extend the licenses from year to year unless there is good reason for cancelling them? We have not heard those reasons as yet.

Mr. CARDIN: Certainly not. People who spend large amounts of money in establishing broadcasting stations certainly expect that their license will be continued for more than one year, but when they make their application and when the license is granted it is apparent to them from the documents and from the law and regulations that their license can be taken away from them. Supposing the company to which my hon. friend has referred, a big company in Toronto, or elsewhere, spent $150,000 or $200,000 to establish a broadcasting station; let us imagine that there are five, six or seven of these companies throughout the country in that same position, but that during the course of the year it is decided that for the advantage of the general public the number of these licenses should be reduced, even though these companies have made heavy expenditures. They will have to suffer the loss of their licenses; they have no claim against us; they have no vested right. Otherwise, if the contention of my hon. friend were sound, once a license is issued it would have to be renewed after a year and no one could think of refusing that renewal or of cancelling that license.

That is not the practice. I know what my hon. friend has in mind; the department is not supposed to do that without having some good reason, and I am quite ready to admit that fact; that is what I stated last night. I contend that in this particular case we had reasons strong enough to justify our action. Hon. gentlemen do not agree with that, but it is a matter of judgment; if they do not agree with my decision they are free to have their own view in that regard.

Mr. LADNER: May I ask the minister if he will give us the reasons of the government for taking this action? So far they have not been given, to my knowledge.

Mr. CARDIN: I do not see any necessity or any advantage in repeating again and again in this house or elsewhere statements which already have been made. I stated the reasons in my remarks to the house on April 12, and my statement will be found at page 1951 of Hansard. I repeat, those reasons may not be sufficient in the minds of certain members of the house or of certain people outside the house, but that is no reason for saying that I am to be blamed or censured because I have exercised the authority given me by the law and the regulations. My reasons may not be good; the loser in a law suit is not satisfied with the judgment, but he has lost his case just the same. I submit that our reasons were sufficient to justify our action; those reasons have been plainly stated in this house and they are to be found in greater detail in the documents which have been filed. I do not believe the minister who has the responsibility in regard to these matters can occupy a more sound position than to take care first of all of the listeners-in, and to look after the interest of the broadcasting stations after that. After all the public at large, the listeners-in, are to be considered first; the welfare, the benefit and the enjoyment of the mass of the population which is composed of the listeners-in should be considered before anything else. In the decision which we made we tried to satisfy the listeners-in, after hearing their representations and their protests.

I regret to say that it has been stated that I may have been induced, in giving that decision, to act as a censor of religious beliefs or creeds. From that one may draw the inference that in dealing with the matters of my department I am somewhat prejudiced from a religious point of view. I desire to state most emphatically that this is not the case; in dealing with the matters which come under my jurisdiction I try to be fair and just to everyone who has anything to do with the affairs of my department. I may be lacking in many qualifications possessed by others both in and out of this house; I may not be so important as many others, but from the point of view of fairness, honesty, tolerance and sense of justice I have no leaves to take from the book of anyone in or out of this house. I may make mistakes; all men make mistakes, but I try to act with the greatest sense of justice, fairness and honesty towards all those who have dealings with my department, and I very much regret that certain inferences to the contrary may be drawn from remarks which have been made in this house.

The complaints upon which we acted came from three sources, as my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre said; complaints came from Toronto, from Saskatoon and from Vancouver.

Mr. SPENCER: May I ask the minister how many complaints came from Vancouver and Saskatoon?

Mr. CARDIN: I could not say offhand, but the number is stated in the papers tabled.

Mr. SPENCER: Three from the one place and six from the other, I believe.

Mr. CARDIN: My hon. friend may be right. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre drew atention to a certain number of these complaints taken from the papers tabled, but I say that it was hardly fair to pick out a certain number of letters or complaints which might suit his argument and pass over other complaints which are of a general character. The complaints made are not confined to matters of religious belief, or creed, they are of a general character. One has only to look at the return which has been produced to ascertain that the complaints are of a general character. The complaints which have come from Vancouver, while they may not be numerous, have come from a representative association of people interested in radio broadcasting and in matters connected with that new industry and its development. The complaints received from Vancouver include a resolution adopted by the Greater Vancouver Radio Association, a body of listeners-in, and also one from the Radio Trades Association, representing firms and individuals dealing in radio apparatus. It may be that the complaints are not numerous, but they represent those who are supposed to be most directly interested, because they are listeners in, or are engaged in the business of selling the necessary apparatus.

Mr. LUCAS: Has the department received any complaints regarding other broadcasting stations?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, there are complaints received all through the year against other stations, but I am free to say that they were more numerous in this particular case

Mr. ADSHEAD: When complaints are received, is it not the custom of the department to send an inspector around? You have inspectors in every city—you have one in Calgary—and when complaints are received, do you send an inspector to that particular station to talk the matter over with them, and possibly warn them; did you do that in this case?

Mr. CARDIN: I would venture to say it was done in this case. Complaints have been made, and I think they have been filed in the return, by the inspectors themselves.

Mr. SPENCER: Did the association meet the requests of the inspectors?

Mr. CARDIN: As I stated before, inspectors, who had previously favoured the issuing of a license to the International Bible Students Association, took an opposite view last year and said that we should not renew that license. They informed us they had been flooded with protests of all kinds from the population of the cities where they were operating. These letters accused the department of failing to instruct the inspectors to stop certain broadcasting, and to prevent certain people from doing what they were doing; we were accused of not doing what we should do for the protection of the listeners-in.

Mr. KAISER: Did you notify the association regarding the material being sent out?

Mr. CARDIN: The association were perfectly aware of the situation.

Mr. KAISER: It appears to me, in handling this matter—I admit the difficulty of it—that when information comes to the government that a broadcasting station is sending out material objectionable to a great many people the government should notify the particular company concerned.

Mr. CARDIN: The people who enjoy broadcasting are more or less in communication with the government all through the year. I am informed that they are in communication with the officers of the department. There is an instance of that in the case mentioned by the member for South Vancouver (Mr. Ladner), in his remarks on page 3645 of Hansard, as follows:

> On the other hand, when the license was cancelled it will be observed that over twenty thousand letters expressing appreciation of the programs were forwarded to the Department of Marine and Fisheries and duly acknowledged.

These letters were forwarded to the Department of Marine and Fisheries in 1927, apparently following the complaints which had come from Toronto. The sending of these letters was apparently to combat the accusations which had been made against those responsible for the broadcasting programs. This shows that these people cannot plead ignorance and say they were not informed. My hon. friend said that 20,000 letters were sent to show that the listeners-in were satisfied with the broadcasting and desirous of keeping the station in operation, and that the criticisms were not justified.

Mr. McGIBBON: Did the minister warn these people that if they did not stop broadcasting objectionable matter their license would be cancelled; did he give them any warning at all of the premeditated action of the government?

Mr. CARDIN: I will frankly say, Mr. Chairman, that I have no recollection of any special warning having been sent to them.

Mr. McGIBBON: Do you not think you should have given them notice?

Mr. CARDIN: We informed them about one month before its expiration that the license would not be renewed. I am quite free to confess that I have no remembrance of any special warning having been sent to them before that.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Is that not the custom with other broadcasting stations?

Mr. CARDIN: I will say that we have never been placed in such an embarrassing position as we have in this case, and in connection with that I would express a wish which is very strong in my mind: The sooner I can get rid of this and have it taken out of the department, the better it will be for me. To say that they did not know of the complaints against them is not quite accurate. They knew the situation; they knew that complaints had been made and that we were forced to consider them in the interests of the listeners-in of Canada.

The hon. member for Vancouver South is quite mistaken when he says that 20,000 letters expressing appreciation of the programs were forwarded to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Not 20,000 letters, but 5,029 letters in four packages were forwarded by the association to the department. Out of these 5,029 letters, 24 were complaints, and 5,005 were letters of commendation. But here is the interesting part; out of the 5,005 letters of commendation, 4,056 were from people living in the United States of America, and only 949 were from Canada. These were the supposed 20,000 letters forwarded to us in 1927 to answer the complaints which had been made against this association.

Mr. LADNER: I would ask the minister if there was not a clear and direct expression of opinion in the petitions which have been sent to the extent of 482,000 people?

Mr. CARDIN: I am coming to that.

Mr. LADNER: I would also ask the minister if he himself has not received a large number of letters, as most of us have from our constituents, on the subject?

Mr. CARDIN: I will come to that. Regarding the petitions which have been sent to the Prime Minister, it is stated that they contain about 458,026 names of which only 82,468 are those of persons who claim to be radio listeners.

Mr. LADNER: Owners.

Mr. CARDIN: No, radio listeners. But without saying anything against the people who have signed these petitions and for whom I have the greatest respect, I may say that everyone who has any experience in public life knows how easy it is to have a petition signed in regard to practically everything. Have we not all had in our experience a petition on which certain names would appear and the next morning the same names would appear on a petition asking exactly the contrary of what was asked in the previous one? We have all had that experience and it is not surprising that such a thing has been done. I do not blame people for doing that, but during the last month these people have been broadcasting to all their listeners that they ought to make strong representations that freedom of speech should not be done away with in Canada. I do not blame them in any way and I respect them, but in deciding the matter I have to take the situation as it is and to analyse the facts as they are. These people have had friends of theirs, no doubt acting in good faith, passing through the different communities with petitions and asking people to sign them. There came to the department afterwards certain letters from people saying that they regretted having signed the petition because they did not know what was the matter and they were not given the full facts of the case. There is one instance of a boy of seven years who, in the absence of his parents, was asked to sign a petition to give back the license to the International Bible Students' Association. Another case was that of a maid who was asked to sign the petition although she said she did not know a single thing about the radio business; yet she was asked to sign the petition. I have numerous letters from people who signed under similar circumstances. I repeat that I do not blame them; they were acting in good faith, but this shows how easy it is to build up a petition and secure signatures. Supposing we sent persons to Toronto, or Vancouver, to ask people in those cities to sign petitions against the International Bible Students' Association. I venture to say we would be in a position to come before the house with a petition bearing at least as many names as the one which has been produced before us.

We are supposed to have received 9,358 letters in the department. The department has issued 267,210 licenses to listeners and the protests that we have received from people holding receiving licenses number 1,658. Out of 267,210 licensed listeners-in, we have received complaints or protests from only 1,658. We have not had time to analyse the petition containing the 458,026 names.

Mr. LADNER: Is the minister not mistaken there? He referred a moment ago to the matter with regard to the 82,468. My information is that these state in their petition that they are owners of radio receiving sets and they make the protest.

Mr. CARDIN: The information which has been supplied to me by the officer of the department who has looked into these petitions is that out of 458,026 names, 82,468 claim to be radio listeners.

Mr. LADNER: Owners.

Mr. CARDIN: Listeners. That is the information I have before me.

Mr. MANION: May I take the liberty of suggesting—and I do so with all respect to freedom of speech and all the rest of it—that while there are in the house a few who are greatly interested in changing the minister's decision in this matter, I think the vast majority of us are satisfied to let the minister take the responsibility, which he has said he is willing to do, for the action he has taken, and endeavour to get on with the business of the house? The minister has taken straightforwardly and squarely upon his shoulders the responsibility of cutting off these people. I may say—and I say this subject to further study—that from what little I have studied of the situation I rather think the minister is right; but at any rate, irrespective of what I think about the matter, I believe the house at this late stage in the session could be far better occupied than in fighting out a question of this sort. If the minister is willing to take the responsibility, as he has said he is, let him be criticized by those who do not agree with him; but we have spent hours on this question and without meaning to reflect in any way upon any hon. gentlemen who may think differently from me, I wish to offer the suggestion that we would be better occupied in dealing with some of the real business of the house than in carrying on this particular question.

Mr. CARDIN: In view of the importance of the subject and the agitation that has been going on, I think it is proper that I should state clearly the position, first, for the government, and second for myself. I do not want to be accused, as I have been most unfairly in certain newspapers and elsewhere, of having been unjust and of having acted at the dictation of persons belonging to the church to which I belong. It is only fair that I be given an opportunity to make my statement and to place the whole facts before the committee. The facts have to a certain extent been presented but only from one side, and I should like to submit some information from our side of the problem in order to enable unprejudiced people to form their opinion. I quite agree with the hon. member for Fort William who has just spoken. This is not a matter which should, from a certain point of view, take the right of way over other business; but the question is so important and it has been given such wide publicity in the press and elsewhere that it is proper that I should answer the criticism advanced by members of the house who have expressed their views, I admit, in good faith, and in a very fair way—a way that I appreciate very much.

With respect to the action which the government has taken in regard to the numerous letters which were sent to the department, we have discovered that a great number of these letters are in the same handwriting, and that the only difference is in the signature. The letter had evidently been prepared in advance by somebody else, and was offered for signature to many people. The action of the department has been approved in many communications which we have received. Many letters of congratulation and of felicitation have been addressed to the government on account of the action we took, and I may add that, generally speaking, the editorial sections of the newspapers throughout the country have approved of the action of the government in regard to this matter. So I think there is something to be said on my side, in support of the action taken by myself with the approval of the government.

We speak, and we hear very much, about the freedom of the air. I do not hesitate to say that the air is as free as it was before. But the use of the air has never been free, and so far as radio is concerned, the use of the air cannot be free, because if it were open to anyone to use the few channels of communication that we have in the radio service, the result would be chaos. This is a matter which has to be regulated and controlled for otherwise there is no liberty, and no advantage to anyone. If there is no regulation, if everybody is free to go on the air, then his neighbour should have the same privilege, and if they all go on the air together at the same time, using the same system, nobody would enjoy the air because there would be too much interference, and no one would get any benefit at all from radio broadcasting. So there can be no freedom in the use of the air. It has been controlled in all countries of the world. It is being controlled in the United States; it has been controlled and is being controlled in England to-day by the British Broadcast Corporation.

It must be remembered that we cannot appropriate to ourselves a certain number of wave-lengths for our own use. Others might use the same wave-length, and no satisfactory results would be obtained. I read not very long ago in a newspaper that it was very strange that the United States should be controlling the wave-lengths, the channels of radio communication, and that we had simply to follow their decisions. That is not exactly the case. What would be the situation of Canada if we started to-day fighting with the United States, we operating our stations and they operating theirs? The result would be simply chaos, and no one would get any advantage from the broadcasting stations, and in addition, their strong stations would very easily drown out the stations we have in Canada. This is a matter which has to be adjusted by an understanding between the two countries, and that is the only way to deal with it. I have always understood that my freedom and my liberty stops where my neighbour's begins, and that I cannot invade the path upon which my neighbour is travelling. I have to respect his rights as much as I expect him to respect mine.

Hon. gentlemen who have spoken already have spoken of the freedom of the air, but fredom only for the broadcasting people. I am for the freedom of the air in the interests of the listeners-in, first of all, and I think that no broadcasting station has any right, simply under the phrase "the freedom of the air" to impose upon me or upon anybody else his convictions or opinions and to force me to listen to them the whole day or the whole night. That is the position.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Why should the minister rule these people out entirely, and then grant a license, for instance, to Gooderham and Worts to broadcast whiskey advertisements.

Mr. CARDIN: I have already given my reasons for that. My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre may think they are no good; that is his privilege, but I think my reasons are good.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am simply seeking to get at the minister's argument. He says, "My liberty ceases where somebody else's liberty begins," but why rule out entirely one organization, and then issue a license to a whiskey distilling company to publish advertisements of their product?

Mr. MANION: Are Gooderham and Worts permitted to advertise, outside of simply saying that this is their station? Are they permitted to advertise their whiskey?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is not that sufficient?

Mr. MANION: I understand they are not, and that they are only permitted to say, "This is Gooderham and Worts' station." That is the limit of what they can say regarding whiskey, and they make other things besides whiskey.

Mr. CARDIN: No complaint has been made up to the present time against the new station which has been established by the company just mentioned. It must be remembered, in considering radio problems, that when a broadcasting station is on the air in a city like Ottawa, for example, or even in a city like Winnipeg, it is absolutely impossible for the majority of the receiving sets to avoid geting the local station which is on the air. It takes a very expensive set to be able to cut out one station and tune in on another, and in a city like Ottawa or Winnipeg most of the sets are not capable of doing that, and if the receiving set is not strong enough to eliminate a program which is going to occupy the whole evening, the owner of the set has the choice of listening to nothing at all, or listening to what is broadcast by that station.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Would the minister advise me if the International Bible Students' Association is in the same position as the Presbyterian church, for example, in broadcasting a program from a rented station?

Mr. CARDIN: They are in the same position as all other organizations or individuals to whom we refuse to issue a broadcasting license. These people can rent a certain period of time from any other station, and broadcast during that time through a station which has a license to broadcast.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): It follows, then, that they are in the same position as any other body of people who wish to broadcast from a rented station.

Mr. CARDIN: Exactly.

Mr. COOTE: If that is the case, what was the reason for refusing to renew the license of CJYC, who I understand were simply broadcasting programs for the International Bible Students' Association?

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): The broadcasting station was owned by them.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes. The broadcasting station to which my hon. friend has just referred is a station which was incorporated under a different name, but the members of the corporation having the license are the International Bible Students' themselves.

Mr. SPENCER: Entirely?

Mr. CARDIN: Entirely; that is my information.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Was the cancellation due, then, simply to the personnel of the Universal Radio of Canada?

Mr. CARDIN: I say frankly to my hon. friend that this station being under the control of the association with whom we were dealing, we applied the same decision to it as to all the others.

Mr. FANSHIER (Last Mountain): Does this station sell time to any other organizations besides the International Bible Students' Association?

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed they did.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): What percentage?

Mr. CARDIN: The officer cannot give me the information offhand.

Mr. COOTE: So the reason for the cancellation of CJYC station of the Universal Radio of Canada was the fact that it was really owned by the International Bible Students' Association?

Mr. CARDIN: To a great extent, yes. Suppose you operate a station through which you give permission to certain people to abuse the broadcasting privileges covered by the license, I think we would have the right to cancel the license.

Mr. HEAPS: Did the minister notify Universal Radio that they would have their license cancelled, or that its renewal would not be entertained, unless the Bible Students Association's programs were discontinued? In other words, were they given any warning?

Mr. CARDIN: They were given the same notice that we served on the others one month before March 31.

Mr. HEAPS: What was that warning?

Mr. CARDIN: We advised them that after March 31 the license would not be renewed.

Mr. HEAPS: No reason given?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: In cancelling the license of the Universal Broadcasting Company did not the minister apply an altogether new principle? For example, take the Bell Telephone Company and the Northern Electric Company; I do not understand that because the subsidiary company does something that is not approved, the allied corporation is thereupon dealt with.

Mr. CARDIN: Certain people have said: Well, we have freedom of the press, we have freedom of writing, and so on. But the same principle cannot be applied to radio broadcasting. If you are not satisfied with a book you are not forced to read it; similarly, if you do not like the way in which a newspaper is conducted you are not forced to read it, and if you are not in sympathy with the objects of a meeting you are not obliged to attend and listen to the speeches. But in view of the fact that radio receiving-sets are not yet so perfected as to enable you to eliminate any station whose broadcasting you do not wish to listen to, you are forced to listen or not use your receiving-set at all.

Mr. HEAPS: Does the minister say I must be forced to listen to jazz?

Mr. CARDIN: I agree with my hon. friend that there is a lot of broadcasting of jazz from the United States that is not worth listening to, and I should be pleased to stop it if I could; but fortunately those stations being at a distance we can eliminate those that we do not like. For instance, no one is forced to listen to jazz programs from Chicago; you can tune in any other station that you may prefer because you are not in the immediate vicinity of the broadcasting; but when you are near the broadcasting point you cannot escape interference. I may say that I have in my home here in Ottawa one of the latest receiving-sets of the Marconi company, but when CNRO is broadcasting I can get nothing else; if, however, I was living twenty miles from Ottawa I could tune out the local station.

Mr. GARDINER: Under those circumstances, my hon. friend has to listen to the jazz that comes from the Laurier theatre in Hull.

Mr. CARDIN: I notice a certain amount of jazz comes from there, but I may tell my hon. friend that I do not listen to it.

Mr. GARDINER: What do you do?

Mr. CARDIN: I close my set, and if it is late I go to bed.

Mr. COOTE: Mr. Chairman, I am trying to get from the minister information about the cancellation of the license of CJYC. Has he any protest in his department which justified cancelling that license except that it broadcast the programs of the International Bible Students' Association, which I understand was done under the license of station CKCX. If he thinks he was justified in cancelling the license for station CKCX because it was devoted exclusively to broadcasting the programs of the International Bible Students' Association, it seems to me that that fact affords no justification for the cancellation of the CJYC license.

Mr. CARDIN: Our reason was the same as that which we applied to the other stations. I am asking the director of that branch of the service to ascertain if we did not have complaints against the general programs of the station itself, but I would not be sure about that.

Mr. COOTE: Would the minister cancel the license of every station if he received complaints as to the programs broadcast? I am sure he gets complaints regarding CNRO, but he has never yet cancelled the license of that station.

Mr. CARDIN: I do not hesitate to say that I would not cancel the license of any station on receipt of a few complaints. As I have said, we have received complaints in regard to other stations, but nothing comparable in volume to the complaints that we received against the station to which my hon. friend refers. I repeat, it is the first time that we have been placed in so embarrassing and difficult a position, particularly for myself.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) and others have referred to the allotment of wave lengths in the city of Toronto, and the hon. gentleman in particular complained because a single wave length was not granted to a new station which had been erected in Toronto or its vicinity. He added that we had given preference to the station of the Toronto Star. I may say that that is true. The station to which my hon. friend referred is CKJW. This new station has been built and operated by the Gooderham & Worts distillery of Ontario.

Mr. COOTE: Is that a better personnel than the International Bible Students' Association?

Mr. CARDIN: I would not pass any judgment on that, but I should be inclined to say not.

Miss MACPHAIL: If the minister receives half a dozen complaints against that station will he cancel the license?

Mr. CARDIN: If I received complaints I would consider them very seriously and I should probably take action in what I deemed to be in the interests of the general public.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Perhaps if the Bible students went into the distillery business the minister would grant them the license.

Mr. CARDIN: That would not be a justification.

Mr. DUNNING: That is about your size.

Mr. CARDIN: When the station of Gooderham and Worts was established in Ontario all the department promised the company was that they would be given about two days for broadcasting. As a matter of fact we are giving them three and one-third days. No complaint can therefore be made by the company on the ground that they have not been given the single wave length which has been assigned the Toronto Star. At the very moment they began building their station, and when they asked for a license, they were informed that they could not be given more than two days a week, whereas they are now enjoying, as I say, three and one-third days. It has been said that we excluded this new and important station from the air. We did not exclude them from the air because, as I have said, we have given them more time than they had a right to expect from the department. It is also said—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Has the Star any more time now than they had when the Bible students were operating in Toronto?

Mr. CARDIN: The Bible students were on a different wave and did not affect the wave upon which the Toronto Star was broadcasting.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Do I understand that the Toronto Star has no more time now than when the Bible students were operating?

Mr. CARDIN: The Toronto Star has more to-day than previously because we have given it, for a while, the single wave which the Gooderham and Worts company wanted to have for their broadcasting. The trouble has arisen from the fact that this single wave instead of having been given to the Gooderham and Worts company was given to the Toronto Star. That is the cause of the complaint made by my hon. friend the acting leader of the opposition. The hon. gentleman's contention is that the Toronto Star station is not an important station and that it should not have been given the advantage of a single wave. Well, I am free to admit that the Toronto Star is not a very strong station, but I would point out that a station can always and very easily be improved. Changes are taking place very rapidly in the radio business, and a station which is up-to-date to-day may be obsolete and of no use in two months time. The radio industry and radio science are developing more and more and a station which is not very effective to-day may be improved materially. It is just possible that the station of the Gooderham and Worts company will not be the best station three months from now.

Mr. GUTHRIE: How much time does the Toronto Star actually use—how many hours a week? I am informed that it uses twenty-eight hours a week, four hours a day. You have given them the whole week.

Mr. CARDIN: The Toronto Star in using the wave length allotted to them can broadcast every day.

Mr. GUTHRIE: But they actually use four hours a day or twenty-eight hours a week. That is right, is it not?

Mr. CARDIN: The director says that may be the case. As I was saying, the changes that are taking place in the radio business are indeed rapid and extraordinary. Only this morning I read in one of our daily papers that in a country in the north of Europe a coal shovel began to speak one day last week and people were amazed. This coal shovel acted very much like a receiving set and it also broadcast a program of music, following that up with a lesson in the English language. People were very much surprised and they afterwards discovered that what they were getting through the coal shovel, placed against a wall, was a program which was being broadcast by a station not very far away. So you can see that there is always room for development. The fact is that practically anything is possible in the development of the radio science to-day.

Mr. McGIBBON: Was that a political development?

Mr. CARDIN: I would not say that. Now I think I can reasonably draw from the remarks of the acting leader of the opposition and others the inference that giving this privilege to the Toronto Star was an act of politics.

Mr. EVANS: Was not the department informed that the users in Saskatoon were willing to limit their broadcasting to Sundays only?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes; representations in that regard were made to me not long ago.

Mr. SPENCER: Will the minister reconsider the renewing of the license?

Mr. CARDIN: The matter can be considered. As regards issuing licenses for a single wave and giving the privilege of broadcasting every day in the week, the Toronto Star is not the only newspaper which has been accorded this treatment. I may be mistaken, but in my opinion it is more proper to grant a broadcasting license to a newspaper than to a distillery or to any other company, and if I had to choose between the two I should say that it was better to give the single wave to the Star.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The minister must remember that he is the one who gave it to the distillery.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, I gave it to the distillery; but I did not give—

Mr. GUTHRIE: If there is anything wrong in giving a license to the distillery the minister must bear the burden.

Mr. CARDIN: Certainly, I gave it to the distillery; I am not trying to escape responsibility. But I refused to give to the distillery a license for every day and night in the week; I said that instead of giving that privilege to the distillery I preferred to give it to the Star, which is a newspaper. And a newspaper, in my judgment—my judgment may be poor on this point—is a better organization for broadcasting in Canada. But we gave the same privilege to two other newspapers which are not Liberal. This privilege is enjoyed by station CJJC, which is the London Free Press, London, Ont. They have the same privilege as the Toronto Star. And we have also given the same privilege to the station CHNS, which is the station of the Halifax Herald published in the city of Halifax. I cannot be accused of favouring Liberal newspapers in face of this information.

Now, I regret having spoken at such great length. We have made up our minds that a change must be made in the broadcasting situation in Canada. We have reached a point where it is impossible for a member of the government or for the government itself to exercise the discretionary power which is given by the law and by the regulations as they stand to-day, for the very reason that the moment the minister in charge exercises his discretion, the matter becomes a political football and a political issue all over Canada. This is not desirable, although I admit it is the logical consequence of the law and the regulations as they stand to-day. We should change that situation and take radio broadcasting away from the influences of all sorts which are brought to bear by all shades of political parties. This will avoid much trouble for the minister and for the government, and I think will result in greater satisfaction to the public at large.

We are not prepared to evolve a scheme at present, because we have not in our possession all the information we will need. We are inclined to follow that plan which has been established and which is operating at present in England; our idea would be to establish a company, the shares of which would be the property of the Canadian government and to appoint special men, who are called governors in England, to look after the issuing of licenses and the regulation of everything else in regard to this important business. In this investigation which I propose to make with the amount I am asking parliament to vote in the supplementary estimates I am going to inquire into all phases of the situation, and I am prepared to say that I will be inclined to ask these people who will look into the situation also to consider the cases which have been mentioned by hon. gentlemen opposite in the course of their criticism. This investigation and this body which I am going to organize will look into these particular cases and at the same time will provide the department with all the information we need in order to come to parliament next session with a bill which will really establish something different from the system which prevails to-day. I repeat the sooner this is done the better it will be for me and the better I will be satisfied.

Mr. GEARY: Some time ago this matter of the revision of air channels came to my notice, I think through an editorial in the Toronto Saturday Night, and I put a question to the minister in regard to certain air channels in the city of Toronto, which he was good enough to answer. The minister has cited instances, including that of the Canadian National Broadcasting station in Ottawa, where other programs are constantly interrupted because of the proximity of these stations. I do not even own a receiving set; I have listened to the blessed things occasionally, although not very cheerfully, but I have heard those who possess receiving sets constantly complain of the very thing the minister complains of in Ottawa, but in these cases directed to a different broadcasting station. In Toronto complaints are constantly directed to the interference of the Toronto Daily Star station CFCA. I only speak from hearsay, of course, because I do not know of my own knowledge.

I do not want to review all that the minister has said, but there are two or three points on which I must touch. Station CKCX is the name of the phantom station of the International Bible Students' Association. A phantom license, of which there are sixteen according to the minister's report as against seventy-four active stations, is one which has its own call letter but which rents time from some other station. If station CKCX, which rents time from someone else, has its license withdrawn, I presume it is taken off the air and cannot broadcast at all through any other medium.

Mr. CARDIN: That is not the case; they can continue to broadcast but not under the call letters which they had previously.

Mr. GEARY: They must get another call letter?

Mr. CARDIN: No, they do not need any call letters; they can broadcast as many other firms broadcast; they simply say that the program is furnished through the courtesy of so and so.

Mr. GEARY: Very well; station CKCX is not taken off the air by the simple process of cancelling its licenses, since I understand these people are still broadcasting. Station CJYC belongs to a corporation which spent a good deal of money on its plant and which has a physical license, from which it makes money by renting portions of its time. Some of its time is rented to station CKCX; some is rented to other concerns and the rest of the time is used by station CJYC. The minister knows that very well. The International Bible Students' Association and the corporation known as Universal Radio of Canada are entirely different people; it is a well known principle that corporations are entities, each to itself. A corporation may be composed of five men; these five men may be in partnership in another business, but still as a corporation they have nothing to do with the other partnership in which they are interested. There is no reason for cancelling the license of station CJYC unless it is putting on bad programs or doing business in a way which is not satisfactory to the department or otherwise misbehaving itself, so I suggest to the minister that the cancellation of the license held by station CJYC did not necessarily follow the cancellation of the license issued to the International Bible Students' Association. The license to CJYC might have been retained under rigid supervision, in order to make sure that proper programs were broadcast. I think no complaint has been made with regard to this station except as to that part of their time rented to the International Bible Students' Association.

Here is the difficulty; station CJYC and station CFRB were the only stations on the 580 kilocycle wave-length. There is another wave-length known as the 840 kilocycle wave-length, which is exclusive, the first mentioned being shared with the United States. On the latter wave-length were stations CFCA, the Toronto Daily Star; CKCL, the Dominion Battery Company and CKNC, the Canadian National Carbon Company. These three stations were dividing the time on that wave-length, each using one-third of the time. The 960 kilocycle wave-length, which is also exclusive, was given for the sole use of station CKGW, the Gooderham and Worts station. Then what happened? Station CJYC, one of the half owners of the 580 kilocycle wave-length, had its license cancelled; station CFRB, the other half owner, was given the 960 kilocycle wave-length to share with the Gooderham and Worts station. I am not complaining of that, but that left the 580 kilocycle wave-length free.

What was done next? There were three stations on 840 kilocycles, one of them being the Toronto Daily Star. The Daily Star was left there and the other two were taken off that wave-length and given the places of stations CJYC and CFRB, which latter station had been transferred to another wave-length. In other words, the 580 kilocycle wave-length was cleared by means of the cancellation of the license of CJYC and the transfer of CFRB, and the space left was filled by taking the two competitors of the Toronto Star and moving them to the 580 kilocycle wave-length, leaving 840 kilocycles absolutely free to the Toronto Daily Star. I have no doubt that the Toronto Star does use some time on the air, but as a business proposition, as a source of wealth, the exclusive use of an exclusive air channel is of great value. This is an extraordinary consequence. I am not blaming the minister personally, but I suggest that strong representations were made to the government which induced them to clear the road, by cancelling station CJYC and transferring station CFRB, in order to leave space for the two competitors of the Toronto Star in another air channel, which would leave the Toronto Star in exclusive possession of an exclusive Canadian air channel. That is what has happened. On the 960 kilocycle wave-length, which is exclusive, Gooderham and Worts had full time, but I understand from the minister that they never expected to get full time, so they were an easy mark to which to transfer anything lying around loose. So they were made to share that air channel with station CFRB, which had to be taken off the 580 kilocycle channel in order to make room for the competitors of the Toronto Daily Star, who were also transferred. In order to make room for the Toronto Star, their competitors in the 840 kilocycle channel were moved out of that channel.

The net result, Mr. Chairman, is that you have CKCL and CKNC moved up to share a certain channel, and the Toronto Star are given the exclusive right to a Canadian channel and CFRB divides a channel which was formerly in the sole possession of Gooderham and Worts. The answer to my question was this: CKCL and CKNC were transferred from the Toronto Star's channel, in order to give each station more time on the air. Was that done? Instead of getting one-third of the time on their previous wave-length, they now get one-half on the 580 kilocycle channel, but that channel is shared with the United States.

The minister's report says that the United States were prepared to consider some increase in the number of shared wave-length, but "shared wave-lengths, while useful, are of limited value since they can be used only by comparatively low-powered stations, and while they serve to round out a national radio system, they cannot take the place of exclusive wave-lengths in the national layout" which the Canadian representatives foresee will be necessary.

When these stations were taken from third time on an exclusive channel and put on half time on a shared channel, I do not see any good ground for saying they were transferred from that channel, not in order to clear the way for the Toronto Star, but in order to give each station more time on the air. They do get more time on the air, but it is in a limited channel, which, according to the minister's own statement, is of limited value. They get half time on a station of limited value, in place of third time on a station with an exclusive air channel devoted to Canada and not shared with the United States.

I do not know the conditions which exist regarding the London Free Press or the Halifax Herald. There may not be any competition there for air channels, and the conditions may not be the same. I venture to say that if you examine the conditions applying in Halifax and London you will find they give us no assistance in considering broadcasting in the city of Toronto.

The CFCA station has been complained of. I am informed that the first use it made of its additional afternoon time on the air was to broadcast the Woodbine races, the betting odds and that sort of thing. Whether or not that is particularly fine broadcasting, I do not know. They are not a station, as far as one can learn from radio listeners-in, that would be considered as being of any particular value in competition with others. The bald fact remains that they have been given full possession of an exclusive Canadian channel, and they can use this channel twenty-four hours a day, and seven days a week. The other companies may or may not have got some advantage, but one company was put out of business entirely.

I submit that the judgment of the minister is entirely bad, and it seems to me that the Toronto Star has been able to make such representation as to convince the minister, and convince him wrongly in my humble opinion, that it was entitled to this tremendous consideration which has been given to it. This broadcasting privilege has a market value, and an advertising value as well. I hope this matter is before the minister for his consideration, and I would be glad to hear any remarks he has to make, because I think the facts seem to indicate exactly what I have stated.

Mr. EVANS: Seeing that the house and the country as a whole are still in doubt, I make no apology for discussing this question for a few minutes. I have received some seventy letters from my own constituency protesting against the cancellation of the Bible students' radio license, but I have not received one complaining against them. One reason for the cancellation stated to us was that the matter broadcasted was propaganda, and of an objectionable character. I have in my hand a statutory declaration from the association, in which the following appears:

As to the statement of Inspector S. J. Ellis dated November 19th, 1926, "I consider their programs nothing but propaganda and an advertising scheme to get money." This statement is incorrect. The association or its members have never either directly or indirectly solicited funds to pay for the programs or for any other purpose. The association is and was incorporated under letters patent from the Dominion government, as a non-profit association and has remained and will remain such. The sole purpose of the stations is for the entertainment of the public by educational and musical programs, etc.

I also have a letter from R. G. Scott, M.D., medical superintendent of the Anna Turnbull hospital at Wakaw, Sask. Dr. Scott is well known in western Canada, and is favourably known, not only to Protestants, but to Roman Catholics as well. I would like to read one paragraph of his letter:

A word as to the Bible Students. I know a lot of them, and the organization has my good wishes. I have been a minister first of the Presbyterian church, and now of the United church, for twenty-eight years. My work has kept me in a district where I have been doing medical work and for a number of years I have not done much preaching. What I want to state is that the Bible Student movement has done a lot of good and is still doing a lot of good. It has made people honest who were not previously honest. It is a live movement, wholesome, and should be encouraged. Many of their conceptions are crude, and preposterous, but these people are thinking as well as they can, and are travelling in the right direction.

Dr. Scott discussed this question with the Catholic priest at Wakaw, who replied in a noncommittal way that their program was much better than nothing. Apparently he did not consider them in error. I think that some highhanded tyranny has been brought to bear against this association. Their programs have covered the subjects of traffic control, advantages of Ontario hydro electric, the Ontario educational system, attractions of Canada for tourists, technical education in Toronto, world news, travelogue, organ recitals by some of the leading Canadian organists, concerts and so on. The Bible student's association is an international one. They have been broadcasting lectures on public ownership, and I believe that is one of the causes for the refusal to renew their license. This session has revealed the fact that the government is absolutely without a policy on this great question; a Liberal government without a Liberal policy. I know some hon. members may think this rather farfetched—

An hon. MEMBER: Just the usual practice.

Mr. EVANS: I did not hear the hon. gentleman—but let me tell the committee that the great power combine of the North American continent is to-day not only securing radio stations but absolutely buying whole legislatures in certain states of the union to the south of us. In one state it has even the privilege of furnishing the readers for the children in the schools. It is sending out its lecturers to the high schools and universities and it is educating the people in that way. In western Canada we have that great combine and for their underhand purposes they are even seeking the aid of certain city commissioners and others and buying up every available small power plant in cities and towns throughout the west. In face of all that, every reason given by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for the refusal of this license falls flat. The fact is that in Canada and the United States a capitalistic combine has been formed, and when I look at the number of bills that have come before parliament this session, bills that are calculated to fleece the public and that are in many cases decided in the house practically on party lines, I think I am entitled to this suspicion. There are a number of bills such as Bill No. 152, Bill No. 71, Bill No. 43, Bill No. 56, that more than create suspicion in my mind as to the reason for the refusal of this license. One thing is certain and that is that no logical reason has yet been given for the cancellation. I still believe that the great power trust has taken objection to the lectures given publicly by this association and I want to tell the minister now that the country will not be persuaded by anything he has so far said that this association has not been the victim of high-handed action. I submit to him that there is no British justice in the treatment which this association has received. Further let me state most emphatically that the argument that this association's license has been cancelled because there are too many on the air when a license is given to Gooderham and Worts, Limited; is one that I cannot accept.

I said that the government is a Liberal government without a policy. If I am to judge its policy from its actions, I would say that it was "more booze and less Bible". These are my opinions; surely I am entitled to them and until the government—and the minister does not need to take this to himself personally because he is speaking for the government now and the cabinet is in the house practically every day—takes the country into its confidence and outlines a definite policy of treating all alike, the suspicion we have had will remain with us.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I agree with the minister when he says that you have to discount to a certain extent signatures attached to petitions. It is no doubt true that you cannot exactly estimate the strength of a petition by the number of names appearing under it; but making a liberal discount with regard to the petitions which have been presented by members of the house on behalf of many people throughout Canada, you cannot ignore the fact that tens of thousands of people have expressed to the house an opinion against the action taken by the minister. The minister has been asked repeatedly to give his reasons for cancelling this license and he has referred us to page 1951 of Hansard of April 12. Looking at that I notice the reasons given are contained in a couple of sentences as follows:

> The matter being broadcast is generally described by complainants as having become intolerable; the propaganda carried on under the name of Bible talks is said to be unpatriotic and abusive of all our churches. Evidence would appear to show that the tone of the preaching seems to be that all organized churches are corrupt and in alliance with unrighteous forces, that the entire system of society is wrong and that all governments are to be condemned.

If that be the case, the minister has in that, it seems to me, some justification for the course which he has taken, but how did the minister arrive at that conclusion? I assume, not by receiving letters of an indefinite character making complaints. I suppose he would have under his hand, in coming to a decision, statements of the character and actual repetitions of the things that were broadcasted. For the minister to be influenced by a letter stating: "I do not like the kind of broadcasting that is going on," does not seem to me to be a very strong position to be taken as justification for the cancellation of the license. But if he has received from various parts of the country different statements which have been broadcast by this association, which are objectionable and which should not be allowed to continue, then perhaps he has some grounds on which to act. If he has that sort of information he has something which neither I nor other members of the house have. I confess I have read in the press some criticisms of this association and the character of their broadcasting, but I have not read in the press any statements alleged to have been made by them, on which I could form an opinion. I have not a radio set myself and I have not had the privilege of listening in and forming a judgment by hearing what is passed over the air. It seems to me, if the minister has that sort of information under his hand, it should be made available for the members in order that they may form a judgment as to the class of material which this station has been sending out. I should like to see that myself. We are using the air to-day and it will be used more and more as time goes on. There will have to be some control of the class of material which is passed through the air. That, I think, is something there can be no difference of opinion about.

I am not altogether impressed with the word "liberty" as it is used very frequently by people who want what, in my judgment, amounts to license. There have been great abuses in the name of liberty. The word "liberty" has probably been more abused than any other word that you can think of. Some people define liberty in a different way from the way in which I would define it. If this society is circulating through the air propaganda which is unpatriotic, which condemns all governments and which tends generally to bring into disrepute everything that we regard as our standards, I for one, would like to see some of the messages which it has sent out in order that I might form a conclusion whether or not there was justification for cutting off the license. It does seem to me, however, in the face of these large numbers of petitions sent in here, that the minister would have been well advised, and it strikes me it would have been a little fairer, when the complaints were coming to him, to have called the attention of this organization to the fact that he had received numerous complaints, and that they would have to change the character of the stuff they were broadcasting or their license would be cancelled. That he has not done, he says very frankly, and that does not strike me as playing the game quite fairly.

I would like to add this further word. The way it appears to me now, in the light of the great number of persons who have petitioned against this action, is that the attitude and action of the government have been rather strict, having regard to the fact that the bookstalls in this city of Ottawa and all over the province of Ontario are loaded with American literature which cannot be regarded as having anything but a damaging effect on the young people of this Dominion. It seems to me that there is a good deal of laxity in regard to United States literature coming into this country, and in view of this laxity the action of the government in regard to cancelling this radio license does appear somewhat severe.

I have received, as have other hon. members, a number of letters in regard to the cancellation of this license. I have talked with a good many people who have sets of their own, and I have asked them if they have ever heard anything which struck them as improper being issued by this society, and in not a single instance did anyone tell me that they had heard anything which they thought was objectionable. That is all I have to go on in forming my opinions, in the absence of a definite statement as to the sort of stuff this organization has been broadcasting. If the minister has that information and does not care to place it on Hansard, I should be glad if he would make it available for me and other members of parliament to glance over it, so that we can form our own judgment as to the real character of the matter which has been broadcast, and about which the minister has received some complaints.

Mr. CARDIN: Certainly, I will.

Mr. HEAPS: I have no desire to prolong the discussion at this stage, because anything I might add would be more or less a repetition of things which have already been said. However, there is one point I would like to bring to the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and it grows out of the discussion last night just prior to the adjournment of the house. Just before the moment of adjourning the house at eleven o'clock last night, I had stated that there were complaints in the correspondence brought down for the year 1918 and 1919. The minister said he thought I was mistaken. I went to the trouble to-day to obtain the correspondence tabled, and I find that my statement was correct. Before placing the facts before the house I would like to preface my remarks with an observation or two. On April 16, the house passed the following resolution:

> For a copy of all letters, telegrams, and correspondence, pertaining to the cancellation of the radio licenses held by the International Bible Students' Association.

The correspondence asked for in this resolution was brought down on the 7th of May, exactly three weeks after the motion for the production of these papers was passed. At the time this motion was passed by the house it was understood, I believe, and was so stated by the right hon. the Prime Minister, that only correspondence would be produced that pertained to the cancellation of these licenses. That is all we wanted, and I believe that that is all that was asked for. But when the correspondence was produced, this is what I find.

In the first place, there is a letter sent from the Department of Marine and Fisheries, dated the 12th of April, when the motion, I believe, was already on the order paper, practically asking for information against the International Bible students. A letter came back on the 17th day of April. I find also several other letters on this file dated about the same period. In other words, the department cancelled the licenses, and after they had done so, they looked around for evidence to justify them in taking their action. I do not think that is fair; it is not the kind of action we should care to justify in this house.

I look towards the end of this file of correspondence and I find articles reproduced from the American newspapers of about the year 1918. There is one dated March 8, 1918, and these are given, I presume, as a reason for the cancellation of these licenses. It is quite true that there may have been many people in 1917 or 1918 who might have agreed with the action then taken against the Bible students in Toronto or New York, but certainly that is no excuse to be given to this house in the year 1928 for the cancellation of these licenses. I think it is a most unfair thing, and I believe that it is not in keeping with the traditions of this house, when we ask for correspondence pertaining to a certain action, that after the date of asking for the correspondence the department should go around looking for correspondence to table. The only reason I got up this afternoon was to protest against this method of the department, and to protest also against going back for a period of ten years for evidence against this association. In 1918 and 1919 there was no such thing as a radio license granted by the Department of Marine and Fisheries in Canada. I believe it was only in 1920 or 1921 that licenses were first granted by the government. It is unjust to this association that these matters should be brought to the attention of the house, and what is more, I do not think it is becoming the government to go around looking for evidence after a motion is passed by the house. What I mean by that is this. After I had asked on the 16th of April for the tabling of the correspondence pertaining to the cancellation of these licenses, the government go around to the various departments, such as the Post Office department, and to newspaper offices probably, and clip items out of newspapers and paste them in the record, and then table it all to justify their action. That is the protest I wish to make this afternoon.

Mr. CARDIN: The documents which have been produced at the request of my hon. friend are all the documents existing on the file of the department regarding this association. We thought it would be fair to place before the house everything that we had relating to this association. The documents to which my hon. friend has just referred were taken into consideration, I am informed by the officers of the department, when the International Bible students made their first request for a radio license in 1922, which request was refused at the time, and I am told that the request was refused at that time on the strength of the documents to which my hon. friend has just referred. When we brought down the correspondence, we wanted to bring down everything in our possession with regard to the matter.

Mr. HEAPS: May I point out that this document is dated April 17, 1928, which is after the license had been cancelled, and consequently the statement of the minister has no bearing on this communication to which I have referred.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I have just a few words to say in respect to the matter that is before the house. The minister has done something which a great many people are condemning him for, and yet perhaps some of those who are condemning him find themselves in the same position as I do myself, of rather feeling that he has done a service to a great many people in the country. I do not wish to discuss at length the religious teaching of the Bible students, but I do wish to point out that a great many people throughout the country share the opinion that their teaching was not wholesome and was not welcome. Our population is made up of various religious sects. I find that 96 per cent of our people belong to religious bodies that certainly do not accept the religious teaching of the International Bible Students; for instance, the Anglicans, the Baptists, the Brethren, the Congregationalists, the Evangelical Association, the Friends—known as the Quakers—the Lutherans, the Mennonites, the Methodists, the Plymouth Brethren, the Presbyterians, the Roman Catholics, the Salvation Army, and several others composing approximately 96 per cent, or over eight million of our population. These people in general do not accept the religious teaching of the International Bible Students' Association, because their doctrine is so different from that of the majority of our religious organizations that it is not acceptable to them. Therefore I find myself in the position of commending the minister for the stand he has taken.

[Mr. Heaps.]

The argument has been advanced that his action constitutes interference with liberty of speech. Well, I am not so sure that it does. "Liberty of speech" is a phrase capable of a variety of meanings. We have liberty of speech in some matters, in others we have not. Even in the manner of speaking our thoughts we are restrained to quite an extent—especially in this chamber. Here we are not permitted, for instance, to make any derogatory remarks about the sovereign, or the governor general, or even about the upper chamber.

Mr. JACOBS: Or even about each other, much as we should like to.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Quite so. We think a lot more than we say, and under our breath we may mutter comments that we should not like to appear on Hansard.

Miss MACPHAIL: Hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: While the Bible students are forbidden to give forth their religious teaching on the air, they still have the medium of the pulpit. They are not restrained in the least from using that channel. Also, they still have the privilege of going into our homes—which, by the way, they do very aggressively—and trying to sell their literature; and they still have the privilege, to use a slang phrase, of buttonholing people on the train or in the street, which also they are very aggressive in doing. In short, they are not restrained in these respects from disseminating their views, so I do not feel that any great injustice is done them so far as liberty of speech goes.

There is, though, room for criticism in another particular. I feel the minister is subject to some degree of criticism because of discrimination. Yesterday we learned that the United Church of Canada has a broadcasting station in Vancouver, and that the Christian and Missionary Alliance has a broadcasting station in Edmonton. I know something of the latter because I was concerned in getting it there. The International Bible Students used to have four broadcasting stations. Now I think there is discrimination in that the licenses for the four stations of the Bible students were cancelled, while these other two religious stations had their licenses renewed. I do not know whether I should suggest how that discrimination might be overcome, but I should like to give forth a thought that was expressed to me last night by a minister of the Gospel in this city—one who, I believe, has charge of the largest congregation locally. He told me that he would favour discontinuing the broadcasting of all religious programs. Now, if the minister had taken that attitude and refused to license the broadcasting station of any religious organization, his position would be unassailable. I believe there is something to be said in support of the view that the broadcasting of any religious programs should not be permitted. The attitude of this reverend gentleman of course was taken because in his opinion such broadcasting tends to keep people away from church, where he thinks they should attend. So he may be selfish in his opinion.

A point that has not been brought out in this discussion is that the International Bible Students Association have really had a special privilege.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I am not very conversant with their programs other than those broadcast from their Saskatoon station. If my information is correct, they enjoyed a special privilege there in this way: they operated their own station, and in addition they had a certain amount of time for broadcasting from another local station. The Ministerial Association of Saskatoon met together and allotted the time that each denomination would have for broadcasting, leaving the Bible students out of consideration as they had their own stations for their exclusive use. But afterwards the Ministerial Association was approached by the Bible students, who said: Here, we wish for our share of the time with the other religious bodies on your station. And they were legally entitled to their share, and got it. So they had all their time on their own station, and their share with the other religious bodies of the broadcasting on the joint station.

Mr. DUNNING: What about freedom of speech?

Mr. CARMICHAEL: They had an excess of freedom of speech—an excess of time. Now that the department has refused to renew the Bible students' license for their station they are on a parity with the other religious organizations in Saskatoon. So instead of their being discriminated against, I feel that their special privileges have been withdrawn and they are now simply put on a par with the other religious bodies, where they should have been from the first.

I was pleased to note the minister's statement that the government proposes to take over the control of radio. I think that is the proper policy to adopt, and I do not think it is necessary to spend very much money or consume a great deal of time in order to arrive at a sound decision. In my opinion the government should take over radio broadcasting as a public business and direct it in the interests of the whole country.

Mr. BIRD: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make it clear that I hold no brief for the Bible students against the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I do not think it necessary to attribute any ulterior motives to the minister or to the government in this matter. I think his refutation of the charge of ulterior motives was both dignified and convincing, at least so far as I was concerned. I believe that the minister, as he claimed, had a perfect right to form his opinion on the evidence given. At the same time I think he will concede to others the right to estimate the value of his opinion. Personally I believe that the minister's action was somewhat precipitate; he did not have regard to principles that are traditional and that lie very deep at the root of our most valued and cherished beliefs. This year we are celebrating the third centenary of John Bunyan. The whole English-speaking world is looking back with pride upon the record of that humble English tinker, not because he produced one of England's premier classics, which is the next best seller to the Bible, but because he spent twelve long years in prison to maintain the right of free speech. I say these matters go much deeper than we perceive on the surface, and a good many of us, no matter what our relationship to the Bible students may be, are very intensely interested in the question of free speech, the freedom of religious opinion and the freedom to express that opinion.

It seems to me, from what has been said, that the objections to the Bible students in this phase of their propaganda have come mainly from three classes of the community, to whom I do not think we ought to give undue weight. First of all there are those who are antipathetic to the religious views of the Bible students. It has been said that the Bible students are propagandists; they have been stigmatized with that as though it is something to be condemned. I put it to the house, that to be a propagandist in religious matters is not a thing that bears with it any stigma at all. After all, looking back on the history of religious controversy, it has been the propagandists who have made their mark in the progress of religion, notwithstanding what their religious views have been. I do not agree with the theological beliefs of this sect; they are not beliefs that I can accept. But that is a very secondary matter. At any rate these people, whatever their views are, believe in them enough to go to some trouble to try to disseminate them amongst Canadians; and in my view the dissemination of religious beliefs in contemporary life is not by any means overdone. It seems to me that the ideas that are coursing through the minds and hearts of the people are not ideas that are overburdened with religious conceptions of any kind. After all, I admire any people, Mohammedans or Christians or whatnot, who show some zeal in the prosecution and spread of their religious beliefs. And many of us know these Bible students personally; they are our neighbours. There is scarcely a town or hamlet in western Canada where some of these people do not reside. They are amongst our best Canadian citizens; they can be classified as the very best of our Canadian citizens. I understand that they do not believe very much in us politicians. Their kingdom is not of this world; therefore they do not lay much stress upon the achievements of worldly institutions. I do not know whether we can hold that against them or not; a good many of us have become pessimistic about the efficacy of some of our institutions.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Can the hon. member assure the house whether or not they believe in rendering to Caesar the things that are Caesar's?

Mr. BIRD: I think that the people who raise that question ought to be sure that they are rendering unto God the things that are God's. The onus is on the other people, not on the Bible students. I am not holding any brief for the other-worldly conceptions of these people. But they are not the only religious sect that have been other-worldly in their beliefs.

Another set of objections come from people who are very patriotic. They believe that the sect is a menace to the country; that its teachings somewhat blur the lines of nationalism; in other words, that they are not very patriotic, and that during the war they were anti-militaristic. I will not tax the religious knowledge of my fellow members, but I want to ask hon. members, who have any knowledge of religious history, to tell me of any sect which at its best time was not anti-nationalist and anti-militarist. I could wait for the reply with perfect confidence that no satisfactory answer can be given to that question, because it is well known that in the case of religious sects that bear the name Christian—and this sect does—the more sincere they are, the more nearly they get back to the first principles of their belief, the more antipathetic and antagonistic they become to all conceptions of a narrow, Chauvinistic, nationalist spirit and to all ideas of military aggressiveness. You cannot name one of the great Orthodox churches, let alone this little modern sect, of which this is not true. One remembers that away back in the sixteenth century Sir Thomas More, who, as a faithful Catholic, suffered for his belief in transubstantiation, was a pacifist, just as these people are to-day—an associate of Henry the VIII who in his younger days was known by his pacifism. And these people were pacifists because they believed that it was the teaching of Jerome and of St. Augustine, and indeed of Paul and of Christ himself. I think therefore that we ought to hesitate before branding a modern sect because it enunciates beliefs of a pacifistic character. I think any sect to-day which has the courage to come out in this materialistic age and enunciate beliefs of a pacifistic kind bears the marks of the true church in a way that some of our more orthodox churches have not borne it in recent times. I think that is a very far-fetched objection to this sect.

Mr. JACOBS: I do not claim to be an authority on religion, but just for the sake of information who was it said:

Think not that I am come to send peace on earth; I came not to send peace, but a sword.

Mr. BIRD: A member of my hon. friend's race said that.

Mr. JACOBS: Who was it?

Mr. BIRD: I do not need to mention who it was, because at all times that is a name to be mentioned with the greatest of reverence, but I will say that the author of that utterance was in the habit of using language in a metaphorical sense, and that is one of the most outstanding incidents in which our Lord used metaphorical language to instil a great truth into the minds of his followers.

Objections come from a still less worthy section of the community; I refer to the people who think the air should be monopolized by jazz music and prize fights. I put those people last, because I think they are lowest in point of worthiness to be considered in this house. We have not settled the matter at all by ruling out the International Bible Students' Association. The air is being monopolized to such an extent that a good many people who have invested in radios have either got rid of them or put them on the top shelf, simply because in the last two or three years the air has been monopolized by stuff not worth listening to.

I do not agree with my hon. friend from Kindersley in his view that religion should be taken off the air; I do not think it should be taken out of anything where it possibly can be placed. If we are going to take religion off the air what are we going to put in its place—prize fights, jazz music, questionable lectures upon popular science? All these things are going to monopolize the air and get the ear of the people, yet religion must be banned and kept out of it simply because religionists themselves do not happen to agree on certain minor points. I believe that religious controversy is perhaps the one thing most worthy of a place on the air. I do not say it should have an undue place; I do not think it should get more than its share; but what goes deeper to the roots of life than religious controversy? Two winters ago I listened with the greatest of interest to a lecture by a Roman Catholic bishop in Denver on the Mexican situation. Previous to that I had heard nothing about the Mexican situation except what I had read in the Orange Sentinel, and I was surprised to find that there could be another point of view so diametrically opposed to that of the Orange Sentinel. I think, under regulation, that is the very finest thing that could happen to our generation. Mental stagnation is one of the things menacing our age more than anything else; this everlastingly sitting passively and listening to prize fights by proxy and to Irving Berlin with his questionable productions is bringing a blight to the minds and hearts of our generation, but religious controversy, which goes to the depths of our nature and stirs us healthfully, is the very finest thing we could have. I am not one of those who believe that the other fellow's is the heterodox belief and that mine is the orthodox belief. The old story of the man who was defining orthodoxy is that he said, "Orthodoxy is my doxy and heterdoxy is the other man's doxy." I do not believe in that. I think that religious beliefs, held seriously and sincerely, are better for being aired; the truer and more fundamental they are the better for them and for the people. Erroneous beliefs are the better for being broadcast, and there again I disagree with my hon. friend. You cannot root out error by keeping it down; the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church, and every time you try to restrict or keep down you disseminate and fling abroad. I think this debate to-day is the best object lesson of what you succeed in doing the moment you repress or seem to repress, even unintentionally, the activities of any sect whatever. To-day and yesterday the Bible students have received some of the best and cheapest advertising that any sect in Canada has received for a great many years, and it has all come about through what I consider a mistaken act on the part of the minister.

As I said before, in my mind there is no reason whatever to attribute to him any ulterior motive, especially in regard to the fact that he himself belongs to a certain church, because anyone who knows the situation can see quite easily that this is not a case of a Catholic against a Protestant sect; it is a case of all traditional and orthodox sects against a new and seemingly usurping body which, by its insistence, is creating jealousy in the minds of orthodox believers. We live in the twentieth century, and we cannot afford to harbour such jealousies in our minds. Let this sect have all the leeway it can have; if its beliefs are real—and I have no reason to believe they are not—it can do no harm and it can do a lot of good. I sometimes think they are rather irrational, but can anyone tell me of a creed possessed by any other people that is rational? Religious beliefs are not rational; they are not rational propositions; they cannot be defended logically. The fact that these things are repugnant to our reason and to our rational minds is no reason why we should put the people who so believe outside the pale. There is not the most elementary belief possessed by any of us which is not irrational to the man whose logical faculty rules everything else. We cannot afford to stand on a pedestal and look with contempt on the beliefs of a sect of this kind. In John Bunyan's day the Baptists were as trifling and insignificant in England as this sect is in Canada to-day; indeed more so; their beliefs were more repugnant to the traditional beliefs of Englishmen than the beliefs of this sect are to Canadians to-day, yet out of that seed sprung a religious tolerance and liberty in which I think everyone in this house believes to-day.

In conclusion I should like to assure the minister again that I for one have not the least suspicion that there is in his mind anything of an ulterior nature. I can conceive that the situation has been one into which he has been forced by these elements in the community bombarding him with their opinions. I say to him and I say to the house that their opinions are not very worthy of consideration. Bigoted minds and jazz hounds are not the type of people the minister or anyone else should listen to, because in my opinion they are less worthy than this small sect of earnest, believing Christians.

Mr. WARD: I have followed this debate with perhaps a good deal of selfish interest, as I have a great many of these people in my constituency. I have received many communications protesting against the action of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I desire to associate myself with the last speaker in that I do not accuse the minister of anything ulterior in this matter, but I believe he is a victim of a blunder on the part of the officials in his department; I say that frankly. I do not think the action was wholly warranted; I do not think the reasons given to the house are such as we should be expected to accept. For these reasons I hope that before this vote passes the minister will state to the house that he will have an investigation made, and if there is discrimination he will have it removed. It has been stated by hon. members that there is discrimination, and that belief is not wholly removed from my mind. It will make it very much easier for a lot of us if the minister will make such a statement, and I hope he does so before the vote passes.

Mr. SPENCER: Of all the criticism which has been made from both sides of the house with regard to the minister's action I believe the most biting was made by the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary), when he pointed out that the station CJYC was cancelled to make room for others, including CFCA. I should like to know whether the minister can give us an explanation of the action of his department in this respect. Does he question the statement made by the hon. member for South Toronto?

Mr. CARDIN: Mr. Chairman, I deny that imputation. The license of the International Bible Students' Association, or of the Universal Radio of Canada, was not cancelled to favour any other station.

Mr. SPENCER: Probably I should say that the license was not renewed?

Mr. CARDIN: That is not the reason. There is no connection between what is supposed to be favoritism, according to my hon. friend opposite, and the action taken in this particular case.

Mr. McGIBBON: Considering the answer given by the minister to my question this afternoon, that he had not warned these people, would he consider regranting their license on condition that they did not broadcast anything of an offensive nature?

Mr. POWER: You do not look like that in your picture.

Mr. CARDIN: I think I answered that point when I said that no special warning or notice was given before refusing to renew the license. I stated that they were absolutely familiar with the situation as it existed; they knew of the complaints we had received against them, one of the indications of that being that they sent to the department a certain number of letters.

Mr. McGIBBON: It is the latter part of my question I am more particularly interested in. Would the minister be willing to grant them a trial license, say for a month?

Mr. CARDIN: I can only say that an investigation is to be held into the whole situation, and I am ready to place the case of the Universal Radio station before the commission.

Item agreed to.

Marine department—river St. Lawrence ship channel—maintenance and operating dredging fleet, $1,895,000.

Mr. CARDIN: This is the annual vote for the dredging of the St. Lawrence channel from Montreal to Father Point. There is an increase of $373,000 to provide for the reconditioning of certain dredges which are getting old, and rebuilding one or two of them.

Mr. MANION: Is the usual annual vote about this size?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: Could you give us some idea as to the progress being made in dredging this channel?

Mr. CARDIN: The channel from Montreal to Father Point is 30 feet deep at certain points, and we have to dredge a distance of 34 miles before the program of deepening the channel to 35 feet is completed. We expect that it will take five or six years to complete this work.

Mr. GEARY: Is that below Quebec?

Mr. CARDIN: Part is below Quebec and part above.

Mr. GEARY: The channel has not a depth of 35 feet below Quebec?

Mr. CARDIN: Not at all points.

Mr. GEARY: I concluded from the remarks of the member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) that there was nothing to be done there at all.

Mr. CARDIN: There is some dredging to be done.

Mr. GARDINER: What will be the ultimate cost?

Mr. CARDIN: We are spending about $1,800,000 per year, and there will be the same expenditure for five or six years.

Mr. GARDINER: About $10,000,000?

Mr. CARDIN: About that, yes.

Item agreed to.

River St. Lawrence ship channel — for construction of one hopper barge, $315,000.

Mr. MANION: Would the minister explain, please?

Mr. CARDIN: The Department of Railways and Canals being in need of a barge for their work in the Hudson bay, we lent them one, and this is to replace it.

Mr. MANION: Who is constructing the barge?

Mr. CARDIN: It is being done by tender.

Mr. MANION: The lowest tenderer will get the work?

Mr. CARDIN: Oh, yes.

Item agreed to.

To provide for maintenance and operation of Sorel shipyard, $154,000.

Mr. MANION: Would the minister explain?

Mr. CARDIN: This amount is required for the maintenance and operating of the government shipyard in Sorel, where dredges and tugs used in dredging the St. Lawrence are repaired.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the construction of a regulating and retaining dams in the St. Lawrence river, $1,000,000

Mr. MANION: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. CARDIN: A few years ago a commission composed of engineers was placed in charge of the work of studying the problem of regulating the water in the St. Lawrence river from Montreal down to Father Point. This commission, which was composed of Mr. E. E. Haskell, Dean of the College of Civil Engineering, Cornell University; Mr. V. W. Forneret, Superintending Engineer of the St. Lawrence ship channel, and Mr. William J. Stewart, Hydrographer of the Naval Service, who has died since that time, made a study with a view of raising the water more particularly in the harbour of Montreal. They came to the conclusion that by the construction of some submerged dams in the St. Lawrence at certain points they could maintain the water at a higher level in the port of Montreal. It was suggested that submerged dams be established, one in lake St. Peter in the vicinity of Three Rivers, another one to unite the islands at the head of lake St. Peter in the vicinity of Sorel, about forty-five miles below Montreal, and a third a few miles below the port of Montreal. These engineers contended that with these submerged dams we could increase the depth of the water in the harbour of Montreal by nearly two feet and assure that depth throughout the year. That is the object of the expenditure.

Mr. MANION: Has the contract been let, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. CARDIN: No. Nothing has yet been done.

Mr. MANION: Tenders will be called for in the usual manner?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. MANION: Will this amount of a million dollars be spent this year?

Mr. CARDIN: I am not sure but we may be placed in a position to give the contract for the whole thing.

Mr. MANION: What will be the total cost?

Mr. CARDIN: In the vicinity of a million dollars.

Mr. MANION: That will cover the whole thing.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: What depth will these submerged dams be below the water level?

Mr. CARDIN: That depends upon the level of the water at different periods of the year, but generally speaking I think there will be about two or three feet of water above them at low water to avoid any danger from the ice in the spring. When the ice leaves the St. Lawrence in the spring the water rises, but in the summer these dams will be submerged and there will be about two feet of water above them.

Mr. GARDINER: I presume they will be built on either side of the channel?

Mr. CARDIN: They will not be in the channel in any way. They will be built from the shore to a certain distance towards the centre of the river to create obstructions to the flow of water in order to bring the water back into the port of Montreal. We do not propose to dam the St. Lawrence.

Mr. MANION: In regard to item 217 "River St. Lawrence ship channel—for construction of one hopper barge", the minister gave an answer which seemed a little strange at the time. The minister mentioned the Hudson bay. The item speaks about the river St. Lawrence ship channel.

Mr. CARDIN: We lent the barge to the Department of Railways and Canals.

Mr. MANION: To be used in Hudson bay?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes. It is already there.

Mr. CANTLEY: I understand the purpose of these dams is to retard the outflow of the water below Montreal.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. CANTLEY: Is it intended to build all three dams simultaneously, or one at a time? If the latter, which dam does the minister propose to build first?

Mr. CARDIN: The engineers of the department are working on that problem, but the indication is that they will start in the vicinity of Montreal.

Mr. GARDINER: Has the minister information in regard to the experience in other parts of the world on the subject?

Mr. CARDIN: I will frankly say I have not that experience, but the engineers who prepared the report have, I think, procured information from other sources. I am sure they inquired about the possibilities or practicabilities of such a scheme. A report has been prepared by the commission. I am not sure that it was not tabled some years ago. I shall be pleased to supply a copy of it to my hon. friend.

Item agreed to.

Lighthouse and coast service — salaries and allowances to lightkeepers, $750,000.

Mr. POULIOT: I have just a question to ask the minister in connection with Mr. Dube, lighthouse keeper at Brandy Pot. I should like to know if there are different grades for lighthouse keepers and, if so, in what grade he is.

Mr. CARDIN: I regret very much that I am not in a position to give the information to my hon. friend at present. I have a great deal of information before me, but unfortunately, as often happens, the information asked for is not at hand. I shall be pleased to supply the information to my hon. friend.

Mr. POULIOT: Who compose the board that looks after the grading of lighthouse keepers?

Mr. CARDIN: The members of the lighthouse board are the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the chief engineer of the department, the commissioner of lights, the director of pilotage, Mr. Forneret, superintending engineer of the St. Lawrence ship channel, a representative of the shipping federation, and also a representative of the Dominion Marine Association.

Mr. POULIOT: What is the quorum?

Mr. CARDIN: Generally speaking they are all there when there is a meeting, because practically all are officers of the department. There is, in addition, only the representative of the shipping federation and of the Dominion Marine Association.

Mr. POULIOT: Do they meet very often?

Mr. CARDIN: Requests come in to us for the establishment of lighthouses, and when we have a sufficient number of these representations we call a meeting of the lighthouse board. There is no stated time for its sittings. The board meets when there are sufficient representations to be dealt with.

Mr. POULIOT: I should like to say a few words on behalf of that lighthouse keeper, whom the Minister of Justice in this house knows very well. Brandy Pot island is not far from Hare island, in the middle of the St. Lawrence river, just in front of Riviere du Loup between the counties of Temiscouata and Charlevoix-Saguenay. The river is very wide, some twelve to fourteen miles, at that point. This lighthouse is of the utmost importance to oceanic shipping. These vessels take their direction from that lighthouse when they go up and down the river. I am very well acquainted with the lighthouse keeper, who has been there for several years, and not only does he perform his duties very efficiently, but in addition, he has performed a great deal of other work for the Department of Marine and Fisheries, in that he is a carpenter and has made all the repairs to the lighthouse with his own hands; so I do not think that it has cost the Department of Marine and Fisheries or the Department of Public Works very much for repairs to that lighthouse. That is the first point.

The second point is this, that that light is of the utmost importance to every steamship and sailing vessel in the St. Lawrence river. There are some very dangerous reefs on the east side of the island, and the light is, of course, of the greatest importance. There is another reason why that light is important, and that is because there is not far from the lighthouse a very good harbour where sailing vessels can take shelter in bad weather.

There is another consideration which I wish to submit to the committee, and that is that the lighthouse keeper is kept at his station, because of ice, sometimes as late as New Year's, and this year he had to stay there until the middle of January. Then he was taken off by the Montcalm and left at Sydney, Cape Breton, and had to come on home from there. For these reasons I am asking for an increase of salary for this lighthouse keeper, and that he be put in a class with the other lighthouse keepers occupying important positions and carrying on very important duties. I hope the minister will have a kind word to say.

Mr. CARDIN: I will see if he can be given more favourable consideration.

Item stands.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house met at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

LONDON AND PORT BURWELL RAILWAY COMPANY

Mr. M. F. HEPBURN (West Elgin) moved the third reading of Bill No. 58, to incorporate the London and Port Burwell Railway Company.

Hon. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac-Addington): Mr. Speaker, this bill has been considered on three different occasions by the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines; it has been considered in committee of the whole, and I presume the house should be, and probably is, ready to vote on it. I therefore move, seconded by Mr. White (London):

That the question be now put.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is moved by Mr. Hepburn that Bill No. 58, to incorporate the London and Port Burwell Railway Company, be now read a third time. Mr. Edwards (Frontenac) moves that the question be now put. The question is on the previous question. Those in favour of the previous question will kindly say "aye".

Mr. TAYLOR: I am in favour of the question being put, Mr. Speaker, but I had a notice on the order paper of an amendment which I was prepared to move on the motion for the third reading of this bill.

Mr. WHITE (London): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. When a motion is made that the question be now put, I understand that it is not debatable.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, you are all wrong.

Mr. SPEAKER: The previous question is always debatable, but the hon. member must confine his remarks strictly to the question.

Mr. McGIBBON: That is a reversal of your own ruling a few days ago, Mr. Speaker; then you decided it was not debatable.

Mr. SPEAKER: I never decided that the previous question was not debatable. On the occasion referred to by the hon. gentleman the question was put, but no debate was had on it.

Mr. McGIBBON: I do not disagree with your ruling to-night, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: The point was not raised the other day. I put the question that was handed to me, and there was no debate. It seemed to be the desire of the house to proceed to a vote at once.

Mr. TAYLOR: Mr. Speaker, as I was waiting for the motion for third reading of this bill, I feel that the motion of the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) is quite out of order. I wish to move an amendment, seconded by Mr. Cayley:

That the following words be inserted as clause 4:—

"The capital stock of the company shall be five hundred thousand dollars."

Mr. SPEAKER: No amendment can be moved to the previous question.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. SPEAKER: Those in favour of the previous question being now put will kindly say "aye".

Some hon. MEMBERS: Aye.

Mr. SPEAKER: Those opposed will kindly say "nay".

Some hon. MEMBERS: Nay.

Mr. SPEAKER: I believe the nays have it. I declare the motion lost.

Mr. TAYLOR: Now I desire to move, seconded by Mr. Cayley, the amendment to this bill according to my notice of motion:

That the following words be inserted in Bill No. 58, respecting the London and Port Burwell Railway Company, as clause 4:—

"The capital stock of the company shall be five hundred thousand dollars."

Mr. SPEAKER: The house having decided that the question be not now put, the motion for third reading of this bill will go to the foot of the order paper. The next order is—

Mr. TAYLOR: Mr. Speaker, I submit that the motion by the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) was out of order. Do you rule it was in order?

Mr. SPEAKER: It was in order.

Hon. C. A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I submit that the hon. member for Norfolk-Elgin (Mr. Taylor) had given notice of an amendment which he intended to move on the motion for the third reading of this bill. My hon. friend from across the way (Mr. Edwards) moved that the question be now put before the hon. member for Norfolk-Elgin had an opportunity of moving the amendment which stands in his name. The motion that the question be now put was defeated. Are we to understand that that has the effect of killing the bill?

Mr. SPEAKER: No, it goes to the foot of the list. This is what Bourinot says at page 326:

If the motion—

That is, that this question be now put.

—be carried the Speaker will immediately put the question without further debate.

That is, if the motion of the hon. member for Frontenac had been carried I would have put the question immediately.

But if the previous question be resolved in the negative—

As it was.

—then the Speaker cannot put the main motion, which is consequently superseded. The main motion may, however, be revived on a future day, as the negative of the previous question merely binds the Speaker not to put the main question at that time.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Mr. Speaker, one point has been entirely forgotten. When the hon. member for Frontenac moved the previous question, the hon. member for Norfolk-Elgin raised a point of order and asked Your Honour if the motion as put by the hon. member for Frontenac was in order. This you had not decided; you simply called the previous question.

Mr. SPEAKER: This is my recollection of the facts. I rose to read the motion for the third reading, but immediately I saw the hon. member for Frontenac, and he moved the previous question. Then the hon. member for Norfolk-Elgin rose and read his amendment which he proposed to move, and I told him that he could not amend the previous question.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): That is right.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. SPEAKER: Then the motion was put, and it was negatived, and logically the question cannot be now put. The house has so decided. This action does not kill the bill. It is simply superseded and goes to the bottom of the list.

Mr. GARDINER: That was some of his own medicine; he had better take it.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I never moved the previous question on any occasion.

Mr. DUNNING: Just to elucidate our future proceedings, Mr. Speaker—if on the next occasion that this bill comes up some hon. gentleman desiring to move the previous question catches your eye, shall we then be again in this position?

Mr. SPEAKER: No.

Mr. DUNNING: The previous questior can be moved only once?

Mr. SPEAKER: It has been defeated.

Mr. DUNNING: And cannot be moved again?

Mr. SPEAKER: Not at this stage.

Mr. POWER: Mr. Speaker, on the next occasion when this bill comes before the house the previous question may be moved on any amendment that is being proposed.

Mr. SPEAKER: There is no previous question on an amendment.

EDMONTON, DUNVEGAN AND BRITISH COLUMBIA RAILWAY COMPANY

The house resumed from May 4, consideration in committee of Bill No. 57, respecting the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway Company—Mr. Kennedy—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. LETELLIER: Mr. Chairman, I wish to take this opportunity on the bill sponsored by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy), not to oppose any development of railways in British Columbia, but to place on Hansard certain resolutions which I have received. In order that I may do so adequately I shall ask hon. members to bear with me while I express myself in my mother tongue.

(Translation): Mr. Chairman, I am delighted in being able to address the house on the subject of railways. In no way am I opposed to the expansion of railways, however, the question is sufficiently important for the committee to again discuss the bill submitted to the house, so as to avoid any possible error. If I mention any possible error, it is because just recently the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) himself stated to this committee that he was not in a position to furnish us with certain information which consequently led to an adjournment of the debate and placed the responsibility on the hon. member for a fair share of the delay which this bill must undergo. The hon. member for Elgin West (Mr. Hepburn) speaking in the house on May 4 last, stated that this measure should be the object of further study, and my opinion is, that this committee should earnestly take up its study and if necessary refer it back to the select standing committee on railways. The fact that this line is a private enterprise should make us the more cautious. Generally, these companies, after meeting with a certain amount of disappointment, appeal to the government for subsidies, then a few years later when they have squeezed out of the line every possible profit, they cease operations, it is then that the government are forced to operate the railway at their own expense, if they cannot find a responsible company to take the line over. Here is an example of what I am asserting: in 1925 a railway company in my own riding was operating a line; after obtaining from the government many thousands of dollars and having squeezed out all possible profits from the enterprise, the company ceased operations, and I was obliged to earnestly request the government to take the necessary means to continue operating this line. While on the subject, I wish to thank the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), also the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning), and a number of my colleagues, who gave me their strong support at the time. Thanks to the government, expropriation proceedings were taken before the exchequer court and the line was purchased by the Canadian National; a few months later it was resold to the Canadian Pacific which, to-day, is operating the line, and I hope will soon realize very handsome profits. However, there is still a portion of this line which is not operated. I trust that this powerful company so admirably managed, not only in the province I reside in, but throughout the whole country, will find it possible to put into operation that part of the railway so as to link it with the Maine Central, on the United States side. My constituents are anxious to see the whole of this line operated not only for the advantage it may bring to my county, but so that the beautiful province of Quebec may have its due share of railways and compare favourably with other provinces.

Recently, sir, the newspapers of Edmonton, and among these the Edmonton Bulletin, reported that the Hon. Vernon W. Smith, Minister of Railways in the province of Alberta, had expressed his astonishment to hear that this measure, sponsored by the hon. member for Peace River, met with such strong opposition on the part of the eastern members. I wish to convey to the Hon. Mr. Smith the assurance that we are greatly interested in the development and prosperity of that vast region of the Peace River, to which this bill refers. However, I shall take the opportunity which the remarks of the Hon. Mr. Smith afford me, to state that if the people of the Peace River region wish to obtain certain railway development, they should warn their representatives to be more indulgent towards the members on the right, when they bring up measures in the interest of the people not only of the province of Quebec but of the whole Dominion. There is a proverb which says: Give and you shall receive. The hon. member for Peace River was unable to surround himslf with friends who would have been well disposed to reciprocate the help he might have extended in the development of railways in the other provinces.

The people of certain counties in the eastern townships, as well as those of Richelieu, Yamaska and Drummond have for ever so long requested the construction of a railway. The representatives of these ridings would be very pleased if they could obtain this railway so long expected, and which would be advantageous not only to those counties but to the greater portion of the eastern townships. Instead of receiving their goods by way of Montreal, the manufacturers and the public as a whole would be served by this line. They could forward their goods through the port of Sorel and at less expense if this railway was built. I have received resolutions from various boards of trade appealing to the government in this matter.

A few years ago the member for Matane introduced a bill bearing the No. 24. An Act incorporating the Pabos, Amqui and Edmundston Railway Company, it was given its first reading on March 22, 1920, however this railway was not approved of.

Mr. Chairman, I trust this committee will not refuse to listen for a few moments to the reading of the request lately made by the Board of Trade of Amqui with reference to the Gaspé peninsula:

The Gaspé peninsula has reached the turning point in its history; it is said, that it is on the eve of being rediscovered. And it is not too soon. At the time of the discovery of the new world, European navigators were continously seeking a passage to India and sailed towards the west, coming to a stop, after they had found out their mistake, this accounts for the interior of the country being settled before the coast which nevertheless is nearer to the old continent.

No doubt the Gaspé peninsula is rich enough in natural resources and sufficiently picturesque to draw one's attention; but we are living in an epoch when merit is not always acknowledged, and that is why it is sometimes necessary to make a little fuss over a name. The Board of Trade therefore wishes to do its bit.

While the Gaspé boundaries do not extend as far as Montmagny, it is not the less almost a province, six times as large as Prince Edward Island. Experts contend that its territory comprises 70,000,000 cords of pulpwood; engineers find that there is place for the settlement of about fifty parishes; its soil is of the best and well watered; there are sufficient water powers for the needs of the region; fisheries exist which can compare favourably with the finest in the world. Within the last few years mines, of inexhaustible wealth have been discovered. We do not wish to mention its natural beauties, its picturesque landscapes which attract tourists from all parts, as we especially wish to interest business people. Owing to its geographical situation, Gaspé is the part of the country nearest to Europe, by about 300 miles; Gaspé, with railway facilities to Montreal and the western cities by way of Amqui, is nearer by again 300 miles or more, to the large centres than is any other port on this side of the Atlantic, Notwithstanding all these advantages, the Gaspé peninsula up to the present time has been considered of little importance. Means of communication are lacking, its population must depend on its local resources, the young people must seek work elsewhere.

What is the remedy to all these ills? A railway, a line linking Gaspé to Amqui and connecting with the National Railways.

The development of the country, the progress of industry require that ports be build for the export of our products; Halifax and Hudson Bay will not suffice, and there are on the Gaspé coast at least six ports which can be improved, at a low cost, and become winter ports.

We think that our turn has come to be placed on the same footing as the other parts of the country, and we humbly request the governments at Ottawa and Quebec not to forget the Gaspé peninsula, nor always neglect it as it has been the case up to the present time.

The interest of the whole country demands it. Amqui, February, 1928.

Other resolutions have been presented. I think they are of the utmost importance as this honourable house will shortly ascertain.

We learn through the newspapers that within the last few years the Gaspé people have been asking for the construction of a railway, looked upon as a necessity to insure the future of this vast region, the area of which covers about 12,000 square miles—most of which forming a plateau of very rich arable land covered with timber which cannot be got out by utilizing the rivers, the sub-soil is highly mineralized: lead, zinc, silver, copper and gold are to be found, as it has been shown by prospecting and mining operations undertaken within the last ten years. In his 1927 report, Mr. F. J. Alcock, official geologist of the Canadian government expresses himself as follows: To the geological viewpoint, the interior of Gaspé offers very attractive prospects. "The discovery of a number of veins has abundantly shown the richness of these mineral deposits. However, it is difficult to travel in that region; there are very few roads and they are rather in poor condition. The provincial government has already done a great deal for the mining development of that region by assisting in the construction of highways". It is this Gaspé plateau extending in length for 150 miles which we are seeking to open up to settlement, mining and timber development, and, at the same time, further the ends of agriculture. It is with this object in view that we request the immediate construction of a railway through the interior of the Gaspé peninsula. This is requested both in the town of Gaspé and at the other extremity of the peninsula, that is in the upper part of the Matapedia valley. It was also the desire expressed by the member for Matane (Mr. Dionne) when, speaking on the budget in this House, on February 21, 1928, he requested the construction of that railway which he designated by the name that indicates its lay out, the Gaspé Matapedia Edmundston Railway. We beseech all members to support the request of the hon. member for Matane, a request made to the hon Minister of Railways, also communicated to the cabinet ministers representing that district of Quebec, as well as to members more directly interested in this project. This request was simultaneously made by both the Boards of Trade of Amqui and Sayabec. We estimate that the construction of the Gaspe-Matapedia portion, which is the most pressing one to-day, would cost between seven and eight million dollars. We beseech our colleagues to consider the railway situation of Canada as a whole. Even after receiving the grant of these $8,000,000 for that section of our province there cannot possibly be any fear that we shall have received more than our fair share. Let us, to be more brief and clear, divide the country in four sections and with the help of Canada's official statistics for 1926, let us endeavour to discover what important part each section plays, what is the share of each in railway mileage, what traffic each section supplies to feed these railways, and what would be the cost to each to own and operate these railways. Let us group together: 1st the Maritime and British Columbia provinces; 2nd the three Prairie provinces; 3rd Ontario and 4th Quebec, let us examine the following table:

Provinces	Area	Population	Population per cent	Railways	National Wealth
1. Maritime	407,039	1,604,015	17·35	7,755	2,846,102 535
2. Prairies	759,116	2,074,600	22·26	16,561	6,846,469,347
3. Ontario	407,270	3,145,600	33·01	10,908	7,353,397,816
4. Quebec	700,000	2,361,800	26·87	4,797	5,541,818,967

Provinces	Tonnage unloaded	Tonnage loaded	Value subject to taxes	Income and sales taxes
1. Maritime	9,308,932	11,558,451	121,557,171	5,964,211
2. Prairies	11,397,809	21,703,745	145,590,971	5,852,054
3. Ontario	34,697,600	21,408,268	466,678,836	26,918,542
4. Quebec	1,898,914	12,043,243	267,852,358	19,100,212

Provinces	Customs and Excise	Post Offices	Tonnage per mile		Total taxes
			Unloaded	Loaded
	$	$			$
1. Maritime	8,849,616	4,979,664	1,200	1,490	19,793,491
2. Prairies	8,550,489	8,119,211	688	1,310	22,521,754
3. Ontario	48,738,284	13,067,423	2,264	1,962	88,724,249
4. Quebec	32,915,354	5,982,415	2,481	2,510	57,997,981

According to the figures stated we can conclude as follows: Ist the Prairie section with a territory slightly larger than that of Quebec and a slightly smaller population has 16,561 miles of railway; 2nd the four maritime provinces with a population more than 30 per cent inferior to that of Quebec, have 7,755 miles, while Quebec's share is but 4,797 miles, which is too little if we consider its size, population and value as a national asset. Yet, Quebec and Ontario, the two oldest provinces of Canada, paid in 1925-1926 $146,722,230, for the administration of the country, railways included, they have both together but 15,707 miles of railway. The other seven provinces pay only $42,215,245 and have 24,316 miles of railway. Note that the amount paid by Ontario is $88,724,249, and that paid by Quebec is $57,997,981.

A fair distribution of railways between the four Canadian sections should take place according to their respective population, that is in a ratio of 47 miles per 10,000 people; the Maritime and British Columbia provinces would have 7,538 instead of 7,755 miles; the Prairie provinces 10,247 instead of 16,561 miles; Ontario 14,781 instead of 10,908 miles; and Quebec's share would be 11,096 instead of 4,796 miles. Therefore the Maritime section has 217 miles more than its share and the Prairies 6,314 miles; while Ontario would be entitled to 3,873 miles more, and Quebec to also 6,299 more. That was the situation as it existed two years ago. Since then new railways have been under construction, always in the West. The 1928 program includes four important new branches. We do not contend that the west has too many lines, but that Quebec has not enough. If the Quebec members show a sense of generosity in promoting the general welfare of the country and of the west especially, even though they practically control the administration by their numbers, they expect in return the no less generous co-operation of all the members outside of Quebec, when it is a question of carrying out necessary work for the normal progress of their province and the country as a whole. It is an easy matter to show that Quebec suffers from the lack of railway transportation. Its normal expansion in connection with agricultural and industrial progress is greatly impeded by it. The rural population, weary of the isolation caused by the great distances which separate it from transportation lines in order to reach the markets where its products are sold, desert the farm for the cities, or else emigrates to the United States where living conditions seem to be easier. We must therefore conclude that we need more railways in Quebec. The most remote parts are those that have the greatest need of them and the Gaspé peninsula especially suffers from this lack of railways; it requests the construction of this railway which will link Gaspé, through its interior, to the Matapedia valley. Practically, this railway will cross almost in a bee line from Gaspé to Sayabec along the heights of the plateau and the heads of rivers. The reasons which seem to point to Sayabec, as the terminus for this first branch line are the following: the Canadian National Railway has already at Sayabec extensive yards with a capacity for 400 cars, scales to weigh cars, a "Y" to turn the locomotives around and a shunter is in daily use. It is the locality of the Matapedia valley which at present supplies the most traffic to the National railway. There are extensive level grounds for the construction of the necessary shops for a terminus. If later on the traffic needs a further extension to Edmundston, New Brunswick; there is a natural pass at Sayabec on the same level as the present railway that will facilitate the crossing of the mountains which seem to block the way everywhere else.

Considering our position in the Dominion relatively to the other parts of the country, we are perfectly warranted in requesting this 150 miles of railway as part of what is due to us. We feel confident that we can depend upon this spirit of fairness and patriotism which animates all federal members, also upon the zeal of the Quebec members for the population they represent, as well as the impartial devotion of the members of the government in order to insure the construction of the Gaspé railway in a near future.

In closing my remarks, Sir, I wish simply to add that the hon. Minister of Railways is certainly deserving of our congratulations for what he has accomplished in the past, and I feel certain that, as well as the government, he desires the expansion of our railways not only in our beautiful province of Quebec, but equally throughout all the provinces which make up Canada.

Mr. KENNEDY: I understand that when this bill was up some nights ago doubt was expressed as to who was asking for the legislation. There is an application to the Alberta government for a charter to enable the government to construct a railway to serve a settlement which is about fifteen years old and in which there has been produced in the last two years something like 2 million bushels of wheat. The settlers are farming from fifteen to ninety miles from a railway. I do not intend to ask that the bill be reported; I do not want to see anyone move the previous question. I want to make that explanation, and if anyone wishes to block the bill he is at liberty to do so and to take the responsibility.

Mr. SYLVESTRE (Translation): Mr. Chairman, when this bill was under consideration on May 4, last, I was unable to complete the remarks that I wished to make, as the time allotted for private bills had expired. To-night I want to complete them.

Considering that there are quite a number of French-Canadians settled in the region of the Peace River, I am sure that the sponsor of Bill No. 57 (Mr. Kennedy) must be pleased of the interest we display in this measure. Let us first examine clause 2 of the bill. It reads as follows:

> The Company way within two years from the date of the passing of this Act commence to construct the lines of railway authorized by section one of this Act, and may within five years of the said date, complete the said lines of railway; and, if within the said periods respectively, the said lines are not commenced or are not completed and put in operation, the powers of construction conferred upon the Company by Parliament, shall cease and be null and void as respects so much thereof as then remains uncompleted.

This company is not in earnest. It asks for very extensive privileges, but practically assumes no responsibilities.

As you have just noted, it is stated at the outset of this clause that the company "may" be granted and as a matter of fact it is granted a delay of two years "to begin the construction of the railway lines" that clause 1 authorizes it to construct.

The reasons given by the hon. member in support of his bill permits us to foresee what certain persons intend to do should this bill be adopted. According to the statements made by the prime minister of Alberta and certain members of his cabinet, we note that the intention of all those who are interested in this project is simply, once the bill is passed, to sell their rights and hand over their charter to the National Railways. It is an open secret that on April 21, last, the prime minister of Alberta (Mr. Brownlee) came to Ottawa, and even went down to Montreal to consult the president of the National railways on the subject. Following this interview, he could not do otherwise than state that he hoped the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway Company would be purchased by the National railways.

On the other hand, if we look up the history of the National Railway Company we can ascertain for ourselves that at various times private companies sold and conceded to this company, their rights, charter and stock, thus imposing on the ratepayers further expenses and taxes.

I shall go one step further, sir. I do not believe that the hon. member for Peace River is himself in earnest with regard to this bill, because in April last when this measure came up before the house, he could not supply the hon. Minister of Railways with information as to some figures. The hon. member should have had a knowledge of all the facts regarding this measure, moreover, this railway is on the south shore of the Peace River, while the majority of settlers are established on the northern side of the river. It is therefore seen that this railway will not be of any advantage or benefit, except to a few persons. This committee must not accept this bill nor grant the privileges sought to the detriment of the public's interest; the National railways have many improvements to make to their system, in every province of this Dominion, before ever thinking of purchasing a line which exists but in the minds of its promoters. Usually, when a company obtains a charter to build a railway, it is always cautious, through the medium of its engineers, to select the most adaptable roadway possible for the construction of its line; and when the time comes to sell its rights, if it succeeds, the company purchasing them is forced to pay a much higher price, many times more than what it is worth, because they cannot ignore those who obtained those rights. I believe that, in the present case, the intentions of the company do not differ from those of other companies which have acted likewise. In the past, railway branches where one could find but old ties and twisted rails, were sold a hundred times more than what they were worth. To-day we are loaded with an enormous debt; we have heavy interests to meet, and I am of the opinion that we should not add new taxes to those which already heavily burden the ratepayers.

Mr. Chairman, this question must not be discussed in a light manner; this bill should be returned to the committee on railways to be closely studied.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, I call your attention to the fact that it is nine o'clock.

Mr. DIONNE: One minute more.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No, it is nine o'clock.

Progress reported.

56103—233

Mr. SPEAKER: The hour for private bills being exhausted the house will revert to committee of supply.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF MARINE AND FISHERIES

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Salaries and allowances to lightkeepers, $750,000.

Mr. POULIOT: I do not want to delay the house, but I wish to refer to the case of the keeper of the Brandy Pot lighthouse. The present keeper is in class 7 and I would ask the department to put him in class 5, for the reasons I have already given. I have obtained some information from Mr. Hawken, the acting deputy minister, who tells me that it is hard to do anything more. If it is impossible to promote Mr. Dube, the keeper of this lighthouse, from class 7 to class 5 I will ask the committee to reduce the salary of the acting deputy minister to $1,200 a year, which is the salary being paid the lighthouse keeper at Brandy Pot.

The second point to which I wish to direct the attention of the committee is very simple. There is another lighthouse between Temiscouata county and the Tadoussac river, on Red Islet, which is a small island in the middle of the river. The lighthouse keeper there, and the lighthouse keeper at Notre Dame de l'Ile Verte, both need sailing vessels, because there are no bridges between these islands and the mainland and they have to carry barrels of gasoline or oil and other things for the lighthouse in addition to articles required for their personal use. I will ask the minister to give instructions that the lighthouse keepers at Red Islet and Notre Dame de l'Ile Verte be provided with sailing vessels of the ordinary size, such as they formerly had.

Mr. GOTT: What salary does this lighthouse keeper receive now?

Mr. POULIOT: I spoke about two different things; I mentioned the lighthouse keeper at Brandy Pot and now I ask for sailing vessels for the other two lighthouse keepers.

Mr. CARDIN: I am not in a position to give a definite answer to my hon. friend now because I am not familiar with the conditions to which he has referred, but I can promise him that I will look into the matter and will do the best I can to meet his requests.

Mr. NEILL: I have a matter I want to bring up under this item; I refer to the holidays of the lighthouse keepers. It appears that a petition was presented to the government about two months ago by the Amalgamated Society of Civil Servants of Canada, which is the largest association of civil servants in Canada, drawing attention to the position of lighthouse keepers in relation to their annual leave. As the matter now stands, a lighthouse keeper taking an annual holiday has to provide and pay for a substitute during this leave of absence, and also has to assume responsibility during that period. I may explain that it is not so easy for a private person to obtain a substitute, and in addition it is very expensive for him to pay the steamer fare to his particular lighthouse. Moreover, he not only has to pay for the substitute but he also must be responsible for any action of that man, who may inadvertently do something to damage the machinery, for which the wretched lighthouse keeper, who is no more responsible than I am, must suffer the penalty, either by paying for the damage or by losing his position.

I will read from a letter which I have received:

> For some considerable time lighthouse keepers have considered this an injustice, in view of the fact that other civil servants are not under this disadvantage, but are paid for their leave of absence.

I may state that these lighthouse keepers are civil servants in every sense of the word; they are under the act, and there is no opportunity of side-stepping by saying that they do not come under the act. They are under the act; they are appointed by the Civil Service Commission, so they are entitled to the same advantages enjoyed by the other civil servants. This letter goes on to say:

> It has also been considered that, were the matter discussed impartially, the justice of the lighthouse keepers' plea for treatment similar to other civil servants could hardly be denied.

They evidently are not familiar with the customs and usages of the House of Commons at Ottawa. We have heard a great deal lately about freedom of speech; there is such a thing, Mr. Chairman, as the rights of the minority, which is sometimes quoted in the same connection. I have an idea that if these people numbered 6,000, as the civil servants do in Ottawa, instead of being scattered throughout the country, their demands would be acceded to, and the justice of their case would have been recognized long ere this. Surely we are not going to say that the government is actuated by political expediency rather than by justice. These people have no political pull whatever; they are scattered throughout the country and there are only a few in any one district. I do not suppose there are twenty lighthouses in the district I represent, and probably only about half the keepers would be able to vote because it is impossible for them to leave their lighthouses and travel the long distances necessary to get to the polls. So I do not expect any political or personal advantage from my plea to-night; it is made simply on the merits of the case.

I believe the civil servants at Ottawa have twenty-one days annual leave as holidays—it is provided for by the department—but in addition to that, whether it is a matter of custom or law, they are allowed two weeks' sick leave annually. If they have a casual cold or a headache produced by being out at a dance the night before, they are allowed their sick leave without a doctor's certificate, as long as it does not exceed two weeks in the year. When they have a real sickness, and a doctor's certificate is produced, they are again leniently dealt with. I have no objection to this at all, but I am only drawing a comparison between the life of a civil servant in Ottawa, with all the attendant social advantages, and at least five weeks' leave in the year, and the men out on a barren rock who get three weeks' leave if they supply a substitute and pay his wages and are responsible for anything he may do in that period.

I sometimes think it is a good thing to bring an argument home to ourselves. I wonder how many hon. members of this house would like to be stuck on an isolated light station month in and month out, year in and year out, hardly able to take even the necessary exercise, because there are no facilities for walking, no chance for any kind of amusement, no hobby, no one to associate with but one's wife. I have no desire to belittle the blessings of married life—I dare not do it if I would because though my wife does not read Hansard some busybody would be sure to draw her attention to it—I do not wish to deprecate the blessings of married life at all, but when a diet is composed entirely of sweetness even it becomes unpalatable in time. I remember hearing a lecture many years ago by the Arctic explorer Nansen. He described how he and his partner had to spend a winter in a remote part of the Arctic region. These men were bound together by the ties of mutual friendship, and you would think they would have been glad to associate with each other, but he told how they would start out in the morning without any conversation; one would go east and the other west in order to get away from each other's society. They would return in the evening and there would be no conversation at all except that compelled by their joint interest. He said that he was able to laugh at it afterwards, and they remained friends, but the fact of there being such ill-will between them was so unjustified that it apparently made it much worse; they simply hated each other. This is the condition which might arise between a man and his wife when they are placed on a barren rock somewhere off the coast of British Columbia. They have nothing to look at except the wave-tossed sea. It rains there six months in the year, and it can rain more in two days there than it does here in the whole year. If you think that is a nice prospect to look out at year after year, you are a better judge than I am.

I am emphasizing this case on behalf of the all-year-round permanent men, and not the men who are paid $15 a month to go out and light a light every night. I am speaking for the men who are employed twenty-four hours in the day every day in the year, not the men who attend these petty little lights where they can go out in an hour's time and do everything required. I suggest that these permanent men have a legal claim. I could read the whole act if necessary to impress it on the committee, but the act provides that civil servants shall have three weeks holidays per year, and it does not say that they shall have to provide out of their own pockets for a substitute, transport him over a hundred miles, and be responsible for his errors.

Mr. BRADY: I do not wish to delay the house, but I should like to say a few words on behalf of the lighthouse keepers, not only along the British Columbia coast, but along the Atlantic coast as well. I agree with everything the member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) has said here to-night. I wonder how many people in Canada realize the lives that are lived year in and year out by these wonderful, heroic people who are guarding our seacoasts. There are twelve or thirteen lighthouses in the constituency I represent, and I visited five or six of them last year and found conditions prevailing which I am sure will appeal to the minister and to the government as deserving of consideration. These people have no holidays; if they need a holiday they must get a substitute and pay him from their slender salaries. These salaries range from $517.50 minimum to a maximum of $2,940 per year. I consider it an absolute duty that these people be given at least a fortnight's holiday, and they should not be obliged to pay the substitutes out of their small incomes. I am confident that the people of Canada one and all would be in accord with any move in that direction.

I visited a certain lighthouse where a man and his wife lived, and they told me a story so pathetic and so realistic that it would touch the chord of any heart that was responsive to any appeal to human kindness. Here is the story: Every month or so the feeling of isolation and loneliness played upon them to such an extent that one or the other would get into a deep fit of melancholy. For some three years neither of them could understand the other, and they lived a tragic life until one day it dawned upon the husband that his wife was not at fault. They agreed upon a compromise whereby when either of them got into one of these melancholy moods, say if the wife refused to get breakfast in the morning and moped around the island rock, the husband would do the work instead. This depression would often last for a week, and then the wife would recover, but a fortnight later the husband might fall into one of these moods. They had tended this lighthouse for six years without any holidays. Surely we are not so hardhearted as to take the attitude that those who hold the frontier, those who endure this isolation, are not entitled to a little consideration. Surely they deserve at least a fortnight's holiday without being obliged to pay for a substitute out of their earnings. I am sure it would meet with the approbation of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and everybody else who listens to the story.

Mr. EVANS: I brought this matter to the attention of the Prime Minister some time ago and he promised to look into it particularly in regard to the lightkeepers of Greenly island. I hold in my hand a petition presented to the minister and the Minister of Finance last year. The rates of salaries for Cape Race and Sand Head are $3,600. Out of that they have to pay four assistants. The United States salary is $8,520 for the same work. For Estevan point, S.L., W.L., Belle Isle, Lennard island, Pachana and Langara the present salary is $2,940 and four assistants have to be paid out of that amount. For Bird rocks, northeast Belle Isle and Pelee passage, the present salary is $2,820 out of which they have to pay three assistants. This is evidence enough to the committee that this class of servants needs looking into. To say nothing of the loneliness of their life, I think we should give them a wage that will at least furnish them with a decent living.

Mr. NEILL: Just before the minister replies—and I think the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Brady), would like an answer to the question of holiday policy before we go on with the question of pay, which is a totally different matter—I should like to remind the committee that we have a relief officer in the case of telegraph operators. The government provides a relief officer who goes around to the various scattered telegraph stations. He relieves this man one month and another man the next. He can work it in at small expense and give satisfaction to the service, because they are always sure of a competent man to do the work.

Mr. GOTT: The substituting lightkeepers would not be detained long at the lighthouses in the constituency represented by the hon. member for Rosetown.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Some time ago the hon. member for Rosetown brought to the attention of the house the question of some reward being given to the lighthouse keepers of Greenly island for what they did in connection with the Bremen. The three lighthouse keepers are at present receiving a salary of $2,100 per annum. It was evident from the applause that came from the house that they endorsed the idea of giving them some recognition in connection with what they did. Has any action been taken in the matter as a result of what occurred on that occasion?

Mr. CARDIN: Notice has been taken of the representations made but so far nothing has been done. We are considering what we can do in the way of recompense to these people.

Mr. ADSHEAD: The matter is not dropped?

Mr. CARDIN: No. In reply to the representations made for holidays being given to the lightkeepers, I am ready to say that I sympathize with the case which has been placed before the committee, but this grant would cost a very large amount. If I am not mistaken, the additional expenditure would be in the vicinity of $200,000 a year.

Mr. NEILL: What for?

Mr. CARDIN: Supposing we grant them twenty-one days' holiday, we cannot get a substitute without paying him at least five dollars a day and there is a certain amount of expense if we make him travel all along the coast. This will bring the cost for each lighthouse to at least $125. I do not know at present how many lights we have in that class, but they are numerous and it does not take a large number of lighthouses to increase very materially the amount of the expenditure. I am not saying that with the view of expressing any opposition to the request made. I am quite ready to look into the matter and to consider it most favourably. But it must be remembered that salaries and allowances to lightkeepers have been increased very materially since 1911. For example, in 1911 the total amount that we were paying for salaries and allowances to lightkeepers was $450,000. For 1927-28 the total had reached $700,000, and this year we are asking for $750,000. When the increases were granted to the lightkeepers, they were granted on account of the exceptional situation in which they were placed and all the facts which have been brought out to-night were taken into consideration at that time. For example, take a man who is in class 1 lightkeeper at Cape Race, Newfoundland. The maximum that he was receiving in 1911 was $2,300, but the maximum in 1927 is $4,700, or more than double.

Mr. EVANS: How many helpers does he have to provide for out of that?

Mr. CARDIN: Two.

Mr. NEILL: For No. 1 class I think the minister will find there are four assistants.

Mr. CARDIN: I have not the number of assistants for that particular place, but for Belle Isle, southwest, the maximum in 1911 was $1,900, and at present it is $3,060. Out of that the man has to provide two assistants. The same scale of increases applies in regard to the salaries of all the others. I repeat that I am giving these details not with the view of showing any adverse disposition in regard to the matter but only in order that the committee may become familiar with the circumstances of the case. I still promise I will look into the matter and if there is any possibility of granting the request, I shall be only too pleased to do so.

Mr. NEILL: I would not like it to go forth that anyone was asking, on a plea of this kind, for an expenditure of $200,000. There must be a very big mistake about that. The total expenditure asked for salaries and allowances for every kind of lightkeeper is $750,000. Many of them would be part time men not requiring holidays. If giving a holiday of three weeks to half of them—it would not be more than half—is going to cost $200,000, that would be equivalent to giving them two days' holiday a week, not twenty-one days a year, because $200,000 is roughly one-third of the total expenditure. They are not asking that they all get it. A lot of these low paid men, getting two or three hundred a year, and working only an hour or two a day, do not require it at all, so it would not be anything like that sum. From the knowledge my friend from Skeena and I have of the west coast, I do not suppose there are over thirty lighthouses on the west coast, and say there is a similar number on the east coast; that would be an expenditure of something like $5,000 as regards the extra pay.

As to increased wages, I do not think that was put exactly according to the facts. While the expenditure has increased in the period stated by the minister from $460,000 to $750,000, that does not mean that the same number of men are getting that extra amount. It means that there has been a large increase in the number of lighthouses and in the number of men employed therein. Canada has not been standing still in the last fifteen years, and as I say, a great part of that increased expenditure is due to an increase in the number of employees. If the minister will look into the matter I think he will find that the No. 1 lighthouses are compelled to keep four assistants, and it is certainly not the case that the commission when allocating the salaries to these men provided that they should not have holidays, or having holidays, that they should pay for a substitute themselves; otherwise it would be so stated in the act or in the order in council, and that has not been done. As the salaries of the whole civil service have grown under the various orders in council and regulations, and so on, so have those of the lighthouse keepers, but they have not grown out of proportion to the increases in the civil service in Ottawa. I would submit that this is a case where really there is no practical way of logically evading the suggestion that these men ought to get the treatment that I have recommended. I accept the minister's statement that he will look into it, and I hope that that will lead to immediate action.

Mr. SHORT: I am thoroughly in accord with the remarks that have been made by my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni and my hon. friend from Skeena. I think this is one branch of the service that should receive every consideration from the department. I certainly do not think that these men are overpaid; in fact, they are not paid enough. The fact that their salaries have increased since 1911 is no indication that they are being adequately paid to-day. There is not a branch of the civil service where the salaries have not increased very materially, and in some cases more than doubled, since 1911. The cost of living, as everybody knows, has more than doubled since that date, and if there is one branch of the service that needs every consideration and should be well paid for the work it is doing, it is the lighthouse keepers.

I notice that there is a small increase of $10,000. I would ask the minister if that is to cover an increase to the lower paid men. I understand that in the service there are many lighthouses that are not in isolated positions at all, and where the lighthouse tender may live half a mile or a mile away from the light. He goes to the lighthouse at night and lights the light, and then goes home, and comes back in the morning and puts the light out. Many of these men are paid from sixty to one hundred dollars a year for performing this service three hundred and sixty-five days in the year. That does not pay for the cost of the shoe leather. I know of one case in my constituency where the man walks a mile to light the light on the end of a breakwater. It is quite an important light, and the man tells me that he gets $60 a year; this was a year or two ago. I think that this class of men should receive some consideration. The minimum pay for that class of lightkeeper should be $100. We have increased the salaries of the small country postmasters from $60 to $100, and I think the minister might very well take into consideration giving a similar increase to these lightkeepers. It would only be in keeping with the increases that are taking place in the Post Office department.

Mr. CARDIN: The $10,000 increase is an appropriation for salaries in connection with an additional establishment which we are putting into the service. There is nothing here to provide for an increase in the salaries of the lower-paid lighthouse keepers, but I might say that I am impressed by the argument that has been made by my hon. friend in regard to the lower-paid men, and I am quite prepared to look into that question at the same time as the other.

I should like to make a correction. I gave the figure of $200,000 to my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni. It would not be as high as that.

Mr. GUTHRIE: May I say a word in regard to a formal application made to the minister in a document dated February 10, 1928, which I think very well sets out the claim of the lightkeepers' association for some consideration in the way of increased salary. In the first place, it is pointed out:

That the increase of $10 per month granted last year to keepers from class 1 to 10 inclusively, was gratefully received and appreciated, and was furthermore looked upon as an important item in the welfare of those who were thereby concerned. But as regards keepers from class 1 to 5, who have assistants to pay and board out of their salaries, no provision was made about them, and therefore we confidently hope you will this year be kind enough to recognize and grant an increase of $5 per month for each assistant of same.

That is the first claim they make. I see that the number of assistants in classes 1 to 5 is as follows:

Class	No. of assistants
1..	12

It is respectfully asked that these assistants be granted an additional $5 per month. These assistant keepers are now paid and boarded by the principal keepers. The next clause in the appeal reads as follows:

The schedule of salaries we are submitting this year on behalf of the "part time" keepers from class 11 to 18 is the same as that submitted every year since 1922, and notwithstanding the many promises made since the above mentioned date, those men are still waiting if something will come, and we again beg leave to call your kind attention to the fact that these "part time" keepers are giving good and appreciable service to navigation, and for which they receive a very poor salary, which is at least 125 per cent less than those paid in other countries. We earnestly hope you will kindly consider our demand favourably and grant those well deserving keepers the schedule we are submitting to you this year.

The minister has the schedule, and I think the increases asked for are very, very modest. The third request reads as follows:

It was resolved, and we hereby humbly submit, that all the keepers of open sea stations who are on duty twelve months in the year are not receiving an adequate remuneration for their services if we consider that in some provinces the stations are closed during the winter months while the former have to bear the coldest months of the year, causing their task to be most trying. We therefore beg to submit that said keepers of open sea stations be given an increase pro rata to their monthly income.

That is on behalf of the lighthouse keepers. There is also an appeal to the minister, although it is addressed to the Minister of Finance, dated February 10, 1928, from the Canadian Brotherhood of Lightkeepers Association. I will read this appeal, for the sake of brevity:

This is an appeal respectfully submitted to your consideration and concerning the lightship captains, as also the captains of the government steamers appointed by order in council, and whose salaries are more than $600 per annum. These civil servants beg leave to state that being willing to pay their contributions such as stipulated in the statutes of the Pension Act, they would deem it a favour if they were granted the privilege of participating in it. One of the most plausible reasons offered as a basic argument favouring such an enactment is found in the fact that both the captains, Leblanc of the White island lightship, and Christensen of the Prince shoal lightship, have retired on their pensions a few years ago, and consequently we see no reason why the others of the class above mentioned should be denied the same privilege of working their way to a similar objective.

Hoping therefore you will be kind enough to give this very important and earnest request all the consideration it deserves,

We beg to remain, hon. Sir,
Yours respectfully,

THOS. M. WYATT,
President,
Father Point, P.Q.

R. W. LINDSAY,
General Secretary.
Isle Verte, P.Q.

I have looked over the schedule of wages attached to these requests. In my humble judgment. Mr. Chairman, the increases asked for are very modest indeed, and I sincerely hope the minister will see his way to grant them.

Item agreed to.

Maintenance and repairs for lighthouses, $900,000.

Mr. COOTE: The minister might give an explanation of this rather large vote.

Mr. CARDIN: This vote, the same as last year, is for the maintenance and repair of aids to navigation, including lighthouses, buoys, fog alarms and other aids to navigation. It also covers the cost of supplies and the labour and materials for repairs.

Mr. COOTE: How many lighthouses are we keeping up?

Mr. CARDIN: 1,617 lights, 11 lightships, 351 fog alarms—

Mr. SHORT: Where it is available has the department ever considered the use of hydro-electric power for many of these small lighthouses? In my constituency we have just spent a large sum of money to generate hydro-electric power, and the line passes within a very short distance of several lighthouses. I think electric light would be cheaper and much more satisfactory than the use of oil lamps.

Mr. CARDIN: We are already putting that policy into practice in certain places.

Mr. SHORT: In my constituency there are fifteen or twenty lighthouses, and several of them can be served at a very moderate expense by our hydro-electric power system. I think it is well worth the department's consideration.

Mr. CARDIN: To complete the information I was giving to my hon. friend from Macleod (Mr. Coote): 417 gas and signal buoys; other aids to navigation, 8,430.

Mr. COOTE: How much is spent in the different provinces?

Mr. CARDIN: I can give my hon. friend the total number of lightships, fog signals and other aids to navigation for each province: New Brunswick, 1,439; Nova Scotia, 1,504; Prince Edward Island, 2,895; Quebec province, district of Quebec, 861; Montreal district, 1,243; province of Ontario, Prescott district, 701, Parry Sound district, 1,083; Kenora district, 448; Manitoba, 87; British Columbia, Victoria district, 509, Prince Rupert district, 154.

Mr. COOTE: Nothing in Alberta and Saskatchewan?

Mr. CARDIN: Not yet.

Mr. COOTE: How much of this vote was spent last year?

Mr. CARDIN: $893,231 up to March 31, 1928.

Mr. SPENCER: Is any revenue received from shipowners toward the cost of maintaining these lighthouses?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. COOTE: Will not the minister be constructing some new lighthouses and aids to navigation this year?

Mr. CARDIN: The construction of lighthouses comes under the next vote.

Mr. COOTE: I understand that. It is because the minister is asking for $725,000 to take care of further works that I am asking whether this vote will be sufficient for maintenance, it being the same as last year.

Mr. CARDIN: Very few of the proposed new lighthouses will be ready before next year.

Mr. COOTE: Did we vote anything last year for the construction of new lighthouses?

Mr. CARDIN: I think we did.

Mr. COOTE: The minister has not explained how he will be able to take care of the maintenance of the new lighthouses under this vote.

Mr. CARDIN: Most of the lighthouses that we propose to build will not be ready this year. We will have ample time next year to provide for their maintenance.

Mr. COOTE: Last year I think we voted $783,000 for the construction of new lighthouses. Surely some of them must be completed by this time. How is the minister going to provide for their maintenance out of this vote?

Mr. CARDIN: We will be able to take care of them. Certainly the men will not lose their wages.

Mr. CANTLEY: Referring to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Short), I would call the minister's attention to the fact that Pictou is a point in question. There you have a lighthouse and three range lights all within a short distance of hydro-electric power. In fact, the wires pass practically alongside the range lights and very close to the lighthouse. I suggest that the minister look into the possibilities there.

Mr. CARDIN: I will, certainly.

Item agreed to.

Construction of lights and aids to navigation, including regulation of traffic at such places as may be found necessary, $725,000.

Mr. COOTE: Where is this money to be spent?

Mr. CARDIN: First of all we have a general account of $80,000 required to pay the wages of foremen, travelling expenses of engineers and foremen, costs of investigations, examinations and reports; purchase of land; purchase of repairs to plant, et cetera; and operation of Prescott lighthouse depot. For buoy service there is $100,000. It is impossible to foresee just what amounts will be required or to estimate the damage or loss that may occur during the next two winters. However, it is not anticipated that anything out of the ordinary will occur and it is expected that the sum of $100,000 will cover these particular requirements. For general repairs and improvements and new works, $255,000 is asked for. This amount is required to carry out new works recommended by the lighthouse board and approved by council, and for the necessary repairs already asked for as well as requirements which will develop before April, 1929. Unfinished works will require $40,000. This is needed for works commenced in the fiscal year but which, owing to various causes, may have to be carried over to next season. For aids to navigation, north channel of the St. Lawrence river, an amount of $250,000 is needed. In connection with these aids to navigation, east of the island of Orleans, range lights consisting of two piers with lighthouses will have to be established. It is estimated that $250,000 will be required to cover the cost.

Mr. COOTE: Will the minister give some particulars of the new works that are being constructed?

Mr. CARDIN: The following is a list of new works, improvements and repairs contemplated for the fiscal year 1928-29:

Nova Scotia—
Pearl island, Combined lighthouse and dwelling.
Isaac harbour, New dwelling.
Eddy point, Fog alarm,
St. Paul island, Derrick and slipway,
Flat point, Moving tower,
Guysborough, Unwatched light on beacon.
Guysborough, Light to range with present one.
Sable island W.E., Repairs and painting.
Prince Edward Island—
Cape Whittle, Light and fog alarm.
Charlottetown wf., Repairs west face.
Neguac gully, New dwelling.
Oak point, Moving back light.
Echourie, M.I., Light tower and shelter shed.
New Brunswick—
Long point, Fog horn.
Jemseg, New pole and pier.
Porter point, protection.
Quebec—
Quebec, Repairs to wharves.
Anse aux Canard, Range lights.
Agouanish, Range lights.
St. Marguerite, Range lights.
Cannes des Roches, Light on breakwater.
Riviere Nouvelle, Light on breakwater.
L'Anse a Brilliant, Pole light.
Riviere a Claude, Light.
Bersimis and Outarde bay, Hand horn.
Montreal—
Isle Deslaurier, New pier.
Bloody island, Straightening tower.
Vercheres village, Rebuilding front lgt. pier.
Lotbiniere, Range lights (red).
Ontario—
Batteau rocks, Fog alarm and light station.
Hudson straits, 10 gas lights.
Grosse pointe, New pier.
Lancaster bar, Repairs foundation.
Chantry island, Pointing and whitewashing tower.
Spectacle shoal, New tower.
Spruce shoal, Repairs foundation.
Bronte, New tower.
Gibbons point, day beacons.
Muskoka lakes, 2 lights (red).
Gore bay, Pole light.
Victoria, B.C.—
Amphitrite point, Dwelling and water service.
Cape Cook, Unwatched light.
Shusartie bay, Aga light.
False bay, Small light.
East bay, Small light.
Prince Rupert, B.C.—
Green island, Fog alarm.
Lucy island, Fog alarm.

Mr. COOTE: I must thank the minister for the information given. Is any of this money to be spent in Saskatchewan and Alberta?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. COOTE: Has the minister had a request to provide certain services on lake Athabaska?

Mr. CARDIN: I understand that we are sending somebody there to inquire about the situation. The same remark applies to Great Slave lake.

Mr. COOTE: Would there be any possibility of work being done this year under this vote if the report showed that it was necessary?

Mr. CARDIN: We shall take care of any work that is urgent unless it calls for a very, very large expenditure. If it were not too large we could take care of it.

Item agreed to.

Maintenance and repairs to wharves, $10,000.

Mr. GOTT: This may not be within the purview of the minister's department, but I am informed by some of the lumber dealers in Essex county that they have not yet been privileged to tender on lumber used in repair work on the docks in that county. I do not see why it should be necessary to travel one hundred miles to get a small supply of lumber with which to make repairs to wharves when this lumber can be purchased close to the point where the repairs are to be made.

Mr. CARDIN: I may say that out of that vote we provide for only small repairs costing up to $50. The larger repairs are made by the Department of Public Works.

Mr. GARDINER: Then why is this item under this department?

Mr. CARDIN: The reason is that once a wharf is completed by the Department of Public Works it reverts to the Department of Marine and Fisheries for administration. We collect the dues on these wharves, and this vote is to provide for small repairs which may be urgently needed. When any serious repairs must be made the work is done by the Department of Public Works.

Mr. GOTT: That is the reason I mentioned it; I thought this came under the jurisdiction of the Department of Public Works. I hope the minister will take occasion to call this matter to the attention of his colleague, the Minister of Public Works. Recently I sent a letter to a firm in Essex county inquiring whether they had been permitted to tender on lumber used for this purpose, and this is their reply:

Your letter of May 9th to hand. In reply we wish to say that we have never had the opportunity of figuring on any government dock in Essex county.

I hope the Minister of Public Works will take cognizance of this situation and see that the lumber dealers in Essex county, whether Liberal or Conservative, have an opportunity to tender on the lumber used for repairing these wharves.

Item agreed to.

Amounts required to pay pensions to pilots, $10,500.

Mr. ADSHEAD: This amount is requested to pay pensions to pilots, and I see that the thirty-five pilots receive only $10,500, which is at the rate of $300 per year. Does the minister think that is enough for a man to live on, or are these pilots expected to apply for old age pension?

Mr. CARDIN: This is not the only pension received by these pilots; from their own funds, collected by fees, they receive an equal amount of $300. This item is the result of certain negotiations which were made with the pilotage association of Quebec when the department took control of the pilotage in that district. At that time, which was some years ago, one of the considerations was that we should pay a pension of this amount to the pilots who were then in the service. It is a part of the contract which was then made.

Mr. ADSHEAD: They are retired?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. ADSHEAD: And they receive a total pension of $600?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. ADSHEAD: They live on that, and a judge cannot live on a pension of $5,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Are the pilots now employed under the superannuation fund?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Allowance to harbour master at Amherstburg, for supervision of lights and buoys on the St. Clair river, the Detroit river and lake Erie, and other services in connection with the lighthouse service for the season of navigation, 1928, $600.

Mr. GOTT: My curiosity is rather aroused by this item. I should ask the minister for the information which will show why it is necessary to have one particular item covering the harbour master at Amherstburg, in view of the fact that there are harbour masters in other places from coast to coast.

Mr. CARDIN: I will give my hon. friend the information I have before me in this regard. On the Detroit river and lake Erie some seventeen gas buoys and about fifty-eight other buoys, some of them lighted, and ten winter spar buoys are maintained under contract and under the supervision of the harbour master at Amherstburg, and on the St. Clair river there are five gas lights under his direct supervision. Also the business in connection with the Southeast shoal and Bar Point lightships is to some extent looked after by him, and he assists with the business connected with the maintenance of some of the more isolated light stations at the western end of lake Erie. Under the statute a harbour master's remuneration is derived from harbour dues collected, but the dues at Amherstburg are negligible while the work and responsibility in connection with the maintenance of aids to navigation are quite considerable. This appropriation is to provide an allowance to the harbour master at Amherstburg for services rendered in this latter connection.

Mr. GOTT: What vote would cover the wages paid to other harbour masters?

Mr. CARDIN: There is no vote, because they are paid by fees which they collect.

Mr. GARDINER: Does this particular harbour master collect fees in addition to this $600?

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that we have no record of that before us, but it is stated here that he is not collecting very much and that is why we pay him this compensation.

Mr. GARDINER: If it is stated there that he does not collect very much, surely the department should know how much he is getting.

Mr. CARDIN: No doubt we have that information somewhere.

Mr. GARDINER: It does not seem that $600 is very much for the work this man is supposed to do, and I wondered what amount he collected by way of fees.

Mr. GOTT: I know that if the harbour master at Amherstburg were paid by fees he would not draw any salary, but is he the only harbour master in the Dominion who is paid a salary by this government?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, he is the only one.

Item agreed to.

Marine—meterological service, including magnetic observatory, grants of $500 each to Kingston and Montreal observatories, and allowance of $400 to L. F. Gorman, observer at Ottawa, $300,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. CARDIN: This proposed appropriation is to provide for the maintenance of the meteorological service of Canada.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the reason for the increase?

Mr. CARDIN: The increase over last fiscal year is to provide for an extension of the service to meet the requirements of the air board by way of furnishing immediate data with regard to atmospheric conditions, air currents and so on, in particular districts and along particular routes.

Mr. COOTE: How much was spent last year?

Mr. CARDIN: $272,623.

Item agreed to.

Steamboat inspection, $142,980.

Mr. CARDIN: This vote provides for an expenditure, but the government is practically reimbursed through the fees charged for this inspection and the money is paid into the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. COOTE: Do you inspect all passenger steamboats in Canada?

[Mr. Cardin.]

Mr. GARDINER: Will you give us the income and expenditures for last year?

Mr. CARDIN: They have not been tabulated for last year, but I can give my hon friend an idea from the figures for 1926-27—the income was $135,450.39, and the expenditures amounted to $121,961.

Mr. HARRIS: Does this vote cover the inspection of passenger steamships and life-saving apparatus?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. HARRIS: How many inspectors are there on this work?

Mr. CARDIN: About thirty-four in all.

Mr. HARRIS: How many classes of life-saving apparatus are there?

Mr. CARDIN: I regret I have not the regulations here.

Mr. HARRIS: If I read the reports correctly there is a No. 1 class, No. 2, No. 3, and so on. I am asking particularly with regard to the pleasure boats running on the Toronto-Kingston and Kingston-Montreal lines. Does the department demand that these passenger boats shall have all No. 1 class life saving equipment, or do they still have considerable of what the department terms No. 2 and No. 3?

Mr. CARDIN: Not having the regulations before me, Mr. Chairman, I am not in position to satisfy my hon. friend regarding that. I will be quite ready to give him the information, probably to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS: To my mind there is not sufficient protection on these passenger boats—I am dealing particularly with the Ontario district—for the travelling public, especially during the tourist season when these boats are overcrowded. I suggest to the minister that this inspection should be reviewed and checked up to prevent the occurrence of a tragedy on our lakes in the near future.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What control has the department over the number of passengers carried on boats?

Mr. CARDIN: According to the regulations, the inspector fixes the number of passengers that the boat can carry.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): And a certificate to that effect is in the boat. But what control has the department over the boat to see that this is carried out?

Mr. CARDIN: The customs collector at the different ports is supposed to see that the regulations are observed.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): And that is the only official?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous—to provide for the salary of Hon. J. C. Patterson, commissioner to investigate titles of Great Britain to lands in the Arctic seas, $2,400.

Mr. GARDINER: I would like some information regarding this item.

Mr. CARDIN: The Hon. J. C. Patterson was appointed a commissioner to investigate titles of great Britain to lands in the Arctic seas by order in council P.C. 1160, at a salary of $200 per month, payable out of the moneys appropriated for unforeseen expenses. By order in council P.C. 1391 it was provided that Mr. Patterson's salary was to be paid out of moneys appropriated for the Canadian Arctic expedition organized in that year, and later designated as the patrol of northern waters of Canada. No provision being made in the main estimates for the fiscal year 1928-29 for the patrol of northern waters of Canada, some other provision for Mr. Patterson's salary is therefore necessary.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the explanation as to the need for the investigation of these titles?

Mr. CARDIN: He is working up some data and information to ascertain exactly the situation in regard to the lands which are mentioned in the order in council.

Mr. ADSHEAD: In regard to titles to lands of Great Britain?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Why does Great Britain not look after her own titles?

Mr. CARDIN: These will be Canadian lands.

Mr. COOTE: The question naturally arises why Canada should investigate the titles of British lands. That is why we are asking the question.

Mr. CARDIN: Really they are Canadian.

Mr. COOTE: It might be advisable to correct the item and say: "titles of Canada". Now that we are on an equal status with Great Britain I think we should investigate the titles of our lands and Great Britain might investigate the titles of hers.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. COOTE: As amended.

Item agreed to.

Civil Government—Marine and Fisheries—salaries and contingencies, $614,615.

Mr. GARDINER: I must protest against the manner in which the Chairman (Mr. Bouchard) is reading these items. We do not know where we are and we cannot hear a word he says. I suggest that unless he speaks louder, some other hon. member should take the chair.

Mr. CARDIN: This is item 16, civil government. The details appear on page 87.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The increase of $4,500 is due just to statutory increases?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Fisheries—salaries and disbursements of fishery officers and guardians, fisheries patrol and fisheries protection service, $950,000.

Mr. SHORT: This is in connection with fisheries and as this is Friday, it is a good day to discuss them. I should like to say just a few words in connection with fisheries.

Mr. McINTOSH: How many?

Mr. SHORT: I will not talk too long. I have not a great deal of correspondence to read and I hope hon. gentlemen will give me the same attention that they did the other night. If they wish to make any comments I shall be glad to have them and will answer them as best I can.

Mr. McINTOSH: Make it short.

Mr. SHORT: I will make it very short. Little or nothing has been done by the department of fisheries. I think the minister will agree with me that this is one department that has not received the attention it should receive. Had it received proper attention there would not have been the trouble or the discontent that occurred among the fishermen of the maritime provinces during the past year. When the Duncan report came down, one of the recommendations was that a deputy minister of fisheries should be appointed forthwith. When the discussion took place on that report, the Prime Minister, speaking on March 18, 1927, said, as reported in Hansard at page 1334:

The commission's recommendation with respect to the appointment of a deputy minister whose duties will be confined to what at present constitutes the fisheries section of the Department of Marine and Fisheries will be carried out.

A year and three months have elapsed since that statement was made to the house and no deputy minister has yet been appointed. Had that appointment been made shortly after the house prorogued last year, there would not have been the discontent that there was among the fishermen of the maritime provinces because they would have felt that something was being done for the industry. Nothing is being done for the industry by the department except to carry out the regulations that appear on the statute book or to put new ones into effect. Many of them which they should have carried out they did not carry out and those which they should not, they did carry out. If there is any department which has been neglected, it is the department of fisheries. I say this with all respect to the minister and the deputy. They are great friends of mine; I know they will take in all kindness everything I say, and I think down in their hearts they will agree with me. Both of them are very busy men. The marine department is a very large department and their time is practically taken up with it, the fisheries being left to other officials who have no power whatever. They must report to the deputy and the minister and, as I said before, they are too much engaged in the other duties of the department to bother about the fisheries.

Our fisheries constitute one of our greatest natural resources and if they were properly developed they would be capable of producing double the amount they do now. Last year the production of fish in this country amounted to about $50,000,000, and if we had a department of fisheries that amount could easily be doubled. The fisheries commission that has recently reported has gone further than the recommendations of the Duncan commission. They recommend that a separate department with a minister and a deputy be established. But I am not going to discuss that report tonight because I understand the Prime Minister has already stated to the house that as the government have not had an opportunity of going thoroughly, into the report, no legislation will be brought down this session in connection with the recommendations contained therein. Therefore the matter is not under discussion, unless the minister can give the committee an idea whether the government are going to change their minds or not. Will any action be taken in connection with the report this year? I presume not, because the minister does not answer. I presume they are not going to take any action, because one of the recommendations in the report was that no changes whatever should be made in the different seasons for taking lobsters in various sections of the province of Nova Scotia; that that regulation be made statutory so that it could be changed only by consent of parliament. But since the report was brought in a change has been made and an extension has already been given to one section of Nova Scotia. It is either ten or fifteen days, I do not know which. Evidently, therefore, the government do not intend to pay much attention to that report. Had we had a deputy minister appointed last year, we would never have had this trouble in connection with the fishermen in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. That commission has cost this country some $85,000. If that money had been spent in creating a separate department—and it would have carried that department for some time—it never would have been necessary to have a commission, because you would have had men in that fisheries department who knew something about the industry, and they would have brought down some remedies for the ills that exist in that part of the country. But the government decided that they would do nothing in that connection, and the result has been great deal of dissatisfaction and unrest among the fishermen of the maritime provinces, as the house is well aware

We feel also that we are not protected against foreign fish coming into this country Perhaps this house is not aware that we import from the United States nearly one million dollars' worth of fish a year. To be exact, last year we imported $911,000 worth of fish from the United States, practically every dollar's worth of which could have been produced in the maritime provinces. There was $540,000 worth of fresh fish brought into Canada from the United States. Most of it came in last spring when prices were very low in the United States, and our duty of only one cent a pound is not sufficient protection to keep that fish from coming in, owing to the fact that the express and freight rates are very much lower from Boston and Portland to Montreal, Toronto and Ottawa than the rates from the maritime provinces, the distance being so much less.

Mr. McMILLAN: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. We are not discussing the tariff, I submit.

Mr. SHORT: We have to bring in the tariff in order to show you what is wrong with our fisheries. I do not think the hon. member has read the report of the commission. When we ship this same fish to the United States, we have to pay a duty of two cents a pound. There is no reason why there should be one dollar's worth of fresh fish brought into this country from the United States. The maritime provinces are suffering from lack of markets for their fish. We have been asking this government for the last two years to try to extend our markets for us. Hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of American fish, the same as we produce here, are brought into this country, and no steps have been taken by the government to relieve the situation. We also imported into this country from the United States $108,500 of dried, smoked and pickled fish, every dollar's worth of which could have been produced in the maritime provinces, and would have been if we had had a duty as high as the American duty. We have not been able to export any of our cheap fresh fish to the United States since the Fordney tariff came into effect. If we had a deputy minister who was a practical man, who knew the conditions as they exist in the maritime provinces and elsewhere throughout this country, and the conditions as to markets, we might get some relief. For the last year and a half the Canadian Fisheries Association have been trying to get this government to help them in advertising fish so as to increase our markets in Canada, but last year the government never contributed one dollar towards that advertising campaign. The year before they did contribute $10,000, and the industry had to put up a like amount; but ten or twenty thousand dollars is not enough to carry on a propaganda of advertising in this country if we are going to increase the sale of our fish, which is one of our great natural products, giving employment to thousands of our Canadian citizens.

Mr. ADSHEAD: How many carloads of fish were shipped from Athabaska to Detroit?

Mr. SHORT: I could not tell you; that is out of my district. Perhaps my hon. friend from Skeena could answer that.

Mr. GOTT: The hon. member for Rosetown ought to know.

Mr. SHORT: It would be in the public interest to appropriate in these estimates a sufficient amount to carry on an advertising propaganda in this country to increase the sale of fish. Had we had a market for our fish there never would have been any trouble with the fishermen. Our trouble has been lack of markets, and the consequence was the fishermen could not make a living. They felt that they had to make some appeal to the public, which they did, and the government finally took notice of it and appointed this commission, which has dealt very thoroughly with the situation.

I see an item of $130,000 to assist in the conservation and development of the deep sea fisheries and the demand for fish. Why cannot a sum be taken from that item for advertising purposes, which would be of the greatest benefit to the country? This same item of $130,000 was in the estimates last year, and only $5,920 out of that $130,000 was expended. The department does not even seem to know how to expend the very small appropriation which they do get for the fisheries. I say, therefore, that they should call in a practical man, a man who knows that business —because they have got the men. They should put in authority a man who knows production, and who knows how fish are sold. Last year they sent two men, Mr. Cowie, of the department, and a Mr. Earle, across to England to look into the question of markets for our fish, but I have not heard a word of what they did. It cost this country several thousands of dollars to send them over there. There is a market for our fish in England, but it is up to the department to develop that market, just as other departments of the government, the Department of Agriculture, for instance, develops markets for the products of the farm. But the department of fisheries has done nothing whatever in that regard. I am told that there is a wonderful prospect for a market for our fresh fish in England. But no single firm can develop that business, and it is therefore up to the government to find a market for our fish, just as it does for other natural products. That is what the Department of Fisheries is for, but absolutely nothing has been done.

I do not want to be complaining, Mr. Chairman, at all. I just want to bring this matter to the attention of the committee for its consideration. I am not blaming the present minister a bit more than his predecessors. We have never had a practical man in charge of the fisheries department. What would the Department of Agriculture think if a professional man was made Minister of Agriculture? They have never done that, and why should we not have a man who knows the fish game in charge of the Fisheries department that you are going to establish? You want a man who knows the industry, and you have such a man on your side of the house, a man who is capable in every way, a man who has been in the fish business all his life and knows it from start to finish. I want to give a word of caution: when this separate department is created do not put in a clerical man who knows nothing whatever about the business; put in a man who knows the industry, and then you will get some results. I bring this to the attention of the minister in the hope that something will be done so that we will not next year have the same trouble down in our province that we had last.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Mr. Chairman, I desire to refer to the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada on a reference to it as to the constitutional validity or interpretation of certain sections or regulations under the Fisheries Act, 1914. As was brought out the other day, the judgment was rendered on May 28. I presume the minister has read it carefully. I have a copy here which I received today, and which I have glanced through. What action does the government propose to take to deal with the situation which has arisen by reason of this judgment? I understood the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) the other day to say that he was giving instructions for an appeal to be taken to the Privy Council. It seems to me that that is not sufficient; something must be done right away, the situation being very serious, particularly on the Pacific coast. When this matter was referred to on a former occasion the Minister of Justice said that pending the appeal the government would not act on this judgment, but I am afraid that the orientals will secure a mandamus and force the minister to issue licenses to them.

I have read the majority judgment of the court. I have not read the dissenting judgments by Mr. Justice Duff, Mr. Justice Migneault, and Mr. Justice Smith. The judgment deals with three questions. The first two refer to cannery licenses. The third question has to do with the authority of the minister to refuse to issue licenses to take salmon and other fish on the Pacific coast. If I may give a synopsis of the judgment, it decides that the act and the regulations thereunder do not at the present time give authority to the minister to refuse a license to any person who possesses the necessary qualifications. The regulations provide that no person shall be entitled to fish without a license. Now, the court declares that that is not sufficient, that the act must give the minister direct and definite authority to refuse a license to any person. In other words, there must be a discretionary power in the minister. The Minister of Justice may go on with his appeal to the Privy Council, but in the meantime the situation in British Columbia will be alarming, to say the least, if all the Japanese who have been refused licenses are going to receive them now, and in view of the judgment I do not see how the minister can refuse to grant them licenses.

To meet the situation I suggest, even supposing the judgment is sound, a remedy is available and should be taken advantage of during the present session. It would mean an amendment to the act giving the minister discretionary powers to refuse licenses. That is all that is necessary, and it could be enacted without taking up a great deal of the remainder of the session. Of course, I am aware that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has stated that no further legislation will be introduced, but I think this matter is of such vital importance that it should be dealt with at once.

Mr. CARDIN: Mr. Chairman, the government has decided to appeal to the Privy Council. I may reassure my hon. friend on another point. So long as there is an appeal to a higher tribunal the judgment of the lower court is of no effect. Consequently the situation remains as it was, the judgment of the supreme court can have no effect until it is affirmed by the Privy Council, and in the meantime we shall carry on in the usual way. So my hon. friend need not be afraid of the alarming developments to which he has referred.

Mr. NEILL: I am very glad to hear the minister express his opinion in this matter, both as a minister and a lawyer. While I would have preferred to see an amendment made to the Fisheries Act—and I think this is the course that ultimately will have to be taken—yet at this late stage of the session the decision announced by the minister will perhaps be as effective as we could wish.

As to the remarks of my hon. friend from Digby-Annapolis (Mr. Short), of course he was entirely out of order; he was talking on an item that had nothing to do with the subject. It should have been brought up on the civil government estimates. However the hon. member has been allowed to deviate from the straight and narrow path and I may be allowed to do the same for a few minutes. I endorse what he has said as regards the appointment of a deputy minister. We were promised that, if not the year before last, certainly last year. The legislation has been passed and I see no reason why it should not be carried out.

Mr. CARDIN: It will be.

Mr. NEILL: It would make for efficiency in the service. The Duncan report also recommended it and we in British Columbia are anxious to have the same thing. I would go further, again following the Duncan report, and say that we in British Columbia are in sympathy with the idea of having a commissioner for the east and one also for the west—men who would live, respectively, in the maritime provinces and in British Columbia and who would necessarily be familiar with the local conditions of the industry. As my hon. friend has indicated, they would be able to formulate policies ahead, so to speak, of their urgent necessity and not wait until the industry was almost in the ditch. They would foresee trouble and devote themselves to the providing of remedies. Speaking for British Columbia and particularly for the district I represent, I hope that before long we shall see the Department of Fisheries established under the deputy minister.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I want to refer to another matter. Yesterday we listened to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni speaking in regard to the conditions of men employed in the life saving stations in British Columbia. He referred to their pay and also to the fact that they are not under the Civil Service Commission, being thereby deprived of certain privileges which otherwise they would enjoy. There is another class that comes directly under this item; I refer to the patrol boat employees on the Pacific coast. I have from time to time made representations to the department, and representations have also been made by the Amalgamated Civil Servants' Association of New Westminster in the same connection. These men are very much underpaid, it seems to me, and more than that they have been deprived of certain perquisites which they formerly received. They formerly received food when they were out on their work; they got provisions; and they have been deprived of these. They were not granted any increase of pay when other civil servants received an increase; it was stated that they were not permanent employees. All I can say in that connection is that a great many of these men have been in the employ of the department for upwards of five, ten and fifteen years. To say that they are only temporary employees seems to me rather ridiculous. They are not given any holidays at all; nor are they entitled to any superannuation. They work from seventy to eighty hours a week for five months of the year and during the remaining months they work a minimum of forty-four hours per week. I do not think the government is treating the civil servants of this country at all fairly in a great many ways, and this particular class have been very badly treated. There is no reason whatever in the stand taken by the department, that these men are not entitled to further consideration. Their salaries are most inadequate and I would impress upon the minister the necessity for reveiwing the condition of these men. I would also ask that he do something to give them fair treatment. It was my privilege to bring the matter to the attention of the minister personally, but I am afraid he has not gone into it very carefully, because he cannot defend the stand which the department has taken.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain the increase?

Mr. CARDIN: The flat increase of $120 given last year was paid out of the special appropriation; this year it is included here. It amounts to $9,500. This year the annual increases amount to $1,860. Two new boats for the Atlantic coast are required; one for investigational work, $12,000 and one to replace hired boats for the Grand Manan district for which we are paying $600 per year. The new boat will cost about $2,000 and will pay for itself in less than four years. This amounts to $14,000. There are also new boats for the Pacific, one to replace the Swan, built in 1908 and which is worn out; the other takes the place of a boat which was burned last fall. At $6,000 each these amount to $12,000. There is a new engine for another vessel; this amounts to $3,000. This makes up the $40,000 increase.

Mr. GARDINER: But I understand there is an increase of $90,000.

Mr. CARDIN: We had a supplementary voted at the opening of this session for last year amounting to $50,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Is there any of this money spent in the prairie provinces?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: How much?

Mr. CARDIN: The expenditure in Manitoba last year was $16,618.96; Saskatchewan, $18,588.66; Alberta, $21,391.73. This is for fishery officers.

Mr. GARDINER: What are the duties of these officers?

Mr. CARDIN: They are administering the fishery laws and seeing that the regulations are observed.

Mr. COOTE: We often hear complaints about the number of inspectors in the Department of Agriculture, and I was just wondering, for the purpose of comparison, how many inspectors are included under this vote.

Mr. CARDIN: In the three prairie provinces there are three district inspectors, fifteen overseers and twenty-four guardians.

Mr. COOTE: What is the duty of an overseer? Does he oversee the inspector?

Mr. CARDIN: No, he sees that the regulations in his district are observed. He has charge of a particular district.

Mr. COOTE: Would the minister just go a little further and tell us what he does in that district? What is the difference between an inspector and an overseer?

Mr. CARDIN: The inspector is the more important man. There is one inspector for each province, but he cannot see to all the details and supervise all the districts under his control. The men working under him are the overseers, who are given certain districts to look after, and these overseers have under them the guardians, who are supposed to see that the regulations are observed.

Mr. COOTE: Are these guardians full-time men?

Mr. CARDIN. No, they are only seasonal men.

Mr. GOTT: Mr. Chairman, I call your attention to the fact that it is eleven o'clock.

Mr. CARDIN: They are paid only the rate prevailing in that locality.

Item agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL PEACE

MULTILATERAL TREATY PROPOSED BY THE UNITED STATES—CORRESPONDENCE TABLED

Right hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): With the permission of the house I should like to lay on the table the correspondence relating to the proposal for a multilateral pact for the renunciation of war. This includes the reply of Canada to the invitation of the United States.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I ask the Prime Minister if he will be prepared to provide an opportunity for a brief statement with respect to these papers?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think my hon. friend will find when he sees the correspondence that it contains about all that can be said in the way of a statement.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Does the correspondence contain a statement of government policy in connection with this question?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It contains a statement of the position of the Canadian government.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Saturday, June 2, 1928.

The house met at eleven o'clock.

PRIVATE BILL

LONDON AND PORT BURWELL RAILWAY COMPANY

Mr. W. H. TAYLOR (Norfolk-Elgin) moved:

That Bill No. 58, an act to incorporate the London and Port Burwell Railway Company be placed this day in its position on the order paper for third reading.

Mr. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPENCER: May I ask the hon. member what he considers the place of this bill should be?

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the hon. member asking that question of the Chair?

Mr. SPENCER: I am asking the hon. member, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That would be for the officers of the house to say.

Mr. MANION: Does this motion require notice?

Mr. SPEAKER: No; under standing order 45 no notice is required in the case of private bills but if amendments are made then under standing order 113a notice is required.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): The motion reads "in its position". I should like to know what those words mean. I have no objection to the bill being placed on the order paper but it cannot have precedence over other bills now on the order paper.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is that a point of order?

Mr. TAYLOR: I am willing to take your ruling, Mr. Speaker, as regards the position the bill should take on the order paper.

Mr. SPEAKER: Yesterday the motion was made by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Hepburn) for the third reading of this bill. Thereupon the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) rose and moved the previous question. The previous question was negatived. What does that imply? It means simply that on that day the bill could not be read the third time. In my humble opinion, however, it should not lose its position. It was not "killed;" it was only superseded and therefore should retain the position it held last night. The bill was not in committee of the whole. Standing order 15, subsection 4 reads:

After a private or public bill has been considered on Tuesday or Friday evening and debate thereon has been adjourned or interrupted at nine o'clock, it shall be placed at the foot of the list of such bills on the order paper.

That was not the case in the present instance. The Speaker was in the chair, and the bill was merely superseded by reason of the previous question having been negatived. Consequently it keeps its place on the order paper, and I so rule.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): It keeps its rank?

Mr. SPEAKER: It keeps its rank because, as I have said, it was not "killed". The situation is the same as though the bill had stood. If an hon. member had said "stand" the bill would not have lost its rank. The bill was paralysed—figuratively speaking—yesterday, but to-day it is revived.

Mr. MANION: It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that when the house last night voted that the question be not now put, the inference is that the house had no wish to decide upon the bill at all.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No.

Mr. MANION: Not at that time. I am not objecting to its being reintroduced, but I do submit that the bill should go to the bottom of the list and not be placed at the top.

Mr. SPEAKER: Perhaps I should observe that the implication of "the previous question" has been always a moot question. Cushing, who has written several chapters on the point, has this to say:

When this motion was first introduced, the question was put in this form, "that the main question be put?" and, if resolved in the negative, the main question was suppressed, and could not again be moved for the whole session. The form of the question was afterwards changed (it is said on the suggestion of Sir Harry Vane), to that which it now bears, namely, "that the main question be now put?" and the operation of it, if resolved in the negative,—

As the motion in this instance was last night.

—is to suppress the main question for the day only.

And further:

If the previous question is decided in the negative, namely, that the main question shall not now be put, the effect of this decision is, that the same question cannot be moved again the same day, but may be on any subsequent day.

But the motion resumes its position automatically the next day. I have cited Cushing, but May and Bourinot are both of the same opinion. The motion therefore stands where it was yesterday. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Motion agreed to.

INDUSTRIAL AND INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

Motion for concurrence in report of committee.

Mr. C. R. McINTOSH (North Battleford) moved:

That the third and final report of the select standing committee on industrial and international relations, as amended by instructions of the house, be concurred in.

Mr. STEVENS: This motion is not on the votes and proceedings. Surely it requires notice. As soon as I got my votes and proceedings this morning I consulted it but I could not find any notice of the motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: Has notice been given?

Mr. McINTOSH: The house has virtually had notice for over two weeks. There is but a slight amendment in what is asked to be concurred in now as compared with what was submitted for concurrence days ago.

Mr. SPEAKER: Strictly speaking notice must be given. In the absence of notice the motion stands.

Motion stands.

UNITED STATES FLAGS IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. G. McQUARRIE (New Westminster): I wish to ask a question of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), referring to a press dispatch from Saranac Lake, New York, appearing in the local newspapers today intimating that a complaint had been made that American flags were torn from a Saranac Lake tourist party's automobile in Montreal and trampled upon by a resident of that city on May 30. Will the government consider the suggestion made by the Native Sons of British Columbia that legislation be introduced making it compulsory that all foreign automobiles while in the Dominion of Canada, carrying or displaying a flag of their own country, should carry and display a British flag of like size?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I have not had an opportunity to consider the suggestion. Personally I do not like the idea of compulsory legislation in matters of this kind. I should think that a useful purpose might be served by conversations between the legations in Washington and Ottawa as to the practice which each country might follow in these matters of international courtesy. The question might be dealt with more effectively in that way than in any other. I shall have pleasure in opening a conversation towards that end.

DEPARTMENT OF MARINE AND FISHERIES

Fisheries—building fishways and clearing rivers, $20,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): May I ask the minister to explain the work done under this vote?

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): This appropriation is for the purpose of removing obstructions to fish ascending rivers and streams to their spawning areas and building fishways in dams across such rivers and streams. Particularly in British Columbia, log jams are forming continually and frequently become so complete that the ascending salmon are unable to get past them. In addition to that, natural obstructions are sometimes encountered which prevent the salmon from reaching the excellent spawning areas higher up the stream. Experience has proven that the removal of these obstructions invariably results in substantial increases in the runs of fish. In British Columbia during last year an expenditure of $11,260 was made. The list of the places where this money was expended is rather long; does my hon. friend desire that list?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): No. There is a very important matter in conection with this item to which I direct the attention of the minister and of the department. While the run of salmon in British Columbia is very important, there is a certain difficulty on the rivers running into Hudson bay. Power companies are being allowed to build dams and obstructions on these rivers without giving the fish an opportunity to pass up in the spawning season. This may be a provincial matter as far as the construction of the dams is concerned, yet the construction of these obstructions prevents the run of fish into Hudson bay. The minister and the department will find that a number of power dams are being erected in that part of the country with no arrangement made to permit of the passage of the fish. This is important not only to the province, but to the Dominion as well.

Mr. MILNE: I would like to draw the attention of the minister to the fact that on the White Mud river, at the town of Gladstone, Manitoba, the Canadian Pacific Railway constructed a dam in order to provide water for their tank. In this dam there is no adequate means for the passage of the fish. This matter has been brought to the attention of the department for at least fifteen or eighteen years, and nothing has been done. It is only on very rare occasions, when the water is extremely high, that the fish are able to get over the dam. In ordinary years, when the ice goes out with comparatively low water, the fish come up to the bottom of the dam and remain there; they cannot get up the stream, where they desire to go. I draw this matter to the attention of the minister in the hope he will endeavour to have something done. There are many settlers above the dam who desire to obtain these fish in the spring, but on account of the dam they are unable to do so. I hope the minister and his department will look into the matter and see if something cannot be done to permit the fish to get up the stream in spring as they desire to do.

Mr. CARDIN: We have had one fishway built at that place but the technical officers advise that this is a very difficult situation to deal with. However, we propose this summer to send an engineer to look over the situation and advise us as to the possibility of coping with it. As far as my hon. friend from Kingston is concerned I may say that when a dam is built on a river the company is obliged to build a fishway according to the regulations established by the department.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): But still these dams are being built with no arrangement of this kind. This is very important, because the spawning grounds of the fish are destroyed and the settlers will suffer later. There are no fishways in these new dams which are being built for power purposes in that part of the country.

Mr. CARDIN: Has my hon. friend any particular river in mind?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I cannot give them all, but I can mention one, the Matagami river.

Mr. CARDIN: The law gives us power to impose upon the companies the obligation to build fishways in all their dams according to plans and specifications aproved by the department. Of course, it may be that the river to which my hon. friend is referring is in a province which administers its own fisheries.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): While that may be true and the site of this dam may be within a provincial jurisdiction, yet the effect is on Hudson bay, so the matter becomes federal also.

Mr. CARDIN: I see the point.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): I want to add to what has been said with reference to these dams. As far as the province of Nova Scotia is concerned the construction of fishways is entirely overlooked, and some of our best rivers are destroyed because there is no fishway in the dam and consequently not a single fish can get up to the spawning grounds. This not only deprives outsiders of their sport but also deprives the people living along those rivers of an opportunity of employment and of the means of earning very considerable sums of money during the fishing season. There is one river in particular, a very excellent salmon river, which has been absolutely destroyed because of a dam built across the river without a fishway. That applies to a great many of our rivers, but when these matters are brought to the attention of either the federal department or the provincial department we are told that they will look into it, and that is the end. I protest against these dams being built across the rivers with no proper provision to permit the salmon to pass up to their spawning grounds.

Mr. CARDIN: I am very much surprised at the criticism of my hon. friend from Halifax, because I am informed by the director of fisheries that we are paying very close attention to this work in the maritime provinces and particularly in Nova Scotia. I am told that a certain number of these fishways would be of no effect at all in view of a change which has taken place in the conditions obtaining on several of the rivers, but in order to be in a position to inquire I would like my hon. friend to give me the name of the river to which he has just referred.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): I was referring to the East river, Sheet Harbour. I may say that I would be delighted to spend two or three days with the minister if he would care to come down to that province. I would take care of him and put him up and show him the conditions which prevail, so that he could verify what I have been saying.

Mr. McQUARRIE: May I ask the minister if any further work is contemplated in clearing out Hell's Gate on the Fraser river, above New Westminster? The minister is perhaps aware that in 1913 the river was completely filled by a mountain slide caused by the operations of the Canadian Northern railway. Since 1913 there has not been a large run of sockeye salmon. Previous to that time in a big year, which occurred every fourth year, we had packs of sockeye salmon which ran up as high as a million cases. A case of sockeye salmon is worth about $16, and perhaps more. Since that time the highest pack that we have had on the Fraser river has been about 50,000 cases. I think the minister will realize the loss there is to the country by reason of the depletion of the run of sockeye on the Fraser river. It just happened that this slide took place during one of the big runs, just before the spawning season, and the salmon could not get through. It was understood that the rock had been removed from the bed of the river to allow the salmon in after years to proceed to the spawning ground, of which there are hundreds of thousands of acres above that point, but some of the people out there, and more particularly the Indians, are not satisfied that the river has been properly cleared. I believe that recently there has been some investigation made by engineers of the department, but I have not heard with what results. I do not know what is proposed to be done but it seems to me it is a point that should receive special consideration.

Mr. CARDIN: We have had working at this particular point, a board of engineers composed of engineers of the provincial and federal governments, but a report has not yet been made by that board. My hon. friend may rest assured that this matter has not been forgotten, and is being looked into. We realize the importance of it.

Mr. McQUARRIE: When did the engineers start work?

Mr. CARDIN: About a year ago.

Mr. McQUARRIE: The reply that these reports are indefinitely delayed is not good enough. When I was complaining about the depletion of the sockeye run on the Fraser river I was told that the biological board was making investigations. I asked when we might expect a report from that board and I was told possibly in ten years or so. This means a big loss to the country, and it seems to me that the engineers have had sufficient time to make a report. If the river has not been cleared it should be cleared out immediately.

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed, Mr. Chairman, that it is very important that we reach a proper decision. If a mistake is made, according to the information given to me by the technical officers of the department, it would mean the ruination of the whole fishing industry in that section. We are taking every precaution to make a complete study so that proper recommendations may be made.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I would like the minister to explain that because, as I understand it, it is just a question of taking out rock which fell into the bed of the river. What other question is involved there? How can that industry be seriously damaged when it has been almost completely wiped out already?

Mr. CARDIN: It may be very easy to say that it is only a matter of taking out a certain amount of rock, but I am told by the director of fisheries that if we take out a certain amount of rock at certain places it may change the direction of the river. At the present time a certain number of fish are going up that river, but if rock is taken out at certain points it will create such a current that the fish will be unable to pass through it.

Mr. McQUARRIE: You could not change the direction of the river at that point by anything short of an earthquake. If the minister had seen the river I think he would agree with me.

Mr. CARDIN: The currents would be changed.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): I would like to mention the Indian river in Nova Scotia. This river gave up to flies over 200 salmon the last year it was fished, but because of the dam, not a fish is to be had in it to-day.

[Mr. Cardin.]

Mr. CARDIN: I will send my hon. friend a complete statement regarding the two rivers he has just mentioned.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): A large development is being carried on in the Mersey river in Queens county, where a number of dams are being constructed. This is a valuable river and I would ask that special attention be given to it.

Item agreed to.

Fisheries—to assist in the conservation and development of deep-sea fisheries and the demand for fish, $130,000.

Mr. PRICE: To assist in the conservation of fisheries, and the demand for fish from deep sea waters, I would like to call the attention of the minister to something needed for the benefit of the fishermen in my constituency. At Cape Bauld considerable difficulty has been experienced for some years in protecting the fishing boats owing to lack of shelter facilities. The government built a pierhead about 100 feet long, but it is not long enough to give the protection required. There should be an extension of at least 100 feet to this pierhead in order that protection would be afforded the small fishing boats during rough weather. Considerable destruction has taken place there, both to boats and motors, and the fishermen feel that more business would be transacted and they would have a better opportunity of carrying on deep-sea fishing if this pierhead was extended. I think this could be done with an expenditure of about $10,000 or $12,000. I have previously called the attention of the department to this pier, and I would again suggest that this work be carried out. I realize that it would have to be done in co-operation with the Department of Public Works, and I would also direct the attention of the Minister of Public Works to this point. It is something that is really required. About $75,000 worth of lobsters alone go over this wharf every year, and a considerable quantity of potatoes are shipped —from twelve to fifteen thousand barrels. This expenditure should be made there in order to assist the farmers and the fishermen, and I ask the minister to consider this and see if something cannot be done to relieve the situation there.

Mr. NEILL: I am sure I will have the support of every justice-loving member in this house in the matter I propose to bring up, and especially those from the maritime provinces, and more particularly from the province of Nova Scotia. If the members will look at the foot of this page, they will see these words:

Authorized by statute — fishing bounty, $160,000.

Mr. SHORT: We have not come to that item yet.

Mr. NEILL: I am going to speak on it under item 241, because we are not allowed to speak on a vote authorized by statute and it concerns the same matter. My hon. friends will, I am sure, be surprised to be told that, inadvertently no doubt, the province of Nova Scotia has been robbing the province of British Columbia of the sum of $80,000 annually for the last forty-six years. This is no phantasy; it is founded on law.

Mr. BANCROFT: Is that why the British Columbia members want Hell's Gate opened?

Mr. NEILL: You cannot give Hell's Gate away, but you can give this away unless some action is taken now. The act is now chapter 74 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, and it is called the Deep Sea Fisheries Act. It was passed in 1882, that is forty-six years ago. What did the act do? It provided that an annual grant—I wish the committee to note that word—not a bounty, a grant, of $160,000 a year be paid. Where was that grant obtained? By looking at section 2 we find that it is to be taken out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada. Mark that, Mr. Chairman. There was not some earmarked fund set aside, but the money was to be taken out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada. What was to be done with it? I again quote section 2. It was to be used—

To aid in the development of the sea fisheries of Canada, and the encouragement of the building and fitting out of improved fishing vessels, and the improvement of the condition of the fishermen.

That is the fishermen of Canada. The act under section 7 took power to make regulations, as follows:

The governor in council may, from time to time, make such regulations as he deems necessary or expedient respecting the payment of the said grant and the manner in which applications for the same or any portion thereof shall be made.

And so on. It is just the regular phraseology that allows the minister to make regulations for the carrying out of the act. But it is an axiom of law—and I do not need to repeat it here—that parliament can give power to a minister to make regulations under an act, but those regulations must always be merely in an administrative capacity for carrying out the act. They are confined entirely to the administration of what is in the act. It is absolutely ultra vires and impossible for parliament to confer, and it never does confer by an act of that kind, legislative powers on a minister; that is to say, he cannot under those regulations go out and make legislation or change the legislation concerning which he is authorized to make regulations. Just as recently as yesterday the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. McQuarrie) quoted a reference to the supreme court the other day of a matter in connection with British Columbia fisheries, and a great deal of the argument turned on that point. The judge who gave his decision alluded particularly to the fact that the Fisheries Act under a similar section gave the minister power to make regulations but not power to legislate.

But what the minister did in this case under the regulations was practically the same as if he had made a new act. He might as well have said that this money should be given for the production of cabbages or sheep or something of that kind because, by means of regulation, he changed the whole spirit and intent of the act. I am not speaking about the present minister, of course, because this thing has been going on for forty-six years. By provisions made under the regulations the act was confined practically entirely to the maritime provinces and particularly Nova Scotia. They dared not do this in so many words because that would have been too raw, but they introduced, in connection with the application, language which practically confined the act to Nova Scotia. I notice they forbade applications to be made for this so-called bounty—it is not a bounty; it is a grant—by anyone engaged in fishing for salmon. One would suppose that fishing for salmon would come under the category of deep sea fisheries. I also find that they made provisions whereby people who went lobster fishing in Nova Scotia were qualified as being engaged in deep sea fisheries, although I do not think they go out so far to sea to trap lobsters as they do on the coast of British Columbia where we have trollers that go out thirty or forty miles to sea to catch salmon. That was the way in which the thing was worked. In addition to the provision against salmon taking it did not even allow British Columbia fishermen to qualify where they were engaged in cod or herring fishing. In other words they said indirectly what they could not and dared not say directly, namely, that British Columbia was not to share in this grant which was announced to be entirely for the development of the deep sea fisheries of Canada.

A week or two ago I asked the government whether it was true that this money had been spent entirely on the Atlantic coast and the answer I got was yes. I also asked whether the government would take steps to see that the fishing industry on the Pacific coast got its fair share of the money and the answer I received was this:

As the bounty is based on the interest on Canada's share of the award made under the fishery articles of the treaty of Washington, 1871, and as the said articles apply to the Atlantic coast only, the payment is restricted to that coast.

That is a very nice answer if you want to believe it, but you do not have to. In the first place it is a grant, not a bounty, and it is so specified in the act. I am not talking about what happened in 1871; I am talking about the act which was passed in 1882. When I am told that it is based on something that happened in 1871, I am reminded of an incident that happened in British Columbia. There was a case up in the supreme court and the lawyer who was arguing it happened to have been in the legislature at the time the particular act under discussion was passed. He insisted on telling the judge how he knew that the legislators when they passed the act intended such and so and meant such and so. He would say: "I was there and I know what the intention of the legislators was." Finally the judge got a chance to put in a word and he said: "Probably you were there and probably you know what the intentions were of the legislators, but unfortunately the government forgot to bind you up with the act. I have only the act before me and I must decide the law according to the act." That is the case here. We have nothing to do with the intention or what somebody thought or did not think in 1882. We have simply the act to bind us. I have a letter from an official of the department making a very valiant and desperate attempt to justify the action of the government in years past. He writes in part:

The fishing bounty—

I object to the word "bounty".

—grew out of the award of the Halifax commission which was made under the provisions of the Washington treaty of 1871.

And so on. I do not need to go into the details about the Washington treaty. I will say simply this. There were matters between the two governments and the two bodies of fishermen, American and Canadian. The United States government agreed to pay the Canadian government a sum of money, which I think was $4,500,000, in consideration of our selling or giving them certain rights for their fishermen. In other words, Canada sold a little part of the rights of Canada, but my rights and your rights were sold just at the same time, as well as the rights of the fishermen of Nova Scotia, because they gave the Americans certain rights which were Canadian rights and they parted with a portion of those rights for $4,500,000. Very properly they took that money which belonged to the whole of Canada, just as the fish belonged to the whole of Canada, and placed it where? In a fund earmarked for this thing? No. It was placed in the consolidated revenue fund of Canada and we all know when money is placed there it is used entirely for the general good of Canada. The argument is used in the letter written by the department that this money was given to compensate the fishermen for their partial loss in sharing the privilege and therefore they were entitled to the interest derived from those sums. In the first place it was not given for that purpose; it was given to the whole people of Canada and not to one section of the people of Canada.

Let me give a very appropriate illustration. When the same conditions obtained in connection with the sealing award, they made a treaty between the United States and Canada, and the American government agreed to pay over a certain amount of money year by year from the proceeds of the sealing, and a considerable sum down in cash, but they paid that over to the government of Canada, and it went into the consolidated revenue fund. Parliament, it is true, did take a very small sum and pay compensation to some sealers who had been immediately put out of business, but they held, and are holding to-day that that sum was paid for some rights belonging to Canada, and that it properly went into the consolidated revenue fund. However, that is more or less beside the point. The argument that I make is that whatever was thought or intended or wished at that time was not put into the statute. They say: It "grew" out of the treaty of 1871. Well, it took eleven years to grow, because the act was not passed till 1882, and all I am concerned with, and all we are concerned with here is, what did the act of 1882 say? For those eleven years that money lay in the consolidated revenue fund, and the interest was devoted to the common use of the finances of Canada, and there was no question of it being earmarked for anybody at all. They did not think of that then. It was only in 1882, possibly because of some political exigency—I do not know—or perhaps because it was thought wise policy—at any rate they decided to vote $160,000 a year for the development of the sea fisheries of Canada, and that money has been spent, not for the benefit of the sea fisheries of Canada, but for the benefit of one small portion of the sea fisheries of Canada. Consequently we have been robbed, to put it in a blunt way, of our share of that money for that period.

It will be said that our fisheries were not in existence at that date, but that is not so. The salmon fishing of British Columbia had achieved considerable prominence even at that time. The trouble was that British Columbia was numerically inadequately represented in this house, and we suffered in consequence. When I was a child, being one of the younger members of the family, I suffered much from the theory largely believed in by my parents, and especially by my older brothers, that everything went to the older brother, and he had all the rights and privileges that were going. That feudal idea has disappeared now, and we in British Columbia, one of the younger members of the Dominion family as perhaps we are, feel that we are entitled to our fair share and to strict justice in this matter. I am asking, not for fair play, not for equity, not for a compassionate arrangement, but just for that bare legal justice that we would accord even to an enemy alien in the darkest days of the war, for surely we would not refuse bare justice to anyone. We are not asking for a refund of our share of the $160,000 for forty-six years, which would be a considerable sum, or that we should get this amount exclusively for the next forty-six years. We are prepared to take a bigger view. We will make a grand gesture and say: Keep what you have got; we will not ask you how it was obtained, but we say that in the future we should share in the allocation of this money in proportion to the needs of the growing output of our fisheries and whatever is most urgent as between the two sides of the continent.

That the government themselves anticipated something of this kind will be found by referring to section 6 of the act which provides that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, whenever he deems it expedient to cause inquiries to be made in connection with any matter with respect to the grant or the payment thereof, shall direct that the inquiries be made.

There are many problems both on the Atlantic and the Pacific in connection with which this money could be far more wisely spent than in giving this trivial bounty of one dollar to one man and six dollars to another. That does not do them any practical good, and it does not develop the sea fisheries of Canada. Take the British Columbia coast, for instance. There is a problem out there upon which a portion of this money could well be spent. The salmon going into the Fraser river go past our shores, but before they reach the Fraser they pass through Puget sound, where they are caught in enormous numbers in traps run by Americans who catch the big end of our Fraser river fish. If we did away with that, we would be in a position to make a treaty to-morrow with the United States. That is the stumbling block between us to-day. The United States are willing that we should have a close season and build up the Fraser river fish, but they want to take three-quarters of the catch in the future, as in the past. If we could develop this—some individual men have tried to do it, but they cannot afford to do it—if it was proved that these fish could be caught in our straits by gill nets—there are conditions of tide and current that govern fishing there—before they reach the United States traps, that would weigh heavily with the Americans, and we could make a treaty with the United States in six months.

There is another problem. That is in connection with the big pilchard industry that we have been developing in the last few years. The question will arise sooner or later whether these fish should not be caught out in the open sea instead of waiting until they get into the narrow inlets, where they are caught in such numbers that there is danger of scaring them away.

Then in connection with the trolling of salmon. No attempt has been made to trace the salmon, to find out where they come from, where they feed in the ocean, and in what way they approach our shores. That would be of great practical benefit to the fishing industry, and it would be worth fifty times a little hand out to a fisherman here and there. But I am not asking for any details. We are asking that in justice, and under the law as it stands in the act of 1882, a fair share of this money should be allocated to British Columbia or the Pacific coast in the future.

Mr. SHORT: I have been very much interested in the remarks made by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, but surely he is not serious in the argument that he is attempting to put up for the Pacific coast, that British Columbia should participate in the bounty.

Mr. NEILL: Not a bounty, a grant.

Mr. SHORT: It is a bounty. It was always understood that it was a bounty. It has been paid for the past fifty years. This sum of $160,000 represents the interest, as the hon. member well knows, on the award that was made at Halifax in 1878.

Mr. NEILL: How should I know that? Where do I find that?

Mr. SHORT: The records show it. That was before there were practically any fisheries on the British Columbia coast.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): It was before British Columbia was a part of the Dominion.

Mr. NEILL: British Columbia came into the Dominion long before 1882.

Mr. SHORT: It was in 1878 that the award was made, and it never was paid. The government never decided to pay this bounty to the maritime provinces and Quebec until 1882, and consequently we claim that there is interest of $160,000 for three years which is still unpaid and is still due to the fishermen of the maritime provinces. My hon. friend laughs, but there is no question about that. We have a well established claim to that money. The hon. gentleman well knows what the American government paid this money over to the Canadian government for. It was for certain privileges in regard to fisheries on the Atlantic coast, not on the Pacific coast. There were no fisheries on the Pacific coast at that time that amounted to anything, and the government did perfectly right in paying this bounty because the award was made for that purpose, and that purpose only. It has been paid for the past fifty years and it seems rather out of place now for a member from British Columbia to come forward, fifty years after this matter has been decided, to make a claim for the fishermen of British Columbia. I really cannot think that my hon. friend is serious in his demand, and I trust he will not press it, because it can only bring up a fruitless discussion. I am sure he is not going to take advantage of any little technicality there might be in connection with the act and claim for British Columbia something that the province is certainly not entitled to. I am confident that we on the Atlantic coast would never think of making a claim for anything relating to the fisheries of the Pacific coast; and we expect of course the same treatment from our friends in British Columbia. I do not think this matter is worth discussing further, because it was settled years and years ago and, as I say, the maritime provinces still claim that the interest for the three years from 1878 to 1881 is due to us, amounting to-day to over half a million dollars. I hope the government will decide that that sum shall be distributed among the fishermen of the maritime provinces.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. NEILL: Oh, no. I want an expression of opinion from the minister, but first of all I want to point out the absolute fallacy of my hon. friend's argument. He says: Everybody knows about this, it has been understood for fifty years. But when did age ever lend dignity to a wrong? If his argument is sound, see the extraordinary situation with which we are faced. If he has no better argument than to say I am striving for a technicality, then I submit my claim is proved, and I stand or fall by the act of 1882. Somebody says that British Columbia was not a member of the confederation at that time.

Mr. SHORT: This award was made in 1878.

Mr. NEILL: But I am talking of the act of 1882 which started this grant to our friend, and which now, not unnaturally, he wishes to retain when someone proposes to take it away from him. If I am not mistaken, British Columbia went into the union in 1871, but I am not quite sure.

An hon. MEMBER: Yes.

Mr. NEILL: But I am sure it was in the union a long time before 1882, I am sure we had fisheries then, and I am sure we are entitled to a share of this money. If the minister is not prepared to make a statement I will ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), not for a legal opinion, for I know he will wriggle out of it—I do not need a legal opinion; I have consulted some of the best legal minds in Canada on this subject, and they say that legally I am absolutely right—but, if the Minister of Marine and Fisheries cannot see his way to make a statement, then I ask the Minister of Justice to say if he will issue a fiat to enable us to test this matter in the Exchequer Court of Canada, and so ascertain whether we are relying on a technicality or not.

The CHAIRMAN: Item 242—

Mr. NEILL: No, Mr. Chairman, you are not going to proceed until I get an answer from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries or the Minister of Justice.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am sorry, but I have just come in and do not know what my hon. friend is talking about.

Mr. NEILL: His colleague sitting beside him is fully acquainted with the matter and can easily tell him.

Mr. CARDIN: I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, that I am not in a position to satisfy the request made by my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill). I am inclined to think that the practice which has been followed for the past fifty years has resulted in a certain interpretation of the statute regulating this matter. It is true that the statute does not state specifically that the money is to be distributed solely among the fishermen of the maritime provinces, but the interpretation placed upon this law by all governments since that time leads me to believe that the real intention of the law—the spirit—has been understood as giving this privilege or advantage to the fishermen of the maritime provinces. In fact, the whole thing arose out of a difficulty at the time, which interested only the maritime provinces. As has been stated, the treaty of Washington gave certain advantages to the fishermen of the United States, and certain reciprocal advantages were given to Canadian fishermen, but at the time it was thought that the balance of these advantages rested with the Americans. A joint board was appointed to investigate the matter, and it decided that the Canadian fishermen of the Atlantic coast—they were the only ones concerned in the negotiations—were to a certain extent prejudiced by the treaty, and the United States government paid four million dollars to the Dominion government by way of compensation. This money was paid in 1878. Since that time we have been paying the interest to the fishermen of the Atlantic coast. Reading the statute, not according to the strict letter but according to the spirit as interpreted by successive governments since that date, and taking into account the circumstances which gave rise to the legislation, I think it is fair to assume that the fishermen of the Atlantic coast are the people whom it was sought to compensate; and if the award was made for that purpose, it is only fair that those fishermen should be given the full advantage of the interest from that fund. I quite understand that from the purely legal point of view my hon. friend would be capable of making an argument—

Mr. NEILL: Hear, hear.

Mr. SHORT: But only an argument.

Mr. CARDIN: —but I should not like him to entertain the idea that in the application of our laws and regulations we forget their spirit and the circumstances existing at the time any case was dealt with. Those who suffered as a result of this treaty are, in my opinion, the people who should receive the compensation; that is only a matter of justice.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister give the committee some information as to how this bounty is distributed?

Mr. CARDIN: We distribute about $160,000 annually. One dollar is paid for each boat of a certain length which is used by the fishermen. Each fisherman must catch a certain quantity of fish to entitle him to the bounty.

Mr. IRVINE: What is done to conserve our deep sea fisheries?

Mr. NEILL: Perhaps the member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) will allow me to finish this subject?

Mr. IRVINE: Certainly.

Mr. NEILL: I have this one word further to say in connection with the matter. If that was the spirit of the legislation when it was passed in 1882 the legislators must indeed have been chock full of spirit, or why did they not say so? Why was it not so expressed in the act? I cannot conceive of a body of legislators, passing an act like that, stating something entirely different from their supposed intention. As to the suggestion that because this thing has been going on so long it had better go on a little longer, I would remind the house of a recent example where this suggestion was not followed. I refer to Quebec's claim on Labrador, a claim that had been made for the last sixty years, but the Privy Council did not say: Well, having gone on so long the claim is valid. No, on the contrary, they said they would interpret the claim according to law. That is what I am asking the minister to do in this case, to adhere to the strict letter of the law. I may also say that in my view the suggestions I have made for the spending of this money would do far more good to our deep sea fishermen than giving a dollar to one man here and a dollar to another man there. That is not doing any good either to Nova Scotia or to any other part of the country. I want to ask the minister one more question. In view of the powers given him under section 6 of the act, would he be inclined to cause an inquiry to be made into the matter? That at least would give us some useful information.

Mr. CARDIN: At pages 66 and 67 of the fisheries commission's report, it is recommended that the law be amended to meet the situation and obviate criticism. The idea is particularly to meet the objection of my hon. friend.

Mr. NEILL: That is another proof that my contention is correct.

Mr. SHORT: How much does the minister propose to spend of this amount? This vote has been in the estimates each year, but last year only a small portion of it was spent—some $5,800. Out of this item an amount might very well be spent to create a demand for deep sea fish by means of advertising throughout the country. The money could not be spent in any better way. For two years the department spent $10,000 annually in conjunction with the dealers in the industry and a largely increased demand for fish was the result. The government should take out of this vote a sufficient sum—not a trifling amount like $10,000—to advertise deep sea fish throughout the length and breadth of the country. I understand that last year a small amount was used to put on a few collecting boats for the purpose of gathering up the fish in outlying districts and making it accessible to the market. How has that worked out? Was it satisfactory, and if so, is it the intention of the department to put more boats on this year so as to find a market for fish from the outlying districts?

Mr. CARDIN: Out of this vote we certainly could provide for some measure of advertising. Last year we contributed $10,000 to an organization and this has proved satisfactory. We can increase that contribution and this vote would cover the expenditure. Most of the money spent under the vote, which is relatively new, is intended to assist the marketing of fish.

Mr. SHORT: Only $5,800 was spent last year.

Mr. CARDIN: The vote has been increased materially in the last few years. We are using the money to help the marketing of fish as well as to collect fish caught in small places where there are no facilities for transportation. That fish is brought to the more important centres where it can be marketed more readily.

Mr. SHORT: Is it the intention to increase that this year?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes; we propose to extend that service.

Mr. SHORT: I understand that not a dollar was spent last year in advertising.

Mr. CARDIN: It was the year before.

[Mr. Cardin.]

Mr. IRVINE: Is this vote intended to conserve deep sea fish or deep sea fisheries? It is not clear.

Mr. CARDIN: Deep sea fisheries.

Mr. IRVINE: What does that mean?

Mr. CARDIN: We encourage the fishermen and try to develop markets. Where fish can be marketed fresh, the fishermen make much better returns; hence it is desirable to extend the areas that can be served by fresh fish marketing. To this end an experiment was made in fish collection along a portion of the coast of Guysborough, from Pickerton to Canso. Two boats were employed for the work early in July, and the service was continued until the end of the year. Towards the end of October a third boat had to be employed for a time to keep up the work. Each boat made three return trips per week, giving the coast a collection service every second day. This is more particularly contemplated to help those fishermen who are operating in small ports or on certain sections of the coast where there are no facilities for the transportation of fish. We are assisting them in bringing their fish to the more important markets where it can be disposed of.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): Were those boats equipped with cold storage?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. IRVINE: What was the total value of the fishing industry in the maritimes last year?

Mr. SHORT: $16,000,000, I think.

Mr. CARDIN: In the vicinity of $20,000,000.

Item agreed to.

Fish culture, $442,000.

Mr. IRVINE: Has this to do with deep sea fishing?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. IRVINE: In Scotland the idea was prevalent among the fishermen that the trawlers destroyed the fishing beds as well as the fish. Has the minister taken cognizance of that situation? I believe that trawlers are active on the coast just now.

Mr. BARBER: I should like some information regarding a matter I brought up last session; I refer to the depletion of streams and rivers of British Columbia, particularly the Chilliwack river. It was intimated that the department had already taken action in regard to stocking that river with steelheads. What progress has been made in the restocking of these streams with game fish?

Mr. CARDIN: The director of fisheries informs me that he is not in a position to give details, but generally speaking the work is followed up.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Will the minister tell us if any new work has been undertaken in regard to fish culture? I think this is the most important work of his department, and I would like to know if he has done anything new.

Mr. CARDIN: An appropriation was made in 1927-28 for building five hatcheries, but it was not found possible to complete the survey work required in selecting sites in time to have these hatcheries built. In addition, the Windsor hatchery is to be replaced and new hatcheries are to be built, one on the Lesser Slave lake, having to do with white fish. Then there is a trout hatchery on Waterton lakes.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Are these new hatcheries?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Not some of the five which were proposed last year?

Mr. CARDIN: The appropriation last year was not sufficient to complete the work on these five hatcheries, and in addition the survey work was not completed. Hatcheries will be also located in northern Saskatchewan, Antigonish, Yarmouth and Windsor, and we propose to spend $175,000 on this work.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Following that, a more important point is whether the department has changed its policy in regard to the deposit of fry and fingerlings. There is a further item in the estimates to provide for fish culture in connection with the biological board, and there has been a great deal of constructive criticism to the effect that the department should adopt different methods. Has any other method been adopted in regard to the deposit of fry and fingerlings?

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that the department is studying the matter in conjunction with the biological board, but no definite change in procedure has been adopted. I am also informed that in certain places one system is more profitable than another, but all the work is carried on in conjunction with the board according to what is best in view of the circumstances.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The trouble has been that the suggestions of the board never have been carried out. Let me point out that in the United States a different policy has been adopted. We are still continuing the deposit of fry and fingerlings in regard to pisciculture, and these fry and fingerlings are being destroyed, causing great waste. The United States has adopted a method by which these fingerlings are taken by separate clubs and kept for several months before they are finally deposited in the streams. I am only directing attention to that fact because this discussion is now open, and this is a subject which is worthy of a great deal of attention. Waste has occurred in the past in this regard, and I think Canada should get more in line with modern methods in the distribution of fingerlings and fry.

Mr. CANTLEY: Following the remarks of my hon. friend for Kingston, from my own experience, I am convinced that there is no doubt that we are wasting our time and our money in putting out fry and even fingerlings up to three and four inches in length. I might tell the minister that for four years in succession I have deposited some millions of fry in a lake the conditions of which from the point of view of fish culture, judging from a report made by the minister's own officer, are ideal. However, I have not seen any result whatever. That corresponds with the experience of scores of others not only in Nova Scotia but practically all over Canada where that work has been carried on. As the last speaker said, this question has been very freely discussed in the United States, and it is the opinion in that country that to deposit fry and small fingerlings is simply to waste effort, time and money. If we are going to attain any results we must keep these fry in the hatcheries or in some other place close by until they reach sufficient maturity to be able to defend themselves against their natural enemies, of which there are many. In other words, it is useless to put trout and salmon fry into our streams and liberate them under a length of say six inches, or more in some cases. I think that has been amply demonstrated, and I hope something will be done to remedy the enormous loss which we are suffering every year through the continuance of a practice which has proven valueless.

Item agreed to.

Salaries

To provide for a director of publicity, fisheries branch, $3,420.

To provide for one head, western division, fisheries, $3,120.

To provide for one head, eastern division, fisheries, $3,120.

Mr. SPENCER: Are these new positions?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: What will be the duties of these men?

Mr. CARDIN: These are new positions to meet to a certain extent the recommendations of the fisheries commission. We propose to have a director of publicity. We had a publicity and marketing division some years ago, but when Mr. Conlon left the service the position was discontinued. The commission recommends the re-establishment of such a position, the need for which has made itself evident from time to time in recent years. We also wish to provide for an officer in western Canada and also one in eastern Canada more particularly to look after the fisheries in these sections.

Mr. SHORT: This item is to provide for a new publicity service?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Fisheries — Marine Biological Board of Canada—further amount required, $62,100.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is that an increase over the amount in the main estimates?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the payment of a bounty for the destruction of hair seals in tidal waters, $25,000.

Mr. SPENCER: Was a similar amount spent last year?

Mr. CARDIN: A sum was spent last year, but it was taken from the conservation vote.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Will the minister explain the method used in the destruction of these seals?

Mr. CARDIN: The fishermen kill them any way they can, and we pay them when they account to us.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is a bounty?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: How much per head?

Mr. CARDIN: $3.50.

Mr. IRVINE: What is a hair seal? I never saw a seal that did not have hair.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the expenses of a commission to enquire into the radio broadcasting situation throughout Canada and to advise as to the future administration, management, control and finance thereof, $25,000.

Mr. IRVINE: I understand the minister gave the committee assurance yesterday that he was changing his attitude regarding the decision on the cancellation of the Bible Students Association's license, and for that reason I was wondering what this commission was for. Am I correctly informed that the minister has decided to reconsider his decision in respect to the cancellation of that license?

Mr. CARDIN: That is not exactly what I said. This vote provides for the acquiring of the necessary information before changing the whole situation regarding broadcasting. We want to inquire in England, the United States, and Canada as to the best means for Canada to adopt in dealing with radio broadcasting. We want to have this information before coming to parliament with a bill nationalizing the system, or some such method. We want to get the benefit of the experience of others before doing this. I said that I would have no objection to this commission looking into this particular case to see if any real injustice had been done.

Mr. IRVINE: Do I understand the minister to say that he will see that that is done?

Mr. CARDIN: Oh, yes, I will.

Mr. HEAPS: Is this commission to be of a departmental character?

Mr. CARDIN: Not necessarily. I have not made up my mind as to whom I will appoint. The main object is to get information; we will try to appoint a commission which will be qualified to get the information we need.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The commission will be entirely advisory; nothing administrative about it?

Mr. CARDIN: Oh, no, absolutely advisory.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I quite agree with the desire of the minister to have a commission for this purpose. This is a matter which affects everybody in this country, and a proper inquiry by a commission would be most helpful. I would suggest to the minister that this commission ought to be appointed differently from many of the commissions heretofore; it should be a non-partisan commission. The members should not be selected on political grounds, but for their qualifications to give this question serious study. This is a question in which Conservatives are just as much interested as Liberals. This is not an inquiry into a partisan matter, and I hope the minister will not follow the plan which has been followed with some other commissions in appointing a man purely for political reasons.

Item agreed to.

To provide for compassionate allowance to J. B. Fontigny, father of Ovila Fontigny, formerly a member of the crew of the C.G.S. Shamrock, $3,050.

Mr. KAISER: Vote No. 476 provides for a compassionate allowance to a member of the crew, and this vote provides for an allowance to the father of a member of the crew; why that distinction?

Mr. CARDIN: It has been the practice, not only in my own department, but in other departments, to settle these difficulties according to the law existing in each of the provinces. The amount provided for in vote No. 477 is according to the law in the province of Quebec.

Mr. PETTIT: Why the difference in the amount?

Mr. CARDIN: I cannot explain the difference, but I would say that the amount in vote No. 476 is satisfactory to the parties concerned.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the construction of an ice breaker for Hudson strait, preliminary amount required, $500,000.

Mr. PRICE: Where is this ice breaker to be built?

Mr. CARDIN: Tenders will be called for as soon as the plans are complete.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the construction of a new ice breaker for service in the St. Lawrence river, preliminary amount required, $400,000.

Mr. CANTLEY: I notice a difference of $100,000 in the amounts set aside for these two boats, one for the Hudson strait and the other for the St. Lawrence. Are we to understand that the boat for the Hudson strait is to be 25 per cent more powerful or more effective than the boat for the St. Lawrence?

Mr. CARDIN: It is estimated that the ice breaker for Hudson bay is going to cost over $1,000,000, and the other one will cost in the vicinity of $600,000; it will be a smaller boat.

Mr. MANION: When does the minister expect to have this boat ready for the Hudson bay? Is it needed at once?

Mr. CARDIN: We are told that it will take a year to build that ice breaker, and it has been represented to us that it will be needed by that time.

Mr. STEVENS: You will be shipping wheat then.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Agriculture—live stock, including grants to exhibitions, feeder shows, etc., $1,480,000.

Mr. FRASER: I want to ask the Minister of Agriculture what arrangement he has made for the settlement of the claim that Mr. Pendrell Smith of Kamloops has against the department? I have had this claim up with the minister now for more than two years. It is for a certain salary for certain work done by a member of his department, which salary the minister refuses to pay. I should like to have the thing finally and flatly settled.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): My recollection is that Mr. Smith was holding down two jobs, and that is contrary to the usual practice in government circles. So he was deprived of one salary, which was a very modest one and the smaller of the two, in connection with car inspection, the maximum salary for which would be about $200 a year at that point. That is just my recollection of the circumstances. The claim of Mr. Smith was that some back pay had been retained. After going into the matter very carefully we considered that his claim was not well founded. I told my hon. friend a few days ago that I would have it reviewed, but in the rush of the last few days of the session I have not yet succeeded in doing that.

Mr. FRASER: The minister says that the action taken is on account of his holding two positions. I should like to know on what grounds he bases the statement that he cannot pay a man for two positions in the same department. Is it contrary to the provisions of the Civil Service Act?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand that is contrary to the provisions of the Civil Service Act. At all events the Civil Service Commission declines to make two appointments go to the one man.

Mr. FRASER: I want to read to the minister section 17 of the Civil Service Act which applies to the matter. Section 17 reads:

> In the absence of special authority of parliament no payment additional to the salary authorized by law shall be made to any deputy head, officer, clerk or employee permanently employed in the civil service in respect of any service rendered by him, whether in the discharge of his ordinary duties of office or of any other duties which may be imposed upon him, or which he may undertake or volunteer to discharge or otherwise perform.
> 2. Nothing in this section is intended to prohibit the payment to any officer, clerk or employee of a separate annual salary from each of two or more departments or distinct branches of the civil service in respect of separate duties performed for each of such departments or branches respectively, if one of such salaries is not sufficient to compensate him for his whole time, and if the aggregate salaries do not, in the opinion of the deputy head, concurred in by the commission, exceed reasonable compensation for the discharge of all the duties so performed.

I want to tell the minister that the total salary earned by this gentleman for the two positions was about $825 per annum. Does he consider that is sufficient salary for a man for a whole year? Both of these are seasonal occupations; neither of them extends throughout the year. Out of that amount of $825 per annum the minister is deducting $146 because the man is employed in two different branches of the same department. The officers of the department are absolutely certain of the fact that the services have been faithfully performed. They are anxious to pay the money and the heads of the department refuse to pay it. The duties do not conflict in any shape or form.

Mr. GOULET: How many months would he work?

Mr. FRASER: I am not sure, but I think about five months in the whole year. The duties start in about August and they end in the beginning of the year when the fruit season is over. The stock car inspection work, I imagine, continues throughout the year. The salary which he should receive for this work but of which he is denied payment amounts to from $15 to $20 a month. He was appointed first as a stock car inspector, receiving an average of $15 to $20 a month. Afterwards the Civil Service Commission advertised for a junior fruit car inspector for the Kamloops district. This is a seasonal occupation lasting about five months. This gentleman, as I say, was at that time occupied as inspector of cars of live stock at a salary of $15 to $20 a month. When the position of junior fruit car inspector was advertised he sent in his application and he stated on it that he was temporarily, part-time employed as stock car inspector. The application was accepted with that statement on it, and he was appointed as fruit car inspector at a salary of $125 per month for the season, which I understand is about five months of the year. This information was before the department when the appointment was made. He carried on both of these duties for the five months and he was not advised until after the expiration of the five months that he would not be paid the amount he was earning from time to time for the inspection of stock cars. That has been refused from that time till now. The gentleman, as a matter of fact, has been discharged by the department for some reason. I do not know what the reason is and I am not inquiring about it. It may be a very good reason for all I know. The point I am making is that when his appointment was made it was definitely stated to the commission and to the department that he was a part-time employee and they raised no objection to that at the time. They allowed him to go on for five months making these inspections of stock cars and they now refuse to pay him something like $146, which he has earned. They also neglected to notify him that he would not be paid for the inspection of the stock cars. Had they so advised him, he would have refused to inspect them. The department is absolutely satisfied in regard to the inspection of the cars. The work was well done and yet they refused to pay him. Under the circumstances the department surely cannot refuse to pay this gentleman. The minister quotes the Civil Service Act as his authority for refusing to pay this sum, but my interpretation is that there is nothing in the section to prevent the payment.

Mr. ROBB: Before the minister replies, may I point this out generally for hon. gentlemen who are supporters of the government as well as for our opponents politically, including my hon. friend who has quoted the Civil Service Act in support of his argument? There is another regulation under the Civil Service Act which might be very helpful for the house on all sides to remember, and that is that any employee of the government, in any capacity, who lobbies through a member of parliament runs the risk of losing his position.

Mr. FRASER: That has no application to this case because the man has already lost his position. He has lost it for some work in regard to an election which the government says is objectionable.

Mr. ROBB: I thought he was lobbying for an increase.

Mr. FRASER: No, he is lobbying for money that he actually earned and which the officials of the department say they are absolutely willing to pay, and the man should be paid, but the minister refuses to pay him.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is some time since I reviewed the case, therefore the details are not so clear to me as I would like to have them in order to make a specific statement, but I remember this much, that the accountant of the department claimed that this claim could not be paid. I suppose it could be paid by bringing down a special appropriation, if we decided to do it, but under the law and under the regulations that govern the accounting, the accountant claimed that it could not be paid. In any event—I do not want to take advantage of it—this difficulty about stock cars and an appointment to the fruit branch does not come under this item, but under the next one. In the meantime I will give my hon. friend the assurance that as soon as the session is over—I cannot promise it before the end of the session because we are too busy to justify our taking on any more inquiries—we will have this alleged claim thoroughly reviewed and we will do the very best we can for my hon. friend's friend, but no more than is coming to him.

Mr. FRASER: It is not an alleged claim. I cannot allow the minister to get away with that. There is another point. I would not have brought up this case on the floor of the house had I not been working on it for two years and that is as far as I have been able to get yet. With all due respect to the minister and all due deference to his opinion, I think it is about time that a claim of that kind was settled. After having followed this thing up in two different sessions, and getting this information from the department, if I had any reason to believe that the claim was not founded on justice I would not bring it up on the floor of the house; that is a certainty. The man did the work, and that is recognized by the officials of the department.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We will look into it.

Mr. FRASER: They would have had to pay somebody else if he had not done the work, and they did not advise him that he would not be paid until after he had done the work. He has only been paid $825 for the whole year, and then you deduct $146 for this stock car inspection. It does not seem fair to me, and the minister knows it does not seem fair to him.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have no desire to hold anything back.

Mr. FRASER: I agree that you do not desire to do it, but just the same you have done it and you are doing it now.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, we have not done it.

Mr. VALLANCE: This is rather a large item and I notice an increase of $175,000. I would ask the minister if out of this $175,000, he is providing grants for class B fairs.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, Mr. Chairman

Mr. VALLANCE: I should like to ask the minister why he is dropping the grants for class B fairs.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The story is somewhat a long one, and it is pretty near lunch time, but I will do the best I can. The first year after I had the honour to have charge of this department I looked into the matter of grants to all the fairs quite thoroughly and I tabled a return this year dealing exhaustively with grants both for winter and summer fairs all over Canada.

Briefly, before the war there was a federal grant of $50,000 to a perambulating Dominion fair, which was held in practically every province. During the war that grant was stopped, and in lieu of it certain grants were given to the larger fairs throughout Canada, which were subsequently classified into class A and class B fairs. This was done purely as a war measure because of the difficulty the fairs found in financing. During the war it was at one time thought of suspending all these exhibition grants in order that the federal government and the governments of the provinces might confine their attention more particularly to war purposes, but it was decided eventually to give grants to a number of the medium sized fairs and interprovincial fairs, running up to two or three hundred thousand dollars in the aggregate. That was done as a war measure and as a war measure only. In 1922 I gave notice to these fairs that the grant must be dropped off, but I promised that until their finances were in better shape we would continue to pay the grant for two or three years. That was done, but at the end of the two or three years, we extended the period, and in fact extended it on three different occasions. Now, ten years after the war, surely the smaller fairs, many of which are not entitled at all to a federal grant should be able to get along without our assistance. It was never intended that the federal government should duplicate the provincial grants for these comparatively small fairs. So the proposal is to drop the grants for these smaller fairs and continue the grants for the larger fairs that are interprovincial in character, such as those at Vancouver, New Westminster or Victoria, in British Columbia; in Alberta, Edmonton and Calgary; in Saskatchewan, Regina and Saskatoon; in Manitoba, Brandon and I understand that Winnipeg is coming in before long, and when it does it will also be entitled to the grant; in Ontario, Ottawa, Toronto and London; in Quebec, there are three, and in the maritime provinces one each. After reviewing the whole field, that was the arrangement that we decided to come to in regard to federal grants all over Canada, based largely on population. If we continue the grants to the smaller fairs of which Saskatchewan has some five and Alberta three or four, there is no place to get off at, and we might just as well give the grant to hundreds of similar fairs. In lieu of the $50,000 that was given by the federal government to the perambulating fairs immediately before the war, we are now giving $85,000 to these seventeen class A fairs of an interprovincial character, while the other twenty-two fairs, which are the smaller ones, will have to be taken care of like other smaller fairs are by the provincial government. In the last ten years I notice that the provincial governments in anticipation of the government dropping the grants to these smaller fairs have increased their grants, in many cases by two or three thousand dollars.

Mr. GARLAND Bow River): The Minister of Finance gave us a statement of policy which was entirely new, I think, to the house; it was certainly new to me. I would like to have him clear the matter up a little more definitely. As I understood it he said that lobbying amongst the members for an increase in salary was liable to lead to the dismissal of the person lobbying. Is that correct?

Mr. ROBB: That is my understanding of it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Does that apply to organized efforts to secure increases of salary, for example, to the federal charwomen's association?

Mr. ROBB: Oh no.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It does not apply to the organizations.

Mr. ROBB: To the individual.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Does it apply to judges lobbying amongst the members? I ask the minister for a straight answer.

Mr. ROBB: It may have prejudiced the case.

Mr. KAISER: I think we had better confine ourselves to the case under discussion instead of trying to deal with several cases at once. We are discussing the matter of advances to fairs under this particular item. The minister says these grants were war-time grants. Well, in Ontario we would be rather inclined to ask the minister why such conspicuous fairs as the Kingston industrial exhibition, the Belleville exhibition, the Stratford fair, the Peterborough industrial exhibition, the Renfrew fair, the South Victoria fair at Lindsay and the South Ontario fair at Oshawa, were absolutely overlooked.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Is the hon. member correct in saying that the Peterborough fair was overlooked? The hon. member for Peterborough told me two years ago his fair was not overlooked.

Mr. KAISER: Two years is a short time to you, but a long time to most other people.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): All the same, Mr. Chairman, I submit that if the hon. member is inaccurate he should correct his statement. Peterborough fair was not overlooked.

Mr. KAISER: We have only two minutes to discuss this matter; do let us have one minute to ourselves.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): You have had a good deal of the time of the house this session, and I do not think you need complain if you are asked to correct an inaccuracy.

Mr. KAISER: These fairs give prizes of four thousand dollars in compliance with the act, but they are receiving no grant from the Dominion. But we notice that fairs in some other parts of the Dominion are being looked after; for instance, in Alberta. We find grants of fifteen hundred dollars made to the following fairs—Camrose, Lethbridge, Red Deer, Stettler and and Vermilion. We find in the other provinces a similar condition, fairs receiving grants, although those fairs by no means compare either in their prize list or public patronage to the least of the fairs that I have mentioned. Now, I claim that these outstanding fairs in Ontario should be given consideration and receive grants at least equal to those made to fairs in all other parts of the Dominion.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Agriculture—live stock, including grants to exhibitions, feeder shows, etc., $1,480,000.

Mr. BARBER: As a representative of British Columbia I wish to protest against the cancellation of the grant to class B fairs. We have not been receiving this grant in British Columbia, with the exception of the Victoria fair. I submit that we have not been fairly dealt with, but I do not wish on that account to see the grant withheld from the other provinces. We find that Lloydminster, Melfort, Prince Albert, Weyburn and Yorkton have all received a grant of $1,500 in the last two years. This money could not be better spent than in assisting these agricultural associations, and the only regret we have is that the grant has not been extended to the other provinces. The province I refer to particularly is British Columbia. Many of these class B fairs have had a hard struggle to exist during the last few years, and a grant of even $500 or $1,000 represents to them the difference between success and failure. The fair in Fraser valley has had a very difficult time financing. This fair in our district and those elsewhere are important to agriculture, for they not only create an interest in agriculture in the districts concerned, but they act as feeders to the larger fairs. I am sorry that the minister decided to cut out the grants to these smaller fairs. Alberta and Ontario have received some grants and Saskatchewan has received a number. I wish the minister would reconsider his decision even if the grant were smaller. He should extend the grant to these small fairs.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Is the hon. member speaking of Kamloops?

Mr. BARBER: Well, Kamloops might be included, although my remarks referred to Fraser valley. I am speaking of the class B fairs. I understand that there is $4,000 worth of prizes. What is the qualification?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have no record of any class B fair in my hon. friend's riding.

Mr. FRASER: I am interested in the Kamloops fair.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is nothing in the return in respect to Kamloops.

Mr. FRASER: There is none there; why not?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is the question. If we are to continue to certain fairs the grant made for ten years as a war measure, we are going to have the question from every quarter of the house, "why not?" until we have "why nots" all over Canada. The only answer in that event would be to give them the grant, duplicating the provincial grant.

Mr. FRASER: What I am interested in is this: what is the qualification for a grant to a fair of that kind—the class B fair? What must the association do to qualify for the class B fair grant?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: At the outset they had to put up $2,500, but they got so hard up trying to qualify that a great many of them became broke and the directorate had to go bond or sign notes at the banks to carry the thing along. The result has been that in the last six years they have been given the grant unconditionally; we just asked them to go and pay their debts and square up their obligations with the banks and elsewhere. That is the condition under which the grant has been given to the class B fairs. Now they have had an opportunity in the last six years, through these unconditional grants, to get out of the hole they got into trying to qualify for the grant.

Mr. BARBER: Did the department experience any difficulty in British Columbia?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am informed by my deputy that there are no B fairs in British Columbia.

Mr. FRASER: There has been no fair at Kamloops in the last two or three years. I do not imagine there are any financial difficulties at all, such as the minister speaks of. They are proposing this year to put on a fair, and my question is directed to the minister for the purpose of ascertaining accurately what the qualification is now. What will entitle them to participate in the grant?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Just go and get out of debt.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: What is the grant to the class A fairs in Edmonton, Calgary and such cities?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: $5,000, if they qualify.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: That is, to each of these cities?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is the maximum for which they can qualify. If they do not qualify for that amount they get whatever less is coming to them.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: What is the total sum given to Toronto? I understand there is a grant every year of $35,000 extended over a term of years.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: Are there any other grants given to this fair?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is $35,000 for the royal fair over a period of twenty years; that was provided by statute last year. Then there is $25,000 for ten years provided by order in council of our predecessors in the year 1921.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Did Calgary earn the whole grant last year?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think so; the return will show it.

Mr. LUCAS: Is the minister cutting out all grants to B fairs?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. McPHEE: Representing a district in which there is a class B fair I protest against the cancellation of the grant to this class. The Yorkton fair board spent thousands of dollars establishing a plant which is a credit to the district and to the province as a whole. They give a large amount of money in prizes, and in the judgment of those who have attended the fair there as well as fairs in class A centres, these class B fairs, from an agricultural point of view, are superior to the class A fairs. I for one will protest against the cutting out of the grant to class B fairs. If the minister will let us go through this vote of $1,480,000 item by item I think we shall be able to cut it down sufficiently to enable him to continue the grant to class B fairs.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): What is the annual total grant to Toronto?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The regular grant to the Canadian National Exhibition, outside the special ones to the royal, is $5,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the total of all the grants?

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): The total of all grants, statutory and otherwise, which Toronto gets yearly?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does my hon. friend mean the royal winter fair or the Canadian national exhibition?

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): Take them both.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The Canadian national exhibition gets $5,000 and the royal winter fair gets the aggregate of those amounts which I gave, $35,000 for twenty years from 1927 and $25,000 for ten years from 1921.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Does that cover all the amounts granted to both Toronto fairs?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: In order to answer that question I would have to consult the return which was brought down.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have not seen the return.

Mr. LUCAS: Would the minister say how much was paid last year to the class B fairs?

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We paid $33,000, twenty-two fairs at $1,500.

Mr. VALLANCE: And how much to the class A fairs?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Roughly $85,000; if the seventeen fairs all earned a full amount, that would be the total.

Mr. VALLANCE: It seems to me that if the Department of Agriculture are still determined to spend that $85,000 on fairs, I am with the hon. member for Yorkton in believing that this money could be spent to better advantage in giving assistance to class B fairs rather than to the class A fairs.

Mr. DONNELLY: In rising to say a few words on this item I rather associate myself with the hon. members from British Columbia. I understand that these class B fairs were organized about ten years ago to assist certain small fairs. These fairs have been receiving that grant steadily every year since that time, but there is no chance for any other fairs to get into that class. If your constituency happened to be old enough to have a fair in existence at that time it was put in this class, but if that was not the case you were left out and you must stay out in the cold. I happen to represent a constituency which unfortunately was not old enough to have a fair at that time, and we are left out. I do not see why these people should continue to expect that grant forever, just because they have been receiving it for the last few years. In my constituency we have two or three fairs now which are as large as the average class B fair and in fact larger than the majority, but we do not get anything. Either the department should set a standard by which to judge all these class B fairs and so let them all in, or shut them out entirely. If we are to have class B grants let all the class B fairs receive it.

Then with regard to the class A fairs, held at Toronto, Regina, Saskatoon, Brandon, Edmonton and Calgary, these fairs are not very hard up; they are making quite a bit of money every year and could get along very well without this grant. I am in favour of cutting them out also; cut them both out and put them all on the same footing. I do not see why the smaller fairs, such as I have in my constituency, should be unable to get any grant while the big fairs receive $5,000 which they do not need.

Mr. SPENCER: I wish to add my protest against the grants to class B fairs being cut down or taken off altogether. These fairs are doing about as much good as any other fairs; they are doing a lot more good than the smaller class C fairs, and their work is equally valuable to that done by the class A fairs. According to the minister's figures the class A fairs receive $85,000 per year, while the class B fairs have been receiving about $33,000. That covered twenty-two fairs, which are doing educational work as valuable as that done by any other fairs, and there is not the slightest doubt that if this grant is cut down or taken off altogether many of these fairs will be forced to drop to class C, and will be unable to continue with the valuable educational work they are doing at present. Therefore I would ask the minister to reconsider his decision, and if he cannot give the amount given in past years let him at least give part of it. If he cannot continue the grant for any length of time let him tell this house for how many years he can continue it, in order to give these fair boards all over the country an opportunity gradually to adjust themselves to this condition.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend's presentation is so fair that I feel he is entitled to a reply. I am not going to quarrel with his remarks regarding the class B fairs and their relative usefulness, but the same arugment could be made as between class C fairs and class B fairs. Every fair is said to be doing work equal to that of the fairs in the class higher, but you could go on with that argument until you got to the end of the alphabet. Even then the class Z fair would make exactly the same claim, that it was doing work equal to that of the class Y fair. Where would you get off in this alphabetical enumeration of our fairs; where would you stop? I contend that there is no place to stop as between A and Z except after A.

It has been said that we should cut out the grants to the class A fairs, but where would that leave us? Supposing we proceeded to do that with all these fairs from Amherst to Vancouver and Victoria; we would naturally start with the smaller ones, and out would go all the western, maritime and Quebec fairs. That would leave the largest of all, the Royal Agricultural Winter Fair at Toronto and it gets $60,000 a year now, $10,000 more than was given to all the fairs before the war. Therefore you would naturally gravitate back and have the $50,000 formerly spread over Canada given to the biggest fair at Toronto.

It has been suggested that we should do away with grants to this fair, that we should finish with them all. Unfortunately we have promised them $35,000 a year for twenty years by statute. Are we going to default on that obligation? The government which preceded us promised them $25,000 a year for ten years, to start their prize list and to help them get on their feet. Are we going to default on that obligation also? So we find that $60,000 is obligated to the Toronto winter fair, and we must live up to those obligations. Then, if you cut out all the rest of them, is this parliament to continue to expend the amount of money spent annually before the war, and $10,000 in addition, and concentrate that amount in Toronto? I can imagine what this house and what the country would say if we adopted that policy. Consequently, will anyone offer a solution better than the one we have enunciated? I am open to suggestions; my staff and myself have discussed this question for six years, and while it would be a delightful sensation to hand out all the money all the fairs wanted, as head of the department I have some responsibility to the treasury and to the government as a whole as well as to the people throughout the country, to administer this money in such a way that I can justify the expenditure. I cannot justify the duplication of provincial fairs from one end of Canada to the other. While I am at it I will point out that it was distinctly understood, when the original grants were given to these B class fairs, that it was a war measure. I would point out the policy of the government regarding this war measure assistance in other respects. One of the first grants eliminated was the one under the Agricultural Instruction Act (an immediate pre-war measure) at the termination of a ten year period of administration. The amount of the annual grant was $1,100,000 and that was eliminated in two years. The same thing may be said with regard to the road grant, running over a period of ten years. This was eliminated in two years and there was no prolonged process of probation to get the people familiarized with it. Then the federal loans wth regard to the building of houses were eliminated, and the Prime Minister has stated that the technical education grant will be eliminated. What we are proposing to do with regard to B fairs is exactly in line with the government's policy on the other war measures to which I have referred. As I have said many times, if we do not eliminate these grants there will be no getting off place on the down grade to the smallest exhibition in this Dominion. If you start cutting off A fairs you land up against the only one left, the one in the city of Toronto, and that is granted by statute.

I know it is not an easy thing to take things from people. We know what that is when we try to take tariffs from the manufacturers. Whether it be a manufacturer or an agricultural exhibition, they are all hard to wean. They all object to being weaned, and you know what we say about the manufacturers when there is a little cut downwards in the tariff. They holler and we say: "Oh, you are hard to wean; whenever you get hold of a nipple you want to hang on to it." These exhibition associations—B fairs—apparently want to put themselves in the same position; because we give annual assistance for ten years they want to hang on to that down to eternity. They are putting themselves in exactly the same position as the manufacturers who complain about tariff reduction. There is a time for weaning both infants and calves, and manufacturers and exhibition associations. With all due respect, Mr. Chairman, and I am speaking seriously now, if this is not done now it will mean further procrastination. You will not have twenty-two B fairs, you will have one hundred and twenty-two before two or three years have passed. I have four of these fairs in my own province. The hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) has spoken for the fair at Assiniboia; the member for Assiniboia could speak for Estevan, the hon. member for Humboldt could speak for Humboldt, and I could speak for one at Melville. You would naturally think I ought to have some say in these matters, and especially with regard to the B fair in the town of Melville.

Mr. ADSHEAD: How did Toronto come to get such a hold on the dipper?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Because it is an exhibition representing the whole Dominion. Practically every province pays one-half the freight rate on exhibits to Toronto; they recognize it is the outstanding exhibition of the Dominion of Canada, both the Canadian national and the royal.

Mr. STEVENS: It is also international.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This was pointed out last year when we were putting through the bill authorizing the grant to the royal winter fair. It was not being paid to the pure bred Tories of Toronto, but to the owners of pure bred cattle in this Dominion. We had to have the fair somewhere, and there was no city which had proved its right to it as much as the city of Toronto. That city has the size, the hotels and the buildings to lend itself to a fair of this kind. I know it was not an easy matter, Mr. Chairman, to get it through, but I recognized that it was the best and proper place. It is not my fault if they are all Tories.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): I am not in accord with increasing the grant to the Toronto fairs, as has been done yearly. To my mind there has been no attempt made to wean these Toronto calves. It is like the tariff, when they are situated in the large centres there is no attempt made to wean them. We remember that the grants were increased to Toronto last year, but what was done? It seems that the Department of Agriculture had only a certain sum of money at its disposal, and in order to give so much extra to Toronto certain things had to be lopped off. What was lopped off last year? Among others, the grant under the pure-bred sire policy was cut off, the policy which laid the very foundation of the exhibition we are trying to establish in Toronto. The Minister of Agriculture was like a farmer who would sell his seed grain to build a granary.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have a much better substitute for that policy.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): We lopped off the grant to the pure-bred sire policy, and we took the money saved there and gave it to Toronto.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is not so.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): We only have so much money to spend, and that was the net result of it anyway. My plea is that there should not be the centralization that we are having to-day. If we need more money let us have more money spent by the Department of Agriculture, and not cut off these B fairs or abandon such policies as the pure-bred sire policy in order to be able to give a larger grant to Toronto.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That has been said so frequently that apparently my hon. friend believes it to be a fact. It was decided, and they accepted the decision six years ago, that the grant would be eliminated by a gradual process of reduction. This was extended three times, and here they are at our door again through the medium of our hon. friends. I do not object to that—they must keep themselves right with their constituents, as I must keep myself right with the whole country—but to say that we lopped off—to use my hon. friend's own terms—the grant in respect of the bull loan policy to build a fair at Toronto, or to increase the grant, is nothing but absolute nonsense. If my hon. friend desires to know where this extra vote is going, he will find that we have provided a substitute policy for the one which was eliminated, and which proved to be unsound.

It performed a good work, but any good thing eventually becomes capable of being abused, as that was. There is another policy substituted whereby any province may come in. This policy provides male animals, whether it be bulls or rams or boars, to the people of the respective provinces and we are prepared to carry half of the loss up to 15 per cent. The provinces of Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Alberta, British Columbia and Quebec are now in line to take advantage of this policy, which is a much better one. As far as Toronto is concerned, is my hon. friend really proposing to repeal the act we passed last year? We cannot repudiate what we did last year with respect to Toronto, even if we wanted to.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): My whole argument is that the Minister of Agriculture seems to have so much money to spend, and in order to give more to Toronto he takes it from other well deserving fairs and well deserving works in connection with his department.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That has nothing to do with it at all.

Mr. FANSHER (Lambton): I am not objecting particularly to Toronto getting what she does, but these other grants should not be wholly eliminated in order to benefit the Toronto fair. The others should receive attention as well as Toronto. The minister should pay more attention to that and not so much to centralization.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend seems to talk reasonably. How would he suggest that we solve the problem? There are these fairs spoken of by the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) and many others. Two hon. members from British Columbia want further recognition and if we continue these grants to class B fairs, nothing in the world can prevent the grants being extended to all the smaller fairs until they are all covered throughout the Dominion. The other method is to cut them all out. I pointed out how impossible that was because one of these grants was authorized by statute, and we cannot cut them out without repudiating our statute of last year and the order in council which was passed by my hon. friend the member for Victoria (Mr. Tolmie) and his government with respect to the prizes. I think it was a very creditable thing to do and it gave a start to one of the finest exhibitions not only on this continent but anywhere in the world.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: I would ask the minister how the grant to the Quebec exhibition compares with the grant to the Toronto exhibition?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They would be the same if Quebec had the exhibitions, but I believe they have a lesser number. Of course we can have only one royal fair. We cannot have two fairs of that description in Canada. We must concentrate on one and make it an outstanding one, and it happens to be in Toronto.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: What is the amount of the grant for the Quebec exhibition?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does the hon. member mean the city of Quebec?

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: We have only one exhibition, the Quebec provincial exhibition.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is a $5,000 grant. They have attained the maximum and there is a special grant of $3,000 for restoring the building, the same as was done in the case of Amherst.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: Does the minister know that the Quebec provincial exhibition asked for this federal grant on many occasions? A number of the other provinces got the grant twice but Quebec never got it. When the time came to hold the Dominion exhibition in the province of Quebec we were told that the government had decided to discontinue the grant. Owing to that fact, would it not be possible that the grant for the Quebec provincial exhibition be increased this year?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Of course Toronto did not get it until last year either.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: They got it before. We never got it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The live stock men were desirous of having one big live stock exhibition and it had to be somewhere. It could not be up in the heavens very well, as it was in Toronto. It could not be down in the bowels of the earth, because Toronto is recognized as "Toronto the good". It had to be somewhere and I do not know of any other city than Toronto that has earned the right to it by its record of the last fifty years in holding exhibitions.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: Owing to the fact that Quebec was refused the federal grant of $50,000 of some years ago, when the turn of Quebec came for the Dominion exhibition, would it not be possible to decrease the grant to the Toronto fair this year and to increase the Quebec grant?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: When the only Dominion exhibition was a perambulating affair, the grant of $50,000 was given and I understand Quebec got that grant.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: No.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My deputy is not very sure whether they did or not, but if they did not, it was because they did not at the time have an exhibition large enough to entertain the crowds. Montreal has never, in my time at least, taken a very active interest in holding these exhibitions and when the big commercial centre of Canada did not take it in hand, of course they may have passed up the grant. But my understanding was that they got the Dominion exhibition. I know British Columbia, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and all the rest of the provinces got it except Prince Edward Island, and they did not have accommodation for it.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: The province of Quebec never got the federal grant. The reason why Montreal does not recognize an exhibition is because we have these provincial organizations in the city of Quebec. It is a provincial exhibition. As I stated a few minutes ago, when we asked for the federal grant, it was the turn of the province of Quebec to have the Dominion exhibition, but we were told that the government had discontinued the grant. After the other provinces had received the grant we were refused it. Under the circumstances it is only reasonable that the grant to the Quebec exhibition should be increased to some extent.

Mr. McMILLAN: At this point I should like to make a protest. I made it before to the minister and the department and I was promised favourable consideration, but so far I do not know that it has been given. I refer to the holding of the royal winter fair. It is being held at the very worst season of the year so far as the farmers are concerned and if there is any one class which we should expect this fair to benefit, it is the farming community. It is held every year just about the time they are housing their live stock and this makes it impossible for them to get there in sufficient numbers.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There are a number of exhibitions being held and the situation is just the same as that of the circuit in any other part of Canada. Some of them have to be first and some of them have to be last. That is a law you cannot get away from. Chicago fits in with Toronto and they fit in also to some extent with Ottawa and the other winter fairs that are held about that time, for instance, at Chatham and the ones in the maritimes. You cannot disregard the interests of other fairs and other countries, because many of the exhibits go from Toronto right to Chicago and before a circuit is arranged all the boards are taken into consultation. It is the same as any other circuit of fairs, these class A fairs or other fairs. Certain attractions come to the fairs and we have to arrange with them so that they can be circuited with the least possible expense and the best results all round.

Mr. McMILLAN: This is a consideration but it is not very encouraging. Is it not a fact that a most vigorous protest has been made on the part of many of the live stock men?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is right.

Mr. McMILLAN: It would appear that not very much consideration has been given to the protests made by the live stock man. In all the explanation the minister has given there is no reason why the date should not be changed by a week or so.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The matter was thoroughly threshed out from every aspect particularly because of the advanced time of the year—the 24th of November last year —when it started. That is wintertime with us. You have to make the circuit to suit the convenience of as many fairs as possible, but of course it is not possible to please everybody. Would my hon. friend rather have the royal winter fair earlier?

Mr. McMILLAN: Just before the Chicago fair.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is when it is now. After the royal winter fair, they load up their cars and away to Chicago.

Mr. McMILLAN: I think some time elapses between the two, and that was considered by the live stock association when they entered their protest.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My deputy informs me that what I stated is correct, that there is just enough of an interim between the Toronto fair and the Chicago fair to allow the exhibitors to get their cars loaded up at Toronto and get nicely settled in Chicago.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I find it rather difficult to distinguish between the class A and the class B fairs, and I think the only way I can get the information I want is to ask the minister as to each of these fairs I see mentioned in the Auditor General's report.

I would like to ask the minister if the fairs mentioned here will continue to receive assistance from the federal department. The first is the Cobourg horse show.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No; that was not a B class fair, just a special horse exhibition.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The Eastern Canada live stock union?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is not a fair. It is the corresponding association in the east of the organization they have in the west.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): This item in the Auditor General's report is headed "Exhibitions and Fairs." The next one I would ask about is the London and Western fair.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Central Canada?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Ottawa winter fair?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Peninsula winter fair?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, that is at Chatham. It was not held for a year or two, but I understand they are holding it now.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Peterborough industrial?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No. That was one of the B class fairs.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Canadian national?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The feeder cattle show?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Where?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It does not say. That is what I want to know.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, that grant will be continued.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Where is the show held?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: One at Winnipeg, one at Moose Jaw, and one at Calgary.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I thought these grants covered only Ontario.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Winnipeg is not in Ontario.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The open air horse parade?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is in Ottawa.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is that grant continued?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It may be. It is a very small contribution.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The provincial winter fair?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not recognize it by that name. Will my hon. friend say where it is?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): It gets $6,000. I hope it is in Ontario.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We do not know it by that name in the department.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): This information came from the department to the Auditor General.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It has not been christened properly there.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I am not responsible for the christening. What about the royal agricultural winter fair?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, that is in Toronto.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The bacon hog competition?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The horse-breeders club, is that grant continued?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. DUNNING: You have done very well.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The Minister of Railways says that we have done very well, but I would point out there are only twenty-four little items here for Ontario whereas there are seventy-nine for Saskatchewan.

Mr. DUNNING: But read the total of the Ontario items, including the royal winter fair.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: When the hon. member for South Huron spoke of the royal fair I recalled the bill which the Minister of Agriculture brought down last year, in speaking to which he said that his chief purpose in introducing it was to extend further assistance and encouragement to the live stock industry of Canada. It would appear that the only encouragement to the live stock industry in Canada is given through the Toronto fair, but I think that the agricultural industry in this country receives just as much encouragement, if not more, through the large number of small fairs that we have out in the west, especially the B circuit fairs. One of the members in a little conversation I had referred to the Toronto fair as a national fair, but so are all these fairs national in that they are doing a good work and helping a national industry in this country. We have a fair in Vegreville, which is a national fair to my way of thinking, in that it does help considerably a national industry in this country. I do not know when the minister first gave these people intimation that the federal grants would be discontinued, but I do know that the Vegreville exhibition association has got into pretty bad straits because of the financial obligations it has incurred, and which it is not able to meet at the present time. I do not wish to repeat the arguments which most of the members have made here to-day, because it would be superfluous. But I do say that it is very unfortunate that these grants are being discontinued to the B circuit fairs. They are doing a great work, and a work that is just as much national in its character as the Toronto fair.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I wrote to the departments of agriculture in Alberta, Manitoba and Saskatchewan to find out what they had done with respect to their respective fairs in anticipation of the federal grants being dropped. Everybody knew that this adjustment was going to take place, because they had been given warning, and in anticipation of our dropping these grants the provincial governments in some cases were raising theirs. That was not done in all cases, because some fairs had got into hard circumstances, trying to keep up with the Joneses, and they could not earn a larger grant from the provinces. I would point out to my hon. friend that Vegreville got $985.83 in 1918 from the provincial government, and in 1927 it received also from the provincial government $2,426 for its exhibition alone.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I should like to say one word on this subject, which I think is rather important. As I understand the minister's contention, and I recognize the difficulty of his position, these grants are being withdrawn on two main grounds. The first is that they were given in the first place as a war measure, when conditions were not normal, and now ten years after the war these grants are being dropped. The second is that continuing these grants would make it almost impossible to draw the line between B class fairs, C, and so on all down the line, and would involve the minister and his department in a tremendous amount of obligation. I have had a little experience, as most of us have had, having been in the west for forty years or so; I have visited the different kinds of fairs we have, and I know the work they are doing. We have in my constituency a number of small fairs, in addition to one B class fair in Red Deer. I also have been glad to attend the larger fairs in the larger centres whenever I had the opportunity, and I have been endeavouring to see to what extent the money has been spent to the best advantage, and generally what value the country has been getting from the money expended under these grants.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: You mean federal grants?

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Yes, to see where the money was spent to the greatest advantage; not for providing amusement, but for actually improving the quality of our live stock and the standard of farming throughout the country. As I understand it, that is one of our greatest national works. From that point of view I do not think it is very difficult to differentiate between what we call B fairs and those further down the list. I suggest it would be well to set a certain standard to which those B fairs must attain or else lose the grant. My experience is that the smaller fairs are purely local in their character; they are attended by the farmers in the district, who bring in their stock for competition. But the B fairs are more than local, they draw their exhibits from all over the province, and sometimes from other provinces. In other words, as an object lesson in quality of stock they stand pre-eminently above the smaller and purely local fairs. In that respect they come more nearly to a parity with the large provincial fairs whose grants are being continued. From that point of view I believe it would be sound policy within reasonable limits—and no one can say that $33,000 in grants to the smaller fairs throughout a country like Canada is an unreasonable expenditure—to treat as permanent the grants to those fairs which are endeavouring to improve the quality of our stock and our methods of farming.

Then there is another thing to be taken into consideration—and undoubtedly it was regarded at the outset—the financial position of these fairs and their opportunities of obtaining money from other sources. Those sources are very few, and the principal are of course the gate receipts. Those gate receipts are becoming more and more dependent on the side shows, the grandstand performances and other circus features, which, regarded from the proper point of view, are not educational agriculturally. The more nearly the fair approaches the proper type, the type intended as an educational factor, the type intended to give an object lesson to the whole country as to the class of farming carried on and the quality of stock raised, the more nearly it approaches the ideal. And it follows that the less stress laid on what I term the purely circus features, the side shows and so on, and the more on stock judging and the other important factors, the smaller, as a whole, will be the gate receipts. At Calgary and Edmonton we find the gate receipts running into the tens of thousands of dollars, paid for the most part by people not five per cent of whom ever go near the stock and farming exhibits. Those people attend to see the grandstand performances and to look at the side shows, the circus and the fireworks. But those two fairs are allotted grants which they do not require in anything like the same degree as the smaller shows, because the very nature of the extraneous attractions at the big fairs swell the gate receipts.

I recognize the difficulty confronting the minister, but in the interests of the Dominion he should do his utmost to build up the basic industry to the highest point possible by encouraging the production of better stock and the bringing together at these fairs of samples of that better stock from all over the province and from the other provinces as well. To this end I suggest that it would be sound policy to make permanent what was commenced purely as a war measure; and to do away with or lessen the difficulties of the smaller fairs I suggest he should stipulate the conditions under which grants will be made, thus giving all possible encouragement to those fairs to develop stock-judging competitions, which would be of great educational value to our agriculturists and stock men. This policy in my opinion would be preferable to the policy that is being pursued right now of putting a premium, so to speak, on the side show and circus features of these fairs to the disadvantage of the great basic industry of agriculture.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What would my hon. friend do with such a case as that referred to by another hon. member, the Willow Bunch fair, which has grown up from infancy—would he let that class of fair in?

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Instead of the $33,000, I think $100,000 would be well spent in grants to fairs that live up to the proper conditions, that is, so conduct their operations as to educate the people in improving the quality of their stock and their methods of farming.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: But would he permit such fairs to come in as B fairs?

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Yes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: You would have them by the score.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Well, I would welcome them if they lived up to all the conditions that I have stated, and I think the money would be better spent.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Another question. Every time I have a conference with any agricultural association, particularly provincial, I am implored to cut out overlapping of activities. Well, the further we go with these grants the more we overlap the provincial grants. That is the one outstanding complaint from the provincial departments of agriculture, that our work is overlapping theirs. Now, if I take the advice of my hon. friend, good as it is, I would be overlapping more and more every year. And I want to assure my hon. friend that we could not stop at the point he indicates—the C fairs think they are as good as the B, and the result is that in a democratic country such as this, where you have to hearken to the electorate, there is no place to stop until you get to the bottom, the smallest and most humble exhibitions in the Dominion. That is my experience.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I realize the objection to overlapping. I realize, too, that if that objection was carried to its logical conclusion there would be no federal department of agriculture at all. But to my mind that overlapping could be better avoided by the minister saying: We will take over as a federal obligation those fairs that reach the proper standards, and the provinces can devote their whole attention to the smaller fairs. In other words, subdivide the territory. Then each authority could do better work, and there would be no overlapping.

Mr. MALONEY: In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) is quite sound in his views. The weak spot of the ministers' policy appears to be that by encouraging Toronto and the other large exhibitions he is centralizing the whole system. If you consider the exhibits at, say, the Toronto exihibition, you will find that eventually, if this policy is continued, the small breeder will be forced out, because he cannot compete with any hope of success against the millionaire who to-day takes up stock-breeding as a hobby. The idea of making grants to the large centres rather than to the small is in my opinion not in the interests of agriculture. The hon. minister spoke wisely when he stated that if he continued giving to one fair after another he would be accused of overlapping; but I think he might very well overcome that objection by handing his grants to the provincial ministers of agriculture, with the stipulation that they must be distributed among a certain class of fairs. In that way he could not be accused of overlapping provincial work. I will give him the experience of Renfrew. He has in that county one fair which is decidedly class B and which is perhaps, next to Toronto, one of the best and most representative fairs in the province of Ontario. It is in the town of Renfrew. That fair never received a grant from this government as a class B fair. When I see towns in the west, one-third the size of Renfrew, with fairs whose prize lists do not compare at all with the prizes given at Renfrew, but who nevertheless receive grants, I can say only this, that the policy that has been pursued has been indeed unfair. There has been no overlapping so far as Renfrew is concerned. In the town of Arnprior—

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Does the hon. member consider that it is the towns or the agricultural districts that are entitled to such a system?

Mr. MALONEY: I am speaking now of exhibits, the total value of exhibits.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Agricultural or industrial?

Mr. MALONEY: This is related to live stock. It is an agricultural fair, but this particular branch has reference to live stock exhibits. What I have said with regard to Renfrew applies with almost equal force to the town of Arnprior. Neither of these fairs ever received any consideration from this minister, or from any other minister for that matter. After all, it is the small breeder, the man who takes an interest in the breeding of stock in the small centres on different farms, to whom we must look in the long run, and not to the millionaire who is interested in stock breeding as a hobby. If we wish to encourage the breeding of stock broadcast, then I say to the minister, hand over to the various departments of agriculture in the provinces a certain sum each year, that money to be distributed in conjunction with grants given provincially, and let the class be stipulated. If the minister continues as he has been doing in the past, we will make a demand for Renfrew, and many demands will be made from this province for fairs which deserve and have deserved grants which they have not received.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Is my hon. friend in favour of Renfrew receiving a federal grant?

Mr. MALONEY: Absolutely.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That proves what I say. If we continue these grants to B fairs every fair like that of Renfrew will want a grant.

Mr. MALONEY: I have advised you how you may overcome the difficulty. Give a substantial grant to each provincial department and let them distribute the money. If you do not feel equal to distributing it, leave it to those who know the situation and let them distribute the money.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That would be an unusual way.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I have a great deal of sympathy with the minister in the position in which he finds himself. He is suffering to-day and has been for some time, as the result of an unwise economic policy adopted in the past, a policy which in my opinion cannot be justified on its merits. I refer to the policy of assisting certain fairs and withholding assistance from others. That is something that developed out of conditions over which probably no one had any considerable control. I agree with the minister that the condition should be remedied, but where I object to the procedure of the minister is in the method he seeks to adopt by which to remedy the injustice that exists. I find myself in much greater accord with the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Fansher). That hon. member enunciates a principle which is absolutely sound throughout the country; that is, that it is not to those who need assistance the least that assistance should be given, but rather the centres which are doing genuine agricultural development work, and who stand most in need of assistance. There is and has been for many years in this country a tendency to encourage large places and large enterprises at the expense of smaller and growing communities, whether rural or urban. By this means a great deal of the wealth of Canada has been concentrated in cities and problems have arisen, from that concentration, in connection with industrial development. And we are now threatened with the same condition in relation to the development of agricultural fairs. It is absolutely wrong for us to give large sums of money by way of assistance to fairs which financially do not require any assistance at all, while at the same time we cut out the aid to smaller places which are functioning well in the interests of improved agriculture, particularly as regards stock and grain growing. The fairs which are receiving assistance under the head of class A fairs have not been enumerated, but we are told that the Toronto fair gets $5,000. Now, everyone knows that the Toronto fair has been earning profits, not at the rate of $5,000 a year but something like from $40,000 to even $200,000 a year for many years back. One or two years ago I put on record in this house the net earnings and profits of the Toronto national fair. Not long ago I saw the figures brought up to date, showing that the profits have increased largely in the past two years. They do not need that $5,000 in the slightest degree. The royal fair at Toronto is probably in a different position, but even here we see the result of a wrong system—the concentration in one city of $60,000 per annum for the promotion of agricultural interests of the Dominion. At the same time we are cutting out the smaller sum of $33,000 spread throughout the Dominion. The statement has been made by the Minister of Agriculture to-day—and it is right—that $50,000 was spent before the war in a perambulating fair. Possibly that was entirely justified. If I remember correctly, though, it was the intention that after the perambulating fair had visited every province in Canada that branch of endeavour should not be continued.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I don't think it.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): That is my memory; I do not argue the point however. I accept the word of the minister.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand from my deputy that you are right.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Yes; generally I can trust my memory to a certain extent at least. The province of Prince Edward Island was not able to take advantage of that grant by reason of local conditions. Now, what situation do we find to-day? We are told that the $33,000 must be cut down because there is no stopping place. I agree with the minister that there would be no limitation unless restrictions and regulations were framed in regard to the number of these fairs. But in connection with the larger fairs, what is the situation? Something like $275,000 is being spent now in the encouragement of the larger fairs. The hon. member for Red Deer a moment ago observed—I cannot recall his exacts words, but I will give his meaning—that these larger fairs consist largely of industrial exhibits, sideshows, entertainments, stampedes and other features perhaps worse than any of these I mention, while the agricultural element constituted the minor feature. Anyone watching people going into these large fairs will see them make at once for the sideshows, the grandstand, the horse races and that class of entertainment. But if he visits the barns, as I invariably do when I go to a fair, he finds within a short distance of them the absence of any crowd. There is no competition there; no one is jostling anybody off the sidewalk. The crowds do not concentrate around the barns. Yet we find that to-day these fairs, where this condition prevails, are getting the sum of $275,000 as against $50,000 voted once in each province in connection with a perambulating fair. If the argument is sound that grants to the class B fairs should be discontinued because the assistance was given as a war measure, the argument is five times as forcible in relation to these other fairs. I think it would be a wise move either to abolish the grants altogether or to continue them on the basis of a perambulating grant to the provinces, to be repeated every nine years, at approximately the rate paid before the war. The minister has a serious objection against the smaller fairs increasing in number so as to become an embarrassment to the Dominion treasury, yet I find that to-day he is inviting another city to stage a fair and apply for this grant. The minister says he understands Winnipeg proposes to come into this class later on, and that if she does she will be entitled to the larger grant. I suggest that in view of the very important work being done by the smaller fairs, this grant should be continued. It is very small, hardly worth fighting over, but these fairs are doing good work and they should continue to receive this assistance.

Before I sit down perhaps I should draw a contrast between the larger and the smaller fairs. In the district which I have the honour to represent, a district 180 miles wide by 500 miles from north to south, there is an area of about 100 miles by 60 miles which is well settled agriculturally. In that district there is one class B fair to which stock are brought from all over that district. Farmers and their families and associates can come to that fair on any one of the three days for which it lasts. It costs a man living fifty or sixty miles away very little to put himself and his family into his car, drive to town, pay the admission for himself and his family and have a full day's enjoyment and entertainment. I regret that even small fairs seem to think they must have entertainment, but at any rate a man visiting that fair has a long day's entertainment and education in viewing the stock and exhibits. Then he goes to his car and drives home with his family, arriving there in plenty of time to take up his work the next day.

Contrast that with the fairs in the large cities. If a man desires to go to the fair he finds it very difficult to take anyone but himself; it is expensive both in time and in money as well as inconvenient for himself and his family to be away from home for so long. The smaller fair overcomes that difficulty entirely. The argument is made that the larger fairs are interprovincial, and that their exhibits are received from the different provinces. That is so, but the smaller fairs obtain exhibits from provinces just as far distant. Many exhibitors at the smaller fairs make the statement that they are able to do much more business in the selling of live stock than is the case at the larger fairs, because the farmers from the surrounding districts come to the small fairs and devote their time to a study of the live stock, and they are much more at liberty to discuss business and consider the purchase of live stock as foundation stock than are the farmers who attend the large fairs.

I think it is important that we continue for some time this assistance to these fairs. I do not think the department can go on indefinitely increasing the grants to any fairs which may apply for them; personally I should like to see the grants cut down, because I think this is a provincial responsibility. However, so long as the large fairs receive something like $275,000 a year I object to the smaller fairs being cut out of the $33,000 they now receive. Two years ago these grants were reduced about forty per cent on the ground of economy and because the money could be used to greater advantage elsewhere, and very little objection was made. If the grants to the larger fairs were reduced in the same way and abolished next year I think it would be all right, because then the provinces would have to attend to this matter. No doubt there is considerable overlapping, and I agree with the minister that it is a bad policy for the government to be spending money on the same objects for which the provincial governments are spending money, but I do not think this is the best way to stop the practice. Something should be done, and I should be glad to see a definite policy of reduction put into effect.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think if we are to abide by the understanding which was reached we should either pass this vote, and apparently we are not ready for that yet, or ask that the committee rise and report progress, which I now do.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have some further remarks to make, Mr. Chairman.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the house adjourned at 4.20 p.m., until Tuesday, June 5.

The house met at eleven o'clock.

ATHABASKA ELECTION

CONCURRENCE IN REPORT OF PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS COMMITTEE

On motion of Mr. J. J. Denis (Joliette) the second and final report of the select standing committee on privileges and elections was concurred in.

PENSION ACT AMENDMENT

NON-CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Health) moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their honours that this house agrees to their amendments to clauses 4, 5 subsection 4 (1), 5 subsection 4 (3) inserted, 24, 29, 32 subsection 6 and new clause A, and disagrees to their amendments to clauses 2 (a), 7, 12, 25, 30, (10), and 31 to bill No. 289, an act to amend the Pension Act, for the following reasons:

Because in respect of clause 30, subsection 10, the amendments made by the Senate differ in form and substance from those made by them to clause 5, subsection 4 (1) and are likely to cause confusion and misunderstanding in their interpretation. There is no objection to requiring the approval of the commission or of the board before the payment of accounts, but the right to question expenditure must lie with the minister who is responsible to parliament for the proper use of the moneys with which he is entrusted.

This safeguard is implied in subsection 4 (1) of clause 5 as amended by the Senate in the provision that the commission shall be attached to the department. There is no such safeguard provided in the amendment by the Senate to subsection 10 of clause 30. The board should not possess a greater control of expenditure than that given to the commission. It is considered that the situation would be clarified and the two bodies placed upon an equal footing in this respect if an amendment similar to that made to subsection 4 (1) of clause 5, were made to subsection (10) of clause 30. The subsection would then read as follows:

"The board shall be attached to the department and the expenses required to be incurred for the discharge of its duties, including the salaries of its officers, clerks, and other employees shall, on approval by the board, be paid, out of the moneys provided by parliament."

Because in respect of clause 12, while this house concurs in the amendments made by the Senate as to the special tribunal that is to consider cases claimed to be specially meritorious it is not clear what course must be followed by the applicant before he presents his application to such special tribunal. The term "entitlement" as used in the amendments made by the Senate is not defined by the Pension Act. There are several cases which might properly be made the subject of an award of a compassionate pension or allowance which are obviously not pensionable as a matter of right under the Pension Act. If it is intended that before applications are made to the special tribunal, the applicant must first apply to the commission in all cases, even if obviously not provided for in the Pension Act, and must make a further application to the board only in those cases, where, under the Pension Act, an appeal lies to the board, it is considered that such intention would be made clear by deleting the words "and in which entitlement has been refused by the commission, and by the board where the right of appeal exists" as contained in the amendments made by the Senate and substituting therefor "and in which pension has been refused by the commission, or if an appeal lies to the board, both by the commission and by the board".

Because in respect of clauses 2 (a), 7, 25 and 31, this house adopted these clauses unanimously. They were based upon the report of the special committee of this house on pensions and returned soldiers' problems, who were unanimous in their findings and recommendations. The said committee held forty-seven sessions and heard representatives of various soldier organizations throughout Canada, departmental officers, the chairman and officials both of the commission and of the board. The report of the special committee was concurred in unanimously by this house. The clauses are designed to remove grievances which the special committee considered well founded and to extend the payment of pensions to persons who ought to be entitled thereto. The amendments to these clauses made by the Senate are considered to be not in the public interest.

Because in respect of clause 7, under the provisions of section 11a of the Pension Act, although pension is paid to a member of the forces in respect of the aggravation of an injury or disease existing prior to enlistment resulting in disability where such aggravation was attributable to or was incurred during military service, yet no pension is payable to the dependents of such member of the forces on his death unless it is proved to the commission that such aggravation was itself the cause of his death, the object of this house in passing clause 7 was to provide for the payment of pensions to the dependents of such member of the forces on his death where the aggravation although not itself the cause of his death was a substantial factor in causing it. The clause is easier of application than the present law and would give a greater latitude to the commission to award pensions in accordance with the fundamental principle of the Pension Act that a pension shall be paid to the dependents of a deceased member of the forces if the death of such member took place during or was attributable to his military service.

Because in respect of clause 25 it is considered that the provisions of section 32 of the Pension Act, that no pension shall be paid to the widow of a member of the forces unless she was married to him before the appearance of the injury or disease which resulted in his death, are too wide in their extent. While it is in the public interest not to pay a pension to a woman who married a member of the forces in the expectation that she would receive a pension upon his death, it is not in the public interest or just that pensions should be denied to all widows who come within the class described in section 32. Nor is it in the public interest that members of the forces who have suffered disability by reason of military service should be in a different position as regards marriage from other members of the forces. The object of this house in passing clause 25 was to provide pensions in deserving cases, at the same time providing necessary safeguards. It is considered that difficulties of interpretation and application might be overcome by providing that a pension shall be paid to the widow of a member of the forces, notwithstanding her marriage to him after the appearance of the injury or disease which resulted in his death, provided that such marriage took place prior to the coming into force of the Pension Act of 1919, or that at the time of such marriage the member of the forces was not over forty years of age, was not in receipt of a pension in respect of the injury or disease which resulted in his death, and was not seriously ill.

Because in respect of clause 2a, which defines the term "appearance of the injury or disease" as the same is used in section 32 of the Pension Act, it is considered that the provisions of the said section ought not to extend to the widow of a member of the forces who was married to him after the appearance of an injury or disease and after such injury or disease had been reduced sufficiently to permit him to serve in a theatre of actual war, provided the marriage was prior to the recurrence of such injury or disease.

Because in respect of clause 31 under the provisions of section 51 of the Pension Act the only question on which an appeal lies from the decision of the commission is as to whether the injury or disease or aggravation thereof resulting in disability or death was attributable to or incurred during military service. The object of this house in passing clause 31 was to widen the scope of appeal. It is in the public interest that the returned soldiers and their dependents should have confidence in the administration of the Pension Act, and this object would have been accomplished by providing for a review by the board of decisions of the commission where applicants felt themselves aggrieved. It is considered that an appeal should lie to the board on decisions made, for example, under the provisions of sections 12, 30, 32, 33, 34 and 39 of the Pension Act. Clause 30 would have provided an appeal and an opportunity of correcting error, subject to the proviso therein contained, on such questions. By reason of the amendments by the Senate no such appeal is allowed.

And that the Clerk do carry the said message to the Senate.

He said: In moving that we disagree with the Senate amendments referred to I wish to say that a great deal of consideration was given the amendments to the Pension Act by a special committee of this house, who unanimously reported in favour of the bill which was presented to this house, and adopted unanimously by the house. The matter is one which deals with a great social problem of the Canadian people, the care of the men and the dependents of the men who served overseas. There has been at all times a desire among the Canadian people to do full justice to the returned soldiers and their dependents, who served the Canadian people during the war overseas. This bill was sent to the Senate and has been returned to this house with certain amendments; certain sections considered important by the House of Commons have been deleted. We think the matter of sufficient importance to disagree with these changes, and I therefore move that this message be sent to the Senate in order that they may have an opportunity of reconsidering the sections which they have deleted and the other changes they have made.

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South): I wish to say only a word or two regarding this motion, referring to the particular clause which asks the Senate to reconsider its decision with respect to widows who had married ex-soldiers after the appearance of disability. The underlying principle laid down by those who first looked after pension legislation was that any woman who married a soldier after he had been injured or had incurred illness on service, would not upon his death be entitled to a pension. This clause has been considered too restricted and committees of the House of Commons, and the house itself, have on four separate occasions passed legislation to amend the act with respect to this very deserving class of widows.

This year the committee brought in a unanimous report which was concurred in unanimously by the house, and when the discussion took place in this chamber there was no difference of opinion on the principle. The amendment of the committee apparently did not satisfy the members of the Senate, who stated that it was unworkable and that it was perhaps too broad. However, for the first time, I learn that members of the Senate have agreed in principle that, with proper safeguards, the widow who in good faith married a member of the forces who returned from overseas suffering from an injury or disease contracted on service should receive a pension. There is no difference of opinion with regard to the principle, and it seems to me that if the Senate and the House of Commons have agreed in principle, surely we should be able to find some formula or phraseology which will give a pension to this most deserving class of people. That is the situation as it stands to-day. I freely admit, as chairman of the committee, that fault might be found with the amendment which was sent up to the committee, but I am not prepared to agree that it was altogether unworkable, nor am I prepared to agree that it was too broad. If an injustice is being done a certain class of persons in this country, it is preposterous to go to the country and say we know the injustice is being done but the united wisdom of the House of Commons and of the Senate is incapable of formulating a provision to rectify it.

We have had informal conferences—perhaps they were not constitutional—at which members of the committee, the Minister of Pensions and Health, the Minister of National Defence and members of the house have appeared before the Senate committee. Due to the emphatic and blunt pronouncement of my hon. friend from Kingston (Mr. Ross) we were able to save one clause from the wreck, that which did away with the limitation of time for making application for pension.

If this house is unanimously of the opinion that a clause should be inserted in the bill to provide for this class of people, we should be able to say to the house, with the assistance of the officers of the Department of Soldiers Civil Re-establishment, that the members of the committee on pensions are prepared to make any suggestion and to discuss the whole question with the members of the Senate or of the Senate committee. More than that, any member of the house who knows the Pension Act is prepared to offer his services. The leader of the opposition, a gentleman of high legal standing, and, may I say without irony, a master of phraseology and a moulder of words, would I am sure be only too glad to join with members on the other side of the house to discuss this question with the members of the Senate in an effort to find a solution of the difficulty.

Mr. JEAN J. DENIS (Joliette): I have just one word to say before this motion is allowed to pass. It has been my privilege in the past to be chairman of a committee similar to the one that was sitting this year, and it is needless for me to say that I am in entire sympathy with the desire to give due recognition to the rights and privileges of the soldiers; I want every returned man and his family to receive the pension to which they are entitled. On the other hand, I am against what you might call the speculators; the country must be very careful to see that this class of people are not included in the amendments passed each year.

It must be remembered that in the United States after the civil war a very serious state of affairs developed. I will not go into details because the facts are well known to everyone. I might however point out that at present the amount that the country is paying for pensions to returned soldiers and their dependents is several million dollars more that it was, say, five years after the war was over. One would imagine that ten years after the conclusion of the war the amount paid for pensions should begin to decrease; but it is not decreasing, it is increasing every year. I have not the exact figures under my hand but I know them practically by heart. About five, six or seven years ago we were paying $31,000,000, $32,000,000, $33,000,000 a year, whereas now we are paying $40,000,000 a year. Therefore I think parliament should be very careful in the passing of legislation all the time enlarging the number of pensioners. No doubt it is on that principle that the senate rejected part of the bill that was passed by the Commons. In resuming my seat I wish to repeat once more that I am in entire sympathy with returned men and I want them to receive all the good the country can give them, but I am not in sympathy with those who may, under cover of being dependents of returned men, be preying on the country's generosity.

Motion agreed to.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT ACT AMENDMENT

The house resumed from Monday, May 14, consideration of Bill No. 288, to amend the Soldier Settlement Act.—Hon. Mr. Forke—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: The last time the bill was before the committee all the sections were adopted.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Railways and Canals—chargeable to capital—Hudson Bay railway and terminals: construction and betterments, including E. B. Jost at $2,500, $6,500,000.

Mr. LUCAS: Will the minister give an explanation of this appropriation?

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): Perhaps a brief statement regarding the progress being made and what is contemplated in the current fiscal year would be advisable at this stage. In 1926, as the committee will remember, the Hudson Bay railway consisted of 332 miles of railway which had been constructed ten to fifteen years previously and which had gone completely out of condition. The original ties on the road were all of native spruce and they had all rotted in the intervening period. A large proportion of the construction being over muskeg country, the embankment had gone very badly out of condition. The telegraph line was completely destroyed. There were no water facilities and no engine terminal facilities at any point on the line.

It will be remembered that at the session of 1926 provision was made in the estimates for the rehabilitation of the existing line of railway. That work has since proceeded and it is now well toward completion. Engine terminal facilities have been provided at the commencement of the line at Le Pas and at mile 137, and another engine terminal is now under construction at mile 327. In addition steel has been laid beyond mile 332 to mile 356, which is the present end of steel, six miles beyond the Limestone river. It will be remembered that last year there was placed in the estimates a further appropriation to complete the reconditioning of the existing track and at the same time an intimation was given to the house that an investigation would be conducted during 1927 regarding the matter of ocean terminals. That investigation, as was announced in the house last session, was conducted by Mr. Frederick Palmer, president of the British Institution of Civil Engineers. I had the privilege of accompanying Mr. Palmer on the journey to Hudson bay. He and his assistant also spent some time here on the first trip to this country, going through all the records of the department in relation to the whole enterprise, and coming back again in the month of July and early August to make an actual inspection of Nelson and Churchill on the ground. As a result of that work, Mr. Palmer reported very emphatically in favour of making the terminus of the Hudson Bay railway, Churchill, rather than Nelson. His report was published by the government immediately and was given very wide circulation. I think every member of the house received at least one copy of it, and a number of members more than one, and therein are set out the economic reasons for the recommendations made.

Briefly I can summarize them by saying that there is no question in the mind of Mr. Palmer or of any of the Canadian engineers who accompanied the party that Churchill can be more cheaply, more economically developed into a safer port than Nelson. If in the subsequent discussion further information is desired than that brief statement, which I think a careful reading of the report on the part of any member will confirm, I shall be glad to give the information.

With regard to the extension of the railway to Churchill, the construction work is in the hands of the Canadian National Railways in the same manner as the reconstruction of the original track. The Canadian National has let the contract for the grading of the last piece of line from the present end of steel to Churchill.

The vote asked for this year is $6,500,000, of which $3,500,000 is for railway purposes and $3,000,000 for port development. It will be understood that in making arrangements for the construction of the port a large portion of the initial expenditure must necessarily be on equipment to do the work. I may say that every effort was made to get ready for active construction work at the port during the fall and winter of 1927. Immediate instructions were given, following the confirmation by the government of Churchill as the terminus, to have the dredge Kennequhair which was built many years ago for Hudson bay service, and which was then at Halifax, transferred to Churchill during the fall of 1927, the idea being that if a dredge could be placed at Churchill during 1927 it would be immediately available for work in the season of 1928. Hon. members will understand the difficulty of attempting, with our present knowledge of navigation conditions, to get into the bay before the month of July, it is not practical to expect that a dredge shipped into Churchill in the month of July or August could accomplish very much in the way of dredging work in the season during which she travels from the Nova Scotia coast to Churchill. Unfortunately, although the Kennequhair was sent to Churchill, it was necessary, in a storm in the north Atlantic, in order to save the lives of the crew of the tug and the crew of the dredge, for the tug to cut the hawser after three days of very stormy weather, and consequently the Kennequhair was lost. That has rendered it necessary to provide new dredging equipment, and in all probability that will involve some delay in the completion of the dredging work at Churchill. Every effort is being made by the department to speed up the work consistent with the necessary provisions for safety. It is not an easy task to construct a great engineering enterprise so far from our normal business and industrial bases, and particularly is that the case with respect to floating equipment, because it must of necessity be sent in by sea, and there is the limitation of the navigation conditions as we presently know them in that regard.

[Mr. Dunning.]

The department conducted an investigation into the loss of the Kennequhair, and we cannot attribute blame to any individual with respect thereto. The loss was incurred not in the straits or in the bay, but in the waters of the north Atlantic. There was, if my memory of the report serves me aright, a continuous storm for three days. The dredge was being towed by the tug on a hawser, a leak developed and this gradually increased until on the third night it was not deemed safe to allow the crew to remain on the dredge. Consequently, when it became dark, those members of the crew who were on the dredge were transferred by orders of the navigator to the tug for their safety, and during the night it became necessary to cut the hawser and let the dredge go. She sank immediately. These are things, of course, which we must expect occasionally in attempting enterprises of this character. We hope for better luck in the future.

During the winter arrangements were made to transfer as much as possible of the useful equipment at Nelson to Churchill. For that purpose Lynn tractors, commonly used in large lumbering enterprises, were employed, and a large amount of useful material has been transferred overland from Nelson to Churchill in order that it may be available during the coming summer. Hon. members who are familiar with the sea will understand that the first job to do this summer is to arrange for some landing facilities at Churchill, some temporary pier construction in order that the vessels arriving there may unload economically instead of having to transfer in deep water to smaller boats or scows. The material is being assembled for that purpose, and it is proposed this year to send in approximately 13,500 tons of material by sea. It is hoped by the time the material reaches Churchill that the force now there, with the material now there, will have a temporary pier constructed in such a manner as to enable all material to be unloaded in the most economical fashion.

That is all I have in mind at the moment. I expect a number of inquiries, and shall endeavour to give as much further detail as the committee may desire.

Mr. CANTLEY: Would the minister be good enough to repeat at what point the dredge was lost?

Mr. DUNNING: I have not the exact latitude and longitude, but it was in the north Atlantic, a considerable distance off the Labrador coast.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): How many miles is it from the end of steel to Churchill, and what is the estimated cost to complete the line to Churchill? Secondly, how far would it be from that line when completed to Nelson? The line was originally intended to run to Nelson, but has been diverted to Churchill. Does the government contemplate building a line to Nelson from the main line running to Churchill?

Mr. DUNNING: I am just looking up the exact figures which are contained in Mr. Palmer's report. These were all carefully checked, and I prefer to use them rather than to rely on my memory. The diversion to Churchill occurs at a point seventy miles from Nelson, the line turning north at that point to Churchill.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): That would be the nearest point on the line to Nelson?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, that is mile 356 from Le Pas, where the northward turn occurs. From that point it is 154 miles to Churchill and 68 miles to Nelson.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): What is the estimated cost of completion of the line to Churchill?

Mr. DUNNING: The extra capital cost over and above what it would cost to build the line to Nelson is what my hon. friend is asking for?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): No.

Mr. DUNNING: I will give that figure first; it has a bearing on the other. It will cost $5,085,000 more to build the line to Churchill than to Nelson. These are the figures of the Canadian National engineers. The total cost—I am sorry I cannot put my finger on this figure just now.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): If you had the cost to Port Nelson you could figure it out.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. It is between seven and eight million dollars, but I prefer to be absolutely accurate.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The other part of my question was: Does the government contemplate building the sixty-eight miles from that point to Nelson, as well as the line on to Churchill?

Mr. DUNNING: Not at the present time. Whatever may eventuate in the future we cannot foresee. If my hon. friend will read the whole engineering report with respect to the two places—

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I have—

Mr. DUNNING: It is possible. With the great development taking place in the northland at the present time, he would be a bold man indeed who would venture to state definitely that the line never would be built to Nelson. In view of the remarkable occurrences now taking place in that part of Canada, I prefer not to commit myself to stating that the line to Nelson will never be built. It may be, but for the present we cannot see any immediate necessity for it. Now I have the figures for my hon. friend. The railway to Nelson would cost $2,458,000, that is, from the point of junction, the cost of the railway to Churchill would be $7,543,000, the difference between the two being the figure I previously gave.

Mr. IRVINE: Some months ago, Mr. Chairman, I noticed in the press a report to the effect that the government had taken steps to prevent speculation in real estate at the new port of Churchill. If the report is correct, I wish to congratulate the minister and the government. I think we all agree that the real estate speculation which has characterized the development of town sites in the west is something which is not healthy and, if preventable, it would be a great advantage to the general public. If the report is substantially correct, I desire to ask the minister what steps he proposes to take. I should like to know also if he is making an experiment with respect to this particular townsite—I think the time is ripe for it—which would prevent all such speculation as in the past took place in the west.

Mr. DUNNING: Well, Mr. Chairman, I can indicate to the committee the steps taken up to now. Immediately on the selection of Churchill as the Hudson bay port one of the problems the department had to meet was with respect to the land ownership there. There was a certain amount of land on the west peninsula—on which most of the works will be situated—which had been owned by private parties for many years. The great bulk of the land was still in the crown under the Department of the Interior. I felt that considerable difficulty might arise, especially due to the fact that a large portion of the privately owned land was distant more than four miles from the point at which the port works would be situated. I may say frankly to my hon. friend that I visioned all sorts of possibilities of enterprising individuals offering lots for sale at Churchill which the unfortunate purchasers, later would find were approximately four miles from the port itself, and with the resultant trouble which always follows that sort of thing.

An hon. MEMBER: As in a lot of western towns.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. It was deemed wise—the government accepted my recommendation in that regard—to expropriate all the privately owned property on the east peninsula at Churchill, and the present situation is that no private individuals own any property there. The Hudson's Bay Company has a certain area reserved on the west peninsula, on the other side of the harbour. I may say that an adjustment has not yet been made with the owners of the property expropriated. The department is endeavouring to secure some basis upon which to make a settlement. Failing that the matter will be dealt with in the usual way through the exchequer court. It is rather a unique case, of course, because I suppose the privately owned property could be said to be practically worthless unless and until the port works and railway are built. However, it will be for the exchequer court to determine what compensation should be paid. The pioneer settler who homesteaded there had faith that that was the proper port for the Hudson bay. While he is dead and gone, I do not think this parliament would like to see those who have succeeded him robbed of the results of his pioneer faith. However that may be, no doubt the exchequer court will pay due regard to all the considerations which should be taken into account. It is true that a substantial portion of the property has passed out of the hands of the original owner, Mr. Beech, and the Beech estate, and the ownership of lots is scattered in the subdivision. As to what will be done in the future, I know my hon. friend would like to see the government embark on an experiment of a town in which there was no private ownership.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Hear, hear.

Mr. DUNNING: I cannot say as yet if it will be possible for us to work out anything of that sort in connection with the development at Churchill. The whole matter is under consideration. It is not the intention of the government to dispose of any property to private individuals until the port development is thoroughly planned and we can see clearly what should be the next step in the development.

Mr. GUTHRIE: May I inquire of the minister what arrangement, if any, has been made with the province of Ontario with regard to the right of way which was granted through Dominion lands to Port Nelson in 1913? If my memory serves me right, there was a strip of land five miles wide running from the boundary of Ontario to Port Nelson, the idea being that the province would have the opportunity of building the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway up to Port Nelson if she so desired. Does that arrangement carry to Churchill at the present time, or has any new arrangement been made with regard to it?

Mr. DUNNING: I am advised that the old arrangement with regard to the right of way to Port Nelson lapsed some time ago. But however that may be, there would be no objection, indeed quite the contrary, to making such arrangements as might be necessary to enable the government of Ontario to extend their Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway to Churchill if that government should so desire at any time. My information is that they are presently heading in the direction of James bay towards Moose Factory, rather than towards the west coast of the bay.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I understood we made a grant of the right of way. Were there any conditions attached to it that would cause it to lapse? I remember very well the discussion that took place here by reason of this territory being given to the province of Manitoba.

Mr. DUNNING: The condition was that if they went on within a certain period the right existed. But in any case I can assure my hon. friend that we will have the whole matter looked into, and if it is necessary to extend any rights in that regard arrangements can easily be made. I am personally very doubtful of the desirability of giving one province a corridor five miles wide through another province. It would in my judgment be quite sufficient for the purpose of the province owning the railway if it were permitted to acquire a sufficient amount of land within the adjoining province to enable it to build its railway to the point it desired to reach. That has been done with respect to the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway entering the province of Quebec. It now enters that province, and although it has no corridor five miles wide it has of course the usual right to build a railway, which I am quite sure is satisfactory to the government of Ontario. In any case I assure my hon. friend that no difficulties will be placed in the way of the extension of the Ontario government railway to the port of Churchill if there is a desire that it should reach there.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It would be the province of Manitoba to whom we should have to go if Ontario so desired. I understand that this territory has now been made a part of the province of Manitoba. If we build a railway in Manitoba we shall have to go to that legislature.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend forgets that the land over which the line would pass is still in the crown in the right of this Dominion.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What right should we have to build a line in Manitoba?

Mr. DUNNING: By securing permission from this government, just as the province of Ontario did in connection with the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway when it was desired to go into the province of Quebec. There was legal action in the matter, afterwards settled; and the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway did secure the right to enter upon crown lands in the province of Quebec—crown lands which in that case were in the right of the province.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What is contemplated in the way of port expenditure at Churchill? Can the minister give us an estimate of what expenditure will be necessary to render the port satisfactory?

Mr. DUNNING: In engaging Mr. Palmer to make an investigation we asked him, in the letter of engagement, to give estimates based on a minimum port development. Perhaps I had better read the terms of the letter. This was what Mr. Palmer was asked to do, and it is the basis of the figures I am about to present:

> What we have in mind as an initial test development—and this is suggested more for your guidance than as a conclusive and limiting instruction—would be the provision of accommodation in either harbour for six cargo ships in port at one time, with working berths for three of the six; the estimated draught of the vessels to be not less than twenty-six feet. The minimum development projected at each port should, of course, be capable of such progressive extension as future requirements might dictate.

On that basis the harbour works at Churchill are estimated by Mr. Palmer to cost $8,450,159.

Mr. ARTHURS: Including elevators?

Mr. DUNNING: That includes provision for an elevator having a capacity of a million bushels. In that connection I might say, particularly for the benefit of members from the west who are interested in the handling of grain, that my idea was that to start with, in an initial test development, it would be better to plan for a fast handling low capacity elevator which could subsequently be added to by means of additional storage as the route developed. But to start with, my calculations and those of the department indicated that a million bushel storage plant, with very fast handling capacity—the fastest which is at present in use—would be the most economical and satisfactory equipment.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): Has the minister ever made any estimate of the total cost of the Hudson Bay development, embracing: the railway, port development, the money already expended there, the cost of bridges, aids to navigation and development in the straits? In other words, what is the estimated total cost of everything in connection with that development until it reaches, say, the eastern or the southern end of the strait, that is, the entrance to the strait from the Atlantic?

Mr. DUNNING: In that regard I can give information only as it affects the Department of Railways and Canals. The work on the straits is being conducted, as my hon. friend knows, by the Department of Marine. I have before me information relating to the Department of Railways. To date, since the inception of the Hudson Bay undertaking in 1911, there has been expended on the railway and port combined—everything—the sum of $28,333,711.72. That is up to March 31 last. As to the cost of completion, that is of course a matter of not so great certainty; but to complete the railway it is estimated that $7,543,000 will be required, and to complete the port $8,450,000. Roughly, therefore, the estimates would indicate that about $16,000,000 more will be required to complete the whole project, over and above what has been expended up to March 31 last.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): Will it be in order for me to ask that the minister obtain from the Public Works department the cost of their expenditure?

Mr. DUNNING: It would be the Department of Marine and Fisheries, whose minister is not here. I can tell my hon. friend, however, as regards expenditures by any other department, that they commenced only last year. The vote in the estimates last year and, I believe, also in the supplementaries, for the Department of Marine and Fisheries in connection with work on the straits represents the total expenditure up to date under that department. I believe the house has since voted in the main estimates of the Department of Marine a further sum for the completion of the work now going on in that regard.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I wish to refer to a point raised by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine), and to support the implication of his remarks, as to the minister having made so extraordinary and, shall we say, encouraging a statement as the one he did with respect to the holding of property at Churchill. If I recollect rightly, the press reported him as having said that he did not intend to allow speculation in land at Churchill, or words to that effect. I do know that this remark was received with a great deal of pleasure and approval by a large body of citizens, economists and others, throughout the country. One great curse of all western Canada, as the minister himself knows, has been the appalling and unjustifiable speculation especially in city property of almost every kind. If the minister can prevent that in Churchill he will have performed a great service not only to his own department, but to the development of the port itself. If the rapid development of that port is to be forecast now and is to progress in the future, it will depend upon the absence of too heavy capitalization in land. If we can turn that money into the proper channels of development work and so on it will help to a very large degree, but when answering the hon. member for Wetaskiwin the minister stated that he was not certain that he could carry out the implied plans.

Mr. DUNNING: No, my hon. friend did not understand me correctly.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I hope the minister will make that quite clear in a moment. At any rate, he did not make any statement as to what definite plans had been made with respect to the future. All he did say was that they had expropriated the land on the east peninsula and I take it that now all the property within a certain area, the extent of which the minister has not yet said, is in the possession of the crown. I am trying to encourage the minister, and I would like him to go a little further in this matter. I think he has announced a departure from the old, orthodox method which will mean a great deal to western Canada in the development of that north country, and if only he can be strengthened in his present state of mind to the degree where he will develop plans for the development of Churchill along these lines he will be doing a great deal for western Canada. Now I hope he can give us a little further information with respect to what he had in mind in this matter.

Mr. DUNNING: I am sorry my hon. friend misunderstood me, and possibly he has misunderstood the press statement to which he has made reference. The difficulty with which we were faced when Churchill was selected was an immediate difficulty with respect to the evils of speculation. Private individuals did own property at Churchill. What I was referring to then and what I am referring to now is the trouble which arose in that regard immediately Churchill was selected. Immediately the announcement was made an official of the department was sent to the land titles office in Manitoba to file the necessary expropriations. My hon. friend will realize the importance of that if for a moment he will imagine what would have happened before now if that action had not been taken. That was the point I had in mind. As to what we should do for the future, that I intended to leave for more mature reflection, having regard to experience elsewhere in regard to similar matters, but I did desire and the government desired to prevent the sort of thing which certainly would have happened before now if the privately owned property had not been expropriated in the first place.

As to the plans for the future, I will admit that since that time I have been studying various methods which have been applied elsewhere in the world with respect to experiments of the character indicated by my hon. friend. Frankly, there is nothing in existence that I can find which is quite as ideal as some of my hon. friends would desire in that regard. Particularly is the development of anything of that sort difficult when you bear in mind that the whole of the property for thousands of miles around is owned by the crown. If my hon. friend will also bear in mind the attitude of the public towards property owned by the crown, from his experience in the west he will know that it has proven virtually impossible to prevent people from squatting on crown property, where it exists in large areas such as is the case around Churchill. One of the great problems in evolving any plan for the development of Churchill along such lines as my hon. friend has in mind is that wherever crown property has existed in this country in large area, in practice it has been found impossible to prevent people from simply going in, sitting down and taking possession without acquiring any real rights and certainly no speculative rights, hindering development such as my hon. friend has in mind.

At this stage I only desire to say, without in any way discouraging the idea that something of an experimental nature might be carried out, that at present we are studying the possibilities of the situation; further than that I cannot go at present. It is much more difficult than our friends who possess these ideals indicate. Perhaps some of them who hold these views might give us something in the nature of a constructive scheme and tell us how it would work in relation to a municipality which is under the jurisdiction of the province, and which must be so—how it would work, for instance, having regard to matters of property and civil rights in the province of Manitoba. All these things must be studied. It is one thing to state a great ideal; I love to do so myself, but it is another thing to plan the steps which must be taken to make that ideal practical.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I think in respect to this matter of squatters the minister has exaggerated the difficulties more than we have exaggerated the benefits of this scheme. Really the squatters do not present a very serious problem in the handling of that territory, not only the municipality of Churchill itself but the surrounding country. If any difficulties did arise with respect to them, however, even if such were possible, a modification of the regulations respecting squatters' rights would be very readily acquired. In any case, the squatter does not possess title to the land, nor can he acquire title except through the crown.

Mr. DUNNING: I mentioned that.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): So even if the whole territory were surrounded by squatters the title is in the crown, and the crown can determine upon what terms the land may be further used by these persons. At the present time I am not going to enter into a discussion of a practical method by which this scheme can be applied; it is too late in the session for that, but I am going to meet the minister in this way: I am going to send him in writing a plan which has been worked out before and which may be applicable to the Churchill situation. I hope he will take it into consideration; I feel sure he will, because on the whole I think he is rather inclined towards a little experiment in this matter, and if the suggestion is at all practical I think he will accept it.

Mr. DUNNING: That is right.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I think the minister is in the proper mood with respect to that suggestion, so I will be pleased to accept his offer and will send him a written statement which may be of use.

Mr. DUNNING: I would be pleased if my hon friend or any other member on either side of the house who has any ideas with regard to that form of development would write me with respect to it. Perhaps this is a fitting opportunity for me to say further, here in this house where it will get major publicity, to individuals who desire to go to Churchill, that we cannot accept them for the next couple of years. I am being pestered by men of all professions, all trades and all occupations to be allowed to go to Churchill. At present Churchill is purely a development proposition; the department must arrange to feed everyone who goes there; we must provide doctors and hospitals and so on, and we simply cannot undertake to let private individuals, no matter in what business they may be engaged, go there until matters are further advanced than they are at present.

Mr. CANTLEY: Does the minister say he will not permit citizens of Canada to go to Churchill? How can he stop them if they want to go?

Mr. ADSHEAD: May I ask a question? Was not a very good experiment carried on at the town of Banff, where the whole town is owned by the government and there are no private owners of property?

Mr. DUNNING: I am interested in the example of Banff and it is being studied, but I am afraid it will not apply quite as well as we might desire. My hon. friend from Pictou took me up wrongly; I did not say we would not permit people to go there; I said that our facilities for taking them there were limited. If my hon. friend desires to go and will walk in, or go in by ship, we cannot prevent him, but even to him I would submit that it is unfair to ask us to feed and look after him once he gets there.

Mr. CANTLEY: I am not asking that at all. I am simply taking objection to the statement of the minister that he would not permit people to go to Churchill. I do not like that word.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): How much land at Churchill does the government claim to own, and under what authority?

Mr. DUNNING: It should be understood that the government owns all the land there.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Under what authority?

Mr. DUNNING: I guess it was purchased when the Hudson bay territory was purchased.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): From whom? The Hudson's Bay Company never owned any land there.

Mr. DUNNING: We will not enter into a discussion of that, but the fact is that the crown does own all the land on the east peninsula.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I take exception to that. I say they do not own it and never have owned it, and I ask the minister on what authority he makes that claim?

Mr. DUNNING: I took my legal advice from the Department of Justice. When the Department of Justice advised that the crown owned all that land, except the small portion which had been previously alienated to private interests, expropriation proceedings were taken under the Railway Act.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I was simply trying to get an expression of opinion from the minister of the authority under which the Dominion of Canada claims ownership to any of that land. I would suggest that the minister spend a little of his spare time looking that up.

Mr. DUNNING: I have been more or less intimately associated with the problem for a number of years, and I do not think this is the place to discuss it. At the present time the Dominion does claim the right of administration over the lands in question, considering them crown lands.

Mr. IRVINE: Could the minister give us the acreage which has been expropriated by the government?

Mr. DUNNING: I am trying to convey to the committee the fact that the government owns the whole thing for thousands of miles around there.

Mr. IRVINE: There were some private squatters, or something of that kind.

Mr. DUNNING: They have been entirely eliminated; the whole thing is expropriated. In view of the fact that it is an irregular peninsula, it is very difficult to give the exact area, but the expropriation proceedings dealt with the area including the whole of the east peninsula at Fort Churchill. This peninsula is four miles from the point to the base, and the base is constantly widening, and at present is close to three miles across. I would point out to my hon. friend that all the land is vested in the crown, subject, of course, to what my hon. friend from Frontenac is now saying.

Mr. GARDINER: What was the acreage which was expropriated from private interests?

Mr. DUNNING: There was the original Beech homestead of 160 acres, and, due to some exchanges which took place years ago, a few additional blocks in the surveyed portion of what was then the townsite of Fort Churchill. I am sorry to say that I cannot give the exact area, but I do not think it would amount to two quarter-sections; the original homestead of 160 acres, and some small additions.

Mr. BANCROFT: Could the minister give us some information as to the result of the investigation into the ice conditions in the strait? I know it does not come under his department, but he will probably be familiar with that.

Mr. DUNNING: The Department of Marine and Fisheries, aided by an interdepartmental committee, conducted work in the the strait, aerial and otherwise. The report of the work has already been published, and I think is in the hands of every member, and if not it can be secured at the distribution office as it is printed. It is undesirable to go into great detail, particularly on a matter not under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Railways, but it is sufficient to say that the result of last year's investigation indicated that commercial navigation through the strait was possible up to the first day of December.

Mr. McGIBBON: Will the minister be good enough to tell us the ice conditions as of the 5th of June at Port Nelson and Fort Churchill?

Mr. DUNNING: There is ice at both places.

Mr. McGIBBON: About six or eight feet thick?

Mr. DUNNING: I could not say as to that.

Mr. PETTIT: As stated in a previous session, I am in favour of the construction of this railway commonly known as the Hudson Bay railway, and I am persuaded in my own mind that Fort Churchill is the proper selection as a port. May we however be assured by the government, through its minister, that the development of the port and the expenditures there will depend upon and be guided by the duration of the season in which the straits are navigable, and that the investigation of the straits will extend over a period of at least five years so that we may have an average of the duration of the season and so be in a position to determine whether the navigation of the straits is feasible from a commercial standpoint?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend has stated very succinctly what is the basis of our whole undertaking, and I am in position to say that if last year's investigation has revealed the average condition, then the facilities provided for Fort Churchill will soon prove to be inadequate. Please remember that qualification. No man can say definitely whether one year's condition will prevail, but my hon. friends have only to visualize what is possible with navigation to the 1st of December to see what will be the result.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Could the minister give some brief details of the expenditures made in the strait? I understand there was an ice-breaker paid for, and so on.

Mr. DUNNING: I am a little handicapped because the work is under the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The committee will remember that the government's proposal regarding a reconnaissance in the strait was placed before the house and approved. Briefly, the work done was to combine the navigation by the old ice-breaker Stanley with aeroplane reconnaissance from three bases, one at the eastern entrance to the strait at Port Burwell, one at Wakeham bay about half way along the strait on the south shore, and one at Nottingham island at the western entrance to the strait. Aeroplane reconnaissance was made from each of these stations. As it was necessary to erect all the buildings required in the same year this work was started, it was not as successful as we would have desired. But as a result of that work a report has been tabled and is available to every member. It covers only one year, and I want to emphasize that. Many people who have been heretofore opposed to the development take the ground that it has been a very exceptional year. We cannot tell whether it was an exceptional year, but, in any event, my colleague the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin) is arranging for a continuance of the reconnaissance work, not so much by the aeroplane method, although the information gathered in that manner has proved very interesting, but by the method recommended by many members on both sides of the house who have had experience in such matters. This method includes the gradual development of aids to navigation, such as direction finders, and so forth, and the use of the strait by the ships in the service of the Department of Railways and Canals continuously taking in materials, which will provide us with a mine of information.

Mr. COOTE: I would like to ask the minister when it is expected this work will be completed so that the road will be ready for operation?

Mr. DUNNING: The contract for the construction of the line calls for completion by December, 1929. Last year I would have said that it might be ready in 1930, but following the loss of the dredge Kennequhair which involved the building and sending in of dredges this year, it is obvious that there will not be a very substantial start made upon the dredging during the year 1928. I would prefer at this stage not to be positive regarding the date of completion. I can only say that all the force the department can economically bring to bear upon the work will be brought to bear until it is completed and in operation.

Mr. BANCROFT: Can the dredge at Port Nelson be used for this purpose?

Mr. DUNNING: That is the sand-sucking dredge. It is lying on top of the island at Nelson and not only would it not be useful for this work but we do not know yet how we are going to get it down. That is the fact of the matter. It can, of course, be got down; nothing is beyond engineering science; but we think we have more important work to do at present than putting a large force of expert engineers and workmen on the problem of getting it down, when as a matter of fact we do not quite know what to do with it when we get it down.

Mr. CANTLEY: What class of dredges does the minister propose to take out this summer and when?

Mr. DUNNING: Two dipper dredges.

Mr. CANTLEY: Are they on the way?

Mr. DUNNING: No. They are being built.

Mr. CANTLEY: Where?

Mr. DUNNING: Montreal.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): The minister made reference to the development that will take place at Fort Churchill to provide facilities for three ships at berth and three ships at anchor. What is the possible development of the port? How many ship berths and how much anchorage can be provided?

Mr. DUNNING: I can only quote Mr Palmer in that regard. I cannot offhand find the spot in his report, but I can tell my hon. friend that the development is practically unlimited. We can put in Churchill harbour any size of harbour works that the necessities may demand. In fact, many years ago plans were prepared for Fort Churchill and Port Nelson and there remain in the Department of Railway and Canals actual designs providing for more dock space at Churchill harbour than now exists in New York. On the old, original plans of twenty years ago there are seventeen and a half miles of docks. I must admit, however, that a good many of the things done then were not very accurate.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I presume there is no necessity for further proof that Churchill should fill the bill. Were any observations and records made of the ice conditions at the port last fall and this spring? The only disappointing feature I find in Mr. Palmer's report is that he said he was not able to speak with authority with respect to ice conditions in the harbour, the probable date of the freeze-up and the opening again in the spring.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Palmer was a very thorough man and when he was asked to offer an opinion on something which could not be supported by definite scientific data, his answer was always the same. "Engineering is an exact science", he said. There is no exact data in existence with regard to the point which my hon. friend mentions and for that reason Mr. Palmer refused, as he said, to give an opinion. The department is arranging, in fact it has had under way all winter a careful observation at both points and in addition we are intending to secure aeroplanes for an aeroplane observation of the ice conditions off both ports during the present summer and particularly during the period in the fall when both ports would necessarily be most interesting from that point of view. We are finding aeroplane transportation a very useful adjunct to our work in the north country and indeed mining people and others are using aeroplanes up there now. Having them, we intend to conduct a very thorough, careful and continuous comparison in regard to ice conditions at both ports. We have learned now what appears to be a regular condition and that is that the two ports are not at all comparable as to ice conditions. When the ice goes out at Churchill, it is gone. When the ice goes out at the port of Nelson, it may not be, and very frequently is not clear of the mouth of the Nelson river, twenty odd miles away. It appears to be characteristic that the ice coming down from the north with the currents masks the entrance to the Nelson river long after the port of Nelson itself is free from ice. The conditions are not strictly comparable. To simplify the explanation I might say to my hon. friend that it is very frequently possible to get by ship from Nelson twenty miles down stream while Churchill is frozen up, but it would be impossible to get from Nelson out to sea. Have I made that clear? That is one thing we have learned so far which appears to be very interesting and we are continuing the observations.

Item agreed to.

Canals—Trent canal construction and betterments, $13,500.

Mr. SPENCER: When will this work be finished?

Mr. DUNNING: We are always working on construction. Whenever a dam is built, that is construction.

Item agreed to.

Welland ship canal construction, $13,750,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is the minister's opinion as to the time of opening of this canal the same as it was last year?

Mr. DUNNING: I have had no reason to change my view as to the time of opening.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What was the time, may I ask?

Mr. DUNNING: 1930.

Mr. COOTE: What has the canal cost up to date and what is it estimated it will cost to finish it?

Mr. DUNNING: To the end of the last fiscal year, $90,000,000. It will cost between $115,000,000 and $120,000,000 in all.

Mr. CANTLEY: Are these unit prices throughout all the tenders?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. CANTLEY: Did the tenderers name the unit prices?

Mr. DUNNING: In their tenders, yes.

Mr. CANTLEY: Does that include the supply of steel sheet piling and items of that kind?

Mr. DUNNING: All supplies by the contractors are at unit prices.

Mr. CANTLEY: In that way how does it come about that one contractor receives five cents and another six cents for exactly the same material on the same class of work?

Mr. DUNNING: I can only say in that regard that these tenders have been let progressively from year to year and in every case the lowest tenderer gets the job. There may be differences in the prices due to work that was let in one year as compared with work let in another. This work has been going on for many years and while some contracts were let last year, some I presume were let ten years ago.

Mr. CANTLEY: I can understand that, but what I am inquiring about is this. For instance I find under the contract with Johnson P. Porter, sections 1 and 2, the sheet piling is put down at six cents. I find in another contract by different people the price for the same item is five cents, making a difference of about $64,000 in the case of that one item. I find another item in regard to steel where the unit prices are four and five cents and where there is a difference of $50,000. I am at a loss to understand how on the same job in returns made for the same year there should be so large a discrepancy.

Mr. DUNNING: The explanation of that is this: When the tenders were originally called for on each of these sections, contractors were asked to bid on the basis of unit prices for every operation involved. While the unit price might be lower the price in the aggregate might be higher. The man who bid a cent less, let us say, for sheet piling might be two cents more than another tenderer on material involving a far larger expenditure, and in letting the contract—most of them, of course, were made before my time, but some have been let since, and I have had the experience—I have always asked the accountants to extend the totals of the whole tender on unit prices aggregating everything in the tender.

Mr. CANTLEY: On estimated quantities, of course?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, and then awarding the contract to the lowest tenderer in the aggregate, based on unit prices. We have had the experience many times of one tenderer bidding a very low price on some very small item, but in the aggregate submitting a high tender as compared with the other tenderers.

Item agreed to.

Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada, maintenance and operation, $287,100.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I would ask my hon. friend to let this stand until this afternoon.

Mr. DUNNING: Until this afternoon?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, just until this afternoon.

Item stands.

Governor General's cars, $2,500.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think we should have some explanation in connection with this item and the other expenditures in this connection. According to a return supplied to me by the department, we have had in the last ten years for governor general's cars an expenditure of $101,257.72. In 1924 alone we had an expenditure of $42,659.73. In addition to that, there has been very heavy cost connected with the carrying of these cars over the various lines, concerning which the department is not able to give information, stating in reply to my question, that:

> No separate record is kept of such movement by the railway management, and to take out this information would necessitate a special and particular search of all train service records of every division of the entire Canadian National system over a period of five years. This would take so much time, and cost so much money, that the management does not consider it in the public interest to undertake the work.

So we are quite in the dark with regard to what it costs to carry special cars either of the Governor General or of the government or of visitors. Further, I wish to call attention to, and to ask an explanation from the minister, of the large expenditures which have been incurred by the Canadian National in connection with the building of special cars for the Governor General. I notice in a western Labour paper an item credited to the Montreal Gazette which I think should be in the possession of the house. It is entitled, "Two Canadian National Cars to be used for Their Excellencies' Visit to Washington," and reads:

> In deep royal purple glistening and new, the two state carriages built by the Canadian National Railways for Their Excellencies, the Governor General and Viscountess Willingdon, stand ready for the first state visit of Canada's representative of the crown to the capital of the neighboring republic. But it is no ordinary lavish comfort that is embodied in these remarkable achievements in the art of travelling, for the interior decorator is none other than Her Excellency herself, and her discriminating taste has given a personal touch to the whole equipage which is a hundred times more attractive than any unbridled sumptuousness.
> In some ways the carriages have the air of state coaches, but in some ways they seem like a doll's house. Her Excellency has conceived the whole idea on lines of the bijou apartment, so that nothing has the appearance of being overdone for its size. The plain purple exterior, with its royal coat of arms, has an imposing dignity. In the inside, within the limited space of the car's proportions, is a diminutive moving home, complete in every detail from the aquatints and watercolours, and house telephone of the living rooms to the varieties of jelly moulds in the kitchen.

Their Excellencies' private car is entered by an oak-panelled hall with a blue carpet and short blue silk curtains. Ample cupboard space hints a feminine influence in the designing. In addition to individual closets in each room, a large wardrobe with plenty of hooks and hangers comes first. There are two bedrooms beside Their Excellencies' suite in this car. One room with cream-colored walls is done in printed linens of a kind of Dutch blue with bright tulips, and the colour scheme has not even forgotten that peculiar hook with which trainmen adjust windows at the top of the carriages. It, too, has its handle of blue and tulips. All the ladies' dressing tables have triple mirrors, and there is an ingenious array of drawers and closets. Another bedroom of similar design is in rose. Small chairs and side tables complete each room.

Their Excellencies' own rooms are in soft lavender, one in cream and lavender and one in grey and lavender, with deep lavender carpets. Both bathrooms are tiled in lavender, and even the shower curtain carries out the colour in rubber silk. The curtains are lavender silk.

The private sitting room is as distinctive as it is simple. Provincial designs are carried out in the furniture, which, with the panelling, is curly beech, and parchment-shaded lamps, a desk, a nest of tables and comfortable chairs are cosily arranged. Printed linen holds sway in coverings, this time in a floral design with a soft orange predominating. Even a barometer is ready to be tapped hopefully in the morning.

The second car includes the lounge and the dining room, and these are gaily painted in apple green, with orange-printed linen with bright flowers. Not the least of the ingenious planning of the cars is in the kitchen and serving pantry. Refrigerators, toasters, broilers, bakers and whatnots of the modern kitchen are compactly stowed away in the white and nickle ramifications of two diminutive rooms.

The bedrooms of the rest of the staff are in this car.

It is perhaps rather significant that in a parallel column of the same newspaper is a summary of some of the existing conditions among the poor people of the city in which this paper is published. We have the deadly parallel in two columns. I say that that is the reaction of the common people of this country to these reports as published in our press concerning the sumptuous cars which are being built for Their Excellencies.

I would like to ask the minister, first of all, whether it is with the consent of the department that these cars are being built. I would like to ask why it is that these huge expenditures, which must involve—I do not know, but rumour says two or three hundred thousand dollars—are not included in the proper place in these estimates, where, according to the item before us apparently all that is being expended for Governor General's cars is $2,500. Why have these large items involved in the building of these new cars not been included? I ask, further, whether we consider that our Canadian National Railways, with the capitalization it has been carrying for a great many years, must carry in addition extravagances of this kind. The people of Canada are solidly behind the Canadian National Railways, but the people of Canada have a right to see that only legitimate expenditures are included in the railway estimates, and if expenditures are to be made along these extravagant lines in providing for certain officials the people of this country through parliament ought to decide upon these expenditures; they should not be decided by the heads of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. DUNNING: I cannot enter into any discussion as to the propriety of the people of Canada providing, as they have done for the past thirty years, travelling equipment for whoever may for the time being occupy the position of governor general. The fact is that such accommodation has always been provided, and I think the country is convinced of the necessity of making provision for it in order that the occupants of the position may properly discharge their obligations to the people by travelling to the extent that they do. I am reminded by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) that if we had a republic we should probably provide similar accommodation for the president, as there is no government in the world which does not make such provision for the head of the state.

The former cars used for the purpose were built by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company more than thirty years ago, at the time when His Majesty as Duke of York visited Canada. They were subsequently purchased by the government, I do not know in what year.

Mr. CANTLEY: Built in 1901.

Mr. DUNNING: A number of years ago at any event. To say they have become obsolete, and in fact unsafe, is not going beyond the mark. During the past few years the executives of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National Railways, and before that time indeed the executives of the railways as they formerly existed, have directed the attention of the government to the condition of these cars and the risk which was involved not only to the distinguished persons using them, but to the train crews and others who were engaged in their movement from place to place. The old cars had a certain value, they could be advantageously rebuilt for a different type of service. After reviewing the problem, Sir Henry Thornton thought it wise and most economical, having regard to the necessities of the case, to take the shell of an ordinary steel pullman, such as is being constructed for the Canadian National Railways, and fit it up for the use of the Governor General, instead of installing the ordinary pullman or observation car equipment, and to take back into the Canadian National service the two old cars, rebuilding them for the class of service to which they would be allotted.

Mr. CANTLEY: Send them down to Nova Scotia, as you do all your old rolling stock.

Mr. DUNNING: Before they are sent there, I can assure my hon. friend that they will be thoroughly reconditioned. My hon. friend referred to the large amount which has been spent on the governor general's cars during the past ten years. That is true, and it constitutes one of the main reasons why the old cars should be put into other service, and so save further maintenance at the rate which has been expended on these cars during the last ten years—expenditure abnormally large, but rendered necessary by reason of the obsolete condition of the cars themselves. The lower maintenance cost of the new equipment is illustrated in the item now before the house of $2,500, which is the estimated maintenance cost for this year. As I say, the whole matter has been handled by the Canadian National Railways, and I think in the most economical manner possible having regard to the service required.

My hon. friend read a newspaper article which emphasized the lavishness of this, that and the other thing. I do not propose to enter into the subject at all. When we were getting new cars I am sure the people of Canada would want those cars to be properly built and properly fitted out. Personally I have not seen the new cars, but I am quite sure the president of the Canadian National Railways would see to it that the job was properly done when he was once determined that it should be done.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The minister has not told me why this item has been taken out of the regular schedule for these expenditures.

Mr. DUNNING: It never was there.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: We had $42,000 in connection with governor general's cars several years ago, and in the past ten years we have had $100,000 included in these estimates for governor general's cars. Why should not the new expenditure appear there?

Mr. DUNNING: It was simply a question of the proper way of doing it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: In the past these items for governor general's cars have been included in the estimates.

Mr. DUNNING: For maintenance?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: For construction and alterations.

Mr. DUNNING: Will my hon. friend point out where the construction of governor general's cars ever did appear in the estimates?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have suggested several years ago in that one item of $42,000.

Mr. DUNNING: There is no special reason for doing it in this way, except that it is the most convenient and most natural way to do it. Originally the government owned only the Intercolonial railway, which did not come near Ottawa and had no facilities here for looking after the cars. During that period the government owned the cars. At the present time the Canadian National own the cars and look after their replacement in exactly the same manner as they would look after the replacement of any other cars belonging to the system. There is nothing sinister in this.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not suggesting there is anything sinister, but I say this is not ordinarily a part of the Canadian National Railways expenditure. Since it is a distinct expenditure on the part of the government, it ought to be included in the government estimates in the regular way. Are all the furnishings in these cars also included in the Canadian National Railways expenditure?

Mr. DUNNING: They are part of the cost.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Will the minister give us a statement with regard to the cost of these new cars?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes; I will also give information with respect to the nearest comparable ordinary car. Car No. 1 cost $87,247.79; car No. 2, $88,976.98. The nearest comparable car is a seven-compartment buffet observation car, which in quantities can be purchased at $58,000.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I think this is the point, Mr. Chairman. This being a state affair, it should not be burdened on the Canadian National Railways; it is not a Canadian National disbursement.

Mr. SPENCER: What does the small sum of $2,500 represent?

Mr. DUNNING: Maintenance purely.

Mr. GEARY: Can the minister compare this with another private car? Recently I was in a car which was not very sumptuously furnished, and I was told it cost $100,000. By comparison the cost of these cars does not look excessive.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend will appreciate how impossible it is to give comparisons with other private or business cars, for the reason that such cars vary in price anywhere up the scale as high as $200,000.

Mr. GEARY: These are not the most expensive cars.

Mr. DUNNING: Not by any means. There are cars much more expensive on the road to this country, particularly the cars from the United States. Any railwayman will tell you that.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Will the minister answer this question? As this is a state affair, why should not the expenditure be shouldered by the state? Why should the Canadian National Railways be burdened with it, and the amount hidden so that no one can tell what it really is?

Mr. DUNNING: Answering my hon. friend from South Toronto (Mr. Geary), the nearest comparison I have under my hand is for the New York Central. Last year that railroad furnished to its president and, I think, four vice-presidents, cars for their use at a cost of $100,000 each. I presume they would not be equipped in an unduly sumptuous manner for those officers. With reference to my hon. friend from East Calgary (Mr. Adshead) it is just a matter of arrangement. Now that we have a state railway, I believe all our railway equipment should be owned by the railway. The railway can better look after it. If there is a maintenance account then let the government meet it with respect to any cars in the service. But as a matter of good business I think railway equipment owned by the government had better be owned by that agency of the government which has to do with railways, namely, the Canadian National Railways.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Miscellaneous service, including salaries and expenses of experts employed temporarily, $38,000.

Mr. CANTLEY: Does this include the cost of the engineer you had at Hudson bay?

Mr. DUNNING: No, he is paid.

Item agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: Before I leave the chair, I have been asked to announce that the agriculture committee will meet at four o'clock this afternoon in the railway committee room.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada, maintenance and operation, $287,100.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The leader of the opposition will be in his place in a moment and I think perhaps he may have a word to say on this item. In the meantime, what is the explanation of the increase of $15,060 in this item?

Mr. DUNNING: That sum includes an increase of $5,060 in salaries and $10,000 for additional help necessary to do the work requisite under the Maritime Freight Rates Act.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I suppose that is for clerical assistance?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Welland ship canal—to provide for payment to P. Lyall and Sons Construction Company, Limited, on account of washing rock from section 4—not anticipated at time tenders were called for, $56,658.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Will the minister explain what this vote is? It is unusual, and I do not understand it.

Mr. DUNNING: This is the third time an item of this kind has appeared in the estimates with reference to the Welland canal. Following a great deal of difficulty from an engineering point of view on the question of washing rock, some three years ago it was finally decided that this work should be done, a schedule of payment with respect to it was arranged and agreed upon and of course in each of the succeeding years it had to be paid as an extra amount. I am informed that this is the last year during which this rock washing will be necessary; this will complete the work. This represents a grand total of 343,800 cubic yards, or 30,700 cubic yards less than the original estimate, and the total cost is $21,490 less than the original estimate.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): May I ask the minister if the contract with the P. Lyall Company has been completed?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): What arrangement was made with that company by which they were allowed to sell part of their plant?

Mr. DUNNING: Back in 1919, just after the war, it was decided to proceed on the Welland canal by contract instead of having the government do the work, and in letting the various contracts each contractor had to take over part of the equipment then belonging to the government as part of his contract obligation. They are all paying for the equipment then purchased out of the amounts due on progress estimates from time to time, and the Lyall firm is in the same position.

Mr. MANION: When is it expected the Welland canal will be completed, and what is the total estimated cost?

Mr. DUNNING: I answered that this morning. It is expected to be completed by 1930 and will cost something between $115,000,000 and $120,000,000.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): In just what position is the Lyall company in respect of its debt to the government?

Mr. DUNNING: Originally on the Lyall contracts $2,338,000 worth of machinery was purchased from the government, and there is a balance outstanding of $527,000 on that account.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): How much machinery have they sold to others?

Mr. DUNNING: They are not allowed to sell any machinery until it is paid for. I may tell my friend that the account is being well protected by the engineers in charge.

Mr. CANTLEY: I would like a little information with regard to this amount for washing rock. I think it was generally understood that the rock to be used in the concrete was to be excavated from the cuttings of the canal. Who first brought up the question of this rock being washed before it was used in the concrete?

Mr. DUNNING: As I indicated before my hon. friend came in, this is the third occasion on which it has been necessary to introduce an item for this purpose. The basis was settled some three years ago, but probably my hon. friend does not recall the previous discussions. The original negotiations took place in 1925. It was part of the contract that this contractor should deliver to another contractor rock which was being excavated from his part of the canal. When the actual excavation of the rock was going on it was found that there was too much of an intermixture of clay; the rock was full of fissures of clay. Someone had to wash the rock and there was no provision in the contract for it; the contractor was merely obligated to deliver the rock, so these arrangements had to be made.

Mr. CANTLEY: In other words this was done to meet a condition which was not anticipated when the contract was let?

Mr. DUNNING: That is so.

Mr. CANTLEY: What is the rate per cubic yard for washing this rock?

Mr. DUNNING: The rate is seventy cents per cubic yard; that is the actual cost, checked by our own officials.

Mr. CANTLEY: How do you arrive at the rate of seventy cents as the actual cost?

Mr. DUNNING: We check the actual operation.

Mr. CANTLEY: How is it washed?

Mr. DUNNING: With big jets of water under pressure.

Mr. CANTLEY: I should think seven cents would be more nearly correct than seventy cents for washing rock with jets of water. I do not care what the pressure is; the higher the pressure the more effective it would be. It seems to me that seventy cents is an outrageous price. What is the cost for excavating?

Mr. DUNNING: I can only say to my hon. friend that our officers and auditors check the actual cost of this operation.

Mr. CANTLEY: I must take objection to that price, because never, by any possibility, could this operation cost as much as seventy cents per cubic yard.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): What does it cost per cubic yard to excavate?

Mr. DUNNING: One class of material costs $1.56, another class 60 cents, and another class $30 per yard. I am informed by the officers of the department that these rates are affected by the distance and conditions regarding the disposal of the material after it is excavated, and they are hardly a criterion of the cost.

Mr. CANTLEY: I cannot understand that material which can be excavated for 60 cents per yard should cost 70 cents per yard to wash.

Mr. DUNNING: It is earth that costs 60 cents.

Mr. CANTLEY: I asked for the cost on rock.

Mr. DUNNING: That cost is $1.56.

Mr. CANTLEY: Seventy cents is about one-half, and there would appear to be something wrong there.

Mr. DUNNING: I will be glad to make inquiries. My officers inform me that an actual check has been kept ever since these operations started in 1926.

Mr. CANTLEY: You had better put in a new set of officers.

Item agreed to.

Compassionate allowance to the widow of the late Charles Hilden who was accidently drowned at Halifax, September 8, 1927, $3,000.

Mr. BENNETT: There seem to be half a dozen different values placed on human lives which have been lost. In this case the compassionate allowance is put at $3,000, and in another place in the estimates there will be one appearing at $500. What is the determining factor?

Mr. DUNNING: In the case of the Department of Railways and Canals the determining factor is the workmen's compensation law in the province in which the accident occurs.

Item agreed to.

Canadian government railways—to provide an additional car ferry between the mainland and Prince Edward Island, $1,000,000.

Mr. CANTLEY: I wish to thank the minister for coming down off his perch and providing this vessel. I have now an answer to the question I asked in the committee on railways and shipping.

Item agreed to.

To supplement pension allowances payable under the provisions of the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railway Employees' Provident Fund Act so as to make the minimum payment, during the period from January 1, 1928, to March 31, 1929, the sum of $30 per month instead of $20 as fixed by the said act, $50,000.

Mr. POULIOT: Will the employees get more this year than they did last year?

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. DUNNING: This vote has been necessary for a number of years in order to supplement the amounts paid in by the employees to the provident fund of the old Intercolonial railway. Due to a change in conditions throughout the years, this fund has run behind and it has been necessary for parliament to supplement it in order to enable the provisions of the provident fund to be carried out.

Mr. POULIOT: Is it the intention of the government to increase this amount next year?

Mr. DUNNING: The real reason for this deficit in the fund was that five or six years ago the minimum compensation was raised from $20 to $30, due to changed conditions, and this amount has been required.

Mr. POULIOT: I wonder if the Department of Railways and Canals or the minister have anything to do with the pensions of the Canadian National Railways' employees under the Provident Fund Act. There are some sad cases of employees who have been working for the railway for a number of years, such as that of Mr. Pierre Bossé of Riviere du Loup. Mr. Bossé has been working for the railroad for several years, and is entitled to a pension. He has paid his dues every year but the doctors refuse to give him a certificate that he is ill. I believe their reasons are that he has no wound in the face, and has the use of both eyes, and that he can hear; they believe he is all right. There are some doctors at the head office of the Atlantic region at Moncton who, I imagine, have not even yet received their diplomas; because they do not know how to examine sick people, and when employees go there the doctors stay on their throne and allow them to be looked after by their assistants who are just freshmen and know nothing about the diseases of the human body. I do not know if they could qualify even as veterinary surgeons. People who have given their lives to the Canadian National Railways, and who have paid annually to get a pension when they are sick or too old, have had trouble in getting what they are entitled to. I have personal knowledge of a man who was employed on the section at Trois-Pistoles who went down to Moncton to be examined. The doctor told him that he was perfectly well, but when he went to another doctor and was X-rayed it was found that he suffered from a very serious disease. When he brought back the plates to Moncton the Canadian National specialists had to acknowledge their mistake. I wish to bring the case of Mr. Pierre Bossé to the attention of the minister and of the house, because when the department ask for a vote of $50,000 to help the employees they should right any injustice that has been done. Mr. Bossé has worked for the railway almost twenty years, being laid off on account of staff reduction. He claimed his right of seniority, but that was not given to him. He wanted to work in the same capacity as he had worked before, but while he is a carpenter, they told him that he should fire a boiler. He was fifty-nine or sixty years old then and this was a very hard job for him. He could not do it because he was ill. When he reported his case again, they told him that it was a fake; that he was not serious. I think the way in which old employees are treated by the officials of the company in the Canadian National medical branch at Moncton is a shame. The matter should be brought to the attention of the house and I hope the minister, although there is a wall between him and the Canadian National railway management, will be able to make an opening through the wall large enough to enable him to tell them to be fair to their employees and to give them what is due to them.

Pensions—J. L. Weller, $3,500.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): What are these for?

Mr. DUNNING: This is just one item. I have under my hand all the information regarding every one of these votes. If it is not given, it is simply because no one appears to desire it. In most cases the explanation has been given in previous years and I do not like to inflict the explanations on the committee unless they are asked. Mr. Weller was employed by the government for forty-two years as an engineer. He was never in the position of being a permanent civil servant. He entered the service of the department in 1883 as an engineer on canal construction and operation. In 1900 he was appointed superintending engineer of the Welland canal, which office he held until 1912 when he was appointed engineer in charge of survey and design of construction of the then proposed new Welland ship canal. He remained in charge of the work until 1917 when it was closed down owing to the war, and Mr. Weller's services were dispensed with. From January, 1919, to March 31, 1927, the services of Mr. Weller were retained in the capacity of consulting engineer in connection with the construction of the Welland ship canal, and his salary was fixed at $3,600 per annum, it being felt that that rate was adequate in view of the fact that his whole time was not being occupied during that period. Mr. Weller is now well on in the seventies and in view of his record of service, which, had he been in the permanent class of civil servants, would have undoubtedly entitled him to superannuation, a year ago the house voted this pension for him. It is on the basis of the Calder Act.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): This is simply putting Mr. Weller in the same class as retired judges.

Mr. DUNNING: No, putting him in the position that he would have been in as a permanent civil servant retiring under what are known as the provisions of the Calder Act.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): He did not pay anything into the superannuation fund?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): In that sense he is receiving superannuation the same as retired judges, who never pay anything into the superannuation fund.

Miscellaneous—to provide for the payment of salaries and expenses in connection with the St. Lawrence ship canal surveys and investigations, including D. W. McLachlan at $1,500, and G. W. Yates at $1,200, as secretary, $50,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Have the surveys now been completed or is there any further work to be done in regard to the matter referred to in this appropriation?

Mr. DUNNING: The report of the joint engineering board, which I have no doubt my hon. friend has read, reveals important differences of view between the Canadian engineers and United States engineers regarding the development of the international section. It is quite evident that some further work will require to be done in that connection and in addition, with a project of such magnitude, continuous observations of various kinds and other work have to be done. It is not considered wise to let the whole work drop at this juncture.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Are the United States government carrying on similar surveys, or are they carrying on joint surveys with the Canadian engineers?

Mr. DUNNING: The United States government are keeping alive and active their half of the joint engineering board.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): There is close co-operation between the two?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Trade and Commerce—Commercial intelligence service, including miscellaneous expenditure in connection with the development and extension of Canada's trade, $500,000.

Mr. COOTE: Will the minister kindly make a statement to the committee regarding this vote?

Hon. JAMES MALCOLM (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The increase in this appropriation is due mainly to a revision of salaries, slight increases in living allowances for trade commssioners and an increase to provide for an increase in the number of commissioners on account of the growth in the service. The appropriation includes salaries, travelling expenses, contingencies and other expenditures; salaries of trade commissioners, assistant trade commissioners and commercial agents; salaries of clerks in the trade commissioners' offices; travelling expenses of the Ottawa staff; salaries of temporary clerks at Ottawa, and also miscellaneous expenses in connection with the department.

Mr. COOTE: How many agents are there now?

Mr. MALCOLM: There are twenty-four trade commissioners, five in grade three, three in grade two and sixteen in grade one. There are four vacancies to be filled, which are being filled at the moment.

Item agreed to.

Dominion Bureau of Statistics, $150,000.

Mr. MANION: Why the reduction? It is so rare that we would like an explanation.

Mr. MALCOLM: The Bureau of Statistics, as my hon. friend will recollect, always has a larger staff when the quinquennial census is on and in a near census period. The bureau happens to be decreasing its staff now. The quinquennial census in Saskatchewan is over and I think there will be a smaller staff for the next year or two until the next census.

Mr. MANION: My reason for asking was because the Bureau of Statistics is one of the departments of the government for which I have a great deal of respect. You can get quick and reliable information in a very short time. I like to say a good word once in a while for some branches of the service because I think we are a little inclined to be over critical. That is why I particularly noticed the reduction.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I wish also to associate myself with the remarks of my hon. friend from Fort William. I think there are few departments which have been pursuing so constantly useful a service to the members of this house as the Bureau of Statistics. I regret to see a reduction because, although the minister speaks of the quinquennial census as having passed by, yet I do know as a result of questions. I have asked Doctor Coats that there is much material still to be gathered, much synchronizing of the work of various collecting agencies, much tabulating and inter-relating of facts with respect to various works and developments throughout the country still to be done. I would suggest to the minister, whom I look upon as one of the most intelligent members of the ministry, and that is paying quite a compliment to the rest of the ministers, that when we come to agricultural statistics in particular, the Department of Trade and Commerce unfortunately is sadly lacking in the required personnel. I have found that through personal investigation, and I am perfectly satisfied that Doctor Coats could do with several assistants in that particular branch of his work.

There is another question which comes up at this stage. I wonder whether it would not be possible for the minister to consider the possibility of amalgamating two or three of the other statistical branches of this department with the Bureau of Statistics. That would result in greater uniformity, and in the elimination of some overhead and some overlapping that is existing at the present time, and on the whole I think the minister would find that it would result in more satisfactory work.

My principal objection to this reduction—it is very seldom that I object to a reduction—is that I am satisfied as a result of my own investigation that the Bureau of Statistics could do with additional personnel, particularly in the agricultural staff. For example, I go down there and ask for information respecting the capitalization of manufacturing industry in Canada. I get that information, and I go further and say that I would like to have a return showing the average wage paid and the total wages paid in manufacturing industries, and that I want the same information with regard to agriculture. But in agriculture I can only get an estimate, and that is very vague. I go still further. When I want to tabulate the relative economic value of agriculture to manufacturing, with absolute facts and figures, I am always given the answer: We can give you this information with respect to manufacturing fairly accurately, but not with respect to agriculture. I think in a country of this size, and in view of the paramount importance of agriculture, the minister will find that his department will not lose, and the country will not lose, by giving Doctor Coats all possible help in that direction. I compliment the minister, and particularly Doctor Coats, on the very excellent work which has been done in the past.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Can the minister say when the bureau will be moved out of that firetrap in which it is now located? The Minister of Public Works told us some five weeks ago that the bureau would be moved out in six weeks, but from the look of the building at New Edinburgh I would say that it would be six weeks longer. In the event of a fire occurring in that building, with such crowded quarters, there would not only be the loss of valuable statistics, but the much more important loss of human life very probably, and I would just like to give this warning to the minister.

Mr. MALCOLM: I think everyone appreciates the danger of the quarters which the bureau is now in, and just as rapidly as the property which we are taking over, which fortunately is fireproof, can be got ready, the bureau will be moved.

Mr. COOTE: When the Minister of Public Works stated that the Bureau of Statistics was going to be moved to the old mill at New Edinburgh, I thought it was the wrong place to put the bureau. It is too far away from the parliament buildings and from other government departments, with which the bureau must be in constant communication for the gathering of statistical information. I think the government might even yet consider placing the bureau in some building adjacent to the other departments of government, and certainly closer to the parliament buildings. I think it is an awful mistake to place the bureau away out there at New Edinburgh.

Item agreed to.

Electricity and gas, including international electro-technical commission, $203,960.

Mr. GEARY: What is the explanation of this item?

Mr. MALCOLM: This is for the administration of the Gas and Electricity Act. The salaries of the staff amount to $163,484; contingencies, $45,615; $5,500 for revision; electro-technical commission, $400.

Mr. COOTE: Is there some revenue collected in the administration of this act?

Mr. MALCOLM: This is a profit bearing service; it more than supports itself.

Item agreed to.

Electricity and Fluid Exportation Act (export of electric energy), $1,000.

Mr. LUCAS: This item is small, but it refers to the export of electric energy. Would the minister give a word of explanation?

Mr. MALCOLM: This act is administered by the electricity and gas inspection branch. By regulations established under the act, it is stipulated that the officers must visit any premises in which electric energy is generated and produced. Since the imposition of the export tax on electric energy, it is necessary to keep in close touch with the activities carried on in various exporting plants. It is estimated that $1,000 may be required to cover the travelling expenses and other contingencies which may arise.

Mr. LUCAS: Is there any considerable amount of electric energy exported?

Mr. MALCOLM: I have the details if my hon. friend would like me to read them. The licenses cover a total export of electric energy amounting to 291,525 kilowatts. Fees paid amount to $675, and the export duties collected to $267,652.

Mr. LUCAS: From what province is that exported?

Mr. MALCOLM: I think from almost every province in Canada. It is exported by the Hydro Electric Commission of Toronto, Canadian Niagara Power Company, West Kootenay Power Company, Southern Canada Power Company, International Electric Power Company, Maritime Electric Power Company, and the Fraser Power Company, of Edmundston, New Brunswick, and others.

Mr. GEARY: Not the Hydro Electric Commission, of Toronto: it is the Ontario Hydro Electric Commission.

Mr. MALCOLM: The Ontario Hydro Electric Power Commission, at Toronto.

Mr. GEARY: It is under the old contract at the falls, is it not?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes.

Item agreed to.

National Research Council, $300,000.

Mr. MILLAR: Does the research work carried on at Winnipeg into the rust problem come under this vote?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is a big increase in this vote; can the minister explain it?

Mr. MALCOLM: We had a discussion of this item before, but I shall be glad to read from the brief again:

This vote is required to provide for the general activities of the National Research Council, including the organization, co-ordination and stimulation of research work in Canada; grants in aid of scientific and industrial researches; special problems; scholarships for the post-graduate training in science and research of the best scientific talent graduating from Canadian universities, for service in the industries of Canada and in the technical departments of the government service; salaries of staff; general administration, and for such other purposes as the council may deem necessary in order to effectively carry on and extend its activities.

The sum of $170,000 was voted by parliament for the work of the council during the fiscal year 1927-28. The vote requested this year therefore represents an increase of $130,000 over the vote for 1927-28.

This increased vote is required in order to effectively carry on the activities of the voluntary research organization, which has been built up by the council during the last ten years and which is steadily expanding along sound lines.

The National Research Council is charged with the functions and duties detailed in sections six and ten of the Research Council Act.

The act provides for a council of fifteen members, each of whom, with the exception of the president, serves in an honorary capacity, without remuneration, for a period of three years, one-third of the membership retiring each year. Under the act, the council is constituted a corporate body, capable of accepting and holding gifts, grants, bequests, etc., for the purpose of its work. All receipts and expenditures of the council are subject to examination by the Auditor General.

The president of the council may be a permanent officer, giving his full time to the work of the council.

The president of the council has given up his position as president of the Edmonton university and will now be in definite charge of the work.

Mr. McGIBBON: Has the minister dropped the somewhat elaborate program that he outlined earlier this session?

Mr. MALCOLM: Not at all. That was to provide for the permanent laboratories of the council; this is the administration vote. This $130,000 increase is necessary this year to carry on the work of the council while the new quarters are being provided.

Mr. McGIBBON: When do you expect that to take place?

Mr. MALCOLM: I did not catch my hon. friend's question.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): How much money is spent on research work in Ottawa?

Mr. MALCOLM: I cannot give my hon. friend an answer. I believe there are three separate research investigations going on: one by the National Research Council, another by the Board of Grain Commissioners, and a third by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. COOTE: Have the National Research Council their own investigators that are being paid out of the moneys voted under this item?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes, everything is paid out of this item with respect to their own investigations.

Mr. COOTE: I think the rust research work is carried on partly by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MALCOLM: The Department of Agriculture is conducting research work on the rust problem independently of the work that is being done by the Board of Grain Commissioners in their laboratories at Winnipeg. The National Research Council is making a contribution to that work.

Mr. COOTE: I understand that the building which is being used for rust research work at Winnipeg was built out of moneys voted to the Department of Agriculture, and the work is being done by its officials. Am I correct?

Mr. MALCOLM: If my hon. friend is referring to the work that is being done by the Manitoba College, the money was voted by the Department of Agriculture, but the research work that is being carried on by the Board of Grain Commissioners in connection with the rust problem comes under the Trade and Commerce department vote.

Mr. COOTE: In connection with the resignation of one or two of the officials who were engaged in the rust research work at Winnipeg, were they in the employ of the National Research Council or of the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. MALCOLM: They must have been in the employ of the Department of Agriculture, because we have had no men leave our staff.

Mr. COOTE: Will the classification and salaries of the men who are in the employ of th National Research Council come under the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. MALCOLM: I think my hon. friend understands that a great many of the technical men engaged in rust research work are not employees of the government at all; they are professors of the universities in the west. We make contributions to their salaries Only part of their time is devoted to rust research work, and they do not come under the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. COOTE: I want to ascertain whether the National Research Council engages these men. One of the men I had in mind is Mr. Bailey. I believe he has left the service either of the Department of Agriculture or of the National Research Council.

Mr. MALCOLM: The Department of Agriculture.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): The rust research work is extremely important to western Canada. As I understand, only a few thousand dollars per annum are spent on this work, whereas the loss to the grain crop of western Canada during the past few years has been tremendous. It would be well for whatever department is handling this work to consider very seriously the extension of its operations. In some seasons we have lost as much as $150,000,000 from rust. As against this appalling loss we are spending only about $50,000 in trying to cope with the rust problem. I think this is one place where the government might spend a large sum of money until we find some commercial preventive for rust, and I wish the Minister of Trade and Commerce, along with the ministers of any other departments concerned, would take seriously into consideration the expenditure of more money on this very important research work.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, last Saturday a gentleman greatly interested in research work drew my attention to the overlapping in this connection. The Fisheries department and the Agriculture department are carrying on research work, and the Interior department has almost a research branch of its own. Now you have the Department of Trade and Commerce. Cannot we do something to save the country's money by co-ordinating the efforts of these various departments? You will not get these various departments to relinquish their activities unless you strangle them by withholding money for the purpose. The officials of the Interior department will insist on carrying on their little show in connection with coal, iron and other things, the fisheries department will insist on their experts dealing with their problems, and the Agriculture department will never let go their particular work. At the present moment there is a waste of money. It has been found in the United States, Great Britain and Germany that the only way to do research work effectively is to bring it under one control, and until that is done neither Doctor Tory nor anyone else will make a success of it. If he is made chairman of the research council he must have control of all the research work carried on in this country by the various branches of government departments.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend is making some rather strong statements with respect to the research work being carried on in this country.

Mr. BENNETT: And they are warranted.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I take issue with my hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT: We will discuss it this afternoon.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Both Doctor Grisdale and Doctor Camsell are members of the research council.

Mr. BENNETT. Quite so.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend failed to mention that.

Mr. BENNETT: Everybody knows it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Of course, but he failed to mention it to this committee and he has failed to do so on former occasions.

Mr. BENNETT: What has that got to do with it?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Not only do Doctor Grisdale and Doctor Camsell sit on the research council, but they are parties to the program of research work prepared by the council. So far we have not had laboratories under the control of the research council. My hon. friend knows that full well.

Mr. BENNETT: The Interior department has.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I will deal with the Interior department in a minute. For the present I am dealing with the two departments my hon. friend has been criticizing. So far there have been no laboratories other than those provided by the departments of Agriculture and Mines to carry on this work, and only such work as should be carried on has been undertaken by these two departments. But that does not mean that they cannot be co-ordinated with the research council. Not for a single moment does it mean that. They have been co-ordinated, and I wish to assure my hon. friend that there has been no overlapping in any work that has been done. I cannot speak so authoritatively in respect of fisheries; there may have been in the Fisheries department. But I can speak for the work done in the Mines department as well as in Agriculture because both these gentlemen are fully conversant with the program set out by the research council. That is why I rise to put my hon. friend right on the question. As I say, I cannot speak with equal authority in regard to fisheries, but I shall be glad to know the point at which there has been duplication of work as between the research council and the fisheries department. I should also be glad to know, if my hon. friend would tell me, where there is interference, on the part of the research work carried on in the wood products laboratory in the Department of Interior, with the research council's program, because I have tried to avoid such overlapping. I do not say that co-ordination should not take place; I am all for it and will use every effort to ensure co-ordination, so far as I am able to bring it about. I repeat, however, that so far there has been no overlapping as suggested. To say that there has been overlapping in all departments is not borne out by the facts.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sorry the minister has not accurately followed my observations. Several departments are independently expending public moneys. That is the point I was endeavouring to make. These departments are independently spending the money in research work, and that should not be. Whoever is responsible for research work should spend the money. The Department of the Interior, as we know, and as was pointed out the other evening, has buildings and is spending public moneys in research work. The Department of Agriculture is also being voted money for research work; the fisheries department is voted money for research work; and the mines branch is also being voted money for the same purpose. The point I wish to make is that if the organization which is now taking over research work is to succeed it must have control over these operations. It is idle to say that some gentleman associated with the Department of the Interior or some deputy minister of mines are members of this research council, for as indicated by the minister the other evening—it is not necessary to repeat it—the research council has certain duties to perform. This is clear: so long as parliament makes votes to various departments who may independently spend these moneys, as they are now doing, co-ordination, and overlapping are not only inevitable but follow from day to day. The minister speaks of wood products; there is about as much necessity for that work as carried on as there is for a fifth wheel to a coach. The University of McGill was endeavouring to carry on that work, but the Department of the Interior wanted it and got it. And we are voting public money for it. If you are to have one department to carry on this work, let all moneys be voted to that department; but do not make separate grants to separate departments for research activities. That is my point and that is the point to which I direct the attention of the minister. The fact that Doctor Grisdale or Doctor Camsell is a member of the council is beside the point; the point is that this country is asked to grant sums of money to be expended independently by various departments of the public service, whereas the whole matter should be in the hands of the research department.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend has changed his ground slightly since his first statement.

Mr. BENNETT: Not a bit.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): So far there has been no overlapping, which my hon. friend distinctly stated was formerly the case.

Mr. BENNETT: And I repeat it now; there is bound to be.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There is no overlapping. I am anxious that the work should all be co-ordinated. So far as the Mines department is concerned its program of research work is one which is thoroughly understood by Doctor Tory and every member of the research council, and if we did not vote money in the Mines department it would be voted somewhere else. My hon. friend makes the statement that we should combine all these activities and grant one vote. I have no complaint to make in that regard; I will cheerfully acquiesce in that. But I would point out that we have not had the facilities to do so until now. With the problems awaiting solution we shall need buildings very much larger and more pretentious than those at present contemplated. Take the work carried on in the Mines department, the work performed by the universities, and that done by the different units in Canada: all this presents a large problem. I feel strongly on this question and I have had a good deal to say about it in the house. I think I realize to some extent the importance of the question, and I believe that with the help of the universities and of the various agencies in Canada, when we have research laboratories established in Ottawa we shall not even then have begun to touch the fringe of the subject. All these agencies will be required. That is why I am keen about the scientific research council having control, so that they can allocate to the various agencies the work to be done. I am in accord with my hon. friend that we should vote them as much money as will carry on the work. The Department of Agriculture is not paying for all the research work carried on in wheat rust—not by a good deal. Amounts are used from this item to supplement the work done by that department. I desire to see all the universities in Canada interested in this question given assistance; and then there will be plenty of room for the Mines department to continue the work they have been carrying on—continue under the control of the research council if you like. I have no complaint to offer in regard to the activities carried on by any of the various units. If this work that we are doing is not warranted—if the research council say so—I for one am prepared to scrap it at once. But I want to assure the committee that we have not had any overlapping. I do not like to hear the statement that we have been wasting money, for we have not. I think I could prove that to my hon. friend or anyone else if we had time.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I wish to emphasize the observation that there is want of co-ordination and waste of money at the present time. I would direct the attention of the committee to the statement of the president of the council as to the duties of that body. I am strongly in sympathy with the work and I am a strong supporter of research, but I must condemn the results we are obtaining at present. The duties of the council, as indicated by the president, are these: first, to promote the utilization of the natural resources of Canada; second, to undertake researches with the object of improving technical processes and methods used in the industries of Canada, and of discovering processes and methods which may promote the expansion of existing or the development of new industries; and, third, to undertake researches with a view to the utilization of the waste products of industry. I shall discuss only two or three things to show that there is a waste of money as well as a want of co-ordination in the work, judging from the results. Take fishing, for example. There is a biological board going into research work in the fisheries. That board has published a report on the oyster, a report which this government has never attempted to implement. There is also the report of a commission requesting the enforcement of the recommendations of the biological board. So much for that; it will stand a good deal of study. In the next place we have the work done in the mines branch. I would ask the committee this question: What is the use of publishing all these books on chemical and metallurgical development, on arsenic, the survey of Canada for arsenic, fuel ore, testing and so forth? Here are reports from the research committee which the government has ignored in its budget. What is ore testing except examining the tailings of mining plants and of smelters? They are trying to find some way of making use of these things, yet with that in mind this government have admitted into Canada the materials which go into the manufacture of insect poisons and insecticides. Here was an opportunity to use our low grade ores throughout the country; the Department of Mines published a big book on arsenic, containing a survey of the arsenical ores of Canada, and yet we import from the United States all these articles, among them arsenic in large quantities.

This is a subject on which I could speak for a long time, but I am going to stop now. The report of the Department of Mines draws attention to the fact that the time has now arrived when low grade ores should be considered and used, yet by our budget we have taken away an opportunity to make use of them. I have here a list of thirty-three industries in Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia using these low grade ores of which arsenic is one of the most important by-products. For years arsenic was a white elephant at all smelters; no use could be found for it, but finally the discovery was made that it was a very good insecticide. The United States supply was used up in two years, but they surveyed their fields and at present they have all their arsenical ores located. We have just completed our survey, yet now that we have an opportunity to build up new industries which will give employment to our people, by our budget we have wiped out any possibility of using these ores. For that reason I say there is a great lack of co-operation in this work which is being carried on. I approve of the work done by the research council, but I do condemn the government for the use they have made of the reports and recommendations made by that body.

Mr. MILLAR: I am sorry this vote is so small. I should like to know how much money has been spent on rust research, but since part of this work is under the Department of Trade and Commerce and part under the Department of Agriculture it seems impossible to secure that information. However, if the total amount of this vote were spent on rust research it would be much too small. One of the three professors at the agricultural college at Winnipeg, has made a discovery in connection with rust which has startled the scientific men of the North American continent, yet we have lost this man and possibly two others simply because they were not being paid sufficient salaries. The hon. member for Moose Jaw stated that in some years our loss from rust amounted to $150,000,000, and I think he was not far over the mark. I doubt if the loss would average that much year by year, but for the last four or five years a conservative estimate of the loss would be $50,000,000 per year, and that is increasing annually. If this vote is any indication of the amount of money being spent on rust research, the sum is altogether too small, and I hope the minister will see that in another year this work is pushed on and a larger amount expended in that connection.

There is another question I should like to ask, although I do not know whether or not the minister will be able to give me the information. I wish to know whether the places of those men who have left the service have been filled. That does not come under this department, so perhaps I cannot expect it from the minister, but if he has that information I shall be glad to get it.

Mr. MALCOLM: I think my hon. friend realizes that up to the present the National Research Council has contributed grants in aid of research to our laboratories. I am sorry the information before me is not definite in connection with the grants; they are not divided, although the total amount of money granted in aid of research last year is $170,000. How much of that was actually granted for rust research I cannot say, but I can assure my hon. friend that with a larger vote this year that grant will be increased accordingly, and that when the laboratories of the research council in Ottawa are in operation, with the council directing the research work of Canada in general, as I hope will be the case in years to come, very sympathetic consideration will be given the question of rust research.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): On the question of the co-ordination of the activities of the various research branches, I do not think even the leader of the opposition could point to any single country in which there is complete co-ordination; I do not think that is possible. I think in every country we will find that certain needs arise in certain industries and that certain universities will be carrying on certain lines of investigation. That is the situation in Canada, and as far as research in agriculture is concerned, I would hesitate quite a long while before recommending that the entire administration and direction of agricultural research should be placed completely under the control of the National Research Council. I am afraid that at times, in all countries, scientific men assume positions of directorship without hav- the agricultural viewpoint, and if you take away that important viewpoint from a scientific body such as the National Research Council, we might find ourselves in serious difficulties in the future. However, I do think that co-ordination can be sensibly and logically carried to the point where direction may be secured from some central body, while the actual research work itself might remain under the auspices of the particular department concerned.

Mr. EVANS: I understand that the grain testing laboratory at Winnipeg is under the National Research Council?

Mr. MALCOLM: I might correct my hon. friend there; the grain testing laboratory is not under the research council at all. It is under the grain vote.

Mr. EVANS: I was going to ask if it is possible to have the reports of that laboratory distributed systematically so that the public may receive the benefit of their findings. I refer particularly to methods of drying grain, which cost the farmers of the west millions of dollars last year. I understand that Doctor Tory was directing that laboratory, and I would like to see the reports which have come out regarding the methods of drying grain, so that the farmers might receive something from the off grades of their grain.

Mr. MALCOLM: There is a report on that subject at the printing bureau now, and we may be able to lay it on the table of the house before the end of the session. I think it will be ready in a week or ten days.

Mr. McGIBBON: Since we have been dealing with this subject for about ten years, may I ask the minister what progress has been reported, if any?

Mr. MALCOLM: I think my hon. friend realizes that the National Research Council has been giving scholarships and granting aid to research up to the present time with a limited vote. Now we propose to establish laboratories in Ottawa just as soon as they can be equipped.

Mr. McGIBBON: That was not exactly what I meant. What discoveries have been made by the council so far?

Mr. MALCOLM: My hon. friend has no doubt received the annual report of the research council. It is a very long document, and the work of the council is pretty well covered. It is rather too long to read, but I shall be glad to let my hon. friend have my copy if he has not received one.

Mr. McGIBBON: I think a number of members of parliament, together with myself and other people throughout the Dominion, have submitted problems to the council for solution. The question I submitted was the problem of extracting the tanning properties from hemlock bark, and I wonder if any progress has been made?

Mr. MALCOLM: I cannot give my hon. friend any definite information at the moment, but I shall be glad to get a report on the matter for him.

Mr. MILNE: I am not sure that this is the proper place to bring to the attention of the government the importance of the rust epidemic in western Canada, but I presume it will be appropriate here. It has been my experience in talking to people of this section of the Dominion that they do not grasp the significance of this outbreak of rust in western Canada. Very often when I mention it they say, "The whole trouble is that you fellows do not go into mixed farming." I should like to spend a good deal of time on this subject, but I will simply make a few statements.

The first statement I want to make is regarding the growing of hard wheat in western Canada. This has put western Canada on the map; if that country had been left to the development of dairying and mixed farming a good portion of it would still be a wilderness. Not so many years ago you could go down into the central states as far as Wisconsin and you would find that a large portion of the crop consisted of wheat, while to-day there is practically no wheat grown. That movement has been coming north, and to-day Manitoba is not producing twenty-five per cent of the hard wheat she should be producing. Her crop last year was less than half what we consider her average crop should be, and of that half less than fifty per cent was hard wheat and the rest durum.

This rust area has spread until it practically reaches the northern section of the wheat-growing area of Manitoba. It is now extending west; it has covered a large area of Saskatchewan and has reached into Alberta. The only remaining area for the wheat grower to recede into is the Peace River country. This epidemic has continued for many years, and we have reached the point where we have to put our backs to the wall and fight, because there is no area in western Canada left for wheat. When western Canada has to stop growing wheat we shall have lost our best means of return. This is the position so far as the rust question is concerned, and I hope the government and the business men of this section of the country will realize the facts as they are and endeavour to face them. The small amount of money we are expending in an endeavour to find some means of overcoming this epidemic is pitiful. We have the development of wheats which are rust-resisting; some of our scientists are talking about parasites to overcome the difficulty, while others maintain that cultural methods may be successful. The field is so broad that $50,000 or less is not going to make very much of an impression on this very important matter. When it was being discussed the other day the Minister of Finance told us that the salaries of the scientific men were controlled by the Civil Service Commission. If the Civil Service Commission can obtain a man who is a graduate of some recognized college, who has taken post-graduate work, and has four years' experience in that special line, at a salary of $2,760, I will have no particular complaint to make just now. But it seems to me unreasonable to expect a man to come in and undertake investigation of such a broad field as the rust question at such a salary.

The amount we are spending on this problem seems to me to be like tossing a pebble in the ocean, so far as the effect is concerned. I am not going to enlarge on this in any way, but I do want to impress on the government and this country the significance of this question. Rust is driving the grain growing areas into the extreme north of the country, and large sections which are adapted to the growing of wheat in every way are practically put out of business on account of this scourge. I do hope that in the near future the government will spend a sufficiently large sum of money to be able to cope with this extremely serious situation.

Item agreed to.

Motion picture bureau, $50,000.

Mr. BRADY: I should like the minister to give us an explanation of the extent of the work done in this very important branch.

Mr. MALCOLM: This vote is an increase of $15,000 over last year, and is necessary to meet the requirements of the bureau due to considerable expansion in the service, the greater number of film feet produced, and the greater number of film subjects circulated, which will be more in the first seven months of 1927-28 than in the last fiscal year. The present equipment will have to be augmented, and in some cases replaced.

In 1926-27 we produced 600,000 feet of film for circulation, while in this past year we have produced 749,000 feet. We expect that there will be a total production of 1,000,000 feet of film this year. In 1926-27 we had 601 film subjects circulated through 21 agencies, and in the past year we have had 908 subjects circulated through 35 agencies. There are three moving picture cameras in the bureau, one of which is practically useless, while the others do not meet present day requirements, all this equipment having been there since its organization ten years ago. There will also be some increased drying equipment to put in this year. The revenue from the department has been from $11,900 up to a peak of $27,876. In 1925-26 it was down to $22,163. In 1927-28 to January 31, 1928—that is a part year—it amounted to $14,456. The total expenditure for 1923-24 was $27,689, and for 1927-28 to January 31, 1928, it amounted to $29,989, exclusive of the salary list.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I understand last year when the minister had this particular item before the committee, he stated that the director was then in Los Angeles negotiating for the sale and distribution of our motion picture reels. I think he went further and stated that the director had been sent on this mission in the expectation of putting the bureau on its feet. The figures just given to the committee indicate a revenue of about $27,800 and expenses, exclusive of salaries, of $29,900. The expenses alone exceed the revenue by more than $2,000, so that evidently the sending away of the director on this sale mission was not very successful. Would the minister care to give the committee the reason?

Mr. MALCOLM: I would rather my hon. friend had not put the question in that way. Our director went to Los Angeles and made a contract which at the time it was first submitted to the department seemed to be a tremendously profitable one, but it did not turn out to be as satisfactory as it had appeared. The director who made the contract unfortunately died just shortly after he returned and we were not in a position to discuss the contract very much. It did not turn out well and we let it drop. It was not as successful as it should have been. The present director has just returned from England and he reports fairly good opportunities to distribute Canadian films in the old country but I will make no forecast as to the result. We will wait and see how well it works out.

Miss MACPHAIL: Are the films available for schools and colleges in Canada or are they just sent outside of this country?

Mr. MALCOLM: I think my hon. friend realizes the fire regulations with regard to showing films. Our stock is the inflammable type of film that can be shown only under certain conditions in motion picture theatres. They cannot be shown in schools because the fire underwriters would not give their permission.

Miss MACPHAIL: Would it not be worth while to have the type of film that could be shown in schools? I find that both public and high schools are anxious to secure films that will help the children in getting a better grasp of the country and its many activities and this is one way of teaching the children rapidly and pleasantly. The government might very well spend money on such a project.

Mr. MALCOLM: The motion picture bureau was started by the Department of Trade and Commerce for the promotion of trade and not from an educational standpoint. The matter of education is under the jurisdiction of the provinces. The films are the standard motion films which are distributed and in some cases sold. The distribution of films during the first nine months of the fiscal year 1927-28 is as follows:

Country	In theatrical circulation either revenue-producing or sold outright	In circulation theatrically and non-theatrically, free
Australia	120
Austria and Jugo-Slavia	..	10
British West Indies:
Jamaica	..	8
Trinidad	..	8
China	..	12
Cuba	..	6
England	25	20
France	15	10
Germany	..	16
Holland, Belgium and Scandinavian countries	32	3
India	..	4
Italy	..	6
Japan	4	10
Norway and Sweden	..	9
South Africa	15	10
South America	24	13
United States	38	895
Total	273	1,040

These reels are being constantly circulated and shown by theatres. The second list is a free list.

Mr. MANION: Is it for purposes of trade that they are sent to China and India? It is evidently not for immigration purposes.

Mr. MALCOLM: They are all trade reels. They are sent free as a matter of developing trade.

Mr. PETTIT: In connection with the films that are sent out of the country, may I suggest that the pictures showing Canada should deal more largely with scenes showing fruit areas, farming areas, sport areas and our lakes and streams than they now do? I have heard it remarked often by people living outside of this country that we show too many winter scenes. People living in the southern states and elsewhere come to regard Canada as "Our Lady of the Snows" rather than as an agricultural country having a milder climate. We in Canada know the conditions that exist at different seasons of the year, but people living in the southern states, with whom I have come into contact, owing very largely to films showing winter scenes, have views regarding Canada which are rather astonishing. These pictures are very beautiful no doubt, but I would suggest that the department see to it that the films shown deal more with matters such as those I have mentioned.

Mr. JOHNSTONE (Cape Breton): I should like to ask the minister just exactly what these scenes cover? Do they take in the whole of Canada?

Mr. MALCOLM: The best answer I can give to my hon. friend would be to ask him to pay a visit to the motion picture bureau and see some of the films. They cover a very broad range of industrial activities throughout the whole of the Dominion. The hon. member for Welland (Mr. Pettit) asked that certain stress be laid on the class of film that would depict Canada as being a warmer country than it is depicted by some others. This is not a large vote; it is only a matter of $50,000 for the whole service, and we have to endeavour to secure all classes of films to represent all classes of industry, agriculture, fruit-growing, mining, pulp and paper, fishing. I think the director can hardly be criticized for being unfair to any one class of industry. He has divided up his films covering all industries and all parts of Canada as well as can reasonably be expected. Those who have seen the full range of films have never criticized the division. My hon. friend can get a catalogue of the films we have in the bureau. I shall be glad to send him one and to let him see the class of films that are shown.

Mr. JOHNSTONE (Cape Breton): An important point is that of attracting tourists. For instance, Cape Breton is one of the most beautiful spots in Canada and I have not seen any films pertaining to Cape Breton for the purpose of encouraging the tourist traffic. I think it would be a good idea to have views of the Bras d'Or lakes shown so that tourists may be attracted by their scenic beauty and fishing possibilities.

Mr. BRADY: This amount is really not enough when one considers the importance of the work the motion picture bureau is doing for Canada. Publicity to-day is so important that I think the minister is rather modest in asking for such a small amount for this service. As the hon. member for Southeast Grey has said, there are thousands of our children to-day who are ignorant of the country in which they live. I was very pleased to see at a theatre in Ottawa the other evening a very beautiful picture of the Bella Coola Indians, and I heard many favourable comments on this wonderful part of the country, and heard people ask, was it possible that such people really were found in this historic place of Bella Coola. I would urge that in view of the importance of the motion picture bureau, more money should be expended and a greater effort made to develop it in accordance with the wishes of the people of this country.

Item agreed to.

Printing of parliamentary and departmental publications, including the "Canada Year Book", $118,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): When may we expect the next publication of the Canada Year Book? It has been a couple of years since we had one?

Mr. MALCOLM: I think the 1927 issue is out.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have not received it yet.

Mr. MALCOLM: I think it is available.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I ask what is the date of the latest issue which the minister says is out?

Mr. MALCOLM: I have not the date, but I have the estimated cost of publishing the book.

Item agreed to.

Weights and measures inspection, including the international bureau of weights and measures, $333,000.

Mr. CANTLEY: Is this self-supporting?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes, and profitable.

Item agreed to.

Publicity and advertising in Canada, and to hereby appoint Herbert E. M. Chisholm as director of publicity at $4,000 per annum, and to hereby appoint the necessary staff to carry on this service, $50,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I take it that this vote covers the full page advertisements of the activities of the department which have been appearing in the newspapers during the past year? Is there any other publicity work done?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes. The advertising which is being done under Mr. Chisholm's department covers really two classes of advertising. There is the newspaper advertising, the object of which is to create and stimulate an interest in export trade, and the other is advertising through the trade journals and magazines. Information is now being published in the trade journals which formerly appeared to a certain extent in the Commercial Intelligence Journal; that is to say, inquiries and information with regard to the work of our trade commissioners will now be published monthly in the trade journals. That covers part of the appropriation; the balance will be required for magazine and newspaper advertising.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister has mentioned the work of the commercial intelligence service. I understand that at a previous meeting of the committee he stated that we had only one trade commissioner in the United States, at New York; is that correct?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Has the minister under consideration the appointment of any more trade commissioners in the United States?

Mr. MALCOLM: That is rather a difficult question for me to answer. I doubt if any two men would agree on the number of trade commissioners we should have in United States. We would have asked for a larger appropriation for the commercial intelligence service this year had we the number of men in training and trained to send to the field, but at the present time we have not many men in training. It would take a very considerable number to canvass the American field to the extent that some people think it should be canvassed. But we have passed that vote, and I hardly care to give my hon. friend a definite answer at the moment.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): My only purpose in bringing the matter up was that in Canada in practically every city of importance we have a United States consular agent who does largely the work of one of our trade commissioners. He gathers all the business information that is required, and sends it back to the bureau that was established by Mr. Hoover, and the result is that you can go into the bureau at Washington and secure information about Canada and about business in any section of the country that you could not secure in many of our own cities, and it just occurred to me to suggest to the minister a way out of his difficulties. I am informed that the total fees paid for consular certificates and vises of all kinds for 1925 amounted to $1,137,000, and that the amount collected for invoice vises granted by the consular agents of the United States amounted to $459,346, while the total expenditure for the whole United States consular service in Canada was only $370,080; so there was a balance to the credit of the United States consular service of $1,226,000. If these figures be accurate—I have them only on hearsay—they do point the way out for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. He could secure consular representation of this country in the United States, and have our agents do this investigational work and the gathering of information, just as the United States consular agents do here. For example, in the city of Calgary the United States consular agent appears every morning with the secretary of the board of trade, and inquires if there is anything to report to-day, any news at all. He also attends the meetings of the chamber of commerce, and goes around and has a chat with the different members, and if there is anything new moving, any new development in connection with the tar sands or mineral deposits or any discoveries in oil, the information is passed on to the Hoover bureau in Washington. A service of the same magnitude may not be required by this country, but the functions of this department might well be broadened to include an active propaganda looking to the development of the home market to the same degree that you are working for the development of external markets. I have no doubt the minister has already this matter under advisement because he is not only intelligent, as I said, but he has a lot of vision. I think he might well take into consideration the possibility of establishing some sort of service such as I have suggested, which would not only be self-sustaining, but might in time return a handsome profit annually.

Grant to the province of British Columbia for the improvement of the mail service on inland waters in that province, $3,000.

Inspection of subsidized steamship services, $5,000.—Total, $862,675.

Mr. MALCOLM: Mr. Chairman, I should like the committee to consider these two pages of steamship subsidies from vote 151 to vote 200, covering the existing and established steamship services to which we are paying subsidies. The only change in the whole list is an increase of $500 in one item and $5,500 representing appropriations not used. Last session when we considered these votes, I pointed out that it would be more to the advantage of the committee to take up any one item they wished to discuss and then pass all the votes together. It is a long list.

Mr. SHORT: As these are practically the same subsidies that are voted from year to year, I think the minister's suggestion a good one.

Mr. BRADY: Mr. Chairman, I desire to refer to item 153. The minister is already aware that a large petition was signed by the people of Queen Charlotte islands for a better service, but their prayer was not granted because of the expenditure involved. But that does not alter the fact that the service between Prince Rupert and the Queen Charlotte islands is very poor indeed. The tourist service along the Pacific coast from Vancouver to the north, as the minister is well aware, is in a very congested state, and even as early as five weeks ago the accommodation on the Canadian Northern and the Canadian Pacific boats was practically all booked until the end of July. It means that thousands of tourists who were anxious to take the Alaska trip will not be able to do so. I believe it is imperative that the Canadian National put two new boats on the Alaskan trip, and that they should provide an improved service to Queen Charlotte islands, and also to Anyox, the smelter city, and to Stewart, which to-day is in the centre of the greatest mining development that British Columbia has known for many years. I should like the minister seriously to consider that proposition. Last year I wished to go down to Vancouver, but being a local resident it was impossible for me to book a passage on any of the tourist boats. A week ago I was in Montreal, and I found there the congestion was just as great as in Vancouver. When we consider that our tourist trade is the third greatest revenue producer surely every effort should be made to encourage it by improving our steamship and other services. I am told that two million tourists passed through Ontario last year. I contend that in our steamship service we are lagging far behind present-day requirements. I trust an effort will be made by the minister before another year to improve both the island service and the tourist service from Vancouver to Skagway.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the pleasure of the committee that votes 151 to 200 inclusive be carried?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Items agreed to.

Canada and Newfoundland, steam service between, $35,000.

Mr. CANTLEY: Does the minister think this item is needed? There is an established service from the St. Lawrence and Nova Scotia ports to Newfoundland. Where does this boat run to?

Mr. MALCOLM: This subsidy is to be paid, as it was in former years, to the existing service. It is not a new service. This subsidy is granted in connection with the trade agreement which we have just made with Newfoundland. Under that agreement we are given the most favoured nation treatment, and in consideration of it we are to restore the subsidy which Canada paid to this service. When the necessary legislation is passed in the Newfoundland house we will pay the money.

Mr. CANTLEY: With what port of Newfoundland does this service connect?

Mr. MALCOLM: Port aux Basques.

Item agreed to.

Canada and South Africa, steamship service between—further amount required, $25,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Why was it not possible to include this and the other items in the estimates proper?

Mr. MALCOLM: The estimates were prepared before Christmas of last year. These items have come up within the last three months.

Item agreed to.

Eastern Canada and Brazil, Uruguay and the Argentine republic, steam service between, $100,000.

Mr. MALCOLM: This is an entirely new service. In view of the present trade conditions between Canada and the Argentine and the river Plate ports, it seemed desirable to establish a service similar to the service that we have between Canada and South Africa, sailing from Montreal in the summer months and from the Atlantic ports in the winter months. We could have secured the service from boats flying a foreign flag, but we felt it would be better to give the Canadian Government Merchant Marine the opportunity. I am perfectly frank in saying to the committee that if we have to pay $100,000 for a steamship service, we might as well pay it to our own merchant marine. The first service will start on June 9. Advertisements have already been issued. The subsidy is $10,000 per trip—ten trips per year. From the information we have obtained from shippers, we rather think the service will be just as great a benefit as the South Africa service has proved to be.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): Any tenders asked for that?

Mr. MALCOLM: Enquiries were made as to what it could be secured for and tenders were invited more or less privately to ascertain the cost.

Mr. BELL (St. John): Are the winter sailings on this line distributed between Halifax and St. John?

Mr. MALCOLM: Halifax and St. John in the winter and Montreal in the summer.

Item agreed to.

Pictou, New Glasgow and Antigonish county ports, service between, $1,000.

Mr. CANTLEY: What was this last year?

Mr. MALCOLM: This was not in last year; this is a restoration of a former service.

Item agreed to.

St. John and Centreville, steam service between, $1,000.

Mr. SHORT: I presume this is a vote for the steamer Disco from Centreville to St. John. It is a new service?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes, a new service.

Item agreed to.

St. John, Westport, Yarmouth and other way ports, steam service between—further amount required, $3,000.

Mr. SHORT: Is this an additional service to be given? I notice in the regular estimates there is $15,000 for the same steamer. Is this to be an increased service?

Mr. MALCOLM: No; it is a straight increase of $3,000 in the subsidy for a service which was not paying.

Mr. SHORT: How many trips a week?

Mr. MALCOLM: Seventy trips per annum.

Mr. GEARY: Round trips?

Mr. MALCOLM: Yes.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

National Defence: Militia services—administration, $317,000.

Mr. ADSHEAD: When this vote was last before the committee we had two excellent addresses from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) and the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail). I am sure we all agree that peace is a good thing. In fact when I left Calgary I met no less a personage than Major General Archibald Macdonnell, who made a strong statement to me. He said, "Don't ever think that a general who has seen his men gassed, cut up and blown to pieces wants another war like the last". I feel sure that all members of the house, whether they are returned soldiers or not, have a common desire for peace. The addresses of my hon. friends who spoke the other evening remind me very much of an incident related by Doctor Michael Clark, who once sat in this house. When in England during the Boer war he held a peace meeting in the town of Newcastle-on-Tyne. In the course of the meeting a number of soldiers and others in favour of the war broke in and disturbed the meeting by singing Soldiers of the Queen and other war songs. I said, "And doctor, what did you do in that case?" He said, A few of us old football players went at them and threw them out by the scruff of the neck". I observed that this was a rather belligerent method for a lover of peace to adopt, and he replied that he loved peace so well that he could fight for it. The speeches made by my two friends the other evening are what I should call fighting speeches for peace, while the speech made by the Minister of National Defence was a pacific speech for militia.

In all fairness to the department and to the government itself it must be said that their record shows that they are not altogether war lords. During its term the government has expressed itself several times in favour of any movement for peace. When I raised the question of the signing of the optional clause by Canada, one minute before six the Minister of Justice took occasion to declare that the government would support the optional clause. And while my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) was discussing the matter the other day the Prime Minister himself rose and stated that the Minister of Justice had spoken for the government and that they would gladly take any opportunity that offered to advance the cause of peace. Last Friday night the Prime Minister laid on the table the invitation of the United States to join in a multilateral peace treaty and the reply of Canada, which was favourable. So I think in all fairness to the government it might be termed a peace government, but with that, even though I do not regard the Minister of National Defence as a war lord or the government as a war government, the minister must be prepared for a very searching inquiry as we go through these estimates. I rather think he will not resent it; he should not do so, and he should be able to give very good reasons why these estimates are being increased. I do not think I should say anything more at the moment, but as we go through these estimates, I shall take occasion, together with other hon. members, to subject the minister to some very close questioning.

Item agreed to.

Cadet services, $500,000.

Miss MACPHAIL: I would like to ask the minister if the department are doing all they can to form additional cadet corps throughout Canada, and what methods are being followed?

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of National Defence): Last year I described to the committee rather in detail just what is done under this vote. The system is that selected personnel are given special courses in physical training and cadet drill. Then they go to the Royal Military college, where further selections are made from those who have been trained in the districts and further courses given. Then they are loaned to the various provincial governments and are sent to the normal schools, where they give those taking the normal course training in physical culture. That has been the system under which the physical training and cadet drill have been given. Then if there are those in the normal schools or in the districts who desire cadet training, a special course is established for them at district headquarters and they are given that training which is necessary to equip teachers who desire to take up cadet work, and these teachers carry on that work in their various schools.

Miss MACPHAIL: When we bring up any other thing pertaining to the field of education in this house we are always told that education is under the jurisdiction of the provinces, and that the Dominion Government must not interfere. How does the Minister of National Defence account for the fact that his is the only department which has anything to say about education in the different provinces?

Mr. RALSTON: I think my hon. friend is under a misapprehension, or else she did not listen to my explanation last year. No cadet training is carried on without the consent of the provincial authorities; all we do is provide a fund for training teachers, if the provincial authorities desire such training.

Miss MACPHAIL: Then in the opinion of the minister there would be nothing to prevent the Dominion government from teaching peace through the schools as aggressively as we now teach cadet training?

Mr. RALSTON: I repudiate the soft impeachment as to aggression; I am merely stating what we do. We provide this fund for the training of teachers who desire to take it, who take up that work in their schools where it is desired. There is nothing at all to prevent the establishment of some special chair for teaching peace, and it seems to me that what the federal government are doing right along, for instance in connection with those films which were referred to a few moments ago, is inculcating in the youth of our land a love of Canada and an appreciation of the activities of this country, which my hon. friend herself has mentioned. That is being done by the federal government. I have no doubt that if hon. members searched their minds they could remember other ways in which the federal authorities are indirectly assisting in connection with education in the schools.

Miss MACPHAIL: But would you not call it aggression when the instructors are specially trained and specially paid by the government, and when uniforms, rifles and other equipment are supplied?

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend may come to any conclusion she wishes; I am simply stating what is done, leaving myself in the judgment of the committee and of the country as to whether or not it is aggressive. I say it is a perfectly proper and laudable thing for this government to provide such a fund for these provinces which desire this training to be carried on. No teacher is compelled to take up this work; no school is compelled to accept it. I can think of two schools in Manitoba, and there are many others, where the teachers who are directors of physical culture were trained by our instructors but where no cadet training is being carried on.

Miss MACPHAIL: If the teachers in the various schools who give cadet training were not specially paid by the department and if their training were not provided out of the public funds, in the opinion of the minister would not that do something to lessen the demand of the provinces for cadet training?

Mr. RALSTON: I never was a teacher and I do not know what the attraction would be; I would leave that to my hon. friend to answer. I respectfully suggest that she should know whether or not a teacher would be attracted by what is paid in connection with this work, and I think I should leave it there.

Miss MACPHAIL: I feel that I cannot let this vote go without saying something about it; reasons may be given why we should talk peace while we are increasing our military estimates and with those reasons the house may agree, but in connection with this vote I do not think any reasonable person can agree with the reasons given. Each year I have made a speech on this question and I am sure the house is very tired of hearing me talk about it. However, it seems to me that my opinions have been very well expressed by Rennie Smith, a member of the British house, so to begin with I will just put it in his words:

> We have a right to safeguard our public education from the blight of a military state. We have a duty to protect our educational institutions from the encroachments of a zealous war office.

I believe that word "zealous" would also apply to this department.

> It is in the schools, in the shaping of young minds, that the foundations of wars are laid.

I do not think that is putting it too strongly, and I do believe that the teaching of youngsters that the way to settle international disputes is to resort to war absolutely prevents them from thinking of any other way out. It seems to me a contradiction in terms and a hypocritical position for this or any other government to give lip service to peace while aggressively pushing the military machine into the schools of the country. The two things do not agree at all.

I had a very interesting debate with Major General MacBrien, former chief of the general staff, in Montreal; he was upholding cadet training in schools, and he took the ground that it was good physical training, that it was good discipline, that it brought security and that it is human nature to fight. Those were the grounds on which he debated, and wherever you hear this question discussed those points are brought up. I do not think any one of the four contentions is sound, and I am going to take just a little time to go rapidly through the same notes which I used on that occasion, but at much less length.

I would like to say that I had a most enjoyable time, and I wish we could have this discussion repeated about a dozen times throughout Canada. The purpose of education is to draw out the latent powers of the child or the adult who is being educated; to develop the initiative of that person, to develop his full rounded powers and to help him to fit himself to the community in which he lives and to render the best possible service. It seems to me that cadet training does not meet that definition of education. Military training subordinates the will of the individual and kills initiative, rather than developing it. I think that is very well expressed in the poem:

> Their's not to reason why,
> Their's but to do and die:

And let us hope there will not be any more die. In military training the individual cannot select what he is to do, and do it in the way he thinks best. If he is to become efficient he must become machine-like, and the result is that instead of raising a generation of youth who will shape society by their thoughts, they are shaped to the thought of existing society, which is very bad for both the child and society.

Mr. RALSTON: Is my hon. friend quoting?

Miss MACPHAIL: No, but I will now quote from John Stuart Mill, who says that all attempts by the state to bias the conclusions of its subjects on disputed points are evil.

There is no doubt at all that the Department of National Defence is trying to bias the opinion of people on a disputed point through cadet training. In Canada we are divided into two schools of thought on how to gain security, but the department is not putting forward the two ways of getting security; they are only putting forward one. They are putting forward military training, military preparedness, the establishment of a military machine which can be turned against our enemies. They are trying to bias the minds of growing children on a disputed point, and a very important point too.

We now come to the question of physical training. It is very true that everyone needs physical training; whether boy or girl, youth or adult, physical training is needed to keep us fit. Military training alone is not good physical training, but in the past a great deal of what is purely physical training has been taken over by the military. During the war physical training occupied a great deal of the soldier's time, it being needed in order to keep him fit. I do not think military training appeals to the cadets; if we could give them the choice I believe they would take straight physical exercises, track work or work in the gymnasium; they would prefer that to military training. My conversations with many people would lead me to believe that to be true.

About a year and a half ago a survey was made in British Columbia by two educational experts, Dr. Putman of Ottawa and Dr. Weir of the university of British Columbia. They made an investigation, not only on this aspect of it but on many others, and in their report they said this:

> We take strong exception to the plan of having any part of this work done by militia officers, who naturally give it a military bent.

And they say again:

> We think the schools would suffer no real loss if every vestige of military training were eliminated from the school program.

As was pointed out to me in the debate in Montreal, the report of this committee was not agreeable, and a second committee was sent out which came in and made an opposite report. This looks to me as though it seemed very important to certain people that military training should not be discredited in the minds of the people of Canada.

There are many countries that have thrown over military training for schoolboys, after a trial of some ten or fifteen years, believing that it was not good for the boys either physically or mentally. France is one of the outstanding examples of this.

I have always contended, and I feel I am right in saying that constant military training does something to the mind of the growing youth. It is not only that his body is trained into military actions, but his mind becomes a military mind, although he may be unconscious of it. When the time comes for a decision to be made as to how a national or international situation should be solved, people who have been trained along military lines quite naturally—I am certainly not blaming them—think of this particular method of settling disputes. I think enough was said the other day on the general subject of military training as a method of settling disputes, and it need not be gone into again. Even the daily newspapers are seeing that it is time we found some new way of settling disputes, and an editorial in the Toronto Daily Star of November 11, 1927, said:

> Every reasoning creature must perceive that the true interests of the race are bound up in the efforts of those who seek to organize internationally against the recurrence of war and for the stamping out of such small outbreaks of it as cannot be foreseen and prevented.

I could go on and on but I do not wish to keep an impatient house. I could quote from prominent world authorities and splendid writers who agree that if war served a purpose for humanity at one time it is now finished, and it is time we found some other way of settling our disputes. But if our Department of National Defence is going to take the boys in our schools throughout Canada, more and more of them as the years go by, and train them to this one way of settling disputes, how in the world are we going to find any other way? It is for that reason that I am so strongly opposed to this particular vote. Other parts of the military estimates are not agreeable to me; there are many people in Canada to whom they are agreeable, but I think the majority of the people in Canada are against this vote. I believe that if we could get their opinion on the matter they would ask the government to keep their hands off the schools. Let them work through any other agency they like, work with people who are full grown and who can make their own judgments. Children are not always in position to do this, and I think it is utterly unfair to use them, because that is what we are doing, and to make them only instruments in the hands of people who want to keep on settling international disputes by the method known as war.

I will not speak at any greater length for the moment, but before sitting down I would like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth):

That item 85 be reduced by the sum of $499,999.

Mr. RALSTON: I would like to indicate to the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) that I am not impatient at all. She has a perfect right, and those whom she represents have a perfect right to express their views, and I want to meet them if I can. The hon. member has expressed herself with regard to a number of matters which have already been discussed, but there is just one point I want to mention. She has an idea that the cadet training, the physical training, or whatever is done in the schools, has some sort of bad effect on the mentality of the boys who undergo it. I want to point out to her only this, and it seems to me it is a complete answer to all that is said along that line—if military training is such that it teaches girls, boys and young men always to go into a military life and to become militaristic, that is to put military things and the militaristic spirit above the ordinary things of commercial and social life, how is it that of the boys who go through the Royal Military college at Kingston and who there get as complete a training as young men can in military matters while they are in the formative stage in life, something less than ten per cent go into military life, while the rest of them go into business, commerce, the arts and sciences and all the other occupations which go to make up our nation's activities? It is also found, however, that when the time comes that the country must defend itself, these same young men are equipped and ready and above eighty-five per cent of the men who went through the Royal Military college went overseas in the great war. That assists me in coming to a conclusion and it ought to convince my hon. friends and others who have an idea that military training creates a military mentality. The situation is quite the reverse. It teaches these young men to be good citizens; that there is something to live for in this country; that while we talk about our natural resources, our opportunities and the many things which are good in Canadian life, those things are good enough to defend and when the call comes, they are ready to defend them. If my hon. friend will look up the records of many men not only in this country but in England as well, she will find that the strongest advocates of peace have had their share of military training and on that account they have not had their peaceful instincts stultified, but they have been ready all the more to advocate peace, just as the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Adshead) suggests, because they have had the experience of military training and they know something about the seriousness of war.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Will the minister make it clear that this question of cadet training is perfectly optional, first, by the provinces, second, by the schools and, lastly, by the parents themselves? Has Alberta asked the government for military training in that province? I rather think it has. Another point I took up with the Minister of National Defence last year was this. Some complaints were sent in that in a school where a military gentleman was training the scholars, those who did not see fit to take military training were ridiculed, held up to scorn by the military officer. I could not substantiate that myself, although there was some evidence in that respect, but I should like the minister to give his opinion, so that it may go on Hansard, that military training is quite optional just in the same way as a scholar can choose between taking up science or languages, and that a boy will not be taunted because he does not choose military training any more than if he chooses to take up science in place of languages.

Mr. RALSTON: I have before me the application for cadet corps, and I can assure my hon. friend that the roll which is sent forward with the application contains the signatures of boys who desire to go into the corps, and that it is certified to be signed with the approval of the parents or guardians. In the second place the application itself is to be signed by the minister or superintendent of education of the province or by the chairman of the board of education. Third, with regard to Alberta, I have under my hand the agreement with regard to that province just as I have the agreements with regard to the other provinces. Fourth, with regard to the matter of any scorn or ridicule or anything of that sort, I can assure my hon. friend, as I assured him at the time, that if such is the case it is absolutely contrary to instructions and orders. I would be only too glad if he would give me any instance in which that occurs and I would see that it was followed up and that disciplinary action was taken.

Amendment (Miss Macphail) negatived.

Manufacturing establishments, $587,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain the increase?

Mr. RALSTON: I think I explained the other night, in running over the items, that the increase is largely due to this, that, at the Dominion arsenal at Quebec which is the only manufacturing establishment we have in Canada, we are endeavouring to manufacture sufficient ammunition for use during the training period so that whatever reserve there is will not be depleted.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What proportion of the supply of small arms ammunition is manufactured in the Dominion's own manufacturing establishment?

Mr. RALSTON: All the small arms ammunition is manufactured at Quebec.

Mr. LUCAS: Does this refer only to ammunition that is manufactured?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, at the Dominion arsenal at Quebec. There is a small amount of some $9,000 for care of an arsenal which was established at Lindsay during the war. That is still being retained but it is not being operated.

Mr. LUCAS: We are not manufacturing any rifles at the present time?

Mr. RALSTON: No.

Mr. LUCAS: What class of rifle are the troops using?

Mr. RALSTON: The issue rifles are the Lee-Enfield rifles.

Mr. GARDINER: Where are they secured?

Mr. RALSTON: We are not getting any new ones. They are the rifles we had over after the war.

Mr. LUCAS: I understand we had a large quantity of Ross rifles during the war.

Mr. RALSTON: We have them.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Are you manufacturing any poison gas?

Mr. RALSTON: None.

Miss MACPHAIL: Does the minister not think in the interest of Canada the department should be manufacturing poison gases? What good are rifles going to be against poison gas? Is Canada not getting some poison gas ready?

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend the other night attempted to tell us how the department should be carried on in this respect and she remarked that what was being done was not to any purpose. I only want to say to her and to the rest of the committee that we are endeavouring not to attempt experimental work but to carry on with the fundamentals in connection with military training. The matter of gas is not engaging the attention of the department at all, except that I think we have on hand one or two thousand gas respirators which we use for anti-gas training.

Mr. LUCAS: Is it possible for the public to secure any of these Ross rifles for sporting purposes?

Mr. RALSTON: No. I have been approched a great many times in regard to that.

Mr. GEARY: Are they issued for sharpshooting, for target practice at all?

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend knows that they are good for target practice, and were used a good deal by snipers, and he also knows that they did not work well as service rifles

Item agreed to.

Non-permanent active militia, $2,315,000.

Mr. SPENCER: What is the explanation of the increase?

Mr. RALSTON: I dealt with this briefly the other night. The increase in the estimate is to provide for an average of twelve days training at camp. Previous to the war, the average number of days training was sixteen days. Nine days training hardly provides one week at camp. Not very much can be done on the first day and the last day and you have not much left in the way of training for officers; so it was suggested—and I think it is in the interests of economy, and will result in better training, and in the long run save money—that we should provide for a greater number of days at camp. As the committee may know, the city units train largely at local headquarters. Perhaps they have three or four days at camp, and the rest of the training at local headquarters. This is more for rural units than for city units.

Mr. GARDINER: In view of the new methods of warfare that are likely to prevail in any future wars, does the minister really think that this militia training is of any value at all, even against invasion?

Mr. RALSTON: The principles of infantry and artillery training I think are just as sound now as they ever were. My hon. friend will find that the advance and the change which is being made in connection with training both in England and the United States is largely along the line of the mechanization of transport, but you have to have artillery training just the same, no matter how you haul the gun, whether by horse, motor, or some special tractor devise. Of course tanks are being experimented with, at very great expense, and as my hon. friend knows, the tanks were an invention of the last war. I do think that all we can hope to do is to train along fundamental lines so far as infantry, artillery and cavalry training is concerned, and then be prepared, if such an untoward event should come about that we are at war, to utilize the specialists in connection with tank warfare and mechanization and things of that kind; because the last war showed us that if people understand the fundamentals they can pretty easily adapt themselves to the new species of transport and the new species of armament.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): How many men will be in training at camp this year.

Mr. RALSTON: The whole training will be about 33,000.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): How does that compare with last year?

Mr. RALSTON: It is the same.

Mr. BELL (Saint Antoine): In view of our new status as a nation, it does not seem surprising that the militia estimates should be increased. When the leader of the Progressive party spoke regarding our protection in case of future wars, I thought possibly the government would take into consideration the splendid showing made by Canadians in the last war as air pilots. Canada supplied practically 60 per cent of the air pilots overseas, and I thought possibly the government would be making some provision for the development of an aerial service because of the part that air forces will play in future wars. It is rather surprising that at the present time we have practically no aerodromes, and no provision made in that respect. All of us know the part played by aeroplanes in the last war, and as I said before, the Canadians excelled as air pilots.

It is rather amusing to hear the different speeches in this house regarding war. We listen patiently to hon. members speaking of war, but when did Canada ever become a warlike nation? We have never entered into a war unless it was practically forced upon us, and yet members rise in the house and make these long orations. The hon. member for West Calgary congratulates the government for being a peaceful government, and the hon. member for Southeast Grey accuses the government of spending great amounts on military training and of being a warlike government. I would suggest that the great peace advocates in this house should have a conference among themselves and determine what is the actual status of the government in regard to war, and what is the great cause of these periodical outbursts on the subject of peace.

Royal Military College, $375,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What is the number of instructors on this staff, and what is the cost of the class instructors?

Mr. RALSTON: There are sixteen instructors, and the total cost is $57,682.50.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What is the regular pay and allowances of the military instructors?

Mr. RALSTON: The pay and allowances are as follows:

Commandant	$ 6,000 00
General staff officer I senior professor	5,045 00
General staff officer I	4,745 00
General staff officer II	4,051 50
Staff adjutant	3,000 00
Quartermaster	3,759 50
Paymaster	3,540 50
Engineer officer	3,759 50
Medical officer	2,100 00
Nursing sister	2,263 00
Professor of tactics	4,380 00
Associate professor of artillery	3,540 50
Instructor military engineering	3,212 50
Instructor of tactics	3,066 00
Physical and weapon training	2,920 00
Riding master	2,299 50
Total number 16—pay and allowances	$57,682 50

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I take it that there are over 100 instructors altogether; is that correct?

Mr. RALSTON: Not instructors.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Instructors and the military staff.

Mr. RALSTON: There are 59 and 16—75 altogether, the military superior staff and a subordinate staff. Of course, my hon. friend understands that many of the subordinate staff are not instructors.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I want to get at the total number to keep up the establishment.

Mr. RALSTON: Let us take them all, to be fair. The total number of the staff of the college is 143. Of that number 75 are military —about 50 per cent.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: And the total cost of the military and civilian staffs is?

Mr. RALSTON: In rough figures, $240,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: How many graduates have you each year?

Mr. RALSTON: The number runs from 30 to 50.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Someone has given me a memorandum,—I have not checked it—that from 1880 to 1927 there were 883 graduates.

Mr. RALSTON: The first graduating class was in 1880. Up to November 1918 the number of candidates taken on the strength was 1,493. The number registered at the college to date is 2,017.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: But the graduates?

Mr. RALSTON: That is, the total to date from 1880?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes.

Mr. RALSTON: I am afraid I cannot give my hon. friend the figure.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If I have it right, the figure is 883 up to 1927, or only about 20 a year.

Mr. RALSTON: I will give my hon. friend a full statement for each year. It is not a thing that there can be any doubt about.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Quite so. If each year the enrollment is about 200, and the actual graduating class is only about 20, the expenditure is very heavy.

Mr. RALSTON: But we are training others besides those who graduate. The cost—I think I gave it to the committee when we were discussing the amendment to the Royal Military College Act earlier in the session—my recollection is between $1,400 and $1,500 per student.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The minister stated a little while ago that only 10 per cent of the cadets took up the military profession.

Mr. RALSTON: I said that was the percentage for the last few years.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Of that ten per cent how many remained in Canada?

Mr. RALSTON: This year ten took commissions in Canada; none took commissions in the British army.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is it true that in the past quite a number have accepted commissions in the imperial army?

Mr. RALSTON: I have not that at hand. Will my hon. friend let me give him the information later? Would he like it for the last three or four years?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes. Just one other question. From the standpoint of the Canadian military establishment, is it a good thing to spend this large sum in educating so small a number of people, and then have the most proficient of them accept commissions in the imperial army?

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend is wrong in thinking that a large proportion of them do accept commissions in the imperial army.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I said the most proficient.

Mr. RALSTON: I do not admit that, and I do not think my hon. friend would wish to so understand it. Some of the boys desire to go into the imperial army. As my hon. friend knows, with a force of only 3,300 men we have not many commissions to offer. Some who care for military life take commissions in the imperial army, but I do not think that proves they are the most proficient.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: But I was wondering whether it is a good thing to spend this enormous sum in educating these boys and then have a number of them—we will not say whether they are the most proficient or not—go over to the old land to find a career.

Mr. RALSTON: If there was a very large number out of the total enrollment I presume my hon. friend's objection might hold, but from the point of view of Canada I do not think there can be any objection with respect to the few who take imperial commissions. Ninety per cent of these boys enter civilian life and do not follow a military career.

Miss MACPHAIL: Have the students of the Royal Military college any more advantages in the way of lower railway fares or free equipment than the students in any other college throughout Canada? If so, what are they?

Mr. RALSTON: As was said, they put up what amounts to something like $400 a year.

Miss MACPHAIL: But do they pay their railway fares to and from home?

Mr. RALSTON: Coming to the school to enroll and returning home when they graduate they are given their railway fare.

Miss MACPHAIL: And are the horses and uniforms provided by the state?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes.

Miss MACPHAIL: Rather generous, don't you think?

Mr. RALSTON: They pay for their uniforms. The horses are provided for the students.

Mr. GEARY: In corresponding institutions in the United States the student pays nothing; he is paid.

Miss MACPHAIL: I do not care what they do in the United States. The only fair comparison to make is between students in other colleges of Canada and those at the Royal Military college. Because they do more in other countries to encourage the military training of boys is no justification for doing it here.

Mr. RALSTON: I do not think my hon. friend gives sufficient consideration to the fact that the Royal Military college is open to every Canadian boy, no matter whether he is rich or poor. As was very properly said soon after the opening of this session: merit counts; a boy gets in on merit alone.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): There is a little more to be considered in connection with the military college than has been brought out. Every cadet has to be an officer after he has graduated; he has to be connected with some unit in Canada. He is on the reserve after that. At present some of them are training for the air force; five have to take a three year course each year for air force in the civilian service. In addition to that there is also provided what is known as the long course training for officers. That expenditure goes on the military college but it is really an expenditure in connection with staff work. As regards the imperial army, there is an opening there for the very best engineers in the world, and every Canadian is proud of the position held by Girouard in South Africa, who was the principal officer there, he having made possible all the bridge work. These men are not always looking after military work; railways and other undertakings are under their advisement. So that in a great many ways this college is providing for the advancement of civilian life. I do not think there is any establishment that has advertised the name of Canada as much as this college, and I would suggest to the minister, in view of the motion pictures which are exhibited in this country, such the The Great Parade, and which are nothing but an advertisement for the school at West Point in the United States, that it would be much better for Canada to advertise its own school. These boys immediately on graduating from military college take up scientific work in chemistry, engineering and so forth, and they carry their talent into all civilian activities in Canada. But they are the great reservist force of the Dominion.

Miss MACPHAIL: Does the minister think it would be necessary to increase the army in order that all men graduating from the college who wish to take up a military career may have an opportunity? Surely you should not hold down the Canadian boys who want to go in for a military career? Had you not better consider increasing the force?

Mr. RALSTON: I will consider the suggestion if my hon. friend tells me she will vote for it.

Item agreed to.

Royal Canadian Air Force—all expenses in connection with the general maintenance and training of the Royal Canadian Air Force, and the auxiliary and reserve air force, including training personnel for civil air operations, $1,669,694.

Mr. IRVINE: Will the minister make clear to the committee the position of the men serving in the Air Force? Are they entitled to pensions at the expiration of their service and are they protected in case of accident in the air? If so, what is the nature of the protection?

Mr. RALSTON: There are two situations to be considered, one which presents itself when the particular airman is still in the employ of the department, and the other after he is discharged. The disabilities pension act which was the subject of an amendment this session—I am referring to the Pensions Act covering the military and naval service as well—applies to airmen and others who are discharged, or to their dependents if the man dies from any cause attributable to service. They get the same pension as those who served in the permanent force. In addition to that we have under the pay and allowance regulations, sections 298 to 308, provided for compensation and for treatment of those who have suffered injury, disease or illness arising from a cause incident to air force service. Provision has also been made with respect to those of civilian occupation in other branches of the government service who may be accompanying airmen on service. They are provided for by order in council which has been passed under the air board legislation. They are well covered both by the Pensions Act and by the pay and allowance regulations.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Why is it necessary to have the civil air force under the National Defence department?

Mr. RALSTON: One might as well question a shoemaker with regard to the advisability of cobbling shoes.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am asking a serious question.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend must not take offence at the remark; I merely wished to imply that it was not fair for him to expect a disinterested answer from me because I happen to preside over the Air force as well as the Defence department. However, I will state the facts and my hon. friend may draw his own conclusion. The air services in Canada were established first under the air board and were then taken over by the Department of National Defence. At their inception they had to do particularly with military air service, but it was soon found that the aviation service could well be utilized in connection with a number of government activities. For two or three years the air force did that work. Last year the government decided that there should be a straight division between military and civil government operations and so it was that on July 1 we set up in the Department of National Defence a separate organization in this regard. Most of the personnel are still in the air force. There is a demand in Canada, which we cannot supply, for aviators, and these men are constantly being asked by commercial companies to enter their employ. I can assure my hon. friend that we are making the transition as fast as we can in an endeavour to establish a purely civilian organization. Already the department of the controller of civil aviation is under the Civil Service Commission, and positions are being filled entirely by civilian personnel.

Mr. POULIOT: I wish to bring to the attention of the minister a serious accident that occurred the other day.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend can take it up on the next vote.

Item agreed to.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

LONDON AND PORT BURWELL RAILWAY COMPANY

Mr. M. F. HEPBURN (West Elgin) moved the third reading of Bill No. 58, to incorporate the London and Port Burwell Railway Company.

Mr. SPEAKER: In amendment the hon. member for Norfolk-Elgin (Mr. Taylor) moves:

That the following be inserted as clause 4: "The capital stock of the company shall be five hundred thousand dollars."

Mr. J. F. WHITE (London): I rise to a point of order in connection with the amendment. I would refer Your Honour to Bourinot, fourth edition, page 618, where the following appears:

On the third reading in the Commons no amendment may be made except of a verbal nature; and, if it is wished to make any material change, the bill must be referred back to committee of the whole.

Then further up on the same page I find the following:

It is the correct course, in all cases where it is necessary to make material amendments, to refer the bill back to the select committee, to which it had been previously sent, instead of considering the proposed changes in committees of the whole.

It seems to me that the proposed amendment is a very material change in the bill. This section was struck out in committee when it was considered on May 8, I think, and it is the custom of this house to refer such questions back to the committee which considered the bill, which in this case would be the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. This practice was followed on May 31, when the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh) moved an amendment to the final report of the committee on industrial and international relations; that report was referred back to the committee with instructions to do so and so, and it seems to me that that is the proper course to pursue in this case.

Mr. SPEAKER: Does any other hon. member desire to speak on the point of order? The hon. member's point would be well taken if we were under the old rules, but last year we amended the rules of the house, and I would refer my hon. friend to standing order 113:

No important amendment may be proposed to any private bill, in a committee of the whole house, or at the third reading of the bill, unless one day's notice of the same has been given.

The amendment may or may not be referred back to the committee. It is permissible, not compulsory. I am informed by the clerk of the house that notice was given some days ago; therefore the amendment is in order and I so rule. The question is on the amendment.

Amendment (Mr. Taylor) agreed to on division.

Mr. WHITE (London): I protest, Mr. Speaker; I was on my feet before the motion was put.

Mr. SPEAKER: But the hon. gentleman had already spoken.

Mr. WHITE (London): Only on the point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER: So I put the question.

Mr. WHITE (London): I spoke on the point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would be very much afraid that if I allowed the hon. gentleman to speak a second time on the point of order after it had been ruled out, it would look like filibustering, although I am sure the hon. gentleman does not mean to do that.

Mr. WHITE (London): I hardly think I can be charged with that.

Mr. SPEAKER: Far be it from my mind to charge the hon. member with lacking in parliamentary dignity or committing any wrong. I will simply state that the hon. gentleman made his point and I ruled on the point of order after having asked if any other hon. members desired to speak. No one speaking, I ruled on the point of order and immediately put the question.

Mr CHURCH: Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN: I desire to move that the question be now put.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): I rise to a point of order. I wish to direct attention to the fact that on May 16 I gave notice that on the third reading of this bill I would move the six months hoist. That motion has precedence on the third reading of a bill. I was ready to debate the question a few moments ago, before the hon. member for West Elgin rose. I would also call attention to the fact that I was on my feet before the hon. member for West Elgin spoke.

Hon. C. A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): Just on the point of order, Mr. Speaker, might I call your attention to the fact that in connection with another bill a few nights ago the previous question was moved after notices of amendments had been given. It happened that the hon. member rising to move the previous question, I think it was the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington, caught your eye while the hon. member who had given notice of his amendment did not do so, and in consequence his amendment was barred.

Mr. SPEAKER: I was under the impression that there was only the one amendment which has been carried; I did not know there was a second amendment. May I remind the house that there is an unwritten rule that before putting the question the Speaker must take up all the amendments relating to the bill. See May, thirteenth edition, page 347. I have just been informed that another amendment appears on the order paper, and therefore it is my duty to put that amendment. Mr. Church moves:

That bill No. 58, to incorporate the London and Port Burwell Railway Company, be not now read a third time, but that it be read this day six months.

Mr. CHURCH: No doubt the hon. gentlemen on the front benches do not like to see such an amendment brought in to an important public bill which affects the people of western Ontario. A few of the hon. gentlemen on the front benches in connection with this and other private bills are nearly "all front and bench" and no public rights—from what I have heard and seen on private bills legislation in this chamber for the past month. We have asked the Minister of Railways and the government for a statement of their policy on this particular bill, which affects the territory around St. Thomas. I spoke in the St. Thomas city hall with the late Sir Adam Beck in connection with a hydro radial to run from lake Erie through St. Thomas, the counties of Perth, Elgin and Middlesex, and on to Tillsonburg. The people of St. Thomas carried the by-law at that time by ten to one, and it was also carried in Port Burwell. The late Sir Adam Beck proposed to build a system of hydro radials in western Ontario through the counties of Middlesex and Elgin and other counties, which would have relieved this parliament of the cost of such a railway as this. The people carried the by-laws in every municipality. Where is the head of the national railways? He is the gentleman that has crucified the whole thousand miles of hydro radials in Toronto, London and St. Thomas and the Niagara district. Sir Adam's scheme of hydro radials would have been just as successful as his light and power scheme proved to be, and would have acted as a feeder to the whole Canadian National Railway system. I was in the county of Middlesex and the county of Elgin with my late leader, and we carried all our light and power by-laws by 100 to 1, and we carried the radial by-laws by a large majority. These radials would have acted as feeders to the main line of the Canadian National, to bring dairy products, vegetables, and agricultural products of all kinds to the main line. The light and power proposition has done wonders for the western part of Ontario, and the hydro radials would have done just as much.

Sir Adam Beck took an old railway, the Pere Marquette, he electrified it from the city of London, through St. Thomas down to Port Stanley, and this road, about 26 miles in all, has conferred a great boon on the citzens of the cities of London and St. Thomas and the other municipalities in that district. Now this bill 58 will more or less parallel the London and Port Stanley—it serves much of the same territory, which further is Canadian National exclusive territory.

A petition is presented by private people, through the medium of bill No. 58, and we must see who these people are. There is Mr. Lockrow of the city of Birmingham in the state of Michigan, attorney at law and Robert L. Harp of the city of Detroit. He will act as and will be a very happy harp for Sir Henry Thornton, the crucifier of the hydro radials. A thousand miles of road were to be built under Sir Adam's hydro radial scheme, representing 268 Ontario municipalities that had carried these bylaws, not only in the Toronto district, but in the Niagara-London, St. Thomas and Port Burwell districts. These hydro by-laws were carried, and we would have had a line from Port Burwell on the north shore of lake Erie to the city of London, St. Thomas and Listowel and Tillsonburg. Sir Henry Thornton attended the railway committee while this bill was up and he did not oppose this bill 58, but a few years ago he opposed the hydro radial scheme, which had been passed by the ratepayers of the municipalities from Port Burwell, right up through St. Thomas and down to the town of Tillsonburg. It is a happy coincidence that I have here the evidence regarding as to these hydro radials, taken before the railways and shipping committee in 1924 and 1925, and Sir Henry was asked why he opposed the hydro radials. He sent a wire to Toronto opposing the hydro radials and said he wanted the entire territory and would electrify the Grand Trunk line to the falls, to Montreal and elsewhere, which was never done.

The people in these municipalities have put up their bonds to build these hydro radials in the counties of Elgin and Middlesex, to build the London and Port Stanley Railway. These bonds have been guaranteed by the province of Ontario, and it is now proposed to make a scrap of paper out of these securities and allow a new private road to invade their territory. These people come along and say, "We will scrap all this territory; we will scrap all these bonds, and destroy the life work of Sir Adam Beck in the county of Middlesex and Elgin." Sir Adam Beck did more for the counties of Elgin and Middlesex and western Ontario than a thousand Sir Henry Thorntons.

Where was he when this bill was before the railway committee? He was asked what his views were regarding a line going through these counties, and he replied that he had no interest in this railway (Bill 58). Of course he had no interest in this railway. I can remember the time when it was estimated that a third of a million dollars was put up to defeat Sir Adam Beck and hydro radials in Toronto by the electric ring. I was with my late leader in the counties of Elgin and Middlesex when we launched the investment of the municipalities in the London and Port Stanley Railway. It is a fine road and a shining example of what the public ownership of radials would have done for the people generally in radials all over the province of Ontario. I regret to say that my late leader was driven to the wall, and some of these American corporations have found western Ontario now a very happy hunting ground now owing to the fact that we have as head of the National railways a gentleman who does not believe in public ownership. This man has fought hydro radial by-laws in the city of Toronto, and in the counties of Elgin and Middlesex, in season and out of season, and helped destroy the hydro radials. He says he is not interested in these radial by-laws. Of course he is not interested in the radial by-laws; he is only giving them the same kind of bunkum which he gave to the taxpayers in Toronto by wire during the radial election. Sir Henry Thornton was asked in the committee on railways and shipping what his hostility was to the scheme of Sir Adam Beck to build a thousand miles of hydro radials in the province of Ontario. He was asked what his views were, and he said that if he had to do it over again he would never have sent the telegram he did on the eve of the presentment of the hydro radial by-law to the taxpayers of Toronto.

We have to go back to history to get the chronological order of this thing. The hydro by-law was defeated in the city of Toronto, and we can see to-day in Michigan, New York, New Jersey and Indiana what a system of hydro radials has done there, and would have done here for the counties of Elgin and Middlesex and western part of Ontario if adopted. Many of these cities and towns are suffering from rural depopulation. There is under-production; the farmers are not able to get their crops to the market and in many cases farm produce is suffering from lack of transportation. In many counties farms are untilled. Why? Because of lack of transportation facilities and the lack of electric hydro radials.

Sir Adam Beck, in addressing the people of the district covered by Bill No. 58, pointed out that if we had a system of hydro radials built by the municipalities it would solve the great problem of under-production in Ontario. He told them that they would haul the farmer's crop to the market; that they would multiply the value of every farm in Middlesex, Elgin and other Ontario counties by two, three or four, as has been done in Michigan, Indiana, Ohio, New York and New Jersey. What built up these five states across the border? Their system of hydro radials. When Sir Henry Thornton took over the presidency of the Canadian National, by-laws had been passed in the various municipalities approving the hydro radial system. I was over the whole right of way of this particular road and every by-law was carried. I cannot speak for Tillsonburg, because I do not remember the by-law there, but I remember being in the county of Elgin and the city of St. Thomas. This is one of the many contracts between the entire 262 municipalities. Port Burwell, the city of St. Thomas, the city of London, and the town of Tillsonburg are in the contract. These contracts passed the ratepayers. The by-law was prepared by the municipalities; it was endorsed by the hydro-electric commission; it was sent to the people and on municipal voting day the ballot boxes were opened. Those who were ratepayers in these municipalities of western Ontario which enjoy cheap light and power went into the polls and by large majorities all the municipalities covered by this particular bill 58 preferred a hydro radial system, acting as a feeder for the old Grand Trunk, affiliated and connected with it. Many of these municipalities to-day, only for the work of Sir Henry Thornton, would be linked up with the London and Port Stanley railway, and with the great hydro trunk line between Toronto, Hamilton and the city of Windsor, with this particular right of way along the north shore of lake Erie and all the branch lines operating in western Ontario as a net work connecting up in western Ontario the rural municipalities, the suburban municipalities and the urban municipalities and by a vast trunk line extending over to Niagara Falls, St. Catharines, Hamilton and Toronto and not by duplication but taking existing old Grand Trunk dilapidated lines in western Ontario and electrifying them and acting as part and parcel of the old Grand Trunk.

These by-laws in the various municipalities were carried under Sir Adam Beck's auspices, some of them by a hundred to one, some by ten to one, some by five to one and some by three to one. Everything was going along lovely for the adoption of a system of hydro radials in western Ontario and in the Niagara district around lake Erie and lake Ontario, when like a bolt out the blue there descended upon those municipalities a gentleman by the name of Sir Henry Thornton, who is supposed to be president of the Canadian National. The municipalities were to construct these railways themselves, or take over old dilapidated Grand Trunk lines; they were to act as feeders for the old bankrupt Grand Trunk in western Ontario. This question was discussed in the house the other night by the Minister of Railways, and I have a great respect for him. I differ with him now; I will differ with him many times in the future, but I know that he is sincere in his belief. I have always found him sincere in what he says, but I have not found the same sincerity in regard to the president of the Canadian National. He fought Sir Adam Beck in season and out of season. When this hydro radial by-law was brought up in Toronto he sent a wire to the minister stating that he was going to electrify the whole Grand Trunk from Toronto to Montreal; that he was going to electrify the road which passes through the municipalities from Toronto to Niagara Falls. Another line to be electrified was from Toronto to Barrie and another was the Toronto and Eastern railway from Leaside down to the town of Bowmanville. Now I find that the whole Toronto and Eastern railway has been torn up by Sir Henry Thornton. I had a return brought down in the house and it showed that the Toronto and Eastern railway, which would have been a hydro radial from Toronto to Bowmanville and Cobourg, a railway which Sir Adam Beck was to electrify was torn up. Sir Henry Thornton did the same thing with the contract for the purchase of the Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto railway which Sir Adam had a contract to purchase. He cancelled it and he did the same thing with the Toronto suburban railway running through the Humber valley to the city of Guelph. These three railways belonging to a bankrupt road were to be taken over by Sir Adam Beck and the municipalities passed by-laws by a large majority for their acquisition. What happened? After the present government came into office they cancelled the orders in council of the late government and declined to give the hydro radials these three railways which would have been developed and extended under public ownership as free feeders for the Canadian National and have saved the people of Canada all the cost of betterments now spent on these systems.

The Toronto and Eastern railways, for example, which would have acted as a feeder, has been torn up by Sir Henry Thornton. As you pass out of the village of Leaside, what do you see? You see ties torn up, bridges torn up, right of way torn up. Would that we had on both sides of this house some public-spirited men like my leader, Sir Adam Beck, who was the best Conservative we ever had in the province and who was a voting strength to the Conservative party. When the ballot boxes were opened in the municipalities it was found that they gave big majorities to the hydro radial system proposed by Sir Adam Beck.

We have to-day a gentleman who comes to this house and promotes this bill and I charge in the house that these two United States citizens who are connected with this bill are nothing but dummies for the National railways. Some of Sir Henry Thornton's officials were connected with a bridge bill the other day here—a bridge engineer and Grand Trunk Railways brakeman and one of his officials on the railway promoting a bill. To-night this bill is being promoted by a gentleman from Birmingham in the United States of America. He is an attorney-at-law. Of course he is an attorney-at-law. One of the duties of an attorney is to be at law.

[Mr. Church.]

There is another gentleman from Detroit, called Robert Lee Harp. That is a nice-sounding name. He is playing the harp, but the chief harper and the chief fiddler who defeated the hydro radials and to put this bill through is Sir Henry Thornton, the one who destroyed Sir Adam Beck's whole dream of radials in Ontario. There are papers in my own city and in many other parts of the province which have fought for Sir Adam Beck in season and out of season.

Mr. TAYLOR: I rise to a point of order. The hon. member is not speaking to his motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the hon. gentleman should speak with more relevancy to the subject matter. Sir Henry Thornton and the Ontario Hydro Electric Commission have nothing to do with the present bill. I would therefore ask the hon. gentleman to come a little more closely to the question before the house.

Mr. CHURCH: I will, although it is pretty hard, Mr. Speaker, to separate the question of the public Ontario hydro radials from the private bill that is now before us. The territory that is to be covered by the London and Port Burwell Railway Company and this bill is and was hydro radial territory. At the present time the London and Port Stanley Railway Company have this territory in agreement with the county councils of Elgin and Middlesex counties. These are the two counties mainly concerned, except for a small portion of the county of Perth through which this road is to go. I have already dealt with the question of the territory to be served.

Now I come to discuss this proposed line of railway, which in my opinion would parallel the London and Port Stanley road. If I remember rightly, the county council of the county of Elgin and Perth asked to have the hydro radial system extended into these counties. By this bill we would wipe out the London and Port Stanley railway, and launch on this new line of railway. Bill No. 58 received its first reading on March the 6th, and has already been reported. I am moving the six months' hoist, Mr. Speaker, for the reason that I am attacking this bill on grounds of public policy. In the second place, I attack it because this road would invade Canadian National territory which never should be surrendered. The Canadian National railway has already a large deficit, and it is going behind about $8,000,000 in its passenger business, and I say that it should not give up territory which would serve as a feeder to its main line. This proposed line of railway runs through the counties of Middlesex and Elgin, and virtually parallels the London and Port Stanley road, and if this bill goes through, the London and Port Stanley road might as well close up. For these reasons I think the bill should not be adopted by this house. It is opposed to the rights of the municipalities. The city of St. Thomas is already tied up to a contract with the London and Port Stanley railway, and if this bill goes through it will finish somewhat that contract. The Ontario Hydro Electric Commission has bonds running into the hundreds and thousands of dollars of these various municipalities, and if this bill goes through it would destroy somewhat those securities. It is something that has never been done before.

Who are the Canadians that are connected with this proposed line of railway? They are John H. Teall, gentleman, Donald F. Gibson, barrister-at-law, Frederick A. Ramsay, merchant, all of the town of Tillsonburg. To please my hon. friend the chairman of the banking and commerce committee, who is in favour of this bill, and for whom I have the utmost regard, as I have also for the promoter of this bill, and for the hon. member from Elgin too, I might be inclined to support the bill, but as a supporter of the Ontario hydro radial system, I cannot do it. I know that these people in the municipalities concerned are behind the scheme of Sir Adam Beck, and I cannot surrender the views I hold after having been connected with the Ontario hydro radial system for twenty-two years.

This work is declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, but not by the widest stretch of the imagination can it be called that. The road is not interprovincial in character; it is not international; it is simply a small provincial railway, which would parallel the London and Port Stanley road, and a federal railway in a mythical sense only.

I understand that an amendment is to be moved in regard to what the capital shall be. They are to issue preferred stock apparently. The head office of the company is to be in the town of Port Burwell, in the county of Elgin, and the annual meeting of the shareholders is to be held on the first Monday of October. It is provided that the number of directors is to be not less than five nor more than nine, and that the company may lay out, construct and operate a railway from Port Burwell on the north shore of lake Erie to the city of London, passing through the counties of Elgin and Middlesex. For these and other reasons, Mr. Speaker, I move that this bill be not now read a third time, but that it be read a third time this day six months.

Mr. M. F. HEPBURN (West Elgin): I shall not attempt to reply to the speech of the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Church), if I might term it a speech. After eulogizing the late Sir Adam Beck, a gentleman for whom we all have the greatest respect, the hon. gentleman made a speech that had nothing to do with the subject before the house; it covered practically everything from ships of war to Easter eggs. But what I did resent was his assumption that he represented the people of the county of Elgin. I do not think there has been or ever will be a time when they will ask the hon. gentleman to represent their opinions in this house. We all realize that he is obsessed with the idea that the sun rises on the east side of Toronto and sets on the west side.

To show how wide he was of the mark I am going to read a telegram that I received only a few minutes ago from the county council of Elgin, now in session. It reads:

> The Elgin county council unanimously passed the following resolution this afternoon: That this council approve of the bill now before the House of Commons providing for incorporation of the London and Port Burwell Railway Company.
>
> (Signed) K. W. McKay,
> County Clerk.

I would like to read also a communication that I have received from the mayor of St. Thomas. My hon. friend from London (Mr. White) had serious doubts in his mind whether the statement I made in the house a few nights ago was accurate or not, and he wrote to the mayor of St. Thomas asking for the attitude of that city in regard to the London and Port Burwell railway. The mayor replied as follows:

> Matter referred to in letter left to the discretion of local member, in whom city council has full confidence. For your information would further add that St. Thomas does not desire to block rail or industrial development beneficial to southwestern Ontario.

I also want to correct one of the misstatements made by the hon. member for Toronto Northwest, that this railway parallels an existing line. I make the definite statement that it does not. The nearest station on the London and Port Stanley railway, which some hon. members are so anxious to protect, is not within twelve miles of any proposed station on the London and Port Burwell railway.

Mr. CHURCH: Would the hon. member give the vote in the city of St. Thomas in favour of the hydro radial bill? It was ten to one for hydro radials.

Mr. HEPBURN: I am not talking of hydro radials. Connected with this railway proposition there is now pending what I believe will be the biggest industrial development we have ever had promised in southern Ontario. So great does that development promise to be that the promoters are willing and anxious to spend money to build a branch or feeder line to the main trunk line running east and west through southern Ontario. I do not blame them for not wishing to tie themselves up with a railway monopoly. When we look at the map we see a huge American city opposite a Canadian village, the reason being that we are always too prone to protect monopolies in Canada; in fact we are making it the happy hunting ground for monopolies. I appeal to the fair-mindedness of this house to take a vote on this bill. We are willing to abide by the decision.

Mr. J. F. WHITE (London): Mr. Speaker, when this bill was before the house last Tuesday night I made some remarks in connection with it, and now I wish to make some further observations and to refer to some of the statements which have been made by the sponsor of the bill (Mr. Taylor), and also by the member for West Elgin (Mr. Hepburn) who is supporting it. In the short time that the bill was before the committee of the whole on Tuesday night I opposed it, believing it to be undesirable and unnecessary. On that occasion I outlined the situation and informed the house that the proposed line would practically parallel the existing line. It is true the two lines would be a few miles apart at the southern end, but they converge as they approach the city of London at the north end. I also gave a short history of the existing road, the London and Port Stanley, and showed that is has been in actual operation for seventy-five years, and that it is now controlled and operated municipally as a public-owned proposition. Further, I stated that my constituency owns four-fifths of the stock and the Canadian National Railways about one-fifth, there being a few privately owned shares.

Mr. TAYLOR: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. Surely the hon. member for London (Mr. White) should not obstruct by reading his speech.

Mr. WHITE (London): Mr. Speaker, I do not suppose that is a point of order.

Mr. HEPBURN: Put down your notes and see how far you can go.

Mr. WHITE (London): I also referred to the quality of the installation, to the condition of the road and to its equipment, and also to its importance as a freight-distributing line to London and to Port Stanley. I also explained the method adopted by the city council of London in managing—

Mr. DUNNING: Surely, Mr. Speaker, it is not in order for my hon. friend to repeat a speech which he admits he made on a previous occasion.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. DUNNING: He says so.

An hon. MEMBER: He did not.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): It is on the same subject.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is permissible for an hon. member to refer to remarks made on a previous occasion on the same subject provided he does not repeat word for word what he then said.

Mr. DUNNING: He is coming pretty close to it.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. WHITE (London): I would remind the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) that this is a different stage of the bill and a different question entirely is now under consideration. Besides, probably there are members present to-night who were not here last Tuesday night, and when I get through the house will see that I have not made the same speech.

An hon. MEMBER: Or any speech.

Mr. WHITE (London): I desire to make my speech in my own way, not to have others make it for me. I referred also to the financial results and showed that for several years the road had made surpluses after paying rentals, interest on sinking fund and operating costs, but that owing to unforseen competition from motor trucks and so on much of the business of the road had disappeared in the last few years, with consequent deficits.

Mr. HEPBURN: Have you not had charges of bribery and corruption levelled against the road?

Mr. WHITE (London): If the hon. gentleman will possess his soul in patience I will answer that part of his remarks as well. He may not hear it to-night, but he will a little later. I also showed—

Mr. HEPBURN: What is the answer?

Mr. WHITE (London): I have answered you before.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. WHITE (London): I also showed how Port Burwell is already served by the Canadian Pacific Railway, that there is not enough business to keep one road busy, so that without a great influx of population, of which there is no immediate prospect, two roads could not possibly be successful.

In regard to no influx of population, I have looked up the census of Canada for 1921, and I find that the population in the district is less than it was in 1901. Those census figures deal with four townships and three villages. The townships are Malahide, Bayham, Yarmouth and South Dorchester. In 1901 the township of Malahide had a population of 3,795; in 1921, 3,191. In 1901 the township of Bayham had a population of 3,771; in 1921, 3,438. In 1901 the township of Yarmouth had a population of 5,089; in 1921, 5,212. In 1901 the township of South Dorchester had a population of 1,637; in 1921, 1,550. Taking the four townships together there were 900 fewer people in that district in 1921 than in 1901. The villages comprise Aylmer, Springfield and Vienna. In 1901 Aylmer had a population of 2,204; in 1921, 2,194. In 1901 Springfield had a population of 501; in 1921, 460. In 1901 Vienna had a population of 352; in 1921, 288. So that there were 115 fewer people in these three towns or villages in 1921 than in 1901. Taking the whole district together, the population has diminished by about one thousand. But it is curious that the town of Port Stanley and the city of St. Thomas, which are not touched by this proposed railway, have gained in population in the decades I have mentioned. In 1901 Port Stanley had a population of 552; in 1921, 973. In 1901 St. Thomas had a population of 11,485; in 1921, 16,026. In other words, Port Stanley and St. Thomas have increased considerably in population since 1901. In view of these figures and the fact that there is no general demand for more railways, I submit that the facilities in that area are adequate. I wish to bring to the attention of the house another feature, and that is the relative mileage of the London and Port Stanley Railway and of the proposed road. The London and Port Stanley Railway is twenty-four miles long while the proposed line is thirty-four miles, according to the sponsor of the bill. That is to say, it has 40 per cent more trackage. It has ten miles more of right of way to purchase. On that account it will have a higher cost of construction, a higher cost for interest and sinking fund, and a higher cost for maintenance and operation. To balance that the freight rate is being considered. Some people have the idea that the installation of the road will result in lower freight rates on coal and coke from Erie to London. I would point out that the freight rates are fixed by the Railway Commissioners, the rate from Port Stanley to London being the governing rate. That is the established rate, and all other lines which find their way to London will have to charge rates correspondingly. These rates, I say, are fixed and confirmed by the railway commission.

It is said by the promoters of the bill that the success of the railroad depends on the success of the coking plant which it is proposed to establish. Central Canada is of course very much interested in fuel to replace anthracite coal. All our supplies of anthracite come from the United States. These supplies of coal are being depleted and before long central Canada will have to find an additional supply of fuel. We have been trying out substitutes and have used small shipments of Alberta coal. Many people have turned to coke and a number of others to the use of oil. Now the matter of establishing a coking plant is a very important one, but I do not intend at the present moment to go into the pros and cons of coke production. My information is that the proposed amount which is to be spent on the coking plant is utterly inadequate for the installation which will be required to establish a going concern which will be able to compete with others already putting goods on the market. It seems to me, from what I can gather, that it would take two or three times the amount of capital which it is proposed to spend in order to install a thoroughly equipped coking plant.

In the railway committee the promoter of the bill was asked as to the type of coking plant which it is proposed to establish. He was uncertain; he did not seem to know the difference between certain types of coking plants; but he did say, I think, that there were three or four kinds, any one of which might be used. At any rate he gave no particularly definite information concerning the plant. Now, I know of one firm in London who are interested in things of this kind and who had a great deal of engineering advice on the matter. They went into it most thoroughly and exhaustively and they came to the conclusion that the installation of a coking plant was not likely to be a paying proposition. Accordingly they abandoned the idea. It might be that in other respects this proposal would be a success, but there are many questions which ought to be considered in regard to this proposed plant and which so far have not been answered. Rather than take on the responsibilities and uncertainties of railroad operation, this company might very well turn its attention to the production of coke and gas and refuse to have anything whatever to do with the railway project. I am quite sure that the operation of the railroad will so cripple this company that the coking plant will fall by the wayside. Otherwise it might be a success. At page 3519 of Hansard the sponsor of the bill is reported in connection with the question. Speaking in regard to the finances, he said:

> This company are not asking, nor do they intend to ask, for any assistance financially or otherwise, except that they be given the privilege to spend their money in this manner.

I ask, whose money is going to be spent? In the meeting of the railway committee when the question came up, the promoter mentioned certain hypothetical circumstances which would prevent the railway from selling its bonds. I should judge from that statement that the company proposes to sell bonds to the public. In that case, of course, it can hardly be said that the railway company is spending its own money. It means that the public—no matter where they may be—who can be influenced to buy bonds will be the investors, and not the gentlemen who are seeking a charter for the road.

I could give several examples of losses which the people even in that section have suffered on account of activities of this kind. In my previous remarks I referred to the liquidation of the South Western Traction Company, a radial line which ran from London to Port Stanley at one time and which had charters to run to various other towns in western Ontario. Those who invested money in that concern lost it. That was followed by the London and Lake Erie Transportation Company, which operated for a while and then followed in the footsteps of the traction company. It went into liquidation and the ruins of some of its works are to be seen to-day. The bond holders have nothing to show for their investment in that road except these ruins.

[Mr. J. F. White.]

I have been treated to a little editorial comment in connection with this matter. A few days ago an editorial appeared in a newspaper, this statement being made, that London had the reputation of putting an old established firm out of business on account of its going into railroad operation. Let me say that London was operating the Port Stanley road fifty-three years before this company referred to went into business. Consequently th firm referred to, the London and Lake Erie Transportation Company, were forced to go out of business.

Parliament should study most carefully the prospects of every railroad before allowing the passage of bills which may ultimately involve losses to the general public. This house has made some efforts to move along that direction, and the matter is covered to a great extent by a report made by the Drayton-Acworth commission.

Mr. SPEAKER: Time.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): If the house will permit me to interject a few remarks, I merely wish to say that we have been discussing the first of a series of private bills, and that of the entire number, only some four, or possibly half a dozen, are contentious. The government is anxious to further the wishes of hon. members in bringing about prorogation at as early a date as may be appropriate, and it would assist the government considerably in the arrangement of its program if hon. members would allow such private bills as are non-contentious to pass at this evenings' sitting. Of course, unanimous consent would be required for the purpose. I do not suggest that any contentious bill should be discussed, but if hon. members would allow the others to be taken up, on the understanding that any hon. member is free to rise and ask that any bill be allowed to stand, we could clear the slate of a good many of these bills and, as I say, it would materially aid the government in arranging its program.

Mr. BENNETT: I wholly concur in the observation made by the Prime Minister.

Mr. WHITE (London): I should like to know what is the standing of this bill?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is a contentious bill and will be assigned its proper place.

Mr. WHITE (London): I presume this will be a contentious bill, and that it will now go to the foot of the list.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the House that we now proceed with the non-contentious bills? Unanimous consent is necessary.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS

Bill No. 215, to incorporate the Canadian Commerce Insurance Company—Mr. Bell (Hamilton).

Bill No. 314, respecting the Dominion Fire Insurance Company—Mr. Ryckman.

Bill No. 303, respecting a certain patent of Anchor Cap and Closure Corporation of Canada, Limited—Mr. Clark.

Bill No. 341, to incorporate Eastern Bank of Canada—Mr. Foster.

Bill No. 71, to incorporate The St. Lawrence River Bridge Company—Mr. Smith (Stormont).

Bill No. 342, for the relief of Frank Deering—Mr. Casselman.

Bill No. 343, for the relief of Mary Mabel Jennie Potten Impey—Mr. Church.

Bill No. 344, for the relief of Cyril Wilfred King—Mr. Sanderson.

Bill No. 345, for the relief of Myrtle Adelia Baker Knauff—Mr. Casselman.

Bill No. 346, for the relief of James Harvey Lefurgey—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

Bill No. 347, for the relief of Hilda Evelyn McDowell—Mr. Jelliff.

Bill No. 348, for the relief of Catherine Ellen Mobbs—Mr. Jelliff.

Bill No. 349, for the relief of Edith Elizabeth Poole—Mr. Arthurs.

Bill No. 350, for the relief of Henry Frederick White—Mr. Casselman.

Bill No. 351, for the relief of Frederick Clayton Wilton—Mr. Arthurs.

Bill No. 352, for the relief of Lillian May Yuill—Mr. Lennox.

Bill No. 353, for the relief of Ruth Ellen Braund—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

Bill No. 354, for the relief of Harry Alven Heels—Mr. Heaps.

Bill No. 355, for the relief of Francis Augustus Pearce—Mr. Arthurs.

Bill No. 356, for the relief of Florence Anne Salmon—Mr. Price.

Bill No. 357, for the relief of Rocco Scocco—Mr. Church.

Bill No. 358, for the relief of Mary Audry Walton Smith—Mr. Young (Toronto).

JEAN BAPTISTE HURTEAU PATENT

The house in committee on Bill No. 322, respecting a certain patent of Jean Baptiste Hurteau—Mr. Prevost—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Extension of time.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I would like to ask whoever is sponsoring this bill to explain what it is about. I notice it is one of those patent bills, with which we have had trouble before. I have no desire to obstruct, but I would like to know what the bill is about.

Mr. PREVOST (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I wish to briefly state that this bill is purely a matter of form. It is a question of reviving a patent which had lapsed owing to an oversight on the part of the patentee. It is simply a matter of form.

Section agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

DETROIT RIVER CANADIAN BRIDGE COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 339, to incorporate the Detroit River Canadian Bridge Company—Mr. Odette—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. SHORT: Mr. Chairman, I notice on the order paper the words "without amendment." What does that mean?

The CHAIRMAN: That means that the bill was not amended in committee.

Sections 1 to 21 inclusive agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CUMBERLAND RAILWAY AND COAL COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 304, respecting the Cumberland Railway and Coal Company—Mr. Ilsley—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. SHORT: Please explain.

Mr. ILSLEY: This bill was fully explained when it was before the railway committee. An act was passed by the Nova Scotia legislature incorporating a new company called the Dominion Coal and Steel Corporation, Limited, which was authorized to acquire practically all the companies which constituted the British Empire Steel Corporation. The purpose and object of the bill passed by the Nova Scotia legislature was to get all the properties of these various companies under unified control and management. One of the companies is the Cumberland Railway and Coal Company, which was incorporated by this parliament by chapter 77 of the acts of 1883. Before this company can transfer its assets to the new

Nova Scotia corporation, that is, the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation Limited, there must be an empowering act by this parliament, and this is that act.

Mr. QUINN: When did this pass the Nova Scotia legislature?

Mr. ILSLEY: I cannot give my hon. friend the exact date, but it was bill No. 202, of 1928; it passed a few weeks ago.

Section agreed to.

Sections 2 and 3 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

THE PEOPLE'S THRIFT CORPORATION

The house in committee on Bill No. 340, to incorporate the People's Thrift Corporation—Mr. Casgrain—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Sections 1 to 7 agreed to.

On section 8—Exceptions.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I notice there is an amendment; could we have that explained?

Mr. CASGRAIN: The amendment was simply to correct clerical errors. For instance, in one place the word "corporation" apeared instead of the word "company", and vice versa. That was the only thing that was amended.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

EDMONTON, DUNVEGAN AND BRITISH COLUMBIA RAILWAY COMPANY

The house resumed from Friday, June 1, consideration in committee of Bill No. 57, respecting the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway Company.—Mr. Kennedy—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Bill reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: Moved by Mr. Kennedy, seconded by Mr. Speakman, that this bill be now read a third time.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I think the orders of the day should be followed in regard to the third readings.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am reading the last bill which was reported from committee of the whole. The others were not reported.

Sir EUGENE FISET: They have been reported from the committee, but when you come to the third readings I think the orders of the day should be followed.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand unanimous consent has been given to the third reading of these bills.

Mr. CANNON: If I understand properly the point of the hon. member for Rimouski, while it is true that the house has given its consent as regards bills which were considered in committee, the hon. member says, now that we have reached the stage of third readings, we ought to take up the bills in the order in which they stand on the order paper—

Mr. SPEAKER: That was not my understanding, but I am in the hands of the house.

Mr. CANNON: —and always subject to the understanding that if any bill is contentious, it should not be considered.

Mr. SPEAKER: But the point was not raised in committee about the bill being contentious or not.

Mr. CANNON: As long as it is not raised, we go along with the bills. This is always subject to the understanding that we are now dealing with bills which are not contentious.

Mr. SPEAKER: My understanding was that only non-contentious were to be passed. Non-contentious bills have been reported. If this is a contentious bill, of course I shall not proceed with it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. SPEAKER: This bill having been reported from committee and no objection having been taken in committee, the bill being non-contentious, I have only to ask the house to carry it.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think that will help the other bills.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CENTRAL FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. F. W. HAY (North Perth, for Mr. Lang) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 59, to incorporate the Central Finance Corporation.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I beg to say on behalf of the hon. member for South Timiskaming (Mr. Lang), the sponsor of this bill, and also for the promoters of the bill, that they are quite agreeable to accepting the amendments as made by the Senate.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

DOUGLAS J. MARTIN PATENT

Mr. J. A. CLARK (Vancouver-Burrard) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 66, respecting a certain patent of Douglas J. Martin.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hour for private bills having expired, the house will resume in committee of supply.

Mr. GEARY: Mr. Speaker, is it quite correct to say that the hour for private bills has expired? It did expire at nine o'clock. This was another arrangement. It may make a difference.

Mr. SPEAKER: There was an agreement made, with the unanimous consent of the house, to extend the time. It very often happens that the house rises before six o'clock, yet the Speaker has to say, "It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair."

Mr. SHORT: What about this extra half hour we have been talking on these bills?

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Civil air operations—flying operations for civil government departments in connection with aerial photographic surveys, forestry patrols, forestry and grain pests, transportation, etc.; control of civil aviation, establishing air routes, aerodromes and airship bases, aeronautical engineering, etc., $3,195,037.

Mr. POULIOT: I have said a few words about the previous item, and what I wish to speak of now is a very serious aeroplane accident that happened at St. Alexander, not far from Riviere du Loup, on Saturday last. I shall be very brief, but I wish to give our friends of the press gallery a scoop. It was not mentioned in the papers, but an aeroplane belonging to the Transcontinental Airways, a company which has a contract with the Post Office department, crashed. The aeroplane left Montreal for Rimouski, where there is a landing field, but on account of the foggy weather the pilot was unable to land. He could not see the field, and he had to go back to Quebec. As his supply of gas was nearly exhausted he tried to land near Riviere du Loup, an important city, just about halfway between Rimouski and Quebec. There is no landing field there, the country being all divided up by fences and ditches, and it was not possible for him to find a suitable landing place, although he flew very low and tried to locate a favourable spot. Not succeeding, he went further on his way to Quebec, and at St. Alexander, as his supply of gas was very low, he had to come down, and his machine was wrecked in landing. Fortunately, he was not hurt. My point, Mr. Chairman, is that in the United States, in Mexico and in other countries with air routes there are landing fields. Hydroplanes have been used experimentally, but owing to the conditions at certain times on the St. Lawrence river they were not found satisfactory; aeroplanes are now used rather exclusively, especially along the St. Lawrence river. The distance from Montreal to Rimouski is about 375 miles, and I desire to ask the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) if he intends to build a landing field at Riviere du Loup. Such a field would be a real help for aviators and would improve the mail service over that route. Riviere du Loup is an ideal location, being not not very far from New Brunswick and Maine; in fact, it is one of the best sites in eastern Quebec for such a purpose. Does the department buy the ground or does it help the local authorities to acquire the necessary site? Also, does the department erect any buildings on landing fields?

Mr. RALSTON: I may say that the department has not under consideration the provision of a landing field at the point mentioned. My hon. friend may not know that the company to which he refers, Transcontinental Airways Limited, has the contract for carrying the mails from Montreal to Rimouski, and under that contract the company must itself provide any intermediate landing fields. It is impossible for the department to forecast the need for landing fields along the route. While a fog settled over the point which my hon. friend mentioned, forcing the plane to land, on another occasion the forced landing might be somewhere where it would be impracticable to provide a field. Therefore the contractor has to provide his own facilities at intermediate points.

The general policy of the department is not to provide landing fields except solely for government services. We are endeavouring to encourage municipalities all over the country to realize the importance to their own towns of themselves providing these facilities. On request the department sends a qualified officer to look over the proposed site and to advise on the preparation of the landing field.

Mr. POULIOT: Does the department contribute towards providing such fields or for their maintenance?

Mr. RALSTON: No. The only contribution the department makes is to send officers to advise on suitable sites and for their preparation for aviation purposes. This is generally the system in the United States where they have many municipal aerodromes.

Mr. PARENT: I notice that this item refers to flying operations for civil government departments in connection with aerial photographic surveys, forestry patrols, forestry and grain pests, transportation, etc. I should imagine that much of this work should fall under the provincial authorities. What authority, provincial or federal, has to do with this?

Mr. RALSTON: The services referred to are federal. The forestry patrols are in connection with the Department of the Interior.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I think I saw in the Imperial conference report that those air pilots who had received commercial certificates in civil aviation became automatically members of the military force or the reserve force. I should like the Minister of National Defence to confirm my view that these air pilots are not obligated in any way so far as military service is concerned.

Mr. RALSTON: I can confirm that, and assure my hon. friend that that is absolutely so.

Mr. PARENT: I am not quite satisfied with the minister's answer to my question. In Quebec the provincial authorities are engaged in forestry patrol work by means of aeroplanes. What relations exist between the federal authority and the provincial in such matters?

Mr. RALSTON: The federal authorities claim that the licensing of planes and pilots is within their scope.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Ralston.]

Construction of magazines, etc., Halifax, $100,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Will this be sufficient to complete the magazine?

Mr. RALSTON: It will not be. As I remember, the amount estimated was $500,000, and I think $255,000 will have been expended up to 1928. This will bring the total expenditure to $355,000.

Item agreed to.

Government of the Northwest Territories—Mackenzie basin system—radio services—for the maintenance and operation of the Mackenzie division radio system with stations at Dawson, Mayo, Edmonton, Fort Smith, Fort Simpson, Fort Resolution, Aklavik and Herschel island, $139,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. RALSTON: It is for the maintenance and operation of the Mackenzie division radio stations. There is a slight reduction in the estimate this year of $11,000.

Item agreed to.

Battlefields memorials, $180,000.

Mr. GARDINER: What progress has been made in this direction? How much was spent last year, and for what purpose?

Mr. RALSTON: This is a contribution to the battlefields commission. We deal only indirectly with it. The vote is $20,000 less than last year.

Mr. BENNETT: Who comprise the commission?

Mr. RALSTON: I beg my hon. friend's pardon; I was thinking of the contribution to the Imperial War Graves Commission. The Battlefields Memorials Commission is our own. It is comprised of Major-General Mewburn, the Honourable the Speaker, and others whose names I cannot recall at the moment.

Mr. BENNETT: What progress has been made in their work?

Mr. RALSTON: The Vimy memorial is practically the only one left. The secretary of the commission has just returned from the old country where he has been endeavouring to straighten out a serious situation with regard to that memorial. He has come back with an excellent report and the work will now be proceeded with and be finished within a measurable period; I cannot predict just when. It seems to be a case where architects and contractors have been experiencing some difficulty.

Item agreed to.

To provide for Canada's proportionate share of the expenditure made by the Imperial War Graves Commission, including contribution to endowment fund for the permanent maintenance of cemeteries, graves and memorials, $573,780.

Mr. BENNETT: Does this complete our contribution?

Mr. RALSTON: No; there are five contributions and there are three left.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Are these for graves outside Canada?

Mr. RALSTON: Outside and inside.

Item agreed to.

National defence—militia services, $150,000.
Naval services, $5,000.

Mr. BENNETT: What about the claims of certain British officers who came here and remained for a time on the promise of a bonus which has never been paid? I happened to meet one of these officers in command of a steamer crossing the ocean. He had never been paid his bonus. He was lent by the British government to our government, his claim was preferred, and it was denied on the ground that the British government should pay it. They did not pay it and he has received nothing. He just happened to mention the fact to me and I intended to inquire personally of my hon. friend. Now that the vote is before the committee I wonder whether anything can be done?

Mr. RALSTON: I thought I had had presented to me almost every claim that had been submitted to my predecessors and which had not been passed upon. I had not heard of this claim.

Mr. BENNETT: It is in connection with the naval service.

Mr. RALSTON: I shall be glad to make a note of it.

Mr. BENNETT: Would this amount be available for that purpose?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON: We have a great number of returned soldiers to take care of in Detroit and that vicinity. I refer to men who die over there and who would be buried in paupers' graves were it not for the Great War Veterans and other associations at Windsor who give the bodies decent burial. We bought a plot some years ago in the Windsor Grove cemetery, but it is now filled to capacity. It will require $3,000 or $4,000 more for an extension for future burials. I would suggest to the minister that an appropriation be made to take care of this work. So far the money has all to be raised by voluntary contribution. If any further details were necessary I could supply them, but in any case the minister should give the matter his earnest consideration.

Mr. RALSTON: There is some arrangement between the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment and the American Red Cross. Is my hon. friend referring to the case of ex-Canadian soldiers now living in the United States?

Mr. ROBINSON: And British soldiers living in the United States.

Mr. RALSTON: Will my hon. friend give me a memorandum?

Mr. ROBINSON: I shall be glad to write the minister fully on the subject. I have in mind a major with a splendid war record in the Imperial army, who died of tuberculosis and was to be buried in a potter's grave. He had not a cent. The matter was brought to the attention of the authorities at Windsor and we gave him a proper burial.

Item agreed to.

Militia services—engineer services and works—further amount required for rifle range at North Vancouver, $30,000.

Mr. SPENCER: Is this entirely new?

Mr. RALSTON: This is new, but the property was bought last year. There is a rifle range out there but it has been so built around that the buildings are within the danger area. I can tell the committee that my information is there will be likely no cost to the country in the purchase of a new range, because the land in the old range is worth probably as much as the cost and development of the new.

Mr. CLARK: For years the city of Vancouver has been practically without a range. Will this range be in operation this year?

Mr. RALSTON: I cannot assure my hon. friend.

Mr. CLARK: Will this vote complete the range?

Mr. RALSTON: No.

Mr. CLARK: How much will be required?

Mr. RALSTON: Probably it will run to $100,000.

Mr. CLARK: Why cannot the whole sum be voted at once and the range put into operation? There is a very large district there without proper accommodation. Men go out on the twelve o'clock car on Saturdays and return in the evening at eight o'clock without having shot.

Mr. RALSTON: I understand that; but my hon. friend will give me credit for having taken hold of the matter and endeavoured to do something. For some years there has been difficulty; practice has been carried on there, but not satisfactorily. However, we are trying to remedy the situation.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH

Department of Health—the administration of the acts respecting food and drugs, honey, maple products, opium and narcotic drugs and proprietary or patent medicines, $130,000.

Mr. BENNETT: I believe the hon. member for Muskoka desires to discuss this item, so perhaps we might let it stand for now.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Very well.

Item stands.

Marine hospitals, including burial expenses of destitute deceased mariners and grants to institutions assisting sailors, $210,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Could the minister give us any particulars of the institutions which are assisted under this vote? I was asked to ascertain.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have departmental marine hospitals at Sydney and Lunenburg; in the other ports we have contracts with the local hospitals, where provision is made for the treatment of sick mariners.

Mr. GARDINER: Does the department have contracts with these institutions?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. We arrange to pay so much per day per patient; it averages from $2.85 to $3 per day, depending on the locality.

Item agreed to.

Immigration medical inspection, $270,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Would the minister give an explanation of this item?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This appropriation is required for the immigration medical inspection service.

Mr. BENNETT: Does that include the medical men overseas?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes; that is why the vote has been increased this year.

[Mr. Ralston.]

Mr. BENNETT: How many men have you overseas?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think we have twenty-eight officers overseas.

Mr. BENNETT: What salaries do they receive?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The salaries vary from $3,000 to $3,480.

Mr. BENNETT: Is there any additional grant for expenses?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, they get $660 living allowance in addition to their salaries; the grade 2 officers get $780 and the grade 3 officers $900 as a living allowance.

Mr. BENNETT: In view of the report of the immigration committee, might it not be well to allow this item to stand? This matter was discussed in that committee, and the report might have some bearing upon this item.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Very well.

Item stands.

Laboratory of Hygiene, $5,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Should not this be included in the work of the National Research Council? This was one of the matters I had in mind this afternoon when I mentioned the necessity of having these appropriations dealt with by the National Research Council. The following item for $100,000 is in a similar position; apparently there is an organization in this country which does that particular work, and this is a grant to that organization. The point is whether or not we really get any value for moneys spent under these circumstances, especially having regard to what has been done by the research bureaux such as the Rockefeller Institute and the Carnegie Foundation; is a grant of this kind of any value for laboratory work? I fancy no one knows better than the Minister of Health how absolutely valueless is $5,000 in connection with investigations of this kind. We might expend $5,000,000 before satisfactory results are obtained, so I suggest that this item should form a part of the amount voted the National Research Council.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I might say that this item of $5,000 is to provide for the examination of certain drugs which were dealt with last year in an amendment to the Food and Drugs Act, under which it was proposed that these drugs should be standardized. There was the drug digitalin and some of the mercurial preparations. This is a very small amount and is more to check the manufacturers who puts these drugs on the market, to see that the product is up to standard.

Mr. BENNETT: That is why I thought the research council should deal with it.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I rather think it should be done in the department. We have our inspectors enforcing the Food and Drugs Act; they take these samples from the various stores and tests are made in the laboratory.

Mr. BENNETT: Since the research council will not be functioning until next year perhaps the item should pass for this year, but I do think each department should not deal with these matters in this way. The next item is one in which the provinces are vitally interested, and in connection with which they must make some expenditures.

Item agreed to.

Venereal diseases, $100,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Might I ask whether this amount is used by the department itself, or whether it is granted to the provinces? What is the method?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We grant it to the provinces, and they expend the money on the understanding that they supplement the grant dollar for dollar, on the basis of population.

Mr. BENNETT: Then this money really goes to assist the very difficult and arduous work of the provincial department of health in this regard?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. KAISER: Just at this point I should like permission to make a few general observations. Most of us regret that these items come before parliament in the last hours of the session, when the men who have given a great deal of attention to this kind of work are rather closed out from expressing themselves on these important matters. I hope that in a future session we may have a little time in which to bring before the house and the country a few matters which are of great importance, and which should be taken over by this department.

Somehow or other it is commonly accepted in Canada that the matter of public health is assigned by statute to the provinces. We who have studied this question have submitted that point to legal authorities, some of whom say that we are not working along national lines in connection with the public health of our country. It is held by some that the major matters of public health should be looked after by the parliament of Canada. The only matter specifically mentioned in the British North America Act in regard to public health is that of quarantine, and that matter is assigned to the federal government. Nothing is said of other matters in regard to public health, for the simple reason that in 1867 the health of the nation was really a matter which was not considered at all. We must remember that only in 1882 was an organization known as the provincial board of health started by the province of Ontario. We think to-day that if the British North America Act were to come into existence now, a great many matters which are handled at present by the provinces would be taken over by the Dominion government. The authorities state that matters which are not mentioned as specifically assigned to the provinces should be assigned to the Dominion.

Twenty-five years ago a child born in Canada had a chance to live to be thirty-three years of age, then the average life of man. Owing to the application of health principles throughout the various parts of Canada and the United States, Dr. Mayo was enabled to say in the city of Toronto about a month ago that the average span of life has been increased to fifty-eight years. This marvellous result has come about by the proper application of principles well understood to-day, and these matters are being merged and brought forward as a national effort.

I contend that the Dominion government should divide this country into certain areas. In the maritime provinces there should be about three in each province; in Quebec about ten; in Ontario ten or twelve, and so on from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The Dominion government should pay at least one-half the cost of employing permanent medical officers to supervise certain of the matters in connection with the public health of the country. If the government of Canada were to take hold of certain of the work in regard to public health and spread it over this Dominion of Canada, we would be in step with other countries and could expect to make the average life of man seventy years within fifteen years' time.

The question is so important and permeates into so many quarters that a conference should take place. Some of our leading experts on public health are to-day urging us to bring this question up in parliament, in order that what we hope will take place may be accomplished. Nothing can be done now, but I hope that a resolution will be submitted to parliament within the next few years dealing with this matter of prime importance.

We spend $900,000 on this department, and less than $400,000 is spent on the health of the community. The larger part of it is spent for civil government, and we do not get results throughout the Dominion for the amount that is expended. As I say, I trust at some future session I shall be able to submit a resolution in which the government of Canada will be asked to take hold of many matters that are now assigned to the provinces. They could be spread over the whole Dominion and the result in the next ten or fifteen years would be startling.

Mr. MALONEY: What is the department doing in the matter of the prevention and treatment of venereal diseases?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The grant of $100,000 is for the treatment of venereal diseases. This amount has been given for some years on a pro rata basis to the provinces. There are some fifty-six clinics organized throughout the Dominion, and all the provinces, with the exception of Prince Edward Island, have taken advantage of this grant. The grant is distributed according to population. Alberta, with a population of 588,000, gets $6,504; British Columbia, with a population of 524,000, gets $5,798; Ontario, with a population of 2,933,000, gets $32,425, and Quebec, with a population of 2,361,000, gets $26,098. These clinics, we are informed, have brought about a very great improvement in the larger centres, particularly Montreal and Toronto. The hospital statistics show that there has been a great improvement in regard to the care and treatment of these cases.

Mr. MALONEY: In what way is the money expended?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Some $97,000 is expended by grants to the provinces, and $3,000 for administration.

Mr. KAISER: In other words, the department admits no responsibility other than that of passing the vote and handing the grants over to the provinces?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The department merely supervises it and sees that it is properly handled. My hon. friend is quite right in his remarks regarding the limitations of the Health department under our Dominion regulations. Health matters are no longer confined to localities; they are not even national, but have become international, and the action to-day of medical authorities and those who are interested in this work is to try to internationalize it and bring about uniform conditions. We are doing that through the Dominion Council of Health, composed of the officers of the provincial boards of health who meet in conference with the Dominion health officials twice a year. They have done very good work in bringing about uniformity in our laws in regard to health, but there is the constitutional difficulty in that these matters are delegated to the provinces.

Mr. MALONEY: It would seem that all this is only an excuse. I do not wish to find fault with the minister or his subordinates, because some of them are very exceptional and capable men, but here is a department spending less than a million dollars; a large part is alloted to the payment of salaries, and absolutely nothing is being done so far as the public health is concerned. The minister himself admits that. If you read over the reports of the various provincial boards of health you will find that they are all dealing with public health in a systematic and a scientific way. The Dominion department should either take charge of public health or hand it over to the provinces, who seem to be doing the work and doing it well. I have great sympathy for the Minister of Health; he is a man who, I am sure, is most capable and anxious to administer this department in the interests of the people of Canada, but I find that he is debarred by several other departments in this government. For example, the health of Indians comes under the Department of the Interior, and he has absolutely nothing whatever to do with it. He is not allowed to touch health matters connected with the Department of Agriculture. He has absolutely nothing whatever to say except to O.K. the salaries of those who do the work. For that reason I quite agree with the hon. member for Ontario that there should be a rattling of the dry bones in this department and that after this year something should be done to place it on a proper basis or else to put it of business.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is any part of this amount paid to the Canadian Social Hygiene Council?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, they receive a separate grant. Formerly a sum was set aside out of this appropriation, but that is no longer the case.

Item agreed to.

Civil government — Health — salaries and contingencies, $250,727.50.

Miss MACPHAIL: I want to ask the Minister of Public Health if the government contemplate taking any action on the report on maternal mortality, publication No. 37 brought down by the department, whereby the number of deaths among women in Canada will be lessened?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Our action will be taken through consultation with the various provinces, through supporting the Canadian Council on Child Welfare, and through the committees on health matters, Dominion and provincial.

Miss MACPHAIL: I fear that working with the child welfare organizations will not in any way affect this condition of maternal mortality. It will take a large vote to deal with the matter. Does the government contemplate inserting in the estimates at the next session a special appropriation to cover the very great need which is shown in this report?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think the work is largely provincial. It is true the government has subsidized the child welfare league, which carry on an educational program throughout every one of the provinces and are doing considerable work. They are also co-operating with the various provincial governments. We are increasing that grant this year. The matter is pretty much provincial and it is really out of our field.

Miss MACPHAIL: Governmental action might be a provincial matter, but educational work along this line certainly must belong to the Dominion. Many doctors who have written letters in the report point out that the work is not being done by anybody in Canada, so it seems clear that the provinces are not doing this work. I do not see how the child welfare organization would cover this field even though a much larger grant is given.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have been issuing publications and pamphlets in an endeavour to interest the people and the provincial authorities in this work. The matter has been discussed at several conferences and I think there has been an awakening in the various provinces in regard to the work. It is a question whether the Dominion should go into the provinces and carry on propaganda, or whether we should stimulate the activities of the provincial authortiies. Under our present constitution this seems to be the work of the provinces or of the municipalities. We can direct and probably give a lead, and that is what we have been endeavouring to do.

Miss MACPHAIL: I noticed recently in a United States paper that they have what is called the Federal Maternity and Infancy Act which appropriates $1,240,000 per annum among the states. Except for a free grant of $5,000 a year each, a state must put up as much as it gets from the federal treasury. The result of the use of this appropriation for educational purposes has been very good. The report went on to say:

> The death rate of rural mothers from causes connected with child birth has dropped by 36 per cent in Utah and 26 per cent in Maryland.

These are two of the states that have taken the matter up. I have read this report with great interest and made a close study of it, and I feel that everybody who has had anything to do with the report feels that this work has not been done in Canada. It seems to me that a special vote will have to be put through earmarked in some way that it is to be spent by the provinces on this work, or else the educational work will have to be carried on by the Dominion. The death rate is so terrific that it is a great national drain. These women are young; the average age in the year in which the investigation was made was only thirty-one years, and there was an astounding number of them, namely (in 1926) 1,532 mothers who left behind them 5,073 motherless children. From a national point of view we cannot just sit still and say that this is the work of the provinces. Somebody must get to work in regard to the matter. I hope by next year the government will be prepared to co-operate with the provinces in what I think is a very vital matter and see that somebody does the work. I do not care whether it is the provinces or the Dominion that do it, but it is something we cannot remain quiet about. It is rather remarkable that previous to this session, this great drain on our national life—the death of mothers—was mentioned in the House of Commons only once. It is not a subject that the Commons have ever interested themselves in and it is a subject that should be of interest to everybody who has the welfare of Canada at heart. I hope the minister will be prepared next session to do something definite and far-reaching in this matter.

Mr. BENNETT: May I direct the attention of the committee to page 76 of the estimates where the details of the civil government vote are shown, so that we may see to what extent the item includes the work of the research council? There is a chief of the laboratory of hygiene, chief of division of venereal disease control, chief pharmacologist, chief Dominion analyst; then further down we find junior chemist, Dominion research assistant. Then we find pathologist and bacteriologist, laboratory assistants, and so on. I submit, although it may be too late, that this vote should not be used in this way but that the research council should take charge of these particular matters as well. We are spending $190,000 and paying a deputy minister a salary of $8,000 to hand over money to the provinces because the Department of Health cannot do very much as long as it functions in the way indicated, and this work should properly be in the hands of people who are trained for this particular business and who could deal with it properly.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The hon. member is under a misapprehension. The services that he mentions are not research work. They are to analyze the food contents of various articles that are bought and to keep them within control. This is not research work at all; it is purely departmental. It is true that the work might be done in laboratories that would be controlled by the research council, but that council has not yet been established. To carry on the ordinary work required under the Food and Drugs Act requires the services of chemists and other officers, such as are mentioned in this item.

Mr. BENNETT: One of the officials is a medical research assistant.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is a very small item.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, but it is the whole principle that is involved.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is to deal with the amendments that were made to the act last year. We have standardized certain drugs and we have to check up the manufacturers in order to see that they are living up to the standards. This is not research work at all.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is that the work of the medical research assistant?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): In other words, he is a chemist. If he is a very good man, the minister is lucky to get him at that salary.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think so.

Item agreed to.

Grant to the Canadian Social Hygiene Council—further amount required, $10,000.

Mr. BENNETT: This is in accordance with the request made by Doctor Bates?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: He is asking for a much larger sum. I am sure the minister has seen the figures that indicate the ravages of disease in this country which might be described as preventable disease, and this work was one of them to which great attention was directed. It does occur to me that if part of the $190,000 that is used in paying, in my judgment, for unnecessary services at Ottawa, were used for that purpose, we would have very great results, because the minister must realize that what we are doing is handing money over in many instances to the provinces or to voluntary organizations that are carrying on this work throughout Canada. With $190,000 being spent for salaries for the Department of Health, I do submit that we are getting no results commensurate with that expenditure at Ottawa. It is in many respects wasted money, if I might use the word without giving offence, and the proper course is to lessen the cost of the machine here and increase the efficiency of the work done by adding to the grant for this purpose, because the work they are doing is the real work that is being done, and they are doing it at very slight cost so far as overhead is concerned. I know how the provinces are driven for money, and I am satisfied that if a less costly machine were maintained here, and the amount of money was given for the purpose for which I think it should be given, namely, the prevention of diseases that are covered by this item, it would be of very much advantage to Canada as a whole.

Item agreed to.

Grant to the Canadian National Committee for Mental Hygiene—further amount required, $10,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Will the minister explain what this is required for?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This committee was organized in 1918 for the purpose of rendering assistance in the solution of the many problems connected with mental abnormality in the Dominion. The grant of $10,000 was first voted for 1919-20 and has been paid each year since, with the exception of $5,000 in 1923-24.

The association is dominion-wide and is backed by substantial people, many of them having pledged their financial support for the next few years. They carry on investigations of the mental conditions amongst school children, prisons and asylums at the request of the authorities and report their findings to municipal and provincial governments with a view to the correction of conditions where necessary. Surveys of mental treatment have been made in several provinces and in most of these reforms have been made.

Psychiatric or dispensary mental clinics are conducted where examinations are made and much good work has been done in the treating of the incipient cases of mental disturbances.

This committee has also gathered valuable information as to the mental condition of many of the immigrants to this country, and from their same publications are strengthening public opinion in support of the government's efforts to exclude the mental misfits from Canadian citizenship.

The committee is composed of prominent men. Dr. Charles F. Martin, of Montreal, is president of the organization, and the executive officers are scattered throughout the various provinces. Undoubtedly they have done a very good work in stimulating public interest in the character of the work that is being done in the provincial asylums. Years ago the asylum was looked upon merely as a place of refuge where patients were detained and given food and care, but to-day in the various provincial asylums we have these mental cases receiving medical or scientific consideration and treatment, with the result that many cases are being relieved and are being returned to their homes and vocations.

Mr. BENNETT: But the federal authority cannot reach the provincial institutions.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We cannot do anything more than subsidize an organization like this, which through propaganda and education is doing a very good work in Canada, work that the federal government might not be able to do. The people are sensitive in regard to suggestions in the matter of health and their home affairs, and especially sensitive of government interference, but men like Doctor Bates can through their organization and through the county and municipal councils carry on an effective campaign which is undoubtedly improving the condition in Canada and interesting the people in health matters.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I do not think that this organization has very much to do with the situation so far as the provinces are concerned. The provinces are far ahead in this work. They are doing the work, and their asylums are being run to-day in a manner that is far ahead of anything any organization of this kind can suggest. If the minister has reference to the penitentiaries, then I think some work could be done, but I intend to speak on that matter further when we come to the Justice estimates. I think, however, that the minister has exaggerated a good deal as to the work this organization is doing. That it has any effect on the provincial authorities, I dispute, but if its work is in connection with the federal authorities, then I think it can be justified.

The minister also mentioned as a second argument the work which this association is doing in regard to immigrants, but having increased the grant now so that all those mental cases wishing to come are stopped from coming, there will be no further need for the grant. I would like to know what other reason the minister can give in justification for this grant. I am not going to say that I am against it, but I want to know why this grant is being made. None of the reasons given satisfy me.

Mr. MALONEY: The Dominion has nothing whatever to do with asylums; they are entirely under the control of the provinces. Judging from the reports of the various provincial boards of health, the work is being done admirably. The minister has given us no reason to believe that we should take this work out of the hands of the provincial authorities. Therefore unless we get some more satisfactory explanation from him I feel that we should strike out this item.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This vote is very small. Since 1918 we have been voting annually ten thousand dollars to stimulate public interest in mental hygiene. My hon. friend says the Ontario government run their asylums. That is true. But mental hygiene means education in the homes, in the schools, and in the universities to deal with cases before they become of such a character as to require treatment in asylums. Undoubtedly a great work is being done by organizations such as this not only in Canada but throughout the United States and other parts of the world. The Rockefeller Foundation is active in promoting mental hygiene in the United States. Many of the trained psychiatrists in the institutions in Ontario and the western provinces have been associated with this organization, and from it have proceeded to take other courses. This is a small grant and is solely for the purpose of stimulating the organization which is trying to improve the condition of those who happen to be somewhat mentally deficient and require considerate treatment and care.

Mr. MALONEY: This is really the first intimation we have had that the federal government has attempted to do anything to improve the mental condition of anybody in this country. We have always thought the work was in the hands of the provincial authorities. It is all right to talk of Charlie Martin being at the head of the work in Montreal, but that does not justify the grant.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The minister's last explanation has not helped the vote very much. I object to this additional ten thousand dollars in the absence of any satisfactory reason for the increase. The work is well taken care of by the provinces, and I never heard of any person taking up such work in connection with the universities. What universities are engaged in this work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Representations have been made to us that this organization expects to procure from the public subscriptions of over three-quarters of a million dollars, to be expended in the next four or five years. I know the university of Montreal will give a course in mental hygiene, and British Columbia through its university proposes to do so too. I have not been informed regarding Ontario, but I know that the people active in this work come largely from this province. It would be entirely out of place for the Dominion government to undertake this work, but we have felt from the representations made to us that this grant should be made. Since 1919 parliament apparently has been sufficiently impressed to make a grant of $10,000 each year. We have increased it this year because we are advised that the organization intends to extend its work. No one who has followed such work can say that it is not important and should not be supported, especially when we find that those who have given thought to it are to-day contributing larger sums from their own means to encourage a continuance of the work.

Item agreed to.

The administration of the acts respecting food and drugs, honey, maple products, opium and narcotic drugs and proprietary or patent medicines, $130,000.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. McGibbon) is here now, if the minister will go back to item 61 at page 22 of the estimates.

Mr. McGIBBON: Will the minister state in connection with the Narcotic Drugs Act how many convictions have been secured during the past year, what have been the occupations of those convicted, and the penalties inflicted?

[Mr. Maloney.]

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The total convictions ending September 30, 1927, covered 459 male and 31 female offenders. Of these 327 were given the option of a fine and 159 were committed to jail. The nationalities were: British and American, 102, Chinese, 351; French, 24; Italian, 4; Polish, 2; Russian, 1; Jewish, 3; Hindu, 3; negro, 1. I have not the occupations.

Mr. McGIBBON: I insist, Mr. Chairman, that the minister give the occupations: I want him to subdivide the figures and tell us what the commitments were for.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Most of those people who have been convicted are engaged in the traffic of drugs or are addicts. I except those engaged in the practice of medicine and pharmacy. The report would indicate that the larger percentage of those convicted were of the Asiatic race. It is well known to the committee that the use of opium and narcotics has come largely from China and many of that race do indulge in opium. And as a class they have been engaged in the traffic. As for the occupation of the others I have not the information and I am not sure that our files would indicate it.

Mr. McGIBBON: That is what I would expect from an incompetent department such as the minister's. His department has been absolutely incompetent and absolutely sterile —absolutely incompetent to deal with the issue. I charge this government with allowing the agents of narcotic drugs to debauch the people of the country, doing it with the knowledge of the department. And they have been absolutely sterile, incompetent, and helpless as children to protect the country. I insist that we get this information before these items pass.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I take entire exception to my hon. friend's statement. He has the habit of getting up and making statements without much behind them—

Mr. McGIBBON: I have absolute proof.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): If he has information that would indicate that the officials have not been acting as they should act in the administration of the law, he should give that information. The fact that the officers have not the names or the occupations of the individuals arrested has not much to do with the administration. If my hon. friend would like to discuss any phase of the act or of the operations I should be glad to have a discussion with him. These cases, as he knows, are brought to the attention of the department from various sources; and when information comes to the department through our own officers, through the provincial officers, or from other sources, that information is acted upon and investigated to the limit. I can say this: Within the last two or three years there has been a marked improvement in the condition that formerly existed in Canada. We are told to-day that in the city of Montreal there is very little street traffic in the sale of narcotics. We know that, due to seizures made last year and convictions secured a year ago, there is to-day very little of import or export traffic in Montreal, which heretofore was one of the largest drug centres. It is all right for my hon. friend to take exception; but if he will inquire into and familiarize himself with the work of the department and ascertain what has been accomplished, he will have a different story to tell. I do not know what he is referring to when he says that they are incompetent. I know I have confidence in the officers. They have worked seriously and assiduously to bring about proper results in regard to this traffic. We have had large seizures made on the western coast, and convictions obtained of men engaged in the business for many years. We have secured the conviction and imprisonment of a great many. The same is true in the city of Montreal and in Toronto. In the city of Montreal there were convictions of five years, four years and two years; I am not giving the names. In Winnipeg convictions carrying terms of three years in three cases. In Vancouver in sixteen or seventeen cases there were periods ranging from two to seven years In all there were twenty-one imprisonments in the penitentiaries.

Mr. McGIBBON: You cannot get away with that for a minute. I have statistics from the Bureau of Statistics and the minister's department has been absolutely incompetent to deal with the question. To-day narcotic drug fiends are travelling the country and selling morphine and cocaine at exorbitant price to drug addicts of the country at $25 to $50 a tube, debauching the lives of the people, and his department has never been able to cope with it. I demand of him now to tell me how many of these fiends have been convicted under his department in the last year. I charge further that the department's officers have been taking out through the country drug addicts and feeding them on morphine and administering it to them, and going through the country and entrapping doctors illegally. I have evidence. The minister need not shake his head. I have in under my hand, and when he shakes his head he is telling what is not true.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I take entire exception to my hon. friend. If he has evidence such as he speaks of he should produce it.

Mr. McGIBBON: I have evidence.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Then produce it.

Mr. McGIBBON: I have evidence.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not propose to stand for that kind of thing for a moment. I expect my hon. friend to withdraw that statement.

Mr. McGIBBON: I won't withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN: I think the hon. member really should withdraw the statement that the minister, either by word or by action, was telling an untruth. That surely is not parliamentary.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend states—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member should withdraw the statement.

Mr. McGIBBON: I am prepared to prove every statement I make on the floor of the house; I have evidence taken in the courts—

The CHAIRMAN: There is a well known rule which states that the word of any hon. member must be taken with respect to remarks made in a personal way. Certainly the remark of the hon. member was one that comes within that rule.

Mr. McGIBBON: Quote my remark.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. gentleman said that the minister in shaking his head made a statement which is untrue.

Mr. McGIBBON: He denied a statement I made and my word is as good as the minister's.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend, after he considers it, will withdraw. His statement is absolutely absurd. If he has evidence such as he says he should produce it, and it should have been produced before this. He wanders along. I said that the traffic had been very materially suppressed during the last two or three years. He says that to buy the drug in Canada costs a great deal of money—$75 an ounce.

Mr. McGIBBON: $25 to $50 a tube.

Mr. MANION: What proof has the minister to-day that the traffic is more or less wiped out?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The report of the police officers in Montreal is that the traffic is very much less than it was some years ago.

Mr. MANION: Why limit it to Montreal? I ask merely for information.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): For one reason, Montreal has been the great centre of the drug traffic in Canada.

Mr. McGIBBON: It is only one centre.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Just a moment; I have the floor. A year ago we were fortunate in making a very large seizure and obtaining the arrest of some very important people engaged in the traffic. To-day they are serving sentences in the penitentiary.

Mr. MANION: Laying aside Montreal for the moment, has the minister any information with regard to the rest of the country? Is the rest of the country improving as he claims Montreal is?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Our reports say so.

Mr. BENNETT: There were 103 cases of seizures in Vancouver last week.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes; Vancouver and Montreal really have been the ports of entry. We are also informed that conditions at Windsor have improved, and generally speaking the condition throughout the country has improved. We still have the addict with us, and it is a very serious problem as to what should be done with him. Undoubtedly some provision will have to be made for these people; they will have to be taken care of, but we have reason to believe there has been a decided improvement in Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Eleven o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN: Before the committee rises I think the hon. member for Muskoka should withdraw the statement he made.

Mr. BENNETT: I suggest that the hon. member be given the opportunity to see what is reported in Hansard, and I am sure if there has been a violation of the rules he will withdraw.

Mr. McGIBBON: I am prepared to prove every statement I made, and I will not take back anything I can prove.

[Mr. J. H. King.]

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend cannot make the statement about me that I am telling untruths.

Mr. McGIBBON: I did not say that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We have the assurance of the leader of the opposition that, after the hon. member has had an opportunity of looking at Hansard, if anything unparliamentary has been said he will be prepared to withdraw it. I think that is satisfactory.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

The house met at eleven o'clock.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES FOR 1928-9

A message from His Excellency the Governor General, transmitting supplementary estimates for the year ending March 31, 1929, was presented by Hon. J. A. Robb (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Second report of the joint committee on printing of parliament—Mr. Denis (Joliette, for Mr. Marcil).

GRADING AND INSPECTION OF WHEAT

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND COLONIZATION

Hon. J. E SINCLAIR (Queens, for Mr. Kay) presented the ninth report of the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization, as follows:

The select standing committee on agriculture and colonization begs leave to submit its ninth report as follows:

Your committee have had under consideration a resolution and order of reference dated February 16, 1928, whereby it was resolved:

That whereas the protein content is an important factor in the value of wheat,

"Therefore be it resolved that in the opinion of this house, the National Council of Industrial and Scientific Research in conjunction with the Board of Grain Commissioners be asked to investigate and report on the feasibility of utilizing the protein content of wheat as a basic factor in the grading of that product.

And further be it resolved that this resolution be referred to the committee on agriculture and colonization for consideration and for such suggestions in connection with the grading and inspection of wheat as it deems advisable to pass on to the said national council and Board of Grain Commissioners."

Pursuant to the said resolution and order of reference, your committee has agreed to the following conclusions, which it has passed on to the said national council and the Board of Grain Commissioners, viz:

1. From a price standpoint baking strength is an important element in wheat, and in the Canada Grain Act definitions of our higher grades, baking strength is determined by two factors—variety and percentage of hard red vitreous kernels.

2. In the resolution submitted to your committee it is proposed to amend the Grain Act so as to determine baking strength by the two factors—variety and quantity of protein—the latter to be determined by a chemical test and to be expressed in percentages.

3. In Canada, Great Britain, the United States and probably most other countries that consume Canadian wheat, baking strength is an important factor in determining its value; by strength is meant the quantity and quality of protein.

4. Except in the case of durum wheat, which at present is graded in a class by itself, and possibly one or two other varieties that are grown in relatively small quantities, the protein in the contract grades can be assumed to be of good quality.

5. All things considered, the amount of gluten, that is, of protein, seems, in the light of present day knowledge to be the nearest approach to an ideal index of baking strength available.

6. The cost of making the protein tests would range from 50 cents to 75 cents, and is not considered a serious difficulty notwithstanding the fact that laboratories would necessarily have to be installed at all inspection points. We would suggest that data be obtained as to cost of installing and maintaining laboratories.

7. The time required to make an individual test would be from one and a half hours to two hours. However, as daylight is not required for laboratory testing, and as a large number of tests may be conducted simultaneously, under sufficient organization operating 24 hours a day, no difficulty would be encountered in testing of cars and no delay in despatching cars to terminal points may be anticipated.

8. The definite proposal contained in the resolution could be put into effect in so far as car-lot shipments are concerned, but your committee is not yet satisfied that wheat sold locally in wagon-loads could take advantage of this scheme. A practice in vogue among members of the Kansas wheat pool whereby the farmer and elevator man forwarded samples jointly to the laboratories would seem to point the way to a solution of the difficulty concerning street wheat and this system should be investigated.

9. The introduction of protein as a factor in wheat grading would be an incentive to grow the best milling varieties of wheat. This we consider of great importance.

10. According to Mr. L. H. Newman, Dominion cerealist, Ottawa, and in the opinion of this committee, the following varieties are classed as desirable:—Early Red Fife, Marquis, Ruby, Red Bobs, Selections, Renfrew, Kitchener, Garnet and Reward.

11. It is highly desirable that the cereal division of the federal Department of Agriculture, and the several provincial governments working jointly, continue in their efforts to zone Canada's wheat area with a view to advising as to the variety, or varieties, most likely to prove satisfactory in each case.

12. So far however, as our export trade is concerned, there was not sufficient evidence submitted to the committee relative to the effect of the proposed change in the basis of grading to warrant your committee recommending its adoption at present. However, your committee recommends that a full enquiry into this phase of the question be instituted.

13. Re: Garnet wheat—In so far as evidence would show we are of the opinion this wheat which has hitherto been excluded from No. 1 northern should be eligible for that grade.

14. Re: Complaints of Liverpool Corn Trade Association.

Your committee believe that the complaint in the matter of No. 3 can be in some measure sustained, due principally to the inclusion in this grade of a large volume of improperly dried wheat.

Respecting the complaints regarding the general lowering of the standard of respective grades other than No. 3, we find that the evidence does not bear out this complaint.

Regarding the situation with respect to No. 3, we find that the Board of Grain Commissioners and the department are now fully alive to this situation. We recommend that steps be taken to prevent a continuation of this condition.

We recommend that the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Board of Grain Commissioners keep a careful check upon the quality of export wheat, and that samples of export shipments should regularly be secured and sent to the chief inspector and retained in his office for purpose of comparison; and also that the laboratory be required to make baking tests and report on samples of shipments regarding which complaint has been made.

15. The committee recommends: (a) temporary interchange of inspectors between the several inspection points in the western division.

(b) Uniformity of standards of grades from year to year is most necessary and for the purpose of comparison standard samples should be preserved for at least five years.

16. In order that the high quality of our export wheat be maintained, and in order to discourage, as far as possible, the growth of undesirable varieties of wheat, we would urge that one or more seed warehouses be established for the purpose of collecting and distributing seed of approved varieties, and that an experimental flour mill of sufficient size be established in order that experimental work in milling and baking may be conducted on a scale that will give results in line with those obtained in commercial mills.

The committee would suggest that the cost of construction and equipping these facilities may well be taken from surpluses of revenue over expenditures in the administration of the Grain Act and the revenue from terminal elevators overages in the western inspection division.

17. The committee recommends that the protein map prepared by Dr. Birchard, exhibited to the committee, be printed for distribution and that a similar map be prepared by the research laboratory for distribution as early as possible in each year.

18. This committee recommends that inspectors be appointed at all transfer points between the head of the lakes and the seaboard, whose duty it will be to prevent any mixing of wheat so that the quality and condition of grades as fixed by final inspection will be maintained.

19. Your committee recommends that the said National Research Council and the Board of Grain Commissioners report, as by the said resolution instructed, to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and that the said report be made before the next session of parliament.

A copy of the printed evidence taken by the committee, in respect to the foregoing subject, is appended hereto for the information of the house.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

W. F. Kay,
Chairman.

FOREIGN CONSULS IN CANADA

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I desire to lay on the table certain correspondence with respect to the granting and withdrawal of exequaturs to consuls in Canada. This information was requested by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa).

INDUSTRIAL AND INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

CONCURRENCE IN REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Mr. C. R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Neill:

That the fourth report of the select standing committee on industrial and international relations be concurred in.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS: There is just one word that I should like to say in regard to this report and to draw it to the attention of the Prime Minister and the government. I am not objecting to the main sentiment expressed in the report. I think the real intention of the report is simply to indicate that there is a problem and that it should be further studied. I gather from reading the whole report that was really what the committee had in mind, but in section 2 there is a very positive declaration:

That we accept and endorse the principle of unemployment insurance.

The point I am drawing to the attention of the Prime Minister is this. It is quite true that in the subsequent paragraph that declaration is qualified by pointing out that the matter is within provincial jurisdiction and there are one or two other qualifications. For instance, the committee indicate that there is an insufficiency of data to determine to what degree unemployment exists and the committee are also unable to make any estimate of the cost. Such qualifications follow the declaration, but in my opinion a declaration of this kind going out from parliament with its unanimous endorsation will convey to the public at large the impression that parliament has endorsed and consequently will be bound to implement by legislation a definite unemployment insurance scheme. That I think would be misleading. It ought to be made clear that such a declaration by parliament at this time is limited by the obvious limitations indicated in the subsequent paragraphs.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I agree with my hon. friend that if it were to be assumed that the report carries with it an obligation on the part of the government to implement by legislation any of its resolutions or expressions of view, it would not be advisable that the report should be endorsed by the house. The government regard the statement with respect to principle as purely and simply an expression of opinion and, having regard to other phases of the report not as one imposing any obligation on the federal administration.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): I think anyone who has read the report will recognize that whilst certain limitations are expressed with regard to the immediate adoption of the principle, whilst according to the law officers of the crown the obligations primarily rest with the provinces and whilst we have not yet sufficient information to enable us to work out a scheme, there is also in the report the opinion of the law officers that it is quite possible for us in regard to unemployment insurance to follow the lines already adopted in regard to old age pensions. Therefore it seems to me that we are not going very far in adopting this report, when, after all, we are committed under the treaty of the League of Nations to put into legislation unemployment insurance. I think that principle of unemployment insurance was adopted by the Conservative party at their last convention at Winnipeg and I hope the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) is not going back on the platform of his party. Then, may I suggest to the Prime Minister that if endorsing the report does not mean that we are going to implement it by legislation, we may as well kill the report to-day. We do not want to go on giving the public the impression that we are going to do something—forever expressing pious resolutions and then failing to implement them. Although I am tremendously in favour of getting something on the record with regard to unemployment insurance, if this report means simply another pious hope on the part of the government that something will at some time be done, let us to-day kill the resolution for concurrence and then the public will know where the government stands.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Reading the report of the committee I find the following:

That the evidence of the Justice department makes it clear that the responsibility for such legislation rests on the provincial authorities, it being within their jurisdiction under the provisions of the British North America Act, but that it would be within the power of parliament to contribute, by grant, to such provinces as adopted such legislation, following the precedent set in the matter of technical education, highway construction, and, more recently, the Old Age Pension Act.

Then I find that section 7 states:

In order that this matter might be further dealt with, your committee recommends to parliament that at the next session this question be again referred to the committee on industrial and international relations.

I have no objection at all to adopting this recommendation. It is made clear that the matter is a provincial one. Of course the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is a little aggressive in these matters. He would like us to enact legislation which would not be within our jurisdiction.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If the hon. member will permit me, it is also made clear by the report that it is quite competent for parliament to proceed along the lines followed in connection with old age pensions.

Mr. LAPOINTE: To help; to make grants. That is why the committee has reported that the matter should be further dealt with at the next session of parliament.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Quite so.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not see why we should have such an outburst on the part of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The point is simply this. If I understood the Prime Minister aright, he was going to interpret the report that there was no obligation whatever to implement it by legislation, and I take the ground that if the report means anything, it means that we should study the problem further with a definite view of enacting legislation. If the government is not prepared to take it in that way, the government ought to make that very clear now so that the country at large can understand the situation.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think I made my position clear to my hon. friend. If he assumes that in passing the report at this time the government is obligating itself to ask the house to vote money for unemployment insurance—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —he should understand clearly that the government would not support the report.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, I did not suggest that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is the point I wish to make clear.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I think it was thoroughly understood by the committee and, I hope, by the house, that this is merely an interim report and an interim report does not carry with it any insistent demand for legislation or action forthwith by the government except to carry out the recommendations contained in the seventh paragraph that investigations be continued next year and to obtain data asked for in paragraphs five and six. I do not think it will hurt the house or the country to accept and endorse the principle. I would point out that this is no new thing. As far back as 1919, the Union government, I suppose, brought together a national industrial conference of Dominion and provincial governments with representative employers and labour men, on the subjects of industrial relations and labour laws, and for the consideration of the labour features of the treaty of Peace. That conference sat for quite a while and went very thoroughly into all phases of the question. I find that they report on some sixteen items, and the third item reads as follows:

We recommend immediate inquiry by expert boards into the following subjects, with a view to early legislation:
(a) State insurance against unemployment, sickness, invalidity and old age.

That recommendation was adopted. If that was the opinion of this conference in 1919, that an immediate inquiry should be made with a view to early legislation, I do not think we are very much ahead of the times when we ask, nearly ten years later, that we endorse the principle of unemployment insurance.

Motion agreed to.

THE KING'S PRINTER

Mr. QUINN:

1. On what date did F. A. Acland enter the printing bureau and take up the duties of King's Printer?

2. What age is F. A. Acland?

3. What are the qualifications of the King's Printer?

4. Where, at what place, and during what period of time did F. A. Acland acquire a practical or technical knowledge of the commercial and job printing trade, either as a pressman, bookbinder, hand or machine compositor, lithographer, engraver or any of the technical qualifications necessary to efficiently direct and manage a large printing plant, such as the printing bureau and as required by the act creating the department?

5. How many years and during what period was F. A. Acland employed in the Labour department?

6. What were the reasons given for his transfer from the Labour department to the printing bureau?

Mr. RINFRET:

1. Mr. F. A. Acland was appointed King's Printer by order in council P.C. 2038, June 15, 1921, being at that time Deputy Minister of Labour, and the appointment of King's Printer carrying no compensation; in 1923 Mr. Acland ceased to function as Deputy Minister of Labour and, under P.C. 1727, August 27, 1923, performed only the duties of King's Printer, receiving a salary at the same rate as that paid him as Deputy Minister of Labour. On September 1, 1923, he removed his official headquarters to the printing bureau.

2. Date of birth, August 9, 1861.

3. Chap. 162, Sec. 7, R.S.C. 1927, reads as follows: "No person shall be appointed King's Printer unless he has been actively engaged for at least ten years in the business of printing or publishing, or in the superintendence of the printing and cognate services of the parliament or government of Canada."

4. Mr. Acland was appointed by the government and has the necessary qualifications.

5. March 1, 1907, to August 31, 1923.

6. P.C. 1727, August 27, 1923, contains the following statements: "The Minister submits that experience has shown that the person charged with the duties attaching to the office of King's Printer cannot, with due regard to the public interest, give any portion of his official time to the administrative duties of another department.

MR. P. A. FORSYTH

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac-Addington):

1. Was P. A. Forsyth, postmaster at Whitney, New Brunswick, dismissed last September?
2. If so, what were the charge or charges against him and by whom laid?
3. Was P. A. Forsyth given an opportunity to defend himself against these charges?
4. Did the department receive a petition signed by some 70 persons asking that Mr. Forsyth be retained as postmaster?
5. How long had he occupied the position of postmaster?

Mr. VENIOT:

1. Yes.
2. Political partisanship. By the member for the constituency.
3. No.
4. Petition received.
5. Since 1st March, 1909.

ROYAL MINT, OTTAWA

Mr. MALONEY:

1. Under whose direction is the Royal Mint at Ottawa?
2. Why are some employees at the Royal Mint at Ottawa given superannuation on retirement while others are given only a gratuity?

Mr. ROBB:

1. The Ottawa Mint is constituted as a branch of the Royal Mint by the Ottawa Mint Proclamation, 1907, and as such its administration is under the immediate control of the master of the mint and the lords commissioners of His Majesty's treasury.

2. Appointments to the staff are made by the treasury under section 15 of the Coinage Act, 1870, which also authorizes the assignment of duties and the award of salaries. Certain posts are established, the holders of which come under the provisions of the Imperial Superannuation Acts, while other posts are unestablished, the holders not being entitled to pension but receiving under certain conditions a gratuity on retirement.

MR. F. G. BRONSKILL

Mr. MALONEY:

1. What is the present salary of Mr. F. G. Bronskill, accountant, Department of Public Printing and Stationery?
2. Has the King's Printer placed an increase in salary or change from Grade 5 to Grade 6 Accountant, in the main estimates for Mr. Bronskill?
3. What are the qualifications of the accountant, and where and when did Mr. Bronskill receive "five years" experience in the measuring and auditing of printing and binding work?
4. Has Mr. Bronskill ever had any experience or competent knowledge of accounting or bookkeeping outside of what he has picked up in the Printing Bureau?
5. If so, in what establishment did he serve his probationary period?
6. Have any one of the other 31 officials whose salaries are provided for in the main estimates been recommended for a change in grade or increase in salary by the King's Printer?
7. Are they not considered efficient or worthy of promotion?

Mr. RINFRET:

1. $4,240.

2. (a) No. Mr. Bronskill's salary at present is the maximum of grade 5, which is also the minimum of grade 6; no increase of salary is included in the estimates. (b) Yes. A change from grade 5 to grade 6, departmental accountant.

3. (a) The qualifications of the accountant as provided by chap. 162, sec. 12, R.S.C., 1927, are as follows: "No person shall be appointed accountant unless he has a competent knowledge of book-keeping and accounts, and has had at least five years' experience in the measuring and auditing of printing and binding work, either in a printing or publishing establishment, or in the service of the parliament or government of Canada." (b) In the department and during his service therein.

4. Answered by reply to No. 5.

5. Mr. Bronskill has had 36 years' experience in the department and is competent to perform the duties of his present position. Mr. Bronskill was appointed assistant accountant by order in council, P.C. 38/2480, September 12, 1912, and was promoted to his present position by the Civil Service Commission October 1, 1922.

7. Answered by reply to No. 6.

MR. JOHN D. LOGAN

Mr. HUBBS:

1. When was Mr. John D. Logan appointed to the archives staff?

2. What date did he leave to go to the United States?
3. What date was his resignation received?
4. Was he paid his salary and expenses during his absence in the United States?
5. If so, what sum did he receive?

Mr. RINFRET:

1. 16th February, 1925.
2. 10th September, 1926.
3. 17th December, 1927.
4. He was paid his salary during his absence in the United States on various occasions, amounting in all to about twelve months.
5. His salary was $2,400 per year and statutory increase in 1927.

INTERNATIONAL PEACE

MULTILATERAL TREATY PROPOSED BY THE UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): I desire to direct the attention of the Prime Minister to the fact that on the 18th of May, speaking in this house in answer to a question, he stated to the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) that it was erroneous to assume that the British government could not sign the treaty of peace known as the Kellogg treaty without the concurrence of the Dominion. But on the 19th of May, Sir Austen Chamberlain, in a letter to Mr. Kellogg, stated that the treaty because of its very nature could not be participated in otherwise than jointly and simultaneously with the dominions and India—a seeming contradiction to the Prime Minister's statement. That in itself was serious, but on the following day, May 20th, Sir Austen Chamberlain in a further letter to Mr. Kellogg, intimated that because England had certain interests in unspecified territories throughout the world, she would sign the treaty only on the distinct understanding that it did not prejudice her freedom of action in respect to those territories and her interest therein.

I now desire to ask the Prime Minister, because of the obvious commitments and moral obligations implied in the reservations made by Sir Austen Chamberlain, whether he would be willing to agree that this house shall have an opportunity of discussing the treaty before its ratification, and secondly, would he care to give the house a statement as to his acceptance or otherwise of the Chamberlain reservations.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): In reply to my hon. friend, I would say first with respect to any alleged conflict of opinion between Sir Austen Chamberlain and myself, that I do not think there is any, I was speaking with respect to the policy of the Canadian government as to the signing of the treaty, and I indicated that, having regard to conditions of which we would wish to take account on the invitation being extended to us we would be quite prepared to sign. Sir Austen Chamberlain was speaking with respect to the position of the British government, and announcing its policy. The British government is free to pursue whatever course it wishes with respect to signing the treaty. It may have reservations which it will wish to make, and which it has a perfect right to make. As I say, Sir Austen Chamberlain has given the point of view of the British government, stating its policy with respect to the invitation extended to it. I have given our point of view with respect to the invitation as extended to Canada.

As to the treaty being submitted to parliament for approval, if my hon. friend has looked over the correspondence, as I am sure he has, he will have noticed that in the reply sent to the United States, our government intimated that the treaty would be submitted to parliament for approval before ratification was recommended.

With respect to the last question of my hon. friend, as to whether this government would express any dissent or approval of the reservations suggested by Sir Austen Chamberlain, I consider that is a matter with which the British government itself should deal. I do not think we are called upon at this time to give any further expression of our views.

CIVIL SERVICE

RECLASSIFICATION OF POSTAL SERVICE EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. G. McQUARRIE (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Postmaster General what action has been taken in regard to the salaries of railway mail clerks and also refer him to the promise he made some time ago in relation thereto?

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): Already within the last two weeks, Mr. Speaker, I have answered that question twice. But I was further asked if the commission had given any reasons why they did not carry out the recommendations of the Postmaster General as to the increase of salaries of postal helpers, postal clerks, mail carriers and railway mail clerks, to which I answered that I had received no reasons from the commission. Since that time, however, the commission has seen fit to give reasons through the Secretary of State, and with the permission of the house I will read the reasons, which will clear up the whole situation. The letter received by me previous to this was dated May 22, which I read to the house at the time. This is dated May 23 and reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Rinfret,

In view of the discussion which took place in the House of Commons on Monday last with reference to the refusal of the Civil Service Commissioners to recommend higher rates of compensation for certain classes of employees in the postal service, the Civil Service Commissioners have prepared a brief explanation of their action therein, and would be pleased to have you make this explanation to the house.

On September 19th, 1927, at the request of the Civil Service Commission, the Deputy Postmaster General submitted the following suggestions with regard to maximum salary for certain classes in the postal service:

Postal clerks in grade 6 post offices and up—maximum $1,800 per annum. Present salary range $1,080-$1,740.

Postal clerks in post offices of grade 3 to grade 5—maximum $1,680 per annum. Present salary range $1,080-$1,620.

Letter carriers—maximum $1,560 per annum plus uniform and boots. Present salary range $1,080-$1,500 plus uniform and boots.

Mail porters—maximum $1,560 per annum. Present salary range $1,080-$1,500 plus uniform and boots in certain instances.

and at a later date suggested an increase of $60 in maximum for the class, railway mail clerk, or a new maximum salary of $1,860, the present salary for which class is $1,080-$1,800 plus mileage.

The commission has been giving attention to the question of salaries for Post Office and Customs department classes almost continuously since April, 1924, and has in this time increased the maximum and minimum salaries for all of the classes $240, the revision of 1924 granting an increase of $180 and the revision of 1927 an increase of $60 per annum, the letter carrier receiving an extra increase of $60 in the minimum.

The commission believes that the salaries paid this class of employee are equitable and comparable with other salaries paid for somewhat similar kinds of work in other government departments and feels that if any increase is recommended for the postal classes that a corresponding increase must be recommended for Customs classes and certain classes in the Department of Immigration and Colonization, as well as for a considerable number of other classes in other departments of the government service who are engaged in work of a nature not much different and carrying as great responsibility as that of employees in the Post Office Department.

In the opinion of the commissioners it would be entirely unfair to the Customs, Immigration and other employees with somewhat similar kind of work to perform to recommend higher rates of compensation for the postal classes without making recommendations for higher compensation for the classes in which these employees are classified.

To increase the postal employees' salaries an amount of $60 in minimum and maximum would create an additional estimated expenditure of approximately $550,000, and the additional amount required to include Customs, Immigration and other classes throughout the service which, in the opinion of the commission, should participate would cost approximately $400,000, or a total increased expenditure of $950,000.

In the commission's letter of May 2nd, 1928,—

This comes to the point brought up by my hon. friend.

—to the Post Office Department, the department was advised that the Civil Service Commission while not agreeable to raising the basic rates of pay for railway mail clerks would be pleased to further consider the question of providing by means of allowances, or by the grading of runs, higher remuneration for such railway mail clerks as have duties of higher grade than the ordinary.

Right here I may say that that situation is now under consideration in co-operation with the Civil Service Commission.

Attached hereto is a schedule showing in brief form the various salary recommendations and salary changes made in the postal classes since May 31, 1924.

The commissioners would also like to draw attention to the fact that in practically every centre in Canada the recruiting field for positions in the Post Office Department would not indicate that the salaries now paid do not render the positions desirable inasmuch as every time a postal examination is advertised there are long eligible lists of properly qualified applicants established; and that for a number of years no difficulty has been encountered in obtaining the desired number of properly qualified employees for post office positions.

Yours sincerely,

W. J. Roche.
J. Emile Tremblay.

I will not read the schedule.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Does the minister intend to accept the ruling of the commission?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. There is nothing before the house to debate.

Mr. McQUARRIE: It is just a question, Mr. Speaker, arising out of the minister's answer. Does the Postmaster General intend to accept the ruling of the Civil Service Commission, or is he going to take any other action?

Mr. VENIOT: What other action can I take? We have given full power to the Civil Service Commission under the act, and if they do not recommend an increase of salaries I can proceed no further, except perhaps by way of asking for an amendment to the Civil Service Act.

Hon. W. A. BLACK (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the Postmaster General a question with regard to these railway clerks. I would call his attention to his reply to a question placed on the order paper by the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church). It will be found at page 2429 of Hansard for April 13, 1927. I will not read the question, which is somewhat lengthy, but here are a few words of the minister's reply:

The answer to that would be: The more or less hazardous nature of railway mail clerks' duties was taken into consideration when the original compensation schedules were fixed, and the present salary revision is not intended to alter the relativity between the compensation schedules for the different classes, but simply to provide a general increase to the service as a whole.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question is rather involved and I would advise the hon. member to put it on the order paper.

[Mr. Veniot.]

Mr. GEARY: This need hardly go on the order paper, if the Postmaster General will implement in one slight particular the statement he has made. In the letter he read from the Civil Service Commission there is no reference to the hazardous nature of the work of railway clerks. Was that before the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes; that was placed before them. In fact, I believe that in one of their letters they refer to it. I made a public statement in the house last winter as to the hazardous work and that was brought before the commission.

Mr. GEARY: And that is under consideration now?

Mr. VENIOT: We are considering it at the present time.

MR. McGIBBON—EXPLANATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka-Ontario): Mr. Speaker, addressing the committee last night on the narcotic drug evil—a thing that I have a very strong conviction on and also considerable information about—I regret to say that in the discussion my remarks might be construed as applying to the Minister of Health (Mr. King). That was not my intention at all, and I hope the minister will be good enough to take my word for it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Hear, hear.

Mr. McGIBBON: My point was that I could not agree—and I cannot yet—that the measures to counteract the narcotic drug traffic in this country are satisfactory. That was the impression I desired to convey. However, I hope the minister will be good enough to accept this explanation.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

SHIPMENT OF HALIBUT FROM PRINCE RUPERT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. C. BRADY (Skeena): I wish to direct the attention of the Minister of Railways to a very serious condition that prevails at Prince Rupert. I have a telegram to the effect that the day before yesterday 260,000 pounds of halibut and the following day, yesterday, 230,000 pounds, were on the market and only three cars were available, with the result that lots were drawn to see whether Canadian or American orders for halibut to be sent east would be filled. The American vessels succeeded in getting these three cars. Meanwhile the Canadian Halibut Owners' Association have had to take their fish to Vancouver and they request that the Minister of Railways immediately get cars ready to take away the heavy load of fish. They say that cars are being taken from the port to transport fruit from Okanagan. The matter is quite serious and I have two or three telegrams. Will the minister be good enough to advise what should be done?

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways): I shall be pleased to bring my hon. friend's question to the attention of the management, who of course deal with matters of car distribution and operation generally. I should appreciate it if he would let me have one of the telegrams.

SALE OF SCHOOL LANDS—ALBERTA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): On May 14 notice was given in votes and proceedings asking for copies of some seven files in the Interior department with reference to school lands. A day or so afterwards these requests were entertained by the house, and although nearly three weeks have elapsed the files have not been brought down. Some members are very anxious to have these copies of files before the Interior estimates come up. Is there any possibility of their being brought down?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I am sorry the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) is engaged at the moment in a meeting of a committee. I will direct his attention to the request and I am sure his desire will be to have the information brought down immediately. I do not know why it has been overlooked.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Public buildings—Ottawa, New departmental buildings, $500,000; Parliament building, $130,000; National Research Council laboratories, $750,000.

Mr. MANION: The hon. member for Vancouver Centre wished to say a few words on this vote.

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): I understand he wishes to speak in regard to the New Edinburgh mills, but that is not in this item.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I am very pleased that this building is to be put up as soon as it possibly can be. I want to suggest to the minister again, as I have done in private conversation, that it is a grave question whether that cornerstone is not too near the street. I should like to have him look into that matter again. Now that we are putting up these fine buildings for all time they should be erected a reasonable number of feet from the street. I think he should look into the matter again to make sure that the cornerstone, which I understood was only temporary but which the minister has since told me is permanent, is not too near Wellington street.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The matter is under consideration.

Mr. COOTE: Has the minister considered securing property on Wellington street between Metcalfe and O'Connor for the purpose of putting up the new building next to the main structure, thus bringing the whole block opposite here into harmony? It would be far better than putting the new building away down where the present Bureau of Statistics stands.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The suggestion is by no means a new one. The records show that in at least the last thirty years it has been put forward from time to time.

Mr. HEAPS: Is it the settled intention of the government to erect the government buildings along Wellington street in a direct line? I am just wondering if the minister could not get some architectural or other expert advice in regard to a different location for these buildings.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I know my hon. friend's views on the matter, because we have discussed it on different occasions, but the plan being followed by the department is one which was arrived at after a good deal of careful consideration, and it is the layout provided by a number of architects some years ago. That is what is proposed to be done in connection with this building at any rate, and I want to be frank with my hon. friend in saying that it is the intention of the government to make this the first of a series of buildings to be erected.

Mr. HEAPS: When the architects came to that decision there was no idea of acquiring property in the centre of the city for the proposed park. In view of the change which has been made in the meantime does not the minister think it would be advisable to get the opinion of experts on this question, to see whether another location would not be much more desirable than the location on Wellington street, which I personally think is not the best.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: I would like to ask the minister if any arrangements have been made for the purchase of the Bank of Montreal property on St. Peter street, Quebec city. I understand that the Bank of Montreal offered to sell their building to the department at a very low figure, and since the Department of National Revenue require more space in that city, that building would be a very good location for the income tax branch.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Some offers have been made by the Bank of Montreal, but no decision has been made to purchase that property.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: Is the minister contemplating continuing the negotiations with the Bank of Montreal? I might add that they are offering this building at about half its valuation.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think it is only fair to say that at present the negotiations, if they can be called such, are not at all active. What may happen in the future is difficult to say, but they are not progressing rapidly at present.

Mr. SPENCER: Is it the intention of the government to move the Bureau of Statistics permanently away from the centre of the city, or whether the new location is to be only temporary.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Under the present proposal the bureau must be removed from its present location in order to proceed with the construction of the departmental building. It will be placed on the property for which I hope this house will pass the estimate when we reach it, that is, the Edwards property down on the bank of the river. That is the present arrangement.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers, $2,350,000.

Mr. COOTE: I am sure we have no objection to this item, but I take this opportunity to ask the minister whether, in the interval between now and next session, he will see whether this chamber can be better lighted. I do not want to place the whole responsibility on the minister; I am afraid sometimes he thinks we bring too many requests to him, but anyone going from this chamber to the railway committee room will be struck with the better lighting which prevails there. I think it is altogether too dark here, and I am sure it could be improved if the matter were brought to the attention of the engineers.

[Mr. Heaps.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: I will be very glad to give the matter consideration.

Mr. FRASER: I would like to ask the minister a question with regard to the item:

Lower lakes terminal, $1,500,000.

Has the department decided where that money is to be spent?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I would say that at present the decision is somewhat contingent upon the arrangement which can be made with the government of the United States as to the work to be done in their own channels. The government have arrived at a decision, provided suitable arrangements can be made.

Mr. GEARY: Can we not get a little closer to it than that? If the government have arrived at a decision, providing certain arrangements can be made, I suppose the whole matter will be opened again if those arrangements cannot be made, but perhaps we might know at what decision the government have arrived?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have no objection to giving my hon. friend that information. The recommendation of the engineers is that the elevators should be placed in the vicinity of Prescott, providing satisfactory arrangements can be made with the government of the United States with regard to dredging their portion of the channel.

Mr. GEARY: I suppose that no matter where the terminals were located some arrangement would have to be made with the United States in regard to dredging?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Not necessarily.

Mr. GEARY: That is the only point on which an arrangement must be reached?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think so.

Mr. GEARY: Could the minister tell us if he has any doubt whatever but that the location in the end will be, as he has indicated, near Prescott? Are the arrangements to be made of any great importance; is there any doubt about their being carried out? Are there any formidable obstacles in the way?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I expect that the arrangements can be carried out; I think we are reasonably certain that they will be carried out, but they have not been completed and there is always some uncertainty.

Mr. GEARY: But the minister is reasonably sure that he has settled on the location?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Quite so.

Mr. GEARY: Could he indicate when the negotiations may be expected to be concluded so that work may be commenced, and when we may expect work to commence under this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I would expect that negotiations would be completed perhaps within the next few months.

Mr. GEARY: And I suppose work will commence then?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Work will commence in the fall or late summer, as soon as the arrangements are completed. We are anxious to get along.

Mr. FRASER: Is it anticipated that a substantial portion of this amount will be spent this year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It all depends on how soon we get started. If we get an answer right away the greater part of this vote may be spent this fall.

Mr. GEARY: If I am not troubling the minister too much, will this be the total cost of the work, or is this a sort of interim appropriation?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is just a progress appropriation.

Mr. GEARY: Has the minister any idea of what the total cost will be?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It will be in the neighbourhood of $4,000,000.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): May I ask the minister if his decision was based upon the recommendation of the three officers of the government selected for that purpose?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, I would tell my hon. friend that that is the case.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is there any objection to the report being laid on the table?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not think there is any serious objection, except the report makes certain recommendations as to what the engineers consider should be done by our neighbours to the south. I would rather not lay it on the table unless my hon. friends insist. The matter is still one of negotiation, and I would rather leave things as they are.

Mr. SPENCE: Is there any objection to our seeing the report?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Not the slightest.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): In case the understanding is not carried out has the government any alternative site or program, because within a year arrangements must be made for the receipt of the grain boats coming through the new Welland canal. As the minister knows, there are certain large boats which cannot go down through the islands.

Mr. ELLIOTT: A number of sites were considered and reported upon, but serious consideration has not been given to any of the other sites since it has been decided to accept the Prescott site. There is so little doubt in the minds of the members of the government, as to suitable arrangements being made, that up to the present time no extended consideration has been given to any of the other sites.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The decision was arrived at based upon the report of these three engineers?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Ellis Bay—harbour improvements, $300,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: In view of the various objections which were made by members of the house, I am going to suggest that one of my colleagues move that this vote be reduced to $200,000, and that it be made conditional upon the wharf being at the disposal of the public. My information is that all boats travelling in that channel are permitted to use that wharf. It is very important as a place of shelter, and I have found, on making inquiries since the vote was up before, that about 347 vessels used it last year. This figure may not be correct as I have not the details available, but it is a very large number.

There was the further objection raised by my hon. friends from East Calgary (Mr. Adshead) and Quebec South (Mr. Power) that the public did not have access to this private property. I think hon. members in every section of the house will understand the difficulty there is in dealing with a situation of this kind. Until 1926 this property was not utilized for anything except pleasure purposes. Since that time there has been a development there, and I think every member who considers the results derived from it must consider that it has been in the best interests of the country as a whole. The arrangement at the present time is that 420,000 cords of pulpwood will be removed each year. Last year there were 300,000 cords removed, and a little less than that the year before, but the arrangement is that 420,000 cords will be removed this year and each subsequent year. It is thought that the growth will amount to 450,000 cords, according to the estimates of the men who tramped over the area at the time of purchase. Objection has been taken to the fact that it was a privately owned island and the people who were there had not the right a British subject should have to go back and forth at will. That is largely a matter for the provincial government, but I feel that we should say to the company that we expect them to obtain for the people who are engaged there the privileges which a British subject should have. I do not think it is an unreasonable request that some hon. members of the committee make that a substantial part of this vote should stand over until another year. In the meantime, what is granted will be conditional upon the public having the use of the wharf.

Mr. DICKIE: Is it the intention to export any of this pulpwood across the line?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The arrangement with the three paper companies, two at Three Rivers and one at Port Alfred, is that this pulpwood will be made into paper at these three Canadian mills. Since the matter was before the committee before I have gone into it in a good deal of detail, and I find that the expenditure for wages during the calendar year 1927 amounts to about $2,000,000. They pay the bushmen $75 per month and board and housing in the lumber camps. They have expended nearly an equal amount in the purchase of supplies, largely from Canadian farmers. The paper to be made from this pulpwood at these three mills will run to a value of around $20,000,000 per year.

The CHAIRMAN: When this vote was last before the committee the member for East Calgary moved that the vote be reduced by $290,000. The question is on this amendment.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I have listened to what the Minister of Public Works has said, and I want to assure the committee that my amendment to this vote was not with the purpose of obstructing. All the discussion that has taken place, except at the present time, has been on the questions of revenue or profit, what business would be brought to the Dominion of Canada, and what revenue might be paid to the Dominion exchequer. What caused me to be so greatly interested in the matter was the utter absence of any provision for preserving the rights of the people living on the island. It is a fact that the habitants on the island, as my hon. friend from Quebec South has pointed out, have absolutely no rights as Canadian citizens. They have to buy their stores from the company at whatever prices the company sees fit to ask. Before I can go on to the island I have to ask permission and my business is inquired into. It is a perfect example of a benevolent Mussolini autocracy. It is quite true that the company maintains private hospitals, schools, and so forth, but it taxes the inhabitants for them and the latter do not enjoy any of the ordinary rights of Canadian citizens. The Manchester Guardian has this to say about the island of Anticosti:

> Technically, Anticosti is part of Canada's domain. It is part of the county of Saguenay in the province of Quebec. But its island isolation and its exclusive ownership give it some of the qualities of an independent kingdom.

It is a kingdom within the Dominion of Canada.

> In practice the control exercised by the federal authorities is casual and meagre. On Anticosti there is the autocratic government of private ownership that brooks no popular rule. The inhabitants of the island are there on sufferance; they have no voice in its rule. There is a closed door beside which that of China gapes by comparison. The Anticosti Corporation is a law unto itself; it permits entry or prohibits landing at will.

In view of the benevolent Mussolini organization which controls the island, I cannot support any grant to the corporation on the mere statement of the minister that he expects it to do so and so. I want to know first that the inhabitants of the island have the rights which they are supposed to enjoy under the British flag. The company who own the island have the Canadian flag flying over it. They like it for their own protection; they like it because they are going to get some grants of money, but the inhabitants of the island are deprived of what I would call Canadian rights. We in this corner of the house are occasionally criticized because we are analytical and critical in regard to various things and we are told that we have no constructive policy to offer in matters of this sort. Before I sit down I want to give the conditions under which I might support any grant to the island. I will not support it on the statement of the minister that he will tell the company: We expect you to do so and so. I want to know that it is being done before one dollar more of Canada's money is handed over to the corporation which owns the island. I am glad to see that the Minister of Public Works has taken into consideration the question of the right of any Canadian vessel to enter that harbour and to use the wharf subject to whatever government dues there may be, if there are any. It is not good enough for me to have the Minister of Public Works state that he will request or expect the company to do so and so. I must be satisfied that the inhabitants have the rights which Canadian citizens enjoy. Therefore I make four propositions and if they are accepted and put into force I shall be prepared to support a grant of $100,000. The propositions are as follows:

1. That all vessels shall have the right of use of the harbour and wharf, paying dues as per government schedule, if there are any. The minister has provided for that.

2. That the district known as the residential part shall be surveyed and incorporated as a town in the province of Quebec, not as a private town owned by a private company but as an incorporated town with all the rights of a town.

3. That the residents of the aforesaid residential district shall have the same rights and privileges of self-government, free speech and assembly and industrial organization as Canadians enjoy in any other town in Quebec.

4. That as far as that part of the island known as the town is concerned, any person shall have the same free right of entry as to any other Canadian town.

In other words, when I visit Quebec or Montreal I enter as a Canadian citizen and I am not questioned as to what I want there. I have the right to go there and any Canadian citizen should have the right to visit that town and to transact business there without being questioned or, if the company do not like him, being told to make himself scarce. If they expect a grant of Canadian money—and the inhabitants of the island are contributing part of that money by their work—I would suggest that all the inhabitants should have the same Canadian rights as we have. If these conditions are imposed and enforced before a dollar of the grant is paid over, I will support the grant, but otherwise I cannot support it.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I know it has been the policy of the Public Works department under both administrations to give assistance to companies that have started enterprises on navigable waters. I know of several rivers in Quebec where enterprises have been started and work given to the public and where there has been need of dredging or building wharves to carry on the business. In such cases the Department of Public Works has been in the habit of giving assistance in that connection and, I think in most cases, quite proper. But I want to draw the attention of the minister to the fact that in nearly all of these cases the work is going on in a place where people are already living and where the land is owned by various people and not all by one company. I consider this Anticosti island is in a class by itself. The island is owned entirely by the corporation and I do not see any public interest to justify the Department of Public Works in paying part of the expenses of doing that business. These companies are powerful companies who are doing good work; they have bought the island purely for private gain, and the construction of wharves and the dredging done at the island are entirely for their own use. The public get no use out of this at all. It seems to me that the company ought properly to stand all the cost required to enable them to develop the resources of the island and to take the pulpwood away. I do not see why the Department of Public Works should vote all this money for purely private purposes. There is no other object in this expenditure than to enable these companies to make money out of their pulpwood and therefore it seems to me that the minister is going in the wrong direction. I do not think the precedents of other votes to enable enterprises to get started apply in this instance at all. Further than that, as I understand the matter—and if I am wrong the minister will put me right—this island being entirely private property, works built on it will really belong to the company. That is to say, nominally they will be the property of the Dominion government, but as a matter of fact they will be used only by the company except in a few instances such as the minister has mentioned where they may be used for shelter in case of storm. Therefore I see no justification for any of this vote. It is purely for the purpose of putting money into the pockets of the people who own the island.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: May I ask the minister if any money has previously been expended on Anticosti island at Ellis bay for harbour or dredging purposes?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The amount spent by the company runs close to $2,500,000. The company built the wharf entirely at their own expense. It is an excellent wharf, and as the engineer says, it is so situated that:

> This development scheme will be a great aid to shipping in the gulf of the St. Lawrence as it is proposed to make Ellis bay the provision centre for ships in the gulf where coal and fresh water will be obtainable at the new wharf. There will also be adequate protection for shipping in bad weather and a sea-going tug will be kept on hand to render assistance to ships in distress in the gulf.

What my hon. friend says about assistance in other cases is quite true. For years back the government has endeavoured to encourage development along proper lines of industrial activity, either by building the wharf and doing the dredging, with the company bearing part of the cost, or the company building the wharf and the government doing the dredging. But in this case the cost of the wharf is so much out of proportion to the cost of the dredging that the department, after very careful consideration, decided that it was only fair to do the dredging. It is to be done in the main channel of the St. Lawrence, and the company itself has no jurisdiction in the channel; it could not do the dredging. The work is also of value, as I have said, from the standpoint of a shelter for ships in that part of the St. Lawrence, which as my hon. friends all know is a pretty difficult part so far as navigation is concerned. I am told that last year one boat was able to avail itself of the shelter of this dock, with the result that possibly the lives of the crew on the boat, numbering twenty-eight, were saved, so that it is valuable from the standpoint of protection to those who have to travel these waters. The fact that the company have expended $2,500,000 made the department feel that it was not doing any more in this case, nor for that matter bearing as large a proportion of the general expense, as has been done in other cases. I think this is good business; it is a development that should be encouraged, and I think the company is doing a fair proportion of the work.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: Possibly the minister did not quite understand my question. I know personally that this company has spent a considerable amount of money on the island for wharves and other purposes, but what I wanted to know was if the Department of Public Works had already spent any money for harbour or dredging purposes on the island.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, except what has been done under this contract last year.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: What was the amount spent?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The amount of work that has been done is $187,000.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: What is the total amount?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Just about half a million dollars.

Mr. HEAPS: The Minister of Public Works has dealt with certain aspects of this question, but has not touched upon one or two points that have been raised by the hon. member for East Calgary which are of great importance to this country, and on which he ought to give us a little more definite assurance than he has so far done this morning.

At the present time there are no public highways in Anticosti. I understand that the island is about the size of the whole province of Prince Edward Island, and that the owners of the island could debar anyone from walking in any part of that large domain. There are no public health regulations, and no laws pertaining to sanitation. All these questions are of vital importance. There is no such thing as law and order on that island, and so far as law and order is concerned it can be run just as suits the company best. I think under these circumstances, before one cent of assistance is given by the government, we should receive the definite assurance from the minister that all these matters I have mentioned will be looked after and put on the same footing as in other parts of Canada. I believe also that the owners of the island control the landing privileges, and consquently the landing of vessels there would depend on the goodwill of the owners of the island. That is not as it ought to be. If we are going to give grants, we ought to have something to say as to the wages that shall be paid and the working conditions that shall prevail. I believe that the company could, if they wished, and it has been done in other parts of the country, prevent a man going on the island to organize the workers into what I might call a legitimate trades union. Company towns in Canada have done that within recent times; and we might find that a person who wanted to land on the island would get no farther than the wharf. I want him to have permission to go to any part of the island, just as he could to any part of the city of Montreal or the city of Quebec. I wish the minister would rise in his place and assure the house that none of this money will be granted by the government until they have the assurance from the owners that all these matters will be put on a proper footing.

Mr. CANNON: As a representative of the district where the island is situated, I want to say just a few words. The hon. member for Argenteuil has pointed out that, after all, whatever is done on this island is done for the pecuniary benefit of the company which is operating on the island. Well, that applies to all companies. Companies are not philanthropic associations; they are in business for a profit, and this organization on the island is in the lumbering business for the purpose of making a profit to be distributed among its shareholders, just like any other company in Canada.

The dredging which the government is now proposing to do is necessary in order to connect the main channel in the river St. Lawrence with the wharves of the company. These wharves were built and paid for entirely by the company, and if my information is correct over one million dollars has been expended by the company for new wharfage accommodation. Is it reasonable after a company has gone to that expense that the government of Canada should disregard that large industrial development, and refuse to do anything whatsoever in assisting in that development, when the government does it everywhere else in Canada? If the government refuse, there is no other authority except the authority which lies with this parliament and with this federal government to do that dredging. No private corporation can dredge in the river St. Lawrence.

Mr. HEAPS: Could they not dredge with the consent of the government?

Mr. CANNON: Probably they might, but would that principle be adopted by parliament? Could the principle be defended before this house of allowing private individuals or private corporations to start dredging in the river St. Lawrence? It is a public channel.

Mr. HEAPS: Under the control of the government, I said.

Mr. CANNON: I do not think it would be a good principle to allow individuals to start dredging in the river St. Lawrence, which is the most important channel of navigation we have. This has to be done by the government.

Mr. HEAPS: Why?

Mr. CANNON: Why? In the same way that we cannot allow individuals to do construction work on railways. Our railways, as well as the river St. Lawrence, have to be under the control of a central authority.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Was not that principle adopted by the government in the case of some survey work last year in northern Manitoba, where the government did the work but the bills were paid by the Manitoba Paper Company, which would profit by the survey?

Mr. CANNON: It might be so; but my hon. friend would not for one moment compare surveying territory in Manitoba with allowing private corporations to dredge in the river St. Lawrence and interfere with navigation.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Why not?

Mr. CANNON: Now, Mr. Chairman, the question has been raised of this island being private property—

Mr. CAMPBELL: Could not the work be done by the government and be paid for by the company?

Mr. CANNON: Yes; that principle was adopted somewhere else. We made arrangements with other companies whereby the government paid two-thirds of the cost of the work and the company one-third. But, as has been pointed out by the Minister of Public Works, in this particular work the company has already expended over two million dollars in building wharves. In the other instances where the cost of the dredging was shared by a company and the government the wharves as a rule were built by the government itself.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: A moment ago the minister said it was done for profit not for philanthropy.

Mr. CANNON: I mean lumbering is a commercial enterprise; there is no doubt about that. Now, as to this island being in the hands of a private company. Well, first of all we must bear in mind that that company bought the rights of Senator Menier. The senator derived his rights from the Coffin estate. This island of Anticosti is in a seigneury.

Mr. HEAPS: The feudal system.

Mr. CANNON: We have to take things in this country as they are. We have other seigneuries in the province of Quebec.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is that Liberal doctrine?

Mr. CANNON: It is not my fault if three hundred years ago the king of France granted seigneuries;—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: But there is something to be said—

Mr. CANNON: —and there is such a thing in this country as vested rights.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: We understand that is Liberal doctrine too.

Mr. CANNON: Would my hon. friend for one moment contend that on account of a special system of land tenure having been established in this country over three hundred years ago, we are to change that now? Coming to my last point, I want the members of the committee to bear in mind that in the case of land tenure we immediately enter a field which is altogether provincial. We cannot do anything even if we wanted to. My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) mentioned "Liberal doctrine". There is one principle of Liberal doctrine that he will subscribe to—the autonomy of the provinces. Well, if we are to respect provincial autonomy we have to keep away from property and civil rights.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Does the hon. minister suggest that the principle of autonomy means that we have to make this grant?

Mr. CANNON: I do not think my hon. friend is putting that question seriously.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am putting it seriously. Let me ask the question this way: Simply because a king of France three hundred years ago granted a seigneury, does it mean that now industrial development has taken place we in Canada must make money grants to a company which is attempting to exploit that island?

Mr. CANNON: My hon. friend has misunderstood me. I am not arguing in favour of this grant because the island is a seigneury, but I am answering the argument of my hon. friend that before we do any dredging we ought to change the land system on this island. I say we cannot change it because it is not within the competence of this parliament. The provincial government has sole jurisdiction as to property and civil rights.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the conditions on this island are not as bad as they have been described, for if they were people would not go there. If the people were treated in such a way as to recall feudal days, as has been said in this house, how could they be induced to go and work there? The people are absolutely free to go or not to go. No one can force them to go and work on that island if they do not want to.

Mr. HEAPS: Economic necessity drives them to work there.

Mr. CANNON: No economic necessity will drive people from the province of Quebec, as I know them, to become slaves. I am aware how the business on this island is carried on. Every fall when the people leave the city of Quebec to work on the island they go there as free men, and they come back as free men.

[Mr. Cannon.]

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to interrupt, but may I ask the Solicitor General a question? I quite understand that people are not obliged to go to the island against their will; but can anybody go there without a pass from the company?

Mr. CANNON: Certainly.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Is anybody permitted to land there without having a permit or pass from the company?

Mr. CANNON: Certainly; over three hundred vessels went there last year.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: That does not answer my question.

Mr. CANNON: How could three hundred vessels go there if people were not allowed to land?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: They got permits.

Mr. CANNON: My hon. friend has experience in the lumber business—

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I should like an answer to my question.

Mr. CANNON: I will answer the question. My hon. friend has had experience in that line of business. Would he contend for one moment that the holder of a license to cut timber in the province of Quebec or the province of Ontario, even though he is not the owner of the soil, would allow the public generally to roam through his limits and endanger them? He would not. It is not done anywhere. My hon. friend knows that. Timber holders protect their property. Why should not the owners of Anticosti protect their property also?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What civil rights have those workmen from Quebec on Anticosti island?

Mr. CANNON: I can tell my hon. friend that the people of Quebec protect themselves and their rights.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That is not an answer to my question. I ask: What civil rights have the workmen from Quebec on Anticosti island?

Mr. CANNON: They have the same rights as other labour men throughout Canada.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No.

Mr. CANNON: The provincial government of Quebec would not allow to prevail on the island the condition of things which has been described in this house and in certain newspapers. That is not the kind of government we have in Quebec.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Are the conditions described by the member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) wrongly described?

Mr. CANNON: To a certain extent they are. My hon. friend from Quebec South has experience in the way timber companies conduct business. He knows that what the people at Anticosti do is simply to protect their property as every other company does. I am fully confident that should the employees of that company consider themselves not treated as they ought to be, as regards municipal organization or otherwise, they know what to do. They have one authority to whom they can appeal any time, any day, any month, and that authority is not the Dominion parliament; it is the provincial legislature and the provincial government, the government of the province of Quebec. And knowing the prime minister of the province as I know him, I have no doubt justice will be done to the people of Anticosti as justice is done to all people in our province. Moreover, if the people were not satisfied either with this government or with the provincial government the courts of the province are there to protect the rights of all citizens; and what shows that conditions on the island in no way approximate the conditions that have been described is the fact that no action ever has been taken at any time in the courts by anyone.

Mr. HEAPS: How far away is Anticosti island?

Mr. CANNON: Anticosti island is not at the north pole; it is in the district of Charlevoix-Saguenay. We have an organization in Quebec which extends throughout the province and these people are not isolated. I submit these facts: First, we are doing for this company what has been done for others in many instances; secondly, as regards the amount, as the Minister of Public Works has suggested, it might be reduced to cover the work actually done this year; thirdly, the proper authority to deal with the matter is the provincial government and the provincial courts and not the federal government; and in the fourth place, speaking from my own personal knowledge, you will never find people from Quebec going to work on that island to become slaves, for they would not go there if the company did not treat them properly.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I want to congratulate the Solicitor General on the overshadowing influence of his very strong and aggressive personality on the Minister of Public Works. He is entitled to that tribute, and I only wish I could enlist his services in regard to another island which happens to be situated in the St. Lawrence river, which is opposite Kingston, and which is known by the name of Simcoe. That little island is peopled by a population entirely of farmers. A couple of years ago when the ice on the St. Lawrence went out it carried away their wharf and since that time they have been asking, and I have been asking on their behalf, for a little consideration in order to have a wharf built to enable vessels to come in there and give the farmers of the island some service. For the last two years the farmers of the island have been unable to market their stock, their hay or anything else until nature has provided them with a bridge by freezing over the river. In the summer months they cannot get off at all. The people of the island have not been asking for $300,000 nor $100,000 nor $1,000. They say, "If you will give us six or seven hundred dollars we are so anxious to have the wharf, which means so much to us, that we the farmers of the island will give our own work gratis. Let the department send their man down to supervise the work and we will not ask pay for what we do in building the wharf". All these people ask for is six or seven hundred dollars. Can I get the ear of the government in that respect? Can I get any assistance from the hard-hearted Minister of Public Works? He does not look hard-hearted, but he is apparently extremely hard-hearted and absolutely callous, indifferent and hard-shelled, unless someone with the engaging personality of the Solicitor General can approach him, and then they can get anywhere up into six figures for anything at all, no matter where it is. But the farmers on that island have received no consideration whatever from this government. This government can tear down half the city of Ottawa to satisfy the ambitious whims of the right hon. the Prime Minister to make a monument for himself in the shape of what I suppose we shall in years to come call King's park. The government can give hundreds of thousands, millions in that way but the farmers on this island cannot even get six or seven hundred dollars to put up a wharf to enable them to market their produce in summer. They must wait until the ice comes and the good Lord provides them with a bridge so that they can get off the island. But $300,000 is nothing in Anticosti, away in the gulf, where even ordinary citizens are restricted in their rights to go and come, everything being under the control of one corporation. The government can spend this money now to provide them with what they need, and when the timber is cut off the island they can move off. I should not be doing my duty if I did not point out to this committee and to the house the absolutely unfair position which the government has taken in regard to some of these small amounts which are rightly asked for by people in various parts of the Dominion. No consideration whatever is given these demands. It is not a question of the rights of the case; it is a question of these people having sent to this parliament a member who sits on this side of the house instead of on the other side. That is the long and short of it; that is the size of it; that is the big and little of it, and it is mostly little.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: When my hon. friend made his unkind reference to myself I was on the point of getting up to support him. I think he has made a fairly strong case for the people of whom he speaks, and if I can be of assistance to him I shall be glad to do what I can.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): When I paid a tribute to the Solicitor General I appreciated his influence and his engaging personality. But if I am to have the assistance of the right hon. the Prime Minister, then I must say, with all due deference to the Solicitor General, that I should prefer help from the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. POWER: Much as I dislike not being of the same opinion as the Solicitor General, he has intimated that some of the statements I made recently were of a rather reckless character, and I must, at least in justice to myself, point out to him that wherever he gets his information he is grossly misinformed. With reference to his statement that people have not been ill treated on that island, I distinctly remember that in the autumn of 1926 for several days the newspapapers of Quebec were filled with complaints of labourers returning from Anticosti island in regard to the conditions they found there. I personally saw a number of these people who told me that they had been sent there in the fall of the year without any shelter or any means to provide for them. They were told that they had to go to work in the bush and they had great difficulty in getting off the island on to the government boat which is there to bring extra supplies. The tales which were told and repeated in the newspapers, which I could produce in the house if I had time, would indicate that at that time, at any rate, the government of the island, which was the Anticosti Corporation, was not such a beneficial and beneficent government as my friend the Solicitor General would have us believe.

With regard to the rights of vessels to land at the island, yesterday I happened to receive a letter from a gentleman whose name I do not wish to give unless the house insist. He is a ship captain, and says:

> During the year 1927 I was connected with a steamship which was operating at times to Anticosti island, and I have on file in my office here a registered letter from the Anticosti Corporation warning me that any person landed on the island without written permission from the company would be deported at the expense of the vessel which landed him.
> I have also a letter from Guy Tombs Limited, traffic manager for the Anticosti Corporation, warning us that our boat must not under any conditions sail for Ellis bay without having first obtained the telegraphic permission of the corporation. This was in May, 1927, and I am holding the letters as proof of my statements.

It has been stated that any citizen on Anticosti island has the same rights enjoyed by other citizens of Canada, but personally I would not like to see a friend of mine who happened to be a labour organizer land at Ellis bay. In the first place he would not land, but if he did he would leave very soon. Then with regard to the statement that this company have only the same rights as other timber limit holders in the province of Quebec, and that these timber limit holders may exclude persons from their limits—

Mr. CANNON: If my hon. friend will allow me, I did not say they only had the rights of other timber limit holders. I said they had greater rights, but I compared the way the ordinary timber limit holder with inferior rights treated the general public.

Mr. POWER: I understood the Solicitor General to say that ordinary persons were not permitted to cross the territory of timber limit holders in the province of Quebec. Having been connected for a long time with people who were timber limit holders and having brought my hon. friend fishing within those limits, I know that they permit certain kinds of people to cross their limits at all events. Perhaps that was because I was with him, but at any rate I must say that the rights of timber limit holders in the province of Quebec are not the feudal rights exercised by the Anticosti Corporation.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would like to have the unanimous consent of the house to enable the chairman of the committee on agriculture and colonization to present a report.

The Speaker resumed the chair and the house reverted to the order of motions.

IMMIGRATION

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND COLONIZATION

Mr. W. F. KAY (Brome-Missisquoi), presented the tenth report of the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization, as follows:

The Select Standing Committee on Agriculture and Colonization begs leave to present its tenth report as follows:

Pursuant to an order of reference dated Monday, February 20, 1928, your committee took into its consideration the Immigration Act and regulations thereunder, and the general subject of immigration including the work of the Department of Immigration and Colonization.

Your committee has held 36 sittings and has called before it the following 29 witnesses, namely:

Hon. Robert Forke, Minister of Immigration and Colonization.
W. J. Egan, Deputy Minister of Immigration.
A. L. Jolliffe, Commissioner, Department of Immigration.
Dr. J. A. Amyot, Deputy Minister, Department of Health.
Dr. D. A. Clark, Assistant Deputy Minister, Department of Health.
W. J. Black, Director of Colonization, Canadian National Railways.
J. S. Dennis, Director of Colonization, Canadian Pacific Railway Company.
J. N. K. Macalister, Assistant Director of Colonization, Canadian Pacific Railway Company.
Sir Henry Thornton, President, Canadian National Railways.
E. W. Beatty, President, Canadian Pacific Railway Company.
Canon Vernon, Church of England.
Canon Burd, Church of England, Saskatchewan Synod.
Miss Gertrude Childs, Secretary of the Social Welfare Commission of Winnipeg.
Sir Joseph Flavelle, Toronto.
Albert Chamberlain, President, British Welcome and Welfare League of Toronto.
Hugh Farthing, Representative of the British Empire League of Canada.
Professor H. Barton, Dean of the Faculty of Agriculture, McGill.
Hon. George Langley, Regina.
Miss N. E. Mackie, former Immigration and Colonization worker.
C. A. Magrath, Toronto.
Col. James Stibbard of the British Permanent Forces.
Col. T. R. Tudge of the Salvation Army.
Staff Captain Owen Culshaw of the Salvation Army.
M. J. Coldwell, Regina.
Hon. Mr. Manion, M.P.
Hon. E. J. McMurray, Winnipeg.
M. N. Campbell, M.P.
Lieut.-Col. Cecil G. Williams of the Navy League.
George H. Corbet, representing several Social Service Welfare Societies of Montreal.

In addition to hearing the foregoing witnesses your committee took under consideration resolutions and petitions submitted by various organizations throughout the country.

Your committee begs leave to report its conclusions and recommendations as follows, namely:

Conditions under which Citizens of various Countries are admitted to Canada

The committee is convinced that there is considerable misapprehension and lack of information regarding conditions on which persons from different parts of the world are admitted to Canada. In order to remove this misapprehension and to have a clear background on which to base any recommendation, the committee gives the following brief summary.

British

1. All British subjects from the United Kingdom or from any of the British dominions are eligible to enter Canada, provided they are sound mentally and physically and in a position to maintain themselves until employment can be secured.

No passport is required.

The passage rate for immigrants from the British Isles generally is $91.25.

2. British agricultural workers are specially encouraged by the establishment of a low rate of $9.73 at the instance of the Canadian government.

3. British domestic workers are also provided for at the same rate as agricultural workers and in special cases even this small amount is advanced as a loan.

4. Families of British agricultural workers who have already emigrated to Canada are given the benefit of the special rate of $9.73 for adults and free passage to all children under seventeen. In this case, also, loans are made in special cases to provide for the transportation of such families.

5. British children over fourteen and under seventeen who are brought into Canada under the auspices of certain juvenile societies, have their passages paid; and an additional amount is paid to such societies to cover the railroad fares and incidental expenses of such children.

6. British boys over fourteen and under seventeen years of age, emigrating to Canada to approved farm homes, receive free passage to their destination.

Northern European Countries — (Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Switzerland, Holland, Belgium and France).

Any subjects or citizens of these countries are eligible for entry to Canada provided they are sound mentally and physically and are in a position to maintain themselves until employment can be secured.

These people are required to have passports.

The average minimum ocean rate is approximately $120.

No special rate or assistance of any kind is given by the Canadian government to subjects or citizens of these countries.

Central and Southern European countries—(Austria, Hugary, Poland, Roumania, Lithunia, Esthonia, Latvia, Bulgaria, Jugo-Slavia, Czecho-Slovakia).

Only agricultural workers, domestic servants or those within a prescribed degree of relationship to residents already legally admitted to Canada are permitted to come in from these countries. Special exceptions may be made in cases in which the Minister of Immigration is satisfied that their labour or service is required in Canada.

These people are required to have passports.

The average minimum ocean rate is approximately $135.

No special rate or assistance of any kind is given by the Canadian government to subjects or citizens of these countries.

United States.

All citizens of the United States are eligible to emigrate to Canada provide they are sound mentally and physically and in a position to maintain themselves until employment can be secured.

No passport is required.

From the above it will be seen that emigrants from the United Kingdom stand in a specially favourable position as compared with emigrants from continental countries, not only with regard to general passage rates but particularly with respect to the very greatly reduced rates given to agricultural and domestic workers from the United Kingdom.

For the further encouragement of British immigration the following schemes for land settlement should be noted:—

3,000 Family Scheme.

British families have been brought out to Canada at a special steamship rate, and they are located by the Canadian government on vacant soldier settlement lands. The British government supplies to each such family a maximum of $1,500 cash for stock and equipment. All repayments are made by the settler for the price of the farm and for the stock and equipment loan, in equal yearly instalments, during a period of twenty-five years at the low interest rate of 5 per cent. The Canadian government provides additional assistance by way of selection, settlement and supervision, free of charge.

British-Dominion-Provincial Land Settlement Scheme.

Under this scheme the provincial government provides the farm. The British government supplies $1,500 for stock and equipment. The Canadian government recruits the settler and provides settlement and supervision, free of charge, and, in addition, shares on a 50-50 basis any loss on account of stock and equipment. In the event of the default of a settler within the first two years the loss of interest on account of the purchase price of the land is shared on the following basis:—

Provincial government..	25 per cent
Dominion..	25 per cent
British..	50 per cent

This scheme has already been adopted by two of the provinces and negotiations are now being carried on with another province.

Training and Placement of British Boys in Farm Homes.

[Mr. Kay.]

Selected boys are given free passage from the United Kingdom to Canada, and institutions known as "training farms" are established by several provinces for receiving these British boys and distributing them among approved farm homes. The Dominion and provincial governments each contribute $10 per boy towards the operation of the farm, and the British government makes a grant of $20 for the same purpose.

Land Settlement for British Boys.

The object is to establish on farms of their own, British boys who have come to Canada, and who have acquired the necessary experience in farm work, and who have each saved $500. Under this scheme the British government loans $1,250, the Dominion government $1,000, the provincial government $250 and these loans, with the boy's savings, aggregate $3,000 which is available for his settlement on the farm.

To indicate the importance of this work the British and Canadian governments have entered into an agreement to spend $5,000,000 during the next ten years in making such loans.

As illustrating the special efforts put forward to encourage British immigration, the evidence shows that the Canadian Department of Immigration spends in this work $16.67 for each British immigrant as compared with an average cost of 11 cents per head for immigrants from the continental countries.

The committee heard evidence in detail respecting the organization of the Department of Immigration, and concerning all phases of its activities as carried on both separately and in conjunction with many governmental and voluntary organizations, and in relation thereto the committee makes the following recommendations and suggestions.

Federal Responsibility.

In the opinion of the committee the responsibility and control of the selection of immigrants, no matter by whom recruited must rest solely and exclusively with the government of Canada.

Provincial Co-operation.

The committee recommends that special efforts be now made to extend the field of activity of the provincial authorities particularly in the matter of placement, settlement and supervision of immigrants, and that, with this in view, the federal government consider contributing to defray the cost of provincial co-operation for that purpose.

Medical Examination

There have been complaints about the new system of medical inspection under which Canadian doctors conduct the medical examination of prospective immigrants in the United Kingdom. It appears that this new system was inaugurated as a result of representations made to the Department of Immigration by steamship companies, by provincial governments, by the Dominion Council of Health, and by other social service organizations.

Several reasons were urged in favour of the change:

1. Great hardship was imposed on the immigrant who had been passed by the medical inspectors in the United Kingdom and then upon coming to Canada was subsequently rejected on arrival or after admission.

2. A large number of deportations have taken place on account of the mental or physical unfitness of those who had been passed as mentally and physically fit before leaving the United Kingdom.

3. The proportion of immigrants committed to mental institutions in Canada has been excessive.

The new system affords free medical examination of prospective immigrants by Canadian doctors before they take passage for Canada. Twenty-one Canadian doctors and forty-five roster doctors are conducting medical inspection in the British Isles, and there are 332 centres where medical examinations are conducted, and, in addition, special provisions are made for medical examination in isolated communities.

On the continent there are seven Canadian doctors whose work is confined to examining all immigrants at the continental ports of embarkation. Previous to this examination by Canadian doctors the continental immigrant is subjected to a medical examination near his home under the auspices of the steamship company. Quarantine, fumigation and other precautions are exacted at the continental ports of embarkation in addition to the medical examination by the Canadian doctors.

The suggestion was made that the volume of emigration from the British Isles to Canada was being reduced by the new medical arrangement, but the evidence showed that there has been a greater decrease in emigration from the British Isles to the other overseas dominions and to the United States.

The committee was impressed with the fact that the medical officers to whom is entrusted the medical examination of intending emigrants have a serious responsibility to Canada, not only to the federal government but also to the provinces. It is their duty to ascertain that intending emigrants are physically and mentally fit to take their places and do their share as Canadian citizens. In this connection, and more particularly with regard to immigration from the continent of Europe the committee quotes the resolution passed by the Social Service Council of Canada at its meeting recently held in Montreal as follows:

"The Social Service Council of Canada having in mind the burden now laid on the various provinces of Canada in providing for the idiots and the insane, and the unfortunate results of admission into this country of the moron and feeble minded, desires to urge upon the federal government a continued and strict adherence to the provisions of the Immigration Act, in order that the door may not be open for the entrance of these types of prohibited undesirables."

Owing to the present arrangements a considerable amount of misunderstanding and dissatisfaction has arisen during the transition period. Certain objections were mentioned by witnesses, some of which have already been remedied. The present system of medical examination in the British Isles was inaugurated primarily for the benefit and protection of the British emigrant. The Department of Immigration and Department of Health should, it is considered, make the most exhaustive efforts to see that the new system is perfected so as to eliminate, as far as possible, inconvenience, delay and expense to the prospective emigrant, and to dispel the idea that there is any intention, on the part of the Canadian government, to restrict or hinder the coming to Canada of British subjects. For this purpose the committee recommends that the present system would be improved and that it would obviate delay and inconvenience to the prospective emigrant, especially those who reside in the rural districts of the British Isles, if the medical examinations were made by British local doctors paid by, and under the supervision and control of, the Canadian medical authorities, who should be located at convenient centres of population.

Special Passage Rates for British Settlers

1. 'Teen Age.

The Committee approves of all previous efforts to promote and encourage 'teen age immigration from Great Britain and recommends that the age limit for boy immigrants be extended to boys 14 to 19 years of age, both inclusive.

2. Domestics.

That the arrangements now in effect for the movement of domestics from the United Kingdom to Canada be continued.

3. Family Re-union.

That measures be taken to extend the assisted passage privileges to the families of immigrants from Great Britain who are now in Canada and who have so far established themselves as to have a reasonable prospect of being able to support their families in this country.

4. Reduction in Ocean Rates for all British Immigrants.

That measures be taken at an early date to arrange a conference between the federal and British governments and the Atlantic steamship companies with the object of obtaining a reduction in ocean rates to British immigrants to approximately £10.

Railway Rates for Canadian Landseekers

The committee also recommend that measures be taken to ascertain whether the railways will restore the home seekers rates in effect prior to the war, making such rates effective eastbound as well as westbound.

Land Settlement

1. The committee having heard the evidence in connection with the experiment of the 3,000 Settlement Scheme, now almost completed, recommend that time be given to test this form of land settlement before embarking upon extended schemes of this character.

2. The committee approve of the extension to other provinces of the tripartite agreement with the British, federal and provincial governments for the encouragement of land settlement by the British emigrant.

3. The committee recommend, subject to the completion of satisfactory arrangements with governments of the provinces, that assistance equal to that given by the British government to British emigrant boys be extended by the government of Canada to the Canadian youth who are trained in agriculture.

Letters of Assurance of Employment
"Permits"—so-called

Your committee recommend that letters of assurance of employment shall state the names, addresses, occupations and nationality of the persons to be admitted and that an annual return be made by the Minister of Immigration to parliament within thirty days of its meeting, giving particulars of all such letters, showing the names of persons so admitted, their addresses, occupation and nationality, the names and addresses of the persons who made the application for each such admission and of any other person who endorsed or made favourable representation in support of such application.

Railways' Continental Agreement

There was in the evidence, considerable criticism of certain features of the railways' agreement. The committee has some doubts as to the desirability of giving to the railways special authority to recruit immigrants, but as certain restrictions were imposed in connection with the renewal of the agreement in October, 1927, the committee is of the opinion that in order to ascertain the results of its operation under the new conditions, the present agreement might be continued according to its terms, but with this exception—that the system of nominations of immigrants from non-preferred countries under the railways' agreement should be confined forthwith to the following degrees of relationship; father or mother, husband or wife, son or daughter, brother or sister of any individual who is now engaged in farming in Canada, and further that the existing railways' agreement should not be renewed in its present form.

Increasing Employment

Your committee would also recommend that the government make an intensive and comprehensive study of the possibilities of increasing industrial and agricultural development in Canada with a view to attracting capital and providing wider and increased opportunities for employment not only for our own people, but for prospective immigrants.

Your committee recommends that 1,500 copies in English and 500 copies in French of the minutes of evidence and of this report, be printed in blue book form and that standing order 64 be suspended in relation thereto.

A copy of the minutes of procedure and evidence is appended hereto for the information of the house.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Chairman.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF MINES

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mines

For investigation of mineral resources and deposits; of the mining and metallurgical industries, and of mineral technology: wages, expenses of testing and research laboratories, investigation by Dominion Fuel Board, including salaries and all other expenses, $200,000.

For operation of peat bog at Alfred, Ont., $50,000.

For publications, English and French, purchase of books, laboratory supplies, instruments, miscellaneous assistance and contingencies, $45,000.

For transportation charges from outlying provinces on ore shipments which may be sent to the ore dressing plant of the mines branch at Ottawa for testing purposes, under regulations approved by the Minister of Mines, $1.000.

To compensate J. H. Fortune for quarters, fuel, light and water supplied him as resident caretaker of the mines branch building, Sussex st., vacated because of the necessity of utilizing the caretaker's quarters for storage and laboratory space, $400.—Total, $296,400.

Mr. FRASER: Why the decrease in this vote?

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of Mines): Two hundred thousand dollars is to be spent on the investigation of mineral resources and deposits; of the mining and metallurgical industries, and of mineral technology. Perhaps an explanation would be in order regarding the operations of the peat bog at Alfred, Ont. Last year difficulty arose through the experiment not being completed before the company took it over. They were not able to finance the undertaking, but are hopeful that they will be able to do so and to repay the government. We took it over but were only able to instal the machinery necessary to carry on, get it all in shape and move the plant across the railway track, and put in the switch necessary for convenient loading. The staff anticipate being able to commence operations this year with a full force, and I hope they will operate the plant during the whole season. We will not require as much money this year.

Mr. BENNETT: What are the company's obligations; if I remember right, there was an agreement.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The original agreement was for the purchase of the site then existing, and carrying on the work in rented premises. They could not make a satisfactory agreement with the proprietor, and since that time we have purchased property across the railroad tracks. We now own that bog by direct purchase.

Mr. BENNETT: What did you pay for it?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): $5,150 is the purchase price. We hope to manufacture this season in a commercial way and establish this industry on a commercial basis. We also hope that the company will be able to finance it and take it off our hands.

Mr. FRASER: How much money was spent last year?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): $64,128.

Mr. FRASER: Was there any production?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No.

Mr. CANTLEY: Mr. Chairman, when I referred to this matter last year the minister was very emphatic that important results were going to be obtained during the last twelve months. This bog has been a sink of iniquity for a great number of years. There has been more lying done about it, not by the minister but by others connected with it, than perhaps any other single enterprise this government has undertaken. The minister need not think that he will ever make a commercial success out of operating this peat bog; it is not possible to do it. Peat cannot be dried commercially so as to get a new dollar back for an old one. Wherever peat is used the world over it is only by the local people, who spade it out, stack it up and air-dry it. Peat contains a very considerable amount of moisture that cannot be evarporated or driven out by heat or in any other way, because it is microscopically combined with the peat itself. That is a fact that I have no doubt the minister knows as does everybody else who has had experience in handling peat in a scientific way. Why continue this farce of endeavouring to operate something that cannot be done commercially? I am at a loss to understand why the minister persists in doing that. The late Doctor Haanel wrestled with this matter for nearly twenty years and got nowhere. The minister will get nowhere and no department on earth can make a success commercially of this matter. Why then persist in the endeavour?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): One can never tell of course until the experiment is completed.

Mr. CANTLEY: There are some scientific facts that speak for themselves and cannot be disputed.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): After investigating almost every process, we have come to the conclusion, just as my hon. friend has stated, that there is only one process that shows any possibilities of success and that is air-drying by spreading a comparatively thin coat over the surface of the ground. One primary difficulty that we have to overcome is the moisture in the air in this locality. I confess that is rather a serious proposition; it is serious to the extent that it curtails the output. We have all the machinery in place; we have the electric current there to carry the experiment to a conclusion, and we hope to manufacture peat this year. But of course I am not going to say for a moment that if we have a very wet summer we shall get a large quantity of peat, because the quantity depends on how fast you can dry it. The Danish process is about to be put into effect at Sherbrooke, Quebec, entirely independent of the government. They have the machinery on the ground; they have spent some money on the project, so that I think that is a fair indication that they mean business. I want to carry the experiment to a conclusion and to demonstrate whether or not peat can be manufactured successfully. I admit at once it cannot be shipped any great distance because it is too bulky.

Mr. CANTLEY: The department have been struggling with this matter for a number of years and the minister will admit they have never got anywhere.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No.

Mr. CANTLEY: Well, he may as well admit it, because there is no question that is the fact. The reports from his department covering a period of ten or fifteen years point to that fact, and he admits that the only process of dealing with peat is by air-drying. The amount of labour you have to put on the material is more than the commercial value of the product after it reaches the consumer. That is all there is to the matter. Where peat is being used it is being used by the residents or natives of the country digging it for themselves and air-drying it. In other words, the cost of labour is not included. It is not a commercial matter; it is simply a domestic affair. The people in the immediate locality could probably do the same thing. The peat will not bear transportation or working by any method, mechanical or otherwise, that the minister may employ provided he pays the ruling rate of wages. The minister will be forced to come back when we review the matter next year and admit that the result of his operations is that just as much money has been lost as was the case in former years. Perhaps some other people are now trying the experiment in Quebec, if that be so they will have a similar experience to that of the minister.

Mr. FRASER: I do not propose to criticize the vote. What I want to know is this. Supposing the operations are successful at Alfred, does the minister know of other places in Canada where the process can be applied successfully?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, I know a peat bog near my old home in the vicinity of Holland Landing, a very fine bog. There are any number of bogs.

Mr. FRASER: In Alberta?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, in Ontario. There are any number of bogs in Ontario. Some of them may not be as adaptable to working as the one at Alfred, but there is no question about the quantity of peat if we can develop a process for handling it.

Mr. FRASER: Has the minister any information in regard to the western provinces?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No.

Mr. RYERSON: Is the minister aware of the experiment carried on or the amount of money expended in Welland and Wellington counties in connection with the very process he is speaking of, namely, the air-drying process of producing peat? A very large expenditure was made there and the same company has spent a great deal of money in this section in the very bogs that I think the government are working on to-day. In view of the failure of private capital in this respect, the government is very foolish to continue the work.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I am afraid I cannot agree with the views of some hon. gentlemen on this side who have spoken in regard to the matter. My reason for taking that stand is that there are in the county of Frontenac bogs which give great promise along this line. Some people there are interested and they have a right to look forward with hope to something being done which will make their property of real value in this regard. One or two in Frontenac county have written me in regard to the operation at Alfred and they are anxiously awaiting the result of the government's investigation into the peat proposition in that part of Ontario. I am interested in the experiment, largely because of their interest, and I think everyone will agree that in Ontario if we could handle the peat in a way that would satisfy some of the demands of the public, it would be of great value in a province which has no coal. There may be and likely are similar properties in Quebec. These provinces have at present only the white coal, that is the water-power, to depend upon. They are certainly at a disadvantage in having no coal and I would not be doing my duty in regard to this item if I did not give it support and look forward with hope to something being done which will prove of real value to the development of similar properties in the constituency which I represent.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The vote under consideration is one that has occupied a good deal of time in the house in the years that have passed. Frankly I never understood why the experiment was started in the first place. Even if fuel that could be used was developed from these peat bogs, its light weight, bulkiness and cost of transportation to any great distance would make the use of it almost prohibitive. Therefore outside of areas within the vicinity of the bogs themselves there would be little hope that this peat fuel could be put to any general use. Moreover, because of the nature of the fuel, the low heating value of it, it would be of use only in the fall or spring months of the year. In fact I think the minister himself is reasonably convinced of the truth of that statement. I have however no desire to impede the passing of the vote at this stage, if, as the minister says, he now having set up this plant and having certain equipment there, merely desires to complete the investigation. I would like to ask the minister how much more money will be required to complete this infernal investigation which has been going on now for so many years without anything in the way of concrete results whatsoever.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This is not any more infernal an operation than the one we started at Bienfait. I should not say I started it, but I had the honour of trying to complete it. Notwithstanding the fact that we have spent $1,000,000 of good hard cash of this Dominion on that experiment, which was said to be a failure, there is construction of a plant going on there, not to utilize exactly the same process as was evolved, but nearly the same process. By a high temperature process we are going to carbonize coal at that mine, and make out of what is a comparatively low grade fuel a rather high grade fuel in a territory where there is no fuel of that character. We cannot say that any experiment of this kind is going to turn out a dead failure. All I have to say is that we have purchased all the machinery, we are going to operate the plant at Alfred, and we expect it to carry itself this year. So far as we are concerned we intend to demonstrate, by costs and otherwise, in this year's operation, what peat can be produced for, what it can be sold for, and whether it can meet the competition in an area beyond one hundred miles of coal coming in from outside sources for fuel purposes, at least in the fall and in the spring, when there is a market for a reasonable quantity of this fuel.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Are we to understand that the minister means the vote granted this year will complete the experimental work?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This is for operating the plant.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No more money will be asked for next year?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Not unless we have to operate the plant next year, and I hope not, because I am hoping that the company will take it over. I am informed that to-day the plant is turning out one hundred and sixty tons of fuel. That will be sold, and we will recoup ourselves, but we need money to carry on.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Was there any revenue from the plant last year?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We did not manufacture any last year. We were buying new machinery and buying the peat bog, and it was all outlay on plant and equipment.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Is there a blue book report on the operations thus far which I could get? I should like to have a publication of that kind.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There will be. I would not say that it is in print, but it can be produced and printed for the use of hon. members.

Mr. FRASER: How much of that $1,000 for transportation charges on ore shipments was spent last year?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Not one dollar, I am sorry to say. As my hon. friend knows, that was put in the estimates as a result of the agitation for the construction of a plant in British Columbia, which we did not consider advisable at that time. We had in the estimates at one time an item of $10,000 I think, for the purpose of transporting samples of ore from British Columbia and all outlying points in Canada to Ottawa for testing purposes, but advantage has not been taken of that appropriation. We did not spend one dollar of it last year.

Mr. PETTIT: I would remind the minister that there is in the township at Wainfleet, in the county of Welland, an area of peat bog of several thousand acres. It might be well to investigate the possibilities there.

Mr. SIMPSON: I would ask the minister if under this vote an amount is appropriated for subscriptions to periodicals and newspapers?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, $45,000.

Mr. SIMPSON: Has the minister a record of the amount expended by his department for subscriptions to newspapers and periodicals during the year 1927.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have not a detailed statement here.

Mr. SIMPSON: According to a return that was tabled in the house, I find that the Department of the Interior, including Mines and Indian affairs, took under the heading of newspapers, 213 publications and paid for 296 subscriptions, and under the heading of "other publications" took 673 publications and paid for 912 subscriptions, at a total cost of $7,499.14. Included in these figures were 145 subscriptions to daily newspapers. It appeared to me that there was an evident lack of proper supervision, not only in this department, but in every department of the government, with respect to expenditure along these lines, and in order to bring the matter to the attention of the Minister of the Interior and of ministers of other departments I would like to give the figures for each department now, rather than bring them up when the estimates of the respective departments are before the committee for consideration:

That makes a total cost for subscriptions to newspapers, periodicals and trade journals of $32,762.34, not including those for the reading room. It is difficult to determine from the Auditor General's report what is allotted to each department for subscriptions to newspapers and periodicals, but I find in this return that in the Department of Labour there is an increase for 1927 over 1925 of $445.57; and there may be increases in some of the other departments.

I fully appreciate the necessity of subscribing for newspapers and trade and technical journals, but I fail to see any reason for buying so many copies. For instance, in the Department of Agriculture I find the following: Manitoba Free Press, 13 copies; Montreal Gazette, 12 copies; Montreal Star, 6 copies; Toronto Globe, 7 copies; Farmers' Advocate, London, 67 copies; Northwestern Farmer, Winnipeg, 32 copies; Farm and Dairy, Peterborough, 22 copies; Farmers Sun, 19 copies; Grain Growers' Guide, 32 copies; Canadian Official Railway Guide, 18 copies; Family Herald and Weekly Star, 15 copies—and also one copy of Canadian Sports and Daily Racing Form. Presumably the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) is preparing for the races. In the Department of the Interior I find the following subscriptions to newspapers and periodicals: Calgary Herald, 6; Edmonton Bulletin, 7; Edmonton Journal, 4; Lethbridge Herald, 4; Vancouver Daily Province, 5; Manitoba Free Press, 11; and so on; Financial Post, 4; Saturday Night, 5. In all departments of government I find, aside from the reading room, the subscriptions to daily papers number 1,200. As an example: Ottawa Journal, 136; Ottawa Citizen, 116; Manitoba Free Press, 77; Montreal Gazette, 105; Montreal Star, 53; Toronto Globe, 68; Toronto Saturday Night, 32; MacLean's Magazine, 22.

As I stated a moment ago, I fully realize the necessity of subscribing for a certain number of newspapers and trade and technical journals. But when we go home and attempt to explain to some of our constituents that we cannot get a rural mail route established, or that we have not sufficient money to furnish them with anything better than a tri-weekly mail service, and they know that the various departments of government are subscribing for 1,200 copies of daily newspapers, it will be hard to explain to them why the postal service should suffer. I bring this to the attention of the minister and his colleagues in the hope that they will look into the matter.

Mr. CANTLEY: Referring again to the Alfred peat bog, I find last year we spent altogether $22,898.27. This included $4,353 for land, leaving $18,545, of which labour costs represent only $1,876 and a few cents. In other words, over nine-tenths of the expenditure is overhead.

An hon. MEMBER: Rent and salaries.

Mr. CANTLEY: I will come to that in a moment. The manager gets $6,000 a year, and his clerk is in receipt of $1,260 odd. But the entire labour bill is only $1,876. How can any enterprise of that character stand such a disproportionate overhead? The Irishman at home spades out his peat and there is no overhead. In no other way can this fuel be used economically. Now let me refer to another matter. I understood the minister to say he was doing some briquetting in the west.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Not now.

Mr. CANTLEY: Where?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Bienfait, Sask.

Mr. CANTLEY: You have abandoned that?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, four or five years ago.

Mr. CANTLEY: I congratulate the minister on his display of good sense as to that matter. I hope he will do the same with regard to the Alfred bog, and the sooner the better.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Two of the main activities of the department, I notice, are in connection with the explosives division. Is the department doing anything beyond the inspection of explosives?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There is the testing of explosives by Colonel Ogilvy. There is also the inspection of the explosive plants, but this is not done usually by him, unless there is some special reason; ordinarily the work is attended to by the mounted police, who look after the safety of the public in connection with this inspection.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): How many explosive companies are operating in Canada at the present time, or have they all been bought up by the Americans?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There are twelve factories operating in the Dominion.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): On page 3 of the report the beneficiation of iron ore is dealt with. Has any practical result come from this research work?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There is a rather lengthy report which I shall be glad to give to my hon. friend. It goes into details showing what is being done. Without reference to the report, we must confess that we have not got very far with the development of new treatments of any sort. Investigations have been carried along old lines.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I shall be glad to get the report. In my opinion, as I have pointed out before, there has been a want of co-operation; the government has not paid sufficient attention to these reports. Was the minister really carrying out his free trade principles, or was he discharging his function as minister of the mining department, when he allowed the Robb budget to bring in all these products required for insecticides and so on? Here are two or three reports which deal with the importance of these things, especially with reference to arsenic. The very products from our own mines which enter into these insecticides and fungicides are brought in from the United States. This report, which gives a survey of Canada, was intended to locate the arsenic areas in Canada, but with the introduction of these products from the United States our research work has practically stopped. The minister might support this change in the tariff by arguing that it was not a matter of price, but I think he will agree with me that as these by-products of the smelters are used up, and in view of the fact that one-third of the supply of arsenic comes from these smelters, in proportion as this material is consumed in the United States and we have abandoned research work, the price is bound to rise. There is no question about that. At one time, when arsenic was used less extensively as an insecticide, it was a drug on the market; it was very cheap. But as it came into use the price rose. If we are not busy locating and making use of our own supplies in Canada the price will go up. Therefore the minister should be intensely active in the development of our own ores and the products which will provide us with a supply of these commodities. It is worth while calling attention to that fact. These reports are being published, book after book, and nothing is being done, notwithstanding that a great deal of expense is incurred. Money is being spent without producing the results intended for the development of our own industries.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): An hon. member asked a question with regard to these publications. He put some very valuable information on the record this afternoon, and I am sure the minister himself must possess a huge fund of interesting material which he would like to divulge to the committee in regard to papers, periodicals, and so forth that come to his department. Here is one publication known as the Journal of Heredity. I do not know whether this is one of the publications in the minister's department, but it is printed in Washington. There are seventeen of these. Does this "heredity" refer to a certain type of gentlemen, the aristocracy of Canada, or has it reference to animals? I do not know whether the journal of heredity concerns itself with two-legged or four-legged animals. I should like the minister to take us into his confidence and let us know whether his department is spending money to furnish all the staff with these various publications.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Perhaps my hon. friend will wait until we come to the Department of the Interior, but if there are any in the Mines department I shall be glad to give him what information I have.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I presume you have a number of publications in the Mines branch.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Quite a number.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Is that to provide the various members of the staff each with a copy?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The number seems unnecessarily large. Possibly it is not, but that is the way it strikes me. The minister did not give the reason for such a number when my hon. friend behind me gave the information he did.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The hon. gentleman who previously spoke with reference to the matter had in mind newspapers that were coming in for use in the department. I believe he said that twenty newspapers came into the Mines department. I cannot say that this should be considered an excessive number because every day information must be available to various officers in the department. With respect to periodicals, this department occasionally uses a great many. The exchange of new ideas in almost every line of metallurgy in which the officers of the department are interested is invaluable, and of course it would necessitate access to everything that is going on throughout the world in the way of new development and the evolution of new ideas. I am unable to tell my hon. friend why it is necessary to have twenty newspapers in one department. However I will inquire into the necessity for that number.

Mr. CANTLEY: With regard to the supply of arsenic, which is coming into the country in increasing quantities all the time, I would suggest to the minister that instead of whipping dead horses, as he has been doing in the briquetting of coal, and endeavouring to do the impossible so far as peat is concerned, he might turn his attention to the question of utilizing our ores in Canada in relation to the supply of arsenic. It is estimated that there are in Nova Scotia 100,000 tons of tailings containing a considerable percentage of arsenic. The hon. member for Kingston has referred to the output of the smelters, and has asked what is being done by the department with regard to the investigation of that matter, which is certainly of vital importance to the country at this moment. A large market is assured to-day and we are depending entirely on our neighbours for that supply.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There is no question about the quantities of arsenic available in Canada. It does not need a geological survey to establish the fact. It is perhaps very much in the same position as was the asbestos market a year or two ago. As my hon. friend knows, there was any quantity of asbestos, but the industry was almost dead. Of course the hon. member would suggest protection at once.

Mr. CANTLEY: Any reasonable man would.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I will not get into an argument with my hon. friend about that this afternoon; we will argue it some other time. Our business as a Mines department is to lend geological aid if necessary where prospectors have made discoveries, and to assist them in testing. But apart from the experiment made by the government in the briquetting of coal and the experiment in connection with peat, we are not trying to undertake commercial development of these ores. That is the point I am trying to make.

Mr. CANTLEY: We are not asking the minister to undertake commercial development. We are asking the minister to undertake the research work which he claims his department is doing, and I presume that is all he is claiming in regard to peat. Why does he not transfer his activities to questions which are pressing to-day, which are of some very considerable importance and in connection with which research work is necessary? No other question is perhaps more important than that to which I have referred. Why does the minister waste his time on matters of no importance while neglecting other matters which require attention to-day, this altogether apart from the question of protection, to which he has been good enough to refer. I am glad to know that at times he has glimmerings of intelligence in regard to the operation of his department.

Mr. COOTE: I would like to ask the minister whether this is the proper place to discuss the oil well regulations?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think that had better come up under the Department of the Interior, because they are practically controlled by that department.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Before this item passes I would like to suggest to the minister that he should reduce this amount for the peat experiment. I do not see why he needs $50,000. I could tell the committee a lot about peat from my own unfortunate experience many years ago, but this is not the time to do so. I do not object to the experiment being carried on in the hope of discovering some way to utilize this natural product, but it does seem that $50,000 is too much to pay for a pure experiment. I wonder if the minister cannot reduce this vote.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have aimed at the production of 15,000 tons of fuel this year at this plant. It is not the idea to create the impression that large commercial plants could be successfully operated because, as my hon. friend from Pictou has said, of necessity this fuel can only supply the market contiguous to the point of production. Peat cannot be shipped great distances because it is bulky and light and carries a fairly high freight rate, but this year we expect to produce 15,000 tons. We hope to produce that at $3.50 per ton, and that is about what we estimate will be the outlay during the season. We expect to recoup ourselves by the sale of peat, so we are simply asking for a sum with which to carry on this year.

Item agreed to.

Geological survey, $331,000.

Mr. FRASER: How many parties have you in the field this year?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have fifty-two parties.

Mr. FRASER: Are there any more in British Columbia than were there last year?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, there has been a permanent arrangement with British Columbia almost since union for geological survey work. I think we have eleven parties there.

Mr. CANTLEY: May I ask what parties you have in Nova Scotia this year, and what districts they are in?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Mr. E. R. Faribault is in the gold-bearing districts in Yarmouth county. He will also continue systematic geological mapping on the Annapolis quadrangle. Mr. J. A. MacDonald will make control surveys in the southwestern part of the province. Aerial photographs have been taken of this part and geological map-sheets contributory to the systematic geological and geographical survey of the province will be made from these photographs and the control surveys. Mr. I W. Jones will complete a geological survey of Springhill quadrangle. Mr. W. A. Bell will make a supplementary examination of the coal area at New Glasgow, and Mr. Bell and Mr. G. W. H. Norman will continue a systematic geological survey of Ainslie quadrangle.

Mr. FRASER: I would like to ask the minister when the reports of the work done last year will be made available?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We will start to issue them shortly and possibly before fall all the reports having to do with the operations last year will be in your hands.

Mr. FRASER: This work was done during the season of 1927, and would be completed by September of that year.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, it would be later than that.

Mr. FRASER: Most of the field parties in British Columbia are finished by the end of September. Could not the preliminary reports of these surveys be issued? Could not the issuance of these reports be speeded up, so that they would be available to the public at an earlier date? We will not receive those reports until July or August. Surely that could be speeded up so that the information would be made available earlier in the year.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): One of our difficulties, as my hon. friend knows, is that maps must accompany these reports, and there is a good deal of work necessary to prepare the details. Possibly we could get out a summary which would be available to the public who wish to have the benefit of that information at the beginning of the spring work, but one of the difficulties here at Ottawa is that the printing bureau is working overtime on parliamentary work from the moment the session opens until it closes, and it is very difficult to get printing done.

Mr. FRASER: Could we not cut down on the sessional work?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not know, but I do know that they are working nights.

Mr. FRASER: Could we not cut out some of the sessional work?

Mr. CANTLEY: I would like to refer to one other matter. Last year as the minister knows, or at all events his chief officers know, a company did a lot of deep drilling in the maritime provinces.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): A private company?

Mr. CANTLEY: Yes, in a search for oil. At Governor's island near Charlottetown, P.E.I., they put down one hole to a very considerable depth; as a matter of fact I think they put down two bore holes, but one was lost. The records of that work must be of very considerable value, and I would like to know if the department have kept in touch with the work and if they have been able to get the log of these drillings, which must contain a very considerable amount of information in regard to the strata and the possibility of oil being in that locality.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am told that we have that log on file in the department, and it can be procured.

Mr. CANTLEY: Similar work is now being done in Cape Breton near lake Ainslie and I presume the department is keeping in touch with the men on the ground in regard to that well?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Mines—amount required for expenses in connection with movement of coal from Alberta to Ontario and from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick to Quebec and Ontario, under the provisions of orders in council P.C. 439 and P.C. 539, $150,000.

Mr. HEAPS: Could the minister give the committee any idea of the amount of coal that will be shipped this summer?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It would be very difficult to make even an estimate of the amount that will be moved. We know that contracts are being made for Nova Scotia coal outside of the old areas in which coal from the maritime provinces was formerly sold in Ontario; in Cochrane, for example. Bituminous coal will be sold in the territory that distance from Montreal. Alberta coal is being sold in a good many different parts of Ontario.

Mr. HEAPS: The minister has no idea of the amount of coal being moved under this subsidy?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I could not say.

Mr. HEAPS: When this subsidy was arranged with the Alberta government did the minister take into consideration the cost of the coal at the mine mouth? From the information I have I understand that coal of a similar character can be mined in the United States under similar conditions at about one-half the cost. I would like to know if the government has done anything to ascertain the cost of coal at the mine mouth in the province of Alberta. I understand that the Alberta government has not been able to obtain that cost, and I was wondering if the Dominion government have anything to show that the price charged is a fair price.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is a very difficult proposition you have presented, because so much depends on the volume and the length of time the mine is operating, to arrive at the cost of raising the coal. There is a considerable difference between the cost charged for coal in Alberta and that in the United States, but whether or not they can raise coal as cheaply, whether or not their volume is as large, and whether all the factors that go to make up the cost of coal are the same, I am unable to say.

We have not made inquiry as to the f.o.b. prices being charged, as that is a matter which the Ontario consumers or the Ontario government and the Alberta government ought to adjust between themselves. The movement is fixed at a rate of $6.75 per ton, and we are only interested in the freight movement of the coal; to ensure a rate which will be reasonable and just for that movement. The matter of selling coal is entirely in the hands of the two governments concerned, not in ours.

Mr. HEAPS: I think the federal government should be vitally concerned in the cost of coal at the mine mouth, because, after all, if you are going to subsidize coal going to other provinces the first consideration is whether a fair price is being charged at the mine mouth. According to an inquiry which was held recently in the United States, it was shown coal was being sold at the rate of $2.25 at the mine mouth. It is evident that the operators in the United States are willing to give that cost, and I want to know why the operators in Alberta or other parts of Canada are not willing to give the same information. They have always refused to give it in Alberta, and I think the minister ought to know that there is a fixed price there. In other words, there is a ring of coal operators and they charge whatever the traffic will bear. A price of $4.50 or $4.95 at the mine mouth, in my estimation, is altogether too high. Before one cent in the way of subsidy for the moving of this coal is spent, I think it is our duty to find out whether a proper price is being charged at the mine mouth. The Alberta government and the operators have been asking this government to give certain concessions in order to obtain the Ontario market. I would like to see the Ontario market supplied with coal from the province of Alberta or from the maritime provinces, but the operators, particularly in Alberta, have given no concessions whatsoever in order to obtain that particular market.

About ten years ago we had a similar situation in western Canada where the operators in Alberta said that if they could only obtain the Manitoba market their problems would be solved. They have now a very large share of the Manitoba market but their problems have not been solved in any way; they are just about where they were ten years ago, more mines have been opened and the mining industry is in about the same position as it was in 1918 or 1919.

The same condition applies in the United States regarding the length of time in the year the mines are operated. The mines of the United States are idle for a good period of the year, and some of them operate no longer or not even as long as do the mines in Alberta. Mr. Chairman, I do think that before the government continues with this subsidy it should take steps to find out what it costs to produce one ton of coal in Alberta, taking all things into consideration, and then we will know whether they are worthy of consideration. At the present time prices run from $4.50 to $4.95 per ton, and when the operators of Alberta are asking the government for assistance I think they should find out if they are worthy of it.

Mr. EVANS: How much money has been paid in the way of subsidy on Nova Scotia coal coming to Ontario, how much coal has been hauled under that subsidy, and where has it been shipped to in Ontario?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend is in error when he states it is a subsidy; it is merely an amount that the board will fix over and above $6.75 per ton for this test movement. It is not a definite subsidy, our interest being only in the freight haul. I do not want to get the government into the position of being made responsible for coal prices either in Ontario or Alberta. That is a problem for the people who administer the Mines Act in the province of Alberta, and it is a problem for either the consumers or the government of the province of Ontario. We are only interested in the freight rate and we have agreed to assist in a test movement to demonstrate what is a fair and reasonable rate to be charged for the movement of this commodity both from the east and west. No money will be paid until the end of the season when the Board of Railway Commissioners will estimate what is reasonable and just to be paid to the railway companies for this movement, and I am asking for the $150,000 to provide against that contingency.

Mr. EVANS: Is there not a subsidy being paid on Nova Scotia coal moving west?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No. There was a subsidy of one-fifth of a cent per mile up to 50 cents per ton some years ago. There was approximately $19,000 paid on that occasion for that movement. But this is the same movement as the one we inaugurated from Alberta and it is based on the same principle.

Mr. CANTLEY: I want to direct the attention of the minister to the question of the movement of coal from the west and from Nova Scotia. As he knows, the rate from Alberta is fixed at $6.75 and from Nova Scotia points to Montreal it is is fixed at $3 and from New Brunswick at $2.10. The distance from Alberta points is practically 1,989, or say 2,000 miles. That figures out at about 3.39 mills per ton mile on which I presume the rate was based. Taking the same rate per ton mile we find that the Minto rate ought to be considerably lower than $2.10, which is the rate issued. The Canadian Pacific mileage from Minto to Montreal is 501 miles. At 3.39 mills that gives a rate of $1.70 instead of $2.10. If you take the mileage by the Canadian National road it is 547.6 miles, which would give a rate of a little under $1.85 instead of $2.10. Therefore by the shortest route which should govern we would be entitled to a rate of $1.70 or even by the longest route to a rate of $1.85. Why put in a rate of $2.10?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am greatly interested in this movement, but I do not think we got down to the exact figures that my hon. friend has presented. In every case in a freight movement of this kind the long haul gets the more reasonable rate. That is generally admitted. Probably my hon. friend will argue that there should not be that much difference. I am accepting his figures; I do not know the correctness of them, but I am sure he has gone into the matter fairly and that his figures are correct. We are endeavouring to treat both east and west alike in connection with this test movement. I have much more hope of assistance to the eastern industry by widening the market by the rail and water haul via Montreal than by the all-rail haul under almost any conditions.

Mr. CANTLEY: I am not interested at the moment in the rail and water haul. That has some advantage, I will admit. It will apply to Cape Breton; it does not apply to the mainland. The minister's statement about the long haul is all right in reference to a haul between divisional points, but it is not a factor where the distance is 500 miles as compared with 2,000 miles where you are passing over one or several divisions to another, because your divisional charges are the same in either case.

I come to the question of the Spring Hill district where the distance is 684.4 miles, about one-third of the Alberta distance, I will admit, but passing over a divisional point, so that the minister's argument does not apply. The rate here should be $2.32 per ton, not $3 as we are charged for the whole province of Nova Scotia—a flat rate of $3 irrespective of distance. If you take the Stellarton district, the distance is 768 miles, and at 3.39 mills the rate would figure out at about $2.60, whereas we are charged $3. The rate from Spring Hill should of course be a little less becauses the distance is less. The rate from Sydney on the same basis would be $3.24. There I admit you are giving Sydney an advantage, but the fact is that no coal will be moved from Sydney under this scheme; it is not expected that it should be moved from there. But a large quantity of coal should be moved from Spring Hill and from the Pictou district to overcome seasonal unemployment and from those points we are asked to pay too much. A level rate for the whole province of Nova Scotia based on practically the greatest mileage that can be found in the province, namely from Sydney, and disregarding the Pictou and Cumberland fields is not fair treatment as compared with that which the other province has received in this regard. New Brunswick is entitled to a rate of $1.70 from Minto, Spring Hill a rate of $2.32 and the Pictou district a rate of $2.60. I do not think any coal will be moved from the island of Cape Breton, but it is entitled to a rate of $3. Why does the minister not give us in the several maritime coal districts the same treatment as he is giving to the west? That is the question I ask and I should like to get an answer.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The maritimes start off with an advantage of twenty per cent covering all rates. That applies in the first instance.

Mr. CANTLEY: The 20 per cent does not apply to this special rate.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is true, but my hon. friend is taking the total rate on the long haul against his short haul and figuring that he is working at a disadvantage. Minto coal, however, comes into this city under the old rate. We are desirous of extending the use of it so far as we can. Minto coal has been burned in this plant.

Mr. CANTLEY: I know that. Pictou coal comes up in the summer but not in the winter.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It comes up by rail.

Mr. CANTLEY: No, it comes by water to Montreal.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I did not understand that it came by water. My understanding was that it came by rail. We are trying to give my hon. friend a rate that will put his coal into this market and that will be as nearly commensurate with the rate to the western provinces as we can make it. My. hon. friend will, I admit, find some discrepancies, but he will agree with me that when we made the attempt before, the maritime provinces were the only portion of Canada to profit by the movement. Moreover, this is a test movement. Accurate figures, I trust, will be taken of the movement. We made one zone of the province of Alberta. We do not say, for example, that the rate from Drumheller will be less than the rate from the mountains where there is perhaps a longer haul of about 200 miles. We took the maritimes as a zone and divided them into two with the exception that we gave Minto in New Brunswick, which is the shortest haul, the lowest rate.

Mr. CANTLEY: That is not a fair statement of the facts. As regards the zoning in Alberta, the whole territory is embraced within a zone of 200 miles.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Quite right.

Mr. CANTLEY: Nine-tenths of the coal comes from one point, namely, Drumheller. The minister has not dealt with the maritime provinces in the same way at all. We are entitled from Minto, New Brunswick, to a rate of $1.70 on the mileage. The minister talks about a long haul and a short haul. A haul of 750 miles is by no means a short haul and it is entitled to just as equitable a rate and it costs no more per ton mile than a haul of 2,000 miles. The fact remains that we have not received fair treatment in this matter. We have been charged $3 where we ought to be charged $1.70, $2.32 and $2.60 from Minto, Spring Hill and Pictou respectively. The minister might just as well admit the situation and rectify it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The minister is not going to admit it at all.

Mr. CANTLEY: I do not know that he admits anything, but at all events he cannot change the facts, and the facts are as I have stated.

Mr. VENIOT: Does the hon. gentleman say that Minto coal goes to Montreal by water?

Mr. CANTLEY: No, I was talking of Pictou coal, which is better than Minto coal.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It was with some little surprise that I heard the remarks of the hon. member for North Winnipeg. When he suggests that it might be wise for the sake of the industry and as a matter of research to get at the production costs of the coal, I agree with him, but when he comes along with the categorical statement that the minister and parliament should not spend one cent of this vote until after the costs of the operators have been produced, there I disagree with him, and in disagreeing with him I am in good company, because I am in his own company or that of his associates. I have in my hand a copy of an editorial from the Canadian Trade Unionist, which I would call to the hon. member's attention.

Mr. HEAPS: Does the hon. member know what he is quoting from when he is quoting from that paper?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am quoting from my hon. friend's friends. It says:

> The successful culmination of the negotiations that have been carried on will be a source of much gratification to all who have aided their progress. The Canadian Trade Unionist feels proud that it has taken part in the campaign. It is now four years since we published the first of our series of articles urging on Canadian workmen the value to themselves of spending the money made in Canada for the Canadian coal of a sister province.

Again:

> There is still the securing of a market for the product,. . . and the influence of labour is to be seen in this resolution from the representatives of a typically working-class constituency. Like results can be obtained elsewhere.

I quote from another editorial, this time from the Labour Leader, which the hon. member for Winnipeg North may have heard of. It says:

> If we take it for granted that the test is to spread over the three years movement and is an attempt to create a permanent Ontario market, the results as far as labour in particular is concerned are very far-reaching. They affect labour as a whole throughout the entire Dominion, not merely the trades and callings directly associated with the mining or movement of the fuel, but others as well.
> In the immediate past, the condition of miners in western Canadian coal fields has been an unhappy one. Skilled workmen, they have only been able to work a little more than six months of the year.

And sometimes less than that:

> Limited markets have restricted the output of the mines and made all-year-round operation an impossibility. The miners, therefore, for their off-seasons have been forced, here and there, in search of some sort of seasonal occupation.
>
> Not only would a substantial Ontario market for the coal relieve distressing conditions among the mine workers, but it is clear that it would also stabilize labour conditions throughout the west, which are now unsettled, due to the number of men who must spend a great portion of each year looking for any sort of fill-in occupation that they can find.
> As well as the direct effect on living conditions among the miners themselves and its effect on other types of business dependent on the miner's patronage, the result as far as the railways are concerned is no minor one.

It is only at that particular point that I wish to take issue with the hon. member for North Winnipeg. The miners themselves are absolutely in accord with this test movement. They feel that it has offered them some hope of greater continuity of work throughout the year, more days employment, and they leave to their own organizations the adjustment of the wage scale. But when the hon. member for North Winnipeg rises and suggests that we should not give a cent of this money until after the costs of the operators have been produced, I must disagree with him. He went further and stated categorically that the operators in Alberta had a ring and were fixing prices. I do not know where he gets his facts. I have no brief for the operators. My friendship is entirely for the miners. I have stated that often and will state it again, in front of the operators or anybody else; I am stating it now. To my knowledge there is not only no deliberate ring so far as the Drumheller field is concerned, but there is keen competition in the securing of markets. In this city of Ottawa one of the Drumheller mines is now offering coal at a cut rate, at 25 cents a ton below the price charged by other mines. That should dispel the hon. gentleman's belief that there is any deliberate ring. That is all I wish to say on this matter at the moment, and I trust the hon. member for North Winnipeg will not be provoked any further.

Mr. HEAPS: Who fixes the price of Alberta coal?

Mr. NEILL: The minister has told us that we must not call this a bounty. I call it a hand-out. It is going to cost us $150,000, and surely it is worthy of a name. It must not be called a bounty or a subsidy. What would the minister call it?

Item agreed to.

Indian Affairs—salaries, $171,992.50; contingencies, $20,000.

Mr. BENNETT: It would seem this might be an appropriate place to make a few observations with respect to the condition of the Eskimos. The minister has had his attention directed to this matter on more than one occasion, and considerable sums of money have been expended for the purpose of improving their condition. I understand that every winter there is considerable hardship endured by the Eskimos, and the only remedy that has been suggested that would be at all equal to the demands made upon the department would be to import a number of reindeer from Norway, and to establish herds up there, as has been done so successfully by Mr. Lopp in Alaska. I know the minister gave the matter some consideration, and there is a considerable number of people who will be very anxious to know from a statement by the minister in this house just what is being done, and what may be done, in the way of affording this measure of relief to this native population of our country to whom we owe so large an obligation.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The importation of reindeer was attempted by the department on the east coast and was a failure, we understand, because of the fact that they were not well located on proper grazing grounds. The reindeer nearly all died. Since that time our attention has been directed to the fact that in Alaska the American government have made a very great success of the rearing and domesticating of reindeer They are rearing the reindeer in their wild state, and have a very considerable market both for the fur and the meat, and as a commercial undertaking it is proving to be quite a success. There have been in the employ of the department for two years two gentlemen who have made a study of the food and other conditions of the reindeer, and it is hoped to make a success in this direction yet. They have been in the north now for a period of two years, and we shall soon have their report. In addition to that, the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Ladner), on behalf of others, approached the department about a year ago to lease a very large territory in the vicinity of Hudson bay.

Mr. BENNETT: In the Mackenzie basin?

[Mr. Neill.]

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): West of Hudson bay. The land was required for individuals who had made a success of rearing reindeer in Alaska. They wished to import a very considerable herd and make a thorough test of the possibilities of raising reindeer in that territory. I think arrangements have been practically completed, and we will soon have, as a private enterprise, a herd of reindeer established there, and year by year a certain number of animals will be turned over to the government, which we will then give to Eskimos, who will be trained to establish small herds. This work we trust will be beneficial to the Eskimos from the standpoint both of meat supply and of fur.

Mr. BENNETT: I have no desire to detain the committee, but possibly the minister has seen a letter which was published in the Toronto Globe with respect to this matter, pointing out the conditions under which the Eskimos are living and the necessity for action being taken to provide for their wants.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is that the Rev. Mr. Walton's letter?

Mr. BENNETT: I am referring to the letters written by him and also by Mr. R. H. Knowles of Toronto. There is also an editorial in the Globe with respect to the matter, which I placed among my files for reference when dealing with the estimates. The movement of reindeer to the Mackenzie basin will not entirely meet the demand for further consideration by the aboriginal population in another section of the northwest. There are about six thousand souls in all, and the story told of their privations and sufferings demands that action be taken to prevent a recurrence of those conditions, for the minister himself on a previous occasion pointed out that we owe to the aborigines a sacred duty that is not lightly to be disregarded. Under the circumstances, if the experiment to establish reindeer in that part of the Northwest Territories immediately concerned has been unsatisfactory, I think a larger sum should be placed at the disposal of the minister to make possible the absolute prevention of a recurrence of the hardships and suffering which those people have undergone.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am asking for a considerable sum in another place—

Mr. BENNETT: I know.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): —but largely for the purpose of securing supplies from the traders. The Hudson's Bay Company, for example, have posts along Coronation gulf and around Churchill where the Eskimos congregate, and they are most likely to know whether the natives are in distress. This occurs in the winter season, when sometimes whole tribes are wiped out. I neglected to say that the investigation we are making by those two gentlemen from the United States is along Coronation gulf.

Mr. BENNETT: The Porsild Brothers?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not sure if that is the name. They have made a study of the subject, so we will have some assurance that there will be the necessary feed available if the deer are moved in. We are having difficulty with our Indians all through the northern territory. On that account we are asking for larger sums for medical attention and supplies. The high prices at which fur is selling to-day is a great incentive to the white trapper to interfere very seriously with the livelihood of the Indians—so serious that we are going to kill some of the older buffalo in the northern herd and reserve the meat for that territory.

Mr. BENNETT: In the Globe editorial it is stated that a ninety-eight pound bag of flour was sold to the Eskimos at from fourteen to sixteen dollars, and a tin of beef at seventy-five cents. There are only six thousand of them in all. If that is so, I think the minister should state to the house very frankly that he regards the Dominion's obligation to feed and clothe them to be of such importance that he will see to it that the Eskimos are properly looked after. I think that is all that can be fairly asked of the department.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am glad my hon. friend has brought this matter up, for it is one on which the house needs information. The reports we receive are usually from a year to eighteen months after the occurrence—

Mr. BENNETT: That is the trouble.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): —and we do not discover there has been distress and suffering until it is too late to apply a remedy.

Mr. BENNETT: Usually they are dead.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes. So far we have had to trust pretty largely to the northern traders. We are trying to get into that territory police posts just as quickly as my hon. friend will give us the men. We have established a number of posts there during the last two or three years, and we are endeavouring to teach the natives to apply to the mounted police as our direct representatives. Let me say that I do not think those natives have always been used by the traders as they should have been, and the mounted police are exercising a very salutary influence on the traders operating in that northern territory. With the extension of the mounted police service I think we shall be able to take measures more adequately to protect the natives than we have been able to in the past.

Mr. ADSHEAD: From what I can hear in this corner you are discussing Indian affairs?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, civil government.

Item agreed to.

Indians—Ontario and Quebec, $317,107.

Mr. SPENCER: Will the minister explain the general increases in these votes?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In this vote there is an increase of $8,000 for relief and medical attendance. Without going into details, I may say that we have to increase our votes all along the line for assistance of this kind to our Indian wards.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no doubt about it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am afraid that in the future we shall have to increase these votes very materially, because we are not in any way meeting the requirements for stamping out tuberculosis, which is very prevalent amongst the Indians. Indeed, it is increasing to some extent. Of course, that means better housing, better care—

Mr. BENNETT: And medical attention.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes. In every case we are asking for some increase in the votes for hospitals and so forth.

Mr. BENNETT: What is the Indian population of Canada at present?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): 105,000.

Mr. BENNETT: I wholly agree with what the minister has said. There is evidence on many reserves that notwithstanding the efforts made the population is decreasing, and if there is any duty we owe in the world it is the duty we owe the Indians and Eskimos, the aborigines who are the wards of the nation. I should like the minister to make it perfectly clear that early this year he will take steps to prevent destitution and starvation among the Indians and Eskimo population in the far northern part of the country. If we do not move now these people will die of starvation this winter.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In the Coronation gulf area we now have a mounted police force which was recently established on Baffin island. In the north, where the Indians congregate, we are also policed.

Mr. BENNETT: But further east?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The northern end of Quebec is the one weak spot in the organization.

Mr. BENNETT: And that is where the Eskimos are suffering.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There is a considerable number of Eskimos there and we have some apprehension, but we are taking the precaution to ensure that the traders will at least endeavour to see that no destitution occurs. But we must have a police force there.

Mr. BENNETT: And start now.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): What is the acreage in Indian reserves in each of the provinces?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I can give the number of reserves but I doubt whether I can give the exact acreage.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Have certain lands, formerly Indian reservations, been acquired or taken over by the government, and if so, what lands were given in substitution therefor?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I can best answer that question by citing what is going on at present in the Peace river country where there are three small reserves in the thickly settled district there. There are not very many Indians on them, it is true, but what we propose doing there, subject always of course to approval by the Indian band themselves, is to sell these and substitute other lands which are not so valuable and which are of a greater distance westward. Generally speaking, where there is a sale of a reserve or of any portion of a reserve, the sale takes place after a vote has been taken by the Indian band on the reserve. Their consent is obtained and the land is then sold at public auction. That method was departed from in some cases when soldier settlement was quite active. The Saddle lake reserve in Alberta is one I know of particularly. In that case there was set aside at a fixed value a certain portion of the reserve, with the consent of the Indians, of course, and $10 an acre was decided upon as the price. There was no public auction in that instance. But in the case of the Blackfoot reserve where the land was not required—it is in the vicinity of my hon. friend's constituency—the Indians voted and the land was sold at public auction to the highest bidder. The practice in all cases is, first, to obtain the consent of the band, and secondly, to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, the funds to be preserved of course in the interests of the band itself.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Why was that procedure departed from in the case of the Saddle lake reserve?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It had been presumed that the land was required for soldier settlement purposes, but it finally turned out that it was not; and as the government were in duty bound to pay over the $10 an acre to the Indians or to the band funds other disposition had to be made of the land.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): What was that disposition?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Part of it was sold to British families. I know there was one portion that went to local people by allotment at $10 an acre—a small portion on the eastern side of the reserve.

Mr. BENNETT: That was not sold by auction?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No.

Mr. BENNETT: Does not the law require it to be sold by auction?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It was sold to the Soldier Settlement Board. It had gone out of the control of the Department of Indian Affairs, and it was sold to the board who made this adjustment.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Was not a large block of that Saddle lake reserve disposed of to one corporation or organization, and by them resold, they being in full control?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend is referring to the British families settled under the Hebridean association. They were settled by the Soldier Settlement Board on these lands which were assumed to be required for soldier settlers but were not, and which were subsequently settled by these Hebrideans.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I did not suppose that the Hebrideans, who were brought out under the Scottish Immigration Aid Association, had settled there at all.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The minister (Mr. Forke) now tells me that they were not; they were British settlers who were put on the land under the British Empire settlement scheme.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Then no large portion of the reserve was disposed of en bloc to any organization or association?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No; only in so far as the Soldier Settlement Board acquired it at $10 an acre.

Mr. SPENCER: Was $10 an acre the average price of raw land around the Saddle lake reserve?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I cannot say; I should think so.

Mr. SPENCER: Perhaps the Minister of Immigration can tell us.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It happened prior to our time; the allotment was made under the previous government. But $10 an acre was a fair price for raw land in that vicinity at that time.

Mr. KENNEDY: What reserves in the Peace river country have been voted on by Indians?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): None as yet.

Mr. KENNEDY: Was a vote taken last summer?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No; an attempt was made but we did not get the Indians together.

Mr. KENNEDY: Is it the intention to take a vote again?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This summer.

Item agreed to.

Indians—Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and Northwest Territories, $918,257.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Will the minister explain the ramifications of this vote? It is a large vote and there is an increase.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The largest proportion of the vote, $40,000, is for destitute Indians, to meet treaty obligations. The three prairie provinces cover a very considerable area and we require this additional amount. I emphasize the necessity for doing something, along with the provincial government, to provide hunting grounds for the Indians apart from the reserves on which they live. If we cannot succeed in doing that, and the Indians come into competition with the white man and are obliged to earn their livelihood, they will starve to death. That is as the situation appears to us. Consequently we are constantly asked for more money to relieve destitution and for illness resulting from destitution, and we have pared these sums to the lowest possible amount. These Indians are our wards; we must do the best we can for them, and without going into a detailed explanation I would say to my hon. friend that every dollar of this amount will be needed for the purpose for which it is voted.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: In regard to the policy of the department I should like to ask the minister whether it is contemplated that the Indians will have to earn their living by hunting, and if so, whether it is a good thing to bring young Indians to boarding schools, keep them there for six or eight years, then turn them out again without having given them the opportunity to acquire hunting habits.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have given this question very considerable attention and I have watched the development of some of these young people, so I might say that I have very great hopes of making a change in connection with the young Indians whom we can put at once into the occupation of farming. For example, take the Blood reserve in Alberta; we have an allocation of land for the young student as soon as he is ready to leave school, and we endeavour to build a small house for him and to become responsible for the purchase of stock and implements, although in a very limited way. We have every prospect of success there, and the reason I lay so much emphasis on this is because I am led to believe it will be successful through what I have seen on the Six Nations reserve in Ontario. Of course there are good and bad Indians just as there are good and bad white men, but on that reserve they are making a fair success of agriculture. However, in answer to my hon. friend's direct question about the hunting Indian, the northern Indian, who is brought to school and then turned loose at the age of fifteen or sixteen years, neither a hunter nor a half-trained white man; that is the problem which is giving us the most concern at the present time. The Indians who live in agricultural areas usually work for the surrounding farmers, and they make good workmen. I am not decrying the advantages of education to the young Indian, but we should have something to put him at as soon as he leaves school in order that he may earn his livelihood, and we have not overcome that difficulty as yet, although we are giving it very careful consideration.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Just one other question in connection with these industrial schools. Would it not be well to encourage the young Indians to become Canadian citizens, or to make it possible for them to become Canadian citizens, in order that they might assume the full responsibilities of citizenship?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Of course that is the whole idea behind the education given them, and it is the solution of the whole difficulty. However, when that happy condition will be attained is a different matter. I do think that the quicker we teach them the virtuous ways of the white man and his methods of earning a livelihood the better it will be for our Indian wards and the sooner they will be able to assume the white man's responsibility. That is what we have in view.

Mr. BENNETT: I think perhaps the minister might have presented the other side of the picture as well. There is no doubt that in some parts of western Canada the Indians have produced very substantial quantities of grain. In Saskatchewan, say south of the Saskatchewan river; in Alberta, say south of Strathcona, and in Manitoba, they have produced very substantial quantities of grain. Perhaps the minister has the information with him, and I am sure the committee would be interested to know the number of bushels of grain produced by the Indians in those provinces last year. I visited two of the reserves last year and was greatly taken with the improved conditions under which they are carrying on agriculture. I am not an authority upon agriculture at all, but the amount of grain they produced was really very wonderful. At one place, as the minister will recall, they had an elevator which was subsequently sold; they had many thousands of bushels of grain which they sold during the year; they had good horses, some excellent cattle and good equipment. In some instances very active government supporters were anxious to sell them increased quantities of equipment to an extent far in excess of their requirements; no doubt the minister will recollect that in one case so much of this machinery was sold that if they had produced enough grain to utilize the number of harvesting machines in their possession they might have ranked with the great grain producers of the world. However, that condition was overcome in due season, like most things of the world; we will get them in due season if we faint not. I think the committee might be interested in hearing just what these Indians produced last year; I think the result is highly creditable to those who have had the responsibility of conducting the business of the Indian department in its various ramifications.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I want to make it clear that only a small proportion of our Indian population earn their livelihood through agriculture; if all Indians did so our difficulties would be ended. I am not pleading for the Indian capable of earning his livelihood in agriculture but I am pleading very strongly for the Indian, wherever he may be, in whatever province of Canada, who is not engaged in agriculture and who is having rather a difficult time. However, as my hon. friend has pointed out, I think it would be of interest to the committee to know just how the Indians have come out in the production of grain. Last year in the three prairie provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta they had 37,307 acres of land under crop which produced 603,621 bushels of wheat; of oats they had about 21,000 acres under cultivation, which produced about 398,000 bushels; of barley they had 4,441 acres under cultivation, which produced 75,435 bushels. Then we have a very detailed statement of the amount of vegetables they raised, the hay and so on; I think the figures I have given will suffice, but if the committee desire I will give a copy to Hansard and have the complete statement put in.

Mr. KENNEDY: What seems to be the chief difficulty in getting a vote taken among the Indians in regard to the disposal of some of the reserves, such as those in the settled parts of the Peace River country?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Well, as my hon. friend knows, it is very difficult to get those Indians on the reserve, and he also knows that unless we get a fairly representative vote we are likely to have trouble with the band because they were not consulted. That happens on almost every occasion, but we are making a determined effort to have that vote taken this year, and I hope the vote will represent the great majority of the band interested.

Mr. KENNEDY: Is it necessary that the Indians meet on the reserve?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY: Is it not possible to take the vote when they come to get their treaty money?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, we have followed the principle of having the votes taken on the reserve. I had exactly the same difficulty on a small reserve west of Edmonton, where we tried for three years to get a vote taken. Last year we finally succeeded.

Mr. KENNEDY: One of the great troubles in connection with these reserves in the Peace River country occurs in grasshopper years. Although the neighbouring farmers do their best to cope with the plague, the reserve close by seem to contain a plentiful supply of grasshoppers for the whole community. That fact has stirred up a tremendous amount of feeling in the community.

Mr. COOTE: I have just one remark to make in connection with this item. I should like to ask the minister to give us an assurance that the young Indians after they leave these industrial schools will be given the necessary equipment with which to start farming on the reserves. I have had a good many complaints from the Indians to the effect that they have had difficulty in getting the department to give them equipment. I do not suggest that there is ground for all these complaints, but I would like to have the assurance of the minister that he will be as liberal as possible in the furnishing of equipment to these young Indians who are willing to start farms of their own.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think I can give my hon. friend that assurance, but I would not promise that we will satisfy the young Indians, because they want a full set of equipment to start with. We try to be as generous as we can in starting up a young man in that way, and I do not think there is any complaint to be made.

Mr. LUCAS: Do these Indians receive agricultural education at the school?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. LUCAS: How much land is there in connection with the school at Edmonton?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think the farm consists of about eight hundred acres.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Does the young Indian have to pay for the equipment out of the proceeds of the crops, or is it given to him?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We expect him to pay for it. He does not always do so, but we lead him to understand that he is under an obligation to repay us.

Mr. SPENCER: Is this equipment charged at full price, or at the cost price plus a certain percentage of profit?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In the case of animals, we have to purchase them at the going price, and the Indian is charged exactly what we pay for them. We can make a very advantageous arrangement regarding implements, because we are buying for about a dozen reservations. We get the advantage of a discount, which is given to the Indians.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Is the department contemplating doing anything regarding the debts some of these Indians have incurred? I should like the minister to state whether some of this vote is for that purpose, or whether there is any provision made for that.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have investigated all these accounts, and where receipts can be produced from the Indian agent we feel there is an obligation on the department to pay. Unfortunately there were a lot of transactions where the agent was never consulted, a sale direct to the Indian. We have made no attempt to clean these up, but year by year we have been wiping off all these old accounts where receipts could be produced. We have not been using any of these votes for that purpose, but have endeavoured to do this by using the band funds and other means. I would like to say that we have them all cleared up, but there was a very considerable amount when I started in to fix up this mess.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Do I understand from the minister that there has never been a vote for this purpose?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am informed that we have never had a vote for this purpose.

Item agreed to.

Indians—Yukon, $19,000.

Mr. SPENCER: How many Indians are there in the Yukon territory?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): 1,528.

Item agreed to.

Indians—general, $231,500.

Mr. LUCAS: Would the minister tell the committee the total Indian population of Canada?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is somewhere in the neighbourhood of 100,000.

Item agreed to.

Indian education, including the construction of school buildings, $2,160,310.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Would the minister be good enough to give us a general statement in regard to this item of Indian education and how it is carried on?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): With the exception of the day schools, this work is carried on very largely by the religious organizations—such churches as the Roman Catholic, the Anglican, the United church and the Presbyterian. In the day schools all the teachers are employed by the government. They must be certificated, and they are inspected by the provincial school inspectors of the province in which they are located. Under the old system the churches asumed the whole responsibility regarding the boarding schools, and received a per capita grant for this work from the government. When I came here I changed the system somewhat, as I found most of the church organizations were in rather severe financial difficulties. We took over such buildings as we deemed to be decent and worth while repairing, and commenced a program of construction of new buildings. We have been spending in the neighbourhood of $500,000 or $550,000 annually in the purchase and construction of new buildings, keeping in mind the necessities of the organizations which have this work in hand, and the necessities of the communities in which they are built. In the British Columbia vote there is an additional $100,000, due to a recommendation made by the joint committee which dealt with this matter last year.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I wanted to get a comparison of the Indians educated in the day schools and in the so-called private schools.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We are constructing a new boarding school at Shubenacadie, Nova Scotia. We believe better training can be given the Indian child in the boarding school than in the day school, because it is very difficult to get him to be at all regular in his attendance at the day school. We have him under control all the time in the boarding school, as he remains there during the whole school period. In the day schools, which are located in all the provinces, we have 4,005 boys and 3,859 girls, or a total of 7,864. In our residential schools, which are located in Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, the Northwest Territories, British Columbia and the Yukon, we have 3,208 boys, 3,433 girls, or a total of 6,641. Therefore there are all told about 14,000 children attending school.

Mr. BRADY: In the Indian schools, particularly the boarding schools, does the department supervise or control in any way the program, for instance, of technical and agricultural work? Is there a defined system whereby the young Indian, instead of receiving the ordinary education which is of little value to him, really becomes a productive agent? I ask the question because I know from my experience in visiting the Indian schools that there is a great waste. In other words, they reach a certain stage; they learn to read and write and a few other things, and then they have absolutely nothing to fall back upon. Is there a defined program of technical education of the Indian boys?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The very difficulty that my hon. friend mentions is one to which we have given some thought in an endeavour to see if we can remedy it; but if he knows anything about the Indian, his habits and environment, he will realize the difficulty. We are endeavouring to teach the girls domestic work in addition to the ordinary public school curriculum, and the boys, such outdoor work as will come to hand in any given institution. In Kamloops, for example, the boys are trained in irrigation work because in that territory the boys are going out into fruit growing areas and drier sections. In the north we give them as much education as we can in regard to agriculture, even as labourers, if need be, so that when they go out they may carry on in competition with their white brothers.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Have there been any epidemics amongst the Indians apart from the tubercular trouble?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, what the doctors call the "flu" or influenza is a very serious menace to the Indians in the wooded areas, but we have not had any serious outbreak recently. Tuberculosis is the worst enemy we have to contend with amongst the Indian tribes.

Item agreed to.

GOVERNMENT OF THE NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Department of the Interior—salaries and expenses connected with the administration of the territories, including the erection of buildings, investigation work, schools, relief to destitutes, maintenance of prisoners and insane patients, administration of the Northwest Game Act and the Wood buffalo park, etc., $200,000.

Explorations—salaries and contingencies, equipment and supplies, etc., $75,480.

Administration of Eskimo affairs, including salaries, relief, care, maintenance, education, medical supplies, travelling expenses, etc., $50,000.—Total $325,480.

Mr. SPENCER: Would the minister give the committee some information as to the number of buffalo taken from Wainwright park to the north?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): For three years we have been transferring young buffalo under two years of age from Wainwright park to the territory in the north. We started this as an experiment, but we now have a very considerable herd in the north and I doubt if we shall continue it after this year. We are sending up another contingent of buffalo this year. We feel that from this point onward the surplus stock both at Wainwright and at Lamont might very well be slaughtered and the hides sold, the government getting the advantage of the sale of the meat and the fur.

Mr. LUCAS: Has the minister any report on how the buffalo are doing in the north?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They are doing very well. They have mixed with the native herd there. True, the buffalo that are in captivity are not as large as the northern buffalo, but there is no doubt that they will be a very fine herd if they are protected.

Mr. KENNEDY: I have had some complaints regarding the refusal by the department to parties seeking licenses to buy fur in the Northwest Territories. What are the conditions in regard to that?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The act of last year was to have come into effect this year. Of course I am very anxious that we should receive some revenue out of the Northwest Territories, and we are entitled to get it, particularly as all the other provinces in Canada have a fur tax; but through a mistake in the revision of the statutes by the committee the wrong year was inserted, which would have meant that I would have to reintroduce the act at this session to have the matter rectified. I thought it well to let it go and it will come into effect next year automatically under the provisions of the act. My reason for doing this was that I received a very largely signed petition from the residents of the Northwest Territories protesting against the imposition of this tax and asking that some investigation be had with respect to the administration of affairs up there as they affect the Indians, and the white people as well, living along the Mackenzie basin. Three weeks ago I sent a representative of the Department of the Interior and a representative of the Department of Indian Affairs up there. We have given them a list of questionnaires and they are to meet the people, at convenient points which will be well advertised to the residents of the north, to take evidence not only with respect to the fur tax, but with regard to every other matter that may be agitating the minds of the residents of that territory, and to report back to the government this fall. But the act will come into effect automatically in 1929.

Mr. KENNEDY: On what grounds were certain parties refused licenses to go into the Northwest Territories to trade?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No one is refused a license who will settle down at one point. If he will designate the place where he wishes to trade, we issue the license at once, but the difficulty is that we have had so many people in the past who are known as transient traders. Our Assyrian friends are very fond of that kind of thing. As my hon. friend knows, the custom in the past among the legitimate traders has been for them to make loans either by way of supplies or of money to the trappers, who then go out and get a supply of fur and bring it back and pay their debts by the sale of that fur. But the difficulty is that along may come one of these chaps who sometimes pays cash, and who travels daily and picks up the fur that rightly belongs to the individual who has grubstaked the trapper or lent him the money, and then the travelling trader disappears out of the country. We found this was an evil which we had to take some steps to remedy, and our remedy was to give everyone a license who will settle down and trade at any given point. We want to know where they are going to trade, and we issue a license to them for that particular locality. They cannot go in and settle down at any designated point without opening what we know as a post. The man we have prohibited from trading is the trapper who travels around and picks up the fur, and usually cheats the man from whom he buys it.

Mr. MILLAR: Are any of the buffalo herd in captivity?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): None of the herd is in captivity in the sense that we have a fence around them, but we have wardens looking after them. They are in the same position as that formerly occupied by a herd of cattle.

Mr. MILLAR: Has it been found necessary to take any steps to protect them from wolves?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Does my hon. friend mean the young buffalo? No. They mix with the herd, which will defend them against the attacks of the wolves. The wolves always pull down the older and weaker buffalo, and it would be pretty dangerous for the calves if they were not protected from the wolves by the other members of the herd. Our losses from wolves in the past were not serious, but we are carrying on an open warfare against them. We pay a very high bounty for the skin, and encourage the hunting of the wolf as much as possible.

Mr. MILLAR: How much is the bounty?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Thirty dollars.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Under this vote there is investigational work carried on. What does that consist of?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The investigation is very largely investigation of the territory. For example, we have men who are investigating pastures for the reindeer. We have investigations of various matters going on there. There is the investigation, for instance, by these men who were sent up to hear the grievances and bring back reports.

Item agreed to.

Dominion Lands and Parks

Salaries of the Dominion Lands outside service, $630,000.

Dominion land contingencies, etc., $170,000.

Amount required to pay the fees of the Board of Examiners for D.L.S., of the secretary and of the sub-examiners and for travelling expenses, stationery, printing, rent of room and furniture, etc. (The fees of Messrs. F. H. Peters, W. M. Tobey and Harry B. Parry, members of the Board, and J. A. Cote, secretary, are to be paid out of this sum), $2,000.

To assist in publishing the transactions of the Association of Dominion Land Surveyors, $125.

Protection of timber, tree culture, inspection and management of forest reserves, surveys of forest resources and research in forestry and forest products, etc., $1,466,050.

Grant to Canadian Forestry Association, $4,000.

For investigations of water and power resources, including the Dominion Hydrometric survey and for the administration of the Dominion Water Power, Irrigation and Reclamation Acts, $500,000.

To cover professional assistance engaged by the governor in council to assist the departmental officers who are advising re international and boundary waterway questions, $15,000.

Amount required to meet expenses of Lake of the Woods control board, $10,000.

To provide for the expenses connected with Canadian National parks, historic sites, care of indigents in the parks, etc., and to reimburse the provincial government for the salaries of police magistrates at Banff and at Jasper, $1,315,000.

Administration of the Migratory Birds Convention Act, $58,825.

Engraving, lithographing, printing and preparation of maps, plans, reports, and kindred publications of the Dominion, including salaries and necessary materials for same, etc., $239,540.

Costs of litigation and legal expenses, $10,000.

Ordnance, admiralty and railway lands:—salaries and expenses, $28,270.

Grant to Alpine Club of Canada, $1,000.

To pay Mrs. E. S. Forbes a compassionate allowance equal to one-half of the salary of her husband, payable monthly, $1,050.

Amount required to pay salaries and expenses connected with seed grain and relief collections, etc., $47,460.

Amount required to transfer buffalo from Buffalo park, Wainright, Alta., to the Wood Buffalo park near Fort Smith, N.W.T., $15,000. Total, $4,513,320.

Mr. DICKIE: The Minister of the Interior in February last contributed an article to the Natural Resources of Canada magazine which challenged at least my admiration. He said in part:

> The great expansion of the pulp and paper industry indicated above is cause for concern as to the adequacy of pulpwood supplies to meet the future demands of the industry. It is my opinion that gross production has been developed as far as it should be, for the time being at least. Until we are more certain that our pulpwood supplies will sustain the industry on a permanent basis there is no justification for continuation of the rather hectic expansion witnessed in the past few years. Rather the time is more opportune for concentration of effort upon refinement of methods and the more complete manufacture at Canadian mills of pulpwood extracted from Canadian forests.

I wish the minister would implement these ideas with action with respect to the pulpwood situation in Canada. Last year Mr. Angus Graham, of the Quebec Forestry Association, in an address that he delivered at Tacoma on the Pacific coast, threw a little light on this subject by saying that in the province of Quebec there were 110,000 square miles of pulpwood limits, and the pulpwood averaged 6.4 cords per acre. Last year we exported from Canada 1,500,000 cords of pulpwood. That represented an area of 360 square miles denuded of pulpwood timber, to be sent across the line to enhance the prestige and prosperity of the United States. It would seem to me that this is a serious state of affairs. We sent 1,500,000 cords of pulpwood across the line when we should have manufactured it here in our own country. We received for it $15,000,000. If that 1,500,000 cords had been manufactured into paper in Canada at $65 a ton, it would have produced $80,000,000 worth of paper. Deducting the $15,000,000 that we received for this 1,500,000 cords from the $80,000,000 that we would have received had we manufactured it into paper, we have a loss of $65,000,000 to this country. If we had unlimited quantities of pulpwood the situation would be different, but as it is we can see the end of our supply. The Minister of the Interior sees the end of it and why is now not the time to put an export tax on pulpwood and let it go to the mills in our own country to be manufactured into paper here, giving employment to labour and tending to the enrichment of Canada generally? 1,500,000 cords of pulpwood, if manufactured in this country, would mean a population of 250,000 more for Canada. We are bribing people to come to this country to go on the land, to go here, there and everywhere. Why not induce them to come here by building up our industries and offering them opportunities? There is not one argument against preventing the exportation of spruce pulpwood. There may be some slight argument in favour of allowing poplar pulpwood to be sent across the line because there is hardly the demand for poplar here that we would like to see. It is a tree that grows rapidly and dies quickly. It may be all right to export poplar pulpwood across the line, until we develop the soda pulp process to a greater extend in this country. Economists tell us that it costs at least $25 a cord to raise spruce pulpwood timber here, and we are letting it go out of this country at $10 a cord. Let us look a little further into the future, and make this a country to which people will be attracted without the extraordinary inducements we have been offering them in the past.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This is a matter that has been raised almost yearly. The department have been giving the question of an export tax some consideration, and I confess that to me it appeals very strongly. But this is one of the difficulties. Immediately, it is a tax that will be borne by the Canadian who sells the wood; he will have to accept a reduced price. In the maritimes and in Quebec I am told that the competition due to the wood going out of the country has the effect of raising the price for the pulpwood manufactured in Canada. There may not be a very great deal in that argument, but it has been presented to me. May I say why I am so much interested in this? If the present quantity of wood exported continued, the revenue from an export tax of 50 cents to $1 a cord would enable us to extend our fire protection activities to a much larger degree without calling upon the treasury for any money. The objection raised when this matter has been discussed is that a large proportion of the pulpwood, particularly from the east, is under contract to American concerns. They have been coming into Canada and establishing plants at a pretty rapid rate during the last year or two. As to overproduction, we have reached that stage now, and I may point out to my hon. friend that beyond placing an export tax on our wood we have very little control over the provincial forests, other than those in the three prairie provinces and in the railway belt in British Columbia. But in Manitoba, where a very considerable export was going on, we now have established a mill and we do control the territory from which the operators get their supplies of pulpwood. I have made the deal contingent on those people purchasing nearly all the wood offered by the farmers and those who have private limits. I propose this year to have a survey of the cutting going on in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, and next year I shall try to limit the extent of those operations. I know some of my friends from Manitoba will not like to hear this, because many of the farmers in the northern district earn their livelihood by cutting and selling pulpwood, and most of it goes over into the United States. Now we are keeping the bulk of it in Canada, and it will be manufactured at the Pine Falls mill in Manitoba. I do not think they will require to manufacture a single stick of pulpwood cut off their own limit; all will be purchased from settlers in the locality. That is what we have done where we control the situation. I am in hopes that our action will be followed by the provinces in dealing with this matter.

Mr. DICKIE: Already British Columbia, Ontario and Quebec prohibit the exportation of timber except from privately owned lands. That is why I am asking the government to impose an export tax. This parliament is the only body with power to do so. I do not care for an embargo; I think an export tax should be levied. We have just passed the apex of the lumber industry, and from now on it will begin to decline. I have seen the forests wiped out in several states of the union, and I realize the seriousness of our own position. When we lose our forest wealth we are losing one of our greatest assets. It is all nonsense to talk of the yearly increment keeping pace with the yearly cut. It was said the other day that in Anticosti the annual growth would keep pace with the cutting of the timber. That is arrant nonsense to all who know anything about forest conditions. Let any hon. gentleman the next time he goes to Hull count the annular rings on the pulpwood piled along the street at the boundary, and he will find that thirty-five, forty and fifty years is the age of those trees. Our spruce pulpwood is the best we have. Let us conserve it. Spend money ad lib to protect it, if possible, from insect pests and fire. But let us stop exportation, which is economically foolish. It can be done, sir, and now is the time.

Mr. MILLAR: Does the tree-planting forestry stations vote come under this item?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It comes under protection of timber, but my hon. friend may as well proceed.

Mr. MILLAR: Since the forestry station at Indian Head is near my home I have gathered some information which I should like to present to the committee. The Indian Head tree-planting station was established in 1904. Another was established at Sutherland, Saskatchewan, in 1914. The purpose of these stations is the propagation and distribution of seedlings and cuttings for the formation of windbreaks; permanent plantations for forestry research; demonstration of fruit-growing and horticultural possibilities under tree protection. The early distribution of seedlings and cuttings to bona fide farmers has increased rapidly, from 58,800 to 47 farmers in 1904, to over 5,000,000 annually to between 5,500 and 6,000 farmers. Up to the spring of 1927, 93,000,000 broad leaf seedlings and cuttings and 2,568,000 evergreen seedlings and transplants have been distributed for prairie planting. This represents the establishment of between 45,000 and 50,000 windbreaks and shelter belts in the three prairie provinces. Observations are made annually by tree-planting inspectors of thousands of plantations. In this way the service maintains a close check on the success of the distribution scheme. In 1921, 7,643 plantations were observed, and 6,292, or 83 per cent, were found to be in a good healthy condition; 1,331, or 14 per cent, were classed as in fair shape, and likely to respond to better treatment. In 1901 there were only 54 farmers requesting assistance in tree-planting. 1927 was a banner year in prairie tree-planting. 12,528 farms were listed for inspection either for further tree-planting or for new plantations. Indications point to a heavier demand in 1928. The appropriation for tree-planting in 1910 was $29,592. At the time the distribution averaged not more than 2,500,000 trees, and instruction service was given to 6,718 farmers. In 1926 the appropriation necessary to carry on the work had increased to $79,000, but close to 7,000,000 trees were being distributed, and inspection and transplanting services were being given to over 12,500 farmers. The estimate for 1928-29 is over $94,000, an increase of about 16 per cent. There are now 40,000 plantations, and these valued at $300 each would represent $12,000,000, or, $11,200,000 in excess of the total cost since 1901. That gives in a concise form something of the work that is being done. For every dollar expended at this station the country is getting a full dollars' worth in return. The work is excellently supervised, and is carried on in a way which is likely to bring continued success such as has been achieved in the past. It is only fair that I should take this opportunity to express this appreciation of the work that is being done there.

Mr. FRASER: On May 3 the minister replied to certain questions that I had on the order paper in regard to the discharge of a fire ranger in the railway belt in British Columbia, a Mr. W. E. White. The information is that after fourteen years' service Mr. White was discharged from the department for active political partisanship, although no complaint about his services had been received by the officials of the department. The minister says that he was discharged for active political partisanship. How is the fact established that he was a political partisan?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There are about five or six thousand employees in the department and I cannot answer that question. I do not think we have the information here but we could get it at six o'clock.

Mr. FRASER: Will the minister have that information here after eight o'clock?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, I will get it during recess.

Mr. FRASER: I understand that an investigation was held and the report submitted to the department. This man requested a copy of the report and it was refused him. He thinks, and I agree with him, that he is entitled to a copy of the report.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Was it an investigation before a commission?

Mr. FRASER: Yes, by a commissioner.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): He is certainly entitled to it.

Mr. FRASER: The department refused it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not understand that.

Mr. COOTE: I wish to refer to the regulations in regard to the control of natural gas. I have here a clipping from the Calgary

Herald from which I learn that a gentleman named Davies, who is said to be an expert on this subject, states that:

> Gas equivalent to 87½ carloads of coal is being wasted at Turner valley daily, and 140,000 horse-power are being burned up daily as a result of gas wastage from wells now under production.

He states that the total gas production in Turner valley at the present time is estimated to be 91,500,000 cubic feet per day. Further on this statement is made:

> Taking the figures of 22,000,000 as being the total average used each day, at present there are 91,000,000 less 22,000,000 or 69,000,000 cubic feet being burned each day. During the coldest winter days this amount would drop to 58.000,000, but in the warm summer days it would rise to 81,000,000. . . . . Then, 20,000 cubic feet of Turner valley gas under average temperature and pressure in Calgary equals approximately one ton of good Drumheller coal. Then, 20,000,000 cubic feet of natural gas equals 1,000 tons of coal and 70,000,000 cubic feet of gas equals 3,500, tons of coal. There are forty tons to a car; therefore this means eighty-seven and a half cars of coal being wasted each day.

I will not quote further from this article but I wish to direct the attention of the minister to the fact that, according to this authority, we are wasting three times as much gas as we are using in the Turner valley field. That means that if we have a sufficient supply of gas to last Calgary and other towns sixty years, we are going to use it up in twenty years and people will then have to go back to coal. Natural gas or even its equal is something which it is almost impossible for us to produce once we have wasted it, and we shall have to go back to coal. There are many places in Ontario and the United States where natural gas has been wasted, and now that the fields are exhausted the people have had to resort to burning coal at a greater cost and certainly at greater inconvenience. Natural gas is possibly the best fuel for cooking and heating which we have, although of course it would not be difficult to get the hon. member for Bow River to except Alberta coal. I bring this matter to the attention of the minister because I find in the regulations, as printed and distributed by the department, the following under regulation 29:

> In case natural gas is discovered through boring operations on a location, the lessee shall take all reasonable and proper precautions to prevent the waste of such natural gas, and his operations shall be so conducted as to enable him, immediately upon discovery, to control and prevent the escape of such gas.

Is the minister enforcing that regulation? Most of these wells are drilled on Dominion government land and I am sure he will realize that something should be done. I ask him now whether he is taking steps to enforce the regulations; if not perhaps he would enlighten the committee as to the reason for not doing so.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The matter is one to which we have been giving a great deal of attention in our department, because the waste of natural gas is rather serious. We have tried to study the question and the results of our investigation would indicate that we cannot shut off that gas. The difficulty of holding the piping, under the most tremendous pressure which we encountered in the first wells, has been overcome by the cementing of the pipe into the limestone rock before drilling into the parent body itself. I had thought of reinforcing the piping from that point upward so that we might be able to hold the pressure. But after we had investigated that scheme to some extent we discovered that with any volume of flow through the four and a half inch pipe, you cannot make it a profitable undertaking for the extracting of the gasoline content, so that to that extent the well would be useless. We had therefore to abandon that idea. The thing that interested me most happened about three weeks ago. A gentleman said that if he got the assurance that he would have no difficulty in procuring gas and delivering it, he would undertake to organize a company to lay a pipeline as far as Winnipeg, piping this gas to Winnipeg and intervening towns and hamlets, and using it to that extent. As my hon. friend knows, there has been a very decided aversion to the exportation of gas; for about three years attempts have been made to secure permission to export gas from a well near the international boundary, and no one felt like taking the responsibility of permitting the export of that gas. Of course in that case it is not escaping, but if the oil industry in the Turner valley is to go on we must make provision for free flowage from the parent supply or it cannot be profitably taken off. We have proven that, and some method must be found to take care of the extra amount of gas which cannot be utilized for the purposes for which they are now using it. We have thought of lampblack, but as my hon. friend knows that article is so cheap that it is hardly worth while making the venture, and in addition it is a very expensive way of using the gas. However, I wish to assure my hon. friend that the Alberta government have become interested in this question and they propose to study it. I have been in communication with them and have offered such information as we have gathered, and in conjunction with them we are putting our men to work to see if something cannot be done to utilize this escaping gas, which I agree should be curtailed and stopped as nearly as it is possible to do so without injuring the industry itself, because I think my hon. friend will agree that the industry is rather valuable. I may be frank in saying that I have thought that in connection with the territory we control we should discourage the sinking of any more wells until some method has been worked out for the utilization of this surplus product.

Mr. COOTE: I am glad to hear the minister say that he would like to stop the wastage of this gas, because this is really a very serious question. According to the estimates which I read, an amount of gas equal to about 3,400 tons of coal is being burned up every day.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There was one thing I forgot to mention. About 60 per cent of the present volume of production is not under the control of the federal government; it comes from privately owned property.

Mr. COOTE: It seems to me that the government might very well go so far as to exercise control over that property also; I do not think that would be going beyond the powers which we should exercise. Let me bring to the attention of the committee and the minister section 29a of the regulations:

> In the event of natural gas being discovered through boring operations conducted on a petroleum and natural gas location acquired under the provisions of the regulations—if the escape of such gas is not prevented—the minister may take such effective means as may appear to him to be necessary or expedient in the public interest to control and prevent the escape of the natural gas—

It seems to me that those words are very clear; if it is in the public interest to prevent this waste the minister has the power to step in and take any measures which may be necessary to that end. Personally I think the minister might go the limit in preventing this waste, and I also think that if he has no effective way of preventing the waste of gas from the wells already drilled certainly he should discourage the drilling of any more wells until such time as he is willing or able to take measures to prevent this waste. It may be going quite a long way to suggest that we prevent the drilling of these wells, but I think this is one of our most valuable natural resources, and in the exploitation of our resources there is nothing I dislike more than to see that gas burning away every day. There is such a volume of gas burned that at night the reflection of the fire can be seen for a distance of fifty miles. It is quite a sight, and is worth going a long distance to see, but every time I see it I am impressed with the way we are wasting our natural resources. It is a shame; I do not know any other word for it. I do not want to lay all the blame on the minister; possibly he finds himself in a difficult situation, but if he would enforce the regulations which I read and which were in force when the leases were granted I think he could stop the waste. The last regulation which I read gives him power to act in the matter, and as far as I am concerned I would go a long way in supporting him if he would stop the waste of the gas.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): While we might make all the regulations in the world we could apply them only where we have jurisdiction, and we have not jurisdiction over privately owned lands in Alberta. I am not seeking to escape in that way; I do not want my hon. friend to think I am looking for a way out, but two difficulties are created. One difficulty is that the same field of gas which is under the privately owned lands is also under the lands controlled by the Dominion, upon which we issue leases. That land we can control, but if we shut down our people immediately they would have a complaint because the people on the other land could continue. That difficulty can be overcome only by co-operation between the two governments. My hon. friend knows the value of that industry; if we shut it off at once and stop the individuals or companies who have spent large sums of money to develop that field we would face a great deal of contentious criticism. However, I am thoroughly alive to the wastage which is going on and no one deplores it more than I do. I would hesitate very seriously before issuing a lease which would permit more wells to be sunk on Dominion lands until we find at least some partial remedy for this waste.

Mr. COOTE: Is it not true that a number of wells have been started on Dominion lands within the last year? We had this question up last session, and I know the minister then admitted the importance of the matter. If these wells were allowed to be drilled last year and we do not take any steps now, probably a number of additional wells will be drilled this year and it will be all the more difficult to stop it. This has been going on now for two years; it is getting greater all the time and that is why I am taking the time of the committee to try and interest them in the matter. I think parliament would not be going too far if we put privately owned lands under the same regulation, provided we have power to do so.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We cannot do that.

Mr. COOTE: I do not think we should allow any person to waste such a valuable resource, and personally I do not think we would be going too far if we took that action.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN: The item under consideration is No. 280, page 57 of the estimates.

Mr. SPENCER: The first comment I have to make is on the way this item is set out in the estimates. There are eighteen or more very important items under one vote, and I think these should be taken one at a time, because they are all quite different. The Chairman has called all at one time a vote of over $4,500,000, comprising a large number of different items, and if we are to discuss this vote in any reasonable way it should be taken up item by item.

While we are on this vote I should like to say a few words to the minister. He, as well as the rest of the house, knows that there have been reasonable or unreasonable charges made against the department over which he is the head. It is not fair to him, to us, or to the people at large to have these criticisms being continually made against any department of the government if they are unfounded. The charges that have been made cover a great many items, but in order to discuss them I do not think it necessary to hold up all the items in the estimates relating to the Department of the Interior; if the minister would just pick out some particular item or items to which these charges have reference, that should be sufficient. It would save time in getting the estimates through, and it would give the house an opportunity to discuss any matter of importance that might be involved in these various charges. I fully appreciate that the minister is head of only too many departments, and I do not see myself how he can personally keep in detailed touch with everything that goes on under him. I am therefore going to ask the minister to be good enough to take some item in his estimates under which he can discuss these charges.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There is no particular item upon which it can be taken up, because these charges—I would call them so-called charges—have been levelled at the department and departmental officials. They have referred not only to the Department of the Interior, but to all departments of the government.

Mr. SPENCER: I understand the most of them are made against the Department of the Interior.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What does my hon. friend want me to do in the matter? If he will mention any particular charge I will answer it.

Mr. SPENCER: There are not many hon. members in the house to-night, and I suggest that one item be left over until to-morrow.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I should prefer to discuss it right now.

Mr. SPENCER: I understand that a man by the name of McClymont was engaged as an accountant in the Department of the Interior. I believe he was told by a deputy minister of that department to make certain investigations, and these took some seven months. I want the minister to correct me if any statement I make is not right. A report was made in due course and signed by the deputy minister of the department, but I understand no action was taken regarding it. The compiler of the report at a later date threatened through the press to make certain statements with regard to what had been going on in the department, and I believe an order in council was passed appointing a special commission to look into the charges, or, as the minister says, the so-called charges. This commission was composed of one man, a Mr. Smith, who unfortunately has been known in Ottawa for a number of years as a very strong partisan. This commission sat in camera, or what I would call double camera, because certain information which was requested to be taken down was not taken down at all. After this commission had finished its work a report was made that not one dollar of the public money had been misappropriated, and this statement has been commented on, I understand, privately and publicly. The man himself has been let out from the department, and I should like to know from the minister if he was an efficient accountant, and why he was let out. I should like to know why he has not been punished if these charges are false, and why no recommendations have been carried out if they are true. I should be glad to have the minister answer these questions.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think my hon. friend has given me a pretty big job; if I were to attempt to answer all the statements that have been made by this individual it would take several hours. Anyone who has read his statements in the public press, particularly the western members who are fully cognizant of the statutes under which the department have to carry on their affairs, should at once come to the conclusion that if all the statements made by this individual were on a par with those made by him with respect to the administration of the school lands in western Canada, not very much credence could be given to any of them. By the way, has my hon. friend read the report of the commissioner?

Mr. SPENCER: No, I have not read it all.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I suggest that he read it all, and that he also read the evidence. While the evidence was being taken in this building there was no attempt to exclude the public, but these so-called charges were made against the officials of the department, and surely they were entitled to the opportunity of refuting the statements made against them. That was done, and that was all that was done.

This individual has repeatedly made the public statement that the Department of the Interior had, through their administration of the school lands fund and the purchase of school lands in western Canada, paid $100,000,000 more than they were entitled to pay. There is a simple answer to that and that is that he assumes we are to ignore statutes and agreements and to charge simply the 5 per cent rate rather than the 7 per cent rate that we as trustees were to collect from purchasers of school lands in arrears. That is how he arrives at the $100,000,000. That is one statement he makes. My hon. friends, I understand, have met this individual and have discussed matters with him for several hours.

Mr. SPENCER: Will the minister give his authority for that?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is the information I have. If I am wrong, my hon. friend is quite at liberty to say so. My hon. friends have also put on the order paper certain requests for information with respect to the sale of school lands. It is a fact, is it not, that we have them on the order paper?

[Mr. Spencer.]

I neglected to file the complete files in connection with those matters. May I say this, that with the single exception of a statement made that we had purchased chain which turned out to be anchor chain instead of logging chain which we thought we were purchasing, the department apparently, so far as I can learn, has not done anything amiss. I have the utmost confidence in Mr. Smith and I know of no reason on earth why he should care to shield the department. Those were not the instructions he got and he has not been in the habit of doing that, because he is an honourable gentleman. He had all the evidence that this man had to offer. He asked this man, on half a dozen occasions, as the evidence will disclose, if that was all the evidence he had to offer, and according to the evidence he said that he was through; that every statement he had to make had been presented and was embodied in the report. I do not wish to make with respect to this individual statements that would reflect in any way upon him, but anyone who has read the statements in the newspapers—and I have been bombarded with them now for nearly two years and I have never yet met this individual—will consider them a sufficient answer in themselves, without going much further into them. My hon. friend has asked certain questions and I propose to take up certain of the charges and to give the committee an answer as to those particular ones. I shall be glad at the first opportunity to file the complete papers in connection with each case in order that these matters may be fully investigated. My hon. friends will pardon me if I do not take them just in sequence. The first one is as follows:

Refund Case 1

Ethel Truscott, widow, Battleford — $100 refund due her re overpayment made—sale 1060—file 31458.

This relates to the sale of the southeast quarter of section 11, township 50, range 2, west of the 4th meridian, which land was sold at Lloydminster on the 23rd June, 1909, to Mr. Alex Gordon at the rate of $10 per acre, and was assigned in April, 1911, to Mr. George C. Hodson.

In July, 1912, Mr. L. H. Truscott paid into the department $72 on account of accrued interest and under date of the 19th July, 1912, a receipt for the money was sent to Mr. Truscott. and he was advised that said receipt was made out in the name of Mr. George C. Hodson. the recorded holder, and further that if he had acquired the interest of said George C. Hodson it would be necessary to file an unconditional assignment from Mr. Hodson to himself and have same registered in the department in order that the land might be recorded in his name and the department recognize him as the recorded holder.

In March, 1919, Mr. Edward Plater advised the department that Mr. Lewis H. Truscott was killed at the war in September, 1918, and that he was endeavouring to acquire this land from the estate and Mr. Plater was then advised as to the necessary action to take in order to have the land transferred to him.

In November, 1919, Messrs. Livingston and Atkinson who were acting on behalf of the representatives of the estate of the late Mr. Truscott advised the department that the widow was left in poor circumstances with a small family and that they thought it only fair that she be not required to pay any penalty such as an increased rate of interest, as provided for in the amendment to the Dominion Lands Act of 1918.

The writers were advised in reply that as the original purchaser of the land was not exempt from paying the increased rate of interest by virtue of his having served overseas, and that as the land was not registered in Mr. Truscott's name prior to his enlistment, it would seem that the estate would not be exempt from paying the increased rate of interest.

In May, 1920, Mr. Edward Plater forwarded to the department letters of administration of the estate, together with an assignment from the representative of the estate to himself, on the strength of which entry for the land was placed in the name of Mr. Plater in June, 1920.

On the 28th June, 1920, Plater remitted a draft for the sum of $2,116.89, as payment in full. This amount, however, when applied as short $2.03, which was afterwards remitted by Plater, and patent issued in his favour bearing date of the 25th August, 1920.

It would appear that Mr. McClymont's claim that Mrs. Truscott is entitled to a refund of $100 would be due to the fact that she was charged the regular rates of interest instead of the old rate of 5 per cent on the outstanding principal. This refund, however, was not allowed in view of the facts as set out above; furthermore the only amount paid on account by Truscott was $72.00 in the year 1912, the payments made in 1920 being made by Plater after he had acquired the land by purchase.

That is No. 1. May I say in passing that I have no authority to grant refunds of any sort? I am acting as trustee for the school land fund in this case for all the prairie provinces and it is agreed that when arrears accrue on school land, the rate of interest shall be seven per cent. That is statutory and we have no control over it. That is the explanation in regard to the claim that we have retained out of that sale $100 which are not entitled to retain. Refund No. 2 is as follows:

S. McKeown, Saskatchewan, farmer—$100. Refund due him on sales 495-496—cheque sent in for $478.—Only $378 credited.

This relates to the south half of section 11, township 18, range 28, west of the second meridian, file 3025, S. L. At an auction sale of school lands held at Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, on May 26, 1903, Mr. Andrew McKeown purchased this half section and assigned his interest therein in 1905 to Stephen McKeown. In December, 1911, Mr. McKeown tendered a draft for $478.44 and this was applied as follows:—Principal, $263.10—interest $115,34, while the receipt issued for $478.44, showing principal as $363.10 or $100 over the amount actually credited to the accounts.

This was not discovered until recently and we have found that we are in error in that extent. Of course the land has since been sold to Mr. Forsythe, who was granted patent for the land and as soon as we can make an adjustment of the case we are prepared to refund the overpayment on that account.

John Gair, farmer, Killam, Alberta—

Some of my hon. friends will know him. This is one of the cases that I helped to adjust. This is a case again where the most misleading statements are made with respect to school land sales and taxes.

Refund Case 3

John Gair, farmer, Killam, Alberta—$107 refund due him re overpayment of N.H. 11-43-13 4.

This relates to the west half of section 11, township 43, range 13, west of the 4th meridian, files 159518-159520 S.L.

According to our records Mr. Gair acquired this half section on the 17th November, 1916, at an auction sale of school lands held at Sedgewick, Alberta.

Mr. Gair apparently being unable to meet the indebtedness on the half section made application to the department to have the sale of the southwest quarter cancelled and have the moneys paid thereon applied on the northwest quarter.

I may say that I consulted with the provincial authorities in Edmonton about this very matter. It was in the early days when we were beginning the consolidation of these lands.

The provincial authorities, who seemed very intimate with the case, were agreeable to the consolidation of these sales and Mr. Gair was advised that if he would file a quit claim deed of his interest in the southwest quarter, the department would cancel the sale and apply the moneys paid thereon on the northwest quarter which he wished to retain, on the distinct understanding that there would be no refund of any moneys overpaid after making the adjustment.

It would appear, after making the necessary adjustments, that there was a credit balance of $702.62, which was retained by the department.

From the records I can find no foundation for the claim of Mr. McClymont that the department owes Gair $107. I might also refer you to Mr. Stafford's memorandum of the 26th ultimo addressed to the deputy minister in connection with this particular case.

What I want to make clear is this, that where there is a consolidation, where we got a quit claim deed for a portion of the property under sale and the moneys are applied on the balance of the property, we do not if there is an over-payment make any refund. We consider that the peaceful possession of the land for a period of from eight to ten years fully justifies us in keeping these moneys. May I say that if there is anything wrong about this, it is in agreement between ourselves and the provincial governments, whose trustees we are in connection with the administration of these school land funds.

Refund Case 4

Robert Robertson, Lanark, Ontario—$357 refund due him re overpayment on sales 3431-3433.

This relates to section 11, township 10, range 6, east of the principal meridian, files 13380-81-82-83 S.L.

This section was acquired by Mr. Robert Robertson by virtue of assignments registered from the former recorded holders.

The department made several demands from Mr. Robertson for payment of the arrears and in 1919 he communicated with the department, pointing out that owing to the war and the moratorium, he was unable to collect moneys due him, therefore was not in a position to reduce the indebtedness.

In 1922 he filed a declaration that he had erected on the lands very substantial improvements. In March, 1924, Mr. Robertson approached the department, requesting that he be permitted to surrender his interest in the sales comprising the east half of the section, and have the moneys paid by him applied on account of the purchase price of the west half, and Mr. Robertson represented at the time that he was about 80 years of age and that he was desirous of cleaning up all matters of this nature before he passed away. Representations were also made on his behalf by other interested parties, and in view of the proposed amendment to the Dominion Lands Act to provide for consolidation of sales, the department agreed to grant the request of Mr. Robertson, but it was clearly understood that no refund would be made of any moneys after consolidation had taken place.

After we had made the necessary adjustments and cancelled the sales comprising the east half of the section, it was found that there was a credit balance of $357.44, which money was retained by the department.

As Mr. Robertson agreed to the consolidation under the conditions set out by the department, I claim that he is not entitled to any refund. In this case I would also draw your attention to memorandum of the 13th ultimo addressed to you by Mr. Stafford.

Refund Case 5

W. S. Featherstonaugh—$238 refund due him on account overpayment on sale 3818—file 79720.

This relates to the northeast quarter of section 29, township 32, range 4, west of the 2nd meridian, file 79720 S.L.

In regard thereto I might state that Robert W. Cumming acquired this land at Canora, Saskatchewan, by purchase at public auction on the 4th November, 1912.

In February, 1914, Messrs. Langworthy and McComber, barristers, of Port Arthur, advised the department that their client, William S. Fetherstonhaugh of Cochrane, Ontario, had acquired this land from Mr. Cumming, and under date of the 12th March, 1914, the writers were advised that in order for Mr. Fetherstonhaugh to be recognized by the department it would be necessary to file a quit claim deed from Mr. Cumming to himself and have same registered in the department.

Several demands were made from Cumming, the recorded holder of the land, for payment of the arrears, and in October, 1918, we received a further letter from Messrs. Langworthy and McComber advising that they were forwarding a quit claim deed from Cumming to Fetherstonhaugh; that Mr. Fetherstonhaugh was a civil engineer and was away on some work, and that it would be some little time before they could get in touch with him.

In October, 1918, we advised the writers that they should file with the department the quit claim deed in their possession in order that the advisability of recording Fetherstonhaugh as the holder of the land might be considered.

In reply the writers advised the department that Mr. Fetherstonhaugh had been at the front with the Canadian forces for some considerable time, and that they were endeavouring to locate him in France and would communicate with the department further at a latter date.

In November, 1918, Messrs. Langworthy and McComber submitted for consideration an assignment from Cumming to Fetherstonhaugh, but as this was not properly executed and as further documents were required, the assignment was not registered at the time.

Numerous communications passed between the department and the interested parties in regard to the transfer of this land and in January, 1920, Mr. Fetherstonhaugh signed an agreement to pay 7 per cent on all arrears of principal and interest.

In January, 1920, Messrs. Boland and Cumming, barristers, of Yorkton, forwarded a quit claim deed in favour of Mr. Fetherstonhaugh, which was registered in the department on the 18th June, 1920.

Mr. Fethersonhaugh does not appear to have made any representations to the department for a reduction in the rate of interest charged in view of his services overseas, and had he done so his request in all likelihood would have been refused, as he did not come into possession of the land in so far as the department is concerned, until the year 1920. Mr. Fetherstonhaugh failed to make any payments on account for a considerable length of time and in view of the representations made to the department to the effect that he was not living in the district, but was residing at Calary, Alberta, we granted him an extension of time of thirty days from the 27th March last within which to make a substantial reduction in the indebtedness and we also instructed the agent of Dominion Lands at Prince Albert on the same date to have an inspector make an inspection of the land and report as to the improvements thereon and as to the advisability of cancelling the sale.

I want to make clear to the committee that we do not cancel these sales until every effort has been made and every opportunity given to the purchaser to make payments if it is at all possible for him to do so.

Refund Case 6

W. H. Kemp, Innisfail, Alberta—$700 refund due him re overpayment on H.S. 29-35-28 W. 4.

This would appear to relate to the south half of the northwest quarter of section 29, township 35, range 28, west of the 4th meridian, files 845-1742 S.L., as Mr. Kemp does not appear to have ever had any interest in the south half of this section.

In regard to this case it would appear that the northwest quarter was sold at Innisfail on the 2nd November, 1905, to Mr. Norman W. Stiles, he subsequently relinquishing his interest in the north half of the quarter section to Edgar T. Stiles by assignment.

When this assignment was registered the account for the northwest quarter was divided and a new account opened for the north half of the quarter section under the name of Edgar T. Stiles, and of the amount of the first instalment paid $70 was credited to this account.

Norman W. Stiles afterwards assigned his interest in the south half of the northwest quarter to William H. Kemp, and from checking the records it would appear that Mr. McClymont found what he supposed to be an error in the sum of $70, which he thought should have been refunded to Mr. Kemp but which amount was applied on the sale to Mr. Edgar T. Stiles. We certainly do not owe Mr. Kemp any $700 as stated by Mr. McClymont.

Refund Case 7

Peter Albers farmer, Waterglen, Alb.—refund $15,913 due him on account overpayment on section 29-43-22 W. 4th. Interior charged him $34.79 per acre, while, under the law (S.S. Act) we could only legally charge him $12.—the original departmental valuation, as this section was bought for a returned man.

This relates to section 29, township 43, range 22, west of the 4th meridian, files 11071-56312-293925 and 29642 S.L., and in regard thereto, I might state that the Secretary Treasurer of The Great War Veterans' Association of Canada wrote the department in July 1920 that John Albers and C. J. Annas, two returned soldiers, were desirous of acquiring the north half of this section through the Soldier Settlement Board and that owing to the provincial government and the board being unable to agree on a price they were unable to secure the land.

The agreement between the authorities of the province of Alberta and the board was called off shortly after the board arranged to purchase school lands for returned soldiers, consequently under date of the 12th August, 1920, we notified the secretary treasurer of the Great War Veterans' Association that Messrs. John Albers and C. J. Annas could only purchase the lands in their own right by sale at public auction, in accordance with the provisions of the Dominion Lands Act.

The land was offered for sale in November 1920 and was disposed of at Donalda, Alberta, on the 19th of that month, the south east quarter at the rate of $26.00 per acre, the south west quarter at the rate of $30.00 per acre, the north east quarter at $41.00 per acre and the north west quarter at $42.00 per acre. Mr. Peter Albers acquired the whole section.

The lands were sold at public auction and knocked down to the highest bidder in accordance with the terms and conditions of sale, and I do not think as represented by Mr. McClymont that the Soldier Settlement Act has anything to do with this case.

The lands have been paid for in full and patent issued to Mr. Peter Albers as on the 23rd May, 1921, and Mr. Albers is certainly not entitled to any refund.

Refund Case 8

C.P.R. Company—$5,377 refund due the company (principal $3,073 plus 15 years interest $2,304) on Sask. sale 4427-file 27012-fiat 272343 covering 13.65 acres land required for right-of-way for Weyburn-Lethbridge C.P.R. in 1913. We charged them $255 per acre while legally we could not charge them more than $30—the departmental valuation.

This would appear to relate to right-of-way of the Canadian Pacific Railway through the south half and north west quarter of section 11, township 8, range 30, west of the 2nd Meridian, file 27012 S.L.

In regard to this case the Canadian Pacific Railway Company made application to acquire right-of-way in the above mentioned land in October 1912, and in view of their representations the land was offered for sale, subject to reservation of the areas required for right-of-way.

When the land was disposed of by sale the south east quarter brought $190.00 per acre, the south west quarter $375.00 per acre, and the north west quarter $215.00 per acre, and the department decided to dispose of the areas required by the railway company for right-of-way at the same prices as those obtained for the areas disposed of by sale at public auction.

Under date of the 21st November 1912 an order in council was passed granted authority to sell to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company the areas required for right-of-way at the rates referred to above.

Messrs. Ewart, Scott, McLaren and Kelley, solicitors for the railway company, protested against the valuation, claiming that they were informed that the land was only worth $30.00 per acre as farm land, and that the increase was due to the fact that they had located terminals at this point and established a townsite there.

The matter was submitted for consideration by the late Mr. Checkley under date of the 27th December 1912, and it was ruled that the price as fixed by sale of balance of section must stand. The company, therefore, made payment of the required amount in May 1913, and patent issued for the areas taken by the company on the 27th June, 1913; therefore, the department does not owe the Canadian Pacific Railway Company the amount claimed by Mr. McClymont, and I claim that we were perfectly within our rights in charging the prices which we did for the rigt-of-way in this land even though the fact that the railway company established its terminal at the point did increase the value.

Now I have covered every case. I am prepared to make returns in connection with them, and my hon. friend will find from the files that these sales were made under those conditions. I may say that these are a sample of the charges that have been made by McClymont with respect to the hundred other matters which he mentions but which I have not the time to go into. I have referred to the hundred million dollars that was to be saved by the department. The fact remains that in all this controversy I have been bombarded with letters from McClymont that if I would give him a job in the department at $3,600 a year, then this persecution—I can call it nothing else—would cease. All I have to say is that I am not going to give him a job. He left of his own volition two or three years ago, spent a month writing articles of a similar character, and published them in the newspaper at his own expense, but when asked why he had absented himself from his duties he could give no reasonable explanation.

As to the investigation mentioned by my hon. friend, he made some statements with respect to the action of certain officials. They were called in and refuted those statements. I have no complete knowledge of it, but my hon. friend will find full details in the evidence submitted before the commissioner. I have simply taken these from a mass of statements that have been made by McClymont, who has paid out of his own pocket for every page of advertising that he has inserted in the Ottawa Journal. I never thought they warranted even an answer through the press. I am simply answering some of those statements now because my hon. friend has brought the matter up. If there are any other statements or charges that my hon. friend desires to have answered, I shall be glad to get the information for him. I have carefully read the report prepared by Mr. Smith, and with respect to my hon. friend's statement that Mr. McClymont was not given the fullest opportunity to present every tittle of evidence he might have, I wish to say the report discloses that he was asked the question on at least two occasions, and in reply said that he had filed every statement which he desired to make.

I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that the matter is worthy of further discussion.

Mr. SPENCER: The minister has stated, Mr. Chairman, that he understood I had seen Mr. McClymont for possibly three hours. This is entirely incorrect. I think any man who has a grievance has a perfect right to go to a member of parliament, and the member should listen to him. I have seen this man. Personally I think the minister would have done well had he himself given him an interview eighteen months ago, and thus have avoided a lot of unpleasant advertising of the department. As to the man's having had a fair show at the inquiry held by Mr. Smith, in my opinion it would have been much better for the department itself and the country as a whole if the matter had been brought before the public accounts committee instead of being dealt with in camera. I am informed that when the witness was giving some rather stinging evidence the reporter was instructed not to take it down. I shall be very glad to have the minister refute this if it is untrue, for certainly if my information is well founded the witness was not fairly treated. As I say, these charges, whether true or false, have been in circulation for a long time, and to those of us who take a pride in the department it is not pleasant to see such charges ignored. They should have been dealt with promptly. I have brought the matter up in a spirit of kindness, and I should have thought he would have been glad of the opportunity to dispose of them once for all; instead of that the minister apparently is peeved.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The minister is not peeved.

Mr. SPENCER: I do not know whether the man is right or not, but I have brought the matter up to give the minister an opportunity to clear it up once for all, if it can be cleared up.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I cannot state definitely that the reporter was instructed by the commissioner not to take down the evidence referred to, but I have seen no record of such instructions having been given. I have read some of the loose statements made by this man since the inquiry was held. May I say that after absenting himself for thirty days on the first occasion when he was let out, in order to be fair to him the assistant deputy minister took him on for a further period as a temporary employee, by arrangement with the Civil Service Commission. But we could not put up with a man of his temperament, for apparently he does not wish to render the kind of service we expect from the civil service. I want to say here and now, Mr. Chairman, that no matter how much advertising anyone may direct against me or my department, I am prepared to meet any charges openly and fairly. I am not at all incensed because my hon. friend has brought the matter up, but I do say that had he carefully perused the evidence and secured from the department the information contained in the file, I think he would have satisfied himself that the charges were without foundation. I think anyone reading carefully the statements appearing in this man's advertisements must reach the conclusion that the author himself has furnished a complete answer to every charge he has made. Far be it from me to deny a civil servant any right that belongs to him. He will always get justice from me. More than that, I shall be always ready to extend sympathy. But no department can afford to carry a gentleman who has demonstrated himself such a trouble maker as Mr. McClymont has done during the past two or three years.

Mr. MANION: I do not wish to discuss the case at all. I have listened to the minister's explanation and I have no quarrel with it. I do not know the facts. May I say, however, in the most generous spirit of which I am capable, that in appointing a commissioner it would be wise for the government, either the present or any other, to select someone who is beyond all possibility of being regarded as having political prejudice. I say nothing against Mr. Alexander Smith. I know him and I like him; I have not a word to say against him. But I understand that for many years he was an organizer for the Liberal party. While of course that reflects no discredit on him, at the same time it does not alter the fact that in the eyes of the public he will have a natural prejudice in favour of the party. The minister, in my opinion, should have appointed as commissioner one who could not by any stretch of the imagination be looked upon as being prejudiced. I am not saying that the commissioner in this instance was prejudiced, but I suggest that it would have been well to appoint someone who could not possibly be regarded as susceptible to prejudice—someone such as a judge, either of the county court or of any of the other courts—to inquire into the matter. The commissioner should be a man absolutely above political favouritism of any kind, and in that case his report would be accepted as being possibly more conclusive than the report of a commissioner who, as everyone knows, has been perhaps a pretty strong Liberal. Possibly I should say partisan instead. I make this statement with no disrespect to the present commissioner, but I suggest that it would have been wiser, and in the future it would be just as well, to appoint a judge to a position of this kind.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I was never under suspicion personally. All I was asked to do was to increase the salary of this man and put him back to work and this advertising would cease. But may I say that, if we erred in that respect in the appointment of the commissioner, more than one-half of the charges are laid against the preceding government and their administration.

Mr. MANION: I don't care about that.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I know my hon. friend does not care, but I am pointing out that personally I have never been charged in any way by this individual. It is the administration of his departmental associates from the deputy minister down.

Mr. MANION: As far as I could read from the statements in the press he charged everybody in the government and a few on this side.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): He was indiscriminate in his charges, yes.

Mr. MANION: What the minister has said has not changed my view of what should be done in regard to the commissioner.

Mr. COOTE: I have not had time to read over the report or the evidence connected therewith, nor have I had time to read all the advertisements in the newspapers. I presume the minister would have no objection, after we have had time to read the report and the evidence between now and the next session, to our submitting to the public accounts committee any questions that might occur to us, or any matters in which we were interested in order to ascertain whether or not there has been anything irregular. That, I think, would be the proper course.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I should be willing and ready to have the fullest investigation. As I say, I am personally not charged with anything in connection with this matter except that I would not put this individual back into the service of the department. Any time my hon. friends have had leisure to peruse this evidence, if there is anything in it which they feel needs investigation, the fullest opportunity will be given if I am here acting as minister.

Mr. COOTE: I have no expectation that I shall find time to read it all although I might. My only reason for mentioning the matter at all is that it has received so much publicity, and there may be people in the community—as a matter of fact I personally know there are some—who think that parliament should investigate the matter. Personally I have not had the time to look into it and I simply ask the minister to give us this assurance. I am glad to have his statement on the matter.

Mr. POULIOT: Did that fellow McClymont ask for $50,000 a year to save millions to the country?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not know about $50,000 a year, but I believe that is the statement he made as to saving millions to the country.

Mr. EVANS: I wish to ask the minister a question regarding the raising of buffalo. There are one or two ranchers in Saskatchewan whe have applied for some breeding stock. They are willing to comply with the regulations of the department if the government will grant them two or three buffalo as the foundation for a herd. What policy is the government following in this regard? Is it possible for these men to get one or two buffalo from Wainwright, seeing that they are overstocked on that farm?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Our policy is this. If the individual or the municipality will guarantee that the buffalo will be cared for properly, and if proper facilities are provided to enable the public in the particular locality to see them, we give two animals free of charge from the station at Wainwright. The cost of shipping and the responsibility will be on the individual or the municipality to take them from that point to destination.

Mr. SPENCER: Will the minister explain the increase of $110,420 in this item?

Mr. BENNETT: I wish to make a few observations with respect to the McClymont matter. I read the report of Mr. Commissioner Smith, not very carefully but sufficiently so to enable me to speak by reference to it. The commissioner made certain recommendations. He states first of all that if the department could be consolidated in one large building it would permit of greater supervision and would cut down expenses by allowing certain services to be centralized which are now duplicated in different branches. After referring to the report of 1922 which dealt with the observatory, he goes further and states:

> I find that the work of the department has not only greatly increased but that the nature of the same in many cases has changed considerably. I find that the reorganization plan prepared by officers of the department, and adopted in 1920 by the minister, which has as its main feature the consolidation of related services and the reduction thereby of a number of branches from over thirty to twelve, will ensure the most efficient and economical performance of the department's many and varied duties.

I gather from this that the recommendations of 1920 have not been effected; there has not been a reduction from thirty to twelve. The recommendations were made in the year preceding the advent of the present administration and would have been carried into effect had this government not succeeded. That is Mr. Smith's report. Then he makes certain major recommendations to which I direct the attention of this committee.

> I have two major recommendations which I respectfully submit for your consideration. I am personally satisfied that if they are adopted they will afford a further check on any tendency to extravagance that might arise in the department. These are:
> 1. That a greater measure of responsibility should be placed upon the secretary of the department in the matter of deciding the necessity for equipment and supplies requisitioned by the various branches of the department.
> 2. That, whereas it is understood that the financial controller scrutinizes minutely all accounts, it should be a standard principle of administration that the advice of the financial controller be sought by the branch heads before any expenditure is recommended.

That report was signed by Alexander Smith. I regard these observations of the commissioner, together with the two major recommendations to which he refers, as being of great public importance. It was established in the mind of the commissioner at least that so long ago as 1920 a considered plan for the reorgnization of the department had engaged the attention of its officials and had been accepted and adopted by the then minister and that that plan of reorganization contemplated a reduction in the number of branches, if I might use that word, from thirty to twelve, and further that with respect to the purchasing of supplies the public purse would be better safeguarded if the principles to which Mr. Smith refers were applied to those purchases.

I leave that with those observations, but it must be borne in mind that for a period of weeks Mr. McClymont has been publishing in a newspaper of this city certain charges against the administration of the Department of the Interior. My friend the Minister of the Interior is quite right when he says that these charges are not all directed against him, although his name is mentioned in some of them. He is quite correct in saying that they do not refer to one administration or to two administrations; they are general and refer to a long period of time, and may be summarized in the following terms: First, he charges that excessive prices are paid for supplies and that the system adopted for the purchase of supplies is wrong. I have satisfied myself that that can be substantiated and abundantly proven. I think it is clear that the methods adopted to-day by the Department of the Interior with respect to the purchasing of supplies are wrong, and that a body appointed by this parliament as purchasing agents, for which we are appropriating substantial sums of money, does not properly function, because if they discharged their duties properly supplies for that department could be bought at much lower prices than are now paid. It is true that the prices are certified to by the Auditor General as being fair and reasonable; it is true that very often the prices are certified by the purchasing officer, whoever he may be, but the truth is that tenders are invited for supplies from a limited number of persons and that they fix the prices, which are out of all proportion to what the true prices should be. I say that, for instance, with respect to the national park near Calgary. A limited number of persons have their names placed upon a patronage list; that list is limited to a number of people who do a retail business and they are asked to supply soap, for instance, in large quantities. I know of a case in which a soap manufacturer, by accident seeing one of these advertisements, tendered for the amount required, but his deposit was returned to him. What is more, one of the superintendents of the park was told that he must consult with the defeated candidate before doing any particular thing with respect to the administration of that park. Then is it any wonder that officials make charges such as these? These are facts, not fancies, and I take it that that is the reason why Mr. Smith made the recommendations contained in his report.

I regard Mr. McClymont's very vague and general statements in the same way the minister regards them; he should not be charged with dereliction of duty in vague and general statements, it is true, but there are certain specific charges and one of them is that to which I have referred. I do say that I have satisfied myself from personal observation and investigation that these goods are not obtained for the lowest prices for which they could be purchased by the Department of the Interior or any of its branches; that favorites are chosen, political favorites, partisans, who may be doing retail business, for the purpose of supplying goods by wholesale. This does not apply only to the Department of the Interior; it applies to many other departments, to the Department of Public Works, for instance, and to other departments of the public service. This may have been the practice in this country before the war, but we did hope and believe that our experience with respect to purchasing commissions had been such as to end that sort of thing. Not only are goods purchased in the way I have described, but employment is given under conditions which I mentioned the other day. I read a letter to the committee, and my friend the Minister of Railways admitted that the conditions to which I referred prevailed with respect to the Rideau canal. He was helpless at the moment to contend against those conditions. It is said that these conditions prevailed in 1911 and in 1912. It is true that these conditions did obtain in those years, but we did hope that by reason of the changed conditions in this country, by reason of the great burden of debt we are carrying and by reason of the necessity for the exercise of economy, this country would realize that we must get the most value possible for every dollar we spend. I say that is not being done in the public service at the present moment and that is one of the charges made by Mr. McClymont. Look at the estimates to-day; we find that a commission composed of two or three people have certain powers and obligations with respect to these matters.

The charges made by Mr. McClymont were first that there was not adequate supervision as to the quantity of supplies required and secondly that the financial controller did not exercise that control over these matters which he should exercise. Then what happens? We have Mr. Smith making these recommendations. These are his recommendations, and I am sure no one will charge Mr. Smith with having made these recommendations out of any great desire to find fault with a Liberal administration. In that regard I believe he was conscious of the necessity of greater care being exercised in the purchase of goods by public departments.

Then Mr. McClymont makes another charge; he charges that vast sums of money are being expended uselessly in Ottawa, and in the public press he gave his references to the cost of the maintenance of automobiles and the utilization of these automobiles by one particular family. He gave those particulars; are they true or are they not? If they are true, no officer of the department has a right to the use of a private automobile at the expense of the taxpayers of Canada, and we are told that the automobiles were used not for the purposes of public business but for the purpose of conveying him to and from his home and his place of business. If this sort of thing is to be done let it be done openly and frankly as a part of the conditions of his employment; if it is not to be done let us say so and let us stop it.

Mr. McCymont made other charges in connection with the administration of the school lands branch of the department and in connection with the sale of other parts of the public domain. With respect to that I quite agree with the minister; these charges cover a very large number of cases; they cover lands in every part of the three western provinces and they cover contracts made with people in almost every part of the world. We have certain statutes in this country, and whether or not the terms of those statutes have been observed is a matter which should not be determined by this house in an hour, a day, a week or a month. These are matters of detail which require much examination and much consideration, but I have investigated two of these matters myself. Two of these charges concerned property near my community, one merely dealing with the sale of land to the town of Macleod and the other the sale of another small piece of land. I think in that case the minister did what any minister would have done having regard to the conditions which prevailed in the town of Macleod, for instance, at that time. Macleod was a town which had made default, if I remember correctly, in connection with the payment of interest on its debentures. It had its power plant on a certain piece of land and had made default on the purchase price of the land. The minister put the land up for sale under conditions which ensured the town of being able to get this piece of land at about $20 an acre, which was more than it was worth at that time having regard to the conditions which prevailed in the town and as far as my knowledge goes it is more than it is worth at present. It seems to me that is not a matter which should engage the attention of parliament at this time, but there are charges contained in these advertisements inserted by Mr. McClymont which reflect upon the civil service of the country and upon the administration of the Department of the Interior altogether apart from the minister, the departmental head. It seems to me that these charges make it incumbent that there should be some way by which those people who have read these advertisements in the newspaper may have their minds set at rest. That does not only apply to those of us in parliament; this newspaper has a wide circulation, and the advertisements have been read by large numbers of people. I have been asked what are we going to do about it, what the opposition propose to do. My answer is perfectly clear; no opposition and no member of parliament can undertake to deal with these questions, for the reasons which have been given by the minister. It does occur to me that there are reasons sufficiently strong in these advertisements to necessitate an inquiry by the public accounts committee with respect to the expenditure of public moneys for administration, the purchase of supplies, the payment of large living allowances, and matters of that kind. These are small matters and may look insignificant, but it only takes ten ten-dollar bills to make a hundred dollars, ten of those to make a thousand, and a thousand to make a million. We have got so much in the habit of talking loosely in thousands and millions that you would think this country was ready to hand out ten-dollar tips to waiters. That is not the sort of thing that should prevail, and I will give you an illustration of it.

I was told by a responsible minister of one of the greatest countries in the world that the head of his state had taken such an interest in the practice of economy, even in stationery and pencils, that they found it difficult sometimes to get along with their business. Friendly competitions had been invited among the representatives of that state in the various sections of the country with respect to pencils and stationery, and matters of that kind, which effected very great economy. Now, that all sounds piffle, and somebody says "Why should we waste the time of parliament about something like that?" But it was just that which made it possible for Mr. Coolidge to bring about the economy he did in the United States of America. Those who are interested and who will take the time to read what was said in the report in connection with the last budget regarding the savings accomplished by the methods I have indicated, will realize how desirable it is that we should look upon these matters in a different sense.

I am satisfied, from the evidence that I have read—I have not had time to read it carefully—and from reading these advertisements in a very casual way, that the money of this country is not being spent so as to get the largest possible value for every hundred cents that we take out of the exchequer. I am quite sure that the Prime Minister is anxious that this country's affairs should be economically conducted. It is not easy to do that, and nobody knows it better than I do. Nobody knows how difficult it is to ensure economical practice in the administration of the government and in the conduct of public affairs; we all know that. But where loose habits prevail; where the one who is in charge permits laxity to prevail, then you set up a condition whereby every man subordinate in position thinks it is his bounden duty to imitate his superior, and the result is that you have vast expenditures. I think it is to this that Mr. Smith refers in the last two paragraphs of his report.

First of all he mentions reorganization and consolidation of services, and the removal of a number of branches. Then he recommended imposing upon the secretary of the department the duties and functions of his office, and the supervision by the financial comptroller of all accounts, to bring about the results so much to be desired.

It will be borne in mind that the main document of nineteen pages upon which Mr. Smith predicates his final report against McClymont is one which was issued in 1922, and had to deal with the late Doctor Klotz of the observatory. That is the main document upon which the major part of his findings were predicated.

It would seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that while this committee cannot possibly investigate this matter and go into all these charges—if the word "charges" might be used—they are of such a serious character, not with respect to the minister but with respect to the conduct of the public service of Canada, as to require a full investigation before a special or standing committee of this house. It should be taken up at the very beginning of the session and carried through to the end, in order that those who have served the state faithfully, for a long period of years may be relieved of any odium that may be attached to them if they are innocent, and those punished who are found to be guilty. With the work we have had this session we have not had the opportunity to do any more than just look at this in a casual sort of way, but if we could call for the various files that may be concerned, we would be able to deal with it as it should be dealt with.

I heartily agree with the minister on the question of employment. No department could continue to employ one who has made charges of this character in the public press; it would be incompatible and inconsistent with the whole theory of public service that it should be done. I, for one, heartily support the minister in the view he takes, but it is hardly a fair assumption to say that all this has been done, all these sums of money have been expended by an individual merely for the purpose of trying to get back a job. Elementary intelligence would indicate to him that he could not possibly hope to get back his position after having gone through the ordeal that he did with respect to the investigation, or having made the charges which he has made in the public press. I quite agree with that, but I do think there still is left that residuum which necessitates the minister taking such steps as may be necessary to see that the public service is vindicated and finding out if there is any foundation at all for what has been said. I cannot but think that there is some foundation, or Mr. Smith would not have made the observations he did.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): So far as an investigation is concerned, may I say here and now that it will be welcomed at the next session of parliament. I quite agree with my hon. friend that it is not fair that any odium should rest upon any official of the Department of the Interior, but perhaps sufficient has been said when I make the statement that I will welcome this investigation as I have always welcomed one in my twenty years of public service. I have always welcomed the fullest investigation into any matter that pertained to me or my administration.

I am interested in one or two things my hon. friend has said regarding the administration of the Banff park. He said that the list was confined to friends. My hon. friend would not suggest that the man who perhaps gets the most money out of Banff park is more a friend of mine than he is of my hon. friend—Mr. Pat Burns.

Mr. BENNETT: I shall be glad to answer that.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There is no reflection intended. Mr. Pat Burns probably gets more money for supplies than any other individual. It is quite true that he gets it by tendering, but my hon. friend is a little confused in that connection.

Mr. BENNETT: I know what I am talking about.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend also said that he was informed by the park superintendent—

Mr. BENNETT: I said that the park superintendent was informed that before he could take certain action he had to see Mr. Luney, recently appointed to the bench, and he came to Calgary for that purpose.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is information my hon. friend got from the park superintendent?

Mr. BENNETT: No, I got it from a gentleman who interviewed him.

Mr. DUNNING: Somebody told somebody else.

Mr. BENNETT: Somebody did not tell somebody else. We will deal with this as a matter of business; this is not the Halifax hotel, it is the Banff park.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I say to my hon. friend that my instructions to the park superintendent, a gentleman in whom I have every confidence, have been to employ returned men, and he has been doing that. I have been accused on more than one occasion of employing more returned men than there was any necessity for, but so far as I know that is not true with respect to the park. I am quite willing to accept the statement made by my hon. friend that purchases of any moment are all tendered for. My hon. friend made the statement that on one occasion a soap manufacturer told him he was refused consideration on a tender for supplies.

Mr. BENNETT: That was in the Indian department.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is a department over which I have control, and I shall be very glad to have the particulars furnished to me so that they can be investigated. I promise my hon. friend that if this is true the party who refused that will be dismissed. I think that is fair.

Mr. BENNETT: That is fair.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think I should be furnished with the evidence.

Mr. BENNETT: I will tell you right now. It was in connection with supplies to the Indian department, and the name of the firm was the Royal Crown Soap Company.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Where is their head office?

Mr. BENNETT: In this instance, their head office would be at Calgary, but they also have an office in Winnipeg.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I misunderstood my hon. friend. I thought it was a tender for soap for the parks branch.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is for the Interior department. I shall be glad to have that. The Royal Crown Soap Company—

Mr. BENNETT: They are manufacturers of soap.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I understand that. With respect to the administration generally, all I want to say in reply to what my hon. friend has said is that the reduction from thirty to twelve branches is almost complete.

Mr. BENNETT: In eight years.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Oh, well. The Civil Service Commission have not yet completed the reorganization and classification of the lands branch. The latter have been denied that for four years and to some extent it is holding up the complete reduction to twelve branches as suggested in the report. But the number at the present moment does not exceed more than thirteen or fifteen and it will be reduced to twelve. Moreover, as regards some of this reorganization, I have been nursing perhaps a false hope that the natural resources would go back to the provinces and this has delayed making permanent many of the employees. I have refused to allow them to be made permanent in the hope that the natural resources would go back to the three prairie provinces and that there would be a large number of employees for whom we would not then have employment. That is my answer to the criticism that all these things have not yet been done. But I say here and now that at the next session of parliament I will welcome the fullest investigation if the request comes from a responsible member of parliament or any member of parliament.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not going to ask for investigations on the request of everyone who undertakes through the press or otherwise to malign or to cast reflections on the administration of the department. But on the other hand I and the officials of my department are prepared to come at any time before the public accounts committee and to answer any charges that may be laid there.

Mr. COOTE: Just in regard to the statement which I think the minister made that goods would all be tendered for, would he say that the contract will be awarded to the party making the lowest tender?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In every case to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. COOTE: In some cases the lowest tenderer has not been awarded the contract, but a party submitting a higher tender has been given the opportunity of having the contract at the lowest price. I should like to know whether the minister will not say that in future the party submitting the lowest tender will be given the contract at that price instead of the man who has submitted a higher tender being allowed to make a second tender meeting the price submitted by the lowest tenderer? That is not entirely fair to the party who submits the lowest tender.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If that has ever happened, may I at once give my hon. friend the reason? It is because they have had business with the department on former occasions and the relationship has not been good, the goods supplied not being up to the mark. That is part of the difficulty we have to meet from time to time in connection with supplying goods to the department. I must take the word of my officials in that connection, but we do not make a practice of refusing to give the contract to the lowest tenderer and paying a higher price for the goods than the offer contained in that tender.

Mr. COOTE: In the case which I have in mind—and I am not going to take the time of the committee if I can get a satisfactory answer from the minister—so far as I was ever informed the department had no kick at all against the goods which had been supplied by this man. As a matter of fact I do not think he had ever before supplied the department with goods, but I think it was to enable the department to give the contract to a certain individual that he was allowed to supply the goods at the price offered by the lowest tenderer. I do not think that is fair and the minister in future would be well advised if he would give the contract to the lowest tenderer instead of giving somebody else a chance to meet that price.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My reply to that is simply this, that the only reason for refusing to deal with the lowest tenderer in any case would be that the goods previously supplied had not been satisfactory. We make it a practice throughout the department to accept the lowest tender unless there is reason to believe that we are not getting the value. When we do not accept the lowest tender, we make it a practice not to accept goods at a higher price than the price quoted in that tender.

Mr. NEILL: I might mention a case that occurred a couple of years ago. Apparently the government of the day wanted ten cords of wood for a certain public building. That is not a very big amount, probably $50 or $60, and apparently they asked for tenders from five different people. Five different people could be calculated to give pretty fair comparative tenders on ten cords of wood and five tenders were put in. I hold in my hand a letter addressed from the government to the caretaker as follows:

I have your report saying you have received the following tenders for the firewood required for the public building in your charge—

Then follows the list of the five tenders at so much a cord, ranging from $6 up to $7.

—and you recommended the acceptance of the tender of—

Stating so-and-so, the lowest tenderer.

—10 cords, $60.

Since you invited these tenders the government has changed, and I am instructed to direct you to see the chairman or secretary of the local organization supporting the present government, show him this letter, and ask him to strike out any of the above names he is unable to recommend and to add any others he may wish you to consult. When he has completed the list, please ask each person named on it to quote a price for the firewood you need. When you have received these new tenders, please forward them to me with your recommendation on form "B".

I am sending you tender forms.

He tells him to fill them out.

If the chairman or secretary—

Of the local political organization.

—concurs in your recommendation, please return all papers to me together with a letter from the chairman or secretary saying that he concurs in your first recommendation.

He was not even going to take the word of the caretaker. It had to be in writing. That is signed by the purchasing agent of the government. That was not a case of confining tenders to firms who had been invited to tender, but after the tenders had been received in sufficient numbers and the lowest tender was about to be accepted, orders were given to change the situation and to have the names struck out in the manner I have outlined. That letter is dated Ottawa, October 16, 1926.

Mr. BENNETT: That was after the change of government. I want to direct the minister's attention to the fact that during my absence I met a gentleman who deals very largely in a certain commodity and he desired to sell that commodity to the Banff park. He was told—and I will give the minister the name if he desires it—that this could not be done unless he telegraphed to Ottawa because he was not—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What were the supplies?

Mr. BENNETT: The supplies were lubricants, gas and oil. The gentleman told me that. With respect to the soap matter, I will send the minister the letter. I want to go further. I was not complaining about the question of returned soldiers.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I did not say so.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister knows perfectly well that what I was directing attention to was the fact that unfortunately we are still endeavouring to maintain the old idea that the defeated candidate for West Calgary should be the man who should determine who is to be employed in the public service of this country. I say that is wrong. When he mentions Mr. Burns, he knows perfectly well that Mr. Burns is not the gentleman who deals with this matter at all. It is the firm of P. Burns and Company, Limited, now Burns and Company, Limited, who are the only people who can supply the goods required. What is more, Mr. Burns always describes himself as a Liberal. I merely mention that so that no false impression may be left on the minds of the committee.

Mr. NEILL: I am told, Mr. Chairman, that I made a mistake in the date of that letter, and I wish to apologize. It was not October; it was August 16.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps the hon. gentleman would give the name of the purchasing agent. He has read the letter.

Mr. NEILL: It was the government purchasing agent, Mr. Dawson.

Mr. KENNEDY: I have been trying to get the floor for some time, after listening to this discussion which has been under way for almost an hour. I want to introduce a new subject, and that is the question of clearing land by fire. I should like to read this letter which appears in a return to an order of the house dated February 13, 1928. It is a letter to Mr. Wilson, of Peace River, signed by the Deputy Minister of the Interior, and is dated June 1, 1926. It reads:

> I have your letter of the 12th April last, in which you request that a small grant be made to Mr. De Bolt for the purpose of enabling him to burn off a considerable acreage of bush land to facilitate settlement.
> I am afraid it will be impossible to authorize any burning operations, save under strict departmental control. You will understand that if the grant were made to Mr. De Bolt, or any one else, and any damage resulted from the burning operations, the department would be held liable. This fact alone makes it necessary to impose the fundamental requirement that any burning operations must be strictly under the control of qualified officers of the department.
>
> In addition, the report of Mr. Lonergan, Inspector of Surveys, which you quote, stresses the point that fire guards must be put in the first thing in the spring and burning done as early in the season as possible, because otherwise there is danger of damage to the soil itself. Unfortunately, for this year at least, the season in the west opened so early as to make it impossible to organize operations for this year.
>
> The matter will be kept in mind, however, and I hope it will be possible to make arrangements to proceed with further experimental burning operations in the spring of 1927.

[Mr. Bennett.]

I would ask if it is the intention to go ahead with these burning experiments or operations during this year or in the spring of next year, and what the policy of the department is in regard to the matter.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The burning operations conducted in that locality some four or five years ago were apparently successful. I would hardly agree with the statement contained in the letter that we would not allow anyone else to burn on crown lands, because these are crown lands. First of all they have to be fire guarded for a respectable width in order to prevent the fire escaping, and the burning has to be done at a period of the year when the surface soil will not burn so that a good deal of care must be exercised. I really must say that I do not believe it is the duty of the government to do this work on a very large scale. We have carried out one experiment and have demonstrated what can be done. I am quite prepared, if the necessity arises and it is desirable to do so, to render some assistance to the settlers themselves. I think they can do it more acceptably than anyone else when they go in upon these lands. I know my hon. friend has in mind the burning off of half a township that would open up that land at once and make it more or less prairie land. We have carried out one experiment, and we do not feel that we should continue this kind of thing indefinitely.

Mr. KENNEDY: In view of the fact that some of the northern territories are being settled in spite of anything governments do or do not do, we ought to give this matter careful consideration, and I think it would be wise to go ahead and actually clear this land by fire. It seems to me ridiculous to be discussing settlement schemes in this house which contemplate the advancing of money or other assistance to clear land at a cost of upwards of $30 an acre, when the Department of the Interior through its own officials has demonstrated that this land can be cleared for less than $1 an acre.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Is the hon. member really serious in making that statement? If so, I would like him to state the type of land that can be cleared for less than $1 an acre, the kind of wood that is on it, its size and thickness.

Mr. KENNEDY: Land that would cost from $30 to $50 an acre to clear by hand was cleared by departmental surveyors for less than $1 an acre. That is the statement, and I can prove it if the hon. member wants me to take up the time of the committee.

But suppose the figures are $15 and $5, where is the economy from the national standpoint in asking a settler to waste his time clearing land by hand which could be cleared for one-tenth or one-twentieth of the cost in a systematic way by government officials or others? When the minister takes the stand that he is prepared to assist the settler, I would point out that the land cannot be cleared economically by that method, because you cannot follow the natural boundaries in providing fire guards. If you are going to guard against the fire getting away, it is necessary to take the open spots through bush land in order to get the proper fire guards, and you cannot follow the section or township lines. It seems to me the Department of the Interior could serve a very useful purpose by taking hold of this proposition. One of the great difficulties we have to-day in the province of Alberta, as the minister knows, is to supply transportation to outlying settlements. In some instances you have a strip of prairie, then a strip of bush land, the settlers do not care to take that up even if it is within ten or fifteen or forty miles of a railway, and the result is that they go back one hundred miles. In another five years there will be a demand from these settlers for two or three hundred miles of railway construction, even though they could have taken up land lying within twenty or thirty miles of a railway, but they preferred the land further back because it had been cleared by fire possibly set by somebody in a careless moment. I think the minister has lost a good opportunity to prevent the development in the next few years of a serious problem in connection with the providing of transportation facilities in the Peace River country at least, and possibly in northern Saskatchewan, by not undertaking this work.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): In view of what the hon. member has just told the committee, I think I should carry the matter a little further. I remember last year an inquiry was held by the railway and canals committee regarding transportation in the Peace River country, and a certain civil servant was brought in to the committee by, I believe, the hon. member for Peace River, who told us in that committee that it would cost not more than 15 cents an acre to set fires under certain satisfactory conditions. But to set fires costing 15 cents an acre is not clearing land. He told us further that the timber in that country was large and heavy, and that there was much of it. Everyone knows the type of land where the bush grows thick enough and large enough, and no grass or underbrush grows sufficient to fire except in dry times. If a man sets out a fire in those dry times it can certainly be done cheap enough. I do not know why the price was set at 15 cents an acre. A single match from a box of the high-class matches we get across the river would set out a fire, and I do not know why the price was set so high. The member for Peace River I notice has the price elevated a little more. But when the witness was asked what it would cost to chop down the trunks and pick up the stumps and burn them, he said, "Oh, the farmer must do that himself." There is a good deal of experimental work being carried on as to the best and cheapest and quickest way of clearing land, but certainly it would not be a good thing for the minister of the interior to allow any of his men to spend much time or money setting out fires. It is very difficult at times to get a fire to run at all in heavy poplar brush, for there is nothing in the bottom to burn. The better way is to cut down the stuff that is not too large, by using a scrub cutter, and in smaller growth modern tractors can plough the stuff down and in a few years it rots; but simply to set out fires is very far from making land fit to cultivate.

Mr. KENNEDY: I think my hon. friend has not had much experience with this class of land.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I am actually engaged in clearing land where the poplar timber runs up to two feet in thickness at the stump and stands rather thick, and it is very difficult to get a fire to burn throught it. I have been trying for years to burn up the trunks. If the hon. member for Peace River could tell me where I could get the services of a civil servant to clear my land at a dollar an acre after the stumps are out of the ground, I would thank him very much for the information.

Mr. KENNEDY: I wish to put two letters on Hansard. One is dated February 25, 1927, and is to Mr. Peters, surveyor general, who was called before the committee last year. I wrote his as follows:

Dear Sir,

Some years ago your department undertook to test out the feasibility of clearing land by fire. I have been urging on the minister occasionally the desirability of doing a little more at this business as we have vast areas in the Peace river country that can be cleared economically by fire without doing any damage. I would like to obtain the following information:

1. What areas or sections were cleared by fire during the progress of the whole experiment?
2. What was the effect of the experiment in relation to clearing the land?
3. Was the soil damaged in any way?
4. What was the cost per acre of clearing the land?

5. Was there any difficulty controlling the fire?

6. In what years was the experiment carried on?

7. Has the land been settled since it was cleared?

An answer to these questions, will greatly oblige.

This is the reply I received from him:

Dear Mr. Kennedy,

Referring to your letter of February 25th concerning the clearing of land by controlled firing in the Peace river country. Answering your questions under the same numbers, I would say,

1. Area No. 1, comprising sections 27, 28, 33 and 34, in township 76, range 21, west of the fifth meridian, which is a short distance south of Donnelly on the E. D. & B. C. railway, and area No. 3, comprising about 90,000 acres in the vicinity of Battle River prairie (a map is attached outlining this area).

2. In areas 1 and 3 good burns were obtained and the experiment was a success.

3. The firing was done in the spring of the year and the soil was not damaged in any way.

4. In area No. 1 the area was so small that the cost per acre would not be typical. In area No. 3 the cost was about three cents per acre. It is probable that the cost for each burn might vary from three cents up to fifteen cents per acre according to the facilities for natural fire guards and other conditions of a like nature.

5. The fires can be controlled, provided the work is done under proper supervision and the necessary precautions are taken.

6. Area No. 1 was burned in 1919. In 1920 an experiment was tried in burning an area of approximately 25 acres ten to fifteen miles southeast of the town of Peace river, and another party undertook firing operations near the Bad Heart river, northeast of Grande Prairie. Because of adverse weather conditions the work of this season was not a success. Area No. 3 was burned in 1921.

7. I regret that we have no information as to settlement of the land that has taken place subsequently, but no doubt you can obtain this information readily from another branch of the department.

From this letter it is apparent that the clearing of land by controlled firing was a success. Regardless of the proportion of the clearing done, my information is that it can be carried out by the department very cheaply in comparison with what it would cost an actual settler to do. I do not see how the Minister of Immigration can justify the policy which subsidizes the bringing in of settlers and turning them loose on farms where it costs them $35 an acre to clear land, if this work can be done for 15 or 30 cents or a dollar an acre by controlled firing by the government. Would it not be better to subsidize the clearing of land in this way than to bring out settlers to waste their lives cutting down bush? The hon. member challenged the success of this operation, but territory was cleared by fire one hundred miles north of the Peace river, and to-day settlers are going back there rather than settle half that distance from the railway. That seems to me to be a practical answer to his light manner of dealing with the whole question, waving it aside as being something of no value.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): It is possible that settlers will go further back to land burnt over some years ago; but when the Department of the Interior is spending hundreds of thousands of dollars to fight fires, I am surprised that the hon. member for Peace River should ask him to set out fires in woods which in a comparatively short time may become valuable. The fact remains that the gentleman who gave evidence before the committee last year and said it cost 15 cents an acre to clear land by firing, still maintains that the farmer must at his own expense gather up the trunks and stumps and burn them. Scores of members from the eastern provinces and the western know that there is a great deal better way of clearing land than by firing. I asked the hon. member as to the size of the wood in this case, but he did not tell me. I asked the witness last year, and he said it was quite large timber. Large green stumps will not burn if the fire passes over them quickly. If they are burned again and again it is easier for the settlers to clear the land.

Mr. KENNEDY: The hon. member persists in handing out information which may apply to his own district,—

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): It applies to any heavily timbered district.

Mr. KENNEDY: —but when he says we are advocating lighting fires, while the department is spending hundreds of thousands of dollars fighting fires, I want to tell him that the problem here is between controlled fires and fires not controlled. If the firing is done intelligently under the control of the departmental officials the soil will not be damaged and the fire will not destroy good timber. Further, there will not be the temptation for settlers to start fires and thereby destroy indiscriminately poor timber and good timber. It seems to me that the policy is a good one from whatever angle it may be studied. It has been argued by some officials, and even by the minister and the hon. member for Melfort, that firing will destroy the soil. Now, in 1923 I know a certain area was fired in the Westlock district. Two years afterwards in that very area there were splendid crops yielding a hundred bushels to the acre on that burnt land. So the statement that the soil is destroyed is not borne out by my experience, and I have watched a lot of firing in the Peace River country. If fire is properly controlled it will do effective work and will not damage the soil or affect adversely the general interests of the country. On the other hand it will enable settlers to establish themselves on the land much sooner and to some extent obviate the transportation difficulties we have experienced in connection with railways and new roads throughout the province of Alberta in the last five, six or ten years.

Mr. COOTE: As regards engraving, lithographing, and so forth, is this done in the printing bureau?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY: Does the minister intend to go further with this policy, or is he going to abandon it?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have no appropriation for this purpose this year.

Mr. BENNETT: I wish to discuss one item, that of salaries. A question was put on the order paper a few days ago with regard to Mr. Gerhard Ens, employed in the Prince Albert land office. He is now in charge of the Mennonite settlement. What is he doing? He is electioneering for the Saskatchewan government and the election is not far off. He has been engaged for some three months.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I did not know he was employed.

Mr. BENNETT: The answer came the other day; I have it under my hand. He is a temporary employee.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): A homestead inspector?

Mr. BENNETT: No, he is in charge of the Mennonite settlement.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I know the man but I did not know he was attached to our department.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister can give me the information later. Now, there is another matter to which I wish to direct attention. The minister will recall that two years ago the hon. member for Vancouver Centre raised a question with respect to alienation of water powers in the Rocky mountains park. It was felt that under the circumstances, without the consent of parliament, these water powers should not be alienated. The attitude taken by this government in recent years has been that they are really trustees for the western provinces, having regard to the fact that the resources are to be turned over to those provinces at no distant date. There is pending an application in connection with the water power in Manitoba, and I do suggest to the minister, having regard to the fact that this parliament —not the minister or the government but parliament itself—is the trustee for the western provinces, to whom these resources will at no distant date be turned over, that the government should decline to part with any of these power sites, which are of inestimable value to the people of the west, until such time at least as parliament—not, I repeat, the ministry—has passed upon the transaction. I look upon this as an entirely different matter from water powers entrusted to the government for administration. These water powers, whatever else may be said, are now merely held in trust for people residing at a distance from us; and inasmuch as the legislature of Manitoba, for example, is not in session, it does occur to me that before any action is taken the approval of this parliament should be given. I cannot think that this is a matter for executive action alone. I cannot think that it is fair or just or right that this ministry or any ministry at this moment should deal wth the matter in this way. The responsibility will always be laid at the door of this parliament in years to come; when the situation becomes acute and difficulties arise it will be said that we were responsible for the action taken.

I know the minister has taken a strong view with respect to some matters in my own province, and in view of the facts that have been brought to my attention I suggest that he give the house an assurance that no water powers in western Canada will be alienated without the approval of parliament; because no other action will meet the situation adequately at this time. If the legislatures of the provinces desire to alienate these powers when they receive them, well and good, that is a matter with respect to which they can formulate policies. But in view of the present condition, in view of the negotiations that are taking place, the fact that in one province an agreement was actually signed, while in another province proposals have been made which have been stated to be acceptable—in view of these circumstances, I submit that we should not part with these very valuable power sites, with all that is involved for the future population of the western provinces. We should not part with these powers without the consent of parliament. And that consent probably could not be given unless the legislatures of the provinces affected were content; because there is a point at which executive action, taken by a government which in one sense has no responsibility while in another sense it has considerable, is not the method which in my opinion was contemplated when the statute was framed. It was contemplated then that we should treat these matters as part of the assets of the Dominion; now we are content to regard them as assets in our hands as trustees. I make that suggestion to the minister in view of the position he took some years ago with respect to another matter Rather than move a motion on going into supply, which would involve the necessity of a vote being taken, I bring the matter to his attention now in order that he may consider it before he finally disposes of this item.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not quite take the view expressed by my hon. friend with respect to trusteeship in connection with these natural resources. The natural resources are the property of the federal government; that cannot be denied. I think my hon. friend will admit that at once. If parliament in its wisdom decides to turn the natural resources back to the provinces, then that is the business of parliament. But while the resources are under the control of the federal government they are under the administration and control of the federal authorities. There is some difference between the situation which my hon. friend has stated and the position I took on this matter a year or two ago. The matter was raised by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, but it had reference to the alienation of water powers within the parks. The suggestion at that time was that the parks and all that appertains thereto, inasmuch as they were recreational grounds not only for the localities in which they were located, but for the whole of Canada, should not be alienated but be put under the control of parliament. I heartily agreed with that suggestion. So far as Banff and the Spray lakes scheme are concerned, we have been resurveying the park with a view to excluding from the park area all the valuable minerals now known to exist within the park boundaries. The park boundaries will be curtailed to some extent and most of the coal areas will now be outside their limits and in the Rocky mountain forest reserve. The suggestion was made to exclude the Spray lakes. Let me say this with respect to the Spray lakes. We must have a dependable flow into the Spray river, particularly during the tourist season; and the engineer of the Calgary Power Company, Mr. Gaherty, informed me in my office not long ago that if we were to take for that purpose more than 150 cubic second feet during three months even, in the tourist season, they were not at all interested in that development. I am glad to get that admission. We shall need in the neighbourhood of 350 to 400 cubic second feet to preserve the scenic qualities of the river, to have sufficient water for fire protection, and for the purposes necessary for the maintenance of the park and the preservation of its beauty. But when my hon. friend separates the water powers from the other natural resources—

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, no; they are the same thing.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am willing to admit that they are valuable; so much so that I am exercising extreme caution in their administration. I think my hon. friend will give me credit for that, because we have had innumerable difficulties on the Winnipeg river where the Seven Sisters falls are located, and to date, I think, the disposition of these water powers has met with universal satisfaction. Now I understand my hon. friend to say that if I give a promise that no disposition of any water power will be made until it is placed under the control of—

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What did my hon. friend say?

Mr. BENNETT: I said we should not part with any water powers without the approval of this parliament.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That would mean that a private bill would be introduced?

Mr. BENNETT: Or approval of a contract given by resolution.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I would desire some time to give consideration to that matter. I quite appreciate the protection given a minister in securing the consent of parliament to any question which involves such an important decision as that of the disposal of 300,000 horse power, but I do say that Manitoba has been the storm centre ever since I came to this government and was honoured with the control of the Department of the Interior; first over the Norman dam, later over the disposition of the pulpwood berth where the mill is now erected and the disposition of the water power, and now a very grave difference of opinion exists with respect to the disposition of the Seven Sisters falls. I may assure my hon. friend that until that difference of opinion is settled I am not going to issue any license for that water power. I think I may assure my hon. friend of that.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sure the committee appreciated the statement made by the minister, but I think he did not entirely grasp my contention with respect to the trusteeship of this parliament. So long as we held the natural resources without having declared as a policy that we proposed to turn them over to the provinces; so long as we did not declare that policy his position was sound, but at the beginning of last session and reiterated again this session we had the policy declared that it is proposed to transfer these resources to the several provinces, and the agreement was actually signed and executed which would turn the resources over to the province of Alberta. Under these circumstances, in view of the statement made by the Prime Minister that it was proposed immediately after prorogation or as soon thereafter as might be reasonable to carry on the negotiations to a completion or until they failed, I submit that we should no longer treat these resources as the property of the crown in the right of the Dominion but as the property of the crown in trust for the crown, in the right of the provinces. That is the point I desire to make, and the last observation made by the minister somewhat supports the view which I was presenting. The position of the parks was not so strong as the case which I now put, for with respect to the parks it was proposed that they should always remain the property of the crown in the right of the Dominion and therefore the Dominion had complete authority to deal with them, having complete authority to deal with them the minister concluded that it was desirable to have the approval of parliament before there was any alienation of any resources within the parks.

My submission is that since we hold these resources, that is, they are the property of the crown in the right of the Dominion, in trust for the crown in the right of the several provinces, we should not as an executive act or as a pure matter of administration part with so valuable a resource as a power site which is of such inestimable value to the people of the country, without the approval of this parliament. In my judgment that would be a proper release to the minister for any action he might take as trustee for the people affected, and would afford an opportunity to the several legislatures to deal with any matter which concerned them until such time as these resources, notably the power sites, were turned over to the crown in the right of the several provinces concerned.

I trust that I have made myself clear; I did not develop the matter at first because I thought the minister had that position in mind. I quite agree that the minister should not be asked at the moment to state what might be done, but thinking the matter over while I was away last week, rather than propose an amendment to the motion to go into supply for the purpose of discussion I thought I could present the matter in that way when his estimates were under consideration, and I thought he might take some little time to consider what might be desirable in the premises because his statement indicates a very earnest desire on his part to deal with the matter in the sense I have suggested, the sense of the relations and obligations which this parliament bears not only to this generation but, as he says, to the future, having regard to the fact that 300,000 horse power may be affected. The same principle, of course, applies to the White Mud falls. Possibly the minister would leave one item, purely pro forma, in order that it might be spoken to, and he might be good enough to present his views to-morrow or at some later time and thereby possibly prevent any further discussion on the matter.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I give my hon. friend the assurance now that so far as his request is concerned I have no serious objection to offer except this: Of course I am always made more or less the storm centre for the settlement of these difficulties, particularly in Manitoba, but I have adopted the principle of consulting with the provincial governments about these matters. Possibly I have carried that principle too far, but I am never forgetful of the fact that I must take the responsibility for final disposition. I am going to say very frankly here and now that notwithstanding the fact that at present the government have adopted a line of action with respect to the Seven Sisters falls I am not in any particular hurry to come to any decision about that matter, largely because of the fact that the members of this house have expressed very decided opinions about the matter as federal members. I am not very much disturbed by the statement that there must be immediate action; I have investigated the matter pretty well and I think there is plenty of time to give ample consideration to this matter before it is decided. In order to settle the question, and in order to prevent any delay, I do not see any reason why we should not await the action of the city council of Winnipeg and of the provincial government, which must take the responsibility, before a final decision is made here. I think that should satisfy my hon. friend.

Mr. KENNEDY: When the minister was answering my question with regard to the clearing of land by fire he said something about assisting settlers. What does he mean by that, in what way and to what extent?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I would much rather give the matter some consideration before going into it here, because it involves an entirely new policy and the question of whether the Department of the Interior or the federal government should now embark upon a land clearing or burning scheme of this kind. I think that would require some consideration, because my hon. friend is aware of the fact that as soon as this house rises we are going to have a discussion with the provincial governments with respect to the transfer of natural resources. In the case of Alberta that may be delayed, but it is a matter in which, so far as I am concerned, I do not want to make any promises for the future except to say that questions of that kind will receive my sympathetic consideration.

Now may I answer my hon. friend from West Calgary with respect to Mr. Gerhard Ens. I have the question and answer which appeared in Hansard, and my hon. friend will note that at present Mr. Gerhard Ens is employed in the land settlement branch of the Department of Immigration and Colonization, so he is not in my department at all.

Mr. SPENCER: The minister said a few minutes ago that the park had been resurveyed and it is possible that Spray lakes would be outside the park. Could he inform us definitely as to that?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There is no definite decision about that matter. We have two surveys, one which includes it and one which excludes it from the park, and while we have practically settled the matter of the new boundary with the provincial government it is not final. I would say this—I am now speaking for myself, not for the government or the department; it is my own opinion—if it is not advisable to develop Spray lakes as a reservoir, then it will be inside the park boundary. If it is going to be developed for that purpose then it should be outside, because we do not want developments of that kind within the park boundary.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. SPENCER: I suppose the department will not come to a decision until they have consulted the province?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Oh, no.

Mr. FRASER: I should like to ask the minister about the report he promised me before six o'clock.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I shall be glad to give my hon. friend the complete report, and that will explain the whole situation. I must confess that I forgot about it; the controller remembered to get the information but did not get the report. I can get it for my hon. friend to-morrow and will deliver it at eleven o'clock.

Mr. FRASER: I will have the opportunity of making any observations on it later?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Absolutely.

Mr. GARDINER: I notice the first item shows a considerable increase in the amount for salaries. Will the minister explain the increase?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The general improvement in conditions throughout the west and the increased demand for land for homestead purposes have caused an increased expenditure. The amount required to cover the statutory increases was $11,000; the amount required for reorganization and reclassification of the western and eastern services is $29,000; and $25,000 was required to cover a shortage in the estimates of 1927-28. A supplementary estimate should have been voted for that fiscal year but it was not done.

Mr. GARDINER: There is another increase in the item regarding the protection of timber; could we have that explained?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have an increase of $6,000 for publicity work; an increase of $12,000 for the research services; $15,000 for Canadian forest week, this year; and $14,000 for the forestry service. Then it was found necessary to move a portion of the forest products laboratories from Montreal. As my hon. friend knows, the pulp and paper association have put about $300,000 into the erection of a new laboratory at McGill university for research work in connection with pulp and paper, and we have left that division of the forestry service in that new building. They were not prepared to erect buildings for the rest of the organization formerly in Montreal, such as the wood testing plant, and we have moved them to Ottawa. In the supplementary estimates I am asking for an amount to cover the purchase of new machinery needed in this connection; $23,000 additional is required for this purpose. In Vancouver we have an addition of $3,500 to cover tree planting. I would say to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Millar) that we have a constant drive on us to extend this service, and I am asking for more money for it. Then we are asking for the following additions in connection with the forest reserves and fire ranger work; for Manitoba, $12,300; for Saskatchewan, $16,000; Alberta, $25,000 and British Columbia, $34,000. May I say in passing that this is one of our most important services and we could spend a good deal more money to advantage than we are asking for here.

Mr. GARDINER: There is just one other item I should like some information on, and that is the one in connection with the expenditures for the national parks.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The increase of $110,000 comes about very largely in connection with Prince Albert park. My hon. friend will remember that we acquired this a year ago. We voted $25,000 for a preliminary investigation to find a location for the administration building, and the major portion of this increase will be spent on building a road through the park to the lake where these buildings will be located.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Will the minister explain the nature of the securities held by the department in connection with the seed grain liens?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In some cases it is very questionable, and in other cases we have first mortgages. My hon. friend will remember in the issue of 1915, which was a large issue, the seed grain liens took priority over all claims. Later on that was abandoned, and these did not rank first. We will probably have some losses, but adjustments are going on now in both provinces.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Are the liens placed only against the land for which the seed was furnished, or can you place these liens against any real estate held by the farmer?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): As in any other ordinary debt, first there is the land, and secondly, there is the security of the individual himself. Naturally, if he has any property, we can proceed against him in the regular way. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. CAMPBELL: That would be only an ordinary debt. You would have to sue in the ordinary provincial court. I have in mind a case that perhaps the minister will recall where a lien was placed against property in a city. I wondered if the legislation at present in existence gives the department power to place a lien against property held in a city by the same man who secured the advance in the first place.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My hon. friend knows full well that all debts of this character are collectible from the individual and if he does not pay, if one piece of property is so encumbered that nothing can be recovered, naturally you can proceed against any property he might have.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The minister misapprehends my question. That is a case of suing a man in the courts and getting a judgment which would automatically be registered against any property he had in the particular judicial district. But in the case to which I refer the lien was registered against property held in a city. It was not a case of suing and getting a judgment against the man but the actual lien was registered against city property. Does the legislation on the statute book at the present time empower the department to place seed grain liens against property in cities?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My controller tells me that the 1915 liens did extend to all property, but later when we did not have the primary security on the land itself, then I would take action against the individual if I thought I could recover.

Mr. GARDINER: I think there is a question that the minister ought to look into. I understand that after the War-time Elections Act expired, it was not possible for the department to register liens against city property notwithstanding the fact that those liens had already been registered against farm property. Many registrations have been made since that time and my understanding of the situation is that they are illegal. It is quite true that the department can take action through the courts for the recovery of this money, but at present there are many registrations in effect and the minister should take the matter into consideration with a view to removing liens that have been put on illegally.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In Alberta the whole matter is in the hands of the commission.

Mr. GARDINER: What progress has been made towards solving that particular problem in Alberta?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): A number of settlements are coming in. There was some little misunderstanding that it took some time to straighten out between the commissioners, but we have got that adjusted and they are now going ahead. The evidence of that is that we are having settlements come in at the rate of two or three a week now.

Mr. EVANS: I have in mind the case of a returned soldier in Saskatoon who secured seed and feed as far back as 1915. He signed a quit claim deed to the farm on the understanding that the mortgagee was taking over the whole of the indebtedness regarding seed and feed. Later on, although he did not have any property until six years after that, he found when he was going to get his title to his city property that the lien was registered against that. This is one of the most sordid tales of bulldozing and bullying on the part of a member of parliament using his official position as a member of parliament to secure the payment of a sum of money from a returned man which he did not owe. I am here accusing the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Young) of doing this and trying to bluff this man into paying a sum of money which he was clear of for more than six years. I think it should be made plain that men in that position, returned soldiers who have since got clear of their debt, who had gone to the war and served their country overseas, should not be bulldozed, when they come back, into paying something that they do not owe. I have nothing more to say.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have full knowledge of the case referred to by my hon. friend. He has brought it to my attention and we are making a full investigation in respect to it.

Item agreed to.

Scientific institutions—expenses connected with the Dominion observatory at Ottawa, $75,405.

Mr. MANION: Why the increase?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This is largely to provide for reorganization.

Item agreed to.

Government of the Yukon territory—grant for maintenance and construction of roads—further amount required, $3,000.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This is an amount we require to spend in the Yukon. Owing to the development of a new mine there we had not sufficient funds to meet the requirements to get the machinery into the mine from the main road through the Yukon. We require $3,000 to complete the construction of that piece of road.

Item agreed to.

DOMINION LANDS AND PARKS

Additional amount required for protection of timber etc., to pay for machinery for the Forest Products Laboratories, Ottawa, ordered but not delivered in fiscal year 1927-28; to cover expenses of the forest service delegation to the British Empire Forestry Conference in Australia and New Zealand, $18,520.

To provide for the expenses incurred under the Lake of the Woods Control Board Act, 1921, and under the agreement between the Dominion, Ontario and Manitoba, confirmed by the Lac Seul Conservation Act, 1928, for the construction of a dam at the outlet of Lac Seul and its operation by the Lake of the Woods Control Board and for the remuneration at the rate of $1,000 each per annum, of Messrs. J. T. Johnston and K. M. Cameron, Dominion members of such board, the moneys expended to be reimbursed to the Dominion by the licensees of developed power sites on the Winnipeg river in Manitoba, $500,000.

Compassionate allowance to S. Knutson in connection with the death of his son at Jasper Park, $500.

To provide for the expenses connected with Canadian national parks, historic sites, care of indigents in the parks, including purchase of land at Fort Louisburg, etc.—further amount required, $32,000.

To satisfy the claim of C. B. Jameson for refund of amounts paid by him on purchase price of coal mining rights and for taxes, $3,239.91.

To cover the Dominion government's share of freight charges in connection with the removal of settlers from the drought stricken areas to other districts, $1,500.

To provide for the construction of the Golden-Revelstoke highway, $150,000.

To provide for expenses connected with the supervisory mining engineer's office due chiefly to the recent mining activities in northern Manitoba and northern Saskatchewan, $10,000.

To pay damages and costs pursuant to the judgment of the Hon. Mr. Justice MacLean, President of the Exchequer Court, in the action brought by the estate of the late E. H. Maunsell, Henry F. Maunsell and Maunsell Brothers against the crown, $40,000.—Total, $755,759.91.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain the item of $500,000?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This is the amount required to make provision for the construction of the dam for which we passed legislation at the present session, that is the Lac Seul dam. It is a storage dam to create a greater supply of water for the Winnipeg river. That amount will be refunded.

Mr. GARDINER: Will this complete the work?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The Ontario government are putting in $200,000. That is the estimate. I think it will complete the work.

Mr. GARDINER: As regards the construction of the Golden-Revelstoke highway, is this a new piece of construction?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, this is a piece of construction that is not yet definitely settled, but I think I can say to the committee that there will not be any doubt that complete arrangements will be made with the provincial government. In brief it was estimated that to cross the Glacier park would cost the department in the neighbourhood of $750,000. Part of it would be on the old abandoned roadbed of the Canadian Pacific where all those snow sheds are built and it is rather a dangerous piece of road. That is the information we got from our engineering department. It will be a link in the national highway across southern Canada, and to that extent the federal government have responsibilities in connection with the construction of the road, as we had with the road through Banff national park. So the arrangement in brief now is that the road shall be built around the Big Bend. It increases the mileage by ninety miles, but I understand from the provincial authorities that it will serve some rather valuable territory, and we shall have a safe road. The proposal is that we contribute up to $750,000 in the construction of this highway, and we will not attempt to build any highway through Glacier park at all. I am asking $150,000 to carry out the obligation of this year's construction, if the arrangement is consummated.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What is this item of $40,000 in the action brought by Maunsell Brothers against the crown?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am sorry the leader of the opposition is not in the house. This is a case of many years standing. It was a case in which a lease held by Maunsell Brothers, of Macleod, was cancelled by the Hon. Frank Oliver, I think in 1909. Apparently the cancellation did not go into effect for some time, but very serious losses were involved.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Was the action tried and settled?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The case was tried in the exchequer court, and while judgment was given against the government, it was for unstated damages. This is an arrangement for the settlement of the case.

Mr. GUTHRIE: An arrangement made outside of the court altogether?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes. The court did not fix the damages.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Reading the item, one would think we were paying a judgment, but as a matter of fact we are making a settlement.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think that is a complete statement of the case.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): During the few moments I was out of the chamber I understand that the hon. member for Rosetown made some sort of charge against me. I wonder if he will be good enough to repeat it.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. We are now discussing item 501.

Mr. ESLING: May I ask the minister—

Mr. EVANS: I can repeat it, if necessary—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The hon. member for West Kootenay has the floor.

Mr. ESLING: Have arrangements been made that the road shall not go through the park? Has it been definitely determined that this Revelstoke road, or what is known as the east road, is not to be constructed through the park?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is the decision.

Mr. ESLING: Is it the intention to build along the Columbia river to the Canoe river, which is at the top of Big Bend, and then into Jasper Park, or is this merely a contribution towards the construction of the Big Bend road?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The Big Bend road will be part of the international highway that will pass from Golden on to Jasper Park and on to Calgary. This is the last link, I believe, in the construction.

Mr. ESLING: Is this part of the scheme to build from Golden to Jasper Park by way of the Big Bend?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I beg my hon. friend's pardon. I understood him to ask, was it the intention to extend from the Big Bend road to Jasper. No decision has been arrived at as to that.

Mr. ESLING: This is part of that construction, is it not?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): This is to complete the highway to Vancouver around by Big Bend. Then there have been suggestions that we might very well build from Elbow to Jasper Park.

Mr. ESLING: To put it in another way, I assume that this vote represents what the government would ordinarily expend in the construction of the road if it went east from Revelstoke through the Glacier national park.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is the statement I made to the committee a moment ago, and the estimate for that is $750,000.

Mr. ESLING: Is it the intention of the government to continue this road to Jasper Park? That is what the people there are very much interested in.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There has been no decision at all with respect to that.

Mr. KENNEDY: Is the matter under consideration?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It might be, but we have no surveys to indicate whether it is possible or not.

Item agreed to.

RAILWAYS AND CANADIAN GOVERNMENT MERCHANT MARINE

Loans to Canadian National Railway Company

Amount not exceeding $39,000,000 to meet expenditures made or indebtedness incurred (where amounts available from net operating income or investments may be insufficient) by or on behalf of the Canadian National Railway Company, herein called "the company," or any company specified or referred to in chapter 172 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, and chapter 13 of the statutes of 1920 or now or hereafter comprised in the Canadian National Railways or by the company in respect of any railways, properties and works entrusted to it from time to time under the provisions of section 19 of chapter 172 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, or any one or more of such companies, on any or all of the following accounts, such expenditures or indebtedness being herein called authorized expenditures:

(a) Interest on securities, notes and other obligations; rentals for lease of lines;

(b) Equipment principal payments; sinking funds; miscellaneous maturing or matured notes and other obligations secured or unsecured;

(c) Operating income deficit, whenever incurred or ascertained;

(d) construction and betterments, including co-ordinations; acquisition of real or personal property.

The amount herein authorized may be applied from time to time to meet authorized expenditures, in the discretion of the governor in council:

(a) In respect of railways, properties and works entrusted to the company as aforesaid;

(b) In respect of railways, properties and works not so entrusted by way of loans in cash, or by way of guarantee, or partly one way and partly the other, subject, however, as follows:

If by way of loans from His Majesty, the amount or amounts advanced to any one or more of the said companies shall be repayable on demand, with interest payable half-yearly at the rate fixed from time to time by the governor in council, secured if and when directed by the governor in council by mortgage or mortgages upon such properties, in such form and containing such terms and conditions, not inconsistent herewith, as the governor in council may approve.

If by way of loans from persons other than His Majesty (without the guarantee of His Majesty) the amounts, terms and conditions of such loans shall be such as the governor in council may from time to time approve.

If by way of guarantee, any such guarantee may be either a general guarantee covering the total amount of the issue, or by a separate guarantee endorsed on each obligation, and may be of the principal, interest and sinking funds (if any) of the notes, obligations or securities of one or more of the said companies specified by the governor in council, which notes, obligations or securities the companies so specified are hereby authorized to make and issue, and such guarantee may be signed by the Minister of Finance, or such other person as the governor in council may authorize, on behalf of His Majesty, in such form and on such terms and conditions as the governor in council may determine to be appropriate and applicable thereto. Any guarantee so signed shall be conclusive evidence for all purposes that the provisions of this enactment have been complied with.

Should temporary loans be made or negotiated before the lapse of this appropriation either from His Majesty or other persons, guaranteed notes, obligations or securities may subsequently be issued under the provisions of the preceding paragraph of this enactment to renew, refund or adjust such loans, or any part thereof.

Each company herein mentioned or referred to is hereby authorized to aid and assist in any manner any other or others of the said companies, and, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, may for its own requirements and also for the requirements of any or all of such other companies from time to time:

(a) Issue notes, obligations or other securities, joint or several, at discretion, for the purpose of any guarantee made or to be made under the provisions of this enactment;

(b) Apply the proceeds of any such guaranteed issue, or the amount of loans received by virtue of this enactment, in meeting authorized expenditures on its own account or on account of any or all of such other companies;

(c) Make advances for the purpose of meeting authorized expenditures to any or all of such other companies, upon or without any security, at discretion.

No purchaser of such guaranteed notes, securities or obligations shall be under any obligation to inquire into the application of the proceeds of any guaranteed issue, $39,000,000.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): This is the first item of the estimates which have been examined by the select standing committee on railways and shipping. Every member of the house has been supplied, I believe, with copies of the evidence taken before that committee, the questions dealt with, and the information given by the officers of the Canadian National Railways. The same procedure has been followed in this regard as in former years, and I am now presenting the estimate for formal adoption by the committee of the whole house.

Mr. STEVENS: Might I ask the minister if he would at this time make a complete statement of the hotel situation in Halifax? I was really expecting the hon. member for Halifax to be here, but he left the chamber just a few moments ago, not knowing that this item was coming up. As I understand the situation, the facts are these, that one hotel was projected, but later as the matter progressed some differences arose, and two hotels are now projected. One has been erected by a local company in conjunction with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and is now, I think, about completed. Then the Canadian National have provided for the construction of another hotel down near the station, but beyond some foundation work I do not think any very great progress has been made. Is it the intention of the Canadian National to erect this hotel, or to join the other concern in one large hotel for the city?

Mr. DUNNING: With regard to the Halifax hotel matter, included in the estimates submitted by the management of the railway for approval by the government, and consequent submission to parliament, is an amount of $1,250,000 for a combined station and hotel in Halifax for the Canadian National Railways. The subject was discussed before the select standing committee on railways and shipping, and the evidence of Sir Henry Thornton in regard thereto will be found in the printed record of the proceedings commencing at page 148. Briefly, so far as the government is concerned, the position is that the Canadian National management and directors, after considering the whole situation with respect to Canadian National interests in Halifax, placed this sum in their own budget for submission to the government. The government, after giving consideration to the views of the management, decided to approve and to place the matter before the house, where it is at the present time.

Mr. ROWE: Has the minister taken into consideration the very great loss of life at level crossings throughout the Dominion, and set aside in his estimates a sum to reduce the hazard?

Mr. DUNNING: These estimates are for the Canadian National Railways. Earlier in the session I did introduce a bill to amend the Railway Act having particular reference to the grade crossing fund. Probably my hon. friend was not present on that occasion. He will find the discussion in Hansard, and it will give him a complete review of the whole matter.

Mr. ROWE: I realize that it is a matter for the railway board, but I do feel in view of the heavy loss of life, a loss that is always increasing with the ever-increasing vehicular traffic, that the Minister of Railways should be the first to be in a position to suggest to the management of the Canadian National Railways a fixed policy in relation to level crossings.

Mr. DUNNING: I know my hon. friend does not intend to be unfair, but I think he will realize that he is if he reads the very full discussion of level crossings on the occasion to which I have referred. The Canadian National Railways, may I say, is in exactly the same position as any other railway with respect to level crossings that is to say, it is completely under the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. STEVENS: One other question I desire to ask the minister. I understand some tentative arrangement has been made with the province of British Columbia for the purchase and operation of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway and its completion to Prince George. Is there any provision in the Canadian National Railway estimates for that purpose, or out of what fund would the necessary money come? I do not wish the details, but could the minister give us a rough outline of the agreement?

Mr. DUNNING: The position with regard to the Pacific Great Eastern is exactly the same as that with regard to a number of other railways across Canada in which various provinces are interested in various ways. The matter was discussed at the Dominion-provincial conference, when the Dominion ministers met the provincial ministers. Following that conference the government decided to ask Sir Henry Thornton to negotiate with the provinces concerned with respect to each of the railway properties, all of which represent problems of a varied character.

Mr. BENNETT: What provinces would be concerned?

Mr. DUNNING: New Brunswick, Alberta and British Columbia come to my mind immediately. There are three classes of railway problems—I do not wish to describe them as of the white elephant class, but railways which for various reasons the owners desire should become part of the National system. To the first class belong railways which are owned by a province; the second class comprises railways which are owned by private interests, but which for reasons of public service over a large area should be considered from the national point of view; the third class covers railways owned by private interests, the taking over of which involve no considerable public convenience, but which the owners very urgently desire to be rid of. The Pacific Great Eastern railway and the St. John railway in New Brunswick belong to the first class; the Gaspe railways to the second class; and I might distinguish any one of a dozen very small roads anywhere throughout the country as belonging to the third class, but I do not care to particularize as to these.

Mr. BENNETT: It might be an encouragement.

Mr. DUNNING: If I particularized too closely.

Mr. GEARY: The third class might be enlarged by including some railways that are being promoted.

Mr. BENNETT: Like the Port Burwell.

Mr. DUNNING: That is always something parliament should bear in mind—as I think my hon. friend will remember I intimated to the railway committee at its first meeting this session—in dealing generally with applications for railway charges. However, not to deviate from the matter to which my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) has referred, Sir Henry Thornton was authorized and has been negotiating with the provinces concerned. As to the exact state of the negotiations with British Columbia, I am not advised, but I can state positively that the Canadian National management is not authorized by the government to make any settlement. Naturally this would have to be approved by the government, and a transaction of such magnitude would of course have to be submitted to parliament. While I presume it is quite possible that some temporary operating arrangement might be made within the scope of the existing law, it surely is very certain that no arrangement could be consummated with respect to a railway such as the Pacific Great Eastern without submitting it to parliament.

Mr. STEVENS: There has been no tentative purchase agreement between the railways and the province of British Columbia?

Mr. DUNNING: I have no knowledge of anything completed. As a matter of fact no such purchase agreement could be completed without the approval of the government. I believe negotiations are progressing satisfactorily, but beyond that I cannot make any more definite statement.

Mr. STEVENS: The minister cannot say whether it involves the extension from Prince George to the Peace river connection?

Mr. DUNNING: I am not in a position to answer—not as to that. Sir Henry Thornton was given a free hand to go into these matters from the point of view of the National system as it now is, and having in mind the policy evolved by the government as the result of the Dominion-provincial conference, which was an endeavour to meet the provinces as far as practicable in connection with these transportation problems under which they were labouring.

Mr. STEVENS: And whatever arrangement was made would have to be submitted to parliament for ratification and for the passing of the necessary capital funds for the purchase.

Mr. DUNNING: If it involved the purchase of a railway such as the Pacific Great Eastern there is no question it would have to come to parliament. But I want to qualify that statement: It is always possible for some operating arrangement to be entered into—such as that which was entered into at one time in connection with the Edmonton and Dunvegan railway—without the necessity of coming to parliament, because of course no outright purchase is involved in that case. It is always possible that, preliminary to the purchase, if the terms of the purchase are agreed to by the government—recommended by the management and agreed to by the government—some operating arrangement might be consummated between the particular railway and the Canadian National. I am not indicating that this will be done, but it is always a possibility. But nothing with respect to the purchase of a property of that kind can be consummated without the authority of parliament. If the authority does not at present exist it must be secured.

Mr. STEVENS: There would scarcely be an operating agreement until the last forty-five miles had been completed. The Pacific Great Eastern does not touch the Canadian National at the present time. I believe there are about forty miles to construct.

Mr. DUNNING: It is not impossible for an operating arrangement to be made with a railway not connected with the parent. But the Pacific Great Eastern, the people of British Columbia say, begins nowhere and ends nowhere. I presume that, as a matter of common sense in its future disposition, whichever organization may ultimately take control of it, it must have a beginning and an end. I do not want to be too definite regarding the negotiations, the nature of which I am not completely informed upon. But I am quite sure that the management of the Canadian National will take into account all the factors to which my hon. friend has reference.

Mr. MacDONALD (South Cape Breton): I want to make a suggestion to the government in the hope of relieving the situation at Halifax. The situation as it appears to me is this. It is evidently going to cost the country about a million dollars to free Sir Henry Thornton from a position into which he has rather manoeuvred himself or allowed others to manoeuvre him. He is asking for a million dollars to build in Halifax an hotel for which there is absolutely no necessity. There are now three or four fairly good hotels at Halifax sufficient to answer all the requirements there. You can visit Halifax at any time of the year and you will find there hotels not at all crowded. In addition to that we are building a new community hotel which will of course take the cream of the traffic; it will be more than sufficient to accommodate all the tourist traffic for a considerable time to come. There has been an effort in the past year in Nova Scotia to stimulate the tourist traffic. The provincial government is spending a great deal of money, and many towns and cities throughout the province are also contributing to this move. In Cape Breton we have organized a regular tourist association, to which all towns and cities in the island have contributed. It is costing a considerable sum of money. I have here a piece of literature which has been distributed by the Tourist Association of Cape Breton. One great obstacle in the way of tourist traffic throughout Nova Scotia is the want of good hotels, and for this million dollars for an hotel in Halifax—an hotel which is not needed—at least four or five good hotels could be constructed throughout the province. I have read the statement of President Beatty regarding the offer he makes with apparent generosity; but everyone who knows anything knows that Sir Henry Thornton cannot accept that offer. To do so would be at least a distinct loss of prestige to him. He has taken a stand on the matter and he must maintain it. In fairness to him I think the alternative proposition should be made. The minister might vote this amount for the construction of hotels in Nova Scotia, and if Sir Henry Thornton then insisted on the hotel in Halifax, I do not think there is anything we could say about it. But it might commend itself to his good judgment to adopt the suggestion made by all the tourist associations throughout the province, and instead of building one hotel in Halifax he might build four or five throughout the province.

I have here a pamphlet issued by the Cape Breton Tourist Association, a very creditable publication entailing considerable expense, in which are set forth all the beauties of the island of Cape Breton. It is unnecessary to say that the island of Cape Breton is by far the most beautiful portion of all Canada. In support of that statement I might read a number of selections from this book but I will content myself with quoting just one from a very well known author, Charles Dudley Warner, whose writings are no doubt familiar to hon. members. Charles Dudley Warner visited the island of Cape Breton some thirty and forty years ago, long before the present transportation facilities were afforded, and he writes:

> One seeing Baddeck would not like to be detained a prisoner in Eden. . . winding around the base of a wooded range, and crossing its point, we came upon a sight that took all the sleep out of us. This was the famous Bras d'Or . . . The scene was enchanting. . . It was enough to sit on deck forward of the wheel-house, and absorb, by all the sense, the delicious day. With such wonder perpetual and such scenery always present, sin in this world would soon become an impossibility The most electric American, heir of all the nervous diseases of all the ages, could not but find peace in this scene of tranquil beauty, and sail on into a great and deepening contentment. Would the voyage could last for an age, with the same sparkling, but tranquil, sea, and the same environment of hills, near and remote. The hills approached and fell away in lines of undulating grace, draped with tender colour which helped to carry the imagination beyond the earth.

I would not suggest in all seriousness that there is no such thing as sin in the island of Cape Breton, and possibly to do so would not be to offer the strongest inducement I could to some members of the house to visit the island. Seriously, however, I want to leave this suggestion with the minister, and I hope to receive the assistance of the Minister of National Defence, because I think it will commend itself to his good judgment: Instead of making this apply only to the city of Halifax it should apply to the province of Nova Scotia, so that if the president of the Canadian National Railways can see his way clear to do so he may confer a favour upon that province which will not be forgotten.

Mr. MARCIL: I am glad to know that the Minister of Railways has included the Gaspé railway in the list of railways which are now attracting the attention of the management of the Canadian National Railways. Away back in 1915 this house passed a branch lines bill to cover cases such as that of the Gaspé railway, authorizing the government to take over all branch lines over 200 miles in length connecting with the government lines of that day. The war prevented that being done in many cases, but that bill remains today and I am sure the people of Bonaventure and Gaspé will be glad to know that at least there is some ray of hope of settling this long-standing question. Sir Charles Tupper asked this parliament to construct this railway as a branch line of the Intercolonial; the first ten miles were built as a branch line but unfortunately the policy was changed and the line was handed over to a private company. Since then it has had a very chequered career. I am not going into the history of the matter except to say that when we mention maritime railways we should include the Gaspé railway because it serves the maritime part of the province of Quebec and is mentioned among those roads which are to be indemnified under the 20 per cent arrangement. Without any further remarks at this time I would ask the minister if he is in a position to tell us exactly how far these negotiations have progressed and whether there is any hope of a final settlement soon, always remembering that there is existing legislation to cover the case of the Gaspé railway under which the government may take over all branch lines 200 miles in length connecting with the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. DUNNING: I am sorry I cannot be more definite with respect to the Gaspé railway than I was in answering my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre with regard to the Pacific Great Eastern railway. The matter is being looked into by the management, and beyond that I cannot go at present.

Mr. BENNETT: I venture to suggest to the minister that first of all these matters should be dealt with by a bill. I have long felt that estimates of this kind should be dealt with as we deal with the appropriations for the commission in Ottawa and for the harbours of Halifax and Vancouver. These are advances made by the state to the railways; I think a separate bill should be introduced and that, as far as possible, details in sums should be mentioned. I apprehend that a supply bill will be founded on these estimates; am I right in assuming that this will be a separate supply bill?

Mr. DUNNING: No, this is merely in addition to the general estimates.

Mr. BENNETT: I submit that that is not the proper way in which the House of Commons should deal with this matter, and for that statement I will give my reasons shortly. The statute provides that the Minister of Railways represents the shareholders of this enterprise; the directors are appointed by the government and have the powers which appertain to statutory directors. They have the powers of directors under the Railway Act. The Canadian National Railways may be considered for that purpose to be a corporation, and the directors have control of that corporation in the same manner and to the same extent that directors have control of any private corporation. However, in every private corporation there are obligations placed upon the shareholders. These are statutory obligations; they arise under the act incorporating the company on the one hand, and under the general Railway Act on the other. The act of incorporation provides a limitation upon the powers of the directors and states clearly where the powers of the shareholders begin; that is, there are certain matters which may not be disposed of by the directors without reference to the shareholders, and the general Railway Act also provides that while the powers of the directors are very large in many instances, the directors must also refer matters of importance to the shareholders. These provisions apply to this undertaking. It is true that the Canadian National railways are owned by the people of Canada.

Mr. DUNNING: The Canadian National Railway Act specifically sets that out.

Mr. BENNETT: I am coming to that. They apply except to the extent that they may be excepted by the statute under which the corporation comes into existence. Now I submit that the proper form in which these estimates should be introduced would be by a separate bill, because in no sense can this be said to be supply. This is not supply; it is not money granted to His Majesty, and should not be treated in that way. It will be observed that we are treating these estimates as supply, and I submit to the minister that by no stretch of the imagination can he treat these advances made to the corporation to which I have referred as supply granted to His Majesty. The very term "supply granted to His Majesty" involves and implies that we are raising by taxation sums of money to enable His Majesty's government to be maintained and to function. If my premise is correct this is a corporation; the government have a board of directors, subject to the provisions of that general act and with the additional provisions to which I have referred in the act incorporating the enterprise, and to which I will not refer now. However, if my premise be correct—and I think the minister must admit, from his observations, that it is—we should not be treating these matters as supply. As I say, we should treat them as we treated the grants made to the harbours of Quebec, St. John and Halifax. They constitute an appropriation made out of the public revenues for specific purposes not related to supply, and they are improperly dealt with in the estimates.

The minister will say that heretofore these matters have been dealt with in this way. I have had occasion to look into this matter with some care since last year, and the conclusion at which I have arrived is embodied in the observations I have just made. I cannot help thinking that it must commend itself to the good judgment of the Minister of Railways that we should deal with these questions as matters of legislation which leaves the house much more free to deal with the situation than otherwise would be the case.

Now let me go a step further. If we are to deal with these matters as I have indicated, and going on the assumption that the management of the railway company, that is the directors, have recommended to the shareholders that they as shareholders appropriate sums necessary to maintain, develop and extend the property where necessary and to preserve it in its entirety, these items then represent recommendations made by the directors to the shareholders. Under the statute the Minister of Railways is the shareholder representing the people of Canada; the members of this house are really the shareholders in fact, because the minister derives his power from them, and I submit that it is still clearer than ever that this is not supply in any sense in which that term can be properly used.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, June 7, 1928

The house met at eleven o'clock.

SALE OF SCHOOL LANDS—ALBERTA

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): I desire to lay on the table of the house copies of files in connection with orders for returns passed on May 14, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7. These were asked for by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland), the hon. member for Camrose (Mr. Lucas), the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Luchkovich), the hon. member for Athabaska (Mr. Kellner), the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman), the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) and the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer).

FOREIGN DECORATIONS

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I beg to lay on the table a return to an order of the house for which the hon. member for St. Lawrence- St. George (Mr. Cahan) has been anxiously waiting, respecting honours conferred by foreign governments on persons domiciled in Canada.

IMMIGRATION

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND COLONIZATION

Mr. W. F. KAY (Brome-Missisquoi): If I can get the unanimous consent of the house, I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Glen:

That the tenth report of the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization be concurred in.

In moving for concurrence in this report of the agriculture committee which has had under consideration the question of immigration, I am not going to detain the house at any length owing to the lateness of the session and also owing to the fact that I may be blamed by some members for having brought the report down at such a late date. The committee has worked very hard on this matter and it might not be out of place for me to explain to the house the number of meetings which we have held and the work which we have done outside of dealing with the great matter of immigration. Altogether we considered and reported to the house nine bills. We took up and considered a reference from the house dealing with the grading of wheat on its protein content and on that matter we held something like twenty meetings. We held nine meetings in regard to bills and something like forty meetings in regard to immigration. Altogether we have held a total of seventy-four meetings during the session. Had this very important question of immigration been referred to a committee which had nothing else to do, it might have been better, because as I said, the agriculture committee, the most important committee of the house, had other matters of great importance to consider.

I should like to express to the members of this large committee my appreciation of and thanks for the very courteous way in which they treated the chairman during all this period. There have been, as might be expected, differences of opinion, but at all times the members of the committee have been very generous in their treatment of the chairman and I wish to express my thanks on that account.

Taking into consideration the large number of members composing the committee and the great divergence of views held by the different members on a question regarding which the country itself has very divergent views, I think it is a matter of congratulation that the committee were able to bring down a unanimous report. Many views which were held by members had to be toned down, if I may say so; some had views which were not expressed in the report; but there was on the part of all parties composing the committee a very keen and sincere desire to help the government by bringing down a report which might be unanimous. I understand the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) is going to move an amendment to the motion, but I do not think that means that he did not support the report, because he was one of the chief members of the subcommittee which drafted it.

There is only one thing which I should like to say to the government in this matter, and that is that I think one of the most pressing needs for the better working of immigration in this country is greater cooperation between the Dominion government and the provinces.

[Mr. Kay.]

There is no doubt that the provinces could more successfully and more easily work out the settlement and colonization of the immigrants who are brought to this country, and I would say that there should be cooperation between the federal government and the governments of the several provinces, cooperation between the Department of Immigration and the many agencies which are engaged in bringing immigrants to this country. I trust that the debate on this matter in this house may be as amicable and as useful as was the discussion in the committee.

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, I can simply re-echo to a considerable degree the opinion expressed by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Kay), who acted as chairman of the select standing committee on immigration and colonization and presided over all its deliberations with great fairness and dignity, and in so doing I am sure secured the respect and esteem of all members of that committee on both sides of the house. Our deliberations were conducted in the most amicable manner, and upon the terms of the report as presented we are largely in agreement, indeed unanimous, I think, except with regard to one particular clause.

It seems to me that the matter of immigration into this country is one of the large and transcending questions upon which the public of Canada at present have their minds directed. There is not, I think, a great difference of opinion with regard to the necessity of developing our country by means of immigration into this country, especially from the British Isles. At the Imperial conference of 1921, at which Canada was represented by Mr. Meighen, the then Prime Minister, a resolution was adopted unanimously, as follows:

> The conference having satisfied itself that the proposals embodied in the report of the conference on state-aided empire settlement are sound in principle, and that the several dominions are prepared, subject to parliamentary sanction and to the necessary financial arrangements being made, to cooperate effectively with the United Kingdom in the development of schemes based on these proposals, but adapted to the particular circumstances and conditions of each dominion.

At that same conference the prime ministers representing the various dominions of the commonwealth also set forth an unanimous expression of view, as follows:

> 2. The conference expresses the hope that the government of the United Kingdom will, at the earliest possible moment, secure the necessary powers to enable it to carry out its part in any schemes of cooperation which may subsequently be agreed on, preferably in the form of an act which will make it clear that the policy of cooperation now adopted is intended to be permanent.

3. The conference recommends to the governments of the several dominions that they should consider how far their existing legislation on the subject of land settlement, soldier settlement, and immigration, may require any modification or expansion in order to secure effective cooperation, and should work out, for discussion with the government of the United Kingdom, such proposals as may appear to them most practicable and best suited to their interests and circumstances.

At a subsequent meeting of the Imperial conference in 1926, at which Canada was represented by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and his colleague the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), a resolution was adopted approving of the resolution of the conference of 1921, the Prime Minister of Canada being present and approving of the previous resolution. First a special subcommittee report was presented, and then the report was considered and adopted by the conference on the 19th of November. The prime ministers of the dominions most closely concerned, Canada, the Commonwealth of Australia, and New Zealand, expressed their appreciation of the advances which had been made in practical cooperation in respect of immigration since the conference of 1923, and emphasized the earnest desire of those dominions to aid further in the development of their respective countries with settlers from Great Britain up to the limit of their capacity. The report says:

As was pointed out at the previous conference, however, the rate at which the redistribution of population within the empire can take place must be governed by the rate at which the dominions can satisfactorily absorb new settlers; and it was generally recognized that a sound policy must be based upon scientific and carefully considered schemes designed to secure the settlement of suitable persons under conditions conducing both to their own well-being and to the prosperous development of the dominion in which they are established.

And then, after approving of the three-thousand-family scheme as having been a conspicuous success in Canada, the report proceeds:

With a view to providing inducements to settlers to remain on the land overseas the subcommittee recommended that facilities should be provided for assisting suitable settlers from Great Britain to acquire farms of their own.

Then finally a resolution was passed of which I shall read the last clause, as follows:

It (the conference) endorses the view expressed at that conference that the policy should be a permanent one. It recognizes that it would be impracticable, owing to financial, economic, and political considerations, to promote mass movements of population, but it is satisfied that, by continuous adherence to the present policy, it should be possible steadily to increase the flow of population to those parts of the British commonwealth where it is most needed for development and general security, and where it will find the greatest opportunities.

That series of resolutions adopted in 1921, and reaffirmed and extended in 1926, proves to my mind conclusively that the representatives of this government and of the preceding government were quite unanimous in the view that it was absolutely necessary to have a clear understanding between the government of this dominion and the government of Great Britain with regard to a policy of immigration that would not only promote the transfer of immigrants to this country, but would secure for them employment on a satisfactory basis after they had arrived in this country.

With those reports in view I attended a majority of the meetings of the select committee on agriculture and colonization. But perhaps I was expecting too much under the circumstances. We dealt with the Immigration department in such a manner as to ascertain its workings in all their ramifications. We investigated certain rumours or suspicions which had been spread throughout the country as to the officials of the department being lacking in honesty, and another suspicion or rumour that members of the House of Commons had been trafficking in permits or letters of admission for immigrants from the continental countries of Europe.

At the outset I desire to say that after examining some of the witnesses and listening attentively to the examination of others from the department and outside, I came to the clear conclusion that whatever the department may lack in efficiency as it is at present constituted, there can be no reflection upon the honour or honesty of the officials who are administering that department. I also came to the conclusion that the suspicion created throughout the country with regard to members of parliament trafficking in permits or letters of admission to immigrants from the continental countries of Europe is entirely without foundation so far as any evidence was brought before the committee, and so far as I was able to ascertain by personal investigation of some rumours which were brought to my notice.

I deem it my duty to say that in the investigations which I personally conducted I think I found the real source of these rumours with regard to the payment of money by continental immigrants for their admission into Canada. Those immigrants do not understand either of the official languages of this country. Some of them have been accustomed to live under conditions which make it necessary to pay bribes to government officials for privileges which they might from time to time apply for. On coming to this country many of them have been requested by the Immigration department to make deposits of money as security that during the term of five years they will not become a burden upon the municipal or provincial authorities, and some of them have believed that they were thereby making payments to bribe officials to permit them to come into this country, not understanding the purpose of such deposits with the department. That has created throughout the country a suspicion that immigrants from continental Europe were required to pay money to secure admission. I found no real basis for those rumours and suspicions, and I am glad so to state.

But my personal opinion is that in view of the immense undertaking with respect to the settlement of a broad domain such as ours, the Department of Immigration is lacking in efficiency and in the necessary executive ability to carry through such an immense undertaking on a satisfactory basis and with satisfactory results. I make no reflection upon the present Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke), in whose personal honour and integrity I have complete confidence; but personally I should be pleased indeed—and I am sure that many members of that committee will agree with me in the advisability of this—to see in charge of the department and directing its administration a gentleman with wider business experience and more thorough executive ability than the present minister has.

But as to the future. The report submitted to the house contains one recommendation. I quote:

> Your committee would also recommend that the government make an intensive and comprehensive study of the possibilities of increasing industrial and agricultural development in Canada with a view to attracting capital and providing wider and increased opportunities for employment not only for our own people, but for prospective immigrants.

That part of the report was unanimously approved by the committee. But it seemed to me and to some other members of the committee that it was advisable to bring to the attention of the government some of the ways and means for establishing a broad, constructive policy to carry into effect what I believe to be the almost unanimous desire of this house and to meet the demands of public opinion. We have, as I have said, a vast domain. It is our duty and responsibility to see that this country is developed not only for the present generation, but to lay broad and deep the foundations of the Canada yet to be. Sir Wilfrid Laurier in a famous expression spoke of the twentieth century as being Canada's century. While we have had some reverses owing to the war and the vast expenditure it imposed upon us, yet I still believe there is no other country on the face of the earth so well conditioned for advancement in population and in production as is Canada at the present day.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. CAHAN: Therefore we must look forward and adopt the best constructive policy adapted to bring about such a desirable result. I am convinced that the department as at present constituted cannot efficiently perform that great public service. Consequently it seemed to me and to some others that the government should now undertake the reorganization of the Department of Immigration and Colonization. Personally, at first I thought it might be reorganized on such broad lines as have been adopted in the Commonwealth of Australia, which recently established a development and migration commission for the direction and control of all schemes of settlement. One branch of that commission has the duty to make a complete economic survey of the industrial resources of the Australian Commonwealth, and I believe it has proved an important factor in the recent prosperous development of the Australian states. In this country I find that a number of members are not in favour of the commission method, although the commission would certainly always be under the supervision and direction of a responsible minister of the crown. Therefore I suggest a modified form in which that department might be created, having one branch in charge of immigration and a second branch in charge of the development of employment throughout the country in every form of industry. We cannot under present conditions bring large masses of immigrants into this country and set them afloat without providing here suitable remunerative employment for them. Under the present conditions and during the last few years we have lost by emigration nearly three-quarters of a million of Canadian youth whose places have been largely taken up by immigrants from Great Britain and the continent. We must provide employment in this country of a diversified remunerative character for the sons and daughters of Canada, and also such employment as will enable us to increase our population by immigration from the old world, especially from Great Britain.

We have at present in the Department of the Interior vast stores of knowledge with regard to our natural resources which are not sufficiently made known to Canadians and to the world. We have in our mines branch, in our geological survey and statistical departments vast stores of knowledge which are very essential to any board or body of men who may desire to undertake the industrial development of Canada. These stores of knowledge should be rendered accessible, and further, full inquiry should be made by a branch of a reconstituted department responsible to parliament under the supervision of a minister of the crown; and that department should seek out and make known to the world all the vast possibilities of industrial development in this country.

I know that when I speak of industrial development in Canada there is always a suspicion that I am talking tariff protection. I regard tariff protection as an incident in the vast undertaking which I have in view and which I believe could be carried out by responsible men of large experience, high intelligence and executive training and ability. I am not bringing forward this motion as a vote of want of confidence in the government. I intend to ask that certain matters which I shall bring to the attention of the house by resolution should be presented by the committee to the government with an earnest recommendation that the suggestions therein contained should receive the favourable consideration of the government, because I realize that so long as we have responsible government in this country we can secure the well-being of Canada, in the matter of political administration, only by acting through the government which for the time being occupy the seats of office. And however much we may desire to remove them at the earliest possible opportunity, we realize that until a general election they will sit stolid and content in the offices which they at present occupy and control.

I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that I can better present my views than by reading the resolution which I am about to propose, because I do not now intend to consume even the forty minutes at my disposal. I move, seconded by Mr. Arthurs:

That the said report be not now concurred in, but that it be recommitted to the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization with instructions that they have power to amend the same and to recommend that the following suggestions and recommendations receive the favourable consideration of the government, viz:

1. The evidence taken by the committee and the reasonable implications of such evidence disclose that in the matter of immigration into Canada, particularly from Great Britain and Northern Ireland, no effective measures are now being taken to secure the active and efficient cooperation, with the Department of Colonization and Immigration, of the Colonization departments of the Canadian National Railways and of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and of the various other organizations, associations and agencies which are engaged in the work of immigration, colonization and settlement in Canada.

2. It is evident that the Department of Immigration and Colonization as at present constituted and administered is incompetent to procure the effective coordination and cooperation of all these various organizations in the work of immigration, colonization and land settlement.

3. The matter of immigration into Canada is of mutual concern to Great Britain, with its congestion of population and prevalent unemployment, and to Canada with its widely extended territory and its sparse population; but neither country may be well served by the mere transport to Canada annually of large numbers of people who are left to make their way in Canada as pioneers in a new country under conditions of life which to them are novel and difficult.

4. On the other hand, the capacity of Canada for the absorption in large numbers of new settlers is obviously limited by the existing economic conditions of this country and the possibilities for their speedy improvement. The cost and difficulty involved in the resettlement in Canada of our returned soldiers after the conclusion of the Great War, and their absorption into the economic life of this country, are indicative of the ramifications of the problem of procuring the migration of masses of people from Great Britain to Canada and their resettlement in this country under conditions which will ensure their future happiness and contentment.

5. Immigration should be carried on contemporaneously not only with land settlement throughout Canada, but also with such development and extension of employment in Canadian agriculture, mining, forestry and manufacturing as will rapidly absorb incoming settlers. Such immigration and land settlement on an extensive scale will eventually require not only large appropriations from the federal treasury for the direction, control and maintenance of such a comprehensive national undertaking, but it will also involve the establishment throughout Canada by private enterprise and by the investment of private capital of such profitable and diversified industries of all kinds as are suitable to our climatic and economic conditions.

6. The key to the solution of the whole problem of immigration to Canada is the provision of adequate employment, in all branches of domestic industry in Canada, not only for our Canadian people, but also for the large numbers of immigrants from other countries who may be induced to settle in Canada.

7. If existing economic conditions are more or less completely ignored and opportunities for employment are not widely extended, large migrations of people to this country will inevitably result in increasing the problems of domestic unemployment in Canada, especially in the winter season, and in lowering the standards of life which are at present enjoyed by those resident in Canada who are now engaged in industrial pursuits; both of which tendencies will, in turn, seriously react adversely upon the flow of immigration into Canada.

8. The committee, therefore, recommend that a department of Immigration, Colonization and Industrial Development be organized forthwith, which shall be under the administration of a responsible minister of the crown and which shall consist of two branches, each under the direction of a superintendent of intellectual strength and considerable business experience.

9. The duty of the immigration and colonization branch of the said proposed department should be;

(a) To procure the cooperation of the several provincial governments with the work of said proposed department;

(b) To coordinate the work of all organizations, associations and agencies, which are now engaged in promoting immigration into Canada, under one supreme direction and control, for the more efficient carrying out of the undertakings which all have in common;

(c) To ensure, in so far as practicable, that a majority of the settlers emigrating from other countries to Canada shall be such as may be physically and mentally adapted to the conditions of life in this northern country and likely to be readily assimilated by our existing population;

(d) To make adequate financial provision for the settlement upon the vacant lands throughout Canada, which are suitable for agriculture, of families who appear, with reasonable certainty, to be adapted for agricultural pursuits;

(e) To provide facilities for the settlement in the more recently organized provinces of Canada of settlers from the older provinces, who, as were thousands of the earlier settlers in the west, are intent upon leaving their homes in the east in search of wider opportunities for self-improvement in the new agricultural and mining districts which are now, from time to time, being opened up for settlement and development in the west; and

(f) To direct, supervise and control all schemes of settlement in the more sparsely settled districts of Canada.

10. The duty of the industrial development branch of said proposed department should be:

(a) To act in close cooperation with the immigration and colonization branch;

(b) To make a complete economic survey and study of the industrial resources of Canada;

(c) To advise in regard to the future economic development of the several provinces of Canada and of the Northwest Territories, with a view to the more rapid extension of industrial employment, and

(d) To direct its attention particularly to the establishment of suitable industries in our smaller towns and villages not only in eastern Canada and British Columbia, but particularly in the three prairie provinces, whence a constantly increasing number of young men and young women, who have no special aptitude or liking for agricultural pursuits, will inevitably emigrate from Canada to seek other industrial employment in the neighbouring republic, if similarly attractive opportunities are not afforded to them in Canada.

11. The investigations of the industrial development branch should be comprehensive in character and be undertaken in a spirit of scientific detachment, in order that it may receive adequate and non partisan political support throughout the whole country.

12. And the committee are also of the opinion that the industrial development branch by a detailed survey of industrial conditions in Canada, would be able to recommend what new industries for the production in Canada of commodities, which are now imported in considerable quantities into Canada, could advantageously be created in Canada or be transplanted from other countries to Canada, without unduly increasing the prices for such commodities in our more limited markets, and so afford constantly increasing and remunerative employment within Canada for all classes of our population, and thus provide the strongest incentive to suitable settlers to make their permanent homes in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I submit this amendment not in any critical spirit, but I think in its wisdom this house should outline some constructive measures for recommendation to the government for their acceptance, such recommendations to be worked out by the government not perhaps in order to start a new era of prosperity but in order to accelerate the prosperity of Canada by ensuring employment in this country not only to our own population but also to ensure that those whom we induce to enter Canada will find remunerative employment here. Unless we concentrate our attention directly upon the necessity of increasing employment in this country it seems to me useless to continue to bring large numbers of immigrants into the country and to disperse them from one end of Canada to the other without providing them with the means of earning a suitable living here.

PRIVILEGE—Mr. YOUNG (SASKATOON)

Mr. A. M. YOUNG (Saskatoon): I wish to rise to a question of personal privilege. Last evening when I was not in the house the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) took occasion to make what I regard as a severe accusation against myself. I wish to read from Hansard:

Mr. Evans: I have in mind the case of a returned soldier in Saskatoon who secured seed and feed as far back as 1915. He signed a quit claim deed to the farm on the understanding that the mortgagee was taking over the whole of the indebtedness regarding seed and feed. Later on, although he did not have any property until six years after that, he found when he was going to get his title to his city property that the lien was registered against that. This is one of the most sordid tales of bulldozing and bullying on the part of a member of parliament using his official position as a member of parliament to secure the payment of a sum of money from a returned man which he did not owe. I am here accusing the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Young) of doing this and trying to bluff this man into paying a sum of money which he was clear of for more than six years. I think it should be made plain that men in that position, returned soldiers who have since got clear of their debt, who had gone to the war and served their country overseas, should not be bulldozed, when they come back, into paying something that they do not owe. I have nothing more to say.

I also understand that in a recent letter to the Minister of the Interior he accuses the minister of getting me to bulldoze this man into paying a debt which had been settled for many years. On that point I want to say that I never discussed this matter with the minister in any way or at any time; any discussion I had was with departmental officials.

I want to say first that if possible I am going to keep out the names of all these parties, and in fairness and kindness to the man referred to in this speech I am not going to mention any of the details except in so far as that may be necessary in connection with the remarks of my hon. friend. I want to explain my connection with this matter. A highly respectable gentleman in Saskatoon, one of my constituents, came to me one day and said he was having some dispute with the Department of the Interior over a seed grain lien, and asked me if I would take up the matter with the department. I have done this on many occasions for many people when disputes have arisen; I consider it to be one of my duties as a member of parliament. So I took up the matter with the officials of the department; we went into the records of the case and then I said I would go back and see this gentleman in Saskatoon to discuss the case further with him. I did so, and he showed me the other side of the case; he brought forward documentary evidence and suggested that perhaps I would be good enough to see the man referred to by the hon. member for Rosetown last night. I said I would be very glad if I could do anything at all to smooth out the difficulties which existed between the three parties.

What are the facts? In the first place, this statement says he signed a quit claim deed to the farm on the understanding that the mortgagee was taking over the whole indebtedness with respect to seed and feed grain. So far as I am aware, there is no mortgagee in this case. In the second place, I want to deny most categorically the charges made regarding bulldozing, bullying and bluffing; they are wholly and absolutely untrue.

This gentleman called to see me after I had suggested what I wanted to see him for. He then made some uncomplimentary remarks about the man who was the former owner, and who is the present owner. I suggested that he had better defer these remarks until he had read the file which I had there. After reading the file his statement to me was, "I acknowledge that I owe this money." Now what are the further facts? This seed grain was purchased by the man in question and has never been paid for. The previous owner, who is the present owner, was not aware for a period exceeding six years that any seed grain had ever been purchased for that farm. I may say that there is a difference of opinion between these two gentlemen on that point, but the evidence goes to show which man has the facts of the case. When he called to see me that night I regarded the whole thing as being closed, except for this one item. He made some suggestion as to payment, but said he was somewhat financially embarrassed. I told him that I knew the previous owner, who is the present owner, was willing out of the goodness of his heart to make some contribution towards straightening out this mix-up, although he had said that he had no right whatever to do that. I simply asked this other man if he would be willing to do the same thing, and he left my office and thanked me very kindly for the interview. Later on he made the suggestion that he would pay a certain amount of money.

I want to draw the attention of the house to one further fact. Last night the hon. gentleman said that this man had been asked to pay a sum of money which he was clear of for more than six years. If I am wrong in these statements I am going to ask the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) to say so right now. The hon. member has offered to pay $300 in settlement of this very claim, which he says his friend does not owe. If that be the case, I would ask him why he has offered to pay anything?

Mr. EVANS: The hon. member will get his answer in the ordinary course.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): I had been asked by one of my constituents to take this matter up with the department, and I was investigating it when the hon. member for Rosetown saw fit to butt in. I would like to ask him if I was not entitled to the courtesy of his coming to me to find out about the case. He never on any occasion spoke to me regarding this matter, never did me that courtesy. In so far as this statement refers to me, I want to deny it absolutely. There was no bulldozing, bullying or bluffing of this man to pay this debt. I will go further and say that I have never done that sort of thing with any man, whether a returned soldier or otherwise, in order to get him to pay any debt. I am going to demand that the hon. member for Rosetown retract his statement unconditionally. When he says this matter has been settled for over six years, I reply that it is now under investigation by the department and sworn evidence is to be taken at Saskatoon. These are the facts of the case.

I have lived in Saskatoon for a period of twenty-two years, and had the hon. member for Rosetown made these statements there I would have no fear of the effect. But inasmuch as he chose to make his remarks in this honourable chamber, with the result that they will be read by a much wider circle and in places where I am not so well known, I feel obliged to demand, as I now demand, that he retract these statements unconditionally.

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Rosetown): Mr. Speaker, I presume I have the privilege of defending myself and the statements made last night.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Withdraw the remarks; that is the privilege you have.

Mr. EVANS: Mr. Speaker, I did not interrupt the hon. gentleman when he was speaking. In the first place, I want to say that when I mentioned the mortgagee, one Hanson held the farm, and the returned soldier never acknowledged to the hon. gentleman that he owed for seed grain. He called to see the hon. member (Mr. Young, Saskatoon) at his residence, after being told by telephone to come and see him on urgent business. It is also untrue that he offered to pay a certain sum, and I will read all the correspondence to show that.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. EVANS: I am also accused—

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. EVANS: I am accused of offering to pay $300, thereby acknowledging the debt. I never acknowledged the debt, and I never offered to pay $300. I wanted the returned soldier to have his title clear, and I went down to the department and offered to pay $300 if Mr. Tubb could settle for that amount; if Mr. Tubb had to pay that amount my cheque was ready there and then. The Minister of the Interior or any department official never intimated to me that they would take my cheque. I want this house to understand that the debt stands at $826 at the present time, and I want to say that neither the hon. member for Saskatoon nor any departmental official, not even the minister himself, has the authority to settle for the amount mentioned. Again I did not butt in when the returned soldier was accused by the hon. gentleman of having obtained seed and feed on false pretences.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): That is absolutely an untruth. I ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw that right now.

Mr. EVANS: I did not interrupt the hon. gentleman when he was speaking and I would ask him to sit as comfortably as possible while I am making my speech.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): I am not going to sit and listen to the hon. gentleman saying things like that.

Mr. EVANS: The returned soldier came and saw me. I was an old friend of this soldier, having known him for twenty-two years. I was the first man he met when he came from London, England, out of the great departmental store of Selfridge's in that city. I gave him perhaps the first advice that he received on coming to this country and I have kept him under my eye since then. In defence of my statement last night I wish to read this as the first letter:

October 27, 1927.

Mr. J. E. Tubb:

I desire to see you in reference to a seed grain lien for grain furnished by the Dominion government. Please 'phone me and make an appointment to see me at my house.

Yours very truly,

A. MacG. Young.

If the hon. member disputes his signature—

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Not at all.

Mr. EVANS: —I can send the letter over to him for his perusal if he likes. He asked Mr. Tubb to call on him and I think he did so, but later the hon. gentleman wrote to the returned soldier as follows:

November 18, 1927.

Mr. J. E. Tubb:

Replying to your letter of the 16th instant, I would say that when you saw me here about your seed grain lien it was agreed that you would advise me at once how much money you could pay on this before the end of the year. I shall be glad to hear from you stating definitely what you are prepared to do.

I take that also as a bit of bulldozing.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. EVANS: Mr. Tubb has written the following on the margin of this letter:

I never agreed to this

At the request of Mr. Tubb I wrote to the department for a statement. I never received a statement from the department, but they informed the hon. gentleman, to use his own words, that I had butted in. They did not put it in that way; they said that I had written for a statement. The hon. gentleman then gave the returned soldier some more impudence for coming to me. Mr. Tubb wrote to the department for confirmation of the promise of the hon. member for Saskatoon to settle for $250. This promise was never confirmed. The hon. gentleman had no authority from the government to make this offer and this was confirmed to me, I want to say, by the minister in conversation with him in his office some time during this session and later by correspondence and interviews with an official of the department. I hold in my hand a letter dated February 6, 1928, from Mr. Tubb as follows:

Under November 18, he—

Dr. Young.

—states I agreed to let him know how much I could pay. That is quite wrong. He, himself did suggest that I go home and write a letter to him promising a certain amount, but you will remember I called and saw you on the way home. I never made any promise whatever. I was looking forward to giving my wife the title to this house on the anniversary of our twenty-first wedding that fell on the 21st of December, and he drafted the conditional agreement to pay $250 in order to get the title.

That was the departmental solicitor in the soldier settlement office in Saskatoon. That was conditional. The hon. gentleman later on found that he had made a mistake; either he had entered into a conspiracy to get this money from this returned soldier, or else he had authority from the department. I am informed that he never got any authority from the department to collect this sum of money.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): May I ask the hon. member what he said about a conspiracy?

Mr. EVANS: Because of my solicitations to the Department of the Interior a move was made evidently to clear up the whole matter. This letter is dated Saskatoon, April 30, 1928, and I will ask hon. gentlemen to follow me while I read it, as it reveals what was done to cover up the tracks of the hon. member for Saskatoon in the mistake he first made in accusing this man of obtaining seed grain under false pretences. Mr. Tubb states:

I received yours at noon to-day. I waited for it because I was honoured by another visit from the gentleman whose card I enclose herewith.

Mr. R. B. Matheson, Edmonton.

He was accompanied by the subagent at Saskatoon, Mr. Collins. They came on Saturday, April 21, and stayed about an hour and a half. This time he, Mr. Matheson, said he was not asking for any money and had no authority to accept it, but instead tried hard, very hard indeed, to get a letter from me promising to pay $300.

Which according to the minister's own words he had no authority to do.

He showed me a letter from A. H. Hanson who promised to pay $300 if the lien was removed from his land. I read the letter.

The subagent, Mr. Collins, followed my wife into the kitchen and tried hard to get her to say she was willing to sign the letter and told her the government could seize the property—

That is the cottage in town which they have struggled six years to pay for.

—and sell it if we did not pay up. My wife is now upset with her nerves over this; in fact, she is ill. I absolutely refused to have anything to do with it.

I hold in my hand an abstract of the title to this property. The date of registry is 1920. There is a seed grain lien placed against the property on the 3rd of July, 1915, five years before Mr. Tubb ever got this property. I find in connection with the figures "1915," that the two figures that were in the place where the "15" is now have been erased, and "15" placed over it in another hand from that which has written the figures "19". Mr. Tubb has written on the bottom of this paper:

The seed lien was put on two years after this mortgage was registered. The date is quite wrong.

I want the house to understand from what I am saying that this man does not owe this debt at all for seed grain. He had signed a quit claim to that property on the understanding that the owner was taking back the farm, knowing full well that the seed grain was against it, and the returned soldier was signing the quit claim on that condition. He went to the war, served his country there, and came back.

I have another letter dated 31/3/28. This was in answer to one I wrote regarding some correspondence: To show how anxious they were to cover up the tracks of the hon. gentleman, listen to this:

Last Thursday the Dominion lands agent from Prince Albert and the commissioner for the western district called on me. These gentlemen, after explaining that the amount of the lien was about $850, offered to accept one-half and assured me that the government would see that Hanson paid the balance. I refused to consider it, and after a lot of talk they finally told me that if I would give them a cheque for $300 right there they would at once have the attachment to the title removed.

This was after the head commissioner from Edmonton had told me that he had no right or authority to receive any money whatsoever. If hon. gentlemen think I am wrong I will leave it to them to decide what was behind the whole thing. The letter continues:

They said they had authority from Ottawa for that.

I understand from Ottawa that they did not have that authority. He goes on:

I absolutely refused to do anything, and they told me that if I did not make the payment within three days the government would take steps to enforce payment for the full amount. I learned the next day that one had gone back to Prince Albert and the other to Edmonton on the night train, and had not called upon Hanson at all.

Here is another letter that is relevant to the case:

Since I last wrote you I have had a visit from the subdivision agent at Saskatoon. He explained his visit was not official—

Not official, this time:

—but knowing I was somewhat deaf, he thought I had not fully understood the importance of the interview with the commissioner. He said: "If you will take my advice, you will pay the $300 and save yourself a lot of trouble."

Then it was I went to the department here and offered my cheque for $300 if this returned soldier had to pay it:

I told him I fully understood the matter. I refused to discuss it any further.

I want the house to follow this a little further, to see how frantic they now became to clear the hon. gentleman. Listen to this:

To-day the 16th I received a long distance call on the 'phone from the Dominion lands' agent at Prince Albert. He wanted to know what I had intended to do about paying the $300. I told him I was taking no action in the matter. He said he would have to make a report to head office about it.

Evidently the report has not yet been made. Here is another letter under date of May 23, containing a few more facts. I will read what is relevant to the discussion.

Mr. CAHILL: Who is it from?

Mr. EVANS: It is from the returned soldier. He said:

You will remember I told you he (Dr. Young) accused me of fraudulently obtaining seed from the government and unknown to Mr. Hanson. This is untrue. Mr. Hanson knew the facts of the case as I asked him to finance me, and he refused. I had only signed the contract to buy the farm that fall (1914). Now the department is to try and find out what kind of a crop I harvested in 1914, and what became of the proceeds. This was the question put to me by Dr. Young. I told him it did not concern him or Hanson as I had not bought the farm then.

[Mr. Evans.]

Not only that, but Hanson himself suggested to the returned soldier to go to the government and get seed grain. The letter continues:

As a matter of fact, I went to Hanson several times about the seed and each time he refused, so I told him plainly that unless I had seed I would have to move off his place and it was then, when he saw he was likely to have a vacant farm, that he suggested that I try to get seed grain from the government. He knew positively about the whole transaction and I, thank God, have a clear conscience, but to go back to a time prior to the signing of the contract does not seem to my way of thinking to have anything to do with either.

Another letter that is relevant to the question is dated 16/5/28 and to show you how desperate they were to clear the hon. gentleman of trying to obtain a sum of money, I ask the house to listen to this, and I want to say that this was never authorized by the department either:

Last Sunday morning we received your telegram, and to-day your lengthy letter. We are thankful to you.

Since my last letter to you, we had another visitor from the Dominion lands office. This gentleman took measurements of the lots, number of rooms in house, and assessment of property. This, of course, thoroughly upset my wife, and she said rather than have had all this trouble, and in consequence giving you a deal of trouble, she would have paid the $300 to have been relieved of the worry.

Mr. DONNELLY: Who is the letter from?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. CAHILL: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. We are listening to documents being read without the names of the writers being given. They have no bearing whatever on the serious charge made by the member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) against the member for Saskatoon (Mr. Young). Last night the member for Rosetown made a serious charge against the member for Saskatoon. I need read only a few lines of it:

This is one of the most sordid tales of bulldozing and bullying on the part of a member of parliament using his official position as a member of parliament to secure the payment of a sum of money from a returned man which he did not owe.

That is a serious charge against an hon. member of this house. The member for Rosetown is not dealing with the question at all. The member for Saskatoon has denied the charge, and it is up to the member for Rosetown to resign his seat in this house or apologize.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Or prove his charges.

Mr. CAHILL: Or prove his charges. He is not reading anything that is relevant to the subject now before the house. He should attempt to prove his charges, apologize or resign his seat.

Mr. SPEAKER: Was the hon. member for Rosetown about to conclude?

Mr. EVANS: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: I will wait.

Mr. EVANS: To do that I have to read a letter from the department which gives the truth, the absolute truth, of those letters which I have read from the returned soldier. This, I think, explains the whole thing. The letter is dated May 14, 1928, and is as follows:

Dear Mr. Evans,—
As I explained to you on Saturday morning,—

I was there and had an interview with the writer.

—the department feel that there is a grave confliction in testimony which should be cleared up before the responsibility in the matter of indebtedness can be fairly fixed.

The minister is, therefore, asking council for authority to have an investigation under oath conducted and, of course, only sworn testimony will be considered.

However, the foregoing has nothing whatever to do with the town property which Mr. Tubb acquired an interest in, which was entirely separate and apart from the seed grain transaction and the department is writing to Mr. Tubb, assuring him that in the event of his taking title to his city property the seed grain charge will not become a charge against such city property, and that should it happen that the registrar places this charge against his city property, then we will forthwith issue the necessary release that will effectively clear his city property from any such registration.

This should relieve Mr. Tubb of any embarrassment in so far as the city property is concerned.

Mr. SPENCER: Who signed it?

Mr. EVANS: W. W. Cory. I think, Mr. Speaker, I have gone far enough to prove that what I said was true. I have it on authority that neither did the hon. member nor anyone else have any authority whatsoever to try to obtain $300 from that returned soldier. More than that, I find that the lien was illegally entered against his city property, and that he could not legally bully the returned soldier to pay $300 because it was entered against his city property.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: This is purely a question of privilege and the point is whether the language used was parliamentary or not. If a charge is made against any hon. member as to his dealings with his constituents, that he has violated the amenities of parliament by doing something dishonourable which debars him from being a member of the house, the rule is well known. Such a charge is made on the responsibility of the member making it, who puts his seat in jeopardy. The case is then sent to the committee on privileges, which after considering it makes a report to the house. In the present instance the house is not called upon to decide who is right or who is wrong—the returned soldier, the registrar, the mortgagee or the member. The only question before the house resolves itself into this. In speaking last night in committee of the whole the hon. member for Rosetown used strong words against the hon. member for Saskatoon respecting a certain transaction—but before quoting those words let me say that the privilege of one member is the collective privilege of the House of Commons. To-day one member may be accused of dishonourable conduct, to-morrow another member. These are the words used by the hon. member for Rosetown against the hon. member for Saskatoon:

This is one of the most sordid tales of bulldozing and bullying on the part of a member of parliament using his official position as a member of parliament to secure the payment of a sum of money from a returned man which he did not owe.

That is a clear case of extortion. Such a charge made against a member of the bar would mean the loss of his gown, and he would be debarred from practising before the courts for a limited period of time and perhaps permanently. But that is only the professional side; he would also be liable to arraignment before the criminal courts, extortion being a criminal offence. This is the charge made by the hon. member for Rosetown clearly and openly in this house against the hon. member for Saskatoon. Further, the hon. member for Rosetown said:

I am here accusing the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Young) of doing this and trying to bluff this man into paying a sum of money which he was clear of for more than six years. I think it should be made plain that men in that position, returned soldiers who have since got clear of their debt, who had gone to the war and served their country overseas, should not be bulldozed when they come back into paying something that they do not owe. I have nothing more to say.

I declare that this is one of the most cruel charges that could be made in the House of Commons against a fellow-member.

Now, what is the rule in such cases. It is clearly set forth by Bourinot at page 304:

> Prima facie, any question affecting a member is considered a case of privilege, but in order to entitle a member to bring it up on that ground he must show that it affects him since he became a member of the house and consequently in his character of a member.

The hon. gentleman concerned, in his character of a member was therefore right in bringing up the question of privilege a moment ago. I am bound to state that the words used by the hon. member for Rosetown are absolutely unparliamentary. I have been in the house for almost thirty-three years, and I must say that I never heard such a charge delivered by a member from his seat against a fellow-member. The charge is clear—as clear as it is cruel. Bourinot says that a member is not allowed to call another member a pharisee, a slanderer or a villain. He says that an hon. member must not say of another member that he has acted either basely or from base motives. Is not this the charge in the present instance? Is not the hon. member for Saskatoon accused of having acted basely and from base motives?—basely in that he extorted money, and from base motives, from the fact that this transaction was carried out at the expense of a poor returned soldier, that the money was not used, and that the hon. member for Saskatoon—according to the hon. member for Rosetown—had no business to deal with the matter.

The hon. member for Rosetown is an old and respected member of this house, and I would ask him to be good enough to rise and accept the denial of the hon. member for Saskatoon. Moreover, I would ask him to accept that denial unreservedly. Bourinot states:

> It has been formally ruled by speakers in the Canadian Commons that a statement by an hon. member respecting himself, and particularly within his own knowledge, must be accepted; but it is not unparliamentary temperately to criticize statements made by a member as being contrary to the facts. But no imputation of intentional falsehood is permissible.

Acting under this rule I therefore ask the hon. member for Rosetown to accept unreservedly the denial made by the hon. member for Saskatoon respecting the above quoted charges which he made last evening. I should be sorry to have recourse to the powers that are conferred upon the Speaker in a situation such as this. I regret to say that this is the worst incident of the kind that has come before me as Speaker—the worst I have known since I have been a member of the House of Commons. I acquit the hon. member of having acted intentionally in the matter, with a view to violating the rules of the house. Surely, however, he must yield to the rule which obliges him to accept, without any reservation, the denial of the hon. member for Saskatoon.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. EVANS: I accept.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman has accepted the denial and that amounts to a withdrawal of the charge.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): I understood from the hon. gentleman that I had entered into a conspiracy with some other person, and I am going to ask that that statement be withdrawn. I want to say that, from what I have heard to-day, I really believe that what happened was this: the hon. gentleman from Rosetown has been entirely misinformed—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The incident has been disposed of. The charges made last evening were more serious than the one made a moment ago in the course of the remarks of the hon. member for Rosetown. Of course the words which the hon. gentleman used were out of order; he should not have made use of the expression that there had been a conspiracy. My ruling was made broad enough to include the whole attitude of the hon. gentleman towards the transaction in question. He has accepted the denial of the hon. member for Saskatoon and therefore the matter should be allowed to drop.

IMMIGRATION

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND COLONIZATION

Mr. J. A. GLEN (Marquette): I rise to second the motion of the hon. member for Missisquoi (Mr. Kay) for concurrence in the report of the committee on agriculture and colonization. That report as tabled sets out the conclusions arrived at after many sessions and after a great number of witnesses, twenty-nine in all, were heard. I think it is fair to say that most of the witnesses, while not entirely representative of all interests in Canada, yet certainly did represent a great many interests both varied and vital in every part of the Dominion; and the report as tabled reflects the opinions of the committee. Those opinions, summarily stated in a few short paragraphs, are rather lengthy; they are mere statements of fact. May I now rather than later say that the deliberations of the committee were conducted in a manner which was a credit to this house. No acrimonious discussion took place on a subject which might well have been somewhat bitter.

Mr. COOTE: I rise to a point of order. May I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to endeavour to preserve order in the house so that the hon. member may be heard. The conversation which is being carried on in the chamber while the hon. member is endeavouring to address the Chair is most undignified.

Mr. SPEAKER: I ask hon. members to be as silent as possible.

Mr. GLEN: As I was saying, the deliberations of the committee were conducted in a way that must be a pleasing reflection to all of those who were privileged to be members of it. At no time did any hon. member conduct himself in a way other than for the benefit of the whole committee and with a regard for the seriousness of the subject under discussion. I believe every hon. member was seriously trying to contribute the best in him to the solution of what must necessarily be a long-drawn out and not easily soluble question. This same feeling which was evident in the interests of the work of the committee will, I think, also be reflected in the house in the present debate.

The reason for the inquiry was attributable to various causes. Some of them were trifling in character as compared with others, but I think the principal reason may be stated in two paragraphs: First, the widespread belief that we were discriminating against British immigration; and secondly, the loss sustained by emigration from our country to other countries and, in particular, to the United States. There were of course other causes, such as the alleged unrestricted flow of continental Europeans with which is allied the question of the activities of the steamship and railway companies. One other question which seemed to overshadow for a time all other matters brought before the committee was the issue of permits. I was glad indeed to hear the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) make the statement today from his seat that at the conclusion of the inquiry he was satisfied, as I think every hon. member was satisfied, that there was absolutely no truth in the suspicions that had been widespread throughout the Dominion.

I wish first to discuss the principal causes to which in my opinion all other matters will be found to be related and subsidiary. The first is that we discriminated against British immigration. Now from the report it will be noticed that despite the assistance given British immigrants, whatever be the cause, we are finding it extremely difficult to get from the British Isles the class of immigrants we desire, although it was stated in evidence that more money was spent by the department in the United Kingdom than elsewhere, the proportion of money spent there being $16.67 per capita for each immigrant introduced into Canada, while on the continent it was 11 cents per capita. Mr. Macalister of the Canadian Pacific Railway stated in answer to a question that they were spending in the United Kingdom twenty times—it might be as high as a hundred times—more than they spent on the continent. And Dr. Black of the Canadian National Railways corroborated that statement. It is true that only immigrants of the occupational class secured assistance; apart from boys and domestics it was restricted to agriculturists, save those who come under section 7 of P.C. 183, which provides that an immigrant may be permitted to land in Canada whose labour or service is required here. And he must satisfy the minister. This is the clause which caused all the uproar and all the talk; it was said to deal with permits, but these properly should be called letters of admission. It must be borne in mind by the house that there is a very limited number of prospective agriculturists in Great Britain; it was stated in evidence that only 5 per cent of the population of Great Britain are employed in agriculture. The British farmer and farm labourer to-day is in a much better position than ever has been the case formerly. He now has an eight hour day with a half-day off each week, and his wages are almost as good as those paid in Canada. You can easily see that the inducements we can hold out to agriculturists would not affect any large body of people, since in many respects conditions there are better than the conditions which obtain in Canada. As a matter of fact, purely along the lines of labour, they have equal opportunities in Great Britain to those in Canada; of course I say nothing with regard to their prospects beyond the mere point of labour.

Now the question might arise, "How do you propose to people the Dominion of Canada with British immigrants in order to maintain its Anglo-Saxon character if you are not able to appeal to the agricultural class?" There are one or two answers to that question in the report, and with these I now propose to deal. I will refer later to the question of the domestic servants, but first I wish to discuss the major proposition of why assistance is not given to British immigrants other than agricultural labourers. Let me preface my remarks by stating that it does not seem to be generally understood that no Britisher who is physically and mentally fit is prevented from entering Canada at present; he is absolutely free to do so so long as he comes under the regulations which are now in effect. There are several reasons in my judgment why assistance should not be given to immigrants from the British Isles, and I think it was the consensus of opinion in the committee that to assist in bringing in a large number of immigrants other than agriculturists, such as artisans, clerks, and professional men, certainly would mean the displacement of a large body of Canadian labour employed here to-day, and it would certainly and inevitably reduce wages. When Mr. Dennis of the Canadian Pacific Railway was giving evidence I asked him several questions along this line, and his opinion was that the policy should be restricted largely to the encouragement of the immigration of agricultural labourers, and in that connection he made a most interesting statement which he claims to be able to prove; he said that each family of five placed in agricultural occupations justifies the employment of 1.73 men in industrial life. Another reason is that assisted immigration of this character would inevitably result in unemployment. At the same time Colonel Dennis stated that he did not believe any large number of the classes mentioned would be rapidly absorbed; the experience of the west to-day, even with assistance to agricultural labourers, only demonstrates that fact conclusively. There can be no indiscriminate dumping of large bodies of men in particular districts without resultant chaos and uncertainty of employment.

The outstanding fact which this inquiry brought to my notice was the paramount need for colonization rather than for immigration. It is recommended in the report that efforts should be made to reduce steamship rates, which reduction when effected will mean the abolition of any assistance to any immigrants other than youths or domestic servants. It might be said that this would result in the indiscriminate dumping into Canada of large bodies of those people whom Colonel Dennis stated could not be rapidly absorbed, but the answer is that that result does not accord with experience. It has been stated in this house even during this session that large numbers of men are migrating to the United States to seek employment. It is an undoubted fact that for several years past the United States have been in the position of being able to absorb a large number of men, and men are just like capital; they seek their best market, and naturally they went to the United States. However, the converse is also true; at present one does not hear the tales about Canada that we used to hear. There has been created in Canada an atmosphere, psychological if you like, that we are on the eve of a tremendous industrial development; whether or not that be true it is a fact that we are bringing back from the United States men who went there years ago; they are now seeking employment in Canada. The fact is that labour will only seek the place where it may be utilized; if we have employment in Canada men will come here, and the indiscriminate dumping which might be expected through the lowering of the steamship rates will not take place because I am quite sure that no man is likely to come to Canada from the old country without making sure of an opportunity to obtain employment here. I am not afraid that when passages are reduced to what they were before the war, even if we have a large influx of men and women into this country, we will create any change in the unemployment conditions which have been created under our present system. It seems to me that with this arrangement the question of immigration will resolve itself into a question as to what restrictions are to be imposed against Britishers.

I would like to remind the house that in connection with the immigration of youths the committee have recommended that the ages be from 14 to 19 instead of from 14 to 17. If there was one particular scheme with which every member of the committee was in accord it was that every assistance should be given to youths and domestic servants. These matters are dealt with at length in the report and I do not propose to discuss them; the committee certainly were of the opinion that the age should be increased as I have stated. I realize that in the future there will be a much greater number of these youths coming into the country, and this might offset to a large extent the reduction in the number of agricultural labourers which may be caused through the abolition of the assistance granted. However, I would say that of all the schemes suggested those dealing with the immigration of youths are much more likely to attain the objects so keenly and ardently desired by the people of this country, among them being the retention of the predominant Anglo-Saxon character of Canada. The committee also recommend that the present arrangements with respect to domestic servants be continued. We can assimilate all the domestic servants we can get from the old country, nd I am informed that at no time was there any difficulty in placing them; the only difficulty was to get properly experienced servants.

Some evidence was given before the committee dealing with the large number of men in this country whose families still remain in the old country; one witness, speaking more particularly of Ontario, said there were 50,000 men whose families were still in Great Britain. At all events, it was felt that if assistance could be given to these men who have established themselves in this country and who are in a position to maintain their families, we as a government should re-unite those families, because most members of this house will realize that there can be no stability in the settlement of these men unless they are united with their families. After all, it is only the footloose who migrate and go to the states. Where you have a man with a family then I think you are likely to get a proper and suitable citizen. For that reason, the committee has recommended that assistance be given for the passage of families of men resident in this country who are in a position to maintain them when they arrive.

There has been a good deal of discussion with regard to land settlement schemes. Experience with these schemes in the past does not make one very hopeful. The soldier settlement scheme is the most recent, and I think this country will be fortunate if we do not lose a sum not less than fifty million dollars on that scheme. The three thousand family settlement scheme, while not the success it has been claimed to be is successful so far as one can appreciate at the present time, but it is still too early to discuss the entire success of that scheme. In this, as in all ventures of this character, you have to deal with so many variable quantities, particularly with human nature, which is the most variable of all.

In my opinion, the government would not be justified in embarking on those schemes unless and until the whole resources and activities of the provincial governments are allied with us. The justifiable complaint has been made by the provinces that we are indiscriminately dumping down large numbers of men in places whose power of absorption and placement is not sufficient to meet the problem. That is the keystone of the whole arch of immigration, and unless and until the governments come in and share with the federal government the question of colonization, I do not think we are ever likely to settle this country in the manner in which it should be. The federal government cannot shut the door absolutely on immigration, and no matter what may be proposed there will always be congestion in the larger centres. There will be surplus in some districts and shortage in others. It seems to me an inescapable conclusion that the provinces—I speak of the prairie provinces particularly, who are claiming there is no need for assisted passages, or no need for immigration—must enter the field in conjunction with the federal authorities and carry on their share of the responsibility and colonization. This is not a new doctrine in the west, because we have agitated that the provinces should devolve some of the duties on the municipalities. The committee has recommended that an effort should be made to enlist the services, resources and activities of the provinces in this matter, and that the federal government shall contribute a large part of the expenses.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. GLEN: When the one o'clock recess took place I was speaking of the question of provincial responsibility and I was saying that in my judgment the keystone of the whole arch of immigration depended upon cooperation with the provincial authorities. If there was anything revealed to the United States during the war, it was that there had been too great liberality in the admission of peoples of all races and kinds into that country. Millions of them were found to be physically unfit and millions of them also were found to be mentally unsuited to join the army. For this purpose, therefore, the committee has recommended that the government should endeavour to enlist the resources of the provincial authorities and contribute towards the cost of the machinery set up. Let me add that we have throughout the whole of this country large numbers of foreign-born peoples. They have been invited by us to come to Canada and everyone who knows anything of them and who has had relations with them knows of innumerable instances where they not only have done well for themselves materially, but are proving and will continue to prove good citizens. The door is not barred to them by the present regulations and the committee have not entertained any thought of shutting the door. The same conditions apply now as formerly. Any European from the preferred countries is eligible for entry into Canada provided that he is sound mentally and physically and that he is in a position to maintain himself until employment is assured. Immigrants from non-preferred countries, namely, agricultural workers, domestic servants and those within a prescribed degree of relationship to residents legally admitted to Canada, are permitted to come here from those coutries and, with that, special exceptions may be made in cases in which the minister is satisfied that their labour or service is required in Canada. Shortly, there is in the report nothing which prohibits or bars the door more closely against continental Europeans than is already the practice. The distinctive idea throughout the whole of the inquiry is that of offering inducements to the British immigrant.

Just a word in connection with the medical inspection in Great Britain. It was felt that the sudden introduction of the examination by Canadian doctors, the elimination entirely of the roster doctors, the blind spots which inevidently occur in most new schemes, the misunderstanding which usually arises through lack of knowledge and ignorance of motive, all contributed to the idea that the medical inspection was intended to restrict British immigration to Canada. It cannot be too clearly stated by the house as a solemn and serious fact that the Dominion invites and welcomes all British subjects who come within the regulations and has no thought of barring the door against any British subject who can qualify under the regulations governing admission to this country. The committee, in order to allay the misunderstanding that has arisen and to obviate delay and inconvenience, have suggested that local British doctors should be employed to make the examinations and that they should be paid by the government. They suggest that those doctors should form part of the Canadian organization and their examination be subject to the supervision of the Canadian medical authorities. I believe that provision will eliminate the principal objection to the present system and I do not think anyone can seriously object to Canadian medical authorities acting as the final authority from a medical point of view on all prospective immigrants.

The recommendations of the report speak for themselves, but there is one other matter to which I shall refer briefly. It is suggested that the assistance of the provinces should be invoked, but stress must be laid on the extreme importance which should be attached to the measure of support given by the railway and steamship companies and other organizations which devote themselves to this field of activity. The necessity of preventing overlapping and duplication of effort should not require to be mentioned at this period, but apparently it is necessary that it should be. All these agencies ought to be coordinated. I said at the beginning that this peace problem is greater than a war problem and for those who speak of patriotism the best patriotism will be evidenced by the desire to cooperate with the department in carrying out its work.

I was in hopes that the report would be adopted unanimously by the house. In the committee there were of course several differences of opinion on particular matters. The hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) had some objections regarding regulations with respect to homeseekers' rates and I presume he will speak to that in this debate, but I was of opinion that we came to the house with a fairly unanimous view that the report should be adopted. Therefore I was very sorry when the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) introduced his amendment this morning. I should like to say this with regard to the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George. During the whole course of the inquiry he was a most helpful member. I believe I am stating the opinion of all the members when I say that he adopted and maintained the standard which he set out at the very beginning of the inquiry, namely, that it should be on as high a level as possible and without any acrimonious debate in regard to peccadilloes of any individual who might come into the inquiry. During the whole of the inquiry the hon. member has maintained that high level. I might say, in passing, it was a privilege to work with him and to get to know him personally as I did. Therefore I was rather sorry that he introduced the amendment, for two reasons. With regard to the first part of his amendment which deals with the question of immigration, most, if not all of the provisions therein set forth by him, are contained in the report. He speaks in the amendment of the coordination of recruiting agencies; immigration from Britain to be regulated and provision for settlement; assimilation of immigrants from other countries; financial assistance and provision for settlers from the east going west, and direction and control of schemes of settlement in sparcely settled districts of Canada.

Most of these suggestions, Mr. Speaker, are embodied in the report. We have dealt with the 'teen age boys, domestic servants, measures to be taken for the reduction of fares, provision for homeseekers' rates, land settlement schemes and particularly provincial cooperation. While the hon. member was not entirely satisfied with the report of the committee, yet I thought that he was sufficiently satisfied with it that he could support it, and therefore I was rather sorry that he introduced an amendment.

With regard to the remaining part of his amendment, dealing with industrial development, it was suggested, and I think agreed to by the hon. member, that the last recommendation of the report dealing with the question of increasing employment, was to a large extent on the lines along which the hon. member wishes to proceed as indicated in his amendment. I might say that the last paragraph of the committee's report was introduced solely to meet the views expressed in the latter part of the amendment moved by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, and I therefore was in hopes that having obtained that statement in the last part of the report, and being satisfied that the other portion of his amendment was already embodied in the report, the hon. member would make this a unanimous report. Not only was I personally anxious to see a unanimous report, but I did think that if this house could only give a lead to the country in the way of a unanimous report adopting the suggestions that have been made, giving a consolidation of thought upon the question of immigration throughout the country, we would be doing a very statesmanlike act, and if in the whirligig of time those who sit to your left, Mr. Speaker, should find themselves to your right, they themselves would have to administer the functions of government to which they had contributed their counsels.

Might I therefore in closing suggest to the hon. member, as I did in committee, that he forego his amendment? Now that he has made his statement to the house and it is on record, and this whole report will be spoken to by other members of the house, may I suggest to him, without seeming to be presumptuous, that if we could only send this report forth to the country as the unanimous opinion of this house, intended to regulate as far as we can the Department of Immigration, these closing days of the session will have been worth while. For that reason I suggest with all deference and respect to the hon. member that he should consider whether he will not, as he did in the committee, withdraw his amendment so that this report may go forward as the unanimous opinion of this house?

Mr. JAMES ARTHURS (Parry Sound): The question before the house at the present moment is probably the greatest question before the people of Canada. Thinking men all over this country are discussing the matter of immigration and of the retention of our population in Canada as they probably never have before. The country has been looking anxiously for the report which we now have before us, and I think I can safely say that it will be a great disappointment to those who have the interests of the country at heart.

This report in so far as it goes is all right, but it does not touch any of the essential points in connection with immigration. It is quite easy for us to agree on recommendations regarding, we will say, juvenile immigration. The committee were unanimous that the age limit should be extended to twenty years, as these young men coming to Canada were probably, and I think are now, the most desirable class we are getting into this country. It was equally easy for us to advise the continuance of the policy of assisted passages for domestic servants. There was no question about this at all; we simply all agreed to it. However, there were larger questions at stake. Matters were brought before the committee which are not touched upon in the report of the committee at all.

The proposition was put forward, and I think rightly so, that we should have a survey of all the provinces of Canada to see what opportunities there were for land settlement and for industrial and other employment in the various provinces; that this survey should be made continuous; that it should be made at least annually, and that men should be on the job looking after opportunities in each of the provinces of Canada. I think this is one of the most essential things that was brought before the committee. The appointment of the men in the different provinces I believe should be left to the province itself, but the Dominion government should pay the salaries of these men, the idea being that in that way we would have men more closely in touch with the various parts of Canada. The results of these provincial surveys would be exchanged between the various provinces annually, or more frequently, and could be publicly distributed. I think in that way thousands of our young men in various parts of Canada would be made acquainted with opportunities in another part of the country from the one in which they now live.

There is a peculiar situation in connection with our young farmers all over Canada. I say that advisedly because it has become a question in the west just as well as in the east. A few years ago a young man brought up on the farm, perhaps one of many sons, had opportunities close at home. There was vacant land near at hand probably, which he had the opportunity of taking up and supporting himself, and in other cases there were industrial opportunities in the small towns and villages nearby. But as these small towns grew and their industries developed, the farms were subdivided so that instead of having farms of two hundred acres supplying the needs of one family as previously the same area further subdivided supports half a dozen families but the farm of to-day with its reduced acreage can support only the family which is on it at the present time. Unfortunately for us a great many of these industries in the small towns are not as progressive as they were in the past. We have many cases all over this country where there are five or six young men growing up on the farm, and we know without being told—it is self-evident that unless industries are developed to provide employment for these young men, they have to leave the farm, and the result to-day is that many of our young men are drifting away from the farm and, unfortunately for us, to the country to the south. But if such a survey as I have suggested were carried out, and the opportunities in the different provinces were made known to these young men, I believe we would retain a great portion of our population which we are unfortunately losing at the present time.

I think also that the department should furnish to parliament at the opening of the session, or as early thereafter as possible, a statement by provinces showing the number of immigrants brought into each province for the preceding year, as well as the number of losses so far as that was ascertainable. This would give us something to go on.

As the previous speaker (Mr. Glen) has said, coordination is one of the great questions in connection with immigration. We have various agencies all endeavouring to bring immigrants to Canada. We have, for instance, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, which, according to the testimony given before the committee, expended last year approximately $750,000 for immigration purposes. I presume our own railway, the Canadian National, will spend approximately the same amount. Then we have the various church organizations and the assistance in some cases of the provinces. For instance, I know that Ontario spends large sums on immigration agencies in Great Britain. But unfortunately at the present time there is no coordination. The two things we need are coordination and leadership; at the present time we have neither.

Your committee was also practically unanimous in another sense. Although it does not appear in the report, we were virtually unanimous in believing that the assisted passages should be done away with, outside of those already contracted for and the cases I have already mentioned—juveniles and domestic servants. We believe it would be much better to endeavour to reduce the transportation rates generally in order to assist those from Great Britain who want to come to Canada on their own. There is a certain class of people in Great Britain, as in this country, who are more or less independent; they do not want to come in as assisted immigrants, but to enter at their own expense and survey the opportunities here. We should make it as easy as possible for them to do this. In fact we might go further: where a man came here and went on a farm, and proved to the satisfaction of the officers of the department that he was making good, his passage money should be returned to him.

We have had various schemes of immigration during the last few years, among them the three-thousand-family scheme. As the report shows, we were undecided as to the actual results of this scheme so far as we could judge from the report of the land settlement board. In that report it will be noticed that in 1925 we received 467 families, in 1926 we received 1,042, and in 1927, 1,122—a total of 2,631 families. The great majority, probably the whole, of these on the average did not remain on the land more than a year. In spite of that fact there are already 261 losses, most of them absolute. Of these families, 92 have engaged in other than farm work, 45 have returned to Great Britain, the whereabouts of 27 is unknown—probably they have drifted to the United States, 16 have been deported, 36 have purchased farms independently of the board, and 45 are employed on farms. I might point out that as regards these "losses", as I term them, under this scheme all but 44 received assistance after arrival. So it is apparent that the loss is serious even under that scheme. Then we had another scheme put forward by the railways called the continental family scheme. Under this scheme 98 families were brought to Canada. They were composed of various nationalities—Polish, 38; Hungarian, 17; Roumanian, 12; Jugoslav, 10; Lithuanian. 4: Czechoslovakian, 3; German, 3; Ukrainian, 3; Serbian, 2. Six families were of unknown origin—they themselves did not know where they had come from. Of these 98 families considerably more than half have disappeared entirely, 14 have purchased farms privately, 9 are in industrial employment, 7 are not definitely located, and the whereabouts of 26 is unknown. So this scheme was not very successful either. Then we had the Saddle Lake reserve scheme. The land was opened up for incoming immigrants, and they were supplied with horses, houses, barns, 40 acres of land broken, fencing, wells, and so on; all of these things were provided, and yet so far the scheme has not been very successful. We also had the Porcupine forest reserve scheme, where five hundred farms were set aside, ranging from 160 to 240 acres in extent.

This land was eventually thrown open to civilians. But I would point out that this fact was not broadcast throughout Canada. We have a large number of young men in eastern Canada who would have been glad to grasp an opportunity of this kind. It shows the absolute necessity of having a survey, the results of which should be available to all the provinces. Undoubtedly many thousands of our young men in eastern Canada would be very glad to have an opportunity such as was afforded to these people from outside. How many of our young men in Ontario, for example, crowded out of the home farm, would be glad to take up 160 or 240 acres of land equipped with horses, barns, houses and so on and be given 25 or 30 years in which to pay the purchase price without interest for the first year. It is only necessary to state the proposition to show how easy it could be worked out.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is one clause of the report with which I entirely agree. The reason I am seconding the amendment of my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) is that he goes a little further along this line and states his reasons more plainly than the reasons of the committee are set out in this report. I refer to the last clause:

> Your committee would also recommend that the government make an intensive and comprehensive study of the possibilities of increasing industrial and agricultural development in Canada with a view to attracting capital and providing wider and increased opportunities for employment not only for our own people, but for prospective immigrants.

With this clause I have no fault to find except, as I said before, it does not go far enough to suit me. I believe we should build up our agricultural industry in every way possible. But in order to have a continuing prosperity and keep pace in population, we must also build up our industries. We must keep our young people in Canada by giving them opportunities, and by all means those opportunities, financial and otherwise, which we afford to newcomers to this country.

Hon. C. A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to take much of the time of the house on this subject. I was not a member of the committee on agriculture and colonization, and having been busy with other committees during the session have not had the privilege of attending the sittings of this committee. I have, however, a peculiar interest in this matter because, as most members know, I was an immigrant to this country some twenty-five years ago, and any observations I have to make are naturally coloured by my own experience. This country has treated me with wonderful kindness, and has given to me an opportunity greater, I believe, than I could have secured in any other country in the world—an opportunity, which, I believe, she offers to-day to any young man of the age I was—seventeen—who comes out from the old land. I believe the opportunities to-day for immigrants from the old land to Canada are just as great as, if not greater than they were twenty-five years ago when I came here as an immigrant. I wonder whether it is as hard for an immigrant to-day or an immigrant family as it was twenty-five years ago? I shall not offer any apologies for personal references, because the experience through which I passed, and through which members of my family passed, is an experience through which many other immigrants have passed and are passing to-day, successfully.

I came here a boy of seventeen and went out to the west to the end of steel at that time. I worked on a farm the first summer at $10 a month and was happy in so doing. I cannot express the great charm that the country had and still has for me; I cannot express the great charm that being entirely self-reliant had for me, of being removed from the congested conditions of the old land and translated into the freedom—freedom in the broadest sense—of the great west. The following year my father came; and by working together during that summer and the following winter at no high wages—wages never exceeding one dollar a day with board—we were able jointly to save enough money to bring to this country my mother and five sisters, all younger than myself. I do not cite this as an achievement because thousands have done the same thing; it was a question of the spirit behind, the recognition by those who were doing that sort of thing of the opportunities which this country afforded them and those of their families who would come after them. And it is being done to-day, Mr. Speaker, by the same kind of people as we in this house.

Conditions have changed very materially in this country and in the old land since that time. Our frontiers still exist; people are still going in as we went in twenty-five years ago; and there are to-day in many areas of the west, conditions almost exactly parallel with the conditions which I and others had to face at that time. There are differences of course; the radio and the telephone have made a very great difference and so has the automobile. But men and women are still pioneering on the frontiers of this country with oxen just as we pioneered. And they are happy in the process. I know of no finer spirit of neighourliness than existed then in those parts which we to-day call old settlements, then thirty miles or more from a railway, when nobody who lived there had any money to speak of but all were able to get along and were happy. There was a community life and spirit which it is not easy to find to-day in our larger centres and in our more wealthy communities. But not only in this country have conditions changed; they have changed in the old land. And it is because of that change in conditions in the old country that our problem with respect to immigration from Great Britain exists to-day, in my judgment, in very large measure. Twenty-five years ago, from the old land, British people emigrated to the United States, to Australia, to Canada and to New Zealand. The spirit of emigration was abroad in the old land; everyone was talking about the dominions. But in those days there was no old age pensions scheme in England; in those days there was no such thing as unemployment insurance. The degree of security which exists to-day for the old country man and woman did not exist twenty-five years ago; and the improvement in social conditions affecting particularly the poorer and lower middle classes—that element of security which has come about during the last twenty-five years—has undoubtedly tended to militate against a desire to emigrate and take a chance in a new land; because, Mr. Speaker, it is quite a decision for a man to make, particularly a man with a family, to pull up stakes and move to a new land.

Now what do we find as a result of this change of conditions in the old land? We find that the British people, particularly since the war, have not been emigrating from that country to any other country in as large numbers as they did before the war. It came out, I believe, during the sittings of the committee that while Canada does not think she is getting sufficient British immigration she is nevertheless getting more British immigration at the present time, and has continuously through the years, than any other British dominion; and with the exception, I believe, of two years, she has received more British immigration during each of the last twenty-five years than has the United States, which is supposed to be the place to which everybody wants to go.

Mr. BENNETT: Of course there is the quota there.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. DUNNING: I am speaking of the last twenty-five years. I looked into the figures recently and, if my memory serves me, only in two of the last twenty-five years did more British immigration go to the United States than came to Canada. And as the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke) reminds me, even the quota from Great Britain to the United States was not filled last year. I mention these things to show that the problem is one rather of the lack of desire on the part of the British people to emigrate as compared with their former willingness and readiness in that regard during the period in which I came to this country .

What I have said raises of course two questions which are bound to present themselves in a country such as ours, needing population to fill up our spaces and develop our resources: Shall we provide great inducements? Shall we try, by offering material inducements, to get those people to come to this country who are now more contented at home than they formerly were? Shall we try by that means to get more of them? That is the first question. And the second of equal importance, is this: Having regard to the nature of our institutions, to the kind of country Canada is, its relationship to the British Empire, shall we limit our immigration from other countries to keep within any stated proportion the immigration which we are successful in getting from Britain? I propose for a moment to discuss each of these questions.

With regard to the first; shall we offer further material inducements in order to get British people to come to Canada? Perhaps my experience ill fits me to advocate schemes of governmental paternalism in immigration. I am quite frankly of the opinion that it is not good for a man to come to this country asking: What will the government of the country do for me? If he comes in that spirit he is very likely not to be a successful immigrant. I make no apology for that statement. I have made it in the old land—and the people of the old land do appreciate frankness and straightforwardness; they are naturally an independent people. During my last visit to the old country I was struck with the hundreds of people who asked me that question: What will the government do for us if we go to Canada? My answer was always the same: We offer you the same opportunity in our land as we have ourselves. You go there if you wish to help us to make that country, Canada, what we all should like it to be. Help us to build up a country in which you, prospective immigrant, will have a share, a share which will mean more to you and to those of your family who come after you than their future could possibly be in the land they are leaving. That was my answer invariably, and that is the view I hold now. By that I do not mean that we should offer nothing, that we should not display an interest in securing immigration to this country; not for a moment. We should put the facts before them. And I believe that the facts regarding Canada are quite sufficient without any gilding. The facts of the experiences of thousands of immigrants to this country not only from Great Britain but from other countries as well, are sufficient in themselves to indicate to any man or woman with self-reliance and ambition that this country is still the land of opportunity for men and women who will work and who will cooperate with those among whom they settle.

With regard to the question of employment, simple machinery is necessary to ensure that we do not receive into the country a surplus over and above those for whom work can be provided during a given period. There always has been a problem in Canada in that regard, a problem common to all countries in the northern hemisphere lying as far north as we do. In the nature of things many of our occupations are seasonal in character, and that operates to discourage immigration from countries where employment is more continuous than can be the case in Canada in our present state of development, at least in a number of our industries. However, that condition is gradually improving year by year. The necessary machinery already exists; since the institution of the Dominion-provincial employment service, operated co-operatively by the Dominion and the various provinces, it has become possible for each province to communicate its employment situation to the Dominion government not only in the aggregate but with regard to particular industries and occupations. I believe that we can approximate reasonable certainty with respect to opportunities of employment by the intelligent use of the Dominion-provincial employment service, in co-operation with the federal Department of Immigration. For instance, it is possible for the province of Saskatchewan to say, "We require for seeding, and in fact we require for the whole farming season, from spring until fall, so many men this year." I will admit that in the west there is always this problem: When the crop is harvested and the grain threshed less men are required than are needed during the rush season. That is one of the problems we have to face, but it is gradually changing character, although it will be many years before in winter agriculture it will be possible to take care of the number of men who can be successfully used during the summer season. I think every member of this house from western Canada knows that it is possible for a man coming to this country in the spring to get a job on the farm at good wages during the summer if he is possessed of reasonably good physique, intelligence and adaptability, and he can earn enough during the summer so that he can afford to work for low wages during the winter. There are men in this house who, like myself, have been willing to work on the farm during the winter months for their board, when the farmers did not have enough work to justify the payment of wages. I do not advocate such a course; I would prefer farming during the winter to be on such a basis that the farmers could afford to pay fair winter wages, and in many areas that condition is gradually coming about. So I believe that through the use of existing machinery it is possible to adjust immigration to the employment opportunities from time to time in this country.

Now with regard to the second alternative or idea which has been more or less discussed, as to whether we should limit our immigration from countries other than Great Britain because of the fact that our immigration from Great Britain is limiting itself due to the causes which I have discussed, I think I can say that I possess nearly all the prejudices of the average Britisher with regard to other races. I suppose no matter what race we spring from we have an inherent prejudice to the effect that our race is somehow superior to any other, and we may as well admit that none of us possesses that prejudice more strongly than those who spring from British stock. While admitting that, however, I have behind me some twenty-five years of close association with all the various peoples making up the population of the province of Saskatchewan and of western Canada generally, and with regard to them I want to say that in the main these people who have come to western Canada from countries other than Great Britain have become good Canadians and to-day, through the medium of our educational institutions and our school systems, are being assimilated very rapidly into our Canadian citizenshp, especially in the second and third generations. People came to our settlement from lands other than mine and I frankly confess that when they came there, with the insularity of mind which characterizes the average Britisher, I did not much like them. But as I have come to know these people, to know their qualities and the contribution which they are capable of making, a contribution to some extent different from that made by the British immigrant, I have come to appreciate the fact that the Canadian of the future cannot be an Englishman; he cannot be a Scotchman; he cannot be an Irishman; he cannot be a Welshman; he cannot be a German; he cannot be a Ruthenian and he cannot be a Ukrainian, but out of those different peoples it is possible to evolve, as I think we are now evolving, a type of Canadianism in the middle west which is true to Canada, which has a deep and abiding affection for the soil upon which it lives and which also is acquiring a deep and abiding respect for the institutions of this country, which are British institutions. Through the medium of Canadian citizenship they can be bound together in the empire. I am sure from my experience that it would be a mistake on the part of Canada to say that because we cannot get all the British immigration we may desire we should therefore limit immigration from countries whose population is of a type which experience has shown can be readily assimilated into our Canadian citizenship and can become good Canadian citizens if given an opportunity to do so.

I have just one other thought, and then I am done. The world has become considerably smaller since I came to this country; I mean that means of communication have become so much improved that now a man thinks no more of crossing the Atlantic than he formerly thought of travelling from the south of England to the north of Scotland. The time consumed in travel is much less than was formerly the case, and I am wondering whether it would not be good business, having regard to the attitude of mind of people at present, to base our immigration propaganda in the old land upon the idea of encouraging people to come and look us over in Canada rather than to ask them to pull up stakes and make a final move. That idea is illustrated to some extent by what occurred a few years ago, when we were at our wits' end to secure harvesters to take off the western crop. That year the Canadian Pacific Railway made an arrangement to bring harvesters from the old land at a comparatively low rate, but with an especially low rate privilege for the return trip on the production of evidence to show that the individual had actually worked for a certain period in harvesting the western crop. My memory is that some 12,000 Britishers, entirely unselected and some of them quite unsuitable, as a proportion of immigrants are bound to be and particularly when recruited so quickly, came on that Canadian Pacific Railway harvesters' excursion. I was making inquiries the other day, and it will surprise this house to learn that only about 2,500 of these people ever availed themselves of the low rate return privilege. Through that one experiment we secured more British immigrants in that year than we obtained from all other sources combined. That is what gives me the idea that if we could base our immigration psychology upon the idea of asking the Britisher to come and look us over, making it easy for him to get back if he so desires, we might achieve a greater success. In the past our whole transportation arrangement has been to make it easy for him to get here but very hard and very expensive to get back. Many of us during those heart searching early years would have gone back if there was any way to get there other than by walking. We know what homesickness means, and there may be the fear in the minds of some that if we make it easy for the immigrant to return home he may run away from us. The best answer to that is the experience which every returning Britisher has in the old land, and which I have had on more than one occasion. Literally hundreds of people who have been to Canada and have gone back home discouraged, come to us when we revisit the old land and want to know if there is any way they could be helped by advice or otherwise to get back to Canada again. We can rely upon the lure of this country, and the lure of the opportunities here to the immigrant, if he has once had the chance to get into his veins this virus, or whatever it is, which so binds people to this country and makes them want to come back to it once they have visioned its opportunities and associated with its people. I believe the idea is at least worth the experiment; instead of making it easy to get here and hard to get back, let us base our propaganda upon the theory of inviting the Britisher to come here and look us over. The world is a much smaller place to the Briton to-day than it was before the war; he does not look to-day on the crossing of the Atlantic as such a tremendous thing as he did before. It may well be that if we attempted to work along these lines we would reap a resultant benefit to our country.

These are just a few stray thoughts from one who has passed through the experience.

Miss AGNES C. MACPHAIL (Southeast Grey): I desire to make only a few remarks on the general subject of immigration, but before doing so I would like to refer to the statement made by the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Dunning). My own opinion is that we stress the qualities of the British immigrant too much, particularly the English immigrant. I want my hon. friend to understand there is no personal inference in this.

Mr. DUNNING: I trust I did not make that mistake.

Miss MACPHAIL: There is nothing as fine as a fine Englishman, but I think they have a high average of duds. The attitude of many English immigrants when they come to this country is that of an Englishman from home looking over a colony. I resent this attitude. Once we admit people to this country we should call them Canadians; I am not going to classify them as English Canadians, Scotch Canadians, Ukrainian Canadians or any other kind of Canadian—they are Canadians, and that is all there is to it.

Mr. DUNNING: I hope my hon. friend did not gather any impression from my remarks that I was doing that. The whole tenor of my remarks was in accord with what my hon. friend is now saying.

Miss MACPHAIL: I think the English superiority of the Minister of Railways has been expressed perhaps unconsciously. We have not allowed people from other countries to make their contributions which would make Canada, not a little England or a little Great Britain, but Canada. We have imposed our thoughts and our culture on the newcomer and have stopped him from making the contribution he desires to make, and which he is capable of making. We put upon him a veneer of, I would like to say Canadianism, but it is scarcely that; but we are so anxious to convert him into a British subject that we prevent him from making the contribution to Canada which he otherwise would make.

For quite a number of years now we have made the error of cheapening Canada. We have been going out pleading and coaxing people to come to Canada, and by it we have cheapened our very excellent country. There is no better country in the whole wide world. When we make such an effort to induce people to come here and when we have such extreme difficulty in keeping them here once they do come, we do not send abroad the impression, which everyone of us has, that Canada is a fine country. We defeat our own ends by the very eagerness with which we go out fishing for people in other parts of the world. There are in this house men who have come as immigrants, from Great Britain and other parts of the world and who have made the very best of Canadian citizens, but they are not men who came here under assisted passages or were caught with a hook and line and special bait; they are the people who had the initiative and the courage to come from their own country to this one. They have made a fine contribution to the welfare of Canada.

Personally I am in favour of just stopping state aided immigration. We do not need to grow so rapidly; great numbers is not a test of greatness. The overcrowded countries of Europe would be very glad to have our open spaces. We want to build Canada with a view to the future, and we should see that we are doing what is best for Canada and best for the people who come here, and which will show the best results in one or two hundred years. There is no real need all at once to fill up this country with people. If we treasure our own country, hold it high in our own estimation, and stop coaxing people to come here, strange as it may seem, we will get more people. In the country we hear it said that the farmer who wants the strawstack eaten builds a fence around it.

Our railroads want immigrants, but their object in wanting them is a purely selfish one. Most of us have selfish motives, but it is well for us, in talking immigration, to realize that the railways want more people in order that they may bring more business to them. The people who have land to sell want immigrants, because they want somebody on whom they can unload the land. It does not matter to them whether he sinks or swims—I suppose it does, really—but their first consideration is to get rid of the land and get the first payment, and then they are in a better position to get the other fellow when he comes along. The manufacturers want immigrants in order that they may have cheap labour. They want to be able to go out into the labour market and have less difficulty in getting people to work for them. The more industrial workers we bring into Canada the less chance there is of our workers getting a job, and the standards of living will be lowered. The business men want immigrants in order that they may sell their goods to the people who come in.

The agriculturists do not want agricultural immigrants, because if we bring immigrants into Canada in large numbers we will produce more stuff than we can get rid of profitably. We would then be producing still more, and the standard of living would be lowered on the farm, and it is low enough now. Most of the farmers we bring to Canada are not class conscious, and farmers who are not class conscious are not good for this or any other country. We do not want farmers with a lower standard of living. We do not want farmers who are bowing and scraping to the manufacturers, to the banks, to the railways, and to the fellows who wear white collars and have soft hands. We want a farmer who is proud of his own industry and who will not let his brother farmer down. We do not want to lower the standard of living on farms; we want to raise it. That is the business of organized agriculture in Canada and I, as one of their representatives in the house, certainly am not in favour of dumping a whole lot of agriculturists into Canada who have no sense of the seriousness that comes from lowering the standard of living.

Some people say that we need more immigrants in order that we may produce more goods of all kinds. We have in Canada machinery and people enough to produce twice the quantity of goods we are now producing and we would produce them if we could get rid of them profitably. So on that score we do not need any more immigrants than we have at the present time. There is a disposition on the part of this government and of governments to bring agriculturists and domestic workers to Canada who, I suppose they think, are the two lowest on the social ladder. There is no inducement for domestic workers to come to Canada; there is no social standing in this country for a domestic worker. They have no unions; they have no way of protecting themselves. We should consider the interests of the immigrant as well as that of the person who wants to get labour conveniently and cheaply. I do not see any legitimate reason for saying to domestic workers in the old country that they will do better here than there. It is quite likely they are as hard to get there as here.

I am glad indeed we are doing something to stop child immigration. Children coming to Canada have been exploited. There has been an effort to bring them to this country in order that there might be cheap labour and cheap labour which could not make a protest on its own behalf. Had I been on the committee I should not have been in favour of bringing in more people between fourteen and nineteen years of age, because that is the age at which they can be most easily exploited, although it is better than bringing them in under that age. I took the trouble this year to read many reports on child immigration and the facts therein recorded would convince anybody who read them that children brought to Canada as immigrants have in the past been exploited. This is a system that should be stopped. They were not carefully examined as to their mental and physical fitness and our penitentiaries, jails, asylums and hospitals have far too high a percentage of people who came in here as child immigrants.

The time has come now when we should look on immigration sensibly, when we should take the view of the masses of the people on it and not the view of those who are spending a great deal of money to endeavour to persuade the government to bring immigrants here for their selfish purposes. The people of Canada are not in favour of spending millions in bringing immigrants who cannot be settled in this country in a way that is comfortable to them or to Canada. We have in the winter time too much experience of unemployment, bread-lines, soup kitchens and other troubles in caring for these people to want to continue paying large sums of money to bring them here in increasing numbers.

Mr. F. S. CAHILL (Pontiac): I first want to congratulate the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Dunning) on his very excellent Canadian speech. I want also to congratulate the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) on her excellent speech. When she suggested that the Minister of Railways showed his English attitude, he was only demonstrating the difference between the Canadian and the Englishman in the assurance of the Englishman in matters pertaining to immigration, the settlement of Canada, and business and conditions generally throughout the world. Probably the Canadian has something of an inferiority complex that we might well get rid of by listening to such men as the Minister of Railways and Canals.

I agree with much of what the hon. member for Southeast Grey has said with regard to the class of immigrants we desire in Canada. Personally I think we should throw the door open to the white races who are healthy and not of a criminal disposition of character, people who are mentally sound. I deprecate the Canadian attitude of making distinctions between settlers in this country. When you classify the British settler as first-class or the most desirable settler, you naturally put every other prospective immigrant in the category of a second-rater. That is a wrong idea. Any man, regardless of where he comes from, who is admitted to Canada should be admitted as a good Canadian, standing on an equal footing with any man in Canada. I want to point out, just as an instance of this classification of immigration how we are liable to land in difficulties. The first preference is to the British immigrant, those of the British Isles; that is England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. That is emphasized in the report. The next class is Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Switzerland, Holland, Belgium and France. People from those countries are permitted to enter Canada without any restraint as to occupation or conditions. Then we have the third class composed of central and southern European countries: Austria, Hungary, Poland, Roumania, Lithuania, Esthonia, Latvia, Bulgaria, Jugo-slavia and Czechoslovakia. They are permitted to enter as third-raters. But I want to call the attention of the House of Commons to the fact that the committee in dealing with immigration overlooked entirely the state of southern Ireland; the Irish Free State is not includued in any portion of the list. People from the Irish Free State are either a first preference or they are excluded. I am quite satisfied that this is merely an oversight.

Mr. BRADY: Did the hon. member examine into the cause why the Irish Free State is not included?

Mr. CAHILL: Will the hon. member tell us what the cause is?

Mr. BRADY: There is a cause and it is the same as exists in New Zealand. The Irish Free State is not included in the immigration policy of New Zealand. It is the understanding that the Irish Free State did not consent to the regulations laid down. I presume the same thing is true in this case.

Mr. CAHILL: I am sorry I cannot listen longer to the explanation of my hon. friend. The people of Great Britain are a preferred class and are stated to be so because they are given assistance through the empire colonization scheme. Southern Ireland is left out of it because it is not a part of Great Britain. That is quite true, but Germany is not in the scheme. Germany is mentioned in the report as being an eligible country from which immigration may be received. So are the other states of northern Europe; so are the states of southern Europe included in the report as eligible under certain conditions. I am quite satisfied that the overlooking of southern Ireland was without any intention whatever on the part of the committee. I do not charge the committee with any wrong intent in that regard, but I merely point that out as evidence of where you are likely to land by specifying first, second, third and fourth class immigration to Canada. Every man who comes to this country ought to be admitted on an equal basis.

Mr. CAHAN: Southern Ireland is included as one of the dominions.

Mr. CAHILL: There is no mention of the dominions.

Mr. CAHAN: They are mentioned at the outset.

Mr. CAHILL: Where?

Mr. CAHAN: The very first clause on page 4.

Mr. MANION: The first clause reads:

From the United Kingdom or from any of the British dominions.

Mr. CAHILL: I am not quite as subservient in my mentality as my hon. friend from Port Arthur.

Mr. MANION: I do not happen to come from Port Arthur.

Mr. CAHILL: Well, from Fort William. A free state is not a dominion nor a colony. They regard themselves as a nation.

Mr. MANION: It is a British dominion.

Mr. CAHILL: They regard themselves as a nation just as the Canadian people regard themselves as a nation, except a small fraction of the Tory party who are still inclined to call themselves a dominion or a colony. That is one phase of the report of the committee on immigration. I agree with the hon. member for Southeast Grey that we should at once stop any assistance to persons outside of the Dominion of Canada. It is bad legislation for the parliament of Canada to vote money to assist the citizens of any other country in preference to our own people. We are granting to people outside of our borders preferences that we do not grant to the Canadian people and legislation which favours outsiders as against Canadians is bad legislation. The system of assisted immigration should be stopped at once. As a matter of fact, I opposed the assisted immigration scheme some years ago, and I am glad to find from the report that I was absolutely right, and that the scheme has proved detrimental to immigration to Canada rather than beneficial. It was poor policy then, and it is poor policy now.

We have the problem of emigration, as well as that of immigration, and I think it is the duty of the government of Canada to ascertain the causes of our emigration. It is far more important that we should solve the emigration problem than that we should solve the immigration problem, because if we solve the emigration problem, the immigration problem will solve itself. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would be favourable to admitting into Canada any person of the white race who was healthy and physically fit.

With regard to colonization, much time was spent in the committee discussing this question, and many suggestions have been made in regard to it, but I have yet to hear any practical suggestion with regard to colonization in Canada. It is quite possible to bring about a considerable colonization movement. Every part of Canada which lies beyond the area of immediate settlement is condemned by the people of Canada as worthless or useless land. We have had that experience all through the history of this country. But where railroads have been built through any part of Canada the result has been the development of rich natural resources which has been beneficial to the citizens who have gone into that part of the country. Take the Timiskaming and Northern Ontario railway, for instance. It has developed the most wonderful mining country in Canada, yet the road was condemned at the commencement of its construction. The west was also regarded as useless until the railways developed it. I want to say that the development of western Canada has been due more to the building of railways and the giving of land grants than to any efforts on the part of any government. It was rather the colonization companies that brought people into western Canada and settled the country, and sold them land at a profit. These people are now prosperous citizens, and the same thing can be done over again.

I have a suggestion to make to the Minister of Immigration, and that is that he should appoint some person in his department who will attempt to cooperate with the provincial governments and with the railways of Canada in order to develop a colonization plan that will bring people to this country and settle our vacant lands. Perhaps he could arrange with the provincial governments to make a grant of land for colonization purposes, whereby the land could be sold to the settler for enough money to build railroads into that territory. The sale of the land to the settlers at a reasonable price on long term payments would more than pay for the railway, and the plan would be more beneficial to the settlers themselves, who would then be immediately adjacent to the railway instead of settling thirty, forty or fifty miles away from a railway.

I would not grant any more homesteads in Canada. I would not allow people to settle on land that is too far away from a railway. I would build railroads to the settlements and sell land to the incoming settlers, or to the Canadians preferably who are now leaving this country. In that way you could build up a big colonization plan that would settle many, many people in this country, and keep our own people at home. It is not necessary to go to the Peace River country or to the western prairies to do this. I have in mind a section in the province of Quebec, in my own constituency, where if a colonization railway were built and the land opened for colonization, we could settle thousands of French Canadians who are now leaving Canada. The land is valuable, and the people are anxious to get it, provided it is accessible by railway. I might instance a grant of land made to the Canadian Pacific Railway some three or four years ago. The company sold 80,000 acres of that land at $8 an acre to a contractor, who is now taking off the pulpwood. That shows the value of the land in these districts that might be taken up by settlers. The wood could be sold by them, and they would bring the land under cultivation, and it would be beneficial to all concerned.

So far as the railways requiring immigration is concerned, I think we have overbuilt our main line equipment. We have too great an overhead for the number of branch lines and feeders to our railways, and I think it will be necessary for us to continue to open up as much raw country as possible for settlement, in order to bring greater traffic to the railways, thereby enabling them to earn their dividends, and in time reduce freight rates to the Canadian people. If this were done, we could keep in this country many, many Canadians who are now leaving, and they are more valuable to us than any immigrants we may get, no matter how good they may be. Our first consideration in this parliament is for the Canadian people, and our first consideration in a policy of immigration or of emigration should be so to provide that our Canadian people will be able to remain at home. I think the government should seriously consider through a commission or otherwise the causes of emigration from Canada.

The report of the committee and the amendment thereto I am not much enamoured of. I am much more in favour of the suggestion made by the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Dunning) with regard to immigration, and of the suggestion made by the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail). I think either of these suggestions would be much better to follow than anything contained either in the report or the amendment thereto.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Fort William): I rise just to say that I resent a remark made by the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Cahill) in reply to what was meant to be a courtesy on my part to him. I thought he had overlooked a phrase in the first clause of the report, and I pointed out to him that southern Ireland was included among the British dominions, which, of course, is a fact although the hon. gentleman does not seem to know it. He said in reply that I was subservient. I resent being termed subservient at any time, because I am not subservient in any way. I might add that his further remarks about the Tory members, as he expressed it, on this side of the house only show a line of thought which the hon. gentleman takes too often in this house. The Canadians on this side of the house are just the same type of Canadians as those on the other side of the house, or for that matter in the other corner of the house. We are all Canadians, and most of us I trust are good Canadians, in all sections of the house. Had I read the report as the hon. gentleman thought he read it, had I understood that southern Ireland was not treated in the same way as other British dominions, no one would have resented more quickly than I any such attitude on the part of the committee, because I submit that there are in this country Irish people from southern Ireland who are just as creditable to this country and to the British Empire as people from any other section of the world. Practically this whole Ottawa valley, for that matter, was colonized by Irish immigrants from southern Ireland, and no more creditable group of people ever came to Canada. But I should just like to say to the hon. gentleman and to his friends who adopt his attitude that if they would be Canadians first instead of Irishmen, if they would give their attention to Canadian problems—of which we have our fair share—instead of worrying about the problems of the Irish Free State, they would be better citizens of this country. That is the trouble with many of those gentlemen who are continually yelling about Ireland—they forget that they should be Canadians first. I have visited Ireland a few times, but I doubt if the hon. gentleman ever got anywhere near the island. I suggest to him that we have plenty of problems to worry about in Canada without going back three or four generations to problems created by our ancestors in Ireland.

Before I sit down, Mr. Speaker, let me say that if in Canada we introduce policies to provide work and wages for our own boys and girls so that they will be able to remain in their native country, if when we bring in immigrants we properly look after them instead of dumping them in the cities or on the prairies, that is, if we give them good land, good advice, and hearty cooperation, I say if we do these things we shall be able to build up this country, and the ensuing prosperity will be the strongest magnet to attract to our shores people from all parts of the world.

Hon. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac-Addington): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) rose I was about to open my remarks with a view to cooling the blood of the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Cahill) by informing him that there was a very good reason why the Irish Free State is not mentioned in the report; that is, the Irish Free State does not want to be. The hon. gentleman seemed to be worrying lest the Irish Free State was in some way overlooked; but we have had proof right here in the last three or four minutes that it is impossible to overlook any part of the world where there is more than one Irishman.

Mr. DUNNING: Or where there is even one.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I wish to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that there was not the slightest thought in the mind of any member of the committee to overlook the Irish Free State.

Now, the hon. member for Southeast Gray (Miss Macphail) said we were too much inclined to impose our own thoughts and ideas upon the alien. I suppose that is a form of class consciousness which we all possess more or less. When the hon. member was speaking I could not help reflecting on her agony of mind if any restriction should be placed on the imposition of her ideas upon the members of this house or the people outside. She said we were too much disposed to stress the fine qualities of the English.

Miss MACPHAIL: I do not think I said that.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Well, I do not wish to misquote my hon. friend. That is what I took down, and I thought I had it right. At all events, I think I am correct in this: she was rather afraid there was a disposition in Canada to favour British immigration, to dwell somewhat too much on the qualities of the English as English, and I think she used the word "fine." In that regard, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that if you look back over the history of the past centuries something can be said for the English after all.

An hon. MEMBER: And you can say it.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Something can be said for them. It is characteristic of the English not to let the world disregard their fine qualities. That is something which the hon. member for Southeast Gray should particularly appreciate. I know that in the past England has made many mistakes, but her record is written throughout the world, and she has done more than any other nation on the face of the globe to raise the standard of civilization to a higher level. Yes, there is something to be said for the English after all.

Now, the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Dunning) stressed two points. First of all he asked: shall we try to get more British immigrants by offering material inducements? He rather deprecated this method. Well, the policy of the government has been along that line all the time that he has been a member of it, but this is the first occasion on which he has expressed himself as opposed to the policy. However, I am inclined to say to the hon. gentleman that the government might offer inducements to get British or other people into this country, not so much by way of land, and so on, but by presenting for their consideration such a sane governmental policy as will assure them work in Canada. He referred to our having adopted what amounts to the quota system with respect to immigrants from the continent of Europe, and he rather opposed the idea. But it seems to me we have to ask ourselves this question: after all, is it worth while in our day and generation seriously to contemplate the maintenance of British ideals and institutions in this Dominion? If we answer that question in the affirmative, then it does seem to me that we must give consideration to the number of immigrants from those foreign countries that we can reasonably be expected to assimilate. I think everyone will agree that it will be easier for Canada to assimilate those classes of immigrants which we have been favouring rather than those from the non-preferred countries of Europe which we have been trying to a certain extent to exclude. After all, we must regard this as a fact, the movement of peoples from one country to another—migration is the word which will cover it—has in all ages had a tremendous influence in shaping the destinies of nations and their standards of civilization. That has been true of past movements, and it will be true for all time to come.

But it does seem to me we have made a mistake, perhaps not intentionally, in our past policy of immigration and colonization in bringing in agricultural workers—those going on the land—assuming that there was no limit to our ability to absorb those who said they were willing to settle on the land. I submit this as a principle which we in this house should keep in mind in regard to immigration—we should aim to bring in immigrants of such a class and type that Canada's population would be fairly well balanced in terms of occupation and production. That should be our general aim. It has not been in the past. We have offered special inducements to those who signalized their willingness to settle on the land. What have been our principal sources of supply? The British Isles; continental Europe, divided into two classes, preferred and non-preferred countries; and the United States of America. The policy of the government has been to limit those coming from the non-preferred countries exclusively to people going on the land, agricultural workers. That has been our policy. The agreement with the railways, which we recommend should not be renewed in its present terms when the existing contract has expired, has been that they should bring out from the non-preferred countries only those who were going on the land. How has that worked? We have brought to Canada in that way thousands and tens of thousands, every one of whom has signified his willingness or intention to go on the land. Have these people done so? I quote from page 735 of the evidence a short conversation between the minister and one or two members of the committee:

> Hon. Mr. Forke: The complaint we have is that the newcomers are going onto the farms, but as soon as they have been here a year they do not go back to the farms, but into other employment.
> Mr. Edwards: They get into the country under the plea of going on the farms, and then leave the land the next year?
>
> Hon. Mr. Forke: We may as well face it; that is the idea.
>
> Mr. Arthurs: Does that apply generally to these non-preferred countries?
> Hon. Mr. Forke: Oh, yes.

There is the situation. We have been bringing in thousands and tens of thousands of people from the non-preferred countries of Europe every one of whom got into the country on the understanding that he was to go on the land and remain there. But after being on the land a few months or a year these men leave and drift into the cities and towns; and they are the main factor in the unemployment situation in our cities and centres of population. That is what we are confronted with; it is one condition which in my judgment we ought to make every possible effort to put an end to. No one in this house will cast any reflections upon the ability of people coming from the non-preferred countries or from any country of Europe to become good citizens of Canada. No one wishes to suggest anything of that sort. We have too many evidences to the contrary in this country. But I repeat, notwithstanding that fact, that everyone will agree that there is more difficulty in assimilating these people than there is in assimilating people of British stock; and it seems to me we must have regard to that circumstance in certain parts of the country if we wish to maintain in their integrity British ideals and institutions.

There are in the report a great many points to which I should like to refer, but I will not take up my full time discussing them. With the report in general I am glad to agree. There is one clause of it with which I cannot agree and I so expressed myself in the committee. I think this was the only clause in the report to which I objected. I refer to the clause on page 8 under the head of Railway Rates for Canadian Landseekers. It reads:

> The committee also recommends that measures be taken to ascertain whether the railways will restore the home seekers' rates in effect prior to the war, making such rates effective east bound as well as west bound.

I object to that paragraph and I object also to a somewhat similar clause, though more extended, in the amendment proposed by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan), namely, that we should provide facilities for settlement in the more recently organized provinces of Canada of settlers from other provinces who are intent upon leaving the east and going west in search of improved conditions and better opportunities. I object to this clause being incorporated in the report. Our committee was appointed as a committee on immigration and this is not an immigration matter; it is a matter which does not touch immigrants at all. It is a matter referring entirely to business within the country. It is an internal matter which has nothing to do with immigration. I object therefore to our considering it or expressing an opinion upon it. We might just as well have incorporated in our report a recommendation in regard to pensions or something of that kind, as to incorporate this. Moreover I object to the principle involved; I object to the government undertaking to make arrangements to move settlers from one province to another. The idea started in moving from east to west; but logically, if you assist in moving people from the eastern provinces to the west, how can you refuse assistance to those in the west who desire to come east if they have changed their minds, believing that there are better opportunities for them in eastern Canada? Where will this sort of thing end? Transferring people from one province to another is not a function of the Immigration department, and I object strongly to the principle not only as indicated in the report but as stated in the amendment proposed by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George. There are a good many things in the amendment with which I agree. I believe it is absolutely and fundamentally sound in pointing to this fact, that the key of the whole situation, so far as successful immigration is concerned, is in providing profitable employment for people whom we bring to the country. I believe that if this government will adopt a policy which will not drive farmers off the farms, which will not drive dairymen out of their business, which will not discourage—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Yes, this is politics; you cannot get away from the political side of it. I repeat what I have said: The key of the whole situation so far as successful immigration is concerned is to impress upon people in other lands that if they come here to farm they have a reasonable chance of success; that if they come to Canada to go into any other business they have a reasonable chance of succeeding in that business. And I have a right to ask consideration of this question: What encouragement is there to a man in another country to come to the Dominion of Canada and to go into the dairy business under present conditions, under the policy of the present government? What encouragement is there to a man in some other country to come here and go into the fruit and vegetable industry? What encouragement is there to people abroad to come to Canada and go into the sheep raising industry under the policy followed by this government? I say the policy of this government has not only closed factories in this country and deprived the people here of an opportunity of earning their living in Canada, but it has had the effect of reducing the reasonable profits of farmers and driving people out of business generally. How in the name of Heaven will you induce intelligent men in the old country to come to Canada under such conditions? Do you think you can stop their ears, their eyes and their understanding? If you invite them to come to the country to settle on the land the first question they will ask you is this, "Why don't your own boys stay on the land?" If you are honest you will have to tell them that the reason is that, due to the mistaken fiscal policy pursued by this government, there is no encouragement for the boys to stay on the land. That is the absolute answer. There you have the key to the situation. You have to provide a diversity of employment; you have to give an opportunity for people in various walks of life to earn a livelihood. How unfair it is, when you analyse it, for anyone to get up and say, "You must not bring industrial workers into the country because we have already all that we need of that class of workers, and if you bring in more you will lower the standard of living and lower wages. That would be unfair." And we are foolish enough, those who represent farming constituencies, to allow that to go unchallenged. Suppose you applied that reasoning to agriculture. There is an industry which every year produces far more than the requirements of the people of the country. We are looking throughout the world to find markets for our surplus farm products. Now, if that reasoning is good with regard to industrial workers, that you must not bring in any more, why not apply it to agriculture and say we are producing all the farm produce that we need, and we do not want more farmers? It seems to me that the argument would logically have to apply to the one as to the other. You must not bring bricklayers because we have enough bricklayers, says the bricklayers' union; you must not bring in any of this class or that class because we have a sufficient number to produce what these classes are producing. Bring in farmers, however, and every time you bring in five farmers you will provide employment for 1.73 people in industrial establishments. I think the whole thing is absolutely wrong and absolutely inconsistent. I repeat what I said a moment ago, that you must aim to bring in such classes of immigrants as we require in this country until you have a population fairly evenly balanced as between production and occupation. As far as I have been able to see there has been no attempt at all along that line.

The question of the feeling in the old country that British people were not wanted in Canada has been discussed in the house this afternoon. There may be a difference of opinion as to whether that feeling exists and as to whether there is any justification for it; many members would say it has no justification. I want to say just as emphatically that I believe there is ample justification for the belief which exists in the minds of many people in the British Isles that Canada does not want British immigrants. As a matter of fact the present government started out wrong as soon as they took office in connection with this matter of immigration; they had at that time as Deputy Minister of Immigration Doctor Black, president of Manitoba Agriculture college, secretary of the economic and development committee and a man of outstanding ability, recognized from one end of the country to the other as having studied this whole problem of immigration for years. His value will be realized when it is remembered that after the government dispensed with his services the Canadian National Railways placed him at the head of their immigration activities, which was a tribute to his worth. When the government took office they studiously ignored Doctor Black for a time until they forced him out and appointed in his place the present deputy minister, Mr. W. J. Egan. Without making any reference to Mr. Egan's present abilities, because I think he has learned from experience and I am sure he would be the first to say so, I point to the fact that in my judgment the government did an unwise thing in dispensing with the services of a man who was so well grounded in this work and who had made a study of it during most of his life, and in putting in his place a man who, no matter what his natural capabilities might have been, was without previous experience. That is what the government did; that was their first mistake, and with all due deference I say they made a further mistake when they appointed the present Minister of Immigration and Colonization. He had had no vast experience in dealing with immigration matters; his previous experience had been gained on the floor of this house down in the southeast corner, where he was one of the chief critics of the other parties in the house; whether they went under the label of Grit or Tory, nothing was satisfactory to him. He was appointed to that position. I venture to say he has learned a lot since that time, but he had no special qualifications for the work, and the result was that as far as immigration was concerned it was regulated by orders in council instead of parliamentary enactments. One thing was tried for a while; then another was tried, and when they both failed something else was tried.

Mr. JACOBS: Would the hon. gentleman pardon me a question? Has not the present Minister of Immigration and Colonization equal experience to that possessed by the hon. gentleman himself when he was appointed to that position in 1921?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): My answer is most emphatically in the affirmative, but for the consideration of my genial friend I would add that when I was appointed to that position I had as deputy minister and assistant deputy minister men who had grown up with the department and who were qualified to guide me as they would be qualified to guide the present minister or any other minister who assumed the office.

Mr. JACOBS: The same officials are still there with the exception of Doctor Black, who was appointed when my hon. friend was appointed. Then it was a case of the blind leading the blind.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Doctor Black had been studying the immigration question for years, and so had Mr. Blair.

Mr. JACOBS: Was he not taken from the position of chief organizer for the Conservative party and pitchforked into that position?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): He might have been one of the organizers of the Conservative party, and in that way he would get a good deal of experience. At any rate, Doctor Black made a study of immigration matters for several years; he was a man highly qualified for the position because of his former associations, and next to him we had in Mr. Blair a man who was splendidly qualified and who had been in the department for many years. In my humble judgment, and I say it candidly and without wishing to reflect upon the present deputy minister, when the services of Doctor Black were dispensed with the logical man to assume the duties of deputy minister was Mr. Blair, who had been appointed by the Liberal party.

Now I would like to say just a word or two with further regard to this matter of discrimination. In my judgment the Salvation Army has been very directly discriminated against and very unjustly used. The Salvation Army started in their immigration work some twenty-three or twenty-four years ago; they have brought to this country over 100,000 immigrants, and they are able to say that less than one per cent of the immigrants they brought here have turned out failures. I would call that a good record, and I think everyone must agree with that. The Salvation Army established a big training farm in England and seven or eight other farms and centres in Canada; they have gone to great expense to carry on this work, but the government have seen fit to shut down on that work because they were obtaining from the boys they brought to this country a sum of money for the purpose of enabling the army to carry on their work and bring out other boys. The government made the mistake of denouncing that principle; they said it was wrong, but that the government were wrong in their attitude is shown by the fact that they have now endorsed exactly the same principle, although for a smaller amount. They have approved of that being done to the extent of $25, but they declared the principle wrong when they shut down on the work carried on by the Salvation Army.

There is just one other matter to which I wish to refer for a moment. In his evidence before the committee Dr. Amyot, Deputy Minister of Health, stated most emphatically that the Minister of Immigration had no right to override the decision of the medical officers in regard to allowing people to come intc this country. Notwithstanding that fact, however, in looking over the proceedings of the committee—and this is where the discrimination comes in—at page 486 I find a girl described as follows:

> Domestic work 3 months. Can cook, wash and do housework. Canadian government say: "She has been employed in mill past four years, therefore not eligible for the reduced passage fare."

I could name eight or ten cases of girls who are described as first class cooks and good housekeepers and who have had experience in that line of work for some years but who, just before they thought of coming to this country, were not engaged in domestic service. The Immigration department denied them the right to come out under this passage, and in every one of these cases the government merely said, "You can bring this girl out all right if you pay the money necessary for her regular passage." That strikes me as being rather harsh treatment and drawing the line pretty tight, if we want that class of immigrant in this country, and I think we are all agreed we do. I contrast that with the action of the minister in granting permits to remain in this country to persons who were deaf, blind or nearly blind, feebleminded; persons who were turned down by their own doctors as being unfit physically and mentally. I contrast the harsh attitude of the department in regard to this class of workers being brought out by the Salvation Army, and whose services are needed in this country, with the laxity of the Minister of Immigration in granting permits to those who were defective physically and mentally. The minister himself must bear a share of the responsibility for the claim made by the heads of some of our institutions in this country that a number of the inmates had been brought in, not only from the British Isles but from continental Europe, and we have had to pay the bills for their maintenance. It is only fair to state that the greater percentage of these cases come from continental Europe, but there are some from the British Isles who are now in our mental institutions, our jails or asylums. I say that the minister himself must take a part of the blame in allowing such people to come into the country after his own medical officers had said they were physically and mentally unfit to be citizens of Canada.

Mr. FORKE: I really do not know what the hon. member refers to when he says I gave permits to come in permanently to anyone who had been turned down by the medical officers. I suppose I have given permits for six months or a year, but as I recollect there have been no permits issued to allow them to remain permanently. I have looked over these permits and I think there is an explanation for every one of them. The hon. member for Frontenac can see the explanations if he wishes to look at them.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I have the same explanations that the minister has—the ones he tabled—and that is what I am quoting from. I assume that if he had had any further explanations he would have put them on the report. I did not say that the minister had given permits to allow these people to stay in Canada permanently; I did not use the word "permanent" at all. If the minister's judgment was defective in giving permits to people to stay in this country who had been declared by his medical officers to be both physically and mentally unfit to be citizens of Canada; if he did that for six months, I have not enough confidence in his judgment to be assured that he would not give them for another six months or a year.

We have cases without number. There is Mr. G, twenty-five years old, who was given a permit by the minister to stay here, although there was a certificate given at the port of entry that he was feebleminded and illiterate. Here is another one; Mrs. H, who had been under treatment in the old country for a mental breakdown. If this woman has become an inmate of one of our insane asylums—and who can wonder at it—he is responsible for it. I contrast that, Mr. Speaker, with what I consider the rather harsh and arbitrary attitude of the department in regard to these persons, certified to as being first class physically and mentally, but who were not granted the privileges of reduced passage given to domestic servants coming to this country.

[Mr. J. W. Edwards.]

Mr. FORKE: I do not want to interrupt, and I think so far the hon. member has been very fair. But he has quoted the case of Mary Holt, who had been admitted into Canada after having been in an insane asylum. To be fair, would you state the facts of that case?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I do not know just what page of the report it is on, but I have made a brief note about it. Mrs. Mary Holt had been under treatment in Scotland for a mental breakdown. Her husband seemed to be able to receive her and guarantee that she would not become a public charge.

Mr. FORKE: Will you allow me to read it?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The hon. minister can read it when he speaks on this matter, and I do not care how many he reads. I do not believe he can find justification for his conduct in any one of the 145 cases. The Deputy Minister of Health declared that the hon. minister had no business to nullify the certificates of his medical officers and grant permits to come into this country, even for six months, to people who had been declared by the medical officers to be physically and mentally unfit to be citizens of Canada. That is what the hon. minister has to justify, and he will have to find more than appears in this report to justify his attitude in that regard.

I would again contrast the attitude of the minister's department in discouraging these first class citizens from coming to this country with that taken in regard to others. What justification on earth can the minister have for allowing a man to come here who was arrested in this country, while under the permit of the minister, on a charge of breaking in and stealing, and sentenced for six months? He was reported by the officials as being dull mentally and suffering from several diseases, probably inherited, but the minister gives the permit to stay in the country, and he breaks in and steals. The minister has to bear the blame for that. Again I contrast the minister's liberality in these cases with the attitude of the department in other cases. They have given every discouragement to these very worthy people, and I can prove that statement to the hilt.

The minister can take up as many of these cases as he likes when he speaks on this question. The trouble arose, so far as the minister was concerned, in his not being able to cope with the situation in his department. He was led from pillar to post to do this and do that instead of managing the department. I believe he will do better as he acquires more experience, like everybody else.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that the key to the whole problem of immigration is to be able to show the intending immigrant that if he comes to Canada to go on the land he has a reasonable opportunity for success. We have to adopt a policy in this country which will stop our own boys from leaving the farms of Canada and going to the other side of the line. That means a complete change in policy. You can figure and theorize as much as you like about getting immigrants into this country, but what will tell in the long run and be the best advertising is the coming into Canada of men from the British Isles and from Europe who go on the land and write back home telling of how successful they have been in the different lines of endeavour. Such a man writes back home and says, "I have done well at farming; I have done well in the poultry business; I have done well raising vegetables; I went into this and that and have done well, and I would advise you to come here." No honest man can go to the people in the British Isles or on the continent and make the statement that there is a fair prospect of success in Canada under the policy that has been followed by this government. The whole tendency has been to discourage men from continuing in these lines of business. We have proof of that all over Canada, and you cannot get people to come in here and go on the land in the face of these facts.

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (Cartier): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to say anything in this debate and I would not have done so had it not been for the fact that I was a member of the committee that brought in this report. Inasmuch as I am not in agreement with some of the main features of it, I feel that it is only doing a duty to myself to give some explanation as to my attitude on the questions submitted in this document. For the last ten or twelve years I have delivered in this chamber my annual immigration address. So far I have convinced no person but myself and it strikes me that ought to be a gentle hint to leave the work to more capable hands. Still, I belong to a somewhat persistent race and I feel that perhaps as parliaments change, the seed may fall on fertile soil and I may be able to make at least one convert in the course of time.

The document which has been produced in the house to-day is noted rather for what it does not contain than for what it does. It was drawn up by a committee, the basis of which consisted of members of the committee on agriculture, and consequently it has an agricultural tinge or flavour to it. One would imagine after reading the report that the whole of Canada consisted of agriculturists and none other. Might I point out that more than fifty per cent of the people of this country are not engaged in agricultural pursuits at all, and it seems to me that some mention ought to be made in the report with regard to those other people? The report is divided, as to the people who are to be permitted to come into this country, into three classes. This was already the rule. The committee are stating merely what already existed. There are three classes of people: first, the children of light, the sons of the morning, the British race; second, those who are somewhat analogous to the British race, but not quite so. We might call them first cousins of the British race—the Germans. I can remember only a few years ago when to mention in this house the name of Germany in a sympathetic or Christian spirit—and I was the only one who did so—was to bring down on you the vials of the wrath of the ultra-patriots. The very mention of the name was anathema. We have moved since then and now the Germans are in the preferred class. Then we have the Norwegians, Swedes, Danes, Finns, Swiss, Dutch, Belgians and French. I can understand why France is included in the list, because French is an official language in this country. Thirty per cent of the people of Canada are French-speaking and it is the most natural thing in the world that the French are included in this class. But I ask myself; If the French did not occupy the position which they do to-day in this country, would France have been included in the list or not? I think the answer is self-evident.

There is another class, the lower or third class, the third stratum. They consist, not of cousins of the British but cousins of the German race. For instance, we have the Austrians. I do not know who drew up these classes, A, B and C, but I rather fancy that it was prepared in Washington where most of our rules of immigration come from. We have the Austrians in this third class, and I should like to ask those who are responsible for the preparation of this list, in what respect do the Austrians differ from the Germans? I do not know of any difference at all. There are no representatives of the Austrians in the house. Probably if there had been their interests would have been looked after. Then we have in this third class, Hungary, Poland, Roumania, Lithuania, Esthonia, Latvia, Bulgaria, Jugoslavia and Czechoslovakia. Russia, a country of 150,000,000 of people, is ignored altogether. They are evidently of such a class that it is not worth while even mentioning them. They are not on the list at all. Do you not think, sir, that among the 150,000,000 people in that great European country there might be some who would make good citizens of Canada? I would fancy so. There must be people there who are not satisfied with conditions as they exist in their country to-day, riven as it is by revolution and so on. Nevertheless they are not even mentioned in the list. Are hon. members aware that 75 per cent of the people of Europe are debarred from coming to Canada by this class 3 list? Take for instance the countries of Norway, Sweden and Denmark in the preferred list. Why, the city of London and suburbs is larger in point of population than the whole of those countries combined. I say that not thirty per cent of the people of Europe are in the second class. The Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Dunning) told us that the people of England do not want to come to Canada because they are pretty well taken care of in their own country. They have the dole, the old age pension, unemployment insurance, and so on. How are we going to fill up our country with the proper people if the British race are so well taken care of that they do not want to come here? I would fancy that you would get them in places from which it is desirable for them to emigrate. People never emigrate from a country where they are satisfied. That has never been heard of. They go from countries where they are dissatisfied. The countries where the people are dissatisfied at the present moment are those which have gone through revolution and are just now in a topsy-turvy condition. I do not say that they are all dissatisfied, but there must be in those countries tens of thousands, yes, millions of people who would be very glad to come to Canada if they could find an opportunity to do so. But their names are not even mentioned in the lists. Yet we endeavour to proclaim to the world that Canada is open for immigration.

Mr. FORKE: In regard to Russia there has been the difficulty that they would not recognize their own passports. If a Russian left Russia he could not return. Consequently there has been some difficulty in making any arrangements with the Russian government. I think they are coming to their senses now and are beginning to recognize their own passports.

[Mr. Jacobs.]

Mr. JACOBS: But are we coming to our senses?

Mr. FORKE: I think we are there now.

Mr. JACOBS: To let them in? That is the thing. This is merely a temporary matter with the Russian government.

Mr. FORKE: We want to deal with governments that will recognize their own laws and regulations and that will deal properly with other nations.

Mr. JACOBS: When those people leave Russia, that country will not be able to see them for dust. They will not want to go back. My hon. friend is referring to the point that if they do not turn out well, they cannot be sent back. We have taken those chances in the past and I would be prepared to take some chances now.

The hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) told us a few moments ago that we want the agricultural class in this country and nobody else, that it is useless for people to knock at our doors and seek entrance if they do not intend to go on the land. That was stated so pontifically by the hon. member that you would imagine it really was a fact, but if he had read the report, which I trust he has, he would see that people coming from Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Finland, Roumania, Switzerland, Holland, Belgium and France, are admitted freely to this country, no matter what their occupations may be. One hundred thousand painters can come in here from Germany, and you cannot say them nay, but if one painter from Austria, from Vienna, were to try to get in, it would necessitate my going with my hat in my hand to see the hon. minister and begging for favour for this Austrian. Is that right? Is that just? Why should there be a distinction made between these two peoples? They are the same class of people, identically the same; they profess the same religion; they belong to the Nordic race. In every respect they are first class, and yet this ridiculous distinction is being made. Then we have the cases of people from Poland, Germany, and so on, who are not permitted to come in. A few years ago Poland belonged to Russia, and Finland belonged to Russia, but to-day the Finns can come in, and the Poles not. What distinction is there between a Pole and a Finn? I challenge the minister to tell me how by looking at a Finn and a Pole he can tell which is which.

Sir EUGENE FISET: The Pole may have fins.

Mr. JACOBS: In that case the Pole might get in, but it would be his finish.

That is the objection I take to this report, that you are making distinctions between peoples where no distinction should be made. I am not talking of Italians, Spaniards, Portuguese and people of that kind. They are not to be mentioned in the same breath with the British people; they are not to be brought into this country; they have no culture at all which thely can contribute to the development of this country; they are Italians, Spaniards and Portuguese, and although they may have had a history, their future is all in the past so far as Canada is concerned. They can do nothing for the upbuilding of this country; they belong to the Latin race, and all Latin races are rigidly excluded with the exception of the French, and a large portion of the French belong to the Norman race and can therefore be looked upon, by a stretch of the imagination, as Nordics. Is it not strange that in this country where we have nine millions of people, and could contain one hundred millions, we should make these distinctions between races as to whether they are Nordics or Latins. I say we are making a serious mistake in making these distinctions, and that this country is not in a position just now to do anything of this kind.

My hon. friend from Frontenac-Addington, I understand, belongs to the medical profession. He knows that when he prescribes medicine for a patient he gives him two grains of this, three grains of that and four grains of the other, with plenty of water in it, and then it has to be shaken up well, and taken until relief is afforded. That is what we ought to do in this country in connection with immigration. We can take two per cent of this class, two per cent of that, and two per cent of the other, and they will all go to make up a people that we shall have very good reason to be proud of. After all, what is the British race but a conglomerate mixture? We all know that that is the case, and that there is no such thing as the pure British stock today, except perhaps in the fastnesses of Scotland, in the hills of Wales, or in the wilds of Ireland. It is only there that you find the ancient British race. All the others are a mixture of the Saxons, the Danes, the Normans, and people of that kind who in turn invaded and captured the country. That is what has made the British people great; it is a mixture of all these races. Here we are in this country a population of hundreds of millions of Christmas trees and eight or nine million people, and we hope to make a great race by exclusion. It is an impossibility. The greatness of a nation is reckoned by the people who live in that country—not by its lakes and rivers and mountains, but by the people themselves. Here we have a country which is losing to the United States hundreds of thousands of people every year. As was pointed out some time ago, within the last five years, 591,000 of our people have gone to the United States. Naturally they go there, because a magnet draws them. They have a quota law in the United States, and everybody from Europe except a paltry two per cent is excluded, although they used to take in from one and a half to two million Europeans annually. But they have been shut out, and where is the United States going to get people to take their place? The United States is draining Canada dry of its people, and we are sitting by and presuming to lay down by silly rules what classes of people shall be brought into this country to take their place.

I say that it is a serious mistake to select people on the basis of the country from which they come. A man is a human being, although he may be born in a stable. A Russian may be a very good man, and so may a Pole and a Ruthenian, even though born in Russia, and a man may be a very bad and wicked man although born within sound of Bow Bells. You should select people for what they are worth in themselves. Look them over, and see if they can fit into the life of this country; to select them by countries, the method that has been followed in Canada for the last fifteen or twenty years, is a serious mistake. In the days of Sir Clifford Sifton we used to get from four to five hundred thousand immigrants a year and they peopled this country. What would this country have been without that vast body of immigration that came to this country prior to the last fifteen years? Things have changed. Our friends the farmers presume to sit in judgment upon the people who do not want to go upon the farms at all. I can understand that they want to have people go on the farms, but when it comes to selecting people for city life it seems to me that the people of the cities ought to have something to say about it. In this report practically nothing at all is said about immigrants except those who are to go on the farms, although fifty per cent of the people in this country are not on farms at all. You are providing that an artisan or anyone else may come in provided he comes from these particular countries that are mentioned in paragraph 6, but my objection to that is that if we are going to allow Germans, Swiss, Danes and Finns to come in—regardless. mark you, of the occupations which they are going to follow when they come here—why should we not extend the same privilege to Austrians, Hungarians, Poles, and so on? I am not here to make an eulogy upon the history of these races or to tell what the Hungarians, Poles and Austrians have contributed to the civilization of the world. Mind you, we are not asking to bring people in here who belong to a different colour; we are not asking that people be allowed in here who belong to a different religion; we are not asking that people be brought in if they differ in any respect from the people who happened to be born in Berlin or Hamburg. But I say that it is an outrage and a crime that we should have to come to the Department of Immigration every time we want to get a man admitted to this country from, say, Vienna, when a man who comes from Berlin or Hamburg is welcomed with open arms. The thing is an absurdity.

The report is void of common sense. Sixty men representing the wisdom of parliament held thirty-six meetings, and they have produced a mouse. I would be prepared to accept the amendment of my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan), but I think it is already incorporated in the last paragraph of the report which reads as follows:

> Your committee would also recommend that the government make an intensive and comprehensive study of the possibilities of increasing industrial and agricultural development in Canada with a view to attracting capital and providing wider and increased opportunities for employment not only for our own people, but for the prospective immigrants.

That is the only constructive suggestion in the entire report. We spent our time in discussing whether we should widen the list of boy immigrants from fourteen to nineteen years of age, whether we should pay $11 per British immigrant, or $9.73, and matters of that kind. We have trifled with our time. We have not contributed anything to the most important question now before the country, and I think everyone of us who was on that committee ought to admit that the result of all our work is simply nil.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, there are a few aspects of this question which I should like to emphasize. To a very large extent I agree with what has been said about this report by the member who has just resumed his seat (Mr. Jacobs). It does not seem to me to be anything like so far-reaching and statesmanlike a document as we might have expected; on the other hand I am profoundly thankful that it is no worse.

One or two of the clauses of the report seem to me to be in the right direction. It is suggested that there should be a larger measure of cooperation with the provinces. I think anyone who has been closely in touch with the immigration problem must admit that this is very necesasry. It is the provinces that must attempt to absorb those immigrants, that must educate them, that must care for them in case they fall sick, that must carry the burden in case they are unfit. It seems to me highly desirable that the provinces should be consulted in the matter. I hope that this cooperation will go even further, and that only immigrants will be brought in that the provinces desire, for after all, since the provinces themselves must assume so much responsibility, they ought to have a very large voice in determining the character and number of the immigrants.

I had hoped that even more clearly than has been indicated in the report it would be declared that the work of immigration should be taken out of the hands of the railways. I would go further and say that it should be taken out of the hands of all private organizations. It would seem to me that the peopling of this country is so preeminently a matter that concerns the state itself that we should allow no private agency, whether it be business or philanthropic, to handle its administration.

With regard to the amendment, the mover (Mr. Cahan) laid great stress upon the necessity of having a business man at the head of the Immigration department. I think we all wish to have the most efficient administration possible, but I fancy that the underlying suggestion is that certain methods now in vogue in the business world should be put into operation in this department. In my opinion that would be a distinct mistake. Altogether too long we have had immigration policies based upon methods that are employed in business, in industry and in finance. As the member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) pointed out so clearly, immigrants have been brought here in order that they might be employed as cheap labourers, that is, they have been brought here to be more or less exploited. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) considered that the man who asked what the government would do for him would not make a good immigrant. It is not so much a case of what the government could do for the immigrant as what the exploiters would do with him. I am hoping that we have gotten over the worst stage and that to-day we are giving more attention and care to the immigrant himself.

It is generally taken for granted that immigration will be a great economic advantage to this country. I do not think we ought to assume this. A most illuminating editorial appeared in the Manitoba Free Press of June 8, 1927, about a year ago, in which this passage occurs:

> You not only transpose the population, you transpose the problem which that population constitutes in its own country. Britain has nearly a million idle workers whom she would be glad enough to see in Canada; Sweden has 65,000 whom she would be agreeable to see here too. What does that actually mean?

Then the article proceeds to show that the reason those people are idle in their own countries is that they cannot find work to do, they cannot find a market for the goods which they produce, and if we bring them to this country the writer says:

> Consequently what would then be transferred to Canada would be the problem of finding markets for the increased production which these immigrants would produce.

So I think we ought to hesitate to accept the conclusion that merely by bringing in people we help to solve our economic problem. If there are social and economic maladjustments in this country, merely by doubling both sides of the equation we do not solve our problem. These people are not merely consumers of the goods, they are producers; they are also producers of more goods, agricultural or manufactured; and if we already have difficulty in finding a market for our goods at home, we will have doubled the difficulty if we double our population. I think that is an aspect of the question which has not been given sufficient consideration.

I pass hurriedly to a question which I have taken up again and again on the floor of this house, that is, the misrepresentation by immigration agents in the old country with regard to conditions in Canada. I know the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke) has said that he is not responsible for those misrepresentations, but that is altogether too easy a way of getting out of the responsibility. He could very effectively handle those agents. With the cooperation of the British authorities such agents could be licensed and prevented from misrepresenting Canadian conditions to prospective immigrants. Just recently a correspondent has sent me a copy of an article which appeared in the Evening Express of Cardiff, Wales, on October 21, 1927. In big headlines we find the following:

> 300,000 Surplus Men
> Where Every Girl Is Married
> £4 10s To Canada

Then the article in large type is in these words:

> Situations can be found in Canada for hundreds of unemployed Welsh domestic servants.
> The Canadian government offer an assisted passage, a comfortable home, easy work, good food, clothing and companionship to every Welsh girl who migrates to the British Dominion.

It is stated that there had been an interview with Mr. H. L. Cotterill, a successful English farmer in Canada, now attached to the Canadian colonization department, who had recently visited Cardiff. The article continues with this sub heading:

> Exceptional Opportunities
> Canada offers undreamed-of opportunities to British girls. Her wages would be anything from £6 to £8 a month with all found. No city, town or village in Great Britain offers such attractive wages. There are 300,000 more men than women in Canada, and as soon as a girl feels her feet there she marries. We cannot keep girls for more than a few months however good a home she finds. The servant is never oppressed on Canadian farms. She is accepted as one of the family, seldom has to wear a cap and uniform, and is never relegated to the kitchen.
> There are labour-saving devices in most homes—

Remember, our farm homes are still being referred to.

> —which makes her work so pleasant that she can finish her duties by noon. Electric light, central heating, and hot and cold water are only some of the pleasures of Canadian home life.

We may laugh at a description of that kind; we all know that it is very far from portraying the real conditions in Canada. But when a girl in the old country reads that description and on the strength of it books for Canada and then finds the home life which is so common in many of the outlying districts of western Canada she may very well feel aggrieved. I do not need to give similar advertisements with regard to the men; I have given these on other occasions.

Again let me say this in regard to labour and immigration. Although the Minister of Railways has referred to our employment agencies, the fact is that we often have in this country larger numbers of people, at least in certain seasons, than we can find work for. It is only a year ago that a resolution was passed by the rural municipalities of Saskatchewan at their convention held on June 23, 1927, at Prince Albert, which resolution I shall quote. It portrays the conditions that have prevailed year after year and which existed last year right in the heart of our best agricultural district.

> That whereas large numbers of immigrants have been brought into western Canada this spring by transportation and other interests working in cooperation with federal government agencies in Europe:

And whereas no adequate provisions have been made by these parties for the supervision and settlement of these newcomers upon the land in accordance with the published intention of the government:

And whereas, because of this, many immigrants have been located in urban centres with no prospect of sufficient employment to enable them to provide reserves for the coming winter and moreover thus aggravating the unemployment problem in such centres:

Therefore be it resolved that we place these facts before the Prime Minister of Canada, the Minister of Immigration, the Minister of Railways, the Minister of Labour, and the members for the several constituencies of this province with the request that immediate steps be taken:—

(a) For the placing of the financial responsibility for the care of such immigrants now and next winter upon the transportation companies and others directly responsible for the situation.

(b) For the prevention of its recurrence in future years by the proper regulation and settlement of only such immigrants as the country can absorb.

(c) The immediate planning of government works for the coming winter to give employment to our own citizens who are suffering from the dearth of employment and low wages caused by the recent influx of immigrants.

We all recognize that there is room for a certain number of immigrants in this country; but the point is that they are brought in without sufficient regard to the opportunities that are open at the particular time and with almost entire disregard of the seasonal nature of so much of the work in Canada. I had occasion a few weeks ago in the early spring to call the attention of the Minister of Immigration to the conditions which prevailed in my own city of Winnipeg. He rather made light of the situation. He said that he had heard from his officials there that these men would not take work. But the fact that we had discussed the matter on the floor of the house and the further fact that the men had held a parade in Winnipeg was sufficient to set machinery going so that, according to the Tribune of May 2, the officials of the employment service a few days afterwards stated that the week before work was found for 620 men, 234 going to farms, 229 to railway construction camps, 61 to highway costruction gangs, 14 to logging camps and the remainder to casual employment. I cite this example merely to illustrate this point: A few days before this the Minister of Immigration had told us that these men would not go to work on the land, and yet when the opportunity was offered them 234 went to work on the farms, the others later on finding employment in other spheres of activity.

The fact is that we have seasonal unemployment in this country. Every year we have to reckon with that situation, and it will be more or less permanent until such time as we make special efforts to provide for winter work. I think it is only fair to Canadians already here that the government itself should very seriously consider the advisability of bringing in immigrants in the springtime before there is work, substituting these immigrants for people already in employment here, and then later turning them loose in the autumn to forage for themselves, as best they can with the result that they finally land up in our cities, a charge upon our urban authorities. I know we have discussed this question again and again, but the problem remains. It is only within the last few months that the government of my own province has issued a report on seasonal unemployment in Manitoba. It is only a few years ago since we had a conference of all the provincial authorities dealing with this question of seasonal unemployment, but we are content, it seems, to make reports and then allow the situation to drift along until something almost desperate happens.

With regard to British immigrants I think it is becoming increasingly clear that there is less disposition on the part of residents of Great Britain to leave their own land to risk the uncertainties of these newer countries. I noticed the other day a speech made before the manufacturers' association in session in the east. It corroborated the testimony which was given this year before the committee on industrial and international relations to the effect that, by reason of the provisions now existing in Great Britain for unemployment, for sickness, invalidity and old age a great many of the best workers in that country are unwilling to leave and come to a land where there are fewer provisions of this kind. If we are to get the best class of English immigrants it seems that the surest way is to raise our social standards until they are somewhat comparable to those which now exist in England as well as in a number of countries in northern Europe.

The Minister of Railways made mention of the harvesters who came to this country and he rather rejoiced that so few of them had returned to the old land. Those who sat in the house several years ago may remember that a large contingent of those harvesters came to Ottawa, out of work, without food, and begging that something should be done in their case. And the most that could be done was to get a special car and bundle them back to Toronto. I am not so sure that that experiment in bringing harvesters to this country was an unqualified success. I am not so sure that the reason a good many more of them did not return to the old country was not simply that they had not the money with which to pay their passage. It may be all very well to get one harvest gathered by such a method, but I submit that a policy of this kind is not one on which we ought to depend to settle this country with the most desirable people.

With regard to foreign immigrants, I am not one of those who would advocate a wide open policy for immigrants from Europe; not because I have any prejudice against south-eastern Europeans. I have a great many friends among them. I admire a great deal what they have accomplished in the old land. I have seen enough of their achievements in Canada to respect them. But I say that we ourselves in Canada are not yet fitted to undertake the problems which the incoming of these immigrants introduces. We urge that we should get immigrants and then we are afraid to assume the responsibility which is entailed by their coming.

I should like to give a few figures by way of illustration from a report which I prepared some years ago for the governments of the three prairie provinces after making an intensive survey of over 1,000 Ukrainian homes in those provinces. I want to give some idea of the social and educational conditions which prevailed at that time in many of these communities and which still prevail to a lesser or greater degree. I noted that on the whole the immigrants remained isolated from their English-speaking neighbours, not so much because they wanted to remain isolated as because the English-speaking neighbours shunned the localities in which these immigrants were located. I also noted that the children were being gradually assimilated through the schools but in the process of assimilation they were losing much that should be retained. I do not think we can emphasize too strongly the necessity of urging these non-English-speaking immigrants to conserve the best things which they bring with them; too often we ask them to leave the old culture behind and forget that in so doing we are asking them to leave behind very much that is most worth while in the whole history of their nationality and in their own characters.

Again, I noted that the educational and social development is not proportionate to the material advancement. I could give you cases in which the Canadian-born children of these foreigners are not so well educated and not so well fitted to engage in the activities of citizenship as were the immigrants themselves when they first arrived in this country. Let me speak particularly of the educational problem which we must face in a good many of our western communities, and in so doing I would like to give a few statistics. In the districts visited, which were fairly typical of those settlements all the way from Winnipeg to Edmonton, 68 per cent of the men did not speak English, 86 per cent did not read English and 48 per cent did not read or write at all. Of the 1,823 parents in the families studied 80 per cent did not speak English; of the other adults and children over fourteen years of age 53 per cent did not write or read English and 50 per cent did not read or write at all. Of the 1,253 children of school age 34 per cent did not attend school, 54 per cent did not read or write English and 61 per cent did not read or write at all.

Mr. DUNNING: In order to make this clear would my hon. friend tell us in what year that study was made?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: This study was made in 1917, eleven years ago.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: Might I ask a question? Did I understand the hon. member to say that 30 per cent of the children did not attend school?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, 34 per cent.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: How about compulsory education at that time?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Compulsory education was not being enforced. I may say that these statistics were very carefully taken at that time; I had the name, the age and the residence of each child. In this connection let me give a little illustration of the official attitude. I mentioned this condition of affairs to the then Minister of Education in one of the provinces—a province which rather boasted of the high standard of its educational attainments. He said, "Oh, well, that cannot be; we have compulsory education in this province." I said, "Well, I have the facts, and your province averages just about the same as the other two prairie provinces." Then that official said, "Oh, well, it would never do to let that become public; it would create a bad impression." I do not think any statement could better convey the attitude which we find all too often with regard to these matters. These facts must not be told the public for fear of creating a bad impression, yet at that time, although it was said that most of the children were attending school and there has been no subsequent census anything like so carefully taken of the districts visited in northern Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, 34 per cent of the children of these non-English-speaking communities were not given an opportunity to attend public school.

Mr. SANDERSON: May I ask a question? These statistics are for the year 1917; would the hon. member say they apply to-day?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I said they applied more or less to-day, but I am inclined to think that conditions have gradually improved. However, I would say that had I made that statement eleven years ago the officials would have said it was not correct, if there had not been the most absolute evidence to the contrary. I am not speaking of conditions just as they prevail to-day but I am speaking of problems with which we are still faced. These statistics are confessedly a little out of date, but they are the latest I have and they do give us some idea of this great problem.

Let me make it clear that I am not blaming the educational authorities of the three prairie provinces; they have done magnificent work in trying to meet this great additional problem which they have had to face. I do not think eastern members of parliament ever realized the problem which the immigrant has meant to the west. You have your English-speaking girls and boys who do not need to learn to speak English; they may have to learn how to speak it more correctly, but they learn the language at home. In the west we have tens of thousands of children who have not that opportunity. More than that, we have had a good many people come to Canada in their young manhood and young womanhood who have had to pick up the language as best they could. In my own city of Winnipeg I suppose we have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars on adult education simply because we felt it desirable that these people who come to us should acquire the English language as soon as possible.

That is the problem we have had in the west. I state the facts not to lay blame but to call attention to a situation. We have done the best we could, in building school houses away out in the northern districts, sometimes far from the railways, where it is almost impossible to attend school. In other ways we have done much, but I should like to emphasize the fact that this great task has been imposed upon us because of the immigration policy of this country. If we are going to import these immigrants we should be prepared to see the job through and assume the responsibility created by their coming. Let me give one or two other points which I noted at that time, and again let me say that the conditions are somewhat improved by now, although in the northern districts I could find a good many similar communities to-day.

Mr. SANDERSON: May I ask another question? The hon. member is going to quote figures which were obtained in 1917, and I would draw attention to the fact that that was during the war period, when conditions in this country were abnormal.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Conditions in some places were rather abnormal, but conditions in the rural communities about which I am speaking are very much the same to-day as they were then. I will say frankly that they are somewhat improved, but I could go to large areas in my own province, up between the lakes, and find conditions almost precisely the same as they were at that time.

Mr. FORKE: I would ask my hon. friend to read a letter appearing in the issue of the Manitoba Free Press which arrived here this morning, written by Mr. Dutton of Dauphin, Manitoba. This gentleman is very prominent in the province of Manitoba, and he deals with the foreigners in the northern part of that province. I would ask the hon. member to read that letter and know something of the conditions of those people, as told by a man who is living among them at the present time.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have spent much time among the foreigners and given as much attention to this question for the last twenty years as any man in the province of Manitoba.

Mr. FORKE: That man is living right among them.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I too have lived among them. These statistics were secured for the governments of the three prairie provinces, and I want to bring before this house some of the problems that face us. Of the 937 families, 10 per cent lived in one room and 56 per cent in two rooms. I want to contrast that with some of the extravagant statements made in the Cardiff paper. Fifty-six per cent had no books, and 95 per cent no English books. Fifty per cent of the families did not take any newspaper, and 96 per cent did not take an English newspaper. In only about a dozen cases—all but three in Manitoba—was a doctor or a trained midwife present at the last birth. Sanitary arrangements were very primitive, and about two-thirds of the women, usually the younger women, worked in the fields. Practically all the children worked on the farm as soon as they were old enough. There was little provision or opportunity for recreation.

Mr. McMILLAN: Does that apply to conditions eleven years ago or to the present time?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have already stated that these statistics were collected in a survey made of the Ukrainian rural communities in the three prairie provinces eleven years ago. I said that I had no doubt, from my observations in crossing the country, that conditions have been improved in the last eleven years, but I would also say that there are many communities in the northern part of these provinces in which conditions to-day are very similar to those which prevailed at that time.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I think the hon. member will agree with me that there are many Canadian homes where conditions are just as bad.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Quite so.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Why emphasize one particular class of foreigner?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not trying to blame the foreigners. I have many friends among the foreigners and they know me, and they understand that. I am simply taking a select group which present more of a problem than the Canadians who have been here longer. If the hon. gentleman who has just spoken would like to get the economic side in favour of the foreigners, I will give it. It shows the wonderful progress made by these foreigners. Of the 832 families from whom information on this point was secured, 50 per cent started with no capital at all and 42 per cent with less than $500. Out of the whole number of families, 40 per cent had no debts at all, 40 per cent had less than $1,000 of debt, and 7 per cent over $5,000 each. In the great majority of cases they had secured a quarter, half or whole section, and in many cases the farms were in very good condition. I want to make it clear that I am not suggesting that these people are not good settlers; I should not like to give that idea to the house. They are among our very best settlers; they are people who have been accustomed to working on the land, and they are doing an excellent work. I do not want to suggest that they are in poorer condition than a great many Canadians in the outlying districts. Some of these Canadians are living under conditions similar to this. But the educational and social life of these foreigners present greater problems than the educational and social life of the Canadian people. The immigrants are not necessarily illiterate because they do not understand English. A great many coming here from northern Europe are well educated, some of them more highly educated than our own people, even although they do not speak English. Nevertheless, the presence of large groups of non-English speaking people in Canada presents a peculiar difficulty to us. A great many of those who came out at the time of the great immigration some twenty years ago, under the Sifton policy, were from south-eastern Europe where at that time school education was not very common, and so a good many of them were illiterate when they came here. There is the other side of the picture. In our schools in Winnipeg to-day there is not a group that takes a higher standing than the children of these immigrants from southeastern Europe, and there are none that take higher standing in the university than those who come to us from various European countries.

Let me come back to the point I was trying to emphasize. There is no use in bringing in all these immigrants from the various countries of the world and then refusing to give special consideration to them or declining to accept the obligations put upon us. We will have to adopt some policy of helping these people if we are to get the best from them. I should like to suggest a few recommendations which I have not the time to develop fully. The immigrants should be protected against exploitation, because they are particularly liable to this through their lack of knowledge of the English language. There should be provisions made for closer settlement than we have given them in the past. In some instance there should have been financial assistance and expert advice given, especially the latter, because many of the immigrants have had to learn at great cost to themselves what they might have been told had there been an arrangement such as we now have under the Soldier Settlement Board. There should have been a stricter enforcement of our school attendance, and curricula should be adapted to meet the needs of these newcomers. There should be special opportunities provided to enable the young people and adults to learn English. There should be instruction given in sanitation, and in farming methods, especially in dairying. This is being accomplished to a greater degree to-day than it was at that time. There should be encouragement in the native handicrafts, some of which are wonderfully beautiful and would be a great asset if they could be developed. There should be a better mutual understanding between Canadians and the immigrants. I wish I had the time to develop this point. We have brought these people in and to a certain extent they have remained foreigners. We have maintained an isolated position. Unless this situation is altered we are laying up trouble for ourselves in the years to come.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have been trying to emphasize that if we are to benefit by the labour of the immigrant, we must not refuse to accept the responsibility which his coming creates. If British trade unionists, accustomed to the right of organizing, accustomed to social insurance, desire to have similar conditions in this country, we must not call them agitators. If we bring in people of other languages, we must not wonder that they want to have the language rights of the minorities of Europe. If we bring in people of alien habits and customs, we must not expect them to live like puritan Englishmen. The tirades which we make against the foreigners, calling them bolsheviks, merely reveal our own ignorance. The immigrant brings with him his own mental, moral, social, religious and political backgrounds. His backgrounds are not those of either English Ontario or French Quebec. It is for us older Canadians to find common ground with the newcomer. Only in this way can we prevent what might become something of a Balkanization of this country. Only in this way can we build up a greater Canada which will be not an English Canada or a French Canada but a larger and more inclusive Canada in the building of which all these various people will contribute.

Mr. THOMAS McMILLAN (South Huron): I rise to dispel among other things two impressions which I consider are wrong impressions to go abroad from this house during this debate on immigration. The first is that we do not need immigrants and we should not encourage them. The second is that there are no opportunities for immigrants and that the government by its action has bludgeoned parts of our agricultural interests to such a degree that they are not able to take advantage of the opportunities which I believe Canada possesses. As regards the first, this is a land of opportunity and we should encourage the right kind of immigrants. I do not believe we should humble ourselves in order to get them, but we should cause the people of other lands to realize that Canada is a land of opportunity and that as long as they are of the right calibre, we would like to have them. There are in this world two classes of people. The one bends to circumstances; the other compels circumstances to bend to themselves. The one is always beset with difficulties; the other clears those difficulties away. In the end the one becomes a living embodiment of what the qualities of energy, industry and perseverance shall surely accomplish, while the other exhibits the miserable wreck following indolence, indecision and want of purpose. It is the first class of immigrants that we wish to have in this country, and consistently with reason we cannot have too many of them.

The impression that we do not need immigrants and that we cannot make provision for them is, from my experience, contrary to the fact. From my experience, not only in my province of Ontario but after an extended trip last year over the western provinces, I believe, if we can get immigrants of the proper stamp, the men who, when they come to this country and realize, as is the truth, that we have great opportunities, will turn those opportunities to their own advantage, there is ample provision for them in Canada. We are looking for them on the farms throughout the whole of my province of Ontario.

The next is that we are not using the agriculturists of this country aright; that we are bludgeoning more particularly the dairy interests, and that under the present regime they have not a chance to operate. What do hon. gentlemen opposite want. That has already revealed itself very clearly. It revealed itself in the efforts which have been made across the floor to get us to pass other orders in council whereby we may repeat the action taken when the previous government came into existence for such a short time. We know the very day they were sworn in, the 13th day of July, 1926, at one crack, for instance, the duty on tomatoes was jumped up from 30 per cent to 76½ per cent at the very time when the consumers of Canada, and more particularly of central Canada, wished to secure their supplies of fruits and vegetables. What is that if it is not protection with a vengeance? In other words, they do not care what tariff there is on goods or whether there is any at all when people do not want to buy the goods or at seasons when their friends have not the goods to sell. The whole thing is indefensible! What does it mean? It means that they may go to certain sectional interests in certain small areas of the country and say: We wish to get your support and in order to get it we will start and tinker with the tariff so that when your strawberries are ripe, as we were told from across the floor the other day, which is the very time when the people throughout Canada want to buy them, we will put on a high duty and compel them to buy from you. Of course this will cause the great mass of the people to pay more for their berries. That is what it will mean. In this way they can, by this dumping duty process, jack up the tariff and thus put these sections in the position that they can extort high prices for their berries and spread that high price over the table of every consumer in Canada. They will be able to spread an additional plaster over the table of every family in Canada in the case of all their fruits and vegetables. As a result of that kind of thing, our friends across the way under this vicious policy the evil of which they discovered and put into operation when they assumed power—this shadow government, which never had any good reason for its existence, and which tried to keep itself in power by—

Mr. HEAPS: I rise to a point of order. I should like to ask, Mr. Speaker, what the question of strawberries has to do with the report of the committee on immigration.

Mr. McMILLAN: When I rose I said that I wished to dispel two impressions which had been placed before the house, one of which was that this government was bludgeoning the dairying industry of this country. I propose to show that they are not bludgeoning the dairy industry, and that the dairying interests are the greatest interests in Canada to-day, so far as live stock is concerned.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman will have to connect up his remarks with the question now before the house, or he will be out of order.

Mr. McMILLAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will proceed to do so. They are now trying to work up a vicious spirit among the dairymen and butter makers of Canada, and are using the Australian treaty as a means of doing so.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the hon. gentleman permit a question? Will he tell us what he is reading from?

Mr. McMILLAN: I am reading from my own statement, which has been done pretty nearly every time any hon. gentleman across the floor from me has addressed the house this session. I am not quoting from anyone.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, after we have burdened all the people for the benefit of a few, we will now put the dairy farmer in a position, by means of this high tariff on butter, to enable him to charge every consumer in Canada a higher price for the butter they require for domestic use.

Mr. SHORT: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Are you going to allow this gentleman to proceed to discuss the dairying interests of this country when the subject before the house is the report of the immigration committee, and he is reading his speech too?

Mr. McMILLAN: I appeal to you, Mr. Speaker, and to every member of the house if it is not a fact that when the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) was speaking this afternoon, he made the distinct charge that the government of this country was bludgeoning the greatest section of the agricultural industry of Canada.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I never used the word bludgeoning.

Mr. McMILLAN: And he went on to say that therefore any immigration policy was no use. He said that that was the crux of the immigration situation in this country. I propose in a few words to show that the dairying interests in this country have been in a better position during the last few years than for many years previously.

What are the facts? I have before me the trade returns showing the exports of butter from Canada and the imports into Canada from all countries of the world for the last number of years, together with the prices in Montreal, New York and London. The facts are that up until very recently, under normal conditions, Great Britain has been the world's best market for butter, and consequently the greatest distributing and price-regulating market of the world. But what happened? In the fall of 1925 there was a seamen's strike in Australia, which stopped all shipping from Australia and New Zealand, the shipping of butter and every other commodity. As a consequence, there arose a scarcity of butter in the British market. In October, 1925, New Zealand butter in London was selling at 50.78 cents per pound; Australian butter in London, 47.74 cents, and Canadian butter in London, 46.87 cents. You will notice that Australian and New Zealand butter was higher than Canadian. Canada then shipped so much of our domestic product to Great Britain as to leave none for the supply of our own people; even our cold storage stock for winter use was not provided. As a result, up went the price of butter in Canada in 1926. Following are the prices of butter in Montreal, New York and London previous to March, 1926:

Date	Montreal	New York	New Zealand butter at London	Australian butter at London	Australian butter at Montreal
	c.	c.	c. c.	c. c.	c. c.
Dec. 1924	37	49	....	....	....
Feb. 1925	30	40·8	34·29 to 35·15	32·12 to 32·98	30·40 to 31·26
Oct. 1925	46	50·84	50·78	47·74	46·02 ....
Mar. 1926	46·5	42·78	36·46 to 37·32	35·15 to 36·02	.....

It will be observed from the above quotations that in March, 1926, butter in Montreal was 10 cents per pound higher than New Zealand or Australian butter was in London, and four cents per pound higher than it was even in New York. As a matter of record, the following are the prices of butter, in cents per pound, during 1927 to May, 1928, showing that during all the year 1927 the price of our butter in Montreal was higher than the price of Australian and New Zealand butter in London:

No sales of Canadian butter at London during this period.

Mr. HEAPS: I must again rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman was allowed to proceed before, Mr. Speaker, but you stated that he would have to show some connection between his remarks and the subject now before the house, which is the report of the immigration committee. I have been waiting for the connection, but I cannot see it.

Mr. McMILLAN: I am showing it.

[Mr. McMillan.]

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The point raised by the hon. gentleman is well taken. The hon. member should confine his remarks to the motion now before the house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Immigration.

Mr. McMILLAN: I was proceeding to show, Mr. Speaker, that the observations made by hon. gentlemen opposite—and they were not called in question—were that this government has been bludgeoning the dairy interests of this country to such a degree that immigration was futile, and it was useless to endeavour to encourage it. I am proceeding, sir, to show, and I think, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that the dairy industry is in a very favourable position in this country at the present time—so favourable as to dispel the erroneous impression that has been placed before the house by hon. gentlemen opposite. At this point I wish to call attention to the following figures:

As a result of those abnormal conditions Canada for the moment became the world's best market, and so butter was sent into Canada from Great Britain, Australia and New Zealand.

Imports from Great Britain

	Pounds
1926	2,062,893
1927	1,418,444
1928	1,325,190

Imports from Australia

1927	801,324
1928	4,904,536

Imports from New Zealand

1926	2,342,966
1927	571,872
1928	13,623,917

This trade was due to the fact that the price of butter has been higher in Canada than elsewhere, with the exception of the United States, and of course there is twelve cents per pound duty on butter entering the United States. These conditions have obtained up to the present time and it is my candid opinion that the Australian treaty has very little to do with the price.

If Australia and New Zealand could get a better price for their butter elsewhere they would not send it to Canada. We have heard a great howl as to the injury to the dairy industry of Canada by these large imports of butter from New Zealand. There is nothing to that cry. That shows that the price of butter was higher in Canada than in Great Britain. The members of the Canadian National Dairy Council and our Tory politicians are simply barking up the wrong tree. They could use their strength to much better purpose. This butter was imported simply to supply a shortage. We have imported butter in years past. In the years 1913, 1914 and 1915 we imported six or seven million pounds a year, and then followed the most prosperous years the dairy industry has ever known in Canada.

If Canada had a surplus for export there would be no butter imported and the price would be relatively lower than it has been during the last two years. New Zealand would not ship any butter here if she could get a higher price in Great Britain, as she can send it at less cost to Great Britain than to Canada.

The Canadian National Dairy Council has had much to say about the large importations of butter from New Zealand and the great injury to the dairy industry of Canada therefrom, but in all their communications to me, and they have flooded me with communications, I should like to point out to them the fact that they have never announced to me that the president of the Canadian National Dairy Council, Mr. J. A. Calder, Regina, has himself been importing New Zealand butter for speculative purposes. In February last he was reported as having had 5,500 boxes of 56 pounds each, or 308,000 pounds of this butter in store at Vancouver, B.C. The fact is, Mr. Chairman, the pessimistic propaganda carried on during the past winter had its origin not so much in a concern for the producer as in the interest of the creamery operators and cold storage speculators who were holding butter in cold storage for future sale.

The Canadian National Dairy Council claims that it is not seeking higher duties on butter but asking only that the government restore previously existing higher rates, but the fact is as I must remind the house again, that during this time butter was a higher price in Canada than in Britain.

In the literature sent out by the dairy council there is much which should be explained. Among the members of their organization are prominent makers of butter. They are creamery owners. One of the most active in the association is J. A. Calder, head of the Saskatchewan Cooperative Creameries and also, as I have said, the president of the Canadian dairy council. In the statement sent is the following:

> The market trends show definitely that the effect of importation (importation of New Zealand butter) has lowered the price of butter fat paid to producers without compensation to the consumer.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. It is true that the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) in the course of his address stated incidentally that the dairy policy of the government was detrimental to immigration. But even so, the hon. gentleman should confine his remarks to the question of immigration. Not the butter policy of the government, but its immigration policy is the subject before the house.

Mr. McMILLAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I assure you that I am willing at once to bow to your decision, in this way, that the future of the agriculture of Canada is at stake, and if this discussion on the immigration problem is broadcast all over the country, with the idea—not contradicted—that the government has been bludgeoning the agricultural interests of Canada to such a degree that there is no need for immigration, I say it is the very worst thing that can happen to this Dominion. I say so, sir, because of the fact that I have been in this business all my life, I know what dairying is, and I know that if there is one section of the farming industry of Canada which should be given every encouragement and a fair chance and justice not only before the eyes of the Canadian people, but of the whole world, it is the dairy industry of Canada.

Now, sir, let me read from this report.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Immigration?

Mr. McMILLAN: Yes, this is the immigration report. This applies to the amendment as well. It is stated that the key to the solution of the whole problem is such development and extension of employment in Canadian agriculture, mining, forestry and manufacturing as will readily absorb incoming settlers. How can we more acceptably absorb incoming settlers in agriculture than by showing to the people of Canada that this government is doing everything it possibly can for the agricultural industry? We are told that the government has been bludgeoning the agricultural interests. I want to give some quotations from the Market Examiner of Calgary setting out the prices of butter and butter fat:

1924	Butter	Butter fat	Spread in price between butter and butter fat
	Cents	Cents	Cents
January	45	34	11
February	45	34	11
March	45	34	11
April	41	32	9
May	36	30	6
June	35	31	4
July	35	28	7
August	35	28	7
September	37	30	7
October	37	30	7
November	37	30	7
December	40	32	8

Average spread, 7 11/12 cents per pound.

The table shows that in 1924, before the Australian treaty came into force, there was a spread of 7 11/12 cents per pound. If we take the figures for the last twelve months, June, 1927 to May, 1928, we find that with the exception of four months the price of butter was higher than it was in 1924; and the spread between the prices of butter and butter fat is less now than it was before, being 5½ cents as compared with 7 11/12 as in 1924. These are the facts revealed by price comparisons.

Now what is being done by the National Dairy Council and my hon. friends who are discussing immigration from the standpoint of their own party? The prices of butter are up, sharply up; the prices of butter fat are up still more sharply. But the spread in price between butter fat and butter is over two cents less now than it was before the treaty came into force, and probably less than at any time in the past. Are interested people trying to tell the farmers things that are not true? Price comparisons reveal the situation. What has the Canadian National Dairy Council to say regarding these matters? We must keep agriculture in Canada prosperous, and I would direct the attention of the house as well as of Canadian dairymen to the increasing demands for dairy products in the United States, which will mean a good deal to future immigration into Canada. The imports into the United States now exceed the exports very materially. For the year ending December 1926 the export of all dairy products from the United States, when reduced to a fat basis, amounted to approximately 16,000,000 pounds while the imports on the same basis for the same period were 60,000,000 pounds, or a net import of over 44,000,000 pounds.

The following table gives the proportion of our exports to the United States, showing increases in the last eight years. The total exports from Canada, and the percentage of these exports to the United States, stated in terms of butter fat, are as follows:

Years ended March 31	Total fat exported from Canada	Exported to United States	Per cent of total exports
	Pounds	Pounds
1919. . .	76,232,282	6,282,582	8.2
1923. . .	72,038,141	12,564,093	17.4
1927. . .	84,903,139	27,599,925	32.5

Practically one-third of our total exports was to the United States during the fiscal year ended March 31, 1927. The proportions will be considerably larger during the present year. Cream is the largest item in these exports at present. It was in 1911 that cream and milk were first listed as separate items in the exports, but comparatively small quantities had been exported for some years previously. In 1919 the exports of cream were 485,015 gallons and the exports of milk 827,973 gallons. In 1923 the cream exports were 1,712,241 gallons and the milk exports were practically the same as in 1919. In 1927 the exports of cream were 4,495,917 gallons and of milk 4,886,445 gallons. As a matter of record I will give the exports of cream and milk since 1911:

Milk and cream exported from Canada to United States

I am not suggesting for a moment that there is an immediate market in the United States for all our surplus products but I think it must be apparent, in view of all the facts that unless the unexpected happens the future of our export trade must be closely connected with that country. I have thought until recently that the high prices prevailing in the United States would encourage production sufficiently to meet all demands, but that is not the case. It is evident that for some years the population of the United States has been increasing faster than the number of cows. In 1890 there was one cow for every three persons; in 1910 one for every 4.2; in 1920, one for every 4.9; and as at January 1, 1927, one for every 5.2. No doubt the yield per cow has increased but the per capita consumption has also increased. Between 1919 and 1924 the number of cattle in the United States decreased by 2,192,000 head while the number of persons increased over 10,000,000. American agriculture is not in the prosperous condition in which it ought to be, showing amongst other things that high protection in the United States has not benefited that industry. In fact, when President Coolidge recently vetoed the McNary-Haugen bill, Senator Blaine from the great dairy state of Wisconsin declared that he did not believe the American duty upon butter was any good for the farmers of his state. He even went further and stated that when the import duty on butter was raised from 8 to 12 cents per pound the price of butter dropped in Chicago below the price in Montreal. His opinion is that the American tariff on butter benefits only the great corporations that hold butter in cold storage and put up the price to the consumer in the fall, winter and early spring. The Canadian government is doing everything it possibly can to encourage immigration and to give immigrants an opportunity to make good in agriculture in this country. The following presents the conditions so far as the storage of butter in Canada is concerned.

Notice the great increase in the quantities of butter held in cold storage in the months of December, 1927, and in January, February, and March, 1928, as compared with the same months in the previous year, and draw your own conclusions as to whether the howl over the danger of reducing the price of butter did not come largely from the speculators who were holding butter in cold storage and who were very much afraid they were going to be stung. Do not the conclusions of Senator Blaine of Wisconsin apply with even greater force to the condition of the Canadian butter trade during the past few months, and is it not a fortunate thing that we have a government in power in Canada of such a calibre that it will not be stampeded by the hollow protestations of the Canadian National Dairy Council? Are not the facts sufficiently forcible to cause the government to consider seriously whether the grant should not be withdrawn from any association which would act in such a manner? This reveals the same story in the butter trade as was disclosed in the fruit and vegetable situation when Mr. Burrows, the secretary of the horticultural society, was making his boast openly that he would make protectionists out of the farmers of Canada.

The whole agitation along these lines is such a sham and deception that it is high time the farmers in every section of Canada were apprised of the fact. So long as the present government continue to follow a real, live, vigorous and progressive program as it has done in the past, this young country cannot afford to drop back under Conservative rule.

Mr. MICHAEL LUCHKOVICH (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I rise not to speak of butter but to deal with immigration. However, I greatly admired the indifference of the last speaker (Mr. McMillan) to all the joviality which interrupted his remarks. Just a few moments ago one of my friends asked how long I was going to speak, and I told him I would speak as long as the subject under discussion needed to be spoken to. I know there probably have been speeches which have taken up too much time, but I think hon. members will agree that I have never taken up the time of this house unnecessarily, and I do not want to do so to-night. The other day in a book one of the hon. members on this side of the house lent me, entitled Disraeli, and which I have just handed back to him, I read of a little episode which happened in the British House of Commons. When Gladstone was a young man he asked his then leader whether in his speech he should be short and concise, but his leader told him to be long and diffuse. I will try to be as concise as possible, even though my speech may be a little longer than is necessary.

I was very much surprised when the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) told this house that he was an immigrant; I did not know that, and at the time I wondered if he came to Canada under any such scheme as the present proposed plan of decreased rates. I am sure if he had he would not have become the great man he is to-day; he never would have reached the eminent position he now occupies. Much has been said on the subject of immigration; many people would like to see this country populated over night; others would like to see immigration brought about gradually, and still others refute an immigration policy altogether from an economic standpoint. But no matter how we may view immigration the question is always before us pressing for a solution. Superficially we might come to the conclusion that Canada needs more people; we might say that Canada is such a vast country with such great resources that our population is absurdly out of proportion to our real and potential possibilities as a great nation.

Some people wonder why we should pay such a heavy toll for the upkeep of our roads, our schools, our transportation systems and other facilities which are necessary in this modern world. Every time I take the trip from Ottawa to Winnipeg or vice versa I am very much impressed by that uninhabited region through which I pass, and which adds to the burden we must carry to-day with regard to freight rates, and indirectly the up-keep of our great transcontinental railways, because of the few people who live in that region. In my opinion northern Ontario never will offer any inducement to immigration until something is found in that locality in the way of mineral deposits; until we find these minerals that region always will offer a serious obstacle to our economic development. Incidentally, I wonder whether something of this sort was not in the fertile mind of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) when he spoke of Canada being a geographical absurdity.

Of course it is in western Canada that the problem of immigration is now concentrated, because there we have some of the finest land in the world still unoccupied. Therefore the successful colonization of this land must engage the attention of the government if we are to derive any benefits from an immigration policy. Undoubtedly to-day the western farmers bear great financial burdens because of the sparse settlement of some parts of our country, and I have noticed that some members of this house have stated that these burdens could be greatly lessened if more of our land were occupied. They also say that a greater settlement of the land would benefit not only the farmers but also the manufacturers; they claim that manufactures are not possible without a population, and that if we have no people in our country there will be no market for the products of our factories. They argue that manufacturers cannot exist unless there are markets, and since the consumption of goods must be local, the different localities must become populated. In other words we must have more people engaged in farming, fishing, stock raising and gardening.

So far as I have listened to the debate there seems to be no serious objection to immigration as such, but rather to the class of people we are bringing into Canada, the methods we are employing in order to induce them to come, and the inducements we offer to obtain the right type. As regards the proper class of immigrants that we should bring to Canada, I think the government, after thirty years of immigration, should know by this time the types which are most desirable for Canada. They should know the types that have become amenable to our laws and our constitution.

So far as the immigrants who have made new homes for themselves in Alberta are concerned, I can say most emphatically and without any fear of contradiction that they have become excellent home builders—not merely house builders but home builders. They have become home builders whose bodies and spirits are in Canada. There are some immigrants who come to Canada whose bodies are here but whose spirits are somewhere in New York, Massachusetts, Rhode Island or any of the other great industrial states of the American union. I have spoken of the word "home". I wonder if hon. members realize the full meaning of that word? On whether or not we realize the significance of the word home depends to a great measure the future welfare and well being of our country. If our immigrants have this home loving instinct I do not think we need fear for the future of the country. If they lack it, I am positive in the belief that degeneration is inevitable. I contend that when a man comes to Canada with the main intention of building a home he has therein the fundamental qualities of good citizenship. If we are to have a policy of immigration, let us give the immigrant a chance to build for himself a home, and we can take it for granted that he will obey our laws and be amenable to our constitution. I think of home as having a personal quality; it is humanly and profoundly fundamental; it is made up of composite personalities, the people of one family who live in the same house and whose devotion to each other results in that elusive but much sought for thing we call happiness. When the German, Scandinavian or central European lands on our shores he first thinks of liberty, then a home, and then happiness. It is the same thing the loyalists had in their minds when they left the United States after the year 1776. When they come here do they become disillusioned? In some cases, yes, but in most cases, no. The immigrants who come here, especially from the northern parts of Europe, and even from the central parts of Europe, are too thrifty, too sturdy, too persevering and too determined to reclaim for themselves a home in Canada to be easily disillusioned.

As far as I have been able to observe, the type we have brought in here has been of the class which is poorest so far as material possessions are concerned. They lived very simply over in the old country; their food was the simplest and poorest, yet they throve very well on it. They had no home conveniences such as we have in Canada; their dwellings were the rudest, and yet they dearly loved them. Their family life was much deeper than is usually the case on the American continent, and their whole lives were circumscribed by their immediate surroundings. They lived in these little rude huts I have mentioned and their whole world was the land on which they lived. You may ask, Mr. Speaker, why it is the central European yearns so ardently for the shores of Canada. I think I have the answer; it is land hunger. It is that fervent desire to build for himself a home; it is that history making impulse that causes people to leave their homeland and seek foreign shores. It is the eternal march of humanity, the eternal search for happiness in ownership of the soil —in other words, a desire for a genuine home.

My feelings, Mr. Speaker, with respect to this subject are intense. If, therefore, any hon. member were to ask me what type I would want brought to Canada, I would immediately answer, the home loving type. It is home that makes character, and it is character that determines destiny, and it is home making that is the mainspring of all civilization and human progress. All these elements are component elements; they are intermingled very closely and all spring from the one parent root—home. You might say, "Ah, but was it not the restless, cultured and debonair Normans who conquered England in the year 1066?" My answer to that would be, Yes, but was it not the home loving Anglo-Saxon who finally assimilated the more cultured conqueror?

I think it would be a wrong policy, Mr. Speaker, to advocate the bringing over of large numbers of people in order to take away the jobs that rightly belong to the Canadian boys in Canada.

Miss MACPHAIL: And the girls.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: And the girls also. I met a man on the train the other day who wanted to know why so many of the immigrants who come to our shores are men with very little education. I think I can explain why. Most of them may be men without very much education, but they have very high ideals. I do not think our policy should be directed to bringing people into this country unless we are ready to give them work. I do not think we should embark on an immigration policy unless this country is ready for it from an economic standpoint. Furthermore, I do not think we should stimulate immigration by artificial means, because by doing so we shall only defeat the ends for which the immigration policy was inaugurated. By stimulating immigration artificially we discourage the pioneering individual and turn our immigrants into sissies or mollycoddles, whose only purpose in coming to Canada is to use this country as a back door through which to slip into the United States.

Miss MACPHAIL: What do you mean by "sissies"?

Mr. STEVENS: That is well understood.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: He is not a red-blooded individual by any means. I have never yet known a man who appreciated a home that was virtually handed to him, and I have never yet known a man to appreciate a home which was not erected by the toil of his own hands or the sweat of his own brow. I have never yet known a home loving man whose home loving qualities were not engendered by honest, plodding toil.

I also think great care should be taken in the selection of our immigrants. The selection of our immigrants as well as the placing of them when they get here should be a government duty. The immigrants should be sound both in body and in mind, and they should be intelligent. They should be imbued with the idea that while the government is giving them a chance when they come here to build homes for themselves and therefore to share in the benefits that such homes give them in Canada, they should at the same time be prepared to share with us the burdens and responsibilities that such citizenship entails. A learned man once said that "every choice we make is for an eternity," and it is only reasonable, therefore, to conclude that when the immigrant comes here, he and his offspring will remain in Canada for all generations and all time. Therefore if the government is to continue its policy of inducing immigrants to come here it should bring in the type of immigrant that is adaptable to a country like ours. I may say, when I speak in this way, that I advocate bringing in people who are of peasant stock. The peasants are emphatically an adaptable type. A great poet once said:

> Ill fares the land, to hast'ning ills a prey,
> Where wealth accumulates and men decay;
> Princes and lords may flourish, or may fade;
> A breath can make them, as a breath has made:
> But a bold peasantry, their country's pride,
> When once destroyed, can never be supplied.

I do not think it is wise to embark upon a wholesale immigration to Canada. Just as I think it is folly to bring over to Canada the riffraff of Europe, so I think it is equally foolhardy to bring in too big an influx. Just as I think it is the height of wisdom to bring in the sturdy, pioneering, home-loving types, so I think it is equally wise that our policy should be one of quality rather than one of quantity. Premier Baldwin in a recent speech in Canada had this to say:

> Canada has an enormous future and, if it be not impertinent to say so to Canadians, I would say: The future is with you; do not be in too much of a hurry. Your country is a country for virile races. Quality before quantity any day. Build up with the best. What does it matter if it is a hundred years or more before your country is full? Keep the stock you have, and the men and women you have, and see to it that the coming generations are in no whit inferior to them. I have often thought that it is a dangerous thing to the morale of a nation to get rich quickly, as it is to an individual. Time is on your side. Maintain the values; maintain the standards; and may the prayer of Canada always be the prayer of the Greek sailor, which has been preserved for us by Seneca: "God, you may save me if you will; you may sink me if you will; but whatever happens, I will always keep my rudder true".

There is a world of philosophy in that statement—"I will always keep my rudder true." Surely that is the spirit not of the mollycoddle but of the red-blooded pioneer.

Now that I have said something about the type of immigrant that we should allow to come into Canada, I shall speak for a few moments about the classification of those immigrants into the preferred, the non-preferred and the undesirable. This classification in many cases is an unjust one, because those put on the non-preferred list might in some cases be placed on the preferred list, and it is possible that even some who are classed as undesirable might be put on the non-preferred or even on the preferred list. You cannot expunge a fact by a mere recital which is not a fact. I think it was Abraham Lincoln who once asked a friend of his this question: "If you call a dog's tail a leg, how many legs would that dog have?" The answer was: "Five." "No", said Lincoln, "You cannot make a leg out of a tail by merely calling it a leg." So in the same manner putting a man on the non-preferred list should not always mean that he is a non-preferred immigrant. I agree with what has been said about undesirable immigrants, that if they are not amenable to our laws and constitution, they should not be allowed to come into the country. I hope hon. members will not misunderstand me when I speak on the question of immigration. I make absolutely no differentiation as to race, or even religion. I speak merely on principle and I oppose the principle of extending financial aid to immigrants in order to stimulate immigration, because I think this is based on a principle that is fallacious, dangerous and absolutely inimical to the purpose for which it was inaugurated. Canada is still a young and primitive country. We have not yet reached the point where the modern conveniences of present-day civilized life begin and where pioneering ends. I have never yet heard in the history of the world of a successful subsidized immigration and I have also never heard of an overfed, pampered and petted person who ever amounted to anything. It is for that reason that I oppose any financial aid to immigration. I know it is dangerous to endeavour to teach a man to swim merely by throwing him into the ocean. But let us remember that there is always somebody in the crew who is ready to throw out a line in order to draw him back on to the deck of the ship. In the same manner in a pioneering community there is always somebody ready to extend a helping hand in times of greatest difficulties. Therefore, other things being equal, if the immigrant has the will and if he is made of the proper stuff, I have absolutely no doubt that he will make good in a country like Canada.

I have often wondered whether it would not be an improvement on our present system if something were done to make Canadian residents who bring in immigrants on affidavits actually responsible for those immigrants when they come into Canada. I have known cases where immigrants upon their arrival in Canada found that the people who had signed affidavits in order to bring them here repudiated the affidavits or eschewed all responsibility for them and would have nothing to do with the immigrants. I have in mind the case of a young girl who came to Canada about two years ago. She also came over here on an affidavit signed by an Alberta farmer. When she arrived, he eschewed all responsibility for his affidavit, and would not give her the work she expected to find when she came to Alberta. She is now being bandied about from one farmer to another, and they are taking advantage of that situation. She is receiving no wages, but is living in the hope that the work and the remuneration she expected to find in Alberta before her departure for Canada will be forthcoming. Cases like this are by no means rare. I merely cite this instance in order to give an example of what is being done, not only in the province of Alberta, but all over Canada. It might be argued, therefore, that only families already resident in Canada should be allowed to bring people in on affidavits. I personally think it would be a very good thing, because when the immigrant arrived in this country somebody in Canada would be responsible for him, and this would prevent the immigrant becoming a charge on the country and from joining the numerous breadlines which we have all over the country even at the present time.

With regard to the immigrants and their susceptibility to our laws and constitution, and their readiness to accept those laws and that constitution, I know that I am dealing with a subject that is of grave concern to many people in Canada. It is of grave concern for this reason, that they see in the coming of foreigners to our shores a potential menace to everything that they hold as dear as life itself. I have noticed also that the coming of immigrants to our shores has caused a great stir in our social, political and educational circles, directed, no doubt, with a view to welcoming the immigrant and with a view to assimilating our immigration within as short a time as possible. The subject is at once a dangerous one, and also very contentious and very delicate. It is difficult indeed to deal with a subject like this without stepping on the toes of immigrants, and also without hurting the sensibilities of the native born. There are many realities in life such as religion, race, love and patriotism, which can be overdone. I intend to deal merely with the question of assimilation so far as it has to do with the questions of race and patriotism.

To begin with, there have been many plans for the quick assimilation of the immigrant.

One of them has been to sandwich the immigrant in with the rest of the races in Canada. So far as this sandwiching plan is concerned, I have this to say: I actually know how it works. It is possible to tolerate the immigrant only so far as he obeys our laws and also respects our constitution, but when it comes to accepting him in our social circles, that is a different matter. It is a different matter also for the immigrant. What does it all result in? It results in the immigrant trying to seek his own level; in other words, he leaves the locality to which he originally came, and goes to another where he hopes to find his own level.

It has been said also that the segregation of the immigrants in large colonies is not conducive to ready assimilation, that it results in an imperium in imperio, or a nation within a nation. When we make remarks like that I think we stretch our imagination a little too far. The immigrant is a human being just like ourselves. He differs from us in no way except in language and certain racial characteristics, and surely in the matter of worldly-wise self consciousness he is not the sophisticated human being that a good many of us are.

There have been two ways in which the immigrant has been looked upon in Canada. One is the mystical attitude, and the other is the rational one. The rational attitude is the one we employ in our everyday life. The mystical attitude is the attitude which we often adopt towards him when we are not in a very good mood, when we are not very well disposed towards him. The rational mood, I would say, would be the more humane. The mystical attitude is the one which smacks more of prejudice, discrimination, and in less democratic countries than ours it virtually amounts to persecution. We on this side of the ocean are more sensitive than we appear. The mere vague annoyance which our own supersession in this country causes us is combined with our antipathy towards anyone and anything foreign. We are obsessed with that mystical attitude which repels everything we are not used to, and it is precisely this attitude which causes such a great gulf to be made between the different racial elements in our country. It is this attitude that makes us look with horror upon the farmer driving into town in his sheepskin coat, and upon the woman dressed in shawl and top boots coming home from market with a duck under one arm and a chicken under the other, in preparation for the family dinner. Why, even the foreigner's thrift and industry is viewed by us sometimes with hostility and suspicion. Of course we must recognize that the Canadian views the foreigner from his own individual and very limited angle. He does not realize that the shadow of penury hangs very frequently over the newcomer and that everything he owns and attains in the way of the material things of life and education depends wholly upon his thrift and industry. The same can be said of the children of the immigrant at school. The immigrant's son or daughter must not fail, because he cannot afford to support his children on his paltry income. They must extend themselves to the limit at all times, for it is only by the greatest economy of finance that these poor people are able to get an education.

It is these things and a multitude of others that must be considered in the light of their effect upon the mind of the Canadian; for it is precisely these things that produce that typical mystical attitude towards the less fortunate newcomer. Yet, Mr. Speaker, I think if we were able to visualize ourselves in the immigrant's position we would realize exactly what his feelings are; we would understand his attitude better, and we would come to a more reasonable solution of the question than we have done up to the present. At any rate it would help to break down the present barriers of misunderstanding between the different racial elements in our population, and it would also result in clear and sane thinking, without which no true progress can take place.

Now, sir, from what I have said with respect to this question I may be considered an ultra idealist, and my contribution may be thought impracticable, but I hope not. Despite everything that has been said against the immigrant, I think the day is not far distant when all the animosities engendered by racial conflicts not only in Europe but even on this continent will give way to a more reasonable attitude and will bring about a sound solution of the whole question. I look forward to the time when all these racial misunderstandings will disappear and will recede into the dim and distant past as relics of a barbaric and savage age.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to detain the house at any great length, but I think it is important that something should be told about the work of the committee. It seems to me that a good deal of what has been said this afternoon is somewhat theoretical. We who have had to do with immigration have read in the press from time to time statements made by hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the house that there was a laxity on the part of the government and the governmental services in securing immigration. But we have always argued that before we bring in immigrants under present-day conditions there must be placement for them, or we would have a condition of affairs that would not be good for the country. Hon. gentlemen opposite have argued that their fiscal policy would cure the whole situation, for according to them there would be work for everyone who cared to come to it. Well, that is not borne out by the state of affairs across the line. In that country they have the kind of fiscal policy that my hon. friends opposite have been advocating with such enthusiasm, but conditions there are not one whit better than here, or even as good.

Mr. MANION: But they have a quota law.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not speaking of the quota law at the moment. I am merely answering the statement made by my hon. friend from Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards). I think it is answered sufficiently in that curt comparison with respect to the fiscal situation in both countries.

When the committee was instructed to consider the whole question of immigration under the motion proposed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), we summoned before the committee people who, we thought, knew something about immigration in order that we might get the best advice possible. We listened to them with a great deal of interest. Let me mention a few of these gentlemen: Mr. W. J. Black, director of colonization of the Canadian National Railways; Mr. J. S. Dennis, director of colonization of the Canadian Pacific Railway; Sir Henry Thornton, president of the Canadian National Railways; Mr. E. W. Beatty, president of the Canadian Pacific Railway; Sir Joseph Flavelle; Hon. George Langley; Mr. C. A. Magrath. We also had a very interesting speech from a gentleman who I regret was injured in the performance of his parliamentary duties, and who since that time has not been in the house. I refer to the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. McRae). Frankly, I had thought we would have secured a greater amount of direction from these gentlemen than appears in the evidence itself when we analyze it.

I hope I am right in thinking that in the 245 members of this house we have a pretty fair representation of the public opinion of the Dominion, and consequently I have listened with a great deal of interest to the speeches made to-day. True, forty minutes is scarcely sufficient to express oneself fully on an important question of this kind. However, I have arrived at the conclusion that there is no very strong opinion in favour of assisted land settlement; if there is I have yet to hear it. Not only was there considerable opposition evident in the committee, but very little was said in favour of such a scheme. I agree to some extent with the last speaker (Mr. Luchkovich) that it is not the best policy to adopt to encourage immigration and increase our population.

In respect to bringing people from Great Britain to this country, we find a peculiar situation. I think it is the desire of everyone to keep Canada what she has always been, a great Dominion; but behind that there is the sentiment of Canadians sprung from British stock that Canada is a part of the great British commonwealth and shall always remain so. And I take issue with those who say we have no right to make selection of the people who shall come to live amongst us. We have every right to make such a selection. I do not bar anyone in that statement, but I do submit that we possess the inherent right to say who shall become Canadian citizens. That is the right of every nation in the world: I made this statement in the committee and I repeat it to-night: I know of no country in Christendom which is more generous than Canada in opening its doors to the nationals of other countries. I make that statement because I believe it is our privilege and our right to do so if we wish. If we desire to increase immigration, from the mother country particularly, and to further the larger object of promoting the welfare of the empire as a whole, if that is the desire of the majority of the members of this house as representative of public opinion in Canada, then no doubt to a certain degree we can assist in bringing in people from the old land. The committee went into that question thoroughly and their deductions and decisions are embodied in the recommendation.

We say, first, dealing with British immigration, that in our opinion the introduction of young people into Canada should be encouraged and extended; that is one of our recommendations. We believe that the field for domestics is a large one in Canada and that aid by way of assisted pasasge should be continued to that class of people coming from Great Britain. There are in Canada at the moment a large number of men who are separated from their families, some of whom came under the assisted passage scheme; others paid their own passage entirely. These men desire to bring out their families and we recommend to parliament that this class of people now in Canada, these citizens, should be given assistance to bring their families to Canada in order that they may take up permanent abode here.

We discovered in our investigations in regard to land settlement—because it has largely to do with provincial affairs—that a scheme was in operation on a very small scale in two of the provinces in Canada under a tripartite agreement, whereby the province put up a certain amount, the government of Great Britain contributed something, and the Dominion of Canada lent its good offices to recruit and settle the individual. We recommend such an extension of this scheme as would bring about satisfactory results.

Then we come to the most crucial part of the whole business. We discovered that in recent years the increase in rates to immigrants from Great Britain had been 200 per cent, in the case of persons coming to Canada, as against 100 per cent in the case of those going to Australia. We strongly recommend that immediate steps be taken to secure if possible from the steamship companies a reduction of rates to £10 to all intending immigrants from Great Britain.

These are some very definite recommendations which the committee have made, and made unanimously. Someone has said that there is no meat in the proposals of the committee.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Possibly so. My hon. friend says, "hear, hear." May I say to the hon. gentleman that the committee is dealing with many more questions than the one introduced in the amendment to-day.

Mr. BENNETT: It was immigration and colonization.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The recommendation of the committee with respect to recruitment is quite concise and clear, that no matter what agency may be securing immigration it shall be responsible to and under the control of the federal authorities, and that the Department of Immigration shall use its best endeavours to cooperate in the work of colonization with the provinces themselves to the extent of paying for an organization which the province might set up for the purpose.

I feel rather strongly on this question, for this reason: If the provincial government will undertake this responsibility, particularly as it affects agricultural settlement, we shall have solved what is now a very difficult problem, with which we must deal before very long. Since 1922 I have had the idea that it was my duty to undertake the responsibility of devising some remedies for the situation that has existed, and I still feel that the provinces, with an organization created by themselves, could much more acceptably carry out this work than it can be done by officers of the federal government, removed by such great distances from Ottawa. Not only are we interested in the boy settlement and in the bringing out of girls, and visiting these young immigrants to see how they are getting along, as well as giving necessary supervision; the same thing applies if a settler is going on the land. Indeed, it applies in every direction, and I have a word or two to say as to how it would apply in industrial activity.

These are the principal recommendations, except this: that for the settlement of these British youths who come to Canada there now exists an arrangement with the British government who are prepared to make a loan for the establishment of these boys when they reach a certain age, to place them on farms. They are given a loan if they have accumulated $500 themselves. The committee thought that it would be wisdom on our part, after hearing the evidence of Professor Barton and of some other enthusiasts who are training Canadian youths in agriculture, that we should offer the same measure of assistance from the federal government to our own Canadian boys, who are receiving some training, as we are prepared to offer to the British youths who were assisted by their own government as well. There are hon. gentlemen in this house who will admit that this is a step in the right direction; it is an endeavour to retain the best kind of immigration we can possibly have—our own boys—and to keep them on the land, helping them to establish themselves there.

Now with respect to passages, we deemed it important that the passage rate should be reduced—important because we believe that the individual who accepts an assisted passage does feel under some obligation to the government for having helped in his transportation from Great Britain to Canada. He will feel very much better if he realizes that he is paying his passage, and every individual who comes as an immigrant from Great Britain will pay £10 and come under the old rates. Thereby we shall perhaps have wiped out what is a more or less serious difficulty which has retarded immigration from Great Britain. So far as British immigration is concerned, that is our chief recommendation.

Dealing with the matter of colonization, I may say that a good deal of attention was given this question. I have stated that we discarded the idea of assisted land settlement except to the extent that it might come under the tripartite agreement on the part of the British, the Canadian and the provincial government in Canada. We have sought to bring down the passage rates in order, as I have stated, that every British immigrant, whether coming for industrial employment or as an agriculturist, may enjoy the same ocean rate from Great Britain to the Dominion. This brings me to the last important clause. There are many others in our recommendations, but what I have said introduces the last important clause in the recommendations of the committee. It also brings me to the amendment proposed by my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan). May I say that with the main portion of the hon. gentleman's motion I agree. But it is embodied in the recommendations. This motion was discussed in the committee and now I am going to take exactly the same ground that I took in that committee. I agree with the suggestion that an industrial and agricultural survey of Canada should be made, that it should be supervised and paid for by the federal government and that the provincial agencies should be asked to cooperate. Just here I might mention why I feel rather strongly on this matter. A year or two ago the city of Winnipeg felt that something might be done to encourage industries to locate in that city, and they asked the natural resources intelligence branch of my department to supply them with a man who had some knowledge of industrial conditions. We have men who make surveys of industrial conditions and report to us for the purpose of securing information on these matters, and we have gone some distance in developing the idea. At that time I did have an individual whom I could recommend, and we sent one of our investigators to Winnipeg, where he spent about two weeks. The business men of Winnipeg organized an industrial association, and I was pleased to learn the other day, from one of the members of that association who visited Ottawa in connection with a delegation which came to interview me with respect to the Seven Sisters falls development, that partly through the efforts of this gentleman but chiefly through the activities of that organization they had been able to locate thirteen new industries in the city of Winnipeg.

There are tremendous possibilities in this idea, and I thoroughly agree with my hon. friend for St. Lawrence-St. George that we should not confine ourselves to agricultural immigration. There are possibilities for industrial workers in Canada if encouragement is given, in order to make a success of our urban centres in addition to bringing settlers to the rural parts of the country. However, I take issue with him when he says this work should not be tied up to the Department of Immigration, that it should be undertaken by someone who has nothing to do with immigration. I would like to point out that some of the criticism in the proposed amendment touches the Department of Immigration because this work has not been carried out. The work of that department is to ascertain where individuals who are desirous of coming to Canada can be best placed and to undertake to see that there is no overflow of labour which cannot be absorbed. The moment there is a place for additional men, either our own people or those who may come to us, then it is the business of the Department of Immigration to make that fact known and to recruit immigrants in the various countries from which we desire to secure immigration. That is the difference between my hon. friend and myself with respect to this matter.

Something was said by one of the speakers with respect to the ability of Doctor Black and regret was expressed that he was not still the deputy minister of immigration. I hold no brief for the present deputy minister, but in fairness to him I think it should be pointed out that many of these measures with which we were dealing and which we commended were instituted by Mr. Egan, the present incumbent of that position. Let me repeat that statement; many of the things which were commended by this committee after the most minute investigation were instituted and brought into effect by Mr. Egan and the minister who happened to be in charge of that department at the time. I have no criticism to offer of Doctor Black; another hon. member dealt with that matter this afternoon, and I have nothing to add to what he said. I think Doctor Black is a very efficient officer. Our relations have always been very friendly, and I think he is performing a useful service in his present position. But I do think the present deputy minister should be given credit for the work he has performed.

Now I should like to close with a brief reference to one fact which is very apparent. A great deal has been said to the effect that we should increase our immigration very rapidly, but I have always taken the ground that it should be increased only as prosperity increases in Canada and only as opportunity offers, and that this should be the goal at which the Department of Immigration should aim. We have climatic conditions in Canada which do not obtain in many other countries, and I think one of the principal reasons why we should try to recruit our immigrants as largely as possible from northern countries is because these people have been accustomed to a climate similar to that which we have in Canada. I am bound to say that as far as I am concerned, in the few countries I have been permitted to visit since I have had anything to do with immigration, and even before that time, I have yet to see any country in which I would rather live than our own Canada. That is my conviction, but I do say that we should be careful when we are recruiting immigrants to see that we have opportunities to offer them so that they will not supplant the people already here. I am heartily in accord with my hon. friend when he says that we should have a well-rounded policy, one of industrial as well as agricultural development; and indeed we should see to the development of all our latent natural resources. When we have a policy of that kind we will not have to worry very much about securing immigrants. There is not nearly so much difficulty in that regard now as there was a year or two ago. That is very apparent from the fact that agriculture is now in a much more flourishing condition than was the case in 1922 and 1923; people know they can make a living on the land in Canada, so they are willing to come to this country. That is the best advertising we can have with regard to its effect on the people who are thinking of coming to this country. Just in closing may I say that if we have the proper conditions, if we have opportunities to offer those who come from other countries, then we need not do very much worrying about securing immigrants to come to this country and take their places in our national life.

Mr. H. B. ADSHEAD (East Calgary): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take up a great deal of the time of the house, but I listened very carefully to the remarks of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) this afternoon. I do not know whether or not I misunderstood him, but I thought he said he went to the west twenty-five years ago. If that is the case I have been there five years longer, because I went there about thirty years ago. I think I went to that part of the country one year after my hon. friend from West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) went to the west. My hon. friend chose to follow the practice of law, while I followed a different line of endeavour by taking up a brush homestead. I am not going to give personal experiences, but I want to point out that there is a difference between immigration to-day and what it was in those days. When British Columbia came into confederation there was an agreement that a railroad should be built from the east to the west. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company built a colonization road, and I think my good friends the Liberals, if I remember aright—I came to Canada in 1878—said that the Canadian Pacific would not even pay for the axle grease. By going through that western country they opened up millions of acres of land on each side of the main line and the branches. There were millions of acres of free land, and interspersed with that were millions of acres of railroad land at $3 per acre. As soon as it became known that the land in the western country was fertile, immigrants poured in by the thousands. Why? Because the land was free. Just as soon as the homestead land began to be taken up, the $3 per acre land owned by the Canadian Pacific was in demand. In other words, we did unconsciously what our American friends had done; they put a railroad through the land first and the immigrants followed. Our policy more recently has been to let the immigrants get in by prairie schooners as well as they could, and the railroad would follow after they were in. What was the condition of the immigrants in 1898 when I was one? Just this: I had a free homestead and all I had to do was to provide my living. The government bet me $10 I could not stick it out for three years; I took the bet and stuck it out for twenty. All I had to do was make a living and buy a couple of pairs of overalls a year in order to keep going. My hon. friend from West Calgary knows all about that. These settlers did the same thing, and when the $3 an acre land began to be taken up, it was a question whether it was cheaper for the immigrant to buy that land from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and work outside when he saw fit, or go on a homestead and be stuck there for six months in the year. At present there is no free land except away in the north country and the Peace River district, and there are no railways in that vicinity.

As far as the immigration policy is concerned, conditions have entirely changed. They are not the same as they were in the homestead days, and to meet the changed conditions you must adopt a different policy. If immigrants are brought in—I am not dealing so much with the question of how they are brought in, whether you pay their passage or not—the question is whether they can stick with it and make farming pay. As I have pointed out, I had no obligations to pay on the homestead, I could just do as I liked as long as I managed to live. But the immigrant to-day has to pay $20, $25 or $30 per acre for raw land, and the problem is to make it pay after having to pay about $4,000 for a quarter section. At seven per cent interest this means $280 per year, and he has to live. At the present time I do not think he can do it. One thing that demonstrates this is the fact that we passed in this house last year what was called the revaluation act in respect to soldier settlement lands. Why? Because the soldiers had bought land at such prices that it was found they could not meet their obligations, and the land had to be revalued at lower figures. There are hundreds of farmers in Alberta and Saskatchewan—I do not know about Ontario—who bought land at these prices and under precisely the same conditions. They had no kind government to pass a revaluation act and take the burden off them.

Then during the war the farmers were told that the price of wheat would be set at $2.40 per bushel. That was not to keep the price up, but to keep it down. The farmer was the only person during the war time who underwent conscription of wealth. I remember seeing mounted police going through the district near Carbon, Alberta, and examining the wheat bins. They would say to a farmer, "You are keeping too much wheat. Of course you raise it, but we are only going to allow you to keep enough to sow your land, and we are going to take the rest at $2.40 per bushel." The farmer is the only person I know of who had his property, his wealth, conscripted during the war. The hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) hopes that we all will be in this position if there is another war. I know of farmers who bought land during the inflated war period, just as our soldiers bought it in 1919-20, and lost all because land values went down; they could not meet their payments and they were foreclosed. Where are the new settlers coming from? I do not care where they come from, whether Scandinavia or elsewhere, a large number of them are going on land held by speculators or corporations at from $20 to $30 per acre; that is where it is intended they are to go.

This question has to be dealt with on a business basis, just as a merchant will count his capital cost and his overhead and try to meet interest and principal charges in order that his business may be a going concern. If he cannot do that he is bound to fail. The same thing is going to happen with the immigrant. If a farm can be bought under such business conditions that he can make it pay you will have no difficulty in bringing him in. Would there be any difficulty in the city of Ottawa if a man knew that a business that was a paying proposition was for sale and all he had to do was to go and take it? You would have a hundred applicants to-morrow. Just as soon as it is known that the farmer who buys land can make it pay, can pay the interest and the principal in proper proportion, and make a living and have something when he gets through, then you will have no difficulty in settling your lands and having a prosperous agricultural community. But that is what the immigrant cannot do to-day, and that is why so many are going on the land and then going off it.

My hon. friend from West Calgary was a solicitor for the gas company at one time, and in his very able manner he proceeded to present a case before the utilities commission. He took the affairs of the gas company before this commission and he charged their overhead, he charged the depreciation, he charged the interest on their plant and the cost of production and all that. When this was placed before the commission they granted a reasonable profit over and above 8 per cent on the invested capital. It does not really matter what the company got, but they were allowed to charge 48 cents per thousand for gas. At that time oats were selling at Calgary at 25 cents a bushel. I happened to be in the council chamber at that particular time, and I went to my office and did some figuring. I took land at $25 an acre and I capitalized it. I knew what on the average a crop of oats would bring. I figured the cost of producing the oats, the overhead charges, the interest, the depreciation on machinery, and then I added just the same 8 per cent that the utilities commission added as a profit to my hon. friend's application in connection with the gas company. It worked out that those oats, to bring the very same profit which was allwed the capitalist, should sell at 60 cents a bushel, and the farmer at that time was getting 25 cents a bushel. I give that as an illustration to show that unless land is at such a price that a man can go on it as a business proposition in the same way as the hon. member for West Calgary figured in connection with the gas company, he cannot make it pay. If you reach that condition where he can make it pay, you will have no difficulty in getting immigrants to take up farming in Canada.

There is another point that I want to bring out. I have seen some of the moving picture films which are taken abroad to show to prospective immigrants and I have also heard some of the speeches delivered to them and some of the conversations had with them in the old country. I do not know whether to make this as a charge, but I am sure I am speaking the truth. All the rosiest pictures of Canada are set forth. I have seen the pictures of "before" and "after". There is perhaps a plain prairie with a little log shack with a single room; then on the other hand there are the bumper crops, the cattle, the fine house, and so forth. In other words what they really do is paint just one side of the picture. It is only fair and right, if we are going to be honest with the prospective immigrants, that we should place both sides of the picture before them, because if they do not get it from us they will get it from some of their relatives on this side, or after they come here and go back home, they will tell their relatives at home their opinion of the country and the picture they will paint will be a very much exaggerated one. We know all about the frost, hailstorms, snowstorms, cold and other conditions we have in this country, and before an immigrant is induced to come out here, it is our bounden duty to give him both sides of the picture.

Various reasons have been presented why we should bring immigrants into Canada. I think one railroad magnate said: We need two million immigrants in the west; if we had two million immigrants here, our railway problems would be settled. That may be true from the railway standpoint and they are considering the question from that point of view. Another person said: We should have another two million people in the west; they would help to pay our national debt, and so forth. But the good of the settler and his future are not considered at all. What is considered is the benefit that would accrue to Canada and not the benefit that might accrue to the particular settler. We do not tell him, as we tell each other, that we want him here in order to relieve the railroads of the burden of over-capitalization, in order to help us to pay our national debt. We do not tell him those things. It is only right and honest that we should tell the settler the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, but in many cases that is not done.

That is the problem, and if you want to bring in immigrants, the farm lands which you have for sale must be offered at a reasonable price and in the far-off stretches where there are no railways, colonization railways must be built, or else it must be made clear that when a man comes here with small capital the proposition will be a business one based on the same principle as that of my hon. friend in connection with the gas company.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to trespass at any length upon the time of the house in discussing this matter; but in view of what was said in the early days of the session when this committee was appointed, I think it is desirable to make a few general observations.

I cannot but think that the report of the committee will be very disappointing to many people in Canada. It certainly offers no new field for endeavour, nor does it offer any new suggestion with respect to the problems involved. I believe the Canadian people are firmly of the opinion that the problem is one of first magnitude calling for immediate action on the part of the government of the country. The reason I say that is greatly strengthened by what I observed from the government's statistics the other day with respect to the movement of our population. From 1897 to 1927, a period of thirty years, the population of Canada increased by 4,377,000. The population of Canada was 5,142,000 in June 1897, and in June 1927, thirty years later, it was 9,519,000, or as I have said an increase of 4,377,000. According to the same reports, between December 31, 1897, and December 31, 1927, we brought into this country 4,491,156 souls. That would mean that in those thirty years the country not only failed to keep the people it brought in but lost a part of its natural increase, because 114,156 more people were lost to the country than we brought in. That is rather a striking statement. According to the year book issued by the department the natural increase of population in those thirty years could not have been less than 2,600,000. Therefore we have the astonishing result that in the thirty years from 1897 to 1927 Canada went behind about 2,750,000 people. We brought in nearly 4,500,000; our natural increase was about 2,600,000, and yet our total net increase was only 4,377,000. Those are alarming figures; they are figures calculated to make every thoughtful Canadian pause—not pause and condemn governments, but pause and ask himself just why we have failed to keep in our country the population that we brought to it from other lands and also the young manhood and womanhood as it grew up in the country to man's and woman's estate. Those figures, as I read them from the report, made me pause, made me consider again how serious is the problem with respect to immigration.

Canada must have increased population if we are to maintain our position among the peoples of the world. We have provided facilities for a population of at least fifteen million people. We are carrying for the moment a debt of two and a half billions of dollars, necessitating annual interest payments, and a charge for pensions arising out of the great war, and for sinking fund, that amounts to a very, very vast sum indeed. The problem therefore is a pressing one. It is a problem that demands solution, and I have not yet concluded that the statesmanship of the Canadian people is not equal to the task that is imposed upon it. I believe that the vision and foresight of those who made possible this confederation have not been lost entirely to their descendants, and that we of this day and generation, if we but approach our problems as we should, in a spirit of goodwill, of unity of thought, of high purpose, of courage, and of real ambition to serve our day and generation, may bring about their successful solution.

It is not in the narrow sense a party question. It is a question that far transcends party. It is a question that strikes at the very life and existence of Canada, and therefore I do think that those figures alone are sufficient reason why we should approach that problem not in any narrow sense, but as one of the first magnitude and of the greatest possible importance to this confederation.

With those very few observations, I turn to look for a moment at the result of this committee's efforts. I listened with much pleasure to the speech this morning and this afternoon of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Glen). He endeavoured to support this report as being a sufficient justification for the efforts of the committee, and my friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) gave some reasons why he thought the results of the efforts of the committee should be viewed as being eminently successful. I regret that I cannot see in them anything that we should rejoice over, and I trust that I am not looking at the matter in any partisan or narrow spirit. Where is there a ray of hope to those who will read that committee's report in the press of this country that any new policy will be inaugurated that will change the conditions under which we exist?

I do not propose to discuss the fiscal policy of this country or of the neighbouring republic. It is sufficient for my purpose to say that under a system of the highest protection the world has ever known, the United States has attracted to its shores the largest population that has ever been brought into any country in the known history of the world and that population is to-day the largest population living in one area, under one form of government, that we have in the world. They have their problems, problems of very great difficulty, but they were able to bring people into their country to such an extent that they now have a quota law against the free admission of the peoples of the world into the United States. That does not in any sense indicate just what action we should take here. I quite agree with my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior that that is so. But there are difficulties in connection with the solution of the problem in this country that were not known in the days when the United States were attracting people so readily to their shores. This was referred to by my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Dunning) and I cannot but think that the address to which we listened of that minister was by all odds the best speech he has made in this chamber. It was one that I think made all of us rejoice and feel a sense of pride that coming to these shores under the conditions he described, he has been able to make for himself such a place in this young Dominion. I am sure that he indicated in the very course of his observations one of the real powerful immigration agencies that should be at work in this country all the time, and that is the immigrant himself. Coming to this country as he did, a youth of seventeen, as a result of the inspiration that he received, he brought here eight people. That is the result. One satisfied immigrant brought here eight new settlers, and that is the way the population of the country grows. Unless we can create conditions that will bring about that feeling of satisfaction and pride in this country on the part of newcomers that governed and actuated my friend the Minister of Railways in inducing his father and sisters to come to Canada to settle, we shall not be able to increase our population with that rapidity with which we should increase it. I feel quite satisfied that that is so.

But there have been many changes in the last twenty-five years. My friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. Adshead) very properly referred to the changes that have taken place in all parts of Canada, particularly in that part in which we both reside. Distance has been annihilated; the attraction of the city has become greater than it ever was before; the building up of great industrial concerns in the great republic to the south has made it more difficult to attract new settlers to our land; the difficulties in connection with a satisfactory return from the labour of the husbandman has also had something to do with it; but, on the other hand, there is no occupation that affords the same assurance of health and of enduring happiness as that which comes from toiling upon the soil and working the land. That, I think, is abundantly demonstrated by every man who has had any experience in that occupation, as well as by what we have been told by those who know the conditions far better than we do. But the attractions of the city are with us. The great war has also changed the attitude of men towards occupations. The great war has changed the mental outlook of millions of people. On the other hand, it must not be forgotten that amongst the other nations of the world outside the British Empire, notably the German republic, you will find one of their most powerful journals referring to:

> Europe's right to the use and development of these empty but fertile and healthy regions of the British Empire. "What right," is it asked, "has Great Britain to keep her Dominions empty?"

And the proposal is made that there should be some arrangement by which the League of Nations would take charge of settling the vacant spaces of the Dominion. That indicates a profound lack of knowledge of our institutions, an entire lack of understanding of what the position of Canada is within the British Empire, but, on the other hand, it indicates that there are people who are longing for the opportunity to settle the great open spaces of a country such as this. Now if the people of Germany feel that way with respect to it, and they have old age pensions and unemployment insurance, just as they have in Great Britain, we have a state of mind developed there that is somewhat different from the state of mind in Great Britain. Yet we know that there are congested conditions in Great Britain. We know that there is there a surplus population that desires the opportunity for advancement, the opportunity to gratify their ambitions, to make new homes for themselves, to own and possess land, and after all, the same idea that was in the mind of the young immigrant of twenty-seven years ago, the love of adventure, the love of the soil, the desire to own a home, to live under the flag of his fathers, is still in the minds of large numbers of young men and young women in Great Britain. But they do not come here, because, rightly or wrongly, they have in Great Britain the idea at the moment that we do not want them. I charge against this administration that during the last few years there has grown up in Great Britain the idea that the people of Great Britain are not wanted in Canada. I read it in their morning papers, in the Post and in the Times; I read it in their evening papers; I read it in their weekly magazines. They have that idea firmly entrenched in their minds, and it has come about not wholly without some reasons, because of difficulties that have been experienced, for instance, in connection with medical examinations, difficulties experienced when they came here, the idea that they are dumped down on the land and left there, difficulties in finding work—these and allied matters have made many of the people of Great Britain believe that they are not wanted in this country. The idea has been, of course, fostered to some extent by countries which require settlers just as much as we do, but the idea I mention has got abroad and it is painfully apparent to those who have visited England in the last ten years, since the war at least. The idea is firmly embedded in their minds that we do not desire those settlers in Canada. That idea is, of course, erroneous, but it has been fostered by conditions to which I have alluded. Under those circumstances and under those conditions, there was brought into being last year a new plan of medical inspection, notwithstanding the fact that according to the reports issued by our own department there were very small numbers of rejections of those who had been examined in England. I am happy to say that one of the recommendations of the committee, insisted upon by the medical men on the committee, will change this and may have very far-reaching and beneficial results. But that in itself was one more factor that made the people think we were desirous of excluding them from this country, although rejections at ports of entry on medical grounds of immigrants from the British Isles were comparatively few. In 1920 they amounted to 21; in 1921, 99; in 1922, 60; in 1923, 37; in 1924, 130; in 1925, 83, and in 1926 only 40. Those are the figures according to our own returns. Nevertheless this new medical plan put in force last fall had very disastrous results, for a friend of mine, a former Canadian, who is vitally interested in the settlement of this country by British people, sent me word as soon as the committee began its sittings that as long as those medical regulations were continued it was no use making any attempt to get British settlers into this country. Then unfortunate occurrences, such as that to which my hon. friend from Halifax recently directed attention, have also done something to neutralize our efforts towards getting new settlers. These are the real conditions that confront us.

But what have we on the other side? We have a great country with a small population. We have millions of acres of untouched land within twenty miles of the railway; we have great fisheries; we have lakes and rivers; we have vast mineral deposits—we have gold and silver and nickel; we have extensive forests. In a word, we have everything that goes to make a great people; that is, we have a great estate. What are we doing to develop this estate? That is the question. The question of immigration is tied up with the question of colonization. Colonization, of course, means work. That single word is the key to the whole situation—work. Work must be provided not only for our own people but for newcomers. I have said so often—I repeat it now—if you go to the old communities of this country you find men and women are leaving, not because they wish to, but because there is no work for them to do. Yet we have the greatest estate that any people ever had committed to their hands in trust to develop. But we are not developing it. True, we are taking away some of the minerals, we are taking something from the forests, we are getting vast wealth from the soil with the limited number of people employed. And I want to place myself upon record that it is a fallacy to believe that the bringing of more people into Canada means the cheapening of labour and the lowering of the high standard of living of those who are here. History teaches us that if you get people settled in a country you are making work. Every time you bring a new productive person into the country, whether he be productive by his hands or his brains, if you are unifying your efforts, you are always opening up new avenues of work. That has been the history of other countries, and I am sure it will be the history of this country.

Now, with this vast estate and with our limited population, we have brought in, as I say, a large number of immigrants, but we have not kept them here, we have not even maintained our natural increase. What is the obvious remedy? Not what the committee's report indicates, but the amendment moved by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan), namely, that we should have a great department—a department of immigration, colonization and industry, divided into two branches, the one dealing with the securing of immigrants, coordinating its efforts with the provinces, and the other seeing to it that there is work for those people when they come here, and not only for them but for those who are already here.

I do not propose to-night to enter into a discussion of the policies necessary to achieve the second result. There may be acute differences of opinion between us with respect to that, but this I do say, that every possible legislative power of this parliament, together with the powers of the provincial legislatures, should be exercised to carry into effect the idea contained in the creation of the second branch of that great department. It was suggested by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) that these two things are not related one to the other. Why, they march hand in hand; without the two it is impossible to succeed. I will take an illustration that came under my own observation and with which I at least in my youth had something to do. East of Calgary the Canadian Pacific Railway Company induced the government of the day to permit them to take the balance of their grant lands in a solid block containing an area of about three million acres. It was surveyed by competent surveyors. They said: An irrigation system is essential if these lands are to be made productive. An analysis of the soil showed that these were fertile lands if properly watered. For this purpose the waters of the Bow river were available. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company spent millions of dollars on an irrigation canal in the western section and the central section, and they spent further millions of dollars in developing these lands and making them fit for the settler. They then spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in the endeavour to get settlers, and I am bound to say that in the first instance their expectations were disappointed; they got no such results as they expected. But they did not stop. They went forward then and developed the eastern section at a further vast expenditure. They found difficulty in getting settlers to come in of their own volition, so they divided the country into ready-made farms, provided with suitable buildings, stock and implements. To-day when you pass through that country as I did only last week you see comfortable homes, well-kept barns and well-tilled land, with evidences everywhere of the amazing prosperity that comes to those who till irrigated land under conditions such as exist there. As I surveyed the scene it gave me a sense of pride that we have in our country an institution that was willing to risk its capital to the extent I have stated to bring about those results.

I regret to have to differ with my hon. friend the Minister of Railways as to relying entirely upon unorganized and individual effort as we used to do twenty-five years ago. But conditions have profoundly changed in the meantime. They have so profoundly changed that, as mentioned this afternoon, there is a very great demand for settlers made upon Britain and upon various countries of northern Europe from which we draw population, with the result that we are not able to secure all we wish from those countries. Australia and New Zealand are in the same plight. But, on the other hand, we can get our fair share if we make conditions here such as are found in other communities, and therefore it is necessary to give that assistance to immigrants which otherwise we would not be compelled to give. So we must take example by that private enterprise to which I have referred. There may be failure, seeming disaster, but with perseverance and determination we must go forward with the work, regardless of the prospects, until at last success crowns our efforts. That is what we must do with this estate.

This is only magnifying by thousands the irrigation work of the Canadian Pacific. This is the same problem as they had to face, only there is added to it something more. The Canadian Pacific found very early that mere agricultural development was not sufficient; they realized that you must add to that some industrial activities. So they endeavoured to get a beet sugar factory, and there is now a small establishment at Raymond in southern Alberta. True, it is not in the irrigation block to which I first referred. It is in the old Galt irrigation block southeast of Lethbridge. There you have an idea of the beet sugar industry. I did not realize just what one industry means in the life and development of a country until I analyzed it on the ground in connection with that sugar beet industry. It was an amazing revelation. I followed its processes from the time the beets were put into the ground until the sugar was put into the bags. There was $1,000,000 of an investment in that factory. I found that a number of men were engaged in making the soil ready for the beets; a number of others planted the beets in the soil; others, again, were engaged in connection with the management of waters and canals and the caring for the plants during the summer, constantly freeing them from weeds. Then I began to see them being taken up, put into cars and by cars transported to the factory. That, I found, reacted so that the repair work on these cars was reflected in the shops at Calgary. I found miners busily engaged getting out the necessary limestone for transportation to the factory for the purpose of clarifying the beet juice so that it might be made into sugar. I found coal men employed, a number of men mining some 10,000 tons of coal for the purpose of running the factory. That one industry, with all its ramifications, from the work in the fields, the planting of the beets, up to the time the sugar was placed upon the market, gave employment to a vast number of men—indeed, an amazing number compared to what one would expect. Men were engaged, as I say, in activities of various kinds: planting beets, gathering beets, weeding beets; there were train men, engineers, firemen, conductors; there were coal men, repair men, limestone men. And finally there were those who sold the finished product over the counter.

That single industry, developed as it was in southern Alberta, furnishes an illustration of the point I desire to make with respect to the second branch of the great department which should be set up in this country, in relation to the industrial side of Canadian life, to give employment to settlers. The minister will tell you that there is no more prosperous settlement in western Canada than that settlement in southern Alberta which utilizes these sugar beets and operates that factory. There you have work and settlement, settlement and work, the one coordinated with the other. There would be no work if there were no settlement, nor would there be any settlement if there were no work. And this factory has brought back to Canada men who had left it. The same conditions existing there have made possible settlement in parts of the United States whence those settlers came.

Let us take another illustration: take the development of our mining industry at Trail, for example. That is an illustration of the development which can take place in an industry from very small beginnings. Because of an economic survey made, because of the determination that there was something there worth trying to get and worth maintaining, the effort which was exerted there has succeeded. Take other branches of activity. Take linseed oil, if you will; from the flax you have the linseed oil. The same may be said with respect to flour.

In 1915 the late Sir William Van Horne was asked to be chairman of an economic commission in this country having for its purpose the very idea which is now set forth in this amendment—the idea of determining by survey what the possibilities of this country are as regards industrial development and the utilization of our vast resources, and side by side with that the settlement of new people. Settlement and work; settlement and development; settlement and employment: these things must go side by side in any policy worthy of the name.

Now I regret to say this—you will say it is very unkind of me to say it. But the fact is that we have not at this time, in charge of this department, a gentleman who by natural aptitude or training is calculated to properly develop policies in connection with the Immigration department. I have as profound a respect as any man in this house for my hon. friend the member for Brandon (Mr. Forke). But in England they have long since, in their parliament, made it a rule under conditions such as these to fearlessly express their opinions with respect to ministers of the crown who direct policies. And in this instance I regret to say that it is painfully apparent to anyone, whoever he may be, whether Liberal or Conservative, whether he sits to the right or to the left of the Speaker, that the hon. gentleman, the member for Brandon, a man of integrity and character, is unfitted temperamentally or by training to discharge the varied and onerous duties of Minister of Immigration and Colonization in this country. That is one of the real difficulties. You could not have made the Canadian Pacific irrigation projects flourish unless you had had at the head of them a man such as the late Lord Shaughnessy or men of that type. And so, in relation to our immigration policy, you cannot have that policy succeed if you put in charge of it one who is disqualified—not qualified at least—either by training or by temperament, to discharge the very onerous duties that appertain to that position. So we say in this amendment that we should have a responsible minister in charge, although in Australia they did try a commission. And there are those in this country who believe that a commission responsible indirectly to the government might be able to succeed. In Canada there is less evidence of the likelihood of a commission succeeding. We say there should be a strong minister, a minister with the training, with the aptitude, with the temperament, with the desire and the determination and vigour to make such a department succeed—with these two great branches working side by side, the one, in cooperation with the provinces and other organizations, seeking new settlers, the other providing work for these settlers when they come here to keep them in this country. For I deny that this country is, by reason of its natural resources, unfitted for occupation, unfitted to give employment to men who come within its borders.

This criticism we make strikes at the very foundation of existing conditions. You will never make this department succeed, it cannot succeed, so long as it is presided over by the gentleman who now controls it, surrounded by those who sit with him. It cannot be done; it will not be done. And therefore we venture to offer that criticism. We offer it frankly because we believe it is in the public interest that it should be made, with no desire in the world to hurt anyone's feelings. However fit and proper, however able the hon. gentleman may be to discharge duties in other places, he is wholly unfitted for the discharge of duties in the portfolio which he now fills.

A step further. My hon. friend from Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) this afternoon, in a very humorous and at times pathetic speech, dealt with the kind of settlers we are bringing in. I venture to say to him that he overlooked one point. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) dealt with it in part, but he did not in my judgment deal with it wholly. The reason we are seeking British settlers is not that we attach so much more importance to them as settlers than to any others, but that our institutions are moulded and formed, and have been for generations, upon British models. And we believe, we are firm in the conviction—as I believe the government is—that the only way in which we can maintain these institutions is by continuing to bring to this country a proper modicum of settlers who understand and appreciate them. That is the real reason.

Mr. JACOBS: Are not the laws of the United States moulded on British institutions, and have not their people come from every part of the world in tens of millions, conforming to British institutions when they arrive in that country?

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Cartier has entirely misapprehended the point. Read the history of the United States, read what is written in every magazine in that country by thoughtful men, and you will find that the principle of the melting pot has failed; and they are quite apprehensive. Every thoughtful man in the United States, every keen observer, every man who travels, every author, everyone who shapes and moulds public opinion in the universities and in the great foundations—all these are bewailing the fact that uncontrolled immigration has been permitted into that country, to such an extent that there is now in the United States a polyglot population, without any distinctive civilization, and one about which many of them are in great despair. That is the answer to my hon. friend. And, sir, it is because we desire to profit by the very lessons we learned there that we are endeavouring to maintain our civilization at that high standard which has made the British civilization the test by which all other civilized nations in modern times are measured.

I quite agree with what my friend the Minister of Railways and Canals said this afternoon. We are bringing people into this country from all the countries which were mentioned by my hon. friend, but the report does not add to or take away from the countries; it merely names those countries from which the people have come. I have in mind at the moment Germans whom I know well, who came to this country many years ago. Some of them went west about the time I went there; some came later and some had been there earlier. I look upon their splendid homes and I realize that they are making a very great contribution to the life of our country. The older settlers—mark you, I say the older settlers—all law-abiding citizens, we appealed to them through their own great national heroes. Now we are endeavouring to make the appeal through the heroes of our own country, those great fathers of confederation who laid the foundations of this Dominion. The celebrations which took place in Canada last year commemorating the sixtieth anniversary of confederation were intended to carry out that very idea and to give effect to that very purpose. At least that may be said with safety. I have in mind families of Ukrainians; one hon. member who spoke to-night, although born in the United States, is a descendant in the second generation of a central European people. I have in mind their homes; I recall the circumstances under which many of them came to settle in this country. They came from Austria and from other states some of which are now a part of Russia. I saw their first beginnings; I saw their sod huts, and years later I saw their beautiful homes, surrounded by trees, with all the comforts which go to make life happy. These people adapted themselves to our conditions, and they have made excellent settlers. We have Germans and Ukrainians; we have people from other countries, Norwegians, Swedes, Danes, Finns, Germans, some Swiss, some Dutch, some Belgians, a few old country French, some Austrians; I recall a very considerable settlement of people from that country. We have people from Poland, a few from Roumania; I have never seen any from Lithuania, but that was part of another country before the war, and the same might be said with respect to Esthonia and Latvia. I have seen some few settlers from Czechoslovakia and Jugoslavia, which countries were parts of Serbia before the war. These people have made excellent settlers; they have kept the law; they have prospered and they are proud of Canada, but it cannot be that we must draw upon them to shape our civilization. We must still maintain that measure of British civilization which will enable us to assimilate these people to British institutions, rather than assimilate our civilization to theirs. That is the point; that is all that may be said with respect to it, and it is the point I desire to make at this time. We earnestly and sincerely believe that the civilization which we call the British civilization is the standard by which we must measure our own civilization; we desire to assimilate those whom we bring to this country to that civilization, that standard of living, that regard for morality and law and the institutions of the country and to the ordered and regulated development of this country. That is what we desire, rather than by the introduction of vast and overwhelming numbers of people from other countries to assimilate the British immigrants and the few Canadians who are left to some other civilization. That is what we are endeavouring to do, and that is the reason so much stress is laid upon the British settler, not upon the Englishman as the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) said, but upon the British settler as indicating that standard of civilization on which we build our institutions and to which we hope to be able to make those who come to us not conform but assimilate, so that they may play the part in it that we ourselves play, that they may realize that the same conditions exist as in days gone by, when the people said "wherever the king's writ ran, there was freedom and liberty of conscience." So everyone who lives under British institutions in that part of the Empire which we call Canada may have freedom and liberty, regard for law and order and a desire for an ordered government of which they and we may well be proud. That I say to my hon. friend is our reason, rather than the reason which he suggested this afternoon.

As far as I can see it is the purpose of all governments to maintain that position; that is the intention of all governments, but we do say that there has been a singular lack of appreciation of that position during recent years by the present government. In various sections of western Canada they have planted colonies from far-off lands, who have settled upon the soil and maintained their own peculiar civilization rather than become assimilated to that British civilization which should prevail in this country, because there has not been a sufficient leavening of it to ensure that result. That is one of the complaints we make.

Mr. Speaker, I have spoken longer than was my intention when I rose, but I cannot too strongly urge upon this house the real gravity and seriousness of the problem with which we have to deal. My hon. friend from East Calgary (Mr. Adshead) referred to the length of his residence in western Canada. I have also lived there for a great number of years, indeed for the major portion of my life since I attained manhood, and I have seen it grow and prosper. I have seen the difficulties which have been experienced and I have seen great problems solved by private enterprise. I have seen great communities settled; I saw the Calgary Colonization Company settle a great area near Calgary; I saw the valley of the Saskatchewan settled by private enterprise. Surely what can be accomplished in that regard by private enterprise can be accomplished by the government. I saw a great railway carry out the enterprise to which I have already referred. This country, east, west, north and south, from Cape Breton to Vancouver Island, is but a vast estate, and as I have so often said it is an estate which we hold in trust to settle and develop. What a reflection it is upon us that to-day there are less people, less tenants on that estate than the number we have brought in during the past thirty years together with the natural increase. What a reflection that is! But there is yet time to remedy the difficulty; there is yet time to solve these problems, and that can be done only by the creation of a body charged with responsibility and presided over by men of vision, of hope, of courage and of determination, who will look upon obstacles not as factors to deter them from going forward with their work but rather as difficulties to be overcome, to spur them on to greater effort. But, Mr. Speaker, these men do not sit upon the treasury benches of this country; such men are not directing this work and are not putting their minds, their hearts, their strength and their courage into this matter as they should. Because they are not doing so and because we believe that the enunciation of proper policies, the placing upon the statute books of proper legislation and the creation of proper departments of the government would bring about these results, we have offered this amendment with its constructive suggestions for the good of the country, rather than the piecemeal report of the committee which means nothing. The report of the committee is a mere statement of platitudes except for the last paragraph, which was included because it was thought it might temper the minds of some of the hon. members who sit on this side of the house to the extent that there would be unanimous adoption of the report of the committee. But that report in itself is not ample or sufficient, because it does not strike at the foundation of the difficulty, which is failure not only to bring people into Canada but to keep them here and to provide them with work.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of National Defence): At this late hour I do not intend to detain the house at any length, but in view of the fact that I happened to be a member of that committee I do feel that the attention of the house should be directed to one or two matters which have been referred to by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). I think the house will bear me out when I say that my hon. friend has not offered anything new in the way of a solution for the immigration question. He has contented himself with stating that this is a great problem, which everybody knew. He has contented himself with stating that the population of Canada has not increased as fast as we would desire. He has also stated that employment is a very necessary corollary to immigration, and I think almost everybody knew that. I do not think there is anything very constructive in the speech of my hon. friend, except the suggestion that there should be the words "industrial development" added to the name of the Department of Immigration and Colonization. I do not think the country will regard that as a very constructive contribution to this debate or to the immigration problem.

Regarding British immigration, no one deplores more than the members on this side of the house what my hon. friend has suggested—I am not prepared to say that it is a fact—that British people have the idea that they are not wanted in this country. If any proof were needed of the fact that they are wanted, I think that proof will be found when our friends in the British Isles read the first portion of this report, which sets out the attractions which are offered in order to induce British settlers to come to this country. I am not going to detain the house at any length in referring to them, but when we remember that all British subjects, no matter what their occupation may be, are welcomed to Canada and are eagerly sought after to come here; that special efforts are made to bring them here, it will be seen that we do welcome them. In addition to that, agricultural labourers have been given a reduction of 90 per cent in the passage rate they are required to pay to come to this country; British domestic workers are given a like reduction; the families of agricultural labourers are being brought out on that same 90 per cent reduction; British children over 14 and under 17 years of age brought here by voluntary societies have their passage paid free of charge by the Canadian and British governments; provision is made for the training and placement of British boys in farm homes, and a special grant is made to societies who bring them out, this grant being more than the amount of the passage. The federal government, in conjunction with the provincial governments and the British government, have arranged a special tripartite agreement, which has already been entered into by two provinces and a third is negotiating in regard to it, whereby the British government supplies $1,500 for stock and equipment, the Canadian government recruits the settler and supervises the settlement, and the provincial government furnishes the farm. In addition to that the Canadian government shares on a fifty-fifty basis in any loss in connection with the loan and shares any loss of interest on the price of the farm. There is also the three thousand family scheme, which is just about completed, in connection with which the Canadian government furnishes the farm on easy terms, the British government furnishes a $1,500 loan for stock and equipment, and the Canadian government provides additional assistance by way of selection, settlement and supervision free of charge. There is also the land settlement scheme for British boys, under which the Canadian government contributes $1,000, the provincial government $250, and the British government $1,250. When these things are really considered the people of the old land will realize that we do want British settlers here.

When I say further that this government spends $16.67 per head for administration expenses and in connection with the assisted passage scheme for British settlers as compared with 11 cents per head for immigrants from other countries, it seems to me it is a pretty practical illustration of the desire which Canada has to have Britishers come to this country. I do feel that it is mistake to give utterance to this idea, or give any credence to the statement that British settlers are not wanted.

Reference has been made to the matter of medical inspection. This house knows and the committee considered it in its report, that this medical inspection was put in mainly for the purpose of assisting the British emigrant and seeing that there is no chance of his coming to a port of embarkation and arriving on this side and being turned back because the Canadian doctors do not pass him. The Canadian government has at its own expense placed Canadian doctors on the other side to provide for examinations at some 350 centres in order that the British emigrant might have the examination made over there and know at the outset whether or not he would be accepted in this country. That was the purpose of the medical examination. That examination was not put into force in any capricious manner. Representations were made by the steamship companies, by the provincial governments, by the Dominion Council of Health and by other social service organizations, who all agreed that this would be a good system to put into effect. I submit that the system has not been given a fair trial.

Influences, to which I will not refer tonight, have started a certain amount of publicity and propaganda in the old land. Perhaps there have been those who fear their interests may by adversely affected in some way or other by this system of medical examination, and they have started propaganda with the result that some British people got the idea that this was a restrictive measure. The committee felt, not because they had not faith in the system of medical examinations and not because they considered it had been given a fair trial, that these examinations had better be conducted by local British doctors under the supervision and control of the Canadian organization. The committee was endeavouring to convey to the British people that it was not the desire of the Canadian government to let them have even an idea that there was any intention of restriction in this regard. As my hon. friend the leader of the opposition has said, that has been recommended by the committee, and I feel that the publication of what I have already referred to will set at rest the fears of our British brothers with regard to our desire to have them over here.

My hon. friend has referred to the matter of the great migration to the United States. We all know there has been a very large increase in the population there, but I want to say to him that I think it is to the credit and pride of Canada that we, situated side by side with that great nation which is supposed to offer the greatest attractions to immigrants of any country in the world, have been able to maintain our population as we have. We have been capable of increasing our immigration during the last three years from that very country to our own. In 1924 we had 11,000 coming from that country. This has been steadily increasing; in 1926, 21,000 came and in 1927, 25,000, the last group having something like $14,000,000 of capital and assets. I think it is to the credit of Canada, and I think it dispels some of the gloom which my hon. friend has tried to shed over this chamber and which his speech may spread over this country, when we remember that people from the United States, that supposedly attractive country, are coming here in these large numbers. In this connection let me read an editorial from an independent paper, the Daily Record of Sherbrooke.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. SPEAKER: Unless it is the unanimous desire of the house to continue, I would call attention to the fact that it is now eleven o'clock.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Before the house adjourned last evening I mentioned that to-night I would move that the house sit until twelve o'clock. That suggestion was approved of by the hon. leader of the opposition, and I think met with the unanimous approval of the house. I believe it is the desire of the house to sit to-night until at least twelve o'clock, and I would move, seconded by Mr. Lapointe:

That the house may sit later than eleven o'clock p.m. this day.

Mr. GARDINER: I do not think there would be any objection if the motion read "until twelve o'clock".

An hon. MEMBER: After twelve o'clock would be another day.

Motion agreed to.

IMMIGRATION

MOTION TO CONCUR IN REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND COLONIZATION

Mr. RALSTON: I was going to read this editorial from the Daily Record of Sherbrooke:

Trekking Northward

They are coming here. Great vans, loaded with household goods, are on the move from New England mill towns northward to Quebec. It is easier to make a living here than there. So many Canadian families are returning.

A few years ago the movement was all in the other direction. Many who went did not better themselves. They received high pay for their work. But the job was not steady. In a few months they realized that they would have been better off had they remained in Canada.

This north or south movement is inseparable from economic conditions. Quebec province and Canada in general are prosperous. There is a greater proportion of unemployment in the states than here. Hence the reversal of the migrant movement.

Let me deal for just a moment with what my hon. friend has suggested with regard to the matter of work. I am afraid he has not read the report very carefully.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, he has.

Mr. RALSTON: If he had and if he had studied what has been done in the way of immigration and of providing settlement and employment, he would remember, as I have suggested before, that in the matter of settlement of those from the old land, agricultural settlers particularly, special assistance, to which I have already referred, has been given by the Canadian government. But those are not the only immigrants who are coming here. In addition to them there are immigrants from continental countries. In respect to them, as my hon. friend should recall, we have an agreement with the railways and that agreement recognizes the principle which my hon. friend has laid down, namely, that there shall be settlement; that employment shall be provided, because it is specifically stated in the agreement that the railways shall provide settlement for the people they bring in. This is no new principle; this is not the first time that it has been enunciated. It has been long recognized as part of the policy of coordination of the colonization principle with the work of immigration.

I want to point out to my hon. friend the second thing which he has overlooked. If he will read the report over carefully, he will find a declaration of what I regard as a somewhat new principle, a recognition of what may be a more effective settlement agency than even a federal department, and that is this, that settlement and employment conditions perhaps can be more intimately and closely looked after and supervised by the provincial administrations. There is in the report a paragraph which points a way to that and which suggests a remedy which I think my hon. friend should take note of. He had in mind the necessity for providing settlement and the best way to do it. The paragraph which is found on page 6 is as follows:

> The committee recommends that special efforts be now made to extend the field of activity of the provincial authorities particularly in the matter of placement, settlement and supervision of immigrants, and that, with this in view, the federal government consider contributing to defray the cost of provincial cooperation for that purpose.

The idea is to be taken along with what is set out in the preceding paragraph, as follows:

> In the opinion of the committee the responsibility and control of the selection of immigrants, no matter by whom recruited must rest solely and exclusively with the government of Canada.

But after the immigrants are selected, after the arrangements are made for their transportation, the matter of placement, settlement and supervision is regarded as being one in which the provincial governments can very effectively cooperate in seeing to it that the work to which my hon. friend has referred is provided. It is no mere gesture, because the committee has suggested that a contribution to the cost of provincial cooperation in that respect be made by the federal government.

Mr. LUCAS: Do I understand that by arrangement with the provinces, the latter will have the say in regard to the class and number of immigrants that they will accept?

Mr. RALSTON: I can only say to my hon. friend that he was a member of the committee which unanimously concurred in the report and I do not think I ought to be asked to interpret it for him. I think the report means exactly what it says, namely, that the field of activity of the provincial authorities particularly in the matter of placement, settlement and supervision of immigrants, can be extended and that the federal government should consider contributing to defray the cost of provincial cooperation for that purpose. That takes care of exactly the idea to which my hon. friend has referred, but it does not do so through some sort of distant department of industrial development set up by the federal authorities in Ottawa. It provides for cooperation by the people who, as I said a moment ago, are perhaps in a more close and intimate position to look after the matter of placement, settlement and supervision of immigrants. That is a forward step; that is a matter that has not formerly been stressed as strongly as we might hope for in connection with the colonization and immigration of this country. I believe along those lines rather than along the line suggested by my hon. friend, namely, by adding the words "industrial development" to the Department of Immigration and Colonization, is the way to see that those who come to this country are properly settled.

I want to say what my hon. friend has also omitted to note, namely that this report, states that although we are to do what we can in the matter of immigration, placement and settlement of those who come to us from other shores, we are not to forget the boys, girls, young men and young women of Canada and we must endeavour to see that they are given a fair chance as well.

May I refer just for a moment to the amendment which my hon. friend has moved. It recommends a department. The department is already established. It proposes to add to the title the two words "industrial development." It mentions a superintendent but I suppose there is nothing much in the name and the duties would really be those of a deputy minister and that title would do just as well. Let me refer to the duties which this department is supposed to perform. There is the co-ordination of all organizations in connection with the matter of immigration. That has been the policy of the Department of Immigration and Colonization ever since it was established. It has been coordinating and working with all these various organizations. It has assisted them in connection with their work. In connection with the inquiry which has just been held the committee have had many representations from them regarding their work with the department. It is also suggested that they will see that the immigrants are physically and mentally fit. We do not need to have any new department for that. Provision is made in the act for that and the matter of medical examination is for that very purpose. The suggestion is made that financial provision be made for settlement. If my hon. friend will look at the report which has been concurred in unanimously, he will find that in the matter of land settlement the committee has made a pretty definite recommendation.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): May I correct the minister there? It was not quite unanimous. There was one section that my hon. friend will remember I did not concur in.

Mr. RALSTON: That may be, but my hon. friend will bear me out in this, that the section to which I am now referring was concurred in unanimously.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): That is right.

Mr. RALSTON: The committee had heard the evidence with regard to the three thousand family settlement scheme and they felt that opportunity should be given to see how that scheme would work out. A very large commitment had been made by the country in connection with that scheme. They had in mind the soldier settlement scheme in which the country had invested many millions of dollars. They had in mind also, although it is not mentioned in the report, the fact that provision had been made for farm loans; that the farm loan board would assist not only those who came to this country but those who are already here, and the committee recommends to parliament that time be given to see how this scheme works out before embarking on extended schemes of that character. I think from what I have heard around the chamber to-day there is a great deal of unanimity in regard to this particular part of the report which suggests that the farm settlement scheme should be allowed to pass the experimental stage and that we have the benefit of the experience in regard to it before we make further large financial commitments. That is what the committee has to say in regard to the question of financial assistance in the matter of settlement.

As regards the reference in the amendment to settlement in the new provinces of those from the older provinces, I only want to say that I happen to come from one of the older provinces and I feel equal opportunity should be given for settlement in the older provinces of those who may have gone to the newer provinces and who would like to come back.

The next suggestion is that the department should direct schemes of settlement. If there are no direct schemes to be put into effect, there are no functions in that respect for the department to carry on. But the department already has ample machinery for that purpose in the land settlement board, which has been operating for a good while.

In the second part of the amendment there are really only two points. One is that there should be an economic survey of this country taken with a view to ascertaining the opportunities for employment. As has already been pointed out, this report expressly recognizes that idea and the very last paragraph contains a most comprehensive statement of that policy in words which have been already read, but which I shall take the time of the house to read again:

> Your committee would also recommend that the government make an intensive and comprehensive study of the possibilities of increasing industrial and agricultural development in Canada with a view to attracting capital and providing wider and increased opportunities for employment not only for our own people, but for prospective immigrants.

The suggestion in the amendment is also that the industrial development branch shall advise as to future economic development. I want to remind the house that we have already a branch of natural resources in the Department of the Interior. We have already a Department of Trade and Commerce, which makes an intensive study of this kind of thing. We have a Bureau of Statistics which I think some gentlemen on the other side of the house referred to the other night as being in every way efficient, and with these agencies at our command it seems to me that we ought to be in a fairly good position to be advised as to our future economic development without setting up any more machinery for that purpose.

There is also the suggestion that attention should be given to the establishment of suitable industries in small towns. I do say that after the economic survey has been made it seems to me it may be time enough for this government to consider cooperation with the provinces in that respect, but so far it has been the practice that the establishment of industries is a matter of provincial jurisdiction and provincial scope, and I think it would be laying down a somewhat dangerous policy to suggest that this federal government shall now embark on the scheme of establishing industries in various small towns throughout the Dominion.

With those remarks I think I have dealt briefly with the teeth of the amendment which is before the house. I do fail to find, with all due respect to my good friend from St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) whose work as has already been stated, has been on such a high level in connection with the whole deliberations of the committee, I do fail to find in his resolution anything new or anything which will provide necessary machinery which we have not already.

My last word is that it seems to me that this report points to a redoubling of effort, to a uniting of resources, to a uniting of all the activities which will go to make the work of immigration successful—not to leave out the provincial authorities, not to leave out the voluntary organizations, not to leave out all those agencies which can help to bring into this country a desirable population, and when that population comes here, see to it that it is properly settled and properly placed. I feel that the report of the committee will perhaps be found to have more of hope and more of new ideas, and to contain a great deal more in the way of constructive policies for the future than anything which my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) has indicated in the rather doleful speech which he has delivered to-night.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it had not been my intention to take any part in the present debate, especially in view of all that has been said, and I would not now do so had it not been for some remarks of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) this evening. For some reason best known to himself, my hon. friend has found it advisable to go outside of the report which we have been discussing to reflect upon a very loyal, a very faithful and a very able colleague, the present Minister of Immigration and Colonization (Mr. Forke) in his administration of the department. I feel that I should be belying every instinct which I possess if I permitted a reflection of the kind, particularly with my knowledge of the minister's qualifications for the position which he holds, to pass unnoticed, and to pass without a very severe censure, if it is permissible for such words to pass from my lips.

The hon. leader of the opposition reflected on my colleague by referring to him as one who did not possess the necessary training or temperament for the position which he holds. That, I think, was the gravamen of his indictment. I would say to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition that he is the last person who ought to speak of temperament. I shall not say anything about his training. I think probably it was a matter of temperament which for the moment caused him to make the remark which he did make.

May I say this, and I say it in all sincerity to my hon. friend: I belive that in commenting as he did upon the Minister of Immigration and Colonization he was giving expression to what he believed was expected of him as the leader of the opposition in voicing a certain critical attitude, rather than giving utterance to his own personal convictions. My hon. friend was careful to say that in British public life men speak fearlessly with respect to those who are opposed to them in parliament. I am sure that in commenting as he did my hon. friend was giving expression to what he believed some members of his following throughout the country would wish to hear voiced. But may I ask with respect to the criticism, on what grounds is it based? Why does my hon. friend say that the present Minister of Immigration and Colonization is not suited by training and temperament to fill the position which he holds?

What has been the training of the Minister of Immigration and Colonization? I ask hon. members to consider the training which the present Minister of Immigration and Colonization has had as fitting him for the portfolio which he holds, and to compare it with the training of other ministers who have held that position, or compare it with any training which a man could possibly have who was going to be called upon to fill the position of Minister of Immigration.

The minister came to this country as a young man; he came to Canada as an immigrant. As an immigrant he went to western Canada, was educated in part in this country, took an active interest in the municipal life of the community in which he lived, was appointed a reeve of the municipality in which he was residing, subsequently was made secretary-treasurer of the union of municipalities, clearly indicative of the fact that his fellow men believed that he was one who had a wise and a wide knowledge of the needs of those who were similarly situated to himself. He brought up his family in a new community, himself as a settler, himself one who was making a home in the new land, and he did it so successfully and so completely that he won the confidence of his fellow citizens in the district in which he resided to such a degree that on three separate occasions they have returned him as a member to this parliament of Canada.

May I add that when there grew up in this country, as there did immediately after the war, a party which was inclined to feel that the two old political parties did not represent to the extent which they thought it should be represented the feeling of the great agricultural interests in this country, and when that party became sufficiently strong to be recognized as a separate party in this house, its representatives in parliament chose the present Minister of Immigration as the leader of their party, and as their leader he held an honoured position in this house.

I cannot but believe that the feeling of hon. gentlemen opposite, if they share the view expressed by their leader, is due to the circumstance that the present Minister of Immigration sits to-day on this side of the house instead of on the opposite side, rather than to any feeling that is entertained towards the minister himself. I say, Mr. Speaker, I can think of no career better calculated to be of service to one in the position of Minister of Immigration and Colonization than a career such as I have described, and no example to others more inspiring. Take those who are thinking of emigrating from the old country to this Dominion. Many references have been made to the fact that we are not obtaining the number of immigrants from the British Isles which we should all like to see coming to this country. I ask you, what greater inducement could be offered to any young man about to seek a home in a new land, what finer example than that which is to be found in the career of the present Minister of Immigration and Colonization? He is a living example of what this country offers to men who possess his sterling qualities. They can find in this land great opportunities, and there is no position to which they cannot hope to rise provided they possess the qualities which my hon. friend possesses in such large measure.

In the course of this debate with respect to immigration, we have not stressed sufficiently the exceptional position which many of those who have come from the British Isles as immigrants have attained in our Dominion. I am proud to be able to say that in the present administration at least three distinguished members—the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Dunning) who spoke this afternoon, the Minister of Immigration and Colonization (Mr. Forke) who is being referred to to-night, and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan) who at the present moment is representing Canada at Geneva—came to this country as emigrants from the British Isles, one from England, one from Scotland and one from Ireland. Could there be a better advertisement of what this country offers in the way of opportunity to British settlers? If it be necessary to mention another example, I might recall the memorable gathering which took place only a year or two ago, when members of this house who originally had come to Canada as emigrants from other countries gathered together, to the number, if I recollect aright, of twenty-seven, to celebrate that particular circumstance. Knowledge of that kind spread throughout the world is to my mind the best sort of immigration propaganda this country has to offer. If we are not getting a larger number of immigrants it is due in large measure to the fact that too little stress is laid on these outstanding successes, while too much is said by hon. gentlemen opposite in bemoaning conditions in this country.

May I say this further word with respect to the temperament, so-called, of my hon. friend the Minister of Immigration and Colonization? What, may I ask, is required in the way of temperament on the part of a minister of the crown to enable him adequately to fill a position which has to do very largely, in fact almost entirely, with human relations and human life? The first quality I should say is broad human sympathy, the second, a great desire to be of service to one's fellow men. I venture to say that hon. members, irrespective of party, will agree with me that no member of this house possesses those two qualities to a finer or in a larger degree than does the present Minister of Immigration and Colonization. Indeed, if he has been willing to take upon himself the heavy obligations of that department it is, I believe, primarily because he has as a life purpose the desire, which I believe is one held in considerable measure by all who are in public life, of being of some real service to his fellow men. But I would say this further with regard to my hon. friend: I believe he honestly feels that the greatest service which it would be possible for him to render to this land and to his fellow men is to bring an opportunity similar to that which he himself has enjoyed, within the range of as large a number of his fellow men as may be possible. I know that the great desire of the minister while he is holding his present portfolio is to be the instrument of helping others to share opportunities such as he as a young man shared, and to enjoy the privileges which he and his family have enjoyed in our Dominion. These are qualities which, as I have said, all hon. members recognize in the Minister of Immigration.

But may I add that if the minister needed any testimony to his successful administration of the department, he has it in the report of the committee which has been presented to-day. Listening to my hon. friend opposite, one would think there had been two reports brought into this house, one by supporters of the government and the other by his own followers. As a matter of fact the report which was presented by the chairman of the committee is a unanimous report, a report which has been agreed to by every hon. gentleman opposite who was a member of that committee, a report which has been agreed to by the members of the Progressive party who were on that committee. Indeed, I am somewhat surprised at my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) who was himself a member of that committee, and I am told an exceptionally helpful and useful member. He had a good deal to do with the finishing touches of the report if I am to judge—

Mr. CAHAN: If I may interrupt the Prime Minister. I did dot some i's and cross some t's, but if the right hon. gentleman is under the impression or has been informed that the committee were unanimous in regard to the report, I entirely dissent from the statement.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What I did wish to express my appreciation of was the final form in which the report has been presented, the form in which the i's are dotted and the t's crossed, and for which I feel a debt is owing to my hon. friend. But I may say my hon. friend has agreed with all the members of the committee on the report which has been presented.

Mr. McGIBBON: May I correct the Prime Minister? While in the main we agreed on the report, there were certainly some parts which we did not agree on. I did not for one, but I was voted down and let it go at that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Certainly, that is the procedure adopted by all the committees of this house. There may be matters in the report which personally members on this side might be inclined to disagree with. I think some do.

Mr. McGIBBON: Then it was not unanimous.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is no minority report. It is a report of the committee presented without any mention in it of dissent in any particular. May I say that there is no more intricate problem than that of immigration, and I think the committtee has come to recognize that fact. It has come to see that it would be impossible so far as Canada is concerned for any considerable number of men to be of one mind regarding what is the most desirable policy to be adopted with respect to immigration. But this report—

Mr. CAHAN: That was the condition of mind of the committee, I think, when we separated.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Exactly; and this report represents the consensus of view—

Mr. CAHAN: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —so far as it is possible to get it from men who differ on many points.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. CAHAN: That is better.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I point out what is common ground, that there is not a single reflection of any kind upon the minister in charge of the department—not a single reflection. Indeed, there is commendation.

Mr. CAHAN: Will the Prime Minister allow a statement?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. CAHAN: It is this. With regard to the position of the minister and the efficiency of his department, no vote was taken in the committee. If a vote had been taken, there are many members on the other side of the house, members of that committee who would have voted for such a motion. But it was left out by common consent because we were not unanimous on that point, and those who were in the minority were left to bring an expression of opinion before the house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If hon. members on the other side were to give expression to their views with respect to any member of the administration they would vote him out of office as quickly as they could. We do not look to hon. gentlemen opposite to express encomiums upon any member of the administration.

Mr. CAHAN: Do not attribute to us opinions which we do not hold.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If there is any reflection to be made upon the Department of Immigration and Colonization, due to the manner in which the department is being administered by the present minister, it was the duty of the committee so to report; and I believe the committee would so have reported, had that been their conviction. But may I add this: my hon. friend in his amendment has not gone that length. He has not expressed a view of that kind, and I do not believe that in his heart of hearts he entertains it.

Mr. CAHAN: I thought the department was very inefficient and it was evident at every stage of the evidence.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is a very easy thing with respect to immigration to make comparisons between the department as it is administered to-day and the department as it has been administered in bygone years, to make comparisons between the number of immigrants that are coming from the British isles at the present time and the number of immigrants that formerly came in; but when examination is made of the circumstances which account for the difference, one very soon discovers the reason. In days when it was possible to give to settlers free homesteads, to advertise free homesteads; in days when it was possible for men and women to bring their families from the old land to the new for a few dollars instead of having to pay the relatively enormous rates which are charged to-day by the steamship and railway companies, it was an easy matter to fill this country with immigrants. There were a large number of people, seeking to emigrate from the British isles, who were anxious to get away and it was then an easy matter to bring them in. But what are the facts to-day? Every single dominion has been competing for immigrants from the British isles; and so far as this Dominion is concerned Canada under the administration of the present minister has had the largest number of immigrants from the British isles. Moreover, while hon. gentlemen opposite in the last few years have been complaining about the numbers of Canadians leaving Canada for the United States, under the present minister Canadians have been returning in larger numbers than ever before.

I say, therefore, without wishing to prolong the discussion, that whether one is to judge the administration of the department by the actual records as they speak for themselves under the administration of the present minister; whether one is to judge by the temperament which should be possessed by anyone whose duty it is to deal with large numbers of human beings seeking to make homes in a new land under conditions which, to most men, must be unknown unless they have been matters of experience; or whether it be the matter of training, my hon. friend and colleague, one of the most loyal, devoted, industrious and efficient of ministers of the crown, no matter by which of these qualifications he is to be judged, will be found to hold an honoured position in this country.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The Prime Minister says that there was unanimity and that there was no reflection in the report. Does he not consider that there was in the report some reflection on the efficiency of the administration of the department in the fact that it unanimously made certain very specific suggestions of very drastic changes?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: So far as that is concerned, I think that some at least of these suggestions have come from the minister himself. They have come from hon. gentlemen on this side quite as much as from hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): From the committee as a whole.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Exactly; I am prepared to give the committee as a whole full credit. It would be an extraordinary thing indeed if, after hon. members have sat for four months or at least three months listening to experts and others of high reputation in different avenues of business, they were not able to make some suggestions calculated to be helpful.

Amendment (Mr. Cahan) negatived on division.

Main motion agreed to on division and report concurred in.

REPORT

Report of the International Fisheries Commission appointed under the Northern Pacific Halibut treaty—Mr. Cardin.

PENSION ACT AMENDMENT

SENATE AMENDMENTS TO BILL NO. 289

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate acquainting this house:

1. That the Senate doth insist on its first and second amendments, striking out the letter (a) in line 1 of clause 2, and paragraph (a) of clause 2, because by reason of a subsequent amendment to clause 25 herein set out, clause 2 (a) serves no useful purpose.

2. That the Senate doth insist on its sixth amendment, striking out clause 7, because under section 11 of the Pension Act all who served in a theatre of war have been pensioned or are pensionable to the full extent of their disabilities without any deduction in respect of their pre-enlistment condition. The existing law clearly provides that even those who were found by medical examination to be unfit for front line service shall also be pensioned to the full extent of their disabilities notwithstanding the fact that their service in a theatre of war was of a non-combatant character, far removed from the scene of active hostilities. The existing law which has been in operation some ten years is definite and is well understood. Clause 7 proposes an amendment thereto providing that pensions shall be awarded to dependents where the aggravation of a pre-enlistment injury or disease substantially contributed to death. Consequently this is obviously intended to cover only those who served in Canada and England. The difficulty of interpreting the words "substantially contributed", coupled with the fact that the present law seems to be sufficiently generous to cover all classes that would come under this clause, warrant the conclusion that it cannot be reasonably justified.

3. That the Senate doth amend its seventh amendment by substituting for new section 21

(1) of clause 12 the following:

"21. (1) Nothwithstanding any of the provisions of this Act, any case respecting a member of the forces or any of his dependents which is claimed to be specially meritorious and in which pension has been refused by the Commission, or if an appeal lies to the Board, both by the Commission and by the Board, may be made the subject of an investigation and adjudication by way of compassionate pension or allowance as hereinafter provided."

4. That the Senate doth not insist on its ninth amendment, striking out clause 25, but substitutes the following new clause 25 in lieu thereof:

"25. Subsection one of section thirty-two of the said Act is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

'32. (1) No pension shall be paid to the widow of a pensioner unless she was living with him or was maintained by him or was, in the opinion of the Commission, entitled to be maintained by him at the time of his death and for a reasonable time previously thereto.

(i) No pension shall be paid to the widow of a member of the forces unless she was married to him before the appearance of the injury or disease which resulted in his death,

(a) Unless the injury in respect of which he was pensioned or entitled to pension would not shorten his expectancy of life; or

(b) Unless he was not chronically ill of a pensionable disease and not in receipt of pension in respect thereof.

(ii) This subsection shall not be held to authorize any payment of a pension for any period anterior to the date of the coming into force of this Act'."

5. That the Senate doth amend its eleventh amendment by substituting for new subsection (10) of clause 30, the following:

"(10) The Board shall be attached to the department and the expenses required to be incurred for the discharge of its duties, including the salaries of its officers, clerks, and other employees shall, on approval by the Board, be paid out of the moneys provided by parliament."

6. That the Senate doth insist on its twelfth amendment, amending clause 31, because under the existing law the soldier himself, or in the event of his death his widow, his children or his parents have the right of appeal on the ground that the injury or disease or aggravation thereof resulting in disability or death was attributable to or was incurred during military service. Paragraphs (a) and (b) of this clause, while not clear, are intended to change the existing principle of the right of appeal, particularly for dependents other than widows and children who claim their financial resources are inadequate. The Senate is of the view this is not advisable.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

PERMANENT MILITIA FORCE—PENSIONS TO GENERALS

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac-Addington):

1. How many officers of the permanent militia force of Canada with the rank of general are in receipt of yearly pensions from the Dominion of Canada?

2. What are the names of such generals and the amount of pension in each case?

3. When and under what authority or for what reason or reasons was each such pension granted?

4. What was the salary or rate of pay of each such officer immediately preceding the granting of the pension?

Mr. RINFRET:

1. None.

2, 3 and 4. Answered by No. 1.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION—ORGANIZATION BRANCH

Mr. LAPIERRE:

1. When was the organization branch of the Civil Service Commission constituted, and for what purpose?

2. What officers were first appointed to discharge the duties of this branch, and at what salary?

3. Who are the present officers of said branch, the date of appointment and salary each is now receiving?

4. Are the present officers graduates of Canadian universities, colleges or high schools? If not, which of them are graduates of foreign educational institutions?

5. What functions are said officers required to perform?

6. Does the scope of their work extend to the outside service? If so, which officer is assigned to investigate those departmental offices where the French language is chiefly the language of communication?

7. Is it the intention of the government to appoint an officer to this branch who is thoroughly conversant in the French language?

Mr. RINFRET:

1. The Organization branch of the Civil Service Commission was constituted in 1918 for the purpose of carrying on the organization and classification work as prescribed by the Civil Service Act of 1918.

TARIFF ADVISORY BOARD—IRON AND STEEL DUTIES

Mr. CANTLEY:

What are the names of the persons or corporations comprising the 350 parties stated by the Minister of Finance as having appeared before or appealed to the tariff advisory board against any increase in the iron and steel duties or any consequences of the presentation to the tariff advisory board on behalf of the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company, Limited, and the Dominion Iron and Steel Company Limited, May 26, 1926?

Mr. ROBB: As regards this question, I would direct the attention of the house and of my hon. friend to the fact that I did not make the statement attributed to me in this question. I have here a memorandum of what I actually said, as reported at page 3425 of Hansard. This is what I said:

> The government has referred this steel inquiry to the tariff advisory board. Some 350 other firms throughout Canada have said, "We want to be heard on this; we are interested. We employ more labour in the steel and iron industry than do the two large steel industries, and we want to be heard."

If my hon. friend will correct his question to conform to what I really did say I can table the information forthwith.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question as amended is answered and the answer is tabled.

The answer follows:

The following persons, firms or corporations have at some time or other communicated with the tariff advisory board—either by answering a questionnaire or by voluntarily submitting memoranda or briefs—as indicating that they were interested in the original applications respecting the duties on iron and steel, filed by the Algoma Steel Corporation and the British Steel Corporation, or in the iron and steel applications related thereto:
