House of Commons Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT

Friday, May 4, 1928

The house met at three o'clock.

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY

BEAUHARNOIS POWER COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): My hon. friend asked yesterday whether an application had been made by the Beauharnois Power Company to the International Joint Commission or had been referred by the government to that tribunal. The answer to both questions is in the negative.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) asked yesterday with respect to an order of the house passed for a return of certain documents relating to applications for the construction of a dam between lake St. Francis and lake St. Louis.

Mr. CAHAN: I meant to say "canal". It, I think, is misreported.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Probably it is the same order. I am advised by the Department of Railways and Canals that its portion of the return has already been made, and by the Department of Public Works that its portion of the return will be made by that department next week. I am sorry to have to inform my hon. friend that the word in Hansard is "dam." I know my hon. friend did not intend to use that word.

ALLEGED POLITICAL PARTISANSHIP

APPOINTMENT OF MR. CHARLES CROCKETT COMMISSIONER TO INVESTIGATE CHARGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley) asked yesterday with regard to a return relating to a commission investigating charges of political partisanship against public employees in the province of Nova Scotia. I am advised that the return is ready for signature and that it will be brought down by the minister on Monday.

TECHNICAL EDUCATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. B. ADSHEAD (East Calgary): There is a press despatch in the morning papers stating that a delegation waited upon the Prime Minister yesterday in regard to technical education and that the Prime Minister intimated that as certain of the prairie provinces and Prince Edward Island had not participated in the grant until several years after it was provided, it was the intention of the government to extend the grant to Saskatchewan, Alberta and some of the other provinces. Is that the intention of the government?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: With respect to grants for technical education the government has under consideration a policy similar to that adopted with respect to grants for road and highway construction at the time those grants expired under the statute by which they were provided. That is to say, where provinces up to the present have not made use of the opportunity which they have had the government will be prepared to consider extending the time for them. I think my hon. friend may rely upon the extension being considered favourably.

SCATARIE ISLAND MARINE SIGNALS

On the orders the day:

Mr. J. A. MACDONALD (Richmond-West Cape Breton): I wish to call the attention of the house—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): I should like to ask my hon. friends opposite if this ovation is an expression of goodwill and if it comes from them as a result of my having defeated the chief Liberal whip in 1925.

I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to an article which appears in the Halifax Chronicle under date of May 1st. It says:

The jagged rocks of Scatarie island, or its adjacent promontories, have claimed another victim. The Dutch steamer Callisto, 2,660 tons register, is a total loss, and its crew, estimated at from 25 to 30 men, have gone to the bottom of the Atlantic.

Deck hatches, life boats, a life boat, badly battered, and the nude body of seamen were washed up on the shores of Main-a-Dieu and Scatarie, this afternoon. Parts of the deck and other paraphernalia found along the shores, told only too plainly the fate that had met the Dutch vessel, bound probably for Sydney or Louisburg to load bunker.

I should like to ask the minister as to the nature and condition of the signals on Scatarie island. I notice in the article a statement made by Mr. Burke, a well known Main-a-Dieu fisherman, that in that vicinity some five or six ocean-bound vessels have been wrecked and that in a good many instances the whole crews have been lost. In one instance, in 1926, five men went down. I claim, and this man, Mr. Burke, claims, that these men could have been saved.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask the hon. gentlemen to come to his question.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Is it the intention of the government to place proper signals on the western coast on Scatarie island? I would also state that a seaman, Mr. James Burke of Main-a-Dieu—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): —I stated that these accidents could have been avoided if proper storm signals had been placed at that point.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman has stated his question. He cannot go beyond his question based on the article.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): The seamen cannot hear the present fog whistle and there is no gun on the island. In thick, heavy weather the sound of the fog whistle cannot be heard in a westerly direction, two miles west of the island. Everyone of these ships could have been saved if proper storm signals had been provided.

Mr. SPEAKER: Having called the attention of the government to what has happened and having put his question, I think the hon. gentleman might now resume his seat.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Is it the intention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to hold an investigation into this matter and if the facts as reported are correct, will his department see that the proper signals are given for the guidance of ships going in that direction?

[Mr. J. A. Macdonald.]

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): The question raised by my hon. friend is certainly one that should be looked into. I will undertake to secure all the necessary information in regard to the matter and I can assure him that the department as well as the government are always anxious to take all possible precautions to protect fishermen and navigators. We are endeavouring to do the best we can but if there is something else we can do, I am quite prepared to do it.

RADIO—CANCELLATION OF LICENSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (North Winnipeg): May I ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin) when the house may expect him to table the correspondence relating to the cancellation of the radio license held by the International Bible Students Association?

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): I think that the copies have been completed and sent to the Department of the Secretary of State, and I expect to be in a position to table the correspondence shortly, probably on Monday.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MORNING SITTINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. P. BANCROFT (Selkirk): I would like to ask if the government intend to begin morning sittings of the house next week, and whether it is considered advisable to suspend the eleven o'clock rule for the balance of the session.

An hon. MEMBER: And sit on Sundays.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The government has not yet considered the points which my hon. friend mentions, but it may do so in the course of a short time.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON FISHERIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. B. SHORT (Digby-Annapolis): I would like to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin) when we may expect the report of the royal commission on fisheries. Some two weeks ago the minister promised that it would be tabled last week. Another week has passed and we have heard nothing about it. The session is pretty well advanced; we should like to have a discussion upon the report, and I think it is desirable that it should be tabled at the earliest possible moment.

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): I am informed that the report is completed, and I shall be in a position to table it probably on Monday or Tuesday.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Public Works—Ottawa—greenhouse, $27,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What is the explanation of this item?

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): This is a revote. It is intended to provide a greenhouse and potting shed either in Major Hill park or on parliament hill to replace the greenhouse now located in Major Hill park. The chief architect reports that the present greenhouse is past repair, and that the woodwork has become so badly decayed that to renew it would mean practically rebuilding the superstructure. The greenhouse is also too small to meet the gardener's requirements, which consist of propagating bulbs and plants for the parks and supplying ferns, palms, and so forth for parliamentary functions. He suggests the building of a palm house with two greenhouse units and a potting shed, but that the present requirements may be met by the building of one greenhouse and potting shed. When the full arrangements are completed the greenhouse situated near the supreme court building and which is in very bad condition, will be removed.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Would it not be possible to take care of all this work at the Central experimental farm? What is the necessity for having a greenhouse in Major Hill park? Could we not save money by concentrating all this work at the farm?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am afraid that that suggestion would hardly be practicable in view of the distance of the farm from the parliament buildings.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Would the minister explain why it is impracticable?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Perhaps my hon. friend did not hear me. I said on account of the distance.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister must know that commercial houses have the means for carrying their stuff much longer distances than that.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Oh yes, but it would necessitate the transferring of it.

Mr. CHAPLIN: You would save two overheads.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The location of the greenhouse which is to be replaced has always been in Major Hill park.

Mr. McQUARRIE: You are doing away with the greenhouse near the supreme court building?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. McQUARRIE: My suggestion is that they both be done away with. The distance from Major Hill park to the farm is not very great, and it is well known that most greenhouses are situated out in the country, not in the city. Vancouver gets its supply of flowers and shrubs and all that kind of thing at a considerable distance from the city. The nurserymen have found it economical to locate their greenhouses outside the city.

Mr. BARBER: This vote is apparently for just one unit. What is the estimated total cost of completion?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is the total cost of what is now proposed.

Mr. BARBER: I thought the minister said this was for one unit.

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is something in the suggestion of my hon. friend from New Westminster as to the location. This is a revote, and perhaps the reason why the work was not undertaken a year ago was because of this question of location. We have not been able to decide definitely what is the very best location. That question is still under consideration, and I shall be glad to bear in mind the representations made by my hon. friend, but I do not want to lead him to believe that any suggestion of the kind he has made has been favoured in the past.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Has there been any money spent on this proposition?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Then it seems to me the minister had better reconsider the matter. Having several greenhouses run independently seems to me a waste of money. You could save a lot of overhead by having them all in the one place. The suggestion of the hon. member from New Westminster looks to me a very good one. I think it is the common sense thing to do.

Mr. GARLAND (Carleton): Is this to replace the greenhouse immediately west of the parliament buildings?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is to replece the one in Major Hill park.

Mr. GARLAND (Carleton): If we place a few more hotels and greenhouses in Major Hill park there will be little of the park left.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What is the estimated cost of upkeep?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is difficult to say. In all probability the upkeep of this greenhouse will not be greater than that of the present structure, and certainly the cost of maintenance will not be exceeded.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What is the cost of upkeep of the present greenhouse?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is not kept separate from the cost for repairs of the other government buildings in the city.

Mr. McQUARRIE: How many men are employed in connection with the greenhouse?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The men who look after the greenhouses are on the staff of the superintendent of all the government buildings in this city.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What is the area of this particular greenhouse?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have not the size.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Surely there are plans for an expenditure of $27,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The plans are not yet out.

Mr. CHAPLIN: When the minister submits a vote of $27,000 for a greenhouse he ought to be able to tell the committee its dimensions. That appears to me to be a reasonable question.

Mr. ELLIOTT: We are judging the cost by the cost of other greenhouses constructed by the department at the experimental farm and at Rideau Hall.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How many other greenhouses are there in separate locations like this; how long are they expected to last; what shape are they in? It seems to me that this is an opportunity for co-ordination. A small greenhouse cannot be run profitably. The major cost of this greenhouse will be the fuel necessary to heat it and the wages of special men to run it, because unskilled men around the building cannot run this or any other greenhouse. I have one of my own and I know what I am talking about. It seems to me foolish for the minister to ask for a vote of $27,000 for a greenhouse of which he cannot tell us the size. I think with his usual courtesy he will allow this item to stand until he had secured the necessary information.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Perhaps my hon. friend was not present when I read the statement as to the necessity of replacing the old greenhouse.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Yes. That was the reason for my questions.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I would not have thought so. My hon. friend of course realizes that the cost of heating will not be more than for the old greenhouse.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That is admitted.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is to replace the worn-out structure.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I agree with the minister that it will cost no more to run this greenhouse where he proposes to put it than it did to run the old one last year. But I want an improvement. If he is going to build a new greenhouse let him put it where it can be run with the surplus heat generated for the other greenhouse. That is the point the minister misses.

Mr. SPENCE: When this vote was up last session I opposed it vigorously. The minister was then asked as to the size of the proposed structure, and he said it would be about 25 by 60 feet. A greenhouse of this size should not cost $27,000. I know something about the cost of construction, for unfortunately I have a greenhouse myself. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) has made a good suggestion, that these units should be co-ordinated. The old greenhouse should be remodelled and placed in a more convenient location so that delicate plants could be distributed from it without too much cost. There is no need of a greenhouse in Major Hill park. It is a bleak place and it will always be difficult to maintain the temperature of the greenhouse at the right point. As the minister has not the plans and cannot give the committee any information, I move:

That this item be reduced by $10,000, and that the old greenhouse be remodelled and used until the minister makes up his mind what he will do with it.

This will reduce the vote to $15,000, a sum sufficient to build two greenhouses of the dimensions that he speaks of.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Was this money voted last year and not spent?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. SPENCE: I do not see how any minister can expect to get this vote through, knowing as little as he does about the business. A year ago he had no plan to submit to the committee, and now he comes back as per usual without any information.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think my hon. friend has not yet clearly understood what is intended by this vote. True, we have not the plans and specifications. Certain changes in the local buildings at the present time are partly responsible for the location not having yet been settled, but this will be considered, and my hon. friend may rest assured that this greenhouse will be located in the most desirable spot. No doubt both my hon. friends have a great deal of experience with regard to the construction of greenhouses, but I can assure them that a larger greenhouse than has been suggested by either of them will be necessary to meet the requirements of the parliament buildings. All we are aiming at is the substitution of a new building for an old and worn out one. The new building will provide better facilities and it has been urgently demanded. We are not proceeding precipitately in this matter. For a number of years this demand has been made, the building being absolutely required. I do not know that there is any further information that I can give. My hon. friends know that for less money a suitable building to replace the present one could not be constructed.

Mr. CHAPLIN: If the minister could give us some idea of the size of the greenhouse we could tell whether it could be constructed for less or not; but he does not give us any information.

Mr. ELLIOTT: When the plans are completed public tenders will be called for, and the lowest tender will be accepted. That is a safeguard against the payment of any undue price. My hon. friends may have no worry on that score.

Amendment (Mr. Spence) negatived: yeas, 31; nays, 52.

Ottawa—improvement of square west of post office, $30,000.

Mr. STEVENS: Is this the first vote for the improvement of the square west of the post office?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is the first vote, but my hon. friend understands that it is for the improvement of the square after the removal of the buildings, including cleaning up and putting the square into proper shape.

Mr. STEVENS: I do not want to inconvenience the minister, but I will ask two questions: First, out of what vote is the cleaning up of the present work being paid? Secondly, will the minister explain what this vote is to be used for?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The cleaning up going on at present is to be paid for out of the proceeds of the removal of the building. We are receiving something over $8,000 by way of salvage from the removal of the buildings, and what is now being done in the way of cleaning up is being provided for out of that.

Mr. STEVENS: The minister has not answered the second question; I will add a third to it. How is this going to be spent, and why is the money not spent out of the grant to the Federal District Commission?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is not part of the Federal District Commission's work; the section west of the post office is not under the jurisdiction of the commission.

Mr. STEVENS: Then we are to understand that some half a million we voted last year, and this $30,000—and undoubtedly more money will be spent on this improvement scheme—are all in addition to the statutory vote of $3,000,000 voted a few days ago?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The statutory vote of $3,000,000 relates to the Federal District Commission. This is not under the commission.

Mr. STEVENS: It is in addition?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. HOCKEN: What work will be done with this vote? Is it proposed to use it to pay for the removal of the present post office?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Not at all.

Mr. HOCKEN: Is it merely to clean up the spot and put some grass on it?

Mr. ELLIOTT: As the work progresses the department will be able to decide better as to what will be required. At present the estimate is for a considerable amount of paving, running to about 4,000 yards at $4 a yard. That represents $16,000. The pavement will be the main part of the work

Then there will be grading, estimated at $4,000, and new sidewalks, $1,440, besides drainage, surface drains, manholes, catch-basins electric light poles and other items running to, say, $5,000. That is our best estimate.

Mr. HOCKEN: When the work is completed, is it proposed to make the spot a parking station for the people of Ottawa as the present plaza is?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, that is not the intention.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What is the idea of paving 4,000 yards at $4 a yard? That is a considerable item.

Mr. STEVENS: That is so the street cars can turn easily.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Four thousand yards at $4 a yard represents altogether too high a figure; the estimate is entirely wrong.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If we can get it done for less we will do so.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I hope it will be done by contract. I know some people who would like to have that job at $4 a yard.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): There is an old expression which has been often used, referring to persons spending money like drunken sailors, and I think it is applicable to this government in view of the way they are now seeking to spend the money of the people of this country. Tens of thousands of dollars have been spent tearing down a city block, and now $30,000 is required to cover that area with concrete in order to add to the general appearance of these parliament buildings and to beautify the city of Ottawa. In proposing an expenditure of this kind the government are giving another example of their absolute disregard for the needs of the people of Canada in those hundreds of places throughout the country which have inadequate accommodation both as to post offices and otherwise. The government are showing no concern in matters of public health and other questions of vital interest; there is no money for such things, but they can tear down a perfectly good city block in Ottawa and now ask for $30,000 to clean up that little bit of land consisting of only about a quarter of an acre. That sum would clean up about fifty acres of the most heavily timbered land in British Columbia. Therefore I am going to move, Mr. Chairman that this item be reduced to $25,000.

[Mr. Elliott.]

Mr. PECK: May I ask the area of this piece of land?

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): Is there any plan of the proposed alterations or improvements?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): Could we have a look at it? This sum of $16,000 for putting in a few little paths astonishes me. This is a small piece of land, and I do not see where $16,000 can be spent in that way.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is the estimate of the chief architect.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What is the area of the land?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The area which it is proposed to pave is 4,000 square yards.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What are the dimensions of the plot?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not know that I can give my hon. friend the exact area of the plot.

Mr. STEVENS: Why not make it a nice green grass plot; that will cost about one-tenth or one-twentieth of this amount and will have a much more pleasing effect. The only excuse I can see for this amount is to provide for a job which should be done by the Ottawa Electric Railway. I have before me an item which reads, "Certain property described as part of lot 27 south on Wellington street" but the minister has not extended the price or the size.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is not settled yet.

Mr. STEVENS: Can the minister not tell me the area?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Only the area it is proposed to pave.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Will the minister say whether there was a contract for demolishing the buildings?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: And the government received so much for the salvage?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: When the contract was drawn, why was not some arrangement made to have these people take the other stuff that was there when they took the salvage? You let them tear down the buildings for salvage and leave all their rubbish, while we must spend this money to clean it up. Did not the contract for salvage contain anything which would provide for the mess to be cleaned up?

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend knows very well that when several buildings are being removed, after they are taken away it is desirable to make your own levels yourself, rather than leave it to the parties who removed the buildings.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I could understand that answer if each individual owner of property demolished his own building, but the government made a contract with one firm to look after all the salvage, for which the government received so much, and the mess they left was nothing more or less than a crime They took away all the stuff that was any good and no provision was made to have them take away the rubbish, which should have been looked after when the arrangement was made.

Mr. HOCKEN: That will provide another contract.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It means that another contract will be given in order to spend a little more money.

Mr. PECK: I have not yet received an answer to my question; I want to know the area of this land, and if the minister does not know let him say so.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have not the area of the land, but I can obtain it.

Mr. STEVENS: Give us the dimensions.

Mr. BRADY: I have waited for a day or two in order to get the proper orientation with regard to these estimates, and I am thoroughly convinced that the people throughout Canada who are building up this country feel disgusted and ashamed with what the government are doing with these estimates. According to the Bureau of Statistics, during the past five years 573,854 immigrants have entered Canada, while during the same period 591,121 Canadians left for the United States.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. BRADY: I wish to bring out my point in this way: Throughout the length and breadth of this country we are pleading for the people who are building up Canada, and who are being denied even the bare necessities which will keep them in Canada. I protest against this extravagance, and I am sure that protest will be echoed by many members. We must now decide squarely—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Louder.

Mr. BRADY: I will speak louder in a moment if it is necessary. We must decide right now whether this absolute waste on matters which do not concern the well being of the country is to pass unchallenged in this house. The other day we voted $3,000,000 for the city of Ottawa, and the sum of $8,000 was mentioned for pulling down the buildings on that square. We have now $30,000 to clear it up, and when it is cleared up, I think it will simply be used for the unemployed to sit and gaze at the House of Commons. I have written to the Minister of Public Works, I have presented appeals for necessary works throughout my great constituency, I have gone many hundreds of miles that I might get the exact facts to put before the minister, and what has been done? The voice of the common people, that the Liberal party repeatedly say is the voice they listen to, is not heard when these estimates are being prepared or discussed. Provision is rightly made for legitimate expenditures in the great province of Quebec but to-day there is nothing short of tyranny in the handling of questions affecting the interests of the people of western Canada.

I shall read a letter that I wrote to the minister when I presented to him a statement of the necessary public works, supported by his own federal engineer and supplemented by requests from large representative bodies. What was the result? I do not know yet whether we shall get even a fraction of what has been asked; but I say this that any government that does not give consideration to the legitimate needs and wants of this country can only have one ending, and that is that the people will have enlightenment enough to put in a constructive government when the hour of voting comes. Here is the letter which I wrote to the minister:

> I most earnestly request that some provision be made in the supplementary estimates for the following necessary public works in the constituency of Skeena, which are appended to this letter.
> None of the works and improvements I present in this report are brought forward but in strict accord with the legitimate needs of the localities concerned.
> As the minister must be aware the crying need throughout western Canada, the latest to be developed among the provinces, is good roads and wharves, in brief, transportation facilities.
> Where roads and wharves are lacking, and where either or both are not kept in proper repair, transportation is handicapped and communities and settlements suffer.
> I am well aware of the fact that the federal government of public works has to look after the needs, not of one constituency or of one province, but of the whole of Canada. Conceding this, still I feel that through lack of knowledge of conditions in the Skeena country, progress is retarded, settlement is checked, settlers are losing heart and abandoning a country the finest in Canada. The government of a nation that has a sense of its dignity and responsibility, should realize that the interests of Canada, its people, its future, are at stake, and the Department of Public Works should be above all politics and all parties.

Now, sir, as you are aware, the appropriation for the Prince Rupert floats and the Stewart wharf were tabled in this house, and yet, despite the fact that trade and commerce have almost doubled in both these places since these appropriations were made, these necessary works have not been done; in fact the appropriations were withdrawn.

Am I right in thinking that their withdrawal was due to politics?

Surely, sir, when you consider the justice of my demands you will not hesitate to put into the supplementary estimates for the present year the small sums which will give relief to these districts, and at the same time add to the revenues of the country.

Appended I present a list of the most necessary public works for the large constituency I represent. Those marked with an asterisk have the approbation of the federal engineer resident in Victoria; the others are as necessary, and, I trust the minister will see that money be provided in the supplementary estimates for that purpose.

Mr. Chairman I have here on my table a whole series of letters and petitions from these people, asking for a few dollars to construct a wharf to enable the people to carry on their legitimate vocations; and I have received the cold shoulder. The life of our people and the future of our young Canadians are at stake, and they are greater than your greenhouses and your parks and your squares; and I make an appeal to-day for these things for which we have asked. I am sure that the people of Canada are well aware that this government is falling down. When we find our people departing from this country, and the government, which is but the servant of the people, playing hide and seek with the destinies of our sons and our daughters, I say, Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN: I am sure my hon. friend will not complain if I refer him to the rule which says all discussions must be relevant to the matter before the committee.

Mr. BRADY: All right, Mr. Chairman. My feelings are deeper than I have words to express.

Mr. STEVENS: That is relevant.

Mr. BRADY: Where there are legitimate reasons for carrying on work already done in our cities, our harbours and our ports, that is all right and I have no objection; but when I find that in many parts of this country where facilities are necessary to hold the people, the necessary encouragement is not given them to remain. I think it is time that we entered a formal protest against all unnecessary expenditures and turned attention to those that are absolutely essential.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that for many reasons I am going to support the amendment. Members on the other side of the house, as well as the chairman, talk about what is relevant to this subject. We thought we had voted money for the beautification of Ottawa. But when we study the question we find that there are two or three different votes with practically the same object. If you want to find out what the beautification of Ottawa means and what it is costing the country, all you need to do is to walk around the canal and see what is being done. I considered that that was all a question of beautifying Ottawa, but it will be found that part of the work comes under railways and canals. That part of the work of beautifying Ottawa has been done in the following way: They have taken down an earth bank along the canal in order to put up a permanent cement wall. The earth has been thrown into the canal and for a time two or three men with shovels were throwing it out. I believe the water is now to be let into the canal and then dredges will be used to remove the earth. This is beautifying Ottawa at the expense of the country. We are willing to spend money but we are not willing to waste money, and we want the people of Ottawa and the country to understand that.

In the same way we believed that we were voting money for a park. We are told by the minister that on one side of the road the park is not under the Federal District Commission but that on the other side it is to be under the commission. The government should get this question straightened out and tell us what we are voting for. Perhaps it is a question of slipping through a vote here and another there but there is no question that this is a waste of money. Last night under the pretence of repairing the citadel at Quebec we voted $150,000 and there was a waste of money there. This appropriation is also, I believe, an absolute waste of money and when we are asking for things that are important we find that the money is being used to throw earth from the bank into the channel of a canal, water being let in and then a dredge brought along to take the earth out again.

As soon as parliament began some time ago to discuss the question of water the city got busy and hired an engineer. I think after the amendment is carried quite enough money will remain in this appropriation to cover the levelling of the site. My opinion is that by this vote the government is simply splitting the city of Ottawa into two sections or making two cities of it. It is making a paved square which the people from one part of the city will never cross in the hot summer, if we have such in Ottawa, or in the cold weather. The government is absolutely destroying the city and doing it for one purpose, namely to glorify and keep in power the King government.

Mr. CHAPLIN: A few minutes ago I asked the minister to give us the area of the piece of property which they have acquired and on which this vote is to be expended, but he is a little short of information. He tells us that the proposition is to pave four thousand square yards within the property or around it. From what I know of the property—and we pass it every day—four thousand square yards constitute practically the whole property and consequently the whole of it is going to be paved. Is the committee prepared to spend this vote of $30,000 and $8,000 of salvage on a proposition of that kind in Ottawa? The proposal of the minister is simply absurd, nothing more and nothing less.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I apparently have not made myself clear with regard to the $8,000 of salvage. We were paid the $8,000. We did not pay it.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I understand that quite well.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend was adding the two together.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The government have been paid $8,000 for salvage. I presume with that $8,000 they can do something; or does that money go into the treasury?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: And $30,000 is the money to be spent?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That explains the matter but my remark still stands regarding the foolishness and inappropriateness of this. If these improvements are to be made around Sparks street, as the plan we have shows, the Ottawa Street Railway or somebody else should pay for them or part of them.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister may be able to get his vote through but my hon. friends had better not make such a row or it will probably be delayed more. My hon. friends are entitled to state their points of view; I am entitled to state my objection to this vote and I propose to do so. My hon. friends cannot get anything simply by calling "carried". This is an absurd vote. This appropriation of $30,000 is wasted money. It is in addition to what we have already voted for Ottawa. After what we have heard this square should be paid for out of the $3,000,000 appropriation and the government should not come back and ask us to vote more money in drips and drops as they are doing.

Mr. MALONEY: I should like to ask the Prime Minister if the immediate destruction of the post office building comes within the scope of his scheme of beautification, and if the destruction is not immediate, when he proposes starting to tear down that building.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is not the intention to tear down the post office for some years at any rate.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): Do I understand that a contract was entered into for the removal of those buildings?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): Has the minister a copy of it?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): Is it not customary in connection with the removal of buildings, to have the debris removed, that is, to have the property left in a reasonably clean condition? Any business man of acumen would have a contract drawn up to that effect and therefore a large portion of the expenditure which is now being made for the removal of the debris would not be necessary. Every business man making a contract for the removal of a building requires that the site shall be left in a reasonably clean and proper condition so that all he has to do is to erect his building without having to remove rubbish and other stuff left by the contractor. If a contract was made, why was a clause of that kind not inserted?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It was in January, I think, and the ground was all covered with snow and ice at the time of the removal of the buildings. There was in the contract a clause such as my hon. friend suggests. Tenders were called for and a contract was entered into, the highest tenderer being given the contract.

Mr. ADSHEAD: The highest or the lowest?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The highest. We asked how much they would give for the buildings which they were to remove. At the time they finished removing the buildings it was impossible, on account of the frost, ice and snow, to level the site. Part of the debris was removed by the contractor and then an arrangement was made by him allowing us $700, the department to do the levelling themselves as soon as the frost was out of the ground.

Mr. STEVENS: Were these public tenders?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes; they were advertised.

Mr. STEVENS: Who got the contract?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The Betcherman Company.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): When the grant for the Federal District Commission was before the house a few days ago, the Prime Minister presented a plan which I think we all understood covered and included the work that was to be done by the commission, and on that plan I see included this particular area, and no paving is shown on the plan. It is simply a matter of shrubbery, grass and a few paths. Has this plan been departed from, and if so, why has the change been made?

I want to say that from time to time in the past few years I have endeavoured to get an extension of the rural mail delivery or some other comparatively inexpensive service for the people of the constituency I represent, and I have been unable to get these essential services which would be so valuable to the people of my constituency. Yet here we are asked to vote $3,000,000 one day, and now $30,000, and further sums in connection with this square. It does seem to me that we are losing our sense of proportion, and that we are not giving our attention to the matters that should really have our serious consideration, and that we are spending these moneys unnecessarily. For these reasons I am strongly in favour of the amendment. If this area were converted into a grass plot, it seems to me that would be very much better than paving. One can scarcely see how so much paving on this small area could possibly be required, unless it is to be converted into a parking area.

Mr. BOYS: Yesterday afternoon the minister informed the committee that he had received about one hundred applications for public buildings throughout various parts of Canada, and he informed me that he would be able to give me a list of the places from which the requests had come, together with the estimated cost. I was wondering if he had that list ready yet.

[Mr. Adshead.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: I certainly have not. Did my hon. friend expect that I would have it this afternoon?

Mr. BOYS: Frankly, I would have thought that a clerk could have got it ready without the slightest difficulty, but perhaps that is because I have not a proper comprehension of the work entailed. I hope the minister will agree to let me have the list before his estimates are concluded.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Has there been any departure from the plan of the federal commission as to this particular area? The minister's statement does not seem to correspond with the plan submitted to the house.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It does not correspond entirely with the plan. The plan my hon. friend refers to has been suggested since the estimates were published, and it is possible that there may be a variation which will render less paving necessary than was contemplated by the architect as absolutely necessary. But the estimate we have before us is the best estimate we can give as to the expenditure, in order to make the area in keeping with the general scheme.

Mr. BOYS: Is it not part of the Federal District Commission's scheme as a whole?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This part is under the Dominion government entirely. The other part of the federal scheme is under the commission.

Mr. BOYS: I was given to understand when this matter was under discussion before, that one of the reasons for this plan was to get a driveway leading from the canal up to the parliament buildings, perhaps not in the exact location shown in the plan, but at all events as part of the scheme. If that is so, I do not see why this work has not been done by the federal commission, and out of the appropriation they are getting, which surely was large enough for the purpose. Are we to understand that the country is not only to provide the sum already voted, but that in addition this square is being taken over by the Public Works department, and that more money will be spent on it too? I can understand that this plan, as the minister says, is not absolutely accurate, but I feel confident that I am right when I say we were told that the intention was that there should be a driveway continued from the canal and approaching this building from the southeast. Am I not right in that?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. BOYS: Then that driveway must come beside or through the square in question, and surely it forms part of the general scheme of the commission. If that be so, why is the work not left to the federal commission?

While I am on my feet, I would like to say that if it is the intention to pave that area, that does seem to me to be a serious mistake. What is the sense of doing that? I thought it was to be a park, and that is what we all understood. The idea of putting a cement square right in the heart of Ottawa, which is hot enough in the summer time as it is, is absurd. If we want to improve that area, surely it would be much better to have it laid with grass, with perhaps a fountain or something of that kind. I can hardly believe that the federal commission should contemplate paving it.

Mr. STEVENS: And perhaps use boiled tar.

Mr. BOYS: We have had some experience with creosote and boiled tar in connection with the square in front of the Chateau. I think the minister ought to give us some more definite idea of what is intended, unless he expects us to vote this sum blindly. We do not know what the size is, we do not know what the intention is, we do not know whether it is part of the general scheme, or whether it is something being undertaken by the Public Works department apart altogether from the general scheme for which we have already voted a very large sum of money. The minister ought to give us some information. This plan was passed around the house, and I certainly did think at the time that it was to apprise us as to the intention of the Federal District Commission, but now when we want to use the plan in connection with this vote, although this area is shown on the plan as part of the federal commission's scheme, we are told that the commission has nothing to do with it, and that it comes under the Public Works department. Why should they be separated unless it is to get more money?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I thought I had made it clear to my hon. friend that this expropriation of buildings west of the post office has been carried on by the Department of Public Works, and not by the federal commission.

Mr. BOYS: The expropriation, certainly.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, and the ownershinp of the property will be in the Public Works department as soon as the values are ascertained. The ownership is really vested in the department now.

Mr. STEVENS: What was offered by the government for this property?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Speaking from memory, something in the neighbourhood of $600,000.

Mr. STEVENS: Is that all?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, but I want to say that these plans are more or less tentative. The plans of the federal commission will be followed as far as they can be followed by the government in connection with making this part of the general scheme, but I am bound to state to my hon. friend that the expenditure here is being borne by the Department of Public Works, and the work is being done by the department, and not by the commission.

Mr. BOYS: Are we to understand that the tearing down of the Russell block comes under the Public Works department too?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, that is federal commission work. The part which the Public Works department is doing is the part in the block in which the post office is situated.

Mr. STEVENS: And we pay that $600,000 out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. STEVENS: Mr. Chairman, here is an amazing situation. There is a good deal of laughing on the other side; apparently this is a joke. The other day the Prime Minister made a very long and apparently a very carefully prepared speech in which he presented to the house what he described as an elaborate scheme for the beautification of this capital and to add to the dignity of parliament hill. In presenting that scheme he rather appealed to the house for support on the ground that wisdom dictated that a large sum should be appropriated, even though it was to be spent over a period of years. Therefore he introduced a separate bill for a grant of some three million dollars.

But what are the facts? We have this bill for three million dollars to be handed over to the Federal District Commission. In addition to that we have a prospective vote of $600,000 for a property which is part of the scheme; we have this paving vote for $30,000; we have a vote of $500,000 or more for the New Edinburgh mills which I understand were offered for sale a couple of years ago for $250,000; we have an extra sum of $100,000 for Rideau Hall above the $60,000 that has been voted in the last two years for improvements and maintenance and furnishings, and we have an extra sum of $150,000 above what we were asked to vote last year for the citadel in Quebec for gubernatorial purposes—a total of $4,800,000. Unquestionably this huge total will be added to by other votes similar to what we are now considering for the purpose—well, some say, of beautifying Ottawa, but I think, Mr. Chairman, it is simply to cater to the extravagant social spirit of this city.

I hold in my hand the plan. It shows a green plot with trees on it in the very area for which the minister is asking a vote of $30,000 for paving. Why in the name of common sense should we pave this area and later break it up and plant trees there if we conform to this plan? The whole proposal seems to me preposterous. I wholly agree with what my friend from Kingston (Mr. Ross) said a moment ago, that by our vote in relation to the Ottawa improvement scheme we are driving a wedge through the very heart of this city and dividing it into two sections, and in this way actually destroying its symmetry. We find that for years the drift of business has been towards Bank street, and now the Prime Minister comes along with this scheme. It is not the town planning scheme which was prepared by experts a few years ago at an expense of sixty or seventy thousand dollars. It is a scheme that the Prime Minister has taken into his particular care and presented to parliament. I repeat, the scheme is not in harmony with the natural growth of this city. It is going to divide the city into two sections. It was bad enough before when business was carried through by the Russell block and the buildings on the other side of the street; but now business will go down the Bank street section, and the Rideau street section will be neglected and depreciated in value. I am confident that the taxpayers of Ottawa as yet do not quite understand just what the effect will be when the Russell block is cleared away.

I am opposed to this vote of $30,000 as an attempt to extract from the exchequer under—I will not say false pretenses; perhaps that would be too strong a term—under a misapprehension by parliament and the people, because we fully understood that the three million dollars vote the other day, which we thought excessive, was to cover all the necessary expenses of this scheme. Let me recapitulate. In adition to that parliament is voting at least six hundred thousand dollars for this property which, mark you, is the offer by the government, but experience justifies us in asserting that the cost will be in excess of this figure by at least ten or twenty per cent; five hundred thousand dollars or more for the New Edinburgh mills, and the minister is coming to parliament in his supplementaries for an additional sum to remodel the saw mill for the purpose of turning it into an office for the statistical branch. In addition to that we have these extra sums for Rideau Hall. Surely, Mr. Chairman, it is time that parliament seriously faced its duty here and insisted that the government should curtail these extravagances. If the Prime Minister had come to parliament this session and asked for half a million dollars to proceed with the general scheme of development of this capital city, I do not think there would have been any very great objection; but he actually asks for four or five million dollars, with no assurance whatever that this will be the end of the expenditure. This, I submit, is carrying the matter altogether too far.

It may seem almost ridiculous to drop from four or five million dollars down to eight thousand dollars, but after all eight thousand dollars is a considerable sum. The minister gets eight thousand dollars for the buildings which are included in the purchase price of the property, and I have no doubt that they were valued at a hundred thousand dollars. Will the minister tell us? I venture to say that that is about the figure. He sells the buildings for eight thousand dollars. If I am wrong the minister will correct me, for undoubtedly he has the particulars. Not only is there this great sacrifice, but the contractor who clears away the buildings leaves hundreds of tons of debris on the site, and we are now paying seven hundred dollars to clear off that debris. Then he is going to spend thirty thousands dollars or thereabouts to improve the property.

Another complaint I have is that the vote as it appears in the estimates is entirely misleading. It reads:

Ottawa post office—addition.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend is wrong. He is referring to the item above:

Ottawa—improvement of square west of post office.

Mr. STEVENS: That is right. But there is another item "Ottawa post office—addition —$30,000" right below that. I forgot to include this vote. This too must go into the beuatification scheme?

Mr. ELLIOTT: When we reach the item I will give the particulars.

Mr. STEVENS: Will the minister answer me now; is it going into the beautification scheme?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No. This addition is for the purpose of providing a covered entrance to the post office for the vehicles that are taking the mails in and out, and for increased postal facilities.

Mr. STEVENS: It is on the property immediately to the west of the present post office, and actually connected with the property we are now discussing. The only reason for putting that cover there is to cover up what was previously the back door of the post office, which will now be fronting on this park area. So that we can add another $30,000, made necessary unquestionably by the cleaning up of the property. I submit to the committee that this is the grossest form of extravagance; there is no justification whatever for it. One half of the members sitting on the other side know in their hearts at this moment that it is an unjustifiable extravagance on the part of the government, and the only reason on earth why they are voting for it is simply to maintain in power the government they happen to be supporting at the present time.

Mr. BOYS: I have been trying to find out where the square is to be paved. I understand that the property we are discussing is bounded on the east by the post office, on the north by Wellington street, on the west by Elgin street and on the south by Rideau street, or the continuation of Sparks street. Am I to understand that the whole of that is to be paved? If that is so you are going to have cement within 66 feet of the buildings which we pass on the west side of Elgin street immediately we leave the parliament grounds. In that case you will have no driveway whatever up to the parliament buildings, which certainly we were led to believe by the Prime Minister when he made his address during the discussion of this subject. And the plan handed to us plainly shows that this is the intention. It may be that this has to be altered slightly; but is it possible that this pavement is going to continue within 66 feet—that is the ordinary width of a street—of the eastern boundary of Elgin street? In other words, when you have the improvements made along the canal and someone, driving along the driveway, wants to reach this building, he must go into Rideau street until he comes to the 66-foot strip of roadway, along which people drive to-day if they want to get to the parliament buildings. One can understand that if the driveway were to conform to the plan which has been exhibited, it would go right to the centre of the property, and at all events there would be continuity of approach to the parliament buildings from the Rideau canal driveway, up through the southeast corner. I want to find out whether it is the intention of the minister to pave the whole square. Unless you are to have motors driving over the whole of the pavement you will have no entrance at all to the parliament buildings in line with the driveway which is supposed to lead up to them. The committee should be informed on this point.

The minister says this is a tentative plan. Is it possible that the government have come to parliament for this vast sum of money without having before them a solitary plan which can be described as in any degree a definite scheme of improvement, and that the whole proposition is merely tentative? I can only say in all sincerity to the minister, if that is so—and that is the impression he leaves with the committee—it is not business, it is not common sense, it is not fair to those of us who want to take the slightest interest in the matter, to ask us to vote in this blind manner. I cannot conceive that there is any member prepared to vote this money to pave that square and not leave a driveway leading up to the buildings. The only possible excuse for the work would be a driveway up to the southeast entrance to the grounds. It would be extravagant then, although there would be some justification for it. We have asked the minister to tell us what the area is that is to be paved; and I gather, when he tells me that the boundaries of the property are as I have indicated, that it must be as I have suggested: it is going to be paved to within 66 feet of the existing buildings on Elgin street on the western side. If that is so you will not have any entrance whatever to the grounds. I do not suppose that vehicles will be able to cross it very well; there will be railings or something to stop them. For that reason they will have to drive to the 66-foot driveway.

I want to be right on this matter; I do not wish to offer any objections that have no basis in commonsense. But as the minister has presented the matter to us, I think we have taken the proper interpretation from his statement. If there is some definite scheme, does not the minister think the committee should have it? Should not the committee be given some idea of the situation, by means, for example, of some plan such as has appeared in the newspapers? This all came out in the newspapers, and I presume the government must have known the newspapers were getting it. It appeared in connection with the published address of the Prime Minister. Now we are told that the whole thing is only tentative.

Mr. ELLIOTT: As regards the width of the pavement, my hon. friend and I are absolutely in agreement. It is not to be limited to the 64 feet he speaks of.

Mr. BOYS: Is the driveway to go through the centre of this very property we are discussing?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That was not the intention at the time the estimate was prepared.

Mr. BOYS: It is the intention according to the plan.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The plan which my hon friend has in his hand is that of the Federal District Commission. The department intends to meet their views as far as it possibly can, so as to make what eventually will be a uniform scheme of beautification for the whole area that is being improved. So far as the pavement is concerned, what was contemplated was a certain amount of paving, flagstones to be laid down on a portion of it, with trees in between so as to produce the most attractive kind of park.

Mr. BOYS: I do not want to interrupt the minister, but this is such an appropriate time to ask the question that I can hardly resist. Am I to understand that there is some more definite scheme—something which is not tentative—showing exactly how this is to be paved?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is not settled as to exactly how it is to be done.

Mr. BOYS: Then it simply means that the minister has come to parliament for money, not knowing where in the world the paving is to be done, where the flagstones will be laid, or anything else in connection with the matter. When he came and asked for the money, one would have thought that an engineer or an architect would have been employed to lay the thing out in accordance with plans of the department, and that upon that basis an estimate would have been made. I can hardly imagine that the minister has come without that information. If so, he has come altogether too soon.

Mr. ELLIOTT: What we have in the estimates is the recommendation of the architect.

Mr. STEVENS: Read it.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It was made on the fifth of January, before the estimates were prepared.

Mr. STEVENS: Read it.

[Mr. Boys.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have given my hon. friend the details. The chief architect reported on the matter on January 5, 1928. He made the statement that until it was actually decided what was to be done in connection with this property, it was impossible to prepare an accurate estimate, but he considered the following items to represent the minimum cost: Pavement, 4,000 yards at $4, $16,000; grading, $4,000; new sidewalks, $1,440; drainage, surface drains, manholes, catchbasins, electric light poles and so forth, say, $5,000. This represents a total of $26,440. He provides for contingencies, $2,000, making a total of $28,440; and he suggests that a sum of $30,000 be placed in the estimates.

Mr. BOYS: Then supposing we are in a motor car at the Russell hotel corner near the post office, and we want to drive to the parliament buildings. After this contemplated work is done, what course will that car follow to reach the southeast entrance to these grounds? Must we drive in front of the Russell house along Sparks or Rideau street, and then having reached Elgin street must we turn up just as the cars do now?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No; the plan which my hon. friend has before him will show what is contemplated.

Mr. BOYS: Then I can only say that the proposition before the committee is absolutely ridiculous, because the plan shows a driveway running diagonally through this property from the corner of the driveway up to the southeast entrance to these grounds. If that were the scheme there would be some continuity to it, but the minister has told the committee that this amount is required to pave the whole of this area; he has left the impression that when the work is finished there will be nothing but pavement in that area and the driveways will remain as they are at present. If an architect has been dealing with this matter surely he must know where the driveway is to be and surely the committee should be given that information. I will ask the minister to furnish that information before the item passes.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think I have already said that if the scheme of the Federal District Commission as shown by that plan is followed, it alters the recommendation made by the architect on January 5, before that plan was drawn and before these estimates were printed. However, probably it does not much alter the actual expenditure which will be required.

Mr. BOYS: The minister makes it very plain; it simply means that his department and the Federal District Commission have not got together. In the meantime they are going to spend $30,000 to pave that whole square, and when the driveway comes through the centre of the pavement for which we are now paying that money, it will be ripped up again.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I will admit very frankly that the details of the plan have been varied since this estimate was prepared and printed, but I understand that if we act in accordance with the plan of the Federal District Commission, as my hon. friend has it before him, the cost will be approximately the sum for which we are now asking.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In the discussion which is taking place before the committee I think the house has lost sight of the decision it reached two or three years ago, at the time of the Ottawa centenary. Hon. members will recall that at that time it was suggested that a small park be constructed in the centre of the city between the post office and Elgin street and between Wellington and Sparks streets. That park was to be a contribution from the Dominion government to the city of Ottawa in connection with the centenary which was being celebrated in that year. The project was so presented to the house, and we voted the money for the purpose of constructing the square in that place. That is the square about which we are speaking this afternoon.

In connection with the properties which were to be demolished, there were some which had been purchased by a previous administration and already belonged to the government of Canada, but a few remained which were of a rather dilapidated appearance and obviously of no great value. It was felt by the present administration, having regard to the location of these buildings, that it would be much in the interest of the improvement of the surroundings of the parliament buildings to have an open square in that location. The estimate was presented to the house, which supported a vote for that purpose.

Mr. BOYS: May I not fairly say that the house thought, from the plan which was submitted, that the driveway was going through the centre of this square to the southeast entrance to the parliament grounds?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, at that time there was no talk of a driveway at all.

Mr. BOYS: The plans were handed out.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No; my hon. friend has not heard what I said or he would have understood differently. I am recalling to his mind a vote which I think he supported in this house two or three years ago to create a square—and I use the word "square" in a general sense to describe the area—between Sparks street and Wellington street, between the post office and Elgin street, which was to be known as By park, or to be associated in some way with the name of Colonel By, it being the year of the Ottawa centenary. The appropriation for that square was voted by this parliament. That involved taking down the buildings which were there and arranging for a park area in that space.

Mr. BOYS: I have no recollection of supporting any such vote.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If my hon. friend will consult Hansard he will find that I am correct in my statement, and I will be surprised if he did not support the appropriation which was made at that time. At all events, my recollection is that the appropriation was made with comparatively little opposition in parliament, although I remember that the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) did take exception to the expenditure and asked whether it was the intention of the government to tear down the post office. I recall that I answered that it was not the intention to tear down the post office, but that it was proposed to convert into a square the area I have already mentioned. Parliament voted the money for that purpose and some buildings were torn down, and part of the undertaking of the government was to have that area put into a park-like condition. At that time it was contemplated that trees would be planted and perhaps a fountain placed in the centre, with walks arranged diagonally throughout the square. Some such plan was in contemplation by the government with regard to this area and it is to complete that part of the work, which is to be carried on independently by the government as apart from the Federal District Commission, that this amount is now being requested. If hon. members, in passing by, have observed that area they will have noticed that at present there are the remains of old basements and foundations which have not been removed. Apparently the persons who salvaged the buildings made an arrangement which only involved taking away the buildings, and the amount they received was fixed accordingly. No doubt if they had been expected to remove the foundation and substitute earth for what is now stone, brick and empty space, they would have demanded a much larger sum for the undertaking.

Now may I come to the other project which is in hand. If hon. members will follow the development in the natural order of things, an order which was unforeseen at that particular time, I doubt very much if they will wish to press unduly the exceptions they are now taking to what is further planned. Last fall the government were informed that the Russell hotel was to be demolished, and the Federal District Commission which has to do with the improvement of the city came before the government and intimated that in their opinion it would be a great mistake, having regard to the future development of Ottawa, to allow another hotel building to be constructed on that site. They told us that if some steps were not taken at that time probably for all time to come it would be impossible to enlarge the open area in the heart of this city, an enlargement which is very much needed in the capital, as any one who seeks to cross the street anywhere between here and the old Russell house or the post office will soon observe. That portion of the capital is becoming more and more congested. The commission drew attention to the fact that the part we have now been discussing was going to be made into a park. They drew attention also to the fact that to the east of the Russell house there was already a park-like stretch between the Russell house and the canal, and that if the government was to acquire the Russell house property, the Dominion would then own a very large area right in the heart of the city, an area that could be developed in connection with the smaller park scheme in a way which would give the capital what was needed for better road accommodation, for a more adequate approach to the parliament buildings, for more in the way of much needed open space and, incidentally, adornment of the city itself. When this proposition was presented to the government we had to decide without delay whether or not we would authorize the commission to expropriate the Russell house property; and the expropriation was taken at the time because, as I have already said, it was the one moment at which the decision had to be made.

The commission in presenting its plan to the government has presented what my hon. friend has alluded to this afternoon, a diagram which outlines what they have in contemplation, and that outline is undoubtedly an approach connecting with the other parks in the city from the Laurier avenue bridge to the houses of parliament, very much in accordance with what was recommended by the commission which was appointed by Sir Robert Borden to plan the capital. All that was fully discussed when we were considering the proposed appropriation to the Federal District Commission.

It is true that at the moment these two matters come to be linked together, but I think it is only right that they should be kept distinct in the minds of hon. members of the house in recognizing what are the respective obligations. The government has an obligation with regard to this By park area to complete it and put it into a form to harmonize with the work done by the Federal District Commission. It is for that we are asking for this $30,000 appropriation.

Reference has been made to the post office improvement item, which comes a little lower down. When the large buildings which were in front of the post office were torn down, they did disclose a side of the post office that formerly had not been seen from the public thoroughfares; and the post office officials, I understand intimated to the Department of Public Works that they were in need of more space in the post office, and also that they wished to have that particular approach to the post office enclosed, so that in the winter months their vehicles could load under cover and without being exposed to the coldness of the winter season. Having in mind the changes that would be necessary to give additional space and to make that enclosure, the architects of the Department of Public Works estimated that a sum of $30,000 would be required. I understand that the minister has since come to the conclusion that what is required in the way of additional space can not be met adequately in the manner in which he had previously thought, and that instead of asking for the $30,000 needed to give the additional space, he intends to reduce the estimate to a smaller amount and ask only for what will be necessary to make a satisfactory enclosure for the trucks and vehicles that carry away the mail.

My hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) has brought together a number of items of expenditure. It does so happen that a good many expenditures with respect to public buildings are falling on the present administration in the meeting of public needs at this particular time, but that is simply because for the last five years, or since this administration has been in office, we have resolutely refused to meet many of the demands for much needed public buildings.

Mr. STEVENS: Will the Prime Minister permit me to say I did not quote a single item in connection with public buildings in Ottawa. I purposely excluded them, using only items applicable to the beautifying of Ottawa scheme.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend spoke of the Edwards mills property, and that is property purchased for the purpose amongst other reasons of giving accommodation, for office buildings.

Mr. STEVENS: Surely the Prime Minister does not mean that they are purchasing at $500,000, the Edwards mill property at the Rideau for the purpose of office accommodation?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The buildings are already there. The Minister of Public Works first made a complete survey of available buildings in the city, and found out that those buildings are not only more accessible but better suited to the needs of the government at the moment than any other property we can obtain in the city.

Mr. STEVENS: For which he is paying $500,000 or more.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We can discuss that item when we come to it. What I wish to make clear to the committee is that we have been criticized over and over again by hon. gentlemen opposite for continuing to pay rents to different companies in this city for space for office accommodation. No one has been stronger in his criticism of the administration in that particular than has the leader of the opposition; and he has repeatedly said that he would not only favour but would support the administration in a plan which would have regard to the government owning its buildings for accommodation of the public services, provided that was carried out in accordance with a general scheme or plan. That is precisely what the administration is seeking to do. As hon. members know, the government of Sir Robert Borden purchased property along the bank of the Ottawa river, near the supreme court, and called for plans of departmental buildings to be erected there. I think the property I speak of was acquired as long ago as 1914. The plans have been in existence ever since Sir Robert Borden's government went out of office. The present administration are taking those plans and are asking parliament to vote what is necessary to enable a section of those departmental buildings to be erected there. In order to have the buildings erected there, it is necessary to remove the temporary quarters in which some of the government offices have been placed, the offices which are located in that part of the city; among the number are included the statistical branch of the government with many valuable records. It so happens that the Edwards mills property which has been mentioned is a fireproof property, and the documents and records can be kept there under the existing arrangement, and the whole property can be put into a form which will be satisfactory at very little cost to the government and render it available for office use and for other purposes for years to come. It is for that reason, to avoid seeking some other quarters where rents will have to be paid that the government has thought it wise to ask parliament to appropriate an amount for the purchase of that property.

Mr. BENNETT: A planing mill will not be fireproof.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend will find that a large sum of money was spent when those buildings were constructed years ago. They are fireproof buildings and very much better fitted for accommodation than any other buildings we know of.

All I wish to make clear to hon. members is that if these votes are analyzed one by one the house will see that each one is justified in the circumstances which have brought it into existence. It does happen that many of them come together at the same time. As was explained in reference to the citadel at Quebec, and as will be explained later in reference to Government House at Ottawa, during the period of the war and for the succeeding years little or no expenditures were made on these premises, and they have as a consequence been allowed to run down. At some stage some government has to assume the necessary obligation, difficult as it may be, and liable to misinterpretation, as is certainly the case at the present time. We have, however, felt it a duty we owe to the country to undertake to meet this obvious obligation without further delay.

Mr. BOYS: Would the Prime Minister mind telling the committee how we shall reach the southeast entrance of these grounds supposing we have a motor car at the east end of the Russell building? I am asking him to bear in mind what has been mentioned, namely, that the whole area is to be paved.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend's question is one that I hardly expected to receive from him because after all it is a matter of a very minor detail as to just where a particular road is to run, but if I can assist him at all to visualize the plan proposed I shall be happy to do so. As I understand it, the plan which the Federal District Commission has in mind is to have a roadway that, immediately as one leaves the eastern gate of these grounds, will run directly across what is a portion or corner of the property now being cleared. It will approach a central area which will be situated in what is at the moment a part of Sparks street, here the driveway will encroach upon this park area, a part of what is now the Russell house property, a part of it will be a one-way driveway for vehicles. Having passed around one-half of the circle the driveway will continue on towards Laurier avenue bridge. Expressed in terms of coming up the other way, from Laurier avenue bridge, what the commission has planned is a driveway that will run diagonally from the canal at the point at which it passes under Laurier avenue bridge, to the eastern gate of Parliament Hill grounds, which driveway will command all the way a more or less immediate view of the main tower of the parliament buildings.

Mr. BOYS: That shows that the pavement will have to be ripped up later on when the improvement is to be gone on with.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have every reason to believe that the Federal District Commission is co-operating with the Department of Public Works in regard to the plans that will be worked out. There will be no duplication. Nothing will be done in the way of expenditure which will involve further changes later on.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Why should the development not be turned over to the Federal District Commission?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is exactly what will be done in large part. As I explained a moment ago, the government itself is committed to the development of that particular portion. That is an obligation which we have assumed and we are simply carrying out our part of it, but it will be carried out in connection with the improvement commission and the work they are doing. They will doubtless make the general plan, and the government will perform its part in relation thereto.

Mr. STEVENS: I desire to direct attention to the argument of the Prime Minister that he is making a great saving by securing the New Edinburgh mills for housing the Bureau of Statistics.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We will come to that vote later.

Mr. STEVENS: That point has been raised. The Prime Minister says, to use his own words, that this is to avoid getting other expensive property, so that it is to be a saving. We are paying more than $500,000 for the New Edinburgh mill property; it will cost a substantial sum to remodel the sawmill and the mill, and the only building suitable for office purposes is the office building, which is comparatively small. That means that at 4½ per cent per annum we shall pay interest to the extent of at least $22,500 on this property, taking it on a basis of $500,000. Surely the Prime Minister does not for a moment suggest that it is good business to acquire property at an interest charge of $22,500 per annum to house the Bureau of Statistics. The Prime Minister must know that is not the object at all. The object in securing the New Edinburgh mill property at $500,000 and more, is simply to acquire it, if there is an excuse at all, for the purpose of a park.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Not at all.

Mr. STEVENS: If it is not for park purposes, the expenditure is absolutely inexcusable. And by the way, I am informed that the same property was offered a year or two ago for $250,000.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I can disabuse my hon. friend's mind on that point because on behalf of the government I have tried for four or five years to secure the property and the lowest price I could get was $400,000 or $500,000.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Where is the item in the estimates?

Mr. STEVENS: I do not think it is in the estimates. Surely the hon. gentleman who has raised the objection is prepared to consider the total we are paying out in Ottawa for what I consider luxuries and extravagance.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Where is the $500,000 in the estimates?

Mr. STEVENS: It is not in the estimates.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Then how can we discuss it?

Mr. STEVENS: I am telling my hon. friend that the government has acquired a property to which they are going to move the Bureau of Statistics although they have not paid for the property and have not inserted an appropriation for it in the estimates. If there were no other reason, the one my hon. friend advances would justify our holding the committee up until the government tell us why they have bought this property without having any appropriation for it in the estimates. We should have an estimate brought before parliament showing the necessity for the expenditure. We have the same thing in connection with the property between Wellington and Sparks streets. With the exception of the notice of appropriation, it has not passed into the possession of the government. I have in my hand the minister's statement that he has acquired the property on Wellington and Sparks streets, and he does not know yet what it is going to cost. He says that he has offered $600,000 for it, but he does not know whether he will have to pay $600,000 or more, and indeed the cost may be a million. Hon. gentlemen are blindly passing these estimates and yet we are chided for holding the government up. It is suggested, because the government have not, forsooth, done their duty in telling parliament what they propose to do, that we should not discuss the matter. I want to say that I will discuss it even in the face of a decision of any authority in the house.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Go ahead and discuss it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The hon. member must observe the rules.

Mr. STEVENS: I will observe the rules to a certain point, but if there is any effort to gag the house by an improper application of the rules I will not be a party to that.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Who wants to gag my hon. friend?

Mr. STEVENS: The point is this. The government have acquired a property and have committed themselves to an expenditure of a minimum of $500,000 for the New Edinburgh property. That calls for an interest charge of $22,500 per annum at 4½ per cent. The minister informed us a moment ago—and I am not trespassing the rules any more than he is—that he proposes to bring in a supplementary estimate for a further expenditure for the New Edinburgh property for the purpose of providing accommodation for the Bureau of Statistics. Then we are told by the Prime Minister as a justification for that: Is it not better to pay $500,000 to house the Bureau of Statistics than to rent or secure property elsewhere? The Prime Minister last year brought forward the suggestion that we should go ahead with the proposed departmental buildings in Ottawa and on that occasion we gave him a vote of $500,000 to commence the erection of a building to house various branches of the public service. What have they done? All they have done so far is to lay a corner stone. Certainly we require public buildings to house the public service of Ottawa. At the present time we are paying $780,000 a year in rent—correct me if I am wrong—and this very year we are entering into new leases which will tie the hands of parliament and the government for years to come. Moreover, we are spending $4,380,000 in addition in what I claim is luxurious and unnecessary expenditure, and it commits us for fifteen years longer. Then we are chided because we bring these matters to the attention of the house.

Mr. VALLANCE: May I ask my hon. friend a question? Was the proposal for the purchase of the property in Vancouver for the hotel that was then projected submitted to this parliament when the hon. gentleman was in power?

Mr. STEVENS: It was not done when I was in power. If the committee desire to hear about that, I can tell them the whole story, as the Minister of Railways can verify. The property he refers to was bought as the result of an agreement entered into between the city of Vancouver and the Canadian Northern in 1913. The Canadian Northern was taken over by the Canadian National, and Sir Henry Thornton, on pressure from the city of Vancouver, made a revision of the agreement which was to be carried out last year. The revision was made by the city solicitor, Mr. McCrossan, with the authority of the Canadian National railways, as I think the Minister of Railways will say, with his knowledge and authority.

Mr. DUNNING: No. If we are going to get out of order this far, Mr. Chairman, I shall want to debate this subject.

Mr. STEVENS: I was only answering a question. If the minister objects—

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend must know that his last remarks are not at all correct and are not a full presentation of the facts.

The CHAIRMAN: The matter is certainly not relevant to the vote under consideration. It might properly be discussed under vote 132, which deals with public buildings generally.

Mr. STEVENS: I was only answering a question. I quite agree that it was out of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. EVANS: The Minister of Public Works stated some time ago that there were 4,000 yards to be paved, and that it was going to cost $4 a yard. I was wondering what such heavy concrete was for. As part of the beautification scheme I cannot see it at all. The price of $4 a yard would indicate that it was to be used for some very heavy work. Are we going to put up fortifications?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend, if he heard what I said, will understand that what is contemplated is making such changes in relation to the other improvements that are to be made,, as are necessary to put that square into proper condition; and when the improvements are made I think he will be able to judge whether or not the expenditure has been extravagant. He can feel assured that with a view to economy the government will watch over the details as to how much paving there is to be, and the like.

Mr. MALCOLM: I should like to make an observation in connection with this vote, because my hon. friend the member for Vancouver Centre has left an entirely false impression with regard to what he terms extravagance on the part of the government in the purchase of certain properties. The bureau of statistics comes under the department which I have the honour to administer, and one of the reasons why the building has not been erected on Wellington street, as provided for some years ago, was the problem of finding suitable quarters for the bureau, which is the first building that is to be demolished. I was consulted by the Minister of Public Works. I say frankly to the house that I was not particularly in favour of purchasing the New Edinburgh mills. The Bureau of Statistics requires 41,000 feet of space to house it properly. There was no such amount of space available except in the new building which was being erected on Wellington street, which space we could not secure for less than $1.25 per foot per annum. So we were facing an annual expenditure of over $47,000 to house the bureau in rented property. I was of the impression that the New Edinburgh mill property was an old property—

Mr. BENNETT: Over twenty years old.

Mr. MALCOLM: I quite admit that, but a building of good brick and concrete construction, and when I saw the buildings, as a manufacturer knowing something about mill property and buildings I was utterly surprised at the value of this property. I will say to my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre that he cannot replace those buildings to-day, giving the same amount of floor space, at modern construction prices, including the head office, which is a very fine building, for less than $350,000 or $400,000. The property at half a million dollars is extremely cheap when you take into consideration the fact that it comprises the whole bank of the river right down to the residence of the late Sir John A. Macdonald, "Earnscliffe." There is one building on the property which contains over 50,000 feet of floor space; I think it is 600 feet long and 60 or 70 feet wide. This building, with a reasonable amount of alteration, would provide at least temporary housing for the Bureau of Statistics for a few years, until probably at some future date a more central location can be provided for the bureau. I say to the committee quite frankly that in the first instance I was opposed to putting the Bureau of Statistics in this property because of its location, but if we were to go ahead with the buildings which were to be erected on Wellington street, I had to withdraw my objections, and I may say that they were very easily withdrawn when this property was offered to the government at the price it was. I may take the committee into my confidence further and say that the price asked for that property was not $500,000, but $750,000, and there was a very considerable amount of negotiating done before it was secured for $500,000.

There is another point. We have to find a property in which to locate what this house I believe almost unanimously supports, and that is a research laboratory in Ottawa. In order to get the national research board functioning, we had to find some quarters for them, and the offices of the New Edinburgh mills provide ideal quarters, in the opinion of the board, for them to make a start in. Another part of this building can be used as temporary quarters for the research laboratory, without any very great expense, and that will enable us to make headway in co-ordinating the research work of this Dominion without extra expenditure.

I put it to the committee frankly as a business man, not as a member of the government, that the space available in the New Edinburgh mills property will save this government, not $50,000, not $100,000, but $150,000 per annum in rentals which we would otherwise have to pay if we went out to lease property at the prices landlords are asking to-day.

My hon. friend suggests 4½ per cent. Let us take it at 5 per cent. The cost of the New Edinburgh mill property to be used by the bureau of statistics at 5 per cent would take $30,000, if we charged it all to the bureau. Suppose it takes $10,000 to paint and plaster and put the building into shape, so that the Bureau of Statistics can move in. The floors are solid, and will support heavy machinery. If you add another $5,000 for interest, this one building alone will absorb the whole amount of money chargeable to interest and really save us money on what we would have to pay if we rented any other property at the rentals asked to-day. So I feel that the committee is not ill-advised in accepting the purchase of this property, even as temporary quarters, for those who have to be turned out in order to allow the new buildings to be erected on Wellington street.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Let me ask the minister one question: Does he think the New Edinburgh mills property is a fit place in which to put the statistical branch?

Mr. MALCOLM: I think it is the best available place while our new buildings are being erected.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Mr. Chairman, the minister told us it was a fit place for temporary quarters.

Mr. MALCOLM: For several years.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The Minister of Public Works told us last night that he expected the statistical branch would be there for the next fifteen or twenty years.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I said for a number of years.

Mr. CHAPLIN: He said the branch would be there for quite a long time. That does not mean one or two years. The minister was asked if they were temporary quarters, and he said they were not to be considered as temporary.

Mr. MALCOLM: I know my hon. friend is interested in the statistical branch, having been minister of the department at one time.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I object to moving the statistical branch out to the mills, a mile and a half away, because I use the branch a good deal and I want it to be where I can get at it without having to travel a considerable distance. I think a good many members feel the same way.

Mr. MALCOLM: My hon. friend is quite right in his objection, and no one will feel the inconvenience of the new location of the branch more than the minister in charge of the department. But I ask him this question: Is it fair to criticize the government for extravagance when they take property that is going to result in economies, and at the same time criticize them for not getting a convenient location which would cost a lot of money? He cannot have both.

Mr. BENNETT: You could have.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Power): May I call the attention of the committee to the fact that we are discussing an item of $30,000 for improvement of the square west of the post office, Ottawa. I permitted discussion on some other building because it appeared to me to be by unanimous consent. I have no objection to its being so continued but I think hon. members should confine themselves to the item before the committee and the amendment.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Why did not the chairman call our attention to it a long time ago before other members got into the discussion?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Power): I allowed the discussion to continue because it appeared to me to be by unanimous consent of the committee. If all hon. gentlemen have spoken on the other building, I do not think they will take it amiss if I call them to order should they stray from the point in future.

Mr. BENNETT: I have followed the minister's explanation with some interest. I should like to know whether it is not a fact that considerable horsepower is available on the property which could be used to supply the government buildings. You have your wheels and other machinery there. I thought probably that was the basis of the purchase.

Mr. MALCOLM: If the chairman will allow this discussion to continue a little further by unanimous consent, I desire to say that the leader of the opposition has brought to the attention of the committee one very valuable asset in connection with this property, which may be of considerable importance in deciding its value when the time comes to discuss it. There is a small waterpower on the property. I thank the hon. gentleman for bringing it to our notice.

Mr. GARLAND (Carleton): I was in favour of the three million dollar vote for the beautification of the city; but I agree with the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) that five thousand dollars is ample to level this property. Before the buildings were demolished the property was assessed for $56,000. The contractors paid to the government $8,311 for the buildings, and I think they made enough money out of material they salvaged to have left the site in proper condition. The work is being done now in such a way that it should not cost a fifth of the amount proposed by my hon. friend from Frontenac; in fact the site is virtually not being levelled at all. I am going to vote for the amendment, because I believe that if the work were left to the Federal District Commission they would get it done for very much less than $30,000, without interfering at all with the beautification scheme.

Amendment (Mr. Edwards, Frontenac) negatived: yeas, 33; nays, 62.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Power): I declare the amendment lost. Shall the item carry?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Mr. Chairman, this property was assessed for $312,000, of which $256,000 covered the land. The item of $30,000 for levelling the site is about one-eighth the assessed value of the whole property. Already, $843.55 has been paid in legal fees in connection with expropriation proceedings, and $6,500 for commissions, to Mr. Foley and Mr. Ross on the acquisition of the property. The minister has told us that the contract entered into with the parties who were to demolish and remove the buildings covered the clearing of the site, but that the work having been done during the winter frost interferred with the operations, and the contractors made an allowance of $700 to the government in lieu of completing their work. In other words, in the estimation of the government $700 was all that should be paid for the work of levelling the site, for which we are now asked to vote $30,000.

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I am taking the minister's own words.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Will my hon. friend permit me? I thought I made it perfectly clear that the $700 was the allowance for the work which the contractors had not done at the time it was taken over by the government, and which, on an estimate by the officials of the department, we thought we could do for $700. It has no relation whatever to anything provided for in the vote of $30,000.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The contract required the parties who tore down these buildings to leave the site in proper condition; they did not carry out their contract, and $700 was considered by the government to be the cost of completing the work, and they accepted this sum from the contractors. Now the government are asking for $30,000 for covering this spot with concrete. It may be the intention of the government to force through every item they have on their list, regardless of any reasons advanced on this side of the house as to whether they should do so or not. However, I propose to test the matter a little further and I move therefore that this vote of $30,000 for the improvement of the square west of the post office be reduced by $15,000. This will leave $15,000 to improve the property—at least to level the place off, to plant a few trees and to put down some concrete, if the government are disposed to resort to that for beautifying purposes.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Power): the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) moves that the item, "Ottawa—improvement of square west of post office, $30,000", be reduced by $15,000. Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the motion?

Amendment negatived: yeas, 33; nays, 52.

Item agreed to.

Ottawa — Laboratory for Department of Mines, Booth street, $50,000.

Mr. FRASER: How much was spent of last year's vote?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Up to the thirty-first of March last, $42,473.41.

Mr. FRASER: For what purpose?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Tenders were called.

Mr. FRASER: Were they advertised?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes; they were advertised and the lowest tender accepted. There were four tenders: Alexander I. Garvock, $48,659; E. Monette, $50,400; Ross Meagher, Limited, $55,567; T. C. James, $66,909.

Mr. FRASER: Is the contract completed?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No. What was done last year was work on the skeleton of the building. The $50,000 was required to complete the erection of a fuel testing laboratory for the Department of Mines at the Booth street experimental station. The skeleton of this building was erected during the year 1927-28 by Mr. A. I. Garvock of Ottawa at a contract price of $48,659. It is necessary to complete the building during 1928-29 by performing all the interior finish to the structure, and for that purpose the $50,000 asked for is required.

Mr. FRASER: Will this building be in connection with the other laboratory we have here?

Mr. ELLIOTT: What laboratory?

Mr. FRASER: Will it be in connection with the research laboratory? Will it be in the same location?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. FRASER: They will not be together?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. FRASER: Why should they not be together?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Does my hon. friend mean the research buildings? It is proposed to erect them on the property which is to be purchased on Sussex street, the property referred to this afternoon.

Mr. FRASER: The two are a good distance apart?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. FRASER: Why should they not be together?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Perhaps I may answer the question. The Booth street laboratory has been in existence for a number of years and we have been adding to it from time to time. This is to take care of fuel testing. A structure was put up last year at a cost of $48,000, and this is to complete the building. There is a battery of fuel and metallurgical testing laboratories on Booth street, and it was deemed advisable to provide this building. There would not be room in that location for the construction of general laboratories such as are proposed in the scientific research council's program. The two branches will, however, be affiliated and this one will work in with the general scheme.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is it proposed, in connection with the research council's laboratory, to have a section devoted to mining research? I should think that work of this character would constitute research.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not follow my hon. friend.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): In the work of the research laboratory I should think that mining would form a big factor.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Fuel testing is as much research as anything can be. It would appear that this was going to be another greenhouse—an absolute waste of money.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We have been doing all our fuel research work there.

Mr. ARTHURS: Not on Booth street.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton: The analysis of ores and certain research work we have been doing on Sussex street, but the operations have been disjointed, and our fuel testing laboratories have really not been laboratories at all. We have no facilities for doing the work. But there is a sufficient property on Booth street to offer accommodation and that will be necessary for mining research work. It is not, however adequate for the purposes of a general laboratory.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Then the mining research laboratory will be distinct from the main research laboratory?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Only in so far as mining is concerned.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): What will be done in the other research laboratory?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): General research of every character will be carried on. I am not familiar with the program, but it has been fairly well outlined in the report of the chairman. The department has been carrying on the work for a number of years, doing its testing on Booth street, with the single exception of ceramics, in connection with which the work has been done on Sussex street.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Does not the minister think it would be a good policy to have everything together and save us building two greenhouses and two or three laboratories?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I can assure my hon. friend that all our oil and mineral research work will be done down on Booth street. We have rented premises in which we are carrying out pulp and paper work.

Mr. FRASER: I should like to ask the minister whether the location of these proposed works has been reviewed by the national research council, and whether it has received their approval. I understand that we have a research council which is to take charge of all this work from a national point of view.

Here we are going on to build research buildings apparently not in the same location as the laboratories which will be used by the national research council. Have they been apprised of the location of these structures?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They know all about it; they have been consulted.

Mr. FRASER: And have they approved of the location?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Later we have to consider a vote for research laboratories, and I should like to know whether this will be considered a research laboratory under that general scheme?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes; unless there is a change in the plans it is the intention that all the mining research work in Ottawa will be carried on in these premises.

Mr. CANTLEY: May I ask the minister who is the head of the department which is carrying on this work?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is under the Department of Mines, over which I have control.

Mr. CANTLEY: Who is the practical man in charge of the work?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The man in charge of this work is Mr. Haanel.

Mr. BENNETT: I am just going to make one observation with which I think the Prime Minister must agree. This idea of setting up three or four buildings, to be presided over by different ministers with respect to research work, is starting the wrong way. I mentioned that some time ago and I refer to it again to-day. Mining research work is perhaps as important as any research work in Canada, and when the buildings are put up on Sussex street, on that vast piece of land extending from the river down to Earnscliffe, there is ample room to take care of all the research operations, which should be together. I think the Prime Minister, who perhaps has had occasion when at Harvard to see the work they were doing and have since done in connection with the Boston School of Technology, will realize that it is desirable to have every class of research work brought together so that from a single nerve centre, if I may so express it, you can touch them all.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I agree entirely with my hon. friend, and anticipated the very point which he has raised. Before this item came up I discussed the matter with both the Minister of Mines and the Minister of Public Works and I was informed, as the house has been informed, that these premises have been used for this work for some time. Last session some provision was made for an enlargement, which is to be completed with this present vote. If we were to begin again I think we should follow what my hon. friend has said, but I do not believe it would be wise, when it can be used for this particular branch, to throw away the plant which is nearing completion and which will be completed when this amount is voted. Otherwise I certainly feel it would be advisable to have everything together.

Mr. BENNETT: I hope the Prime Minister will not think I am unduly insistent, but the Minister of Public Works stated that this was but a skeleton, and now we are going into the interior. I think that skeleton could be used for other purposes; we could still stop this vote and use it for the buildings on Sussex street. The further point I desired to make is this: Is this department to be brought under the control of Doctor Tory, or it is to be controlled by the minister and his deputy? That is rather important, as I think the Prime Minister will see.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I satisfy my hon. friend once and for all by saying that Doctor Tory has no more ardent supporter than myself. I would also say that we have delayed this work for nearly four years; we have put up with inadequate quarters and have been unable to give the information which the public and particularly the mining people are demanding. We have been awaiting some concrete scheme of this character, but we have put up this building and I would protest most vigorously if we are not to be given the opportunity of completing it and installing everything necessary to carry on the work immediately. I would remind my friend that the plant which is to be erected this year will not come into operation until next year, and we are anxious to get this plant going. We wish to install the machinery which we cannot now use in the winter months because of the inadequacy of the premises.

Mr. BENNETT: Will it be under the control of Doctor Tory?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, because the Deputy Minister of Mines is on his board, and every experiment carried on there will be co-ordinated with the work of the National Research Council.

Item agreed to.

Ottawa post office—addition, $30,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: With regard to this item I would like to say that it is now thought that sufficient protection for the loading of the mails can be provided by a structure which will cost in the vicinity of $10,000, and I suggest that this vote be reduced

Mr. LAPOINTE: I move that this item be reduced by $20,000.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What is this?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is a covered way for the loading and unloading of wagons and various vehicles bringing mail to the post office.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Is this to be of a permanent or a temporaray character?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It will be reasonably permanent, in keeping with the structure.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I believe it is the intention of the government to remove the post office building altogether.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Some time in the future.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Would the minister care to express any opinion as to when that will be done?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is very difficult to say.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Has the Postmaster General prepared any plans for this work, or has it met with the approval of his department? I am afraid that this post office will look like a wart on this new scheme of the Prime Minister's, and I do not believe it is a good plan to spend even $10,000 on this work. There has not been a covered way previously, so I believe it is not necessary now.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No doubt my hon. friend believes himself correct when he states that there has not been a covered way there previously, but that is not so. We have had a covered way.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Perhaps we could not see there and it was torn down. The minister should tell us what is the nature of the construction which is to go there. Is it to be a tin lean-to or something of that kind, or what is it to be?

Mr. ELLIOTT: When the $30,000 covering was under consideration it was intended to be of stone. That would be of a more permanent character than departmental officials thought necessary, in view of the fact that probably the building will be torn down some time in the not far distant future; and it is now considered that by an expenditure of $10,000 we can do very well for the present.

Mr. STEVENS: Galvanized iron.

Mr. ELLIOTT: There may be some galvanized iron.

Item agreed to.

Ottawa—Rideau hall—alterations, improvements and furnishings, $50,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Will you call it six o'clock?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Go ahead.

Mr. LAPOINTE: We are anxious to know what you are going to propose.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

EDMONTON, DUNVEGAN AND BRITISH COLUMBIA RAILWAY COMPANY

The house resumed, from April 17, consideration in committee of Bill No. 57, respecting the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway Company—Mr. Kennedy—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—New branch lines authorized.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): This company which has a federal charter is a private company the bonds of which were guaranteed quite a number of years ago by the Alberta government. The shares are owned by the Alberta government. The deputy minister of railways in the Alberta government should therefore be entitled to have something to say in connection with this bill and I am informed, rightly or wrongly—and if I am wrong I want to be corrected—that he urged upon the mover of the bill to bring it before parliament. First of all, if the Alberta government are behind this bill, they should say so and be represented by their own government. There are many ways in which that can be done by them. If we take it for granted that the Alberta government are indirectly sponsoring the bill, my information is that they have pledged themselves to construct only twenty-five miles of the total mileage covered by the bill. If that be so, it would tend to prove that the Alberta government do not approve the bill as it now stands.

But I am not here to plead the case of the Alberta government; I am here to plead the case of the Dominion government and the interest of Canada in this bill. The hon. member for Peace River will correct me in a moment if I am wrong. It has been said that the road is about to be sold to the Canadian National or the Canadian Pacific. That the road should be sold to the Canadian Pacific does not interest me so much, but that it should be sold to the Canadian National does interest me because the Canadian National is the property of the Dominion of Canada. In the past we have had bitter experiences in connection with railways which have been constructed by private companies or even by provincial governments, if there be any such cases, and which have later turned out to be a liability on the hands of those who constructed them. In those cases they have felt that the best thing they could do was to turn the railways over to the federal government. A few years ago a gentleman from Manitoba who sat in this house used to speak quite frequently in regard to railway matters and to say that the government of the day had loaded themselves up with a lot of lame ducks. That is true. Our railway policies in the past have been anything but what they should have been.

If this road is to belong to the Canadian National Railways or to the federal government, they should have something to do with the bill, and if extensions to the present line are to be made in one direction or another those extensions should not be made unless the Canadian National approve them. I know I shall be told immediately that the Canadian National are not the owners of the road and therefore have nothing to do with it. That is the old argument. The Canadian National did not own a number of railways that were built outside of their control and with the consent and approval of parliament over a period of twenty-five years, but the Canadian National and the people of Canada became owners of those roads. When a venture proved to be a bad one, it was put upon the shoulders of the Canadian people. I shall have something more to say later on, but for the time being I should like to hear the hon. member for Peace River answer the point which I have raised.

Mr. HEPBURN: I should like to recapitulate the events leading up to this bill standing on the order paper under date of April 17. It appears that there was some misunderstanding in regard to a certain figure used in one of the clauses, and the sponsor of the bill, the hon. member for Peace River, was unable to give the necessary information to the house at that time. The Minister of Railways thereupon said, as reported in Hansard at page 2112:

> Mr. Dunning: In any event the mistake must be corrected by some formal action on the part of this committee. I suggest to my hon. friend that he leave the bill in committee in order to enable him to confirm his impression, or he may move the necessary substitution now.
> Mr. Kennedy: Let it stand.

So it was at the instance of the sponsor that this bill was allowed to stand. I maintain that if any member who is sponsoring a bill in this house cannot give to the house at any time it is required the necessary information in regard to the bill, he should not ask of this house the special privilege of having his bill given preference over other bills. I am surprised indeed that such a request emanated from his part of the house, because hon. members sitting in the southeast corner of this chamber announced with great gusto on the hustings the policy of equal rights for all and special privileges for none.

Mr. KELLNER: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The hon. gentleman is discussing a question which was settled by the house the other night, and I submit that his remarks are therefore out of order.

The CHAIRMAN: I take it that the hon. gentleman may make a reference to the bill having been allowed to stand, but he would be out of order in going into details.

Mr. HEPBURN: If hon. members in that part of the house do not like to have their inconsistencies called to their attention, all right.

With reference to the bill before us, I have given notice that on the third reading of the bill I shall move in amendment:

> That the said bill be not now read the third time, but be referred to the committee of the whole for the purpose of amending it as follows—

The CHAIRMAN: The amendment of the hon. gentleman should be moved on the third reading of the bill, not in committee.

Mr. HEPBURN: This amendment, Mr. Chairman, has a strong bearing on the bill before us, and I should like to explain why I am bringing it forward. I am moving an amendment of that nature because the hon. member for Wetaskiwin moved an amendment to a bill standing in the name of my hon. friend from West Lambton in regard to the Sarnia bridge charter. I do not think it is out of place for me to delve into some of the doings of the hon. member from the province of Alberta, especially in view of the fact that they have displayed such a particular interest in our affairs in southern Ontario. We came down here after the election of 1926 willing and anxious to co-operate with members from other parts of the dominion, and willing to be guided largely by the advice of hon. members from distant parts of this country in matters of their concern, and it therefore seems strange to me that such particular attention should be paid by our friends from the west to bills which are of vital importance only to southern Ontario.

In asking that this bill be given precedence, the hon. member for Peace River laid great stress on its vital importance. We from southern Ontario in turn could lay just as much stress on the importance of the several bridge bills relating to southern Ontario, which are of particular and vital importance to that part of the country. So I do not think I am out of order in reciprocating that community of interest which they display, in adopting obstructive tactics which have delayed the proceedings in this house, and if we are going to expedite matters, the only way, as I see it, is to put this bill where it belongs, at the bottom of the list.

Mr. IRVINE: Is not the hon. gentleman himself the only member of this house who has talked out a bill this session? He is the only one I know of who has done that.

Mr. HEPBURN: I am going to show something of the obstructive tactics of hon. gentlemen opposite, particularly the hon. member who has just taken his seat. He moved an amendment to the Sarnia bridge bill, to safeguard, he said, the public interest, But I would direct attention to the unanimous opinion of the people of Sarnia, who are the ones directly affected by that bill and who are quite willing to pay the tolls, These are provided for in section 14 of that bill, which reads:

> The company may charge tolls for the use of the said bridge, approaches and facilities—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Some of us are not interested in either of these bills. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the Sarnia bridge bill is not before the house at the present time, and that the hon. member is out of order in discussing it.

Mr. HEPBURN: I do not mind these interruptions; they take up time. I simply wish to justify my position in opposing this bill.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I would ask your ruling, Mr. Chairman, on the point of order. I claim that the hon. member is out of order in discussing the Sarnia bridge bill.

The CHAIRMAN: I have to agree that the discussion now being carried on by the hon. member is not in order.

Mr. HEPBURN: I was just anticipating, Mr. Chairman, the argument which would be used by my hon. friends opposite. However, it is a very easy matter to direct my remarks to the bill before us, if that is is what they want discussed; it is immaterial to me.

Bill No. 57 provides for the granting of a railway charter to the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway Company, which asks for—

> (a) An extension of its main line of railway, from mile 357 at or near Spirit river in the province of Alberta, by the most feasible route and in a generally westerly direction a distance of one hundred and two miles more or less to a point in township seventy-seven to seventy-eight, range eighteen, west of the sixth meridian in the province of British Columbia, and
> (b) An extension of the Grande Prairie branch of its existing line of railway in the province of Alberta by the most feasible route and in a generally northerly and westerly direction a distance of eighty-six miles more or less to a point in township seventy-eight, ranges fourteen or fifteen, west of the sixth meridian in the province of British Columbia.

I have been ruled out of order because I wanted to point out some of the financial strings which hon. members opposite in the southeast corner wanted to put on bills relating to southern Ontario. But I would warn them that in connection with this particular bill they may be providing privileges for some unknown party because, as I understand it, this road is being offered for sale in the market to-day, and we do not know who the ultimate owners will be. I have a clipping here from the Edmonton Bulletin, reading as follows:

> Submission by the Canadian National railways of a new offer for purchase of the Alberta and Great Waterways railway was a strong probability, declared Premier J. E. Brownlee on his return Friday morning from a three weeks' trip to Ottawa, Montreal and other points.
> "I feel there will be an improved offer," he said, "but I don't know whether it will be sufficiently suitable for us to accept."
> The disposal of the provincially owned railways, he said, depended entirely upon the Alberta and great waterways. This was the key to the whole situation and the government had impressed upon both railway presidents the desirability of parting with this line along with the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia line, so that it would be unnecessary to continue a department of railways just for the one line.

Just what the prospects of an early decision on the matter were, the premier would not say. It is known that the Dominion is anxious to conclude the session at Ottawa by May 15, and that unless some agreement were reached by the end of next week it would be too late to have parliament ratify it before prorogation and it would have to stand over until next session.

In the event of an agreement being reached immediately and the offer presented to parliament—

That is one of the press reports indicating the possibility of selling this railway. In the Montreal Gazette of April 21, 1928, there is a Canadian Press despatch as follows:

Premier Brownlee, who has just returned from his trip to Ottawa and Montreal, reports that some progress has been made as a result of the ministerial mission in regard to the northern railway situation. He is hopeful of the Canadian National offer for the Alberta and Great Western line being somewhat improved, and until it is definitely known what action will be taken in that direction there will be no final decision on the sale—

On the sale, remember.

—of the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway. It was made clear to both the transcontinental heads, says, Mr. Brownlee, that the Alberta government does not care to part with the Peace River lines unless it can satisfactorily dispose of the waterways road also, and the latter is, therefore, the key to the entire situation. If a better offer for the Alberta and Great Western comes through early enough, a summer session of the Alberta legislature will probably be called.

Agreement was reported upon a number of points affecting the sale of the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia, which will considerably better the province's interests, providing that the waterways deal materializes. Whatever further action is taken in the matter will depend upon a conference between Presidents Beatty and Thornton, to be held shortly.

I think that fairly definitely establishes the fact that the road is for sale. In insisting on similar stringent provisions to those which some hon. members desire to make in our bridge charters in southern Ontario, I am quite in order in moving the amendment which appears in the votes and proceedings of May 2, as I do not want my hon. friends opposite to be led astray. It is even possible that the Sarnia bridge people might buy this railway, and I want to guard my hon. friend from Peace River against such a contingency. In a press report from Edmonton of April 17, 1928, I find the following statement by another prominent man in the Alberta government, the Hon. Vernor Smith:

No sale of the Alberta government-owned railroads has been effected to date according to Hon. Vernor W. Smith, minister of railways and telephones, who returned to the city on Tuesday morning after a two weeks and a half trip to Ottawa and Montreal with Premier J. E. Brownlee.

Conferences were held with both Sir Henry Thornton and E. W. Beatty, K.C., presidents, respectively, of the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific railways, said the minister, but they were continuing their study of the problem along the lines submitted in the amended joint offer placed before the last session of the legislature.

Sir Henry was interviewed first and Mr. Beatty second. Mr. Beatty was seen on the last day of the minister's stay in Montreal and his final word was that a further interview would be held with Sir Henry Thornton.

Hon. Mr. Smith could not say whether a new offer would be made. This would be determined no doubt by the conference between the two railway heads. Asked whether any intimation had been given by either president regarding a new offer for the Alberta and Great Waterways railways, the minister said he presumed it was being considered in connection with the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia line.

The minister and the premier parted company at Montreal, the former coming home by way of Toronto and the premier going by way of Chicago. En route the minister visited the Welland canal now in course of construction, at a cost of $125,000,000. It is 24 miles long, he said. The largest steam shovel in the world, capable of loading cars raised 60 feet above it, was in use. Some sections of it will be completed within the next year.

In that part of the west it appears they are making a serious effort to sell this railway. Usually when a railway charter is granted settlers flock in. I do not think it is fair that such people should be misled. I have their welfare at heart just as much as my hon. friends have at heart the welfare of those residing in southern Ontario. Certainly it is not fair to settlers in that part of the west to bolster up their hopes in this regard. Before this charter is granted the promoters of the bill should be subjected to the same stringent requirements as were put forward in the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines with respect to the bill for the Port Burwell and London Railway; that is, they should give some guarantee of good faith.

That there is no unanimity of opinion behind this railway is apparent from press dispatches. Mr. Hugh Allen, M.L.A., of that district, made a speech at a banquet at Wembley on May 27 last, and I think it will be of interest to the committee if I read an extract from it because it voices his views:

The joint offer for the provincially-owned railways was then taken up:

"The series of questions as to the joint offer for the provincially-owned railways, which had been directed at Premier Brownlee were a matter of interest to all.

I also think it is a matter of interest to all.

Just why the questions should be directed at the premier was not so clear. The companies specifically stated in their offer that it was made in that form to avoid further competitive bidding, and remembering the reluctance on their part in the past to submit offers and the conditions of secrecy which were imposed on the government when these offers were submitted, their statement need not be doubted. Further than that, when the present traffic agreement was made with the Canadian National Railway a year or more ago, it was violently attacked by opposition members in the legislature on the ground that it was discriminatory against all Canadian Pacific Railway points and the government was urged to make every effort to secure a joint freight rate. That suggestion undoubtedly was the origin of the idea of a joint offer, for in no other way could a joint through freight rate to both Canadian Pacific and Canadian National points be secured.

"In case of a sale of the road now, joint operation would probably mean little or no change if the present arrangement so far as handling all traffic would be concerned.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. What my hon. friend is reading may have something to do with the lines now in existence in that part of Alberta, but it certainly has nothing to do with the section under discussion, which relates to an extension.

Mr. HEPBURN: If the hon. Minister of Railways will be patient he will see that I am leading up to the point. I want to show that there is no unanimity of opinion in regard to the feasibility of this railway, and before I have proceeded very far I think he will understand.

The route of the proposed extension from Wembley to Hythe has been criticized by many in this district. Representations have been made to the Minister of Railways—

And so on. Now, if there is a difference of opinion out there with regard to this railway, I do not see why parliament should be asked to grant this charter. Why do not the promoters apply to the provincial legislature. If this charter is granted and the line is surveyed, it is likely that settlers will go into the district anticipating that they will get railway facilities, and when these are not forthcoming pressure will be brought to bear on the Dominion government to build the road. It appears to me that the Alberta government is passing the buck, so to speak. They have it in their own power to secure a charter from the local legislature.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Can the Alberta legislature grant a charter for a road in the province of British Columbia?

Mr. HEPBURN: Let the Alberta government negotiate with the British Columbia government. The Dominion government have plenty on their chest at present without taking on anything more. A survey was made in 1911, and the then Alberta government, presided over by our present Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart), refused to guarantee the bonds for a railway over this same route. I have a map showing this particular part of the country.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. HEPBURN: I am not the least disturbed by all the noise hon. members care to make.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. HEPBURN: I welcome interruptions; I am not the least bit disturbed. Let me point out that clause (a) deals with the country to be served. I will read clause (a):

An extension of its main line of railway, from mile 357 at or near Spirit river in the province of Alberta, by the most feasible route and in a generally westerly direction a distance of 102 miles more or less to a point in township 77 to 78, range 18, west of the sixth meridian in the province of British Columbia.

We have the reports of the Dominion land surveyors as published officially by the Department of the Interior in regard to the territory proposed to be traversed by this railway. This report was submitted in 1911. I quote the following, with reference to township 79, range 13:

The Spirit River pack-trail from township 79, range 14, is the best route to this township. The soil is from three to six inches of black loam with clay subsoil and would make good farming land. The surface is nearly all covered wth poplar and willow scrub, but there are scattered prairie openings. It is badly broken up by Pouce Coupé river and by the valley of a creek which runs westerly across the township near its centre.

It is also interesting to read the description of township 78, range 13 also in the proposed line of railway:

Our pack-trail from township 77 was the only way to reach this township. The soil is from two to three inches of black loam with clay subsoil and some gravel and clay. It would make only fair farming land. The surface is nearly all covered with poplar and willow scrub. There is a high range of hills along the south and east of the township, while here and there ledges of rock crop out near the top of the hill.

He adds:

Hay is very scarce.

The description of another township in this route, township 78, range 7, is given by J. B.

Saint Cyr, Dominion land surveyor in 1909, as follows:

This township can be reached by a narrow belt of prairie south of the correction line, connecting with Spirit River prairie to the east, and then by Dunvegan wagon road. The township is thickly covered with poplar, spruce and large willow. Spirit River prairie ends at the east boundary. The country is rolling in the northern half of the township and undulating in the remainder. There is no prairie.

If there is no prairie it seems foolish to be extending the railway into that country, and that may account for the statement of the member for the provincial riding, that the proposed route has been criticized by many in the district. There are many more interesting things in these official township reports, which I shall read in a few minutes. But I want to compare the descriptions I have given with the description of the country adjacent to this proposed route where the people are asking for railway extension. I quote the following by way of contrast. As regards township 78, in range 6, now at the terminus of the existing railway and immediately adjoining the township just described, the following statement appears:

Spirit River, which is a very small stream, crosses the settlement from west to east. The soil is of good quality, being composed of a black loam resting on a sandy clay subsoil.

My hon. friend will agree that that describes good farming land worthy of being served, as it is served, by the present railway. The report goes on to say:

The surface is prairie and bluffs. The country is level with the exception of that portion of the settlement situated south of Spirit river. Wheat, oats and vegetables have been successfully raised there for a few years. The prairie furnishes good pasture. Every traveller who came there last summer appeared to like the country and to have great faith in the future of that district.

I, consider that a very good argument because the extension now proposed and which I have discussed was the very one from which I understand the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart, Edmonton), when he was Prime Minister of Alberta, withdrew government support. As a matter of fact, townships 76, 77, 78, 79, 80 and 81 in ranges 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12, all adjacent to the line proposed in clause (a), have not yet been surveyed and it would appear that if this were good country a survey would already have been made. So that those who are dissatisfied with this proposed line are probably justified in their attitude.

As regards clause (b) of this proposed charter, I think that great injustice is being done to the farmers in that part of Alberta by this provision. There is a railway running from Grande Prairie to Wembley, on a line differing materially from a route which was surveyed in 1911, I believe. On the strength of that survey hundreds of settlers went into that part of the country. If this proposed extension is persisted in, while I will not say that it will represent a breach of faith on the part of the government, I will point out that the railway will be circling what was once designated as the route, with the result that the farms in the vicinity of the original location will diminish in value. That is not a very fair proposition to the people of that part of Alberta, and in this connection I would refer the committee once more to the statement of the member of the legislature for that district, to the effect that the route of extension proposed in clause (b) of this bill has been criticized by many in the district.

I want to quote some further descriptions of the property. I am doing so for the information of hon. gentlemen opposite. I am not criticizing all of them, because some hon. gentlemen opposite are willing to co-operate in our effort to expedite progress in southern Ontario. But I feel that we from Ontario ought to take some interest in Alberta and for that reason I shall give to the committee some further descriptions.

Mr. KENNEDY: Will the hon. member quote one sentence I have uttered in connection with any of the bills in which he is interested with a view to blocking them?

Mr. HEPBURN: The hon. member's colleague behind him, the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) has placed on the order paper six amendments which I am ready to read.

Mr. KENNEDY: Will the hon. member quote one sentence that I have uttered for the purpose of blocking any of these bills?

Mr. HEPBURN: I am referring to the hon. gentleman's colleague; they are close together. There is considerable collusion although they try to say they are politically independent of each other. There is just as much partisanship there as there is anywhere else.

Mr. JELLIFF: I am sitting almost directly behind the hon. member for Bow River, and I do not think my hon. friend can charge me and a number of my other colleagues with blocking any legislation in this house. In the interest of the people of Alberta, I consider it unreasonable for the hon. gentleman to pursue the course he is taking. It will not result in any advantage to him.

Mr. HEPBURN: I apologize to the hon. member for Lethbridge if he thinks I have referred to him. I did not have him in mind when I referred to the hon. member for Bow River.

An hon. MEMBER: He doesn't sit behind him.

Mr. CHAPLIN: He doesn't know that.

Mr. COOTE: Does my hon. friend realize that by his action he is apparently endeavouring to prevent the building of a railway to serve some settlers about whom a few minutes age he seemed to be expressing some concern —people who this fall, if the railway is not built, will have to haul their grain as far as eighty miles.

Mr. HEPBURN: Does the hon. member realize that we from southern Ontario have interests that are just as vital as those which he is promoting.

Mr. COOTE: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of privilege. I deny that I have blocked anything in this house this session.

Mr. HEPBURN: I am glad to hear this confession of faith.

Mr. COOTE: I ask that the hon. gentleman withdraw that remark.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I think the whole discussion is out of order because when this committee last sat we passed the entire bill, including this section. Then, because of some doubt as to the accuracy of a figure, the bill was allowed to stand. I fully appreciate that members of the house interested in certain private legislation feel very strongly with respect to other members of the house, particularly those in the far corner, who from time to time talked legislation out, as my hon. friend is apparently attempting to do tonight. On behalf of the government, however, I would say that we have no concern at all for the hon. member for Peace River or what he may or may not have done with respect to talking out other legislation, but we have some concern for the settlers who are affected by the proposed railway extensions, and as far as I can I would like to facilitate the passage of this measure in order that the extensions may be proceeded with. I fully appreciate the feelings of hon. members, and of course this is a private bill, but I would say that possibly on both sides of the house there might be a little more consideration given to the desirability of not pursuing these blocking tactics during this one hour. I am afraid these tactics have been altogether too common this session, and in that connection hon. members in the far corner have done their share if nothing more.

Mr. POWER: The point of order has turned out to be just a little lecture by the Minister of Railways on how members of this house should behave during the hour which is devoted to private bills. I understood the minister to say that although the bill is before us we must not discuss it, for what reason I do not know. The minister says the bill is before us, but discussion on any of the sections is not to be allowed. I would ask the minister to explain further the point of order. If he could convince us that we are not allowed to discuss sections 1 or 2 of the bill I am sure we would let it go through.

Mr. DUNNING: I will try again. All the sections of the bill were agreed to subject to the verification of a figure in section 1, and subject to that point only. That was the arrangement when the committee last considered this bill, so I submit that to all intents and purposes the committee completed their work and only desired to make sure that the figure descriptive of a certain township was the correct one.

Mr. POWER: If the minister will show me anything in the rules which says that a bill may be allowed to stand over subject to verification I should be glad to see it, but as I understand it now the minister is introducing a new procedure. He has had a longer parliamentary experience than is possessed by most of us, but I fail to see anything of that kind in the rules. I submit that if a bill stands over the whole bill is open to discussion unless at the time there was an agreement by unanimous consent that certain sections should be passed. Personally I do not know of any such unanimous consent in this case, and apparently other hon. members do not know of it either. Therefore I take it that every section, every clause and every word in the bill is open to discussion.

The CHAIRMAN: I think the minister is labouring under a misapprehension; no section of the bill was passed when it was last before the committee. It was allowed to stand over while we were discussing section 1, there being some question as to whether a certain figure in section 1 was right or wrong, so the whole bill stood until that figure could be verified. Therefore I rule that the point of order is not well taken. I should read an amendment which has been moved, that the words "township seventy-eight" in line twenty-four be struck out and the words "townships seventy-seven or seventy-eight" substituted therefor.

Mr. DUNNING: I have another point of order with reference to the kind of discussion which has taken place on this bill. I refer to subsection (i), paragraph 293 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, which is as follows:

> Besides the prohibitions contained in this standing order, it has been sanctioned by usage both in England and in Canada, that a member, while speaking, must not:
> (i) use his right of speech for the purpose of obstructing the business of the house.

The very tenor of the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has been addressing the committee has been to the effect that he is giving tit for tat, so to speak; he has suffered from obstruction and is therefore obstructing this measure. I am not blaming him for so doing; on a previous occasion the hon. member for Toronto Northwest calmly announced his intention to talk out a bill. I am protesting against the whole business of obstructing the work of the house in this way, and I think I am supported by this section.

Mr. SMITH (Stormont): Would the minister permit a question? Does he not think the hon. gentleman who has spoken to-night has brought up some points which do not indicate obstruction? He has shown the possibility of this road selling out, and he has shown that valuable franchises may be given for speculative purposes. Does not the minister think these matters should be drawn to the attention of the committee?

Mr. MANION: I think when a group get together to talk over things they should put up their best performer; I do not think we should be forced to listen for an hour to an uninteresting speech of this kind.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

The CHAIRMAN: Is the hon. gentleman speaking to the point of order?

Mr. MANION: Yes. I think my hon. friends would do better with a good speaker rather than such a dull performer.

Mr. CANNON: Before giving your decision, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that you look up the debate on the Georgian bay canal bill.

The CHAIRMAN: Early in the discussion I thought the remarks of the hon. member [The Chairman.] were irrelevant and asked him to bring them more closely to bear on the subject before the committee. Later on I thought his remarks were relevant and allowed him to proceed.

Mr. HEPBURN: Now that this discussion has concluded we will go on.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Your time is up.

Mr. HEPBURN: No, it is not. I have tried to bring to the attention of hon. members who have been deliberately blocking bills of importance to southern Ontario the fact that if necessary we can hit back. A few settlers in Alberta may suffer, but it is a serious thing to Ontario that these bridge companies are not permitted to spend the millions of dollars which they propose to spend. We have the same responsibility to our electors, and we have just as much right to voice our opinions in this chamber. For instance, what right has the hon. member for Bow River to place an amendment on the order paper asking that a certain portion of the tolls collected on these bridges should be paid to the Dominion government? I submit that that is a matter for the Minister of Finance, and I did not know that he had delegated any of his powers to the hon. member for Bow River. I do not think the hon. member was in order in placing such an amendment on the order paper, which he did for no other reason than to obstruct the passage of these particular bills.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. HEPBURN: You cannot get me excited; holler all you like. I like to hear the Tories holler, because it shows they are being hit in the right spot. However, I have attained my objective; I have shown hon. gentlemen opposite the foolishness of the tactics which they have pursued, so I think my time has not been entirely wasted. We are willing to co-operate. We are just as interested in Alberta and in the welfare of Alberta as we are in southern Ontario. I feel where there is unanimity in such matters, there should not be placed on the order paper by hon. members motions obviously for no purpose other than obstruction of these bills. For instance, the member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) knew so little about the matter of the Detroit river bridge—which is being constructed to-day at a cost of some $20,000,000 of American capital, with nine-tenths of the tolls upon it to be paid by Americans coming over to Canada, where they will spend hundreds of millions of dollars—that he voted against it. He says that the bill should be a government measure. Now if we asked an appropriation of $20,000,000 to build such a bridge, he would be one of the first—

Mr. KELLNER: Mr. Chairman, the parliament of Canada should not listen to a debate on a little matter down in southern Ontario when a bill for something out in southern Alberta is under consideration. There can be no relevance in the argument, if it is an argument, which the hon. member has been making for the last half hour. I want to remind you, Mr. Chairman, that he has persistently read documents, newspapers and speeches, speeches made by members of the Alberta legislature. I am quite satisfied that during the larger part of the time he has not been in order, and I submit that it is due to parliament that the hon. member be kept a little closer to the subject.

The CHAIRMAN: In reference to this point of order, if hon. members would assist the chair in keeping order, it would be easier. At this distance it has been very hard to hear what is being said.

Mr. KELLNER: I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that there were things he said which were entirely out of order, and it might be well to rule upon them.

Mr. POWER: Mr. Chairman, I do not know what there is to rule upon. I have done my very utmost to listen to the remarks of the hon. member, but I could not understand what he was saying. I am in no position to say whether he was out of order or not. If the hon. gentleman who has just spoken will tell us what was said, we will know. I would recommend, however, that he tell us in a tone of voice sufficiently loud to be audible, whereupon we in this section of the house may know whether or not the hon. gentleman is out of order. I would like the point of order to be stated as clearly as possible.

Mr. HEPBURN: To satisfy my own curiosity, sir, I would like the hon. member to answer the query as to where I was out of order.

The CHAIRMAN: I do not want to be discourteous to the hon. member who raised the point of order. If order is kept in the committee so that I shall be able to hear the hon. gentleman who was speaking, I will see that he keeps in order.

Mr. SYLVESTRE (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I may be allowed to make a few comments in French seeing that the remarks made in English have so greatly interested the house. Notwithstanding what the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) may think, we are not trying to obstruct or oppose the bill of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy). May we assure him that our intentions are of the very best towards him and that he has no more devoted or sincere friends than those who sit, Sir, to your right.

There are two things to be noted in this bill: the first, is that the company requests an extension of about 102 miles of its line from mile 357; the second, is a request for a further extension of about 86 miles. I must say, Sir, that I do not look favourably on private companies, especially those of railway companies which seek to obtain a charter like the one, at present, under consideration. We have the experience of the past in regard to private companies that have asked for grants to construct railways and which had but one aim in view, that of selling their interests or concede their rights for money consideration. We cannot conceive for a moment that a company, which is really in earnest and really has the intention to develop its line, will spend enormous sums to purchase locomotives, cars and construct a railway, simply to operate a few miles as in the present case. The experience of the past has been too dearly bought with schemes of this nature to induce us to adopt without matured thought the present project submitted to our consideration. We have seen, for instance, the National Railways forced to purchase branch lines from one end of Canada to the other at very high prices in order to save from bankruptcy companies whose shareholders would otherwise have been ruined.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South) (Translation): Time is up.

Mr. SYLVESTRE (Text): I may say that my hon. friend does not disturb me.

(Translation): That is why I rose to take part in the discussion of the present bill, and notwithstanding the remarks of our national desk-pounder, it will not hinder me from discussing what interests me. The National Railways are already a burden on the country. . . .

Progress reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hour for private bills having been exhausted, the house will now revert to committee of supply.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Power in the chair.

Ottawa—Rideau hall—alterations, improvements and furnishings, $50,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, when six o'clock was called I was on my feet and about to move an amendment to this item. I beg leave to move, seconded by Mr. Evans:

That the item, "Rideau hall—alterations, improvements and furnishings, $50,000," be reduced by $40,000.

As we were leaving the chamber, one of my Liberal friends jokingly suggested that I was following the lead of the Conservatives. In regard to the very elaborate furnishings of Rideau Hall I am inclined to think the Conservatives are following the lead of the Labour party, because for several years we have protested against the extravagant expenditure in connection with the office of the governor general. For some years past that expenditure has been steadily climbing. The other evening we were discussing a very heavy expenditure, of an extra $150,000, to provide for completing a residence at the citadel at Quebec.

It is only a few years ago, in 1924, that we had an item of nearly $43,000 for governor general's cars. Altogether during the last ten years in connection with the Department of Railways and Canals on account of governor general's cars we have spent more than $100,000 and I understand that a very heavy expenditure is contemplated this year, has in fact been made and will later be presented to the house. The figures in connection with the upkeep of Rideau hall for the past ten years are as follows:

Fiscal year	Amount
1918-19	59,994 72
1919-20	61,985 46
1920-21	69,981 38
1921-22	81,906 12
1922-23	94,425 12
1923-24	94,426 64
1924-25	96,067 42
1925-26	99,344 34
1926-27	128,560 72

That makes a total for the ten years ending 1927 of $862,271.41. With the comparatively small item of $26,374.32 for governor general's quarters at Quebec citadel, there has been a total expenditure in the ten years for the residence alone of the governor general of $888,645.73. We thought last year we were almost at an end of repairs, additions and refurnishings, but this year we have before us an item of $50,000 and there appears on the next page—I do not know why the items are separated—the following item:

Rideau Hall, including grounds, improvements, furniture, maintenance, etc., $60,000.

That is, for these two items alone—and there are many others—we are asked to vote $110,000 this year. That will not provide for the ordinary expenses of maintenance. There seems to be no limit to this kind of thing. We may give some little latitude to the Prime Minister and to the Minister of Public Works, both of whom are bachelors in their enthusiasm for house furnishing, but those of us who have had something to do with furnishing our homes might think it almost time to call a halt in the kind of furnishings and the elaborate scale on which they have been offered. I want to give only two or three items to afford the committee and the country some idea of how this grant has been spent in the past and how doubtless similar grants will be spent in the future. From the Auditor General's report for the year ended March 31, 1927, part V, page 16, I take the following items in connection with materials, supplies and repairs for Rideau hall:

Hobbs Hardware Co., London, Ont., coffee pots, $330; coffee sets, $235.50; cream and milk jugs, $550.80; flat dishes, $518; forks, $795.83; hot water jugs, $142.50; knives, $591.75; salvers, $193.50; spoons, $879.83; sugar basins, $205.20; tea pots, $261; tea sets, $219; toast racks, $189; sundries, $169.38 on account sundry supplies, $7,684.24.—Total, $12,965.53.

The next item is:

Smallman & Ingram, London, Ont., 82 pr. blankets, $1,038.95; carpet, 654 yds., $5,929.81, sundry, $948.25; 24 comforters, $504; 187 pr. curtains, $777.15; 146 yds. damask, $657; 16 doz. doylies, $288; 421½ yds. linen, $1,992.25; 442½ yds. lining, $442.25; 24 luncheon cloths, $672; 40 yds. repp, $170; 2 rugs, $1,260, $601.25; 36 pr. sheets, $781.50; table linen, $1,285.50; 48 doz. towels, $459.60; sundries, $1,457.80.—Total, $19,265.31.

And the third item is:

Accounts under $1,000: billiard table, $851.28; clocks, $292; electrical work, $170.16; erection of birch stairs, $400; hardware and plumbing supplies, $803.97; house furnishings, $1,051.09; lumber, doors, etc., $1,600.08; marble and tile work, $519.60; radiola, $362.50; pianos, Nordheimer, $540, Knabe Grand, $1,650, less $750 allowed for old one; sundries, $1,433.42.—Total, $8,924.10.

I have ventured to read these items simply because I think the people who pay for these things ought to know the extent to which we are furnishing Rideau Hall. I had rather thought that having done all that last year —and things were in pretty good condition before we began doing it—we might have had some cessation of this expenditure. We have purchased one radio, several pianos and things of that kind. Some of us in our own homes are still using the china which we had when we were married and some of us have not even been able to afford a radio. Even some hon. members who presumably are living on a scale a good deal higher than that of many of the ordinary working people and farmers cannot afford many of these things. Yet this is the scale we are maintaining for the upkeep of two individuals who happen to be our guests here for the time. I wonder, Mr. Chairman, whether this is setting the best example to our young Canadian people. We have been told that work and thrift are the great things which we ought to have in Canada. We were told in the early days that we ought to develop Spartan-like qualities. Is it a good thing for us to set up on this scale? I have wondered!—and I have wondered where it is going to end. Everything should be more or less in proportion. I had a letter to-day from a civil servant, an employee of this government, from which I shall read a paragraph. I cannot help thinking of these things when I come to vote on expenditures of this character. It reads:

> Seeing that we shall not get any general advance in salaries this year, I hope some means will be found, before the house prorogues, to get the government to consider the payment of a minimum salary of $100 per month to all adult fully employed civil servants. This is the most important part to us, as I do not know, speaking frankly, how these married men manage to hang out on their $75 and $85 per month pittances. I am a house owner myself, and have an exceptional lass for my wife, and am on the top grade as a letter carrier, so do not feel the pinch; but how the others manage, and how local merchants can expect to carry on successfully with these wages prevailing is beyond me entirely.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Whom did my hon. friend say the letter was from?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is from a letter carrier.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What is his name and the date of the letter?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not think it is necessary to give the name of a private correspondent.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I submit that it is quite contrary to the rules of the house for anyone to read a letter unless he is prepared to give the name of the writer.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The Prime Minister will have to show me that rule before I can accept it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think I can show it to my hon. friend.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have quoted from a private letter that has come to me only to-day, and which states what I believe to be the facts. I have done so simply because I feel that in this house we are too apt to be caught in the atmosphere of the capital city and to judge things by the standards of the wealthy people whom we may meet with here, and we need sometimes either to go back home or to receive letters from home in order to be brought face to face with the actual conditions which confront large numbers of our people in Canada to-day. Only the other day I happened to be talking to a young working woman right here in the city of Ottawa. She was rather downcast, and I learned the reason. She said to me, "My wedding will have to be postponed. I had hoped to be married on the first of May, but my young man cannot get work, and so we cannot get married this year." That kind of thing is quite common to-day, and as I think of these young lives in which the happiness of setting up a home is indefinitely postponed because there is very little chance of getting work, even in the springtime of the year; when I think of the many homes in which medical treatment or a surgical operation is postponed year after year, much as it may be needed, because of the great expense; when I think of the many homes where the coming of a baby into the home is a domestic tragedy, when I think of the long years of part payments which so many people have to make in order to get the ordinary necessities of their home life, I wonder if we in Canada are justified in authorizing such elaborate expenditures as we pass so lightly in this house.

I have said that these are matters of comparison. I turn over to another page in these very estimates, to page 60, where under the heading of "Miscellaneous" I find:

> Grant for the Canadian National Institute for the blind, $10,000.
> Grant to the Canadian Council on child welfare, $5,000.
> Grant to the Canadian Dental Hygiene Council, $5,000.
> Grant to the Canadian Social Hygiene Council, $10,000.
> Grant to the Canadian Tuberculosis Association, $25,000.
> Grant to the Canadian National Committee for mental hygiene, $10,000.

You could put all these items together, Mr. Chairman, and they amount to practically the same as this one item which we are now being asked to vote for improving and furnishing Rideau Hall. Or I turn to the page of these estimates opposite to that on which is the item under discussion, and I find an item greater than the total of these I have read. With the money that we are asked to vote for that one item we could double our grants to all the institutions that I have just mentioned. Surely when the government takes the ground that because of the state of the treasury, it cannot grant more than five or ten thousand dollars to these national institutions that are attempting to carry on a national work for the welfare of the public, we cannot but pause and ask whether we are justified in spending so much on carpets and curtains and all sorts of luxuries of that kind. Only in the papers to-day I read that the Prime Minister and the government have refused to continue the grant to the provinces for technical education—a matter that is vitally connected with the industrial welfare of this country and with the future of our girls and boys. When the Dominion government cannot see its way to continue its grants to the provinces for this important work, I wonder if we are justified in continuing such large expenditures of this kind.

When the beautification of the city of Ottawa was being considered I did not once rise, not that I did not feel strongly on the matter, but I was willing to let that one large expenditure go by, and other people were protesting. I yield to no one in my desire to have the capital city beautiful and dignified, but I would submit that we are in danger of centralizing the beauty and the dignity of the country here in the capital city, and letting other parts of the country go with very little consideration. I say, therefore, that it behooves us, when items of this character come up, to check them very closely. In this particular case it is not as if those things represented by this expenditure were available to all. The reason I feel most strongly with regard to matters of this kind is that in reality only a very small class, a very exclusive class, gets whatever benefit there is in an expenditure of this kind. It is only a few people who can go to Rideau Hall. It is only a few people who can enjoy these things. It is only a small class in Ottawa, most of them having opportunities in other ways of enjoying good food and pleasant surroundings. As long as there are so many under-privileged in this country, I question whether we are justified in adding still further to the advantages of the over-privileged classes.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

There is another consideration I should like to advance, and it is this. I take it that from now on the governor general will be chosen on the advice of His Majesty's ministers in Canada. He will be the representative of His Majesty, but be chosen on the advice of His Majesty's Canadian ministers. Undoubtedly it will be only a short time before the one so chosen will be a Canadian. I have no objection to having a representative from the motherland here. I think we should have one, and we are going to have one here soon in a new capacity. But supposing as the representative of His Majesty in this country there is appointed, on the advice of his Canadian ministers, a Canadian. Do we wish to continue to maintain a standard of this kind? Again I come back to my ideals of Canadian citizenship. I believe we are acting in harmony with the ideals of the great majority of Canadians if we endeavour to approximate as nearly as possible to a condition under which everyone will have more or less an equal chance. By these votes we are setting up privileges that are available to a comparatively small group, but which must be paid for out of the taxation of the masses of this country. On behalf of the labour people whom I am trying to represent—and I know I have the backing of a great many outside that group—I protest again, as I did the other evening, against these very lavish expenditures.

Mr. STEVENS: Mr. Chairman, for many years I have supported in this house votes for the necessary improvements and to meet the necessary expenses in connection with the residence of the governor general. I believe Canada should be reasonably generous towards such votes; but we have before us certain proposals of the government which are extravagant and unreasonable. For years there has appeared in the estimates an item of $60,000, described as: "Rideau Hall, including grounds—improvements, furniture, maintenance, etc." In other words, that item is to maintain and preserve the dignity and high standing of the residence. In adition to that, immediately below is an item of $19,000, being an allowance for fuel and light—really part of the expenses of the establishment. There is nothing paid out of that item for the salaries of clerks or other members of the staff. Last session this house voted an extra sum of $50,000 for special work at Rideau Hall. I had no great objection to it. It was granted as a special vote. But we find this year the government comes forward again with a similar vote of $50,000 for further expenditure in this regard. The minister ought to indicate precisely what this is requred for. Has this $50,000 which he is now asking for, or any portion of it, been already spent?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The purposes for which this $50,000 is asked are set out with more or less detail in the report presented to the department by the architect as the result of representations made to him by the comptroller of the household. It is required for general alterations and improvements, and for the purchase of certain furnishings for Rideau Hall. Certain details are given.

Mr. STEVENS: Would the minister read those details?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I shall be very glad to. The alterations and improvements are of a general nature, owing to the fact that for many years the hall and the furnishings were allowed to depreciate. Perhaps it would throw some light on this question to say that from 1914 to 1920 an appropriation was made each year of $65,000, the amount which was being expended at the outbreak of war.

Mr. STEVENS: Does that correspond to the vote of $60,000?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes; it is because the $60,000 referred to in the other vote will not be sufficient to meet some extra requirements owing to the dilapidations that have occurred on account of the $65,000 practically not having been expended since 1914. Prior to that year we were spending generally about $65,000. In 1914-15 the vote was a little over-expended—$65,176. As a matter of fact I think that has usually been the case.

Mr. STEVENS: Does that $65,000 include fuel?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, that is for repairs to all these various buildings. They form a long list and cover an extensive area. Most of them are pretty old and require some repairs every year. After the outbreak of war the expenditures were cut down to the limit, running around $40,000, and necessary repairs were not attended to on account of the great demands made upon the treasury by the war.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister give us those expenditures?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

	Voted	Expended
1914-15..	$65,000	$65,176
1915-16..	65,000	57,000
1916-17..	65,000	63,000
1917-18..	65,000	58,000
1918-19..	65,000	41,000
1919-20..	65,000	44,000
1920-21..	50,000	49,000
1921-22..	60,000	60,000
1922-23..	60,000	58,000

From that time on $60,000 has been voted each year and always spent—sometimes a little over-spent.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister give us the over-expenditures?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes. In 1925-26 the over-expenditure ran to $2,698. In 1926-27 the vote was not exceeded, and the same applies to the vote for the following year. It will be seen that during those years the aggregate amount not spent was less than the total over-expenditure. I am giving the figures so that my hon. friends will see the dilapidation that has taken place in all these buildings. At this juncture perhaps I might refer to the list of buildings that are included in this property and which have been a part of it for some time. The following buildings are included: The governor general's residence; cloakroom; greenhouse; conservatories; potting shed; military secretary's residence; two semi-detached residences on Lisgar road; duplex apartments, Lisgar road; lodge at front entrance gate; superintendent's residence, Thomas street; garage; stables; laundry; dairy; guardroom and shed; curling rink; refreshment room; yard of rink; workshop; stores buildings. There is a long list of buildings covering a great area and requiring considerable repairs annually. The repairs have not been made since 1914 to anything like the extent which the government has considered proper, and that depreciation accounts in a large measure for the expenditures which have had to be made in recent years.

Mr. SPENCER: Are these buildings all built of brick or stone, and if so is the depreciation very considerable?

Mr. ELLIOTT: All the buildings, except the superintendent's house, which is of frame, are of brick or stone.

Mr. STEVENS: Will the minister come back to the $50,000 item both for last year and for this year, and tell us what was spent last year and how he proposes to spend the amount this year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have referred to the depreciation in the buildings and structures generally; I have said nothing about furnishings. I am informed that the expenditures from 1914 to 1924 have been largely in repairs to the buildings and on work done on the grounds. As to the furnishings, practically nothing was spent during those years. So that a year or two ago the government were faced with the question of practically recarpeting and refurnishing the whole of the house. That is to a large extent the nature of the expenditures, the details of which I will give. Certain amounts accrued in 1926-27 and were paid in 1927-28, amounting to $2,334.53. I have not the details, but they were for certain demands made before the end of the year and paid after the beginning of the following year. For carpets, rugs, draperies, table linen and things of that kind, there was an expenditure of $5,045.75; for glassware and dishes for the various households, $8,832.50; for silverware, $399; for pavement of property, $4,508.40; for new verandah and steps, $3,859.40; for tennis courts and enclosures, $1,754.30; for materials used in connection with repairs—I can give my hon. friend the list of materials if he wishes it—$10,858.28; and pay list for labour, $12,407.84. That is how the $50,000 is made up.

Mr. STEVENS: How much is that?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is $50,000. Now, for the present we are requested to make certain other repairs including a new fence around the grounds, estimated at $6,000. It is proposed to replace the old fence, which is practically falling down, with an iron fence.

Mr. GARDINER: Any stock around there?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, a good deal at times.

Mr. SPENCER: Is the present fence iron?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No; it is a wooden fence. Then there is the decoration of the ballroom, $2,000. There is a request for a tennis pavilion, $2,000, and, for the installation of additional bathrooms on account of further requirements in that direction, $1,500.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What does that mean?

Mr. ELLIOTT: What it says. Also carpets, $2,000, and dishes and glassware, $3,000. These are all that we have details of. The balance of the $50,000 will be made up of materials for general repairs to the buildings and for work done by the men.

Mr. IRVINE: What became of the furnishings which must have been there prior to the purchase of the new outfit? Certain silverware must no doubt have been there before. What has become of it?

[Mr. Elliott.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is all there still. The silverware that was there is preserved and is still in use. This is additional silverware required.

Mr. IRVINE: If this keeps up you will have to build a house to store the silverware.

Mr. GARDINER: Can the minister give us the details for the balance of the item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The rest is undetermined; it will consist of general furnishings and repairs.

Mr. GARDINER: You will spend all the money?

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend need have no doubt about that.

Mr. ADSHEAD: On page 33 there is an item of $60,000 for improvements, furniture, maintenance and so forth. I presume the minister will give us the details of that item.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The question is a pertinent one, and I propose to give the details showing what are covered in that item. I may point out that there is a regular staff of gardeners and labourers—

Mr. GARDINER: Let us have some of the items.

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is a regular staff of some thirty-five men. The salaries for the thirty-five men ordinarily engaged as servants are estimated at $45,346; then there is $3,200 for additional assistance and for the repairs, purchase of materials, supplies and so forth used in connection with the grounds and premises, $11,453.

Mr. SPENCER: That is out of the $60,000?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. SPENCER: Will the minister tell us what furniture is being bought?

Mr. ELLIOTT: There will be nothing for furnishings if you pay the salaries of the thirty-five men out of the $60,000, but I think those are the terms under which this item has been usually passed. For years, however, no furnishings have been supplied under it, because it has gone to pay the salaries of the servants and for material used around the building.

Mr. GARDINER: Are these thirty-five labourers employed under the patronage system?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not think that system prevails there; most of them have been there for many years as gardeners, butlers and so on, and I do not think the patronage system prevails to any extent.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The minister has an item of $50,000 here, and he has only given us items totalling $16,000. What about the remainder?

Mr. ELLIOTT: We have not the details.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is there an estimate?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes; for the general repairs and improvements which will be required, it is estimated that the additional amount will be necessary. Our experience in the past leads us to believe that this is quite within the mark.

Mr. ROBB: Before the item passes—.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It is not going to pass just yet.

Mr. ROBB: Then before my hon. friend speaks on it I should like briefly review the situation as it appears to the Department of Finance and to the treasury board. My colleague the Minister of Public Works has reminded the committee that during the war period this property was very much neglected, and that is only one side of the question. During the war period, when there was a great patriotic move throughout the country, there was no place in the capital where people gathered more frequently to consider ways and means of helping out in the war than at government house. Government house was visited from time to time not only by Canadians interested in war work but by visitors from other countries, and during that period the household furnishings were pretty well worn. I confess that when my colleague first brought to the attention of the treasury board this amount necessary to restore this property to a condition of which Canadians would not be ashamed, we did think it was a considerable sum, but we were asked to go down to government house ourselves and look it over. When we did so, as Canadians we were humiliated to find that when guests were expected from other countries, or when representative Canadians from all the provinces gathered there, the people at government house were compelled to go frequently to the Chateau Laurier or to the Rideau Club to borrow chinaware, glassware and even the forks and spoons used on the table. That was the condition which existed, and we found that the rugs throughout the house and the furniture generally was in a very shabby condition. I would not feel proud to invite visitors from other countries even to my own humble home if it were in the condition in which we found government house. Their Excellencies were reasonable; they said, "We can get along with it if Canada can," but they submitted to us that it was not a good advertisement for this country. Every person knows that at government house they entertain from time to time not only Canadians who come there, not only members of parliament, but persons from other countries. Just at the moment I remember that this year they entertained representatives of the crown, the Prime Minister of the motherland, the Prime Minister of the Irish Free State, representatives from Australia, from New Zealand, from South Africa and from the United States who came to Canada. Would any member of this parliament desire to have these visitors leave Ottawa with the impression that Canada was down at the heels? We determined that the finances were in such a condition that we might very properly put this property in such a state of repair that Canadians would not be ashamed of it.

When I look over the amounts being spent by the Dominion in restoring this property and compare them with the amounts which the present occupant of that office must pay out of his own pocket, I do not think we stand in a very good position in criticizing these votes. I heard an hon. gentleman say a moment ago that he hoped the day would come soon when a Canadian might occupy that position. I do not take any great exception to that statement, but if a Canadian is to carry on in this position at the pace which has been maintained recently, it will cost him a lot of money; it costs the present occupant of that office a good deal of money to keep up his end in addition to what the government does. While hon. members of this house imagine they are preaching economy it does not appeal to the Minister of Finance in that way, because I have observed that almost every hon. member who has spoken has found fault because we are not spending some money in his own constituency. I have only to look across the floor or at some of my friends on this side of the house to see hon. members who have urged me to give consideration to a particular public work in the constituencies which they represent. I do not find any fault with that; probably as time goes along, and perhaps sooner than they imagine, we may be able to meet their requests, but I submit to the house that if Canadians are to maintain a government house it should be done right.

Not very long ago in this very province of Ontario the newspapers, irrespective of party, carried on a campaign against government house in Toronto. They were going to get rid of it, and they almost did so when a Progressive government came in. When the Progressive government came in and looked the situation over and had a conference with the lieutenant governor, they represented to the lieutenant-governor, so I am told, that they did not object to maintaining the government house in a way that the province would be proud of, but what they objected to was some of the conditions that had been reported to prevail there. And the lieutenant governors coming into that house, because they happened to be wealthy men, able to spend their own money, have made government house in the province of Ontario popular. If then the government house in the province of Ontario is popular, how much greater reason is there to make the government house of the Dominion of Canada popular? At Rideau Hall Their Excellencies entertain not only members of parliament and visitors from sister nations, but representatives, for instance, of all the different churches of Canada who come here from time to time. I recall that not very long ago they entertained representatives of a teachers' association. They are always entertaining visitors who come to the capital city. They are ready to do their part, and are spending their money; and surely the least we can do is to keep that place in a respectable condition.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I want to ask the Minister of Finance if he thinks it is a good thing that we should set up such style that only rich men could occupy that position?

Mr. ROBB: I submit to my hon. friend that if we are to keep an official residence for the governor general, we should at least maintain it in such a condition that when a representative Australian comes here, or a representative of New Zealand, of the Irish Free State or of the mother country, we shall not be ashamed of it, and the visitors will have occasion to go back and say: Well, after all, Canada is a pretty good country—as good as our own.

Mr. EVANS: As seconder of the amendment moved by the member for Winnipeg North Centre, nothwithstanding all that the Minister of Finance has said I am not convinced that all this money is needed every year. According to the sums read out by the Minister of Public Works to-day. I am positive that what was spent during the last fifteen years on government house and grounds is not in value there to-day. I am wondering whether a proper balance account is kept of any part of the public works system by the government, and if the assets and liabilities balance as they go along. I do not like opposing these votes, but seeing the terrible extravagance around the city of Ottawa, including the central park and the beautification of this city, with all its lavish alterations, I say it is unreasonable at this time; and I want to tell the cabinet right here that these things are taken out of the sweated labour of those who have to make their living by the sweat of their brow to-day—out of the sweated labour of the men and women to say nothing of the children, on the farms of Canada. I recall quite clearly that last year when we sought a raise for certain civil servants whose salaries were far below the living line the Minister of Finance himself said it was time someone spoke on behalf of the taxpayers of the country.

Mr. ROBB: I will venture to say that the average civil servant in Canada is paid more than my hon. friend pays his employees.

Mr. EVANS: My employees have always been paid a living wage. I venture to say that $917 is not a living wage in Canada to-day. More than that, the minister has spoken of the different viewpoints between the Progressives and the bureaucrats of Toronto and Ottawa. I want to tell him that the Progressives when in power in any of the provinces have been the best governments. The Progressive government that was in Toronto could account for every dollar that was spent.

Mr. GOTT: Quite so, and they ended up with a deficit of $15,000,000.

Mr. EVANS: Perhaps they did not beautify the grounds of the lieutenant-governor. The grounds and the governor's residence would have had attention if required. The line of cleavage that has been drawn, particularly the last two years, by this parliament between those who have to work for their living and those who are at the head of affairs in this nation is daily becoming more and more objectionable. Much as I dislike to oppose these votes as they come along, I should not be doing my duty to-day did I not protest against this lavish extravagance.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance, speaking for the treasury board, accuses some on this side of the house of being quite willing to spend a lot more money, and further accuses them of asking for money to be spent in their own constituencies. I can answer the minister, at any rate as far as my constituency is concerned, by saying that that remark does not apply to me. I think the Minister of Finance will search a long time before he will find any instance where I have asked to have money spent in my constituency.

The spokesman for the treasury is not acting in his usual manner. Everybody has been referring to him as a sort of watchdog, but evidently the dog has gone to sleep just lately. I do not think the Minister of Finance will take umbrage at those remarks. I have too high a regard for him to think that he would. As far as "watchdog" is concerned, I think I have heard him refer to himself in almost exactly those terms; and consequently he is not likely to take offence. I do not use the expression in any derogatory sense; I simply say that he has lost his vocation for the moment. An hon. member reminds me that he has not had much bite, but apparently the dog has lost his grip in respect of these things.

The Minister of Finance refers to the province of Ontario as having spent a lot of money on its government house, and he says; "Oh well, only a wealthy man can take the job, and somebody down there has made it popular." The person who held the position, the last occupant of the office, made it popular by spending his own money. That is one of the prerogatives of people who get these high positions. While they may set a good example to us and spend a lot of money, that is no earthly reason why in times like these we should go crazy, as if we were bitten by a dog and contracted rabies or something of that kind. I want to call the attention of the house to the difference between the minister's statement to-night regarding the expenditure at Rideau Hall, and what a return brought down the other day discloses. The Minister of Finance says we have not kept up these buildings, and yet the other minister here tells us that even during the years of the war we were spending on an average over $50,000 a year on the upkeep of Rideau Hall.

Mr. MALCOLM: Oh no.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Oh yes, he does; and besides, I have under my hand a return which shows something entirely different. The Minister of Trade and Commerce may say no, but I want to—

Mr. MALCOLM: The Minister of Public Works said that about two-thirds of that vote was for salaries for the staff.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I do not think the minister will say that. I will sit down while the minister does say it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Go on. We like to hear my hon. friend.

Mr. CHAPLIN: My hon. friend had better keep out of this. I have in my hand a return brought down only a short time ago, and according to it the upkeep and improvements at Rideau Hall during the past ten years were as follows:

Fiscal Year	Amount
1918-19	59,994 72
1919-20	61,985 46
1920-21	69,981 38
1921-22	81,906 12
1922-23	94,425 12
1923-24	94,426 64
1924-25	96,067 42
1925-26	99,344 34

My opinion is that sums of that size are very generous to keep in repair and to take care of depreciation of stone and ordinary brick buildings. That is a very large sum of money to lay out each year in the repair and upkeep of buildings. When the Minister of Finance tells us that we are asking for the expenditure of money, let me say to him that constituencies throughout the whole of Canada are in need of public services in the public interest and yet these moneys are being spent in folderols. That is all there is to it.

Mr. MANION: I have not taken very much part in the discussion to-day and I should like to say a word in regard to the statement made by the Minister of Finance as to those who ask for the expenditure of money in their constituencies. We should be living in a strange country if all the money that we collected and spent on public buildings and so forth should be spent in Ottawa. This year we have had immense sums spent in this city and at Rideau Hall and other places and that is what the party on this side of the house is protesting against. Certainly I as a member of parliament have no intention of sitting silent in the house and not asking for necessary expenditures, for example in my constituency. Most of the expenditures asked for in different constituencies by members in various parts of the house are asked for as expenditures which will bring in a return or which are necessary to provide postal customs or other facilities. I wish to put myself on record as taking the stand that simply because some member requests that necessary money be spent in his constituency for some particular work, that does not preclude him from standing up and protesting against what he considers to be unnecessary expenditures in Ottawa or elsewhere.

Amendment (Mr. Woodsworth) negatived.

Mr. SPENCER: Before this item carries I should like some further information from the minister. The two items of $50,000 and $60,000 that we are discussing to-night amount to $110,000 and the minister has given us details in regard to amounts of $45,000 and $16,000, or a total of $61,000. It seems only reasonable that we should ask and expect to receive answers as to how the balance is going to be applied. Surely where repairs and changes are being made in such an important building as Rideau Hall, plans should be made well in advance, and I cannot understand why the minister is unable to give us particulars how the money is going to be spent. Going back into past history we find that from time to time royalty has been extravagant and that parliament has had to step in and criticize the expenditure of kings. In this case we have in Canada a representative of His Majesty who, in the opinion of many members, is getting a little too extravagant for the welfare of this country. It is a very unpleasant duty, I admit, but it is our duty to draw the attention of the government, who ask us to vote for these items, to the fact that we consider these things are too expensive.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Does my hon. friend think his question is fair? If he had paid attention to what I told him a moment ago, I stated that the $60,000 item was taken up with wages of the thirty-five servants amounting to more than $45,000, and materials used by them in connection with the various services there, amounting to about $15,000. That covers the $60,000. That leaves $50,000, of which I have given my hon. friend the details.

Mr. SPENCER: For $16,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, and I have told him that the balance was made up in furnishings required from time to time, improvements and repairs.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Is it the intention to build any addition to any of the buildings and, if so, has the minister the architect's plan so that he can tell us what is going to be done?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The only addition that is proposed is a tennis pavilion amounting to $10,000. May I call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that if the $65,000 item that was thought necessary and that was expended in 1914 had been followed right through, instead of what has been expended annually since that time in this particular connection, it would have made up $120,000 of the $150,000 that we spent the year before last, this last year and that we are asking for now. This is practically to make up the deficiency for those years. I would suggest, if I might, that the item of $60,000 appearing on page 33, and having a direct relation to the matter we have just been considering, be now discussed while we have the whole matter in mind.

Mr. SPENCER: This item has not been carried yet and the minister has already given us the particulars that make up the $60,000 item. The particulars we want are in connection with the $50,000 item. He has not given them to us; he has given us details covering only $16,000 and I am going to give him a wide margin. I beg to move:

That item 127: Ottawa, Rideau Hall alterations, improvements and furnishings, be reduced by $20,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not see any advantage in repetition. I have already given my hon. friend all the information I have on the subject, all the information that is available at the present moment. I have given him details as to the fencing, the decorations, bathrooms, carpets, glassware, and so forth, and it is the opinion of the architect who has looked over the grounds and buildings that it will be necessary to provide certain new furnishings and repairs, of which he cannot give definite details at the present time, but they will be required in the present year.

Mr. GARDINER: If the minister is so satisfied that they will be required, why cannot he give the details?

Mr. ELLIOTT: They are general repairs.

Mr. GARDINER: That is not a reasonable answer. If the archiect thinks that they will be required, he should give some information as to what is required, and what will be the cost. I would remind the minister again that he has only given an explanation with regard to items totalling $16,000. The amendment proposed by my hon. friend from Battle River is to reduce the item by $20,000, so there will still be a margin left of $14,000. Does not the minister think that would be sufficient for the additional requirements, especially in view of the fact that the architect is not in a position to give any details as to what the balance is required for?

Amendment (Mr. Spencer) negatived.

Item agreed to.

Rideau Hall, including grounds—improvements, furniture, maintenance, etc., $60,000.

Miss MACPHAIL: I do not think it is the desire of any member of this house to seem to be mean in relation to the present occupants or any other occupants of government house, but one wonders where this thing is going to end. We do not mind reasonable expenditures. But last night we passed an item to renovate a residence in Quebec at a cost of $150,000, and if certain rumours that come to one's ears to-day and other days are well founded, even these two residences will not be all.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should like to relieve my hon. friend's mind at once about any rumours there may be as to other residences for the purposes of the governor general. If there are any such rumours, they are entirely without foundation, and such a suggestion would not be countenanced by the government.

Miss MACPHAIL: I am very glad to hear it. Two are enough, I think. We do not want the people in government house to have to scurry out and borrow dishes and silverware. That is disgraceful. We ought to be able to provide them with enough cups and saucers and spoons so that they can eat and drink. Everybody wants to see our government houses places of beauty and culture and dignity, but all that can be had for a good deal less expenditure. I sometimes think that one almost trips over the attendants, there are so many. I am not so sure that all that is necessary in order that there shall be culture and beauty and dignity, and though it is unpleasant for me to have to say it, I think it is time that the parliament of Canada said that this is enough, and we are just saying that to the Minister of Public Works to-night, as we did last night. We feel sure that the government will take into their consideration, as the term is, the wishes of parliament in this matter. It has been very clearly shown last night and to-day that parliament does feel that the expenditure is sufficient and should not be added to, and that if there is to be a change of any kind, the amount should be reduced.

Mr. IRVINE: I think there are amounts totalling $129,000 in the estimates immediately before us for Rideau Hall, and last night we passed a vote of $150,000 for a similar purpose. To-morrow night perhaps we shall vote $200,000 more for the same purpose. I cannot say that I am really opposed to these votes because I think the people of Canada desire to maintain this kind of thing. As far as I am aware, no protest has come from any section of the country against these expenditures. It may be that they do not know what is going on, and for that reason we ought to congratulate the hon. members of the house who have drawn the attention of parliament and of the country to the amounts we are expending for this purpose. Perhaps the more we spend in this way the better, because I do not know that there is any more emphatic way of attracting the attention of the public to the situation than by spending huge amounts of money. If they want to have royal conditions and all that kind of thing, they will have to pay for it. I do not think it would be wise for us to try to maintain the office in a second-hand way. If it is going to be maintained after the order, I was going to say, of Melchisedec, but that might be regarded as sacrilegious, so I will say after the order of the middle ages, we shall have to pay for it, and if we pay a little more, it might draw the attention of the public to the situation a little more speedily. On that ground I am not in favour of reducing these votes; in fact, I would like to increase them. If we are going to have royalty in Canada, I want it to be real royalty; I do not want any of this second-hand business. Moreover, I want to see Rideau Hall provided with so many knives and forks that when parliamentarians are entertained there, there will be a few left.

So far as I am concerned I want to say frankly that I do not think we need government houses in the provinces. I think they ought to be done away with. I do not think we need a government house in Ottawa. But the people do. They have made no protest; certainly I have never received one. The people of Ottawa, so far as I have been able to observe, are very glad to welcome this kind of thing—perhaps they get some forks there too—and they know what is being paid. The more people are ruled the better they seem to like it; they seem to desire to bow and scrape before people. Well, if they enjoy that, let them pay for it. Why should we object? As long as they like that kind of thing, by all means let them have it, and let them pay for the bowing and the place to bow in. If they want to double the expenditure, that is the business of the people of Canada, and if to-night we have protests against this kind of expenditure, as the people evidently want them, I am not going to make any. I am going to wait and see whether the exposé of these figures will be noticed by my constituents, and if they take up the protest of course I shall be glad to respond to their wishes. But until that time

I shall have to believe that Canada wants royalty, and if she does she will have to foot the bill.

Item agreed to.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Will you call the next item, telephone service, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. STEVENS: Why do you want to jump to telephone service?

Mr. ELLIOTT: We are not jumping; we are there now.

Mr. STEVENS: We willingly agreed to go to that item and pass it, but now we should get back to the resolution that we were dealing with and finish it.

Mr. ELLIOTT: At the suggestion of my hon. friend I will jump back.

Ottawa—towards purchase of building for government workshops, $12,750.

Mr. GARDINER: What is this?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is the sixth annual payment on the purchase of the property.

Item agreed to.

Ottawa—towards purchase of Daly building, $118,000.

Mr. SPENCER: How much is still to be paid on this building?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Four payments.

Mr. GARDINER: What was the original price?

Mr. ELLIOTT: One million dollars.

Item agreed to.

Rockland—public building, $5,000.

Mr. SPENCER: Explain.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This $5,000, of which $2,500 is a revote, is for the fittings, lock boxes, grading, sidewalks, and so on, required for the completion of the post office erected at Rockland during the year 1927-28.

Mr. LUCAS: What is the postal revenue?

Mr. ELLIOTT: $2,412.

Mr. LUCAS: And the population?

Mr. ELLIOTT: 3,256.

Mr. LUCAS: Was this recommended by the postal department?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not see any recommendation here.

Mr. GARDINER: How would the item get into the estimates without a recommendation?

[Mr. Irvine.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: A delegation of the residents and the local authorities interviewed the minister on February 26, 1924, resolutions were passed by the town council, and other representations were made locally.

Mr. SPENCER: Has the local member recommended this?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Toronto—customs house, $500,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Explain.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is another case where a building was required years ago, but on account of shortage of funds, due largely to the war, we have had to defer it until the present time. We have been renting buildings for the customs and other services in Toronto, paying fairly good rentals, but not getting the desired accommodation. The construction of the customs building will be started this year.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Have you got the site?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, we own the land already. One of the reasons why it is advantageous to put up the building on our property close to the railway station is that to-day we are paying $15,000 a year for the transfer back and forth of the mail and customs packages that have to be dealt with in the examining warehouse. We expect to save a considerable part of this expense. I may tell my hon. friend very frankly that we are not putting up this building until we think it is required.

Mr. MANION: So the Toronto people have said.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the estimated total cost?

Mr. ELLIOTT: What we propose to construct will cost, as near as possible, two million dollars. We are making a beginning this year.

Mr. DUNNING: It will be more than that ultimately.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, but all that is to be constructed at the present time will cost two million dollars.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Where are the Toronto members?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not think they object.

Mr. GARDINER: Let us have the final blow now.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend will get the final blow just as soon as I get it, and I do not intend to get it until I absolutely have to. It is thought that two million dollars will meet the requirements for some time to come. This expenditure will build two of the three units that are proposed. There will be an additional unit later on. It may not be required for perhaps ten or twelve years.

Item agreed to.

Dominion public buildings, improvements, repairs, etc., $35,000; Winnipeg—Fort Osborne barracks—new boilers, $45,000; Winnipeg post office—installation of pickup tables, $7,000; Winnipeg — Minto street armoury — fittings, $16,000; Winnipeg immigration building No. 2 —repairs and improvements, $2,700.—Total, $105,700.

Mr. CANTLEY: What is the $45,000 for in connection with Fort Osborne barracks?

Mr. ELLIOTT: These are new boilers required for the barracks. This sum is needed to provide for the installation of the third unit of three modern boilers there.

Mr. CANTLEY: Did we not have a similar item last year in connection with these boilers?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes. The replacement of the existing boilers was commenced in 1926-27, the work to be spread over three years. In 1926-27 the first unit was installed, under contract with W. G. Edge, Limited, of Ottawa for $29,500. In 1927-28 the second unit was installed by the James Ballantyne Company of Winnipeg, the contract being for $35,397. In order to complete the work it is necessary to install the third and last unit this year, the appropriation being what is now asked.

Mr. GARDINER: Are the units of different sizes?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have not the specifications, but no doubt they are different.

Mr. GARDINER: The first unit cost $29,000, the second $35,000 and the third unit will now cost $45,000. Unless there is some difference in size and in other respects, an explanation should be given.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have no doubt there is a difference in the performance of the different boilers.

Item agreed to.

Saskatchewan—Dominion public buildings—improvements, repairs, etc., $17,000.

Mr. SPENCER: What are the particulars in regard to the $17,000 for Dominion public buildings?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is the general vote. It covers buildings all over the province. The amount expended for this purpose last year was $16,998; the previous year $16,139; the year before that $16,477. It is the usual vote.

Mr. SPENCER: The depreciation in public buildings in Saskatchewan is not as great as the depreciation per annum in connection with Rideau Hall.

Item agreed to.

Prince Albert—immigration building, $45,000.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the need for this building?

Mr. STEVENS: It is the Prime Minister's riding; why should there not be a building there?

Mr. LAPOINTE: They deserve something.

Mr. STEVENS: Surely.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is one of the many fortunate ridings in the country at the present time. The amount is required towards the purchase of a site and the erection of an immigration building at Prince Albert. The proposed building will be a two storey brick structure 90 feet by 35 feet, the estimated cost being $45,000. The erection of the building was requested by Mr. W. J. Egan, Deputy Minister of Immigration and Colonization, in communications extending over a number of years. In his letter of November 15, 1926, he states:

> The department has for some years past had an immigration hall at Prince Albert, which, while possibly meeting our needs at the time of construction and for some period afterwards, is now found to be altogether inadequate. The building is frame, one-storey, 26′ x 70′ x 10′, divided into two sections, practically one-third of it being used for the janitor's quarters, leaving available only eight rooms with a double bed in each for the use of immigrants and giving a maximum accommodation for sixteen persons only.
> The movement of immigrants to this section has been gradually increasing yearly and in the spring of 1926 we had occasion to accommodate approximately 350 new arrivals in three months. What we have in mind is a two storey frame building capable of accommodating one hundred persons including families, the upper floor to be devoted to dormitories for men and women with separate rooms on the lower floor for families, together with quarters for the caretaker.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): How many places in Saskatchewan besides Prince Albert have immigration buildings?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am afraid my hon. friend will have to ask the Department of Immigration; I could not give the information offhand. I might point out that the population of Prince Albert in a period of a little over twenty years has increased from 1,785 to 7,500 at the end of 1927. It has increased about fivefold in the last twenty years.

Mr. GARDINER: How many persons will the building accommodate at one time?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is intended to accommodate 100 persons including families, at one time.

Item agreed to.

Prince Albert public building—addition, $50,000.

Mr. STEVENS: What is this?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is an addition to the public building.

Mr. SHORT: Prince Albert is well looked after.

Mr. ELLIOTT: We are trying to do the best we can.

Mr. STEVENS: Did the member for Prince Albert request this?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not think he did; I have no recollection of his having done so.

Mr. LAPOINTE: He didn't oppose it.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have heard no opposition. The amount is required towards the construction of an addition to the public building at Prince Albert to provide adequate accommodation for the postal, customs, Dominion lands, national parks and forestry services. The requirements in these various branches in Prince Albert have increased, as the population has increased, out of all proportion to the existing accommodation.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Any recommendations?

Mr. ELLIOTT: From nearly everybody. Some years ago the post office gave up to the taxation branch a portion of the space they occupied, on the understanding that if required this space would be returned. Now the post office has made application for the return of this space or its equivalent. A new sketch has been prepared showing the additional accommodation required by the Department of the Interior, which necessitates a rearrangement of the whole scheme. It is considered that to enclose a portion of the court at the rear of the post office will give better accommodation than taking the space now used by the taxation branch. This will provide for the Department of the Interior, the parks branch and the forestry branch.

Mr. STEVENS: Will it include the Soldier Settlement Board?

[Mr. Elliott.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not think so.

Mr. FORKE: It is intended to have the Soldier Settlement Board in the new immigration building when it is completed.

Mr. FRASER: Will this amount complete the building?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is the estimate.

Item agreed to.

Regina—tractor for postal purposes, $1,350.

Mr. LUCAS: Is this a standard tractor?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is a standard tractor requested by the department, costing $1,350. We are getting this kind of tractor in almost every case.

Mr. FRASER: Where are they made?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have not that information, but they are the tractors used by the railways for similar work.

Mr. SPENCER: Why does a tractor come under this department? Why is this not provided by the Post Office department?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The Post Office department makes the request and we have to pay the money, just as we have to build the post offices.

Mr. SPENCER: This is the supply department?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes. The Postmaster General makes a request, and we have such faith in his requests that we try to grant them as far as possible.

Mr. FRASER: That is how the Post Office department shows a surplus from year to year; they do not pay for their equipment?

Mr. VENIOT: I am sorry, but there is no surplus.

Item agreed to.

Regina—armoury, $33,500.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is the first payment on the purchase of a building for armoury purposes in the city of Regina. As a means of providing adequate armoury accommodation it is proposed to erect a building by private enterprise by an organization to be incorporated under the name of the Regina Armoury Association. The city of Regina is prepared to donate a site worth $40,000, situated in the northeast corner of the exhibition grounds for the proposed structure, and the association proposes raising the necessary funds for the erection of an armoury building costing approximately $400,000. It is proposed to lease the building to the Dominion government on a rental-purchase basis at an annual rental of $33,500 for a period of twenty years, at the end of which time the building becomes the property of the government.

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps I might say that while the term "private enterprise" was used by the minister, the association which is being formed is a non-profit organization consisting of the officers of the various units in the city. In connection with the arrangement there is no private profit of any kind at all. The city itself is contributing the site, as I say the organization will be a holding company merely to enable the cost to be amortized over a period of years.

Mr. LUCAS: What is to be the total cost?

Mr. ELLIOTT: $400,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Can the minister tell us how many units will make use of this building?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not think we have the number of units; I am afraid my hon. friend will have to get that from the Department of National Defence. The technical officers advise us that it is not possible for the units concerned to function efficiently in their present quarters, and the erection of an armoury is the only means of providing a suitable building. They also advise that the present rentals may be given up as an offset against the expenditure which acceptance of these proposals would entail. In this opinion the deputy ministers of National Defence and Public Works concur, and are of the opinion that acceptance of the above proposals would tend towards greater efficiency and the acquisition by the crown of a suitable building at a minimum of expenditure.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the present rental?

Mr. DUNNING: Approximately $13,000 a year is now being paid in the form of rent, speaking from memory.

Mr. ELLIOTT: And the accommodation is entirely inadequate.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Is this building at Regina larger than the armoury at Moose Jaw, or how does it compare?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am not able to say, because I have not the figures with regard to Moose Jaw. I understand that it is about the size of the Edmonton armoury, if my hon. friend knows that building.

Item agreed to.

Rosthern—public building, $28,000.

Mr. LUCAS: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is required for the purchase of a site and towards the erection of a public building for postal purposes in the town of Rosthern. For a number of years representations have been made that the present accommodation is entirely inadequate, and a report to council was prepared for the purchase of a certain lot from the Union Supply Company Limited. This was done in 1915, but it was not proceeded with at that time, and has stood over since. Various resolutions have been passed and requests made, one by the district superintendent of postal services on December 23, 1927. Among other things he points out that the postmaster has 174 small lock boxes, all rented, and 97 larger size boxes rented; he contemplates an additional 40 small size boxes, and has a demand for a number more. The revenue is $6,248 per year. The members of the board of trade and representatives of the postal department have urged upon the government the necessity of the building.

Mr. LUCAS: What is the population?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The population is now a bit over 1,500.

Mr. GARDINER: And the revenue is over $6,000?

Mr. ELLIOTT: From postal revenue, $6,248, and from the customs $6,534.

Mr. GARDINER: Are the post office and the customs house in one building?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister give the house some information as to the rental of the building?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is a rented building, supplied by the postmaster.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the rent paid?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The postmaster receives so much and supplies the accommodation.

Mr. STEVENS: Can the minister give the amount the postmaster receives, together with the rental?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, I cannot.

Mr. GARDINER: Is there any information as to the size of the present building?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, except that it is reported to be entirely unsuitable.

Mr. GARDINER: Are the customs and excise at present in the same building?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, I understand they are not.

Mr. GARDINER: What constituency is this in?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Prince Albert.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: A very large constituency.

Mr. GARDINER: Is this $28,000 for the purpose of buying the lot?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The $28,000 is for the purchase of the site and towards the erection of a public building. The building is estimated to cost $23,000; post office and customs fittings, $3,500; grading and sidewalks, $1,500; superintendence and contingencies, perhaps from $500 to $1,000.

Mr. STEVENS: How much are you going to pay for the lot?

Mr. ELLIOTT: We have not got it yet; we have to have the vote before we can buy a lot.

Mr. GARDINER: Has the minister an estimate as to the cost of the lot apart from the building?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. GARDINER: Is this $28,000 both for the lot and the building?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, it is exclusive of the site. The cost of the site has not yet been determined.

Mr. GARDINER: Can the minister explain how he is going to put up a building without having a lot to build it on?

Mr. ELLIOTT: We will not put it up without a lot to build it on.

Mr. SHORT: Why do you not build on some of the lots which you have down in the maritime provinces? You want an appropriation to go through without a lot to build on.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Those lots are too far away to be of service for this building.

[Mr. Elliott.]

Mr. POWER: The member representing this constituency is a representative statesman.

Mr. LUCAS: There was a lot in my constituency for seventeen years without a building put upon it.

Mr. VALLANCE: I might tell my hon. friend that we have a lot, bought by the Tories in 1911, on which there has been no building erected.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Might I ask what is the size of the village?

Mr. VALLANCE: Eleven hundred.

Item agreed to.

Saskatoon—public building, $150,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: In this connection three projects were under consideration, one the construction of a new public building, second, the enlargement of the existing building, and third, the purchase of another building. The present post office building is entirely inadequate to provide for the business that is carried on there, and the advice from our architect is that from a structural standpoint it cannot be economically enlarged to accommodate all the government offices. It was therefore found advisable to obtain another suitable site. The site of the present building is a valuable one, and the land around there, necessary to provide the further accommodation required, is being held at a very high price. What is proposed is to purchase a lot 40 feet on Twenty-second avenue for $53,000, the property adjacent to the railway station and situated on block 148 with a frontage of 150 feet on First avenue, 120 feet on Twenty-second avenue, and distant from the post office 250 feet on First avenue, and to build on that lot.

Item agreed to.

An hon. MEMBER: It is eleven o'clock.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is there any objection to finishing the item? The remaining vote, for Tisdale, is a small one.

Mr. GARDINER: It is rather a large item, Mr. Chairman, and I suggest that it stand over.

Mr. STEVENS: You have had a pretty good day.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Monday, May 7, 1928

The house met at three o'clock.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Fourth and final report of the select standing committee on railways and shipping.—Mr. Goodison.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

MOTION FOR ADOPTION OF COMMITTEE'S REPORT

Mr. F. G. SANDERSON (South Perth): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hay), I beg to move that in accordance with the notice given on the 3rd instant, the eighth report of the select standing committee on banking and commerce be concurred in.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winninpeg North Centre): Just before that motion is adopted, there are a few remarks I should like to make, especially since it was on my motion that the inquiry was made before the banking and commerce committee. I do not desire to move an amendment to that report, which like all reports, is more or less of a compromise, but I should like to point out very briefly some of the facts which came before this committee which are not embodied in the report.

While undoubtedly the attention of the committee was centered upon the suggestion of a central bank of issue and rediscount at the same time there were other suggestions made, such as the establishment of small local banks, and the possibility of setting up co-operative credit societies. These matters were not gone into by your committee.

Futher than that, there were a number of general criticisms advanced with regard to the present banking system. The witnesses that came before the committee were, with one exception, either officials of the department or else those connected with the Canadian Bankers Association. Under these circumstances we had not the opportunity of considering as many of these criticisms as personally I should have liked. I am not blaming the committee; the trouble lay in the fact that very few business men cared to come forward to criticize the banks. I do not know whether their objections are well taken but while privately they criticize the banks, they express themselves as afraid to come forward publicly lest their credit should be interfered with. I do not know whether those fears are justified; I merely mention that for what it is worth.

In rebuttal of various criticisms which were made, the bankers made claims which I summarize as follows:

(a) That the small number of banks in Canada (four banks controlling approximately 70 per cent of the entire deposits) is in the interests of Canada.

(b) That according to the banks' code of honour, in the granting of credits there is no discrimination against a business concern that is a rival to one in which a bank director is also a director.

(c) That on the contrary, interlocking directorates are a distinct advantage.

(d) That districts remote from headquarters are under no disadvantage.

(e) That it is not the function of a bank to take the hazards of the commencement of a manufacturing business but that any solvent concern in a liquid shape can obtain all the cerdit it can reasonably desire for legitimate purposes.

Mr. A. E. Phipps puts it this way:

No legitimate loan properly secured has been refused from one end of Canada to the other, since I have been a banker.

The evidence further shows:

(a) That under the Finance Act the government performed, with less machinery and expense, some of the functions of the Federal Reserve bank, but that the banks use the Finance Act to a very limited degree.

(b) That the control of the Federal Reserve banks over the money market through the open market transactions might be difficult to exercise in Canada.

(c) That in the opinion of Governor Harding,—

1. The mutual savings banks in New England have been highly successful.

2. That in the United States, western cities would organize their own banks.

3. That the Federal Reserve banks have been helpful in stabilizing the prive level by stabilizing the money market.

4. That a federal reserve system organized on the same basis as in the United States—that is, a regional system—would be impossible in Canada.

With regard to the control of the price level, as a good many hon. gentlemen know, there are two schools of economists that differ widely. When introducing my resolution some weeks ago I quoted at length from Mr. Reginald McKenna—

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I gather from the observations of my hon. friend that he imagines he is discussing the report of the banking and commerce committee on the inquiry into the banking system.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes.

Mr. ROBB: That is not the report before the house at all. The motion is to approve the eighth report of the select standing committee on banking and commerce, which covers bill No. 38, an act to amend the Bankruptcy Act.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I was informed by the chairman of the committee that there had been a slight error on the part of the clerk and that "seventh" and "eighth" had been confused, but that it was the report on improving the banking system that was before the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: At the foot of the motion is a note that the eighth report covers bill No. 38, an act to amend the Bankruptcy Act (attendance for examination), which the committee recommend be withdrawn in view of the several amendments to the Bankruptcy Act contemplated next session.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

Mr. W. T. GOODISON (West Lambton) moved:

That the fourth and final report of the select standing committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government be concurred in.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker I think notice should be given. In the meantime the report referred to should be printed in order that it may be studied by hon. members before they are asked to concur in it.

Mr. DUNNING: Agreed.

Mr. SPEAKER: Stands as a notice.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT ACT

Hon. ROBERT FORKE (Minister of Immigration and Colonization) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 288 to amend the Soldier Settlement Act.

Mr. JAMES ARTHURS (Parry Sound): Mr. Speaker, is this bill in accordance with the recommendations of the soldiers' committee?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING

Mr. CHURCH:

1. What sums were spent on advertising in newspapers by the Canadian National Railways in 1927 and 1928, and to whom paid?

2. What sums were spent on free transportation in exchange for (a) newspaper space, (b) eulogy articles on the system and its officials, and to what papers in each case was transportation issued accordingly, (c) to aid in securing new business for the system?

3 How was an item of $175,162 increase in such advertising in 1927 and 1928 expended, and what papers benefited?

4. What was the number of passes granted each paper, and to whom?

Mr. DUNNING:

This question calls for information of a kind that the management of the Canadian National Railways holds not to be in the public interest to divulge in detail, as publication, while serving no useful purpose, may place the Canadian National Railways in an individious position with respect to competitors whose advertising appropriations are not subject to publication.

Even if it were advisable to bring down the information asked for in detail, it could not be given in the form of an answer to a question as it covers advertising of all kinds —newspapers, magazines, printing of booklets, etc.—and also not only the entire Canadian field, but such portions of the United States as are served by Canadian National lines in that country.

The item under advertising in Canadian National accounts which the hon. gentleman refers to as having increased by $175,162 during 1927, covers advertising of all kinds throughout Canada and the United States. During 1927, the management expended on advertising in newspapers $303,809.25. In addition thereto there was issued transportation in lieu of cash for advertising space in newspapers in Canada only $197,225.39.

SAINT JOHN VALLEY RAILWAY

Mr. FRASER:

What is being done by the government in the matter of the Saint John Valley railway?

Mr. DUNNING:

The possible acquisition of the Saint John and Quebec railway, and certain other railways throughout Canada, is under consideration by the government and the management of Canadian National Railways.

ASHTON, ONT., POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. GARLAND (Carleton):

1. Has there been a change in the postmastership at Ashton, Ontario, during the past year?
2. If so, who is the present postmaster and when was he appointed?
3. Who recommended his appointment?

Mr. VENIOT:

1, 2 and 3. Postmaster A. L. Tubman tendered his resignation in February last. The vacancy was advertised in usual way and a certificate has now been received from the Civil Service Commission covering the appointment of Mr. W. H. Bigford. Arrangements are being made for the transfer to the commission's nominee.

SEIZURES OF WINES AND SPIRITS 1923-1927

Mr. CANTLEY:

1. What was the total quantity of wines or/and spirits seized, condemned or confiscated by officers of the Department of Revenue during each of the years 1923-1924-1925-1926-1927, in each of the several provinces of Canada?
2. What was the proportion of (a) wines, (b) spirits, so seized or confiscated?
3. What disposal was made of such wines and/or spirits so seized, condemned or confiscated?
4. What are the quantities of (a) wines, (b) spirits so seized, condemned or confiscated, now stored in (a) Halifax, (b) Pictou, (c) Sydney, (d) North Sydney and (e) other points in Nova Scotia?
5. Have any wines or spirits so seized, condemned or confiscated been sold or transferred to any of the several provincial liquor commissions?
6. If so, to what commissions, what quantities were sold, at what dates and at what prices in each case?

Mr. EULER: Mr. Speaker, there is no disposition on the part of the department to refuse the information asked for by my hon. friend, but to furnish it would necessitate the services of four or five clerks for a period extending over five or six months, the material being so voluminous. Perhaps he will amend his question, or drop it altogether, for I doubt whether it would be worth while to expend so much time on furnishing the desired information.

Mr. CANTLEY: I will consult the minister in regard to it.

Mr. SPEAKER: Stands.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

INVERNESS COUNTY—POSTMASTERS DISMISSED

Mr. MACDOUGALL:

1. How many postmasters were dismissed in the county of Inverness since the present Postmaster General assumed office?
2. What are their names?
3. On whose recommendation did the department dismiss them?
4. For what reason were dismissals made?

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

GOVERNMENT AID TO RAILWAYS

Mr. CHURCH:

For a return showing: 1. The Federal aid granted to the (a) Toronto and Eastern Railway, (b) the Canadian Northern Railway (on section Toronto to Trenton), and the cost of said systems and the terms on which these two systems became the property of the government, and what has been done with these properties.
2. The number of miles of these systems now torn up and abandoned or unused, and the loss attending.
3. The amounts spent on right of way and what sales have been made of these lands.
4. The amounts received from salvage of the tearing up of these systems. What has been torn up, how was it disposed of, to whom, for what sums, and what tenders were received.
5. The loss to the country on account of (a) capital, (b) maintenance, by such abandonment.
6. For a copy of a contract or agreement to sell the Toronto and Eastern to the Hydro-Electric Power Commission applied for by the late Sir Adam Beck.

YPRES, SASKATCHEWAN, POST OFFICE

Mr. CAMPBELL:

For a copy of all papers, letters, and other correspondence, in connection with an application for the removal of the post office of Ypres, Saskatchewan, from its present location.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, HUDSON BAY AND FLIN FLON MINING COMPANIES

Mr. SENN:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, reports, orders in council, leases, agreements or other documents, relating to the Flin Flon mine, and/or the Hudson Bay Mining Company, between the Department of the Interior and the Hudson Bay Mining Company and the Flin Flon Mining Company and/or their solicitors and agents; and any other department of the government.

VANCOUVER HARBOUR BOARD TERMINAL ELEVATOR NO. 3

Mr. CAMPBELL:

For a copy of all telegrams, letters, and other correspondence between E. A. Buckerfield, W. deB Farris, J. R. Murray, and the Vancouver harbour commissioners, or the government relative to the purchase or lease of the property adjacent to (or joining) No. 3 Vancouver harbour board terminal elevator (now under lease to the United Grain Growers) and upon which there has recently been erected an elevator and feed mill.

PORT HASTINGS-QUEENSVILLE, NOVA SCOTIA, MAIL SERVICE

Mr. MACDOUGALL:

For a copy of all tenders received by the Post Office Department for conveying His Majesty's mails to and from Port Hastings and Queensville, in the county of Inverness, Nova Scotia. Also a return showing the names of all persons who tendered, the amount of each tender, along with a copy of correspondence, if any, from other parties in reference to said tenders.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—FLIN FLON AND HUDSON BAY MINES

Mr. SENN:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, reports, orders in council, leases, agreements or other documents, relating to the construction of a railway into the Flin Flon mine or the Hudson Bay mine between the Department of Railways and the Flin Flon Mining Company and/or the Hudson Bay Mining Company, and/or their solicitors and agents; and any other department of the government.

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps my hon. friend will agree to include, along with the Department of Railways, the Canadian National Railways. If that were done all the information respecting the matter would come down at the same time. This would be more convenient for the house and for everyone concerned. If the words "Canadian National Railways" were inserted after the words "Department of Railways," in the fourth line, it would accomplish the object. The government is very anxious to bring down the papers, and this amendment would enable it to submit them all at the same time.

Motion agreed to.

PENSION ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Health) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the Pension Act to provide for the amendments reported to the house by the special committee, and for such other amendments as may be necessary in consequence of the amalgamation of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment with the Department of Health.

[Mr. Senn.]

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

RETURNED SOLDIERS INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act be amended in respect to payments in case of disability not due to war, and as to applications where there is no reasonable expectation of life, and to provide that applications for insurance may be received under the act on and after the 1st July, 1928, up to and including the 30th June, 1933.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

LEVELS OF LAKE NIPISSING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JAMES ARTHURS (Parry Sound): I wish to direct a question either to the Minister of Marine (Mr. Cardin) or to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott): I have received several communications from my riding, and I have noticed in the newspapers a great deal of complaint, regarding the levels of lake Nipissing, which are presently controlled by a dam under, I think, the direction of the Minister of Public Works. Great loss will be sustained if the lake continues at its present level. Has either minister received any communication along that line, or will the dam be opened?

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): I am not aware of any communications but I shall be glad to inquire and give an answer probably to-morrow.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

ATHABASCA ELECTION—QUESTION AS TO MEETING OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): We seem to have a good deal of difficulty in connection with the committee on privileges and elections. In Thursday's votes and proceedings there was notice that there would be a meeting of the committee on Tuesday, and in Friday's votes and proceedings it appears that the meeting is to be held on Thursday. There should be some explanation as to why this change has taken place. I do not suggest that my hon. friend (Mr. Lapointe) knows, but it does occur to me that this unfortunate committee is experiencing great difficulty in getting together. My understanding was that it was to meet on Tuesday in pursuance of notice, and I made my arrangements accordingly.

Mr LAPOINTE: I do not think my hon. friend is in order in referring to the proceedings of a committee of the house; I think that is distinctly against the rules.

Mr. BENNETT: It is not against the rules to ask a question if there is a misstatement. I hold in my hand a copy of the votes and proceedings of the house, which are part of the public record of the House of Commons, and I am directing the attention of the government, who control the committees—

Mr. LAPOINTE: They do not.

Mr. BENNETT: They have a majority in them all, and that is what I meant by the control of the government. That is the kind of control we know in parliament; if there were any other kind of control the hon. gentleman would not be here. In the votes and proceedings it is stated that the committee on privileges and elections is to meet at 11 a.m. in room 424; it was to have met Tuesday and now it is fixed for Thursday. I suppose the officers of the house would be responsible for the change.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): No doubt it is my fault, Mr. Speaker, but I did not quite understand the question asked by the leader of the opposition. If I might be permitted to do so, I will read his question and give an answer at five o'clock this afternoon or at eight o'clock to-night.

NATURALIZATION ACT

STATEMENT BY CHIEF JUSTICE MEREDITH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka-Ontario): I direct the attention of the Secretary of State to the fact that Chief Justice Meredith has made a public protest because he cannot get from the minister information which he requires, and I ask if this information will be given in future.

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (Secretary of State): I have read the report sent out by the Canadian Press having to do with a judgment rendered by Chief Justice Meredith at Osgoode Hall, Toronto. In the first paragraph of the report it is stated that the chief justice intimated that he had applied to the Secretary of State for assistance in arriving at a decision with respect to these aliens who were applying for naturalization, and that the minister had not responded to his request. I believe that is what my hon. friend has in mind.

I can only say that I am afraid the Canadian Press has been misinformed on the matter; I do not believe that Chief Justice Meredith would have taken such a stand, for the simple reason that he did not write to the Secretary of State in connection with this matter, and so could not have received any reply from myself. What happened was this: On April 9 Chief Justice Meredith wrote a letter to the Under-Secretary of State, Mr. Mulvey, which I will now read:

My dear Mr. MULVEY:

The same question in regard to naturalization in Canada of aliens, about which I had some correspondence with you a while ago, has arisen again, in the same place and in regard to the same class of persons.

The still unsatisfactory state of the law and the practice under the act has impelled me to put in writing some thoughts on the subject in the hope that they may lead to something being done to put the matter on a better footing.

Will you be good enough to give to me any assistance you can; and to read that which I have written and let we know your views of all that I have said?

The enclosed paper is merely a draft. I have done nothing yet.

On April 17 of this year the Under-Secretary of State replied as follows:

My dear Judge MEREDITH:

Your letter of the 9th arrived during my absence from Ottawa. I am very glad indeed to have your opinion upon the subjects therein touched upon in respect of the naturalization of aliens. This will be of great assistance to the Secretary of State in promoting a bill which is at present before parliament for the purpose of amending the Naturalization Act, eliminating the clauses which require applicants for naturalization to be heard by a judge. I agree with your view throughout. In fact, I have for years been trying to prevail upon the Secretary of State to put forward the bill which is now under consideration.

Mr. BENNETT: The memorandum attached to the letter has not been read.

Mr. RINFRET: I thank my hon. friend for the interjection, because this is also very helpful. On May 1 Mr. Justice Meredith wrote to Mr. McClenahan, local registrar at Milton, Ontario, in which letter he informed Mr. McClenahan that he was sending papers in reference to cases which were before the court, and in that letter he stated:

You are no doubt aware of the fact that there has been a good deal of discussion over naturalization proceedings ever since the assizes at Milton two or three years ago when several cases had to be dealt with by me.

It has now reached the stage when I think it proper to deal with the cases that came before me at your last Autumn assizes; and I have accordingly filled in my decision in the papers in each case and am now sending to you by Canadian Pacific express all of the papers so that there need be no more delay in sending them to the Secretary of State.

With this letter I am sending to you a copy of my reasons for the decisions; be sure that it accompanies the papers always; unless some one chooses to have copies made and a copy sent with each set of papers. I thought one for the lot should do.

Hoping that all things are going on very well in Milton:

On May 4 Mr. McClenahan wrote to the Secretary of State as follows:

Dear Sir:
Enclosed find all papers re applications for naturalization herein which I received this morning. I am enclosing a letter containing his reasons.

This is not the proper time for any comment, I know, but I do say again that surely this report must be the result of the Canadian Press having been misinformed. Mr. Justice Meredith could not say he had written the Secretary of State without receiving a reply, because in the first place he did not write the Secretary of State; he wrote the Under-Secretary of State from whom he received a prompt reply. The copy of his memorandum which was sent to the Under-Secretary of State previously was forwarded to me by the local registrar at Milton, two or three days after I made my speech in the House of Commons.

Mr. McGIBBON: He did not say he asked for assistance.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: No debate can take place now.

Mr. BENNETT: But only a portion of the letter has been read. Surely the minister will realize that the memorandum accompanying the letter is a part of the letter and should be read.

Mr. RINFRET: There is no objection to reading it, but it is the very memorandum which was placed on Hansard when I made my speech.

BRITISH COLUMBIA PENITENTIARY

ESCAPE OF CONVICT

On the orders of the day.

Mr. W. G. McQUARRIE (New Westminster): I would like to ask the Minister of Justice if it is true that on April 30 last a Chinese convict escaped from the British Columbia penitentiary situated at New Westminster while employed in the private residence of the acting warden, Inspector Jackson, and if it is not contrary to the regulations to so employ a convict?

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I will secure the information.

DISPOSAL OF CANTEEN FUNDS

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of National Defence) moved that the house go into committee on Bill No. 39, respecting the disposal of certain canteen funds.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. RALSTON: The bill has been reprinted and hon. members will find it on their files as reported by the special committee on pensions and soldier problems. That committee made some amendments, all of which have been incorporated in the bill. There are two suggestions in amendment that I have to make to the committee. One amendment is in section 4, and the other in section 7. Hon. members will recall that the purpose of the bill was to provide for the distribution of certain canteen funds accumulated by battalions, and other units, with a constantly changing personnel, and which were in Canada during the war. The bill now before us provides for the distribution on exactly the same basis as that of the fund under the Canteen Funds Act of 1925.

Section agreed to.

Sections 2 and 3 agreed to.

On section 4—Administration by provincial board of trustees.

Mr. RALSTON: Section 4 is one that I have just been discussing with the chairman of the special committee. Section 4, subsection (b), clause 2 provides:

That any use of the provincial allotment for relief purposes should be limited to the class of case for which no relief is then available from governmental sources, or from the allotment made under the Canteen Funds Act.

As I have pointed out, the effect of that section would be that no one would get the benefit of this Canteen Funds Act who was in a position to take any benefit from the existing Canteen Funds Act. In consultation with the chairman of the committee, I understand from him that that was not the intention of the committee, and that this was inadvertent. I think he has consulted with some other members, who concur, and in view of that I am moving:

That section 4, subsection (b), clause 2, be amended by striking out the words "or from the allotment made under the Canteen Funds Act" in the forth and fifth lines of such clause.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): I would like to ask the minister if all of that subsection should not go out.

Mr. RALSTON: That was the principle that was adopted under the other Canteen Funds Act. In other words, this was to be considered a special emergency fund, and if relief was available from governmental sources the Canteen Funds Act should be kept intact. That was the principle that was adopted under the other act, and I presume that is why it was incorporated in this.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 5 and 6 agreed to.

On section 7—Reports to minister.

Mr. RALSTON: I am going to ask the committee to agree to an amendment whereby this fund shall be administered by, and reports made to, my colleague, the Minister of Pensions and National Health, rather than the Minister of National Defence. I am therefore moving:

That the words "National Defence" in line 2 of section 7 be struck out, and that there be substituted therefor the words "Pensions and National Health."

Mr. POULIOT: May I ask the minister what the balance to the credit of that fund amounts to?

Mr. RALSTON: This fund that is being dealt with amounted to $124,000 last September.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

NATURALIZATION ACT AMENDMENT

The house resumed, from May 2, consideration in committee of Bill No. 19, to amend the Naturalization Act.—Mr. Rinfret.—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. RINFRET: This bill has been before the committee on several occasions and has caused considerable discussion. It has also received the attention of the public and the press. I thought that at this stage I might make another statement, not to place any new matter before the committee, but rather to co-ordinate the information that I have given at different stages during the discussion of the bill. I wish to move further amenments to the bill in order to make statutory some of the provisions that the department had intended to deal with in the shape of regulations. In the first place, I would like the committee not to lose sight of the principle involved in this legislation. During the course of the discussion we have touched so many points, and so many sides of this very involved and intricate question, that I am afraid we may lose sight for the moment of the principle underlying this proposed amendment to the act. The principle of the amendment is to bring our act into conformity with the practice throughout the British Empire and to vest the discretion in the Secretary of State in the matter of granting naturalization certificates.

Mr. BENNETT: That has always been so.

Mr. DUNNING: Not under the present law.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. RINFRET: My hon. friend's interruption shows that I was right in saying that I should again direct the attention of the committee to the main principle of the act, which principle the leader of the opposition has lost sight of. Under the present system the Secretary of State, representing the government of Canada, can pass on naturalization papers only where the judiciary have pronounced favourably on the application, and the purpose of the bill is to bring the applicants directly before the Secretary of State and to vest in him full discretion under certain regulations to grant naturalization certificates.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sure my hon. friend does not desire to make any misstatement of facts.

Mr. RINFRET: No.

Mr. BENNETT: Section 4 of the act, which is the principal section determining the conditions under which naturalization shall be granted, contains subsection 3, which is the present law, but which the Minister of Railways was so persistent a moment ago in saying that it was not so. Subsection 3 reads:

The grant of a certificate of naturalization to any such alien shall be in the absolute discretion of the minister and he may, with or without assigning any reason, give or withhold the certificate as he thinks most conducive to the public good, and no appeal shall lie from his decision.

That section is a standard section throughout the empire. It was drafted by British draftsmen; it is the law of Canada to-day and it will continue to be unless my hon. friend takes it out of the statute. This subsection is not touched by this amendment.

Mr. RINFRET: If my hon. friend will refer to my first statement in the house, he will see that I have been contending right along that this section was the underlying principle of our act.

Mr. BENNETT: Of all acts.

Mr. RINFRET: I was basing my appeal to the house on that subsection. I am glad to see my hon. friend admits at last that the subsection is the underlying principle of our act, because that is what I have been contending all the time. What I have endeavoured to demonstrate to the committee and the country is that the sections that we desire to repeal are inconsistent with that very subsection which I have read and which my hon. friend has just read. If my hon. friend will refer to my speech of last Monday, he will find that my first argument was that the principle of the legislation was included in the subsection which he has just read and that sections 22 to 27 inclusive which we wish to repeal are inconsistent with that subsection. In the other British dominions the Secretary of State has, in conformity with what has just been read, and under certain regulations, absolute discretion in regard to granting certificates. When the applications come to him he has absolute discretion to dispose of them one way or the other, provided that the regulations have been followed.

Mr. BENNETT: So he has in Canada.

Mr. RINFRET: In this country, because of the existence of the sections which we now propose to repeal, the Secretary of State can exercise that discretion only when the courts have reported favourably.

Mr. BENNETT: No. It does not say so. It says the opposite.

Mr. RINFRET: Then there will be no reason for objecting to my bill.

Mr. MANION: The objection to the bill was largely because the minister was taking away the discretion altogether from the courts and vesting it in the Secretary of State.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. RINFRET: The leader of the opposition seems to contend that this is the law now.

Mr. BENNETT: So it is and has been ever since the statute has been on the statute books.

Mr. RINFRET: I would feel like putting a question to my hon. friend now. Does he claim that under the present law the Secretary of State has absolute discretion in the granting of naturalization?

Mr. BENNETT: Absolutely.

Mr. RINFRET: Then why object to this bill?

Mr. BENNETT: Because it abolishes the safeguard of a judicial inquiry.

Mr. RINFRET: Does my hon. friend contend that after a judicial inquiry has taken place the Secretary of State can grant a naturalization certificate even after a judge has pronounced unfavourably?

Mr. BENNETT: It is a political matter. No Secretary of State would dare go in opposition to such a pronouncement.

Mr. RINFRET: I am glad to see I have made some headway with my hon. friend. He says that it is a political matter. According to the statute, no matter what the judge says, the Secretary of State can grant a certificate?

Mr. BENNETT: Absolutely.

Mr. RINFRET: Then why does my hon. friend object to this bill?

Mr. BENNETT: Because the reference to the judiciary is the only check on political action.

Mr. RINFRET: After further study of the question my hon. friend has come to the conclusion somewhat more decidedly than a week ago that throughout the empire the discretion rests with the Secretary of State and he will not now dare stand up in the house and say that in this Dominion only we should not grant the same discretion to the Secretary of State. I see that although we have laboured very hard, we have made some headway even with my hon. friend. If we are agreed on this point that not only should the discretion rest with the Secretary of State, but that it does already rest with him, there should be no more difficulty in putting this bill through, because by doing away with the judicial inquiry, we shall be doing away with something which even in the opinion of my hon. friend has become rather useless. After gving some study to the problem during the last week my hon. friend has apparently come to that conclusion.

Mr. CLARK: If this bill passes, will my hon. friend have power and discretion to grant naturalization certificates to orientals?

Mr. RINFRET: That is a side issue altogether.

Mr. CLARK: It makes a great difference to the attitude I take in regard to the bill.

Mr. RINFRET: I will come to that, but that is a side issue altogether.

Mr. CLARK: I do not wish to interrupt the minister but I am asking a question that vitally concerns us in British Columbia.

Mr. RINFRET: We are now discussing how certificates can be granted to aliens generally. The point whether we should grant certificates to orientals, is only a side issue.

Mr. STEVENS: It is a very vital side issue.

Mr. RINFRET: If it has any bearing on the subject, it would be better not to leave it to a judge in British Columbia who might decide in one way or a judge in Alberta who might decide in another; it would be much more satisfactory to leave it to the government which is responsible not for local opinion in some small tribunal, but for the general policy of the country on the matter.

Mr. CLARK: We prefer the judiciary of the country to the government in regard to the question.

Mr. RINFRET: My hon. friend has not the right to exercise any such preference. The government of the country is supposed to determine the policy of the country.

Mr. CLARK: I am only stating my preference.

Mr. RINFRET: In line with my proposed amendment I have in my hands the report of the conference of 1911 on the subject of imperial naturalization and I find that Mr. Churchill concluded his remarks in regard to the question as follows:

This conference approves the scheme of imperial citizenship based on the following five propositions:

These are the five propositions that he gave:

1. Imperial nationality should be world-wide and uniform, each dominion being left free to grant local nationality on such terms as its legislature thinks fit.

2. The mother country finds it necessary to maintain five years as a qualifying period. This is a safeguard to the dominions as well as to us, but five years anywhere in the empire should be as good as five years in the United Kingdom.

3. The grant of nationality is in every case discretionary and this discretion should be exercised by those responsible in the area in which the applicant has spent the last twelve months.

4. The imperial act should be so framed as to enable each self-governing dominion to adopt it.

5. Nothing now proposed (this again is not necessary but only to make clear where we stand—it is only an "aide mémoire") would affect the validity and effectiveness of local law regulating immigration and the like or differentiating between the classes of British subjects.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, though I did not expect the support of the leader of the opposition in making my point, there is not the least doubt that in every dominion of the British Empire, as in Great Britain, the underlying principle of naturalization and the granting of certificates is that responsibility should rest with the government of the country—with the Secretary of State.

Mr. ARTHURS: May I ask the hon. minister a question? Section 27 of the act which he is about to repeal gives the minister absolute discretion as regards the decision of the judges or otherwise. I would like to ask him in how many cases during the time he has been in office he has differed from the opinion of the judges; in other words, how many applications has he refused which the court has decided should be granted; also, in how many cases has he granted naturalization in spite of the opinion of the court to the contrary?

Mr. RINFRET: While I appreciate interruptions, I am afraid that sometimes they have a tendency to spoil the continuity of the argument. When I come to deal with the work of the Secretary of State I shall be able to give my hon. friend a good idea of the condition of affairs in respect to the question he has put to me. But the first point that I wanted to make, and I see that we are agreed on that, is that in the British Empire the principle of naturalization and the granting of certificates rests with the government of the different dominions, and the fullest discretion should be given to every government in the granting of the certificates.

Mr. ARTHURS: The hon. Secretary of State may be absolutely right in his contention, but let me point out that his decision is subject to the legislation of the different dominions; the Secretary of State acts subsequent to the legislation.

Mr. RINFRET: Of course. Otherwise we would not be dealing with this question at all.

Mr. ARTHURS: I am asking regarding the legislation as it now stands, and the minister has not yet answered my question.

Mr. RINFRET: I am just going to answer it, but I would point out that we discussed this legislation for three days last week, and while I desire most earnestly to be frank and courteous in my explanation to show that this is a good bill and should be entertained by the house, I have been subject to questions put in a haphazard way such as the one to which I have just replied. I have tried five or six times to explain the legislation and to cover the points raised by the leader of the opposition, and yet my hon. friend the leader of the opposition would still say that I had not replied to his questions.

I am now making a new statement which I wish to present in an orderly and consecutive way, in order to place before this committee the full views of the government on the matter; and that is the reason why I would ask my hon. friends to bear with me and let me present the whole of the case before introducing questions which, like the questions in regard to the oriental case and the number of refusals, refer only to incidental matters and not to the principle of the bill.

I have shown, and this was my first purpose, what was the underlying principle of the naturalization acts not only in this Dominion, but in every other dominion. Our contention has been that by retaining in our statutes the clauses which we propose to repeal, notably the clause dealing with the reference to the courts, we were acting in contradiction of the principle of the act, and I was glad to hear my hon. friend stand up and admit that that was the case.

My hon. friend has said: We want to know how you are going to proceed if you do away with those clauses. I have tried to explain that before, but I will try to explain it again as fully as I can, and perhaps this will be the proper time to make the explanation.

Mr. MacDONALD (South Cape Breton): May I ask a question? In the constituency which I represent a county court judge deals with these applications. Last year he dealt with seventy applications. We have no mounted police and no homestead inspectors down there to take the place of the judge, and I should like to know just what officials will have charge of that work in place of the judge.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would like to say just a word before the minister proceeds. We on this side of the house have been following the discussion which has taken place on the other side. From the moment the minister sought to explain the principles underlying the legislation which he has brought down, he has been continuously interrupted by hon. gentlemen opposite, interrupted in a manner which has made it perfectly clear that the opposition are unwilling to have him make a clear statement to the country of the position which he is taking on this act.

Mr. BENNETT: That is untrue.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The government has done its utmost—

Mr. ARTHURS: I rise to a point of order.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. gentleman has risen to a point of order.

Mr. ARTHURS: I asked a certain question of the minister and I do not think that I should be characterized as raising objections of no moment, as the Prime Minister stated. My questions were absolutely sincere and were put for the purpose of elucidating the actual meaning of this bill. I do not think, therefore that I should be characterized as one trying to block this legislation.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There are times and seasons for all things. The point I am making is that the minister is endeavouring to make not only to the house but to the country a clear statement of what he is seeking to have enacted by this legislation.

Mr. MANION: He has been trying to do it for a week.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend is quite right, and hon. gentlemen opposite would not permit him. That is the very point I am making.

Mr. MANION: He has been changing his mind every day.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What I wish the house to understand, and the country to understand, is that the minister desires to have the privilege of making a clear statement as to this legislation and the reasons for it. When that statement is made, if hon. gentlemen opposite wish to ask questions as to the details, they will have the fullest opportunity to do so, but the minister must be allowed, as every minister of the crown is entitled to be, to make his own statement, in a fair way and without interruptions.

Mr. BENNETT: We resent very greatly the observations made by the right hon. Prime Minister. They are unfounded in fact. That is number one.

This bill was moved for the second reading by the Secretary of State on the 30th day of April last, and he filled one, two, three, four columns of Hansard without a word of interjection. Then Mr. Manion on the fifth column asked:

What was the system in Canada before 1914?

The minister continued. Then Mr. Campbell asked:

Is any time limit prescribed in this measure? I notice that all the provisions are repealed. Is there any provision for posting applications in the office of the clerk of the court or anywhere else?

Was that an interjection to prevent knowledge being given to the house? The minister proceeded to answer it courteously, and without any assistance from the leader of this house. Then Mr. Kaiser asked a question:

In what way would we differ from Australia? I can see the great difference between naturalization in England and in Canada.

The minister answered that. Then Mr. Ladner asked a question with respect to a very important matter:

Is it not true that the authority still remains with the Secretary of State?

The minister answered that. Then Mr. Ladner asked:

Does the hon. member think the Secretary of State, who has not seen nor heard the applicant, should have power to grant the certificate?

The minister answered that, and then spoke for another column and a half without an interjection. Then Mr. Kaiser asked a question as to what steps the Secretary of State would take in order to satisfy himself that the applicant was a fit subject for naturalization. The minister answered that, and then spoke for another column without interjection, another column, another column, another column, another column, and another column, without interjection, until on page 2538 Mr. Manion asked a question of four lines, which the minister answered. Mr. Manion then asked another question in one line, and then the minister replied. Sir George Perley then spoke for one column; then the Secretary of State interrupted him; then he interrupted him again; then he interrupted him again; then the minister interrupted Sir George Perley again; then the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) interrupted Sir George Perley—as usual; then the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) interrupted Sir George Perley; then the Minister of Railways interrupted Sir George Perley again; then Sir George Perley proceeded; again the Secretary of State interrupted Sir George Perley; then the Secretary of State interrupted again; then Sir George Perley got a chance to fill a column of Hansard without further interruptions. We were not in committee, we were on the second reading. Then I commenced my observations and progress was reported.

An hon. MEMBER: How many columns?

Mr. BENNETT: One column. Then the matter came before the house and I put on Hansard the state of the law in all of the dominions. To-day the minister brings in an absolutely new bill, and the Prime Minister has the hardihood to tell the house that the opposition was interfering with the presentation of the facts in regard to this measure. There are certain amenities in public life, but when the Prime Minister tells the opposition that it has taken such a course he is saying what is absolutely untrue as shown by the records of the house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I rise to say to my hon. friend that I do not need to take any lessons from him on the amenities of public life.

Mr. BENNETT: After what he said the other evening he needs to learn something in this regard.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Don't get excited.

Mr. BENNETT: I am not going to be charged with a statement like that.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Keep cool.

Mr. BENNETT: You need not worry about that.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is necessary in a leader.

The CHAIRMAN: There is a well-known rule that might with profit be read at this time. It will be found in paragraph 312 at page 103 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms:

Whilst a member is addressing the house no one has a right to interrupt him by putting a question to him, or by making or demanding an explanation. A member will at times allow such interruptions through a sense of courtesy to another,—

And so on.

Mr. BENNETT: It does not apply to committee.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It applies all the time, and is worth while discussing. The leader of the opposition says that the rules of the house do not apply to committee. In committee, as well as when the house is in full session, a member cannot be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the house sitting in committee of the whole is to elucidate information.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Certainly.

Mr. BENNETT: For that purpose every member has a right to insist on the minister explaining what he is discussing. That was the purpose of the inquiries we made. To that extent the rules are different in their application from when the house is in session, because then no member may be interrupted without his permission; but during the progress of debate in committee the whole purpose is to secure information.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is why a member may speak many times in committee, but while he is speaking no one may interrupt him without his consent.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is all I was saying.

Mr. BENNETT: We agree as to that.

The CHAIRMAN: Standing order 58, section one, is pertinent in this connection:

(1) The standing orders of the house shall be observed in the committees of the whole house so far as may be applicable, except the standing orders as to the seconding of motions and limiting the number of times of speaking.

I take it that the rules are the same in committee as in the whole house.

Mr. ARTHURS: As one of those who came under the condemnation of the Prime Minister, may I say that I very courteously asked the minister to allow a question, which he did. I think the same applies to my hon. friend from Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Clark). The minister very freely granted permission, but did not answer our questions.

Mr. RINFRET: I quite agree that it is usual in committee for questions to be interjected, and I may say that any hon. member is quite free to put questions to me. But this is a very special case, and speaking in all sincerity and without the least bitterness, I think the leader of the opposition will agree that his complaint right along has been that the minister has not furnished the committee with certain information. That was the reason why he insisted that the discussion should proceed on Wednesday, saying, "I want a reply to my question." I was endeavouring to reply to his question and although I was not quite sure that I could convince him, I did think I could convince the people outside who are trying to follow this bill. In the first part of my remarks I attempted to explain the principle underlying the bill. During the course of my explanation some hon. members put questions dealing with local incidents, but having nothing whatever to do with that principle. If I may be allowed to proceed with my remarks without interruption, I shall of course be delighted afterwards to put myself at the disposal of any hon. members who have questions to ask.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go ahead.

Mr. RINFRET: I do not think anything can be fairer than that. I tried to show the principle underlying naturalization in every British dominion.

Mr. BENNETT: Now, Mr. Chairman, since we have been interrupted, I am going to direct attention to the fact that this whole discussion is out of order. If you will look at your memorandum you will see that the bill was marked "carried" as to sections one and two—the whole bill. A new bill is now being introduced, and the proper method of dealing with it is not the method that is now being pursued. You said "carried" the other day, Mr. Chairman, as to clauses one and two.

The CHAIRMAN: No, the amendment. The clause as amended was not carried.

Mr. BENNETT: Two is the new amendment.

Mr. RINFRET: If, as the leader of the opposition says, the bill now before the committee is carried, I have no objection to its being reported for third reading.

Mr. BENNETT: Let us be accurate about this. An amendment was brought in by the minister, which was accepted, but which you have not yet declared as finally carried.

The CHAIRMAN: The amendment was declared carried, but the clause as amended was not.

Mr. BENNETT: That is it.

The CHAIRMAN: The amendment as presented by the minister is to section one.

Mr. BENNETT: Being subsection 2 of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN: There is a subsection in the original copy that was not touched at all.

Mr. BENNETT: What was carried the other day was the amendment proposed by the minister, being the new subsection two of section one. The section as amended was not carried. That is the position at the moment. The minister is now introducing an entirely new bill.

Mr. CANNON: What is the point?

Mr. BENNETT: The bill proposed to the house and given second reading is not the bill now being considered.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is the same principle.

Mr. BENNETT: No, the principle is entirely different. The Speaker is out of the chair. Discussion on the principle of a bill takes place on the second reading. Amendments are supposed to be dealt with in another manner altogether. We should deal with them substantially as a new measure.

Mr. CANNON: Oh no.

Mr. BENNETT: The rule is reasonably clear as to that. These amendments are not cognate to the bill and the questions put to the minister. This measure having been presented to the house as it was, the minister is now introducing an entirely new measure, which it is not competent for him to deal with in this way at all.

Mr. RINFRET: Mr. Chairman, I submit that this is not a new measure. The bill as originally introduced was to repeal certain sections, and I intimated that the procedure would be replaced by regulations of the department. During the course of the discussion it was pointed out that it would be more in accordance with British practice if those regulations were made statutory, and to this I have no objection. But the principle of the bill remains the same; it does away with application to the courts. That is the bill which is now before the committee. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that if the bill as formerly presented had been adopted—which I do not believe—I have no objection at all to your reporting it as it stood last Wednesday.

Mr. STEVENS: What is before the committee at the moment?

The CHAIRMAN: Subsection 1, as amended.

Mr. BENNETT: There are no new amendments?

Mr. RINFRET: I have not moved any new amendments yet, but I have sent an advance copy to my hon. friend for his information. I intend to make the motion as soon as we come to it. Let me assure hon. gentlemen that so far as I am concerned this procedure is altogether enjoyable; I do not find fault with it. But we are getting nowhere; we are saying, "I am coming to that, I am coming to that", and reaching no conclusion. We do wish to achieve some result.

Mr. STEVENS: We are waiting patiently.

Mr. RINFRET: Now I wish to say a word regarding a practice followed in the department at the present time; and as a typical case, in order to meet the wishes of my hon. friend (Mr. Boys), I have chosen the county of Simcoe. The hon. member wished me to cite a particular instance to show what has taken place there. I have before me the case of an immigrant who applied for naturalization in April, 1927, a man named James Francis Mould. He signed the application for naturalization in the prescribed form, and the department at once referred the case to the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, just a few days after it had been received. It was also referred to the Department of Immigration. The case was considered by the courts, and while it was being heard there it was investigated by the Department of Immigration as well as by the mounted police. When the report came back from the court we also received reports both from the Department of Immigration, as to the residence of the applicant, and from the mounted police as to his character. The two sets of reports agreeing, that from the court and the reports made after our own inquiry, the Secretary of State was in a position to grant the certificate. But, says my hon. friend, when you discontinue referring these cases to the courts, what is going to take place? How is the Secretary of State to satisfy himself regarding the qualifications of the applicant? In the first place I should like to correct a wrong impression which has been given the house by some hon. members. The statement has been made that in 1927 we had to deal with 16,917 cases of naturalization. If you will consult the report of the naturalization branch of my department, you will find at page 331, in the column next to that indicating the number quoted, that the number of certificates issued was only 9,072, that is to say, about half the number of grants made. I will explain this. In many cases we grant a certificate which includes husband, wife and children; and we also grant a certain number of certificates—the number for that year being 797—which are merely renewals of certificates that had been granted under the old act previous to 1914. I make this statement in order to correct the misapprehension that in 1927 16,917 certificates were granted. The point may not be very material, but it is worth while emphasizing it just the same, that quite a number of certificates apply to both wife and children. So that the granting of certificates in this country is not so extensive as hon. members opposite have tried to suggest.

But the question is asked, how is the Secretary of State going to deal with such a large number of applications? Is he going to do it himself or have some officer in the department do it for him? Well, I fancy our friends opposite will agree that in this regard the Secretary of State is in the same position as are other ministers of the crown. Do hon. gentlemen suppose that the Minister of Public Works supervises in person every public work in the country, or that the Minister of National Revenue is present at every port of entry to find out personally whether the customs regulations are properly observed, or that the Minister of Immigration interviews every immigrant coming into the country and, in person, makes sure that the regulations are lived up to? Every minister in this government or in any other government that has existed in the country is in the same situation. The minister lays down his policy and is responsible for the administration of the act, but he does not deal personally with every case appertaining to his department. Of course, he has a staff; he has an organized body of officers to do this work. In my opinion, the whole machinery of responsible government rests upon the fact that the government of which the minister is a member defines the policy, he is responsible for the administration of his department, and parliament exercises control over the manner in which any act has been administered as well as over the policy that has been defined by the government. That is the complete machinery which is at the command of every responsible government. I do not see why suddenly these fears should manifest themselves, that in the case of naturalization, unless the Secretary of State deals personally with every case that is brought to his notice, the act cannot be carried out at all. I say, what the Secretary of State is responsible for is the policy of his department and the proper administration of that policy by his officers. There is nothing extraordinary in this; it is the condition that exists in every department of the public service.

[Mr. Rinfret.]

My hon. friends have pointed out that in the other dominions the regulations, such as we enforce in the Department of the Secretary of State, are made statutory. I had indicated when introducing the bill the way in which the department intended to proceed with these cases if we did away with the reference to the courts. I may observe, however, that I am broadminded enough to accept a suggestion when I think it is good, and I admit that there is some force in the argument for making the regulations statutory instead of leaving them to be drawn up by whoever happens to be in charge of the department. There is something in that argument, and I contend that we are giving a proof of our willingness to accept sound suggestions, a proof that we have no improper motive in putting through the bill, when we say that we are perfectly ready to accept the proposal and to make some of the essential regulations statutory. My hon. friend has been good enough—and I want to thank him for it—to point out the statutory regulations in force in the different dominions of the empire. He quoted from the Newfoundland statute, from the New Zealand statute and from the statutes of South Africa and of Australia. If hon. members have read the speech carefully, or if they heard it—and I may say that I paid the greatest attention to it myself—they will find that all these regulations embodied in statutes in the different dominions touch certain points and provide certain safeguards. They have to do with the proper notice of the application which must be given; they deal with the delay which must ensue after the application is filed before the certificate is granted, and they also touch the question of the testimony which may be forwarded with the application in order to make it easier for the department to appreciate the qualifications of the applicant. I have gone through these statutes and have convinced myself that in the different dominions all the regulations which art statutory cover the points which I have just indicated. That is the reason why, in my desire to make our act as strongly British as possible, to follow the practice which exists throughout the British Empire as closely as we can while providing at the same time what we believe should lie within the discretion of the government in a matter of this kind in order to give the country the greatest safeguards possible in the granting of certificates, I have decided to propose further amendments to the committee which will make statutory those regulations which it had been our intention at first to leave to the department as they are left at present. That is the reason why on Tuesday last I moved the first amendment which is now before the committee having to do with the posting of the application in a post office and requiring a delay of sixty days before a certificate can be granted; that is my reason for moving further amendments to add two sections to the bill, one of which will require a notice to be given by the applicant in a newspaper and the other specifying the certificates which must accompany such an application.

In the first place, an applicant will be required to advertise his intention to seek naturalization, in a newspaper published at or nearest to his place of residence, in either the English or the French language, a copy of which advertisement must be furnished to the minister. In the second place we are asking the applicant to have his petition accompanied by certificates as to his character and his adequate knowledge of French or English from three natural born British subjects, two of whom must be householders and one a justice of the peace. The publication of these applications in newspapers is a provision which obtains in both South Africa and Australia, but in Canada we have the additional safeguard that a notice will be posted in the post office nearest the residence of the applicant. Therefore on this point we have two safeguards or guarantees as against the one which prevails in other portions of the empire. With regard to the certificates which must accompany such applications, we have gone further than the Australian statute, which provides that a certificate shall be produced from three natural born British subjects, two of whom must be householders and one a justice of the peace, a postmaster, a teacher in a state school or an officer of the police. After hearing our friends opposite claim that if a postmaster were a partisan appointed by this government he could not be entrusted even with the important function of posting an applicant in his post office, we decided that we should not include a certificate from a postmaster among those which could be accepted with the application. We desire to make it imperative that whoever applies for naturalization shall send in his application together with certificates from three natural born British subjects, two of whom must be householders and the other a justice of the peace. I trust that after the applicant has filled the form which is provided, in which he is forced to make full declaration as to his identity, the length of his stay in the country, the manner in which he entered the country, his family, his knowledge of one of the two languages, his character and so on, accompanied by the three certificates of which I have spoken, the department will have some reason to believe that the application is made in good faith.

Mr. CLARK: Would the justice of the peace have the right to charge a fee for giving such a certificate?

Mr. RINFRET: I think you will find a justice of the peace always willing to give a certificate in a bona fide case.

Mr. CLARK: Would he have the right to charge a fee? Is there anything to prohibit it?

Mr. RINFRET: Of course it is up to the applicant to secure the certificate, and it is up to the applicant to publish notice of his petition. We will not consider an application for naturalization until the applicant has obtained the necessary certificates and until he has given full publicity to his intention of becoming naturalized. I do not suppose my hon. friend objects to that.

Mr. CLARK: The minister is not answering my question. Has the justice of the peace a legal right to charge a fee for giving such a certificate?

Mr. RINFRET: That is covered by the laws of the different provinces, but in regard to this act we desire to place on the statutes a section which will state that we cannot consider a petition until it is thus presented to us. Just at this point I might say why in the first instance I thought the regulations might be left to the department. There are cases where it will be pretty hard to comply even with these regulations, but I have become convinced that we should not deal with these individual cases where some people may encounter some inconvenience; it is better to put our regulations on the statutes. I am satisfied as to that, although I know there may be minor difficulties; if it is in the statute, however, there will be no way out of it. Sometimes an applicant comes to the department; we may know him very well and he may be in excellent standing. Because of his own negligence he has not become naturalized, but he desires to travel or to do something which requires him to be a British subject. So he asks us to give him a certificate immediately, and it proves very annoying to some of these persons to be unable to obtain a certificate in such a way. Under the old law an applicant had to appear before a court; there was a minimum delay of three months before the certificate could be issued, and under this proposed amendment he will have to wait at least two months. So I say that in certain cases it would have been better if we had some little discretion in the granting of certificates, and that is the reason why I did not plan at first to include our regulations in the statute. However, I have become convinced that in the majority of cases, for the welfare of the country generally and in order to safeguard the granting of certificates, it might be better to disregard these individual cases and not place a discretion in these matters in the hands of any Secretary of State. This refers to myself as well as to my successors, although I feel quite secure and desire to make no prophecy for the future. However, I do agree with my hon. friend that some little hardships will occasionally occur from the fact that there is no discretion whatever left with the minister as to regulations.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I do not wish to interrupt the minister, but I take it that he has practically made his statement now, and before he sits down I would like him to say whether he proposes to have someone in authority personally see each one of these applicants, and if so, what machinery he proposes to use for that purpose.

Mr. RINFRET: That is not proposed; that is the point I was going to take up next. The difference between the system now proposed and the reference to the courts is that the applicant must appear before the court now, while in future he will not be asked to appear before the department. On that point, I desire to say, in the first place, that even in the old bill there was some provision for certain applicants that could not appear before the court. If my hon. friend will refer to section 25 of the act, as it now stands unamended, and which reads as follows:

> The applicant shall produce to the court such evidence, that he is qualified and fit to be naturalized under the provisions of this act, as the court may require and shall also personally appear before the court for examination unless it is established to the satisfaction of the court that he is prevented from so appearing by some good and sufficient cause.

Under the new system, the applicants will not appear before the Department of the Secretary of State, but that department will have the right to call in any of them if they so desire. But it is not contemplated to do so; it is contemplated to follow the British practice to have the application accompanied by a certificate, such as I have described; to give the fullest notice to the application through the newspapers, and by posting, as I have said; and, after that, to have the case investigated by the officers of the mounted police, as regards character and knowledge of language, and by the Immigration department, as regards the five years residence required. I have mentioned the other officers, merely to show that the work of the mounted police could be amplified and completed by other sources. The actual practice of the department is to have every case investigated by the mounted police. At this point, I may say that this is also the practice followed in Great Britain.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The minister misunderstood my question. I was not asking whether he proposed to have the applicant come to the department, but I was asking whether he proposed to have the applicant seen personally, in each case, by someone in authority. I understood the minister to say that he would employ the procedure he is using in the Northwest, by which a mounted policeman would see these men, and that then he intended to follow it up. He has stated, as I understand, that he proposes to have someone see the applicants personally. What would he do in his own city of Montreal, for instance, if an application came from there under this new proposed act? Would he have anyone in authority see the person, in order to make sure that it was all bona fide?

Mr. RINFRET: The applicant will have to secure certificates from three natural born British subjects, two of whom are householders and one of whom is a justice of the peace. To a large degree, that certificate will compensate for the present practice of a reference to the courts. But besides that, the department will conduct its inquiry through the police, as it has done in the past.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: What would you do in your own city of Montreal?

Mr. RINFRET: Do the same thing as in any other city.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: What machinery would you use in place of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police; whom would you send to see the applicant to make sure that the application was bona fide?

Mr. RINFRET: We will have the same machinery there as anywhere else in the country.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The mounted police are there; they are a Dominion force; not a Northwest force only.

Mr. RINFRET: The leader of the opposition, and other hon. members, do not seem to attach much importance to the inquiry made by the police. I would like to point out that that is the practice in England—reading from the report of the imperial conference of 1911 on imperial naturalization, the report of the interdepartmental naturalization committee at page 142 is as follows:

(a) evidence of good character; and
(b) evidence that he has an adequate knowledge of the English language.

As regards (a), it is the practice of the Home Office that in each case there should be a police report on the applicant's character, which further has to be vouched for by four referees.

Mr. BENNETT: By what?

Mr. RINFRET: By four referees. We have made it three, according to the Australian practice, one of whom must be a justice of the peace.

It is not merely the person who has been convicted of serious crimes that has to be guarded against, but the person who would be an undesirable citizen and who would be liable to expulsion under the Aliens Act if convicted of any offence punishable by imprisonment.

My reason in reading this is to show that it is the British practice to have the cases investigated by the police. In the procedure that we are going to follow, we will require that every application shall be advertised in the local newspaper, by the applicant himself, and to be posted, by our own means, in a nearby post office. In the second place, the application will have to be accompanied by certificates signed by three natural born British subjects, one of whom is a justice of the peace. Surely, after all I have said so many times, the leader of the opposition will not rise and say, "The minister has not replied to my question."

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Mr. Chairman, there are such things as fraudulent certificates. Would this method enable the minister to discover cases of that kind?

Mr. RINFRET: Mr. Chairman, there would have to be fraud, first, from the applicant, and, secondly, from the three persons signing the certificate. Surely, a person committing such a fraud would not dare to defy public opinion by publishing a notice in the paper.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: They might all be made by the one man, if they were fraudulent.

Mr. RINFRET: That is why we have provided for an investigation by the police. When we get an application of this kind the police will visit the localitiy, see the persons who presumably have signed the certificate, and find out whether they have really signed it or not. It is the easiest thing in the world.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Will the minister make that investigation? That is what I am trying to bring out.

Mr. RINFRET: The minister has said many times that he would and the department has done so in the past. I wish to point out that this is not a new bill. The only difference between the bill, as it will appear when I move my amendments, and the bill as presented to this house, is that the regulations that I intended to bring in as departmental regulations will be placed in the statute. Mr. Chairman, I have tried to the best of my ability to explain this bill to the committee, and I hope that I have convinced my hon. friend. I also hope he will give me credit for having done my best to present the case as it is, to explain the policy of the government in this matter and to answer the questions that he has put to me.

I now ask leave to move, as an amendment, the following:

1. That section one of the act to amend the Naturalization Act be amended by striking out the words "section is" in the fifth line thereof and substituting therefor the words "sections are."

2. That the said section be amended by inserting the words "under subsection three of section four" after the word "naturalized" in line seven thereof.

3. That the said sections be amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"23. An applicant for a certificate of naturalization under subsection three of section four of this act shall advertise in a newspaper published at or nearest to his place of residence in either the French or the English language in the prescribed form his intention to apply and shall produce to the minister a copy of the newspaper containing the said advertisement.

24. An applicant for a certificate of naturalization shall produce to the minister certificates of character and of adequate knowledge of the English or French language from three natural born British subjects, two of whom are householders and one of whom is a justice of the peace."

I may say that I have requested the reprinting of the bill containing these amendments, and I understand that copies are now ready for distribution.

Mr. SMOKE: Does the minister propose to incorporate in the statute the schedule of regulations? If so, we should have them before the committee, and if not, we shall have a statute passed without any regulations.

Mr. RINFRET: I hold in my hand the full schedule of regulations containing these amendments, but the application of the act covers quite a number of sections that are not concerned at all with those amendments, and therefore I do not see any great advantage in reading in full all the regulations and the forms that accompany them. The substance of the regulations, as regards the fullest guarantee to be given to the granting of applications, is now contained in the bill and is made statutory.

Mr. HOCKEN: The minister is not facile in making the best of a bad case. He is altogether too diffuse and redundant to be convincing. He has made a long explanation of the bill amending the act, but I do not think he has convinced any person who is not simply bound by party ties himself, that the proposed change is in the interest of the country or of good government.

The situation at the present is that the minister has absolute discretion in granting naturalization. Everyone will admit that it is impossible for him to investigate and that he must have some person to advise him whether or not the party applying is entitled to naturalization. Under the present act we have the most reputable and dependable people in the Dominion of Canada appointed to advise the minister. The gravamen of my complaint is that he substitutes for those dependable and reputable men all three partisans who can make a report such as they think will be in the interest of the party which is in power. If the government changes, this party will probably benefit, but until it does, that party benefits. A man who is applying for naturalization will have, so long as party politics are what they are in this country, no trouble in getting three native-born Canadians to vouch for him. In the western provinces there has not been a Conservative government since 1905, so that every justice of the peace in Alberta and Saskatchewan and many in Manitoba are appointees of the Liberal party and whatever justice of the peace we have to sign these papers in those provinces will be a partisan, a man who has been given that dignity because of his services to the party.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Does the same thing not apply to judges?

Mr. HOCKEN: I do not think so. I know judges are appointed partly for political considerations, but the responsibility imposed upon them leads them to act more carefully and judicially after they have been appointed than they would do before. The traditions of the bench are such as to have great influence on a man after he is appointed, no matter by what party. The judiciary of Canada maintains a high standard and every member of it, whether he is a county or high court judge, is keen to maintain the best traditions of the position. A justice of the peace, who is a partisan appointee, could easily dig up others of the same stripe, and whether the man was qualified or not, whether he could speak English or French, whether he had been five years in the country or whether he had the other qualifications or not, if the justice of peace lacked that sense of responsibility which is inherent in the judges he would send on that man's application. I am surprised that any body of responsible public men, having due regard for their reputations in the public service, would introduce a bill of this character into the House of Commons. They lie open before the country to the charge of making it easy, in order to perpetuate the party in power, to naturalize men who are not qualified for naturalization. I do not suppose many hon. gentlemen opposite would resort to any practices of that kind, but at election time there are men who are not altogether of the type of the men who sit on the other side. We have the Baldy Robb case. We have not forgotten the "thin red line" in Manitoba during the Sifton regime, when thousands if not tens of thousands of men who had been in that province for many years were struck off the list simply by having a thin red line run through their names. We have not forgotten Mr. Leach.

Mr. McINTOSH: Why cannot you complete the picture while you are at it?

Mr. HOCKEN: I will complete the picture for my hon. friend. There was the burning of the ballots in the West Elgin election. There was the instruction by the chief organizer of the party to deputy returning officers how they could spoil ballots. There was a Sunday afternoon spent in the Grand Central hotel where they were instructed to put a piece of lead pencil under their thumb nail so that they could spoil a ballot if they wished to do so.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Those were not British-born who did that.

Mr. HOCKEN: This particular thumb nail artist was Canadian born and he has been very prominent recently.

Mr. McINTOSH: And the part of the picture the hon. member is now dealing with is apparently Ontario.

Mr. HOCKEN: Let me direct my hon. friend's attention to the cruise of the Minnie M. from Sault Ste. Marie where men voted who had no more right to vote in that constituency than my hon. friend has. All this kind of thing has gone on. I am not claiming perfection for this party; I do not want this party to be in a position where it could do such things as that. Men who have a regard for their reputation as public men should hesitate before they open the door to charges of abuses of that kind.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does my hon. friend wish to have it inferred that those in all the other British dominions and in Great Britain itself, who have passed similar enactments, have such ulterior motives as he is describing?

Mr. HOCKEN: I do not know that all the acts are the same. In Great Britain the geographical position is entirely different; they cannot send a deputy returning officer into the bush with his poll as happened in 1925.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): And in 1926 also.

Mr. HOCKEN: The point I am making—and I think the whole thing rests upon this; it does so far as I am concerned—is that we have now the most reputable and dependable men in Canada to advise the Secretary of State who has absolute discretion. Why change that? Surely if some little extra trouble is imposed upon the man applying for naturalization, he should be willing to put up with it, because he is being granted by this country the greatest privilege the country has to give to anybody. It is no hardship upon him to have to take measures that are reasonable to satisfy the Secretary of State that the recommendation that is coming from him can be depended upon. I venture to predict that if this legislation goes through, the party on the other side of the house will regret it. The people of this country are extremely sensitive to electoral corruption and they have had reason to be suspicious of it, and that party which opens the door to the possibility of all this will be judged by the people when the time comes.

Mr. NEILL: With the amendments now in the bill, I think there is no objection to its passage so far at least as British Columbia is concerned.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh.

Mr. NEILL: Does my hon. friend wish to say anything?

Mr. CLARK: Is the hon. member speaking to me?

Mr. NEILL: Does anybody want to say anything?

Mr. CLARK: I thought you were looking at me. I do not want to speak to you.

Mr. NEILL: The hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard flatters himself. He is not the only man on the opposite side.

Mr. CLARK: But you were looking at me.

Mr. NEILL: I would have been against this bill as originally introduced on account of some of the objections that have been raised, but with the amendments I think it meets all the objections that are reasonable. It has been stated again and again that even if it costs a little more, it would be worth while for the privilege of becoming a British subject. But it costs, not a little more, but a great deal more. I can see the point of view of hon. members who represent cities, because there is no necessity for this act in the city. It is in the country districts that it is needed, and there is a good deal of country in Canada which deserves consideration in connection with this matter. It is very expensive and in many cases the expense is prohibitive, for an alien to get naturalized. It is all very well to say that a judge goes around. The judge goes around one or two centres, and you cannot get him to go anywhere else. Let me quote one particular case. The county court judge who is going to sit at a particular place notifies the registrar perhaps ten days before he is coming, or perhaps, two weeks. There are people in that district who want to go to that court to be naturalized, but they receive their mail only once a month, or perhaps twice, and by the time they receive the notification from the registrar it is too late to get to the court. Or the steamer may take a little longer than was expected and the applicant may not reach the court in time, and he has to come back again in three months. The cost of all that to an alien, to poor people living in out-of-the way places, is enormous. It has cost a man $200 to get naturalized. The average alien is not too ready to get naturalized, and he should be encouraged, rather than discouraged, in a reasonable way, at any rate, and it is for that reason that I am supporting this bill.

A great deal has been made by hon. gentlemen opposite of the better ability which the judiciary have for sizing up a man's qualifications for citizenship. They say that a judge is trained to weigh evidence, and so on. Perhaps he is better trained to do that than men working in very different positions, but what opportunity does the judge have to judge this man? The man comes into court. He is clean, sober, properly dressed, and carefully posted by the lawyer or agent who represents him just what to say in answer to the judge's remarks. I have done it myself. I know the sort of questions the judge is going to ask, and I tell the applicant the answers he should give, and of course they are nice and proper, and he gets by with them. The ten minutes that he is before the judge is the only opportunity the judge has of finding out whether that man will make a good citizen. The man stammers out a few words of broken English, and thinks that conditions in Russia are going a bit too far, or something of that kind, and he gets his certificate.

But under the proposed system to be carried out by the Secretary of State, the Secretary of State makes his own investigation —and after all he does it now—not personally, of course, as has been so often suggested, but generally by means of the police. Do you think, Mr. Chairman, that a policeman who goes into a little country place containing fifty people is not in a position to get the real dope, as we say, on that man's pedigree? Do you not think that a man's neighbours among whom he has lived for at least five years would be in a better position to size him up and gauge his qualifications for citizenship than the judge who sees him only for ten minutes? They know whether he beats his wife, gets drunk, and does not pay his bills, or whatever it is that characterizes an undesirable citizen. If there is anything against a man, you can surely rely upon somebody in these small places bringing it up, because there is always somebody who has more or less of a grudge against a particular man. The most cursory investigation on the ground is much better than half a dozen investigations by a judge who only sees a man for a few minutes in court.

I suppose we are discussing the whole of these amendments, Mr. Chairman. I think it would be better to take them up separately, but they are all part of section 1, and therefore I presume it is in order for me to move the following amendment which I propose to subsection 24, which now reads:

An applicant for a certificate of naturalization shall produce to the minister certificates of character and of adequate knowledge of the English or French language from three natural born British subjects, two of whom are householders and one of whom is a justice of the peace.

[Mr. Neill.]

I propose that it read as follows:

An applicant for a certificate of naturalization shall produce to the minister certificates of character and of adequate knowledge of the English or French language from two natural born British subjects who are householders and from a justice of the peace.

The idea being that we should not require the justice of the peace to be a natural born British subject. Otherwise the clause is practically the same. I propose that amendment for two reasons. In the first place, it is very difficult and very inconvenient in some districts to get hold of a justice of the peace who is a natural born British subject. On the Pacific coast and on the prairie there are considerable settlements of foreigners, Scandinavians, and so on, scattered up and down the coast or over the prairie. They have come in there in a block, and after a number of years residence, not less than five, they have become naturalized. It becomes necessary to have a justice of the peace in that district, and it is most suitable and convenient and proper to pick out from among these men one whose qualifications in education and character fit him for the position, rather than picking out a British born one, who perhaps may not live within fifty miles. Therefore, the custom is to appoint the best one of these men, and I would resent the suggestion that he should be placed in a different category from the British born justice of the peace. Some hon. member opposite drew a very distinct line between the judiciary and justices of the peace. The justice of the peace is just as reputable in many cases in his own sphere as the judge, and just as free from political bias. I do not want to attack the judiciary, but I have seen a commission presided over by a judge which was a disgrace to the judiciary because of the partisan attitude taken by the judge. It is an insult to a justice of the peace who has been forty years resident in this country and twenty years a justice of the peace—I am speaking of a case within my own knowledge —without ever a shadow of reproach, to tell him now that he is not fit to certify whether or not a man is likely to become a good citizen. It is uncalled for, and it would make the law very difficult to enforce because in these small places there is only one justice of the peace, and the applicant if he could not find him there could not go to another settlement, cut off by water or mountain, and where perhaps he would not be known. It would really nullify practically all the benefits of this act if you insisted upon the justice of the peace being a natural born British subject. Therefore, my suggestion is that certificates should be granted by two natural born British subjects and a justice of the peace.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Chairman, as one of those whose constituency contains a large number of people who at one time or another apply for naturalization, and having discussed the bill briefly the first time it was before us, I wish to supplement my former remarks. I submit this case amply proves the necessity of every bill being subjected to a thorough discussion. As introduced, the bill contained two very short clauses of eleven lines, counting the introductory clause; whereas to-day the Secretary of State has brought down a fairly lengthy bill of something over thirty lines, and containing two or three important departures from his first measure. In fact this does not resemble the original bill at all. The original bill conferred full powers on the Secretary of State; to him the application for naturalization had to be made, and if he chose he could immediately grant the application, as he said in reply to a question I put to him. Last week the Secretary of State amended his bill to make the period sixty days instead of forthwith. That was an improvement, although not quite satisfactory. Now he comes forward with two amendments, covering three other points: one, the applicant must advertise in the press that he has applied for naturalization; two, the applicant must get three certificates; three, the judiciary are in a sense reinstated in the form of justices of the peace. In a word, the Secretary of State has absolutely turned his original bill upside down and converted it into a new bill. I think in its new form it is considerably improved, and presumably if we continue discussing the measure for another two or three days the Secretary of State may be able to draft a bill that will be satisfactory to the people of this country.

Let me deal briefly with some of these points. In the first place, the minister objects to the measure by which in the past the judiciary dealt with the examination of applicant for naturalization. As I have said, he has to a certain extent gone back to the old conditions by availing himself of the services of justices of the peace. This being so, why not leave the judiciary to function as in the past? The outstanding objection to the bill as originally introduced was the lack of notice. Because of the frailty of all ministers, of whatever government, there is danger in the absence of sufficient notice of large numbers of people being naturalized, by the hundred or the thousand, in certain constituencies in order to turn elections. In its original form the bill made it possible for applications to be sent in to the Secretary of State, and if he were unscrupulous enough he could accept the application immediately and allow the newly naturalized citizens to vote. Undoubtedly that could have been done. In fact, as was pointed out in the previous discussion, that has been done in the past. Twenty years ago or more I saw a member of this house get together hundreds of applicants and secure their naturalization hurriedly in time to vote, and so turn an election. In many cases those naturalized had not fulfilled the legal requirements. The change to sixty days is an improvement, but I think the period is too short. If this bill becomes law a candidate a few months before an election could get hundreds of people naturalized and secure their support, and in a tight constituency this would be sufficient to turn the election in his favour. He would simply have to get three householders, friends of his, to hand out certificates. The justice of the peace, I admit, might be a little more difficult to persuade, but every candidate, of either party, has plenty of friends, and they would say: "After all we want these people to become Canadians." That is why I submit that sixty days is too short a period. It should be lengthened. In the United States an applicant for naturalization has to give two years' notice. We are in much the same position as the United States; in that country are many immigrants who do not speak English, and we have many who do not speak English or French. Therefore it is of the utmost importance that we copy the system of a country whose conditions are similar to our own, rather than the system of a dominion whose conditions are altogether unlike ours. For instance, in Australia 99 per cent of the people are British. I think practically the same condition obtains in all the British dominions except Canada. Therefore I submit that sixty days is too short in Canada, and if the government is going to insist on the passage of this bill the period should be made at least twice as long. In fact it would be preferable to make it six months. It makes very little difference to the man who wishes to become naturalized if his application is held up for six months. This would to a large extent remove the possibility of the abuses to which I have referred.

I think those are the two big questions for us to decide, Mr. Chairman, and in deciding them we must be governed by what will benefit the country as a whole. I think the best minds in both parties wish to promote decency and purity in our political life. Then let us co-operate to that end. Let us do away with this sixty-day clause, which may lead to that crookedness in elections of which we have already had far too much. I am not claiming absolute purity for the party on this side, nor do I impute every political evil to the party on the other side; but I do claim that we shall have failed in our duty if we do not so amend this bill as to lead not only to the betterment of our citizenship but of our public life. Before he proceeds further the Secretary of State should give serious consideration to the sixty-day clause with a view to extending it very substantially.

Mr. GLEN: I think everyone will agree with the leader of the opposition, Mr. Chairman, when he says in respect to this bill that no more important measure has been brought before the house this session. I am certain that the Secretary of State can have no quarrel with the discussion. It is altogether fit and proper that this measure should be discussed, not in a spirit of acrimony, but judicially with a view to ensure that nothing shall detract in the slightest degree from the certificate of naturalization as at present granted. The duties and obligations which are implied in a certificate of naturalization should not be diminished in the slightest degree by the bill, and for that reason I propose to deal with the bill as seriously as I can and without any casual references. I am not here for the purpose of making debating capital, as seems to be the habit of some speakers; the subject is too important. When the bill was first introduced by the minister, I, like many others, viewed it with a good deal of disfavour. Had the bill in its original form come before the house for a vote I should have been compelled to vote against it, because I realized then, as I am glad the minister realizes, that some safeguards had to be inserted in it in order to make it something worth while. In its original form, as the Secretary of State introduced it, and with no amendments such as he proposes, it would have made the Secretary of State the absolute and uncontrolled judge as to whether a certificate of naturalization should be granted.

The leader of the opposition pointed out strongly and clearly the practices of the past —practices with which most members in this house are familiar, and practices which I think every member is determined shall not occur again so far as he can prevent them. We all agree, I think, that it is impossible to change human nature by act of parliament. It is possible, of course, and comparatively easy to change an act of parliament. But one can imagine, if the bill had been left in its original form, what might have happened in the time of an election when the Secretary of State would have been inundated, from every political friend of his, with applications for certificates of naturalization. He would be more than human if he could refuse the solicitations of his friends. If he did refuse them his political life would not be worth a groat, and he would very soon realize, whatever his wishes might be, that political exigencies would make it so that he could not refuse applications coming to him. For that reason therefore I was glad indeed to find the Secretary of State had introduced the amendment of sixty days.

The last speaker, referring to the sixty days, complains that it is not sufficient. Perhaps it is not sufficient. I have no fixed opinion with regard to the number of days, only I would say this: I have had considerable experience with regard to naturalization throughout the west and I realize that sixty days is surely in all conscience long enough after a period of five years' probation during which the applicant has been qualifying. I make no strong point regarding the number of days, because I cannot see any danger that is likely to occur where you have other safeguards in the bill with regard to the posting of the notice, and also in connection with the inquiries that have to be made.

Mr. MANION: I would point out to my hon. friend, as a matter of information, that in the United States the two years is not in addition to the five years; it is part of the five years as notice of intention. If we made it six months here, or a year, that time could be included in the five years.

Mr. GLEN: The applicant must have resided within the country for a period of five years. He then makes his application; but he can be granted naturalization only after the five-year period. It is not at all likely that he will make his application before the end of that period, and the two months will be reckoned in addition to the five years.

The leader of the opposition clearly and correctly stated the provisions of the different acts in the different dominions—Australia, South Africa, New Zealand and Newfoundland. He then stated the conditions under which the act was framed. In the first instance, as to the principle of these various acts, he pointed out that the law was framed by British draughtsmen and the principle has been incorporated in all the bills. But there is one fundamental difference which he now admits—and which, to be fair, I do not think he specifically denied in his original remarks—namely, that the principle enunciated and set forth in the statutes of these different countries is also the principle that obtains in the Dominion of Canada. That principle is this, that a certificate of naturalization must be secured under section 4, which I do not wish to read. He then dealt with the question of procedure. On that question the leader of the opposition took a stand and made his strongest objection to the bill. There came to my mind several questions that might arise in relation to the matter of procedure. In the first place, will the application to the Secretary of State direct, instead of through the agency of the courts, be a retrograde step? And, particularly, will it tend to destroy the sense of value of the privilege which a certificate of naturalization is intended to convey? Can a certificate be granted more easily, with the present amendments, and with less expense to the applicant? And, if so, is it desirable that such certificate should be granted in that way and that we should expedite procedure and minimize expense? And will the certificate be granted only after the fullest inquiry is made, as at present obtains?

Now, the leader of the opposition bases his objection, first, on the effect of the principle embodied in the statute and its relation to the regulations governing procedure. I am afraid the hon. gentleman may consider me guilty of heresy when I say that I am by no means enamoured of legislation which need not necessarily go before the courts. During all my practice I have always endeavoured to keep my clients out of court. I find that 99 per cent of the people with whom I deal have a horror of the courts, and it may be that the one per cent who do like litigation are abnormal people. I have had considerable experience in obtaining certificates of naturalization, and I am bound to say that I see no particular reason why the appearance before a court adds to the value of a certificate. Most people will agree that courts of law are at best drab affairs; the atmosphere of a court is certainly not conducive to happiness, contentment or camaraderie. The hail fellow spirit is conspicuous by its absence, and my experience has been that instead of creating a feeling of citizenship and fellowship, in the granting of a certificate of naturalization, such as it might warrant, appearance in court has had indeed the very opposite effect. I have never known of any man making an application to a court who viewed with anticipatory glee his appearance there. As a matter of fact I have always found people very much averse to appearing in court.

I was interested in hearing what the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre said with regard to the granting of certificates of naturalization. He made a suggestion, which I myself have already made, on other occasions in other places, that if it were possible to have the certificate of naturalization made the subject of some ceremonial in the country it would add greatly to the value of the certificate. The hon. member suggested citizens' day, the first of July, when it might be possible to grant certificates to all those who were entitled to naturalization. They could appear before some public forum and be granted the certificates with all the ceremonial necessary to bring home to the applicants the fact that they were obtaining something really worth while.

It seems to me that the granting of an application by the Secretary of State direct rather than through the agency of the courts is no retrograde step. It is something which each of us can support. The question that next arises in my mind is this: Can a certificate be granted more easily, under the present bill, and with less expense to the applicant; and, if so, is it desirable to expedite procedure and minimize expense? I think everyone who has any knowledge of the subject will agree that especially in the prairie provinces the expense is almost prohibitive to a great many of the applicants. I know of men right in my own riding who are not able to become naturalized because they have not the money to spend; these men have come into the country in the regular way and have taken up land; they have been here five or ten years and now wish to become citizens of Canada. I know they would make good citizens, but because they have not the money they are unable to get their certificates. If this bill will reduce their expenses I think we should support it as strongly as possible, and if it will expedite the procedure I think that is another reason why we should support it. My hon. friend from Comox-Alberni has proposed an amendment, and I think his suggestion should be adopted. I know several justices of the peace in different parts of the country who are not natural born British subjects, and some of them are located in districts where they would be requested to give certificates to hundreds of foreigners. It would be a tremendous hardship to these people if they had to go to another district in order to obtain that certificate, and this is one reason why I think the amendment suggested by my hon. friend should be supported.

Some hon. members have spoken with regard to the naturalization of people residing in cities, but I say with all respect and deference that any member who knows only the conditions which exist in cities cannot speak authoritatively upon this subject as it affects the country. The ease with which certificates may be secured in a city certainly does not obtain in the country. It has been said that the delay which takes place is not so great, but sometimes it is very long. Occasionally you will find that a judge sits only three times a year; if the applicant is unable to attend that court his application may not be heard for six or nine months. Certainly that is a hardship to him, especially if he has to drive twenty-five or thirty miles when the thermometer is forty degrees below zero. Those who have had experience in driving a similar distance under those conditions know that it is a considerable hardship, especially when they are looking forward to something which does not give them very much pleasure.

I was anxious to know what inquiries would be made in connection with these certificates. The leader of the opposition made that a very strong point in his case, and I do not disagree with him at all; I think the inquiries should be as complete as possible. From what I could hear of the statement made to-day by the Secretary of State I understand he proposes to utilize the existing machinery in making these inquiries; that is, it will be done by the mounted police or in some cases by homestead inspectors. From my experience I would say that no better plan can be evolved in the Dominion of Canada. The members of the mounted police are imbued with the esprit de corps and the traditions of their famous force; they make personal calls upon each of the applicants, find out all the circumstances, inquire of the neighbours and make reports which I am sure can be accepted by the Secretary of State as being absolutely correct in almost every particular. Of course you will find the occasional exception, but there is no body in the Dominion of Canada which can so meet the requirements of this act as the mounted police. I know the inquiries they make; they go round the district and ascertain whether or not an applicant is suitable, and I submit that their reports can be relied upon.

The question of language was one of the strongest points in the argument of the leader of the opposition, who said that no application for naturalization should be granted unless the applicant possessed an adequate knowledge of either English or French. I would point out to the leader of the opposition that I have seen men in court who could not stand a cross-examination in English, but who would make good citizens. The leader of the opposition directed his question to me personally, and asked if I had never seen in a court of law witnesses who had naturalization papers but who were unable to give their evidence except through an interpreter. Of course I have seen that many times, but I will go further and say that I have seen men in a court obtain their certificates who spoke very halting English. Certainly if these men were to undergo a cross-examination they could not give their evidence without the aid of an interpreter. But I have known of men of this kind who were of excellent character; I know the work they have been doing, the families they have been raising and sending to school, and I know they would make very good citizens of this country. Therefore I would not make that question of language so important that the ability to withstand a cross-examination in court should be the basis upon which a certificate should be granted. The mounted police, in reporting on the language qualification, would exercise a good deal of discretion, and I think they may be relied upon. After all, it is not the men coming to this country in the later years of their life who are likely to acquire a fluent knowledge of English; the real reason for naturalization is to assimilate the children into our national life. I think that is the strongest point against the argument of the leader of the opposition, who suggested that a fluent or an adequate knowledge of English must be possessed by an applicant before a certificate can be granted.

I should like to make a suggestion to the Secretary of State just at this point. In his amendments he is proposing that an applicant for naturalization must advertise his intention in a newspaper published at or nearest to his place of residence. I suggest that in a great many cases the nearest newspaper is published some distance away, and if the amendment could be changed to provide that the advertisement shall be inserted in a newspaper published or circulated at or nearest to his place of residence, I think it would meet the situation better. You would then overcome a difficulty which will be experienced by many applicants. I have already pointed out that if two natural born British subjects certify to the character of the applicant, together with a justice of the peace, who may be natural born or naturalized, that should be sufficient to justify the Secretary of State in granting a certificate of naturalization. If this were granted I should have no hesitation in supporting this bill in its entirety, satisfied that nothing has been taken away from the act and that a certificate of naturalization will have the same value after these proposed changes as it now has under the present act.

Mr. PETTIT: I wish to make a few remarks along a particular line with respect to this bill, but before doing so I want to express my great regret, to put it mildly, at the contemplated change in the act. I think the procedure under the present act is much better, and I regard it as very inadvisable indeed to depart from it, for reasons which have been fully covered by hon. gentlemen on this side of the house. My regret is based on my personal experience in my own constituency, from my observation of the adjoining constituency, and from my judgment generally in the matter.

As to the difficulties that might be encountered in the carrying out of the present act in remote parts of the country, I think they would be amply met by amendment to the present act to provide that judges or other judicial officers, or reputable men selected by the judges, shall visit well recognized centres within striking distance of the settlers generally.

The remarks I wish to make along the particular line relate to the length of residence in Canada in connection with repatriation of British born subjects. By section 4, subsection 5 of the present act of 1927, which is the same as section 5, subsection 2 of the former Naturalization Acts of 1914 and 1920, it was provided that the Secretary of State, "in any other special case", might, if he thought fit, grant a certificate of naturalization, although the four years' residence or five years' service had not been within the last eight years before the application. By order in council passed on the 4th day of May, 1927, the Secretary of State was empowered to issue special certificates of naturalization to natural born Canadians who, having taken out naturalization papers in the United States of America, had returned to Canada to reside, and that such certificates might be granted after a residence in Canada of one year, the application being made direct to the Secretary of State. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the length of residence should be much less than one year—it should be not more than three months—and that the length of residence should apply not only to natural born Canadians but to British born subjects, who of course in law include natural born Canadians. I submit it would be well if the minister would provide, by a further addition to his amendment, that the application of natural born British subjects who have been naturalized in the United States should be considered special cases, and that, upon a residence of three months in Canada, such British born subjects could be repatriated.

I quite appreciate Canadian citizenship, with allegiance to the British crown, ought not to be lightly thrown off and lightly assumed again, but we well know that there are hundreds of thousands of Canadian citizens and British subjects living in the United States through unavoidable circumstances, and who long for the day, and are ready at the very earliest opportunity to take advantage of it, to return to this country again. The love of their native Canada and their love of the empire still burns brightly and fervently in their hearts. We should be ready, therefore, to receive them with open arms, and one way of doing that is to provide in the act that when they do come back they may assume their Canadian citizenship and their British allegiance upon a residence of not longer than three months. I would respectfully suggest to the minister that he take that into consideration and add it as an addition to the amendment that he is now bringing in, or as a further amendment to the act.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Several hon. members on the opposite side of the house have stressed the danger of giving these people naturalization under this newly amended act. One of the supposed dangers is the sixty day clause that is proposed to be put into the act. At present, under the old act, there is stipulated only three months, and the notice of application is posted only in the court house. Under this new act the notice will be advertised in the press, and will be posted in the post office nearest to the applicant's place of residence. Surely, that is far better than placing the notice in the court house, where one is filed on top of the other and in many cases they are seen by only a few people.

I do not want to go into the technical or legal side of this question, but in our part of the country it is a matter of great importance. There are thousands of people in that country who would make good citizens and who would like to be naturalized; but it is so difficult for them to become naturalized that they are not becoming Canadian citizens. In the first place they have to go to a court centre and make application before the clerk of the court; that is one trip. Then an investigation has to be made, and they have to come before the judge again; that is another trip. If the judge happens to have adjourned the court for a certain time, they may have to stay a day or two or they may have to go back. There is so much red tape about becoming naturalized in Canada that thousands of people who should be naturalized, and who would make good Canadian citizens, are not becoming naturalized.

The impression has been put abroad from this house and from other parts of the country that western Canada is filled with foreigners and undesirable citizens. That is not the case. In the province from which I come, Saskatchewan, we have something over 800,000 people, of whom over 600,000 are British born.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): And of the 195,000 who are not British born, 75,000 were born in the United States. Our people are a very progressive people and, as a whole, compare favourably with those in any other part of Canada. After all we are endeavouring to build a nation, and I think we have lost sight of the fact that you cannot build a nation in twenty-five or fifty years; it takes much longer than that, as the experience of other nations has shown. These people who are coming to our country are the same people that built the British nation—Norwegians, Swedes, Danes, French, Jutes, Anglos and Saxons. They are the people who are the basic stock of the British. In coming to Great Britain, becoming naturalized and growing up and building the nation they did not make such a bad job of it. After all, the Englishman is a pretty good kind of citizen. I do not see why we should not be ready, under proper safeguards, to naturalize these people and take them into our families. The leader of the opposition in his speech the other day pointed out one or two isolated cases of people in western Canada who had become naturalized and who had not played the game with us during the great war. As reported on page 2551 of Hansard, he said that in one case a man who had been a German barber in the city of Calgary and who had become a naturalized Canadian citizen had been seen as a prisoner of war. Then he said:

> What did we witness during the war? I wonder if hon. gentlemen recall in their own communities what I have seen in mine.

That may have happened in the case of some of our naturalized citizens, but it would be much better for the leader of the opposition and everyone else in the house to stress the point that not only hundreds but thousands of these people who were naturalized Canadian citizens or even who were not naturalized, went to France to fight for Canada and many of them laid down their lives for us there. They were good enough then, but under our Naturalization Act some of them who have come back cannot be naturalized.

The language qualification is another feature. They must have an adequate knowledge of either English or French. It is right and proper that they should have at least a limited knowledge of either English or French, especially English in the western part of Canada, because in many portions of the west French would not be of much use to them.

Mr. ADSHEAD: How would my hon. friend define the word "adequate"?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Everybody who can live in this country for five, ten or fifteen years at peace and do business with his neighbour has possibly an adequate knowledge of the English language.

Mr. SPENCER: There are many people who have been in this country for five or six years who can hardly speak a word of English.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): That may be. In the country from which the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) comes, there are probably half a million people who cannot speak English. There are many people in the north of Scotland who cannot speak English. They speak Gaelic. These aliens are invited to Canada; we give them land; we tell them we will treat them as equals, and yet we put obstacles in their way preventing them from becoming native citizens. They want to become Canadian citizens and when they do so they are proud of the fact that they are Canadian citizens.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): At six o'clock, Mr. Chairman, I was referring to a remark of the hon. leader of the opposition, that some years ago thousands of people were naturalized in Canada just prior to an election. The fact that those thousands of people were naturalized just prior to an election is perhaps not exactly right, but only because an election was coming on at that time. I do not think there have been any ill effects from having so many of these people naturalized at that time. They have been good citizens of this country, and I have not yet heard any arguments from the opposite side of the house as to why they should not have been naturalized. There should, of course, be certain safeguards, and we should not have an act whereby people could be naturalized just a few days prior to an election.

There is another point. I do not see why we should put obstacles in the way of people becoming naturalized in this country. If we invite these people into this country; if we bring them here and have them live amongst us for five years or more, mingling with us and their children mingling with our children in the schools, paying taxes, buying made-in-Canada goods, improving and building up our country, I do not see why we should not naturalize them. If they are good enough to live alongside people of this Dominion for five, ten or fifteen years, I think they are good enough to live alongside the people of any place in the British Empire, and I do not see why we should not give them British citizenship.

In the present act surely there are enough safeguards. In the first place, the applicant has to be sponsored by two natural born British citizens and by a justice of the peace. Their record is checked up by the immigration authorities; it is also checked up by the mounted police, and in my opinion that can be done more thoroughly by the police going into the district in which a man has lived for five years than it can be done by any court, because in a great many cases these people are from fifty to one hundred miles away from home when they appear in court, and the court can know very little about them, but on the other hand, the mounted police, going into the district where these people live, can find out all about them in a very short time. I do not see any danger in naturalizing these people. We have found, especially in western Canada, when we take these people into our citizenship, give them responsibility, and let them help us in our community and political life, that they make better citizens; they feel as if they were a part of the country, and they endeavour to do the best they can for the country and for their children who will come after them in this country.

There is one other point, which was touched on by the hon. member for Marquette, and that is that in a great many parts of western Canada it costs far too much to-day to become naturalized. A great many of these people do not know what the regulations are, and they go to a lawyer and they pay from ten, fifteen to twenty, and sometimes fifty dollars to get naturalization. I think we should make the expense of getting a certificate of naturalization as reasonable as possible, so that we can take more of these people into our citizenship, because they will make good citizens. As I said before, in Saskatchewan we have 195,000 foreign born people, and we find that the children of these people speak and read and write English. Less than 4 per cent of the children in Saskatchewan between ten and twenty years of age, do not read, write and speak the English language. Some of the older people may not be fluent in the English or the French language, but their children learn the language, and so they can really carry on well in the country without a good knowledge of English or French.

I think the government is well advised to put this legislation through. There are thousands of people who will become naturalized very shortly if this legislation goes through. I do not think that my hon. friends opposite need fear at all that the act will be used to naturalize any considerable number of people for the sole purpose of voting in the next election.

Mr. MILLAR: I have listened to the discussion in connection with this bill, and while the bill did not suit me very well at first, it is in such a form now as I think will give good satisfaction, and I can support it. Coming from a district where I have an opportunity of judging those who would become naturalized, I think it well to make a few remarks before this bill is voted on.

There seems to be a fear that we may have too large a percentage of our immigration come from the continent. While I am glad to see as many English, Irish and Scotch as we can possibly get, so long as they are physically, mentally and morally suitable, nevertheless, those who come from the continent can make a good contribution. They come from conditions that are a little more difficult even than those encountered in our pioneer life. That tells us one thing: It is quite natural to expect, and we are not surprised when we find, that they can make their way better under those difficult conditions than those of Canadian birth, or those of English, Scotch or Irish birth, who have been raised under a standard of living that is higher and under conditions that are easier.

We have in western Canada considerable land that is second class, and some that we might call third class. Those people who come to us from the continent of Europe, used to a low standard of living, accustomed to work long hours for little pay, by their industry and frugality transform such districts into gardens. I have in mind a settlement where there are 170 families. The land is full of bluffs and sloughs and the percentage of good, arable soil is small. I think it is no reflection on our British immigrants or our Canadian sons to say that very few of them could make both ends meet on that land under the conditions that have obtained during the last ten years. Yet those immigrants from continental Europe have, as I say, turned that district into a garden and constructed good, comfortable houses. They are growing grain and other crops, thus providing freight for the railways and business for the stores. In short, they are valuable assets to this country. It is a mistake to suppose that these people are going to undercut wages. Last spring I saw three fine strapping young fellows. They could not speak a word of English. They had just refused an offer to work at $20 a month, and were standing out for higher wages, even though they required assistance to pay for breakfast. They were advised to accept $20 a month until they had learned the English language. Others have expressed fears that the low standard of living of these people will have a tendency to depress our living standard; but they do not interfere with the farmers around them, they do not tend to lower the standard of living. They are an asset to the community, and I am sure the business men would be very sorry indeed if they left the district. The member for Moose Jaw has well pointed out that in Saskatchewan—where there seems to be the greatest fear that there is too large a proportion of immigration from the continent of Europe—in a population of eight hundred thousand, six hundred thousand are of British birth; that is, many of them may be of foreign parentage, but they were born in Canada or some other British dominion I have seen no sign of real danger that Canadians of British stock are likely to be outnumbered by immigrants of alien birth.

I need not cover the ground already so well covered by the member for Marquette and the member for Moose Jaw and other hon. gentlemen with regard to naturalization. I simply wish to add to what they have said as to the difficulties encountered by the applicant for citizenship. Many of our immigrants would be glad to become naturalized, for they take a pride in British citizenship, and it would be well for Canada to have them naturalized. But when after driving ten, twenty, thirty or forty miles they find the judge is too busy to deal with their applications and they must return a second time, many of these people become discouraged, especially under the conditions that have prevailed during the last few years due to scarcity of money. I think this bill provides all the necessary safeguards. No body of men enjoy to a greater degree the confidence of the people of western Canada than do the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. They deserve that confidence, and I think they can be trusted to make inquiries of those wishing to become naturalized.

Mr. ARTHURS: What about homestead inspectors?

Mr. MILLAR: I think my hon. friend ought to have confidence in them because a goodly number were appointed by this party.

Mr. ARTHURS: I asked for the hon. gentleman's opinion; I was not expressing my own.

Mr. MILLAR: Well, I have considerable confidence in a goodly number of them. I suppose possibly a percentage should be watched, but I believe the great majority of them can be trusted to do the work well. I remember during the war some complaint was made because certain of our immigrants from continental countries with which we were at war did not feel very ready to take up arms in defence of Canada. I admit there is a difficulty in that respect. If I were to go to the United States or any other country, I know I could not throw off my love of Canada in five or even ten years. That is only natural. I would not hold it against an applicant for naturalization if he could not suppress his love for his mother country, and felt uneasy at the prospect that as a Canadian citizen he would have to fight against his native country in the event of war between that country and Canada. If he were not capable of fidelity to the country of his birth he would be a somewhat doubtful citizen of Canada. I think every hon. member would find himself in the same predicament if he became a citizen of another country and that country declared war against his native Canada. It is a difficult situation, but for my part I do not worry very much about it. I am glad the bill has been amended, and I hope it will become law, for under it I am sure we will have many thousands of Canadian citizens applying for naturalization who otherwise would delay for years in some cases. It will be an advantage to Canada to have them naturalized.

Mr. BALDWIN: Mr. Chairman, when I used to speak more frequently in this house I put myself on record as favouring the admission of thrifty, hard-working people.

Some have asked, what about the colour line? Well, I am not so much scared about that as perhaps are some others, because I think our climate will discourage that class from coming here. I am not in favour of investing so much money to attract immigrants. If I were at the head of the Immigration department I would expatiate on the wonderful possibilities of this vast country for those who are willing to work hard. I am strong for hard work in every department of life. I would say to them: You have the markets of the world for your products. I believe that those who have the energy to come to this country, be their resources little or big, will make good because of their initiative and industry. I am not in favour of inviting sissified, spineless people, people who are living on alms in England, and simlar types. We are spending a vast amount of money in order to promote immigration and to get hand-picked people, so to speak, to come to this country, and it is our bounden duty when they come here to facilitate their becoming naturalized with the least possible delay and with the minimum of cost to themselves. The present bill, in my opinion; alleviates the situation. I am not going to criticize the old law, but I must say that to me it savours somewhat of war time measures. I am not making any accusations against anyone in this regard. I do think however that we should make it easier for people to become naturalized when they are entitled to the privilege. Take the great republic to the south of us. Could that country have been built up to its present proportions if it had enforced a law entailing a good deal of delay and worry and expense to those seeking naturalization? Certainly not. People entered the country without any means at all and they were able to build up wonderful businesses. Some of the greatest men in that country came over carrying all their belongings in a little handkerchief or in a small tin box. There are multitudes of people in the United States, now good American citizens, who are unable to trace their ancestry to blue blood. The majority of us in Canada can trace our ancestry back to poor people who came to this country in the hope of being able to take advantage of its resources, trusting in those resources and in the laws of the land. Why cannot we enable others now to come and make good?

I submit that we should not withhold the right of the franchise from desirable people. We are now making trade pacts throughout the world, and if we pass this law it will be one of the best advertisements to the nations of Canada's greatness. It will be an assurance to people in all quarters of the globe that, so long as they are fit to come to this country and settle, they will be able to become Canadian citizens without a great deal of delay and expense.

Those who have spoken against this legislation seem to me to have forgotten the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God. Do they realize that race hatred and national hatred lead to war? Why should there be any obstacle in the matter of language? People coming from Scotland speak Gaelic and people from Holland speak Dutch; there are a multitude of languages. But why should that debar people from coming to the country? Many people in the middle western states of the American union—fathers and mothers of the present generation—came over with large families, knowing nothing of the language of the country; nor could they learn that language at their age. But their children learned the language and many of them are to-day renowned throughout the United States. I suggest that it would be a good thing for us to trace ourselves back; if we did we should find that we have not sprung from royalty, nor from people born with silver spoons in their mouths.

I submit that this bill should receive the unanimous support of the house if we are interested in building up this country. Let us have it known throughout the world that Canada is not a country of autocrats, that she is not a country with people who have ideas of race predominance, but that she is ready to welcome all those of good character, those who are willing to work hard and help to build up the country.

It seems to me that it is time to change the present law. The cost of bringing applicants before judges is too great, and the distances they have to travel make it almost impossible for people to become naturalized. Personally I am heartily in favour of the legislation now proposed and I can see no reason whatever for any opposition to it. We need not have any fear of our institutions not being respected if this legislation passes. Let us make it thoroughly understood that this is a country where people must conform to the laws and regulations laid down; let it be known that if a riot should start at any time cold steel will be used if those laws are not obeyed. Let us see to it that the laws are respected. But I would not withhold the franchise from those worthy of it. There are people who have lived in Canada for years without the franchise although they are fully entitled to it. Why should we put any obstacle in their way in regard to expense and needless delay?

I cannot see much reason in any lengthy debate on this question. People outside are looking to see what we are going to do with this legislation which is now before the committee. Immigration and naturalization are linked together so closely that if we refuse to pass this measure it will be heralded abroad, "You may go to Canada if you like, but you will never become naturalized." The Americans have never kept people out of the United States in that way. Canadians go there and find no difficulty in becoming naturalized if they wish to become citizens of the United States. Let us also make it easier for desirable people to become naturalized in Canada. Let us do everything in conformity with the forward step which we are taking in Canada in other directions. It does not seem to me that this measure calls for any lengthy debate and I shall therefore not weary the committee longer.

Mr. GARDINER: I have listened with a good deal of interest to the discussion of the proposed amendments, a discussion which has been very instructive. I appreciate very much indeed the effort the Secretary of State made to enlighten the house on the whole question of naturalization. The leader of the opposition also gave the house much valuable information, which no doubt many of us lacked before we had the privilege of hearing him. My first word is this: If these amendments are likely to bring back the conditions that existed in this country prior to the passing of the act in 1914 I am absolutely opposed to them. I remember the conditions that prevailed in Saskatchewan in my early homesteading experience. In my judgment nothing would deter people coming to this country from thinking well of the country so much as the manner in which certificates were issued for naturalization, particularly around election time. I have known government officials to have their pockets full of these certificates all ready to hand out to those who were willing to promise their support to the particular candidate of those officials. If these amendments are going to bring back, even in part, such a condition as that then I think this house should be very careful before going further with them.

The Secretary of State in stating his case was asked the question how evidence would be secured as to whether an alien should be granted a certificate. He said that the mounted police, the homestead inspectors and other persons would be in a position to secure that evidence. So far as the mounted police are concerned, I would not object to them, but when we come down to the homestead inspectors and other persons I say we should draw the line right there. We are not told who the other persons are to be, but in my judgment the homestead inspectors have been responsible in the past for many hardships which were suffered by aliens coming to this country. In my judgment there are only two reasons which might be advanced for changing the present act, and the first of these is that the present act must be unworkable. I have not heard as yet any good argument advanced to show that the act is unworkable; certainly it is not so in the cities, where it is quite easy for any person to go before a judge and make application for a naturalization certificate. When we come to the outlying portions of the country there is a possibility that there may be some hardship in a few cases, but amendments might be made to provide for such cases. Since I have been a member of this house I have represented two large but very thinly populated constituencies, in which many people live forty or fifty miles from a railway centre, and I have never heard one complaint of inability to secure naturalization certificates. As I have already said, in some sections of the country with which I am not familiar there may be the possibility of hardship, but without tearing the act to pieces it should be possible to provide for such cases.

The only other reason which could be put forward for these amendments is that politicians desire to secure the naturalization of large numbers of aliens for the purpose of securing their votes. I would suggest to the house that it is not advisable even for political purposes to place ourselves in the position of allowing an alien to look lightly upon naturalization in this country. We hold Canadian citizenship in high regard because of the fact that we not only make a man a Canadian citizen; he also becomes a citizen of the British Empire, and to that extent we have a responsibility to other parts of the empire.

The Secretary of State has also made the excuse that some of the judges claim to be incapable of interpreting the Naturalization Act. If the judges are not capable of interpreting that act and of forming an opinion as to whether a person is fit to become a Canadian citizen and a British subject, how would the minister expect a mounted policeman, a homestead inspector or any other person to be able to interpret the act? I think that argument is very faulty, and it defeats the very object the Secretary of State has in view. I would also remind the committee that we have a special committee of this house sitting to go into the question of whether the salaries of our judges should be increased, and I think probably the government are behind this proposal. This statement by the Secretary of State does not appeal to me as a very strong argument for increasing the salaries of our judges.

I am not going to take up the time of the committee further except to say a few words with regard to the amendments, the first of which improved the original amendment to a great extent; I refer to the provision for posting notices for sixty days. That removes some objections to the proposed amendments, but I should be much more satisfied if the Secretary of State would agree to an extension of that time to four or six months. Let us make this provision such that we can say in good faith that because of the time required for the posting of notices no political party can benefit by this act at election time. If we put it on that basis I think probably the house and the country will be more satisfied with the proposal than is the case at the present. Provision is also made for objections to such applications, but in this amendment the Secretary of State has not said where these objections are to be lodged. In my judgment that is a grave omission. Under the present act a person who objects to an application for naturalization can appear in court and present his objection before the judge and the person concerned. Therefore I think some provision should be made whereby persons objecting to a naturalization application should send their protests to the Secretary of State, where they will be given proper consideration.

The only other reference I wish to make is with regard to the three natural born British subjects who are to give a certificate of character. I do not look upon that part of the section as being very strong; in fact it has an inherent weakness. If it is possible when these amendments are passed—if they are passed—for a political party to take advantage of the situation during election time, it is possible for a party to get as many British born subjects as may be required to give certificates of character. Consequently that is not a very strong safeguard. I think the greatest safeguard we can have either now or in the future is to see that sufficient time elapses between the filing of the application and the final granting of the certificate so that no political party can take advantage of this act.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Before this bill passes I should like to make a few observations, although I do not intend to delay the committee very long. I think the government and the Secretary of State are to be congratulated for bringing this bill before the house. I have lived in western Canada most of my life and have come in contact with a good many men from European countries. I have found that many of them have had difficulty in becoming British subjects, and to my mind this difficulty should be removed. If we are going to make it as hard as possible for a man to become a citizen of Canada I think our whole immigration policy will fall to pieces. In my opinion a man should be granted naturalization in Canada if he is physically and mentally fit, if he has passed the inspection of the Department of Immigration and if his character is good. I know of many cases in my own riding of men who have gone to a good deal of expense to appear before a county court judge in order to become naturalized, and in many instances where the report of the mounted police was good and where there was nothing in the world to prevent the applicant from becoming a Canadian citizen, naturalization was refused.

Mr. ARTHURS: By whom?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: By the county court judge.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I know it; I have seen the files myself, and they contained nothing which should prevent those men from becoming Canadian citizens. At the same time a county court judge, through his interpretation of the act perhaps, refused to recommend naturalization. Our friends on the opposite side seem to be in favour of trying to give the impression that a man from a foreign country is inferior to a man that is British born, with the object of trying to prevent him from becoming a Canadian citizen with the least difficulty.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend gave an instance just now of a judge refusing Canadian citizenship to some man. Probably the judge refused him because he could not speak either of the two languages. My hon. friend said that if a man is physically fit and passes the immigration authorities he should be permitted to receive Canadian citizenship. Should not a man have a knowledge of the languages of our country to know something about the problems of our country?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I am glad my hon. friend brought that up, because, in many of these cases, these men can speak just as good English as my friends over there. It probably just happened that the judge felt that way; that he had got out of the wrong side of the bed.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Well, which side did you get out of?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I always get out of the right side, and get in the right side.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: My hon. friend the member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner) just a few minutes ago said that he would not like to go back to the olden days when men were naturalized wholesale before an election. I do not want to go back to that state of things, but we have men in charge of the affairs of the country to-day who would not allow a thing of that kind.

Mr. RINFRET: If my hon. friend will permit me for just one minute, I should like to remind the member for Acadia that the days he spoke of were those—

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): You are too late; the gentleman from Acadia is not speaking.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. RINFRET: We are in committee, Mr. Chairman. Those were the days when applications were heard only before the court; the government had nothing to do with them at all.

Mr. GARDINER: On the occasion of which I spoke, the applications were never heard before a judge.

Mr. RINFRET: But the judges granted the certificate. The government had nothing to do with it before 1914.

Mr. GARDINER: They were never heard before a judge, that is all I can say.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: After these gentlemen have made three of four speeches, may I be allowed to continue with mine? The hon. member for Acadia mentioned a little while ago that he would not like to go back to the state of things that existed during certain elections. I would not want to go back to that.

An hon. MEMBER: The 1925 election?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I am glad my hon. friend mentioned that. I will just give you an instance of a man who had been naturalized for thirty odd years; in 1917 he walked seven miles to cast his vote, and he could not vote. That is the state of things that I do not want to go back to. The hon. member for Acadia mentioned, I say, that he would not like to go back to the old state of things, and I will put the mind of my hon. friend at peace by telling him just to look at the hon. Secretary of State, and examine him closely; I am sure that as long as he is at the helm there is no danger of things of that sort occurring, as they did in the olden days.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have practically finished what I wanted to say. We allow these people to come into this country; we spend money to bring them here, and as soon as possible, provided that they are physically and morally fit and have a knowledge of one or other of the languages, we should allow them to become Canadian citizens and assume the full responsibility attaching thereto. I will say this to my hon. friends if they will allow me—if they will only keep quiet for a few minutes; I did not interrupt them—what would we do during the harvest season, or during the whole season, if we did not have these men who came from the European countries? I am speaking from a practical knowledge of conditions in western Canada. How could we move our crops? How could we go on and build our public works and develop the whole country? How could we get our British citizens or our Canadian citizens to go on inferior lands and develop them to the extent that these men that came from these European countries develop them? It would be almost impossible. These men have been settled on inferior lands, as my friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Millar) has mentioned, and have developed and improved and created beautiful farms for themselves, and they are a credit to this country. The government deserves all the credit for trying to make it as easy as possible for these men to become Canadian citizens, provided that they can comply with the language question, and are physically and morally fit.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): And the political.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, I only desire to make a few observations in answer to my friend the Secretary of State. I think he is entirely wrong in one conclusion that he draws, and the language employed by Chief Justice Meredith, to which he referred the other day, abundantly supports the position that I wish to direct his attention to. The Naturalization Act, which was one of the statutes of this country prior to 1914, only conferred Canadian citizenship upon the applicant. My friend from Moose Jaw (Mr. Ross) in dealing with those who left this country, dealing with the class of persons to whom I referred in my address the other day, overlooked the fact that we did not confer British citizenship, but only Canadian citizenship. When they got beyond the three mile limit they were Germans again, as they had originally been, because of the provision in the constitution of their own country. May I direct the attention of the Secretary of State to a matter which I think is of some considerable importance? As the law now stands, there are certain countries in Europe that provide for military service by their subjects, and they will not relinquish their hold over them, even though they come to this country and obtain British citizenship. This thing was considered as being quite serious, and it was deemed to be worthy of consideration on the part of the government, as to whether or not they would grant a naturalization certificate to an alien from any country that claimed the right to call its citizens up for military service, regardless of where they might reside. I remember that the French republic called up one of its citizens under very distressing circumstances. The German Empire did, and certainly the Japanese Empire at one time claimed the right to do so. Whether or not they are now doing so, I cannot state with authority.

After the imperial conference of 1911, the hon. gentleman who has just spoken must realize that we have a law throughout the empire, which was arrived at by agreement. One of the representatives at the empire conference in 1911 was the late Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who represented the Dominion of Canada. It is true that the statute that embodied the conclusion, to which my friend the Secretary of State referred this afternoon, was not enacted in this parliament until 1914, but the law was agreed to by the Liberal government of that day, by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his colleagues at the imperial conference of 1911. My friend the Secretary of State read the report of the committee on imperial naturalization. I think the chairman of that committee was Mr. Churchill, then the Home Secretary. I may be wrong as to that, but certainly Sir John Simon was one of the members of the committee, he then being, if my memory serves me, either the Solicitor General or the Attorney General. That was the basis of our present law. It was agreed to by the Dominion of Canada, represented by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and one or two other Canadian statesmen. It was agreed to by Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and Great Britain. We, therefore, have a common standard of citizenship. Any alien who desires to become a citizen of the British Empire, whether at the Home Office in London, or in South Africa, Australia or Canada, has to comply with the following four requirements: (a) residence; (b) character; (c) language, and (d) the intention to remain in the British dominions or in the service of the crown. Those were the four requirements, and those requirements you will find in the statutes of the dominions, and in the statutes of Great Britain. That being so, we enacted them in 1914 as a part of our law with respect to naturalization and we repealed the old act. The only question that remained was the determination by the Secretary of State how he would satisfy himself that these requirements had been met. My hon. friend the Secretary of State, this afternoon—and perhaps he was speaking hurriedly—left the impression that as the law now stands, a judge may in some sense control the action of the Secretary of State. That is not so. I ventured to correct him and I now desire to point to the judgement of Mr. Justice Meredith lest, peradventure, the minister would not regard my statement as being at all important. These are the words of Mr. Justice Meredith:

> The judges, courts and authorities, or persons mentioned in section 22 have now no power to grant naturalization. They have the power and duty to hear and adjudicate upon applications for naturalization conferred on them; but their decision in favour of applicants may in the "absolute discretion" of the Secretary of State be in effect overruled in a refusal to issue a certificate of naturalization.
> Whilst, on the other hand there does not appear to be anything in the way of an overruling in effect by him of a judge's or court's decision against an applicant by the simple process of granting another application to him directly under section 4. Nor does there seem to be anything to prevent an applicant, whose application has failed when made to a judge or court or authority or person, applying again and again to other judges, courts, authorities or persons; subsection 2 of section 2 of the act does not seem, directly or indirectly, to create a local jurisdiction.

That was the point I was endeavouring to make to the Secretary of State in the afternoon. Further down in the judgment these words will be found:

> It is not a question of law, nor one of mere commonsense; it is really a question of policy of the country in which naturalization is sought: and as this Dominion has put the matter so completely in the discretion of its Secretary of State; sections 4 and 27 of the act, it seemed to me both natural and proper to look to him for knowledge; but so far that looking by me has been in vain.

That was the reference to which I was directing the attention of the Secretary of State this afternoon. The judge continues:

> Nor can I find anything that has been said or done by any other judge or any court, authority or person throwing light on the subject, helpful to me.

Therefore Chief Justice Meredith was of opinion that the duties cast upon the judge were merely those of inquiry and not judicial in any respect. What he did was to report his findings, such as they might be, as to whether or not the individual who came before him was a fit and proper person to have citizenship conferred upon him. Chief Justice Meredith made it perfectly clear that the absolute discretion in subsection 3 of section 4, together with the absolute discretion mentioned in the other section, was the discretion that touched the question of high state policy: Shall a man become a British subject? The Minister of External Affairs might, for instance, conclude that there were circumstances which the report of the judge did not disclose and which had not been ascertained by him, constituting high reasons of state why the Secretary of State should not grant citizenship Mr. Churchill made that perfectly clear as did Sir John Simon and I read their statements in the first observations I made to the house with respect to the matter.

It must be conceded that the question of the grant of citizenship is not the light matter that the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Beaubien) has mentioned. It is a matter of high government policy in some instances and all governments have claimed the right to determine what person shall and under what conditions he shall become their subject. The law being as I said of universal application, all self-governing communities in the empire have placed upon their secretaries of state that absolute discretion with respect to citizenship that is the attribute perhaps not of nationhood but at least of the right to determine who shall become citizens, in this instance, of the empire.

The measure as brought in by the Secretary of State repealed all the sections dealing with judicial inquiry, notices and matters of that kind. We submitted to him, I think, courteously, that as he had repealed those sections we had a right to ask what inquiry he proposed to substitute in their stead. We asked that time and again. He said: a mounted policeman, a homestead inspector. We asked him for others in order that we might know who were to make these inquiries. Then we went a step further. We also dealt with the question of notice, and the Secretary of State brought in an amendment to his bill providing that notice should be given through posting the applications in the post offices. We then ventured to point out that that conceded our claim that the regulations should be statutory and not the mere whim or caprice of the minister. Since he conceded that we were sound in that respect I suggested, and in fact all the speakers on this side of the house suggested to him that we should follow that up by determining by whom and where the inquiry was to be made whether or not the applicant for citizenship had complied with the requirements I mentioned, namely, residence, character, language and intention. He did not give us a satisfactory answer—I say that with all respect—and I think the hon. member for Marquette and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, who have intimated that the bill in its first form was not acceptable to them, perhaps had quite as much to do with the ultimate result as had those on this side who protested against the measure. At any rate we have some satisfaction in knowing our previous remarks in that regard have commended themselves to his serious consideration. What happened? The committee will recall that the other day the minister dwelt strongly upon the necessity of having uniformity in the administration of the law. Does he realize that the judgment of Chief Justice Meredith to which he referred contains these words:

> And it is of the utmost importance that the law should be administered evenly: that the country should not be open to the reproach: Your laws are uneven.

That is the point made by my friend the Secretary of State. He spoke of uniformity, and although judicial discretion may not be uniformly exercised, as we all know, a judicial discretion is so hemmed about by, so surrounded with safeguards, that in the main it may be said to be reasonably uniform in every part of the country. What have we now? The amendment submitted to the committee this afternoon provides what? That an applicant for a certificate of naturalization shall produce to the minister certificates of character and of adequate knowledge of the English or the French language from three natural born British subjects, two of whom are householders and one of whom is a justice of the peace. I ask this committee: What sort of uniformity will that ensure? Two householders and a justice of the peace in Alberta, two householders and a justice of the peace in Cape Breton determine two questions, namely, character and adequate knowledge of English or French—do you think their judgment will be uniform? Do you think their discretion will be uniform? Do you think it will be, as Chief Justice Meredith said, an even administration of the law? It seems to me it is somewhat ridiculous that for a judicial discretion surrounded by the safeguards that surround all judges with the great traditions behind them, you are going to substitute in every part of the country a different discretion. In one little community of a hundred people you will find a discretion exercised by three people saying that a man's knowledge of language is adequate. In another community they may be more exacting and find that the man's knowledge is inadequate, and in another they may not be able to decide on the question. Thus within a radius of fifty miles you may have three distinct views with respect to character and adequate knowledge of English or French. Is that the sort of thing we want? Chief Justice Meredith says no, and the minister brought his measure into the house demanding uniformity. This is how we are going to secure it and surely that cannot be sound. That is our position with respect to the matter.

Let me go a step further. The first amendment dealt with the notice and it says: The notice must be posted in the post office nearest to where the man is. Who is going to determine that and how is it to be determined? Supposing, as a matter of fact, a mistake is made and the notice is sent to a post office which is not the nearest to the applicant. The words are: "the post office nearest to the residence of the applicant." In some of the small communities there will be a difficulty with respect to whether he resides within eight miles of this office or within ten miles of that.

Then there is rural mail delivery. How about that? All these are questions that must be answered because they are practical questions. They are not manufactured for the occasion; they are not difficulties that we are making. I assure the committee, although I judge from the observations made to-day that the attitude I am taking is one that is severely censured by hon. gentlemen opposite, that I have no interest in the matter other than to see put upon the statute books a law that is workable and one that will reflect the genius of the Canadian people with respect to one of the most serious matters with which we can deal. I have no personal interest in the matter beyond the reasons I have suggested. I can stand it if the committee can, but I have given a great deal of attention to the matter during the thirty years I have been in western Canada, and the reasons given by the hon. member for Acadia were responsible for bringing my attention to it in the first place.

It is provided that the notice must be put up in the nearest post office. The minister must send the notice of the application to the postmaster at the nearest post office, and let me say that there is a provision about posting notices in the Postal Act which I think will require to be dealt with, and then:

> Such postmaster shall thereupon post such notice in a prominent place in the said post office and advise the minister thereof. Such posting shall be made at least sixty days before the issue of certificate of naturalization.

Then look at the next section: It provides:

> An applicant for a certificate of naturalization under subsection three of section four of this act shall advertise in a newspaper published at or nearest to his place of residence, in either the English or French language, in the prescribed form, his intention to apply, and shall produce to the minister a copy of the newspaper containing the said advertisement.

How many times is that advertisement to appear? The South African statute provides that it shall be published in the Gazette. How many times does it appear? That is the first question I ask. The next question is this: How long before the application is heard is the advertisement to appear? It may be the day before, and it would be complying with the section if it was published in the English language in Gaspe. It might not be understood by anybody in the community.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend is wrong. In Gaspe everybody understands English.

Mr. BENNETT: I will take another part of Canada. I selected Gaspe just because the name happened to occur to me. There must be communities in this country where the knowledge of English is very limited; we will put it that way.

Mr. CASGRAIN: No.

Mr. BENNETT: I congratulate my hon. friend because—

Mr. CANNON: It is legal to publish this notice in either language in our province.

Mr. BENNETT: I know that, and the point I am making is this: there is nothing to say that the publication of the notice shall not be in English in a French community or in French in an English community. What is more, if it is published in the foreign language papers in either English or French it would be complying with the section. But the next practical difficulty to which I was drawing attention was this: How long is the advertisement to be published before a certificate is granted? The day before? The week before? How many days before?

Mr. CANNON: Before what?

Mr. BENNETT: Before the certificate is granted.

Mr. CANNON: Notice of his intention to apply.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly. To-day is the seventh. He may put the advertisement in the newspaper to-day, and in the meantime notice of his intention to apply has been running, and his application is considered.

Mr. CANNON: He has to send a copy of the paper with his application.

Mr. BENNETT: Not with his application.

Mr. CANNON: Certainly.

Mr. BENNETT: This is what it says:

—shall advertise in a newspaper. . . his intention to apply, and shall produce to the minister a copy of the newspaper containing the said advertisement.

But not with the application. It does not say so.

Mr. CANNON: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not what the section says, and no court would so interpret it.

It goes a step further. You have an advertisement to be published in a newspaper and inserted a number of times that is not indicated, but it must be at least once. It contains the statement of the applicant's intention to apply on a date not mentioned. Then follows the inquiry, and for the judges of this country who have, as Sir Wilfrid Laurier said, ever since we have had a naturalization law, made this inquiry, you are substituting an inquiry that will be as different as the applications themselves. Those who are conducting the inquiry must satisfy themselves as to the character of the applicant and if he has an adequate knowledge of English or French, and then the justice of the peace comes in. In South Africa they have a provision with respect to that in practically the same terms as here, but for the reasons mentioned by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre and the hon. member for Fort William the other day, conditions in that country are so vastly different from what they are here because the immigrants that go to that country are not from every other part of the world, as is the condition here. That is the situation we have to deal with.

I might make this further observation, which is quite within the mark. It is not the intention on the part of anybody connected with this committee on either side of the house, dealing with a first rate problem of domestic affairs, to say that we are going to make naturalization easy or difficult. The hon. member for Provencher, who has just taken his seat, must realize that this parliament is not making naturalization easy or difficult. He talks about making it easy. This is a standard citizenship we are dealing with which the hon. gentleman's great leader, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, assisted in fixing at the imperial conference of 1911, and it is not competent for us to change it unless we change the whole bargain under which British citizenship is granted.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: My idea was simply this, to make it as easy as possible, and to avoid the financial difficulties of a lot of these men. That is the principle I am talking about.

Mr. BENNETT: That is a fair statement. If the hon. gentleman says he is only dealing with the question of procedure, we accept the principle; and let me point out, which I neglected to do the other day, that a provision now exists in the act whereby in exceptional cases the applicant need not go to the court at all.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Then why not take it all out of the act?

Mr. BENNETT: For the reason that the exception proves the necessity for the rule. Here is the exception. Section 25 says:

The applicant shall produce to the court such evidence that he is qualified and fit to be naturalized under the provisions of this act, as the court may require, and shall also personally appear before the court for examination unless it is established to the satisfaction of the court that he is prevented from so appearing by some good and sufficient cause.

In other words, if the distance is so great and the conditions, financial and otherwise, so difficult that the applicant cannot overcome them, here is the exception that meets that difficult case. Where such conditions prevail, where hardship would be involved, this section could be availed of, if the evidence is ample, and very often the evidence of the policeman who is making the patrol, and usually comes into the court, would satisfy the judge that the man could not be there himself. He could satisfy the court as to identity, character and knowledge of language, and the case would be disposed of. But these are the exceptional cases. These are the cases in which the operation of the law in all its stringency has been suspended in order to meet the difficulties of the case mentioned.

Under these circumstances, I can only unite my voice with that of the hon. member for Acadia and say that a case has not been made out for changing this law. If you feel that that is not sufficiently strong, there is no reason why this parliament should not provide for a case of that character, a case of hardship, by dealing with it directly.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Who is to establish hardship?

Mr. BENNETT: I have never seen judges unwilling to admit hardship if it is placed before them by anybody. Usually the policeman himself would be willing to do it, or the applicant could send a letter to the judge. I must say that I was greatly amazed when the hon. member for Comox-Alberni referred to an expense of $200 as being necessary to get naturalization papers. It is the most astounding information I have ever heard, because, so far as I have been able to ascertain, there is no formality in my part of the country. The clerk's offices are usually well known in western Canada. The applicants for naturalization write to the clerk of the court at Calgary or Edmonton for application forms. They are sent out by the next mail. The applicants fill out the forms, or are assisted to do so, return them to the court house, and the statutory notices are posted. I think some of my friends must have seen this method of dealing with applications for naturalization. Then in Alberta the courts are held more frequently throughout the country than they are in the other provinces judging from what has been said in the course of this discussion. As I have pointed out, if the applicant's financial resources or his condition of health do not permit his attendance at the court, the provincial police go out on patrol, visit the man and report on his qualifications. In our country a judge usually examines an applicant under oath if he is able to attend court. But in this instance we will assume the applicant could not attend but wrote a letter to the judge. In England a person would be admonished for doing this, but under our democratic system it is not unusual in most of the western provinces for men to write direct to the judges. I have seen many such communications. The matter is dealt with in that way. My friend from Provencher (Mr. Beaubien) has proved the very case that we have been endeavouring to make out. The judge may recommend that the man be not granted a naturalization certificate; the Secretary of State has power to grant such certificate.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: You admit that the Secretary of State has the right to grant a certificate of naturalization?

Mr. BENNETT: Surely.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Then why go to the court at all?

Mr. BENNETT: That is the question I did endeavour to answer. The statute says that the Minister of State must be satisfied, and he grants the certificate in his unfettered discretion. But the Secretary of State cannot personally go out north of Calgary to examine the applicant, so he has to get the information some other way, that is, by referring the matter to the judge, and the judge makes his report. But the Secretary of State is not bound to follow that report, for he himself may be satisfied that for other reasons, for instance, as a high act of state, it is advisable to grant naturalization, and he does so.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Suppose the judge did not recommend naturalization, and the Secretary of State issued a certificate, as you say he has the power to do, what is the good of the judge's inquiry?

Mr. BENNETT: My point is this, Mr. Chairman, that while the language of the statute is, as Chief Justice Meredith says, to vest complete discretion in the minister, there is no rule stated by which to determine just what the character and measure of the judge's inquiry should be. Chief Justice Meredith said that he looked to the Secretary of State for guidance and did not receive it. My hon. friend's question is: Why have an inquiry by the judge if the Secretary of State can grant naturalization against the judge's adverse report? But the reason for the inquiry is to be found in the exercise by the Secretary of State of what we say is a sound discretion based on a knowledge of the facts.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: But he can ignore the judge's finding.

Mr. BENNETT: I am not going to waste time in legal argument. The Secretary of State read from the report of the 1911 conference on naturalization. The whole point is that the granting of letters of naturalization is in a large sense a political act, and is done by the government as such, and the Secretary of State exercises that power. If the government sees fit to naturalize a person within the statute, that is, a person having good character and an adequate knowledge of English or French, the Secretary of State himself must be satisfied on these points. That is the position, as pointed out by Mr. Churchill and Sir John Simon at the naturalization conference.

Now that the government has made these amendments, I find there is something further that I intended to state the other day. I think those aliens who are under obligation to return to their native country for military service can never be taken to be persons who should come within the provisions of the section, because they cannot be said to be persons intending to reside in the British dominions. Leaving that out, the details I have mentioned—the difficulties with respect to the time in which the advertisement is to appear, the number of occasions—all those matters but indicate how desirable it is that these amendments should be studied from every standpoint. I submit that these amendments have been hurriedly prepared and give statutory form to conditions which might merely have been regulations of the governor in council. Since we are now going to impose them by statute, as we suggested the other day, I cannot but think their purposes would be best served by the government giving this matter that attention to detail which is so essential to clearly establish the position. In other words, the government should let this matter stand until another session in order that it may receive the attention which presumably the government desires to give to it. But if the government has made up its mind to press the bill through, I can only say once again that we protest against the inadequacy of these sections for the reasons mentioned by Chief Justice Meredith and for the reasons given by the Secretary of State himself. These sections establish absolute confusion and not uniformity; they establish a different form or condition from one end of Canada to the other, and place in the hands of three citizens—one is now to be a justice of the peace, but not a natural-born British subject, and the other two may be illiterate persons without any knowledge of English or French, and possibly, though not necessarily, bitter partisans at elections—the power to say whether or not the applicant has satisfied them on these points. The time specified is wholly inadequate to enable proper inquiries to be made, and there is no provision to permit any check in the event of the application being protested.

From what has been said in this house it is clear that it would have been better for us in days gone by—leaving out political considerations entirely—to have exercised a greater measure of attention and care than we did in the long years that I hope are not entirely forgotten. There has been imposed upon this country in the conduct of all its business an intolerable burden of expense by reason of there having been noncompliance with conditions which have since been made the basis of our Naturalization Act. Those conditions, so far as Canada is concerned, are attributable to the efforts of Sir Wilfrid Laurier who, when the bill was brought down by Mr. Doherty, congratulated him and, as I read the other day, intimated that it was something for which he had striven over a long period of years. For these reasons we protest against this measure being rushed into law under the circumstances I have indicated. That is all I can usefully add to this discussion and to the points that were made by the Secretary of State this afternoon.

Mr. ADSHEAD: The section provides for at least sixty days. Would this prevent the Secretary of State making it ninety days?

Mr. BENNETT: No; he might in his discretion, but it must be at least sixty days. That is the construction to be placed upon the language.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, my purpose in rising is not to draw attention to any points of difference between my hon. friend and myself, so much as to stress the similarity, if not the identity, of view which we entertain on some of the essential features of this measure. In the first place, I agree entirely with the leader of the opposition that we cannot view with too much regard for its importance the question of citizenship within our own country and that larger citizenship which we enjoy within the British Empire. As my hon. friend has said, prior to 1914 the citizenship that was conferred through naturalization was Dominion citizenship; it is now a citizenship which applies to the whole of the British Empire. That being the case, the question that naturally suggests itself to one's mind is, what are the requirements respecting naturalization in other parts of the British Empire? Were the government seeking to bring in a measure which would make it easier for a man to become a naturalized British subject in Canada than, for example, he can become in one of the other dominions or in the British isles, I think we might be open to the criticism that in the circumstances we are making naturalization too easy. But if, on the other hand, the requirements of our act with respect to citizenship are in all particulars the equivalent of the requirements in other parts of the British Empire, including the mother country, then I submit we have advanced a very strong reason why this bill should pass this parliament; otherwise we declare to the rest of the world that while a man can receive naturalization as a British subject in Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, Newfoundland and the British isles, he cannot receive naturalization in Canada on like terms and conditions. That, I say, would be a great misfortune; and it is to avoid discrimination against our own Dominion in that particular that the government in this measure has sought to lay down, as requirements for naturalization in Canada, the same or more rigid requirements than those of the other dominions or of Great Britain itself. If the committee appreciates that fact, which is fundamental and all-important, it will see a strong reason why further exception should not be taken to the bill.

My hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) declares that the legislation has been hastily conceived in the form in which it is being introduced. The Secretary of State made it quite clear, in his rmarks on the first day on which the measure was introduced, that citizenship would be granted in accordance not only with the expressed terms of the statute, but in accordance with regulations fixed by the Department of the Secretary of State, and which were, as he then indicated, precisely those which, in addition to others, are the ones we are to-day making a part of the statute. In the course of the discussion in the committee it became apparent that there was force in the argument that essential requirements ought to be made a part of the statute; and the Secretary of State, recognizing that contention, comes frankly before the committee and says, "I now propose to make, as part of the statute, requirements which otherwise, though quite as important and effective in the long run as regulations, would have appeared only in that form." We are therefore now making a part of the statute what originally were intended to be among the regulations. So that there has been no haste in the conception of what is now brought forward; the difference between the government and the opposition is wholly one of procedure.

This brings me to the other point of agreement between the leader of the opposition and the government. The leader of the opposition has pointed out that the question of naturalization is necessarily a matter of high government policy, and that in the last analysis the Secretary of State in his discretion must grant the naturalization certificate. The responsibility being on the government, it seems to me only right that the government should adopt its own method of securing such information as it needs to protect it in the exercise of that responsibility. If we are going to adhere to the doctrine of ministerial responsibility then, I submit, it is much more logical to place upon the minister the whole responsibility, allowing him the means which he believes to be most effective in order to ensure the results he desires to bring about, than to part with that responsibility to an individual or body not answerable to parliament, and to leave the discretion to someone altogether beyond the control of this house. The minister must meet parliament each session; he is responsible for all cases of naturalization where certificates have been granted by him. As was pointed out the other day, any hon. member can call at any moment for the file relating to any single citizen naturalized, and the minister must bear the responsibility for what the file discloses. I contend therefore, the responsibility being on the minister, that he should have an opportunity of devising the machinery which he believes would be most effective in enabling him to discharge his duty to parliament and to the country.

May I say further, after listening to the discussion and drawing from it the conclusions that are obvious with respect to the difficulties in regard to naturalization, that it would appear that members on one side of the house have been thinking largely of naturalization in the cities and in the larger towns, while members on the other side, to a greater extent perhaps, have been concerned with the difficulties in respect of naturalization in the rural and in the less thickly settled parts of the country. When reference is made to members of the judiciary as individuals before whom applicants shall appear, it must be apparent at once that the person about to be naturalized, if he resides in a city or in a town, is in a much more fortunate position than the man who has gone to some part of the Dominion as yet not thickly populated, or not settled at all, and has there hewn out a home for himself, and become a citizen of the country by virtue of years of labour upon the soil. I submit that, as between the two, if we were to choose which type in the long run was likely to make the better citizen, all of us, regardless of whether we live in the city or in the country, would say that the man who had made his home on the land was much more likely to be the type of citizen possessing the merits and the qualifications which we wish to see in one enjoying the privileges of citizenship than the foreign-born resident of a large city who possesses no property. I do not think there would be any doubt that we should choose him rather than the man in the city or the town. And yet, by the law as it stands to-day, those men who have made their homes in the unsettled parts of Canada and who have contributed towards the settlement of those sparsely settled areas, find it infinitely more difficult after five years of effort to become citizens of the Dominion, than do the men who happen to be in a large city like Montreal or Toronto. When that fact is taken into consideration members of the committee will, I think, see the wisdom of a measure which seeks to make it possible for the man who has settled in the rural parts of the country and possesses the necessary qualifications to obtain his naturalization with as little additional cost and as little additional effort as may be necessary.

There is no difference between the opposition and the government as to the requirements of naturalization; residence, character, language and intention: these, we are all agreed, are the essential requirements. But one point of difference that seems to arise between us is as to whether it shall be made easy or difficult for the applicant possessing these qualifications, to become naturalized. The contention of the government is that if the qualifications are there it ought not to be made as difficult as possible for the applicant to become naturalized; it ought to be made comparatively easy. If the qualifications are not there then certainly naturalization should be made not only difficult but impossible. But, I ask hon. members, bearing in mind what I have said in regard to the classes to whom naturalization is granted: Who are in a better position to know whether those persons settled in rural parts are likely to be worthy of citizenship than their neighbours who are householders, who have lived beside them, who know them, who have watched them year in, year out over a period of five years? It is not to be forgotten that those who are entitled to apply for naturalization are only individuals who have been five years in the country, and men who are householders and natural born British subsubjects are going to put their names to certificates of such importance unless they are pretty sure of the statements they are making.

Just here I should like to refer to the words of the hon. member for Acadia. As he was speaking it seemed to me that he had a fear that this right of naturalization would be exercised by one political party to the disadvantage of the other. I would point out to him that under the measure as it stands, the opportunities are the same for both or rather for all political parties; there is no advantage given to one side or to one political party more than to another in requiring that whoever vouches for the character and qualifications of the individual applicant shall be a person such as is defined in the statute. It is only conveying a false impression to seek to have it appear, whether intentionally or otherwise, that in this matter the administration is in some particular interested in gaining an advantage to itself. The government are seeking to establish qualifications which will apply to everyone in this country regardless of his political leanings, and to give every class an equal chance under the law.

Those I think are the points which I wish to stress at this moment. The whole matter comes down to a question of trying to find, as nearly as a government can find it, the happy mean between two extremes; the one extreme which will make it difficult for the man who possesses the necessary qualifications to become naturalized, and the other extreme which would make it easy for a man who does not possess in full measure the qualifications to become a Canadian citizen. In taking the qualifications which are required in other parts of the Brtish Empire, adding those obligations which are imposed by statute in other parts of the empire and making these a part of the statute of our own land we have gone in this matter as far as it is possible for an administration to go which wishes to be perfectly impartial and to lean in favour neither to the one side nor to the other.

Mr. KELLNER: Representing a rural constituency which is possibly one of the largest in Canada, I wish to state definitely that I have never heard a single complaint against the present Naturalization Act, and I cannot see why anyone should have to go to an expense of $25 or more to become naturalized. The only sum mentioned in the act is the payment of $5 for the application. I do not see that this scheme is going to be any more workable; it seems to me that you are only substituting the mounted police or the homestead inspectors for the judge. In the province of Alberta mounted police are practically things of the past; we have a few of them but they are not on active duty and do not travel around the country to any great extent. There are some districts where homestead inspectors may be found, but there are other districts where they are few and far between. If a man went out to-day to look for a mounted policeman or a homestead inspector in order to make his application for naturalization, it would probably take him quite a long time to find one. I believe you would have to include some of the other inspectors who have been mentioned, and I suppose it would be quite appropriate to include an egg inspector.

I do not think there can be any question but that this act has political possibilities, and everyone who has lived in the west for any length of time knows that the old act was used in that way. I know, and I am satisfied that my colleagues also know, of people who were naturalized and who did not know they were naturalized until they received their papers. In one election I recall a man telling me that one of the election workers asked him to vote. He said, "I cannot vote; I have not been naturalized yet", but the election worker said, "Yes, you have; I have your certificate right in my pocket."

I would like to refer for a moment to this provision under which three natural born British citizens must certify to the character of the applicant, and I just want to say a word on the way the words "natural born British citizens" are used. Surely it would be better to say, "native born"; I think nearly all of them are natural born, so it seems to me that the minister is using a term which does not cover what he means. The main point which strikes me, however, is this: Supposing these natural born or native born Britishers come to this country this week; is there anything in the act to preclude them from giving certificates to one making application for naturalization next week? We know that we get at least an occasional immigrant from England whom we have to send back, and I do not see why such a man could not come out to Canada this week, establish a home, sign his certificate next week for some one making a naturalization application, and still remain within the act. If you are going to have that section in the act it seems to me that the British citizen should be compelled to establish a residence in Canada of at least one or two years; certainly he could not form any very definite conclusion as to the character of the individual to whom he gave a certificate otherwise. In my humble opinion I think the government are spoiling a reasonably good act and giving us what is likely to be an exceedingly poor one.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I should like to add a word or two to this discussion, and I wish to refer first to the reference made by the Prime Minister to Australia and New Zealand. I submit that the situation existing in those countries, where over 90 per cent of the population is of one race and one language, is vastly different from the situation which exists in Canada. We are bringing to this country people from all parts of the world, people of different nationalities, speaking different languages, and I submit that we should have the most systematic and rigorous control by the native born citizens of the two principal races in Canada if we are ever to have a semblance of national unity in this country. In my judgment we should not make the mistake of relaxing or loosening our restrictions with regard to the granting of naturalization certificates; on the contrary, in my humble judgment we should tighten up the regulations.

I should like to submit this point, which seems to me worthy of consideration: We have an example just across the line, in the United States of America. That country was referred to by the hon. member for Stanstead, who stated that they had opened their doors to countless millions of immigrants. That is very true. In the last century some 36,000,000 foreigners immigrated into the United States. In the twenty years subsequent to 1882 there was a flood-tide of immigration into that country; they were receiving from three-quarters of a million to a million per year. In 1914, immigration into that country totalled 1,258,000; in 1921, it was as high as 805,000. Now, what was the course taken by our neighbours to the south? I venture to state that in the past they have been stricter and more rigorous in regard to granting naturalization certificates than we have in Canada. Yet, notwithstanding all that, we find the United States passing perhaps the most drastic immigration law that ever was passed by any country on the face of the earth.

I should like to submit to you a sentence from the message of President Coolidge to congress in December, 1923, when he advocated a stricter numerical restriction, based on the census previous to 1910. The first quota system adopted by the United States was based on the census of 1910, the 3 per cent quota. President Coolidge advocated going farther than that, and in his message he used these words:

> America should be kept for Americans. To obtain this we can admit only those whom we can assimilate, viz., those whose background, traditions, etc., are similar to ours, and those who come for the purpose of making America their home and who will be partakers of the American spirit.

Now, Mr. Chairman, under the quota system of the United States, based on the census of 1910, they permitted about 360,000 to come in from foreign countries. I do not include in that number those from Canada or Mexico. Under the quota system later adopted, on the basis of the census of 1890, the 2 per cent quota, they cut that almost exactly in half. Again I am excluding immigrants coming from Mexico and from Canada. What was the object of the United States in making that change? After a very careful study of the whole situation they did that for the express purpose of eliminating as far as possible immigrants from continental Europe, or, at least, from southern and southeastern Europe. Under the new plan, the quota from England, Germany, and most of the northern European countries was practically not affected by the change from the 3 per cent to the 2 per cent quota on the basis of the two different years.

Let us see how it affected the others. I refer to this because I think it has a very direct application to this proposed law, which, I submit, will affect more particularly those from the southern and southeastern part of Europe than those from the northern part of Europe, the Scandinavian countries and Germany. Let us see how that change affected the situation in the United States. It reduced Austrian immigration from 7,451 down to 1,090—7,451 under the quota system of 3 per cent, based on the census of 1910, and 1,090 on the quota system of 2 per cent, based on the census of 1890.

Mr. DUNNING: The change in boundary would have something to do with that.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Possibly it had. As I will give you other nations, I think it will include them all, even under the changed boundaries. For Czechoslovakia the number was reduced from 14,557 to 1,973; Greece, from 3,294 to 135; Hungary, from 5,638 to 588; Italy, from 42,057 to 4,689; Poland, from 21,076 to 8,972; Roumania, from 7,419 to 731; Russia, from 21,613 to 1,892; Turkey, from 2,388 to 123; and Jugoslavia, 6,426 to 835.

The experience of the United States, our next door neighbour, was that at one time they threw their doors absolutely wide open to the world, inviting people to come in from all parts of the world. That great country looked over the past legislation which it had on its books in regard to immigration and considered what was necessary as to naturalization, and after that they adopted the most drastic and stringent laws in order to protect their country from the influence of those whom it would be somewhat difficult to Americanize. They adopted the most drastic law that was ever adopted in any country in the world. And now, in their experience, surely we have a lesson from which we can learn something. I submit, having regard to the attitude of our great neighbour, that this is not the time in the history of Canada to relax our vigilance, to loosen up on our restriction, and make it a mere matter of form for the strangers within our gates to become Canadian citizens.

We have the proof of it right on the floor of this house, in that hon. gentlemen in this chamber who have come from different countries of the world have made good in Canada and are a credit to the house and to the Dominion. There are thousands and tens of thousands of such citizens in the west, and I firmly believe that any man who has lived in Canada for five years, no matter from what country he has come, and more especially the man who has lived in the country and acquired some land which he can call his own, if he is worth his salt and is worth naturalizing, will not raise any quibble in regard to a little trouble in going to get his naturalization papers. I submit, with all confidence, that the man who will quibble about a little inconvenience to himself, even to a little outlay of money, in rounding out his citizenship, is not the man we want. If he is a settler desiring to become a citizen of Canada, and if he is the right kind of man, he will approach these difficulties, such as they are, with pleasure. If a man will harp and quibble about a little inconvenience to himself and a little outlay of money in order to become a citzen of Canada, it is better for Canada if he never takes out his citizenship papers at all. I submit that those people from foreign countries who do not know a word of English or French, who find great difficulty in acquiring either of these languages; those citizens who have settled in the back parts of the country and who will be put to great inconvenience in getting their papers—those citizens will, I believe, look back on their experiences and will compare their pioneering years in Canada with the best years which they have had in the country of their birth, and they will feel they are so much better off in the land of their adoption than in the land of their birth that they will be glad to crown their ownership of property in this country with the dignity of being Canadian citizens.

Some say that in some cases people living in outside districts are put to considerable inconvenience in travelling long distances and are also put to some expense in order to acquire citizenship. Does that not apply to everything else? Men who live in outlying districts and who have to attend court on some matter or another are put to greater inconvenience than are men who live next door to the court house. The man who lives in an outlying district must in everything be put to a certain inconvenience and trouble in travelling long distances and he cannot do that without incurring some expense. In all other matters that pertain to life and his activities as a citizen, he will be told at once: Well, you live some distance away from the local seat of government in your community; that happens to be your position and you are subject to inconvenience because of that fact; you must submit to that. We cannot all live in the same place. But in regard to the acquisition of the right of citizenship in Canada, the matter of inconvenience has to be raised. Hon. gentlemen have cited cases of men who live fifty miles, a hundred miles or more away from a court and who have to travel those distances in order to secure their papers. These are isolated cases. Should the whole law of the country be governed by the experience of two or three or half a dozen men who happen to live in isolated communities? Surely the law can be framed in such a way that if you have ten, twelve or fifteen people who want to take out naturalization papers and who live fifty or seventy-five miles away from the court, the court will travel those fifty or seventy-five miles in order to meet those people. The only reason that occurs to me why the government should substitute for the judges of the land, whose very position lends a dignity to the acquisition of naturalization papers, homestead inspectors or mounted policemen or some other agents of the Secretary of State is that the government may make political capital out of that change.

The CHAIRMAN: The question is on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni.

Mr. RINFRET: I desire to say that the government is quite willing to approve the amendment. The desire of the government is to see that the certificates accompanying an application are made by persons who may be relied upon. I am quite satisfied, if the committee is, that a justice of the peace would in all cases be a desirable person to submit a certificate.

Mr. MANION: There was another suggestion which I made this afternoon. I was supported in it by the leader of the Progressive party, the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Gardiner), the leader of the opposition and various other speakers, and with the attitude taken by the minister and that taken by the Prime Minister it seems a most reasonable suggestion, namely, the four-month instead of the two-month period.

Mr. RINFRET: The subamendment is now before the committee. The question of delay comes in another part of the amendment.

Mr. MANION: I think the amendment of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni comes in at the tail end of the bill. This is in the fifteenth line, I notice.

Mr. RINFRET: But the chairman has just called the amendment and perhaps it might be pronounced upon first.

Mr. CLARK: Has it been suggested to the minister that there are in this country justices of the peace who cannot speak either English or French?

Mr. RINFRET: I am not aware of the fact. I desire to add this, that these are the minimum statutory safeguards. The Secretary of State will in all cases be at liberty by inquiry or otherwise to add to the statutory safeguards.

Mr. CLARK: If the amendment carries, the justice of the peace passing upon the qualifications of an applicant may be an immigrant, foreign-born, and he may not himself have an adequate knowledge of the French or the English language.

Mr. RINFRET: I do not believe so. If he has been properly naturalized and passed upon by the court when he was naturalized, he would have the knowledge.

Mr. CLARK: Surely by now the minister knows that thousands of men were improperly naturalized in this country before the safeguards were imposed under the present act of having applicants come before a judge. Instances have been given in the house of literally hundreds being naturalized for election purposes. Many of those never could speak English or French.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Where are they?

Mr. CLARK: My hon. friends know perfectly well where they are.

Mr. McPHEE: In what part of Canada?

Mr. CLARK: They are all over Canada. I do not know of one province where this has not happened. I suggest very seriously that this is not limited to applicants for naturalization or to those who have been naturalized, but we have actually in this country justices of the peace who have not an adequate knowledge of either the English of the French language.

Mr. McINTOSH: Name the province.

Mr. McPHEE: Name one man in Canada.

Mr. CLARK: My hon. friends need not be ridiculous in this. I am making a statement and I need not name any one individual. I know justices of the peace who are not educated men, who are not fit and competent to judge whether a man has an adequate knowledge of the English or the French language and whether or not he is a fit and proper person to be naturalized.

Mr. BANCROFT: Does the hon. member know one man who is a justice of the peace who cannot speak English or French?

Mr. CLARK: I know justices of the peace who have not an adequate knowledge of the English or the French language.

Mr. BANCROFT: The hon. member said that they could not speak English or French.

Mr. CLARK: I did not. I said that it has been seriously suggested to me—and I believe it is true—that there are in this country justices of the peace who are not native-born Canadians—

Mr. BANCROFT: Yes.

Mr. CLARK: —who are immigrants, and I firmly believe there are many of them who have not an adequate knowledge of the English or the French language. Those are the men that the minister now suggests he is willing should pass upon applications for naturalization. I was opposed to the bill as introduced, but I am more than ever opposed to it as the minister now proposes it should pass. It seems to me a preposterous thing that the minister should suggest taking any two native born Canadians that you may find willing to certify, and then take a justice of the peace not born in this country who will in all probability charge a fee for his certificate. My hon. friend shakes his head. I feel certain that he will. You will find all over Canada that a fee will be charged by a justice of the peace who puts his name to the certificate, and that will be another scandal. If the minister is serious when he intimates that he does not believe that this will be done, he should make it an offence in the act itself if a fee is charged by a justice of the peace. It is all nonsense to suggest that a justice of the peace is a fit and competent person to pass on these applications. The judiciary of this country has proven itself to be above suspicion in these things, and if there is any difficulty in the administration of the law as it now stands, the Secretary of State can amend the present act so that the judges may travel about the country, making it more convenient, if convenience is desired, for the applicants to be heard. Particularly in our country, I submit that this question is a matter of vital importance because of the tremendous percentage of foreign immigration that we have in this country. The percentage of foreign immigration in Canada to-day largely exceeds the British and therefore we should be taking additional precautions, instead of opening the door wide, as is suggested.

Mr. ARTHURS: Confirming what my hon. friend from Vancouver-Burrard has said, in the part of Ontario from which I come, for many years—for political reasons or otherwise, which I am not going into now—foreigners were brought before a magistrate and sworn on the ordinary oath of allegiance to His or Her Majesty, as the case might be, although usually it was Her Majesty Queen Victoria, and then many of them, before they were naturalized were appointed justices of the peace, and some of them occupy that position to-day. They have no adequate knowledge perhaps of English, and no knowledge whatever of French. I support very strongly the suggestion made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard that in all these cases we should take the opinion of the judges of the court. There is no complaint regarding the working of the present act from anybody in the large cities. The city of Montreal is satisfied. The city of Toronto, where we have a large foreign population, is satisfied, and so on throughout the country.

The complaint is made that some of the applicants for naturalization are located a long way from the court, and have to travel many miles to reach a judge, but surely some slight amendment could be made to the act for the purpose of covering such a case. I maintain that in the main the present law is quite satisfactory, and certainly the present method is more advisable than placing the matter in the hands of a justice of the peace and two other men, who may be his sons or any other two people so long as they are born in Canada.

Mr. CHURCH: Apparently the government has decided that this naturalization question is going to stay in politics as long as they are in office. We have an amendment before the chair, and in regard to that let me say that in the province of Ontario the office of the justice of the peace has practically been abolished. Every city and town, under the Attorney General's department, today has a police magistrate who is paid a salary. The justices of the peace now have no duties to perform. The cost of administering this act will run into hundreds of thousands of dollars. As I said the other night, this is just a political bill, and it was never intended to be anything else but a political bill to make votes for the government when polling day comes round. Especially in the larger city ridings, like Toronto West Centre or Toronto East Centre, where there is a large fluctuating foreign population, the present law has worked admirably. In the city from which I come, we have six county court judges, and every time the court meets there is a procession of these men appearing to secure naturalization. We must remember that under this law we are not merely granting Canadian citizenship when we issue a certificate of naturalization, but that since 1914 and the agreement that was entered into at the imperial conference of that time, followed by legislation throughout the different dominions, we have been really granting British citizenship throughout the whole empire, and once a British subject always a British subject. You can become a British subject in one of two ways, either by birth or by naturalization.

Coming from a city where we have a large foreign population who on the whole are law-abiding, where the present law has worked very well, I protest against the amendment which the Secretary of State proposes, and so far as the latest amendment is concerned, handing over the inquiry to two native born citizens and a justice of the peace who need not be born in the country at all, that just makes the bill just so much worse than it was before—a political farce. Wherever this committee of three is working, you would find a political machine trying to coin out certificates of naturalization for people who are expected to vote for the government.

I wish to protest against the principle of this bill. The other night the government brought down a bill to repeal a provision in the criminal code regarding sedition. The Naturalization Act is now being attacked, and dear knows what the next attack of the government will be for the benefit of foreigners. This is just a nice gesture to the prairie foreign voters in the next election; that is all it is. Whatever you may say about this bill, the fact remains that it is looked upon by the people of this country as a political bill. Chief Justice Meredith, one of the greatest judges the country produced, has written to the Secretary of State of this country wanting information and a ruling or advice of what citizenship is under the present law. If there was more co-operation between the government and the judges the act would be all right.

Mr. BALDWIN: The hon. gentleman has mentioned politics. Does he believe that to the victors belong the spoils?

Mr. McGIBBON: That is the practice over there.

Mr. CHURCH: Chief Justice Meredith has very properly written to the government in the interests of a proper naturalization act, asking if they will define the division of the present law between the judges and the government. We had county court judges before the committee on judges' salaries the other day, and they say that the most important part of their judicial duties is looking after this question of citizenship. Are we to wait until Canada becomes like the United States? When President Harding found, by the last census in the United States, that only 54 per cent of the population were American citizens, his administration brought down a bill closing the door to continental Europe and establishing the quota system, in the interest of the best United States citizenship. That question was taken up by both the parties, Republican and Democratic, both of which strongly opposed the European invasion of that country.

I may say to my hon. friends opposite that if this amendment is passed they will have the spoil system and might just as well abolish the Civil Service Commission. This is simply a political bill. Let us take naturalization out of politics. Our Naturalization Act has worked admirably, and the only trouble has been a lack of co-operation between the Secretary of State and the country court judges. I am opposed to the amendment. Who is asking for it? Have any municipalities asked for it? The Naturalization Act is working efficiently in the county of York. The Naturalization Act is one of the most important statutes, and the government had no mandate to amend it. If at the last election the government had told the people of Ontario that it proposed to pass an amendment along these lines, it would not have secured a single seat throughout the province. Ontario will have to pay the costs of administration under this amendment. A return I secured the other day showed that Ontario was paying 42 per cent of all the cash taxes in the Dominion. It is Ontario that will pay the bulk of the huge cost of such an act as this.

We shall soon have to pass a quota law similar to that in operation across the line. The British born now are getting down to 55 or 50 per cent of the population. In Australia Premier Bruce has tightened up the immigration regulations. He has decided that Australia must be a white man's country. They are getting a majority of the British immigrants. They are doing all the window-dressing in London in immigration. What they have done should be an example to Canada. I submit that this amendment is against the best interests of the British Empire, and it is pretty near time that members from Ontario rose up and protested against this measure. Once more I raise my voice in protest against this bill because it means there will be more politics than ever in the naturalization of immigrants. It is time the British born made a stand against all these acts to benefit the foreign element very largely. The United States have adopted a quota law. The United States was fast approaching the condition of London, England, in 1666, the time of the great fire, which was described, I believe, by the author and poet, Ben Jonson, as follows:

> The common sewer of Paris and of Rome
> Sucks in the dregs of all corrupted states.

And the American people checked a foreign invasion. We should do likewise and adopt a quota law before it is too late.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Mr. Chairman, I think it must be admitted on all hands that we are dealing with something very vital to the life of Canada when we seek to amend the law relating to citizenship, particularly when we remember that admission to Canadian citizenship also carries with it British citizenship under the law that has been referred to during the course of this debate.

I am sure the Secretary of State, who is responsible for the administration of the Naturalization Act, desires to have accurate and reliable information regarding every applicant for a certificate of naturalization. This being so, I wish to ask him how he can get such information better than through the judges of this country—men who are accustomed to weigh the value of testimony, men who know local conditions, men who have the applicant before them and thus have the benefit of a personal interview. Surely these judges can be relied upon to obtain that accurate and dependable information without which the Secretary of State should not act. I have not heard it alleged that in the past they have failed in the discharge of their duty, or that they have in any way neglected to report this information in proper form to the Secretary of State.

Our citizenship is of great importance to this country. In the old days a Roman used to boast of his citizenship. I feel that we may as proudly boast of our citizenship. It is, I submit, worth while to impress upon the applicant for the rights and privileges of Canadian citizenship his duties and his responsibilities to Canada and to the empire. Surely those duties and those responsibilities will not be impressed upon him by the methods proposed by this bill.

There can be no doubt that at certain times and in certain places there will be those who will endeavour to use this legislation for political purposes, and it will require very strong resistance on the part of any secretary of state to prevent this. Then why does he place himself in a position where he will have to resist the pressure of friends, where he will have to resist applications made, perhaps on the eve of an election, in a wholesale way for the naturalization of persons by those who desire their votes. Scandals have occured in the past and very likely will occur in the future under legislation of this kind; but under the present statute I submit there is no possibility of anything of the kind happening, and we should use every endeavour to avoid the possibility of its recurring. In the past we have heard a great deal, and perhaps properly so, about irregularities in connection with the issue of immigration permits. Surely this amendment affords an opportunity for a greater abuse of the law on the eve of an election. The title of a bill should, I submit, bear some reference to its purposes and to its meaning, and it seems to me this bill might very properly be entitled an act to permit the peddling of naturalization certificates for political purposes. I notice that the press of the country is very strong indeed in its expressions of opinion against the bill. Coming in on the train this evening I cut out an extract from a local paper reporting the views of the Brantford Expositor, a paper not unfriendly to this administration. This is what the Brantford Expositor says:

> Parliament will do well to scrutinize the proposed measure in the most painstaking manner, having regard only for the welfare of Canadian citizenship. Unless it can be proved beyond a doubt that there are injustices which ought to be remedied, the proposed amendment ought to be rejected. Canadian citizenship carries with it a priceless heritage, and it ought not to be granted without full judicial inquiry having been made in regard to the merits of the applicants.

If I took much time I could not more effectively express my opinion and, I venture to say, the opinion of the majority of the people in this country on this question than it has been expressed in this very short article.

I have some knowledge of how this act has worked. I have seen applicants for citizenship appear before the county judge; they have been treated kindly, courteously and with every consideration, and advantage has been taken of the opportunity to inform them of their rights, their privileges and also of their duties. That, I think we must agree, is very important and useful if we are to have that appreciation on the part of our newly naturalized citizens of their rights and of their obligations to Canada. It does not appear that there has been any great measure of inconvenience under the act as it has operated. I can well understand that in some outlying, sparsely settled districts some people possibly have been put to inconvenience. But I would point out that if an applicant is unable to attend court all he has to do is to make a statutory declaration. Under the franchise law, where personal attendance is required, there are provisions that make it possible, in case the applicant for franchise is unable to attend, either through sickness or from any other good cause, for proof to be given on his behalf. It may be furnished by affidavit. But in this case, as far as I understand the legislation, no person is required to swear anything; no evidence is taken on oath. We have one or two certificates given by some interested friends, perhaps some political partisan, and these are sent to the Secretary of State.

The Secretary of State admits that there should be some investigation, but what opportunity will he have of exercising supervision over those affidavits and of making a proper investigation? Surely we can safely trust our judges to make the investigation. I believe it was the Prime Minister who said that ministerial responsibility would involve ministerial control. Well, it is not at all unusual to find this government asking judges, and appointing commissions, to make investigations and to tell them what they ought to do. And when we have this machinery set up and working so well, we should stop and ask ourselves just why we are making this change, why it is necessary, and who is asking for it and pressing for it. Is there any injustice? Is there any real inconvenience? Is there any danger to the citizenship of Canada? Shall we not be keeping matters on a higher level if we follow the course pursued in the past, asking the applicants to appear before our courts to vindicate their application and to furnish that measure of proof which is only reasonable and proper, having in view the safeguards essential to the welfare of this country?

Mr. McGIBBON: This is one bill that parliament should certainly refuse to let go by. It is nothing more than another attempt by this government to put through legislation for the purpose of keeping itself in office. It is nothing more and nothing less. It has not been asked for by the country; it is not wanted by the country; it is not wanted by this parliament. In fact, it is wanted by no one but the government and members on the other side of the house. If any proof were needed in this regard it was furnished the other night by a minister of the crown, the Minister of Agriculture, who rose in this house and, in that jocular manner which he so often assumes, said, "There are thousands and tens of thousands of foreigners in the west and we want to get them naturalized." I looked at the government at the time and I saw, representing the province of Saskatchewan, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell). Immediately there came to my mind a map presented the other day to a committee of this house—a map of the province of Saskatchewan. That map I have here in my hand, showing the foreign element marked in black. I suppose other hon. members have received it.

Mr. McPHEE: Did my hon. friend read the list of foreign settlements given in the map?

Mr. McGIBBON: The hon. member read them himself the other day in the committee room and he, like many others in this house who are also on that committee, prevented or tried to prevent this information from getting out.

An hon. MEMBER: What information?

Mr. McGIBBON: The information I am giving to the house.

Mr. DUNNING: Will the hon. member let me see the map? I have not had the privilege of looking at one.

Mr. McGIBBON: Certainly; have a look at it. You will see your own constituency.

Mr. DUNNING: Will my hon. friend describe my constituency as being entirely of foreign birth?

Mr. McGIBBON: I think the minister has a few of them out there.

Mr. DUNNING: And they are good Canadian citizens too.

Mr. McGIBBON: They may be good Canadian citizens, but their judgment is bad when they vote for the Minister of Railways.

Mr. DUNNING: That is a matter of opinion. You tried hard enough to get them and failed.

Mr. McGIBBON: I got mine in my constituency. Now, Mr. Chairman, looking over that map we can readily see why this government wants this bill to go through. The Minister of Agriculture is quite frank about it. He says, "We have thousands and tens of thousands out there and we want to naturalize them." The Prime Minister this evening made the statement that they were all being made equal under the law. That, I submit, is not at all what we are doing. The fact is, they are not under the law; they are under the government. The Secretary of State will have the final say in all these applications.

Mr. DUNNING: Is my hon. friend relying on this map?

Mr. McGIBBON: For what?

Mr. DUNNING: I should like to draw his attention to the fact that all the French-Canadian settlements in northern Saskatchewan are described here as foreign. If my hon. friend likes to take evidence of that kind that is his privilege.

Mr. McGIBBON: I see the minister is very sensitive about many things, but he will find that members on this side are a great deal more loyal to this country than members on his side of the house.

Mr. DUNNING: I am talking about foreigners just now.

Mr. McGIBBON: There are foreigners and foreigners, and I am pointing out that if the government get this bill through all immigrants coming to this country will have to depend upon the government for their naturalization papers, which they cannot secure without going to the Secretary of State. This whole machinery created under this bill will be nothing but political machinery. That is quite evident, and if this parliament does nothing else for the next month we should oppose the passage of this bill. The present act is working well; these applications come before the highest and most respected tribunals in the country, and what excuse have the government given for changing the procedure? What does the Secretary of State hope to do? For the action which is taken before the judge, before whom the applicant appears to answer questions which test his fitness for becoming a Canadian citizen, the minister is going to substitute nothing but a form of correspondence school, which he himself cannot even supervise. He tells us that a man must be vouched for by three people, but I wonder if there is anyone in this house to-night who thinks there is one man in Canada who could not get all these certificates if he wanted to become naturalized. Do we have to recall what took place in Peace River and in Athabasca to suggest what might take place under this act? The safeguards which the minister claims to have placed in this bill do not amount to anything. For example, he says the notice must be posted in a post office, but I pointed out to the Postmaster General the other evening that in many post offices throughout Canada there is not a place where these notices can be posted. The mail is kept in a room of the house and handed out through the door, and there is absolutely no place where a notice could be posted. If a notice were posted the applicant would last perhaps twenty-four minutes in some cases or twenty-four hours in others.

Then, as I pointed out this afternoon, no provision is made for the filing of objections to these applications for naturalization. I wonder what the minister is going to do in that case. If anyone wishes to object to any person becoming naturalized under this bill, what procedure must he follow? I will pause for a reply.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. McGIBBON: My hon friends are not going to make a bit of progress by calling "carried". We on this side have our rights in this house just as hon. members opposite have theirs, and I intend to exercise my privileges. I can stay here and talk until eleven o'clock if it is necessary in order to keep this bill from being carried; I do not want to do so and that is not my intention, but if we cannot be treated with a certain amount of respect when we rise to speak on any question we will have to secure our rights in some other way, and we will see that we do obtain them.

I am not one of those who think it should be made easy for people to become naturalized in this country; I think naturalization is one of the most priceless gifts we can bestow upon anyone. Before we say an applicant will be a good citizen or that he has the making of a good Canadian citizen we must consider the aspirations of the country from which he comes, the attitude of his people towards law and order and towards governments, because all these things will be reflected in the future Canadian nation. Consequently I say that when we are dealing with this matter we should consider it very carefully, and we should proceed with a good deal of caution. Restrictions are necessary to a certain degree; if we do not maintain them we will find a condition existing in this country similar to that prevaling in the United States. We are laying a foundation to-day for the future generations, and nothing is going to contribute more to the soundness of our people in the future than this proposed measure now under consideration.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that in the interests of the government this bill should not pass. We know that when election time comes the Secretary of State will be flooded with applications for naturalization. I am not speaking particularly of the present occupant of that office; no matter who is occupying it at that time pressure will be brought to bear upon him, and being human he will give way under it. This thing eventually will be nothing more or less than a political machine, which will not work to the benefit of the country as a whole. The principle is wrong; the application is wrong, and the results will be disastrous to this country. Speaking for myself, I object to this proposed new act and to the way it is intended to be applied.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): During the debate this afternoon I put a question to the Secretary of State to which I did not receive an answer. I suppose almost everyone looks at this question more or less from a personal point of view; I have had considerable experience in connection with the naturalization of aliens in my county, and so far have had no difficulty at all. It seems to me that the discussion we have had has contained a good deal of matter quite apart from the real issue but the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition have cleared the atmosphere by their addresses. I think on both sides of the house we agree on the principles underlying this bill; it seems to be the unanimous opinion of members of the house that a person who is entitled to naturalization should receive it, and the only point on which we differ is the question of procedure. We have been told from this side of the house that the present procedure works very well, and that is is simple and economical. Under the present system the applicant in the province of Nova Scotia goes to the clerk of the county court. The clerk gives him a form, fills it out for him if he wants to, and charges him five dollars, and that is all that applicant needs to pay to get his certificate of naturalization. The clerk takes that application and files it in his office, and puts a notice on it of the date when the county court judge will hear that man's application. On that date the applicant appears before the county court judge and is put through an examination. As the result of that examination the county court judge reports to the Secretary of State, who gives or withholds the certificate.

It has been urged in favour of the change that it is going to be easier under this new law, and that it is going to be less costly and less cumbersome. With regard to the first, I want to say now that it is going to cost very much more for any applicant to get a certificate of naturalization under this new law than it did under the old. In the first place it is necessary for him to get a form from the Secretary of State. How is he going to do that? Great pleasare made on behalf of those people who live in the far distant parts of this country, and for them I think we must all feel a certain amount of sympathy. We want to assist each one of those men who is looking for naturalization. We want him to get it as easily and as cheaply as possible. Is it going to be easier for a man to get a certificate of naturalization? Is it going to be easier, in the first place, for him to get his application form? To whom is he going to apply? You must remember that those people who live in the far distant parts of the country do not know exactly whom to go to. Down in our country they know exactly where the court house is. They know that they can go there and they can get a form and get it filled in, and all they have to do is to pay five dollars. That is every cent it will ever cost a man to get his certificate of naturalization. He does not have to employ a lawyer, or if he does it will cost perhaps $25, which I think is the legal fee down there. Is it possible to conceive that any man in the west is going to know enough about the procedure to do this without employing a lawyer? It is not. The very first thing that man must do is to employ counsel to secure the form for him, and put him through the various steps that enable him to receive his certificate of naturalization.

There is one point on which I think we are all agreed, and that is citizenship in the British Empire. We are all agreed as to the importance of that, and the value that should be attached to it by every person. Is there any danger, is there any menace to be feared from either the procedure under the present law, or under the proposed change? Under the present law, which has now been in force for fourteen years, we have had no charge of any scandal. There is no possibility of any person securing a certificate of naturalization in this country who is not entitled to it. Under the proposed change, will such a possibility arise? I think we should discuss this matter honestly, and with the knowledge that the political history of this country is not without incidents of various kinds where people have been naturalized who were not entitled to naturalization. Until human nature changes, or until such incidents as were brought to our attention the other day in the Athabaska election are eliminated, I think we can prophesy with considerable confidence that politicians will be found in the future who will not hesitate to take advantage of the opportunity at election time to naturalize those who are not qualified for naturalization, if it is going to swell their election vote.

It is said that the amendments submitted by the Secretary of State go far to preclude any possibility of fraudulent devices on the part of people applying for naturalization. I want to say that everyone of those amendments is prefectly innocuous, as far as any prevention of fraudulent practice is concerned. In the first place, it is said that you must advertise it in the newspaper, and post it in the post office. The difficulties in the way of that have already been pointed out. If, for instance, we are going to visualize a scene where there is a concerted attempt, as there was in the Athabaska election, a procedure to steal an election, it will begin three months before the taking of the poll. There will then be a gathering in some political hall—I am not saying that it will be a Liberal hall any more than a Tory hall, but it will be a corrupt hall, whatever hall it is—and the leaders will be there, and the chances are very much that the gathering will be pretty sure of having a sympathetic hearing from the Secretary of State, Whoever he may be. Supposing there is a corrupt Secretary of State, which I am glad to say is not the case in the present instance—we all have the highest regard for the present holder of that office—you can see the possibilities. In my county I am fortunate enough to have opponents who are far above doing anything of that sort, but there are counties in this Dominion where such practices have prevailed in the past, and it is possible that they may prevail in the future.

Mr. ROBB: Is my hon. friend referring to Colchester?

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): No, I am not referring to Colchester. There was some reference a long time ago to Colchester, but I have not heard the name of my friend the member for Colchester (Mr. MacNutt) in connection with it. He is a man of exceptional integrity. I am glad to assure the Minister of Finance that if there has been anything wrong in politics, as far as Colchester or any other county in the province of Nova Scotia, is concerned the old province of Nova Scotia stands pretty well as to honesty in conducting elections. It is rarely indeed that we have any scandals of that sort down there. It is rarely indeed that we hear of the operations of any Baldy Robb or any other gentleman of that description down in Nova Scotia. He would be too near the waters of the Atlantic to try anything like that.

Let us visualize a little further the procedure under the proposed legislation. The first procedure will be to post notices in the post office and to satisfy the Secretary of State that that has been done. It is not necessary to keep the notices posted up very long; perhaps fifteen minutes will be sufficient to justify an affidavit on the part of any person that a notice has been duly posted in the post office and that the requirements of the act have been fulfilled.

The next thing is the advertisement in some newspaper, and I believe the advertisement will cost the man in the west a greater amount than at present he will have to pay in order to get his naturalization papers. That difficulty however can be overcome. The next thing is to get two homesteaders, two people who own their own land and a magistrate. There is not in the Dominion a county where three corrupt men cannot be found who will sign any papers necessary to carry their party through an election. In this way we have the stage all set for the perpetration of that very thing that we all fear.

In regard to my own constituency I asked a very simple question and I have yet to receive an answer. Under the present circumstances the county court judge of my county passes upon the qualifications of the applicants who come before him. Surely the Secretary of State, no matter who he may be, must depend upon the report that comes to him. As the act now stands he receives the report of the county court judge. He must get a report from somebody and he says that he is going to get a report from, it may be, a member of the mounted police. Unfortunately, or fortunately, because we are a law-abiding people in our part of the country, we have no mounted police. If we do not get a mounted policeman, the minister says: We will get a homestead inspector. We have no homestead inspectors; we have no hay and straw inspectors; we have no egg inspectors, and I do not know just what official the minister is going to employ. If I had an assurance from him that he was going to appoint some reputable person as an inspector I would feel easier about the matter, but the only information he gives us is that it will be either a mounted police officer, a homestead inspector or others. It is that word "others" that I am afraid of. It is a very comprehensive word and under it he can employ any person under heaven he wants to and send him down to my constituency. That is the man on whose report the minister is going to pass upon the qualifications of the applicant for naturalization.

In view of the importance of the subject, in view of the safeguards that past parliaments have thrown around this great privilege, and in view of the imperial conference which agreed upon these qualifications, are we at this late date to nullify the work of all those people? Are we to cheapen citizenship in the British Empire? Or are we to open the door to a possibility of that being done? I hesitate to charge the government with any intent to do anything of the kind. Possibly I may be a bit heretical in saying this, but I regard them individually as very high class gentlemen. As regards the government collectively, I am sorry to say my opinion is not so high. If I could feel assured that the present Secretary of State would hold that office for a long term of years I would feel easier, but I am satisfied that his tenure is not going to be very long and it is within the bounds of possibility that a Tory government may come in. We all know what the record of the Tories was in the past and I am scared at the scandals that may arise in the future if we have a Tory government in power and a corrupt Secretary of State! That is the reason why I for one am going to oppose this bill with all the amendments, because the amendments, so far as I can see, have not tended in the slightest degree to improve the original idea.

There is another point that is urged by some members and that is that this measure will tend towards uniformity. I do not understand how there is going to be any greater uniformity under this legislation than there was in the past.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Tuesday, May 8, 1928

The house met at three o'clock.

REPORTS AND PAPERS

Nineteenth annual report of the Civil Service Commission of Canada for 1927—Mr. Rinfret.

Report of royal commission on fisheries—Mr. Cardin.

OUTBREAK OF RABIES IN ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac-Addington): Mr. Speaker, I desire to put a question which, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell), may be answered by the Minister of Health (Mr. King) or some other member of the government. There has been a very serious outbreak of rabies in the county of Frontenac, and a number of infected cattle and sheep have had to be destroyed. My question is: Under such circumstances will the government recompense to some extent the farmers for the loss that they have sustained?

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Health): I shall be pleased to bring the question to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture so he may reply to it to-morrow.

BRITISH EMPIRE STEEL CORPORATION

PROPOSED AGREEMENT WITH MINERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. B. ADSHEAD (East Calgary): Mr. Speaker, on April 20 I asked the Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan) with respect to an agreement which, according to the newspapers, had been entered into between the Nova Scotia miners and the British Empire Steel Corporation. At the time he promised to furnish some further information. May I ask when the agreement will be tabled, and what action the Labour department has taken in the matter? I am quite willing to let this stand as a notice of motion for production of papers.

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Minister of Labour): I expect to have the agreement to-morrow or next day. If my hon. friend desires, I shall be glad to lay it on the table.

Mr. ADSHEAD: What action did the department take in that connection?

Mr. HEENAN: As this would require a long time to explain, suppose I lay all the papers on the table.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Thank you.

CIVIL SERVICE

RECLASSIFICATION OF OFFICIALS IN POSTAL SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. LADNER (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot) if any steps have been taken to implement his promise of last session to recommend a higher classification for letter carriers and mail clerks; and, if that recommendation was made to the Civil Service Commission, has it been acted upon?

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): Such recommendations were made to the Civil Service Commission as promised. So far as mail carriers, letter sorters and train clerks are concerned, on May 2 last the Civil Service Commission informed the Post Office Department that they could not see their way clear to accept our recommendation or to make any classification which would entail an increased salary for those three classes. I announced this in the house on May 3. In the same letter, referring to the railway mail clerks, they state that they have also made a recommendation. They point out that the railway mail clerks are not exactly in the same category as the others with regard to the grounds upon which the refusal of the application is based and they asked the department to suggest to them in what way it would be best to meet the wishes of the railway mail clerks in respect of reclassification. Yesterday an order was issued by myself, directing the deputy minister and the superintendent of railway mail clerks to have a conference with the Civil Service Commission in order to see what arrangements could be made to bring about the reclassification. To-day the executive of the railway mail clerks are meeting in executive session in Ottawa, and they are in conference with officials of the Post Office Department to try to formulate a scheme which may be acceptable to the commission.

[Mr. Adshead.]

Mr. LADNER: In view of the importance of the matter may I ask the Postmaster General to table the recommendation and the correspondence?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes; I will try and have it to-morrow.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

ATHABASKA ELECTION—QUESTION AS TO MEETING OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. J. DENIS (Joliette): On the orders of the day yesterday the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) requested an explanation regarding the sittings of the committee on privileges and elections. I did not at the time gather the full purport of the question and I asked to be allowed to give the hon. gentleman an answer last night at eight o'clock. Inasmuch as the house was in committee of the whole on resumption at eight o'clock I had no opportunity of making a statement on the matter, and I should like to do so now. I have read Hansard carefully and I find that the leader of the opposition stated that according to the votes and proceedings on May 3 the committee on privileges and elections had been called for Tuesday, May 8—that is, to-day—while, according to the votes and proceedings of the next day, May 4, the committee is now scheduled to meet on May 10 instead. The hon. member asks for an explanation, and he follows this up with the statement that he had already made arrangements to be present on May 8, this change in dates being of course inconvenient to him. I may offer this explanation. The last day on which the committee met was Thursday, May 3, and when the committee rose, to resume at the call of the chair, I immediately went to the clerk and asked him to reserve, as the date of the next meeting, May 8. This was suggested tentatively because I was not sure at the time whether certain documents which are expected from the Attorney General of the province of Alberta would be available on that date. Nevertheless, seeing that we have experienced considerable difficulty and a good deal of trouble in getting together not only this but other committees, and as there are not sufficient rooms available for the committees, I deemed it wise to retain May 8 as the next date of meeting. I thought it best to reserve that date at once and I asked the clerk to arrange accordingly. I was not then aware that the mere fact of my asking the clerk to reserve May 8 would mean the printing of that date in the votes and proceedings as the next date of meeting. Unfortunately this was done, and the following day, May 4, being afraid that the documents for which we were waiting would not be available on May 8, and not wishing to have the committee meet unnecessarily, I went back to the clerk and requested him to make it May 10 instead of May 8. There might be a further explanation regarding the necessity for the documents to which I have referred, but I do not think that my hon. friend's question bears any relation to that. As regards the inconvenience caused the hon. gentleman, I express my regret. It is my mistake and I am sorry.

THE McCONACHIE CASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. P. QUINN (Halifax): May I ask the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke) whether his attention has been called to the press reports concerning the McConachie family?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

Mr. QUINN: What are hon. gentlemen laughing at?

An hon. MEMBER: I didn't.

Mr. QUINN: Why laugh, then? I am asking the minister a question. Has his attention been called to the press reports regarding the McConachie family? These reports state that Mrs. McConachie is sailing for Canada, leaving the infant in charge of an aunt. The reports also state that the child has considerably improved in health, which bears out the statement by medical men, when representations were made to the minister, that they could not with any degree of certainty certify as to the mental condition of the child. In view of these reports, will the Minister of Immigration make an effort now to rehabilitate this family and restore the mother and child to the father and the other children?

Hon. ROBERT FORKE (Minister of Immigration and Colonization): I have noticed the report of which my hon. friend speaks. I am not in a position to make any statement at the present time as to what the department might do under certain circumstances.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I would ask a further question. In case the report is true, will the minister accept a bond from certain reputable Scottish people—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I have a right to ask the question. I want to know whether the minister will accept a bond so that the child may come over without being a burden to the people of this country.

Mr. FORKE: The hon. member introduces his question with an "if". I am not prepared to give any answer regarding problematical cases.

LEVELS OF LAKE NIPISSING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): In answer to a question asked by my hon. friend from Parry Sound (Mr. Arthurs) yesterday regarding the levels of lake Nipissing, I desire to say that a communication has been received on the subject and that the present levels, according to our information, are due entirely to natural causes, the dams having been wide open ever since last November.

INTERNATIONAL PEACE TREATY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): I wish to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) whether the government proposes to take action or to make any announcement regarding the Kellogg peace proposals?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I might be in a position to answer specific questions my hon. friend might care to ask when the matter is under discussion. I should think the best time to discuss it would be on the estimates of the Department of External Affairs. I hope that will be very soon.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. K. ANDERSON (Halton): I would like to ask the Minister of National Defence when I may expect an answer to an order for return in connection with the Halton Rifles, which was passed on April 11?

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of National Defence): I will inquire immediately, and I have no doubt the return will be ready soon.

PENSION ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Health) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the Pension Act to provide for the amendments reported to the house by the special committee, and for such other amendments as may be necessary in consequence of the amalgamation of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment with the Department of Health.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. CLARK: I would ask the minister if the bill has been printed and distributed?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The bill has been printed, and as soon as the resolution is adopted the bill will be introduced and distributed.

Mr. GARDINER: I would suggest that the minister explain the nature of the proposed legislation.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): As the house knows, when pension matters were under discussion last session it was understood that during this session a special committee would be appointed to include members of all groups in this house, which would make an inquiry into certain matters which had been brought to the attention of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment by various soldier and other organizations throughout the country dealing with pension legislation. That committee was appointed at the earliest possible moment this session, and they have been meeting practically day by day, taking evidence and hearing the representations of those interested in pension matters. After hearing that evidence and those representations they have brought forward certain amendments to the Pension Act which are embodied in a bill to be presented to the house after this resolution is accepted. I believe the committee have given very careful consideration to these questions, and I have been advised that the amendments proposed have been unanimously agreed upon by the committee. Therefore I hope the house may find it possible to accept these amendments.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. King (Kootenay) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 289, to amend the Pension Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

RETURNED SOLDIERS' INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

[Mr. J. H. King.]

Resolved, that the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act be amended in respect to payments in case of disability not due to war, and as to applications where there is no reasonable expectation of life, and to provide that applications for insurance may be received under the act on and after the 1st July, 1928, up to and including the 30th June, 1933.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. GARDINER: Explain.

Mr. ROBB: The bill to be introduced based upon this resolution is the result of the unanimous report of the committee inquiring into soldiers' pensions and soldiers' insurance. Broadly speaking, it reopens the insurance for five years from July 1, 1928; it provides for certain changes with respect to those whose expectation of life is doubtful, and places Canadians on the same basis as Imperial pensioners.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Robb thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 290, to amend the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

GOLD AND SILVER MARKING ACT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. JAMES MALCOLM (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the senate to Bill No. 21, to amend the Gold and Silver Marking Act.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain the nature of this amendment?

Mr. MALCOLM: I might explain to the house that the senate has changed the title of the bill from the Precious Metals Act to the Precious Metals Marking Act. When the bill was introduced in the house, for the purpose of covering platinum articles, the word "platinum" was accidentally omitted from various parts of the bill. Section 4 has been changed for the purpose of clarifying it, and provision has been made in the senate by which the act shall not come into force until proclamation by the governor in council. This will permit certain stocks of merchandise on hand to be disposed of before the new act becomes effective. I might say to the house that I think all the amendments by the senate are really improvements to the legislation as offered.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT

APPOINTMENT AND SALARIES OF OFFICERS

Hon. W. D. EULER (Minister of National Revenue) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That the Department of National Revenue Act be amended to provide that the minister be empowered to appoint certain classes of officers with such salaries or remuneration as may be determined by the governor in council, and that a gratuity may be paid any officer on retirement in lieu of a period of leave of absence with pay, with further provisions as to filling vacancies by transfers and promotions for the betterment of the service.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before this resolution goes to the committee stage, I desire to say that we who sit on your left are strongly and unrelentingly opposed to the principle of the resolution in its present form. It means the recurrence of the patronage system, which should not be tolerated in this country. It is not conducive to good service, or to the public weal. While there have been many defects in connection with the administration of the civil service, the fact is that it is a great advance over anything we have heretofore had in this country. We protest against any effort being made to return to the old condition of patronage.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. EULER: Perhaps I might make a statement with regard to the resolution as it stands. The resolution, as well as the bill, which is based upon the resolution, is in accord with certain recommendations made by the royal commission investigating the Customs department. Perhaps I should offer an apology for the resolution being in the form in which it is at present, and I would like to remove some misconceptions that apparently have arisen from the text of the resolution itself.

The bill, which is founded upon the resolution, does not go nearly as far as the resolution does. The resolution itself calls for power to be given to the minister to make certain appointments. As a matter of fact, the bill does not give to the minister power to make any appointments whatsoever, although the commission recommended that such power be given to the minister. I may say, for the information of the committee, that whereas it was intended that such power should be given to the minister, I do not care myself to go that distance, because I do not feel inclined to interfere any further than seems to me to be necessary with the work of the Civil Service Commission.

I would state what actually appears in the bill. The bill is printed; I am not sure whether it is on the file, but it is ready for consideration. Briefly, it does this: It asks that appraisers, who are technical officers in the Department of Excise, preventive officers, and special investigating officers be nominated by the minister. That is, the selection to be made by the minister, or by officers under his control, or by a committee, or, in the case of the appraisers, by the Dominion board of appraisers. The minister will make the nominations to the Civil Service Commission and the Civil Service Commission will make the appointments within a specified time.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): How many officers would that affect?

Mr. EULER: I should think about 125 out of a list of, say, 5,500 in the department. Only a small section of the employees are affected by the bill.

The minister makes the nomination, as stated, to the Civil Service Commission and the commission will make the appointment within fifteen days. That time may not be considered long enough, or possibly a shorter period may be sufficient. On the failure of the commission to make the appointment, it may then be made, on the recommendation of the minister, by governor in council. I draw the attention of the committee to this fact, that the minister himself has not the power to make the appointment. More than that, he has removed from his jurisdiction, to some extent at least, appointments in the preventive service which he now has power to make. He makes the recommendation to the commission, and if the commission does not make the appointment, as recommended, it may then be made by governor in council.

The bill further provides, and this is also in accord with the recommendation of the royal commission, that transfers of collectors and surveyors may be made from one port to another. Instances occur in which a collector may not be well fitted for the particular position he holds, and there may be a collector in a smaller port who has proven his special fitness for the higher position. In this way, it will be possible for the department to place men in the positions for which they are best qualified.

There is one other provision, which I do not think will cause any opposition, at least

I hope it will not. It applies to cases where a vacancy occurs by reason of the retirement of an official. Instead of the position remaining vacant for six months, as is now the case, the position may be declared vacant at once, and be immediately filled. As we have it now, when an official retires he is given six months' retiring allowance; six months' leave of absence, as it were. The position is not actually vacant, although the man has left his post and receives his pay for six months. We would still give him his retiring allowance of six months, but the position becomes vacant immediately, and the new appointment could be made at once. In that way, there would be no interference with the work of the department.

Mr. Chairman, that is practically all that is in the bill. I would like to point out that there is, to my mind, practically no interference whatever with the principle of the Civil Service Act. I personally desire to avoid that as much as possible and I am quite sincere in that, although I see my hon. friend opposite is giving himself over to merriment. I do not like the practice which would no doubt grow up of the minister being importuned from all sides to make appointments, and I desire to avoid that. The proposal is made with the intention of promoting the efficiency of the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): What is the object of going through the pretence or farce of saying that the Civil Service Commission makes appointments, when the minister very distinctly says, I make the recommendation and if you do not appoint the man I recommend, I will appoint him myself?

Mr. EULER: In the first place I agree with the royal commission which felt that in the case of officers such as apraisers where special skill and qualifications are required, the department is in a better position than the Civil Service Commission to make the selection of those skilled officers.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): What then is the use of bringing in the Civil Service Commission unless it be as a sort of camouflage?

Mr. EULER: In the first instance I was disposed to accept the recommendation of the committee just as it stood, but certain representations were made to me—and I saw the force of them—that it might be possible and perhaps would be the case that under such conditions the minister might not make such appointments as he ought to make; in other words, to be perfectly frank, that political pressure might be brought to bear upon him and he might appoint men to positions as appraisers on the score more of politics than of efficiency. It was felt—and I think there is something in the contention—that if in every instance the minister were obliged to make those recommendations to the Civil Service Commission, he would not be nearly so prone to go to the commission with improper recommendations, have his recommendations turned down again and again as they might be, and have the people learn the reason why they were so turned down. This is intended only to operate as a brake upon the minister exercising the power in an improper manner. There is the further brake upon the minister that if the commission fails to make the appointment, he does not then himself make it, but his recommendations and nominations must pass the scrutiny of the governor in council.

Mr. GEARY: Under this legislation what becomes of the preference now provided for the returned men?

Mr. EULER: I would think that the same consideration would be exercised in all cases although perhaps I should qualify that in this way. There will be one primary purpose in the mind of the department in making appointments of appraisers or special investigating officers. While every consideration should be given to the returned men and to the appraisers already in the service, other things being equal, in the cause of efficiency in the department, because the appraisers are perhaps the most important officers you can have in the Customs department, I would not hesitate, if it were necessary, to go outside in order to get the best man for the job.

Mr. GEARY: That is all very well. The Civil Service Commission is to make the appointment and I take it that the commission will be compelled to act within a prescribed jurisdiction in that it must give the preference to the returned man. Does the minister propose that where such a preference has been given, it may be over-ridden by the minister himself or by the governor in council.

Mr. EULER: I am not sure that I can say anything more than I have already said. The department will select the man best fitted in their opinion for the position. If the commission for any reason—and it might be for the reason suggested by my hon. friend—declines to make the appointment, then it will be within the purview of the governor in council to make it. The criticism may be raised that in some instances the returned soldier might not receive the position, but I believe it would surely be, as I think it ought to be, the will of the house that the very first purpose to be served, especially in connection with a department which has been so much criticized, is to obtain the most efficient men to carry on the work. That is the one thought that has been in my mind in the preparation of the bill.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Will the minister or the Civil Service Commission determine whether or not the returned soldier or any other person has the necessary qualifications?

Mr. EULER: In the case of appraisers the recommendation coming from the department, from the minister, although the minister will personally not make the selection, will be made through the board of appraisers. They will make the selection in the first instance, as I have stated, on the primary factor of efficiency. That will stand; I can see no recession from that. Other things being equal, the returned man and also the men who are already in the service of the department should receive the preference. I should like to disabuse the mind of any civil servants, appraisers and others, who feel that they may be sidetracked. There is no such intention. I propose to promote the men in my department if they are efficient, but as I said before—and I hope the committee will bear me out in this—I would not hesitate to make a recommendation and to ask for the appointment of a man even though he came from outside the service, even though he might conceivably not be a returned man, if he were specially and peculiarly fitted for the work which he has to do.

The work which the appraisers have to do is extremely important. The whole efficiency and almost the proper conduct of the Department of Customs depends upon the efficiency of the appraisers. If your appraisal system is wrong, you will certainly not obtain the revenue you ought to obtain. The appraisal system has been criticized very severely by all those bodies that have been investigating the Customs department. Those things which they criticze we want to correct and this is the way in which we desire to correct them. There are those who will say that the Civil Service Commission can make the selections just as well as we can. My opinion is that the Dominion appraisers whom we have selected—the board is not complete, but we have made a beginning—are best qualified to make the selections. Without casting any reflection upon the Civil Service Commission I think we know the men in our department better than the commision can. Therefore I think that is a fair way to make the appointments and it does not place in the hands of the minister the absolute power to make them. I do not know whether this is the time to read from the report of the royal commission, or from the report of the Commercial Protective Association, but if I did they would bear us out in that they recommend our going further than I propose to go under the bill. I have been as moderate as possible, because I do not desire to interfere with the principle of appointments by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. LADNER: In the case of a man being wanted for a given position, is there in the proposed legislation anything that will oblige the minister to submit more than one name?

Mr. EULER: No.

Mr. CLARK: What sort of an examination would the Civil Service Commission give to the man recommended to the commission?

Mr. EULER: The Civil Service Commission could make any investigation they desired. That would be entirely within their own province.

Mr. CLARK: Will the Civil Service Commission prescribe an examination or will they not?

Mr. EULER: The examination to decide what recommendation ought to be made will be made by our own officials, by the board. If the Civil Service Commission wishes to submit the applicant to an examination, that will be absolutely within their power. Following that they can then either make the appointment or reject the nomination.

Mr. CLARK: After the minister and his department had recommended a man for a particular position and had given him any examination they might prescribe, the minister would not expect the Civil Service Commission to refuse to make the appointment.

Mr. EULER: I hope not, because I rather expect the commission would be willing to co-operate with the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. CLARK: Then why bring the Civil Service Commission in at all? Does it not seem a perfect blind to mention the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. EULER: For the very reason I gave before. It should not, I would say personally, be necessary, but the intention is to put a brake, if you like, on any minister who might abuse the power that would otherwise be given to him. If the Civil Service Commission thinks it is not sufficient, I would be willing to cut that out.

Mr. BENNETT: There are two matters to be dealt with. The minister has dealt with the one, but not with the other. The first relates to the selection of the individual; the second relates to the salary or compensation he is to be paid. With respect to the first, the minister should not endeavour to throw this smoke screen before the public. The civil servants of this country are very greatly concerned about this matter, and merely because, I suppose, I am in the position I am, I receive telegrams and letters from civil servants from Vancouver to Nova Scotia.

Mr. EULER: So do I.

Mr. BENNETT: Doubtless the minister has received them. The press of the country has referred to the matter in terms, we will say, of delicate criticism, most of them not believing that it would be possible for the minister to revert to the old system of things.

Mr. EULER: It is not possible.

Mr. BENNETT: Let us see what it means in essence. We must not deal with the present incumbent of the office, but we must deal with the office. It is a mistake to assume that because the Hon. William Euler is Minister of National Revenue, there will always be a William Euler in that office, or that he is a particular person that must be selected for some peculiar kind of treatment from this house. An efficient and effective minister we will say he is, for the sake of argument—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh!

Mr. BENNETT: We will assume that for the sake of the argument, although I think before this house rises we will perhaps have to revise our assumption. Let us go a step further. We are now dealing with the office, not the individual, and the office proposes to make a recommendation to the Civil Service Commission for the appointment of given individuals to given posts. That is what is proposed. In other words, whatever pressure may be brought to bear upon the Minister of National Revenue, whoever he may be, that pressure, political, friendly, family, and every other kind in the world, may succeed in inducing the minister, not this minister peradventure, but a minister, to recommend to the commission the appointment of a particular person. You cannot get away from that. Then why ask the Civil Service Commission to be thus dragged in the mire by making it appear that they are going to appoint somebody that they have no power to appoint? They have to appoint the man the minister recommends or nobody at all. Then why drag the Civil Service Commission in? It is nothing but a smoke screen to make the people of this country believe that you are still retaining the Civil Service Commission in all its integrity, while as a matter of fact you are flaunting it and holding it up to scorn before the public. You simply write to the Civil Service Commission. "Dear Sirs: Enclosed please find the name of the gentleman we desire to have appointed as appraiser." The days go by and the Civil Service Commission find that he is not the man for the job, and they do not make the appointment. Then the minister goes to the governor in council and makes the appointment.

I come to the next point, the question of salary. As the matter now stands, the civil servants have graded salaries, and there is nothing they are more jealous about than their rights with respect to their salaries. This resolution proposes to appoint persons who will be appraisers not appointed by the Civil Service Commission, and receiving salaries in the discretion of the governor in council.

Mr. EULER: May I correct my hon. friend?

Mr. BENNETT: The resolution says "such salaries or remuneration as may be determined by the governor in council."

Mr. EULER: Exactly, that is what the resolution says, but I have apologised already for the resolution. The bill does not carry out that idea. It reads:

> The officer so appointed by the commission or by the governor in council, as the case may be, shall be paid such salary or remuneration in accordance with the civil service regulations as may be determined by the commission or the governor in council respectively.

My hon. friend will note that it says, "in accordance with the civil service regulations."

Mr. BENNETT: That meets the difficulties I was pointing out to the minister. In other words, instead of the governor in council fixing the salaries, they are to be fixed by the Civil Service Commission. The resolution, of course, says just the opposite. Perhaps the better way for us to proceed would be to have the resolution reported and the bill given its first and second readings, so that with the bill in our hands we may study what the new provisions are as distinguished from the resolution.

Mr. EULER: That is exactly the suggestion I desire to make. Perhaps the committee might allow the resolution to be reported, and then the bill can be introduced and read a second time, and the whole matter be discussed in committee.

Mr. BENNETT: Without committing ourselves on this side of the house to any acceptance of principle.

Mr. EULER: Quite so.

Mr. KENNEDY: What is to prevent the Civil Service Commission having access to the same information which is available to the minister in preparing his recommendations in regard to the qualifications of any individual for the position of appraiser?

Mr. EULER: The commission cannot possibly have the same knowledge, because they cannot possibly have that knowledge in themselves. The men who will make the selection as provided for in the bill will be men who have personal knowledge of those whom they propose to be appointed as appraisers, and that is knowledge which no commission could possibly have.

Mr. KENNEDY: Have they not the privilege of sending out an examining board to ascertain the qualifications of those it is proposed to appoint? Surely the minister does not mean to say that the Civil Service Commission themselves have knowledge of all the examinations of all the government employees for the various posts in the civil service.

Mr. McQUARRIE: May I ask whether the minister would advocate the application of this same principle in regard to the appointment of appraisers to other departments of the government?

Mr. EULER: I have troubles enough of my own without interfering with the other departments. If the committee desires, I might give the reasons as stated in the report of the royal commission. The report says, at page 8:

> Our inquiry has shown that the present system of appointing appraisers or other officers requiring expert or technical knowledge is unsatisfactory, and we are convinced that where expert and technical knowledge is required, the examination of the applicants for positions should be conducted by those who are specially qualified to act in the premises.
> We are of opinion that all appointments to the office of appraiser at the different ports of the Dominion should be made by the minister after examination of the applicants by the board of appraisers.
> We quite recognize that this method of appointment would conflict with the system now in vogue under the Civil Service Act, but notwithstanding this we are of opinion that this method should be adopted.

You could not get anything much stronger than that.

Mr. KENNEDY: Can the minister give us the page number of the evidence upon which the commission arrive at that conclusion?

Mr. EULER: I cannot do that. I am quoting from the final report.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Should not the minister take just as seriously the recommendations of the special parliamentary committee that was appointed a couple of years ago to inquire into the Customs department?

Mr. EULER: There have been at least four different bodies that have made investigations of one kind and another in regard to the Customs department, and they do not agree in all cases, and out of the plenitude of the advice that has been offered, I have been obliged to take that which seems best to me. I might also quote from the recommendations of the Commercial Protective Association, whose representations, I think, were considered of some value by the parliamentary committee that investigated the customs department two years ago. They recommend with regard to appraisers:

> That the board (the board of appraisers) be given power to retain such appraisers as they deem competent and qualified, and to appoint with the minister's approval and notwithstanding the provisions of the Civil Service Act such further appraisers as may be required from time to time, and to fix subject to the approval of the governor in council the remuneration to be paid to the various grades of appraisers.

Their recommendations are somewhat similar with regard to special investigating officers.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It looks as if the resolution as it appears on the order paper followed fairly closely the report from which the minister has just quoted. But the difficulty I see is that the minister has announced to the house that the bill which he proposes to introduce does not follow the resolution. We know that matters of this kind must be introduced into parliament by way of resolution, and a resolution must first be expressly approved by His Excellency the Governor General. The resolution as it appears on the order paper was so approved, but if I gather correctly from the minister's statement, the bill does not follow the resolution in two very important points.

Mr. EULER: It does not go as far.

Mr. GUTHRIE: In two very important points of principle the bill involves a serious change. In the first place, the resolution provides that the minister is to make these appointments; now the minister says that the bill which is based on this resolution empowers the Civil Service Commission to do so. The resolution provides that the governor in council may fix salaries; the bill, we are told, substitutes the Civil Service Commission. What I am pointing out, Mr. Chairman, is that the bill must follow the resolution. The resolution has been approved by His Excellency the Governor General, and I think the minister is going pretty far in saying that he proposes to introduce a bill very different from the resolution which he is asking the committee to consider. What is the object of passing this resolution if the bill is to be entirely different? Let us have a resolution such as we expect to be incorporated in the bill when it comes forward. If this proceeding is only for the purpose of expediting the matter, I do not know that I would seriously object; but if we are going to pass a resolution in this instance, not to be followed by a bill along the same lines, we can do it in other instances, and there will be no object in the future in introducing resolutions at all. I submit the whole proceeding is very irregular and that the minister would be well advised to introduce a new resolution in the terms of the bill he proposes to bring forward later on.

Mr. EULER: While I quite admit the justice, to some extent, of the criticism made by my hon. friend, I think after all it is not of vital importance. The lesser is always included in the greater, and we propose in the bill to take lesser powers than are contained in the resolution. I should think the criticism would have more force if the bill went beyond the powers asked for in the resolution.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I think the bill does go beyond the resolution.

Mr. EULER: No. My hon. friend said if he knew the proceeding was merely to save time he would not be disposed to object to the passing of the resolution. That is exactly the reason. I might have removed the resolution from the order paper and replaced it by another. I made inquiry of the proper officers, and they thought there could be no valid objection to passing the resolution in its present form. I would ask the committee to let the resolution go through. I cannot see what possible harm can be done by taking this course, for the right will still be reserved to every member of the committee to discuss the principle of the measure on the second reading, and hon. members can inform themselves upon the whole bill when they have it before them. It is now printed.

Mr. GUTHRIE: We object strenuously, as my leader pointed out, to the principle involved in the resolution, and if our silence is to be treated as acquiescence in this proceeding I must protest.

Mr. EULER: Without betraying any confidence, I may say that I made some inquiries and I understood it would probably be acceptable to pass the resolution in its present form, it always being understood that no member of the committee was to be bound by the resolution, that so far as its principle was concerned they could reserve their right to make observations on the second reading of the bill, which might be entirely at variance with the tenor of the resolution.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: I think the Minister of National Revenue is to be congratulated on his initiative in withdrawing certain classes of officers from the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission. Whenever the question of appointments by the Civil Service Commission has been discussed in this house it has been pointed out that the most important positions in the service are not under the control of the commission. The minister has good authority for taking this course in the recommendation of the royal commission that investigated the customs. They recommended that certain classes of employees of the Department of National Revenue should not be appointed by the Civil Service Commission, but by the governor in council upon the recommendation of the minister. For my part I should like to see some of the minister's colleagues follow the good example he has set them, as I am fully of the opinion that the ministers and their deputies are much better qualified than the Civil Service Commission to appoint the higher classes of employees. I would rather see the minister take this responsibility himself than leave it to the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Mr. Chairman, at the time the Civil Service Commission was appointed I ventured to offer some criticisms as to the wisdom of placing all patronage in the hands of three or four men sitting in Ottawa. At that time I was a voice crying in the wilderness—I was in a hopeless minority. I was treated with the severest censure by those on my own side of the house, and my friends on the Liberal side were unanimous and loud in claiming that all patronage appointments should be taken out of the hands of members of parliament and turned over to the Civil Service Commission, which would be independent of parliament. I expressed the opinion at the time that many appointments, such as postmasters in country districts, should remain in the hands of the member for the constituency, no matter what government was in power. I contended that so long as the people saw fit to express their confidence by sending him to parliament, he was the man whose recommendation should receive consideration in the making of such appointments.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I take no different position now from what I took then. But there was another reason why I had serious doubts as to the way in which this change would work out. I was very confident that so long as a Conservative government was in power the Grits would force them to hew to the line in leaving all patronage in the hands of the Civil Service Commission. While at that time not one of the oldest members of the house, I had a long experience and extensive knowledge of Grit tactics. I believed then and my belief has since been confirmed absolutely, that once they obtained the reins of office the Civil Service Commission would be practically a dead letter so far as many appointments were concerned. Since this government has been in power the recommendations of the Civil Service Commission have become virtually a dead letter, and we have seen thousands of men arbitrarily appointed through Grit patronage just as in the old days before the Civil Service Commission was brought into being.

Now the commission advertise for applicants for a certain position and they set forth the qualifications required. They report whether the successful applicant posseses the requisite qualifications, and on that recommendation, and under the circumstances, the law distinctly says that the returned soldier, not may, but shall, have the preference. It does not stipulate that he shall possess a university education; if he possesses even the minimum qualifications the law says that he shall have the preference. I do not know to what extent that regulation has been observed by the minister who is interested in this bill, but I do know that I am prepared to prove that one of his colleagues, the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot), does not care anything whatever for the laws of the land when it comes to making appointments. I have the facts and I am prepared to show where in a certain instance, out of eight applicants, only one of them was a returned soldier; and although he was not only accepted by the Civil Service Commission as possessing the necessary qualifications but was appointed to the position, the Postmaster General decided to override the law, to override the report and recommendation of the commission and to appoint one who was not a returned soldier and who did not possess any better qualifications than did the returned man. That is one instance. I will venture to say there are members in this house—probably more on this side than on the other, but any number of hon. gentlemen—who could cite cases similar to the one I have mentioned, and which I hope to go into more fully when we are dealing with the Postmaster General's estimates. When that time comes we will fight it out to a finish. I repeat, in view of the experience we have had in the past few years—and every year is getting worse than the year before with this government—for the minister to get up and say the man will be appointed on the recommendation of the Civil Service Commission is the purest kind of farce. It is a bluff, nothing but camouflage. It is hardly worthy of that name, because the minister simply says to the Civil Service Commission: "This is the man you have to appoint, and if you do not appoint him we will take the matter out of your hands and appoint him ourselves. If you do appoint him at our dictation we will say that you are the ones that made the appointment." That is the kind of bunkum put up by the minister to-day and which he wants us to endorse by legislation.

If the government have made up their minds to discard the Civil Service Commission altogether, and to ignore their recommendations, why do they not come out like men and say, " We have tried the thing and in our judgment this procedure is not the proper one; we propose, so far as we are concerned, to discard the Civil Service Commission and make these appointments ourselves." They are doing this anyway without regard for law or anything else. They have been doing it for years and it is getting worse and worse every year. When in opposition hon. gentlemen opposite insisted on hewing to the line, and a minister at that time did not dare suggest such a thing as that he had a better knowledge than the Civil Service Commission as to who should fill a certain office. But as soon as they get the reins of power the Civil Service Act, as well as every other act that interferes with tactics for election purposes, becomes a dead letter. It has been a dead letter ever since this government came into power.

Mr. IRVINE: I understand that, according to this resolution, the appraisers will make recommendations regarding appointments. Is the minister bound to forward to the Civil Service Commission any name so recommended or may he send in some other?

Mr. EULER: There is nothing in the act to bind the minister to accept that recommendation. I may say, however, for the information of the committee, that they would have to be very strong reasons—not political in their nature, by the way—which would lead the minister to reject the nomination of that committee of appraisers.

Mr. IRVINE: Could not a provision be made that the recommendation of the appraisers could be sent direct to the Civil Service Commission, thus relieving the minister of any obligation in the matter of appointments?

Mr. EULER: I think I understand the difficulty which my hon. friend would try to meet. I can assure him that he would not remove that difficulty in any case by the method he suggests. If any minister chose to exercise his authority improperly he would be about as able to do so under that method as by any other means.

Mr. GARDINER: Between now and the time the bill is read the second time the minister might take into consideration the possibility of so amending this legislation as to have the Civil Service Commission make appointments, and have them create an examining board from among the present appraisers. That would probably meet the situation better than would the method now proposed.

Mr. EULER: That would remove entirely from the control of the department the appointment of these special officers, and that is exactly what we do not want.

Mr. GARDINER: If the commission were to appoint a board from the minister's appraisers for the purpose of holding examinations, then the examinations would still be under the officers of the department, although the matter would be under the control of the commission.

Mr. EULER: I have read already from the report of the royal commission, which goes further than the bill, as well as from the report of the Commercial Protective Association, which also goes further than the bill. Someone has raised a point as to the recommendation made by the parliamentary committee of inquiry in 1926, in which no provision is suggested for appointments by the Civil Service Commission. What I have before me states:

[Mr. Irvine.]

The evidence adduced before the committee disclosed two outstanding facts, namely:—First, the methods of appraisal are exceedingly careless and fail to safeguard the interests of the importer, or the revenues of the country from being defrauded by undervaluation; and secondly, persons appointed as appraisers—

And remember, these were appointed by the Civil Service Commission.

—are in many instances untrained in the branch to which they are appointed. The committee recommend that the appraisal branch be reorganized and that all appraisers be chosen because of their competency to estimate the values of the class of goods they are appointed to appraise.

There is nothing said there about appointments by the commission.

Mr. GEARY: Surely it is assumed.

Mr. EULER: Not necessarily.

Mr. BENNETT: It is the law of the country.

Mr. EULER: I do not say that what I have quoted rules out of the equation appointments by the commission. But it does not so state.

Mr. STEVENS: I thought that what we were supposed to do was to pass this resolution subject to reservation, retaining our right to criticize the principle of the bill when we had the bill before us. In the absence of the bill I do not feel competent to discuss the matter, but things are being said now that impel me to make one or two suggestions. If the discussion is to proceed I want to call the attention of the minister to another matter. Frankly, my opinion is that the committee would be in a better position to discuss the subject if the bill were before us. I am going to confine myself for the moment to this statement, that so far as the resolution now before the committee is concerned I am absolutely and unreservedly opposed to it. The minister understands that thoroughly, and in refraining from further discussion of the resolution I must not be considered as in any sense consenting to the principle of the resolution. I will reserve, until I have the bill before me, any further remarks I have to make. I have not yet seen it and I do not know what are its terms.

Mr. KENNEDY: I would like to call the attention of the minister to one fact in relation to this recommendation by the parliamentary committee. It is true that that committee found that the methods of appraisal were very slack, but the minister will remember also the commission we had and the result of that inquiry with regard to the Civil Service Commission. In view of that fact

I do not think it fair that the commission should be ignored and that appointments should be made otherwise than through the Civil Service Commission. However, I am willing to accept the suggestion that we pass this resolution, providing that all our rghts are safeguarded so that we may discuss the matter when the bill is before the house.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. BENNETT: On division.

Resolution reported, on division, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Euler thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 291 to amend the Department of National Revenue Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

NATURALIZATION ACT AMENDMENT

The house resumed, from May 7, consideration in committee of Bill No. 19, to amend the Naturalization Act—Mr. Rinfret—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose the question was on the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill). Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the amendment?

Mr. STEVENS: On division.

Amendment agreed to on division.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

On the title:

Mr. GARDINER: I do not know whether the minister has any further proposals to make; from his observations last night I was inclined to believe that he had. My particular reference is to the question of posting notices in connection with which several suggestions have been made in committee. Under the proposed amendment the notice will be posted for at least sixty days, and we have suggested that the minister would be well advised to extend that time to at least four months. I would like to call the attention of the committee also to this particular section and to ask the minister the reason for posting the notices as the section is drafted at present. It does not provide for anything, even if you post the notices for sixty days. This seems to me to be quite an innocuous section, and unless it is amended in some form it will have no value at all. You may post a notice for sixty days, but if there is no provision for receiving objections to the granting of a certificate, of what value is the posting of the notice? I would like the minister to say if he has any other proposal in mind in reference to these two particulars?

Mr. RINFRET: In connection with the question of the proper delay and other matters of that kind I am quite in the hands of the committee. Hon. members from all sides of the house have suggested that perhaps the delay of sixty days would not be long enough, and some have even suggested a delay of six months. I would point out that under the present act there must be a delay of three months; I think it would be going too far to make it any longer, but I am quite willing that we leave the delay as it is in the present act. Therefore I would move that we revert to section 1 of the bill and that the words "ninety days" be substituted for the words "sixty days" in the fifteenth line thereof. I hope this will meet the wishes of the committee.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. GARDINER: I appreciate the manner in which the minister has met our objections, but there is still another point which he has not recognized. If any valuable purpose is to be served by posting a notice for ninety days, some provision must be made for persons residing in the vicinity to file objections to the granting of a certificate. In section 22 as it stands at present no such provision is made, although in the old act that point was taken care of. I would suggest to the minister that some provision should be made in order that objections to the granting of a certificate of naturalization may be lodged with some person in authority, either with the minister himself or with some person designated by him.

Mr. RINFRET: I do not think any additional provision is required on that point, but I am quite willing to declare now that any objections of the kind to which my hon. friend refers always can be brought to the attention of the Secretary of State. In the previous act it was provided that such objections might be presented to the court hearing the applications for naturalization. But now that whole procedure will take place with the department. I do not think it is necessary to have any provision in the bill. I desire to state most positively to my hon. friend that the Department of the Secretary of State will give full consideration to any such provision, as he has just referred to.

Mr. RYCKMAN: Before the bill is reported I would like to draw the attention of the committee to the language used in the amendment. Opposed as I am to the bill, I have hesitated to address the committee, because I was not in the house yesterday when the matter was so fully discussed. I do not know whether the language used has been discussed or not, but it does seem to me that we are not only using inappropriate language but really stultifying ourselves. "Natural born" can only mean one of two things. A natural born fool is an idiot from his birth. "Natural born" either means an idiot, or an illegitimate or natural son. That is a fact. "Natural" means both legitimate and illegitimate, but legitimate only when applied to ordinary affairs and not to birth. "Natural", in connection with birth, has only the one meaning. I think it can then be said that this bill was conceived in iniquity and born in sin. I am unwilling that this house, without an objection from me, should use the words "natural born" in the sense in which I know the committee intends it, but which is not the true meaning of the words.

Mr. RINFRET: I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that the objection is well taken. I might say that that is the very term used in the Australian statute, which has been recommended for imitation by the leader of the opposition himself.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): There is another objection altogether to the term. "Natural born" is the one thing which the minister is not applying to this legislation. Under the bill, Caesar could not get a certificate, or Macbeth could not get one. How will you prove that anyone is "natural born"? The only people that I think could come under this would be the Indians, who are assured of no medical attention at birth, or the Esquimos or someone like that.

The CHAIRMAN: I think I should point out to the committee that all the sections of the bill have been carried.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I will reserve my remarks for the third reading.

Bill reported.

DEPARTMENT OF PENSIONS AND NATIONAL HEALTH

The house resumed from April 27, consideration in committee of Bill No. 205, respecting the Department of Health and Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment.—Mr. King (Kootenay).—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 6—Selection and employment of staff, etc.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Mr. Chairman, when we were in committee at the last meeting, clause (b) of section 6 also clause (g) of section 6, and section 14 were allowed to stand in order that they might be further discussed at this meeting. The other sections were adopted.

In regard to clause (b), section 6. My hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. Boys) suggested that the word "temporary" should be added after the word "time", in the second line. I think if we will give a little consideration to the section he will find that the addition of the word "temporary" will not improve the section.

What is being sought in this section is to indicate a class which could not possibly be brought under the Civil Service Commission. I will just read the clause:

> (b) for the selection and employment of such part time professional officers, or part or full time employees whose compensation is determined by the rates payable for similar work in the locality in which such persons are employed as may be required from time to time for the carrying on of the work with which the minister is charged under this part.

The first class, professional officers, would include consultant surgeons, consultant medical officers, X-ray experts, or some professional class that would not be in the service of the department at all times, but only as required from time to time. We have a class that would be employed part time, such as painters, window cleaners, and men of that type. They would be "part time" and would be paid for the services rendered at the prevailing rates. Then there would be "full time" employees, such as hospital orderlies, cooks, assistant cooks, engineers and firemen. If we will consult the practice in the Department of Public Works, a large employing department, it will be found that there they have a class known as the "prevailing rate class". It is to make provision for these two classes, which do not come within the provisions of the Civil Service Act, that the section is drawn. As I said before, it was drawn by the Department of Justice, and I think it is quite clear, and would not be improved by adding the word "temporary".

Mr. SPENCER: I would like to ask the minister how many in the department will be outside the supervision of the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I can hardly say offhand, but it would be a considerable number. You would have your professional staff, such as consultant surgeons, consultant heart and chest men, and so on, in the various centres where hospitals are established. You would also have your hospital attendants, such as orderlies, and nursing staff, and the classes that I have mentioned. I would be glad to give my hon. friend that information when we go into the estimates.

Mr. SPENCER: Is the number increased under this bill?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, it is not increased.

Mr. GARDINER: I would like to ask the minister regarding a question which was before the committee when this bill was being considered, that is, with reference to certain classes of returned men who were indigent and had no means of providing for medical attention. In view of the recommendations of the pensions committee, would the minister now say whether those recommendations include provision for that class of returned men?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This bill gives us power to provide for and take care of that class. The recommendations made by the committee will be given every consideration by the government. If my hon. friend will consider the whole field, I think he will agree that it requires pretty careful consideration. There are throughout Canada many pensioners who do not to-day come under our clinical treatment, as we treat only for pensionable conditions. This will include a very great number, but I do not believe it is the intention of the committee—and in fact they have so indicated—that cases that are financially able to provide for treatment for themselves, should come under that provision. As a matter of practice we have been treating many of those cases and we have been giving them hospitalization where they have not the financial means and it has been necessary for them to have such treatment. That practice has been followed and probably it will have to be extended from time to time as that class of case increases in numbers.

Mr. GARDINER: With regard to the class of persons whom we have been discussing, I know of many cases where they have been refused treatment. It appears to me that this country must in some degree accept the responsibility of treating such cases providing they have not the necessary means to procure treatment for themselves. Just so long as the minister is satisfied that he has power to see to it that that class of case is treated and he will look upon those cases sympathetically, I shall be satisfied with his explanation.

Section agreed to.

On section 14—Appointment, classification and salaries of staff.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): This clause stood. It is a new clause.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Clause 14 is related to the previous clause, that is paragraph (g). In this bill proposing to amalgamate the two departments, it is our purpose to bring the executive and clerical officers in the department within the scope of the Civil Service Commission. This clause provides the means whereby those people who have been appointed under the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment may be placed in their permanent position by the governor in council. The old section will be found on the page opposite clause 6. Under this section the minister of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment was empowered to employ those necessary to carry on the work of the department but he was also charged with seeing that those employed under this authority should as far as practicable be classified by him in accordance with the schedule of classes or positions set forth in the civil service classification. Therefore the officials whom we have in the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment and who will eventually be transferred to the permanent service, have been appointed under the rules and regulations of the Civil Service Commission although they have not been under the commission. This new clause will permit us to bring them into the department and to give them their permanent status there.

Mr. BOYS: I did not hear clause 6 called. Clause 3 was called and then as far as I know we passed from clause 3 to the clause now under consideration. What I wish to say would not be appropriate at the moment but I trust I may be given an opportunity of saying a word or two regarding clause 6.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think we have advanced a little too fast. As a matter of fact paragraph (g) of section 6 was held up for further discussion. There was some question regarding provision for burial expenses for returned soldiers who died in destitute circumstances.

Mr. BOYS: It was paragraph (b) that was held up.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We have passed it.

Mr. BOYS: Was it called this afternoon?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes. I referred to my hon. friend's proposal. In regard to the burial expenses of ex-members of the forces, as I stated the other day, at the present time those who are on the strength of the hospital and under treatment and who eventually die, are buried by the department if they die in destitute circumstances. If the individual is a pensioner and he should die, then the pension commission can at their discretion provide for his burial moneys up to $100, and I understand that under the suggestion of the committee this will be made $150. In addition to that we have an organization known as the Last Post fund which is Canadian-wide, having branches in each and every province with the exception of Prince Edward Island. The central executive is in Montreal. We contribute to that organization an annual sum of $10,000. Some of the provinces, particularly Ontario, and some of the municipalities, for instance, the city of Toronto, have also contributed towards the fund. The question was raised last year on the estimates and at that time the house was given the assurance that if the Last Post fund had a deficiency in the revenues it might secure from various sources, the department would supplement that revenue in order that they might have funds with which to carry on the work. That is being done and will continue to be done.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I think the Prime Minister will bear me out that the Minister of Health is somewhat wrong in that regard. The idea was not to supplement the charitable contributions that were made, but the department was going to take over the burial of any soldier who died in indigent circumstances and thus prevent people from having to go out and beg for money for that purpose. The idea was not to supplement what they failed to collect by means of begging, but to take over the whole matter.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I did not understand the matter in that way. I understood that those who were administering the fund found that at times their funds were insufficient and they suggested that some additional aid should be given. There is no doubt the organization has been doing good work and I am not sure that it would be wise to wipe out an organization of that character. It has maintained an interest in the various communities and I do not think that is bad for the people of Canada. If a man who has served overseas dies in a community, I do not know of any nicer tribute than for the community to support the Last Post fund. I do not think they have to go out and do any begging and we do not ask them to do that. In Manitoba and Alberta their funds have been insufficient and we are supplementing them. I believe the work is being done at a less cost and probably more sympathetically than it could be done by the department generally.

Mr. GARDINER: Does the minister find any undue delay because of the fact that funds are not available in any particular part of the country?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): There should not be any undue delay. If a veteran dies in a community and they communicate with the Last Post fund, the burial should take place at once.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I had an entirely different conception of the matter from that entertained by the minister. My protest was made in regard to what I considered a blot on the escutcheon of Canada; that is to allow anybody to go on the street and beg for money to bury a returned soldier. It ought to be the business of the country to see that they do not need to go out and beg.

Mr. CLARK: Section 14 says, "such members of the staff of the department as may be designated by the governor in council." Why should they be designated by the governor in council rather than by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): At the present time they are not under the Civil Service Commission. They have been appointed by the governor in council to date, and in the amalgamation these officers will be selected and designated as the officers for these positions, and eventually they will be transferred and come in under the commission.

Mr. CLARK: Do I understand that the Civil Service Commission will have nothing to say about the selection of the officers who will be appointed for the department?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The selections have been made already and the officers are now in the department.

Mr. CLARK: I realize that, but as I read this section it would indicate that all those who are now there are not going to be transferred, but only those who are selected by the governor in council, thus many of those who are now there may be left out.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not think there will be so many left out. There will be in the amalgamation a reduction in staff, and I think we shall have to take the responsibility of making that reduction in the reorganization. As far as the staff itself is concerned in the central office, there have been certain adjustments and there will be further adjustments, but I am satisfied that the reorganization that is under way will have to be carried on by the department, and after the amalgamation these officers will come in under the Civil Service Act.

Mr. CLARK: Do I understand that the effect will be that after they are once appointed, they come under the Superannuation Act, for instance?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, they will.

Mr. CLARK: And after the original appointments by the governor in council, further appointments must be made by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Exactly.

Mr. McGIBBON: Do I understand the minister to say that he has made all his appointments?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, I have not made very many. Appointments have been made from time to time since the inception of the department under the legislation which brought the department into being. It is the intention, and I think it is the proper thing to do now that we have arrived at the stage where we know that a number of these officers will be required for many years to carry on this work, that they should now be made permanent and given the advantage of the Superannuation Act and other advantages that go with permanent service.

Mr. BOYS: This section really brings them under the Civil Service Act?

Mr. KING Kootenay): It will.

Mr. BOYS: It brings them from the present department to the new department, and then they become permanent and subject to the Civil Service Act?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. BOYS: I see my mistake. It was evidently (b) not section 3 that was referred to. I do not wish to prolong the discussion, but I do not think the minister has in any way answered the contention that I made when this bill was before the committee before. He has merely said that he does not think the word "temporary" is going to improve the situation, but he does not say why He does not meet the argument I made. Let me make it again in a few words.

This section gives the minister power to make regulations from time to time, and to select and employ certain employees either on part or full time. My contention was that that language stands, and that the minister can appoint anyone he sees fit as a full-time employee, and if he does that, that employee stays there and becomes permanent. The minister shakes his head. But there is the language. I am not arguing that the employee will come under the act, but the minister appoints him and he can stay there, and the effect of that is to get around the provisions of the Civil Service Act. I made no charge on the previous occasion that that was the minister's purpose, and I am not doing so now, but I say that as the language stands it enables that to be done, and if the minister can give any reason why the insertion of the word "temporary" is objectionable, I am quite ready, as I intimated before, to drop my suggestion, but he has done nothing except simply to say that after consulting with somebody he thinks the introduction of the word "temporary" is not going to improve matters. He does not say it is objectionable. He does not answer the argument that the way the section is worded at the present time gives him or some other minister power to appoint full-time employees. He merely says that he does not think the insertion of the word "temporary" will improve matters. I think the minister might fairly point out in what respect the argument I have advanced is wrong. We have the English language there, and it says that the minister may select and may employ part or full-time employees. All right. He employs a full-time employee. That means somebody who is going to work all the year round, according to the hours prescribed. The minister leaves him there, and he stays there. Is there not a degree of permanency there, not in the sense that he comes under the act, but permanent so long as he is left there? Why not put in the word "temporary". That would show plainly that the intention of the committee was to give the minister no such power as that.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think my hon. friend is unfair. I discussed this section a few moments ago at some length, and he did not hear a word I said, and now he says that I made no argument.

Mr. BOYS: The minister is not fair to me. He does not mean that. He is just speaking carelessly. He says I did not hear him. I have already said that I thought section 3 was called. I have said that I heard the minister give an explanation in this connection, and I was wondering why he was introducing it under section 3. I said that the minister said that he had consulted certain officers who had told him that they did not think the introduction of the word "temporary" would improve matters. In view of that how can the minister rise and say that I never heard a word he said, when I have been reiterating what he did say.

I do not want to prolong the discussion. I have made my argument as to full-time employees. I have asked the minister to show me that he has not the power under this section to appoint a man as a full-time employee, who would stay there and be permanent, thus evading the provisions of the Civil Service Act. I say that that is the effect of the language. I do not say that it is the minister's purpose, but the insertion of the word "temporary" would put an end to any such thought.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Certain officers will be employed under certain conditions. As I explained before, the part-time professional officer is the expert who may be consulted from time to time, but would not be on our pay from day to day. Then there is the part-time painter, the man whom you might employ for a month or six weeks in the year. Then there is the hospital orderly and the cook, who are employed from day to day and are paid on full-time basis. That is all that means. The section is to apply to that class, and to insert the word "temporary" would just be perpetuating a condition that is now causing a great many men in the service a good deal of uneasiness, not in this department, but in the Department of Public Works and other departments where there are men who have been in the service twenty or twenty-five years and are still known as temporary. That condition of things is not fair to them because they are permanent to all intents and purposes, and yet they do not enjoy the advantages of a permanent civil servant. The cook who is a good cook, and the hospital attendant who is a good hospital attendant, will undoubtedly remain in their positions, and I do not see any objection to using the words "full time". I cannot see any advantage in using the word "temporary".

Mr. BOYS: The minister suggests that this means a cook or an employee of that kind. There is absolutely nothing in the section to indicate that it applies only to a cook. It says:

> Full time employees whose compensation is determined by the rates payable for similar work in the locality in which such persons are employed.

[Mr. Boys.]

That embraces everybody who can be employed.

Section agreed to.

On the preamble.

Mr. CLARK: Mr. Chairman, for a number of years an effort has been made to bring under the Civil Service Act the employees of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment and of the Soldier Settlement Board. Under this bill the former class are dealt with and in due course will become entitled to superannuation. The employees of the Soldier Settlement Board are equally deserving of similar treatment. They are doing very important work and have now been employed in the department for almost ten years. I feel that something should be done to bring them under the Civil Service Act, and I hope that action will be taken by the minister to this end.

Now I should like to ask the minister one or two questions under section seven. Are soldiers' advisers supposed to devote their whole attention to this particular work?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They have not been doing so.

Mr. CLARK: Are they all paid the same salary?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No, the salaries vary from $1,200 to $3,600.

Mr. CLARK: Will the minister give us a list?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I shall be glad to place it on Hansard when we are dealing with the estimates of the department. If my hon. friend wishes I could give him what I believe are substantially the correct figures. In the city of Toronto we pay $3,600; in Halifax $3,000; in St. John, $2,400; in Winnipeg, $3,600; in Calgary, $2,400 or $3,000; in Vancouver, $3,000; in Victoria, $2,400. They do not devote their whole time to the work. Probably they could not be expected to at those salaries.

Mr. CLARK: At the various meetings of the committee which has sat on this subject during the present session it transpired that some of the soldiers' advisers are devoting their entire time to the work and are making a particularly fine record. I might mention the soldiers' adviser in the city of Winnipeg, who appeared before the committee at practically every sitting. The records produced indicated that he had done tremendous service for the returned men; and the records from the other centres in my opinion did not compare at all favourably with his. I suggest to the minister that there should be a reorganization so that each centre may be given the same service as is being given in Winnipeg.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is our intention to go very carefully into the work that is being done by the different advisers. The adviser in Winnipeg undoubtedly has been doing a great deal of work, including the preparation of cases for the appeal board, and he has been consulted by the returned soldiers on almost every matter that interests them. He has given up a great deal, if not all, of his time to the work. That is not true of the other officers; they are devoting their time to the preparation of cases for the appeal board or the pension board. It is my intention to go very carefully into the work performed by these advisers.

Mr. POWER: I wish to endorse the suggestion made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Clark). By common consent I think the committee agreed that the soldiers' adviser in Winnipeg was a remarkably efficient man. He has devoted his entire time to the work of the department for what I consider a meagre salary for a man of his ability and energy—$3,600. I think the minister ought to appoint an overseer of the soldiers' advisers in the city of Ottawa in order that the work may be co-ordinated and unified. At the present time I understand these men have no direct superior, and it is almost impossible to say whether they are doing their work properly or not. I do not wish to accuse any of them of not carrying out their duties as they should, but it seems extraordinary that one man should have so very much work to do and the others comparatively little. In my opinion the minister ought to give serious consideration to this very important matter in its relation to our returned men, and at another session bring forward some plan whereby the work will be carried on a little more efficiently.

Preamble agreed to.

Bill reported.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. ROBERT FORKE (Minister of Immigration and Colonization) moved the second reading of Bill No. 288, to amend the Soldier Settlement Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. FORKE moved that the house go into committee on the bill.

Mr. GARDINER: The bill is not distributed, Mr. Speaker. I do not know whether it is printed or not.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I understand the bill was distributed this afternoon.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: It is on some files not on others.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the house ready to proceed with the bill?

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Marcil in the chair.

On section 1.

Mr. BENNETT: Is this in accordance with the recommendations of the committee?

Mr. FORKE: Yes. Perhaps I had better read section 26 which is being repealed:

> When a settler obtains Dominion lands, whether by soldier grant or otherwise, and whether before or after having secured from the board any advance pursuant to this act, while there is owing by him to the board any sum or sums of money as the result of any sale made to him by the board, or otherwise by reason of the exercise by the board of any of its powers under this act, such sum so owing shall constitute a first charge on the lands so obtained and no patent shall be issued to such settler therefor until such sum or sums, with accrued interest, have been fully paid or repaid.

When a soldier obtained a grant on any particular parcel of land the liability was upon that land, and if he obtained a homestead at a later date the liability was applied to that homestead also. Under this amendment the liability will apply only to the land in respect of which he gave security and if at a later date he takes up a homestead and discharges his duties thereon his patent shall be issued to him without liability on that homestead. The liability will remain on the land for which he gave security. If on the other hand he has obtained a loan upon a parcel of land and later obtains a homestead, receiving a further grant of money on the security of that homestead, then the liability shall apply both to the homestead and to the original grant of land. In respect of the homestead, the liability will be only to the amount that has been advanced by way of increased loan, through his having obtained a homestead. That, in a few words, explains the situation. This legislation will not be retroactive; it will take effect only from the passing of the act. It may be some injustice to those who in the past had not the advantage which will accrue to others under this legislation; but to make it retroactive would lead to endless confusion and would entail a tremendous amount of work which probably could never be undertaken.

Mr. MANION: Did the minister read section 26 as it stands or as it is now in this bill?

Mr. FORKE: What I have read is section 26 in the original act.

Mr. MANION: And the minister is asking the committee to pass section 26 as now proposed?

Mr. FORKE: Yes.

Mr. ARTHURS: The opinion of the committee which made the recommendation along this line was that it should be retroactive; otherwise it would be obviously of no use to the soldier. The intention of the committee was that those men who, they thought, had been unjustly deprived of patents for land by reason of a liability of some other description in respect of a separate transaction with the government, should be relieved and be enabled to secure their homestead without regard to that liability. There is no doubt that the intention was that they should not suffer because of any liability to the government they may have had in the past.

Mr. ADSHEAD: The idea of the committee was that a soldier having received a loan in connection with a quarter-section, that quarter-section should be security for the loan, and that if he had acquired a homestead that homestead should not necessarily be encumbered with the loan which had been granted on the quarter-section. Two soldiers take up two pieces of land; they have a quarter-section each on which they obtained loans; and one takes up a homestead. Now it is manifestly unfair to exact from the one man security in respect of a half-section and from the other man security in respect of a quarter-section. I submit—and this was the intention of the committee—that if a soldier took up a quarter-section on which he obtained a loan and then acquired a homestead, the homestead should not be encumbered but should be left free, unless some specified sum had been advanced on that homestead. I think the words "or otherwise" ought to be deleted. That phrase includes all lands he has acquired, whether by purchase or by way of homestead.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Possibly the hon. member (Mr. Adshead) is under a slight misapprehension. The purpose of the committee was to release the Dominion lands—and by Dominion lands I do not mean lands acquired by purchase but lands still belonging to the Dominion; that is to say, lands on which entry was made, patent to be afterwards issued. We must differentiate between Dominion lands which are purchased and become private property, and lands which remain Dominion lands, on which entry is made until the patent is issued. The purpose of the committee was to remove the charge against such Dominion lands. The proposed section makes provision with regard to a settler who obtains Dominion lands, whether by soldier grant or otherwise, and thereafter secures the approval of the board to any advance to him pursuant to the act, "while there is owing by him to the board any sum or sums of money as the result of any sale made to him by the board or otherwise"; and we have to remember that a large part of the money advanced was advanced not for the purchase of land but for the purchase of stock and equipment, for improvement and other purposes. In many cases we found that the only land held by the man was that Dominion land together with stock and equipment; and we found it impossible to differentiate between the loan which would rightly apply to the one quarter-section alone, and loans applicable to the entire land at the time the loan was advanced. We therefore suggested that the land in possession of the settler at the time the money was advanced should be considered as security. In other words, that was the factor in the mind of the board at the time the money was loaned and was understood by the settler to be part of the security he had to offer. Under the former act, which we propose to repeal, that same man after receiving a loan made entry either by way of a soldier grant or on a homestead; and automatically that additional land was charged under the loan, although the land which he had just entered upon was not in the mind of the board at the time the loan was made, inasmuch as it was not in the possession of the settler when he received the advance. We found that the only practical method to adopt was to draw the dividing line at the point when the loan was authorized. The land in the possession of the settler at that time would automatically come under the act, because we could not free it from the suggestion of being one of the factors that led to the loan. All land on which entry was made after the loan was advanced was free from that suggestion and would be free under the provisions of the act. The bill goes further than is apparent. After a man failed and the contract was rescinded and the land resold, the deficiency which remained was chargeable to the former settler as a debt which would automatically apply as a charge and a first mortgage against any land he might take up thereafter. Under this new section that land is free, because no soldier grant is subject to a charge of that kind.

Mr. ARTHURS: This section is not retroactive.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: It is not retroactive to this extent, that it does not apply to the man who has left the land, but as I understand it, it does apply to any man who is still in possession of the land whether or not the loan was formerly charged. While he is still possessed of the land and while the agreement has not been rescinded I understand that the charge is automatically removed from all Dominion land acquired after the loan was made. Certainly that is the intention of the bill and that is my understanding of it.

Mr. ARTHURS: If that is true the language should be different. In the first line of section 26 we find the words, "When a settler obtains Dominion lands,—". While if my hon. friend is correct it should read, "When a settler has obtained or obtains."

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Our understanding was that by the repeal of the former section the new section would apply to all settlers in possession of the land at present and would not go back to the man who has sold out except that it would permit him to take up a second homestead in the future.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister has admitted that it is not retroactive at all.

Mr. FORKE: It applies to all soldiers now on the land. It is almost meaningless to say that it does not apply to those who have sold out and left, but it applies to all soldiers now in possession of the land.

Mr. McGIBBON: Then what did the minister mean by his former statement?

Mr. FORKE: It was a slip, if anything. The idea is something like this: Supposing a soldier has had rather bad luck with his original land and has had things go wrong. After he has been sold out and everything has been cleaned up he will be able to retain the homestead which he obtains at a later date. This is to give him another chance. Under the old act the board would have been able to follow him up to his second homestead for the original debt, but under this section he will have another start.

Mr. McGIBBON: Does the minister tell me that the government have been doing that in the past? If so, they should be ashamed of themselves.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): The important word is "thereafter" in the second line. I would have no quarrel with the suggestion of the hon. member for Parry Sound; his change would affect men now on the land, but this section goes a little further, because it provides for homesteads which may be obtained in the future. I agree with the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario that this injustice should not have been permitted in the past, but the fact remains that it was done under the old act.

Mr. KENNEDY: I understand that to-day when a soldier has taken out a loan on a farm which he has purchased he requires the consent of the Soldier Settlement Board in order to take up a soldier grant. He has the right, of course, to take up a homestead. In the case of a soldier who has been salvaged and who still owes something to the board, would the minister assure us that there would be no difficulty in securing the permission of the board to take up a soldier grant?

Mr. FORKE: That is the object of the act; the liability will rest only on the land on which the loan was made.

Mr. KENNEDY: But that would not prevent the Soldier Settlement Board from refusing the soldier the right to take up a soldier grant.

Mr. THORSON: What has that to do with this act?

Mr. KENNEDY: It refers to the soldier grant, and in view of the fact that we are dealing with this problem I think it is a legitimate question. It is a matter of administration.

Mr. BOYS: I should like to ask the minister if the purpose of this act is to benefit the soldier?

Mr. FORKE: Yes, that is the main purpose.

Mr. BOYS: I was not a member of the committee and did not hear the discussion which took place there; perhaps for that reason I do not fully appreciate the effect of this section, but after reading it three or four times I cannot see how it is going to benefit the soldier. I see the explanatory note, which reads as follows:

> It is also the opinion of the committee that the present policy of withholding title to homesteads and soldier grants in respect of lands other than those upon which loans are granted should be discontinued.

I understood that the purpose of this section, which repeals the former section, was to free the homestead of any loan which might be owing the department. Am I right in that?

Mr. FORKE: Not exactly. The section repealed gave the board power to follow up the loan to any lands which the soldier might obtain at a later date.

Mr. BOYS: They have that right anyway; if any man owes the department or the government a sum of money, naturally you can follow up that loan to anything he has in order to get the money. I thought by this section you were freeing the homestead of any balance which might be due the department. But let us look at the section, which says:

When a settler obtains Dominion lands, whether by soldier grant or otherwise—

We might as well say when a soldier obtains Dominion lands in any manner.

—and thereafter secures the approval of the board to any advance to him pursuant to this act, while there is owing by him to the board any sum or sums of money as the result of any sale made to him by the board or otherwise by reason of the exercise by the board of any of its powers under this act subsequently to such approval, such sum so owing shall constitute a first charge on the lands so obtained—

That would be a homestead or any land.

—and no patent shall be issued to such settler therefor until such sum or sums with accrued interest have been fully paid or repaid.

With every desire to read this in the manner indicated by the minister, that is, as favourable to the soldier, I cannot so read it. It seems me this is protecting the department.

Mr. FORKE: Section 26 of the original act was an iron-clad agreement which bound up the soldier in every way. This section refers to a case where the soldier secured a loan on the security of his original grant, and later took a homestead. When he took that homestead he went to the board for a further loan, because of the fact that he had the homestead. This section deals with cases of that kind; the homestead will be held liable for the additional money loaned after the soldier acquired it.

Mr. BOYS: Let me follow that up. Suppose the settler has a loan, say, of $1,000 on a certain property. Then he gets a homestead, and this section distinctly says that he cannot get that homestead until he pays the $1,000. I so read it, and if I am wrong I should like to be put right.

Mr. POWER: I am free to admit that while there were seven or eight lawyer members of this committee, they were unanimous on one thing: that the officers of the crown did not know how to draft legislation. They were by no means unanimous as to how legislation should be drafted for presentation to the house. There was a real grievance on the part of the soldier, in that after he had obtained a loan from the board, or had purchased land from the board, and then took up a homestead, the board would follow him and would not permit him to take his patent, or become the owner of this homestead, until such time as he had paid off every cent he owed under the original loan. Moreover, if he was salvaged and there was a deficiency, they would follow him for the rest of his life, even on to other land he might take up. It was thought by members of the committee that that was not quite a fair deal, and that it discouraged the initiative of the soldier. If he wanted to start over again somewhere else, it was not fair to him to plaster a mortgage on everything that he might own for the rest of his life. Two things were done; first, all deficiences were wiped out, and, secondly, it was proposed that the mortgage which was on the original land should not follow the soldier on to any Dominion land which he might afterwards acquire, and he should not be prevented from obtaining his patent.

Mr. McGIBBON: Will you be good enough to tell us where that is so expressed in this?

Mr. POWER: I am coming to that. There is another factor in this situation. The soldier who owned the two, the settlement land and the Dominion land, might go to the board, and, and the strength of both, say, "Will you give me a new loan, a loan for improvements or a loan for stock?" If he went to the board and on the security of both obtained a loan, in that case the board would be entitled to the security of the old as well as the new. It was in an endeavour to make this clear that we arrived at the draft which is now in these amendments, and which is as follows:

When a settler obtains Dominion lands, whether by soldier grant or otherwise, and thereafter—

That is, after he has obtained these lands. Under the old act, section 26, if he obtained a new grant it was plastered with a mortgage. Now, if he obtains this, and then goes after another loan—

—and thereafter secures the approval of the board to any advance to him pursuant to this act, while there is owing by him to the board any sum or sums of money as the result of any sale made to him by the board or otherwise—

"Otherwise" here would cover the case of where he obtained money for stock.

—by reason of the exercise by the board of any of its powers under this act subsequently to such approval, such sum so owing shall constitute a first charge on the lands so obtained and no patent shall be issued—

Mr. BOYS: Would my friend explain to me just what is meant by that? It is confusing to me, and perhaps to others as well. What is meant by the words "lands so obtained" in the third to the last line?

Mr. GEARY: That is the land obtained in the first line.

Mr. BOYS: Does that mean the land he is getting, or the land—

Mr. POWER: "Shall constitute a first charge on the lands so obtained."

Mr. BOYS: What lands?

Mr. POWER: The lands obtained before he got the loan.

Mr. BOYS: That is the point exactly.

Mr. POWER: The lands obtained before he got the loan. The only way I can make myself perfectly clear is to refer to the old act. Section 26 is as follows:

When a settler obtains Dominion lands, whether by soldier grant or otherwise, and whether before or after having secured from the board any advance pursuant to this act, while there is owing by him to the board any sum or sums of money as a result of any sale made to him by the board, or otherwise by reason of the exercise by the board of any of its powers under this act, such sum so owing shall constitute a first charge on the lands so obtained and no patent shall be issued to such settler therefor until such sum or sums, with accrued interest, have been fully paid or repaid.

The whole thing is in the word "thereafter". After he has obtained what I call "new land", which might be Dominion land, or by soldier grant, or by homestead, he goes to the board and says, "I want a loan," whether it be for improvements or for stock, then everything he owned would be covered by that loan.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Would not the land be specified? It is not specifying the land when he gets the loan that we object to.

Mr. POWER: I do not know anything about the agreements, because I have never seen them.

Mr. ADSHEAD: If a loan is given to anybody, the Soldier Settlement Board must necessarily specify the security upon which they give it.

Mr. POWER: At present it is not specified if I may call my hon. friend's attention to section 26—and every piece of land he obtains is plastered by this mortgage to the land settlement board. It was the endeavour of the committee to make that clear, and the amendment was brought down. Whether we have succeeded in doing that or not, I do not know; I would not be quite sure myself. It was an honest endeavour on the part of the subcommittee to clean up that situation. Personally, I think it seems to cover the case. My hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Speakman), who has had far more experience that I have in dealing with land settlement, is also of the same opinion. My hon. friend from Melfort (Mr. McLean), who has a large number of soldier settlers in his constituency, seems to think that this fits the case. I have none in my constituency, and, for that reason perhaps I have not been so much interested in land settlement as I might be.

Mr. ADSHEAD: My hon. friend from Red Deer made the statement a few minutes ago that the soldier who had obtained a loan upon his soldier land when he had a homestead, received that loan without anything being said in the agreement about the homestead. The hon. member said that the homestead having been a factor in securing that loan, it should be agreed upon that it was encumbered. That is the very point: that he gets a loan upon a quarter section, which is expressed in the agreement, and though the homestead that he had at the time he got the agreement was not referred to in the agreement, still it was encumbered. It is that very principle that we are discussing—that when a loan is granted the things secured by that loan should be specified in the agreement. The hon. member for Red Deer said that it was a factor in the board granting a loan, although they did not so specify it.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: If no loan had been made for the purchase of land the matter would be very simple. The security would be specified and be limited to the land purchase. The difficulty is that many of the loans were not obtained for the purchase of lands, and so did not stipulate any particular class of land. They may have been for the purpose of purchasing stock, or for the purpose of placing permanent improvements on the land, such as buildings; or for the purpose of purchasing seed or feed, or sometimes subsidiary amounts in order to subsist. All of these loans were general loans; there was no specification made as to the land to which they applied, and in most of these cases, I venture to say, it is impossible to dissociate the Dominion land held by the settler at that time from the board land.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Section 26 gave them the right to take any land.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: At the time the law was made that dominion land came in as security. Without that security in most cases they could not have made the additional loan for stock, equipment and the other purposes I have mentioned. The hon. member for East Calgary is perfectly right in his contention. The complication arises from the fact that many loans were made by many different people and in none of the other loans was any special reference made to any particular class of land.

Mr. ADSHEAD: That is exactly the unfairness of the situation. I know a soldier who took up a quarter section of land on the purchase plan and he also secured a loan for the purpose of purchasing stock and implements. Another soldier takes up a quarter section of land on precisely the same plan and he takes up another quarter section on the homestead plan. He has to have stock because he has homesteaded. The one soldier gives as security only the quarter section that he has purchased, while the other has to give the whole half section.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That was the law.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I am talking about fairness.

Mr. CLARK: I should like to make this suggestion. Section 26 is being repealed by this bill, but I suggest that we should stop there. What will the effect be? Any future acquired property, whether it be stock or land, will be unencumbered and only the original land will be encumbered. The object of the committee surely is to free the future acquired property from the original mortgage. Therefore if we repeal section 26, we accomplish that purpose. The next thing is that we do not wish to prohibit that man from coming before the board again for a new loan. That is, I think, correct. If that man comes before the board and asks for a new loan, the board will say: What security have you? The man will say: Here is my homestead; here is my stock; here is some other subsequently acquired property; I will give you that. Why bother with this complicated section? Let us repeal the old section and thereby take the charge off the future acquired property. Then a man will have in his possession free all the property which he acquires after he put the mortgage on and he can offer that in the future as security to the settlement board. I think that is the proper way of dealing with the present difficulty.

Mr. NEILL: Might I suggest that the clause would read more to the purpose which is intended by the hon. member for Parry Sound (Mr. Arthurs) if it read like this:

When a settler has obtained or obtains dominion land.

The word "obtains" suggests something in the future and, the minister notwithstanding, this is intended to be retroactive to a large extent. When I say that a man obtains land, that refers to the future. This section is intended to cover also the past tense.

Mr. KENNEDY: I should like to come back to the question that I asked the minister a little while ago, namely, with regard to a settler obtaining dominion land by soldier grant. I understand that every settler has the right to take up a homestead without any question or discretion on the part of the Soldier Settlement Board or anyone else, but section 15 of the Soldier Settlement Act reads:

The minister may issue, free, to any settler a soldier grant for not more than one quarter section, of one hundred and sixty acres, more or less, of lands reserved pursuant to section six of this act.

The point I want to raise is this: Will there be any trouble, so far as the soldier settler is concerned, in getting the right to take up a soldier grant provided that he has been salvaged and he still owes the board say $200 or $300? He has not actually been freed from the encumbrance in connection with the soldier grant unless that right is unquestioned.

Mr. FORKE: My hon. friend is referring to a case where a soldier has a homestead and where he has made a failure and been cleaned out.

Mr. KENNEDY: No, I refer to the case of a soldier who has a loan against a homestead or any other kind of land, obtained through purchase or otherwise, and he has been salvaged. He still owes the board, after everything has been taken over by the board and sold, say $200, but he has not previously exercised his right to take up a soldier grant. Will he have any difficulty in getting a certificate giving him the right to take up that soldier grant?

Mr. FORKE: I can hardly answer that question because soldier grants are governed by another law entirely. If he has failed and been cleaned out, the act says "the minister may". I suppose the whole circumstances will have to be taken into consideration.

Mr. KENNEDY: I think it is a matter of the right of the soldier. The act says: "the minister may". My point is: unless he is given that right, is any club held over him? Is the soldier grant not made clear?

Mr. FORKE: Judging from administration I would say that if a soldier had made a failure on a quarter section of land, had been cleaned out and then had got a soldier grant, if they did give it to him they would not carry over the debt of $200; they would not follow him for that money. I am perfectly certain of that.

Mr. KENNEDY: The minister hardly understands my question. Before a soldier can take up a soldier grant he must first secure a certificate from the minister?

Mr. FORKE: Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY: If he has been salvaged on a previous homestead or on a purchased farm and he still owes the board say $200, will the minister undertake to say that he will receive the right to take up his soldier grant without question?

Mr. FORKE: I can hardly answer that question, because all the circumstances have to be taken under consideration. If the Soldier Settlement Board came to the conclusion that he was worthy of another trial and a soldier grant was given to him, they would not follow him for the $200.

Mr. KENNEDY: That does not release him so far as the soldier grant is concerned.

Mr. FORKE: There is no provision for that in this bill at all.

Mr. GEARY: I think the hon. member has the point of the difficulty. The desire of the committee apparently was to make a charge only on the land in respect of which an advance was given. You are getting at that object not by restricting the legislation so as to make the advance a charge only upon the land in respect of which the loan was issued, but by providing the other case, that is the case where a loan shall be a charge on everything that he owns. That is the case you have provided for and by implication I suppose you mean that in no other case will there be a charge upon all the man's holdings for the advance.

Mr. POWER: By repealing section 26.

Mr. GEARY: No, the old section 26 is just that exactly.

Mr. POWER: That is what is repealed.

Mr. GEARY: If you add the words—

But otherwise there will be no restriction on the right of the advancee to get his patent—

—you would effect the purpose of the committee. Is that not what is wanted? In other words I think my hon. friends fear there may be a debt owing and there is no guarantee that that debt will not be carried over on to all the man's property be it homestead or soldier settlement land. What you have done is to instance the one case where there shall be a charge on everything he holds. You have not excepted the situation which these gentlemen desire should not obtain, that is that there should be a charge made otherwise than in regard to land in respect of which the advance is made. I think it is in the drafting of the legislation that the difficulty has arisen. They have not provided for the case desired to be provided for, but for the other case where the charge shall be made on all the holdings. It is exactly as my hon. friend from North Simcoe said a moment ago.

Mr. BOYS: I should like to support what the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard said. As I understand it, the situation now is that the department have a contract in connection with any loan that has been made. That contract binds certain specific lands mentioned therein. Get rid of this section entirely, and that contract stands as a mortgage against that land. Nothing more should be required by the department but that. We will assume that the soldier wants a further advance either on that land or on some other land, or on both. A new contract is put through, and that contract binds whatever lands may be included in it. It seems to me that to gain that purpose all you have to do is to repeal the section entirely, and the department then stands in the very same position that any individual would be in who has made an advance, and who may be called upon to make another advance.

Mr. POWER: If the hon. gentleman will look at the report of the committee, he will find that that was their original idea, but we could not get it done in that way.

Mr. BOYS: Will my hon. friend point out what is wrong with that? I cannot see it. All the legislation did was to say that notwithstanding a contract specifically mentioning certain lands, any other lands that may be acquired shall be automatically bound when acquired. I understand it is the desire of the committee to get rid of that feature—

Mr. POWER: Then there was the case where the board had advanced moneys to a man for stock or equipment, but only because he had his land settlement land and some other land, and it would be manifestly unfair to say to the board: We will charge this new land on the strength of which a further loan is made.

Mr. BOYS: My answer to that is simple. When he comes for that advance—

Mr. POWER: He has done so already.

Mr. BOYS: Then your position is this. The board has made an advance to a soldier without security. If they choose to make an advance without security—

Mr. POWER: But it was made on the strength of the legislation which covered all his land, both the land under land settlement and the other land. The advance was made on the strength of that legislation. They said: His land setlement land may not be sufficient to cover this advance, but we know that he has a homestead alongside, and so the two together were charged to cover the advance, which might not be just for the purposes of the land settlement land, but might be for stock or equipment to be used on both lands. The settler may have bought horses and cattle to be used on both these lands, and the board advanced him money on the strength of that.

Mr. McGIBBON: But the board has that stock for security.

Mr. POWER: Some of the cattle may have died.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

ST. JOHN RIVER STORAGE COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 17 respecting the St. John River Storage Company.—Sir Eugene Fiset.—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Provincial acts adopted and confirmed.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend from Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) has given notice of motion to amend this bill on the third reading. As he will have full opportunity to discuss his motion then, and knowing how prolix he can sometimes be, and in view of the importance of conserving as far as possible—

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman—

Sir EUGENE FISET —this precious hour for private bills, I do move that this bill be now reported.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the motion?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Motion agreed to on division, and bill reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall said bill be read the third time?

Mr. J. F. POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, before this bill is read a third time I have an amendment to move, seconded by Mr. Woodsworth—

Mr. STEVENS: Next sitting of the house.

Mr. POULIOT: No, now.

Mr. SPEAKER: I will put the motion. It is moved by Sir Eugene Fiset, seconded by Mr. McLean (Melfort) that said bill, namely, an act respecting the St. John River Storage Company (as amended) be now read a third time.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, we called "Next sitting of the house," I understand that without unanimous consent the bill cannot be read a third time to-day.

Mr. SPEAKER: Did any hon. member say, "Next sitting of the house"?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes.

Mr. POULIOT: Before you proceed, Mr. Speaker, I would ask if you will accept my amendment at the next sitting of the house when the bill comes up for third reading?

Mr. SPEAKER: At that time the hon. member will be at liberty to present his amendment.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. We have just reported from the committee of the whole a very important and technical bill that I believe is ultra vires of the parliament of Canada to enact, and we have not considered one single clause of it. I submit that this is out of order, and I desire to register my protest against such procedure.

Mr. SPEAKER: The bill was committed by the house to the committee of the whole. The committee of the whole was seized of what appertained to the bill. If I followed aright the proceedings, the committee of the whole decided of its own volition that the bill should be at once reported. It was so reported. Upon resuming the chair, I asked: When shall said bill be read a third time? I was under the impression that it was the desire of the house to have it read immediately, but the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) called "At the next sitting." Therefore at the next sitting of the house on the third reading any hon. member may rise and take objection to the bill. But as I said, the committee of the whole can do as it pleases with the legislation which is submitted to it. The committee of the whole, having said that the bill should now be reported, apparently considered that it had been sufficiently examined and studied.

Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka-Ontario): Surely, Mr. Speaker, the action of this house is not to become a farce. Here is a bill submitted to the committee of the whole and reported without being considered at all. It cannot be considered clause by clause on the third reading. What are we to do with it?

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): It was fully considered by the private bills committee.

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, am I to understand that this house is prevented from discussing this bill in committee in the future?

Mr. SPEAKER: The committee will do as it pleases. If the committee decides to discuss the bill from the title to its last clause, it will of course do so; but if the committee says unanimously, or by a majority, that the bill shall be reported forthwith, then I must accept the will of the committee.

Mr. POULIOT: The member for Rimouski (Sir Eugene Fiset) was determined that the committee should not hear anything about the bill.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. There is nothing before the house. Will the Clerk Assistant call the next order?

FEDERAL LOAN COMPANY

On the order being called:

House in committee on Bill No. 59, an act to incorporate the Federal Loan Company (as amended, and recommending that the title be changed to "An act to incorporate the Federal Lending Company")—Mr. Lang.

Mr. M. F. HEPBURN (West Elgin): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the sponsor of the bill, I may say that I understand there is to be a change in the title. It is—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. Is the hon. gentleman desirous of proceeding with the bill? The promotor of the bill is not here.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Stands.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. SPEAKER: Stands?

Mr. HEPBURN: Mr. Speaker, I—

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the hon. member authorized by the promoter of the bill to proceed in his absence?

Mr. HEPBURN: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Hepburn, for Mr Lang, moves, seconded by Mr. Chevrier, that I do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole on Bill No. 59, to incorporate the Federal Loan Company. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Incorporation.

Mr. CHURCH: I wish the hon. member who has moved this bill into committee would give some explanation of it. A session or two ago the house took up the question of a consolidation of the federal loan companies act and the principle of incorporating such purely provincial companies was found to be quite unsound and not for this parliament. The house is on pretty thin ice so far as this bill goes as to jurisdiction in the matter of provincial rights are concerned. We do not want any more Home Banks or Sovereign or Farmers Banks or York County Loan Companies in Canada; we do not want loan companies and innsurance companies obtaining from the federal parliament charters purely provincial in scope and character. Is this bill within the four corners of federal jurisdiction? The hon. member should enlighten the committee as to what security parliament will have that the powers conferred in this bill will be carried out and that we are within our powers. We are entitled to know something about the company, what it proposes to do, its bona fides, what security it offers, and the nature of the business to be transacted. In the public interest we should be very careful in passing bills of this sort, which endanger provincial rights.

Mr. HEPBURN: Unfortunately the sponsor of the bill is absent, but I may say that this is an ordinary loan company which is being incorporated in the usual way. Apart from this I have no explanation to make. The bill passed the committee and had the approval of the Superintendent of Insurance. On the third reading of the bill, I have no doubt, an explanation can be given.

Mr. CHURCH: As we cannot get any information I move that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. CANNON: I was present when this bill came before the banking and commerce committee and a report was submitted from the Superintendent of Insurance who had examined it and who gave his approval. The only objection was that the name of the company might be misleading inasmuch as there were other companies bearing similar names. I understood that the promoter of the bill had agreed to change the name. This objection was the only reason why the bill was not adopted when it first came up. It is now before the house in order to have the name of the company changed.

The CHAIRMAN: There is before the committee a motion which is not debatable. Mr. Church has moved that the committee rise and report progress. Those in favour of the motion will say Aye.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

The CHAIRMAN: In my opinion the nays have it; I declare the motion lost. There is a motion that the name of the company be changed to the Central Finance Corporation.

Mr. BENNETT: The notice says "Federal Lending Company."

Mr. SPENCER: This legislation, I understand, is asked for in order to make it possible for corporations to lend money on second mortgages. Although ostensibly only 6 per cent is to be charged on money loaned, we are informed by the Superintendent of Insurance that, with the various charges, the rate will amount to about 18 or 20 per cent. I have no doubt that those who are promoting the bill are perfectly right when they say that this will not be as high an interest as is charged by certain money lenders in such cities as Montreal. At the same time it is a usurious rate and it seems to me that something is wrong with our present financial institutions if it is necessary for us to get behind legislation like this, under which the borrower will ultimately have to pay about 18 per cent. The only ground on which one could possibly support this bill is that under it the evil will not be as great as that which prevails at the present time with money lenders who charge much higher rates. As regards the name, I do not think that the word "Finance" should be used. When we use that word we associate it with the highest type of financial institutions in the country. The name does not seem to me to be a proper one to designate a money lending institution whose various charges will eventually run up to as high as 18 per cent.

Mr. CHURCH: I wish to protest against this bill. Some of us can remember the ruin caused by the York County Loan Company, and the suffering entailed in Parkdale, West York and other places. I protest against parliament granting a charter to the persons named in this bill—Lawrence Kert, David Sher and two or three stenographers. How do we know who the company are? Do we know anything of its bona fides? What are its powers? It will lend money on second mortgages at any rate it likes to poor people. I submit that the powers of this company are beyond the scope of this parliament. The company will deal in chattel mortgages, lien notes, second mortgages and all that kind of thing and its purposes will be purely provincial and local in Toronto. This company is to have its head office in the city of Toronto, but we have had enough companies there incorporated by this parliament, such as the Farmers' Bank, the Home Bank, the Sovereign Bank, the York Loan Company and many others, all of which have failed and caused great ruin and loss to thousands. You will notice what these gentlemen propose to do; they desire to suspend three federal acts, the Money Lenders Act, the Interest Act and the Loan Companies Act, all of which have been passed for the protection of the working classes in our large cities. No one knows what interest this company will charge on these second mortgages; this parliament is asked to release the company from the control of these acts. A similar bill came up in this house two or three years ago, and I took the ground then that we did not have sufficient protection for our people and that this parliament had no jurisdiction. On general principles I protest against incorporating companies such as this, which give no security or protection to the public from extortionate rates of interest.

Mr. MORIN (St. Hyacinthe): I rise to a point of order; I think the hon. gentleman is absolutely out of order in his remarks. The discussion should be limited to the amendment changing the name of the company, rather than to the merits of the bill.

Mr. CHURCH: My hon. friend will be able to speak when I get through.

The CHAIRMAN: I think the point raised by my hon. friend is well taken. There is an amendment before the committee and the hon. gentleman should discuss the amendment.

Mr. CHURCH: Very well, I will discuss the change of name. This change of name is just a subterfuge; they wanted to get the word "Federal" in the title of the company, but some of the government officials were opposed to that name so they are asking this parliament to change the name to "Central Finance Corporation" making this in effect a new bill in its entirety. There are too many of these companies now imposing extortionate rates of interest on the foreign people in the city of Toronto, lending them money on chattel and second mortgage and charging them fabulous rates of interest for it. Many of these foreigners are not educated and cannot afford to employ a lawyer, and companies of this kind find it easy to do business with them. There are several of these companies in the city of Toronto, and the provincial legislature saw fit to bring in legislation to try to effect some control. I see that the hon. member for Toronto West Centre is in his seat; this is in his constituency. If we are not careful, before we know it we will have some day a second York Loan Company incorporated by this parliament if some control is not exercised by this house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CHURCH: I am discussing this change of name, and you cannot discuss the name without discussing the principle of the bill. This amendment practically makes this a new bill, so I think it should go back to the private bills or other committee for reconsideration. While this particular company will not be located in my own constituency I know something of the suffering among the poor people of Toronto from the failure of similar companies, such as the Home Bank, the Farmers' Bank and the York Loan Company, and so long as I am a member of this house I will protest against the incorporating here of purely provincial companies of this kind, which attempt to secure a charter from this parliament by some change of name or some play on words so as to escape provincial supervision. When they are incorporated here the provincial government can do nothing with them; they are not even under the terms of the public acts I have mentioned of this parliament. If this sort of thing is to go on the sooner the Minister of Finance brings in a new Loan Companies Act the better it will be, if the public are to be protected from extortionate rates. As a lawyer I have seen something of the suffering caused among the poor people of Toronto, by the failure of some of these loan companies of this kind, and I wish to protest against interference by this parliament with the government of Ontario in its control of purely provincial companies of this kind, which are not by the widest stretch of the imagination proper companies to give a charter to here.

Mr. ARTHURS: I wish to bring up a point of order. Apparently the banking and commerce committee considered that the name of this company was very important, because the only change they made was in the name. Now we have an entirely new name proposed by some hon. members, and I would direct attention to standing order 113, which says:

> No important amendment may be proposed to any private bill, in a committee of the whole house, or at the third reading of the bill, unless one day's notice of the same has been given.

This amendment now before the house changes the name of the company, so I believe it should stand as a notice of motion to be considered when the bill comes up again.

The CHAIRMAN: Notice of this amendment has appeared in the votes and proceedings for the required time, so it is quite in order.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 2 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

On section 5—Objects.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the promoter of this bill give some explanation with regard to subsection "b" of section 5, which is as follows:

> Notwithstanding anything contained in the Interest Act, and the Money Lenders Act, and in section 63 (c) of the Loan Companies Act—

I should like the hon. gentleman to explain what that means, in order that we may know exactly what we are doing.

Mr. HEPBURN: I am not entirely familiar with this bill. It was discussed in the banking and commerce committee and I understand it has been endorsed by the Superintendent of Insurance. I believe the company is to lend money on second mortgages, and probably for that reason they cannot be bound down as other companies are.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I submit that there are many members of the house who have not had an opportunity of attending the meetings of the committee which considered this bill, and I think someone should be here to explain any of the sections which may require explanation. Inasmuch as there apparently is no one here, I would move that the committee rise and report progress.

The CHAIRMAN: All those in favour will please say, "yea."

Mr. HAY: Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN: The motion is not debatable.

Motion agreed to.

Progress reported.

NIAGARA FALLS MEMORIAL BRIDGE COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 14, to incorporate the Niagara Falls Memorial Bridge Company—Mr. Pettit—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. PETTIT: I move that the bill be reported.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I find myself unalterably opposed to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN: The motion is not debatable.

Bill reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Mr. CHAPLIN: Next sitting of the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: It cannot be read now.

Mr. CANNON: The bill has been amended in committee and therefore it cannot be read a third time now.

Mr. SPEAKER: Standing order 77 reads:

All amendments made in committee are reported by the chairman to the house, which shall receive the same forthwith. After report the bill is open to debate and amendment, before it is ordered for third reading. But when a bill is reported without amendment it is forthwith ordered to be read a third time at such time as may be appointed by the house.

The bill having been amended in committee, it cannot be read a third time now.

Mr. CHAPLIN: There are already on the order paper amendments for this bill.

Mr. SPEAKER: The bill having been amended in committee and having been reported as such, it cannot be read a third time now. I am deciding in favour of the hon. gentleman. Next sitting of the house.

BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF CANADA

The house resumed from April 10 consideration in committee of Bill No. 43, respecting the Bell Telephone Company of Canada.—Mr. Edwards (Ottawa).—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Mr. MORIN (St. Hyacinthe-Rouville): I beg to move, Mr. Chairman, that the bill be reported.

Mr. CHURCH: I have an amendment to that bill, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: House in committee on Bill No. 43, respecting the Bell Telephone Company of Canada.

Mr. MORIN (St. Hyacinthe-Rouville): I beg to move that the bill be reported.

Mr. CHURCH: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I have an amendment to this particular bill in the votes and proceedings of April last.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. When the hon. gentleman first rose the bill was not then before the committee. When the bill was properly before the committee, the hon. member who was looking after it moved that the bill be reported. Is it the pleasure of the committee that the bill be reported?

Mr. CHURCH: I rise to a point of order. I moved an amendment the other night, and at nine o'clock the amendment was still before the chair when time expired. The bill went to the bottom of the list, and it is up again to-night. I had not completed my forty minutes when I spoke the other evening; I had spoken only 38 minutes of that time. I had not finished, I was then speaking to the amendment.

Mr. MORIN (St. Hyacinthe-Rouville): You completed your forty miutes, and I made a motion following.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I think the point of order taken by the hon. member for Toronto Northwest is well taken, that he had not taken his full time. So far as the bill not being before the committee is concerned, there ought to be a rule of this house obliging the hon. gentleman who occupies the position of chairman to sit with his face absolutely facing that clock and not turning one hair's breadth more to the right than to the left. Otherwise it is a question of which can jump the quicker. I am not saying that I agree with the position taken by the hon. member for Toronto Northwest, but I say that every hon. member of this house is entitled to a square deal, and I do not consider that he is getting a square deal in this matter.

Mr. MORIN (St. Hyacinthe-Rouville): The hon. gentleman had already spoken forty minutes, and when nine o'clock struck he had finished his remarks. The committee then reported progress without any amendment.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): On that point I merely wish to say that the only evidence we have is a statement by the hon. member across the way and a statement to the contrary by the hon. member for Toronto Northwest. If the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Rouville wants to back up his assertion, let him produce the records to show that the chair called time.

The CHAIRMAN: I think this confusion has come about from the fact that the house copy of the bill is not at the table at the moment.

Mr. CHURCH: A motion was made, and it is in the votes and proceedings, in April, but the Speaker ruled that before I could move my amendment the bill had to go in committee. I had not finished at nine o'clock. The Speaker was in the chair, and he ruled that the bill had to go into committee. That is recorded in the votes and proceedings. Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, I would point out to you that the clock is striking nine.

The CHAIRMAN: Under the circumstances I think the committee cannot proceed as the house copy of the bill has been mislaid, and it is not on the table.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I would call your attention, Mr. Chairman, to the fact that it is nine o'clock.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT ACT AMENDMENT

The house in committee on Bill No. 288, to amend the Soldier Settlement Act.—Mr. Forke.—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—No patent to issue until amount owing to board is repaid.

Mr. BOYS: Before the house rose at six o'clock the hon. member for Quebec South had made an explanation in answer to what I and my hon. friend from Vancouver-Burrard had suggested regarding this section. At the moment I was somewhat impressed by what he said, but I am given to understand now that in all the contracts the land to which the department and the government look for security is named, and if the land is named, that should afford the department ample security. Therefore I think that the object of the committee and of the minister himself would be gained by repealing the clause entirely, leaving it to the department and the government to look to the land included in that agreement, and to any other land that may be included in any future agreement when further loans may be made.

Mr. FORKE: Where the soldier has taken up a homestead some time after the money was loaned on his first parcel of land, and a further loan is made on the security of that homestead, then the amount of money loaned should stand against the homestead because the loan was made on the further security he had to offer. That is what section 26 as it now stands is intended to cover.

Mr. CLARK: Does the minister suggest that further moneys are advanced from time to time without taking any written security whatever?

Mr. FORKE: I expect so. I do not know that anything is done if money is loaned on the security of that land.

Mr. CLARK: I think the minister misunderstands my question. It is suggested here that further moneys are advanced from time to time after the original loan was made. There is no question surely that when the original moneys are advanced a security in the form of an agreement or mortgage is taken. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. FORKE: Yes.

Mr. CLARK: Then I believe it is suggested that subsequently, for the purpose of acquiring stock or perhaps an additional piece of land, further moneys are advanced. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. FORKE: Yes.

Mr. CLARK: It is now suggested that in order to make that stock or land which is subsequently acquired security for the further advance, we must preserve this section of the act, because otherwise the government would not have any security. I cannot believe that that money would be advanced without a further agreement or mortgage which would make the stock or additional land security for the moneys so advanced. If that is so, then there is no necessity whatever for this section. This section can be repealed quite safely, and in the future the man can come before the department and bargain for the additional moneys required, putting up as security the stock or additional land which he may have in his possession.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): But my hon. friend is forgetting, is he not, that the title to the homestead land is in the Department of the Interior. The precaution taken here is simply by statute to provide that the Department of the Interior shall not issue a patent on land included in the loan for which the settler can give no instrument that would be valid for the loan.

Mr. BENNETT: No valid security.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes. Therefore it is necessary in the statute itself to mention the land held by the Department of the Interior, that is, crown land.

Mr. CLARK: I quite understand that; but there must surely be some document entered into between the soldier and the department when the second loan is made. Am I correct in that?

Mr. FORKE: I think you are right.

Mr. CLARK: Then in that agreement surely this homestead, or whatever it may be, will be mentioned, and even although the man has not the legal right to pledge the homestead as security, notice can be given by the Soldier Settlement Board to the Department of the Interior not to issue the patent, or if issued, to send it to the board. Thereupon the charge is perfected and no statutory provision is necessary.

Mr. FORKE: I understand that the Soldier Settlement Board make a charge against that particular land, which is known as "charged land." When the patent is asked for it is not issued until that charge which has been registered against the land is paid off.

Mr. BOYS: The minister does not make it plain to me. Let us take a concrete case and reason it out. In one case the man owns the land and asks for a loan. He pledges his property to the department as security, and the department is protected. Now the minister takes another case where the man is a homesteader, and before he receives his patent he wants a loan. Cannot the department protect itself when making that loan by taking a mortgage? I do not think this section is as clear as it should be. In fact I think you are hurting the soldier by it.

Mr. POWER: How are we hurting the soldier? We certainly are not making him worse off than he was before.

Mr. BOYS: I rather think we may be. My friend has said that after seven or eight lawyers had tackled it they could not agree among themselves. Now we all seem to be of one mind; we want to help the soldier and to make the legislation definite. I do not think I can put it any plainer. I have dealt with the two classes; one where the man owns the land, borrows money and gives the land as security.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is freehold.

Mr. BOYS: Certainly. The other class is where he has not the freehold; the title is in the crown.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is in the ownership of the Department of the Interior for the crown. It is not the property of the Soldier Settlement Board.

Mr. BOYS: In that event there is no question whatever that the soldier cannot give any security.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, he can give security to the extent of his interest in the land.

Mr. BOYS: Very well; that is done by agreement, and the moment you give the crown notice of that it is binding. This section is useless. I venture to say that my friend from Quebec South (Mr. Power) could draft a section which would be much more easily construed. He must admit that this is very doubtful.

Mr. POWER: No, I do not admit that this section is very doubtful at all. I did say that we had considerable trouble in drafting it. I understand it, but my difficulty is in making it clear to my hon. friends. I understand what we had in mind when we drafted it, and it covers the point we were then considering.

Mr. ARTHURS: That was in your head, not in the bill.

[Mr. Boys.]

Mr. POWER: Partly. The trouble is I cannot communicate what is in my head to thicker heads opposite! I apologize for that remark. I understand the point made by my hon. friend from Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Clark), and also by my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. Boys), that it would be better to repeal section 26 altogether.

Mr. BOYS: Yes.

Mr. POWER: As a matter of fact that was the first suggestion of the drafting committee in the report.

Mr. BOYS: The first suggestion is generally the best.

Mr. POWER: If the hon. gentleman cares to read the report he will find it suggested that section 26 be repealed. While we were studying it later with the officers of the Soldier Settlement Board and with several members of the house who are familiar with the operations of the board, the question arose whether or not if we repealed section 26 we would not be going too far in taking away security from the crown.

Mr. BOYS: Will you explain that?

Mr. POWER: I understand my hon. friend's point. There is a direct obligation over and above the statutory one. We are in agreement up to this point, I take it. In endeavouring to repeal the statutory agreement we found that we had gone too far, in that we had lifted the mortgage from land which really should be subject to it under the terms of the contract.

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. POWER: Yes. The man makes a contract; he goes to the board and obtains an advance of money on the strength of the security which he has in his two parcels of land.

Mr. BOYS: And that certainly binds both him and the land.

Mr. POWER: That binds him—

Mr. BOYS: And the land too.

Mr. POWER: Contractually—

Mr. BOYS: It binds both the man and his land.

Mr. CLARK: And any interest there may be in it.

Mr. POWER: And any interest or equity there may be in the land.

Mr. BOYS: Quite so.

Mr. POWER: But it was in order to save the board from having to take proceedings on that contract that we retained the charge on the land—the statutory obligation. The reason will appear later on in the discussion of another section. The Soldier Settlement Board, though it does sometimes foreclose under the statutory charge, and has as a matter of fact sold lands under the enactment, has not taken action in the courts to obtain judgment and enforce the written agreement or contract. Apparently the board has always been reluctant to do this and I suppose it still is, so much so that it made representations to the members of the drafting committee with respect to the deficiencies. The idea was not to abandon altogether their recourse under the contract with regard to deficiencies, because that might permit fraud or allow a person with fraudulent intent to get something which he had no right to. But the information we had was to the effect that this contract has never been enforced, so that it was thought well to leave the statutory guarantee in. I do not know whether I have made clear the intention.

Mr. BOYS: Does my hon. friend suggest that the statutory right is any higher than the contract of the man himself?

Mr. POWER: It involves much less trouble.

Mr. BOYS: I cannot see that. I agree with everything that my hon. friend has said except on the last point. He admits that the right exists against the land and the man, both, and if you passed fifty statutes you could not give the department more than that. What therefore is the sense of retaining the statutory provision?

Mr. POWER: Because they keep the patent to the land.

Mr. BOYS: Of course they do; they keep it anyway.

Mr. POWER: My information is that under the agreement they do not.

Mr. CLARK: But they can.

Mr. POWER: Under the agreement they do not. Apparently the agreement covered only the loan on the land, whereas the government of the day thought it well to go further and have a statutory charge on the land. We are lifting the statutory charge in every case. The statutory charge that existed in 1926 we are lifting in every case except that in which the man gives his new land as a guarantee for loans in connection with both it and the old. The former statute gave them a lot more.

Mr. GEARY: Will the hon. member tell me this: Is there any charge against the land subsequently obtained in connection with any one of these transactions except the statutory charge contained in the old section 26?

Mr. POWER: Yes.

Mr. GEARY: Are you sure?

Mr. POWER: I think there is.

Mr. GEARY: Outside section 26?

Mr. RALSTON: I do not know anything about the Dominion Lands Act and therefore I am as well qualified to speak about it as anybody else. There seem to be three transactions involved. One transaction, in section 18, relates to the sale of stock and equipment, where security is provided—a statutory charge. There is another under section 19, where the charge is somewhat different; it is a first charge on the land of the settler or the land sold to him by the board. That indebtedness is created by advances for improvements—not advances in connection with the purchase of the land itself, but for improvements. Then section 25 provides for advances for the discharge of incumbrances This is the only section in which there is a specific charge on Dominion lands held by the settler. Under sections 18 and 19 there is no specific charge on Dominion lands which the settler held at the time the advance was made or the indebtedness created. But apparently section 26 has been introduced for the purpose of creating what I may call an omnibus charge not only on land then owned by the settler but on after-acquired land; and what is sought to be done by this amendment is to do away with that charge on after-acquired land. The object is to see that the board's security shall be preserved in so far as there is a charge on land owned by the settler at the time the indebtedness was incurred or the advance made. But as to the Dominion land which he may acquire in the future, there is to be no charge.

Mr. GEARY: Except under 26.

Mr. RALSTON: Except under 26, and, I may point out to my hon. friend, under 25 as well, which seems to provide for the very same thing. Section 26 provides for a charge not only in respect of money owing as a result of any sale made to the settler by the board, but otherwise, by reason of the exercise by the board of any of its powers under this act, and also in respect of advances made by the board pursuant to the act. It seems to cover all possible forms of indebtedness which could be created under the act as between the board and the settler. It says, "You shall have a charge not only on Dominion lands at present owned but on lands hereafter to be owned"; and I take it that the object of the amendment—and apparently it was the object of the committee—is to do away with that charge on future acquired Dominion lands, leaving the board with the security on the lands owned by the settler at the time the loan was made or the obligation created.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister is not quite correct in his interpretation in the matter. The intention was to make it retroactive.

Mr. RALSTON: It is retroactive in the sense that if there is any indebtedness outstanding and there has been no settlement between the board and the settler, the charge which is created by section 26 shall not apply to Dominion lands acquired in the future.

Mr. McGIBBON: In the past a soldier wanting to homestead would apply to the government for a loan for stock, and the government took not only the original security but his stock and notes as well. Is that correct?

Mr. RALSTON: That is correct under section 26. That is one of the transactions covered by that section, under which the board had not only the security of the stock itself, but the security in connection with the land which he owned and Dominion land which he might acquire in the future.

Mr. McGIBBON: It was the intention that the homestead land should be free; that is to say, the original farm plus his stock should be sufficient security for the additional loan, without taking in everything else. Is that right? Does it apply in that case?

Mr. RALSTON: I think so.

Mr. McGIBBON: I want to be sure.

Mr. RALSTON: It applies only to Dominion land which was owned by the settler before the advance was made; that must be what my hon. friend has in mind. If the settler owned land at the time the advance was made, the charge applies; if the land is acquired later the charge does not apply.

Mr. McGIBBON: That is exactly the point; all this land will be still mortgaged. Our contention was that that advance was for stock; his original holding plus the stock should have been enough security without mortgaging these homesteads, and these mortgages should be lifted.

Mr. RALSTON: I can only say that there are three kinds of security, as I was trying to point out; there are three different sections, and they deal with securities in varying terms. Then along comes section 26 and gathers all the land together as security. This section does away with that so far as it affects property later acquired.

Mr. ARTHURS: To a large extent I agree with the hon. member for Quebec South. I know he has had great difficulty in understanding this section, because earlier in the debate he said he had consulted ten or twelve lawyers before he really understood it. To me this section is about as clear as mud. I think the government have the right intention, as far as this section goes; the intention of the committee was that the soldier should be relieved with regard to any land which he held in addition to the land previously mortgaged to the government. This has been more or less restricted by this section, since it does not apply to cases where men had homesteads before receiving a second loan, although in many cases the second loan was expended on the homestead itself. I am not opposed to protecting the government to that extent, but the main objection to the section is that it is not clear and distinct so that everyone can understand it without trouble. A second objection to the whole bill is that it does not go as far as the committee intended it to go. There was a special provision made by the committee, unless I am mistaken, providing that in cases where the assets of a defaulter or a man who had not made good on a farm were not sufficient to pay his indebtedness, he should be released from any future obligation to the government and that no further action could be taken against him. That is most important, because instead of homesteading land a man might purchase other land, and he would always have this claim of the government hanging over him no matter how long he stayed on the land or how hard he worked. I think the act should be amended to include all the provisions recommended by the committee.

Mr. RALSTON: That was the way the report was put before me, and I was given to understand, and I am within the hearing of members of the committee from both sides of the house, that on further consideration it was thought that the repeal of the whole section would be going too far, in that it would wipe out the security for loans made for other purposes besides the purchase of land itself.

Mr. ARTHURS: I did not question that point; I said I was in favour of that restriction which is now made. But there is the other point which has to do with a man being held liable for an indebtedness after he has been cleaned out.

Mr. RALSTON: The repeal of section 26 would wipe out the security not only for indebtedness in respect to land purchased from the board but also for loans for stock and equipment and for improvements, and it was thought that security should be retained provided that it consisted of land owned at the time the advance was made. I understand that my hon. friend does not object to that. With regard to the deficiency my hon. friend is right; I see there is a provision in the statute covering deficiencies, but I understand that that is never invoked except in cases of fraud, and I understand further that the committee reported themselves perfectly satisfied that this section should be invoked in those cases. That is a matter of practice, and I make that statement within the hearing of the minister.

Mr. ARTHURS: We believe it should be in the statute rather than a matter of practice.

Mr. POWER: That is what I was trying to explain a moment ago. As my hon. friend says, it is quite true that the committee was of opinion that these deficiencies should be wiped out and that the man who made a failure should be allowed to start with a clean sheet, but my hon. friend will find that under the act that charge would have applied to lands. There is a charge in the act now which applies to lands which he may obtain after he has been cleaned out. Under the Soldier Settlement Act he cannot make a fresh start unless he first pays back everything he owed to the board, and in addition to that under his contractual obligations, even if he left the land and opened a shop in the city, the board could follow him. It was found very inconvenient to do that; in fact, it was found impossible, and no case has arisen where that action has been taken by the board. We could have easily wiped out the deficiency when there was a question of new land being taken up, and I think we have done that by the new section 26. Any land the settler may take up now will not be charged with his debt; he may take it up now or after he has failed and has settled with the board. The man who goes into the city and opens a shop is not protected in any way by any of our amendments.

Mr. ARTHURS: But the settler who buys an adjoining farm to make a new start is not protected either.

Mr. POWER: Yes; we have wiped out section 26.

Mr. ARTHURS: That applies only to crown lands.

Mr. POWER: I think the hon. gentleman is right, but when the settler obtains a patent that becomes his own land and is therefore private land.

Mr. ARTHURS: But suppose he purchases private land?

Mr. POWER: Then it is not crown land.

Mr. ARTHURS: He would not be protected against that.

Mr. POWER: I believe that is right, but he is protected to the extent that the board will not sue him; it has not been the practice of the board to institute actions of this kind. Unless we pass legislation stating that the board no longer should have the right to enforce obligations under the act by appealing to the court, we must allow this section to remain in the statute. It must not be forgotten that we have to protect the government against fraud, and in view of the fact that it has not been the practice of the board to go before the courts to obtain judgment it was thought wise to leave with the board power to take this action in cases of fraud. If we placed an amendment in the act stating that this action could be taken only when there was fraudulent intent it would be necessary for the board to prove fraud, so we thought it best to leave these provisions in the act with the clear understanding that no soldier settlement board will take action except in cases of fraud, and in so doing I think the soldier is amply protected.

Mr. CLARK: May I ask a question? As I interpret the remarks of my hon. friend, they are to this effect: He leaves the section as drafted in the act. The department can take the law in its own hands and retain the man's patent, or retain the man's interest in the land; the man has no defence. If the section is not there, it may be necessary at some time for the department to take action in the courts, in which case the man would have a defence. Leaving the section in as it is, the department could take the law in its own hands.

Mr. POWER: They have not taken any action.

Mr. BOYS: I do not propose to repeat what I have said, but I want to read the explanatory note on another feature. This appears on the right hand side of the sheet:

It is also the committee's opinion that no deficiency which may remain on the resale of the lands or other property of a former settler whose agreement with the board has been terminated should be charged to or collectible from the said former settler, except in such cases where fraud or intent to defraud is shown.

It has been suggested that such a thing has never been done, and that such a thing never will be done. I do not think there is anybody in this house who has the right to speak for what may be done in the future. That will depend, no doubt, upon the contractual rights. What I rise to say is this: There certainly is nothing whatever in section 26 of this bill which in any way carries into effect the protection that is given the soldier by the explanatory note that I have just read. I might say further that I have been told that this particular bill was never considered by the committee as a whole, but that it was considered by a sub-committee. It does seem to me that the proper course to take is for this bill to go back to the committee for further consideration.

Mr. POWER: The report was read to the committee and concurred in.

Mr. ARTHURS: I want to say that the member for North Simcoe (Mr. Boys) was mistaken.

Mr. BOYS: I was speaking of the bill itself.

Mr. ARTHURS: The bill would not be before the committee.

Mr. BOYS: That is what I am saying.

Mr. ARTHURS: The member for North Simcoe was taking up the point I brought forward a few minutes ago. We want to relieve the man of any deficiency which might exist, but I believe this should be statutory, and not at the whim of this or any other government. This land settlement scheme was for the purpose of placing soldiers on the land as settlers; we all agree on that. We are anxious to keep as many men as we possibly can on the land of the various provinces of Canada. If a man is sold out under this act and still believes that he can go on and make a success, either by the purchase of another farm, with the assistance of his friends or otherwise, or by locating land under the homesteads acts of the various western provinces, or the provinces in the east, that man should not have the threat held over him all the time that an action for the deficiency between the amount he agreed to pay and the amount his land brought under a forced sale will be brought by the soldier settlement board. That is the only point I am trying to make, and I think the minister would be well advised to make it statutory instead of following the practice which we believe is followed. It would be a great relief to many of these men to know they could not be proceeded against except in the case of fraud.

Mr. ESLING: May I ask the minister a question with respect to the future operation of this act? Are there any advances being made now, or is there any provision for advances to returned men toward the purchase either of land or of equipment?

Mr. FORKE: No, there are no advances made.

Mr. ESLING: And there have not been any made since 1924, I understand?

Mr. FORKE: No.

Mr. ESLING: Why talk about the future? Is there going to be any provision made for this year? I have two or three applications from returned men who desire assistance, either in the purchase of land or in the purchase of equipment. Is it the intention of the government to make any provision for the returned men by way of advances?

Mr. FORKE: No, there has been nothing done since 1924; no money has been voted for that purpose.

Mr. ESLING: But have you made any provision for the future?

Mr. FORKE: No, I do not expect so.

Mr. CAHAN: I have listened to the discussion, and it seems to me that the clause might be simplified and carry out the intent of the committee—an intent which has been expressed by the hon. member for Quebec South and by members on each side of the house—if it were made to read something like this:

When a settler obtains Dominion lands, whether by soldier grant or otherwise, such lands shall be subject to a first charge in respect of any advance thereafter made to him by the board, pursuant to this act—

Then follow the closing words:

—and no patent shall be issued to such settler for such lands until the amount of such advance, with accrued interest, has been fully repaid.

If you bear in mind the fact that you wish to secure future advances, and future advances only, upon these Dominion lands so acquired, it seems to me that you might express it in a more simple and concise form, and prevent any possibility of such misunderstandings as have arisen in this discussion. It seems to me that the clause might be redrafted and made so simple and so clear as to obviate the criticisms which have been made during the course of the discussion this evening.

Mr. POWER: Will the hon. gentleman read that again, please?

Mr. CAHAN:

When a settler obtains Dominion lands, whether by soldier grant or otherwise, such lands shall be subject to a first charge in respect of any advance thereafter made to him by the board, pursuant to this act, and no patent shall be issued to such settler for such lands until the amount of such advance, with accrued interest, has been fully repaid.

That seems to me to carry out the intent of the hon. member for Quebec South.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): While I was not a member of the committee I have discussed the matter at some length with members of the committee. Am I wrong in coming to this conclusion that what the committee really intended to do was to free Dominion lands, or crown lands, from the mortgage issued on the freehold, if at the date of the issuing of the mortgage, or subsequent to that date, the settler acquired those lands? That is what I think the committee had in mind—that the mortgage should apply only to the lands upon which it was issued, and not on the Dominion lands acquired after the issuing of the mortgage. I do not think you have done that.

Mr. McGIBBON: No, we have not.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Am I right in supposing that?

Mr. POWER: Yes.

Mr. CAHAN: Did I not cover that in my suggestion—"shall be subject to a first charge in respect of any advances thereafter made"? It does not apply to previous advances; it only secures the advances thereafter made to such settler by the board, pursuant to this act.

Mr. RALSTON: Does my hon. friend think that covers the case of an actual sale of lands by the board—not the advance of money, but the sale of lands? That is what is covered also in this section.

Mr. CAHAN: All I am suggesting is this simple way of expressing it.

Mr. RALSTON: It certainly saves a lot of words.

Mr. CAHAN: And it might save a lot of circumlocution. I suggest that it might be reconsidered. This committee seems to be unanimous in its intent, and it should be easy to find some form of expression which will cover it clearly.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Mr. Chairman, there are two points that we have just been discussing. The first is whether or not the mortgage, under the provisions of the amendment, will be freed from the crown lands acquired after the mortgage was issued, and, secondly—

Mr. BOYS: That is not disputed. How could you possibly free by statute lands upon which the man himself has a mortgage?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We are not speaking of that at all. Let me try to make it clear. As I gathered from the report of the committee what they are desirous of doing is this. Under section 26 as it is at present any land owned by the settler and even his canary and his cat come under the provision of the mortgage. What the committee want to do is this, that any land acquired from the crown by homesteading or otherwise by the settler after the execution of the loan should not be covered by the mortgage.

Mr. BOYS: Quite so.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I doubt if they have done that. Let us endeavour to get the matter clear so that we can amend the act properly. The second thing the committee desires is that it be made statutory, that except in case of fraud, he shall not be proceeded against for the deficiency.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): That being so, does the minister suggest that section 26 covers that? I am directing this question to the Minister of the Interior, he having elucidated the matter better than it has been done so far at this sitting. Is the department under section 26 prevented from suing a soldier for the money he owes?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): He can be sued. If we could get into our laymen's minds exactly what the committee want, then we had better take some time to redraft the bill properly.

Mr. BOYS: We all know what we want, and most of us feel that it is not to be found in the provisions of the bill. We are told that the committee reported on certain things. This is the report of the committee:

> Your committee therefore recommends that an act be passed this session as follows:
> An act to amend the Soldier Settlement Act.
> His Majesty by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons enacts as follows:
> 1. Subsection 4 of section 22 of the Soldier Settlement Act, being chapter 188 of the revised statutes of 1927, is amended by striking out all words following the word "settler" in the sixth line thereof.
> 2. Section 26 of the said act is repealed.

I need not read the remainder. The bill that is before us—and I say this with all respect to the hon. member for Parry Sound —was never before that committee. The bill that was before that committee and the bill which it recommended is absolutely different from the bill now before the house. The committee recommended the repeal of section 26, and we find the extraordinary situation that although we have the committee recommending that repeal, a bill that has not been before them is introduced to carry into effect their report, but doing the very opposite. It may be intended to have the same purpose but it certainly has not. In view of the fact that the bill now before this committee was never before the special committee that dealt with the matter, would it not be wise that it should be referred to the committee for consideration so that some provision may be inserted which will protect the soldier in regard to the explanatory note which I read, and which I need not read again? It is not in the bill now, and if the intention is to relieve the soldier from any deficiency there may be, let us have something in the statute; do not let us leave it to the whim or caprice of some future minister or some official of the department. If you intend to give the soldier that right, to discharge him from that obligation, let us put it in the statute.

Mr. POWER: My hon. friend is quite right in what he has just said with regard to the report of the committee. I will go further. The report of the committee recommended that the Soldier Settlement Act be amended in this respect:

> Subsection 4 of section 22 of the Soldier Settlement Act, being chapter 188 of the revised statutes of 1927, is amended by striking out all words following the word "settler" in the sixth line thereof.

That covers the deficiency.

Mr. BOYS: That is just what I read a minute ago.

[Mr. Boys.]

Mr. POWER: Section 26 we have already discussed. Section 27 also had references to charges on the land. In order that my hon. friend may not have any doubt as to the bona fides of the Minister of the Interior—

Mr. BOYS: I have none.

Mr. POWER: —or of the minister in charge of the administration of this act—

Mr. BOYS: I am not expressing any.

Mr. POWER: —may I tell him this, that the report of the committee passed the committee? The suggested amendments were looked over by the officers in charge of the land settlement board and they found that some of the amendments were not workable. With all due respect to all the lawyers on the committee, although we knew what we wanted, we had not arrived at a workable solution. For instance, in regard to the amendment to section 68, while I was discussing the matter with the Minister of National Defence, he pointed out that it was all very well to provide for a revaluation of certain lands, but we had not made any arrangements for a basis on which the revaluation could be made. Therefore we were obliged to consult with the officers of the Soldier Settlement Board in order to find out how we could arrive at a reasonable basis. That has been done by the new amendment to the act.

The amendments that have reference to deficiencies and to the mortgage were thoroughly discussed by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Thorson), the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. McLean), the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) and myself. We met the officers of the Soldier Settlement Board and the law officers of the crown and on Friday night after continuous discussion we arrived at the drafting which is now before the committee. We were not in any way influenced, I can assure the committee, by either of the ministers, and our endeavour was to put before the house something which would be comprehensive. Evidently we did not succeed. I would suggest to the minister that he allow this clause to stand and I for one am perfectly willing to agree to this. We cannot ask that the bill be sent back to the committee because the committee is discharged, the report having been brought before the house and concurred in. But I think some of the committee members on the other side of the house and others would be quite willing to volunteer to join in a conference for the purpose of discussing the matter. I know members on this side of the house who are interested in land settlement will do likewise, and in view of the fact that we all have in mind the same thing; that there is no dispute with regard to the principle, I think by to-morrow or the next day we may arrive at some amendment which will be satisfactory to all parties. Perhaps the minister will accept that suggestion.

Mr. FORKE: I trusted to about half a dozen lawyers to draw up the bill and I now find there is a great deal of difficulty in regard to it. I move that the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. NEILL: Might I repeat the suggestion I made before six o'clock that if the section is going to be amended it should read that when a settler—

The CHAIRMAN (Sir Eugene Fiset): This motion is not debatable.

Mr. POWER: By consent of the committee.

Mr. CLARK: I do not propose to discuss the motion, but may I draw the minister's attention—

The CHAIRMAN (Sir Eugene Fiset): The motion is not debatable.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY—DUMPING DUTY

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Hon. S. F. TOLMIE (Victoria, B.C.): I wish to move an amendment to this motion, Mr. Speaker, and in doing so, to draw the attention of the house to a very important matter, namely, the application of a dumping duty applicable to certain agricultural products that are imported into Canada from time to time.

It must be realized by all that to build up the agriculture of Canada we must establish and maintain stable markets in which the producer can dispose of his products at a profit. In Canada we find that our crops are divided practically into two divisions. Some of our crops are those which keep well and can be shipped long distances, and owing to that and to our soil and climatic conditions as well, and to the condition of the world's market and the shortage of supply, we can put these crops on the market at a profit. Owing to the very nature of these products we can also hold them from time to time until we have an opportunity to sell them to the very best advantage. On the other hand, we are producing soft fruits and vegetables of various kinds, poultry and poultry products, and so forth. With regard to the fruits and vegetables, they are of such a nature that an immediate sale must be obtained for them; otherwise a loss is experienced.

The United States, located to the south of the border line, and enjoying a very much earlier season, is able to dispose of her early products to great advantage in the large, populous and wealthy centres in that country, and a little later on, when her markets begin to be satisfied, she looks for other suitable markets in which to dump her surplus products. These products are shipped north into Canada in preference to forcing them on the home markets in the United States and spoiling those markets. These products come into Canada in competition with the early crops in this country, and they have a very serious effect on the results obtained by our producers. We have as an illustration of that the poultry business, the production of eggs, and so forth, which has now reached a very large figure in this country. We find that in California they have spring weather in December, January and February. when the poultry down there are producing their egg crop at the very lowest cost of the whole season, while the producers in Canada have to house their fowl and keep them at much greater expense, and are producing at the very highest peak of cost. Then we have in British Columbia a country that is milder than eastern Canada, a province that is especially well-fitted for the production of poultry and poultry products. We can ship to the big markets in eastern Canada, such as Montreal and Toronto and other places, at a season of the year before their local poultry have begun to produce at a profit. That presents a tremendous opportunity for the British Columbian to build up a great trade in the east, but when he ships his produce there, unless protected by the dumping clause as he has been for some short time, he finds that when his produce reaches that market it meets with the surplus production from the southern states, their end of the season crop, when their produce has to be sold very cheap, and the result is that the market is demoralized to a great extent.

As a striking illustration in fruit, take apricots. We have California, Oregon and some other states to the south all producing apricots. They sell their best quality apricots in the large centres of the United States, securing a high price for them, and then when it comes to disposing of their surplus crop, instead of spoiling their local market by forcing their sale, lowering prices to do so, they ship them north into Canada, and a great advertising campaign is carried on to help dispose of them. They are several weeks ahead of our producers in the Okanagan, and when our first class product reaches the market we find that the shelves of the housewife have already been filled to a great extent by American trash. It was to meet such a condition as that, that the dumping clause was first introduced by Mr. Fielding in 1907. It provided that the specific duty was not to exceed 15 per cent under any conditions. But in 1920 it was discovered that the dumping clause had been evaded to a great extent, and that it had been of really no protection to the fruit and vegetable growers in the way it was being applied up to that time. In 1921 it was amended and the duty was based on the cost of production, so that a reasonable figure was charged on these products from the south, and the protection thus received by the producers in Canada was found by them to be very advantageous indeed. In 1922 this was repealed, and clause 47a was added to the Customs Act, whereby the duty was based on the fair market value, such value being fixed by the Minister of Customs. Very little action was taken under this clause for some time, and finally an order in council was passed authorizing the minister actually to fix the various estimates of what a fair charge was. This list was prepared and published, and gave great satisfaction to the dealers throughout the country because it established stability to a certain extent. In 1926, and later, it was generally enforced, with excellent results indeed. The experience with the dumping clause has been that it has not increased the prices of the products to the local consumer. We have found that by stabilizing our home market it has had the effect of encouraging greater production, with the result that our home production soon meets our home requirements, and as far as prices are concerned the competition between the various producers in this country regulates that feature.

The value of a dumping clause depends, first of all, very greatly upon its continuity and steady enforcement, so that a man is enabled to figure from one year to another, whether he is a buyer of these products, a dealer, or the producer on the land.

Secondly, we must have a fair conception of the market value. We progressed very well with the dumping clause, and it was found very advantageous to the producers, but on the 19th of March last, 1928, we found that this dumping clause was cancelled by the government. This has had a demoralizing effect and has given rise to a great deal of discussion throughout the whole of this country from the Atlantic to the Pacific. This was clearly shown the other day at the meeting held in this building when a large delegation from all parts of the Dominion met members of the cabinet and discussed this matter very fully.

Now, the fixing of values on the importation of certain commodities into Canada is not entirely new. I remember years ago after there had been a very heavy settlement of the ranching districts of Oregon, Washington and Idaho, that a large number of horse ranches were closed up owing to the depreciation in the value of the stock. These animals were shipped into Canada several hundred at a time. I remember inspecting one train load of over three hundred head. Some of those horses on their home ranges were not worth more than five or ten dollars a head. To meet this situation our tariff was amended so that those animals were valued at not less than fifty dollars per head, thus assuring the payment of a duty of $12 50 on each animal. That had a very excellent effect for it kept out of this country a lot of cheap breeding stock that would have been detrimental to the horse breeding of the Dominion.

The present situation is one of urgency. It should be dealt with immediately. Some of these vegetable crops are now coming on the market. By the handling of these crops with a little care, by stabilizing our market, we can greatly increase our production not only along the lines I have mentioned but along other lines that are of importance to Canada. To be effective we must have quick action, otherwise the market is broken before the remedy can be applied. In addition to this, we must have such legislation as will anticipate the coming of various shipments. If we have to wait until a shipment arrives at the boundary line before we can get an order in council passed, I am afraid the procedure will be too slow to be effective. What we want is to be in a position immediately to meet any shipments which it is intended to dump here and take the requisite steps to exclude them except under certain conditions. I repeat, the case is most urgent, and I hope after the interview which the government had with the delegates from all parts of the country a few days ago, they fully realize the importance of speedy action and will take a sympathetic view of the whole situation.

Before reading the amendment I may refer to the fact that in the course of his remarks the other day to the delegation the right hon. Prime Minister said, referring to hot house tomatoes, asparagus and canteloup, that some of these were not even produced in this country. I would point out to the right hon. gentleman that that is not exactly so. We are producing asparagus of excellent quality in many parts of Ontario and also in British Columbia. As to hothouse tomatoes, they are produced of the very highest quality in British Columbia and in the east, and under present conditions without the protection of a dumping clause they are forced to come into competition with tomatoes sent up from the southern states, the product of Mexican peon labour. With regard to canteloup, I think growers in the east have established a great reputation for what is known as the Montreal melon. I do know that in the southern Okanagan valley our returned soldiers are producing a canteloup at Oliver, British Columbia. It is very thin of rind, rich in flavour, and second to none. Once you try an Oliver canteloup you are eager to order a case. I am quite sure that if this district is given an opportunity it will soon build up an extensive trade in the Oliver canteloup from one end of Canada to the other.

I beg to move, Mr. Speaker, seconded by Mr. Charters:

That all the words after the word "that" be stricken out and the following substituted therefor:

In the opinion of this house the necessary action should be taken by the government forthwith to effectively control the importation into Canada, either on sale, or on consignment, of natural products of a class or kind produced in Canada under conditions which prejudicially or injuriously affect, or threaten to prejudicially or injuriously affect, the interests of Canadian producers.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I might say to the house that the government received no intimation whatever of the intention of the opposition to move this amendment until after the hon. member (Mr. Tolmie) who has just spoken was on his feet. It is customary, when an amendment is to be moved to the motion to go into committee of supply, particularly as in such a case it is equivalent to a motion of non-confidence in the government, that notice should be given in advance to the administration in order that the ministers who are immediately concerned will be certain of being in their places and in a position to make reply. I regret that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb), who was here a few minutes ago, has gone to another part of the building. Pending his return I shall say a few words with regard to the amendment.

The amendment implies that at the present time there is no power in the hands of the government to take action where necessary "forthwith to effectively control the importation into Canada, either on sale or on consignment, of natural products of a class or kind produced in Canada, under conditions which prejudicially or injuriously affect, or threaten to prejudicially or injuriously affect, the interests of Canadian producers." I may say that there is on the statute books a clause in one of the acts which was passed by this parliament some years ago designed to serve this very purpose. It is a part of the Customs Act and was designed for the express purpose of giving to the administration power to take action in case of necessity. I will read the clause, and I think hon. members will see at once that it almost parallels in its phraseology the terms of the amendment. Section 43 of the Customs Act provides:

If at any time it appears to the satisfaction of the governor in council on a report from the minister, that natural products of a class or kind produced in Canada are being imported into Canada, either on sale on on consignment, under such conditions as prejudicially or injuriously to affect the interests of Canadian producers, the governor in council may, in any case or class of cases, authorize the minister to value such goods for duty, notwithstanding any other provisions of this act, and the value so determined shall be held to be the fair market value thereof.

That clause has never been repealed. My hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Tolmie) has referred to a rather important delegation which, as he remarked, waited upon the government a few days ago, within the precincts of this chamber. The members of that delegation for the most part came here under the impression that the power just referred to had been taken away from the administration, and they were here to request that a new section should be enacted which would restore the power so repealed. They were somewhat surprised to learn that they had evidently been misinformed as to what had taken place with respect to the matters in which they were interested, and to learn that the power which resides in the governor in council and under which alone, during the past years, it has been possible to take action of the character referred to in the amendment of my hon. friend, still resides in the governor in council and has in no sense been affected by any action on the part of the administration.

Mr. LADNER: That is really the whole point of the debate. Does the Prime Minister say there is provision under the act giving authority to the governor in council to pass an order in council to apply the dumping duty? I am informed that the Department of Justice has ruled that no such power as this exists under section 6.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am not aware of the ruling to which my hon. friend refers. What I am aware of is the statute before me at the present time, and the clause which I have just read to the house is the clause in the Customs Act as it appears to-day. I would respectfully submit—

Mr. LADNER: The section to which the Prime Minister is referring is not linked up with the other section giving power to apply the dumping duty, and that is the fault in the whole thing.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I cannot enter into an argument with my hon. friend on matters in respect of which I cannot speak with authority or with full knowledge, but I can say to him that the section of the Customs Act which was framed for the purpose of preventing the importation of natural products of a class or kind produced in Canada, at rates which would be prejudicial to or which would injuriously affect such products in Canada, still remains on the statute, and the governor in council has authority to act under that section.

Mr. LADNER: And apply the dumping duty?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The governor in council has the power to fix the rate at which these goods are to be valued when coming into the country.

Mr. LADNER: But that merely makes it subject to an ad valorem duty; it does not make it incumbent on the governor in council to apply the dumping duty. That is the point of the debate.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: With respect to the importation of natural products from other countries at rates which would be prejudicial to the producers of Canada, the method which this parliament has said should be adopted as an effective means of preventing that sort of thing has been to give the governor in council in cases of emergent necessity power to fix the valuation at which these commodities shall be admitted by the Department of National Revenue. That means is provided in the statute at the present time; the power to exercise that right still resides in the governor in council. I submit therefore, with respect to the amendment moved by my hon. friend, that the necesity for such a motion does not appear inasmuch as the power rests already with the government for this express purpose. There is no doubt that there is wide misapprehension throughout the Dominion as to that power still residing in the government. Circulars were sent out from interested parties to horticultural organizations in different parts of the Dominion, which I gather created the impression that in some manner this power has been taken away from the administration; and the delegation to which my hon. friend refers waited upon the government with the express object of emphasizing the necessity for having that power restored. They were, as I have said, very much surprised when they were told that the power had not been taken away, but that it still resided in the governor in council.

I am informed by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler) that at the present time there are no representations before the Department of Customs with respect to any commodities coming into this country in a manner such as to necessitate action by the governor in council in accordance with the terms of the section of the Customs Act to which I have just referred. Should such a necessity arise, there is power for the governor in council to take action. And the governor in council proposes, as circumstances arise which appear to justify action under this clause, in keeping with the intention of parliament, to see that such action shall be taken as may be necessary. But I desire to make it very clear to this house that the governor in council does not purpose to usurp the powers of parliament with respect to fixing the rates of duty that should govern commodities coming into the country. The right to levy or fix customs duties, which are a form of taxation, is a right which no parliament that has any regard for British procedure will ever delegate to a governor in council or to an executive. So far as the collection or the imposition of customs duties is concerned, that is a responsibility for parliament; and when the government finds it necessary to impose additional customs duties on any class of products it will come to parliament and ask for the authority so to do. The government does not construe the clause to which I have referred as giving to the cabinet the right to fix duties, as the House of Commons would have the right to fix them. What it does construe the clauses as giving to the governor in council power to do is to meet emergent conditions, where producers of natural products in this country are placed at a disadvantage and prejudicially affected by situations, arising in other countries, which could not be foreseen and which are of a temporary character, and such as parliament would not likely provide against from one year's end to the other.

I say therefore, with respect to this motion, that the necessary authority has already been given by parliament to the governor in council to deal with the situation to which my hon. friend has referred. There is no way in which that power could be increased except by the decision of parliament itself to raise the duties which are to be levied on natural products coming into this country. I submit that the moment to consider that question is when the house is in committee of ways and means, with budget resolutions before it proposed by the Minister of Finance, and not by an amendment brought forward upon a motion to go into supply, which is the equivalent of a motion of want of confidence in the administration.

Mr. GOTT: I want to ask the Prime Minister one question. Is he aware of the fact that order in council No. 1088 did not increase the tariff on vegetables imported from the United States?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am sorry I have not in mind just what order in council 1088 is. I do not know the orders by number.

Mr. GOTT: The one we are discussing under 47a of the Customs Act.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

And Mr. Speaker proceeding to put the question:

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, before you proceeded to put the question the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) was on his feet.

Mr. CANNON: He can look after himself.

Mr. BENNETT: But other hon. gentlemen on this side wanted to speak.

Mr. PARENT: The hon. member can withdraw his feet whenever he likes.

Mr. SPEAKER: Does the hon. member for Weyburn desire to speak?

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): No.

Mr. SPEAKER: The spirit does not move the hon. member.

Mr. BENNETT: The point is this: The hon. member was on his feet and a member on our side was to follow, but Your Honour called the question.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question has not been put, and if any hon. member wishes to speak he may do so now.

Hon. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac-Addington): Mr. Speaker, I shall not take up very much of the time of the house in discussing this amendment, but I should like to call attention to the fact that this amendment expresses the opinion that the necessary action should be taken by the government forthwith —not after they have received certain notices and spent several days in consideration of the matters presented to them, but forthwith—with a view to protecting the interests of our producers. The amendment suggests that action should be taken forthwith to effectively control the importation into Canada, either on sale or on consignment, of natural products of a class or kind produced in Canada under conditions which prejudicially or injuriously affect—and I wish to emphasize the next words—or threaten to prejudicially or injuriously affect the interests of the Canadian producer. There are a few people in the constituency which I have the honour to represent who will be benefited by a resolution of this kind, and I would like to present to the house one or two reasons why action should be taken forthwith not only to protect our producers against the importation of goods now but to protect them against improper importations with which they are threatened.

Let us consider for a moment the advantages enjoyed by producers of these articles in the United States. If you go to the southern states you will find that they have the advantage of cheap Mexican and negro labour, and that the wages they pay are very much lower than those paid by Canadian producers. I am sure everyone will admit that the southern producer has a decided advantage in that respect. Then I point to a second advantage: The Canadian producer must be satisfied with the production of one crop during the year, but the southern producer is able to produce two or three crops, due to the more favourable climate. I have indicated two advantages which seem to me apparent as being enjoyed by the southern producer as against the producer in Canada, but there is still another point which must be considered. The American producer has three markets, two high price markets and one low price or medium price market, while the Canadian producer under existing conditions has only one market, which is a low price or medium price market. In the first place, the United States producer has the advantage of the high price which is paid when he first places his vegetables and fruits on the market. After a time producers in other parts of the United States compete with him and he gets the medium or low price market. The Canadian producer has no opportunity to compete in the high price American market, for the very good reason that Canadian products are not available at that time. When Canadian vegetables and fruits are brought to the Canadian market, and when the Canadian producer should be obtaining the high price which will make his business profitable, his products are thrown into competition with American products which have been on the American market for weeks. So I say the American producer, in addition to the advantages of cheap labour and climate which enable him to produce two or three crops in a season, has the further advantage of a home market in which a high price is paid for fresh products and in which he meets no Canadian competition; he has first entry into our market, securing the highest prices paid here, and therefore has two high price markets and one medium price market while the Canadian producer has to take a lower price for his products.

Let us apply this argument to strawberries. American strawberries appear on the Canadian market before our strawberries are ready, and they command a high price here after having also obtained a high price in their own country. By the time our strawberries are ready for the market the American strawberries have broken the market so that our producers must take a low or medium price for what they have to sell. Again, by the time our Canadian strawberries are ready for the market the American raspberries come in at a high price and compete with the Canadian article, which is absolutely unfair.

One may theorize as much as he likes with regard to matters of free trade and so on, but there should be something like fair play for our producers. I do not care what party is in power or who makes the tariff; they may theorize as much as they please with regard to the principles of Cobden and Bright, but any government or party framing a tariff for Canada should in all fairness take into consideration the climatic conditions prevailing in this country and in the countries with which Canada must compete. That is a matter of fair play to our Canadian producers, and it does seem to me that sometimes hon. gentlemen, perhaps with the best intentions in the world, in their theorizing on trade matters, entirely overlook the kind of climate we have in Canada, which places our producers at a disadvantage as compared with producers in other countries where the climate is milder.

A number of years ago the Canadian producer had some protection quite apart from the tariff; the difficulty and expense of transportation afforded him some protection, but to-day distance is not measured in miles but in minutes or hours. We do not say it is so many miles to Winnipeg; we say it will take so many hours to go there. Transportation facilities all over the world have so improved and cold storage appliances have been so perfected in recent years that in so far as trade is concerned the advantage of distance has been practically overcome.

I do submit, on behalf of the people in my own constituency who are engaged in producing these vegetables and fruits, that in all fairness to them I should enter my protest against existing conditions and express my approval of an amendment which has as its object giving our Canadian producers fair play and a decent, reasonable opportunity to compete with their own produce in their own home market.

Mr. ROCH LANCTOT (Laprairie-Napierville) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I entered the house just as the hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Tolmie), the ex-minister of Agriculture, was discussing Canadian vegetables. I strongly favour the policy of giving protection to our farmers, for they are greatly in need of it. However, after discussing the matter over with my hon. colleagues on this side, when the question was brought to their attention by the delegation from Quebec and other parts of the country which came to Ottawa, the right hon. Prime Minister pointed out to us the tariff that was agreed upon in 1926, for a period of twelve months. People living in towns openly advocated that we should not enact too high a tariff, because certain kinds of vegetables are not grown in the province of Quebec or in any other province. I agreed with their views that we should have a seasonal tariff. I agree with all those who advocate a protective tariff for our vegetables seeing that we have the Americans competing against us. We must bear in mind that the United States grow vegetables at all seasons, while we have but one season to produce them. There are in my riding a few thousand farmers who grow vegetables, and I wish to state that our crop of potatoes, tomatoes and a great quantity of garden products were very remunerative last year. I am still in favour of giving this protection to my people who have treated me so kindly ever since I have had the honour to represent them in this house. Later on when Quebec will have its own supply of potatoes and other garden vegetables, I shall be among those who will come to Ottawa to interview the Minister of Customs, the right hon. Prime Minister and his colleagues, and request them to apply the seasonal tariff of which we shall then be in need for a period of three or four months, as the case may be. This will also apply to all the vegetables grown in my county.

I have on many occasions stated in my riding, and I have also told a number of my colleagues in this house, that last year we enjoyed a protective tariff and that we made money. We are indeed very grateful. There must not be only one class of society to enjoy protection. We give protection to the manufacturers of this country; therefore, I state that it is high time to also protect the farmers. Since there is a contention put forth at present, that the salaries of a certain class of people are not sufficiently high, it is also time that we look after the interests of the farmers. The country may be prosperous for certain classes of people but it is not so for the farming element. If there is one person who has a knowledge of farming conditions, I should be the one, for I am a hay and grain dealer in the county of Laprairie-Napierville. I endeavour to give the farmers, who work day and night to supply the Montreal market with garden products, all the protection possible.

I did not expect to deal with this question, but since my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Tolmie) brought on this debate, I deem it my duty to plead for a few moments the cause of my constituents. I wish to state, sir, that I shall bear in mind the statements which were again made to-night by the right hon. Prime Minister: that we should have a higher protective tariff than we have at present, in order that our country may benefit from the sale of early potatoes. Last year, in my own county, we sold on the Montreal market thousands of bags of potatoes; we were able to compete with the Americans on our own markets. The people of Laprairie-Napierville did not sell their potatoes at the price the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) paid for them last year, that is $12.50 per barrel, they were sold at $5.50 and $6 per barrel, or $3 per bag for the first week, gradually coming down in price to $1.50 per bag, and we were quite satisfied. I state that by an intensive production and a protective tariff we would do away with American competition on our own markets.

There are in my riding four factories, canning tomatoes, peas, beans and corn. That goes to show that our tomato production is considerable. Why not encourage our farmers and force the Americans to stay in their own country? Why should the Americans have a market in this country to sell their vegetables, when they have a population of 115,000,000 people? That is why in closing my remarks I state: it is more than time to protect our truck farmers and the farmers as a whole. Had I my notes with me I could discuss this question more at length, but I did not think this subject would come up this evening.

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Rosetown): Tariff legislation, Mr. Speaker, seems to be going up and up, step by step, and I am surprised that a Liberal government in power can apply a measure of this kind to the food of the people. This measure was applied last summer and raised the price of certain natural products to a valuation somewhere about two or three hundred per cent above what any of our growers got for them. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) said, the government still has the power, and they have applied it this year to the very limit. The hon. gentleman said a word or two about the rights of parliament. I want to say right here that this measure, known as the dumping act—call it what you like— has rendered parliament practically a nonentity. No one knows at present what duty is going to be paid on any of these natural products. No one knows what valuation the appraisers will put on these articles, and the duty is collected accordingly. They say that it is only put on during emergent conditions. Emergent conditions, sir, are a matter of opinion only. It has a very wide meaning, something like what our Conservative friends used to call "adequate protection." No one knows what it means, where it begins, or where it stops. Anyway, parliament has been rendered practically a nonentity during the application of this measure. The government still has the power, and it has used it to the detriment of every consumer in this country. They say it is a producers' measure. It is not a producers' measure, and I do not think it was meant to be a producers' measure. It was meant only to be a distributors' measure, and they are the only class that has so far been profited by it.

Last year, I say, this measure was applied, and the result was the raising of the prices to those who had already filled their warehouses. The prices paid to the Canadian producer were similar to what has been paid in years gone by. Take British Columbia apples; there is about 600 per cent difference between the valuation on a box of apples and what the consumer pays for it. From 50 to 80 cents was the price paid this last year for British Columbia apples. Boxes valued at that price, have been selling in the retail stores in Saskatoon—I have taken particular notice of it—at something between $3.25 and $3.75 each. If any further dumping is needed on the food of the people, I do not know of it. The first anti-dumping order on vegetables and fruits was put into effect on July 14, 1926, during the short time that the Conservative party was in power, and tomatoes, cucumbers, celery, onions, potatoes, beets, spinach, cauliflower and so on were in some cases raised two hundred per cent in valuation over the cost price. Peaches and raspberries actually went up three hundred per cent. This was long before the Canadian growers of these commodities came forward asking for any concession or any seasonal tariff, but it was done, I say, by the Tory party during the short time they were in power in 1926. The first order that was imposed on July 14, 1926, was to all intents and purposes imposed after the importers got stocked up on some of these main lines. A week or two later plums, prunes and so on received attention and as regards most of these articles it seemed that the new duty was to be permanent.

The Liberal government after it took power rescinded this order on most varieties of fruits on October 5, 1926, but it was left on certain of the vegetables until February 8, 1927, so as to prevent importations that would spoil the price, not for the growers, but for the importers, packers and dealers who handle the stuff. Hardly any of this stuff is brought out by the farmer later than the end of November and the fact that freer trade existed after those dates did not help the consumer at all. It is on apples that the greatest incongruity of all these manipulations exists. On September 2 an anti-dumping order was issued which fixed the value for duty purposes at 300 per cent higher than the price the growers received that year, and the special duty was maintained by the Liberal government until February 23, when the big dealers announced that they could not buy enough Canadian apples to supply the demand. Therefore, while the duty was removed the price to the consumer remained the same and no one except the dealer was benefited by the putting on or taking off of the special duty. Surely these figures go to show that the man who needs the benefit does not get it. The tariff is an incongruity in all its phases. It is an economic fallacy from the beginning. As I say, the one who needs the benefit never gets it. If the duty was removed the price to the consumer remained the same so that no one benefited but the dealer.

[Mr. Evans.]

Boxes of apples were valued as follows:

Extra fancy, medium and large.. ..	$1 80
Smaller sizes of same..	1 50
Fancy in small sizes..	1 25
Combination fancy and C grade..	1 35
Unwrapped jumble pack..	1 20
Small, fancy and C grade in baskets..	1 20

I have under my hand a letter from the Minister of National Revenue under date of November 18, 1927, with a letter attached giving full information as to the price of apples, in regard to which I was at the time seeking information. The attached letter is signed by Mr. A. Fulton, Chief, Markets Extension Service, and is dated October 17, 1927. I find that the figures that I have given are just about the same as his, but I want to say that the price of MacIntosh Reds to the consumer in Saskatoon was $3.25, on January 6, 1928. The price to the retailer when they were shipped by freight was 15 cents higher. Mr. Fulton in his letter states:

> It is impossible at this date to state what prices the producer will procure for his apples until they are all finally shipped. Last year's average price to the producer averaged between 50 to 80 cents per box according to variety.

This is an authoritative statement showing that the value for customs purposes was fixed at 250 per cent higher than the price the grower received. No one cares for the producer. I have said in the house before and I do not mind repeating it that it looks as if this was done for the benefit of those who can bargain with the government or with politicians. I have yet to hear a better reason why the interest of the consumer is traded off in this way.

On January 6, 1928, fancy apples were retailing in Saskatoon at $3.25 or 400 per cent above the price that the grower received during the time the anti-dumping act was in full operation under both the Liberal and the Tory regimes. On June 1st last a new set of orders were issued reviving the anti-dumping duty, and on this occasion the length of time that the duties were to be in force was specified. Let me take as examples: asparagus, 10 cents per pound from April 15 to June 30; lettuce, a duty of 3 cents per pound all the year round, and strawberries, 10 cents per pound from June 1 to July 31.

Again on June 14 another order was issued covering other fruits and vegetables. Onions and lettuce are covered for the whole year by the anti-dumping duty. It covers a long list of fruits and vegetables on which the duty will now be about 75 per cent to 100 per cent in some cases, higher than before, although most of these were protected by a high duty before the seasonal tariff was imposed, and they were very profitable before to the big dealer and importer. The value for customs purposes of these foodstuffs will henceforth bear no relation to the price the grower in a foreign country may receive from the Canadian importer; it will be guaged entirely by the need of the importer, and I think as well by the campaign election fund of the party. During the session of 1926 the Conservative party declared that what they needed was an elastic tariff. This was also mentioned at the Winnipeg convention, I remember. Well, here we have it. They used to work hard on a "brick for brick" policy, but I think they found that Uncle Sam could sling brickbats just as well as any Canadian. It seems now that elastic is safer than bricks and it can be stretched and manipulated to meet all kinds of conditions.

I am in favour of keeping the cost of living as low as it is possible to get it, and if Canada is to be an exporting nation, if we are to prosper, we must keep down the cost of living in this country so that it is in line with other countries. Then, too, I believe that the worker has a perfect right to all these succulent foods which now only the rich can buy. I think it is time the government considered abolishing an act of bondage of this kind. Dumping legislation was first of all enacted by the Canadian government. It seems that we have led in acts of privilege, at least since 1878, and since 1896 still more It was 1904 that saw the introduction of this measure, and it has been nothing but a measure of bondage ever since. It was put on for the benefit only of those who can make a bargain with the party that is in power at the time.

Mr. R. K. ANDERSON (Halton): We have just listened to the one consistent and whole-time free trader in the house, the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans). The hon. gentleman is always advocating free trade. If he were anything else but a wheat grower and a producer of free trade arguments he would probably want protection, but as those products do not need anything of that kind, he is consistently a free trader. If he had listened to the arguments presented by the very large and representative delegation which waited upon the government about a week ago, he would have heard some fairly good reasons why the use of the dumping clause was in the interests of the consumer. The hon. gentleman says that it is not in the interest of the consumer, but the delegation contended, and they gave their reasons why, that the dumping clause was in the interest of the consumers in the Dominion of Canada. They instanced the fact that if we did not conserve the fruit and vegetable industry and the poultry industry in this country, we would have to look outside of Canada for our fruits and vegetables and poultry products, in which case these gentlemen claim that it will cost the Canadian consumer very much more than he is paying to-day. They instanced the fact that only last year when the production of fruits in the United States was rather small and scarcely sufficient to supply their own needs, the Canadian market was supplied by our home production in Canada, and the prices of fruits here were very much less than they were in other years. The fact that there was no importation from the United States did not increase the price of the product in Canada.

I was very much impressed with that delegation. They were representative men, coming from all parts of Canada, and representing a large and important industry in this country. If you look up the figures you will find that the production of fruits and vegetables in this country is very large indeed. I have here some figures with regard to that industry which I received from the Bureau of Statistics. They show that from 1922 up to the present the industry has been shrinking. The production of fruits and vegetables in 1922 amounted to $55,855,000; 1923, $58,000,000; 1925, $48,000,000; 1927, $46,000.000, showing a slight reduction each year, because, so the delegation claimed, of the inadequate protection which the industry receives on its products.

The delegation are not asking for very much. They ask that the Canadian market be conserved for their products; that is, that the Americans shall not have the privilege of sending their products in here at any and all times, flooding our market with their surplus products, which are sold at lower prices than prevail here.

The hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Edwards) in his remarks this evening gave the reason why the Canadian producer of fruits and vegetables cannot compete with the American producer. It is largely due to climatic conditions. In the United States the weather is very much milder and they can produce their products cheaper. They have a larger market at home, and they can supply that market in the average year and have a surplus. Some of their products starting from the southern states are sent up to the large cities in the United States, and sometimes they reach the Canadian border without finding a purchaser. They are consequently dumped upon the Canadian market simply for the cost of the freight.

On motion of Mr. Anderson (Halton) the debate was adjourned.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, May 9, 1928

The house met at three o'clock.

REPORT

Reports of the Clerk of the House and of the Civil Service Commission in respect to the organization and re-classification of the permanent staff of the House of Commons.—Mr. Speaker.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Mr. F. WELLINGTON HAY (North Perth) moved that the seventh report of the select standing committee on banking and commerce be concurred in.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): I believe I am in order today in making a few remarks on this motion. As I tried to say the other day, the work of the committee was somewhat limited in its scope. We were given to understand that we ought not to bring in any recommendation that would involve a change in the Bank Act, and this made the work of the committee rather academic in character. I would point out that it is impossible to bring witnesses from a distance, such as economists from the United States or Great Britain, who might be considered authorities in this matter. Further, we found some difficulty—those of us who were trying to present the standpoint of the general public—in securing suitable witnesses. I discovered that a number of business men who were complaining about inadequate credit facilities were not willing to come before the committee. Whether or not their contention was correct, they took the ground that if they passed any adverse criticism their credit might be endangered. As a matter of fact, therefore, all the witnesses who appeared before the committee, with the exception of one who represented the Canadian Council of Agriculture, represented either the department or the banks.

While I think the report as presented fairly gives the main points that were considered, I should like to direct attention to the fact that other suggestions were also offered. For example, it was urged that there might be established small local banks and co-operative credit societies. The committee did not go into these matters in any detail. There were also a good many general criticisms of the present banking system. The bankers claimed that these criticisms were not well founded. In order to save the time of the house as far as possible I have summarized the claims of the banks as follows:

(a) That the small number of banks in Canada—four banks controlling approximately 70 per cent of the entire deposits (page 28)—is in the interests of Canada. (page 27).

(b) That according to the bank's code of honour, in the granting of credits, there is no discrimination against a business concern that is a rival to one in which a bank director is also a director. (pages 104-105). That is to say, that the charge that interlocking directorates is inimical to the welfare of the public at large is not well founded.

(c) That, on the contrary, interlocking directorates are a distinct advantage. (page 105).

It has been said, especially in western Canada and in the maritimes, that the concentration of headquarters of banks in Montreal and Toronto is not good for the east or for the west. The banks claim:

(d) That districts remote from headquarters are under no disadvantage. (page 44).

It was complained that in some instances business enterprises, especially in their initial stages, were not able to secure credits such as were necessary, and that private individuals had at this stage to do the financing of such concerns. That is the complaint. The claim of the banks is:

(e) That it is not the function of a bank to take the hazards of the commencement of a manufacturing business (page 102), but that any solvent concern in a liquid shape can obtain all the credit it can reasonably desire for legitimate purposes. (page 100).

Mr. A. E. Phipps was emphatic. He said:

> No legitimate loan properly secured has been refused, from one end of Canada to the other, since I have been a banker. (page 44).

It seems to me that the general public will have to decide whether or not these statements of the bankers are in accordance with the facts. I might, in passing, call the attention of the house to the fact that in England bankers and other financial men, and industrialists, are considering whether or not the present system is adequately meeting the credit needs of the country; and when men of the type of Sir Alfred Mond are beginning to give attention to a question of this character, looking to reform, it would seem that we might take some action in Canada.

The main proposal brought before the committee was undoubtedly the establishment of a central bank. The statements made in the report are, I think, quite fair; but they do not cover all the ground which personally I should like to have seen covered. I might suggest some of the things that are found in the evidence but not included in the report:

(a) That under the Finance Act the government performed, with less machinery and expense, some of the functions of the federal reserve bank, but that the banks use the Finance Act to a very limited degree.

(b) That the control of the federal reserve banks over the money market through the open market transactions might be difficult to exercise in Canada. (page 70).

(c) That, in the opinion of Mr. H. P. G. Harding, governor Federal Reserve Bank, Boston: (1) The mutual savings banks in New England have been highly successful. (page 82). (2) That in the United States western cities would organize their own banks. (page 89). (3) That the federal reserve banks have been helpful in stabilizing the price level by stabilizing the money market. (page 75). (4) That a federal reserve system organized on the same basis as in the United States—that is, a regional system—would be impossible in Canada. (page 89).

Now there is only a bare mention in the report of what many of us consider to be the most vital matter, namely, the possible control of the general price level. As many of the members of the house will recognize, there are two distinct schools of thought on this matter. Some bankers and economists claim that there is very little relationship between the amount of money in circulation and the price levels; others claim that there is a very vital relationship. Indeed, some go so far as to say that the amount of money in circulation determines the general price level and that if this is so the general price level may be controlled by a control of the money in circulation. That was considered true when gold was the chief medium of exchange. It is recognized that the issuance of bank notes also has an effect, but more than that I think these newer economists and some bankers such as Mr. Reginald McKenna are recognizing that credit facilities including the checking system, which is responsible for something like 96 per cent or more of our business transactions today, have a very important effect on the general price level.

Again to summarize what I think hon. members will find in the evidence as submitted to the committee, I would say:

First, that bills and coins constitute less than 4 per cent of the total volume of money (page 42);

Second, that deposits created by loans are not kept, separate from savings deposits (page 40);

Third, that the bankers, in keen competition—to use the words of the bankers themselves—" are a practical people" "meeting the situation from day to day" and not considering the ultimate economic effects of the extension or contraction of credit (page 35);

Fourth, that there is no government control over the extent to which the banks can issue credit; that this is a matter of banking policy (page 3);

Fifth, the preponderant opinion of the witnesses was that only to a limited extent could the banks or a central bank influence the general price level (pages 34 and 84). Mr. Harding, in opposition to the position taken by Mr. McKenna and others of his school, agreed with Mr. Mellon that "neither the federal reserve system nor any other system can control prices (page 84).

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that whilst I can endorse the greater part of that report, we should add to it a clause providing that the committee which the Minister of Finance is urged to associate with himself, in addition to the work which they are asked to do, "should further explore the possibility of stabilizing the money market and preventing the recurrence of periods of inflation and deflation, with their attendant evils." In view of the very great evils which we have experienced in the past; the inflation that appeared to such a degree at the time of the war; the subsequent deflation which so adversely affected business in this country; the fact that students of this question would indicate to us that all through the past there have been recurring periods of inflation and deflation which have been responsible for upsetting general financial arrangements; for transferring large sums of money from one set of pockets to another and for creating great hardships alike for business men and labour people—in view of these considerations it would seem to me that the time is ripe for the government itself to give more careful attention to this whole subject, and to attempt to bring scientific knowledge to bear upon this most important financial problem.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN REPORT

Mr. W. T. GOODISON (West Lambton) moved:

That the fourth and final report of the select standing committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government, be concurred in.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Strictly speaking this report should be read, because it contains many clauses which in the view of many of the members of this house are wholly unwarranted, particularly those parts which endeavour to give approval to the method in which the accounts of the company are kept. In our judgment those accounts are not kept in accordance with the methods which prevail in many similar organizations. It, of course, is a matter of difference of opinion as to how the accounts should be kept in order to exhibit correctly the operations of the system, and possibly this question arises from the fact that the system is divided into eastern and other sections which include parts of several lines. Under these circumstances, since the report has not been read, I only desire to state that the report does not represent the unanimous views of the committee, as I am informed, and certainly it does not carry with it the judgment of all the members who sit on this side of the house. We content ourselves merely with observing that the report concurred in is concurred in on division, and not with our consent.

Hon. C. A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): If the fact that the report has not been read has any effect in preventing debate upon the motion for adoption and if that is what my hon. friend has in mind, I would suggest that the report be read in order to permit discussion.

Mr. BENNETT: All that was meant was that, the report not being read, I was not going to point out the particular sections with which we disagree. It will be open to us to do so when the minister deals with the railway estimates, and my object in rising was merely to observe that we should not be understood as acquiescing in the report, that the concurrence was on division and was not the unanimous sentiment of the house.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): When this motion was up on Monday last it was agreed that notice must be given for the adoption of this report. This is the most important committee we have, but it has not carried out its instructions; meetings have been held in private, yet the house is asked to concur in this report. I did not feel that any useful purpose could be served by attending the meetings of this committee, which only touched the fringe of the subject. I am not a critic of public ownership; I venture to say that I stand second to no member of this house as a proponent of public ownership, but I do object to the way in which these railways are administered. For instance, the committee held a private meeting and went into the affairs of the merchant marine in private.

The Central Vermont Railway is in liquidation, and this government propose to spend $3,500,000 of the people's money in betterments on that road. Then again, the city of Flint, Michigan, can get a new station while the city of Hamilton, Ontario, can get nothing in this line but speeches and promises. I asked a question in this house yesterday with respect to the relationship existing between certain newspapers in this country and the railways; I asked for the production of the pass list and advertising list, but I was unable to get it. It is a well known fact that many of our newspapers just apply to the government for passes in exchange for advertising and for eulogy articles written in connection with officials of the railway. Just a little while ago the Canadian National Railways gave up a valuable right of way on Woodward avenue in the city of Detroit, of the Detroit-Grand Haven Railway on which they paid only $25,000 a year in taxes, in exchange for a right of way on a side street for which they have to pay $150,000 in taxes. This agreement was never considered or passed by this house.

Then there is the question of whether or not there is really a surplus in the operating accounts and annual statement. They have no sinking fund or proper depreciation fund. The annual statement is only a partial statement. It does not include the eastern lines or the Central Vermont or others, or all subsidiaries. It all is a matter of a play on bookkeeping and of accounts whether you have a surplus or not. The $193,000,000 also owed the government on old interest account is left out, but it is in the annual report of the Department of Railways and Canals. It depends on what kind of accountancy you have. In the United States to-day, the railways, no matter what railway it is, are subject to the regulation and control and accounting system of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The accountancy, equipment of the road, condition of the roadbed, treatment of the public, grade and passageways, freight and passenger rates, are all brought under this public control of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The trouble with our railway is they are a law to themselves and can do as they like, and all the railway commission does is to issue a form of accountancy which is a scrap of paper with our Canadian National.

I asked for information last year in this parliament, when such a resolution as this had been rushed through in a few minutes and opposed the appointment of this committee but could get no information at all.

I am a supporter of public ownership, but only the kind of public ownership that the people of the province of Ontario have in their hydro, and not the kind of public ownership represented by this particular railway to-day. Mr. Speaker, private cars are being handed out, and passes are being given, both against the good of the railway and the Railway Act. I asked the minister yesterday for the return of these papers, and he said that it was not in the public interest to give me the particulars or that papers receive a hand-out of nearly $400,000 a year for this. I say that it is in the public interest to have this information. We should know what newspapers are receiving free transportation in exchange for advertising and for eulogy articles of the system and its heads. I have never asked for a pass on this system; I do not want any. I did ask this question regarding the newspaper flood of flattery, all for privileges costing $303,809.25 to the system:

1. What sums were spent on advertising in newspapers by the Canadian National Railways in 1927 and 1928, and to whom paid?

2. What sums were spent on free transportation in exchange for (a) newspaper space, (b) eulogy articles on the system and its officials, and to what papers in each case was transportation issued accordingly, (c) to aid in securing new business for the system?

3. How was an item of $175,162 increase in such advertising in 1927 and 1928 expended, and what papers benefited?

4. What was the number of passes granted each paper, and to whom?

Mr. Dunning:

This question calls for information of a kind that the management of the Canadian National Railways holds not to be in the public interest to divulge in detail, as publication, while serving no useful purpose, may place the Canadian National Railways in an invidious position with respect to competitors whose advertising appropriations are not subject to publication.

Even if it were advisable to bring down the information asked for in detail, it could not be given in the form of an answer to a question as it covers advertising of all kinds—newspapers, magazines, printing of booklets, etc.—and also not only the entire Canadian field, but such portions of the United States as are served by Canadian National lines in that country.

The item under advertising in Canadian National accounts which the hon. gentleman refers to as having increased by $175,162 during 1927, covers advertising of all kinds throughout Canada and the United States. During 1927, the management expended on advertising in newspapers $303,809.25. In addition thereto there was issued transportation in lieu of cash for advertising space in newspapers in Canada only $197,225.39.

Did you ever hear such an answer? I know two papers where all hands just go in and get passes and pay nothing. The advertising part of it is all a myth and of no value. Little of it is given and it is of no value to the system. The whole system of accountancy needs to be reorganized. Is is a mere matter of figures, and I just ask for a few days to give the members time to study this report. The committee they have only touched the fringe of the whole question. The committee just sat there and smoked a pipe or a cigar, and it all looked to me like a pipe dream and a smoke screen was thrown up to prevent a proper presentation of the real picture and the extravagant management of the system. I challenge anybody to look over these estimates of the merchant marine and discover anything. They went to work with 64 ships, and they sold without tender all but 46. They cleared the committee room when questions on the merchant marine were asked. Let me ask the minister if the Canadian Pacific Railway do not know everything that is going on in the Canadian National Railways? They do, and can tell all the inside affairs of the Canadian National Railways. Why were the head offices moved from Toronto to Montreal? Why should they be in Montreal? Montreal is not a public ownership city; it never was and never will be. It is from the central regional area that most of the revenue comes. It was a sorry day that the railway offices were taken out of the public ownership province of Ontario. I would rather see these Canadian National railway offices established in Winnipeg, or Hamilton, or Vancouver, or some other place. They should never have gone where they did go, as headquarters of a great publicly owned system.

Last year we asked the government for a return of the railways' new rates obtained secretly from the Bell Telephone Company, over the head of the railway commission of this country. There was an application pending before the commission for an increase in telephone rates. The application was on the part of the municipalities to remove discrimination. While this was on the Canadian National Railways made a secret contract with the Bell for cut rates. The Canadian National railways board looks like a Liberal campaign committee of directors who do not direct. The service western Ontario gets from the Canadian National Railways, owing to poor rolling stock and terminals, is not fair to Ontario. Let me tell the Progressive members from the province of Ontario that it is a disgrace to any publicly owned road. A few months ago I was in Kitchener, the home town of one of the ministers; you could not get a train out of there on Saturday night after five or six o'clock. It is the same all through western Ontario generally and the trains and equipment are in some cases as old as the hills. What is the reason? I will tell you. This so-called publicly owned road took $22,000,000 of cash out of the old Grand Trunk in Ontario. They took $122,000,000 of credit out of the Grand Trunk. Where did they take that money and credit to? They invested it in what is known as the Grand Trunk Pacific. There has not been hardly one dollar spent since on the Grand Trunk railway in the province of Ontario, although the cream of the business is in Ontario and the chief earning power of the system is there.

I am not criticizing the president of the road personally, but I am criticizing his methods in the administration of the road. I made a speech at the party nomination of the member for Toronto West Centre (Mr. Hocken) along very similar lines, and I have been invited to go there again. I will speak there at the next meeting in his constituency. I do not need to take any lessons from him as a supporter of public ownership. I am a public ownership man first, last and all the time. He tried in 1912-14 to sell the street railway and the electric light company to the city for $32,000,000, but it did not go through. If it had, we would never have been able to take over our railway and would have had 10 cent fares forever.

We proposed a system of hydro radials in Ontario, the electrification of the Grand Trunk branch and suburban lines in the cities and towns of this province. This was proposed by Sir Adam Beck in the province of Ontario, and the municipalities were prepared to take many of these old lines which were out of use, and some which had been torn up, and electrify them. Sir Adam proposed to take many of the dead ends of the C.N.R. and electrify them. They extended from western Ontario down to Peterborough. They would have acted as feeders for the National railways. When Sir Henry Thornton arrived in this country he sent telegrams to the municipalities, and the project was defeated; the life work of this great patriot of the province. Sir Adam Beck has done more for public ownership than Sir Henry Thornton ever can do all his life. Sir Adam had an agreement to buy from the government the Toronto and Eastern railway, the Toronto Suburban railway, and the Niagara and St. Catharines railway, but Sir Henry Thornton vetoed it.

The committee was not interested in this matter. They held a meeting regarding the Canadian Government Merchant Marine. I have asked for a return on the matter, and I cannot get it. There was a report made about two years ago regarding the sale of sixteen ships. No tender was called for. Some of these ships cost $1,000,000, $1,250,000 or $1,500,000. I think sixteen of the smaller ships were sold without a tender. Some of them cost $1,250,000, and were sold for $50,000. That was the report made to parliament before the present minister was in the house.

We are asked to adopt the report of this committee. They asked a few questions in the committee regarding the merchant marine, and then they decided that the balance should be considered in camera, and the press were ordered out. The revenues and rates were not brought out at all. Under a proper public ownership system, like the hydro-electric, or the telephone systems of Alberta and Saskatchewan, every dollar of expenditure must be accounted for. In the case of the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario there is $300,000,000 invested in heat, light and power and transportation. When Sir Adam Beck brought down his estimates in the legislature, there was no committee to whitewash the estimates; they were before the whole house and every dollar and every item passed the house—all the cards were on the table.

When you ask a question in the house here, you are told that it is not in the public interest that these things should be given out. In any properly conducted public ownership venture, like the hydro-electric, the utmost disclosures are made to the ratepayers, who are the shareholders. Why all the secrecy? The Canadian Pacific railway know anyway, first-hand, of the running of this "me too" road.

And now, Mr. Speaker, Sir Henry Thornton is going around the province of Ontario and making speeches nightly. He spoke in Niagara Falls last night, and mentioned that he had seen the Chippawa plant at the falls. This plant generates an enormous amount of power, and is a real public ownership proposition, owned by the municipalities in the hydro. Sir Henry compilmented the engineers on the administration of that particular work. It cost $75,000,000. All the engineers are Canadian born, and, unlike the administration of this particular railway, everybody connected with it is a Canadian.

Who is Mr. Gaston? Mr. Gaston is a New York gentleman. He was asked in the committee if he was a lawyer and Sir Henry Thornton said last year that he was. He is not a lawyer at all. He graduated from the Yale School of Law; but that does not make him a lawyer. Nobody knows what he is receiving and apparently the work that he has to do is something that any young returned soldier lawyer in a law office could do. I believe in having Canadians put in charge of the administration of our roads which are being run under public ownership and in a policy of Canada for Canadians.

A few days ago I was attacked by a learned paper in the city of Ottawa on this question of public ownership in the administration of this particular railway. They said that my voice was the only one that was raised against this item. As long as I am a member of the house I am going to assert my right and privilege as a member of parliament to criticize the administration of the road, for the way Ontario has been discriminated against, the way the assets of the old Grand Trunk have been used elsewhere by the present head of the system, the way the great province of Alberta and the great maritime provinces have been discriminated against in the coal policy of this road. There was an order in council passed months ago in regard to the movement of coal from Alberta but it is still a dead letter, they say now the switching charges should be added to the rates. We will never get any coal brought down from Alberta if Sir Henry Thornton has anything to do with the matter. He would rather quote a rate of $9 to $14 a ton for carrying coal from Alberta and the result of that would be that we would have no business; whereas, if he would quote a rate of $9 a ton we would get the cream of the business. Sir Henry Thornton has done everything he can to defeat the development of the great coal industry of the country and to aid the Pennsylvania coal barons. Our coal industry should be a protectionist industry and one which should bring a great deal of relief and work to the people of Ontario and western Canada. Sir Henry has done nothing to assist the great coal industry in the maritime provinces or Alberta. He has sold sixteen merchant ships of a small type which could be used on the great lakes to go down to the seaboard as far as the ports of Nova Scotia and which could be converted to carry coal from Nova Scotia to central Canada and to cities like Hamilton during the summer.

I have great respect for and I like the Minister of Railways; but I would say, with all due respect, that the committee held only six or seven meetings and there are many other matters that should have been looked into. There is the question of the administration of the Central Vermont. There is the question whether the railway commission has not power to put their officers on the road the same as the Interstate Commerce Commission can do. If there was a proper system of accounting in connection with the system large deficits would be revealed in capital and maintenance. This matter came up on the debate on the address and also on the debate on the budget and it was shown that there is a large sum of money amounting to about $197,000,000 of unpaid interest owing to the government. If anybody else owed that money they would have to pay it, but now it is a mere matter of bookkeeping. That amount should be included in the statement given in the report. The statement in my opinion is not a statement at all, or only a partial one. The eastern lines are not included in it, nor the accounts of the Central Vermont or other subsidiaries. The administration of the Intercolonial has a large deficit, but this is put on the tax rate of the country by way of subventions to the maritime provinces and this is shown not in the statement but in a separate one. The hon. member for Toronto-Scarborough (Mr. Harris) put a very leading question to the committee but he could not get an answer. He asked for the assets and liabilities of the Central Vermont railway but the information was not available since 1926, as they say the railway is in liquidation and the case is before the courts. Yet they can show that the Central Vermont is going to require $3,700,000 for betterments. Where do they get that figure if they cannot show what the assets and liabilities are? Many other matters are left out of this particular statement that has been laid before the house.

There are a number of scrapped railways running out of Toronto; the old Canadian Northern, the Belt Line, the Toronto and Eastern, which could be used to give the people a service that they are not getting today. Sir Adam Beck would have bought the latter. What is the condition of affairs?

They are tearing up parts of whole railways east of Leaside to Brighton and selling them as scrap. This was done without tender. They are tearing up part of the Canadian Northern bridges, ties, rights of way and everything. It is all very well to ask for a committee but I venture to say that if a proper independent investigation was held into the whole Canadian National Railways matter we would have something nearly as bad as the customs inquiry.

My former hydro leader, the late Sir Adam Beck, upheld the principle of public ownership and development of the great province of Ontario, but this province has failed to get a square deal or the rural places there a service from the National railways under public ownership. They took $122,000,000 out of the old Grand Trunk in credits and $22,000,000 in cash under private ownership, a road that was giving good service, that built up western Ontario and that was doing well, and they spent these assets elsewhere. As Sir Henry Thornton said in the city of Toronto the other night, the main part of the revenues of the Canadian National Railways to-day comes from the central regional area; but the trouble is that we have too much radio, too many frills and fads in the system, too many golf courses, too many deadhead passengers and hotels with deficits. I venture to say they have not an hotel that is a paying proposition to-day and last year the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Price) in a return to this house got a return of the hotel deficits showing that every hotel had a large deficit. Yet they proposed to build an hotel in Paris and now they are proposing to build an hotel in Halifax. They are proposing to build two or three new ships to carry on a service between Canada and the West Indies although they have sold, for a few thousand dollars in some cases, sixteen boats that were convertible for further use to the people of Canada.

The last time these matters were up in March I opposed a special committee for these estimates because I believed it would do nothing but whitewash the system. The hon. member for Toronto West Centre (Mr. Hocken) said then that I attacked the system. I did not. I wanted efficiency and economy. He said that he represented ninety-five per cent of the people of Toronto. He did not represent one per cent of the people of that city in the 1913-14 purchase deals to acquire for $32,000,000 the Toronto street railway and electric light plant and all their intangible assets. I venture to say that he does not represent the people of Toronto in his views that one must keep quiet and say nothing when Ontario gets the worst of it and the United States the best of it from the Canadian National.

The Canadian National have a piece of property at the corner of King and Yonge streets, railway offices, but they went to work and moved to the corner of King and Toronto streets, not once but two or three times. They had the telegraph offices of the old Canadian Northern at the corner of Scott and Wellington streets and they moved them to the corner of King and Yonge streets. Large sums of money have been spent in renovating these properties, but they use them for only a few months and then they move back again, backwards and forwards. They have moved backwards and forwards in this way at a cost of five or six thousand dollars in losses of renovations, business and fixtures, and the system allowed a lot of speculators to use the government's and railways' home towards a deal that fell through for a skyscraper at the corner of King and Yonge streets. There is a large exodus of Canadian university graduates from McGill, Varsity and Queen's to the United States. There have been a large number of articles on that question in the newspapers. Our graduates in electrical science were good enough to develop the whole Chippawa power scheme for Sir Adam Beck, which is the most shining example of engineering there is in the world, but they are not considered good enough by Sir Henry Thornton to be given a position in the engineering department of the Canadian National Railways, or the law department. They fill up with Americans like Mr. Gaston.

Who asked Sir Henry Thornton to go to Mexico? How is he able to leave the work of administering the Canadian National railways for five or six weeks? I asked for a return to be brought down on this subject in the house. A debate was not allowed upon my motion, but I have the return here, and I find a letter in it signed this way:

> I have the honour to be,
> with the highest respect, Sir,
> Your most obedient servant,
> (Sgd) H. H. WRONG,
> (For the minister)

The minister being His Excellency, the Honourable Vincent Massey, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary for Canada, Washington, D.C.—and he is I tell you most extraordinary. You would think that we were back in the old feudal days of William the Conqueror, with all this vanity and flattery. Sir Henry Thornton must have an awful lot to do when he can be talking on the radio every night all over the country making speeches and promises, and out on the golf links, and going down to Mexico on a mission that was not in the interests of the people of this country. He talks of spending 15 or 20 millions on immigration also. In this return that was brought down I find this letter:

My dear Mr. Minister:

My government is desirous to invite Sir H. W. Thornton, President of the Canadian National Railways to visit Mexico in order to undertake a survey of the present organization and functioning of the Mexican national railway lines, so that he may bring to the attention of our appropriate authorities the suggestions for the reorganization of those lines which his long professional experience may think fit.

As my government understands that an express assent of the Canadian government would be necessary for Sir Henry Thornton to undertake this survey on behalf of the Mexican Railway lines, I have been instructed to approach Your Excellency, which I have the honour to do, to request Your Excellency's good offices near the Canadian government so that Sir Thornton may be given the necessary authority to undertake the aforesaid labours in Mexico.

Sir Henry stirred up a small sized riot in Canada and created more strife and dissension than good will. I think Sir Henry Thornton would be better employed trying to give service to the people of this country. He would have been for instance, better employed to go out to Alberta and see what he can do towards moving Alberta coal out to the central provinces, or he might go to the maritimes and see if he could not utilize the ships that are being sold for almost nothing, to bring Nova Scotia coal to central Canada than in going this time to Mexico or to-morrow to Philadelphia to help the coal barons there. The Mexico business was a farce and a mistake and did Canada no good. Let him solve Canada's ills first.

As one coming from the province of Ontario, I am not satisfied with the investigation which this committee made. The questions asked in the committee did not touch the fringe of the subject. The whole thing was a white wash and of no value whatever. Sir Henry Thornton talks now about electricity, but he was the very man to destroy in the province of Ontario the dream of Sir Adam Beck for electric radial railways which would have revived every dead Grand Trunk Railway line in Ontario and have acted as feeders for the Canadian National Railways main lines. My hon. friend from Toronto West Centre (Mr. Hocken) used to be interested in the hydro radials and knows, and I am sorry that he was not more critical of the administration of the railways in Ontario and the raw deal Ontario has got. I attended meetings in his riding, and I know that the people in his riding would have been glad to have had the hydro radials which did so much to build up Michigan, New Jersey, Ohio and Pennsylvania.

Sir Henry Thornton, at a great cost, is buying these German engines, instead of using the hydro-electric energy in the province of Ontario for the electrification of our lines. These Diesel engines or electric units are made in Germany. True, they may have later a patent for them in the United States, but I maintain that we should be using our own electrical energy developed on the Chippawa or in the province of Ontario or Quebec, to electrify our suburban lines in these two provinces and bring feeders to the main line, instead of getting a lot of foreign type of Diesel German engines on which the wear and tear is very heavy, and which last only a few years compared with electric power and electrification of the suburban steam lines in industrial centres with trains operated with electricity instead of one coach by a Diesel engine.

There was a great lot of talk in the committee about the traffic which the Central Vermont railway brings to Canada. All that the Central Vermont is doing, when it assembles that freight away out west, is to bring it to the American seaboard through Canada. True, it goes to Portland, but that particular freight should be routed through all-Canadian channels and would mean more to Canada. It could be routed through to Quebec or Montreal by rail and water, or all rail, or be routed to St. John and Halifax by all rail, instead of that traffic being diverted to the United States. The same is true with regard to the shipment of our hard wheat, which is not being sent through Canadian channels and from Canadian ports to United States, lake Erie and American seaboard ports to mill.

I have read every line of the reports of this committee three or four times, and if this is the best that we can get from the investigation of the estimates by a committee, I think nothing is to be gained by referring estimates generally to a committee. The committee met some six or seven times and had some witnesses before them. It was the most obliging and polite committee on deportment I ever saw. It was, "Please Sir Henry this," and "Please Sir Henry that," and "After you my dear Alphonse," and "after you my dear friend Gaston—you first, not me." The report runs this way: Mr. Harris has asked for some report, and Sir Henry Thornton asks: "Have you got that report, Mr. Henry?" Sir Henry says, " I have got that report," and then Mr. Harris says, "We shall be pleased to accept it." Sir Henry presents it and then "Thank you, Sir Henry, thank you, thank you also, Mr. Harris." Then at page 125 of volume 5 of the evidence I find this: That Sir Henry after five years of opposing Sir Adam Beck and his radials and electrification turns around and supports such a policy for suburban areas by electric units of one car with Diesel engine when he could have had trains of hydro radials five years ago. I quote from the committee report:

Mr. Cantley: What success have you had with suburban car traffic, with either the Deisel or gasoline car? Are you extending that service?

Sir Henry Thornton: Yes, we have certain suburban branch line services which, under steam operation, have been conducted at a loss. We cast about to try and find some cheaper but equally efficient method of operation. In the course of our investigation we developed the Deisel electric unit, which we believe is the solution of the branch line problem or the solution of problems which involve the provision of steam service at a loss. We have built a number of these units and are putting them on wherever circumstances justify them. They have been highly satisfactory. (To Mr. Henry). Do you happen to have with you any figures on the subject?

Mr. Henry: I believe we have.

There was altogether too much "I believe' and "I think" about this whole committee and the whole evidence. It is pretty nearly time we had a showdown about the way Sir Henry Thornton refused to work with the hydro-electric movement in the province of Ontario five years ago to bring the joy of living to the farmer on the farm and to the toiler and artisan in the city through the Hydro Radials. Michigan, New York, and New Jersey have all become the great states they are to-day through the great network of electric railway lines which they have developed as feeders to the trunk lines. In New Jersey you will find little villages every mile and a half or two miles, but Sir Henry Thornton, when a gilt-edged proposition was put before him by the hydro-electric municipalities of the province, backed by the province itself in 1923-24, threw the whole thing into the waste paper basket. He says, "My dear Mr. Harris", or "My dear Mr. Henry, we will buy a few more donkey Diesel engines and use them in Hamilton and other places throughout the province", when we could have had a great system of 1,000 miles of electric radials all through the province, at Peterborough, Brockville, London, Toronto, Windsor, Ottawa and many other towns, and have developed a system which would have saved this government the loss which the railway now sustains in the province of Ontario, by electrifying the old Grand Trunk branch lines and making them feeders to the main line of the Canadian National Railways. There are a number of bridge bills before this house at the present time, one at Sarnia, one at Windsor, and three across the St. Lawrence. What is the purpose? It is to build bridges where the Canadian National railways now have the cream of the business and own the territory. The Canadian National Railways declined to preserve the territory and the local business of motor truck and motor bus competition at the territory tributory to these bridges and with the state governments or United States federal or municipal authority control these international bridges and their rates for the system and the public. The telegraph and telephone system accounts should not be mixed up with a lot of petty subsidiaries in the statement. They have a unit with net earning power of $700,000 a year.

There should be a survey of a plan for electrification of certain main lines for parliament. All betterments now go into capital. This is bad financing and we pay in long-time bonds for some of the betterment plans twice the actual cost, over thirty-year bonds, far beyond the life of the work. There should be a reclassification and revaluation and a physical survey made of the entire railway at once. There is too much reference to the United States in rates, in accountancy methods, in depreciation plans. We are not in similar circumstances to class "A" American roads and our laws, federal and state, are different. Our slow Railway Commission should audit actively itself, and compel sinking funds and depreciation on a modern plan. The committee just dealt with a statement all old and just a post mortem. The auditors' system is merely one of checking; it is worthless to the country. No one knows what is going on. There should be a reclassification between operating and investment accounts and a reclassification of what belongs to each. At present there is no sinking fund that takes care of depreciation which is very rapid in the Canadian National Railways equipment and rolling stock. The same rule should be adopted as the hydro has adopted in Ontario. The huge increase yearly in capital is out of all proportion to the real book value of the Canadian National Railways to-day. There are too many novices in the Canadian National Railways crying for the fads and frills of American railway associations. The Canadian National Railways, except on lines in the United States, has no depreciation or retirement reserve and is on an unsound and uneconomic basis at present. Had Sir Henry Thornton been alert to the traffic possibilities he would have got control of these proposed international bridges for public ownership as a means of mobilizing motor bus and motor truck lines to collect local business to feed the railway. But no. When you get down to private bills you find lobbyists there, representing the Canadian National Railways, actively supporting the granting of these charters to private promoters for speculation purposes. When he was asked to go into a rich district like the Red Lake district, he would not entertain the proposal; but when he is asked to take over a branch line that won't pay for twenty-five or thirty years, it is a different proposition. I intend to take the platform again when the proper time comes, as Sir Adam and I did for five years on the hydro radial program, and explain to the people throughout Ontario the raw deal handed to the province by this railway.

Hon. C. A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to follow the hon. member (Mr. Church) who has just sat down in his travels from Toronto to Mexico and back via Germany and then across Canada. I rather agree with the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) that detailed discussion of Canadian National Railway matters can most effectively take place when we are in committee of supply. To attempt to follow the lengthy address in which all sorts of statements regarding the system and its management are made, is not in my view the most effective way of dealing with business of such importance. If when we are in committee of supply my hon. friend has any questions which it is within my ability to answer, I shall endeavour to deal with them. I would, however, commend to all hon. members the study of the reports of the select standing committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government, in order that before the house does get into committee of supply with regard to Canadian National railway affairs there may be a general understanding of the work which that special committee endeavoured to do and also of the information which was placed on record for the use of hon. members.

In connection with Canadian National railway affairs the house adopted a number of sessions ago a practice which has been many times advocated by hon. members in relation to the estimates of other departments of government. The house adopted, rightly or wrongly, what might be called the budget committee system with respect to the accounts and estimates of the Canadian National Railways. That practice has been followed for a number of years, and was adopted again this year with the full consent of the house except, I think, of the hon. member who has just sat down. I think almost every other hon. member is convinced of the practical value of the investigation which can be made, and which is made, by a special committee of this character with respect to an enterprise such as the Canadian National Railways. Therefore I again commend to hon. members the study of the reports and evidence, which are all printed and at their disposal.

I desire to make reference to only one matter mentioned by my hon. friend from Northwest Toronto. I will not enter into his disagreement with his colleague from Toronto West Centre (Mr. Hocken). I am quite sure that that hon. gentleman is well able to take care of himself. But my hon. friend did make reference to what is a very serious matter if it is true. He stated, if I heard him correctly, that free transportation was issued to the newspapers of this country by the Canadian National Railways. He made a further statement which appeared to indicate that he had evidence that the Canadian National Railways illegally issued free transportation to people in the Dominion. Statements have been made in various places throughout the country touching upon this matter, and I should like to say to the house at this juncture that the provisions of the Railway Act with respect to the issuance of free transportation are very specific. The method provided by the Railway Act for the audit of free transportation is clear and definite. The Board of Railway Commissioners is the body that conducts the audit and certifies that the provisions of the act have been complied with. I have on many occasions investigated rumours of the improper issuance of free transportation by both our great railway systems, and I must say that I have never yet had an instance brought to my attention which turned out to be a contravention of the law. My hon. friend makes a direct statement in that regard, and, as minister, I would appreciate it if members who believe that transportation has been issued illegally by either of our great railway companies would bring it to my attention or to the attention of the Board of Railway Commissioners, which, as I have said, is the body responsible for the administration of the Railway Act in regard to free transportation.

Now, with reference to newspaper transportation, my hon. friend spoke of transportation issued to newspapers as if it were free transportation. No free transportation, Mr. Speaker, is issued to newspapers either by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company or the Canadian National Railways. But for many years before the institution of the Canadian National railway system it had been the practice of the railways to issue transportation to the newspapers in contra account for advertising. That is to say, every newspaper in Canada is from time to time in receipt of an order from the Canadian National or the Canadian Pacific to insert a certain advertisement. That advertisement is inserted. The newspaper has an account against the railway company. With respect to that account the newspaper can draw transportation to an equivalent amount.

Mr. McGIBBON: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. DUNNING: Certainly.

Mr. McGIBBON: Is not this advertising submitted to the newspapers without any expectation of the railway paying for it? That is, the newspapers are simply requested to publish the advertisement, and they are not paid for it except by way of free transportation?

Mr. DUNNING: Oh yes. Allow me to refer to the answer I made to a question by the hon. member for Toronto Northwest bearing on the point. It will be found in Hansard at page 2722. This is the concluding paragraph of the answer:

> The item under advertising in Canadian National accounts which the hon. gentleman refers to as having increased by $175,162 during 1927, covers advertising of all kinds throughout Canada and the United States. During 1927 the management expended on advertising in newspapers, $303,809.25. In addition thereto there was issued transportation in lieu of cash for advertising space in newspapers in Canada only $197,225.39.

That is to say, the railway expended in cash not quite twice as much as it paid for advertising by the issuance of transportation. That answers my hon. friend's question.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I desire to ask the minister if any record is kept of the transportation given to reporters and others connected with newspapers.

Mr. DUNNING: I have just dealt with that. Every bit of transportation issued to a newspaper for a reporter or for anyone else connected with that newspaper is charged up in the Canadian National accounts against the newspaper.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. McQUARRIE: Giving details?

Mr. DUNNING: I cannot say positively as to details, but I do know that the accounts are kept in such a manner as to enable one to give the answer which I gave the other day in that regard. My hon. friend from Toronto Northwest also complained because the Canadian National did not think it well, in answer to his question relating to newspaper transportation, to give the details for which he asked. Now that raises what has always been a delicate matter with respect to an enterprise of this character, as to whether, through the medium of parliament, information should be forced into publication which no competitor of the institution, in the ordinary course of its business, does make public. My hon. friend asked for details in great variety, and the answer given—supplied by the management—is:

> The question calls for information of a kind that the management of the Canadian National Railways holds not to be in the public interest to divulge in detail, as publication, while serving no useful purpose, may place the Canadian National Railways in an invidious position with respect to competitors whose advertising appropriations are not subject to publication. Even if it were advisable to bring down the information asked for in detail, it could not be given in the form of an answer to a question, as it covers advertising of all kinds—newspapers, magazines, printing of booklets, et cetera, and also not only the entire Canadian field but such portions of the United States as are served by Canadian National lines in that country.

Then follows the information in aggregate figures which I read a few moments ago. There was no objection on the part of the management to giving aggregate figures, but there was an objection to giving details in relation to different newspapers and different classes of service, and that for the reason which I have just indicated.

I would respectfully urge upon the membership of the house, with respect to the matter of free transportation, that it is not in the interests of the system nor of the country that there should be an idea abroad that free transportation is given by either of our great railway companies in contravention of the law. My object in referring to the matter is to ask hon. members to bring to my attention, if they will be good enough to do so, or to the attention of the Board of Railway Commissioners any case which in their opinion constitutes an infraction of the law. As I said at the outset, the law as amended in 1919 is now quite clear and specific. The Board of Railway Commissioners conduct an audit with respect to free transportation, and I merely ask the cooperation of hon. members with a view to dispelling this rumour that the law is being broken in this particular.

In regard to Canadian National affairs generally, I agree with the leader of the opposition. We can more properly go into details when the house is in committee of supply than in a general discussion of this sort, merely upon the adoption of a report.

Mr. J. H. HARRIS (Toronto-Scarborough): I would have hesitated to intervene in this debate at this particular stage had not my hon. friend from Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) brought my name into the discussion. But another reason I have for rising at the moment is to acquaint hon. members with the importance of some of the items which are contained in this report. It is quite true perhaps, from the point of view of the hon. member for Toronto Northwest, that we may have been in a little pipe dream when that committee was sitting. But I notice that the evidence adduced in the sittings held by that committee was of sufficient interest to induce the hon. member to read the report three or four times, and of sufficient moment for him to rise in his place to-day, on the motion, and make certain observations with regard to the matter.

Inasmuch as the session is dragging out, and in view of the fact that when the estimates do come down to the house they will probably reach hon. members at a time when they are not just ready to discuss them, I wish to point out to the house as now assembled that the statements made in the report of this committee this year reveal two or three facts of which, while no doubt other hon. members and I know about them, I am quite certain that the general public, for whom we are trustees in this road, have no real conception so far as the bookkeeping system of the enterprise is concerned. Let me make one or two observations on this question, if I may. With regard to the rank and file of the men on the pay-roll of the Canadian National railway system, what I have observed leads me to the conclusion that during the last five years, at least, these men have been much more loyal to the company than they were previously. One can observe, from one end of the country to the other, the fact that on the whole the men on the pay-roll of the Canadian National system are, to the best of their ability, advancing the interests of the road which is paying them their weekly wages. You can notice it at every little station and in every section of the business; the men are anxious to secure for the system all the business which it is possible to get. So that in offering a few remarks, which are not necessarily a criticism, regarding the general bookkeeping system of the road, I want it clearly and distinctly understood that I am not in any way whatever referring adversely to those employees of the Canadian National Railways who after all comprise the heart and soul of the entire system—the rank and file. So far as the management are concerned, too, they are taking a keen interest in the success of the road. But I want to point out two or three things to the house.

We have in road equipment to-day a capital investment amounting to $1,914,000,000. I speak from memory. Now that is a sum of real magnitude, and the point I wish to bring out is that year by year we are adding to that sum. The directorate are not offering, nor is the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) in this house, any feasible scheme whereby that fabulous sum, approaching two billions of capitalization, can be brought down to something approximating the real value of the road in order that we may have a truer picture of the operations of the system as disclosed in the balance sheet which is given to us each year. If you refer to page 21 of the report this year you will find additions to capital account amounting to some $43,724,677.16. Very good, if we are having these additions made to capital account. But as a layman who perhaps knows nothing about railways but who has found it necessary each year, in a small business, to take into consideration a certain amount of depreciation on plant and equipment, I say that when this sum is added to the capital account of the Canadian National Railways and no provision is made for exhaustion of the different elements which go to constitute the system, the public should know of these facts. And we sitting in this House of Commons should be in a position to discuss these matters with the public and give them some idea of what this capital account, approaching two billions, really implies.

I appreciate the difficulty one would have in setting up a depreciation reserve to take care of the exhaustion of new elements from year to year, when the capital investment starts with the sum of two billions. You can realize that a mere half of one per cent would be a very large item in the operating account, to be set aside each year for the purpose of meeting depreciation or exhaustion. Nevertheless the point is that nothing is being done at the present time—apart from those elements which are written off—so that year by year we might have reflected in the statement of the Canadian National system some figure which would denote the amount of exhaustion annually of the elements in the service of the road, and which in any ordinary business would be disclosed in a statement of this kind.

Hon. members will find it stated in the report that the accounting system which was reviewed at some length by the committee is in accordance with sound railway practice. I was rather anxious to have a more definite statement as to what railroad practices were meant, and the question was asked whether the system was in accordance with the practice of class "A" roads, which receive their authority from the Interstate Commerce Commission. If hon. members will refer to page 174 of the proceedings of the committee they will find these words:

—some railroads found it good practice to set up depreciation to take care of the exhaustion of different elements, while other railroads did not. Some of the class "A" roads did and some did not. . . . Speaking of roads in the United States, they all accrue depreciation on equipment—

In reading this report any hon. member might believe that the accounting system is in accordance with railroad practice all over this continent, yet we find that the railroad practice depends upon where the railroad is located. When the Canadian National Railways go through the United States, their accounting methods are in accordance with the requirements of the Interstate Commerce Commission, but as hon. members know by far the greater part of this railway is in Canada, and the accounting practice of that portion is in accordance with the rules of the Board of Railway Commissioners. As far as I can see, the railway commission do not lay down rules and regulations with regard to the accounting system of the Canadian National Railways commensurate with the magnitude of this organization.

When these estimates come up, I want hon. members of the house to understand exactly what they are asked to pass. The hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) discussed the withdrawal of the eastern lines from the report this year. I remember when legislation was passed by this house affecting a 20 per cent reduction in freight rates on eastern lines, and I remember that the loss occuring therefrom was to be a statutory payment. I felt glad to do anything I could to assist the development of the maritime provinces; if by making a 20 per cent reduction in freight rates and paying the difference out of the consolidated revenue fund we would help the maritime provinces I was quite content to do so. However, I must admit that I was disappointed, although perhaps it is my own fault because I did not study the situation sufficiently last July, to find that this statement which most members of the house expected to cover all the operations of the Canadian National Railways for last year, does not deal with the deficit arising from the operation of the eastern lines. So while this statement is in accordance with the legislation we passed last year, I want hon. members of the house to know that the loss occasioned by the operation of the Maritime Freight Rates Act is not included in this report, so these figures do not present a complete picture of the operations of the railway.

[Mr. Harris.]

Two or three other rather important matters came before this committee, but I think the time has come in Canada when we should expect from the directors of the Canadian National Railways and from the government who have that directorship more or less under their control, some statement of policy as to what they are going to do to put the Canadian National Railways on a business basis, so that when the members of the house and the people of Canada, who are the shareholders in this railway, receive the annual statement each year they will get a fair reflection of the operations of the road. As it stands now, in my humble judgment this report does not show the people of Canada all that is happening. I would like to emphasize that in just one other way. Over a period of perhaps fifty years it is quite true that this statement issued year by year will be a true reflection of what has transpired, but as a yearly statement it is of little value. This year $40,000,000 has been added to the capital account; these elements all in use on the road will be exhausted during the next twelve months, and that exhaustion represents real money in dollars and cents. Yet when the statement is received next year the exhaustion of that $40,000,000 of additions will not be reflected in any way. I say again that in my opinion the time has come when the government and the directors of this road should give some thought to putting the Canadian National Railways on a business basis so far as their accounts are concerned, so that when the annual statement is presented we will be able to get some idea of what is going on.

Mr. W. G. McQUARRIE (New Westminster): The hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) referred to the issuance of transportation to reporters and others connected with newspapers, and it seems to me that that matter should be investigated. The explanation given by the minister seems to reveal the fact that a pernicious practice exists, or at least that it is customary with both railways to pay for advertising by issuing passes. That seems to me entirely wrong; at least in connection with the Canadian National Railways we should pay for advertising in the regular way, and should only issue passes to newspaper men who are entitled to have them under the provisions of the act. I have heard rumours to the effect that publicity is obtained through issuing passes; that when matters are before the house in connection with which railway officials desire to have the gentlemen in the press gallery stop giving publicity which might hurt them, or when they desire publicity which might be of benefit to them, it is quite customary to have some high official of the railway come to Ottawa and issue passes in a rather wholesale manner to members of the press gallery. These are stories which I have heard; I do not know whether or not they are true, but I do not believe the minister should pass up this matter, as he seems inclined to do, by saying, "Oh, if any of the members hear of these things they should give me particulars of them." It seems to me that the minister or some one in his department should investigate matters of this kind.

Mr. DUNNING: Will my hon. friend permit a question? Is he now referring only to the Canadian National Railways, or does he include the Canadian Pacific Railway as well?

Mr. McQUARRIE: The rumours I have referred to were connected with the Canadian National Railways. So far as the press gallery is concerned, we have them writing articles from day to day, calling attention to the fact that members of parliament are receiving this and that perquisite, using free transportation, and having the privileges of the restaurant, and so on, while they themselves are doing exactly the same thing.

Mr. DUNNING: Oh, no, Mr. Speaker, that is quite wrong. The transportation issued to the press by the railway is not free transportation; it is paid for, and that is the distinction.

Mr. BENNETT: An annual pass is not computed.

Mr. McQUARRIE: That is where the iniquity of the thing comes in. It seems to me that it is all wrong in principle. It is hypocritical for the pressmen to speak about the indemnities and perquisites that the representatives of parliament receive, when it is a fact that we do not get any privilege that the members of the gallery are not receiving. If they are receiving free passes on the railways, contrary to the act, then I say that there should be an investigation, and that kind of thing should be stopped.

Mr. DUNNING: That is right, if it is true.

Mr. McQUARRIE: It should be stopped. I asked the minister if particulars could be obtained of the transportation issued to newspaper reporters, and others connected with the newspapers, and he said, "Yes." When I said, "Can you give the details?" he said, "Oh, I do not think so." A general statement in regard to the issuance of transportation is not good enough; we need the details. I submit, in all seriousness, that the member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) has raised an important matter, and one which should be fully investigated.

Mr. DUNNING: If the hon. member will give me anything to investigate, I shall be very glad to do so. With regard to the general situation, I will assure myself that the situation is as I outlined it a little while ago.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of National Defence): I want to say just a word or two with regard to what has been said by the hon. member for one of the Torontos. He intimates that he is surprised to find that, under the Maritime Freight Rates Act of last year, the deficit on the eastern lines is estimated for and paid out of the funds of Canada rather than out of the funds of the Canadian National Railways. I only want to say that I am sure my hon. friend was in attendance last year, and he should not be surprised. I have before me the Maritime Freight Rates Act—

Mr. HARRIS: I rise to a point of order; is the hon. gentleman referring to the member for Toronto-Scarborough? I want to say that I was not surprised.

Mr. RALSTON: I am glad if my hon. friend was not surprised. I thought my hon. friend at least expressed dissent from the principle which we laid down, and which I understood him to say he did not understand was laid down last year. If my hon. friend did not understand it, and dissents from it, I should think he would be surprised to find that that principle was laid down. In the Maritime Freight Rates Act the principle was laid down just as clearly as it possibly could be that the deficit on the eastern lines would be estimated for by the Department of Railways and Canals. That was a recognition by this parliament, as those from the maritime provinces claimed, of the principles of the confederation pact, whereby it was provided that the Intercolonial railway was to be built. I am a little surprised to find the gentleman on the other side of the house now taking exception to that principle.

Mr. BENNETT: He did not.

Mr. RALSTON: He says he dissented from it.

Mr. HARRIS: No exception was taken to the principle. The only exception was that it was not found in the consolidated accounts of the Canadian National Railways. I agreed with the principle.

Mr. RALSTON: I only want to say that I think some other hon. members in this house got the idea that the hon. member was not favourable to the principle which had been laid down in the Maritime Freight Rates Act.

Mr. BENNETT: He said distinctly that he desired to support it. He said that in his main speech.

Mr. RALSTON: I just want to take this opportunity to make it clear so that everyone else will understand, that the principle laid down in the act was put there because of the recognition by the whole of Canada of the rights of the maritime provinces with regard to the Intercolonial railway. Due to certain considerations of a national character, it cost a good deal of money, which resulted in some deficiency on the road. It was felt that there should be a distinct recognition of the obligation of the Dominion of Canada in that regard and therefore section 6 of the act was passed. It provides:

For accounting purposes, but without affecting the management and operation of any of the eastern lines, the revenues and expenses of the eastern lines, including the reductions herein authorized which shall be borne by the eastern lines, shall be kept separately from all other accounts respecting the construction, operation or management of the Canadian National Railways.

2. In the event of any deficit occurring in any railway fiscal year in respect of the eastern lines the amount of such deficit shall be included in a separate item in the estimates submitted to parliament for or on behalf of the Canadian National Railways at the first session of parliament following the close of such fiscal year.

Mr. GEARY: That has not been done.

Mr. RALSTON: That act was passed on the recommendation of the maritime claims commission. And the following appears on pages 20 and 21 of their report:

We think, however, that a balanced study of the events and pronouncements prior to confederation, and at its consummation, confirms the representations submitted to us on behalf of the maritime governments, in regard to the ultimate construction of the railway, viz:—

(a) That leading Canadian statesmen in urging the adherence of the maritime provinces to confederation defined the purposes of the railroad to be

(i) A means of affording to Canadian merchandise, and to Canada herself in times of national and imperial need, an outlet and inlet on the Atlantic ocean—available all the year round—and

(ii) To afford to maritime merchants, traders and manufacturers, a market of several millions of people instead of their being restricted to the small and scattered populations of the maritimes themselves, particularly in the light of the disturbance with which their trade was threatened as the result of the discontinuance by the United States of the reciprocal arrangements that had prevailed.

(b) That stategic considerations determined the actual course of the line—making it many miles (estimated by Sir Sandford Fleming at 250 miles) longer than was necessary—if the only consideration had been "to connect the cities of the maritime provinces with those of the St. Lawrence."

(c) That to the extent that commercial considerations were subordinate to national, imperial and strategic considerations, the cost would be borne by the Dominion and not by the traffic that might pass over the line.

Mr. McGIBBON: May I ask the minister a question? Did the Minister of Railways and the Prime Minister not ridicule that principle two years ago?

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Speaker, I must object, and I ask my hon. friend to withdraw that statement. On no occasion did I ridicule anything of the sort.

Mr. McGIBBON: The principle of taking money out of the treasury to pay for the reductions.

Mr. DUNNING: I did not ridicule it.

Mr. RALSTON: I am glad to pay tribute to my hon. friend the Minister of Railways. He was the one who carried this bill through the house, and who gave to the house reasons why the Dominion of Canada should adopt this principle and why the reductions in freight rates should be borne by the Dominion of Canada as a whole.

Mr. McGIBBON: Not in his election speeches.

Mr. RALSTON: I did not follow my hon. friend in his election speeches, but, from what I have heard of him I think he is able to take care of himself.

I want to say that the deficits were incurred as a result of the operation of the road, operating, as it was, not simply as a commercial proposition but from the point of view of national and strategic considerations. Lower freight rates were charged on that road than in the rest of the Dominion of Canada. In 1912 there came a drive to increase the rates on that road, in an endeavour, apparently, to make the people of the maritime provinces pay the deficit. Those rates were increased by a considerably greater percentage than the rates in other parts of the Dominion of Canada. What the Maritime Freight Rates Act did was this: First, it reduced the freight rates to the proportion which they bore previous to 1912 to the other freight rates in the Dominion of Canada. It said: The people of the maritime provinces shall not be required to pay a greater percentage of increase than the people of the rest of Canada. It did not restore to the people of the maritime provinces the excess rates which they had paid from 1912 up to the time of the Maritime Freight Rates Act, but it said that from 1927, when the act was passed, the rate should be reduced by 20 per cent.

It went one step further and it laid down as a principle of the statute, a principle recognised by parliament and by the Canadian people, that because of the national and strategic conditions under which the road was built the deficit on this road above the amounts which were properly collected as rates which the traffic would bear, should be paid by the people of the whole Dominion of Canada. That principle was assented to by parliament. I thought I heard from my hon. friend that he dissented from that. I am glad to hear I was wrong. I have heard of it in some other quarters, and so far as I am concerned I want to make it abundantly clear that that was the principle on which the act was passed and that it was a recognition of that principle by the people of the whole of Canada which led to the insertion of section 6 whereby to-day the Minister of Railways, when he is bringing down his estimates in regard to the Canadian National Railways, estimates the whole deficit on the eastern lines.

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto): I should like to say a word with reference to the speech of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) who has just sat down. I see no point to his speech. I do not see any object in what he has been at such great pains to repeat. He is only repeating what everybody in the house and the country knows. The whole of his speech seems to be an effort to indicate that on this side of the house we are renouncing the principle upon which we insisted in order to have the Maritime Freight Rates Act passed last year. My hon. friend knows that we on this side were as insistent as they on the other in passing that act. He should know further that it was the insistence of members from the maritime provinces sitting on this side that procured the issuance of the Duncan report. The hon. member for Toronto-Scarborough (Mr. Harris) said nothing to draw from a member of the government such remarks as the hon. member has just made. He said nothing whatever to indicate that he did not understand the principle upon which we were paying these deficits and nothing at all to justify the remark of the minister as he sat down that he was afraid that he saw on this side of the house symptoms of a failure to understand the principle upon which the Maritime Freight Rates Act was passed, and moreover that there was objection on this side to the payments required under that act. As a member of the house who does not come from the maritime provinces, but who is fully aware of the feeling on this side, I desire to say that it seems to me the minister's remarks were directed not to the question at issue, not to the point of trying to convince anybody in the house about anything, but to people outside of the house who, he hopes, may read or hear of his statement.

Motion agreed to on division.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Under the order of motions, in accordance with a resolution of which I gave notice on April 25, I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Kennedy:

> That the resolution passed by this house, on Friday, the 23rd of March, 1928, providing that on and after Monday, 16th April, 1928, and all subsequent Mondays and Wednesdays until the end of the session, government notices of motions and government orders shall have precedence over all other business except questions and notices of motions for the production of papers, be rescinded.

I think the last few private members' days have made it quite clear that there is not sufficient opportunity for the adequate discussion of private members' legislation. On the one hand we have had blocking tactics and on the other an attempt to railroad through certain legislation. It seems to me that the only possible way in which we can conduct the business of the house with some dignity is that we should have sufficient time for the consideration of each of these measures on its merits.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have grave doubts as to this motion being in order. Any motion relating to the business of the house must be moved by a member of the government. May, at page 250, 13th edition, states:

Motions relating to business of the house which must stand in the name of a minister of the crown, are placed first, and a motion for a vote of thanks, when moved by a minister of the crown, is placed among these motions.

This motion can be moved only by a minister of the crown, not by a private member, because it relates to the business of the house. In my judgment the motion is out of order and I so rule.

VALIDATION OF ORDERS IN COUNCIL

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior) moved:

That the following orders in council, laid on the table on the twenty-seventh day of January, 1928, be approved:—

Orders in council which have been published in the Canada Gazette between 11th November, 1926, and 20th December, 1927, in accordance with the provisions of section 77 of the Dominion Lands Act, chapter 20, 1908;

Orders in council which have been published in the Canada Gazette between the 11th November, 1926, and the 20th December, 1927, in accordance with the provisions of the Dominion Forest Reserves and Parks Act, section 19, chapter 10, 1911;

Orders in council which have been published in the Canada Gazette and in the British Columbia Gazette between the 11th November, 1926, and the 20th December, 1927, in accordance with the provisions of subsection (d) of section 38 of the regulations for the survey, administration, disposal and management of Dominion lands within the 40-mile railway belt in the province of British Columbia.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I cannot think it was ever the purpose of parliament, when enacting the statutes to which reference has been made, that this house should merely give approval to orders in council about which it knows nothing. The orders in council should either be in a schedule to be approved, or the orders in council themselves should be available beyond merely laying them on the table at the beginning of the session. But leaving that aside for the moment, I direct the attention of the minister to the fact that this parliament should not under any circumstances be asked to give approval to an order in council that appears in the British Columbia Gazette. I think the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) will agree with me that the practice is not only bad, but highly improper that this government should be asked to give approval to an order in council from the British Columbia Gazette without at least having the order in council before us in order that we may deal with it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They are in both Gazettes.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, but it says:

Orders in council which have been published in the Canada Gazette and in the British Columbia Gazette between the 11th November, 1926, and the 20th December, 1927, in accordance with the provisions of subsection (d) of section 38 of the regulations.

There is nothing here to indicate what these orders in council were except that they referred to the administration of what is known as the railway belt, and under those circumstances, the orders in council in the British Columbia Gazette not being before us—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They were placed on the table.

Mr. BENNETT: The ones published in our Gazette were placed on the table, but the orders in council published in the British Columbia Gazette were not.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They are the same.

Mr. BENNETT: It does not make any difference. We are being asked to approve something that appeared in the British Columbia Gazette, over which we have no control, and which Gazette is not laid upon this table. It is the form of the resolution that I am pointing out is wrong, and I suggest that it stand and be modified to meet what I conceive to be the correct constitutional practice, namely, that this parliament should not endeavour to approve any order in council issued by any authority other than the authority that speaks in the right of the crown of the Dominion. That is the constitutional practice.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is done merely to notify the people of British Columbia. The lands in question and the administration of these acts are under the jurisdiction of the federal government, and the orders in council are published in the Canada Gazette, but in order that the people of British Columbia may have an opportunity of seeing what is being done, they are also published in the British Columbia Gazette.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister surely realizes that you do not say, in dealing with orders in council that affect Alberta or Saskatchewan—at all events you have not done it heretofore—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, for the very good reason that we have only a very small portion of the lands of British Columbia, the railway belt and the Peace River block.

Mr. BENNETT: And you should have only a very small portion in Alberta.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Be that as it may, we have them all now. May I say to my hon. friend that this is merely to close out the year, and what I propose doing next year, if I am here, is to introduce legislation to make compulsory the publication of these orders in council in the Gazette, and to discontinue the practice of having parliament approve of a resolution in order to validate the orders in council.

Mr. BENNETT: Continuing my observations, I only desire to point out that I assume that what was done was that the order in council was passed here and was published in the Canada Gazette and also published in the British Columbia Gazette, but we have no control over the matter of its publication in the British Columbia Gazette except the sending of it down there, and why we should make it appear that we are approving of an order in council that is published in some other publication than the official publication of this country, I cannot for the moment understand. Why mention the British Columbia Gazette at all? Why not strike out those words?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am perfectly willing to do that. I move, Mr. Speaker, to strike out in the second line of the last paragraph of the resolution the words "and in the British Columbia Gazette."

Amendment agreed to.

ASCENSION DAY—VICTORIA DAY ADJOURNMENTS

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That when this house adjourns on Wednesday the 16th instant, it stand adjourned until Friday, the 18th instant.

That when this House adjourns on Wednesday, the 23rd instant, it stand adjourned until Friday, the 25th instant.

He said: The house understands that the 17th of the month is Ascension day, and that it has been customary for the house not to sit on that day, it being a holy day. The 24th of May is Victoria day, and on that day also it has not been customary for the house to be in session.

Mr. BENNETT: Although we have sat on Dominion day.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: And there have been occasions when we have sat on the 24th of May.

Mr. BENNETT: Some of our friends are greatly exercised over two holidays following in those two weeks. If they leave for home on Wednesday night to come back here on Friday morning in both instances, it will be very difficult for some of them. I do not know how the matter might be dealt with, for I have not yet had an opportunity to discuss it, but on one of the days it might be well for the house to adjourn until the succeeding Monday.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I was going to make a suggestion, which possibly would meet with the approval of the house, and might facilitate bringing the session to a close within a reasonable time; that is, that we should sit on Saturday of each of those weeks.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If the house will agree to it unanimously I should like to move:

That on Saturday, May 19th instant and every Saturday thereafter until the end of the session, the house shall meet at three o'clock in the afternoon, and that the order of business and procedure shall be the same as on Fridays.

It means that if this motion should carry the house will not sit on Thursday either of next week or the week following, but will sit on Saturday of next week and, if the house is still in session, on Saturday of the week following. I think it might facilitate the passing of the motion later, Mr. Speaker, if it were allowed to stand until to-morrow. The three motions could be considered together then, unless there is unanimous consent to its adoption now.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the desire of the house that the three motions stand until to-morrow?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. SPEAKER: The three motions stand until to-morrow.

CIVIL SERVICE

RECLASSIFICATION OF OFFICIALS IN POSTAL SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Ladner) asked if I would produce the correspondence in connection with the recommendations made to the Civil Service Commission for increased salaries of postal clerks and other employees. I promised that I would endeavour to do so to-day. I now desire to lay the correspondence on the table.

HOME BANK DEPOSITORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. G. McQUARRIE (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance if the government has come to any conclusion with regard to further payments to the Home Bank depositors?

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, some few days ago I made a statement regarding the Home Bank depositors. If my hon. friend will contain his soul in patience until the supplementary estimates are brought down, he will there find what we propose doing for the Home Bank depositors.

DANGER TO BORDER RESIDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Northwest Toronto): Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) what will be done to protect Canadian citizens and Canadian interests at Port Colborne from the invasion of several armed American cruisers, as set out in articles in yesterday's Mail and Empire and the Toronto Star. One man was shot at. There is a heavy tourist traffic in this district at the opening of the season, and it is important that the necessary protective measures should be taken.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has raised a very large question when he speaks of an "invasion". I should like to see the articles to which he refers in order that I may consider them and give him a reply later.

[Mr. Speaker.]

TOBACCO GROWING INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GOTT (South Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) that the people of western Ontario have been anxiously and patiently—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GOTT: Will the minister state when we may look for the report of the commission appointed by the house to inquire into the tobacco situation in western Ontario, in view of the fact that he promised some time ago to lay it on the table?

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I expect to table it some day this week.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON FISHERIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. G. ERNST (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin) if the fisheries report is being printed for distribution amongst the members of the house. While I am on my feet I wish to draw attention to the fact that a synopsis of the report was published in La Presse of Montreal on Monday preceding its tabling in the house.

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the report is being printed, and I think it will be ready for distribution to-morrow. As to the synopsis which appeared in La Presse, I think certain information was given out by the members of the commission themselves, subject to an understanding which, I am told, was not observed. I disclaim any responsibility for what happened.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): The other day, Mr. Speaker, I directed the attention of the right hon. Prime Minister to what had happened in connection with another report. It would appear to me that the proper way to deal with members of a commission who give to the public the contents of a document that should be in the hands of the administration before it appears in the newspapers, would be neither to pay their expenses, nor to allow any sum by way of compensation for services. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has,

I think, taken the correct view, but something should be done to prevent this premature publication. This is the second time it has occurred this session.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Withhold their salaries.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly.

NATURALIZATION ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (Secretary of State) moved:

That Bill No. 19 to amend the Naturalization Act be now read a third time.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Guthrie:

That the word "now" be left out, and the words "this day six months" be added to the end of the question.

It is not my intention, Mr. Speaker, to address to the chamber any extended remarks in connection with this matter. We have considered the bill very fully in committee and also upon second reading. The fact is that in 1914 we enacted legislation with respect to naturalization, which legislation might be devided into two parts. The first part deals with the conditions under which applicants for naturalization may obtain British citizenship—no longer Canadian citizenship, but British citizenship. The second part deals with the procedure under which the Secretary of State satisfies himself that the conditions imposed with respect to qualifications have been observed by the applicant. The conditions under which applications are to be dealt with are: that the applicant should have resided in Canada for five years, should have a good character, should possess an adequate knowledge of English or French, and should have the intention of residing in the British dominions or remaining in the service of the crown. If those conditions are satisfied, and the Secretary of State is seized of sufficient information that those conditions have been complied with, the applicant is entitled, not as of right, but in the discretion of the Secretary of State, to British citizenship.

We differ with respect to the question of procedure. Heretofore in this country the procedure has been to leave the matter to the judges of the country. There is a provision in the present statute that unless there be grave reasons why it should not be so, the applicant should appear before a judge and satisfy him of his having complied with the conditions to which I have referred. These conditions with respect to procedure are now being swept away, and hereafter two persons, who are natural-born British subjects, and a justice of the peace, who may not be, will certify to the Secretary of State that there has been compliance with the conditions under which citizenship could be obtained.

We object to these changes for two reasons. First, because no evidence has been adduced of any sufficient weight indicating that there has been any difficulty that should be considered sufficient by this parliament in the administration of the act as it now stands. In other words, there has been no crying grievance for which a remedy should be provided. Secondly, the minister himself, as well as the only judicial opinion to which he referred in the course of the debate on this matter, has made it abundantly clear that the department desired uniformity or, as Chief Justice Meredith said, the "even administration of the law." There being no evidence of any crying grievance on the part of anyone that could not be remedied by existing legislation, the first ground disappears.

With respect to the second, the method now proposed not only does not make for uniformity or convenience in the administration of the law, but permits a variation in the administration of the law, within an area of five miles, in dealing with two applicants. Entirely different standards are observed. That not only makes for inconvenience in the administration of the law and lack of uniformity, but it puts a premium on laxity in administration. For these reasons, without going into the details that have been traversed in committee, we deem it incumbent upon us to move that this bill do not receive the sanction of parliament and be enacted into law, but that it disappear from the order paper.

If there were any crying grievance in the law as it now stands, if the law were inadequate to deal with the difficulties that have been referred to, if it were shown that a new method would conduce to convenience and to uniformity in the administration of the law, or that the safeguards which should surround naturalization of aliens were any better than those that now exist, there would be no difficulty in acceding to the proposals now being advanced by the administration. But as the matter now stands we are asked to substitute, for the traditional fairness and discretion of the judiciary of this country, the discretion of two persons, perhaps illiterate, who may reside near the intending applicant, together with a justice of the peace who might not himself be able to speak the English language or to understand whether the applicant's knowledge of it was adequate or inadequate. For the discretion of the judiciary we are asked to substitute a discretion such as that. Against that we protest, and for that reason we move the six months' hoist with respect to this legislation.

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (Secretary of State): I do not desire to offer any extended remarks at this stage; I agree with the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) that the matter has been thoroughly discussed at one stage or another, either on the second reading or in committee. I merely wish to summarize now the main reasons for the changes we have proposed.

In 1911 at the imperial conference an agreement was reached between the representatives of the British government and those of the government of the dominions on certain enactments with relation to the granting of British citizenship throughout the empire. As has been pointed out during this discussion, it was required that an applicant should have resided five years within the British Empire and one year in that part of the empire wherein the application was filed; that he should be of good character; that he should possess a knowledge of one of the official languages of the dominion wherein the application was made; and that he should indicate his intention to reside within the British Empire in the future. These were the requirements that were made compulsory with respect to the granting of naturalization within any part of the empire. But the local regulations were left to the various legislatures or governments within the empire. The principle was laid down, however—and this is not disputed now—that absolute discretion should rest with the government in every dominion as to allowing or disallowing the granting of a certificate. The local procedure, as I have just said, was a matter for the individual government to determine.

In this country prior to 1914, when the present act was put on the statutes, applications for naturalization were filed and presented to the courts of the land, and I believe that in the act of 1914 that feature was retained in our legislation rather as a remnant of the past than as a new enactment. Since then it has been found—and the claim has been pressed upon the Department of the Secretary of State—that for a number of years there has been great inconvenience in the less settled parts of the country on the part of applicants desiring to be naturalized. They have found it difficult to appear in person before the judge. This difficulty has been amply illustrated in the debate that has taken place on this bill. We have tried to show that leaving it to the discretion of the individual judge to pass upon the requirements as to character or adequacy of knowledge does not make for uniformity in decision but tends rather to serious discrepancies.

I would point out that in no other dominion of the empire does the applicant appear before a judge. This is a provision that exists only in Canada. And, I repeat, it was carried into legislation in 1914 not so much as a new provision but rather as a remnant of the practice in the past in the granting of naturalization. During this debate we have been asked what would be substituted for the present procedure requiring appearance before the court and the decision of a judge. I have indicated what the regulations will be On this point some hon. members have expressed the opinion that there would be a greater safeguard and a greater guarantee if the regulations, instead of being merely departmental, were made statutory. The government at once yielded to that opinion, deeming it proper and just. We accepted it because we were very anxious to demonstrate to the house and to the country that we had not the least unworthy motive in the matter. For no consideration did we desire either to make naturalization something that could be obtained without a proper guarantee or, as some hon. members have suggested, to make use of it for any political or electoral purpose. For these reasons we at once yielded to the demand that the regulations be made statutory, and that is why we have embodied in the bill, now proposed for third reading, the provision regarding the posting of a copy of the application in the nearest post office, retaining as well the period of ninety days which is now in the act. We are providing that a copy of the application shall be printed in the nearest newspaper and we have also made statutory the provision that the application shall be accompanied by a certificate signed by two native-born British householders and by one justice of the peace. And after all these statutory safeguards and guarantees have been properly observed the department will, as it has done in the past, inquire into every case brought to its attention through the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. This body, I may point out here, is no longer local or territorial in character; it is now a national institution operating throughout the country and giving magnificent results.

I do not think I need stress these points any longer. I have spoken on many occasions in the course of this debate and have done my best to explain the policy of the government and to indicate the intentions of the department in the matter, and I ask the house to pass the third reading of the bill, which will vest in the government the power of allowing or disallowing the granting of a certificate of naturalization, which we claim is a matter of policy and not a matter of a judicial nature. This legislation will bring our act into perfect conformity with the statutes in other parts of the empire. We make our regulations statutory, following the practice which exists in other dominions, and by doing away with the inconvenience to the applicants of appearing in person before the courts, after which they must wait for a period of months before receiving their certificate, the government will be enabled within a reasonable time and under perfect guarantees and safeguards to grant certificates of naturalization to immigrants who have legally entered this country and have resided here in a peaceful and law-abiding way for five years. I think every hon. member will agree that if we want to build up this country and if we want to make Canada prosperous and progressive it will not suffice to invite immigrants from all parts of the world to settle in this country; it will not be sufficient to open our doors to these immigrants. After they have lived here for a number of years, after they have shown themselves to be of good character and have learned one of our official languages we should bind them to this country by making it possible for every one of them to receive the priceless gift of British citizenship.

DEPARTMENT OF PENSIONS AND NATIONAL HEALTH

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Health) moved the third reading of Bill No. 205, respecting the Department of Health and Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

FERTILIZER ACT AMENDMENT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the senate to Bill No. 72, to amend the Fertilizer Act.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain the nature of these amendments?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The amendments made by the senate are for the purpose of clarifying the meaning of the term "agent in Canada," in section 2 and have it mean agents domiciled and resident in Canada. Three further lines are also added to section 2, providing that unless such agency or a like agency be so maintained registered, the applicant shall cease to have the right to import, sell or offer or hold for sale any fertilizer in Canada.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

RETURNED SOLDIERS' INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 290, to amend the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Payments in case of disability not due to war.

Mr. BENNETT: Is this bill wholly in accordance with the recommendations of the committee? Some of those who are not members of the committee are desirous of knowing what it means.

Mr. ROBB: The explanations are all on the right hand side. The act has already expired. Under section 2 it is now reopened and the time is extended to 1933. Section 3 removes the right to insure from those whose expectation of life is very doubtful. That is about all there is to the measure.

Section agreed to.

Sections 2 and 3 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

PENSION ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Health) moved the second reading of Bill No. 289, to amend the Pension Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Pensions and National Health in place of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment.

Mr. BENNETT: Do I understand that this bill represents the legislation founded upon the unanimous report of the committee to which the question of pension was referred at the beginning of the session?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is true. There are other sections but they are of a departmental nature and have been agreed upon.

Mr. BENNETT: It would be well to state in the committee those sections unanimously agreed upon by the special committee and those that are departmental.

Section agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

Section 3—Definitions.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is departmental.

Section agreed to.

Section 4 agreed to.

On section 5—Commission attached to department.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is departmental.

Mr. BENNETT: Was this section agreed to in its entirety by the special committee?

Mr. POWER: This is a section of the department.

Mr. BENNETT: I should like some time to consider it.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The section might stand.

Section stands.

On section 6—Regulations.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is departmental.

Section stands.

Sections 7, 8 and 9 agreed to.

On section 10—Pension suspended on imprisonment or paid to dependent.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This is departmental.

Mr. BENNETT: Some time ago a letter came to me from a friend in England, saying that the widow of a member of the forces who had been killed in action had been deprived of her pension because she had been charged with improper conduct. I see that by this section we continue the pension even in the event of the imprisonment of one of the dependents. Would a case such as I mention be met by this legislation?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): No.

Mr. BENNETT: I presented the case to the pension board, because it struck me as one of extremely great hardship.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Under the new section there will be an opportunity to appeal on misconduct.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no doubt about the misconduct.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They never had that privilege before.

Mr. BENNETT: The misconduct is admitted; that is the point I make. In the case before us there is imprisonment, and still the pension is continued; in the case I mention there was improper conduct. One was a crime against the laws of the country and the other was a crime against good morals—it did not happen to be a crime against the laws of the country. It struck me at the time that it was a case of tremendous hardship, because the frailities of human kind, both men and women, are well known. I took the case up with the pension board, but nothing apparently could be done because the woman in question would not make a declaration that she had not been guilty of misconduct. But she was endeavouring to reform, and the very fact that she did not get the pension drove her into a worse and worse condition. This friend of mine who had investigated the matter thought that we were treating her rather harshly, having regard to the well known frailties of human nature.

Mr. POWER: The case to which my hon. friend calls attention is the case, I assume, of a dependent—

Mr. BENNETT: She was the widow of a member of the forces.

Mr. POWER: The act provides for the suspension or the taking away altogether of the pension—

Mr. BENNETT: They did take it away.

Mr. POWER: —of a widow of a member of the forces who has been guilty of immorality. At one time the act was much wider than it is at the present time, and the pension could be taken away for practically any offence. The matter was argued in the committee, and there has to be distinct immorality of a flagrant kind—

Mr. BENNETT: This was not flagrant.

Mr. POWER: She has to be openly living with another man or living as a prostitute before the commission can suspend the pension. I do not think it was thought well to go beyond that. I have not the section before me at the moment.

Mr. BENNETT: The difficulty is a very real one. My information is that the cancelling of the pension when the lapse from proper conduct was discovered has driven the woman into a life of shame, because she has nothing to live on at all and is incapable of doing work. She appealed to them to give her a chance to start anew, and they said they had no authority to do it. My information came some months ago, and I do not know whether she is now living, but it struck me at the time that that is not the sort of case in which we should deprive the woman of a chance in life. She was deceived by this particular individual, and that is all there was to it.

Section stands.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

ST. JOHN RIVER STORAGE COMPANY

Sir EUGENE FISET (Rimouski) moved the third reading of Bill 17 respecting the St. John River Storage Company.

Mr. J. F. POULIOT (Temiscouata): Mr. Speaker, I move seconded by Mr. Woodsworth:

That the said bill be not now read a third time, but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada, in accordance with the Revised Statutes of Canada 1927, chapter 35, section 56, in order that the constitutional question therein involved may be given a legal interpretation.

This bill involves several most important questions of law, and to elucidate those questions I think it well to state some matters of fact. I would draw the attention of the house to page 5 of the bill, where will be found the preamble of chapter 100 of the statutes of Quebec, 1927, which we are called upon to adopt and confirm by this bill. The first paragraph reads thus:

Whereas the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission Company has, by its petition, represented:—

That it was incorporated by the Act 15 George V, chapter 117, for the purpose of regulating the flow of the waters in the Madawaska and St. Francis rivers, constructing certain dams for the storage of water, and other incidental powers required for the purpose of carrying on the development of the water-power at Grand Falls, in the province of New Brunswick.

It will be observed that this paragraph recites that the act of 15 George V, chapter 117, was passed to enable certain dams for the storage of water to be constructed. This I will deal with later on. The work was to be undertaken by the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission Company. The second paragraph of the preamble is as follows:

That arrangements have now been made whereby the development of the water-power at Grand Falls is to be undertaken and carried out by the Saint John River Power Company, a company incorporated by the Act 16 George V, chapter 45, of the acts of the legislature of the province of New Brunswick.

The third paragraph is in these words:

That the lieutenant-governor in council of New Brunswick and the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission, with the approval of the said lieutenant-governor in council, were, by the terms of the said act, authorized to transfer or otherwise render available to the Saint John River Power Company all property, rights, powers and privileges vested in the province or in the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission—

The same concern.

—which the company might deem necessary or useful for or in connection with the development and generation of hydro-electric power or energy at Grand Falls and pondage and storage thereof in New Brunswick or beyond its borders,—

"Beyond its borders" is most important.

—and, without limitation of the generality of the foregoing, all rights, powers and privileges of the province of the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission under or by virtue of the Act 15, George V, chapter 117, incorporating the company petitioner, and any and all other property and rights acquired for the development of storage in the province of Quebec.

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, the province of New Brunswick decided to embark on two big undertakings. The first had to do with the development of hydro-electric power at Grand Falls on the St. John river; the second was for the purpose of constructing certain works in the province of Quebec to regulate the flow of the Madawaska and St. Francis rivers in connection with the water-power development at Grand Falls. It will be noted that the new Brunswick Electric Power Commission Company, although incorporated by the province of Quebec and also by the province of New Brunswick, forms one single body, acting for and on behalf of the province of New Brunswick. Projected as a public ownership undertaking, after a change of government the legislature of New Brunswick empowered the new government to sell to a private company all the rights belonging to the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission. It ceased to be a public utility concern and became a private company. What sort of company? It is a branch of the International Paper Company, and if hon. members will look at page 258 of the New Brunswick statutes of 1926 they will see the name of that well known financier, Mr. Archibald Graustein, manufacturer of Framingham, Massachusetts, who is the head of the International Paper Company. But a distinction must be made between the province of New Brunswick on the one hand and that gentleman on the other. When the province of New Brunswick sold its rights to a private individual there was a transfer, according to the preamble of the act, of all rights, powers and privileges vested in the province or in the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission:

Which the company might deem necessary or useful for or in connection with the development and generation of hydro-electric power or energy at Grand Falls and pondage and storage thereof in New Brunswick or beyond its borders, and, without limitation of the generality of the foregoing, all rights, powers and privileges of the province and of the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission under or by virtue of the Act 15, George V, chapter 117.

The acts which we are now called upon to confirm contradict themselves. In the preamble to the second act we see that the province of New Brunswick has no longer any rights. I say that as a lawyer and without prejudice, because I am not now discussing the legal aspect of the question. My first wish is to make a statement of the facts according to this official document which we have in our hands. The moment the second Quebec bill was passed in 1927 the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission ceased to have any rights. The province of New Brunswick no longer had rights either in the power or in the storage; those rights were all transferred in virtue of the act of the New Brunswick legislature.

Another paragraph of the preamble to which I wish to direct the attention of the house is the following:

That in order to make fully effective such change of enjoyment of the benefits of the act incorporating the petitioner and to render the same effective for the purpose intended, and to change the name of the company, it is necessary that the said act be amended.

It was two years after the first act was passed, and one year after the transfer of the rights of the province of New Brunswick and of the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission to a private company, that another Quebec act was passed, "to make fully effective such change of enjoyment of the benefits of the act". I believe the deed of sale was completed, but the St. John River Storage Company was not a party to the sale. What I find strange is this. After the province of New Brunswick had sold all its rights to a private company there were no more rights that could be enjoyed, no more rights from which there were benefits; yet an act was passed in Quebec "to make fully effective such change". At that moment the former directors of the New Brunswick Power Commission, incorporated by the Quebec act, ceased to act for the province of New Brunswick. A change of government had taken place; they were no longer representing the province. And, I may add, they had not been incorporated alone; their successors also had been incorporated under the same name of the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission. And their successors, according to the Quebec act, were to be replaced by the lieutenant governor of the province of New Brunswick. The first three directors of the company, incorporated by the first act, were incorporated not in their private capacity but in their official capacity as representatives of the executive of New Brunswick. I am ready to believe that they had no personal interest in the matter; and it could not be otherwise, because everyone in this house knows that no member of the executive can have any personal interest with the executive. Such persons can act only in their public capacity. If therefore they had had a private interest—which I cannot believe—it would have been strictly illegal and against the general principles of government, not only in Canada but in every other democratic country.

After that change of government, when the three gentlemen were defeated who are named in section 1 of the first act, chapter 117 of the Quebec statutes of 1925, those gentlemen no longer had any right to speak for the executive of the province of New Brunswick. The only three gentlemen who are named in this bill—named in both acts, according to schedule A—are:

> The Hon. Pierre J. Veniot, of the town of Bathurst, in the county of Gloucester, in the province of New Brunswick, premier of the province of New Brunswick, the Hon. Ernest A. Smith, of the town of Shediac, in the county of Westmorland, in the province of New Brunswick, chairman of the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission, and the Hon. Joseph Enoil Michaud, of the town of Edmundston, in the county of Madawaska, in the province of New Brunswick, member of the executive council of the said province of New Brunswick, and a commissioner of the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission.

They are the three gentlemen mentioned in section 1 of the first Quebec act; and according to section 4, to which I alluded a moment ago, the persons named in section 1 of the act shall be the first directors and shall remain in office as such until replaced by the lieutenant governor in council of the province of New Brunswick. That section has been changed in the second bill, and now reads as follows:

> The persons named in section 1 of this act shall be the first members and directors, and their successors in office at the date of this amendment shall remain in office as such until the election of their successors in accordance with the provisions of the Quebec Companies Act.

When the second bill was passed at Quebec the gentlemen who were mentioned in the first bill were no longer acting for the province of New Brunswick, and even if there had been no change after the general election they would have had no power to act for that province because at that moment New Brunswick had sold all its rights in the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission to a private company. The same thing cannot be sold twice, or to two different people; they had sold their rights and had nothing left.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I come to a very delicate question. I have the greatest regard for the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot); I believe he is an honest man; I believe in his sincerity and integrity, and because I so believe I cannot think he has any interest in the matter. If he had an interest in it I would say that I have no more confidence in him, and I believe the people of the country would say the same. If the Postmaster General has no private interest in this matter I will appeal to my friends on this side of the house to divide equally, in order not to displease my friend from Rimouski (Sir Eugene Fiset); I will ask the support of my hon. friends opposite, and that will give me a nice majority. At any rate, I have explained the facts as shortly as possible in order to acquaint the house with the question now before it.

Here we have two Quebec bills coming before us for approval and adoption. Are they legal? Are they intra vires? Or on the other hand are they illegal and ultra vires? If they are illegal can we make them any better by adopting and confirming them? This is not only a matter of interest to the county of Temiscouata which I have the honour to represent in this house and in which this proposed storage plant will be built, involving the flooding of about forty square miles of farm land, as a lawyer for one of the companies interested in this matter told me on Sunday last; this is not only a matter of interest to that county but it is a matter of interest to the country at large.

We should know the jurisdiction of this parliament and of the provincial legislatures in order that we may not exceed that jurisdiction, and before any measure is passed we should ascertain whether or not we have sufficient authority to so deal with it. In connection with this matter I represent my county under a special power of attorney, contained in a resolution passed by the county council of Temiscouata some time ago. I do not wish to hurt the feelings of anyone; I think this matter should be considered from a broad point of view; it should be considered without favouritism and without any suggestion of friendship or enmity. If it is good this house should pass it, and I am sure that if the house finds it to be bad the amendment will be adopted and the matter referred to the supreme court for interpretation.

Section 1 of this bill reads as follows:

In so far as the parliament of Canada has authority so to do the two acts of the legislature of the province of Quebec, set forth in schedule "A" to this act, are hereby adopted and confirmed, to the same extent as if re-enacted herein.

That reminds me of the labels we sometimes see, bearing the words, "Glass. Fragile. Handle with care." This section clearly shows that the promoters of the bill know it is illegal. Under the British North America Act the imperial parliament delegated authority to the Dominion parliament and provincial legislatures of Canada to enact laws, and duly fixed the limits of their respective jurisdictions. Such is the constitution of this country, drafted by those statesmen who are rightly called the fathers of confederation, and later adopted by the Imperial parliament. As it now stands, that act cannot be changed by the Dominion or Imperial parliaments except by and with the unanimous consent of the provinces, who were a party to that agreement. Moreover, the rights and powers conferred upon the Dominion parliament by the Imperial parliament cannot be delegated to the provincial legislatures, or vice versa. The Dominion parliament is bound to act within the limits of its own jurisdiction as defined and determined by the British North America Act, and those limits may not and cannot be exceeded. The same rule undoubtedly applies to the provincial legislatures, and when the Dominion parliament or any provincial legislature exceeds in its enactments the limits fixed by the British North America Act, such enactments are ultra vires and null and void, because of the lack of authority possessed by the legislative body. These are fundamental and elementary rules of constitutional law.

To sum up, no legislative body can confer upon anyone rights or privileges which it does not possess. Part VI of the British North America Act, entitled "Distribution of legislative powers", contains the following disposition under the subtitle "Exclusive Powers of Provincial Legislatures." Section 92 of the act reads thus:

In each province the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to matters coming within the classes of subjects next hereinafter enumerated; that is to say,—

10. Local works and undertakings, other than such as are of the following classes:—

(a) Lines of steam or other ships, railways, canals, telegraphs, and other works and undertakings connecting the province with any other or others of the provinces, or extending beyond the limits of the province;

11. The incorporation of companies with provincial objects.

Both the above-mentioned provisions shall be construed with the last paragraph of section 91, which enumerates the powers of parliament, and which reads as follows:

And any matter coming within any of the classes of subjects enumerated in this section shall not be deemed to come within the class of matters of a local or private nature comprised in the enumeration of the classes of subjects by this act assigned exclusively to the legislatures of the provinces.

Such are the limits fixed by the imperial parliament for the respective jurisdiction of this parliament and of the provincial legislatures with regard to incorporation of companies. One should note that the words "exclusive" and "exclusively" have been intentionally repeated to clear any possible doubt on the legislator's intent and also to remove all conflicts of jurisdiction. What interpretation has been given by the fathers of confederation to that part of our constitution? In the legislative assembly on February 6, 1865, the Attorney General, Sir John A. Macdonald said:

Any hon. member on examining the list of different subjects which are to be assigned to the general and local legislatures respectively, will see that all the great questions which affect the general interests of the confederacy as a whole, are confided to the federal parliament, while the local interests and local laws of each section are preserved intact, and entrusted to the care of the local bodies.

It will be seen that the local legislatures have the control of all local works; and it is a matter of great importance, and one of the chief advantages of the federal union and of local legislatures, that each province will have the power and means of developing its own resources and aiding its own progress after its own fashion and in its own way. Therefore all the local improvements, all local enterprises or undertakings of any kind, have been left to the care and management of the local legislatures of each province. It is provided that all "lines of steam or other ships, railways, canals and other works, connecting any two or more of the provinces together or extending beyond the limits of any province," shall belong to the general government and be under the control of the general legislature. . .

Besides all the powers that are specifically given in the thirty-seventh and last item of this portion of the constitution, confers on the general legislature the general mass of sovereign legislation, the power to legislate on "all matters of a general character, not specially and exclusively reserved for the local governments and legislatures" . . . It is in itself a wise and necessary provision. We thereby strengthen the central parliament, and make the confederation one people and one government, instead or five peoples and five governments, with merely a point of authority connecting us to a limited and insufficient extent. . .

There are numerous subjects which belong, of right, both to the local and the general parliaments. In all these cases, it is provided, in order to prevent a conflict of authority, that where there is concurrent jurisdiction in the general and local parliaments, the same rule shall apply as now applies in cases where there is concurrent jurisdiction in the imperial and in the provincial parliaments, and that when the legislation of the one is adverse to or contradictory of the legislation of the other, in all such cases the action of the general parliament must overrule, exnecessitate, the action of the local legislature.

On February 20, 1865, Sir Etienne Pascal Tache said:

The 29th section says: "The general parliament shall have power to make laws for the peace, welfare and good government of the federated provinces, (saving the sovereignty of England), and especially laws respecting the following subjects."

Then follows a list of all the subjects committed to the general government. But the resolution does not finish there. There is something that comes after all that, and it is this:

"And generally respecting all matters of a general character, not specially and exclusively reserved for the local governments and legislatures."

On February 9, 1865, Hon. Thomas D'Arcy McGee had already said:

It is a principle eminently favourable to liberty, because local affairs are left to be dealt with by local bodies and cannot be interfered with by those who have no local interest in them, while matters of a general character are left exclusively to a general government.

The Secretary for the Colonies, the Earl of Carnarvon, in introducing the bill to the House of Lords on February 19, 1867, said:

The real object which we have in view is to give to the central government those high functions and almost sovereign powers by which general principles and uniformity of legislation may be secured in those questions that are of common import to all the provinces; and, at the same time, to retain for each province so ample a measure of municipal liberty and self-government as will allow and indeed compel them to exercise these local powers which they can exercise with great advantage to the community.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

Mr. Adderly, M.P., on the second reading of the bill in the Commons, on February 28, 1867, said:

The power of the provincial legislatures, in reference to legislation, will be confined to a certain number of specified subjects.

He was supported by Mr. Cardwell, M.P., who also said:

It is necessary that for municipal and local purposes there should be large powers of legislation in the provinces there.

If the provincial legislatures enjoy complete autonomy within their spheres of action, it is only fair to claim the same rights for the Dominion parliament. Is the object of a company local or provincial? It comes under the sole jurisdiction of the province. Consequently, if the object of a company is to connect the province with any other or others of the provinces, or to extend beyond the limits of the province, it comes under the sole jurisdiction of the Dominion. No company can come under both jurisdictions. As there are no concurring rights in that respect, there would be only conflicting rights in contravention with the spirit and letter of the British North America Act.

Bill No. 17 is a most extraordinary measure. This parliament is called to give retroactive power to provincial enactments by adopting and confirming them. There are doubts expressed in the bill itself about the authority or jurisdiction of this parliament. If we have authority, the provincial legislatures have none; if on the contrary the provincial legislatures have authority, we have none, and it is absolutely impossible for us not only to adopt and confirm, but even to consider such provincial enactments. If they are ultra vires, they cannot be confirmed; if they are intra vires, we are deprived of jurisdiction or authority in the matter. A distinction is to be made between enactments which are ultra vires per se and those which are ultra vires per accidens tantum. The former are radically null and void and essentially non-existent. There is no remedy for them; the latter are partially null and void and they can be remedied.

The only precedent that has been timidly quoted before the private bills committee is an act incorporating the United Church of Canada, 14-15 George V, chapter 100. After that bill was adopted by parliament it was submitted to the legislature of the province of Quebec, (Quebec, 16 George V, chapter 97) for, as the preamble states, the matters concerning the said corporation "are or may be of exclusive provincial jurisdiction". A shrewd lawyer said that the same course has been followed in connection with Bill 17, except that it was the "reverse", while anyone can see that it is absolutely the contrary.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Time.

Mr. POULIOT: I apologize to the house for referring closely to my notes, but I wish to make my remarks as brief as possible and this is the only way in which I can do so, as this is a technical case; otherwise, I would speak just as long as I did in the private bills committee.

Was the legislature of the province of Quebec empowered with jurisdiction or authority to incorporate by section 1 of chapter 117 of the statutes of Quebec the first members and directors of the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission Company in their official capacity as representatives of the executive of another province? The three members and directors or promoters of the company are thus designated in section 1:

(a) The first one, as premier of the province of New Brunswick.

(b) The second one, as chairman of the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission.

(c) The third one as member of the executive council of the province of New Brunswick, and a commissioner of the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission.

Their private occupation is nowhere mentioned in the act, and as I have stated before, it was not possible for them to act for the province both in their private capacity and as members of the executive of the province. According to section 4 they shall be the first—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak to this amendment I may say that it is not my intention to deal with the legal aspect of it, but may I call the attention of the committee to this fact, that the Quebec legislature passed two acts touching the franchise which was granted to New Brunswick and later to the company in question? One act was passed in 1925 and the other in 1927, and if either of those acts were considered by my hon. friend ultra vires of the province of Quebec, there has been sufficient time to apply to the Dominion government for a veto. No such application has been made.

I wish at this point to give a history of the question so that hon. members may be seized of all the facts and be placed in a position to vote intelligently upon the amendment. In 1925, the province of New Brunswick, of which I had the honour at that time of being premier, adopted a policy of hydro development by public ownership. An act incorporating myself as premier, the chairman of the New Brunswick hydro commission and one of the commissioners was passed by the province of New Brunswick. An application was then made to the province of Quebec to incorporate the company so that they could hold property and franchises in the name of one province, namely, New Brunswick, in another province, namely, Quebec. The reason for that was this. The development was to take place and the dam to be built at Grand Falls on the river St. John which, at a point two and a half miles above this site, forms the international boundary between the province of New Brunswick and the state of Maine. The water flowing in the international river was not sufficient to warrant the expenditure of a large sum of money at Grand Falls to develop 50,000 or 60,000 horse-power, without privileges being obtained either in the state of Maine on the Fish river or in Quebec at the Temiscouata lake. The matter was brought before the International Joint Commission and after that question was settled and the International Joint Commission reached a decision on all matters pertaining to the international waters, we made application to the authorities of the state of Maine for the privilege of damming what is known as the Fraser river and its ten lakes emptying into that river. That privilege we did not obtain.

We then applied to the province of Quebec for the privilege of damming the Temiscouata lake where it empties into the river whose waters flow into the St. John river at Edmundston. That privilege was granted on certain conditions, one of them being that the province of New Brunswick was to reserve for the use of the province of Quebec 5,000 horse-power to be delivered at the boundary between the two provinces at the will and call of the government of Quebec, they to do what they liked with it after it was delivered at the boundary. We entered into that agreement and the province of Quebec passed the first act in 1925. It is true, as my hon. friend says, that the government which had propounded the policy of public ownership was defeated, but I cannot admit with him that the government was defeated on that question alone. After the new government came into power and after considerable deliberation on their part, they decided to change the policy, and pass the franchise to a company. Those rights were never sold as he wished the house to infer they were. They passed the franchise to this company for the development of Grand Falls under certain conditions. Among other conditions there was this, that they would enter into a contract with Frasers, Limited, for 13,000 dependable horse-power and 7,000 seasonal horse-power to be used by Frasers, Limited, for the establishment of a new pulp and paper mill on the north shore at or near Campbellton, a distance of 110 miles from Grand Falls across the province. The company to which was transferred this franchise by the local government also undertook as their part of the bargain to establish a new pulp mill on the north shore of New Brunswick either at Campbellton or at Dalhousie. It was also a condition of obtaining the franchise that the company should reserve six thousand horse-power for the absolute use of the New Brunswick hydro commission, which was then operating at Musquash. Those are the conditions under which the government coming into power in 1926 changed its policy of public ownership. This company under those conditions, under the franchise granted, began construction operations at Grand Falls in 1927, and to-day those operations have been completed, and they are prepared to distribute 50,000 horse-power throughout certain sections of the province of New Brunswick, but they cannot distribute that 50,000 horse-power unless the power as conferred upon them under the franchise granted by the government of the province of Quebec shall be left intact. That being so, they will go on with the construction of a dam at the foot of Temiscouata lake. The construction of that dam will not overflow 40,000 acres of land, as my hon. friend says. He is getting his information from somebody who does not know what he is talking about. The survey of Temiscouata lake and of all that country was made under the direction of myself, then Premier of New Brunswick and Minister of Public Works for the province. The construction of that dam will raise the level of the lakes seven and one-half feet. It will not, according to engineering reports, cause any undue damage to land under cultivation in that country, but should such be the case the owners of that land are protected under the act, and damages, of course, will have to be paid.

My friend in his remarks said that he did not wish to hurt the feelings of anybody, and that he hoped he would not be hurting my feelings, because he felt that I had no personal interest in this matter. With the stand which the hon. gentleman has taken on this question I have no fault to find. He represents the county of Temiscouata, and he has a perfect right to stand up for what he considers to be the rights of the people he represents, and nobody has any right to criticize him for that, but I want to say to him that I have an interest in this matter. I have a very deep interest in it, not simply as an individual, but as a resident of the province of New Brunswick, to see that no barrier shall be placed in the way of the development of the industries of that province. While I did not, now and perhaps never will, agree with the principle of private ownership in the development of hydro, now that that policy has been adopted by the government of New Brunswick there is nothing else I can do in the interest of my province, and in the interests of the industries of the province, but to accept the situation as I find it, and do all I can to encourage the development of the industries of that province, be it under private or public ownership. That is the interest that I have in this bill.

As to the legal aspects of it, as I said before I do not intend and, in fact, I am not capable of discussing them. I am not a lawyer, and I cannot deal with technical legal questions, and therefore I shall not attempt to touch the legal aspects of the case. But I do say this, that this bill was before the private bills committee, where my hon. friend from Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) took one hour and forty minutes of the two hours of that commitee to discuss the question in its legal and other aspects, and the committee after hearing him decided unanimously to report this bill without any amendments. I do hope, in the interests of the province of New Brunswick, in the interests of a province that is looking today for industrial development, a province that is rich in natural resources but has not the cheap power to develop them as they should be developed, that this amendment will not carry.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I merely want to lay emphasis upon what I brought to your attention last night when this bill was railroaded through the committee. It is surely evident to the house now that this is a very contentious bill, but we are now not even permitted to ask a question nor to have the sponsor give an explanation as could have been done in committee of the whole last night, and the house is in practically total ignorance of the merits of this question. It does seem to me, in view of the sudden railroading of the bill through committee last night, that the sponsor of the bill must have some fears lest there be some weight in the opposition to the bill. That is about the only conclusion I can come to, judging from the action that was taken last night, and I should like to suggest to some able lawyer of the house that he meet the argument of the hon. member for Temiscouata, who has taken exception to the bill. We who are laymen wish to vote intelligently on this question, and if his charges are not completely answered by those who are capable of doing so, although I am in favour of public ownership, and this is a public ownership proposition, as I understand it, nevertheless I would feel inclined to oppose the bill.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): I was asked to second this amendment, and I did so solely on the character of the bill itself. I am not a lawyer, but I do not think that even a layman can read this bill without recognizing that it is most peculiar in its framing. I know nothing of the details of the situation in Quebec and New Brunswick other than what has been given to us by the mover of this amendment and by the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot), but I must say that the explanation given by the Postmaster General has not made me feel that I made any mistake in seconding an amendment of this character.

As I have listened to the presentation of the argument in support of the amendment, it has struck me that the object of the bill is really to secure succession rights for an illegitimate still-born child. I am trying to put into ordinary phraseology what my hon. friend from Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) has conveyed in a very exhaustive and elaborate and learned discourse. I say a still-born child because the original company really never came into existence, never had life given to it. It was a public commission, and the effort is to try to give whatever rights it had to somebody else—to a private company. I would say that the child is illegitimate because evidently, if these rights were firmly established, the promoters of this bill would not be coming to us to-night. Apparently this is an elaborate, if somewhat clumsy, scheme by which, through collusion, the purposes of the British North America Act may be defeated.

I am not going into the question of public ownership versus private. Some of us believe in public ownership, but I do not think we need discuss that matter to-night. The Postmaster General has outlined the general background of the bill. Evidently an attempt was made by the province of Quebec to pass legislation incorporating the company. That legislation apparently is not intra vires. If it is, we would not have this bill presented here.

Now, let me very briefly call attention to two clauses of the bill. They are very simple. I am leaving out the preamble. It may very well be made out from the legal standpoint that the present company seeking incorporation is not the original company, but I suppose that is a matter between the two provinces concerned, and I do not know whether we ought to ask the Dominion authorities to interfere with that aspect of the case. Section 1 reads:

1. In so far as the parliament of Canada has authority so to do the two acts of the legislature of the province of Quebec, set forth in schedule "A" to this act, are hereby adopted and confirmed, to the same extent as if re-enacted herein.

It does strike me, Mr. Speaker, that that is most peculiar phraseology. The bill contains two schedules. We have no right whatever to amend these schedules; we can only accept or reject them. So a bill is presented to us which really we have no right to amend. I think there was very good reason for pushing this bill through the committee stage last night, since the committee could not have changed a single clause. In dealing with this matter we are simply passing a piece of enabling legislation. The opening phrase of the section which I have quoted is very strange:

In so far as the parliament of Canada has authority so to do—

I do not like to be a party to passing legislation of that kind. Either we have authority or we have not, and we ought not to act in this conditional fashion. Then the second clause:

Notwithstanding the provisions of section one of this act,—

Which we were supposed just now to pass.

—the company shall be governed by the applicable provisions of the Quebec Companies Act,—

Evidently the legislature of Quebec had not the power to pass the legislation which it enacted, and now the promoters come to this parliament to legitimize their offspring. The scheme is that once we have legitimized the offspring, we are to turn it back to the province of Quebec, which will then exercise jurisdiction over it. Let me repeat, either we have jurisdiction or we have not. Either the province of Quebec has jurisdiction or it has not. I take it that had it full jurisdiction this bill would not be before us. If we have jurisdiction, we have no right to resign our powers of administration to somebody else.

I think of the closely parallel case in my own province in which the province of Ontario was concerned. We have water powers in the Winnipeg river, the head waters of which and of the English river are in the province of Ontario. Several years ago an effort was made to establish storage dams at Lac Seul in the province of Ontario in order that the flow of water might be regulated and increased for the benefit of Manitoba. What was done? The right thing. Mr. Meighen, then Prime Minister, introduced legislation in this house which declared the works in Ontario to be for the general advantage of Canada, and as such they came under the federal jurisdiction, and they have been under that jurisdiction ever since, notwithstanding some attempt to repeal the legislation. Then the water-powers were developed under the Dominion authority. Now it strikes me the proper thing in this instance would have been for the province of New Brunswick to have come to the federal authorities and asked that the works in Quebec be declared to be for the general advantage of Canada. Had that course been taken we would have been able to make suitable provision.

Mr. VENIOT: Was not that part of the water flowing through Manitoba under the jurisdiction of the federal government? It was not owned or controlled by the government of Manitoba.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That may have been one reason,—

Mr. VENIOT: The two cases are entirely different.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: —but that does not affect my argument, because clearly under the British North America Act any such work an this may be declared to be for the general advantage of Canada. Suppose that in Manitoba we had control of our own natural resources, and suppose we made a bargain with regard to Boundary falls, we will say, situated within the province of Ontario, can you imagine the Ontario authorities remaining quiescent? Not at all. Undoubtedly if we have the right to legislate in this case, it is because we control navigable streams, and I submit the proper course would have been to declare this work to be for the general advantage of Canada. Then it would have been carried out under the jurisdiction of the federal authority. Section 2 seeks to put the company back under the control of the province of Quebec. Again I submit that that is not in keeping with the spirit of the British North America Act.

Since this is an exceedingly complicated question, involving as it does the jurisdiction of the province of New Brunswick in which the works are actually situated, the jurisdiction of the province of Quebec in which the storage basin is located, and the jurisdiction of the Dominion in so far as these are navigable streams, and as this work might well be declared for the general advantage of Canada, it seems to me that under these circumstances, and in order to remove all the constitutional difficulties, we might well have the matter referred to the supreme court for decision. This would cause a few months delay, but it would straighten out the tangle, and would not create the precedent that might be created by the passage of this bill.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Northwest Toronto): Mr. Speaker, it is of vital importance to preserve the water powers of this country for the people. That part of the province of Quebec bordering on the province of New Brunswick is rich in water-powers. Those water-powers should not be alienated by parliament without good reason. The great principle of public ownership is involved in this bill. If the principle of this bill, which it is sought to apply to New Brunswick and to Quebec, had been applied to Ontario, there would have been no hydro-electric movement in this province, and instead of the two-cent unit we would now have a ten or twelve-cent unit. This particular company is nothing but a subsidiary of the International Paper Company, which is tied up more or less with some fifteen or twenty corporations in Ontario and Quebec and in the United States, all parts of the great electrical merger, which is one of the most powerful trusts across the line.

This is a most dangerous bill, for many reasons. It is a most extraordinary bill, for it is proposed to make it retroactive, which is something that has never been done before by this parliament. Bill No. 17 is a most extraordinary measure. This parliament is called upon to give retroactive power to privincial enactments by adopting and confirming them. There are doubts expressed in the bill itself about the authority or jurisdiction of this parliament. If we have authority, the provincial legislatures have none; if, on the contrary, the provincial legislatures have authority we have none, and it is absolutely impossible for us not only to adopt and confirm but even to consider such provincial enactments. If they are ultra vires they cannot be confirmed; if they are intra vires we are deprived of jurisdiction or authority in the matter.

I do not care what political party takes up this question of water-power, whether it be the Liberal party or the Conservative party: I submit that it has no right to commit this country to private ownership. We must remember what was the condition of affairs in Ontario around 1900 and 1905. It was pretty much the same in Ontario at that time as it is in Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia to-day. The Ross government had given away al the water-powers of the Niagara river to private ownership and there remained about 10,000-horse-power. In 1905 Sir James Whitney was returned to power and he cancelled the last orders in council with the result that the hydro-electric was instituted in Ontario.

The rights of various private companies were taken over on a fair basis, and the province was given a chance to develop its own water-power. The result is that to-day we have cheap light and power in Ontario. That was a lesson to the people of New Brunswick, but it does not seem to have been taken to heart. I have read reports of surveys made in the province of New Brunswick and the province is admirably adapted to cheap electrical power. Unfortunately however that province has given away all its resources to private ownership, just as the province of Nova Scotia has done. The Liberal party in that province, in power for thirty-four years, handed over to private ownership the magnificent resources of the province including water-powers, fisheries, timber and mines. What was the result? The province became stagnant and lost its population. There was no industrial growth, for the simple reason that he who has the key to the development of the water-powers of any country has the key to the future industrial development of that country.

I say therefore that the principle of this bill is wrong. It is unsound from a legal standpoint. But on grounds of public policy it is outrageous. We have no power to amend an act of the Quebec legislature and to hand over a public utility to private ownership. The gentlemen named in the bill as directors were appointed to act in an official capacity on behalf of the province of New Brunswick, so that the Postmaster General Mr. Veniot) and those associated with him in that capacity could have no individual interest in the matter. The gentlemen named in the bill are, first, the premier of the province, secondly, the chairman of the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission, and, thirdly, a member of the executive council of the province of New Brunswick, a commissioner of the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission.

Mr. VENIOT: And their successors.

Mr. CHURCH: In Ontario the chairman of the commission was a member of the provincial cabinet, Sir Adam Beck, and the two other commissioners were nominated by the executive council; and they were appointed to act not in any private capacity but as public officials in order to preserve the water-powers of the province so as to provide the people with that boon of cheap light and power.

I regret very much indeed that the Conservative party has not seen fit to emulate the noble and inspiring example of Sir James Whitney in Ontario. At the coming election it would do that party a great deal of good if the policy followed in Ontario in regard to water-powers were adopted not only in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia but also in British Columbia, a province which gives great promise for the future. That province, if given a chance, will go ahead by leaps and bounds. Everyone is proud of its growth and, I repeat, it would be an excellent thing for British Columbia and for the maritime provinces as well if the Conservatives would only follow the policy adopted in Ontario. If they did so they would reap a greater advantage in one day than they have been able to derive in all these years under private ownership.

I desire to quote some prophetic words of the late President Roosevelt in regard to a similar situation which arose in his own country when he was in power. In regard to the waste of water-power in the United States he predicted that the day was not far distant when that country would run out of coal and other natural resources, particularly petroleum and gas. He said:

> The people of our country are threatened by a monopoly more powerful than has been ever seen, as it affects very closely their domestic and industrial life. Our next generation will witness a shortage of those natural resources, petroleum and gas. The price of coal will be such that hydraulic power turned into electrical energy will, owing to its cost, become the prevailing factor for transport, for manufacturers, for lighting and heating our towns. Our hydraulic power alone, entirely and judiciously employed, would be adequate for the present needs of transport, industries, municipalities, and private individuals. The major portion of these powers is not developed and remains the national property. It would be madness to part, without conditions, with one of our greatest resources. If we become guilty of this crime, our children will be bound to pay an annual royalty on a capitalization fixed at the highest price that the trade will stand for. They will see themselves struggling with powerful sweaters entrenched behind the doctrine of discharged rights strengthened by all means of protection that money can buy and the cunning of corporations defended by legal men. These ogres of finance will have succeeded long before then to monopolize those resources so as to be able to dictate to the people the management of their affairs and their way of existence. Public opinion will be their least worry.

These were the words of a prophetic statesman. In conclusion I have to say: American capitalists have found Canada a happy hunting ground. In the maritime provinces, in Quebec, Northern Ontario and the northwest, they have seized the water-powers which should be developed under public control. We find Mr. Backus getting control of the water-powers in the northern section of new Ontario, and in addition to these magnificent rights and privileges he is given what virtually is a principality of timber as well. It will be a sorry day for the province of New Brunswick when they hand over their resources to any private monopoly. The province of Ontario spent a good deal of money for cheap light and power, but if we obtained that light and power from private companies it would have cost us many millions more to pay for the over-capitalization of these companies. When you pay for hydro power to-day you pay the actual cost of generating and distributing that power, but when you buy bread, milk, and many other things you have to pay a price which will return a profit on the millions of dollars invested of split common stock of no par value. I hope this legislation will not pass, and I intend to oppose it; I think we are on dangerous legal ground. I think we should not change this act of 1925 which incorporated certain gentlemen in their official capacities to operate a great public utility on the border of these two provinces for the public good rather than for private gain.

Mr. A. J. ANDERSON (Toronto-High Park): I wish to offer just a few remarks on the question now before the house, and I am sorry I must differ with the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church). We are both supporters of public ownership in the province of Ontario, but this bill affects the provinces of New Brunswick and Quebec, and it must not be forgotten that the province of Quebec has always supported private ownership. That province has seen fit to legislate in regard to this matter at the instance of the province of New Brunswick, and I take it that when this proposition was first started the province of New Brunswick intended to establish a public ownership enterprise under the direction of the present Postmaster General of this government, who was then premier of that province. To-day someone else holds power there, and they have seen fit to change the position of the matter, apparently preferring private ownership. That is a matter quite within the rights of the province of New Brunswick, and I do not see why we should interfere in any way. These two provinces undertook to pass legislation of this kind in connection with their natural resources, and it would appear now that there is some doubt as to the validity of that legislation since these waters are interprovincial.

[Mr. Church.]

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) referred to a case involving the provinces of Manitoba and Ontario, but these two provinces are in a very different position. Ontario is in possession of its own natural resources while Manitoba is not, so the jurisdiction of this parliament must prevail. That is why that legislation was passed in this house. This legislation does not imply that the province of Quebec or the province of New Brunswick have not power to deal with this matter; the fact is that there may be some feature in connection with the fact that these are interprovincial waters which may require the consent of this parliament, and as I understand it we are asked to deal with it on that basis. I do not know of any reason why we should not allow the province of New Brunswick look after its own industries according to its own ideas. I would not wish to force my opinion or those prevailing in Ontario on the people of New Brunswick; this is within their jurisdiction and they should be left free to exercise their judgment in the matter. In my opinion this legislation is drawn very carefully, with all due respect to the member for Winnipeg North Centre. We simply grant such power as we possess in order to make this legislation more effective.

Mr. POULIOT: Might I ask my hon. friend a question? Has he read the bill of 1927 which appears in schedule A?

Mr. ANDERSON (Toronto): I have just read the material before me.

Mr. POULIOT: Des my hon. friend know who are the present directors of the St. John River Storage Company, and if so, are they acting in their private capacity or for the province of New Brunswick?

Mr. ANDERSON (Toronto): I am not very much interested in that. The province of Quebec has seen fit to continue its legislation and to pass an order in council consenting to the transfer of whatever rights are affected by this legislation. I think the government and the legal advisers of the province of Quebec are quite capable of looking after their own interests.

Mr. POULIOT: Is that order in council mentioned in the schedule?

Mr. ANDERSON (Toronto): It is referred to in the bill. I have never seen the order in council but it is referred to in this bill, and I am satisfied that no government would pass such an order in council unless it were satisfied it had the power to do so.

Mr. POULIOT: In what part of the schedule is that order in council mentioned as approving the transfer of the rights of the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission to a private company?

Mr. ANDERSON (Toronto): I can only refer to what is in the bill before the house. One has only to read it, and if I have misunderstood it my hon. friend will correct me. It seems quite clear that the province of Quebec did consent to that transfer, and we are only asked to grant whatever power we may have in that regard in order to make this legislation more effective. This will help out the province of New Brunswick and I propose to do so if I can.

The house divided on the amendement (Mr. Pouliot), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman cannot speak, because, by moving his amendment he has spoken on the main question. It has just come to my mind that the same question arose on the budget debate, when the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) was debarred from speaking. By moving or seconding an amendment, a member, if he utters only a few words, actually speaks on the main motion. It is only after the amendment has been put by the speaker that it is considered a new question.

NIAGARA FALLS MEMORIAL BRIDGE COMPANY

Mr. G. H. PETTIT (Welland) moved the third reading of Bill No. 14, to incorporate the Niagara Falls Memorial Bridge Company.

Mr. GEORGE SPOTTON (North Huron): I move that this question be now put.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Spotton moves, seconded by Mr. Garland (Carleton), that this question be now put. This is the previous question.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I should like to have your ruling on this point, Mr. Speaker. There are already on the order paper five different amendments, proposed by me in the regular course, to be added to this bill. I should like to know what Your Honour has to say regarding that.

Mr. SPEAKER: There is a notice on the order paper of some amendments concerning this bill, but they have not been moved before the house and therefore the previous question precludes any amendment to the main question. If the previous question is defeated, the bill is also defeated. The question is whether or not this question shall now be put.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Petit moves, seconded by Mr. Garland (Carleton) that bill No. 14, to incorporate the Niagara Falls Memorial Bridge Company, be now read a third time. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Do I understand, Mr. Speaker, that a debate under these circumstances is not permissible on the motion for the third reading?

Mr. SPEAKER: No. That is the effect of the previous question. Bourinot says, at pages 326 and 327:

> The "previous question" means the question whether the main issue shall be voted or not at once. The previous question prevents an amendment to the main question and thus forces a direct vote on the main question. If the previous question be carried, the Speaker will immediately put the question, without further debate.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Thank you.

Motion agreed to on division and bill read the third time and passed.

THE FEDERAL LOAN COMPANY

The house resumed, from May 8, consideration in committee of Bill No. 59, to incorporate the Federal Loan Company (as amended, and recommending that the title be changed to "An Act to incorporate the Federal Lending Company")—Mr. Lang—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: When the bill was last before the committee, all sections had been adopted with the exception of section 5.

On section 5—Objects.

Mr. SPENCER: When this bill was before the committee the other night the mover was not present. When clause 5 came up, a question was asked with regard to paragraph (b) which reads:

> Notwithstanding anything contained in the Interest Act, and the Money Lenders Act, and in section 63 (c) of the Loan Companies Act.

Information was requested why this company should be exempted from those acts. I should like to ask the mover of the bill for an explanation.

Mr. LANG: The company proposes to lend, mainly on personal security, but also on mortgages, its own capital only. The bill prohibits the taking of deposits or the issue of debentures. The company in lending money on personal security will impose a loan charge in addition to a stipulated rate of interest and, in the case of small loans, the combined interest will exceed the limitations imposed by the Interest Act and the Money Lenders Act. These acts are therefore overridden by this bill. The section respecting interest which is overridden, and in regard to which a question was asked by my hon. friend a moment ago, reads:

> Except as to mortgages on real estate, whenever any interest is, by the terms of any written or printed contract, whether under seal or not, made payable at a rate of percentage per day, week, month, or at any rate or percentage for any period less than a year, no interest exceeding the rate or percentage of five per centum per annum shall be chargeable, payable or recoverable on any part of the principal money unless the contract contains an express statement of the yearly rate or percentage of interest to which such other rate or percentage is equivalent.

That section is done away with by this bill, because the loan is going to be made on personal security mainly, but also on second mortgages or securities such as would not be accepted by the banks or loan companies. Therefore, in order to take care of the further risk, they are being withdrawn from the operation of these provisions. Then certain provisions have been incorporated in the bill from the Loan Companies Act. I may say that all these provisions have been gone into thoroughly by the Superintendent of Insurance and have his approval. We believe that this bill will result in a great deal of good in different parts of Canada in allowing men and women who sometimes find it necessary to raise money quickly upon securities that the banks and loan companies will not accept to get assistance without going to sharks and money leaders who will charge extortionate rates of interest. Believing that the bill is a good one, we confidently ask for the support of the house in passing it.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Does the exemption of this company from the operation of these acts mean that they will be allowed to charge just as high rates of interest as they can get?

Mr. LANG: No. They are allowed to charge a 6 per cent discount interest in making the loan, and also after the loan is made a small charge, an investigation charge, which is regulated by the bill and depends upon the size of the loan, so that altogether the interest and charges may run up to as high as twelve or fourteen per cent, but that gets them by where they could not get by if they applied to a bank or loan company for a loan.

Mr. GARDINER: Is that the only charge they are permitted to make?

Mr. LANG: Yes, that and the 6 per cent discount, which is paid weekly or monthly according to the provisions of the note itself.

Mr. HAY: I might add a word of explanation in regard to this bill, which was gone into very thoroughly by the committee in view of the fact that the bill embodied a new principle so far as we in Canada are concerned. This bill follows very closely along the lines of the Morris system which has been operated successfully in the United States.

Mr. GARDINER: Successfully for the borrower or the lender?

Mr. HAY: For both. They have found it to work very satisfactorily for a number of years. I believe that this bill will fill a want particularly in the larger centres of population. This company, however, is debarred from taking deposits or selling debentures; they are lending simply their own money. The committee has added certain provisions at the suggestion of the superintendent of loan companies. I might add that the whole proposition has been agreed to by the secretary of the loan association in Canada, and there is no objection from any quarter to this bill becoming law, the general desire being to prevent men and women from falling into the hands of loan sharks, who exact very high rates of interest and show very little mercy on the maturing of the debt. I make this explanation only because the sponsor of the bill was not a member of the committee. I repeat, the committee gave very careful consideration to this bill because it embodied a new departure in this country.

Mr. JACOBS: What did Mr. Finlayson have to say about it?

Mr. LANG: He is quite in accord with the provisions of this bill, having gone into them all very carefully.

Mr. CAHAN: Did any official of the Finance department appear before the committee?

Mr. HAY: The Superintendent of Insurance appeared before the committee, as well as the representative of the loan companies, and everything was agreed to by all the parties interested.

PATENT OF WILLIAM H. MILLSPAUGH

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (Cartier) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the senate to Bill No. 15, respecting certain patent application of William H. Millspaugh.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the nature of the amendments proposed by the senate?

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (Secretary of State): If my hon. friend will allow me, I have the bill as amended by the senate, and although not the sponsor of the bill, as the minister in charge of the patent branch I wish to say that there is no objection to the amendments which have been made by the senate.

After the words "Patent Act" in line 5 of the preamble, the senate has added the words "then in force, chapter twenty-three of the statutes of 1923." In the twenty-second line they specify the Patent Act, which means chapter 150 of the revised statutes, 1927. This is merely a clerical change. Besides that the senate has added as clause 2 of the bill the usual clause:

> If, as provided by section one of this act, the said forfeited application is restored and a patent is granted for any invention therein described, any person who between the nineteenth day of May, 1925, and the twelfth day of November, 1927, has commenced in Canada the manufacture, use or sale of that invention, may continue such manufacture, use or sale in as full and ample a manner as if this act had not been passed.

That is the usual precautionary clause, but it had not been incorporated in the bill. So the amendments made by the senate improve the bill.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

DOUGLAS J. MARTIN PATENT

The house in committee on Bill No. 66, respecting a certain patent of Douglas J. Martin—Mr. Clark—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Rights saved.

Mr. SPENCER: As one of those not a member of the private bills committee, I should be glad to have the bill explained.

Mr. LADNER: Mr. Chairman, this is merely a renewal of patent rights. The wording of the bill is quite clear. If the hon. gentleman desires I can go over the section with respect to the rights saved, but I think it would save the time of the committee not to engage in an extended explanation.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

THE SISTERS OF CHARITY OF THE NORTH WEST TERRITORIES

The house in committee on Bill No. 219, respecting the Sisters of Charity of the North West Territories—Mr. Marcil—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Increase of real estate that may be held.

Mr. GARDINER: I should like to have an explanation of this section, particularly with regard to the amount of real estate to be held by this organization.

Mr. PARENT: I may be permitted to give an explanation to the hon. gentleman. Not longer than a year ago we gave the Sisters of Charity of the city of Ottawa power to own property to the extent of five million dollars. That congregation is of far less importance than the one concerned in this bill. The Sisters are asking for power to have money or hold property to the extent of six million dollars, if I remember correctly.

Mr. CAHAN: That is right.

Mr PARENT: Compared with what has been done in the past it appeared to the members of the committee that the request was very reasonable. The representative of the sisters stated to the committee that they were the owners of four or five large hospitals, and that the capital value of those buildings would represent at least half of the six million dollars. Under the circumstances the committee recommended that six million dollars be considered fair.

Section 2 agreed to.

GREAT LAKES AND ATLANTIC CANAL AND POWER COMPANY, LIMITED

Mr. J. J. DENIS (Joliette) moved the second reading of Bill No. 152, respecting the Great Lakes and Atlantic Canal and Power Company, Limited.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, personally I have no desire to object to the second reading, but in consenting to it I should like to say that I am not agreeing with the principle of the bill. May I ask one question: Is this bill to be referred to the committee on railways and canals?

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I take the same stand as my hon. friend.

Hon. LUCIEN CANNON (Solicitor General): That is the rule with private bills.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): I do not want to take up the time of the house, but it is perfectly understood and agreed that no member is committed to this bill by the mere fact that it gets its second reading. We simply want to send it to the committee to have it examined.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Northwest Toronto): I do not think that this bill should be read the second time. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) is not here, and it is questionable whether the bill comes within the four corners of the jurisdiction of this parliament. It covers territory starting at Cornwall and going all the way into Quebec. The points presented in the bill have been sent by the cabinet to the supreme court for consideration and the question is to be heard within a few days. The bill involves a division of authority between the federal parliament and the provinces regarding international streams. This question was discussed a few years ago in relation to the Morrisburg dam, and the matter of provincial rights then came under review. We have a series of documents and papers exchanged between the governments of the United States and of the Dominion of Canada touching the very points involved in this bill, and the moment we give the bill the second reading we automatically approve the principle of it. This, I submit, we have no right to do under the circumstances, especially in view of the statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) some time ago that an opportunity would be afforded later on to discuss the whole question.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): Let me assure my hon. friend, as I said in answer to the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), that no hon. member is by any means committed to the principle of the bill in voting for the second reading of it. The sole purpose is to have the bill sent to the railway committee. I would not ask my hon. friend to commit himself to the principle of the bill. Indeed I am not committed to it myself, if it can be proved that it is unsound.

Mr. GARDINER: Why do you not explain it?

Mr. CHURCH: So far as I am concerned, I am opposed to sending the bill to any committee because it is altogether out of order in view of the fact that provincial rights in the matter of water power are involved, and that this question has been referred to the supreme court. There is too much of this sort of thing in this house. Under the rules, the second reading of a bill approves the principle of it. This is in accordance with all the authorities—Bourinot, Beauchesne, May and others. This is a contentious stage of the bill, and especially a bill of this description.

I understand that a measure similar to this has passed the provincial legislature and this bill is now before parliament; we are asked to adopt concurrent legislation. And now the point is raised: What are the rights of the provinces and of the Dominion respectively in regard to the diversion from the river of water needed for navigation purposes? This question is among those referred to the supreme court, and it should not be discussed now, nor should the bill be sent to a committee of the house. This house has already dealt with questions similar to those involved in the bill. Such questions appear on the order paper, and it is not competent for us to forestall the action of parliament in the matter. The announcement has also been made that irrespective of the decision that will be rendered by the supreme court there is to be an appeal to the Privy Council on these various questions involved in the St. Lawrence waterway. This matter was under discussion the other day and the question came up in that connection as to whether these private bills should be passed. On April 10 the question was under consideration, and the very matters involved in the bill now before us were covered in the debate that then took place. That debate lasted one afternoon and the Prime Minister rose in his place and proposed an adjournment.

I would remind the house that the correspondence between the United States and the Dominion of Canda in regard to the St. Lawrence has been printed—500 copies in English and 200 in French. Various questions arise in these documents: What are the rights of the state of New York? What are the rights of the province of Quebec in regard to the St. Lawrence, in so far as it lies exclusively in that province? What are the rights of the province of Ontario in relation to waters passing by its doors on their way to the St. Lawrence? And what are the international rights and the rights of this Dominion in respect of surplus water? There is a statute in this country known as The Navigable Waters Protection Act, which provides that before an application can be brought to parliament it shall be sent to the Minister of Public Works. Before any erection can be made on an international stream it must conform to the provisions of the Navigable Waters Protection Act. Now, the preamble to this bill contains certain provisions which are hardly within the powers of this parliament, and it also raises the question of jurisdiction, which, I contend, is sub judice. Mr. Speaker has ruled upon this point; a similar question arose last session and, having been considered, the ruling was given.

I submit that this bill is out of order for the reasons I have indicated. I have here opinions from counsel for the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario of a few years ago, with regard to this particular question, and there is no doubt that the control of navigable water lies with the Dominion government. If it is desired to carry on any construction which will affect navigable waters application must be made to the Minister of Public Works, who holds a hearing and reports to the governor in council. These questions are now before the supreme court; counsel are acting for the Dominion government and for the provinces of Ontario and Quebec; the pleadings are all in and a day has been named for the hearing. In view of that situation, how can we pass this bill?

Let us look at the preamble, which states:

> Whereas a petition has been presented by the Great Lakes and Atlantic Canal and Power Company, Limited . . . . praying that it may be authorized to construct and operate a deep waterway from the western end of lake St. Francis at or near the town of Cornwall in the county of Stormont, in the province of Ontario to Hungry bay in the county of Beauharnois in the province of Quebec, and to build a canal from said Hungry bay to a point at or near Melocheville, in the said county at lake St. Louis, and a deep waterway through lake St. Louis to a point at or near Caughnawaga in the county of La Prairie—

They are not satisfied with that; they even name an alternative route. The canal system of this country, as I understand it, has been under the control of the Dominion government since about 1854, and since that time we have spent over $200,000,000 on that system. To-day we are spending large sums of money on the Welland canal, so I say we should not give a private company power to construct a canal of this kind. Here we have a canal to be built near the great port of Montreal, where we have spent so much money; we have the United States requesting permission to divert a great quantity of water to the Mississippi river through the Chicago drainage canal; they propose another canal from Ogdensburg to Albany, and if this sort of thing goes on there will not be a drop of water left in the port of Montreal. If this were purely a power company I would have no great objection to it; in Quebec they have a progressive premier who is always looking out for his province, but this is not such a company.

This bill gives this particular company the power to build a canal in the counties named, to the head of navigation, in and near the city of Montreal. It says:

> —so as to make and complete throughout the entire distance from Cornwall aforesaid to the harbour of Montreal as aforesaid, a navigable canal or canals.

This bill gives this particular company the power to build a private canal, because that is all it is going to be. It is going to be a private canal, and it is changing the whole canal policy of this country by handing it over to a private company, incorporated as it is in the province of Quebec, and giving this company powers in this province. You are going to upset the whole policy of canals in this country.

In 1854 the jurisdiction over these waters was in the Montreal harbour commission. They transferred the whole jurisdiction, in order to build a ship canal in 1854, from the port of Montreal to Quebec. The country spent $54,000,000 to dig that waterway. To hand over to this particular company the power to build this private canal, a private undertaking, as this preamble sets out, I must say is an entirely wrong principle.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

UKRAINIANS UNDER SENTENCE OF DEATH

Mr. LUCHKOVICH:

1. Have any representations been made to the Prime Minister by any citizens and residents of Canada, of Ukrainian descent, protesting against the sentence to death of Wasyl Atamanchuk and Iwan Werbyckyj, and demanding a new trial by a jury composed of Ukrainian members in proportion to the Ukrainian population in eastern Galicia and Volhynia?
2. Has the Prime Minister taken any action?
3. If not, will he do so in respect of this matter?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING:

1. Representations have been received from a number of Ukrainian societies in Canada and from persons of Ukrainian descent now resident in Canada.

2. These representations were noted and replies were sent pointing out that no evidence had been submitted which would establish that there was in this case a denial of justice or that the trial was not fairly instituted. It was also pointed out that an appeal had been lodged with the Supreme Court of Poland and that the course prescribed by law was being followed.

3. Answered by above.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ASCENSION DAY—VICTORIA DAY ADJOURNMENTS

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I beg to move, in accordance with notice given:

That when this house adjourns on Wednesday, the 16th instant, it stand adjourned until Friday, the 18th instant;

That when this house adjourns on Wednesday, the 23rd instant, it stand adjourned until Friday, the 25th instant.

Motion agreed to.

SATURDAY SITTINGS

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I ask the consent of the house to move the following, of which I gave notice yesterday:

That on Saturday, May 19th instant and every Saturday thereafter, until the end of the session, the house shall meet at three o'clock in the afternoon, and that the order of business and procedure shall be the same as on Fridays.

That is virtually substituting Saturday for Thursday.

Mr. GARDINER: I desire to ask the Prime Minister whether it is intended to sit on Saturday evenings?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That will depend on the progress we make. It may be found that it is unnecessary to sit on Saturday evenings. On the other hand, if it will help to bring the session to a speedy conclusion, it may be advisable.

Mr. GARDINER: Does that motion require the unanimous consent of the house?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think it does. I gave notice yesterday, but two days' notice is required.

Mr. CLARK: May I ask the Prime Minister why we do not sit in the morning? The committees are pretty well cleaned up, and we could do that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We are sitting afternoons and evenings, and that is going some, as they say. My hon. friend will recollect that the government may have to consider a good many matters during the concluding part of the session, and a part of the day is required for that purpose.

Mr. CHURCH: If this motion is to be passed for the purpose of expediting the work of the session, why not suspend the eleven o'clock rule, and sit in the mornings as well?

Mr. CAHAN: Mr. Speaker, does this require the unanimous consent of the house?

Mr. SPEAKER: A notice of motion was given yesterday, and the house seems to be unanimous that it will serve as notice for today.

Mr. CANTLEY: I do not think the house is unanimous in regard to sitting on Friday, the 25th, and I understood the Prime Minister to say—

Mr. SPEAKER: Saturday.

Mr. CANTLEY: I am referring to Friday, the 25th. A good many of us from the maritime provinces and the western provinces desire to have the opportunity of going home. I would point out the inequality of the position occupied by the members from the eastern section and the western section of the Dominion, as compared with the members from Ontario and Quebec. The latter are able to get home practically every week end; we are not. I spent six months and two days continuously here two years ago, and last year I was here for over four months. We do not have the opportunity of going home at all as have those of the central provinces. I would ask the Prime Minister that when we adjourn on the 24th, the house do not meet again until the following Monday.

Mr. CLARK: We need ten days to go home and get back again.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The government naturally is anxious to consult the convenience of the house generally, and I think the feeling of the house, taking it in a general way, is that it is now desirable to try and get through the session as speedily as possible. I believe that sitting on Saturdays will help to effect that result. I do not think it would be wise to adjourn over Friday and thus have three days on which we would not be sitting in that week when two of those three particular days might serve to conclude the business of the session.

Mr. CANTLEY: I will tell the Prime Minister that he will not get through on the Saturday.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That may be.

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): I would suggest that the Prime Minister do not press the motion to-day so that the members may have a little more time to consider the question of sitting on Saturday nights. I would remind the house of the situation that was created in former parliaments where the last few days of the session saw much important business rushed through without adequate consideration. If we sit on Saturday nights members will not have a minute's time to consider the questions before them. I suggest that we should have some time to consider them.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Ordinarily we would be sitting five days a week. This motion means simply that we shall be sitting five days a week the same as before because two Thursdays happen to come in as holidays. This is to substitute Saturdays for Thursdays. It will enable us to get along further with the business of the session but it will not create any undue haste.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. GARDINER: While what the Prime Minister says is quite true as regards the first two weeks, when we come to the third week we shall be sitting six days a week.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Argenteuil): This motion, as Your Honour has said, requires unanimous consent because sufficient notice has not been given. As it has been suggested that it be not considered to-day, I would ask the Prime Minister, as our leader is away and will be away until Monday, whether he will be good enough to put this proposal on the order paper and bring it up on Monday.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I shall be very glad to do that. I hope on Monday all will be prepared to accept the motion.

Mr. W. G. ERNST (Queens-Lunenburg): Would the Prime Minister consider having the house meet at two o'clock instead of three in the afternoon and suspending the eleven o'clock rule for the rest of the session?

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): I should like to take this opportunity of protesting against the suggestion of suspending the eleven o'clock rule. Speaking simply for myself I am willing to come here early in the morning and work all day up to eleven o'clock. I think the country would approve our sustaining the eleven o'clock rule.

Motion stands.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. B. ADSHEAD (East Calgary): I wish to direct the attention of the Minister of Labour to an article in the press which says, in connection with the old age pensions, that provincial appointments are in large measure under the control of the Minister of Labour and that the Minister of Labour would see to it that supporters of the Liberal party were placed in positions. Are such provincial appointments under his control or not?

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Minister of Labour): Would the hon. member tell me who made that statement and where he is reading from?

Mr. ADSHEAD: I am reading from the Ottawa Journal of the ninth instant.

Mr. HEENAN: I assume the hon. member is reading from one of the local papers, quoting what a member of the Ontario legislature is reported as having said, namely, that the reason he was against the old age pension plan was because the Minister of Labour had all the appointments under his authority. Conditions are just the reverse. Under this scheme the provincial government has full control over the administration and it makes all the appointments. The only thing the federal government does is to pay half the bill; we are glad to do that and we hope the member will acquaint himself with the legislation.

NEW EDINBURGH MILLS PROPERTY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): Will the government lay on the table any orders in council and other documents referring to the acquisition of the property known as the New Edinburgh mills, so that when we come to discuss the matter we may have complete information before us? The information required will be the order in council, the agreement to purchase, and any other papers of that character pertaining to the acquisition of the property.

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): I shall be glad to lay on the table the order in council, the agreement providing for the purchase of the property and any other information in the possession the department.

Mr. STEVENS: The valuation?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

SPEAKER'S RULING—CORRECTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, at your convenience would you look at page 2858 of Hansard of last evening, where in giving a decision you are reported, I think incorrectly, as saying:

> If the previous question is defeated, the bill is also defeated.

I would ask Your Honour to consider whether that should not have read:

> If the previous question is defeated, the bill is superseded for the time being.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman is right. I used possibly a wrong expression. I meant that when the previous question is defeated, the bill is superseded, but it may be revived later on by a motion.

Mr. CAHAN: That is what I understood.

Mr. SPEAKER: But when the previous question is adopted the house must proceed without any further debate. I used the word "defeated" where I should have used the word "superseded," which has another meaning.

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto): I did not understand Your Honour to rule that there is no debate on the motion that the question be now put. It might have been debated.

Mr. SPEAKER: It might have been debated, but after the motion is adopted there is no debate. When the motion is made to the house that the question be now put, it may be debated. There was no debate yesterday evening.

OUTBREAK OF RABIES IN ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. EDWARDS (Frontenac-Addington): On Tuesday last I submitted to the government a question which in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture was answered by the Minister of Health who assured me that he would place the matter before the Minister of Agriculture and that I might expect an answer yesterday. I presume that has not been done. My question to the minister was this. There has been a very severe outbreak of rabies in the county of Frontenac. Several cattle and sheep have become affected and have had to be destroyed. The question is: Under those circumstances is the government prepared to give a certain amount of recompense to the farmers for the losses they have sustained in carrying out the order for the destruction of such animals?

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): I regret to report that there is no provision that I know of in any of our statutes whereby owners of live stock, when their animals are bitten by rabid dogs, can secure any compensation. The situation is regrettable but there is no provision in regard to the matter.

Mr. A. E. ROSS (Kingston city): May I ask the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister of Health under what regulations are animals destroyed in an outbreak of rabies?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Under the authority given to the Health of Animals Branch to destroy dogs that have been proven to be affected with rabies. If the dog is only on suspicion through coming into contact with another dog that is affected with the disease, it is quarantined.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The minister has hardly answered my point. I asked under what regulations was this done, under regulations issued by the Department of Agriculture, or provincial regulations.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Under the Health of Animals Act itself, or under regulations issued in conformity with that act. It is a federal matter.

CIVIL SERVICE

RECLASSIFICATION OF POSTAL SERVICE EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto): May I ask the Postmaster General if he will acquaint the house with the grounds upon which the Civil Service Commission justified its refusal to accede to the recommendation of the minister for reclassification of salaries of the postal clerks, letters carriers and so on?

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Postmaster General): In reply to the hon. gentleman I may say that I am the last one in the world that the Civil Service Commission would take into their confidence. They gave no reasons whatever in justification of their refusal to consider the recommendation made by the Postmaster General for increases or the reclassification of the mail carriers, postal clerks and the other officers mentioned.

Mr. GEARY: No further communications?

Mr. VENIOT: No. I laid all the correspondence on the table yesterday, so that it might be seen.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON FISHERIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. B. SHORT (Digby-Annapolis): I should like to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Cardin) whether instructions have yet been given to have the report of the Royal Commission on Fisheries printed, if so, when copies will be available to members of the house.

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): In reply to a similar question yesterday I said that the report was being printed and that I expected it would be ready to-day. Unfortunately I have not as yet been informed that it is ready. I hope it will be available soon.

Mr. STEVENS: Has it been laid on the table?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

DANGER TO BORDER RESIDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) yesterday asked this question:

[Mr. A. E. Ross.]

I desire to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) what will be done to protect Canadian citizens and Canadian interests at Port Colborne from the invasion of several armed American cruisers, as set out in articles in yesterday's Mail and Empire and the Toronto Star. One man was shot at. There is a heavy tourist traffic in this district at the opening of the season, and it is important that the necessary protective measures should be taken.

I asked to see the articles that I might give my hon. friend a reply to-day. Having seen them, I would say that the assumption that steps will be necessary to protect Canadian citizens and Canadian interests at Port Colborne from an invasion of several armed American cruisers is not borne out either by the newspaper articles to which the member for Toronto Northwest refers, or by other sources of information. The shooting by coast-guards to which reference is made, was on the United States side of the border. There is no ground for believing that United States revenue vessels will endeavour to operate in any way on the Canadian side of the boundary.

SUPPLY—PROCEDURE

RESUMING ON THURSDAY OR FRIDAY DEBATE ON AMENDMENT

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Order No. 5.

The CLERK ASSISTANT:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of the Minister of Finance, that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go again into committee of supply, and on the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Tolmie.

Mr. SPEAKER: The house should go into supply without question put on a Thursday, unless the rule is suspended. Otherwise I will leave the chair and no debate can go on.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is the only order on the paper relating to supply which can be called, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac-Addington): Rising to a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have always understood that following the British precedents and British practice going back for a very long time, when an amendment was moved to the motion for going into supply it has always been considered that the complaint which was embodied in the amendment, if we may call it a complaint, should be redressed before supply was given. That has always been the right of the House of Commons, and I would ask your ruling, Mr. Speaker, whether supply should be given and further business taken up before this complaint, to call it such, has been redressed and there has been a full discussion.

Mr. SPEAKER: Standing order 28 reads:

On Thursdays and Fridays when the order of the day is called for the house to go into committee of supply, or of ways and means, Mr. Speaker shall leave the chair without putting any question.

That is the case to-day. And if the house will bear with me, I will read also paragraph 233 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, which is a reproduction from May:

The adjournment of a debate on an amendment to the motion for the Speaker's leaving the chair—

We have the amendment of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Tolmie).

—may create an exceptional result, owing to the direction contained in standing order 28 that on Thursdays and Fridays when the order of the day is called for the house to go into committee of supply or of ways and means, Mr. Speaker shall leave the chair without putting any question, provided that, except with the consent of the house, the estimates of each department shall be first taken on a day other than Thursday or Friday. If an adjourned debate on such an amendment is standing upon the order paper when supply, for consideration of which in committee it is not necessary to propose the question for the Speaker's leaving the chair, is to be taken, the order of the day for resuming the adjourned debate is removed, and procedure on the amendment lapses, in order that the Speaker, in obedience to standing order 28 may leave the chair without question put.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Before you give your decision, Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to say a word or two? I read over these clauses carefully this morning, and I submit that the action taken by the Prime Minister does not bring this clause into force. The Prime Minister called, "Order No. 5," and thereupon the assistant clerk read out:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of the Minister of Finance, that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go again into committee of supply, and on the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Tolmie.

As I understand it, it might have been possible for the Prime Minister, had he so chosen, to have called, "Supply", and thereupon Your Honour might have been able under this rule to leave the chair without question being put.

Mr. DUNNING: Which item would that be on the order paper?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Simply "Supply"; no item at all. But the Prime Minister has called, "Order No. 5," and I thought that the Prime Minister had done this intentionally. If the Prime Minister wished to go on with the adjourned debate, which I think we ought to do at the very first opportunity, he could have taken no other action than to call Order No. 5. According to the rule which Your Honour has cited, the Prime Minister could have taken advantage of it to go into supply without question being put. But he did not choose to take that position. Quite properly, I think, he called item No. 5, thereby implying that the government were willing to have this amendment disposed of. I submit for your consideration, Mr. Speaker, that by the mere calling of item No. 5 the government proposed to proceed with the discussion on the amendment in order that it might be disposed of and the business of the house expedited. Whether intentionally or not, the Prime Minister took the course necessary to resume the adjourned debate on the amendment, and, having done so, he must now go on with that adjourned debate as it was called by the Clerk Assistant.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend will recognize at once that the government cannot call an item which is not on the order paper. With respect to the item that was called, the government is restricted to those subjects that are on the order paper. Last night before the house adjourned it was announced that the government wished to proceed with supply to-day. The only number on the order paper which relates at all to supply is No. 5, and accordingly I moved that No. 5 be called. Whether as a consequence of going into supply to-day some amendment that is already before the house lapses, is entirely a matter governed by the rules, to which members of the government, like all other members, are subject. I believe it is a fact that the rules have been so drafted as to make it possible, notwithstanding what amendments there may be to the motion to go into supply, for the government to go into supply on Thursdays and Fridays. My hon. friend will see at once that unless there were some such rules a situation might be created whereby the government would never get into supply. But the rules provide that with respect to estimates that already have been under consideration on Thursdays and Fridays the government may get into supply by the Speaker leaving the chair without any question being put. Therefore the government is simply following the procedure applicable in such a case.

Mr. W. A. BOYS (North Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to endorse what has been said by the hon. member for Argenteuil. It seems to me that no motion to go into supply, has of necessity to be made to-day under the rules, and that ordinarily, had it not been for the debate on the amendment to the motion to go into supply having been adjourned on Tuesday night, the Prime Minister would call what he wanted and that being supply you, sir, would automatically leave the chair and the committee would then be in supply. Being in supply, the Prime Minister would have the right to call for any departmental estimates he liked providing they had already been dealt with, and as far as I know the only two departments he could call would be Public Works and Agriculture, none other having been dealt with as yet. The Prime Minister called order No. 5, which is as follows—

> Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of the Minister of Finance, that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go again into committee of supply, and on the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Tolmie.

—is it pretended that the debate which was carried on with you, sir, in the chair, could be carried on to-day with the house in committee? It seems to me that the proposition is preposterous. If the debate is to be resumed it can be resumed only in one way—with you in the chair. I am ready to concede at once that the Prime Minister can to-day, irrespective of the order mentioned, make a motion that we do proceed to supply, and thereupon another amendment could be moved. But the rules certainly provide that on Thursdays and Fridays you automatically leave the chair, and then the Prime Minister calls whatever is in order in committee of supply, and, as I have already said, the only two estimates open to him would be those of Public Works and Agriculture. I cannot see how it can be contended that the debate on the amendment is to be terminated by this procedure; or, on the other hand, that it could proceed in committee when it commenced in the house, where it must be concluded.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the result which my hon. friend claims would be preposterous has been foreseen not only in this house in the words which Your Honour has quoted from Beauchesne, but even in the British house. I find at page 527 of May, 13th edition, the following:

> The adjournment of the debate on an amendment proposed to the question for the Speaker's leaving the chair may create an exceptional result,—

[Mr. Boys.]

It is exceptional.

> —owing to the direction contained in standing order No. 17, that except on first going into committee of supply on the annual estimates or on a vote of credit, the Speaker shall leave the chair without putting any question. If an adjourned debate on that question is standing upon the notice paper when supply, for the consideration of which in committee it is not necessary to propose the question for the Speaker's leaving the chair, is to be taken, the order of the day for resuming the adjourned debate is removed, and procedure on the amendment lapses, in order that the Speaker, in obedience to the standing order, may leave the chair without question put.

As May says, it is an exceptional result, and it is the same as is worked out in this house by our rules, which provide that on Thursdays and Fridays the Speaker must leave the chair automatically when supply is to be taken. Of course, if it could be taken as my hon. friend from Argenteuil (Sir George Perley) suggests, merely by saying "supply" without reading the orders of the day, then this exceptional result would not happen either in the British house or here. But this is the first time I have heard it suggested that the house can take up any order of the day without specifying the number of it on the order paper.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Mr. Speaker, let us admit that the government had the right to call for supply on Thursday and Friday without the question being put. There were two courses open to the government in this instance. The Minister of Justice will not contend that the government had not the right to go on with the item on the order paper for resuming the adjourned debate on the motion and the amendment.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes; it would be against the letter and the spirit of standing order 28.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I beg my hon. friend's pardon. He will not contend that the government had no power to propose going on with the item for resuming the adjourned debate. They had it in their power, according to his own argument. It was optional with them whether they would go on with the adjourned debate or would move the house into supply under the other rule, without question being put. I submit the Prime Minister has chosen the alternative of going on with this item. To argue otherwise, Mr. Speaker, reduces the procedure to an absurdity. How did the government lose the right of calling item No. 5 and proceeding with it? I submit, Mr. Speaker, that they had that power, and exercised it, and therefore they should go on with the adjourned debate.

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure): Mr. Speaker, before the Conservative government came into power in 1911 a motion to go into supply could be made on every government day, and amendments disposed of and grievances remedied before the house went into supply. But after 1911, for the purpose of expediting the business of the house, the Borden administration had the rules changed so that on two days of the week, Thursdays and Fridays, the house would go automatically into supply without question put. The government has to abide by that rule; it is a standing order of the house. Unless therefore there is consent to waive the rule I do not see how the house can proceed with the motion and the amendment thereto, proposed by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Tolmie).

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The Prime Minister called order No. 5. Will the hon. gentleman be good enough to read order No. 5.

Mr. MARCIL: But the rule of the house lays it down that the Speaker shall leave the chair on Thursday and Friday without question put, unless the house consents to suspend that rule.

Mr. CANNON: My hon. friend's argument is that the government could call order No. 5—

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: And did call it.

Mr. CANNON: —or any other order. Now what is the rule we are discussing? The rule in question is standing order 28, which provides:

> On Thursdays and Fridays when the order of the day is called for the house to go into committee of supply or of ways and means, Mr. Speaker shall leave the chair without putting any question.

The rule does not say "may leave;" it says "shall leave the chair." It is imperative and no one has any discretion to alter the rule.

Mr. BOYS: That is the argument I am making. The moment the Prime Minister calls supply, without any further discussion Mr. Speaker leaves the chair and the house goes into committee of supply. That is one procedure that could be followed. Another course the Prime Minister might adopt, if he saw fit, would be to call order No. 5, which of necessity would require the house to proceed with the debate begun the other day, and which would be a debate with Mr. Speaker in the chair, and not with the house in committee. That is the point we are contending for. If the other view is taken, what is the result? I do not suppose for a moment that this is a trick, nor do I think that the Prime Minister is trying to use it as a trick to avoid the motion and the amendment thereto, moved by the hon. member for Victoria, being disposed of by the house. If however that course is persisted in it can be nothing but a trick; and judging from the way matters have been going in the last two or three days, my hon. friends should be the last to talk about free speech. There is not very much free speech; we are not given opportunities to move or to discuss amendments. And this is only a further effort along that line, if such is the intention. I cannot believe that this is the intention; I do not think the Prime Minister would want to bring about such a result. Let me read the rule in its entirety—because I cannot see anything in it which has the effect my hon. friends contend for:

> On Thursdays and Fridays when the order of the day is called for the house to go into committee of supply or of ways and means, Mr. Speaker shall leave the chair without putting any question, provided that, except with the consent of the house, the estimates of each department shall be first taken on a day other than Thursday or Friday.

The Prime Minister had two courses open to him. He might have called supply, and rule 28 would have become effective. You, Mr. Speaker, would automatically have left the chair without any motion for the house to go into supply. The other course open to the Prime Minister was to do what as a matter of fact he did do—call order No. 5. That brings about a continuation of the debate upon the amendment which was moved the other night by the hon. member for Victoria. And surely, sir, that debate must continue with yourself in the chair; it must be resumed in the house, where it started. How could it be otherwise? Will anyone seriously contend that a debate, begun with the speaker in the chair, can by any rule be continued, and a vote taken upon the question at issue, with the house in committee? I think I am justified in describing such a proposition as preposterous.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It happens in the British parliament.

Mr. BOYS: I am not sufficiently well informed in that regard to say that it does not, but I can hardly imagine such a procedure being followed. Now is it necessary. If the desire of the government is to go into supply without continuing the debate already in progress, all they have to do is to call supply and under rule 28 Mr. Speaker leaves the chair, the only restriction being then that the committee may deal only with the estimates of the Department of Agriculture and Public Works. As a matter of fact I intended asking the Prime Minister what the government had in mind if we did go into committee of supply. Will hon. gentlemen suggest that because of this situation they have a right to go into supply in connection with departments other than the two named?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No.

Mr. BOYS: I am glad to hear that. I have not much more to say. I appeal to the Prime Minister, in the absence of our leader (Mr. Bennett), to let the house go into supply without calling order No. 5. No one on this side of the house would, I think, object.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: But he has called order No. 5.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My first duty is to see as far as may be possible that the rules of the house are observed. It is the duty of His Honour to decide what the rules are in the event of a difference of view. We have stated what we honestly believe to be the rules and have given authority from the rules, and we are quite prepared to abide by the decision of Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BOYS: One more observation and I am through. The Prime Minister called order No. 5, which is for the resumption of a debate which was adjourned with the Speaker in the chair. If that debate is continued it must continue with the Speaker in the chair, and standing order 28 is not invoked in the circumstances. The calling of order No. 5 is not affected by standing order 28. Mr. Speaker was in the chair when the debate was adjourned and the debate must continue in the house and not in committee.

Mr. LAPOINTE: May I ask you, Mr. Speaker, whether supply can be taken, as my hon. friend suggests, without order No. 5 being called?

Mr. SPEAKER: That is the government's business. If the government calls supply, either to-day or to-morrow, then automatically I leave the chair.

Mr. BOYS: But they did not say "supply".

Mr. LAPOINTE: Can the government say merely "supply" without referring to any order?

Mr. SPEAKER: I have heard "supply" called without reference to any order. The Minister of Finance says "supply".

Mr. LAPOINTE: But the clerk always says "No. 5" or "No. 6".

[Mr. Boys.]

Mr. BOYS: The Prime Minister did not call supply and therefore did not invoke the provisions of rule 28. He called order No. 5.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend says I called No. 5. But that is the only order on the paper that relates to the house going into supply; it is the only order in order to get into supply that it is possible for the government to call. It is for His Honour to say whether, in accordance with the rules of the house, he can do otherwise than leave the chair and have the house go into supply.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: If the Prime Minister desired to go on with this adjourned debate to-day, what motion would he make?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We should have to suspend the rules of the house.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Not at all. One word more. I do not want to inflict myself on the house, but I claim, as my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. Boys) does, that standing order 28 has nothing at all to do with the question. I claim that the government, according to their own arguments,—supposing that they could call supply with this motion on the order paper—could, if they so wished, call supply and have the Speaker automatically leave the chair, under standing order 28. The government had a perfect right to go on with the adjourned debate if they saw fit, or they could have had the Speaker leave the chair for the house to go into committee of supply without any motion being put.

Mr. CANNON: Will my hon. friend allow me a question? Should his contention be right, and should we resume the adjourned debate, then the house would be called upon to discuss the question whether Mr. Speaker shall leave the chair, notwithstanding that the rule lays it down distinctly that on this very day, Thursday, he shall leave the chair without any motion being put. The house would therefore—if my hon. friend's contention is correct—be discussing a procedure which according to the standing order in question Mr. Speaker shall—not may—follow without any motion. My hon. friend from North Simcoe has advanced an argument which I would acknowledge had the Prime Minister said, for example, "No. 8" instead of No. 5. But the moment he called order No. 5 he called an order relating to supply; and under standing order 28, on Thursdays and Fridays, Mr. Speaker is bound to leave the chair without any question being put.

Mr. McGIBBON: I would direct attention to the fact that there is before the house a motion of want of confidence, made so by the Prime Minister himself, and this government are not entitled to supply or anything else until this house has decided upon that motion.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): In our business to-day we have reached what are called the orders of the day; those are government orders. This program was prepared for the house by the government, and while the Prime Minister says he had to call order No. 5 because there was no other order he could call to get into supply, I would suggest that if there has been any neglect or oversight it has been on the part of the government in not preparing the order paper so that they could call an order that would get them into supply. The government prepared these orders; the Prime Minister has called order No. 5, so we cannot stop until we finish with that order. How can you call order No. 5 and stop short of everything included in that order?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend is mistaken when he says the government prepared the orders of the day; that is a part of the duties of the officers of the house, and the government has no control over it.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Does the Prime Minister seriously state that officials of this house go ahead and prepare anything that suits them?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I say it would be absolutely wrong for the government to insert any orders on the order paper other than those which come in the regular course of procedure, in accordance with the rules.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Then I would say that the government have the responsibility of instructing their officials to prepare the order paper in such a way as will enable them to get on with their business. We have before us a program; order No. 5 has been called and that order must carry with it a continuance of the debate on the amendment. If that is not done I should like to know what becomes of this amendment.

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): I submit for Your Honour's consideration that when the Prime Minister called order No. 5 he was entirely out of order, because by calling that order he insisted that we consider a formal motion that the Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of supply, which carries with it a proposed amendment. The rules of the house provide that on Thursdays and Fridays Mr. Speaker shall leave the chair without putting any question; therefore there is no question before the house. When supply is called no formal motion may be made and no formal question may be put to the house for decision; therefore I think the Prime Minister was out of order. It is only necessary now for the Speaker to decide that on this day, Thursday, we go into committee of supply without a formal motion. Nevertheless, the adjourned debate on another motion stands on the order paper, and at the proper time, on a Monday, Tuesday or Wednesday, the Speaker may be called upon to decide as to whether that motion and that amendment are still subsisting. They are not before the house to-day.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Would that not be a question to discuss later, when the time comes?

Mr. CAHAN: Certainly, but the time is not come. On this day there is no motion before the house, and there can be no decision by the Speaker on any motion to go into supply, because there is no motion. There can be no question put on this day, and therefore there is now nothing for the Speaker to decide, except that we now go into committee of supply by the Speaker leaving the chair, and on a future date His Honour may decide whether that formal motion No. 5 may take its regular place on the order paper.

Mr. J. A. CLARK (Vancouver-Burrard): With all due respect to my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George, I believe it is quite clear the government had open to them two courses: First, they might have determined to go into committee of supply automatically, in those departments which have had their estimates before the house previously. On the other hand, the government might have decided to move the house into supply of a department whose estimates have not been before us. I do not think there can be any dispute about that.

Some hon. MEMBERS: You cannot do it.

Mr. CLARK: The Prime Minister or any member of the government to-day or tomorrow could move to go into supply of a department whose estimates have not been up already. That course was open to the government and the Prime Minister has made that motion. He has elected to move the house into supply, taking up a department which has not been in supply before, and in order to proceed with that business order No. 5 had to be called. To that order there is an amendment, and the Prime Minister has elected to continue the adjourned debate by calling that particular order. Otherwise, what would be the result? This would provide a very convenient way for the Prime Minister and the government to avoid the discussion of a want of confidence motion; it would be simply necessary for the government to go on with government orders day by day and on Thursdays and Fridays go into committee of supply automatically, thus avoiding discussion of the want of confidence motion. Such a course would be preposterous, but that is exactly what the government propose to do to avoid continuing a very important debate which concerns the country at large.

Mr. GEARY: With all due reference to the Solicitor General, I think he was wrong in his presentation of the case. Standing order 17 provides:

> Whenever government business has precedence, government orders may be called in such sequence as the government may think fit.

We have before us the government orders, and order No. 5 includes the adjourned debate. My friend the Solicitor General says it would be useless to proceed with that debate, because its termination may decide that the house should go into supply, which is absurd when the house does not need a motion to take up supply. That is an incidental result; it may happen that there may be a different ending to the discussion, but a motion having to do with the public business of the country is before the house as an amendment to the motion to take up supply and I submit that that should be discussed after having been called. If it should be an incidental result of that discussion that we decide to go into supply on a day when we do not need a motion to go into supply, I do not think that can make any possible difference to the precedence of that particular order of the day. I think this discussion should continue until the question is finally settled.

Mr. W. G. ERNST (Queens-Lunenburg): I would like to say just one word in reference to this particular motion. This amendment was moved on Tuesday evening; yesterday, being Wednesday, was a government day under the present rules, and the government proceeded with government orders. To-day, by the rules of the house, the government can go into supply automatically, but altogether apart from the question in dispute there is a question of policy involved, and when a similar question came up previously an illustrious predecessor of the present Prime Minister decided otherwise. In 1876 a question of this kind came before the house, when Sir John A. Macdonald moved his famous national policy as an amendment to the motion to go into supply. The Right Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, who was then leading the government, said that it was a motion of want of confidence, just as the right hon. the Prime Minister has said; but in this case he wanted that question resolved and determined by the house, and desired to take a private members' day in order to have it determined.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Is my hon. friend aware that the present rule governing Thursdays and Fridays was not in existence at that time?

Mr. ERNST: I am not talking of the present rule; I am referring to the way the Right Hon. Alexander Mackenzie treated the question. In both cases there was a motion of want of confidence before the house. In one case the government wanted to have it determined, but in this case the government is trying to side-step the issue, and does not want a vote.

Mr. SPEAKER: The Speaker is the servant of the house and the slave of the rule. Standing order No. 28 is a new rule, dating from 1913, and reads as follows:

> On Thursdays and Fridays when the order of the day is called for the house to go into committee of supply, or of ways and means, Mr. Speaker shall leave the chair without putting any question,—

A situation arises to-day, here in the Canadian parliament, as has already arisen in the British parliament. Members need only refer to what May says at page 476 (12th edition) where exactly the same question arose. It so happens that by automatically leaving the chair to-day, as I am forced to do, the debate which was adjourned the other evening in good faith, on the motion which was presented by the hon. member for Victoria, would lapse. Certainly I cannot do otherwise but leave the chair—standing order No. 28 is imperative—but I do not rule that this debate, on a motion presented in good faith, shall thereby lapse. The procedure lapses, but the question can be revived. Here is what May says:

> If an adjourned debate on such an amendment is standing upon the order paper when supply, for consideration of which in committee it is not necessary to propose the question for the Speaker's leaving the chair, is to be taken, the order of the day for resuming the adjourned debate is removed, and procedure on the amendment lapses, in order that the Speaker, in obedience to standing order 28 may leave the chair without question put.

I must give a liberal and broad interpretation of this dictum of May's. The procedure may lapse, but the question itself is not lapsed, because there has been no judgment of the house on the question. It has simply been adjourned. When the time comes I will therefore allow that motion to be revived.

Mr. LAPOINTE: By way of a new motion?

Mr. SPEAKER: Certainly.

Mr. BOYS: Can we be sure that the government will accept the ruling at that time?

Mr. SPEAKER: That will be a matter for the house. When I am in the chair on Mondays or Tuesdays, when supply is called, any member can move any grievance that he may have.

Mr. BOYS: If the government would accept it, I am quite sure their followers would. And if they would accept it there would be no question, and the debate would continue at a future time. I feel sure that no one on this side of the house wants anything more.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Will Your Honour allow me to ask you one question? Does Your Honour rule that the government had no power to-day to call this order No. 5 in such a way that the adjourned debate on the motion to go into supply, and the proposed amendment thereto, might be proceeded with?

Mr. SPEAKER: By rule 28 I am forced automatically out of the chair. I must obey that rule. But, as I said a moment ago, on another day, when I am not automatically forced out the chair, a motion, similar to the one which was made the other evening, and which was adjourned by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Anderson), can be made.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In answer to my hon. friend I would say that our desire is to follow the rules of the house, and, in every particular, the wishes of His Honour the Speaker. I do not think my hon. friend will find any difficulty in the question being revived at the right time.

Mr. BOYS: I hope that is an assurance.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The amendment moved by my hon. friend, in the words of the right hon. Prime Minister, constitutes a motion of want of confidence. It is a desire to get from this house an expression of opinion as to whether or not this government has any right to get one dollar of supply. Now the proposition is that they be allowed to go ahead and get $100,000,000, or so, of supply, and later on, after they have got all the supply they want, the motion of want of confidence on going into supply may be brought in.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Saskatoon—public building, $150,000.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I wish to get some information from the minister regarding this item. We in Ontario are very much interested in the value of properties in Saskatoon. Years ago a number of our people bought lots out there, and I fancy that we could supply sites for post offices at very reasonable rates. I have no reason to doubt, if the information given to us is correct, that it is a very desirable location. I should like to ask the minister if the site for this building has been acquired?

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): The site has been acquired, subject, of course, to the passing of this estimate by this house. It is a site having a frontage of 150 feet on First avenue and 140 feet on Twenty-second street. It has been purchased from Butler Byers Brothers, Limited, for the sum of $53,000.

Mr. STEVENS: From whom?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Butler Byers Brothers, Limited. That is apparently a limited company.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Would the minister give us some further information? Could he give us the numbers of the lots?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think it would be better if I just sent a plan over to my hon. friend. The present post office is in a building on the corner of First avenue and 21st street. That site is 83 feet by 71 feet and it is a very desirable site. The department endeavoured to get land in the immediate vicinity of it and they were offered two pieces but the cost of them would be about $102,500. As these two pieces of property had on them buildings which were leased, if we attempted to make a contract without expropriation, the best contract we could get was $102,500 for the additional land required and in addition we would have to bear whatever the cost of settling with the lessees would be. A site approximately 250 feet north on exactly the same street, on the corner of First avenue and 22nd street, was obtainable at $53,000 and that is the site which we have purchased. I will send across to my hon. friend a plan which has been prepared showing exactly the location of the site.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Is the property that is being acquired vacant property.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Practically vacant.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Then we have a property, 150 feet on one street by 140 feet on another, practically vacant, costing $53,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Can the minister give the committee any information as to the history of this property and the sales and purchases in connection with it shortly prior to its acquisition by the department; further, if any valuations had been made on behalf of the department before the agreement for the purchase was entered into?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I shall be glad to give my hon. friend the information which he requires as far as we have it. This property was, according to our report, obtained by a company with a view to placing upon it a theatre or moving picture building. I cannot give my hon. friend the cost to them. It was obtained, I understand, in various pieces, but the report from our resident architect is that he considered $68,000, which was the amount first asked by the owners, a reasonable price for the site. We asked three men to value it. One realtor, Mr. Angus McMillan, was of the same opinion. Mr. J. H. Cameron, of Saskatoon, places the approximate value at $50,000, and Messrs. Heddle, Thorburn and Spring, at $48,950.

Mr. STEVENS: What were the dates of those valuations?

Mr. ELLIOTT: They were immediately prior to the order in council obtaining it and the order in council was passed on the 26th March.

Mr. EVANS: I think the site secured for the new post office at Saskatoon is a very desirable location. While the price for the lot may seem high, it is not excessive according to values in that part of the city. I feel quite well pleased, and from all accounts I have received from Saskatoon I believe the people are well satisfied with the location for the new post office on the corner of 22nd street and First avenue.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): How long has the department been considering the construction of a post office on this particular site, and how long before the date when the order in council was passed was it that the company acquired the property?

[Mr. Elliott.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: I cannot give the exact dates in connection with either of the questions that my hon. friend has asked, but the question of extending accommodation for the post office, customs and various other Dominion services in Saskatoon dates back a number of years. The government have been considering for at least five or six years the question of obtaining an additional site. The negotiations with regard to land in the immediate vicinity of the existing building have been going on for several years, but it was out of the question for the department to obtain that property at a price which they thought reasonable. The other land owned by the government was not considered at all suitable. If they could have secured for $53,000, or perhaps a larger amount, land in the immediate vicinity of the post office, they would have preferred that. But there were two objections to that. First of all our architect reported that the building did not lend itself to being transformed into a building giving additional accommodation for the services there. Of course, as my hon. friend knows, Saskatoon is a city that has grown very rapidly and in the last few years has been particularly active.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Did I understand the minister to say that he could or could not give the number of the lots? I understand there are three lots.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The order in council describes the property simply as property having a frontage of 150 feet on First avenue and a frontage of 140 feet on 22nd street.

Mr. STEVENS: The minister must have the lot numbers before him.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not have them here.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Could the minister say whether two of those lots had shortly before been sold by the city of Saskatoon for taxes?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I cannot say as to that; I have no information.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The Daylight Theatre Company who owned one of the lots recently, shortly before this purchase, apparently purchased it for a very small sum of money. Does the minister think he could obtain any information as to the earlier cost of these two lots?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I made very careful inquiries at the time, and my recollection is that while a small part of the property was purchased, probably at the tax sale to which my hon. friend refers, at a smaller cost than the balance, yet my inquiries led me to believe that we were getting the property for very little more than it had been sold for. That is, some of the pieces had been purchased at a much higher price, but we were satisfied that the whole 150 feet was a valuable property and worth all that we were paying for it. We are also quite satisfied that it was wise to obtain it as we did, instead of taking expropriation proceedings.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): It is the first duty I presume of every hon. member to seek to express on the floor of this house the views and opinions of the constituency that he represents. To vote $150,000 for putting up a public building in Saskatoon may or may not be a proper proceeding. I have a great admiration for Saskatoon, and such a building may be necessary, but when we vote $150,000 for this or any other purpose, by the passing of that vote we express our confidence in the judgment that the government will apply to the expenditure of this money. I believe I am expressing the views of the people of the county of Frontenac when I say that they have no confidence in the judgment of this government in connection with an expenditure of $150,000 or even $50, and there are reasons for that. We have only to walk a short distance down the street here to see whole city blocks that have been pulled down, costing millions of dollars, to satisfy the temporary whim of somebody or his idea of the beautification of Ottawa.

But there is another reason why I believe the people of my constituency, or a part of them, would ask me to oppose this vote at this time. People who are suffering the loss of much money every day because of unjust legislation, or because of the lack of proper legislation, have through their representatives in this house asked that that injustice be removed so that they shall no longer be subjected to this loss. The people of my constituency are working without any profit at all; they are working at a loss and suffering daily injustice because of the dumping of fruits and vegetables into this country, and they have asked this parliament to redress that grievance. We have taken the stand that that grievance should be redressed before any further money is put into the hands of this government to expend. Voicing the opinions of the people of my county, I say that we have no confidence in this government and in their judgment in spending this amount or any other amount, nor can we have any confidence in their sense of justice and fair play, which is an indication of their lack of judgment so long as they refuse to rectify the wrongs and just grievances of our people before applying to parliament for the appropriation of further moneys. This simply drives home the fact that we are voting supply to a government to-day which has so manipulated things as to prevent this house from expressing its opinion as to whether they should be allowed to spend a five cent piece, let alone $150,000 or $1,000,000 or more. My judgment is that if the government had not prevented a discussion of the amendment, this house would have expressed such a vote upon it that my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works would have been relieved of the worry of getting through any estimates whatever.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Yes, I have a right to suppose that a vote of want of confidence would have carried, and that the government would have been obliged to resign.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yesterday's vote did not look much like it.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): My opinion is just as good as that of the hon. gentleman until the vote is taken. I have no doubt what the result would have been.

Mr. DUNNING: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I refer you to standing order 58, subsection (2), which reads:

> Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

I submit that the item under discussion is a vote of $150,000 for a post office at Saskatoon, and not the question which my hon. friend is discussing.

Mr. GEARY: But the money is to be spent by the government.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I submit, Mr. Chairman, that I have a perfect right to give reasons why this government should not be voted $150,000 or any other amount to spend in any part of Canada, and I am giving my reasons why. Like every other hon. gentleman in this house, I appreciate the fact that even to be recognized for a moment by one so great as the Minister of Railways and Canals is far better than not to be recognized at all.

Mr. DUNNING: Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): The hon. member knows the rule.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Yes, perfectly.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): It says:

Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

There is an old rule that the ruling of the chair cannot be criticized.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I am not criticizing it. You have had a long experience in this house, Mr. Chairman, and I can assure you that it is hardly necessary to protect yourself ahead of time by suggesting that I might criticize your ruling.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): I was referring to the Speaker's ruling on the question of going into supply to-day.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I did not know that I mentioned the Speaker. I was referring in general terms to the fact that the people in my constituency, whom I am here to represent, have no confidence in this government to spend this or any other amount, and surely when we are asked to express confidence in the government by voting this amount, we must be allowed to show why we have no confidence in them. However, I have covered that point as far as I wished to cover it.

I will now give another reason why I think this amount should not be placed in the hands of the minister to expend. Fourteen years ago a site was bought and paid for in the county of Frontenac, and no building has been erected on that site from that time to this. In the meantime, the people of my county have not got what you might call even half way decent accommodation at that place for the carrying on of the business of the country. I am perfectly safe in saying that the city of Saskatoon, having regard to its relative size and importance has far better accommodation, according to its population and needs, than has this little village in my constituency which has been entirely overlooked or disregarded. And for what reason? Because, we are repeatedly told, the government has not got the money to spend for this purpose. That is the reason we are given. Well, if the government has not money to spend to put up a five or six thousand dollar building to provide the people with the accommodation of which they are sorely in need, where is it going to get this hundred and fifty thousand dollars? I propose to take this stand, and I shall take it on other occasions, that in my judgment a government which has shown such an utter disregard of the needs of the people of Canada as this government has in throwing away millions of dollars to tear down city blocks in Ottawa for a park, part of which will be covered with concrete at a cost of $30,000, to be a monument for all time to the present Prime Minister—for I can conceive of no other reason why it is being done; beauty is out of the question altogether; the park cannot add one particle of beauty to these buildings—I say that a government which has shown such an utter disregard of the urgent requirements of the people from one end of Canada to the other by throwing away millions of dollars as it is doing to-day is not entitled to the confidence of the house in passing this or any other item.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: I quite appreciate my hon. friend's reference to the site in his own riding. His riding is in a similar position to many other ridings with regard to sites for public buildings purchased years ago and upon which, for various reasons, successive governments since that time have not seen their way clear to construct buildings. He also mentioned that in his opinion the town to which he refers was quite as much in need of a post office for the amount of public business it was doing as the city of Saskatoon. Now, I have no quarrel with him for expatiating on the merits of his town, but of course he knows that we in this house have heard of that centre before.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): And you will hear of it again.

Mr. ELLIOTT: We expect to hear of it again; that is my hon. friend's privilege. No doubt it is deserving of all the commendation he has given it. But the circumstances in the city of Saskatoon are exceptional, and for the information of hon. members in every corner of the house I wish to give figures of the growth of business in that western city. The postmaster of Saskatoon states that twenty years ago the revenue of the post office was $19,711; while for the year ending March 31, 1927, it was $280,943.

Mr. DUNNING: When was the present post office built?

Mr. ELLIOTT: In 1908. He says:

Therefore it is evident that since 1908, the time at which the present post office was built, the postal business in the city of Saskatoon has increased approximately 1,500 per cent.

I should be glad if every town in the Dominion was doing as well. I think my hon. friend will agree with me that under the present government, towards which he is not as enthusiastic as the great majority of the people are at the present time,—

Mr. GOTT: What majority?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The majority you heard about yesterday in this house.

Mr. GOTT: The government has been in a minority for the last two years.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend may think so, but the votes do not show it.

Mr. GOTT: The votes do show what was the popular opinion.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am speaking of yesterday's vote in the house. I do not know whether my hon. friend was here or not. He is very sincere in thinking that he and his party got a majority of the votes yesterday, but he is mistaken; no doubt about that. I have looked over the record, and I was here when the division was taken.

Mr. GOTT: I should like to put the minister right. He has a wrong impression of my thoughts. What I think and know is that of the popular vote taken at the last general election the Conservative party polled a decided majority.

Mr. CASGRAIN: That is why we are here.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend and I are agreed on one thing—that the vote taken at the last general election was a popular vote. But I was dealing with Saskatoon and the growth of its postal revenue in the last twenty years from $19,000 to $280,000. Of course, no one will contend that it is possible for the public business to be carried on properly in a building erected when Saskatoon was practically a city of tents. The customs and other branches of the public business have grown correspondingly.

Mr. STEVENS: Before the minister leaves the post office revenue,—of course, he is including in the figures the twelve sub post offices in the city.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes. I assume that there are newer post offices in that district. This, as everybody knows, is the main centre in that whole section.

Mr. STEVENS: Quite.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend is quite right in saying that all the post offices for miles around will be served from Saskatoon.

Mr. STEVENS: No, the minister misunderstands me. The revenue he gives is for the whole city of Saskatoon, including the various sub post offices there.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes. I always enjoy the suggestions of my hon. friend from Frontenac, for they are usually helpful. Of course, I cannot agree with them all, particularly when they apply to this government; but I do not know that any hon. member deserves more credit for presenting on every possible occasion the claims of one particular town in his riding. He does it well, but I am bound to tell him that the requirements at Saskatoon are much more urgent, and the accommodation much more inadequate, if I may say so, than possibly obtains at any other post office to-day. There is the same need for the other government services in the city, and it would not be in the interests of the exchequer not to provide this accommodation, because the revenue that this country needs, even under the most economical administration that it has ever had, cannot be efficiently collected unless reasonably suitable buildings are provided for the purpose.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): Mr. Chairman, may I say with what unspeakable joy and felicity I listen to these delightful little tributes from the Minister of Public Works. Somehow or other they come to my ears more pleasantly than the commendations of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Dunning)—I suppose because the Minister of Public Works has cultivated a smile in connection with the discharge of his public duties, which is one of the finest assets that the King government possesses to-day. May I compliment him on the very skilful way he has of using the King's English, of selecting words with a desire to make you feel that you are bathing in taffy or molasses; while at the same time we know that he has not the slightest intention of granting any favours or fair play to anybody who sits on this side of the house. Nobody, unless he is a Grit and a good Grit, spelled with capital letters and rolled in sand to make it sufficiently gritty, will receive any sort of consideration from the Minister of Public Works. My hon. friend's supporters, whether they deserve it or not, will get the public buildings; we shall get the oily smiles. And that is all we shall get. But that is material of a kind that you cannot commercialize; you cannot make anything out of it in the way of selling it. It can be of use only here. I cannot get any money out of it to build a post office in Sydenham; I cannot get anything out of the minister's oily smiles. Now I do not want to be understood as opposing proper accommodation in the city of Saskatoon. I have had the privilege of visiting that city on many occasions, and in my humble judgment it is one of the finest and most promising cities in the whole west. I am not opposing a vote of $150,000 as being too much money to spend on the building of a post office there. I do not want to be understood as taking that position. I do not know whether it is too much or not. In all probability there is a lot of information, in regard to buildings that have been acquired and that sort of thing, which the minister has yet to supply us. I should be surprised if that were not the case. But he will open up after a while and be perfectly frank, and we shall know what all this property cost, what was paid, and who got the graft, if there was any, out there. But what I do emphasize is this. While the minister may be very properly spending this amount for this building in Saskatoon there are scores of places throughout the country that had to wait, and did wait patiently because of the war, and which are receiving no consideration whatever from this government, while at the same time the government can spend millions in tearing down buildings and in other useless work in the city of Ottawa. That is my point.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not intend to reply at further length to my hon. friend, except with regard to one statement. I refer to his request for an explanation as to who got the graft—

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): If there was any.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Oh, I beg your pardon.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): I put that in.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I want to assure my hon. friend absolutely that I shall be only too delighted to have the matter investigated as to the purchase of this building, the ownership of the land, and everything connected with it. I shall have it investigated to the very minutest detail, and I think my hon. friend will be satisfied that the best portion of his speech was that part in which he said, "if there was any."

Mr. GOTT: I am opposed to such a large expenditure on a public building in Saskatoon in view of the fact that, according to a return brought down to-day, one of the finest cities in western Ontario has been asking the Department of Public Works for the last twenty years, without success, for a new post office. I refer to the city of Windsor. The people there also made this request through the late Hon. W. C. Kennedy, one of the finest men who ever occupied a seat in this house —and this at a time when there were three cabinet ministers representing that part of the country. In order to show the committee how this tally-ho is regarded by the public I may read an extract taken from the Border Cities Star under a full line heading: "New post office plans told by Odette. Ottawa ready to erect post office in Windsor now." Does the minister realize that when the old post office was built in 1879 Windsor had a population of only 6,000, whereas to-day, with the same post office standing, that population is 75,000. Let me inform the hon. gentleman that fun is being made in the city of Windsor, and some are becoming the butt of these good-natured jokes, because the hon. member for East Essex (Mr. Odette), is up against it. I quote from the Border Cities Star:

> Local Boy Makes Good. A torchlight procession, hot-dog barbecue and home-comin' celebration is bein' organized in honour of Eddie Odette, who is expected to arrive in our midst soon with a new post office. Eddie recently visited the p.o. factory at Ottawa and looked over the new models, selecting a snappy four-door job, it is said, for this enterprisin' community.

I would suggest to the minister that it is time to quit this bally-hoo in connection with the Windsor post office and come across with a good appropriation, something definite in the estimates, for that city.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The minister was good enough to say that a proper investigation would be made with respect to this site.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If it were wished.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I suggest that the proper time to make an investigation is before the site is purchased. I am sure the minister must have made some investigation. He intimated that he had some information in regard to the amount of land sold recently for taxes. I desire to know more definitely how much of this site was sold for taxes. Can he tell us the total number of lots in the whole site, and by what material the valuator supported his conclusion as to the value of the property? It seems a very large sum for a piece of land 150 by 140 without buildings on it, except for some very inferior ones. Does the valuation show separately the value of the land and the value of the buildings?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think I can satisfy my hon. friend by quoting to him the prices asked for land—

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I do not care what was asked.

Mr. ELLIOTT:—in the vicinity of the old post office, which is on the same street, 250 feet lower down.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): When it is found that the government wants to secure a site, the people desire to know a good deal more about the property than the information we have been given in this connection. It is the valuation I want.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I obtained the services of three reputable valuators, and I have given the valuations which they have made. Naturally they vary considerably, but I came to the conclusion that we were getting excellent value.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There must be some details in connection with these valuations, surely. They must intimate how many lots there are.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No; we asked them to value this piece of property 150 by 140 on that corner and they gave the valuations in lump sums.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Are we to understand that there are no details in regard to the valuations of the land and of the buildings—no details giving the number of the lots acquired? How many lots were there altogether?

Mr. ELLIOTT: There are six lots, but I do not see any details here. My recollection is that there were six.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That would appear to be correct?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is what it would be on a 150-foot frontage.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That would indicate that there were six lots?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. STINSON: What is the city assessment of the property?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have not the assessment.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Surely the valuator has given the minister something more than a brief statement as to what he considers this property to be worth. Surely he supports that statement by something in the nature of the assessment of the property, the values of the buildings, the values of surrounding property, and so on. Surely no valuator simply makes the bald statement, "I value this property, 150 by 140, at $52,000", or whatever the figure is. I should like to have the full details.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is what was done. We sent out three valuators and they reported lump sums. We did not ask for details. We made the best deal we could and we think we have done well.

Mr. STEVENS: Surely in receiving these valuations the minister would receive the numbers of the lots, the legal description of the property and the assessed value.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I knew that the legal description of the property was 150 feet—

Mr. STEVENS: Surely the minister knows that is not a legal description of the property.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is quite legal, I may tell my hon. friend.

Mr. STEVENS: No.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is quite legal. You start at the corner and go down one street for 150 feet, then across parallel to the other street for 140 feet and so on. That is a perfectly legal description.

Mr. STEVENS: The minister is a lawyer, while I am not, but I will venture the statement that in any city, town or district where the property has been plotted and surveyed and where plans have been filed in the registry office, he will not describe any transfer of property by metes and bounds, nor will any other lawyer of repute. Metes and bounds are used wherever the property is not surveyed or where a portion of a surveyed plot is described. I think there is no doubt that this property has been surveyed. Will the minister be good enough to tell me if this property coloured red on the plan and marked, "site of new building D on the corner of Twenty-second street and First avenue" includes lots 15, 16 and 17, and is the block number 148, plan Q2?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am afraid I have not that information, although I think there would be no difficulty in getting it. I am satisfied that this property goes back 140 feet, with a frontage of 150 feet on First avenue.

Mr. STEVENS: Has the minister any knowledge as to whether there are six lots or three lots in this property?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The deputy advises me, and this is my recollection of it, that there are six lots, but I am bound to tell my hon.

friend that the data before me does not show the number of lots. However, I do not think there is any doubt that these are 25 foot lots.

Mr. STEVENS: Has the minister the order in council concerning the purchase of these lots?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, I simply have a memorandum that on March 25 an order in council was passed to purchase this property, but I will be glad to hand a copy of the order in council to my hon. friend.

Mr. STEVENS: Will the minister lay that order in council on the table at six o'clock or eight o'clock.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, as soon as I get it.

Mr. STEVENS: Did the minister say this property was bought from Butler, Byers Brothers, Limited?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. STEVENS: Who are these people?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I could not say.

Mr. STEVENS: Does the minister know if they are dealers or real estate agents?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I could not say as to that; my information was that they were a company formed to build a theatre.

Mr. STEVENS: Did they own all this property?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. STEVENS: The entire 150 feet?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. STEVENS: What have they been paid so far—just a deposit?

Mr. ELLIOTT: They have not been paid anything.

Mr. STEVENS: There was just an order in council passed to purchase the property?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. STEVENS: Did the minister consider expropriation?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. STEVENS: Why was not that process followed?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I concluded that I had to take the responsibility of getting this property for the best possible value, and I was quite satisfied that if it were expropriated it would cost the government more than $53,000.

Mr. STEVENS: When did the minister first open negotiations for the purchase of this property?

[Mr. Elliott.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: I would say in the early part of March.

Mr. STEVENS: Has the minister the date of the valuations from which he quoted?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes. I do not have them here, but I know they were made just prior to the passing of the order in council. The reason we proceeded as we did, I believe, was that plans had been drawn for the theatre, and unless we obtained the property at that time we would have had to pay more for it or would have had to get some other property one they started construction.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Could the minister tell us when instructions were given for making these valuations?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That would be done shortly before the order in council was passed.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There would have to be a report before the passing of the order in council, and surely the minister can tell us when he gave instructions to have the valuations made?

Mr. ELLIOTT: We had the general report on file in regard to this post office and the sites available; this has been a matter which has been very active in the department for years. There is a big file of correspondence in this connection, and I cannot think of any particular time within the last year or two when it became more active than at any other time until perhaps the latter part of February, or at any rate after the opening of the session.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): When the minister brings down the information at six o'clock could he inform the committee as to when instructions were first given to value this particular parcel of property?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, I will be very glad to give that information. I know from personal knowledge that it was shortly before this order in council was passed, because we were given the impression that we should act with some despatch if we desired to secure this piece of property.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I presume it would be done by correspondence?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Might we have a copy of that correspondence?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. STEVENS: I am not questioning the desirability of a post office in Saskatoon; like my hon. friend from Frontenac I know that city well and have known it for the last thirty years, ever since it was a small, insignificant place. Now it is one of the leading centres of the west, and must have adequate accommodation for its business. There can be no question of that, but these questions which we are asking are pertinent, and I am sure the minister has no objection to answering them.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have not, and more than that I appreciate the interest of my hon. friends in asking them.

Mr. STEVENS: The minister quoted the engineer's report; would he be good enough to read it so that we might have it on Hansard, and would he also give us the date of the report?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I will give my hon. friend the parts of the report which I think are most important; if he wishes any others I will be glad to read the whole report, which covers several pages.

At present, the post office building, which is 83 by 71 feet, is situated on a lot 100 feet on First avenue by 90 feet on Twenty-first street, and was erected in 1907.

Mr. STEVENS: I can save the minister a good deal of tiresome reading; we take it for granted that the engineer has stated what my hon. friend is now reading. We now ask for the report of the engineer on this site which is marked D on the plan, and the date of the report.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Perhaps this will do:

As the present site is now completely covered, if the building is to be increased, it will be necessary to purchase the property to the east on Twenty-first street, and to the north on First avenue. Should this additional property be acquired, it is considered advisable to increase the building in height, as well as in area, in order to accommodate all other government offices now in rented premises in Saskatoon. The present building, from a structural standpoint and the standpoint of appearance cannot be economically and satisfactorily enlarged in area and height. Accordingly, it has been found advisable to ascertain the cost of another suitable site, on which to erect a building of a size sufficient to accommodate the post office and all other departments of the Dominion service in Saskatoon. Mr. Stephenson, our district resident architect at Regina, was requested to report on various sites available, and on the 7th instant stated that to acquire additional property adjacent to the present site, the price asked for 50 feet on First avenue is $40,000; this has now been reduced to $37,500, and for 50 feet on Twenty-first street, $65,000; that in addition the government would have to take care of certain leases, which would be rather an expensive item. The total amount asked for land to increase the present site is $102,500, plus a further amount to take care of existing leases.

On the attached plan, the present site is marked "A". Mr. Stephenson further reports that site "B", having a frontage of 150 feet on 21st street and 130 feet on 3rd avenue, belongs to various parties, and can be purchased for approximately $165,000, which he states he considers rather high. Site "C", having 130 feet on 3rd avenue and 150 feet on 22nd street, can be purchased for approximately $135,000, which Mr. Stephenson states is also rather high. Site "D", having 150 feet on First avenue and 140 feet on 22nd street, Mr. Stephenson reports can be purchased for approximately $68,000, and that this price is fair and reasonable.

This was the site that we got eventually for $53,000.

Mr. STEVENS: What date is that?

Mr. ELLIOTT: March 20th.

Mr. STEVENS: I am going to suggest that the minister be good enough to let this item stand until these papers are tabled after eight o'clock.

Mr. EVANS: What height is that building to be?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is proposed to erect a new building upon this site, consisting of five storeys and basement, with frontages of 140 feet and 130 feet, to cover all the property. It will be a brick structure with stone trimmings, and will provide accommodation for all the government services. The rental of $18,063.85, for ten premises, will be eliminated.

Mr. EVANS: Is that a yearly rental?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. EVANS: What is the cost?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The proposed building is estimated to cost $600,000, made up of $575,000 for the building, and $25,000 for fittings.

Mr. CAMPBELL: If I am in order, I would ask the minister if he has received an application from some public body pointing out the necessity for a post office in Wynyard?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have not the details regarding Wynyard, but there are over 150 places that are asking for buildings of this kind. With regard to Wynyard, my recollection is that some gentlemen from there made representations to me personally, and possibly the board of trade, if there is an organization of that kind in the town of Wynyard, made representations, and sent a resolution of the board of trade urging the government to construct a public building at Wynyard.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I would just like to point out that at the present time part of the town hall is being used for the purpose of a post office. It is entirely too small, and it is utterly inadequate to properly handle the business. The postmaster can hardly be expected to erect a new building himself, and it is absolutely necessary that something be done there to properly look after the business. I notice in the next item there is $28,000 provided for a post office at Tisdale. I notice that the revenues at Tisdale for 1927 were $6,967, while those of Wynyard were about 85 per cent of that amount, or $5,500. I am just drawing the minister's attention to the fact that Wynyard is certainly entitled to some consideration.

Item stands.

Tisdale—public building, $28,000.

Mr. LUCAS: What is the revenue per year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: My recollection is that it is just about what my hon. friend stated. With the local post offices, which are served, I think it runs to about $12,000. The postal revenue for 1926-27 was $6,957, and from the outlying post offices, which are served from this point—I am simply speaking from memory—

Mr. LUCAS: That would apply to any other district, likewise.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. LUCAS: What is the population?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The population is about 900.

Mr. LUCAS: Has there been any recommendation from the Post Office department?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes. I might tell my hon. friend that this is another old standing matter. An appropriation of $12,000 was made in the year 1927-28, to provide for a building containing 730 square feet of space. This is a revote of nearly $12,000. The Post Office department insisted on an area of 1,200 square feet, and stated that the smaller building would be practically useless for postal purposes and, as a result, it is necessary to increase the appropriation.

Mr. SHORT: May I ask the minister what constitnency Tisdale is in?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is in the constituency of Melfort.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Regarding the post office at Wynyard, is that included in the list you spoke of?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is in the list. My hon. friend from Kingston (Mr. Ross) asked for this list, and I should have got it to him before, but I received it myself only this afternoon. He asked for a list of the public buildings for which we had applications throughout the country. I told him that we had over 100, and the cost would run around $5,000,000, speaking from recollection. I have asked the department to make up a list of what would be called practically live applications at the present time, and it includes 154 applications. These applications are the ones upon which the greatest pressure is being brought to bear upon us. The estimated cost of constructing the buildings asked for would run to twice $5,000,000; to over $12,000,000.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Does that include additions?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Some of them are additions.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I would ask the minister, Mr. Chairman, if that list shows the buildings that have been recommended by the Post Office department for consideration?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, it does not show that. It is a list showing the buildings that are under consideration.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The minister has hardly answered my question. Could he give me any indication of what action the department is likely to take in connection with a post office at Wynyard? Is there any chance at all of an estimate for it being placed in the supplementaries?

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is always a chance. That is about as far as I can go with regard to any of the applications for which items have not been placed in the estimates.

Mr. LUCAS: Does the government already own the lot in Tisdale?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. LUCAS: How long have they had it?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It was purchased on the 23rd January, 1928, from the Canadian National Railways for the sum of $750.

Mr. GARDINER: Is it intended to accommodate any other government service than the post office?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. GARDINER: How many surrounding districts obtain their mail service from this post office?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I cannot tell my hon. friend.

Mr. EVANS: Before we leave this item regarding Saskatchewan I should like to draw to the attention of the minister a matter which has been brought to his attention now for two years, namely, the need of a public building in the town of Biggar.

The CHAIRMAN: We are now discussing an item in connection with a public building at Tisdale, $28,000. Item 132 has to do with public buildings generally, and that matter might be better taken up then.

Mr. EVANS: As we are discussing Saskatchewan items now, I thought this would be the best time, but if I can have an opportunity later, that will be satisfactory.

The CHAIRMAN: My hon. friend will have an opportunity under item 132.

Item agreed to.

Alberta—Dominion public buildings—improvements, repairs, etc., $17,000.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I hope I am in order under this item. The last time the question of the Calgary post office came up, the Chairman allowed the hon. member for West Calgary (Mr. Bennett) to discuss the matter at some length and the Minister of Public Works to reply. When I endeavoured to follow them I was informed that I was out of order and that I must discuss the matter in connection with the Alberta estimates. I wish, not to make a special plea, but to direct the attention of the Minister of Public Works and the committee to the fact that the government are losing money by the way in which they are handling post office affairs in Calgary. A retrospect of what has happened in that city might very well go on Hansard.

In 1911 the city of Calgary had a three-storey stone building which was a post office and which was occupied also by the Dominion Lands office. My hon. friends to my right at that time got into power and with all good intentions they pulled down the post office in order to build a larger one because the accommodation there was not adequate. They also bought lots to the east of that site for $312,465, with the intention of erecting a building such as the Minister of Public Works has just described for Saskatoon. The war came on and they put a board fence around those vacant lots and for fifteen years the people of Calgary have had to look at that board fence right in the heart of the city where my hon. friends pulled down these buildings for the purpose of erecting a new one.

Mr. SPENCER: Where are the stones now?

Mr. ADSHEAD: I do not know. I inquired about that last year and I could not get any information in regard to the matter. If I could make a comparison I would say: Look at the square west of the Ottawa post office which is just being modelled into a park, and I would ask the committee to visualize if they can a square of that size in the heart of the city of Ottawa surrounded by a board fence, and the people of Ottawa being allowed to look at that for fifteen years and to go without a post office altogether. Comparisons, they say, are odious to the general public. I may say to the Minister of Public Works that the city of Calgary is more important than the city of Ottawa. I do not mean it is more important politically but it is more important financially. I would direct the attention of the minister to the fact that of all the cities in the Dominion, Calgary stands fifth in regard to bank clearings. The bank clearings for Ottawa for April, 1928, were $33,727,739. For Calgary for the same month the bank clearings amounted to $50,656,715. In other words, although we are the fifth city of the Dominion in regard to bank clearings for the month of April, we have no post office but we have to look at that blank square across a hideous board fence. In the matter of post office revenue for the year ended the 31st March, 1927, the collections at Calgary amounted to $566,871, that city being the seventh in the Dominion of Canada. It was ahead of Quebec, Moncton, Edmonton and most of the other cities, and still we have no post office.

Mr. SPENCER: How did it stand with regard to the city of Ottawa?

Mr. ADSHEAD: It was within a few thousand dollars of the post office revenues of the city of Ottawa. I propose to deal with the rentals that we are paying in Calgary and to show that we are losing money by the process that is going on. I asked for information as to the annual rental of the post office building which we have in Calgary and the answer I received from the Minister of Public Works was that we are paying a rental of 70,000 per annum for a gross space of a little over 70,000 square feet. I think the minister the other day observed in the house that as regards some building which was proposed for the Bureau of Statistics the rental asked was a dollar per square foot, and he thought that altogether too high for a building of that sort—

Mr. ELLIOTT: The best we could do was $1.25.

Mr. ADSHEAD: —so he decided to purchase a building. In Calgary we have been paying under lease nearly $1 per square foot, a figure which I consider too high for the rental of that particular building. If we were to capitalize that $70,000, not of course including depreciation or maintenance, at five per cent we could erect a building at a value of $1,400,000 and at four per cent we could erect a building at a value of $1,750,000. The minister has just told us that in some city, I think it was Saskatoon, they propose to erect, on a lot somewhat similar in length and size to the lot I have indicated we have in Calgary, a five-story building, for the sum of $600,000. If a building of that size can be constructed for $600,000, the interest and depreciation on it would not nearly reach the $70,000 of rent which we are paying for our post office and the Dominion land office in Calgary. I suppose the matter could be arranged under the plan of a sinking fund. I know the minister has not inserted an item for it in the estimates this year, but there is a phase of the situation to which I wish to draw his attention and that is that the lease on the building which they have rented for $70,000 a year expires at the end of 1929. I would suggest to the minister that if he wants to save money; if he wants to be economical; if he desires to have in Calgary a building which will belong to the Dominion and which in interest, depreciation and maintenance will not cost more than $70,000 a year, he should make some plan or have some prospect of erecting a building there whereby the government will have a building of their own prior to the expiration of the lease. I think preparations should be made at once with the idea of providing a building. I hope the government has no idea of purchasing the building in which the post office is now located. It would be very much against the wishes of the people of the city of Calgary if you purchased that building and left vacant the lots upon which the post office was originally built, together with the $312,465 worth of lots which were purchased for the express purpose of erecting a building right next to the old post office building site. I hope the minister will give serious consideration to this question from a business standpoint, and not simply give me the usual platitude, "I am going to give the matter serious consideration." It should be considered from a business standpoint, and also from another standpoint. The government did intend before the war to build a public building in Calgary, and for the last fifteen years not only has that hideous board fence been left in the heart of the city, but property values all around have depreciated, and what is more, the government is actually losing money by continuing the present conditions. You have no building of your own, and it is costing more for rentals than the interest and depreciation on the new buildings would amount to. I would ask the minister what he proposes to do when the lease on this building expires in 1929. Does he propose to renew the lease for three or five years, or what preparations are being made for putting the thing on a business basis and relieving the people of Calgary from that hideous eyesore in the very heart of the city?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I will answer my hon. friend as far as I can. I think he will realize that it is quite impossible for me to say at the moment what we can do on the expiration of a lease which does not expire until some time in 1929.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Some preparation is necessary before the lease actually expires if you are going to put up a building.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am bound to tell my hon. friend that even if we had come to a decision, we might not think it was in the public interest to say just what that decision was this far ahead of time. But I will be very frank in stating that we have come to no decision in regard to renewing the lease.

Mr. ADSHEAD: And no decision as to buying the present building?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is in the same category. There are a number of buildings in the smaller places throughout the country, old bank buildings occasionally, and other buildings that have been purchased in the past for the public services and turned into a public building, and among the applications that we have before us at the present time are a few asking us to purchase buildings already in existence, which no doubt could be purchased very much cheaper than we could construct a new building. That proposition was made to us in the city of Saskatoon. There was a building there that we were asked to purchase, and no doubt we could have purchased it and got floor space much cheaper than we could consrtuct a new building. The same is true of many other places, but of course these buildings would never look very much like a post office, and there is just the difficulty. If it is in a town where you consider that you are getting exceptionally good value, and where possibly you would not construct a new building costing from $20,000 to $30,000, my view would be that we might be justified in buying a building in some of these places if the people were satisfied with the accommodation it would provide, say a building costing $10,000 or $12,000, perhaps half the cost of constructing a new building. So far as Calgary is concerned, there is certainly no decision in favour of buying a building for customs and post office and government services generally.

Mr. ADSHEAD: There is a customs office there already.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I understand that. I want to say further, as regards the prices my hon. friend mentions—and prices were also mentioned in connection with Saskatoon—that they are altogether out of proportion to the figures shown in the actual tenders. So far as Calgary is concerned, tenders were called for in 1914 for the construction of a building which was considered sufficient to meet the requirements of Calgary at that time, and the lowest tender received was for $1,399,000, and the highest tender, $1,703,000. There were five tenders altogether. There is no question that the cost of the building has increased enormously since that time.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Surely the minister has no idea of purchasing the building in which the post office is now located. I asked that question last year, and Hansard will show that the minister said that they did not have that intention. I hope there is no doubt about that.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I will be very frank in saying to my hon. friend that there is absolutely no change in the condition from what it was a year ago, and no serious consideration has been given in the last year to purchasing that building. That answer was true then, and it is true now.

Mr. ADSHEAD: If there was any such intention, it would raise a terrible disturbance among the people of Calgary.

Mr. LUCAS: I would ask the committee to look at page 32 of the estimates and compare the amounts being voted for the three western provinces, and ask hon. members if in their opinion Alberta has been fairly dealt with. In 1927-28 Manitoba was voted $114,000; Saskatchewan, $212,950; and Alberta, $32,000. In 1928-29 Manitoba is being voted $105,700; Saskatchewan, $353,850; and Alberta, $56,850.

I also see in looking over the estimates that no provision is made for a public building in Camrose, for which there was an appropriation in the estimates in 1926, and which was brought before the house last session. I would ask the Minister of Public Works if he can give any reason why that vote, which was considered and approved by the government and placed in the estimates, has been withdrawn.

Mr. STEVENS: That ought to be easy to explain.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I gave my hon. friend the answer last year, and there is nothing I can add to what I then said. Camrose is in this long list of applications that we have here, where the need has not been considered as urgent as in the other places for which provision is being made.

Mr. LUCAS: The minister says it does not appear to have been considered as urgent as the need in other places. I will ask the committee to follow these figures I am going to give in regard to votes passed this session for public buildings at different places. For the province of Quebec there are two votes: St. Jacques, population 1,714, revenue $2,017; Waterloo, population 2,000, revenue $6,356; Durham, Ontario, population 1,640, revenue $5,060; Rockland, Ontario, population 3,156, revenue $2,412; Rosthern, Sask., population 1,500, revenue $6,248; Tisdale, Sask., population 900, revenue $6,957. Now I come to the town of Camrose, in the province of Alberta, which has a population of 2,000 and a revenue of $13,186—more than double the amount of the revenue of the other post offices for which votes have been passed this session. In addition there is a sub customs office there with a revenue of over $50,000 a year. In view of these facts I think the minister should state to the house what is the policy of the government in determining whether or not a town is entitled to a post office.

In case the minister may think that I am prejudiced in putting forward the claims of Camrose, let me read an article from the Camrose Canadian of January 5, 1928. It is a Liberal paper published in Camrose, and I feel sure the minister will accept this article as fairly representing the facts. It is headed, Why the Delay?

> Away back in 1911 the Department of Public Works in the Dominion government purchased a very desirable site in Camrose for the erection of a post office building. The volume of business transacted at the local post office at that time warranted this action on the part of the government, and it was the hope of the citizens of the town, and residents of the surrounding country, that a building in keeping with the needs of the community would be ready for use within a reasonable time.

With the completion of the various railroads, radiating in all directions from Camrose, resulting in the creation of many new villages and country post offices, the local office acted as a gathering and distributing centre for a large proportion of the mail in and out of this portion of the province. This meant a tremendous increase in the amount of mail passing through the Camrose office. The selection of Camrose as the location of the normal school for northern Alberta, the building of the Camrose Lutheran college, and the establishment of several large wholesale houses, made it necessary to provide more commodious and up-to-date quarters for the proper handling of the rapidly growing business of the post office.

Sixteen years have passed since the site was purchased, and the lots lie as they did in 1911, bare as the virgin prairie. No use whatever has been made of them. Eight thousand dollars of the peoples' money have been tied up in this unproductive investment all those years. The town treasury has been deprived of a sum of money amounting to approximately $4,000 which, had the property remained in private hands, would have been paid to the town as taxes. In the interval the needs of Camrose for larger post office accommodation has been growing from year to year.

I wish the minister to note particularly this part:

It is not necessary to draw the attention of the public to the utterly inadequate premises in which the business is carried on at the present time. The unsatisfactory conditions are familiar to all. The space in the building for the public, as well as the employees, is far too limited. Frequently it is impossible to enter the building, particularly at the noon hour, when the schools close and the students call for mail. It is clearly obvious that the clerks are cramped for space, especially when scores of mail bags are dumped into the rear part of the building. As a result of overcrowding, the air becomes so foul that it is sickening, and the wonder is that the employees whose work compels them to remain in the unhealthy atmosphere for hours at a time, have so far escaped serious illness. Under such unfavourable conditions in any other place of business it is doubtful if the public would be given the same courteous service which is invariably rendered by the clerks of the Camrose office. In all probability the health officer would interfere and insist on better sanitary conditions.

It was a Liberal government that purchased the property for the proposed building. That government was defeated later in the year. Efforts were made to interest the newly-formed Conservative government to carry out the program begun by its predecessors, but without avail. Then came the Great War when all public works in Canada were suspended. Following the defeat of the Union government, with the Liberals again in power, hopes were revived that it, which recognized the needs of the community in 1911, would feel its responsibility and carry out the undertaking.

In the preliminary estimates presented to parliament last session, an item was included for the construction of the Camrose public building. As a result, high hopes prevailed in the hearts of the people of Camrose that the long delayed building would shortly become an established fact. But such was not to be; something miscarried. What happened has remained a mystery to the present time. When the item was up for discussion little, if any, support was offered in its favour from the government side of the house. Strange as it may seem the cause of the constituency was championed by opposition members. The final outcome of the matter was its entire withdrawal from the estimates. The same government which placed it there allowed it to perish unsupported. No reason whatever was given for their indifferent action. Surely we are entitled to an explanation. Sinister motives on the part of the government were imputed for the unusual treatment.

The Canadian does not care to view the matter in that light, rather it believes that some of the fault rested with us. During the debate on the item it was very clear that little was known of our requirements, some members even being ignorant of the existence of such a place as Camrose. Our case had not been presented in a manner which would demonstrate the importance of the situation. We believe our claim is fair and just, and can be supported by the facts, and the government should be made aware of these facts at the earliest possible moment.

Some very interesting figures are revealed by the census taken during the summer of 1926. That extensive, fertile territory, through which the Battle river flows, extending from Wetaskiwin on the west to Hardisty, and from Vegreville on the north to Stettler, is shown to have a population greater than any other rural area of like size in Alberta. Being nearly one hundred miles square, it combines an area equal to that portion of western Ontario lying south of a line drawn from Toronto to Sarnia. In this block of highly improved parkland country, there is a population of 50,000 people, over 8,000 occupied farms, and 50 towns and villages.

Many of the urban centres are shown to have populations ranging from 200 to 500, and Camrose, located fairly near the centre of this territory, had a population of over 2,000 in June 1926. More than twenty banks serve the needs of this thriving region, and the same number of coal mines are in operation most of the year. Much of this country has been settled for over twenty-five years, and in that period many millions of dollars' worth of farm products have gone to swell the export trade of the Dominion. The wheat grown in this territory in 1927 exceeded 25 million bushels, and the value of all the products of the farms and mines during the past year will approximate at least $40,000,000.

Now for what really hurts. Never has one dollar of federal money been expended in this large and important part of western Canada for public buildings of any kind. Does that seem fair? We doubt if any other section of Canada of like size and importance has received such treatment. How much longer must we wait?

It will be noted, Mr. Chairman, that the article says that the needs of Camrose have never been fairly presented to parliament. When I came down here in 1922 as the representative of what was then the constituency of Victoria and in which Camrose was included, it is a well-known fact that the policy of the government at that time was not to spend any money on public buildings as we were still feeling the effects of the heavy war expenditure. Therefore I made no representations in regard to this post office. But within the last few years the present government has changed that policy, and I certainly made such representations that in 1926 an amount was placed in the estimates to provide for this building. Having secured that recognition, I felt I had gone far enough to convince the government that we were entitled to the post office building. When the item came up for discussion last session there was no opposition offered to it, and therefore I did not deem it necessary to take up the time of the house by giving any further explanation. But now that that estimate has been withdrawn, I desire to endorse everything that is contained in this leading article which I have just quoted, and to point out to the committee that Camrose is one the most flourishing towns in western Canada. It is a very important railroad centre, lines radiating in eight different directions; there are three wholesale houses; a large normal school for the northern half of Alberta is located there, and a large Lutheran college. The result is that when all these people attempt to get in, especially when schools and colleges are out, and the wholesale houses are closed, the present accommodation in the post office is entirely inadequate. I feel sure that the government does not want to treat Camrose unfairly, and I would ask the minister to give some promise that in the supplementary estimates an item will be provided in this connection.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I know something of the needs of Camrose. I know the town, and I do not agree with my hon. friend that the need there is more urgent than in many other places on our list. I do not think it is as urgent as any of those that have been granted. It is on the list that we have under consideration and it will receive the best consideration we can give it. But I think my hon. friend heard me say that it would be quite impossible for me to promise him or anyone else that it will be put in the estimates.

Mr. LUCAS: On what basis did the government consider it urgent in 1926 to put a vote in the estimates if it is not urgent now? Was it more urgent then than it is to-day? What has occurred to cause the government to change their opinion?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I was not in charge of the department when the vote was included in 1926. I go over the information we have and submit to the treasury board first of all, and afterwards to council, a certain list of appropriations. It did not seem to either the treasury board or council, nor did it appear to me, that this was as urgent as some of the other places whose applications were granted.

Mr. KENNEDY: Does the minister think that the previous minister made a mistake in including the item in 1926?

Mr. ELLIOTT: There are certain times when it looks as if a town is growing very rapidly. We have a great many towns that are growing rapidly and the accommodation of several years ago is not adequate to-day. It might have appeared in 1926 that the town was going ahead very fast and additional facilities would have to be provided; but perhaps when the next record comes in—returns for the following year—the increase does not look nearly so marked. When all these circumstances are considered we have to make the best recommendation we can.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Alberta—Dominion public buildings—improvements, repairs, etc., $17,000.

Mr. LUCAS: Just before six o'clock I understood the minister to say that some places for which we have voted money for public buildings showed evidence of increased growth of one kind or another. Would the minister tell us more about that in regard to some of the places for which we have already voted money?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The item last under discussion, the public building for Saskatoon, is an outstanding example.

Mr. LUCAS: Would the minister leave out the cities and take up some of the rural places which I mentioned this afternon?

Mr. ELLIOTT: There are very few buildings in the whole vote. To what does my hon. friend refer?

Mr. LUCAS: I gave a list this afternoon.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not think my hon. friend expects me to go over all the places for which we have voted money, although there are not many of them. Will my hon. friend name any particular place and ask to have a comparison made?

Mr. LUCAS: I do not wish the minister to go over all the places, but I gave a list of six this afternoon, two in Quebec, two in Ontario and two in Saskatchewan, small rural towns similar to Camrose. I understood the argument of the minister to be that some of these places were starting to grow and were therefore entitled to money for a public building, but I contend that Camrose has shown as much growth as any of them, if not more. For instance, take Rosthern, Saskatchewan; the postal revenues in 1924 amounted to $6,429, while in 1927 they totalled $6,248. Then there is Durham, Ontario; in 1924 the postal revenue amounted to $7,145, and in 1927 it was $5,683. Take Waterloo, Quebec; in 1924 the postal revenue was $6,673 and in 1927 it amounted to $5,731. Personally I cannot see any evidence in these cases of the growth to which the minister referred.

Mr. ELLIOTT: All the circumstances, the accommodation which is being used, the opportunity for obtaining better accommodation and the urgency for making a change of some kind, are looked into, and the department arrives at the best conclusion possible under the circumstances.

Mr. GARDINER: I have heard the Prime Minister say time and again in this house that the government are but a committee of the house, responsible to the house for all their actions, and further that the government are responsible for carrying out the wishes of this house. In the supplementary estimates of 1926 there appeared an item for the construction of this building at Camrose. The committee will remember that the supplementary estimates and in fact many of the main estiates were not passed in the first session of 1926. On December 9 of that year this house was called together primarily for the purpose of passing the estimates so that the government would not have to issue governor general's warrants; I remember that the supplementary estimates at that session contained this item for the Camrose post office, which item was passed by this house. That means that this house instructed the government to construct this building at Camrose. When the main estimates came up the next year, because of the fact that the building could not be proceeded with immediately after the item was passed the estimates did not contain any item for the Camrose post office. What I want to know is this: Is the Prime Minister satisfied in his own mind that the government are a committee of this house and as such are willing to carry out the instructions of this house? If so, will the minister explain why, after this house once passed this particular item, the government so far forgot their duty to the house that they did not proceed with this work? I think that should be explained before we go any further.

[Mr. Lucas.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: The hon. member heard my explanation a year ago and he has heard what has been said so far this session; the department have gone over all the available data and have come to the best conclusion possible as to what shall be recommended to the treasury board and to council. That is all I can say; I cannot add anything to that statement.

Mr. GARDINER: Then do I take it from what the minister says that he does not believe in the principle enunciated by the Prime Minister, that the government are but a committee of this house and responsible to the house? Does the minister wish to repudiate that statement by the Prime Minister?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Not at all.

Mr. GARDINER: The minister is evidently doing it under the circumstances.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Not at all.

Mr. LUCAS: Will the minister say there was any evidence came up to show that Camrose was not just as much entitled to a post office this year as in 1926, when this estimate was first passed?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I will certainly say there was no evidence to lead the department, the treasury board or council to believe that Camrose was more entitled to a building than a great many other places whose applications were being refused at that time.

Mr. LUCAS: That was not the question I asked. Evidently this matter was considered by the government and the treasury board in 1926 when the item was placed in the estimates, and I am asking the minister now if any new evidence came up which would justify the government or the treasury board in cutting this item out of the estimates.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend is quite wrong when he says the item was cut out of the estimates; that was not done. It was in estimates which lapsed, and another set of estimates was made up. For reasons which the government considered sufficient from all available data, the item was not inserted again. That is all I can say to my hon. friend.

Mr. LUCAS: I would just like to say to the hon. minister that the town of Camrose has been making rapid growth. Only this last year a large business block costing over $40,000 has been erected there. A very large hotel, estimated to cost $90,000, has just been completed, and also several new churches, all costing very large sums of money. All the evidence is to the effect that the town of Camrose is prospering and growing rapidly, and therefore it seems rather difficult to understand why the government consider this matter in 1926—because I feel sure that it would not have gone in the estimates unless they had considered it—and later cut it out. As far as the evidence of development is concerned, the government cannot produce anything to show that the town of Camrose is going back. I should like to know for what other reason the government decided to leave this item out.

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Chairman, will the minister ask his deputy to give him the reasons for putting the item in the 1926 supplementary estimates, and his reasons for leaving it out in the 1927 main estimates? There must have been good and sufficient reason why it was put in in 1926, and no doubt there were good and sufficient reasons why it was taken out in 1927. Would he let us have the information with regard to those two particular items of procedure?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I should like to ask the minister regarding this installation of pick-up table.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is a patented device, known as the Cummins pick-up. It is thought to be the best device available for picking up the letters from the floor, or the table, or whatever place they are on at the particular time. I have never used one of these machines myself, but they are a distinct type, and very well known. I believe that it is the type of machine that investigation has shown to meet the requirements, and is the best machine available at the present time.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Where is it manufactured?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think it is an American concern; the Interprovincial Equipment Company, Queen street, Ottawa, is the Canadian representative. I have a note to that effect, so I take it that it is an American concern.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is it being installed in all the large offices?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think the investigations that were made with regard to the new terminal station at Montreal were made in New York and various other places. If my memory serves me right, their information was that this was the type found most satisfactory there. It is what the post office asks for.

Mr. GARDINER: I asked the minister two questions, and I hope he will be given time to answer them.

Mr. SPENCE: Is this pick-up table supposed to be a labour-saving device, and if so, is there any actual saving in connection with it? Will it save any extra help and cut down the overhead, or is it a labour-saving device which will allow men to stand around and do nothing?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I will give my hon. friend all the information I have on the subject. By authority of an order in council passed on July 15, 1927, 10 Cummins pick-up tables were purchased at a cost of $3,500 each, from the Interprovincial Equipment Company, of Ottawa, four of the tables being for Montreal and six for Toronto. This equipment is a patented article, made in Chicago, and is the only mechanical pick-up table on the market. For this reason there was no object in calling for public tenders, and a contract was entered into without this being done. This is the information which I was unable to give to my hon. friend a few minutes ago. At the time these tables were purchased the following memorandum was submitted by the Deputy Postmaster General on May 16, 1927, regarding the advantages of the same:

> This machine has been under consideration by the department for some time, as a means of economy, and for the expediting and prompt despatch of letter mail. This type is the only mechanical pickup table and stacker produced commercially, either in this country or the United States.
> Other experimental types were investigated, and as there were no plans available, sketches were made for the purpose of a general report to this department at the time. The Mayer type, of which only one was constructed for test purposes in the New York post office, was too cumbersome and complicated, as will be seen on reference to the sketch mentioned. The output of the Rotary type developed by the United States government for smaller offices has been disappointing and unfavourably reported on by the majority of United States postmasters who have used them.
> The Cummins type has produced the most favourable comment, and it has the advantage of having passed through the experimental stage, and being a standard article substantially built and produced by a reliable firm.
> The stacker attachment alone will do the work now performed by a porter, and the statement made by the concern introducing this machine "that it will save its own cost in a year" is well founded, as the labour charge during the peak load period can be reduced 50 per cent in the "facing up" process.

Mr. SPENCE: No one is denying that this is a labour saving device, but are we going to save anything by using it?

Mr. ELLIOTT: They say that the ten that were purchased will pay for themselves in a year, by the saving in labour.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Would the minister repeat the name of the agent in Ottawa?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The Interprovincial Equipment Company, Queen Street.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Who are they?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I cannot tell my hon. friend.

Mr. GERSHAW: Is it the intention of the minister to install this device only in the larger post offices, or in the post offices generally?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The Department of Public Works purchases articles such as these, the little tractors and other machinery of the kind used in connection with the Post Office department, upon the recommendation of the officials of the department, with such information as we are able to get.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister answer the questions I put to him a few moments ago?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am sorry, but I will have to ask my hon. friend to repeat them.

Mr. GARDINER: In the supplementary estimates for 1926 there was an item for a post office at Camrose. I would like to ask the minister the reason for including that item in the estimates. What representations were made that finally led to this item being in the supplementary estimates of 1926? I will put one question at a time.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I must apologize to my hon. friend for not having answered that before. He added to that the request that I would ask my deputy just how that had been done. He would not have added that to his question had he realized just what I propose to tell him about the procedure. The deputy is not in the council when these matters are being considered and the decisions really made. Perhaps that will be a sufficient answer as regards the deputy.

Of course as my hon. friend knows I was not in the department at the time. My predecessor, after considering the question, decided to place this item in the supplementary estimates. The procedure is this. I will in a few days put before the treasury board a large number of items for the supplementary estimates. I am not sure yet what fraction of them I will get. They first go before the treasury board and the treasury board in their discretion say: Well, we will cut this out and we will leave that in. Sometimes, but not often, something that is cut out by the treasury board is replaced by the cabinet council when the estimates are subsequently submitted to them. It is quite impossible, as my hon. friend will understand, for me to tell him the particular history of this one item out of very many that went through at a time when I was not in charge of the department. I know it was in the supplementaries and I know it did not come through the treasury board and council at the time that the next estimates appeared. That is all I can say in regard to the matter.

Mr. GARDINER: Has the minister any information as to the representations made in the first place which warranted the inclusion of that item in the estimates of 1926?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. GARDINER: Who receives those representations?

Mr. ELLIOTT: They would be considered by whoever was making up the supplementaries for 1926.

Mr. LUCAS: Has the Post Office Department recommended a new building at Camrose?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I cannot say as to that.

Mr. LUCAS: The minister has laboured a great deal in an endeavour to explain why this item has not appeared in the estimates this year. He might just as well be frank and tell the committee that the real reason why this item was cut out was because the hon. member for Camrose did not support the government on all occasions.

Mr. VALLANCE: Following up the reasoning of the hon. member for Camrose (Mr. Lucas) I may say that in the constituency of South Battleford we happen to have a situation that has been hanging fire for a long time before 1926. It has been hanging fire since 1911 when the Department of Public Works purchased a site for a post office in the town of Wilkie. I do not think the hon. member for Camrose should raise half the objection that we do and in spite of what he says, namely, that he did not vote right, I hope we have always voted right and the town of Wilkie has always voted right—

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. VALLANCE: Yes, and yet I could not get any closer to the minister than my hon. friend seems to be able to get. I do not think his reasoning is very good

Mr. LUCAS: Did the hon. member ever have an item inserted in the estimates for the building?

Mr. VALLANCE: The lot was purchased in 1911 but the building was never erected.

Mr. LUCAS: A lot was purchased in Camrose in 1911, the same year.

Item agreed to.

Edmonton—tractor for postal purposes, $1,350.

Mr. FRASER: Probably the minister could give me the information which I asked for the other night in regard to these tractors. He has given us the information about the pick-up tables. It was information similar to that which I was looking for the other night with regard to tractors.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am sorry but I do not seem to have under my hand information about the tractors in as much detail as about the pick-up tables, I suppose for the reason that the departmental officials assumed that the tractor now in use had become so well known that perhaps such information was not so necessary as it was when the tractor was first installed. This is the type and the price of a tractor that seems to be used in practically all post offices in Canada where a tractor is used. It is the tractor that the officials of the Post Office department ask for and the one that we try to secure. I shall be glad to make inquiries and to give my hon. friend further information at some later date.

Item agreed to.

Wainwright public building, $35,000.

Mr. KAISER: Would the minister kindly explain the revote in this case? There was a vote of $15,000 in 1927; now there is a item of $35,000 for this year with a revote of $15,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The history of that is that the appropriation of $15,000 in 1927-28 provided for a building containing 830 square feet of area. The Post Office department insisted upon an area of 1,200 square feet and the Customs and Excise department require 600 square feet. In order to provide the required accommodation, that is for all the services, under the one roof, the proposed appropriation had to be increased to this amount.

Mr. SPENCER: Is the building likely to be erected this year? I understand the people are very anxious to have the building erected and probably the Minister of Public Works knows the present post office is a very poor affair. They are particularly anxious that the work be begun soon so that private interests may know whether or not there is going to be a public building there this year.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is hard to say positively, but as soon as this item passes instructions will be given to have the plans prepared so that the matter may be proceeded with just as in the case of all the other buildings and other works for which money is appropriated in these estimates.

Mr. CANTLEY: What is the population of Wainwright?

Mr. ELLIOTT: About 1,000.

Mr. BARBER: What is the revenue?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The postal revenue is $5,557, and the customs revenue $15,739.

Mr. McPHEE: Who is the member for the district?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The hon. member for Battle River.

Item agreed to.

British Columbia—Dominion public buildings—improvements, repairs, etc., $40,000.

Mr. ESLING: I regret that there is no provision made in this vote for a public building in Trail. I regret that particularly because there seems to have gone out from the government to the people of Trail information to the effect that a vote for a public building in Trail would be "noted" in the supplementary estimates. I presume that what is meant by "noted" is considered, and I hope that such will be the case. We are not, like some of our friends from Saskatchewan and elsewhere, asking for a public building in Trail simply because we want to get a whack at the public treasury, but because in Trail there is urgent need of a public building. We have an industrial institution with a continuous pay roll, and it is not necessary for us to come down here and make inroads upon the public treasury just to get a few thousand dollars spent there. We have there a pay roll of approximately $5,000,000 a year, and I am asking for this public building solely because it is in keeping with the policy laid down by the hon. Minister of Public Works last session, when he said that the policy of the government was to construct buildings where the accommodation was inadequate and the need urgent. I think that is a very sane and sensible policy. It sounds more like a Conservative policy, and I want to congratulate the minister upon having laid it down.

The first intimation we had from the government about a public building in Trail came from the hon. Minister of Health, formerly the Minister of Public Works. He notified the Trail board of trade that this item would be noted by the government and of course the people of Trail were pleased to hear that. The city of Trail then sent a telegram to the minister, stating that they had received such advice, and urging the immediate construction of this building for the reason that the accommodation was inadequate and the necessity urgent. They went further and passed a resolution emphasizing this urgency. The resolution goes on to say, in keeping with the general prosperity of Trail:

> Whereas the number of boxes in the post office is at present 1,047, and whereas the present requirements are 2,500—

That is a little stronger than I put it before, but evidently the city seems to think that their requirements are a little more than double the present accommodation. The resolution goes on:

> Owing chiefly to the rent of the present premises having been increased from $75 to $115 a month, the postmaster in like manner has increased the rent for the boxes from 25 to 33 per cent.

There are 1,047 boxes in use in the Post Office, and there are 500 people waiting for boxes; in addition, there are from three to five families using many boxes. I am confident that the minister will admit that that is a case of inadequate accommodation.

Considerable has been said to-day about the growth of the various communities for which votes have been asked. To-day the governor general is laying the corner stone of a new city hall for Trail. That is pretty good evidence of prosperity. The people of Trail by public subscription are preparing for the erection of a $200,000 hotel. That is a little better than some of these Saskatchewan hotels. Within the last two years there have been erected a $100,000 hospital and a $45,000 artificial ice rink; and within the last two months there has been constructed a new $75,000 theatre. This large industrial company at Trail of which I spoke has loaned to its employees $700,000 for the erection of homes. I would like to know if you can get any better evidence of prosperity and progress.

The city of Trail in the past five years has grown beyond all bounds. During that time they have carried on construction work, street paving, a water system and so forth, to the amount of $475,000, and the Canadian Pacific Railway has just completed the construction of a new brick station. I submit to the Minister of Public Works that the Canadian Pacific Railway is not building stations except in places where the requirements of the people demand it. Within the last five years the city of Trail has issued building permits to the value of $1,731,000. I have taken the precaution, Mr. Chairman, to get these figures from the city clerk, so there can be no dispute about them—$1,731,000 in building permits in Trail within the past five years; what better evidence could you have of progress? The company at Trail has also disbursed within the last five years $7,800,000 for construction work. When you consider all these evidences of prosperity, it is difficult to realise how any fair-minded government could hesitate to meet the requirements of the city of Trail.

In addition, the city of Trail pays into the federal exchequer in business and income taxes $1,000,000 a year—$1,000,000 a year from this little city of Trail, for the purpose of building wharves down in Quebec province and public buildings in Saskatchewan. Then we pay into the provincial exchequer $800,000. As a matter of fact, the city of Trail pays in taxes to the federal exchequer three times as much as this parliament votes for public buildings in the entire province of British Columbia. The city of Trail and its industrial plant pay in excess of one per cent of the total freight bill by rail and by water for the entire Dominion.

Now, what is needed is a three-storey building to take care of the postal and customs requirements. The customs collections for the past year amounted to $120,000. That is a pretty good figure for a small community. The post office revenue for 1926-27 was $20,381. Trail post office ranks nineteenth out of the 941 post offices in British Columbia. By way of rent, interest and incidental expenses in connection with the post office and the customs office the government pays the equivalent every year of 5 per cent on $90,000.

Much has been said in behalf of some other communities about their growth of population. Trail's population has increased in the last five years from $5,000 to 8,500. The government post office inspector has reported to the department that in two or three years the population will probably reach 12,000. Just compare this with the vote of $28,000 passed this afternoon for a post office at Rosthern, Saskatchewan, which has only 271 boxes, and it needs another 40. We have 1,047 boxes, and the post office inspector reports that 500 people are waiting for accommodation. The Minister of Public Works justified the Rosthern vote on the ground of lack of accommodation. Then we have the right hon.

Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) coming from Prince Albert, and Prince Albert is voted $95,000 on the plea that in twenty years its population has grown from 1,785 to 7,500. It didn't take Trail twenty years to wake up; in three years its population increased from 5,000 to 8,500. Then we have an appropriation for Waterloo, Quebec, with a population of 2,000 and a revenue of $7,804. There are several cases of that kind appearing in the estimates while Trail with its much larger population and postal revenue is ignored.

I think it is generally admitted throughout the country that it is unfair for any member or any community to ask for public improvements that are not needed, and I commend the Minister of Public Works for discouraging such applications. But surely this has been about the largest spending program of any government since confederation. We have voted $8,500,000 for Quebec harbour, $6,000,000 to beautify Ottawa, $100,000 last year and another $150,000 this year for Quebec citadel, $100,000 last year and a similar sum this year for Rideau Hall, and $30,000 for a greenhouse. I merely mention those votes by way of comparison with the small sum which is asked for a community that is actually suffering for want of adequate post office facilities.

I have a letter here which I have hesitated to read, because it is rather amusing in view of the huge sums which have been voted. It comes from the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. King), who was formerly in charge of the Department of Public Works. It is his second letter to the Trail board of trade. For some reason or other he seems to have changed his attitude, for which I am very sorry, and I do hope that the present Minister of Public Works will not be influenced by his colleague. He says:

> The Minister of Public Works informs me that it is felt by the government that it is better to continue the reduction of taxation and payments on the national debt,—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. ESLING: Yes, it is amusing, and hard to believe in view of about twenty million dollars voted recently. Let me continue:

> —and this can only be done by strict economy and delaying, for the present, any undertakings which, although necessary, are not essential to the carrying on of the public business.

If that is not a joke, I do not know what is, particularly following the budget speech of the Minister of Finance, in which he noted a surplus of $54,000,000 and said that the estimated revenue for the coming year was sufficient to meet the needs of a growing country.

I have dealt with the inadequacy of the accommodation in the buildings at Trail. Now I am going to refer to the urgency for a new building. On October 6—and may I ask hon. members to recall that the general election came on October 29, 1925—the hon. Minister of Health, was at that time Minister of Public Works and distributing such patronage as he could on the eve of the election, purchased in Trail a site for a post office. That is, he did so three weeks before the election, and this is what I wish to impress upon the present Minister of Public Works and my friends on the other side of the house so that they may observe how the former head of the department regarded this matter. The Public Works department, of which, as I say, the present Minister of Health was then the head, sent the following wire to the surveyor:

> Make the survey of these lots with the utmost despatch, as the matter is very urgent.

That was three weeks before the election. If it was so urgent back in 1925, why has it not been urgent enough since to proceed with the construction of the building? But that is not all. The then Minister of Public Works sent another letter in which he says that he is quite familiar with the necessities of the situation, and that he purchased the site with a view to the construction of a building. I am merely giving these facts to impress upon the government, if it is possible, that I am entirely within bounds in urging the construction of this building, not because we want to get at the treasury, but simply because we need the accommodation. There are many days when the men come off shift, line up on the sidewalk waiting to get their mail, and after vainly waiting for half an hour or more they find it useless to remain longer and go home disappointed. Surely that is evidence of the necessity and urgency of better accommodation. Let me quote a letter from the post office inspector who has sent to Trail to investigate conditions. Under date of December 16, 1926, he wrote to the department:

> I would respectfully request that a new building be erected as soon as possible. Three times more floor space required. There are now 1,047 boxes and 500 people are waiting.

He recommended that the new building should contain 2,100 boxes. That is evidence enough of the necessity. I present these facts in the hope that the minister from British Columbia will put aside political prejudice and follow the policy laid down by the Minister of Public Works, and give to a growing community of wage earners the accommodation so urgently needed.

We had another letter which I shall be pleased to read. This one comes from the Minister of Health; it is addressed to myself. He says:

I am thoroughly conversant—

You see, the Minister of Health is aware of the needs of the district. He says he is thoroughly conversant with them.

I am thoroughly conversant with the matters of that district, and it was with a view of giving better accommodation that I recommended the purchase of a property in Trail some time ago,—

He was a little reticent about saying when.

—it being my intention to advocate the erection of a suitable building on the site.

The situation just comes down to this. The Minister of Health is certainly in a peculiar position. He is a member of the cabinet and he cannot go to Trail and say, "I have not recommended your post office", because he has already intimated that the supplementary vote would be considered. It would not be healthy for him to go to Trail.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I always find it very healthy there.

Mr. ESLING: I may remind the Minister of Health, with all courtesy, that he was out there last autumn and was within an hour's ride of Trail; and yet, curiously enough, he passed by us and went up the lake. He could not go there and say that he had not recommended the vote. The Minister of Health is in fact in a most embarrassing position and a position of humiliation if he says to his colleagues in the cabinet, "I firmly and honestly believe that the vote is necessary and I urge you to provide in the supplementary estimates for a public building in Trail", if that representation is to be disregarded. I should not like to be in the position of a minister of a government who could not receive sufficient attention from his colleagues to meet his wants in a matter of this kind, particularly when, as in this case, the hon. gentleman is the sole cabinet representative of the province of British Columbia. I may say that all we have got in British Columbia from this government is the Minister of Health.

I am now going to conclude these remarks with a courteous request of the Minister of Public Works and the other members of the cabinet. I appeal to them not to disappoint the citizens of Trail in regard to this post office.

I have another letter here—I have saved the best for the last. This letter is dated January 4, 1927, from the Postmaster General, who naturally receives reports from all quarters. Under this date he sends me a letter in which he says:

I have already made representations to the department (Public Works) that the accommodation at present provided at Trail is totally inadequate—

The Postmaster General says that the accommodation provided at Trail is totally inadequate, and it is on that basis that I trust the Minister of Public Works will meet our wishes in this matter. He continues:

—and have urged—

He has not asked them, mind you; he has urged:

—the erection of a suitable public building.

My appeal to the minister and to the government will, I hope, be entertained. I know we are on the wrong side of the fence, but it was not altogether our fault.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We pretty nearly got you in Trail.

Mr. ESLING: Never mind about Trail. The Minister of Health should not say anything at all in regard to votes. He managed to slip into his seat by a slim 275 votes, and if he is well advised he will slip into the senate at the first opportunity that offers.

Mr. BARBER: I feel sure the post office for Trail will appear in the supplementary estimates. I wish to congratulate the hon. member (Mr. Esling) on the case he has put up and I am sure the minister and the cabinet cannot very well turn down the Trail post office. There is one matter I want to refer to. Anyone who will casually glance over the estimates for public buildings in the province of British Columbia will be struck by this fact, that, outside the city of Vancouver, the amount for new buildings is just $29,000. It is quite apparent that British Columbia has been overlooked. We do not know whether it is because we are so far from the capital—some 3,000 miles distant—or whether it is because of the political complexion of the province. At any rate there is some reason for it. It seems to me that the Trail post office and applications for other public buildings in that province should be considered in the supplementary estimates. As I say, the amount for buildings in British Columbia, outside Vancouver, is $29,000, although we find in the votes the other day the sum of $30,000 allotted to cleaning up a site west of the post office in the city of Ottawa—$1,000 more than the sum given to the province of British Columbia for public buildings outside of Vancouver. Then we find, coming to Saskatchewan, in Prince Albert, with a population of 7,500 a vote of $95,000 for public buildings this year, making a total of $133,000 for public buildings in the district of Prince Albert.

The minister has said that it is the intention to provide accommodation, in certain towns and cities, sufficient to facilitate the carrying on of the various services. The other day we had a number of items for public buildings, in connection with which the postal revenue ranged from $2,000 up to $6,900, and I find that in the Fraser valley district it is twenty years since we have received a vote for any public building. I have here an application which was made to the government by the Mission City Board of Trade some time ago, directing attention to the fact that a lot had been purchased a number of years ago, in 1911 or 1912 I think, an amount having been voted for the construction of a building. That amount was subsequently revoted, but it disappeared, because of the conditions which existed during the war. Now the government apparently have undertaken to commence a program of construction throughout the Dominion, and certainly the people of these cities and towns in this district expected to receive consideration.

Mission City is the centre of one of our greatest fruit districts; the Minister of Health will bear me out when I say that it is one of the centres of the small fruit district of the Fraser valley, and has developed considerably in the last few years. The post office in that town is housed in a very small frame structure. The postal revenue is given by the Post Office department as $6,669.21, and in addition a rural route is served. A lot has been purchased, and as I have already said appropriations have been voted and revoted; the people of that district feel that they have waited patiently and that they are entitled to some consideration now that the government have commenced to provide buildings in such centres. Many other places with smaller revenues are receiving grants; I might mention the town of Wainwright, which has a postal revenue of about $5,000, and for which we have voted an amount to-night to provide for a public building. I would ask that the government and the minister consider the case of Mission City and see if something cannot be done.

Then there is the town of Abbotsford, which is one of the customs ports of entry. We all know that the customs commission recommended that many inland ports be closed, but it is certain that a port such as Abbotsford must be retained. The Board of Trade of that town took up this matter on July 19 in regard to accommodation for the post office and for the Customs department; they pointed out that three railways meet at that point, namely, the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Great Northern Railway and the British Columbia Electric Railway, and the revenue from customs imports and exports and the postal revenue has greatly increased during recent years. I believe the board of trade have already communicated with the minister in regard to this matter. Last year the customs revenue amounted to about $75,000 and the postal revenue to over $4,000, making a total of almost $80,000. It will be easy to realize the conditions which exist with regard to the Customs department when you consider that they pay only $185 a year for their accommodation, although the revenue amounts to about $75,000. This is a port which will remain; it is just on the border, and is in the centre of a rapidly growing district. This town should receive attention in the very near future, and I would ask the minister to take these facts into consideration. I must say the people in British Columbia are disappointed with the very small vote for public buildings in that province and we hope the government will consider the applications which have been made for public buildings and provide for them in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. NEILL: As a British Columbian I have listened with interest and pride to the description given by the hon. member for West Kootenay of the prosperity which exists in the city of Trail, but that is only one instance which might be duplicated in a score or more of cases throughout British Columbia. I could give examples on a smaller scale of half a dozen towns which have grown very rapidly in the last few years. This growth and prosperity should not be attributed to any one cause but rather to the general conditions which exist in British Columbia, and I am glad that the eastern members have learned that British Columbia is a growing community which needs attention and which requires to have money spent there. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat says that only $29,000 is being spent in British Columbia outside of Vancouver. Of course you can do anything with figures, but as I read them these estimates show that for public buildings in British Columbia we are voting some $243,262.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. BARBER: I said that sum was being spent for the construction of new public buildings outside of Vancouver.

Mr. NEILL: Surely the money for repairs is spent on the buildings.

Mr. BARBER: I was referring to the construction of new buildings.

Mr. NEILL: I am talking about all the buildings, and I do not think it would be a very wise policy to spend money on new buildings and not repair old buildings. I want to emphasize the fact that we are spending $243,262 on public buildings in British Columbia.

Mr. STEVENS: If my hon. friend will permit me, he is looking at the wrong column. The sum of $100,262 represents the appropriation not required, and there is a total of $311,000 provided for British Columbia.

Mr. NEILL: My natural modesty made me place the figure much lower. So we are spending $311,000 on public buildings in British Columbia, and not one cent of that amount is being spent in the district represented by the Minister of Health or in the district represented by myself. Hon. gentlemen opposite talk about the pork barrel in British Columbia but they will notice that the constituency represented by the cabinet minister from British Columbia and the constituency represented by myself are getting no benefits at all. In spite of that fact we find hon. gentlemen opposite getting up and doing the Oliver Twist act and asking for more.

Mr. BARBER: Not one cent is being spent in the district represented by the hon. member for West Kootenay nor in that represented by myself.

Mr. NEILL: At any rate, this amount is being spent in districts represented by Conservatives. Now I want to go back for a moment to the town of Trail and the glowing picture presented by the hon. member for West Kootenay. I do not believe he overdrew that picture, but certainly he dwelt on it with a great wealth of detail, missing only one thing. No doubt inadvertently, he omitted to tell the committee the cause of that prosperity, which was the action of this government some years ago in putting a bounty on copper rods manufactured in that town. As a result of that policy initiated in 1923, just the period to which he refers—

Mr. ESLING: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. NEILL: I have the floor at the present time.

Mr. ESLING: I rise to a point of order. In the first place, the hon. gentleman attributes our prosperity to the bounty which this government paid on copper rods.

Mr. NEILL: The hon. gentleman is making a speech.

Mr. ESLING: There has been no bounty paid on copper rods made in Trail.

Mr. NEILL: The house is in committee, and a point of order is not an opportunity for a speech.

Mr. ESLING: I object to that statement, Mr. Chairman. The hon. gentleman said that our prosperity was due to the bounty on copper rods. I say that that is a misstatement, and moreoever it is a ridiculous statement, because there has been only $270,000 paid by way of bounty on copper rods in the history of this government. Would that make a pay roll of $5,000,000?

Mr. NEILL: Do you wish to rule on the point of order, Mr. Chairman? I think we had better send for a microscope to see if we can find a point of order in his statement. The prosperity of Trail, so we were told in this house by the representative at the time, and his colleagues, was going to be materially increased by that copper rod bounty. It was unfavourably received at that time by many of the members in this house, but it passed and I think it was renewed again last year. If I am not mistaken, the period of the bounty coincides with the period the hon. member mentioned, when he said that in the last five years the population had gone up from 5,000 to 8,000. I think when he was dilating on the growth of prosperity, he should have at least mentioned that fact.

I just want to say, speaking more particularly to the members from British Columbia, that I do not begrudge these votes that are being passed for their districts. I know they are entitled to them, and I know they will be wisely and justly expended. I do not object to the fact that they are getting $311,000, but I would just suggest to them that, when there is some little wharf vote for the district of Comox-Alberni, in the supplementaries or elsewhere, to develop the trade of fishing or lumbering, they will take the same position I have, and admit that it is necessary for the development of our district and our province.

Mr. BRADY: As the government has renewed the lease on the Prince Rupert post office for five years, I suppose we cannot ask for a new post office, but I would like to point out the condition of our Dominion public building in Prince Rupert.

I would like to draw the attention of the committee to a few points, and I can illustrate what I am going to say by reference to the Prince Rupert post office. On February 13 I asked certain questions of the Postmaster General. Some of the questions I asked him were:

> What is the annual rental paid by the government for its lease of said building?
> When does the present lease expire?
> Has the lease recently been renewed, and if so, on what date?

The answers were as follows: It was leased for five years; rented on June 1, 1927, to terminate June 1, 1932, at a rental of $6,540. I also asked who recommended the renewal of the lease, and the answer given was:

> The various departments interested.

I endeavoured to find out who were the parties interested. I found that it was not the citizens of Prince Rupert as a body; it was not the board of trade representing the city of Prince Rupert, but it was confined to a very small section, and that section, undoubtedly, does not hold the views of the people of the city. I will leave it to the hon. members of this committee to know who recommended the renewal of that lease.

I wish to read a letter from the Prince Rupert board of trade, asking this government to do something towards meeting the requirements of that city. The letter is as follows:

> That as the building now leased at Prince Rupert for federal offices, such as customs, post office, government telegraphs, marine and fisheries, harbour master, excise department, Indian agent, etc., is hopelessly lacking in accommodation and is badly arranged, poorly ventilated and altogether unsuited for the occupancy of the Dominion government offices in this city; and as the rentals paid for these offices are sufficient to justify and provide for the erection of a suitable federal building upon the government's own property situate in a more central and convenient location: therefore, that representation should be made to the Dominion government, urging the immediate erection of a federal building in Prince Rupert, in keeping with the requirements of the city, and that the lease of the building now used be not renewed, except for such period as may be necessary for the completion of the new building.

I am now going back to the hon. Minister of Public Works, and will refer to his own statement, given in answer to one of the hon. members from the prairie provinces, as to why Saskatoon was given a vote of $150,000. The answer was not satisfactory to me, because it was not based, I thought, upon sound reason. Here is what the minister said:

> The reason why this vote was given to Saskatoon was on account of the increased trade and revenue.

And then, later on:

> Twenty years ago the revenue was $19,711, and in 1927 it was $280,943.

If that is the basis upon which the Minister of Public Works based this vote, I should like to draw his attention to the post office in Prince Rupert and give figures which may convince the committee that things are not dealt with in accordance with the facts. Here are the figures:

Fiscal Year	Customs Revenue
1922-23	$369,901 95
1923-24	481,431 08
1924-25	327,844 78
1925-26	491,451 04
1926-27	430,641 89

The average customs revenue for five years amounted to $420,317.69. Added to that, we find that the post office revenue for last year was $32,047.

We find that Vancouver is the first customs port in British Columbia; Victoria is the second; New Westminster the third; and Prince Rupert the fourth. In other words, Prince Rupert ranks fourth in the collection of revenue, and it ranks third in its shipping in and out of the port. In 1926-27, 2,278 seagoing vessels arrived at that port; and 2,428 departed; 4,786 coasting and inland vessels arrived, and 4,757 departed.

I wish to draw attention to this fact. The Minister of Public Works has explained how these items are put into the main and supplementary estimates. He tells us that the treasury board and later the cabinet decide exactly what items shall be retained, what shall be omitted and what shall be added. Consequently I am not going to blame the Minister of Public Works. But let me tell him and the committee a few facts regarding Prince Rupert post office. It was originally a gymnasium for the young men belonging to a local society. It never was and never has been intended for a public building. Furthermore it is unhygienic; secondly, it is hopelessly inadequate for the large amount of work that is carried on therein, and, thirdly, it is not in the centre of the city. It was placed in its present position—and I am sorry to say this in the house where men are supposed to be above common politics—for the good not of the city but of the member at that time. It is completely out of the way, on a side street; it is not meeting the requirements of the city trade and it is so hopelessly inadequate for the amount of work that is being carried on that last Christmas the postmaster issued a public notice begging the people to come to his aid in order to enable him and his staff to cope with the heavy amount of work. The condition of affairs last Christmas can be described as confusion and chaos. Christmas letters and Christmas parcels could not be delivered as they should. The staff was not to blame. Mail to the outlying islands did not reach their destination; in the hurry, excitement and hubbub where hundreds of thousands of letters were going into that wretched place, mail to the islands was often sent to wrong places. This information I had from people who have written to me.

I wish to say just this, because I believe it is for the good of all. These Dominion buildings are as important as parliament buildings, the reason being that in these federal buildings we carry on our customs and excise and other important business. They stand as the external proof of law and order and in our cities where federal work is being carried on, the buildings should teach the people that in them things are being conducted in a law abiding manner, meeting every requirement of public life. Surely a filthy, unsightly, wretched building is by no means in keeping with the work which a federal government should carry on. Second, the principles under which our Dominion buildings should be erected should not be actuated by political exigencies. They should be based on a sound and definite principle. Are they really needful? What requirements are to be met? If necessity be the basis on which public buildings should be erected and if the minister here to-night is able to tell us that Saskatoon is entitled to $150,000, merely because of a slight increase in its revenue, then I say that as intelligent people we have good reason to object to certain of these votes.

Therefore I say on behalf of the people of British Columbia and, indeed, every other province of Canada that the hour has come when any government in power should place its public works department completely out of the control of politics; there should be nothing of politics in it. Why should a former member of parliament be the final judge whether this or that building should be erected? Why should I have to come here and plead for something which it should be the duty of the Minister of Public Works to know is required? He has the machinery; he has his federal engineers in his own department to give him the facts. We waste endless time in connection with these matters and we get nowhere. I know what I say now will not get me a post office because there is a five-year lease in existence; but even if there were no five-year lease I do not believe my words would enable me to succeed in getting what I want. Nevertheless I know as well as I stand here that if the Minister of Public Works, the Prime Minister or any other member of the cabinet went and looked at that building, he would admit that it is unfit, not merely for carrying on federal work but for any man or woman to spend six or eight long hours therein.

For fifteen years I was presiding examiner for the Civil Service Commission. It was my duty to supervise the examinations and I shall never forget the comic-tragedy of the examination papers sent out by the Civil Service Commission for applicants for positions of janitors in the post office. I am sorry I have not a copy of these papers under my hand but I can get one. These unfortunate people, whose hours were spent in nothing more than a stable, with poor ventilation. with doors that would not open properly on their hinges, with a roof that could be blown off by an ordinary wind, were asked questions such as these. What method would you adopt in order to ventilate a post office? What are the various hygienic things that are essential for the cleansing and keeping in proper order of a Post office building? I sat down myself while three of those unfortunates were scratching their heads, wondering, and I said to myself: If these men get five per cent out of a hundred they are better men than I am. I am afraid they did not get that five per cent. I have just a simple question to ask. Are we to continue carrying along on the same old lines of tit for tat? Is it because in the past something was done, we shall do the same? Or is it possible, when we come to the important question of deciding how the money of this country shall be spent on public works, that they shall be spent where the money is needed, where it will do the most good and bring the greatest return?

Mr. FRASER: I am going to ask the Minister of Public Works some very pertinent questions along the same lines as my hon. friends have been asking. I note in the Auditor General's report under the British Columbia item which we are now considering, an item "Ashcroft public buildings". Is there in the item we are now considering an amount to provide for the brick veneering of the Ashcroft public building?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The Ashcroft public building is not included in the item that is now before the committee.

Mr. FRASER: Let me explain the situation as it was laid before me when I was on my way to Ottawa last January. This is a very good public building erected about eight or nine years ago. The building, however, was not completed. It was to have been brick veneered following its occupancy, but it has been occupied now for eight or nine years and no attempt has been made to veneer the building. The result is that the department is paying a good deal more than is necessary for the heating of the building in the winter time on account of the extra amount of fuel that is required, and in the summer the employees are hardly able to live in the place on account of the heat. As the minister knows, the temperature runs very high in Ashcroft in the summer, and the building is not sufficiently complete to make it habitable either in winter or in summer. I would ask the minister to look into the matter at the earliest possible opportunity and see that the building is completed so as to make it reasonably comfortable for the employees.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am very glad to assure my hon. friend that what he has just mentioned will receive consideration. I would also like to point out that out of the general vote for public buildings in Canada last year, $725 was expended on the public building in Ashcroft for general repairs.

Mr. FRASER: That was in 1927?

Mr. ELLIOTT: In 1927-28.

Mr. FRASER: Are you going to spend more money out of that vote this year to finish that building?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have not the data here of the general vote. We have not come to that yet.

Mr. FRASER: We can discuss it when we come to it.

Mr. ELLIOTT: When we come to the vote I shall have the details of how the money will be expended, and I have no doubt that Ashcroft will receive its fair proportion of the general expenditure for the province the same as it did last year.

Mr. FRASER: That was for the ordinary upkeep; it was not for veneering the building.

Mr. ELLIOTT: For general repairs.

Mr. FRASER: That is what I said. It was not for brick veneering the building. I want to ask a question in regard to the city of Kamloops, I find according to page V-66 of the Auditor General's report that you have two buildings in the city of Kamloops, Kamloops public building and the old Kamloops post office.

Mr. ELLIOTT: A new and a temporary building.

Mr. FRASER: But they are both used by different departments of the government. I find here an expenditure of $950 for coal for these two buildings. Can the minister tell me what was spent during 1927-28?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have not that information with me, but I shall be glad to get it for my hon. friend, if he wishes it.

Mr. FRASER: I should like to have it.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I see that $245.50 was spent on Kamloops post office, and $444.75 on what I take to be the temporary post office, in the Fremont block.

Mr. FRASER: But that was for the general upkeep of the building. The information I want to get is what amount of coal was used for these buildings during 1927-28, from whom it was purchased, and whether tenders were called for.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think my hon. friend can rely upon it that tenders were called for. As he readily understands, I do not carry in my head all the details, but I shall be glad to get that information for my hon. friend.

Mr. FRASER: I want to take up another question. For the last three years I have been asking for the construction of a post office building in the city of Prince George. Unfortunately I cannot go back twenty years to show the comparative revenues of the city, because twenty years ago the city was not in existence at all, but according to the latest report of the Post Office department the postal revenue of the city of Prince George is $11,522. I would like to ask if representations have been made to the minister for the construction of a new public building in the city of Prince George.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have not the list in front of me now, but I have no doubt that Prince George is in the list of 150 places for which applications have been made for public buildings. I think my hon. friend was referring a moment ago to the two post offices in Kamloops.

Mr. FRASER: Two public buildings.

Mr. ELLIOTT: One is referred to as new, and my information is that that is a building that was built in my hon. friend's constituency a few years ago at a cost of $78,000.

Mr. FRASER: Quite so; it was built in 1922.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I shall be glad to get the particulars of how much coal was used.

Mr. FRASER: And you are still using the old building that was in use before the new one was constructed. It was used by some of the departments, either the Department of the Interior or the Department of Customs, I think. Will the minister give me information in regard to the representations that have been made to him for a public building in Prince George. I think promises have been made to Prince George in regard to the construction of a new post office.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not think my hon. friend will suggest that any promises have been made by me.

Mr. FRASER: By the department for which the minister is responsible.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not think so.

Mr. FRASER: Has the minister any information in regard to the situation in Salmon Arm?

Mr. ELLIOTT: What situation? I do not recall that we have a public building in Salmon Arm.

Mr. FRASER: There is no public building there, but representations have been made, I understand to the government, for a public building.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have no doubt that is right.

Mr. FRASER: What representations have been made to the minister in that regard?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not carry them in my head, but I am satisfied that the same prosperity that has been spoken of by my hon. friend from West Kootenay and my hon. friend from Comox Alberni and my hon. friend from Skeena exists also in Salmon Arm, as it does throughout practically the whole country. From all parts of Canada we are hearing of the wonderful prosperity that exists and the progress that is taking place under the excellent administration of the present government, and nearly all these places are asking for public buildings if they have not received one in recent years.

Mr. GEARY: I wonder if the minister might be induced to confine himself to discussing the item under consideration.

Mr. FRASER: That is all very fine for the minister, but I want to tell him the position that I am in. I come to parliament and sit here for four or five months, and twenty minutes is all the time I have in which to get information from the minister in regard to these things, and when I ask him for it he tells me that he has not the information. This is the only opportunity I have to get the information. Now, what answer am I to get from the minister?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I would just like to ask my hon. friend, because I think he wants to be fair, if he has been here the length of time he says he has, and with the excellent ability which we all know he possesses, does he think he has been using it to the best advantage to come here and ask me what representations have been made in regard to a place that is not mentioned at all in any of the votes we are considering? Does he think that is quite fair?

Mr. FRASER: Where else am I to get the information?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Surely my hon. friend knows where to get it. He might follow the example of my hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. Gott) or some other hon. gentlemen on his side. There is an order paper—

Mr. GOTT: I should like to explain—

Mr. ELLIOTT: Questions are put on the order paper, and they have not been few so far as some sections have been concerned. He would get the information just as my hon. friend from South Essex has got it—I think the day after it was asked for.

Mr. GOTT: I should like to tell the minister why the member for South Essex had to put so many questions on the order paper.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GOTT: I hope it is not out of order to furnish information. The reason is that the man who holds the patronage in South Essex is so egotistical and self-centred that the good Liberals of the riding cannot get any information from him.

Mr. FRASER: I thought I was going to the proper place to get this information.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I shall be very glad to make a note of my hon. friend's request.

Mr. FRASER: Of course, when I put my question I thought the minister still had the list of places that were asking for post offices. I believe that my three points are on that list, and the minister has not got it. When can I have it?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is right on the desk in front of him. I sent it over to the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Boys).

Mr. BOYS: I may say to the minster that I have not had time to digest the list.

Mr. FRASER: There are three points, and they are all in exactly the same position as my hon. friend from British Columbia said.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I believe Salmon Arm is on that list.

Mr. FRASER: "Merritt public building, Salmon Arm public building." But the Prince George one is not on this list.

Mr. STEVENS: It got lost in the shuffle.

Mr. FRASER: I put some questions on the order paper a year ago about the Prince George building, and I know there has been a requisition for it. But here we have $45,000 for the city of Merritt. Its position is a little different from the other two that I have been speaking about. They are both in need of public buildings, especially Salmon Arm. Last March I placed a question on the order paper asking for the following information with regard to Merritt public buildings:

1. Did the government in 1911 purchase a double corner in the town of Merrit, B.C., for the purpose of erecting thereon a public building?

The answer was:

1. No, but a site on the northeast corner of Granite evenue and Voight street was purchased in 1913.

My second question was as follows:

2. Did the government in 1911, or subsequently, appropriate the sum of $24,000 for the construction of said building?

To which the minister answered:

2. No, but appropriations were granted as follows:

1911-12..	$ 5,000
1912-13..	10,000
1913-14..	20,000
1914-15..	25,000
1915-16..	25,000
1916-17..	25,000

We have heard a good deal about some of these appropriations being dropped from the order paper. I would point out that this building was considered necessary some twelve or fifteen years ago. The board of trade of Merritt has made representations for this new building. After waiting since 1911 I should think it was pretty nearly time that the government took into serious consideration the question of providing the town of Merritt with a suitable public building.

Item agreed to.

Vancouver—public building—amount required to meet one year's interest at 5 per cent on mortgage of $400,000—$20,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is this a mortgage on which the government is paying 5 per cent?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This building when purchased was known as the Winch building. It was situated on the northeast corner of Hastings street west and Howe street, and was purchased from A. J. Buttimer, of Vancouver, for $700,000, the old post office building on the southwest corner of Granville and Pender streets being taken as part payment at a valuation of $300,000. The remaining $400,000 is held by the Montreal Trust Company as a mortgage on the building, and this the government took over and is paying interest at the rate of 5 per cent specified in the mortgage. The $20,000 is required to meet one year's interest.

Mr. GARDINER: When is the mortgage due?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The mortgage is for five years from July 1, 1925, to June 29, 1930.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No doubt there is a clause in the mortgage permitting payment of the principal two or three years after the date of purchase.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Would it not be wise to borrow some of the money that the Minister of Finance can raise so easily at a low rate and pay off this mortgage?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It might be advisable.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Why has it not been done?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I want to be sure that it can be done. Not all mortgages contain the clause to which my hon. friend refers. I shall be glad to look into it, and if something along that line can be done I will suggest to the Minister of Finance that he furnish the money to discharge the mortgage.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Probably that is covered by provincial legislation, as in the province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. STEVENS: No, not in British Columbia.

Item agreed to.

Vancouver—public building—addition to site, $150,000.

Mr. STEVENS: Is this site being secured by expropriation; and is it the corner immediately adjoining the main post office?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It adjoins the main post office. Of course, like any other site, it can be acquired by expropriation.

Mr. STEVENS: What is the price to be paid?

Mr. ELLIOTT: There were some negotiations early in the summer, and when I was west last fall I looked the site over. The owners were asking about the prices that we have in the estimates. It looked to me a good price. It is unoccupied property, as I recall.

Mr. STEVENS: Is it to be acquired for the extension of the post office facilities?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, and for other public services, if we acquire the property. I think a tentative contract might have been entered into before this had it not been that after negotiations had been in progress for a certain length of time someone attempted to get an option on the property. The owners do not seem to be anxious to sell now at the $150,000.

Mr. STEVENS: It is a very reasonable price if you can get the property.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I thought so. I think it is a good price, and personally I would not feel like paying any more.

Item agreed to.

Douglas—site and building for immigration and customs excise purposes, $25,000.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Does the minister think this will provide sufficient accommodation at this point? The minister knows where this building will be on the new Pacific highway. It is one of the main ports of entry in British Columbia and very considerable motor traffic is handled there. It seems to me this is a rather small item. While the government is thinking about the matter it should provide ample accommodation at this particular point.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This will not cover the full expenditure by the time the work is through; it will probably run to about $40,000. We have to expropriate about fifteen acres. The point in question is on the international highway—

Mr. McQUARRIE: The Pacific highway.

Mr. ELLIOTT: —at a strategic point on the new Pacific highway. There has been a great increase in traffic, particularly, motor traffic, over the highway which has rendered it necessary for the departments of Immigration and National Revenue to provide accommodation for the examination of persons and baggage entering or leaving Canada. It is proposed to erect a frame building for the general use of these departments, at a cost estimated at between $40,000 and $43,000, depending upon the class of structure. The details have not been completed as to exactly what class of structure will be erected. It will also be necessary to procure fifteen acres of land from the Department of Indian Affairs owing to the fact that the highway will have to be diverted at this point.

Mr. McQUARRIE: This is not on the Pacific highway; it is on the new Pacific highway.

Mr. ELLIOTT: New Pacific highway, I said.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Has the minister received any suggestions as to improvements required there?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have no note of any.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I know the point very well and I know that automobile traffic there is very heavy, indeed much heavier than it is at the other point covered by the item. It seems to me the accommodation is quite inadequate and something should be done to improve conditions. The department has had the matter in hand, but I do not think it has been taken up at all seriously so as to meet the requirements.

Mr. LADNER: Are these expenditures, the details of which the minister has given, in connection with buildings at the new customs point where there stands the monument put up by the Honourable Sam Hill—

Mr. STEVENS: The peace arch.

Mr. LADNER: Yes, the peace arch put up by Sam Hill.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, that is the location.

Mr. LADNER: I support the views of my hon. friend (Mr. McQuarrie) as to the extent of the traffic on the road to which he has referred. There will always be a very considerable traffic there. I commend the minister on his undertaking the construction of buildings at or near the peace arch; it is the natural location. The condition on the Pacific highway—and the same remark might be applied to the other—is such that during rainy weather there are not many points where there is such an enormous traffic as there is just there. The traffic is lined up for a mile or so and there is great congestion. A great many conveniences are lacking, such as sheds into which cars might go; and even toilets and washrooms are needed. I suggest to the minister and his deputy that this is something that should receive consideration. I understand that requests have been made in this connection but have not yet been attended to.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Before we leave British Columbia buildings, may I ask the minister whether there has not been a recommendation for an addition to the New Westminster post office. I believe the minister was in New Westminster not long ago when he looked over the situation. The floor space is altogether inadequate, as there has been a large increase in the amount of business in that office. Besides taking care of the postal business of the city, the office is a distributing centre for a large district and at the present time it is almost impossible for it to carry on business in a satisfactory way. I know the minister has heard this story a good many times in connection with other places, but it does seem to me that New Westminster should be attended to, particularly in view of the fact that the Post Office department, as I believe, has recommended that this addition is urgently and immediately required. The Postmaster General visited New Westminster himself not long ago, and if the Minister of Public Works would confer with him I am sure he would be told that this is really a case of urgent necessity.

Mr. ELLIOTT: An application is on our list for an addition to the New Westminster building, the addition to cost $80,000. It is quite in line with a number of other places that have made a similar request.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I believe it has been recommended by the Post Office department to the Department of Public Works—

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have no doubt that is correct.

Mr. McQUARRIE: —for immediate construction.

Mr. ELLIOTT: A large number of places have been recommended for consideration. I agree with my hon. friends in regard to the traffic. Our records show that for the year ended July 31, 1927, something over 850,000 persons crossed the boundary at this point. That means between two and three thousand persons a day.

Mr. LADNER: In the course of time a good deal of that traffic will go by the peace arch.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. LADNER: There is a new road being built in that direction. The government has taken the right course in making these improvements, but it should not forget the other, because at present there is great inconvenience to tourists from California, Washington and Oregon, travelling north and south.

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is a greater accommodation for the travelling public at this point.

Item agreed to.

Generally

Experimental farms — replacements, repairs, improvements, etc., $100,000; Flags for Dominion public buildings, $5,000; Installation of fuel saving devices, $10,000; Military buildings—repairs, fittings, alterations and additions, $50,000; Military hospitals—repairs and improvements, $79,000; Public buildings—generally, $45,000.

Mr. TOLMIE: As there will not be another opportunity to refer to experimental farms I should like to again call the attention of the government to the importance of establishing an experimental farm in that great empire, northern British Columbia, a section of country very rich in natural resources, ideal for the production of live stock, excellent for dairying and good for all kinds of general farming. When I had the honour of occupying the position of Minister of Agriculture a favourable report was made by some of the experts of the department with regard to the necessity of placing an experimental farm in that section. With such a farm it would be possible to demonstrate quite clearly both to prospective settlers and to those already on the ground the opportunities of that great region, and in addition it would be a good point from which to carry on the distribution of live stock of improved quality. This is particularly necessary now because of the fact that the distribution of pure-bred sires, which was carried on for a number of years, has been suspended, and I sincerely hope the government will keep that section of the country in mind. I have travelled over a good part of it and can speak from experience. The prospects there are excellent indeed, and with a little encouragement and by opening up the country excellent results will be obtained.

Having brought this matter to the attention of the government, before taking my seat I would like to say one word about the prosperity of British Columbia in the line of mining, and to what that prosperity may be attributed. In the first place, we cannot mine without ore; certainly the ore was not placed in the ground by any Liberal government but by the Creator, and we who live in British Columbia are very thankful that it is there. For a long time a good deal of this ore, which was low grade, could not be mined successfully and put through the various processes of refining at a profit, but the oil flotation system was discovered only a few years ago and this put an end to that trouble. The big Sullivan mine, located in the Crowsnest region, was offered for sale to a prominent mining man in that country for $10,000 and he would not look at it. To-day that mine is turning out 4,000 tons of ore a day; it is being worked at a splendid profit and is one of the chief sources of supply for the smelters at Trail. That is also true of many other sections of the country; old mines which were abandoned years ago before the discovery of the present system of refining are now being opened up and are becoming quite prosperous. This prosperity extends over practically the entire province; it is not due to any Liberal administration but rather to the discovery of the ore and the methods through the use of which it is now possible to refine these ores at a profit.

Mr. BROWN: Would the hon. member suggest that we cancel the bounty on copper rods?

Mr. TOLMIE: I said all I wanted to say when I was on my feet; I do not propose to receive any suggestions from my hon. friend.

Mr. BRADY: I would like to direct just one word to the Minister of Agriculture. The experimental farm for central and northern British Columbia which has been advocated by the hon. member for Victoria is really something which should appeal to the house at this time when the question of immigration is so much discussed and when solutions are being sought for the difficulties which have arisen in agriculture and dairying throughout Canada. Central and northern British Columbia, as you all know, is an immense empire in itself, and never has had the privileges or the opportunities which other more fortunate parts of British Columbia have enjoyed in the matter of experimental farms. If the government really believe in the efficacy of experimental farms, which I believe they do, and knowing as they do the impetus given all branches of agriculture by the establishment of these farms, surely they should extend that system to northern and central British Columbia. The people of that great area have wonderful opportunities but they lack the scientific requirements which are essential in these modern days. I do not think anyone should have to direct the attention of the government to a matter of such importance. The Irish Free State—and I do not know why I bring this up, except that I read it lately—are adopting a splendid, up-to-date and progressive agricultural policy. Denmark is doing the same thing, realizing that the one way to keep their young men on the farms is to give them that scientific training and education in agricultural and dairying activities which is really essential. Therefore I trust that this government will seriously consider the advisability of adding to their existing experimental farms throughout Canada one more farm in this wonderful area, which will prove of great benefit in developing agricultural and dairying activities in a part of British Columbia admirably adapted for these industries.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Will the Minister of Public Works explain the items of this expenditure? What is it all about?

Mr. ELLIOTT: As my hon. friend can see from the estimates, a similar amount was voted last year. This is required for replacements, improvements, alterations, repairs and so on in connection with the several experimental farms and stations throughout the Dominion, requested by the Deputy Minister of the Department of Agriculture in a letter dated November 30, 1927.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Does this include any new buildings?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I see nothing here which leads me to believe that it includes new buildings.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Can the minister give me the amount which will be expended on each farm?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes: Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, $38,030; branch farms, $61,970. Those are the only two items.

Mr. BOYS: The other night when these estimates were under consideration I asked the minister if he could supply a list of the applications for public buildings throughout Canada, and he was kind enough to say that he could. To-night that list has been handed to me; I have it here, and I observe that the total number of buildings requested is 150, with a total estimated cost of $12,700,000. I understand that this list shows all the applications which have been under consideration, but which up to the present have not been granted by the department; they are still pending, but will not be granted this year.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I would not say that; it may be that some will be included in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. BOYS: Then I will say that most of them will not be granted this year, and at all events the supplementaries will show which of these items are taken care of.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Perhaps if my hon. friend would permit me, we might refer back to the item which was allowed to stand until this information was furnished.

Mr. BOYS: After we get through with this resolution?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Whatever meets the convenience of my hon. friend.

Mr. BOYS: I would like to say what I have in mind first. I want to make some remarks with regard to this matter, but I am not in a position to do so to-night; I wish first to obtain some further information.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend may not think that that list was prepared very hurriedly, but it was. In view of the returns in various branches which we have found it necessary to prepare, in the last couple of days, to say nothing of the preparation of the supplementary estimates, we perhaps have not been able to give it the necessary time. I have not looked over it very carefully myself, but that is tentatively a list that I would say is fairly accurate.

Mr. BOYS: You might put "E. & O.E." on the bottom of it, and make it all right. I notice that there are some items which are not even carried out. I was not after an accurate list; I simply wanted a general statement which would give some indication of the situation. It is fairly long, and I am quite sure it would be interesting to many members in the house. I suppose it would take twenty or thirty minutes to read it, and if there is no objection I would ask that I might hand it in and let it be printed. If we do that we save the time of the committee, and the information would then appear in Hansard.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is quite agreeable to me, but I should like to have the opportunity of going over it again before it is printed. I thought my hon. friend would want to refer to it to-night while the estimates were under consideration. I should like to go over it with my hon. friend before that is done.

Mr. BOYS: Perhaps at this juncture I had better hand it back to the minister to give him an opportunity of checking it.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If the hon. member has any remarks to make I should be glad to have them now.

Mr. BOYS: I did not expect to get the list to-night, and I have not the information that I would need to make the remarks. I would prefer to give it back, and have it checked over and corrected. Then, at a later date I can read it if necessary, or have it put on Hansard.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend can keep it for his own purposes, and I will use the copy.

Mr. FRASER: Let me clear up one question. I notice there is an item in this list for the city of Salmon Arm, covering a building for the forestry branch, Department of the Interior, $6,500. Do I understand from the minister that that is the only item there is for the city of Salmon Arm? I understand that there is a requisition in the department for a public building for general purposes. The idea I gathered in the city of Salmon Arm was that they were going to use the one building for postal, customs and fisheries purposes, as well as for the Department of the Interior.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I cannot give you the details, but the amount of $6,500 cannot be intended to cover any other service of any great extent.

Mr. FRASER: Your interpretation of it would be that it would only cover the Department of the Interior?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It would look that way to me.

Item agreed to.

Flags for Dominion public buildings, $5,000.

Mr. COOTE: Will these be Canadian flags?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Is my hon. friend serious?

Mr. COOTE: We heard something a year or two ago about establishing a distinctly Canadian flag. I wonder whether any progress is being made on that, and if we are going to have a Canadian flag.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The flags referred to here will be union jacks.

Mr. COOTE: Is the government considering the adoption of a new Canadian flag?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Item agreed to.

Installation of fuel saving devices, $10,000.

Mr. CANTLEY: What type of fuel-saving devices are these, and where are they to be installed?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is what is called the Burnhall fuel-saving device. It is a Canadian product, made in the town of Peterborough. I am advised by the officials of the department, who have made a study of it, that it has given good satisfaction, and has made a very substantial saving. I have a statement here which might be of interest to the house, made by, I think, a former member of this house for the county of Wentworth. This letter was written on March 10, 1924, and is in the way of a testimonial. It rather appealed to the department, because I see that they have it here in the data that has been supplied to me. It reads as follows:

I have your bill for the two Burnhall fuel savers, and enclose herewith cheque for the amount.

These have given us the utmost satisfaction. Our furnace man, who is a very reliable young man, assures us that there is a saving of approximately 25 per cent in the amount of coal used and we are satisfied that, with whatever amount of coal he uses, the house is kept at from three to five degrees warmer. He tells us that the thermometer on the furnace shows continually from ten to fifteen degrees greater heat in the water.

I note that you guarantee this device for ten years, and that it will never be too much trouble for your engineer to call and explain anything, or to fix anything that might by any chance go wrong, which seems impossible, as the device is very simple.

That letter was signed by Mr. E. D. Smith, of Winona. I think it is a good device and a good investment.

Mr. CANTLEY: Will the minister tell us what kind of fuel this device burns?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Ordinary soft coal.

Mr. CANTLEY: Soft coal screenings?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Lump coal.

[Mr. Elliott.]

Mr. CANTLEY: At what points are you going to install it?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I could give you, in a general way, the buildings in which we have installed it for a number of years. In 1922-23 we installed it at Barrie, Belleville, Brockville, Cobourg, Guelph, Lakefield, Lindsay, Milverton, Newmarket, and several other places. In 1923-24 we installed it at Montreal, a number of buildings in Ottawa, Aylmer, Amherstburg, Aurora, Bracebridge, Bowmanville, Carleton Place, Chatham, Deseronto, and so on. In 1924-25, at Hull, Ottawa experimental farm, in a number of buildings, St. Catharines, Niagara Falls, Bridgeburg, Dundas, Paris, Burford, Simcoe, Elmira, Elora, and so on.

Mr. CANTLEY: I understand from the minister that it is purely a device for heating buildings?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. CANTLEY: Is it an American or a Canadian invention?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Canadian.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Has the minister made any experiments in connection with smoke-consuming devices? This city of Ottawa is a very dirty city so far as the atmosphere is concerned, and it would seem advisable, when we are talking about the beautification of the city, that the government, with all the buildings that it has here, should endeavour to do something in the way of taking care of the smoke from the various chimneys. Is anything being done along that line?

Mr. ELLIOTT: We have what are known as automatic stokers in a number of our largest buildings. They are smoke consumers, more or less; that is, they eliminate a good deal of the smoke.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I may be able to offer to the Minister of Public Works a suggestion that will enable him to get rid of the smoke nuisance of which my hon. friend speaks. If the government would take advantage of the excellent rate on coal from Alberta to Ottawa and use that coal in their public buildings, they would have very little, if any, smoke or soot. They would also be doing a very patriotic act in that they would be helping to get a market for Alberta coal definitely established, at least in Ottawa.

Mr. CANTLEY: I can give the minister a very much better suggestion, namely, that he should use Nova Scotia coke and then he would have no smoke at all.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I know my hon. friend will be glad to hear that we are using it.

Mr. CANTLEY: I hope the minister will extend the use of it.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the cost of these fuel savers?

Mr. ELLIOTT: They vary according to the size of the building. The prices generally are as follows:

Barrie	$342
Belleville	346
Brockville	489
Lindsay	575
Milverton	375
Peterborough	285
Trenton	293

Item agreed to.

Public buildings generally, $45,000.

Mr. EVANS: Before six o'clock I was promised an opportunity under this item of bringing before the minister the question of the urgency of a public building in the town of Biggar. I was assured last year that it would have very sympathetic consideration and the Postmaster General went so far as to get a report. I was in hopes that this year, owing to the urgency of the case, an item for the erection of this building would be included in the estimates. A post office official in Saskatoon assured me that there was no other place he knew of where there was such urgency as in Biggar for the erection of a public building. Biggar is a growing town with a population now of nearly 3,000, and it is almost impossible to rent a suitable building. It is a railway centre with the two main lines of the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National and also lines running north and south. It is a divisional point and the railways have established repair shops there. Comparing the revenue from this office with the revenues of other places where the government have considered it necessary to make appropriations for the erection of public buildings, I find the figures are as follows:

Town	Revenue
Tisdale	$6,957
Durham	5,683
Rockland	2,412
Wainwright	5,957

The post office alone at Biggar has a revenue of nearly $9,000. This shows the importance of the place. It commands a wide district.

Mr. ELLIOTT: What has been the increase in population, say in the last ten years, or has there been any?

Mr. EVANS: I do not know what the increase has been, but the population at present is upwards of 2,800. I want to impress upon the minister who, I believe, knows something of the district himself—

Mr. ELLIOTT: I know it well.

Mr. EVANS: —that it is impossible to rent a suitable building. There is not room even for the boxes that are needed and the fire hazard is tremendous. I hope the government will see fit to increase the supplementatry estimates sufficiently to include an item for a public building in Biggar because it is an urgent case.

Mr. SHORT: The other day when the minister was putting through his items for New Brunswick a considerable discussion took place and the matter was left over. He said that we could discuss public buildings generally when this item came up. You can talk all day about public buildings in the west, in Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Alberta, British Columbia—

Mr. ELLIOTT: May I interrupt my hon. friend for a moment? He is referring to St. Stephen?

Mr. SHORT: Yes, but the minister said that when this item came up we could discuss public buildings generally; that we could take in the whole country.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Unfortunately my hon. friends did not accept the suggestion and the item was left over. I suggest that we revert to it.

Mr. SHORT: The minister will not revert to the New Brunswick item to-night because there are not many members from that province present.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Perhaps my hon. friend will defer his discussion.

Mr. SHORT: The other day the minister stated that when this item came up we could discuss public buildings generally. The minister has made appropriations very generously for the west and I want to call his attention to the fact that in Nova Scotia, outside of the city of Halifax, only $14,500 is appropriated for public buildings. Does he think that is a fair proportion to be allotted for public buildings in Nova Scotia? Why is it that Ontario, Quebec and particularly Saskatchewan have been so liberally looked after in the way of public buildings and Nova Scotia completely neglected? A public building is urgently required in Bridgetown in the constituency which I have the honour to represent. This matter was brought to the minister's attention last year; in fact, it has been brought to his attention since 1925. They evidently thought the matter was urgent then because a site was purchased for that building. The Liberal candidate in 1925 and 1926 promised that if he was elected a public building would be erected there. I want to know what the policy of the government is? Are they going to erect buildings only in those constituencies that are represented by their Liberal friends?

Mr. SMITH (Stormont): Yes.

Mr. SHORT: Is that the policy—to the victor belong the spoils? I want to tell my hon. friend that that day has gone by. People are not living in the past. We on this side of the house are just as much entitled to appropriations as my hon. friends opposite are and we are going to get them; otherwise we are going to hold up some of these other items or at least criticize them. I should like to know what the disposition of the minister is with respect to the Bridgetown post office. The minister's predecessor, the present Minister of Health (Mr. King), when Minister of Public Works, made the statement when his estimates were before the committee that he had visited Bridgetown and that the post office there was a perfect disgrace, and so it is. The postal revenue is $6,600, and the customs revenue $10,800. We have not a public building of any kind. It is nothing but a shack, practically, that the post office is in; it is a disgrace to the community. The government is making liberal appropriations for other parts of the country, and I do hope that the minister will consider the application from Bridgetown and that an item will be placed in the supplementary estimates to provide for a public building there.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I see it is in the list that we have, a public building at an estimated cost of $36,000.

Mr. SHORT: Will an item for that amount be included in the supplementaries?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I would have to consult the treasury board and council.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): Has the minister in that list an application for a post office in Oxford, in the county of Cumberland, Nova Scotia?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, but not for quite such a good post office. The estimated cost is $35,000.

[Mr. Short.]

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): That is good enough if you will give us the building.

Mr. EVANS: Has the minister received representations from the town of Biggar? I think he is impressed with the urgency of the case, and I should like to know if an item will be included in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I see that a public building for Biggar is included in the list, at an estimated cost of $30,000. I have spent a good deal of time in that district and know the town of Biggar well. I do not think it is one of those towns that are growing rapidly, but as I recollect the figures it has a fairly healthy growth. Some time ago I went over some of the requests that had been made. I think the board of trade has sent in a request with regard to Biggar within the last six months, and I can assure my hon. friend that it will not be forgotten.

Mr. SHORT: I understand that the list which the minister has compiled contains about 150 applications.

Mr. ELLIOTT: To be accurate, 154.

Mr. SHORT: And that the total cost is $12,700,000. I suggest to the minister, in view of the spending government that we have and the generous treatment that is being accorded to Ottawa—I see items here for Ottawa totalling about $8,000,000—the minister might well appropriate $12,700,000 for public buildings that are urgently needed for these 154 places all over the country, and then everybody would be happy.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Of course there are a lot more than 150 places in the Dominion.

Mr. SHORT: Well, then next year you would have another list of 150.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is just the point I was going to make.

Mr. LUCAS: Is Camrose on that list?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. LUCAS: What is the estimated cost?

Mr. ELLIOTT: $52,000.

Mr. STEVENS: That is in cold storage.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is a cold locality.

Mr. LUCAS: No, quite the contrary. The very name indicates that it is the rose garden of the west.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): Has the minister the town of New Waterford on that list?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, there is no doubt about that.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): Did the minister say he was going to do something for New Waterford? Last year two delegations came up here from that town, and they had the assistance of the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough. New Waterford is an incorporated town of from eight to ten thousand people, with a town council and board of trade, and all civic improvements, such as sidewalks, sewers and so forth, and five or six large schools. The post office is only about twelve by twenty, and it is not even on the front street, but is in the back part of the building and is entirely too small for the business that is done there. There is a postal revenue of about $6,000 and a customs revenue of about the same amount. Urgent representations have been made to the minister in this regard, and I would ask if there is any possibility of the government considering the application favourably and of an item being included in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I would not hold out a great deal of hope to my hon. friend for an item in the supplementary estimates. So far as my information goes, I cannot see that New Waterford is in any more fortunate position than a great many other places on this list, and from what I know of the gentlemen that I have to get past with the supplementary estimates, I would not think that there will be a large list.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): With all deference to the minister, I think the house should be given some idea of the system upon which these grants are made. Last year we had a vote of $16,000 for a post office at Kensington, and this year there have been three or four votes of from $20,000 to $30,000 for small towns in the province of Quebec that are perhaps only one-fifth the size of New Waterford. There must be some method by which the minister can be approached, and I was wondering whether it was the physical size of the members who represent these constituencies. I see that my hon. friend from Melfort got a vote through, also the hon. member for Princeton, who is a very large man. Are physical threats necessary to get a vote?

Mr. ELLIOTT: If size or good looks have anything to do with it, my hon. friend will stand an excellent chance.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): That is very pleasant indeed, but I would rather take home some assurance that the minister will consider favourably the application of New Waterford.

Mr. GEARY: What are the details of the $45,000?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This vote is required for items of expenditure which have to be met every year in connection with public buildings controlled by the Dominion government, together with such special outlays for works as cannot be charged against any other of the general appropriations made by parliament for prospective improvements in the several provinces.

Mr. CANTLEY: I would like to refer again to the question of public buildings in Nova Scotia. The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis in referring to the vote for Nova Scotia was over generous. The total amount for Nova Scotia, as given on page 31 of the estimates, outside of the government buildings in Halifax, is $7,500. In the list which the minister was good enough to give to my hon. friend, the total number of buildings is ten, and the total estimated cost, $127,000—a mere bagatelle as compared with votes for public buildings in many other sections of the country. To refresh the minister's memory in regard to the alterations and repairs to the public building in New Glasgow, let me say that we have a postal revenue of practically $3,000 a month or $36,000 a year. We have customs and excise of about a quarter of a million dollars a year. That building is certainly nearly fifty years old. The minister is thoroughly familiar with the whole situation. Will he be good enough to tell me what he is going to do about it?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Nothing has been decided for this year.

Mr. CANTLEY: That is not very satisfactory. We went over this whole question last year. I think the minister made me a promise with regard to it at that time. Is he disposed to fulfil his undertaking?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I will certainly fulfil anything I said to my hon. friend or to anybody else. But I am not going to put myself in the position—of having him come back and say that I made him a promise and did not keep it. He got pretty close to that last year—

Mr. CANTLEY: Yes, he did.

Mr. ELLIOTT: —and is just bordering on it again. I am as near it as I intend to be at the present time.

Mr. CANTLEY: Instead of just bordering on it again the minister is sliding away from it again.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, I am quite as near it as I ever was with my hon. friend.

Mr. CANTLEY: He is flirting with it.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, I never do that.

Mr. CANTLEY: Possibly the minister might be better off if he had done a little flirting and then decided on the date. But I should like to get an assurance that he is going to make the alterations in that building that he knows, that his deputy knows, and that the postal department knows are absolutely necessary and have been for some years. I am quite sure he will admit that he has in his department letters from the postal department calling attention to the conditions and stating that they are disgraceful, and that in the public interest the building ought to be remodelled. A year ago the plans for the alterations and addition to the building were revised and the cost very materially reduced, and I understood from him last session that this year the matter would be attended to. Now I ask him to carry out what I understood to be a virtual promise in that connection. I want some assurance.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I know my hon. friend is quite sincere when he says he wants some assurance.

Mr. CANTLEY: "Sincere" does not measure up the situation at all. I am in earnest, I want it, and I expect him to give it to me.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I quite admit he has been in earnest; he has been any time he spoke to me about it. And the other 149 gentlemen who have asked for the balance of this list are also in earnest. There is no doubt about their sincerity or mine, but what will be done this year or next year is more than I can promise, because if I promise my hon. friend definitely—

Mr. CANTLEY: Your troubles would end right away.

Mr. ELLIOTT: They would! My good friend from Rosetown (Mr. Evans) would think that he was entitled to a promise, and he would be if my hon. friend in this quarter was, and knowing something of human nature I have not any doubt that every hon. gentleman representing a riding mentioned in this list—which I was unfortunate enough to give to my genial friend from North Simcoe—would want similar assurances.

Mr. CANTLEY: I am very sorry the minister makes any reflection on my sincerity or his own.

[Mr. Cantley.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: Will my hon. friend permit me? I disclaim making any reflection whatever on my hon. friend's sincerity in any respect, and especially in respect to this particular public building. No man ever was more sincere.

Mr. CANTLEY: Thank you.

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is no doubt about that. Perhaps my hon. friend from Skeena (Mr. Brady) is in the same class. But I have no doubt about the sincerity of any hon. gentlemen who have asked for buildings, and I hope they will give me credit for equal sincerity in connection with the matter.

Mr. CANTLEY: Mr. Chairman, I am not asking for a building. All I am asking for is to have a patch put on a building. The matter of sincerity was raised by the minister. He disclaims referring to my sincerity. I hope he did not refer to his own.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. SINCLAIR (North Wellington): I wish to call the attention of the minister to the flag over the post office at Harriston, my home town. The last time I was home it was at half mast and all in ribbons. I now ask him to send along a flag for the building. This is the first time this session that I have asked him for anything.

Mr. STEVENS: Send the flag along.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): While we are on this item I wish to refer to one or two matters in connection with these votes, some of which have been passed. In considering the generosity, I might say the enormity of many of the votes which have been passed, I think we in the eastern end of the Dominion must conclude that we are getting really the pin point, not the pinhead. In anything I say I do not wish to create a feeling of jealousy between provinces and districts, but let me call the attention of the committee to the fact that during the last two or three days I find with respect to Ottawa that instead of nearly five million dollars having been voted, as was stated a few days ago, the total is ten million dollars, and this does not include several small items which might reasonably come under that head. I take vote 127, and there I find for Ottawa a total of $3,220,000 odd.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend will find that vote 127 in the aggregate is only $1,200,940—a great difference.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): I should have said $382,000. Then I take vote 132, and I estimate the proportion of that applicable to Ottawa is $96,000—a third of the whole.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is only $38,000.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): Very well, we will cut that down, but I do not know how you arrive at your figure. I take it that the experimental farm—

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is the part of the experimental farm vote that will be spent in Ottawa.

Mr. STEVENS: Where is the $60,000 being spent?

Mr. ELLIOTT: On branch farms outside of Ottawa.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): Then I go on to 133 and I find in the first dozen items, down to and including telephone service, the sum of $1,854,500 expended in Ottawa. That does not include rentals, which total $1,565,000, over $700,000 of which is spent in Ottawa. I am not estimating at all the salaries of caretakers and all that sort of thing. With the exception of the last two, a certain proportion of all these items must be fairly chargeable to the vote for Ottawa, but I am not including any of them. Then I come to another item, 121, $1,380,000 for Ottawa alone. Item 145 is a small item, it is true, $14,600; and as regards item 144, there is a dredge at work in the canal digging out what was put in in the winter time.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is not under public works.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): In item 150 we find, for the National Gallery of Canada, $135,000, and for the national monument on Connaught place $35,000. During the hot weather in the summer it will be pretty nice walking around on the hot tar looking at that monument, instead of walking on a green plot, won't it? Then we come to the $3,000,000 to the federal improvement commission; and there is $200,000 annually to that organization. For the New Edinburgh mills there is the sum of $525,000 and $100,000 for repairs. Under item 232, observatories at Ottawa, we have an expenditure of $75,000 as against $59,000 last year. So that adding all these figures together, you have practically $9,000,000. That does not include any expenditure in connection with the Rideau canal; I could not locate what had been allocated to that. I understand, further, that there is an expenditure of $4,000,000 in connection with the Chateau Laurier. That means, over $13,000,000 spent in Ottawa by this government. But what do we find in regard to Nova Scotia? In the estimates little Nova Scotia gets, for buildings, $84,500, while you are expending $13,000,000 in Ottawa. What justice is there in such a condition of things as that? What justification is there for it? I will not refer to national parks. Suffice it to say that out of $1,300,000 odd in the estimates for national parks we had an expenditure last year or the year before in what might be called a national park, inasmuch as it is owned by the Dominion, of $1,800, and a small expenditure in Annapolis for a fortification. That perhaps does not come under this vote. But this is the way that we in the east have been treated, not only by this government but by previous governments as well. When we apply for a small grant it is not given us.

I must protest most vigorously against the neglect shown the maritime provinces and particularly Nova Scotia in relation to these votes from year to year. We are contributing our full quota and we are not getting half of what we pay. I may be told by some hon. gentlemen, "Look at your breakwaters, wharves and so on". But my reply would be: Are there none in Quebec and Ontario and in the Pacific province of British Columbia and elsewhere throughout the Dominion? Look at the estimates and you will find $2,000,000 for breakwaters in Quebec, while we in Nova Scotia receive less than $500,000, a quarter of what they get in Quebec. I could spend an hour referring to these discrepancies which appear in this blue book, the official publication of the government, but I have said enough to call the attention of the government to the injustice and I hope that some consideration will be given us in Nova Scotia, if not in the supplementary estimates then in another year.

Item agreed to.

Mr. ELLIOTT: We have only a minute or two left but perhaps we might consider Saskatoon, in regard to which I gave an hon. member a memorandum with reference to the public building site there. We might clear that up.

Mr. STEVENS: Let that stand.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Very well; I do not want to insist. The same applies to St. Stephen. The hon. member is here who asked for information as to why a contract was not let.

Progress reported.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Ninth report of the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.—Mr. Parent.

TOBACCO GROWING INDUSTRY

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I desire to lay on the table the report of the tobacco commission. This report will not be ready for general distribution from the King's Printer for possibly two or three weeks, owing to the large number of similar orders on hand.

CIVIL SERVICE

HOUSE OF COMMONS STAFF CLASSIFICATION

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture) moved:

That the reports laid on the table of the house on the 9th of May instant in respect of the House of Commons staff be approved.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Elliott.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PENDING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): In view of the fact that there are only four or five government measures remaining on the order paper, I would like to ask if any more legislation is to be brought down this session by the government, or does the order paper cover all proposed legislation?

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Yes, except what may be necessary as a result of committee reports.

PRISON REFORM

PRODUCTIVE WORK AND COMPENSATION FOR INMATES OF PENITENTIARIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CHURCH: I would like to ask the minister if anything is being done to carry out the resolution of last session, to pay the wives and children of the inmates of penal institutions in Canada, for the work of the inmates.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not recall the resolution of last session, but if my hon. friend will give me a memorandum I will have it looked up and give him a reply early in the week.

Mr. CHURCH: Will there be anything done in a concrete form to give effect to this resolution this session?

INTERNATIONAL PEACE TREATY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. B. ADSHEAD (East Calgary): As the Prime Minister is not in his place today, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice a question, based upon a press report this morning which states that the government of Great Britain is awaiting the assent of the dominions to signing the treaty which Mr. Kellogg, the United States Secretary of State, proposed some time ago. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice if he has received such a request from the British government, and if so, if he could give the house information as to the answer?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am sorry the Prime Minister could not be present this afternoon. I can only say to my hon. friend that communications are being exchanged between the British government and this government, with regard to the matter he has mentioned. All I am at liberty to say is that any move towards the establishment of peace cannot but be considered favourably by this government.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

SHERBROOKE—PORTLAND BRANCH LINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. T. MacNUTT (Colchester): I would like to direct the attention of the hon. the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Dunning) to a press despatch from Portland, Me., published in the Saint John Telegraph-Journal, which reads as follows:

This city is buzzing with excitement over the present development of plans of the Canadian Pacific Railway to make Portland its winter port by taking over from the Canadian National its subsidiary from Sherbrooke, Que. to the city and the local terminal and docks.

Those interested in the great project for Portland openly declare that plans have been and are being made by the Canadian Pacific Railway to bring a fleet of its ships to Portland as a terminal, at least during the months when the St. Lawrence is frozen, the ports of Montreal and Quebec are closed to shipping and the only other Canadian ports open are Halifax and St. John.

Would the Minister of Railways state if any applications, or representations, have been made by the Canadian Pacific Railway, or others, for the granting of running rights over this foreign system?

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): I answered a question on May 9th, bearing upon the matter, and which indicates that there is nothing in the report in question, so far as the Canadian National is concerned. I will look up the answer to the question and let my hon. friend have it.

OUTBREAK OF RABIES IN ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac-Addington): I would like to ask the Minister of Health if representations have been made to his department by the Department of Health of the province of Ontario, suggesting the advisability of a strict quarantine against dogs coming into Canada from the United States, and if the federal Department of Health has taken or intends to take any steps along the line of strict quarantine against American dogs?

Hon. JAMES H. KING (Minister of Health): I have no knowledge of any representation having been made. If it is quarantine against animals, I would think the representations would be made to the Department of Agriculture.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Public works chargeable to income—Ottawa public buildings and grounds — Dominion Observatory and Geodetic Survey building—repairs, improvements, maintenance of grounds, etc., $4,000.

Mr. SPENCER: How much of this was spent last year?

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): $3,999.

Item agreed to.

Departments generally—char service including $100 to E. Snowden for firing the noon gun, $385,000.

Mr. SPENCER: The item of $100 for firing the noon gun is a small one, but now that we have the clock in the tower which gives the time regularly, I was wondering whether there was any necessity for continuing to fire the gun.

Mr. ELLIOTT: There are many people who are able to hear the gun when they cannot see the clock in the tower.

Mr. CHURCH: I should like to see the charwomen get an increase in pay from $1.25 a day. Many of them are widows with young children dependent upon them and they should have a little better pay.

Item agreed to.

Repairs, improvements, additions and maintenance, $650,000.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Is there anything included under this item for improvements at Rideau Hall?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Nothing.

Mr. SPENCER: This is a very large item. Would the minister give us some particulars?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is the same amount that has been granted for a number of years past. The expenditure for the last few years are as follows:

Year	Amount
1921-22	$710,335
1922-23	591,000
1923-24	665,000
1924-25	612,000
1925-26	652,000
1926-27	623,000
1927-28	651,000

It is required for carrying out the work of repairs, alterations, additions and improvements and for procuring furniture, fittings and other supplies in connection with the maintenance of all the Ottawa public buildings.

Mr. McGIBBON: Who is responsible for looking after the ventilation and heating of this chamber? After a time it is usually so hot and stuffy that it is not fit for people to live in.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Employees of the Department of Public Works operate the equipment under the direction of the officials of the house.

Mr. McGIBBON: That does not give us very much information. Is anybody responsible in general for looking after this chamber and the other rooms in order that they may be properly ventilated, not overheated, and that the air, at least in this chamber, may be fit to breathe? Surely there is somebody whose duty it is to superintend this work. The matter has been referred to a number of times in the house but we do not seem to get anywhere. Is there someone on whom the minister could place the responsibility?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not see the Sergeant-at-Arms in his seat. There is a thermometer on his desk. He is supposed to keep an eye on the temperature indicated by that thermometer and if it gets too high, to have some fresh air let in or, if it gets too low, to see that the temperature is increased.

Mr. STEVENS: The real difficulty is the condition of the atmosphere. Some times it is not only the heat but the bad air which is oppressive. The place is not properly ventilated. We have an expensive set of machinery for ventilating the building. I do not know what type it is but either the machinery is faulty or those who are operating it do not know their business. That is the long and the short of the matter. The situation is serious because while we sit here during the session, we almost invariably get a headache or feel some other depression. With this expensive machinery we ought to have satisfactory ventilation and we are not getting it.

Mr. GEARY: Will the minister explain what sort of system it is?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is something to which I have been devoting some thought and time in connection with some of my other duties. The system is called the combination plenum and exhaust system. There are fans that are supposed to suck in the pure air and other fans which are supposed to draw out the impure air.

Mr. STEVENS: The impure air fan does not work.

[Mr. McGibbon.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: This building is a good deal like other buildings which have been erected under the supervision of the best architects procurable; it is well constructed After a number of people have been in all the galleries and in the house from three o'clock in the afternoon until perhaps ten o'clock in the evening and a number of members on all sides of the house have been talking a good deal, the air is not as good at ten o'clock in the evening as it was when the house opened at three o'clock in the afternoon. My hon. friend will notice that now there is nothing to complain about. I see we are all agreed on that.

Mr. STEVENS: What would happen if we called the divorce bills?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Of course, you cannot expect it to remain like this all the time. To be serious, I am told that in practically every building after it has been occupied five or six or seven hours, even under the best regulated system of ventilation known to architectural science, the air becomes not as fresh as it was at the beginning. It is the same with any theatre. I understand that the system here is one to which great consideration was given at the time of the construction of this building, and it is said to be in repair at the present time. Only recently we have adopted the system of gauging the temperature by a thermometer, which is under the supervision of a very careful official of the house, who makes it one of his duties to regulate the temperature.

Mr. GEARY: No plenum system will work if an outside door is open, because that lets the draught in and puts the whole arrangement out of order. The plenum system in a building of this kind will not work, and you might as well make up your mind to that, but we might get some relief from letting in the fresh air.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I suppose that, like all questions of a more or less scientific nature, there are differences of opinion about that.

Mr. GEARY: Not much difference of opinion about that.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think so, if I may say so. According to my information, our system is one of the best available, but, of course, if a door is open in very cold weather you will get a draught through any building.

Mr. GEARY: That is not the point.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is the point, if I may say so, in connection with this building. Those sitting particularly in the vicinity where I now stand can feel a draught on the back of their neck practically every time the outside door and the door over here are open at the same time.

Mr. GEARY: The point is that opening that door disturbs the draught of air that is supposed to ventilate the chamber. If you have a room that is hermetically sealed, you can ventilate it very well by the plenum system, but opening an outside door and letting in a draught disturbs the whole arrangement. I suggest that the minister consider that question with a view to installing a better system. We shall get no relief otherwise.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is a matter in which I am very much interested because I have myself experienced the discomforts which hon. gentlemen complain of, and if I can find any way of improving the system I shall be very glad to do it. Proper ventilation is most essential to the health and comfort of everybody who has to spend any time in this house.

Mr. CHURCH: Close up the session in two weeks and hon. members will be able to get all the ventilation they want free.

Mr. MARCIL: Those who sat in the old chamber will remember that the ventilation was not very good, and that it was very often discussed. But so far as the acoustics were concerned, the old chamber was far superior to this. For instance, I have had to content myself with hearing only half the explanation just given by the minister on this question of ventilation; I could not make out half of what he said, and half of what is said from the far corner of the house is not audible at this end, so I hope the minister has not given up entirely the task of improving the acoustics of this chamber. This is a magnificent chamber and a credit to the architect, but I am sorry to say that so far as the acoustics are concerned it is not a success, and we at this end are able to hear only very imperfectly what is said from the other end, and vice versa. That was admitted, and the members of the cabinet had to move more towards the centre of the chamber so that they could be better heard at that far end, but their moving down has been our loss, because we are not able to hear the explanations given by the ministers. So if anything can be done to improve the acoustics of this chamber, I hope it will be done because it is very much needed.

The CHAIRMAN: I might be permitted to say a word here. While the acoustic properties of the chamber are not all that may be desired, if hon. gentlemen would keep better order and less conversation were carried on in the chamber, hon. members would be able to hear the ministers and to hear each other when speaking in committee.

Mr. ELLIOTT: In reply to my hon. friend from Bonaventure, I am told that in every building where a speaker is speaking away from a wall or background of some kind, there is difficulty in hearing him at any great distance. A number of my hon. friends in this house who are familiar with what is one of the best constructed and best designed legislative buildings in Canada, the parliament buildings in Toronto, will agree that the complaints we have in regard to the acoustics of this chamber are but a very small percentage of the complaints we used to hear of the acoustics of that building. It must be borne in mind that when a speaker speaks out into space his voice will carry, but it is impossible to arrange any room where you will have the sound carried in the various directions in the same way.

The CHAIRMAN: There is no difficulty in hearing the minister now that we have order in the chamber.

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is something in what the chairman says. The acoustic properties are greatly improved when the members of the house are making a reasonable effort to hear what is being said, and when not too many of them are talking at the one time.

Mr. MARCIL: In the old chamber, at confederation, the Speaker's chair was at the end of the chamber, but with the increased membership it was found necessary to transfer it to the centre of the chamber, and that improved the acoustics very considerably. Have the experts considered the question of moving the Speaker's chair to the centre of the room and arranging the seats in a sort of semi-circle around it, so that everyone would be facing the Speaker and the Speaker would be facing the members?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That has been considered. Models have been made and a plan was endeavoured to be worked out along that line, but the objection to that is that if the Speaker's chair were opposite to where I am now standing, the voice probably would not carry to that corner. I am told that that plan is not feasible, and the experts consider that the present system is the best they know of at the present time.

Mr. MARCIL: The system I suggest has been tried at Washington and at the Palais Bourbon in Paris, and in many other capitals in Europe.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend is familiar with what happens in Paris. The speakers go to a certain point in the chamber when they are going to address the house, and they all speak from the same point. It is quite feasible then. The acoustic properties can be improved when the speaking all takes place from the same point and the voice carries reasonably in the same direction, but that plan is quite unworkable when speakers are speaking from all over the chamber.

Mr. MacNUTT: This is an important matter, Mr. Chairman, I do not think the ventilation can be improved by simply opening the doors. I have a great deal of sympathy for the officers of the house and others whose duties oblige them to remain in the chamber throughout the sitting. I am sure the attendance of hon. members in the house would be much better if the ventilation were improved. In my judgment large air tubes should be installed from the ceiling to the outside through which the vitiated air would be withdrawn by electric fans. As to the acoustics of the chamber, I think two years ago a vote was placed in the estimate to effect an improvement in this respect. I understand that an expert reported that the acoustic properties were all right. I should like that expert to sit here day after day as we do in an effort to hear what is being said. Those whose hearing is normal find it very difficult and at times impossible to distinguish a speaker addressing the chair from either end of the chamber. Undoubtedly something is radically wrong with the acoustics, and it seems to me that the only remedy would be to install radio distributors. Then we should be able to hear any hon. member without effort.

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Chairman, I wish to endorse the remarks of the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. MacNutt). It is most important that we should hear what is going on. That is what we are here for.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Louder.

Mr. NEILL: In the house of Lords there is a telephone on each member's desk. Whether that is for the purpose of making audible to each member the debates in the chamber I do not know; but I do not recall seeing a similar system in the House of Commons.

Mr. GEARY: The minister has justified this item by telling us how much was spent in previous years. Is this $650,000 the total budget for the various buildings showing proposed repairs and what may be required throughout the year?

[Mr. Marcil.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: This budget is made up of staff and materials. The staff consists of 252 men at an estimated cost of $400,340; materials, supplies, extra assistance, $249,666.

Mr. GEARY: That is by way of estimate from each department in regard to particular buildings?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No. There has been no change for the last couple of years in the staff.

Mr. GEARY: If you have an item for additions, there must be some idea what those additions are to be; they must be considered before an appropriation is made for them.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The practice has been to have a special vote for any additions involving a considerable outlay. The staff looks after all the various buildings, and the materials are used by the staff. No budget is made up by the different departments; the cost is arrived at as a result of experience extending over a number of years.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is an inventory kept of the furniture and contents of the library?

Mr. ELLIOTT: A record is kept of all the purchases of furniture and supplies.

Item agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: The next two items for Rideau Hall were adopted at a previous sitting of the committee.

Telephone service—$100,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is included in this large expenditure?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This covers the rental for the fiscal year of the telephone connections throughout the several departments in the city of Ottawa.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Are the telephone costs of Rideau Hall and the governor general's office included in this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is correct.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I find in part V—32 of the Auditor General's report for 1927 an item of $378.05 for the governor general's office and Rideau Hall for telephones. I turn to part V—31 of the same report and I find an expenditure of $355.20 for the governor general's office and Rideau Hall for telephones, direct lines, and so on. Then at part G—3 another item, telegrams and telephones amounting to $4.020.32, again for Rideau Hall. The total is $4,753.57, most of which would appear to be for telephone messages. What is the reason for this extraordinary telephone bill for Rideau Hall? There may be some good reason for it. How much is the estimate for this year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is part of the expenses of the building from and to which telephone messages are sent. It is not in connection with this building. What my hon. friend refers to I take it, although I have not looked over the details specially, would cover the various telephone calls and telerams from the governor general's office.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That explanation is hardly good enough. I find for example in the same item of the Auditor General's report at part V—31 that the total cost of telephones for the Prime Minister in respect of the House of Commons is only $57.96, and he has another small bill in connection with the External Affairs department. Even the Prime Minister's telephone calls do not nearly approximate those of Rideau Hall. I cannot understand why there is such a heavy expenditure. The minister has not yet told the committee how much of this $100,000 will be devoted this year to the Rideau Hall telephones.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Will the minister explain how it is that there are three or four different accounts for telephones? Why should there be so many.

Mr. ELLIOTT: These subdivisions are made by the Auditor General. He subdivides them under the different headings and is, I understand, responsible for the classifications that appear here. Of course, they all have to be passed on by him.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I want to say a few words in regard to this item. We all appreciate the minister's seriousness in dealing with these items; he is more serious than any other minister, and he realizes the importance of the matters involved. But he must realize at the same time that there is a rumour abroad that there is great waste in connection with the administration here. In my opinion, if there were put under one item all the automobiles in use by every person connected with the administration, and the same in the matter of telephones, the government could satisfy the demands of nearly all those who are asking for public buildings. Here we have an item of $100,000, and I am sure that if the minister went through it carefully with a view to eliminating unnecessary expenditures he could provide a post office for my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards), in Sydenham, and one for Camrose as well. I would ask the minister to turn to two pages which have been referred to in the Auditor General's report for 1927. There he will find a long list of office telephones. I have no doubt that if he went through that list he would discover a great many telephones which are absolutely unnecessary; they could be done without, especially when people are unable to obtain proper postal service throughout the country. He will also find, if he consults this book, a list of private telephones in private residences throughout Ottawa. Many of these telephones can be justified, but I will guarantee that a great many of them cannot. There are seventeen ministers who have telephones in their private residences and apartments; there are also twenty-seven deputies and sixty-three sub-deputies who have private telephones in their private residences, paid for by the government of Canada. Take the various departments: Agriculture with nine sub-deputies; Justice with five; the Post Office with seven; the Public Works with six and the Railways with six. If the minister or his deputy would take these two pages and go over them carefully he could eliminate enough of absolutely unnecessary expenditure to provide a post office in Camrose, one in Sydenham and one or two others, about the necessity for which we have heard.

Mr. CANTLEY: And Pictou.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Pictou, if you like. If the minister will take the automobiles used by the officials and deputy officials and those connected with the administration and put them all under one head, I guarantee he will be able to supply a post office in every place where a demand is made for one. With this $100,000 we have here I am sure he could provide three or four post offices. I cannot understand why so many persons need private telephones to be paid for by the government. I grant you that every department should have a certain number; for example, work must be done on Saturdays and on Sundays and at night. But why should we pay for private telephones for six and seven sub-deputies and sometimes the secretaries of ministers? I cannot understand it. I repeat, I would refer the minister to these two pages of the Auditor General's report, and I would ask him to go over them carefully with a view to cutting out unnecessary expenditure. If he did so now, and again next year, he would be able to provide a post office for every member who asked for one.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I know my hon. friend is serious in making these suggestions and perhaps I should devote a minute or two to him; because the matter is important if what he says is correct. In the first place, it is not correct that there is great waste, nor do I think it is correct that there is a general impression throughout the country to that effect. What is the test? Look at the amount of money paid out in the last fiscal year in this department and compare it with what was paid out in other years and you will see whether there is great waste or not. I would call my hon. friend's attention to a statement I made the other day in answer to a somewhat similar criticism: that in this country in 1913, which was a quite normal year, this department, with Canada doing a trade of $1,048,000,000, paid out in cash in this particular department $18,884,000. Last year on the other hand, with wages greatly increased, with cost of materials increased by at least 50 per cent, and with the cost of practically every service also increased, the total expenditure in this department, to provide for a trade of $2,357,000,000, was $17,408,000. Let my hon. friend get this into his head, because I know he believes what he has been saying with reference to these rumors, which perhaps he has been encouraging. He believes that we are spending in this department more money than was spent years ago by his friends whom he has lauded to the skies. But he is wrong. He also believes that the business of the country is not as good to-day as it was years ago. In that particular also he is wrong. Just let me put the matter in figures which my hon. friend and everyone else in this house who is similarly minded can understand. With a business in Canada a little over a third of what it is to-day the government of this country in 1913 spent 50 per cent more in this department than we spent last year—and last year was the highest year but one since this government came into power. Let me give the figures so that we shall have the matter threshed out. In 1912-13—

Mr. STEVENS: We must be getting along too quickly.

Mr. ELLIOTT: You cannot get along too quickly if there are misunderstandings.

Mr. STEVENS: Go on.

Mr. ELLIOTT: We shall get along more quickly when we appreciate the facts. For the year 1912-13 the total amount paid out in this department was $18,884,000; for the last fiscal year before the war, ended March 31, 1914, for a trade a little over a third of what it was this year, this department spent $27,991,000. Compare the figures: $27,991,000 in 1914 as against $17,408,000 last year. I know my hon. friend is fair enough not to repeat that criticism after he gets the figures, because it is not correct. If I may say so with regard to my predecessor in office, in whose footsteps I have endeavoured to follow, the business of this department has been carried on not only with no great waste but with great economy since this government came into power.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): When a member does come to this house with a little advice for the minister which may perhaps take him out of those old trails which he has been following, the minister gets a little annoyed and springs up with a lot of figures on trade and so on. I will guarantee that if he takes the two pages to which I have referred he will be saved a lot of trouble. Knowing the trouble and the anxiety which he has endured during the last few days and the attempts he has made to defend these items and to satisfy the different members who come to him with demands, I have tried to show some places where he can save money in order to allow himself something more to spend in other directions. Apparently my endeavours have been wasted; the minister seemed to get angry, and said we had been spreading false rumours. I have not spread false rumours; I have spent a lot of time over this book and I have pointed out two or three ways in which some little expenditures have been stuffed. I am not going to suggest that the minister ask the Auditor General to look into these matters; perhaps when the Auditor General reads this discussion he will include five or six pages covering the automobiles used by the different departments, just as these telephones are now included. Then we can criticize that expenditure.

I hope the minister will get out of these old paths which he has been following; I hope he will go to his department and say, "I cannot understand why private secretaries have their telephones paid for, or why three or four deputies should require their telephones paid for." I will admit that there is need for some of these telephones, but I think it could be cut down a great deal, and I hope when we discuss these estimates next year we will find a reduction. I am sure a company doing business in the commercial world would look at the overhead charge first of all, and that is what we are endeavouring to do; we believe that we could do a great deal more trade with a smaller overhead than we are carrying. I think I made it plain to the minister, and I hope he understands, that by saving in some directions perhaps he could satisfy some of these other demands which are made upon him. If the minister will break away from the policy of tu quoque, "Thou also", and never mind what other ministers have done—they have made a great many mistakes and it is only from mistakes made in the past that we can learn to do things better in the future—he will be much better off, and that is my only reason for bringing up this matter.

Mr. ELLIOTT: With regard to this matter of supplying telephones to secretaries I understand from the deputy, who has been here much longer than I, that the practice was in vogue when he first entered the department and has been maintained ever since. My hon. friend will agree with me that with the salaries that are being paid and with the cost of living as it is at present, perhaps no official in the public service has such a difficult task as the secretary to a minister. Demands are made upon these secretaries at all hours of the day and night; urgent business of the department necessitates that they be on call all the time, and I hardly think my hon. friend from Kingston, whom I know very well would not want to work an injustice on any official, would suggest that the old practice of supplying these telephones should be done away with. I do not believe that would be in the interests of the public service.

Mr. DUNNING: Any business concern would do it for similar officials.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That is not so.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): No.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Suposing we should say to the secretary, "We have decided not to pay for your telephone any longer." I believe that was done by one of my predecessors some years ago, and it lasted just a week. He was not a minister of this government but was a member of the previous administration; he had the idea that this could be dispensed with, and maintained that position for just a week. The secretaries said, "Very well, if you do not want us to have telephones it is quite all right; we will have them taken out." My hon. friend can readily understand the situation which resulted. I do not want my hon. friend to misunderstand me, because I think perhaps no member of the house presents his criticisms with a greater desire to be helpful to the government, and I appreciate that fact. I want to get it into his head, if I can, that we have stepped out of the old trails, and because of that fact we have been able to effect the immense economies both in this and other government departments which have occurred since this government took office.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I just rise to correct a remark interjected by the Minister of Railways, who said that ordinary business concerns did the same thing, or words to that effect. I absolutely deny that such is the case. The employees of industrial corporations pay for their own telephones just as they pay for their own breakfasts.

Mr. DUNNING: I am sure my hon. friend will allow me to state that just as he personally knows of business concerns which adopt that principle with respect to this class of officials, so do I personally know of corporations which, with respect to the class of officials whose telephones are used far more for the business of the concern than for the business of the individual, pay for these telephones as a matter of business.

Mr. CHAPLIN: That might be done by the national railways, but not in general business practice.

Mr. DUNNING: I am not speaking of the national railways but of business concerns with which I am personally familiar. I can speak of them just as my hon. friend can only speak of those with which he is familiar. On the question of principle, I would say that the secretary of any minister must be and is in receipt of telephone calls all the time affecting the business of the department and of the minister's office, and in the service of the members. I do not mind confessing that my own practice is to direct that all telegrams coming addressed to me out of office hours shall be telephoned to my secretary. I do not suppose that my hon. friend would desire a minister to be answering the phone for hundreds of telegrams which may come in, particularly when there is an agitation in some part of the country during which the people are encouraged to send telegrams en masse to a minister to influence his course in one direction or another. Really I think it is a pretty small thing to pay for a business telephone which is available for an official out of business hours. That is really what it amounts to; as the Minister of Public Works has said, the experiment of cutting out the practice was once tried and did not succeed very well.

Mr. CHAPLIN: The minister limits the telephone matter to secretaries. No one, as far as I have heard, has objected to that. The objection is made—I am not making it, but I am only illustrating the objection—to having a whole raft of telephones.

Mr. DUNNING: I understood the reference was to secretaries.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Some of them must be justified, but why should three commissioners have telephones? Possibly the secretary should have a telephone, but not the three commissioners. Every little sub-deputy of a department has a telephone while one or two only may be absolutely necessary. My point was that this list should be gone over to find what is necessary to be granted, and what is not necessary. I believe there is one-third of it not necessary. I have brought the matter up to show how economy can be practised and it is apparent that economy could be practised by cutting out some of these telephones. You will find that every member of a commission that comes here has a private telephone. There are several departments in connection with which a great amount of telephoning would not be necessary although that of the minister may be an exception.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Would the minister give me the information I asked for at the outset; what proportion of this $100,000 would be allocated to the Rideau Hall telephones?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The figures that I have do not segregate that. The same system is followed, I take it, as was referred to before. I think the classifications are largely auditors' classifications. I find that Rideau Hall is provided for as part of one item. The Rideau Hall operator is one of the employees whose salary, amounting to $900, is paid out of this vote. I do not think there is any place, in the data I have before me, in which the operations of the Rideau Hall telephones are collected together. I suppose I could obtain that information, and I would be very glad to obtain it for my hon. friend and hand it to him, if he desires it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, I am a little puzzled about this matter, and I am quite frankly interested in calling the minister's attention to this extraordinary telephone bill. I have already given him the figures from part V, page 32. We find $378 05, which covers the governor general's office and Rideau Hall. Then turning to part V page 31, we find a total of $355.20 more. Then, turning to part G page 3, we find a total amount for telegrams and telephones of $4,020.32. This makes a grand total of $4,753.57 for telegrams and telephones. A great proportion of that would appear to be for telephone use. I am afraid the minister will find that a lot of the little buildings, like janitor's house, and so on, have telephones although they are right on the grounds. Most of them really do not need telephones but they are using them, and the bills are being sent to the department and charged up to Rideau Hall. After all, the government is the guardian of the public purse, and when we examine the estimates and find that it is costing us in the neighbourhood of a million dollars in two years to maintain Rideau Hall, then, surely, the closest examination of the estimates should be made. I find, for example, $10,000 for the printing of menus and invitations, for social engagements. When you talk to the man outside in terms of $10,000 for social invitations, just for the printing alone, he wants to know what it is all about. We find $250,000 for two railway cars; $250,000 for the Citadel as a summer home; $150,590 for office expenses over here in the east block; $48,666 for salary; $3,064 for a secretary; and $3,500 for a personal secretary, and innumerable other expenses. For example, on page 31 of part V, we find enumerated an item for plants and seed, $1,145.20, and bulbs and plants, $1,488.70. That will make a pretty nice garden. Then we find sewing and button machines—I wonder whose buttons are being sewed—$121.19. Somebody has just interjected a remark, but I am not going to repeat it.

I am going to call the attention of the house to the fact that the Prime Minister's favourite daily newspaper was so unchivalrous as to go back to the time of Adam and Eve, and blame it on the woman. I do not know whether it is true or not, but I do say that there is more expenditure this year, more wild expenditure at Rideau Hall, than I can remember in the eight years I have been here. It is time that sort of thing was checked up.

I want to know, for example, if they are still winding the clocks up there. We find an item "winding and regulating clocks", $260. It seems a large item for winding clocks, but there may be an awful lot of them.

The principal objection I have in this connection is to the enormous amount that has been spent on telephones. I find various telephones under this item; the Department of Agriculture, $73.92; Customs and Excise, minister, $57.96; Hull customs house, $57.96; External Affairs, Prime Minister, $65.52; Speaker, $57.96; Immigration and Colonization, minister, $57.96; and deputy, $57.96 They all seem to be pretty much on a level. The Department of Justice, minister, December 10 to March 31, $22.92; Minister of Labour, $72.84; all relatively. I am not going to read the whole list, but we come down to Rideau Hall, $355.20. These things require explanation. I am not going to conduct a very long discussion on it, but I do ask that the minister take this matter into consideration, and find out why we are spending such enormous amounts on telephones and telegraphs; a total of $4,753.57.

If the minister is not able to give us the information with regard to this item of $100,000, and how much of it would be apportioned to this particular classification, I do urge upon him that he take it into consideration and look into the matter, and see if he cannot cut down some of the expenses in connection therewith. I am afraid he may find it is part of a general policy of increased extravagance. The place is one of beauty; we are entitled to it and they who occupy it are entitled to it, but within reasonable limitations. We must carefully govern our expenditures in connection with this matter if we do not want ourselves in this democratic country to throw the whole office into disrepute. The Prime Minister and the minister concerned owe it to themselves, to the very office which is under discussion at the moment and to the people of this country to see to it that this thing does not go too far.

Item agreed to.

Dominion quarantine stations—maintenance and repairs, $15,000.

Mr. McGIBBON: How many people have been in them during the year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am afraid my hon. friend has asked me something concerning which I shall have to get the information from the immigration department. We are only supplying the facilities.

Mr. McGIBBON: If the minister can bring it down some other time, that will be all right.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I shall be glad to do that.

Item agreed to.

Fittings, general supplies and furniture, $135,000.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Will the minister give details of this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is for fittings, supplies, furniture, file cabinets, adjustable roller bookshelves, steel doors and so forth required in the various government offices throughout the Dominion outside of Ottawa. It is $10,000 in advance of the appropriation for last year; but we find that during the last fiscal year we spent $124,895, and it was thought, to meet the requirements this year, we would need a little extra.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Is there going to be an annual expenditure of this amount?

Mr. ELLIOTT: There has been for many years and some years the amount is much more than that.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Is the expenditure as great as that every year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes. In 1921-22, $172,000 was expended under this item.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Is an estimate not made up every year of what is required based upon reports made by the various departments?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is like a number of other items about which questions have been asked. The estimate is based largely on the experience of the department in previous years.

Mr. McQUARRIE: That does not seem to be a businesslike proceeding. In connection with municipalities, for instance, it is customary at the beginning of each year, when the estimates are being prepared, for the various departments to bring in their budgets giving details of what they expect will have to be purchased during the year, with the reasons therefor. In due course the council goes over the estimates and endeavours to pare them down by cutting out unnecessary items. Surely in the government there must be something of a similar nature. It is a mistake simply to base the expenditures for the coming year on what has been spent in the past, particularly in regard to furniture, fittings, and so on. Surely a time will come when you are fully furnished and, outside of exceptional cases, you will not have to buy anything for a few years.

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is no year in which some of the old furnishings are not wearing out. I want to assure my hon. friend that the department endeavours to keep down the expenditures to the lowest possible point and not to grant anything unless it is shown to be absolutely necessary. I appreciate his suggestion, but I should like to ask my hon. friend, with his knowledge of public affairs and of human nature, whether he seriously suggests we should send around to the various departments asking them: How much will you require for new fittings this year?

Mr. McQUARRIE: I should think so.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If my knowledge of human nature and services of this kind assist me at all, I think he would find they would immediately mention an amount much bigger than they get from us during the year.

Mr. McQUARRIE: That is ridiculous, because that kind of thing could not go on.

Mr. ELLIOTT: We do not send out invitations.

Mr. McQUARRIE: My information is that in business the regular practice is to find out from the various departments in the business what is really required. The whole trouble with the running of the government is that it is not done on a business basis. You say: Well, so much money was spent the year before and during previous years; it is all right to spend the same money now. Nobody seems to attempt to make any improvement or to effect any economy. I remember two or three years ago having quite a discussion with the Minister of the Interior about this particular matter. He told me that he was endeavouring to get his department down to a business basis, the idea being that there were too many employees; that there was a lot of dead wood, if you like—and according to common rumour there are cases of that kind in all departments—and that that sort of thing should be eliminated; not that anyone who is employed now and doing his work should be dismissed, but that where there were persons who were not really useful, they should be retired.

The same thing would surely apply in regard to purchases. There has to be some system, and I believe if we could get the business of the country down to some systematic basis, millions of dollars would be saved every year. All the ministers seem to have the same idea; they do not care very much as long as they can come to the house and get their estimates through. Their job is apparently to get their estimates through. This particular minister is very nice about all the questions we ask him and so on, but his system seems to be to sidestep. He says: Well, I have not the information, and in fact and truth he has not the information. His deputy minister sits in front of him and I know what his deputy minister is like. The deputy minister is a man of long experience in that office, and apparently is a very capable and competent man. If there is anything he does not know about the department I would be very much surprised indeed. I believe that we would be able to get right down to details if we had a chance to cross-examine the deputy ministers instead of the ministers themselves, and that we would in that way make a great deal more progress. But unfortunately that is not the system. I think a change might be made in that respect and that when the estimates of a department are before the house the deputy minister might be allowed to sit down in a seat beside the minister, instead of in front of him, and be subjected to questioning. Of course, it might be better if all the estimates were referred to a committee, and in that respect I agree with the Minister of Finance. We would then have the opportunity of getting direct information from the men who know. It is not to be expected that the minister can know all the details of his department, and I am not so unreasonable as to expect that, because his duties are many and very complicated and take up a lot of his time, particularly when he has to see so many people, and has to go so many places, and has so many things to do, council meetings every day, and so on and so forth. I quite realize that the present minister is in no different position from any other minister who has occupied that portfolio. He simply has not the time to become familiar with all the details of his department, and we have found here time after time that the minister has not the information we desire. I suggest that something is wrong with the whole administration of affairs if we are simply going to base the estimates for the coming year on the expenditures which have been made in previous years. We should get down to business. We should have budgets in every department, and the minister when he comes to the committee with his estimates, should be able to give information on all essential details.

Item agreed to.

Dominion public buildings—rents, $1,565,000.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Would the minister please give details?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This amount is required for the payment of rents for the year 1928-29 on buildings leased for the various departments of the Dominion government, including the London, England, Canadian building, and to pay for the rental of buildings used exclusively by the Militia department, and also for the payment of taxes both in and outside Ottawa, and the payment of telephones outside Ottawa. There are many pages of detail, and I would be glad to give my hon. friend any information he wants if he would just indicate what he desires.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): What do the Ottawa rentals amount to?

Mr. ELLIOTT: They amount to $650,377 for 1927-28.

Mr. GARDINER: There is an increase here. What is the explanation? What extra buildings do you contemplate renting in Ottawa?

Mr. McGIBBON: Is it the intention of the government, as is reported, to rent a large amount of space in this architectural monstrosity that is going up in front of the parliament buildings on Wellington street?

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is no decision to that effect.

Mr. McGIBBON: It is under consideration, I believe.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I would not go that far even.

Mr. GARDINER: I would like to inquire as to the nature of the taxes paid in and outside Ottawa. Are these municipal taxes?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The taxes that the department pays are paid largely as a matter of grace. We nearly always pay local improvement taxes, for local improvements in front of our buildings, also taxes on any buildings which are owned by the government and leased to an individual or company.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Does the department pay taxes on buildings that are leased exclusively for their own use?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The lessor pays the taxes, but he charges them up in the rent; we do not pay the taxes direct ourselves. Some of the buildings down on Wellington street that were obtained by the government some years ago are occupied by individuals, and we are responsible for the taxes.

Mr. GARDINER: But no taxes are paid on property that is wholly owned by the government?

Mr. ELLIOTT: And used for government purposes.

Mr. GARDINER: In that case you only pay local improvement taxes?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Are the buildings on Wellington street which are occupied by the Department of Militia and the Department of Agriculture owned or rented by the government?

Mr. ELLIOTT: They are owned by the government and occupied by various departments. Some of those buildings are occupied by private individuals.

Mr. ADSHEAD: The doors and windows of many of these buildings are all weather-beaten and look as if they belonged to a person who had not a friend in the world.

Mr. GEARY: They do.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I think the department should spend some money painting and renovating these buildings.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The scheme at the present time is that as the various units of the Confederation buildings that are under contemplation are constructed, the buildings my hon. friend has in mind will be torn down. For that reason I think my hon. friend will agree with me that it is not advisable to make expensive repairs.

Mr. HEAPS: I do not think Wellington street is a desirable location for new government buildings. Now that the government has decided to have a park, to be known as Confederation park, in the centre of the city, it would be more logical to group government buildings around this space. It might be a saving in the long run to sell the Wellington street property and rearrange the buildings as I have suggested. Wellington street will never be a suitable location for government buildings; they will have to be stretched out in one continuous row.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Is the large building now in course of erection a block east of the main entrance on Wellington street being built to lease to the government for offices?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I answered a similar question a moment ago. The government has no connection with that building at the present time.

Mr. GARDINER: Have any communications passed between the owners of the building and the government with respect to future renting of space?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: Of what nature?

Mr. ELLIOTT: They inquired whether the government was desirous of renting space, and quoted a price.

Mr. GARDINER: What was the price per square foot?

Mr. ELLIOTT: $1.25.

Mr. GARDINER: The same as the others?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Higher than other buildings that we are renting at the present time.

Mr. KENNEDY: Who is the owner of the building?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The Rideau Realty Company.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I hope that at no future time will the government change its mind and lease space from this or any other company. I think the time is past when the government should rent buildings. Certainly if it pays a private company to invest money in a building to lease to the government, it should be well worth while for the government itself to provide the necesary accommodation.

Mr. ADSHEAD: At the far end of Wellington street there is a good sized dwelling house occupied by the livestock branch of the Department of Agriculture. Did the government buy the property for the use of the Department of Agriculture, or is it rented?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is part of the property that was purchased by the government some years ago.

Mr. ADSHEAD: What was it purchased for?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It was the intention of the government at the time to utilize the building for the accommodation of those engaged in some department of the public service, and eventually to erect a building on the site.

Mr. MARCIL: When the government rents a building are the taxes paid by the owners or by the government?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The owners pay the taxes, and of course this is one of the elements they consider in fixing the rent. I know of no case in which this element has been forgotten in arriving at the amount of rent to be charged the government.

Mr. MARCIL: The government makes no change in the system of paying taxes?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. MARCIL: I asked the question because I have read frequently in the Ottawa papers complaints that the taxes were not divided between the two school boards, and the separate school board did not get its share.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The fact that the government leases a building makes no change whatever in the manner in which the owner pays his taxes.

Item agreed to.

Salaries of caretakers, engineers, firemen, etc., $1,080,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Do these employees come under the Civil Service Commission?

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: With the exception of the firemen.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The charwomen?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The charwomen are not included in this item.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Are these considered permanent or temporary employees?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This item includes both classes.

Mr. McQUARRIE: What is the reason for the increase?

Mr. SPENCE: An increase of $42,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: As the service increases, the amount of space occupied is greater, and we have to increase the number of caretakers accordingly.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Any increases in salaries?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Representations have been made that the charwomen are employed steadily, and yet are not allowed holidays and are not under the some conditions as others who work in this building. Will the minister give us some information about this class of employees?

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is no difference between the conditions applying to those employed in the house and to those engaged in corresponding services. The charwomen are on a day basis. They start at seven o'clock in the morning and work until half past nine, at $1.25 per day.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Representations have been made that there is really no allowance for sickness nor for holidays. It seems to me that these women ought to be placed on as good a basis as other government employees.

Mr. ELLIOTT: They are paid so much a day. They get no pay for any days they do not work. The hon. gentleman is quite right, there is no allowance for holidays. On the basis of a daily hiring we think they are paid what the service is worth.

Mr. ADSHEAD: How many hours a day do they work?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Two hours and a half.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: As they are employed steadily month after month, ought they not to be on other than a day basis? Simply because they are lowest in the scale of pay, I do not see why they should not be given as fair treatment as other classes of employees in the government service.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My information is that those who reorganized the civil service in 1919 did not consider that employees on a daily basis, such as charwomen, should be allowed holidays.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Then the statements of the Civil Service Commission should be reconsidered, because it seems to me that when any of us employ day labourers, as a good many of us employ charwomen in our homes, in case of sickness we gladly allow for that misfortune. In the case of women steadily employed day after day I submit they ought to be placed on something of a permanent basis and given holidays like other people. I urge this on their behalf.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I doubt very much whether in many homes, even where the highest wages are paid, this class of workpeople are paid at the rate of fifty cents an hour. That, I think, is the answer.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes; but the minister will recognize that though these people are paid at the rate of fifty cents an hour they work only two and a half hours, which is a very short time in the whole day. And it really spoils the day for any other type of work, at least in most instances. I simply suggest in the name of humanity, as well as on the ground of good business, that if a woman is ill, when she is employed week after week, the least we can do is to make some allowance for such illness and pay her for the time she is away. I also suggest that these women be given a holiday. It is not as though they were employed one day in six weeks; they are employed day after day throughout the year.

Mr. MARCIL: I might remind the hon. member that this state of affairs exists with a certain class of employees in the Public Works department, among the men as well as the women. The labourers employed by the department are paid only for the days they work; they are not paid for the days on which they do not work. The women are placed on the same basis.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I would not say that the women are the only ones who should be given consideration, although perhaps their case makes a stronger appeal inasmuch as many of them are under the absolute necessity of going out and supplementing their husbands' income. I should say that the same rule ought to apply in the case of men, whether or not they come strictly within the classification of permanent employees. The fact is, they are virtually permanent. They are not engaged for an odd day occasionally but work steadily for 365 days in the year, minus, I suppose, Sundays. I do not know whether they are supposed to work on Sundays. I contend that they should be regarded as permanent.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I quite agree with my hon. friend that no class of employees earn their wages with greater difficulty than do the charwomen. But we think we are paying them a fair wage. It is a matter to which I personally have given some consideration, because I felt that they of all classes were entitled to consideration. I do not however feel, in the interests of the public service, that we could either increase their wages or pay them for days on which they are not actually working. They do not work on Sundays or holidays and they are not paid for those days. The argument for holidays does not perhaps apply to them to the same extent as it does to others. I think we are getting excellent service; I have considered the matter, and I want to make that statement. I believe we have in Ottawa about 800 of an excellent type of workwomen, but this is a class of work for which there are a good many applicants for whom we canot find room. I do not of course advance that as a reason for not treating them with absolute fairness, but in my opinion those whom we employ we treat fairly.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It would be comparatively easy to keep a few reserves. There are many applicants, and if a woman were ill a reserve could be called on to take her place. I suggest that any woman who is ill should be paid. If necessary a medical certificate might be demanded. But she ought to be paid, since she is required to work fifty-two weeks in the year. I cannot see why, because she is a charwoman, she should not have one or two weeks' holiday with pay like other people. The proposition is a reasonable one; they should be treated the same as those whom we classify as higher grade employees. I do not think that the sum involved would be very large. I do not want to say anything nasty, but I do think that the minister might give as careful attention to this matter as is given to some other matters involving a considerable expenditure. The public would endorse such an action. There is something else I want to say. It has been suggested to me by some of these women that they would welcome the fact of having a woman in charge over them—an immediate forewoman. Sometimes they would prefer to tell their difficulties to a woman rather than to a man, who is at the head of this work. This is done in almost every business and I do not see why it cannot be done here too. Perhaps this matter may be considered almost beneath the dignity of parliament; nevertheless I submit that, as in any ordinary business, these people should be treated fairly. I should be glad if the minister would consider the matter; if he did so I am sure he would easily come to a favourable decision.

Mr. MALONEY: Has the minister the power to grant holidays to charwomen and labourers?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No; but that is not what my hon. friend has suggested.

Mr. MALONEY: I want to know whether the minister has authority to do it.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The hon. member's suggestion was that I should make recommendations to the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. MALONEY: Has the Civil Service Commission control over the char service?

Mr. ELLIOTT: As to classification.

Mr. MALONEY: But as regards the granting of holidays. Have they control over that?

Mr. ELLIOTT: They can recommend—

Mr. MALONEY: But you have supreme authority as Minister of Public Works.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am bound by the regulations.

Mr. MALONEY: But surely the minister must have authority if these appointments are made by him independently of the Civil Service Commission. The granting of holidays does not come under the commission. If the minister has authority to give these poor charwomen the odd holiday—and the labourers who, he says, are being paid fairly good wages, as we all agree—why should we discriminate against them? You allow the ordinary civil servant appointed by the Civil Service Commission the usual holiday each year; why deny that right to the labourer and to these poor women?

Mr. ELLIOTT: There would be something in the argument if my hon. friend's question were not based on a wrong hypothesis. We name the parties, but the Civil Service Commission classify them and fix the rate of wages and the terms of service.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Dominion public buildings—water, $83,000.

Mr. KENNEDY: What is this?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This covers water service to all Dominion buildings throughout Canada.

Mr. KENNEDY: Drinking water?

Mr. ELLIOTT: And for other purposes as well.

Mr. SPENCE: Is that water supplied under a meter system? That seems to be a high price for water such as we get in Ottawa.

Mr. ELLIOTT: We pay the ordinary rates in the different towns where we obtain the water supply.

Item agreed to.

Yukon public buildings—rents, repairs, fuel, light, water service and caretakers' salaries, $28,000.

Mr. MARCIL: Before we leave the Ottawa public buildings perhaps the minister might answer a question which has been asked me quite often. We are making an attempt to beautify Ottawa by removing a number of old structures in the vicinity of the parliament buildings, and I would like the minister to say whether it is possible to remove that old workshop on Sussex street by Major Hill park, which is an eyesore to those passing on their way to the Basilica and to Government House. Part of the building has been removed, but the other part is still there and it prevents people from enjoying the beauties of the park. What is the purpose of retaining that old building, which was put up some years ago when the Connaught building was erected? The Connaught building was completed years ago, and I see no reason why this old workshop should remain, because it disfigures the whole street.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I quite agree with what my hon. friend has said. This building was put up some years ago during the time of the construction of the parliament buildings; it has been used since for the preparation of stone being used in the parliament buildings, and for the last year or two in connection with the tower. We expect to have it removed within three or four weeks.

Mr. McGIBBON: I would like to ask the minister if the government have seriously considered removing from the estimates this item of $1,565,000 for rents, by putting up their own public buildings. It seems to me there is no excuse for the government of the Dominion of Canada paying such sums for rent. If it is found profitable by business people or friends of the government to construct these buildings and lease them to the government, surely it would be good business for the government to own their buildings. I think the government own enough land now to contain all these buildings, and I would like to know if this question has been given any serious consideration.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes. I thought it was pretty well understood by hon. members of this house that the plan is to proceed with the construction of public buildings to house the various departments of the public service. That is our policy.

Mr. McGIBBON: When are the government going to start?

Mr. ELLIOTT: We are practically ready now to call for tenders on the first unit, the Confederation building, which will contain 175,000 square feet of floor space. Of course that is only a very small portion of the accommodation we will require, but this is only the first of a number of buildings which will be proceeded with, not all at once but gradually, and I hope not too gradually.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I would like to call the attention of the minister to the corner stone tablet at the northeast corner of the parliament buildings. Part of the lettering on this tablet has become almost entirely obliterated; I have seen a number of visitors looking at the tablet, and I think it would be a good thing to have that attended to and the lettering renewed so that anyone might be able to read the incription.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have not had my attention particularly brought to this matter and I have not noticed it myself, but I will be glad to look into it. Certainly the corner stone and inscription should be kept in proper condition.

Mr. GEARY: I see that this final vote totals $5,536,500. A little while ago in discussing one of the items the minister took the opportunity to compare, in an impassioned manner, the expenditures on public works under this government with the expenditures for the year 1913-14, seeking to establish the economy of the present government by saying that amounts chargeable to income this year were something over $17,000,000, whereas I think he said they were about $22,000,000 in 1913-14.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No; I was dealing with the total expenditure of this department.

Mr. GEARY: Then we will take the amount chargeable to income, which is $17,000,000 this year as against $22,000,000 in the year mentioned. We were speaking of this particular item, which is a more or less general item and for which no immediate physical value is received.

Mr. STEVENS: And this is only a portion of it.

Mr. GEARY: That may be quite true. This is an item covering rents, repairs, furniture, heating and so on, and included in it are some of the items to which my friends to my left were referring. It was this particular item which induced the minister to launch into that defence to which I have referred. In the year 1913-14 the total under this item was $1,992,500, so the item is at least 150 per cent higher this year than it was then. It is quite true that the whole amount for improvements, buildings and so on exceeded the expenditure made this year by some $5,000,000, but we received value for that amount. For instance, in 1913-14 we spent $20,000 in Trail, which probably satisfied the demands of that town at that time. The other night we were told by the hon. member representing the constituency in which Trail is located that they are badly in need of a public building in Trail, yet nothing is being done this year. No one would complain if urgent requirements of that kind were satisfied, and in 1913-14 a good deal of money was spent for public buildings, post offices and so on for which value was received. When you come to these more or less general charges, among which are items which were defended by the minister, as I have said we find that the expenditure in 1913-14 was less than two-fifths of the expenditure to-day. I do not see any point in the minister going back to that year, the facts being as they are. At the same time he ventured into the Department of Trade and Commerce, referring to the trade of Canada at this time as compared with the trade at that year. It occurs to me that that was a bit gratuitious on the part of the minister. We are not saying that the value is not here; we do not contend that the increases are not due in some measure at least to the increased cost of material and labour, and it would have been well if the minister had defended these expenditures on that ground rather than to obtain an unfair result comparing them with what happened in 1913-14.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I cannot agree with what my hon. friend has said, and probably he does not expect me to do so.

Mr. GEARY: But the figures are there.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No. My hon. friend will be fair when I call his attention to the real point to which he is addressing himself, and that is that these services have increased since 1914.

Mr. GEARY: Certainly.

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is no doubt about that; the services have increased in various ways. Consider labour, with which this item deals very extensively; no one will deny that the cost of labour has increased at an enormous rate since 1914, and when that point is conceded I think the argument of my hon. friend must fail.

Mr. GEARY: Why?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Why? Because, not only has the number of employees increased enormously, but the cost of each employee has increased, so that we are having the only result that would be possible under these circumstances. I am afraid that my hon. friend has not just got the point.

Mr. STEVENS: Are you not going too fast?

Mr. ELLIOTT: We are always going too fast, when we attempt to answer criticism. I do not propose to let it go without an answer.

Mr. STEVENS: You will get one, too.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The point I was making to my hon. friend was that while you may find raises and increases in salaries, you will also find increases in the cost of materials. The cost of things is uncontrollable. The point I was trying to make to my hon. friend —I hope I did it with as good temper as my hon. friend displayed—is that the test, after all, is the comparison of our total to-day with the total in former years, when the business of the country was not nearly as great. My point was that with a business of a little over a third of what it is to-day, the expenses fourteen years ago were one and one-half times the total expenses of to-day.

Mr. GEARY: If my hon. friend were to decide this year that he required a house to live in, and ten years hence he does not require a house to live in, is it fair to compare his expenses ten years hence with his expenses to-day, when he has to pay out rent for a house to live in? That is exactly what has happened in this case. We required a large number of public buildings in those days, and for the expenditures in the year 1913-14 we got assets in lands and bricks and mortar. This particular item, which we are discussing at the moment, has increased 150 per cent.

[Mr. Geary.]

Mr. STEVENS: The minister did not include $6,500,000 of capital this year, which makes it $24,000,000 instead of $17,000,000.

Mr. GEARY: There has been a decrease, for instance, in the Yukon. In 1913-14 we were obliged to spend $128,000, while this year we are only obliged to spend $34,000, on account of the decreased business in that territory.

Mr. KENNEDY: Could the minister explain the meaning of the different items "Public works—chargeable to capital" and "Public works—chargeable to income"?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I must say that the very question my hon. friend has asked has caused me to make some investigation. It is a term used by the department presided over by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb), and apparently they draw the distinction between public buildings—capital, and public buildings—income. It is a distinction that is fairly hard to follow logically.

Mr. KENNEDY: It is just the name of an account?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is the distinction.

Mr. COOTE: Just a distinction without a difference.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It seems to be a bookkeeping distinction, rather than anything else.

Item agreed to.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Perhaps this would be an opportune time to take up some matters that were held over for further information.

Victoria, B.C., astrophysical observatory (Little Saanich mountain) — maintenance, repairs and improvements, $3,000.

Item agreed to.

Saskatoon—public building, $150,000.

Item agreed to.

Dominion public buildings — improvements, repairs, etc., $102,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend from Charlotte (Mr. Grimmer) asked for certain information as to why tenders were not invited for post office fittings, including boxes, at St. Stephen. The estimated cost was put at $1,300, in August, 1927. Two tenders were received, one from Joseph MacVay of St. Stephen, for $1,500, and the other was from George Stewart Ryder, St. Stephen, and was for $1,800. As the appropriation covering this work had been exhausted at that time, the tenders were not accepted, and the security furnished by the tenderers was returned. The item has been noted for consideration.

Mr. GRIMMER: I would like to ask the minister if it is the intention of the government to proceed at once with the repairs?

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is no vote yet. The item has been noted, along with many others, for the supplementary estimates; that is a matter of consideration in connection with the supplementary estimates.

Mr. GRIMMER: Is it the intention of the government to wait until such time as they receive tenders that will come within the estimate?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Our difficulty at the present time is not with the tenders; it is a question of there being no appropriation now. The first thing for the government to consider is whether or not an appropriation for this work will be inserted in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. GRIMMER: When does the government intend to take this into consideration? Will that come in in the supplementary estimates?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It will be considered.

Mr. GRIMMER: I think there are other things to be considered at the present time in connection with the matter. This question came up four or five years ago. I was not the one responsible for it, and was not the one that advocated it. No doubt this is a matter for the postal department. They found out that it was absolutely necessary in the interests of the department, to carry on the work, that the premises should be improved. At the same time, there were boxes which the public were willing to pay for. The government, through their engineers, had estimates prepared, and they took into consideration, for the benefit of the department and also for the benefit of the people in that vicinity, the proposition of at once proceeding with the work. That was in 1922 or 1923. It requires only a matter of probably $2,000 or less to cover these alterations. I cannot understand, nor can the people understand, why the Postmaster General does not see his way clear to spend this small matter of $2,000 in the interest of the department, and for the benefit and convenience of the public.

This building was built some thirty-five or forty years ago. No doubt it was then one of the best buildings in that community; it was adequate at that time. The first floor is occupied by the postal department; the second floor is occupied by the customs, and there is a storey and a half above that. Architecture at that time was up in the air, rather than just floor space. The upper storeys were used by the caretaker. I do not know whether they are using them at the present time or not. The arrangement of the building is such that there is not sufficient space to carry on the postal service satisfactorily. The government themselves decided that in the interests of the department they would make these alterations and the people were led to believe that this work would be done at once. As I said before, something else must be entering into the matter. I hope it is not unjust to the government to suggest that there is something in connection with the tenders; but I have been informed, although I do not know this to be a fact, that the tenders which have been received for making the alterations have been made by Conservatives in the town of St. Stephen. On the other hand I understand there is no one there who happens to be a supporter of the present administration who is equipped for making those alterations. If it is the intention of the government to wait until such time as they can get a tender from one of their own party, they will have to wait until the next generation grows up.

This matter has been hanging fire for the last five years and it is only proper that the government should understand the situation from the point of view of the people in the town. The whole patronage system in that county seems to be narrowed down to one person, and if a whole community is going to be subject to one person in respect to alterations and other matters of this kind, it is time that some of the conditions be changed. Here we have one man deciding not only in this matter but in everything else that comes up in connection with any expenditures in Charlotte county. He decides for the county whether or not the government should make these expenditures and it is time that the government take the people in the county into consideration and not one person alone. I hope what I understand to be the case is not so, but indications point that way.

The same thing has come under my observation in connection with two or three requests I have made of the government with respect to certain matters. Some members of the government promised me they would do certain things for the county in respect to little matters. When I would bring a matter before them, they would say: "Yes, I think that is absolutely necessary and I will look after it." But before they look after it, they have to refer it to the gentleman I have in mind and what is his answer? He says: "No, if anything is wanted for the county, let them come to me and I will look after it for them." Therefore that is cancelled. I am afraid the same condition exists in regard to making a slight alteration that is so necessary in a public building in order that the work may be carried on in a satisfactory manner in the interest of the postal services. This is not a new building; it is a building which the government own; it is a building that needs repair. The amount required is only a small one, and therefore I ask: Why carry it over from year to year, going through the farce of asking for tenders and then throwing the whole thing down until the next session? What did the government say in 1921, 1925 and 1926? "The post office is going to be enlarged; there is no difficulty about that; the undertaking is to begin at once." But the day after the ballots were counted, they forgot all about the matter. I do not believe it has any bearing on the town of St. Stephen as far as the voting is cencerned, nevertheless on every platform one of the government's supporters appears before the public making not only that promise but others, promises which have never been carried out since this government came into power, and which I do not believe they intend to carry out. Therefore I say in connection with something the government started themselves, in connection with alterations that are necessary for the convenience of the public, for the satisfactory carrying on of the public business, it is up to the government now to spend that paltry sum of $2,000 and not to put the matter off until next year by calling for tenders and then making a farce of it.

Mr. ELLIOTT: So far as I am aware the reason why a contract was not given out was because the lowest tender was quite a considerable amount above that estimated by our architect as a fair value for the work. I do not mean by that that the architect is always correct as to what these things should cost. Sometimes when we call for tenders and they are near the amount estimated, we have to pay more; but in this case the lowest tender was considerably above the estimate and there was quite a difference between the tenders, one being $300 higher than the other. This is, however, not a large item and while I cannot make any promises to my hon. friend about what will happen to the supplementary estimates, the chance of an item of this kind getting in is much better than that of an item of a larger amount. I think those are all the items that were held up.

Mr. FRASER: Will the minister give me the information about the tractors?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have obtained the information which I think my hon. friend wants. This is a gasoline tractor for Edmonton, costing $1,350. It consists of a four-cylinder gasoline engine with planetary gear, similar to a Ford truck, with rubber-tired wheels, etc., and it is used for the purpose of hauling mail trucks to and from mail cars on station platforms. All parts are made in Canada. It is assembled and supplied by A. C. Lariviere, 56 Colborne street, Montreal. It is the same type as those installed in Toronto and Moose Jaw and it is much cheaper than electric tractors which have been installed previously in many places where charging current is available, such as Montreal, London and Toronto. The price of the electric tractor is about $3,000. There was available in the department a photograph of the tractor and I have attached it to the memorandum which I shall be glad to hand to my hon. friend.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the horse-power of the tractor?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The information does not give the horse-power.

Mr. STEVENS: Twenty-five.

Mr. GARDINER: This tractor is very expensive for its size. It is only a very small horse-power. The minister should look into the matter further before he purchases any more.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The purchasing agent looked into the matter before this one was purchased.

Mr. LUCAS: What is the difference between this tractor and those previously purchased?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I assume this is a larger tractor. It is certainly a more expensive one.

Mr. GARDINER: I suggest that the minister look into the matter again. You can buy a Ford tractor for $500 or $600, and there is much more material in them than in these small things. The price is ridiculous when you consider what you get for your money, and I would ask the minister to look into it

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not think you can do this work with any smaller tractors. These are for hauling trucks around the station platforms, and I am told they are suitable for that work and are good value for the money.

Mr. GARDINER: I have seen these tractors at work around the various stations, and there is nothing to them. They should not cost half that amount.

Mr. ELLIOTT: But they do.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers—Nova Scotia—Bailey's Brook—repairs to pier, $2,500.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): Under the general vote for Nova Scotia harbours and rivers, I wish to bring to the attention of the Minister of Public Works, for the third successive year, the deplorable and inadequate condition of two harbours in the province of Nova Scotia with regard to public service and shipping facilities. As I said, this is the third session I have brought the matter to the attention of the Minister of Public Works, twice to the attention of the present minister, and once to his predecessor.

The first harbour I wish to speak about is that of Port Greville, on the bay of Fundy. The importance of that harbour may be realized from the business that passed through the harbour in 1926. Before giving that, let me say that this locality is not served by any other means of transportation. It has no railway facilities, and the business of that locality is absolutely dependent on the shipping facilities provided. To give the committee an idea of the importance of the harbour let me say that in 1926 there passed through the harbour:

5,000,000 feet of lumber.
31 three and four master schooners repairs.
14 large vessels cleared with lumber.
8 cargoes of piling.
16 cargoes of lumber in smaller vessels.
1,000,000 feet of lumber shipped in scows.

It amounted, in all, to over 30,000 tons, deadweight, of shipping.

In 1924 or 1925, I am not sure which year, certain repairs were made to the breakwater and certain beach protection work was done. A great deal of money was expended, and it is claimed not properly expended; that is, the expenditure did not give the service it should have provided; a lot of unnecessary work was done, and a lot of necessary work was left undone. The complaint is that the breakwater at this point does not extend out far enough to protect the harbour channel.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Just what was the date of that work?

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): In 1924 or 1925, I am not sure which, but I think it was 1924. The chief complaint is that the breakwater does not extend far enough out into the harbour to protect the channel, and the result is that with the flow of the tide back and forth, sediment is deposited in the channel; the harbour is gradually filling up, and it will not be long before there will be no harbour there at all. The result will be that the people of that locality will be unable to ship their products to the markets of the world. I have a communication here from a member of a shipbuilding company in Port Greville, drawing my attention to the fact that this breakwater must be extended by the government, and also that the beach protection, which extends from the breakwater along the shore, must be repaired. He says in conclusion. "Unless something is done soon this harbour will be a thing of the past." It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, in view of all the money that has been lavishly expended by this government in different parts of the Dominion of Canada, and especially in the city of Ottawa, there should surely be enough money in the treasury to protect important public works that require immediate attention in order to enable the people to conduct their shipping business. Not only on that ground, but from the standpoint of good sound business this breakwater should be extended and the beach protection work repaired, because if much more time is allowed to elapse the cost of these repairs will be double or treble what it would cost to-day. I implore the minister to look into this matter very carefully, and to bring down an item in the supplementary estimates to provide for this service. I admit that this matter has been taken up by some of the persons in that locality with the engineers who are in charge of the government works in the province of Nova Scotia, but apparently the government's engineers there do not appear to understand the significance of what is required at this port. I would urge the government—and I make this plea on behalf of the people of that district—to have this very necessary work done in order that these people may be provided with proper shipping facilities.

The other harbour I wish to bring to the attention of the minister is that of West Advocate. Before speaking of that, I would ask the minister whether an appropriation is to be placed in the supplementary estimates to provide for extending the breakwater at West Advocate. In that case, I shall have nothing further to say, and it will save time.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The name of West Advocate is familiar to me. The work my hon. friend mentions has been considered up to a certain point, but whether or not an appropriation will be included in the supplementary estimates, it is quite impossible for me to say at the present time.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): No definite decision has been arrived at?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The supplementary estimates have not been before the treasury board or council.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): I understand from parties living in that district that the rumour has been circulated there that an estimate amounting to $8,000 would be placed in the supplementary estimates to provide for the extending of the breakwater at West Advocate. As the minister says that this has not been definitely decided upon, I wish to bring to his attention the situation at this point. West Advocate is also a port on the bay of Fundy, and it has no other transportation facilities beyond the harbour; there is no railroad within a good many miles of this point, and all the lumber, all the pulp, and all the fish of that locality have to be shipped from these two important ports that I have mentioned. At West Advocate, on account of the shortness of the breakwater, vessels cannot get into the harbour, and all the lumber has to be shipped to them in scows and taken out and loaded in the vessels in the stream. The breakwater needs an extension of about 100 feet, I am told, and I would urge the minister to give this matter his serious consideration, because it is impossible for the people living in this district to conduct their shipping business properly and to get their products to market unless the shipping facilities are adequate. I plead with the minister to place in the supplementary estimates a sum sufficient to put these two breakwaters in proper repair, and to extend them at least one hundred feet so the harbours will be protected.

Item agreed to.

Blue Rocks—wharf repairs, $2,700.

Mr. ERNST: Mr. Chairman, I am not objecting to the item, but there are two Blue Rocks, one in the county of Antigonish and the other in Lunenburg county. In the one there is a government breakwater; in the other there is a government wharf. I assume that this item applies to the wharf at Blue Rocks in Lunenburg county, inasmuch as it is in a deplorable condition.

[Mr. Elliott.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend can rest assured that this applies to the place where the wharf needs repairs the most—at Blue Rocks, Lunenburg county.

Mr. ERNST: Thank you.

Item agreed to.

Bridgewater—repairs to and reconstruction of railway wharf, $30,200.

Mr. ERNST: In this connection again, Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to offer I understand that last year the wharves generally were taken over from the railways by the Public Works Department. The wharf at Bridgewater is in a deplorable condition, and a car went through the deck last year. I am very grateful indeed that the minister has seen fit to have this work included in the estimates. But I wish to call his attention to another railway wharf at Lunenburg. Both wharves are of equal importance to the communities they serve. The wharf at Lunenburg was constructed at considerable expense, and is the only wharf suitable for ships of any size. The outer portion is absolutely useless; there is no top on it whatsoever, and the bare piles are sticking out in the water. The inner portion is inadequate for the purpose for which it is needed. In the spring large quantities of bait are brought into Lunenburg by the railway, and it has been the custom for the freight cars to be taken on to the wharf and the bait loaded into schooners. Since the wharf is in such bad repair it is necessary to cart the bait from the railway yard down to the respective wharves of the fish merchants. At the time I brought the railway wharf at Bridgewater to the minister's attention I also mentioned this wharf. I sincerely hope that he will make provision in the supplementary estimates to look after these much needed repairs. It is not a question of politics. It is a question of saving an investment that is rapidly going to waste.

Item agreed to.

Dingwall (Aspy Bay)—breakwater, $16,000.

Mr JOHNSTONE: What is the total tender for this breakwater?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The amount of the contract was $73,569: The expenditure to date is $59,590.

Item agreed to.

Grass Cove—breakwater—wharf, $28,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Part of it is a revote of $15,500.

Mr. GARDINER: Will this appropriation be sufficient to complete the work?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Guysborough—dredging, $23,800.

Mr. LUCAS: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The work proposed to be done consists of dredging three areas: (1) Channel through the bar at Porter's beach; (2) Removal of point of bar at the beacon (Stoney Patch) 450 feet long, 120 feet in extreme width; (3) small area at Peart beach 250 feet long, 30 feet in extreme width. The total quantity to be dredged is 24,330 cubic yards place measurement, or 31,630 cubic yards scow measurement. The material consists of boulders, gravel and clay.

Mr. LUCAS: Will this amount complete the work?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is expected to.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers generally—repairs and improvements, $65,000.

Mr. SHORT: I wish to call the attention of the minister to a very small amount that is placed in the estimates for the constituency which I have the honour to represent, and which probably has as long a coast line as any constituency in Nova Scotia. In looking over the different items I find we have an appropriation of only $17,000 to take care of all the breakwaters in Digby-Annapolis. I think the records of the department will show that in the constituency there are as many breakwaters as in any other riding in the province. The neighbouring constituency of Shelbourne-Yarmouth, which is represented by the hon. Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) has an appropriation of $74,500. I have not any complaint to make, because I have not the slightest doubt that the amount is justified and required; but the same thing applies to my constituency. I look again to the constituency of Antigonish-Guysborough, represented by my hon. friend Mr. William Duff, who sits on the other side of the house, and I find that for his riding the appropriation is $57,600. Why is my constituency discriminated against and allowed only $17,000, while the other two are so generously provided for? I certainly feel that there has been the greatest discrimination, and I am entitled to the same treatment for my constituency as these gentlemen get for theirs. The public service demands it. The government say that they want to do everything they can for the fishing industry in the maritimes, and they have gone to considerable expense appointing a commission to investigate the fisheries problems there. That commission will cost the country a great deal of money. It has made some splendid recommendations which I believe this government will carry out as far as they can. I do not think they can carry them all out, but the commission has recommended that every consideration be given the fishing industry of the maritimes. But that industry cannot be carried on successfully in Nova Scotia without these breakwaters to afford proper protection. In my constituency, more perhaps than in others mentioned, we have the greatest need; the industry there is quite important; yet I am put off with only a trifling sum of $17,000 to take care of breakwaters in that constituency, while others have been liberally looked after. It is in the public interest that the constituency of Digby-Annapolis should be treated just as liberally by this government as such places as Yarmouth and Shelburne or Antigonish-Guysborough. I trust the minister will put a sufficient amount in his estimates to provide for the much needed repairs and improvements in my constituency. There is hardly a breakwater in the constituency which is long enough to enable the fishermen to carry on their vocation satisfactorily; in fact nearly all of them need lengthening, and a great many of them dredging. Some time ago I called the attention of the minister to a petition, which I presented, signed by the residents of Salmon river, Digby county, asking for the dredging of the channel. But no action has been taken; nothing is contained in the estimates for this work. I hope the minister will see that an amount is included in the supplementaries for this dredging in Salmon river. There is also a very important breakwater in my constituency at East Ferry in Digby county, connecting the mainland with Long island and Brier island. It is absolutely necessary that some dredging be done there. The minister has a petition from the municipal council of Digby county asking that a new breakwater be built at this point. It is a very important place; it serves the whole of Long island as well as Brier island.

There is no means of communication except a ferry and the breakwater is in a very bad state of repair. If we do not build a new one there, important repairs will have to be made. Dredging is also necessary and ought to be done this year. I trust the minister will give instructions to the district engineer with regard to the breakwater on the Salmon river and also with regard to one at Victoria beach. Last year I called his attention to the fact that a dredge was working in Digby harbour and I asked him to endeavour if possible to have some work done at Victoria beach, which is an important station at the mouth of Digby harbour. For some reason or other, however, arrangements could not be made. I sincerely trust the minister will give the matter his serious consideration. Do not let him show such partiality when giving out his appropriations for the year. Let him treat us all alike and he will not have very much trouble getting his estimates through. Surely he will take these matters into consideration and try to treat us as liberally as he can.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Much as I should like to get my estimates through easily, I cannot get more money than the treasury board will allow me or council will pass. I know my hon. friend will revise his statements as regards discrimination when he considers what has been done for one of his colleagues. If he will look at Queens-Lunenburg he will see how much has been spent there.

Mr. SHORT: A good many of the items for Queens-Lunenburg relate to works which have been begun already. They are revotes.

Mr. ELLIOTT: They were represented by the same man last year.

Mr. ERNST: I thank the minister for treating my constituency as generously as he has done, although I do not mean to say that he has given us everything that we need.

Mr. ELLIOTT: At least you will say I have given the things that are urgent.

Mr. ERNST: The minister has treated the constituency fairly; I will say that. But there is one matter to which I wish to call his attention—something that has arisen since these estimates were compiled. I refer to the harbour of Liverpool. Liverpool is a town of 3,000 and is the capital of Queens county. Since the house convened, thanks to the activities of the government of Nova Scotia, Liverpool has been assured of a newsprint mill of 200 tons capacity daily. This mill is being set up there largely because the power facilities at that point are the best in the province, and the mill will be situate at tidewater. The harbour is open the year round. But if the venture is to be a complete success it will be necessary for the department to cooperate with the provincial government and with the company in improving the harbour facilities. There is a sand bar across the harbour. It was dredged some years ago but it has again accumulated to such an extent that large vessels cannot use the port. I will ask the minister to give every consideration to the needs of this port, not merely because it is the port of the capital of Queens county but because it is destined to be one of the ports of Nova Scotia. May I ask him to make the fullest survey of the harbour with a view to having everything done which is necessary to make this port what it is destined to be.

Item agreed to.

La Have river—dredging, $43,000.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the explanation of this?

Mr. ERNST: That is my constituency; it is all right.

Mr. GARDINER: Is that the explanation?

Mr. LAPOINTE: It doesn't hold water.

Mr. DUNNING: He is getting too much.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The work is under contract and this is necessary to complete it.

Item agreed to.

L'Ardoise—repairs to and extension of harbour protection, $1,800.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Those of us from the west are not in a position to vote intelligently on these items; we must take the word of hon. gentlemen from the maritimes. I repeat now what I have said before with respect to these grants for harbours: it seems to me that the proper thing to do would be to increase the indemnity to the provincial government. Go back over a period of years and see what it has cost to keep up these harbours. In my opinion the provinces could expend this money to better advantage than we can. The members of the provincial legislatures are more closely in touch with the situation and they would know what they were dealing with. If you take the records of the three maritime provinces you will see that they have had efficient and economical administration; I know enough about the maritimes to be able to say that. I think the money would go further if spent by the provinces, and the government might take into consideration increasing the grant to the provinces and having these matters handled by them.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Does my hon. friend suggest that we change the British North America Act and give control of navigation to the provinces?

Mr. CAMPBELL: I do not know that that would be involved at all, although I am not a lawyer. However, I would not allow a little thing like the British North America Act to stand in the way.

Mr. LAPOINTE: But if there is one matter which is truly national in its character surley it is navigation.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I do not know that that has anything to do with my proposition, and I do not know that it would involve any change in the British North America Act, although I cannot say that with authority. If the administration of these matters were turned over to the maritime provinces my contention is that they could expend the money to much better advantage, more efficiently and more economically. The members of the legislative assemblies of those provinces are in a much better position to deal with these questions.

Mr. BRADETTE: But the members of this house from the maritime provinces should be able to deal with them.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Yes, but the members from all the other parts of the country have a responsibility, and in this case I suggest that the responsibility should rest entirely upon the members of the legislative assembly.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I think the hon. member for Mackenzie is so accustomed to the efficient government of the province of Saskatchewan that he expects to find the same condition in other parts of the Dominion.

Mr. McQUARRIE: With regard to the legal problem I suggest that we have a new doctor of laws in the house, and we might put it up to him.

Item agreed to.

GREAT LAKES AND ATLANTIC CANAL AND POWER COMPANY, LIMITED

The house resumed, from May 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Denis (Joliette) for the second reading of Bill No. 152, respecting the Great Lakes and Atlantic Canal and Power Company, Limited.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. CHURCH: I would like to ask the promoter if he would kindly explain the bill.

Mr. DENIS (Joliette): I have already spoken once to the bill. I have no objection to giving an explanation if I am permitted to speak again.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman (Mr. Church) has already spoken on the bill and so has the hon. gentleman who has moved the second reading, so that both are precluded from again addressing the house.

Mr. CHURCH: I had not finished my remarks the other night.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman has already spoken.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): Before the motion passes, I want to offer a suggestion. We do not know anything about what is involved in the bill. The sponsor of it did not explain it and we have had this year the spectacle in parliament of bills being reported out of committee without the consideration of a single clause in them.

Mr. CANNON: Will my hon. friend permit me? If the motion passes the bill will be sent not to the committee of the whole but to the railway committee, where it will be fully examined.

Mr. IRVINE: I quite appreciate that; but it is the privilege of the house to discuss the bill on the second reading and before we endorse the principle of the bill to that extent, we should know what it is about. I am not going to insist on that if we are assured that none of the closure tactics which have been practised during the last week in the house will be applied to the bill until we know what it is about.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am informed by the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) that he had not completed his speech the other night; that he intended to move the six months' hoist. Under those circumstances he should be allowed to speak.

Mr. DUNNING: How long did he speak the other night?

Mr. SPEAKER: He did not speak forty minutes. The hour of adjournment struck and he had not completed his speech.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): I move, seconded by Mr. Tummon:

That Bill No. 152, respecting the Great Lakes and Atlantic Canal and Power Company, Limited, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months' hence.

I wish to raise the question whether the second reading of this bill is in order inasmuch as it is within the four corners of a reference to the supreme court on the St. Lawrence waterways question by the following order in council which the Prime Minister laid on the table on the 31st January, and the issues covered by this bill are sub judice and relate to the jurisdiction of the federal and provincial authorities over navigation—the surplus waters, who owns the bed of these streams and the banks and rapids, and generally the power question as follows:

The committee of the privy council have had before them a report, dated 17th January, 1928, from the Minister of Justice, submitting that at the Dominion-provincial conference, held at Ottawa in the month of November, 1927, the premiers of certain of the provinces questioned the right of the Dominion to dispose of water-powers brought into being by the erection of Dominion works for the improvement of navigation, and asserted a right on the part of the province to dispose of any such water-powers within the limits of the provinces.

This bill is largely a power proposition and it also proposes to give over to a private company a canal running from Cornwall through Montreal. If the bill goes through there will be no St. Lawrence waterways. It will mean that the Canadian section will be out of the question for all time. The bill deals with the very questions which are now before the supreme court. All the questions involved in the preamble of it and indeed in the whole bill are now sub judice and I should like hon. members from Ontario to understand that if this particular proposition goes through, we shall have no St. Lawrence waterway. This is the question involved in the reference to the supreme court:

The committee, therefore, on the recommendation of the Minister of Justice, advise that, pursuant to the powers in that behalf conferred by section 60 of the Supreme Court Act, Your Excellency may be pleased to refer to the Supreme Court of Canada for hearing and consideration the following questions.

If hon. members will look at the questions involved in this particular bill they will see that it involves the very question of the jurisdiction of the province as regards not only water powers but the construction of a canal. Therefore it covers questions that are now before the supreme court. It has been announced by one of the provinces that it is going to carry the matter to the privy council, the court of last appeal. There was a debate in the house on the 10th April in connection with the St. Lawrence waterway and the Prime Minister suggested that the bill should stand until the papers were brought down. If hon. members will look at the correspondence between Mr. Kellogg, Secretary of the United States, and the Ambassador at Washington of the government of Canada, and the government of Canada, they will see that it covers the very questions that are involved in this bill, namely, the right of the federal authorities on the one hand and the right of the state or province on the other, the international question, the federal division of authority with the provinces, and other questions regarding the canalization of the new St. Lawrence waterway. Further they are starting to divert water at Chicago right down to the Mississippi river for a canal there. Then there is a canal proposition at Ogdensburg going down to Albany. The third is the proposition before the house to-night for a canal running from Cornwall through the deep sections of the Canadian waterway to Beauharnois and right down to Montreal, and they propose to construct a private canal and upset all the settled canal policy of Canada for the past fifty years. I do not know what is to become of the port of Montreal if this bill goes through and if everybody is to have the right to divert water right from lake Michigan all the way down the great lakes to Montreal for canal and power purposes. Among the questions referred to the supreme court was this:

1. Has the province any proprietary interest in flowing waters within the province—

In this case the water is wholly within the province of Quebec:

—and if so, what is the nature of such interest?

That is covered by the preamble of the bill and the sections that follow. The next question submitted to the supreme court was:

2. Does the ownership by the province of the bed of any stream whether such bed be level or sloping, give to the province the ownership of water-powers?

It has always been upheld that subject to the rights of navigation, the surplus waters, the bed of the river, the banks and rapids belong to the provinces. The question raised by this bill is already sub judice before the supreme court and no doubt it will be appealed to the privy council. This same question came up in this house two years ago in connection with the Morrisburg dam. The province of Ontario wanted to build a dam at Morrisburg and develop power wholly within Ontario, and the Minister of the Interior read an opinion in the house in the year 1926 to the effect that there was no doubt that so far as navigation was concerned the interest of the Dominion in international streams was paramount, but that the surplus waters and the bed of the river and the banks and rapids belong to the province after the rights of navigation were satisfied. The province applied under the Boundary Waterways Protection Act for power to build that dam, and plans were filed by Sir Adam Beck on behalf of the Ontario Hydro Commission and the Ontario government, but the application stood for three or four years, and never was granted. If that dam had been built, it would have been of benefit to the whole of eastern Ontario. It is true that the power to be developed under this bill which is now before us is from a river that is wholly on the Canadian side in Quebec, but what about the rights of the people farther up the lakes? What about the several other canals? And if the province of Quebec is to have this right, Ontario will also claim the same right, and so will the state of Illinois, New York, and other states, and you will find yourself on very dangerous ground. To continue with the questions referred to the supreme court:

2. Does the ownership by the province of the bed of any stream, whether such bed be level or sloping, give to the province the ownership of water-powers:

(a) created thereupon by dominion works for the improvement of navigation; or

(b) existing thereupon by nature?

3. Has the province any proprietary interest in or legislative control over:

(a) the canals, with lands and water-power connected therewith, and the lake and river improvements which were conveyed to the dominion by section 108, schedule 3, of the British North America Act, 1867, or in or over the disposal of any water-powers created thereby or existing thereupon from time to time; or

(b) water-powers created by works for the improvement of navigation constructed by or under the authority of the dominion since confederation; or

(c) works constructed wholly for power purposes by the dominion out of moneys appropriated by parliament for such purpose?

Part of this canal is for navigation purposes:

If so, what is the nature of such interest or control?

4. Has the dominion exclusive legislative power to regulate waters for the purposes of navigation:

(a) in navigable waters; and

(b) in non-navigable waters?

5. Where the dominion, for navigation purposes, expropriates or uses any part of the bed of any stream vested in the province, is the province entitled to any compensation for such expropriation or use?

6. Has the dominion the exclusive legislative control over and proprietary interest in water-powers brought into being by works authorized by parliament to be erected in an international stream for the purpose of carrying out an agreement between Canada and any foreign country looking to the creation of joint works for the improvement of navigation in such streams?

If not, what are the powers and rights of the province with regard to such water-powers?

[Mr. Church.]

That is the very question which this bill brings up. To continue:

7. Where the bed of a navigable stream is owned by the province or by a private individual, is the title of such owner subordinate to the public right of navigation, and to the provisions of any statute which may be enacted from time to time by parliament, within the powers conferred by section 91 (10) of the British North America Act, 1867?

In conclusion, I wish to quote May's Parliamentary Procedure, at page 709, in regard to what principle is involved in the second reading of a bill. He says:

The second reading of a private bill corresponds with the same stage in other bills, and in agreeing to it the house affirms the general principle, or expediency, of the measure. There is, however, a distinction between the second reading of a public and of a private bill, which should not be overlooked. A public bill being founded on reasons of state policy, the house, in agreeing to its second reading, accepts and affirms those reasons: but the expediency of a private bill, being mainly founded upon allegations of fact, which have not yet been proved, the house, in agreeing to its second reading, affirms the principle of the bill, conditionally, and subject to the proof of such allegations before the committee. Where, irrespective of such facts, the principle is objectionable—

As it is in this case, because the question is sub judice:

—the house will not consent to the second reading; but otherwise, the expediency of the measure is usually left for the consideration of the committee.

The time to enter a protest against the principle of a bill is on the second reading, and I am opposed to this bill in principle. I say further that in view of the order in council which I have read, this bill should not be gone on with on grounds of law and of public policy, and in view also of the exchange of correspondence between Washington and Ottawa on the whole question of the St. Lawrence deep waterway. The interests of navigation are paramount.

Mr. SPEAKER: On the point of order, if the question before the courts was exactly the same as the one that is being debated by the house, I would have no hesitation in saying, as I have said in similar circumstances, that the question, being sub judice, was not debatable before the house. But it is not the same question.

As regards the general point raised by the hon. gentleman, I find, according to Bourinot:

The Speaker will not give a decision upon a constitutional question, nor decide a question of law, though the same may be raised on a point of order or privilege.

That disposes, I think, of the question of the point of order.

The question now before the house is that this bill, respecting the Great Lakes and Atlantic Canal and Power Company, Limited, be read a second time, and in amendment thereto Mr. Church moves that the said bill be not now read a second time, but that it be read a second time this day six months hence. The question is on the amendment.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): Just before the question is put, while my views on the bill would probably coincide with those of the hon. member who has moved the six months hoist, it is customary to allow petitioners for private bills to appear before a committee of the house and there state their views, what they want, and why they want it, and the normal course to follow in the case of a bill of this character would be to refer it to the select standing committee on railways and canals. While I cannot predict the outcome, the very fact that the six months' hoist has been moved indicates that the bill would be very carefully scrutinized by that committee, and I submit that that work can be done very much better by a committee of the house than by our summarily disposing of the matter on the second reading of the bill. I think we would all agree that we reserve our right to destroy the bill on the third reading even if it does come back from the committee. The work of the house in connection with a bill of this kind can be done much more conveniently by one of the standing committees, and for that reason I am opposed to the six months' hoist.

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto): I think one would not take exception as a general rule to what the minister has just said. The ordinary course is to allow such a bill to be passed on to a committee in order that it may be explained there by its promoters, but that, of course, is subject to consideration of the general situation which follows the passing of the second reading, that thereby the principle of the bill is more or less adopted. It seems to me that this bill can have no possible chance of success. On principle it is wrong in the circumstances, because we have the very recent declaration of the government that the whole question of the St. Lawrence waterway is to be considered; that not only have negotiations been entered into and correspondence passed between Washington and Ottawa, but that the government has the matter under consideration. I have forgotten the exact language used, but that is the effect of it. This bill is diametrically opposed to any fair consideration of the St. Lawrence waterway proposition. If this bill were passed granting the promoters power to construct the projected canal, it would be an absolute bar to the deepening of the St. Lawrence waterway as a national undertaking. One has only to look at the powers contained in section 17 and the other powers scattered throughout the bill to realize that it is not at all the sort of measure which the house should consider at the moment. It is directly opposed to ownership by the Dominion of the deepened waterway when and if it be completed. The bill is studded with provisions that will interfere with and endanger action by this house on the St. Lawrence waterway project.

Now, we have not reached the position where the St. Lawrence waterway deepening can be discussed, but I think I may express it as the general feeling of the house that this great undertaking will come eventually. So the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has put it, and so most of us in the house believe. But to place in the hands of private owners navigation rights through the St. Lawrence is beyond belief. I do not know of a case where such rights have been granted, either by the federal or the provincial authorities, to private individuals. Nor should they be so granted, because as a highway on land should be free to the passer-by, so should the road by water be free to those who seek to use it. No private corporation is entitled to come to this house and ask to be given powers which will override the natural rights of the people to the ownership of their own water courses.

Mr. DUNNING: Might I interrupt my hon. friend just there? He says that no private interest should have the right to come to this house and ask. I think it is the fundamental right of every citizen to come and ask. To receive is another matter, but to come and ask is the undeniable right of anyone.

Mr. GEARY: I accept the hon. minister's correction. I may not have stated the position in apt terms, but my meaning is surely evident. Perhaps a private person has the right to come and ask for anything—

Mr. DUNNING: That is right.

Mr. GEARY: —but no private person has the right to expect that he may get something of this kind.

Mr. DUNNING: I agree.

Mr. GEARY: So, Mr. Speaker, it is so obvious to me that the principle should not be accepted by this house that I concur fully in the motion to read the bill this day six months. We are shortening discussion of the bill perhaps, but its purpose requires no explanation or discussion; those who run may read; and the dangers that would follow the passage of such a bill are so manifest that I submit the house should not at this moment advance it even by a second reading.

Mr. A. E. ROSS (Kingston City): Mr. Speaker, if we give this bill second reading we accept its principle. I do not think any member is prepared to endorse it. Having, as the minister says, given the bill a little chloroform, I think we should not prolong the agony by allowing it to go to committee for further discussion. I am absolutely opposed to the principle involved, and I do not see any reason for allowing the bill to proceed a step further. Therefore, I support the amendment.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, this bill, as the member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) intimated, involves the pretty wide question of navigation rights. I had not known, until he drew my attention to it, that the question of navigation was involved, and with all due deference to the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) I submit that no bill involving this question on such an important body of water as the St. Lawrence should receive the recognition of this house even to the extent of sending it to committee. I have not heard any satisfactory explanation of the bill. The minister will doubtless reply: Wait until the bill goes to committee and then you will get a full explanation. But the fact of the matter is that if we give the bill second reading we are virtually telling the committee to consider the possibility of granting to private interests navigation rights on the St. Lawrence. The whole situation is so ridiculous that I cannot imagine even the Minister of Railways countenancing it. Frankly, I am in agreement with him on the general principle that private individuals are entitled to fair consideration for their bills.

Mr. DUNNING: That is all I am asking.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I think the minister is quite right in that regard, where questions of this nature do not arise. but in my opinion this house would make a grave mistake if it were now to give its imprimatur to the possibility of private interests receiving navigation rights on the St. Lawrence. I am therefore going to vote for the amendment of the hon. member for Toronto Northwest.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely opposed to this bill, and have been since I first read it. I was prepared to allow it to go to committee and do my best to kill it there, which is really the normal course; but I find myself in a position where I cannot vote against the six months' hoist because I believe the bill merits it. Had that motion not been made, I should not have grievously objected to the second reading simply as a matter of form. Under the circumstances I shall vote for the amendment, for I do believe this bill is bad in principle.

Mr. A. J. ANDERSON (Toronto-High Park): Mr. Speaker, I associate myself with the mover of this amendment (Mr. Church). We have spent a large amount of money in getting reports on the deepening of the St. Lawrence waterway. The government has not declared its policy with respect to the project, but it has submitted certain questions of federal and provincial jurisdiction to the supreme court. The province of Quebec is not the only province interested in the result; Ontario and the western provinces are also concerned. The province of Quebec may have the right to grant incorporation to this company which proposes to build a canal, but the canal would really form part and parcel of the St. Lawrence waterway. The deepening of the St. Lawrence waterway is not only an interprovincial matter, it is international.

There is sufficient in the preamble of the bill to show just exactly what is intended by the promoters. The principle involved is absolutely contrary to what this parliament should sanction. The United States have treaty rights with regard to the navigation of the St. Lawrence, and this canal, if constructed, would very materially interfere with those rights. This would bring up the question of damages and other collateral matters. I am strongly opposed to the bill on principle, for it affects the question of navigation; and, further, the question of federal and provincial jurisdiction, which at present is under consideration by the supreme court. This is simply trying to get certain powers which will create a complication when we come to deal with the whole question. The preamble itself is quite wide. It says:

Whereas a petition has been presented by the Great Lakes and Atlantic Canal and Power Company, Limited, a body politic and corporate, duly incorporated under the Companies Act, chapter seventy-nine of the revised statutes of Canada, 1906, hereinafter called "the company", praying that it may be authorized to construct and operate a deep waterway from the western end of lake St. Francis at or near the town of Cornwall in the county of Stormont, in the province of Ontario to Hungry bay in the county of Beauharnois in the province of Quebec, and to build a canal from said Hungry bay to a point at or near Melocheville, in the said county at Lake St. Louis, and a deep waterway through lake St. Louis to a point at or near Caughnawaga in the county of La Prairie; or by an alternative route to build a canal from Lake St. Francis at Hungry bay in the county of Beauharnois, through the said county of Beauharnois and thence through the counties of Chateauguay and La Prairie, to some point on La Prairie basin, in the latter county; to create a deep waterway from La Prairie basin to deep water in the harbour of Montreal, so as to make and complete throughout the entire distance from Cornwall aforesaid to the harbour of Montreal as aforesaid, a navigable canal—

And so on.

That is involved in the St. Lawrence scheme, and, as I say, it is merely an attempt to anticipate action in regard to the entire question. If this bill were passed it would thwart the whole scheme. I am opposed to it on principle and I shall vote for this amendment. No doubt if it went to the committee there would be ample opportunity to discuss it, but I do not think it deserves the consideration that was shown a similar bill last year. On principle that bill was wrong but it was sent to a committee and it was there for a considerable time before it was killed. I am satisfied to support this amendment and I think it would be the part of wisdom for the house to accept it.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Argenteuil): Inas much as I am paired with the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) and therefore am unable to vote, our pair being binding at all times, I rise now to say that I am strongly opposed to this bill—as strongly opposed as anyone can be. I can see no purpose in considering the matter at all under present conditions. The government have referred to the courts the question as to the respective rights of the provinces and of the Dominion, and the adpotion of this bill would create complications for the administration in any future settlement of that question. I merely rise now to express my opposition to the bill.

Mr. JAMES ARTHURS (Parry Sound): I have no hesitation in saying that I am opposed to this bill on general principle, especially in view of the fact that there has been so much agitation in Canada and the United States in relation to the deep waterway, with a part of which this bill must interfere. There can be no doubt that the question now before the courts as to the respective rights of the provinces and of the Dominion is involved in this measure, as it is in all legislation along the same line. I am therefore opposed to any measure of this kind at the present time.

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Rosetown): If this bill passes and becomes law it will give power to a private concern to interfere with a part of what is known as the deep waterway from Montreal to the great lakes. I thought we had practically laid down a policy regarding utilities of this kind when a similar bill was defeated last year. In my opinion it is time this parliament adopted a definite policy governing such great public utilities, particularly one of such magnitude and importance to the whole country as the project under consideration. I am on principle opposed to placing any public utility in private hands and I shall vote for the amendment. There should be no possibility of a bill of this kind passing this house.

Mr. M. N. CAMPBELL (Mackenzie): I wish to add my word of protest against the bill and to express my approval of the amendment. Among the powers asked for in the preamble is this:

So as to make and complete throughout the entire distance from Cornwall aforesaid to the harbour of Montreal as aforesaid, a navigable canal or canals and ship channels of a depth of not less than thirty feet between said points for the passage of ocean-going vessels—

This is an important part of the bill.

—and to generate, distribute and sell such electrical energy as may be available.

As the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) has said, this bill is very much like the one rejected by the committee last year and known as the Georgian Bay Canal bill. That bill was turned down and I can hardly conceive of parliament accepting a similar bill at the present time. The government should come forward with some definite policy so that parliament and the country may not be left in a maze concerning projects of this character. It is time the government came forward and definitely stated their attitude towards such bills. It seems a remarkable situation that a bill of this importance, involving a project of such magnitude, should be introduced by a private member without any expression of opinion from the government regarding not only the question under consideration at the moment but all other matters of this nature. I hope that in the few minutes left for the discussion of the bill some member of the government will tell us where the administration stands with respect to it.

Mr. DUNNING: I did so.

PAIRS

Mr. TUMMON: I was paired with the hon. member for Chambly-Verchères (Mr. Langlois). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

[Mr. Campbell.]

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): I was paired with the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hour for private bills has expired.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

Public Works — Malagash — wharf repairs, $3,600.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): I would like to ask the minister whether this amount is for repairs in addition to the amount voted last year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes. If my hon. friend will look at the column showing the revotes he will see that none of this money is being revoted.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): This amount is to continue the repairs which were started last year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: To repair the pierhead by driving creosoted close-piling along both sides and across the end, and renewing and repairing the decking, guard, stringers and so on. This is all new work.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): I should like to draw the attention of the minister to the fact that I am instructed that the shipping facilities at this point are inadequate. This is a very important port on the straits of Northumberland and is quite near a salt mine which has expanded rapidly during the past few years. I am told that they require more adequate shipping facilities than they have at present at this point, and I would like the minister to take this into consideration when bringing down the supplementary estimates.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I might tell my hon. friend that it is largely on account of these requirements of the salt industry that this vote is included in the estimates. I will read our report:

> This wharf is the shipping point for the output of an important salt product industry, which is growing rapidly. The anticipated value of water shipments of salt for 1927 is approximately $28,000; the value of products and supplies shipped and received over this wharf in addition to the above amounts annually to approximately $15,000.

It is to provide shipping accommodation that this work is being done.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): I am not objecting to the amount; I say it should be increased. This is an important industry and the surrounding country is so rich in agriculture as well that everything possible should be done to see that proper and adequate shipping facilities are provided.

Item agreed to.

Murphy's Pond, Port Hood—harbour improvements, $6,000.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I see there is a revote of $6,000. Will the minister explain why the money was not spent last year?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This work is under contract, and it has not been completed.

Item agreed to.

New harbour — (Antigonish-Guysborough county), breakwater extension, $25,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister explain why this item is required?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is required in order to complete the work.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): I do not rise to oppose the vote to my hon. friend from Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff) but I want to call attention to the fact that there is some $60,000 voted for wharves, and so on, in the county of Antigonish-Guysborough. For the county of Halifax, with the indented coastline that they have, to say nothing of the harbours, and so on, there is a vote of some $16,000. Sixty thousand for Antigonish-Guysborough, and sixteen thousand for Halifax! It seems to me that there is discrimination there, and it is hardly fair to the county I represent.

Item agreed to.

Parrsboro—repairs to harbour protection works, $3,600.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It covers repairs to the harbour, protection work. They have to tear down and rebuild a portion 160 feet long, 10 feet wide, and 10 feet high. This work has greatly deteriorated, and has been damaged by storms. This is one of the important shipping ports of the province; the lumber shipments are valued at $750,000 to $1,000,000.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): Is this under contract?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, it is a new work.

Item agreed to.

Pictou—repairs to railway wharves, $25,000.

Mr. CANTLEY: I would like to ask the minister a question in regard to the control or ownership of these wharves and the other railway wharves in the province of Nova Scotia. Would the minister be good enough to tell me if the Public Works department has taken these wharves over from the railway department?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The transfer is hardly completed, but negotiations have been under way and are very nearly completed for the taking over of these wharves by the Public Works department.

Mr. CANTLEY: I presume that that will apply to the other railway wharves in the province of Nova Scotia?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It applies to a number of them, but not all of them.

Mr. CANTLEY: Will the minister be good enough to tell me the exceptions?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have not that information here, but I can give it to my hon. friend later.

Mr. CANTLEY: You will let me have that later?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. CANTLEY: I presume this amount will be expended by the Public Works department?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Oh, yes.

Mr. CANTLEY: I want to thank the minister for the vote, and also for the small vote to cover repairs to pier at Bailey's Brook. Both were urgently needed, and the repairs to the railway wharves at Pictou should have been made some considerable time ago. I want to thank the minister for undertaking it at this time.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): Would the minister be good enough to tell me what has led up to the transfer to an outside department of these railway properties and railway wharves which are necessary for the operation of the railway? It would appear as though only a portion of them were being taken over. Why a portion, and not the whole? If the policy is to take them over, why not take them all? What led up to it, and what is the real policy with regard to it? Why should a railway wharf be taken over by another department of the government? They are part and parcel of the railway, operated and used by the railway, and the Public Works department has nothing whatever to do with them.

Mr. ELLIOTT: One of the reasons why we are not taking all the wharves over, as I answered my hon. friend, is that there is a difference between those which are public wharves and those which are mostly railway wharves. It was thought by the railway authorities, as this department is charged with the construction and repair of wharves throughout the country, that they could look after the work perhaps more conveniently, having facilities already available, than the other department. There was the additional reason that they were not wholly railway wharves, but served the public generally, and it was contended that they should come under the Public Works department.

Mr. CANTLEY: That remark cannot apply to the railway wharves at Pictou, which are wholly railway wharves, serving only the railway or the customers of the railway.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Our information is to the effect that this wharf is used for various purposes. It is used extensively for the shipment of timber on vessels, loading, of course, from railway cars. This is one of the notes that our representative gives us:

> The Canadian National Railway wharves at this place afford the only adequate wharf accommodation for all traffic.
> This wharf (shed wharf) is a transfer wharf for freight, mail and passengers to Magdalen islands, via steamer Lovat; Prince Edward Island via steamer Hochelaga, and other traffic to local ports.

Mr. CANTLEY: That information is quite correct so far as it goes, but it is not strictly accurate in this respect; the railway wharves are used exclusively in connection with the railway. It is quite true that the coastal boats land their freight and their passengers.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Would my hon. friend say that the vessels going to the Magdalen islands are railway vessels?

Mr. CANTLEY: No. If my hon. friend will wait a moment I will make myself clear. It is quite true that the coastal boats use these wharves, but they use them to land passengers and freight which come over the railway. That is the point. Ninety-nine per cent of the freight handled by these boats passes over the railway either inwards or outwards. As a matter of fact they are feeders to the railway. Any local freight coming by these boats is infinitesimal, probably not more than one per cent. These wharves are strictly railway wharves. The east wharf which the minister referred to as handling lumber, handles nothing but deal and lumber of that character which is largely shipped abroad. There are several other wharves which are used by other shippers. I may add further that both these wharves were built by the Intercolonial prior to its being taken over by the Canadian National railways and they are essentially and entirely railway wharves. I want to make that clear. I asked whether they were now being taken over by the Department of Public Works as I have been endeavouring to get authoritative information for six or eight weeks. I asked a question in regard to it in the house some few weeks ago and was told that the wharves had not been taken over. I now note from the explanation made by the minister that while they are not yet actually taken over, the matter is under negotiation and the intention is to take them over.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The intention is to take them over but—

Mr. CANTLEY: Then I understand their administration will be by the Department of Marine and Fisheries as is the custom in regard to wharves under the control of the Department of Public Works?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Round Hill wharf repairs, $5,000.

Mr. SHORT: Is this Round Hill, Annapolis county?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. SHORT: These repairs are very much needed. In fact the wharf was in such a condition last year that steamers could not call at it, and I would request the minister to be kind enough to give instructions to have the repairs made just as soon as possible.

Item agreed to.

Soldier's Cove wharf replacement, $4,200.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works if his department still persists in the stand which they have pursued so far in building a new wharf at Soldier's Cove.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is the intention.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): What explanation does the minister offer for this extra expenditure?

Mr. ELLIOTT: District Engineer Locke has reported under date of November 4, 1927, recommending that the new wharf be built of creosoted substructure pile type on the eastern side of the cove. The Chief Engineer reports as follows:

The petition sets out various reasons whereby it is considered the present site of the wharf would be the proper one and from the reports on file, dating from 1902 to date, I have excepted the following summary of statement as to actual conditions as reported by the engineers from time to time, and which deals with the points raised in the petition as well as such other features as seem to me to be pertinent to the question.

	East side	West side
Shelter	Well sheltered	Well sheltered
Cost	$4,150	$5,150

Or $1,000 more.

Location

In centre of district — At one side of district

Warehouse

To be provided, included in cost — Private owned, for sale

It is also stated that the east side is easier to keep in shape. The report continues:

I am not yet in a position to deal with the fifth point raised in the petition, that the highway from suggested site would be so steep as to make it impractical to haul more than one-third the average load from the wharf to the main highway, since Mr. Bernasconi, when assistant engineer in 1909, reported that the grade of the road from the eastern site would not be less than one in ten, which grade would render the hauling of loads a difficult matter.

However, in the report of October 25, 1927, by Assistant Engineer Gregory, forwarded with Mr. Locke's report of November 4, it is stated "and that the then objection, that the main highway was too far away from the site, had now been overcome by the provincial main highway coming closer to the site through diversion along the shore of the lake."

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Are those the only reasons that the minister's department now gives for the building of a new wharf in that locality?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is reported to us to be cheaper and better. Those are the reasons.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): I have taken the matter up with the Minister of Public Works and he has made the statement that the petition states so-and-so. I know of no petition that has been passed through my district except one and that is a petition in opposition to the new site of the wharf, a petition which the minister has in his possession and which is signed by 153 residents of the district and vicinity which the proposed wharf would serve. The question came up in 1921 and the same engineer who has handed in the report which the minister to-day reads, reported that the site of the existing wharf was the site that should be chosen. The people in that vicinity claim that this new wharf is an unnecessary expenditure of public money. We need public money. I make the statement that I am not opposed to the expenditure of public money in my constituency and I say that we have not so far received a sufficient quota of public moneys that are expended in Nova Scotia and in the Dominion generally. The county of Richmond is entitled to far more money but that money should be expended properly. It should not be expended as this $4,200 is to be expended in Richmond where it is being spent wholly and solely for political purposes. It is being spent in order that a vacant farm in that constituency may be sold at a better price. That is the whole statement. There are not six people in that community who want this new public wharf. It is only the patronage holder, my opponent in the last election, and the individual who owns the property, who are interested in having this new wharf built. As my hon. friend knows, his department must function when they are asked to do so by departmental heads, and that is the reason why such a report is in the department to-day. I have here a petition which was presented to the hon. Minister of Public Works, signed by 153 residents of that district. They are not all of one political faith, but of all political faiths. There are only three or four people in that district who have not signed this petition. Those people have signed because they want public money spent for public service. They do not want to see public money wasted. They want the present wharf which was built in 1921 to be repaired by this government. They do not want the new wharf built, and the minister knows that full well. This is the petition which has been signed by 153 persons of that district:

We, the undersigned residents of Soldier's Cove, Grand River and vicinity, humbly petition your department to reconsider the matter of constructing a wharf at Soldier's Cove, opposite the site of the present wharf, for the following reasons:

Whereas, the location on the opposite side of the harbour is not suitable for shipping—

They make the statement openly, that it is not suitable for shipping. Further, let me state that the only marine captain in that district, Captain D. L. Stewart, a man who has sailed the Bras d'Or lakes for the last twenty-five or thirty years, is the man who signs second on this list, and he should know whether the above statement in the petition is right. The petition goes on:

—is not suitable for shipping, because of its exposure to the Bras d'Or lakes, for a distance of twenty miles, with north and northwest winds prevailing;

Whereas, ships could not moor at suggested site of new wharf, with above-mentioned winds prevailing;

Whereas, wharf site would have to be purchased and the department put to the expense of building a new wharf, where one now exists;

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, only one or two people in that whole district are interested in the purchase of this site. It goes on:

Whereas, a highway would have to be constructed for a distance of half a mile;

Imagine it! A new highway will have to be built although a highway already exists leading to the present wharf. It goes on:

Whereas, the highway from suggested site would be so steep as to make it impractical to haul more than one-third the average load, from the wharf to the main highway;

Whereas, the construction of a wharf on the suggested site would increase the distance now traversed to Lewis Cove road, by at least one and a half miles;

The people who are mainly served by this wharf are the people in the Grand River district, and the petition of 1921 which caused the government to take action was largely signed by the people of Grand River district. They wanted that wharf, and they want the wharf that exists to-day. It is only the few who have a piece of property at the lower end of Soldiers' Cove who want this new wharf—a wharf, mind you, to reach which the people will have to go one and a half miles further. As the petition says:

Whereas the present site of the wharf at Soldier's Cove is most easy of access—

The people who are to be served say that the present wharf is most easy of access. The petition goes on:

We further petition your department to effect the necessary repairs to the present wharf, which we consider would be of greater service to the community which it serves and a great saving to the treasury of this dominion.

In 1921 this same engineer, Mr. Locke, investigated both sites through his resident engineer, and when no political pressure was being exerted, he selected the site on which the present wharf is built and recommended that to the department, but to-day on account of the little bit of political pressure that has been exerted by my opponent in the last election, and by one or two people who want to make a little divvy out of the sale of a piece of land, this government throws discretion to the winds. Our fishing communities need the expenditure of public money on every part of the Atlantic seaboard, and all they are asking for in this case is a little bit of repairs to the present wharf. Owing to the action of provincial government officials in 1925 the old wharf was broken, and this government has never seen fit to repair it. There was an item in the estimates of 1926 for repairing that wharf, but this government did not see fit to expend that money when they came back into power, and to-day we find in the estimates an item of $4,200 for the building of a new wharf in a different locality altogether. As the representative of that community, as the one who receives the large support of that district and the support of the adjoining districts, I make the statement here that I am opposed to that sort of public expenditure. I want public money expended for public service, and not to gratify a few barnacles that are hanging on to this government.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): No. I move to amend the item by striking out the words "wharf replacement" and substituting therefor the words "repairs to present wharf." It may be necessary to reduce the amount from $4,200. I am opposed to this item absolutely.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The house has no doubt been impressed by the excellent case presented by the hon. member who has just taken his seat, and although I know nothing about the situation my curiosity has been aroused, and I would ask the minister to explain the situation, or to answer the allegations that have been made by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I did not notice whether my hon. friend was in his seat when I made the explanation in regard to this item. If he was, I suppose he heard me.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am sorry I did not catch what the minister said.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I gave a full explanation, but I shall be glad to give it again. This is not a new matter. It has been a matter of controversy in that community since this wharf was first proposed in the year 1902, and there has been a serious difference of opinion with regard to it. For that reason a very careful examination was made and greater care was taken in ascertaining the relative merits of the two sites than otherwise would have been the case.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Will the minister explain how it happens that a report evidently came from the engineer three or four years ago in favour of one site, and now another report comes from the same engineer in favour of a different site. I should be glad if the minister would elucidate that.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The first recommendation was in favour of the site that we now propose.

Mr. CHAPLIN: By the same engineer?

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): I take exception to the minister's statement. In 1902 there was no such thing as a wharf in that district. I have been practising medicine for fifteen years in that community, and I take exception to the minister's statement.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If my hon. friend was following me—

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): I have the floor, and I am going to keep it.

Mr. DUNNING: You have not. You gave it up and the minister took it.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): I have as much right to it as the hon. Minister of Railways.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I asked the hon. minister a question, and I thought he was doing his best to answer it. He had reached a comparison between the statement of the engineer a few years ago and his statement of to-day. I think he ought to be permitted to conclude his statement, and then I shall be delighted to hear the hon. member for Richmond-West Cape Breton finish his oration.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I was stating that this is an old controversy, and if my hon. friend from the riding had been paying attention to what I was saying, he would know perfectly well that I did not say there was a wharf there in 1902. I said that there had been an agitation between two contending parties in that riding as to the best site, each side wanting their own site ever since 1902. My information is that when the people of Soldier's Cove discovered it was proposed to reconstruct the wharf they started an agitation to build a new wharf at another location, the reasons for the change being: (1) The present wharf was at one end of the district, while the proposed site would be in the centre; (2) that when the present wharf was built the majority of the local people were in favour of having it at the site of the now proposed wharf; (3) and that the objection that the then highway was too far away from the site has now been overcome by the provincial main highway coming closer to the site through a deviation along the shore. I hope hon. members will not think that this decision was arrived at without the most careful consideration. One cost $4,200; the other will cost over $5,000. My hon. friend will not contend for a moment that the old wharf is suitable at the present time, or that it does not need complete reconstruction at the expenditure that I have stated. Those are the circumstances. The department takes full responsibility, and has arrived at this judgment after the most careful consideration.

Mr. CHAIRMAN: The hon. member's motion is in direct conflict with standing order 56, section 510:

> It is not allowable to attach a condition or an expression of opinion to a resolution in the committee of supply, or to change the destination of a grant.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Mr. Chairman, the minister states that an agitation had been conducted since 1902. No doubt when his party was in power from 1902 to 1911 the same people were interviewing the government and doing their utmost to have a wharf built in a locality where only one or two families lived. In 1921 the public placed before the government a petition, signed, as is the present petition, by 153 residents of the district. As a result of the petition the Department of Public Works, through this very same engineer, Mr. Locke, selected the site of the present wharf in Soldier's Cove. I may state that he selected it without political pressure being exerted, as is stated in the petition. Political pressure had been exerted, and was effective for fifteen or twenty years in preventing the wharf being built in that district. There is now a wharf at Soldier's Cove, and it will not take very much money to repair it. The top is in perfect repair; but in 1921 the Department of Public Works, through its engineer, used ordinary native wood instead of creosoted timber.

Mr. ELLIOTT: What year?

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): 1921. You cannot say that the engineer is bad from the political standpoint, for he has been as good a tool of this government as any that I have ever known. Now, Mr. Chairman, as the representative of that district, thoroughly conversant with every step that has been taken in the construction of this wharf, and knowing the interests that it must serve, I strongly object to the minister's statement. If we do our duty to-day we will repair the present wharf at Soldier's Cove and not incur this additional expense. Instead of handing out public money to a few of his heelers, I would ask the minister to extend some of it on wharves along the coast for the benefit of our fishermen; I would ask him to spend it in the opening up of the Grand river; I would ask him to spend it in building a public wharf at Louisburg, or in aiding the districts of Main à Dieu and the Lorraines, L'Ardoise, and so on; I would ask him to spend it in giving us a life saving station at Scatarie island.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

The CHAIRMAN: Carried.

Mr. QUINN: It is not carried yet. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the minister who requested the repairs to the breakwater at Devil's island, $1,400.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That item was passed some time ago.

Mr. QUINN: Who requested the repairs?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not propose to go back to the discussion of an item that was passed some time ago while another item is still under consideration.

Mr. QUINN: Is the item, Soldier's Cove, still under discussion?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes.

Mr. QUINN: I noticed that the minister did not reply to the hon. member for Richmond-West Cape Breton (Mr. Macdonald). This discussion comes under item 134. I am asking for an explanation about Devil's Island breakwater repairs in order to ascertain whether the telephone and telegraph communication between the island and the mainland has been re-established.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I shall be glad to give my hon. friend the information when I have the data relating to telegraphs and telephones. It is about three books from these items.

Mr. QUINN: May I ask if the item Dover, wharf repairs and extension, refers to Dover in Halifax county?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is Antigonish-Guysborough.

Mr. QUINN: Who directed the minister's attention to the wharf repairs at Owl's Head, $1,200? At whose request was it placed in the estimates?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It was supported by the engineer.

[Mr. J. A. Macdonald.]

Mr. QUINN: Who directed the engineer's attention to the weakness of the breakwater and the necessary repairs?

Mr. ELLIOTT: As far as I know the engineer is supposed to examine these wharves and report on their condition.

Mr. QUINN: At whose request?

Mr. ELLIOTT: On his own responsibility. That is what he is there for.

Mr. QUINN: Then we have Sheet Harbour wharf repairs, $1,000. I suppose the same answer applies to that. Then Tangier.

Mr. BANCROFT: I rise to a point of order. We had better call in all the Nova Scotia members so that we shall not have to go over this again. This is the second time we have gone over the list; they have all been discussed.

The CHAIRMAN: I would point out to the hon. member that we are taking this vote item by item.

Mr. QUINN: I am discussing vote 134.

The CHAIRMAN: The committee is now discussing Sydney wharf, $27,000.

Mr. QUINN: I am speaking to vote 134.

The CHAIRMAN: But the committee decided to take it item by item.

Mr. QUINN: Vote 134 is the whole item.

The CHAIRMAN: The committee decided to take vote 134 item by item and we are now at Sydney wharf.

Mr. QUINN: Then am I precluded from discussing any item that has been previously dealt with under this specific vote, 134?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Certainly.

Mr. QUINN: I am asking the Chairman, not you.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The hon. member was not here this afternoon and it has always been customary—it is an act of courtesy on the part of the minister—to answer reasonable questions regarding one of the items in a vote such as this.

Mr. LAPOINTE: One, yes; but he is going over the whole list.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Probably it would take less time if the question were answered.

The CHAIRMAN: The rule states:

Sometimes there are a number of items in a resolution. Each item may then, if the committee think proper, be taken up as a distinct question, and so discussed and amended. The debate in such a case must be strictly relevant to the item, and when it has been disposed of, no reference can be again made to it when the subsequent items are under consideration.

The committee decided to take vote 134 item by item, and to revert to items already passed is not in order.

Mr. McGIBBON: If we are to adhere to the letter of the rule we shall not make much progress. The minister and the government this afternoon absolutely blocked their own estimates; there is no question about that. The hon. member is asking a simple question and there is no reason why he should not get an answer. There has not been much opposition, but if an hon. member is to be prevented from asking questions because of a technicality we must take some other means of getting our rights.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member was not interfered with until he got beyond the item under discussion. He went down the list until he passed the item now before the committee. I called "Soldier's Cove" which was carried, and the committee is now considering Sydney wharf.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): I want to ask the minister a few questions. I am not through.

Mr. QUINN: He will be here another week now on account of this.

Mr. DUNNING: Perfectly proper; that is your right.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): Did I understand the minister to say that the repairs to the old wharf would cast $5,000? It would cost only $4,200 to build a wharf on the east side of Soldier's Cove. Will it take $5,000 odd to repair the old wharf?

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend is right in his understanding of what I said.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): As I understand it, we are going to spend $4,200 in the purchase of a site to construct a half mile of highway and build a wharf; and the wharf will be built at a point which is not feasible. The first name on the petition to which I have referred is that of a shipper, the only man who ships out of that port, and in his opinion and in the opinion of the others the site is not feasible. These people state that you cannot build that wharf for that money; you cannot purchase the site and construct the highway for the money. The old wharf, constructed on the other site, did not cost more than $3,000, and all that is required to-day is a little creosoted timber. I cannot see how the minister can stand up and advance that sort of argument and expect this committee to accept it.

Mr. MacNUTT: It is a most unusual occurrence for a representative of a maritime riding to get up and ask for a vote to be reduced, and I am sure the hon. minister, after the many statements he has made in the last few days as to the amount of sweat he has lost in securing money from this wonderful treasury board, should welcome an opportunity to accept the suggestion offered by the hon. member for Richmond-West Cape Breton (Mr. Macdonald). I have some knowledge of the district which is under discussion, and I may tell the minister that if the hon. member has a petition bearing 150 signatures or more he has a petition that covers pretty nearly all the people who are living in that community. I also have some knowledge of the situation in respect of the two wharves, and I am free to admit that there is a good deal in what has been said regarding the prevailing winds affecting shipping on that side of the harbour. The present wharf was built in 1921, and if I know anything about construction work it is about wharf building. In my opinion no wharf built in 1921 out of native Nova Scotia timber is to-day in very bad condition. I should be inclined to regard the charges made by the hon. member as somewhat serious and I would advise the minister to make haste slowly in this matter and prosecute some further investigation.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Will the minister tell us what the estimate consists of? I know nothing about the matter, but I should like to know what the estimate is for the right of way as well as for the wharf itself.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The cost of the new structure—including right of way, $75, and warehouse, $200—is $4,150 and it is placed at $4,200.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What about the site itself?

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is included; there is $75 for the right of way.

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): Has the minister the two reports of the engineer, one made in 1921 and the other on which this item is based? If so, it would be interesting to have those reports read.

Mr ELLIOTT: Yes; we have all the data including the correspondence and—

Mr. SMITH (Cumberland): And the reports?

Mr. ELLIOTT: And the reports. We have all the correspondence that has passed ever since the matter was first agitated. I may say to my hon. friends that I have no desire to force a wharf on an unwilling people in that section of the country and I am perfectly satisfied to let the matter stand.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): In view of the stand the minister has taken I want to ask this question: Is he in favour of repairing the present wharf which the government built in 1921?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Not in view of our information.

Mr. CANTLEY: Has any work been done on the new wharf?

Mr. ELLIOTT: No.

Mr. CANTLEY: No provision made for the highway leading up to it?

Mr. ELLIOTT: We have nothing to do with the roads. A road has been built by the province which comes near the site of the new wharf, but we have made no expenditure in connection with it.

Mr. CANTLEY: How near does it come?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The main highway has become the provincial highway, and is closer to the wharf.

Mr. CANTLEY: I can tell the minister it is not very close. In view of the fact that he has received a petition bearing over 150 names asking that the existing wharf which has been there since 1921 be repaired, I think he would be well advised to let the item stand and change it to a repair item.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I will probably drop it altogether; I do not want to force a wharf on people who do not want it.

Mr. MACDONALD (Richmond): The minister has received a petition signed by 153 people, including the Liberal counsellor in the district of Grand River, asking that the wharf at Soldier's Cove be repaired. This wharf was built as a public convenience and for the public service, and I state distinctly to the committee that the proposed new wharf would not be of public service and would not serve the community. I think the minister is ill-advised when he makes the statement that he will not repair a public wharf which this government allowed a provincial government to destroy in 1925 by placing upon it some 50 or 100 tons of sand. This money has been appropriated by the treasury board, and it is the duty of the minister to give those 153 people the public service which they require. I make the statement advisedly that it will not cost anything like $5,000. You must have creosoted timber to put in a new wharf, so why not put it in the old wharf which is there with a warehouse right alongside? In 1922 a merchant of Grand River constructed his own warehouse for perishable goods, and it still exists.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am very much obliged to my hon. friend for the information he has given and for the manner in which he has given it. I do not propose to prolong the controversy, so I will let the matter stand and if I find anything to lead me to change my view to that which my hon. friend has expressed I will do so; otherwise I will drop the item.

Mr. QUINN: The minister has just stated he will allow the matter to drop.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I will let it stand for the present.

Mr. QUINN: That means it is wiped out for this session, or that it will come up some day when no one is here to oppose it, and it will go through flying like many other things toward the close of the session. I want to place myself on record as not opposing any small vote such as this amount of $4,200 for Soldier's Cove, or any other votes for the province of Nova Scotia, although we are only spending the paltry sum of $492,100 on harbours and rivers in the province of Nova Scotia which is absolutely surrounded by water, where we would expect a comparatively larger vote than any other province in Canada. What I want to ask the minister is this: When a requisition is made for a public work in any constituency of Nova Scotia or any other province, who recommends that expenditure and why is not the elected representative of the people for that particular constituency consulted? He is the man who is logically and rightfully the most interested and best informed on matters in his own riding. Why is he not consulted, and why do we find in the estimates votes for some constituencies larger than they should be, while in other constituencies there is no appropriation at all?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I suppose my hon. friend is referring to the constituency of Queens-Lunenburg, in which the largest vote is being spent?

Mr. QUINN: I did not mention Queens-Lunenburg; we are dealing with Soldier's Cove. I was called to order by the chairman a short time ago because I referred to Devil's Island; my hon. friend is now referring to Queens-Lunenburg and I hope the chairman will rule him out of order.

Mr. ERNST: Again I want to thank the minister for listening so attentively to my persuasive eloquence; I hope it will continue to be persuasive with him.

Item stands.

Sydney—wharf, $27,000.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): Will the minister kindly give us some information about this vote? What is to be the total expenditure for the site and the wharf?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is an amount required to complete the wharf at Sydney, to finish the work now under contract with the Cook Construction Corporation of Montreal.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): What is to be the total cost of the wharf and the site?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The total will be probably $135,000.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): For both?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The site cost $68,000; amount of contract $59,755; inspection and other expenses, $7,245, making a total of $135,000.

Item agreed to.

Tangier—wharf repairs, $1,300.

Mr. QUINN: May I ask the minister who recommended this vote?

Mr. ELLIOTT: The report of the engineer, in all these cases.

Mr. QUINN: That is the answer in all cases. At whose request would the engineer go to Tangier? There are 150 coves and harbours in the county of Halifax; why should they pick out Tangier?

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is the duty of the engineer to go round to the various wharves and inspect them. They make reports, and from these reports and all the other information which we can obtain we come to the best conclusion possible with regard to the necessity for repairs or construction.

Mr. QUINN: Tangier happens to be sixty miles east of the city of Halifax, and I wonder why the resident engineer of Halifax or the province of Nova Scotia should particularly pick out that place. I am not saying that Tangier is not an important settlement, but there are others just as important in the constituency of Halifax. I cannot understand why the engineers should pick out that place, sixty miles from Halifax, and find there a necessity for a $1,300 expenditure.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Our report is that this work is required for the maintenance of the structure which provides facilities for a fishing industry valued at $15,000 annually. Fishing is the only means of support for a population of 400 people. If my hon. friend objects to it, I am willing to let this item drop.

Mr. QUINN: I do not object to the item. My hon. friends say "drop it", but let me tell my hon. friends from the province of Quebec that they are feeding out of the public trough to a greater extent than the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. DUSSAULT: I suggest to my hon. friend that he is spending more than the wharf would cost by taking up the time of the committee for half an hour on an item of $1,300.

Mr. QUINN: I have the utmost respect for the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Dussault), but while we may be on a very small item of $1,300, my hon. friends from the province of Quebec will be talking about $8,500,000 worth, and they will fight very hard for it. I am not objecting to the principle, nor am I objecting to this vote.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I would not say that you are supporting it.

Mr. QUINN: I am supporting it.

Mr. CASGRAIN: We cannot see it yet.

Mr. QUINN: Why is there such a small vote for the constituency of Halifax? Why should we get $1,300 for Tangier, and not get more in other districts? There have been many requests made for the county of Halifax, and they have not been granted. I cannot understand why this particular district has been picked out for an expenditure of $1,300. I would like to know who requested the engineer to go down there?

Mr. POULIOT: If my friend—

Mr. QUINN: I am asking a question of the Minister of Public Works and my hon. friend from Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) may keep his seat.

Item stands.

Westport—wharf repairs, $3,500.

Mr. SHORT: I am very glad to see that the minister has a small appropriation for this very much needed wharf.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I hope my hon. friend is not going to insist on this item standing, because I will have to meet his wishes if he does.

Mr. SHORT: I just want to find out whether this will include some dredging that is needed at this breakwater. It is a very important breakwater.

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is no dredging included in this; it is to cover repairs to the wharf. Our report is that the repairs will consist of rebuilding a section of the pile wharf, 90 feet by 30 feet, on which the piling has been destroyed and eaten off by the limnoria; replacing 30 brace and fender piles, also destroyed, and 10,000 feet board measure of bulkhead. This is one of the most important fishing centres in Digby county, the annual value of the fishing catch amounting to between $200,000 and $300,000. On account of this report, we feel that the repairs should be done, and that they are all needed.

Mr. SHORT: This is a very valuable breakwater, and a lot of money has been spent on the construction of it. It needs these repairs very badly, but the appropriation now made is totally inadequate. This is a large piece of work, and there is some dredging that is very urgently needed. I hope the minister will give instructions to his resident engineer that a dredge be sent there during this coming summer. Perhaps this can be provided for out of the $65,000 for harbours and rivers generally. I hope the minister will give the necessary instructions to have this work carried out as quickly as possible.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I may say that there is some money being expended out of the general vote to repair the incline slip, bulkhead, refoot some of the piling that was destroyed by the limnoria, and make the wharf safe and secure for the winter. This amounts to about $550, and will somewhat increase the amount. Apparently it is a necessary work at a very important point.

Mr. SHORT: I am sure it would be in the public interest if the minister would recommend to the engineer that the necessary dredging be done there.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I shall be very glad to look into it.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Quinn.]

Yarmouth bar — breakwater repairs and improvements, $4,000.

Mr. QUINN: I presume that has been recommended by the district engineer.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Certainly.

Mr. QUINN: Without any suggestion from the representative of that county.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I could not say as to that.

Mr. QUINN: I thought that would be the answer.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): I want to correct the statement I made a short time ago in reference to the expenditure under this vote No. 134, in the counties of Antigonish-Guysborough and Yarmouth. I stated that there was about $60,000 voted for these two counties, but I find, on going carefully over the figures, that out of nearly $500,000 these two counties are getting $135,800, or 27 per cent of the whole vote. Halifax county, the most populous in the province of Nova Scotia, does not get $16,000, as I said, but $8,500. I would ask the Minister of Public Works not to hold up that item for Tangier, because it would reduce the $8,500 to about $7,200, and that would look very small. I feel that the minister would almost be ashamed of such a small amount.

Mr. ELLIOTT: When my hon. friend was making his estimate I am sure that he wanted to be absolutely fair and not leave the impression that on account of the riding being represented by some particular party it was being discriminated against.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): Oh, no, I just took the figures as they were.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Did my hon. friend take the trouble to see how much was being expended in Queens-Lunenburg? Does he know that about $120,000 is being expended in that riding?

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): It is needed.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I have no doubt it is. It is because it is needed that it is being spent.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): I am not opposing that vote.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is being spent because our reports show that it is a little more needed there than in the riding represented by my hon. friend.

Mr. ILSLEY: I want to say a word in answer to the suggestion made by the senior member for Halifax, namely, that public money spent in Nova Scotia should be op-portioned in proportion to the population or something of that sort. If we adopt that suggestion we shall be following an entirely wrong principle. The money should be spent in accordance with the needs of the various constituencies. There is a feeling in Nova Scotia that a good deal of money is spent in the county of Halifax. We in the other parts of Nova Scotia do not object to that if the money is needed; but it is an entirely erroneous doctrine to be propounded in the house that because the constituency of Halifax does not get a very large proportion in any particular year of the money spent in Nova Scotia, something is wrong. I, as a representative of one of the rural constituencies of Nova Scotia, wish to protest against the idea going out that we from that province are always trying to get all the money we possibly can regardless of the needs of our various constituencies.

Item agreed to.

Prince Edward Island—harbours and rivers—Bonshaw freight shed, $2,900.

Mr. QUINN: Why is this freight shed needed?

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is to construct a freight shed, 30 feet by 60 feet. Warehouse facilities are urgently required on account of the development of the seed potato industry in the district. The annual business over the wharf is between $30,000 and $40,000.

Item agreed to.

Charlottetown — reconstruction of railway wharf, $140,000.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): Is this wharf being taken over from the railway department by the Public Works department?

Mr. ELLIOTT: An order in council was passed on October 19, 1927, granting authority to transfer from the Canadian National Railways to the Department of Public Works certain wharf properties including the railway wharf, freight shed and portion of coal shed at Charlottetown.

Item agreed to.

West Point wharf repairs, $4,000.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): Before the items for Prince Edward Island are all through, while I do not like to follow the suggestions that were made in the house this afternoon and evening with regard to favouritism in the matter of distributing the money in the Public Works department, yet having regard to the situation that existed last year and that exists this year in Prince Edward Island, I feel it is almost impossible to get away from that idea. A year ago I drew the minister's attention to the fact that out of an amount of $107,000 voted for harbours and rivers for the three counties of Prince Edward Island, the sum of $1,000, which was a revote from the year before, was voted for Kings county. This year I find a similar condition existing although not to quite so bad an extent. Out of a total vote of $229,800, an amount of $13,000 is voted for Kings county. It seems to one representing the county in opposition and remembering that the other counties have government representation, that our county is being penalized because two years ago it voted against the government. I hate to make that suggestion. I know the minister does not want to play that kind of politics, but it is pretty difficult, in view of the facts as we find them, to entertain any other idea. If we did not have needs, and very serious needs, I would not say a word, but I want to call the attention of the minister to this fact. In 1925 a vote of $36,500 was put through the house for a very important piece of work, namely for the strengthening of the Souris breakwater. Souris is one of the most important towns in Kings county and it is an important point serving a large section of the people. As I say, in the session of 1925 an amount of $36,500 was voted for this work and a contract was let, but for some reason or another the contractor did not perform the work. In the session of 1926 the appropriation was dropped; the contract was not renewed and the work has not yet been done. The breakwater is in imminent danger of going to pieces, and if this occurred Souris property would be destroyed. I should like to ask the minister why the vote of $36,500 passed in the session of 1925 was dropped and not renewed, in view of the fact that he has the government engineer's report of the urgent need of the work and the imminent danger of the breakwater being destroyed if it is not strengthened.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Do I understand my hon. friend, who is the representative for Kings county, to say that there was just $1,000 expended in that constituency a year ago?

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): I said that out of the votes passed in the house a year ago, amounting to $107,000 for harbours and rivers in the whole province, the sum of $1,000 was earmarked for Kings county.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If my memory serves me aright, an amount of $30,000 was expended on a potato warehouse on a wharf in Kings county, my hon. friend's riding, which he says was discriminated against.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): I was not speaking about the votes which were the result of the recommendations of the Duncan commission. As a result of the recommendations of that commission there were three votes, one for Prince, one for Kings and one for Queens. I was leaving those out altogether because they are not ordinary votes by this parliament. I was referring to the votes for harbours and rivers for the three counties, and for that reason I did not take into account any particular county.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If my hon. friend wishes to be fair, does he mean to suggest that Kings county last year and this year has not been very generously treated by the Department of Public Works?

Mr. QUINN: I may say, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am not asking you.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): I will reply to the minister's question, by asking him another. Does he think it is fair when he votes $170,000 for the three counties for harbours and rivers generally that only $1,000 should be granted to my county, which needs public works even more than the other counties? I say this to the minister, and he should know it, that in our county we have a larger proportion of harbours and rivers than in any other county in the province.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend sees, does he not, that $145,000 of this $229,000 is a revote?

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): I am aware of that. I have asked the minister a direct question twice about the Souris breakwater, but I will repeat it. In the session of 1925 this government voted $36,500 for the purpose of strengthening the Souris breakwater. That work was needed at that time, and it has been needed ever since. A contract was let by the government, but through some inadvertence the contractor did not complete his work. The vote was dropped in 1926 and again in 1927. That work is very much needed, because there is imminent danger of the breakwater being destroyed if it is not strengthened. Why was that vote put in the estimates in 1925 and then dropped, and why is it not being renewed now when there is very much greater need for the work?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I suppose the various officials who have had to pass upon these votes from time to time have decided that something else was more urgent. That is all that I can say.

[Mr. Elliott.]

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): Does the minister expect me to be satisfied with suppositions? If so, he is making a mistake. I am not satisfied to take what he supposes at all, and it is not fair to ask a member to accept his suppositions in the matter. If anything could most strongly bear out the charge of favouritism and discrimination against Kings county it is that one fact that a vote was put in for this work when the county was represented by a Liberal, and dropped out of the estimates the following year when he failed to secure re-election, and the vote has been dropped ever since. The minister's answer is not satisfactory. I want something better than that; I want some facts.

Mr. JENKINS: I should not like the impression to go abroad that Kings county had been discriminated against in any way by the other members from the province. I know my hon. friend from Kings wants to be fair to the representatives of Queens and Prince. At all times I have endeavoured personally to co-operate and do anything I could to help the people of Kings county. I want that distinctly understood. When construction of a warehouse at Georgetown was mooted last year we did everything we could to support that request. Even from a selfish point of view, Mr. Chairman, it was our duty to do what we could to establish a warehouse at that point, because Georgetown harbour is open very much later in the season than Charlottetown harbour, and a considerable quantity of our potatoes and other produce going forward must be shipped through that port. Therefore, as I say, it was essential that we should push for Georgetown if only from a selfish point of view. I think my hon. friend from Kings would not want the impression to go abroad that my colleagues and myself from Prince Edward Island were in any way responsible for votes not being put in the estimates for his county. Kings county needs more money, Mr. Chairman, and I think there should be more warehouses established there, because the potato business is growing very rapidly, and I feel sure if the minister can see his way clear to do anything for Kings county next year, or even in the supplementary estimates this year, my colleagues and myself will be only too pleased. I am quite sure that the member for Kings would not want to convey the impression that we were endeavouring to block expenditures for his county. Personally I say from the floor of this house that I am not doing so. On the contrary, I repeat that my colleagues and I are endeavouring in every way to co-operate with the people of Kings county. I only make that statement in order that my position may be clear before the people of my province.

I want to thank the Minister of Public Works for the consideration he has given to our province. A great deal of fault has been found with him to-night, but I sincerely appreciate all he has done for our county, for the building of a wharf at Charlottetown, and numerous other works throughout the province, all of which were necessary. I am sorry to hear so much criticism of the Public Works department because, speaking personally I have always found the minister a first-rate fellow. He is willing to meet any reasonable demand. Our friends on the other side must remember that a great deal of money is being spent in places where we have not representation in accord with the government, notably in Toronto, for instance, and I think the minister has been very fair to constituencies that did not send representation to this side of the house. I have always found him very reasonable and wish to add my word of tribute for the good work he is doing.

Mr. QUINN: I would not say a word at this stage of the debate but for an interjection of the Minister of Public Works when I was endeavouring to answer a question. He said that the had not asked me the question which I attempted to answer on behalf of twenty-five per cent of the representation from Prince Edward Island. The last speaker, who represents part of seventy-five per cent of the representation of Prince Edward Island, has tried to point out that the Department of Public Works has been very fair, but I ask was the minister fair when he tried to place to the credit of Kings county an expenditure of $60,000? May I say, and my friends to the right of the Minister of Public Works will bear me out in this, that Kings county is the only county in Prince Edward Island whose harbours are open to shipping throughout the winter, and naturally a cold storage potato warehouse would be placed in that county. Now when this expenditure is made in Kings county to look after the shipping requirements of the whole province, why should the minister endeavour to place that expenditure to the credit of Kings county?

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): I was glad to hear the remarks of my hon. friend from Queens (Mr. Jenkins). I wish to assure him that there was no intention on my part to charge either him or any of his colleagues from Queens or Prince with being a party to discriminating against Queens county. I want to be fair to them because I have always found them absolutely fair with me. But certainly the votes that have gone through the house to-night are not fair to the Island, nor were the votes that were passed last year. With regard to the frostproof warehouse which the minister referred to as having been built in Kings county last fall, I think the remarks of the member for Queens make it clear that that was not a county affair, but provincial. I wish to express the appreciation of the people of Kings county for the building. It was late in the season before the contract was let, but from December up to the 4th of January five large steamers loaded at the warehouse. I think this justifies the expenditure. But I do wish to get an answer from the minister in regard to the vote for the Souris breakwater which was placed in the estimates, passed by the house, and the contract let in 1925. Why has not the work been carried on since?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report progress.

Progress reported.

LIVE STOCK AND LIVE STOCK PRODUCTS ACT

The house in committee on Bill No. 61, to amend the Live Stock and Live Stock Products Act—Mr. Motherwell—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Regulations—Beef for domestic consumption.

Mr. TOLMIE: Will the minister explain the bill?

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Chairman, this is a bill to provide for the voluntary grading of beef for domestic consumption. It is the result of the work of a committee that entered very fully into the whole question throughout western Canada. They also visited Chicago to ascertain how the grading system was working there. As a result they recommended that this system of voluntary grading should be adopted. Their recommendation was endorsed by the Western Canada Live stock Union. The bill passed through the committee on agriculture without change, and at this hour of the night I can safely recommend it to the consideration of the house.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Does the minister suggest that it would not be all right in the morning?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It would be all right both morning and evening.

Mr. TOLMIE: Are you adopting the United States stripe system of branding?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That was discussed in the report, and it was thought to be a very handy way. I may say that we are not accepting in toto the recommendations of the committee to which I have referred. We propose to call together all parties who are interested in the grading of beef, that is, a representative butcher, a representative abattoir man, and a representative producer, in order to work out the grades. It is important to ascertain just how many grades are required. The committee recommended that there be two grades only—choice and fancy. There is a difference of opinion whether those would be suitable names. To make quite sure that that is what the country desires one of the first steps to be taken will be to call together, as I have said, a fully representative committee of all the various interests, and so work out a system of grades.

Mr. TOLMIE: Have the United States added a third grade yet?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not think so.

Mr. TOLMIE: Has it worked out fairly successfully in the United States?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It seems so. Some are not enthusiastic over there, but I think the system has come to stay. There seems to be a very general opinion in favour of it, especially in western Canada. I found a much greater number of people supporting the system than I anticipated, especially the small butchers, who find it necessary in the summer time to order their meat from the abattoirs. They never know what they are getting. Under this system they would order by name the grade they want, and if not supplied they would have some redress against the abattoir.

Mr. TOLMIE: I do not think you need the system so much to protect the dealer—he is a pretty good judge of beef—as the consumer, who when he ordered prime steer beef steak was sold cow beef of second quality. Cut up into steaks, he could not tell what grade was being supplied. With this system of branding in force the grade will be indicated, no matter how thin the steak may be. In that way the consumer will be educated to buy the better grades. This will have beneficial effect on the producer, inasmuch as he will receive a little more for first class beef. That has been the great trouble all the way through—the ability of the middleman to sell second or third grade steer beef for first class. I notice this simply gives you power to work out your system later on.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am a little disappointed, Mr. Chairman, that the minister now intimates that the form which the brand is to take is to be left open. In committee we were advised that the roller system would be adopted. I hope he is not going to retire from the position then taken and that possibly the stamp system may be adopted. This would not cover every cut of beef, and, as the member for Victoria (Mr. Tolmie) points out, it is the public that must be protected.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: After this committee works out a system of grades which it is prepared to recommend, such system will first of all be submitted to the trade, and to the consumers and producers, to see how acceptable it will be. It will have to be done quickly, on the roller system, just as we brand the top of a box of butter. It is the same system. We shall have to work out some system and submit it to the interested public and find out whether they have any suggestions to offer before it is finally adopted.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is all I wanted to know. The bill is a good one and I approve of it. The minister is of the opinion that the roller system is a good one?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes; it is the most expeditious.

Mr. CANTLEY: The minister probably knows already that a considerable number of cattle are being slaughtered in some provinces and are reacting from the tuberculin test. How will he indicate beef of that character?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That opens up a considerable problem which we can more properly discuss on the vote for the administration of the Health of Animals Act.

Mr. CANTLEY: Is not this a good time to take it up?

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Lapointe the house adjourned at 10.55 p.m.

Monday, May 14, 1928

3. To fit up the new office and furnish it in keeping with the surroundings and also the offices of other railways, an expenditure of $4,600 was made. The furniture formerly in use in the Ellicott square building was turned in to the railways' stores department for use at other points as required.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SATURDAY SITTINGS

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That on Saturday, May 19th instant, and every Saturday thereafter until the end of the present session, the house shall meet at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and the order of business and procedure shall be the same as on Fridays.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): In view of the fact that Thursday the 17th and Thursday the 24th instant are holidays, this is a most inconvenient motion to many hon. members. There are many pressing reasons why some hon. members, especially those who sit on this side of the house, will be absent on Thursday and Friday, and to come back on Saturday is a highly inconvenient procedure to everybody who has to be absent from this city.

In addition to that the motion is objectionable inasmuch as it provides that the procedure shall be the same as on Fridays and Friday is one of the days when the Speaker leaves the chair without motion for supply. That the procedure should be the same as on Mondays would not, I think, be an unfair suggestion, because the rule permitting the Speaker on two days to leave the chair without motion for the house to go into supply is only a recent innovation, as a matter of fact dating back to 1913. Prior to that a motion was required whenever the Speaker left the chair for the house to go into supply. If the procedure on Saturdays is made the same as on Fridays, when there is practically nothing but estimates left to deal with, this house will have but one day on which to present its grievances and there are many grievances which the house has to present between now and the end of June. I suggest to the Prime Minister that with the motion as it now stands it is very inconvenient for many members to sit on these two Saturdays, whatever may be done on succeeding Saturdays.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Will the house be sitting on succeeding Saturdays?

Mr. BENNETT: It certainly will be beyond all doubt. The other part of the motion is highly improper as it places in the hands of the government the suggestion that the procedure shall be the same as on Fridays so that the Speaker will leave the chair without motion for supply and I think we should subsitute for the word "Fridays" the word

"Mondays". I hope that suggestion will meet with the approval of the government; but if not, we can do nothing more than present our position and if necessary move that the word "Mondays" be substituted for the word "Fridays".

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Towards the end of every session for years past the house has met on Saturdays and the order of business on the Saturday has always been similar to that on the Friday. I might mention this further feature which may have escaped the attention of my hon. friend, namely, that on Friday the order provides for the first hour in the evening being devoted to private bills. The government felt in that particular it would perhaps be furthering the wishes of a large number of members if we followed the same procedure as on Fridays.

Mr. BENNETT: Make it Tuesday then.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If the question is only one of moving an amendment on going into supply my hon. friend will find that he will have plenty of opportunities. There will be the following Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. If such a really serious situation were to develop that an amendment on going into supply on some subsequent Saturday were desirable I have no doubt he will wish to have the house continue in session, for a day or two longer, in which event he will have an opportunity of moving his amendment the following Monday. The government has sought to ascertain, through the whips and in other ways, the general wish of the members; the motion has now been discussed two or three times, and so far as I am able to learn it is as nearly in accordance with the general wish of hon. members as any motion is ever likely to be. In the circumstances I would ask my hon. friend to allow the motion to pass.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Whilst I agree with the motion of the Prime Minister as to taking Saturday afternoons for the business of the government, I must at the same time express my understanding of and sympathy with the attitude taken by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) as to the matter of going into supply. I think it is only right, if Saturdays are to be taken, that every opportunity should be given for presenting whatever grievances hon. members of this house may have.

The complaint, however, of the hon. leader of the opposition, that the taking of Saturdays is objectionable on the ground that hon. members want to leave the house on Friday or Wednesday night and be away until the following Monday is not an argument that is very potent with those of us who have to stay here from the beginning till the very conclusion of the session. Although I have a very deep sympathy with hon. members whose business or social engagements entice them away from the happy surroundings of this house for several days at the end of the week, I do not feel that public business should be held up on that account. But I do think that the Prime Minister should give to the hon. leader of the opposition the opportunity of allowing supply to be moved in the ordinary way on Saturday, if Saturdays are to be taken from this on.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say, Mr. Speaker, that rather than have it appear that the government is in the least concerned about any motions on going into supply, I have no hesitation whatever in changing the Friday to Tuesday. It will be the wish of hon. members to have the first hour in the evening reserved for private bills, should that be necessary. If that meets the wishes of my hon. friend, as I think it will, and generally the wishes of the house, I will move to amend the motion accordingly and to strike out the words "and procedure."

Motion as amended agreed to.

KINGSVILLE, ONT., DREDGING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GOTT (South Essex): I would like to inquire from the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) if there is any dredging to be proceeded with in the near future at the port of Kingsville, Ontario, and if so, if he will make an endeavour to proceed with it as quickly as possible.

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): I have no knowledge of any dredging to be proceeded with in the immediate future at Kingsville, but I shall make inquiry.

IMPORTATION OF EGGS FROM CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. PETER McGIBBON (Muskoka-Ontario): I would like to ask two questions of the Minister of Health (Mr. King); first, when he is going to bring down his estimates. I have been waiting for years to see them, and I have not seen them yet. Secondly, I want to ask him if he will, in the interests of the health of the people of Canada, investigate the statement that was made to a committee in this building by supporters of the government in connection with the conditions under which the eggs imported into this country from China are produced. I cannot repeat in the house the language that was used in describing those conditions because it is too filthy to be repeated, but if the conditions are as indicated, these eggs are certainly a menace to the health of the people of Canada. I would ask the minister to investigate the matter and, if the conditions are found as reported, to exclude those eggs from the country on the ground of public health.

Hon. J. H. KING (Minister of Health): In reply to my hon. friend's first question, I would suggest that he inquire of the Prime Minister as to the time when those estimates will come before the house. They have been tabled, but I have not yet had them before the committee. They will be brought before the committee at the convenience of the government as directed by the Prime Minister.

In relation to the importation of eggs from China, I shall be very glad to look into the information which I understand has been placed before the committee; I shall have inquiries made to ascertain just what that statement was. I am not familiar with it, not being a member of the committee.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister was present, also the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb).

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend is referring—

Mr. McGIBBON: To the meeting in the railway committee room.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I know what my hon. friend is referring to now. I shall be glad to have that matter inquired into.

CHINA-JAPAN RELATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Under article XI of the treaty of Peace it is declared to be the friendly right of each member of the League of Nations to bring to the attention of the assembly or of the council any circumstances whatever affecting international relations which threaten to disturb international peace or the good understanding between nations upon which peace depends. I should like to ask whether Canada, either as a member of the council or of the assembly, is taking any action with regard to the trouble which now exists between two members of the league, China and Japan.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Unfortunately up to the present time Canada has no source of official information regarding what is taking place in the orient other than the British government. It would seem that if the situation were such as to require the intervention of the league of nations on behalf of these two oriental countries, it should come in the first instance from Great Britain rather than from Canada. I have been given to understand that some other member of the league or some other power has already made representations with respect to the situation. But Canada has not, for the reason that we have not received any official information at first hand to guide us in the matter.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

INVESTIGATION OF MCCLYMONT CHARGES BY ALEXANDER SMITH, K.C.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): Some days ago an order of the house was passed for the production of certain papers with regard to the Smith inquiry of last year, and also with regard to certain reports brought up by one McClymont, at the request, I understand, of the Deputy Minister of the Interior. I should like to inquire when these returns will be tabled.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): So far as the papers in connection with McClymont are concerned, they will be tabled at once. I did not quite catch what else my hon. friend was referring to.

Mr. SPENCER: It was with reference to the report of Commissioner Smith.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That report was tabled long ago.

Mr. SPENCER: And the motion called for the production of the exhibits.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Oh, the exhibits, yes.

PENSION ACT AMENDMENT

The house resumed from May 9 consideration in committee of Bill No. 289, to amend the Pension Act.—Mr. King (Kootenay).—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: When the committee last sat, certain sections were adopted, certain other sections were allowed to stand, and certain sections were not considered at all.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): We were dealing only with those sections which the pensions committee had passed unanimously, and I think we had reached section 11.

The CHAIRMAN: Sections 3, 5, 6 and 10 stood.

Mr. McGIBBON: Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to revert to section 4—not by way of objection at all, but simply to point out that I do not think it goes as far as the committee intended. The intention was that a man should receive all information uopn which an appeal could be based.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I have no amendment.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the desire of the minister to take section 5?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is a committee section.

Mr. BENNETT: As I understand it, we are passing without much discussion those sections of the bill that were agreed to by the select committee, and the sections that are purely departmental and amend the existing law have not yet been considered by the house.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Exactly.

The CHAIRMAN: Sections 5, 6 and 10 are not dealt with.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Will the minister allow reconsideration of section 4?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am told that the section as now drawn meets the situation and was accepted by the committee; but if there is good reason why it should be reconsidered, I have no objection. I would, however, prefer completing the other sections and coming back to section 4 if it is thought advisable to reconsider it.

Sections 11 to 18 inclusive agreed to.

On section 19—Time from which payment of pension for disability shall commence.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): An amendment has been suggested to this section to clarify it. It has received the approval of the committee. I move that the following be substituted for the present section:

19. Paragraph (b) of section twenty-seven of the said act is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:—

"(b) in the case in which a pension is awarded to an applicant the appearance of whose disability was subsequent to his retirement or discharge from the forces, in which case a pension may be paid from a date six months prior to the day upon which application for pension has been received or from the date of the appearance of the disability whichever is the later date, or from the day upon which application was made to the department for treatment in respect of the injury or disease resulting in disability for which pension is awarded provided that if treatment was commenced under the jurisdiction of the department in respect of such injury or disease resulting in disability a pension may be paid from the day following that upon which the treatment of the applicant by the department was completed."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: The old section left out the word "disease" and simply referred to "disability".

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. McGIBBON: Is it definitely plain that the primary treatment must be for the same disability as that for which the pension is awarded?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. VALLANCE: Mr. Chairman, there are some of us over here interested in this bill, but we cannot hear what is going on.

Mr. ADSHEAD: We cannot hear at all.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Sections 20 to 26 inclusive agreed to.

On section 27—Pension to unmarried wife at discretion of commission.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That, Mr. Chairman, is also a committee section. I wish to change the wording of the side note to read:

Pension at discretion of commission in certain cases.

It does not affect the section at all.

Mr. BENNETT: That seems to be somewhat pertinent to the question I mentioned to the minister the other day.

Mr. THORSON: It is a different principle.

Mr. BENNETT: Your saying so does not make it so.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 28 agreed to.

Sections 29 and 30 stand.

Sections 31 and 34 inclusive agreed to.

On section 4—Information to be placed on file.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Section 1 passed the other day, but I may explain that it involves merely a change in the title of the amalgamated departments. As regards section 4, this is in accordance with the recommendations of the committee.

Mr. McGIBBON: I spoke to the minister the other day in regard to this provision, pointing out that in my opinion the intention of the committee had not been borne out. Let us take the case of a man living in British Columbia who applies for a pension which is refused: the intention was that the file should show all the reasons on which the decision was based and on which he might wish to establish his appeal.

Mr. THORSON: Section 4 as it stands in the present act is in accordance with the suggestions made by the Canadian Legion, and I believe it carries out the suggestions of the committee, based upon the recommendations of the legion. Those suggestions have been incorporated practically verbatim in this section 4.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I do not wish to create any difference of opinion, but it will be remembered that during the discussion of this question in the committee, while the point of view of the legion was undoubtedly as indicated, there was something else implied. There was evidently a desire that the reasons, or the evidence upon which the decision was based, should be fully set forth. I have been speaking to a representative of the legion since and he said, "We should like to go that far, but we don't know whether it will be granted". I think it is only fair that this should be done. For example, a man applies for a pension and the information comes back, "Your application has been considered by the board and it has been decided that the bronchitis in your case is pre-enlistment". To enable this man to go on to an appeal, it is desirable to know upon what evidence it has been decided that the bronchitis is pre-enlistment so that the appellant may be in a position to furnish counter evidence. That is only fair. And it is only for purposes of appeal. If we included in this section a stipulation that there should be disclosed such evidence as is required for these purposes, the reasons would have to be given for the decision that the disability was either pre-enlistment or post discharge. Only upon that evidence can the man make his appeal.

Mr. RALSTON: The section as drafted is word for word the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. McGIBBON: We agree.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): But the discussion went further.

Mr. RALSTON: On the file there would appear all the evidence submitted. I do not think you could expect, in the judgment of the board, which is inserted in a form, that there should be a complete consideration of all the certificates pro and con and of all the medical evidence upon which it was found that the disability was either post discharge or pre-enlistment. That is on the file and is available to the soldier's adviser. What the ex-service man really wanted was some provision which would obviate the clash, which apparently has frequently occurred, between the board of pension commissioners and the federal appeal board in connection with the diagnosis. In some cases a man was suffering from a disability which the doctors found it impracticable to actually name; as to the disease which gave rise to the disability there was a difference of opinion between the board of pension commissioners and the federal appeal board, and it was held that the federal appeal board had no jurisdiction. It is this difference of view which the present section is designed to meet. The old section set forth the ground on which pensions were awarded or refused, and that has been amplified into three subsections setting out, first, the medical classification of the injury or disease causing the disability on which the claim is based; secondly, the medical classification of every injury or disease which the board considers in dealing with the application; and, thirdly, an absolute statement as to whether the board found that the injury or disease was either post discharge or pre-enlistment or whether it was an aggravation of a condition resultant from service. I do not think you could give very much more in the way of particulars in a judgment unless you set out the file.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): But the information desired is not on the file. Let me give a concrete case. A certain ex-service man applies for a pension on account of asthma and the board decide that the asthma was pre-enlistment. The man has submitted all the evidence he can possibly get to prove that it was not pre-enlistment and there is nothing on the file to show on what ground the board concluded that it was. There should be some evidence in that direction; they might get the evidence from some neighbour or other person to show that the man had suffered from asthma before enlistment. But, as I say, there is nothing on the file to that effect. It is cases of this description to which we refer; you do not get on the file the reasons for the board's conclusion. We want to know just why they have come to a certain conclusion—what evidence there is for their decision.

Mr. RALSTON: I am not a medical man; the hon. gentleman has the advantage of me. Generally speaking, however, if there is a decision that the asthma—or whatever the disease may be—was pre-enlistment there would surely be evidence forthcoming, from the family or from someone who knew the man, in regard to the attacks from which he had suffered. That evidence might come from a great many sources and it is all on the file. I will quite agree with my hon. friend; if it is a case where the board deliberately made a finding with no evidence at all, the file itself would show that, but this is only asking them to set out what is not on the file. I do submit that we are getting into the realm of administration and out of the statutory provisions altogether. I have repeatedly urged that the pension board, when they advise a man as to pension being refused, should give him some idea of the ground on which the refusal is made, to let him know what kind of evidence he should adduce in order to support his case. That was one of the reasons why the soldiers' advisers were appointed, in order that they might go over these files and tell the man what sort of evidence he should have.

Mr. McGIBBON: I believe the committee did not quite know really what they wanted. If you consider these first three subsections, they could be answered by one word, such as bronchitis, tuberculosis, arteriosclerosis or something of that kind.

Mr. RALSTON: In order that we might have something concrete before us I wonder if my hon. friends think their case would be met if, in addition to the three subsections we have already, we re-enacted the old subsection (b), which required that the board of pension commissioners set out the grounds on which pension was awarded or refused.

Mr. McGIBBON: I think that would help.

Mr. RALSTON: That has been cut out, but if that were reinserted I think it would provide the particulars my hon. friends want.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The minister has the point; that information should be on file, because in many cases there is nothing to show why the board came to a certain decision, and in those cases the man cannot go to appeal without being at a disadvantage.

Mr. RALSTON: I would suggest that we add as subsection (iv) "The grounds on which pension is awarded or refused." That was in the old act.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Has the soldiers' adviser or his agent full access to these files?

[Mr A. E. Ross.]

Mr. RALSTON: Yes.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I move that we amend section 4 by adding the following subsection after subsection (iii):

(iv) The grounds on which pension is awarded or refused.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 5—Commission attached to department.

Mr. BENNETT: Does the minister think this section gives effect to the proposals mentioned in the explanatory notes with respect to it? There is no provision covering appeals to the federal appeal board, which was included in the old section.

Mr. RALSTON: Under the old act the federal appeal board was attached to the Department of Justice.

Mr. THORSON: My friend is thinking of subsection 2 of section 7. That is incorporated in section 51 of the act, so provision is made elsewhere.

Mr. BENNETT: Without going through it, will the hon. gentleman say it is sufficiently clear that there is no doubt about it?

Mr. THORSON: I think so.

Mr. BENNETT: What about the question of clerks and employees attached to the commission being subject to the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): They will be.

Mr. BENNETT: Is that clear?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes, I think so. I understand that is the case at present, and this makes no change in that regard. The change here is more in administration; it has been felt that a saving could be made and equal efficiency given if the routine auditing and accounting were done by the officers of the department rather than by the pension board themselves, they confining themselves strictly to the adjudication of applications and being relieved of the necessity of carrying accountants and auditors and so on. This will bring the staff under the control of the departmental heads.

Mr. BENNETT: Does not this amendment limit to some extent what you might call the independent character of the commission?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not think so; that is not the intention.

Mr. BENNETT: It may not be the intention, and I say this with no desire to give offence, but does it not place this commission practically under the control of the minister as a sub-department of his department, which I think was not the intention of parliament when the commission was created? The Minister of National Defence will remember that one of the points strongly urged was that this should be a commission more or less lifted out of politics, if I may use that expression in no offensive manner, and certainly the effect of this amendment is to make the commission nothing more or less than a branch of the department.

Mr. RALSTON: It is always attached to the department.

Mr. BENNETT: But this is the way it reads:

> The commission shall be attached to the department and the expenses required to be incurred for the discharge of its duties, including the salaries of its officers, clerks, and other employees shall be met out of the moneys provided by parliament for the purposes of the department.

I speak subject to correction, but my memory is that we dealt with the commission as a distinct branch of government with regard to appropriation and so on, and now it must rely entirely upon the departmental appropriation.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is true.

Mr. RALSTON: That is the case now.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The commission has its own vote of $80,000 or $90,000. A great deal of the trouble that has arisen between the pension board and the department, in the matter of administration, has been in the control of certain individuals who are merely carrying out routine. I have provided that the pension board, in order that they may be more independent and be better able to carry out their work, should have under their control the officers on whom they are depending to secure information regarding the pensioner or proposed pensioner. Heretofore, the medical men in the field were in the offices of the Department of Soldiers Civil Re-establishment, and that department reported through to the pension board. It is now proposed that they will have the control of their medical officers and the officers in the field, the men securing information, investigators and so on. We believe that considerable economy can be effected by one auditing organization and one accounting organization, without in any way interferring with the commission or its independence. It is merely a matter of administration.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sure the minister is very anxious to have this matter removed from the field of political activity. Will he be good enough to look at the old and the new section? Under the old section the commission had the powers and duties of a deputy head of a department for the purposes of the Civil Service Act. The bill, as now drawn, gives effect to a principle entirely opposed to what the minister has now stated. Section 5 says that the expenses:

> including the salaries of its officers, clerks, and other employees shall be met out of the moneys provided by parliament for the purposes of the department.

In other words, the commission may require help and it may not be able to get it; if the minister says, "I am not going to provide it," that is the end of it. Heretofore, the commission has functioned as an independent branch, receiving a direct appropriation from parliament which was subject to the supervision of the Auditor General. You have reversed that exactly. The minister said a moment ago that questions relating to clerks, and matters of that kind, would be determined by the board. What he proposes to do now is to take these matters out of their hands. The section says: "Shall be met out of the moneys provided by parliament for the purposes of the department." In other words, if he thinks that they should not have additional men to carry on their activities, they cannot have them because the minister is not going to provide the money to pay them. He is in supreme control of the whole fund under which this commission is to operate, and, heretofore, that was not so. I cannot think that this is a step in advance, nor will it promote economy.

When I asked the minister a moment ago about appointments, he said that they were now under the Civil Service Commission, but will they be hereafter?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Where is that in the act?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is provided for in the act we passed a day or two ago, bringing about the amalgamation.

Mr. BENNETT: That does not touch the question at all, and we must not evade it. The minister is well aware, if he will consider it at all, that that does not touch upon the question. The old act said that the commission shall have all the powers and duties of a deputy head of a department for the purposes of the Civil Service Act. This will make this service a special branch of the department, and provides that the salaries of clerks and other employees shall be met out of the moneys provided by parliament for the purpose of the department. The effect of that is to take the appointment of these clerks out of the Civil Service Act. I do not say that that is intended, but that is the effect of it. I think the minister sees my point and I hope he will make the matter a little clearer.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): How would it be if we amended that section by dropping the words, "for the purposes of the department." Would that make it clearer?

Mr. BENNETT: I was going to suggest that the salaries of officers, clerks and other employees, should be paid out of moneys provided by parliament for the purpose. Does not the minister think that it is desirable to add those words to make that abundantly clear? We want to have it perfectly clear that these employees and officers will undoubtedly be under the Civil Service Act.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Or we could insert the old section, which says:

> The commission shall have all the powers and duties of a deputy head of a department for the purposes of the Civil Service Act.

Mr. BENNETT: Having regard to how this provision has worked out in the past, I think it will be more satisfactory just to add that subsection. Speaking subject to correction, I understand that under the old act, this has worked out satisfactorily. Is that correct? The Civil Service Commission made the appointments from time to time on the requisition of the commission?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Under those circumstances, I think the minister's suggestion would meet the case.

Mr. RALSTON: We can reinsert the old section.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly. Do I understand the minister to suggest, as an amendment that the salaries of officers, clerks, and other employees shall be met out of the moneys provided by parliament, and the words "for the purposes of the department" shall be struck out?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I would like to let this section stand for a moment, because it is rather important. It was drafted with some care in order that we might have better administration. That is really what we are after.

Mr. BENNETT: We all want that.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I would like the section to stand for the time being, until we can give it further thought.

Section stands.

On section 6—Additional duties.

Mr. BENNETT: That is merely a re-enactment of the old section?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Yes.

Section agreed to.

On section 10—Pension suspended on imprisonment or paid to dependent.

Mr. BENNETT: The other day I mentioned to the minister a case that was brought to his attention some time ago. I fancy that several members have had the same kind of case brought to their attention. However, I do not think that this question can be dealt with usefully under this section.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I do not think it could be done under this section.

Section agreed to.

On section 30—Federal appeal board.

Mr. BENNETT: It was section 30 that I desired to discuss with the committee in connection with section 5. Section 30 reads as follows:

> Such officers, clerks, and other employees as may be required for the proper discharge of the work of the board shall be furnished by the department, and the salaries of all such officers, clerks and other employees, together with all other expenses incidental to the carrying out of the work with which the board is charged, shall be paid by the department and shall be charged against the salary or other appropriations of the department.

It is very desirable to make this provision absolutely clear.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I suggest that the section stand for further consideration.

Section stands.

On section 29—Term of office.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): This section deals with the term of office of the appeal board. There is a suggestion that this section should be amended to give more permanency to the appointment. The section as drafted reads:

> Of the members first appointed to the board, other than the chairman, one-half shall be appointed for a term of two years and the other for a term of three years, and they shall be eligible for re-appointment for such further terms of two or three years, as the governor in council may deem advisable.

The words "two or three years" were substituted for the words "not to exceed five years". I understand in the committee there was some doubt as to whether the use of that term "not to exceed five years" would exclude them from further appointment, and they decided to reduce the term to from two to three years. A term of two to three years seems to be rather a limited term; at least it would not attract the type of men we would like to have act on the board.

Mr. BENNETT: Was that not what was intended by the Ralston report, namely, that it would not be a permanent body, but rather that to clear up the situation they would be a charge on the public service for a limited number of years?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): That is true.

Mr. RALSTON: It turns out that they are going to be as permanent as the pension board. They are still operating.

Mr. BENNETT: But in view of the amendments that are now being made to the act in the endeavour to meet the situations that experience has taught us should be met by legislation, the necessity for this board will become less and less apparent. That is, in the operation of the act as the committee has now amended it, there should be less necessity for the appeal board to act.

Mr. RALSTON: We are now giving the appeal board direct jurisdiction over the meritorious clause, which is the one which will be invoked more and more as the years go by.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the minister's personal view?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): In consultation with the Department of Justice we have had the following amendment suggested which would replace the amendment as it came from the committee:

> Every member of the board shall hold office during pleasure or such limited period of time not exceeding five years as the governor in council may prescribe, and shall be eligible for re-appointment from time to time as in the case of the first appointment, provided that any member who is appointed for a fixed period of time shall be removable for cause.

It is just a question whether the period of two or three years will attract the men that we should have on a board of that character, or whether we should extend the period to five years.

Mr. BENNETT: There seem to have been a good many applicants for the job.

Mr. McGIBBON: I am unalterably opposed to long appointments, I do not care whether they are on committees or on the bench or anywhere else. When you appoint a man to a position for ten or twenty years, no matter who he is, where he is responsible practically to nobody, he becomes autocratic, domineering and instead of being more efficient, he becomes less efficient. There is nothing like keeping people keyed up to their jobs. I am opposed to extending the time limit. In fact I moved in the committee that the pension board be brought under the same regulations as the appeal board, and I can see no reason why there should be a distinction between them. I am not impressed with the idea that you have to make long-term appointments in order to get good men. If a man has the ability, the inclination, the ambition, he will take chances on making good. All he wants is the chance, and you are making a mistake in fixing long-term appointments for these offices. Nearly everyone who is on the committee was impressed, rightly or wrongly, with the fact that there was a lack of harmony between the soldiers and both of these boards. It is no use endeavouring to disguise that fact. The soldiers were complaining not so much about the law and the bulk of the regulations as about the spirit in which the act was being administered. A large part of our work was to correct the act so as to make it absolutely compulsory for both of these boards to do what we wanted them to do. As a matter of fact we were restricting what you might call the liberty of each of these boards and compelling them to carry out the specific desire of parliament.

It is a mistake to increase that tenure of office of this board and the board of pension commissioners could to advantage be put under similar regulations as the appeal board. If you have good men on the board, you have the privilege of reappointing them. If you do not have good men, they automatically fall by the wayside and you do not have to cause ill feeling by dismissing them. In the end if you limit the term of office of these boards you have greater harmony and greater satisfaction expressed by the soldiers. If you are going to make the term ten years with eligibility for reappointment, that means twenty years, which will carry them through the lifetime of a large number of the soldiers. I am positively opposed to long appointments. On one occasion I suggested to the Minister of Justice that he should get the senators to retire at a certain age. In the railway commission I think the ten-year limit is the right principle to follow. We should place in these positions younger men who will be more energetic, more ambitious and who will probably throw greater enthusiasm and energy into the work.

Mr. BOYS: How many members are there on the board?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Seven.

Mr. BOYS: Does the minister think this section is workable? I understand there are seven members on the board and it reads:

> Of the members first apointed to the board, other than the chairman, one-half shall be appointed—

That would mean three and a half.

Mr. THORSON: Other than the chairman. There are seven including the chairman.

Mr. BOYS: Excuse me.

Mr. RALSTON: You will not have to split them up. I took some interest in this and I think the hon. member from Muskoka perhaps misapprehends the section as drafted and the suggestion made by the minister. The section in the original act is rather peculiar. Section 50, strangely enough, provides no limitation whatever for the appointment of other than the first members. That is to say, after you have appointed your first members, the other members may be appointed under the statute for a certain specified time without limit. There appears to be some ground for that for the reason that it does not seem to be implied that they are appointed during pleasure, because it is expressly inserted in the act that any member may be removed for cause. If they were appointed during pleasure, there would not have to be any provision for removing them for cause. I understand that there was considerable discussion in the committee about the fact that the section as it stands does not permit anybody to be reappointed for an aggregate term of longer than five years, no matter whether there may be two or three reappointments.

Mr. BENNETT: How long is the chairman appointed for now?

Mr. RALSTON: The chairman holds office as chairman at pleasure. The chairman is one of those as to whom there is no provision in the act, limiting or extending his appointment.

Mr. BOYS: Does the minister say that the chairman is not appointed for any specified period?

[Mr. McGibbon.]

Mr. RALSTON: As to the chairman as a member of the board, there is no provision limiting his appointment.

Mr. BOYS: If he is appointed as one of the seven, he should start—

Mr. RALSTON: For instance, I think he might under this act be appointed for ten years.

Mr. BOYS: I realize that I was wrong in the observation I made at first, but suppose we apply it now: If there was a provision which said that the chairman shall be appointed for five years, and of the remaining six, half shall be appointed for two years and half for three years, then it would be all right, but in a hurried glance I do not see anything in the act which says that the chairman, apart from the other six, is appointed for a specified period.

Mr. RALSTON: I quite agree.

Mr. BOYS: Then we start with an appointment of seven members, and we look to this section, which says that half are to be appointed for two years and the other half for three years.

Mr. RALSTON: No, we do not.

Mr. BOYS: Then under what section is the chairman appointed separately from the other members of the board.

Mr. RALSTON: He is appointed under subsection 2 of section 50. Section 50 says:

> There shall be a board known as "The federal appeal board," consisting of not less than three nor more than seven members appointed by the governor in council on the recommendation of the Minister of Justice.

There is no limit whatever. Then you come to subsection 4, which says:

> Of the members first appointed to the board, other than the chairman, one-half be appointed for a term of two years and the other for a term of three years, and they shall be eligible for reappointment for such further terms, not to exceed five years, as the governor in council may deem advisable.

I understand that in the committee there arose the question as to whether or not the phrase "not to exceed five years" did not mean the aggregate of all the reappointments which could be made; in other words, that if a man were appointed for two years and then for three years, would not the power of reappointment be deemed to be exhausted? And it was suggested that it should be provided that he might be reappointed for as many terms as was thought proper, because by reappointing him you would get the benefit of his experience and information.

The other point is this: Under the act, and the suggestion of the committee, there is no limit, as I have pointed out, to the appointment of the chairman or to the appointment of any other member that the first member of the board, and it has been suggested by the minister, and is embodied in the section which he proposes, that everybody shall be limited. If they are first appointments, they would not be for more than two or three years, and they never can be reappointed at any one time for longer than five years. It seemed to me that that was advisable.

My hon. friend the leader of the opposition referred to the report of the commission with which I happened to be connected. I find here that their recommendation for the period of appointment to the federal appeal board was five years. It seemed to me that was sound. In the first place, it did not provide for life appointment or for a long permanency, but for some permanency so that a man might have the expectation of some reasonable period of employment, and thus be willing to cut himself off from something else and perfect himself in this work. The suggestion made here is that if you appoint a man first for two years, and he is a good man and you want to reappoint him, you cannot reappoint him for more than three years at the very outside.

Mr. BOYS: But you could continue to reappoint him.

Mr. RALSTON: Quite right.

Mr. BOYS: I would certainly agree with that.

Mr. RALSTON: And the five years makes it so that the man can feel, "I do not have to depend upon the whim of somebody to reappoint me; I have at least five years service before me, so I will take my chance and go into the service."

Mr. BENNETT: There are a great many applicants, unfortunately.

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, and perhaps they are not all qualified. It is not everybody who is qualified for the pension board or the appeal board. A man requires not only medical and legal or business experience, but he has to be wise as a serpent and harmless as a dove as well.

Mr. BENNETT: Some of them are the latter.

Mr. RALSTON: And therefore it seems to me that it is worth while to consider giving some permanency to the appointment, providing you have a good man who has served for two or three years—

Mr. BENNETT: What are the salaries?

Mr. RALSTON: For the chairman, $7,000, and $6,000 for the others. The amendment which the minister suggests does two things. It puts a limit on everybody's appointment —the chairman's and appointments which would be called first appointments; they are not to exceed five years—and secondly it puts a limit on reappointment, which is not to exceed five years. As the leader of the opposition says, in the course of time the federal appeal board may work itself out of a job, but that is not going to be for a long time yet, I am afraid, and the amendments that are passing this year are the reverse of cutting them out of work; they are giving them additional work and additional responsibility, and perhaps imposing qualifications which were not thought of when the board was first appointed.

Mr. McGIBBON: I do not think the minister just caught my point. It is pretty hard to discuss this matter without being considered personal, but I do not wish to be considered personal in what I say in regard to either the federal appeal board or the pension board. As a matter of fact, I know very few of the members. But the point is this: If the minister goes on the assumption that he has a perfect board now, and wants to keep them all on, he might just as well pass an age limit for their retirement at seventy-five or eighty years, but the impression we got in the committee was not that the board is perfect, but that it is far from being perfect, and the federal appeal board is just as bad as the pension board, or worse. If the minister is going to raise the period—

Mr. RALSTON: He is not raising it.

Mr. McGIBBON: I thought you were making it five years.

Mr. RALSTON: It is five years now. This is cutting it down to two and three years, but it is making it so that you can reappoint a man.

Mr. McGIBBON: I thought the minister was proposing an amendment to make it five years.

Mr. RALSTON: It is five now under the act, and the committee suggested an amendment cutting it down to two or three years, but providing that you could reappoint him. The minister's suggestion is that when the reappointment comes, it may be for a period of at least five years.

Mr. McGIBBON: That is my point. It should be for two or three years.

Mr. RALSTON: It is five years under the act now.

Mr. McGIBBON: I would suggest dealing with the pension board in the same way you deal with the federal appeal board.

Mr. RALSTON: That is another question.

Mr. McGIBBON: I am not saying that in a personal way at all, but I think you would get better satisfaction that way.

Mr. BOYS: As I understand it, the reappointment is given by subsection 4 of section 50, which reads:

> Of the members first appointed to the board, other than the chairman, one-half shall be appointed for a term of two years and the other for a term of three years, and they shall be eligible for reappointment for such further terms, not to exceed five years, as the governor in council may deem advisable.

Under the present law they may be reappointed for five years. I think there should be a limitation, but no disqualifications. Because there is the right to reappoint for five years, you are not obliged to exercise it; discretion may be used under that section. I am strongly inclined to think that if you got a good man, and offered him a reappointment for one or two years, he might not care to accept it. It seems to me that a person would have very carefully to consider accepting a five-year appointment, because after that time, if his services were dispensed with, what would he do? I prefer leaving the law in its present form.

Mr. RALSTON: Would my hon. friend have that apply to everybody? In other words, cut out the word "first" in the first line of subsection 4?

Mr. BOYS: Yes.

Mr. RALSTON: As it is now there is a question whether the governor in council could not appoint some of them for ten years.

Mr. BOYS: It would work no hardship to put them all on the same basis.

Mr. RALSTON: It keeps them "on their toes", as one hon. member put it.

Mr. BOYS: I quite agree.

Mr. McPHERSON: Under clause 4 in the original act there was power to reappoint "for such further period, not to exceed five years." This amendment says that they "shall be eligible for reappointment for such further terms of two or three years." Would not this be restrictive to one reappointment? I agree with my hon. friend from Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. McGibbon) that the advantages of a shorter term were shown before the committee. It was the general opinion that the appointment should be made for a nominally short term, but that the appointees might be reappointed even to the extent of ten or fifteen years so long as they were giving good service. I rather think the proposed amendment would limit the term either to two or three years. The minister suggests a five-year term. Personally I am not very much interested in whether the term be two, three or five years, provided there is a reasonably short appointment and a short reappointment so these men wil be kept on their toes and give good service to the public by looking after the soldiers properly.

Mr. RALSTON: This is the amendment suggested, and I think it will meet my hon. friend's views:

> Every member of the board shall hold office during pleasure, or for such limited period of time, not exceeding five years, as the governor in council may prescribe; and shall be eligible for reappointment from time to time in the case of a first appointment, provided that any member who is appointed for a fixed period of time shall be removable for cause.

That gives the governor in council power to appoint members of the board to hold office during pleasure, which, should occasion arise, would enable council to cut them off immediately. A member of the board might be reappointed for a further period, but not longer than the original term. All the members would be removable for cause.

Mr. BENNETT: The words "during pleasure" would have no value at all.

Mr. RALSTON: If you appoint them during pleasure the appointments are probationary.

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): This was all carefully considered in the special committee, and the amendment in section 29 represents the conclusion arrived at, with the possible exception of the word "first" in the third line. I think if you eliminate that word the subsection represents exactly what the committee wanted in the way of legislation. It was the intention of the committee to recommend that the reappointment should be made at pleasure for the period of two or three years, as the government saw fit, and not for a period of five years. Of course, if the minister is not prepared to accept the recommendation of the committee, that is a different matter.

Mr. RALSTON: Does my hon. friend find in the subsection any power at all for a recurrent reappointment?

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): Yes. He "shall be eligible for reappointment for such further terms of two or three years."

Mr. BOYS: There are two classes of terms, but surely it does not limit the reappointments.

Mr. RALSTON: Is not that just what it does do?

Mr. BOYS: I would not think so. The language may be ambiguous, but it can be clarified.

Mr. RALSTON: Is it not to provide for staggered appointments, one for two years and the other for three?

Mr. BOYS: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Could not the subsection be clarified by making it read, "for one or more periods of two or three years"?

Mr. RALSTON: With all respect, I do not think much of the two- or three-year limitation.

Mr. BOYS: I suppose this is to ensure that you will always have some members on the board who had been on previously, the first half being appointed for two years, the other half for three years, and they would be reappointed respectively for three and two years.

Mr. RALSTON: Yes.

Mr. BOYS: Then why not put in the words "from time to time," thereby removing any ambiguity as to reappointment?

Mr. RALSTON: I do not think that will remove any ambiguity. The suggestion here is to give the governor in council power to appoint up to five years; then they can regulate any man by reappointing him for a shorter or longer period.

Mr. MANION: But you have your different periods in your original appointments, some for two and some for three years. The future appointments could all be for two or three years. You do not need to step them; you have already done so. Some will drop out in 1940, some in 1941, and so on.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): When the appeal board was first formed I think it was expected that it would not continue for more than five years.

Mr. MANION: I am speaking of the amendment to subsection 4 to section 29.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Quite so. But if this bill is accepted the appeal board will be continued for a considerable period, and it seems to me you will find difficulty in getting the type of men you need to accept appointments for such a short term.

Mr. BENNETT: You would get as good as you get now. I will give you a hundred of them before six o'clock.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): To get the better type of men we have to extend the period to five years; I am not sure it should not be ten.

Mr. BENNETT: The period of time should not be longer than five years, having regard to the conditions which first brought this court of appeal into existence. The Minister of National Defence in dealing with the matter originally did not contemplate the possibility of the board being in existence for any length of time. Circumstances have now made it likely that it will continue for many years. Under those conditions it is essential, as the member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. McPherson) and the member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. McGibbon) said, that these men should have a continued thought of the importance of their office and not get into a state of mind where they would not be as desirous of discharging their duties as they were when originally appointed. If you appoint them during pleasure, or for a period not exceeding three years, it seems to me you have done justice to the whole situation by imposing on them always the thought that they must discharge their duties properly, because there has been much complaint that the entire personnel of the board is of one political faith. That in itself is wrong. I put it to the minister, if in a board like this a total disregard of political considerations should not prevail. I have been told so frequently by returned men, "They are all of one political faith on that appeal board. What hope is there for me?" That is a wrong state of mind on their part, but it is brought about by a wrong attitude on the part of the government who appoint the appeal board. The appeal board should be appointed without regard to anything of this sort. That is my view at any rate.

Mr. McGIBBON: I may call the attention of the minister to the fact that the chairman of the appeal board was at one time on the pension board and was removed.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): He was at one time chief medical adviser, but not a commissioner.

Mr. McGIBBON: One point I would emphasize is this: These appointees should be men who served in France and had some experience in the front line. This is coming to them. There are a good many men who were smashed to pieces in war service and they ought to get the preference in all these appointments. I move that the five year period be reduced to three years.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The amendment is only proposed; I have not moved it. The committee reported unanimously and the house accepted their recommendation and it is not my purpose to bring about any disagreement between its members. I argued that it was advantageous in the interests of the soldier as well as of the men who compose the board that the appointment should be for a period of five years. I have not changed my mind, but rather than have a division of opinion on the resolution as it has come from the committee I withdraw my amendment and allow the section to stand as it is.

Mr. McPHERSON: In my view the amendment as suggested by the minister is preferable to the amendment as it appears in the printed bill. It covers the case fully.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall section 29 carry as it stands in the printed bill?

Mr. BOYS: I thought the minister was allowing the section to stand.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I am withdrawing my proposed amendment and allowing the section to go through as it is.

Mr. BOYS: Are you not going to meet the doubt expressed by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) as to the possibility of the section, as it stands, limiting reappointment? If it does limit it provision should be made for reappointment. I would suggest the words "from time to time" after the word "reappointment" in the thirty-seventh line.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): If there is no objection on the part either of members of the special committee or of this committee I move that the words "from time to time" be inserted after the word "reappointment" in the thirty-seventh line.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT ACT AMENDMENT

The house resumed, from May 8, consideration in committee of Bill No. 288, to amend the Soldier Settlement Act.—Mr. Forke.—Mr. Marcil in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: Section 1 was called at the last sitting of the committee. Section 2, "Revaluation of land".

On section 2—Revaluation of land.

Mr. BENNETT: I am told that the department has ruled, under the authority of the Department of Justice, that when a settler buys a property—at least when he receives money from the board and pays for the property and gives the mortgage back—his lands cannot be revalued. I think that parliament intended that these lands—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is section 2.

Mr. BENNETT: The chairman called section 2. Should we not apply the same principle to those who get money from the board, buy land, give a mortgage and take title, as in the other cases where there are agreements outstanding?. It was certainly intended by parliament last year that we should.

Mr. FORKE: That is section 2.

Mr. BENNETT: The chairman called section 2.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): The leader of the opposition is right. At the last sitting of the committee section 1 was considered and I have initialed it as carried.

Mr. BOYS: It certainly was not carried.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): Then we will revert to section 1.

On section 1—No patent to issue until amount owing to board is repaid.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I must say that I object to this section as much as ever. I will outline to the committee exactly the process through which the soldier passes in obtaining land. In the first place, the soldier did not know when he bought land that his homestead would be encumbered in consequence. I want the committee to follow the process throughout and see whether we ought to have the soldier's homestead, as well as the land, encumbered. First of all he had to go to the settlement board and satisfy them that he was capable of farming and after he passed the board he picked out his land. The board said, "We will not allow you to pay for the land the price which you think you ought to pay because you do not know very much about it." They wanted to get full value for their money, so they sent an inspector to value the land at a price at which the board would be able to recoup themselves if the land ever came back on their hands. As soon as the inspector came back to the office of the board the applicant was informed that the land had been valued at so much, and the soldier was asked to pay one-tenth of the price in cash. If he bought a $4,000 farm he had to put his hand in his pocket and pay over $400 to the board as further security. Then they bought the land, taking the deed in the name of the crown, and the soldier settler having paid his $400 took back an agreement for sale.

After having gone through all that he went on the land, but he could not sell a bushel of grain except with the consent of the soldier settlement board. I have documents on file to the effect that the soldier settlement board had to give their consent before grain could be sold, and they stated how much of the sale price they were to receive. In addition to that they sent out inspectors who watched the settler to satisfy themselves that he was doing right with the land and that their security was still good. If he secured a loan on cattle, those cattle remained in the name of the board; he could not sell a cow and could do nothing with the products of those cattle unless he received the approval of the board. The inspector would come around and say, "Where are those cattle; where is the increase? What have you done with it?" He was restricted in all quarters; he could do nothing except with the consent of the board. The whole purpose of that procedure was to make certain that the land would be valued at a price at which the board could recoup themselves; then they received one-tenth of the amount from the settler, and finally they made sure that the settler could not dispose of anything unless the board were satisfied that they would get their share of the sale price. Nothing was said to the settler about a homestead which he might take up, but after all that procedure the board now propose that when the settler fails and they have to take back that land, as would be done by a mortgage company, they shall put their hands on his homestead as security for the amount still owing.

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Who said no? The amendment states:

> When a settler obtains Dominion lands, whether by soldier grant or otherwise, and thereafter secures the approval of the board to any advance to him pursuant to this act, while there is owing by him to the board any sum or sums of money...

If the settler has taken up a homestead, that homestead is encumbered with a charge for the debt he may owe the board. A mortgage company would not proceed in that way, and I do not see why a soldier settler should have land which was not considered when the original agreement was made encumbered in this way.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think my hon. friend is wrong there, if the settler did not have the homestead at the time he secured the advance.

Mr. ADSHEAD: But nothing was said about it in the agreement; if it had been included then, there could be no objection. if the agreement under which he bought the land from the government included the homestead, there would be no need for this act.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I am not sure that I quite understand how this amendment will apply. I will just give the minister a specific case. Here is a soldier who recently lost not only the land he had purchased from the board, but his homestead which was encumbered according to his agreement. The board have foreclosed on the land he secured from them and on his homestead. Under the act recently passed by this house this soldier settler wants to take up a second homestead, and in that case I wonder if that second homestead will be encumbered to secure any indebtedness which might be still charged against him?

Mr. THORSON: I think it is quite clear that any homestead he may take up subsequently will not be charged with any previous debt owing by him to the board.

Mr. ADSHEAD: It says, "When a settler obtains or has obtained."

Mr. THORSON: I am referring to the question put by the hon. member for Mackenzie. If he will look at the language of the new section 26 he will find the following:

> "When a settler obtains or has obtained Dominion lands, whether by soldier grant or otherwise, such lands shall be subject to a first charge in favour of the board for any sum owing to the board in respect of any sale or advance thereafter approved for and made to him by the board pursuant to this act and no patent shall be issued to such settler for such lands until the amount of such sum so owing with accrued interest has been fully repaid."

So if there were a sale made to him before he gets his homestead, or if any advance were made to him before then, his homestead will be free from the charge.

Mr. NEILL: There is one word which I think should be changed; I refer to the word "sale" in line twelve. This section says that such lands shall be held as security for any sum owing in respect of such sale. It is not in respect of a sale but in respect of a purchase; the debt is owing by the man who bought the land. I did not think any obligation rested upon the man who sold the land; I thought the obligation was on the man who bought the land and did not pay for it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It deals with the sale to the soldier or the advance made to him.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I think it is covered by the words, "sale made to him."

Mr. BOYS: It refers to the sale made to him, which is the same as a purchase by him.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Revaluation of land.

Mr. BENNETT: I would like to ask the minister the question which I propounded a moment ago, as to whether or not section 68 could not be further amended by providing that lands which have been purchased with money advanced by the board, for which mortgages have been given, should be subject to revaluation in the same way as other lands mentioned in the section. It seemed to me incredible that such a limitation should exist, having regard to what parliament did last year, yet the Department of Justice has told the department presided over by the Minister of Immigration and Colonization that we could not revalue those lands.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I understand that this matter was very thoroughly discussed in the committee, and perhaps there were good reasons why that is not embodied in this bill.

Mr. THORSON: It is included, if I might say a word in explanation. I think the purport of section 2 is to cover just those cases which the leader of the opposition has in mind. There were two soldier settlement schemes, the one of 1917 and the other of 1919. Under the 1919 scheme title was taken by the board, who sold the land to the soldier under an agreement for sale. Under the 1917 scheme there was no such procedure; the money was advanced to the soldier, who bought the land, obtained title in his own name and gave a mortgage back to the board. The purpose of this section 2 is that the revaluation scheme shall be applied to those persons who had obtained an advance under the 1917 act, which advance was used in the purchase of agricultural land. I think section 2 carries into effect the very object which the leader of the opposition referred to.

Mr. BENNETT: It occurs to me, Mr. Chairman, that the language should be sufficiently comprehensive to cover the point I have raised, as that appears to have been the intention of the committee. I shall treat it as though it were, although I was somewhat surprised when the department ruled that they could not deal with it. Subsection (a) of section 2 will meet the situation with respect to indebtedness to the board, and subsection (b) will meet the situation where the price has been paid, with the approval of the board, for the land and improvements. I do not think it is made abundantly clear that that is what was intended to be done, but we will take it for granted.

Mr. THORSON: It was because of the ruling of the Justice department that this question came before the special committee.

Mr. BOYS: It is next to impossible for any member to appreciate what this does. I am not saying that there is anything wrong with it, but we have not the act before us. If we had the section of the act we would know what it covers, and then we could see if there was an error made. All I have to say is that if there is any distinction between the soldier who gets an allowance and a revaluation where there is no mortgage, and the one who cannot have a revaluation where there is a mortgage, it would seem to be most inequitable. A mortgage should not control the thing at all. What does control it is the first sale, and if that sale was made at too high a price; if the revaluation shows that he paid $5,000 for lands that were worth only $3,000, he should be allowed the difference; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. RALSTON: Only the first sale, with the participation of the board.

Mr. BOYS: I have heard what my leader says regarding what is intended, and I have heard the hon. member say that this implements that intention, but I have not heard anybody quote the act. I do not say that this does not cover it, but surely it could be made clear and we would not have to guess at it. The Minister of the Interior did not seem to have any too much confidence about it, but possibly he was just speaking with that usual caution that characterizes him. Let us have the section read to us, and also the amendments.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I shall be very glad to do that. My reason for being cautious is that I have found it pays to be cautious when I am talking to a group of lawyers. Section 68 reads as follows:

Notwithstanding anything in this act, a settler who has agreed to purchase any land from the board, who has not assigned or transferred his interest in his land—

That is amended in the following manner:

(a) by inserting immediately after the word "who' where it first appears in the second line thereof, the following:—

"is indebted to the board in respect of an amount loaned to him by the board under the former act for and expended in the purchase of agricultural land or"

And then follows the wording of section 68:

who has not assigned or transferred his interest in his land,

Then (b) amends subsection (c) of section 68. My hon. friend does not want me to read the whole section? I will just read the amended sections.

Mr. BOYS: That will be all right.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I will read down to where the amendment takes place:

(c) The depreciation in value to be determined shall be the amount by which, through no neglect or mismanagement on the part of the settler, the price at which the board agreed to sell the land and improvements to the settler

Then comes the amendment:

—or the price under the former act paid by the settler with the approval of the board for the land and improvements

Then the section goes on:

—exceeds the present value, and in determining the present value of the land, improvements made by the settler shall not be included.

Mr. CLARK: I made a proposal to the minister the other day that when he brought this act back he include in it a provision to make the employees of this department permanent. The same day the Minister of Health, in his bill to amalgamate the departments of Health and Pensions, brought in a provision which, in effect, makes the employees of that department permanent, and thereby subject to the Civil Service Act and entitled to superannuation. The employees of this department are in exactly the same position. They have been in this department nearly ten years, and they have done and are doing very important work. I understand that they are doing the colonization work for the Immigration department, in addition to administering the Soldier Settlement Act. I understand also that they are doing colonization work, or a large portion of it, for the railway. Surely under the circumstances these men should be made permanent and should be given the same opportunity and treatment as the other civil servants. The fact that they are, in the main, soldiers in my opinion makes their case that much stronger. I cannot understand why they have been kept out of this right for ten years. I think this offers a very convenient opportunity to make these employees civil servants and entitled to the provisions of the Civil Service Act and superannuation.

Mr. FORKE: I was considering bringing them under the Civil Service Commission at the next session of the house. However, if there is any strong desire in the house that it should be done this session, it probably could be done. I should prefer, however, to wait until after the report comes from the committee that is now inquiring into immigration matters.

Mr. CLARK: Is it true that they are doing colonization work for the Immigration department?

Mr. FORKE: Yes.

Mr. CLARK: And it is true that they are doing a large portion of the colonization work for the railway?

Mr. FORKE: The railways do not admit it.

Mr. CLARK: Is it true they are doing something?

Mr. FORKE: I think they do.

Mr. CLARK. Then is not their case unanswerable?

Mr. FORKE: I think they have a very good case.

Mr. CLARK: Is it not a very simple amendment that is required?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Having had some experience myself, I did not wish to stand in the way of any department of the government coming under the Civil Service Act. That is not my intention, but I think it would be well to wait at least until the report of the committee now dealing with immigration matters is made, because it will have some bearing, undoubtedly, on whether this organization known as the soldier settlement board is to be a permanent one or not. They certainly are not required to be permanent to administer this act alone. They have been doing, as my hon. frend has pointed out, a considerable amount of colonization work; there is no doubt about that. I think the committee which is inquiring into these matters will have something to say as to that, and I suggest that it might be well to leave this matter until the committee has reported.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, I hope the minister will deal with this matter at this session. I have received a very large number of letters and telegrams from gentlemen whom I do not know, residing in various parts of western Canada, asking that the matter be impressed upon the attention of the government at the present session of parliament. Having regard to the service they have rendered and the responsibilities they discharge, and the willingness of the minister, as he has himself stated, favourably to consider the matter, I think that this should be dealt with at the present session. We hope that he will do this without necessitating our endeavouring to move an amendment on the third reading of this measure in view of the representations that have been made from various parts of Canada, if the bill could be dealt with by an added section at the instance of the minister himself, that would be much more pleasing to us than if we were compelled to make a motion which I suppose the government, with its majority, could easily vote down.

Mr. FORKE: I have no serious objection to that. Of course I would have to consult the Prime Minister and the government before introducing an amendment of this kind.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. COOTE: There is just one objection that might be offered to that suggestion and that is whether it is necessary to have the organization made permanent in character. It is quite fair for the employees to ask to be placed on a permanent basis, but I question whether Canada should contemplate making the soldier settlement board a permanent body in the government service. Surely the work of the settlement board will be completed in a few years and therefore I do not think we should say definitely now that for a long period of years we shall require a number of these men in colonization work. I do not really know whether that is necessary.

Mr. FORKE: My experience is that the colonization end is the bigest end of the immigration work. As Minister of Immigration my opinion is that their work will be necessary for many years to come.

Mr. NEILL: I should like to ask the minister in charge when we are going to get some action on this revaluation. I think the question is appropriate as the title of the section is "revaluation of land". Revaluation was long overdue when the act was passed in 1926. The legislation was delayed a year owing to the defeat of the government. It has been passed for more than a year now. All claims had to be entered before October last; that is seven months ago, and as yet I have not heard that any of the settlers in my district have had their claims finally settled. Their claims have been investigated and I think, generally speaking, a number of claims throughout Canada have been satisfactorily arranged so far, but they have not yet the authority of law. These men are kept sort of dangling between the devil and the deep sea, not knowing what they will get or whether they will get anything in the way of revaluation. I should like to know whether any progress has been made. Can the minister give me some definite assurance when the matter is to be, if not wound up, at least proceeded with to the extent of making progress.

Mr. BENNETT: Without repeating it, I should like to associate myself with what the hon. member for Comox-Alberni has so well said. The other day there came to my attention a case of considerable hardship. As the hon. member said, the settler is left suspended between the devil and the deep sea. He is perfectly willing to take a swim if the opportunity offers, but he must resist with all his power the effort made to drive him to the gentleman to whom the hon. member has referred, and in terms meaning the government itself.

Mr. FORKE: I can assure the committee that every endeavour is being made by the land settlement board with extra assistance to have the settlements made as quickly as possible. Many difficulties have arisen but the board is doing its best. My intention was that when my estimates came up I would give a complete report upon the parcels of land examined, the percentage of reductions made, and all other data in connection with the work carried on during the past summer. When my estimates come up I shall be glad to make a statement of that kind.

Mr. BOYS: Have any settlements actually been concluded?

Mr. FORKE: Quite a number.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Supposing the settler bought school lands, would they be covered by this?

Mr. FORKE: I think so.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I should like to suggest that the hon. member for East Calgary has certainly left upon those who have not studied the act the impression that this is a new and stringent regulation. As a matter of fact it is a modification of an act which has been in existence since 1919. That is, under the general act all Dominion lands, whether obtained before or after the receipt of a loan, were brought in. Now this is restricted to those he obtained before a loan was made. I may say frankly that I have gone and I shall be prepared to go as far as I consider it possible to go in relieving the soldiers' obligations, but I feel I have some responsibility as a member of parliament to the taxpayers and that is as far as I am prepared to go.

HAY AND STRAW INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee on Bill No. 73, respecting the inspection and grading of hay and straw.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Marcil in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Regulations.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): There are two subsections added to section 2, as follows:

(c) by inspection certificate, to certify the class, quality and/or condition of hay or straw, and such inspection certificates issued by officers appointed by law for that purpose shall be accepted in the courts as prima facie evidence of the particulars therein set out.

(d) to prescribe the places where and the conditions under which the inspection or re-inspection of hay and straw may be made.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The purpose of the two new subsections that have been added is simply to authorize the department to issue certificates of inspection in any case where this method of inspection is invoked. That is not the law now. We are issuing certificates at the present time without any particular authorization, but under this bill we are taking authority to issue the certificates wherever this inspection system is invoked by any hay seller or buyer. It is voluntary legislation, and the principal purpose of the amendment is to reclassify and re-introduce a different system of grades.

Mr. COOTE: I have received a letter from some hay growers in Alberta asking whether they would be given some representation on the advisory board when the grades are being established.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Our usual practice, wherever there is an organization of hay producers, or an organization in any other line of business that is being dealt with, is to give representation on the advisory board, and particularly are we desirous of having a representative from each province to represent the hay growers.

Mr. BENNETT: I was going to say to the Minister of Justice, to whom I was just speaking, that to make the certificate prima facie evidence in the provincial courts, plus the fact that the legislation is in itself in my judgment an invasion of the legislative jurisdiction of the provinces, will some day invite a declaration from some court that the whole matter is ultra vires of this parliament. I content my self with making that observation, because in your desire to impose the certificates in the provinces by federal legislation, you are now going the whole limit and saying that the courts are bound to take the certificates of this department as prima facie evidence of what the inspectors say regarding the quality of the hay or straw.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I would not like to dispute my hon. friend's theory of the matter, but the fact remains that we have had this principle embodied in at least three or four acts, and they have never been challenged in the courts.

Mr. BENNETT: The only one that got to the courts was the one about eggs, and it was held to be bad.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have this principle embodied in several acts.

Section agreed to.

On section 3—Reasons for grading.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): This section has been amended by adding after the word "matter" in subsection 2 the words, "not naturally produced with the hay or straw."

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 4—Imported hay and straw, how to be graded.

Mr. NEILL: What is the meaning of the words "applicable to hay grown in the province into which hay is imported"? The bill says that when straw imported into Canada is inspected, the inspection and grading has to be done in accordance with the provisions of this act, but in the case of hay there are these additional words, "applicable to hay grown in the province into which hay is imported." There is no provision in this act dealing with specific regulations as regards one province more than another, and I should like to ask what is the purpose of these words.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Under the old act there was a variation in grades in different parts of Canada; there would be an outstanding difference in the quality of the hay. The intention here is simply to recognize distinct grades for each province, where necessary. Down in the maritimes, for instance, in Nova Scotia, we have marsh hay, having peculiarities differing substantially from upland hay, although it is tame hay. In New Brunswick and in Prince Edward Island we have the regular order of hay. In Quebec it is largely timothy. In the prairies the hay has distinctive characteristics, and in Alberta it is largely alfalfa. The idea is to work out a system of grades that will take care of the peculiar characteristics of hay that we have throughout Canada.

Mr. NEILL: Are you going to establish grades by regulation?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Under the advisory board.

Mr. NEILL: There is nothing in the act to indicate the minister's intention to do it according to regulations made under the act.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have power in the act to make regulations.

Mr. NEILL: If it is to be done by regulations, reference ought to be made to the regulations in the act, but there is no reference here.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If my hon. friend thinks that would make it any plainer—

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): If regulations are to be passed under the provisions of this act under which grades are to be established, surely the regulations should be mentioned in the provisions of the act.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This section is no doubt capable of improvement to make it more lucid, but it is just as we have had it in the old act, although that may not be a good commendation. But I see my hon. friend's point. We have power, however, to act on the advice of the advisory board in the matter of establishing standards.

Mr. LANCTOT (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I had the privilege of being present at the sittings of the committee on agriculture which, some time ago, recommended the adoption of this bill. To-day, I wish to set forth the viewpoint of the province of Quebec, because in this country there are various qualities of hay. I wonder whether Alberta, among other provinces, grows really hay for commercial purposes. I rather think that this bill is especially introduced to please the farmers of Alberta, because there is a variety of other things in their hay. They made the sale of this hay legal, although they admitted that it contained wood and bones of animal carcases, etc.

As I stated, before the committee of agriculture, there are to-day all kinds of new machinery to take care of the hay crop, work which we old timers of Quebec used to do by hand. I am still in favour of grading the hay in the field after it has been mowed and raked separately; we do not gather it in hay-cocks to-day because we have hay loaders. Unfortunately, this makes the hay more difficult to grade. It is different with grain, which we can pass through the fanning-mill, and if necessary we pass it through two or three times so as to obtain grain suitable for seeding. The hay cannot be put through the same process. For instance, in one morning about 20 arpents of hay is cut on a piece of land measuring 15 arpents in length by 1½ to 2 arpents in width; let us suppose that we have in succession a strip of pure clover, another of mixed clover, and a third of fine timothy; in my father's time all the timothy, the pure clover and the mixed clover were handled separately and also placed in different bays in our barns so that we had some fine, medium and ordinary hay. We therefore had a bay of fine hay, a bay of medium hay and a bay of ordinary hay. When it was taken into the barn we could separate the various qualities and we sold the hay according to its grading, Nos. 1, 2 or 3; who could grade the hay to-day while it is being pressed since it is all mixed? Grading is simply impossible. I have been a hay dealer for the last 36 years. I employ, to grade the hay, men with experience, as well qualified as any inspector of the Department of Agriculture. When I purchase 100 tons of hay from a farmer I send an expert; the latter examines two cars and grades them. He places in one car the best quality of hay and that of medium quality in one of the warehouses which we have here and there throughout the district where the hay is bought. If the hay was graded in the fields we could caution the farmer; and he would bring us hay of good quality only and we would not be bothered with the kind of hay which we are apt to have in storage. In my own county the farmers bring me good hay, because I tell them to grade and separate it in the fields. I am aware that for a farmer who has very little hay to sell and but one barn, it is harder. However, when farmers have three or four barns at their disposal for hay, they can grade it better than inspectors and dealers. We, the dealers, together with our experts, grade it the best we can, yet the hay is mixed, it can be camouflaged but this does not often happen in a county where the dealer can warn the farmers and tell them to do the right thing. You know that the careful person is always in demand; he goes to the trouble of grading his hay and sells a better product. As a rule we pay him sufficiently to indemnify him for his trouble.

In regard to this measure and many others introduced by the Department of Agriculture, we find it is overdone and it is very annoying to have so many acts in regard to every thing and which have no meaning.

As to the province of Quebec which grows a great deal of both timothy and other hay of good quality, I think that the expert, who championed the bill before the committee of Agriculture (Mr. Clarke), should allow the old dealers to carry on without troubling them. We can assure him that the experts of the Department of Agriculture cannot do any better than we can.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: To do full justice to the observations of my hon. friend (Mr. Lanctot) I shall have to wait until they are translated, which will not be until to-morrow. Therefore I move that the committee rise and report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

SUPPLY—DUMPING DUTY

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. R. K. ANDERSON (Halton): Mr. Speaker, I rise to move an amendment to the motion to go into supply, similar to the amendment that was moved last Tuesday by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Tolmie). The subject matter of his amendment was not then pronounced upon by the house, the debate being concluded under the eleven o'clock rule while I was speaking, and consequently I adjourned the debate.

The amendment is being moved again for the purpose of once more bringing to the attention of the government and the country a matter of considerable importance owing to imports of agricultural products at certain seasons of the year to such an extent as to be injurious to the producers of similar products in the Dominion. These importations affect particularly the farming classes in the provinces of Ontario, British Columbia, Quebec and Nova Scotia, and relate to fruits and vegetables and poultry products It will be generally agreed that these may be described as necessaries of life, and are essential to the health of our people, particularly fruit and vegetables when they first come on the market. The sale of the home grown product is injuriously affected by the importation of similar products produced in the United States under conditions that make it impossible for our producers to sell their products at a comparable price. As I have said, fruits are essential to the health of our people, particularly in the summer time; but there are certain seasons of the year when fruits are still more essential to the health of the people of the United States. At those seasons the producers in the United States have a surplus for export, and they dump that surplus into Canada, where it is sold practically to cover the cost of transportation.

Last Tuesday I was interrupted by the adjournment of the house before I could complete my remarks regarding the extent and importance of this industry to Canada and point out the necessity of preserving our home market for Canadian producers. No one will contradict the statement that the home market is the best market for the producers of these particular products. Members of the delegation that interviewed the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) a short time ago claimed—and they ought to know what they were talking about—that Canadian-grown fruit and vegetables are the cheapest that the Canadian consumer can buy. All the delegates asked for was that they might be protected against abnormal competition in their home market, and undoubtedly when the surplus fruit and vegetable products of another country are being dumped here the competition is abnormal. The same thing applies to poultry and particularly to eggs, and if the producers of these commodities in Canada are capable of supplying adequately the demands of the Canadian people they should be protected from the imports of the surplus of similar products of other countries.

The delegation which waited upon the government two or three weeks ago was a large body representative of these two particular industries; they came from every part of Canada, from the Pacific to the Atlantic. They were here and they presented their case in a very forcible and impressive manner. They stated on that occasion that they would be perfectly willing to accept a seasonal tariff which would enable them to have their own market at that season of the year when their products were available for the home consumer. That surely was a very reasonable request and one which the government could scarcely deny. If they had been asking for a high tariff the year round, to keep out similar products from other countries when they could not be supplied at home, the case would have been different. The Prime Minister, in his speech a week ago, made this observation, as reported at page 2813 of Hansard:

> The members of that delegation, for the most part, came here under the impression that the power just referred to had been taken away from the administration.

I quote the Prime Minister in this regard merely to assure him that the delegation had no misunderstanding as regards what they were asking for. They knew perfectly well that the power had not been taken away from the administration to afford them assistance in connection with the dumping duty; they knew that the dumping clause in the Customs Act had not been repealed. But they did know that the order in council authorizing the Minister of National Revenue to fix the fair market price of articles coming into Canada had been rescinded. There was no misunderstanding on that point.

The hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans) opposed the dumping clause on the ground—and he quoted figures—that the application of the clause increased prices in Canada. He instanced particularly peaches and raspberries. He claimed that the clause increased the prices of peaches in the western provinces from two to three hundred per cent over the prices that obtained in those years when the dumping clause was not invoked. I have in my hand a statement showing the prices of peaches in various parts of Canada for the years from 1923 to 1927, and I shall quote from it in order to show how erroneous were the statements made by the hon. member for Rosetown. We will take Calgary, for example, a city in the prairies —and I fancy the hon. member was referring particularly to prices in the prairie provinces. The following comparison speaks for itself:

	Calgary	Regina
1923..	$1 60 per box	$1 50 per box
1924..	2 08	1 95
1925..	....	1 75
1926..	1 50	1 58
1927..	1 78	1 75

[Mr. R. K. Anderson.]

It will be remembered that the order in council empowering the Minister of National Revenue to place a valuation on these articles when imported was passed in July, 1926. In that year peaches in Calgary were $1.50, ten cents below what they were there in 1923, when there was no dumping duty invoked; while in Regina it was $1.58, or eight cents above what they were in that city in 1923. In 1927 peaches sold in Calgary at $1.78, slightly above what they were in 1923, but considerably below the price obtained in 1924, when there was no dumping clause; because in 1924 they were $2.08. And in Regina, in 1927, the price was $1.75 as against $1.95 in 1924. This shows that even in the prairie provinces the invoking of the dumping clause did not increase the prices of these articles.

As regards the importance of these industries I want to quote a few figures from the Bureau of Statistics showing the amount of money spent by the people of this Dominion in these commodities and also the Canadian production in one year. We will take fruits and vegetables. In 1922 this industry produced in Canada $55,000,000 worth of fruits and vegetables as compared with $46,025,000 in 1927. That point was stressed by one of the delegates from Ontario, Mr. Fisher, who pointed out that because of competition from the United States the fruit and vegetable industry was being injured particularly in Ontario, but in the Dominion at large as well.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Will the hon. member repeat those figures?

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): In 1922 Canada produced—this is home production—$55,000,000 worth of fruit and vegetables as against $46,000,000 in 1927, or a decrease of about $9,000,000. That point, I was saying, was stressed by some of the delegates, who pointed out that the industry in Canada was declining because of insufficient support from our fiscal policy. In 1923 the production in Canada was $58,000,000 as against $43,000,000 in 1926; in 1924, it was $44,000,000; in 1925, $48,000,000; and in 1926, as I said, $43,000,000. This shows a steady decline in the production of fruits and vegetables in Canada.

It is well known that this country can produce fruits and vegetables equal to and better than those of most other countries, and there is therefore no reason why the Canadian industry should not be flourishing. I would suggest to hon. members from the prairies that they go to Toronto and motor through the Niagara peninsula. If they do,

I can assure them that they will see one of the most beautiful districts in this or any other country in the world; if they go towards the end of this week they will find it a most beautiful spot. When the peach and cherry trees are in full bloom that section of the country is a veritable garden of Eden. The market gardeners there are fairly prosperous, but they could be made much more so. And that is only one of the sections of the country where this condition prevails. Certainly it would be a calamity and a tragedy if any policy initiated by this parliament should jeopardize that particular industry.

Then we come to poultry and eggs. I think the great importance of these products is not fully realized by many people in this country. In 1922 the production of poultry and eggs was valued at $62,850,000, in 1923 at $62,370,000, in 1924 at $65,084,000 and in 1927 at $97,937,000. That is a very large amount of revenue to be derived from poultry and eggs. It has been stated that this industry brings more money to the people of this country than our great fishing industry. In 1927 the total revenue from fruits, vegetables, poultry and eggs amounted to $143,962,000. Not only have we a splendid market in Canada for our poultry and eggs, but I would remind the house that in England alone we have a market for two and a half billion eggs each year. England consumes annually about five and a half billion eggs, and produces only about one-half that number. Over six hundred million eggs are imported from the dominions, the remaining coming from all over the world, so we have a large market in that country. The hen is sometimes looked upon as the humblest of the farm stock, yet it has been stated that poultry raising is the only industry which always shows a profit under normal conditions. For these reasons I think the government should seriously consider reintroducing the dumping clause.

Reverting to the question of fruits and vegetables, I have already said that five provinces are interested in this industry, their production being as follows:

Province and Description	Year	Total Quantity	Total Value

Other berries	1926	2,965,000	326,150
	1927	2,296,000	206,640

These figures will show that this industry is scattered all over the Dominion, that it produces a considerable revenue for the Dominion and affords a living for a large number of people. The delegation which came to Ottawa some weeks ago to interview the government in this regard was composed of 250 people, who claimed to represent 150,000 fruit, vegetable and poultry producers in Canada. Allowing five persons to a family, that delegation represented well over half a million people who make their living through this industry. Surely it would be proper to make every possible effort to foster a home industry of this kind; it is not in the interests of Canada or any other country to import articles or products which can be supplied by the domestic producer. We should conserve our markets for our own people, to induce our people to take up these industries and to induce people to come to Canada from other countries and carry on this line of work. If we give the necessary assistance we can easily bring about that result, because we have the climate and the soil conditions which are favourable to this branch of agriculture, while nowhere in the world can we find better conditions for the production of eggs and poultry. The people of the prairie provinces should be interested in this matter, particularly in the poultry industry, since almost every year at the Christmas season they send large shipments of poultry to the markets of Ontario and Quebec. They also produce eggs in those provinces, and you would think that they would be the ones interested in seeing that the industry was put on a good paying basis.

The delegates, when they made their representations to the members of the cabinet, stated very definitely that it was in the best interests of the consumer as well as of the producer to keep the dumping clause in effect. They mentioned the fact, which everyone will agree with, that when the application of the dumping clause does not increase the price to the consumer, and when the domestic article is equal to or better than that imported from the outside, the use of home grown products is in the interest not only of the consumer but of the producer, and the government should take cognizance of the fact that in encouraging the consumption of domestic products they are at the same time serving the interests of consumer and producer.

I draw these facts to the attention of the government. I do not wish to labour the question, but I only say to the government that they would be well advised to read carefullly the statements made by the various delegates when they presented their cases, and to come to the conclusion that the order in council giving protection to these particular products be reinstated.

I therefore beg to move, seconded by Mr. Stirling, the following amendment:

[Mr. R. K. Anderson.]

That all the words after the word "that" be stricken out and the following substituted therefor:

"In the opinion of this house the necessary action should be taken by the government forthwith to effectively control the importation into Canada, either on sale, or on consignment, of natural products of a class or kind produced in Canada under conditions which prejudicially or injuriously affect, or threaten to prejudicially or injuriously affect, the interests of Canadian producers".

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. E. J. YOUNG (Weyburn): Mr. Speaker, two mistaken impressions have gone abroad throughout the country in regard to what has been done in connection with these dumping duties. The first is that the government by order in council has deprived the farmer of what little protection the tariff affords him. That is a mistake. The duty as fixed by the parliament of Canada on natural products has not been tampered with. The duty on fruits and vegetables is as it was. The duty on fresh vegetables to-day is 30 per cent and the duty on fresh fruits is specific, being so much a pound or a box or a barrel, as the case may be. With those duties the government have not interfered and so far as I am aware they have no intention of interfering. The other wrong impression that has gone abroad is that the government, by order in council has repealed the dumping clause in so far as it applies to natural products. That also is a mistake. The dumping clause has not been tampered with in the least. The dumping clause requires no order in council for its enforcement. It applies to-day to fruits and vegetables just as much as ever it did. It applies to fruits and vegetables just as much as it does to manufactured articles. What then has happened? Perhaps I can best explain the matter by referring to the statutes themselves. Let me turn to the dumping clause, which is section 6 of chapter 44 of the revised statutes. It reads:

In the case of articles exported to Canada of a class or kind made or produced in Canada, if the export or actual selling price to an importer in Canada is less than the fair market value of the same article when sold for home consumption in the usual and ordinary course in the country whence exported to Canada at the time of its exportation to Canada, there shall, in addition to the duties otherwise established, be levied, collected and paid on such article, on its importation into Canada, a special or dumping duty, equal to the difference between the said selling price of the article for export and the said fair market value thereof for home consumption; and such special or dumping duty shall be levied, collected and paid on such article, although it is not otherwise dutiable:

Provided that the said special duty shall not exceed fifteen per cent ad valorem in any case;

And so on, with some further exceptions.

To what does that dumping clause apply? It applies to natural products and manufactured goods alike so long as similar goods are produced in Canada. When does it apply? It applies when those products are being dumped into this country. The definition of dumping as given in the clause is that goods are being dumped when they are being sold for export to Canada at a lower price than that at which they are being sold for consumption in the country of origin. What is the penalty attached? The penalty provided in the dumping clause is a special duty equal to fifteen per cent of the value of the goods. What is the method of enforcement? It requires no order in council, no order from the minister, no order from any official in Ottawa. Any person who is interested can go to the collector of customs at the port of entry and say: "These goods are being dumped into this country; they are being sold to us at a lower price than that at which they are being sold, for home consumption in the country from which they came; here is the proof of my statement." That is all that is required to bring the dumping duty into effect and to have the special duty of 15 per cent added.

Let me turn now to what was section 47a or, as it is now numbered, section 43 of the Customs Act. It reads:

If at any time it appears to the satisfaction of the governor in council on a report from the minister, that natural products of a class or kind produced in Canada are being imported into Canada, either on sale or on consignment, under such conditions as prejudicially or injuriously to affect the interests of Canadian producers, the governor in council may, in any case or class of cases, authorize the minister to value such goods for duty, notwithstanding any other provisions of this act, and the value so determined shall be held to be the fair market value thereof.

To what does this apply? It applies only to natural products. When does it apply? It applies when those products are being sold in Canada at a price with which our own producers or growers cannot compete. It takes no cognizance of whether those goods are being dumped into the country or not, so long as our producers cannot compete with the price. What is the penalty provided? Not a special or dumping duty but an increased valuation which shall be the basis for computing the ordinary duty. What is the method of enforcement? By order in council. When those goods are coming in and being sold at a price with which our growers cannot compete, then the minister can ask for an order in council which will give him power to impose this arbitrary valuation.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): When goods are dumped into Canada at below the price in United States, on what price would the 15 per cent duty be collected?

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): On what was determined to be the fair market value.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): The fair market value in the United States?

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Yes. Let us get this clearly in mind. Let us compare the two. The Dumping Act applies to all goods produced in Canada, natural products and manufactured goods alike. The old section 47a applies only to natural products. The Dumping Act applies when goods are being dumped into this country. Section 47a is not concerned whether goods are being dumped into this country or not; it applies when they are being sold at a price with which our growers cannot compete. The Dumping Act provides a special or dumping duty of 15 per cent of the value of the goods. Section 47a makes no such provision; it provides for an increased valuation. The Dumping Act works automatically simply by someone producing the evidence of dumping to the customs collector. Under section 47a an order in council is required. There is the distinction, as clearly as I can explain it, between the two sections.

Section 47a has been on our statute book for a number of years, but not very much attention was paid to it. It remained for the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) to discover the evil use to which it could be put.

Mr. STEVENS: A good use. An official use.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): I will explain this to you as clearly as I can in a minute. During the short time he was Minister of Customs he caused to be passed an order in council giving him power to impose this arbitrary valuation on fruits and vegetables. It did not make any difference to him that there were no Canadian vegetables ready for the market at the time. He got authority and he fixed the value. Let me use the example I used last year, tomatoes, I choose this vegetable because our largest importations are in tomatoes, and they best illustrate what was done. Tomatoes were selling in Tennessee at 50 cents a box. The duty is 30 per cent. My hon. friend said that the value on tomatoes should be 85 cents a box. By so doing he increased the duty from 30 per cent of 50, to 30 per cent of 85. In that he was within the law; that was the intention of the law, and if he had stopped there, perhaps nothing further would have been heard of it. But he did not stop there. In his zeal to prevent the people of this country from eating fresh vegetables, he imposed on top of the already increased duty a special or dumping duty. Mind you, he did not say that tomatoes were being dumped into this country, because they were not; but he imposed a duty anyway. He added the 15 per cent, not 15 per cent of 50, but 15 per cent of 85, so that the duty which he found to be 30 per cent of 50, he left at 45 per cent of 85, and when you figure that out it comes to 76½ per cent of the value of the goods. The duty that he found to be 30 per cent of the value of the goods he actually raised to 76½ per cent. Fortunately, my hon. friend was not long in office.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend is aware that the present government passed two additional orders in council along the same line?

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): I will come to that, but the hon. gentleman knows that the present government repealed those orders in council.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh yes.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): And that is what my hon. friends opposite are objecting to, I believe.

As soon as the people of Canada discovered what was being done—and we took good care to inform them—they decided that my hon. friend was not the man they wanted in charge of the customs department, and on election day they told him so.

Mr. STEVENS: Oh no, I am here.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Yes, but not here. When the session opened the following winter some of us undertook to find out why those dumping duties were being collected. Let me say that whatever faults my hon. friend has, he does seem to inspire loyalty among his subordinates for those who acted under him were not at all anxious to tell us anything. We found it difficult to get the information. But we persisted, and our search led us to the secretary of the Canadian Horticultural Council, the evil genius of Canadian agriculture, the man who is working night and day to deliver the farmers of this country into the hands of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the man who openly boasts on the streets of this city that he is going to make protectionists out of the farmers.

Mr. McGIBBON: Half of them are made already.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): We went to him and asked why these dumping duties were being collected. He said, because the goods are being dumped into this country. We asked him what evidence he had, and he said plenty, but all the evidence he could show us was a letter from a man in British Columbia stating that the United States expected to harvest a very large crop of fruit that year, and urging that some steps be taken to prevent the people of Canada from buying any of that fruit. That is all the evidence they had that dumping was being practised, and yet my hon. friend imposed dumping duties. We ventured to express the opinion that these dumping duties were not being lawfully collected, that those who were being made to pay them could go into court and force the government to disgorge. We went to a lawyer about it; we went to two lawyers; we went to three lawyers, and they all gave us the same opinion.

Mr. MANION: May I ask, just for information, who is "we"?

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): I was one of them anyway.

Mr. STEVENS: We, the three tailors of Tooley Street.

Mr. GOTT: The hon. gentleman is very broadminded. Colonel Lindbergh said "we" referring to himself and his plane.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): As I was saying we secured the opinion of a number of lawyers to the effect that these duties were not being lawfully collected, and that they could be recovered by those who were being compelled to pay them. Armed with this opinion we went to the officials of the department, and they laid the matter before the minister. Fortunately we had a Liberal government in power then, and they said, "We do not want anything like this. We will have to look into the matter. We do not want to be in the position of collecting duties and then be compelled to refund them. Anyway, we do not want to collect money to which we are not entitled," and so they asked the Department of Justice for an opinion. I have that opinion before me. It is lengthy, and I shall read only the final paragraph which sums up the whole case. It says:

My view is that a decision of the minister under section 47a has no effect to bring a transaction within the dumping duty clause which is not otherwise within it.

There is the reason, the prime reason, why the order in council was rescinded, because the best legal authority we could get said that we had no right to collect those dumping duties under the act.

Mr. STEVENS: What the hon. member has just read does not say that.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): What I have just read says that exactly.

Mr. STEVENS: I do not think so.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): It says:

My view is that a decision of the minister under section 47a—

That is, the value placed by the minister:

—has no effect to bring a transaction within the dumping duty clause which is not otherwise within it.

Mr. STEVENS: That is absolutely meaningless.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): It means a whole lot.

Mr. STEVENS: It does if you read something into it that is not there.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): It means a whole lot if my hon. friend will take the trouble to study it.

Let us see what was the purpose in imposing these dumping duties in the first place. What object was to be achieved by imposing them? I think everybody will admit that there was one object, and one object only, and that was to shut out the importation of American fruits and vegetables, and to secure for our Canadian growers a monopoly of the home market. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Anderson) who spoke this afternoon, gave us figures which showed that the Canadian grower already controls 93 per cent of the home market, and the purpose in imposing these dumping duties was to give him the other 7 per cent, to give him a 100 per cent monopoly of that market. Did the imposition of those duties accomplish its purpose? Did the imposition of those duties succeed in shuting out the importation of American fruits and vegetables, as the votaries of the protectionist idol so fondly hoped it would? I shall prove to you that it did not. Let us examine the trade returns. The fiscal year ending March 31, 1926 is the last year before these duties were imposed. Let us compare our importations of fruits and vegetables for the year ending March 31, 1926, with the importations for the year ending March 31, 1927:

Imports

Apples: 1926, 150,840 barrels; 1927, 201,589 barrels, increase.

Apricots, quinces, nectarines: 1926, $139,289; 1927, $83,709, decrease.

Blackberries, blueberries, raspberries: 1926, $6,227; 1927, $37,392, increase.

Cherries: 1926, $81,071; 1927, $120,912, increase.

Grapes: 1926, $826,531; 1927, $939,164, increase.

Melons: 1926, $412,600; 1927, $382,644, decrease.

Peaches: 1926, $643,001; 1927, $501,576, decrease.

Pears: 1926, $926,398; 1927, $855,274, decrease.

Plums: 1926, $495,035; 1927, $425,226, decrease.

Strawberries: 1926, 3,168,975 pounds, $607,345; 1927, 3,944,707 pounds, $668,417, increase.

All other fruits (dutiable): 1926, $64,977; 1927, $150,650, increase.

Mr. GOTT: Are these importations?

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Yes.

Mr. GOTT: I thought the hon. member just said that there were no importations.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): You have been dreaming.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): The hon. member has forgotten that the dumping clause was being applied in 1926.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): My hon. friend is mistaken.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): No.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): These figures are for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1926. To sum up, for the year ending March 31, 1926, our imports of fresh fruit of the dutiable kind were $6,094,686, and for the year ending March 31, 1927, $6,067,778, showing a reduction for the year ending March 31, 1927, as compared with the previous year, of $26,908, or a little less than $27,000. We imposed those dumping duties for the purpose of shutting out $27,000 worth of fruit. And do you know how much in duties was collected? They amounted to $1,287,000. In other words, to secure a market of $27,000 we collected duties from our people of over a million and a quarter dollars.

$13,608,000 worth of these duty-free fruits; in 1927, $15,227,000—an increase of a little more than $1,600,000.

What is the point? There is in this country an ever-increasing market for fresh fruits and vegetables. But the housewife who has only a limited amount of money, and must get something with it that will go round the table, will buy the fruit which she can buy cheapest. In our endeavour to make her buy our own Canadian-produced fruit we have artificially increased prices of these same fruits. What has the housewife done? She has turned to the fruits not affected—to the duty-free fruits. We have, then, in trying to create by this artificial means a market for our own fruits only succeeded in creating a market for tropical fruits. The explanation is simple. Go into any store in Ottawa to-day and for five cents you can get two of the biggest and finest bananas you ever saw. But you have to pay five cents for one apple that has probably seen better days.

How is it with respect to vegetables? We cannot, as we do with fruit, resort to some other kind that is not taxable, for tropical vegetables do not come in. For the fiscal year 1926 we imported $221,000 worth of cabbage, as against $316,000 worth in 1927; of onions, $394,000 worth in 1926, as against $396,000 worth in 1927; of potatoes, $481,000 in 1926 as against $647,000 worth in 1927; of tomatoes, $1,110,000 worth in 1926, as against $1,173,000 worth in 1927; of other vegetables, $1,915,000 worth in 1926 as against $2,117,000 worth in 1927. The total value of fresh vegetables imported in 1926 was $4,236,123, and in 1927, $4,747,630—an increase of $511,000.

Now, has the imposition of these dumping duties achieved its purpose? I say, no, it has failed and failed utterly. Why, then should we continue this imposition? What effect did it have? The imposition of these dumping duties had the same effect on the fruit and vegetable market as the imposition of a similar duty on woollen goods would have on the woollen market; it simply persuaded people to buy something else. Fruits and vegetables came in anyway. The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) has been out in the country making speeches—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Good ones, too.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Yes. He likes to make speeches. If I could make as good speeches I should like it too. But anyway he went to Guelph the other night and stated that these dumping duties were wiped out because a few members on this side of the house threatened to withdraw their support from the government unless such was done. In this the hon. gentleman was not correctly informed.

Mr. BENNETT: Not the dumping duties. I was very particular in the language I used, for I have followed this matter with great care. The report is inaccurate.

Mr. DUNNING: The reporter's fault.

Mr. BENNETT: Orders in council. The point is clear enough. It is all the same.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): From what the hon. gentleman says I suppose he has no objection to the dumping duties being wiped out. I am very glad to hear that. But I want to say this: We on this side did not use any threats against the government. We have lived long enough to know that no worth while victory was ever achieved by means of threats. All we did was to assemble the facts of the case, and lay them before the government. The justice of our cause and the inherent goodness of human nature did the rest.

Mr. FANSHER (Last Mountain): Will the hon. member kindly tell us who passed 47a? How did it become law?

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): My hon. friend wants me to admit that the Liberal party put it on the statute book. I admit it. All the more reason why the Liberal party should repeal it.

Mr. CHAPLIN: They have repealed it.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): No; I say, all the more reason why they should repeal it. The members of the Liberal party are not so small-souled that they are afraid to say: We made a mistake and will go back and correct it.

Mr. GOTT: Did they not promise to repeal it?

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): You will find out in due course. We on this side of the house stand solidly behind the Prime Minister in what he said the other night. The question with us is: Shall the tariff laws of this country be made by parliament, or by order in council, or by departmental regulations? We take the stand that they should be made by parliament, and by parliament alone. If parliament sees fit to increase the duties on agricultural products, we shall bow to the will of parliament, however foolish we may think the move; but we do not bow to the will of departmental officials or anybody else who presume to make tariffs without consulting parliament.

Mr. McGIBBON: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Would he like the house to believe that the government took everything into consideration before they set the duties on anything?

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Of course they did. I do not suppose my hon. friend will believe it anyway, because he cannot believe anything good of this government. We are solidly behind the Prime Minister in the stand he took the other night—that we must have government by parliament and not by order in council. I say in that stand we have the wholehearted support of the leader of the opposition, for since he has been elected to his present position no man in Canada has spoken louder or more frequently in denouncing government by order in council; no man has insisted more vehemently that the authority must rest with parliament and should not be taken away by the executive. In the light of his utterances, then, I say he is going to support us on this motion. He can do nothing else.

Now I should like to refer to the situation in the fruit-growing province of British Columbia and in the prairie provinces. Once these orders in council were passed, effectively shutting out of our market American fruit, the fruit-growers of British Columbia went to their provincial government and got them to create a committee of internal direction, to which they gave power to license the fruit growers, to tell them where they should sell their fruit, when, and at what price. In doing so they were in effect empowered to dictate to the people of the prairie provinces not only what we shall pay for our fruit, but how much of it we shall have. That is the situation. Last year in British Columbia they produced 90,000 odd cases of peaches. They ate about half of them themselves, leaving approximately fifty thousand boxes for the use of the prairie provinces. We out there consumed over 400,000 boxes. But while the fruit growers of British Columbia could not begin to supply our market for fruit, they had this dumping duty put on, which compelled us to pay an 80 per cent duty on the 400,000 boxes which we bought from the States because British Columbia could not supply them. It is all nonsense to say that the fruit producers of this country receive low prices for their fruit. We pay just as high prices in the season for British Columbia fruit as we have to pay for American fruit out of season, and once our own British Columbia fruit comes on the market we never use any American fruit, because theirs will not compare with ours for quality. I will say that for the fruit growers of British Columbia.

What is the matter with the Ontario fruit growers? The trouble with them is this: They have been in the habit of selling to a local market where they do not take any trouble or care in packing their fruit and preparing it for market. The day is past when they can sell exclusively in a local market, and now that they are obliged to ship their product a distance it will not carry west of Winnipeg because the fruit is not properly packed. We never get their fruit in Regina in a condition fit to use.

Mr. BANCROFT: They also voted against a cheap rate for that fruit going west.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Ontario did?

Mr. BANCROFT: The Conservative party voted against a cheaper rate on fruit going west under the Crowsnest agreement.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): To sum up: The disadvantage from which our producers of fruit are suffering are: first, insufficient production, and second, improper packing and shipping methods. And the latter reason applies particularly to Ontario. If the fruit producers of Ontario wish to hold their present market or to secure a wider market all they have to do is to adopt modern methods of packing and marketing. If they do that they do not need the dumping duty. The government was justified in repealing this provision because it was totally ineffective as a means of shutting out importations and, secondly, because under the law as it stands they have no right to collect these duties.

Mr. GROTE STIRLING (Yale): I associate myself with the amendment before the house because of the seriousness, as I see it, of the situation which faces the producers of natural products in this country. There is now, and for a long time there has been, great misunderstanding over a misuse of terms. I have heard in this house references to the "Dumping Act"; yes, I have heard ministers refer to the Dumping Act. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Young, Weyburn) referred to the Dumping Act. There is no Dumping Act in Canada, nor was there ever a Dumping Act in Canada. What we have had and what we now have is one clause of the customs tariff, which was placed there in 1904, sponsored by the Right Hon. W. S. Fielding. He put it in there to meet certain conditions which he saw existing, and I want to quote a sentence or two from the speech which the right hon. gentleman made in introducing that clause. He had been referring to the memorable words of Mr. Cleveland: "It is a condition and not a theory which confronts us".

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Will the hon. member quote what his own leader said on that occasion?

Mr. STIRLING: I have not got it, but if my hon. friend knows the page of Hansard he can easily read it.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): I have read it.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It will be enlightening.

Mr. STIRLING: Mr. Fielding proceeded:

We recognize that fact in tariff matters as in many other matters, and we say that many new conditions have arisen and are arising of which we are obliged to take notice.

Further on he said:

I quite realize that what I may call the extreme free trader, that is, the theoretical free trader, if there be such a man, who attaches more importance to a theory than to the practical things of this life, may ask: "Why should we care about that? We do not get the benefit of cheap goods." Well, if he could be guaranteed forever or for a long period that we would obtain cheap goods under that system the question would be a very fair one. If these trusts and combines in the high tariff countries would come under obligations, with sufficient bonds, to supply us with these goods at the lowest prices for the next fifty years, it would probably be the part of wisdom for us to close up some of our industries and turn the energies of our people to other branches. But surely none of us imagine that when these high tariff trusts and combines send goods into Canada at sacrifice prices they do it for any benevolent purpose. They are not worrying about the good of the people of Canada. They send the goods here with the hope and the expectation that they will crush out the native Canadian industries. And with the Canadian industry crushed out what would happen? The end of cheapness would come and the beginning of dearness would be at hand.

Then later on he added:

We propose therefore to impose a special duty upon dumped goods. That special duty, subject to a limitation which I will mention, will be the difference between the price at which the goods are sold—the sacrifice price—and the fair-market value of those goods as established under the customs law of the country.

That was Mr. Fielding's method of dealing with conditions as he then found them. Three years later, speaking in the city of Toronto, Sir Wilfrid Laurier is quoted as saying:

Why did we introduce that anti-dumping clause? We introduced it for the reason I gave a moment ago, that it was essential to the success of manufacturing that the man who is engaged in business should know exactly the conditions under which he would operate; and we put in this clause to prevent the demolition of market.

I contend that these two great Liberal leaders introduced that legislation for the purpose of meeting conditions as they found them; and I further contend that such was Sir Wilfrid Laurier's love for the good people of Quebec, the market gardeners of Quebec, that if he found an evil confronting them such as we now find he would certainly do what was in his power to remove that evil. That clause met the conditions as he found them. I do not know to what extent the dumping clause was satisfactory in meeting the conditions that faced the manufacturers of non-perishable products, but I do know that that clause has never been effective in taking care of the difficulties with which the producers of perishable products have had to contend. That clause proved too inelastic; it was too easily evaded; it was useless to the fruit and vegetable producers. So badly did they suffer from conditions that in 1920, after the shipping season of that year, their representations found the ear of the Union government, and in 1921 the valuation clause was placed in the Customs Act, enabling the minister to declare what the value for duty was, on a basis of comparison with the actual cost of production of similar goods imported into this country at a like date. That clause was made use of in the fruit and vegetable shipping season of 1921 and it was effective. Then came the change of government, and early in the session of 1922 the Liberal government repealed the valuation clause in the Customs Act, ridiculing the idea that it would be possible to declare what the actual cost of production was, although it had so been declared the year before, based very largely on the published figures in the American states. I think that the government realized that they had gone rather far when they removed that assistance, for later on in the session of 1922 they passed this clause which my hon. friend has been referring to, then called 47a, since called 43. The hon. member read the clause, and the gist of it I will repeat: it was to enable the minister to declare what the fair market price was. Because section 6 of the customs tariff, left by itself, did not so declare, and it was necessary that there should be a valuation clause.

Now clause 47a required that an order in council be passed, but we notice that the shipping seasons of 1922, 1923, 1924 and 1925 passed with no order in council having been given the minister on which he could begin to take action. I well remember in one of those years the then Minister of Customs, accompanied by his commissioner, coming into British Columbia. He came down the Okanagan valley, and we entertained him to a luncheon in the city of Vernon. There we laid before him the difficulties with which we had to contend, and I well remember Mr. Bureau telling us that it was his firm intention to protect us against the evil of dumping. We did not understand what method he was going to adopt; we lived far away from this home of phrases; we did not understand clauses and orders in council, and perhaps we did not even know of the existence of orders in council, but we trusted Mr. Bureau. We found that a certain sporadic collection of dumping duty went on in those years, and then in 1924 it reached our ears that rebates of dumping duty were being granted. Early in the session of 1925 I placed questions on the order paper asking whether the dumping duty had been rebated, how much had been rebated and why, and the answer I received was thoroughly evasive. Later on I took it up with Mr. Bureau's successor and told him what I have just told the house. His reply was that he would look into it, and if there were an answer I should have it. I have never had the answer, but I do not think I am going too far when I surmise that these duties were rebated simply because no order in council ever had been passed, and when a rebate was asked for it was granted. When the Duncan report came out early in 1925 we read in it that in every case investigated by the commissioner in which a rebate of the dumping duty was requested, that request was granted. No orders in council were passed in those four fruit shipping seasons; then we had a change of government and the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) became Minister of Customs. We made representations to him with regard to this dumping; he realized that it was being carried on and that order in council was passed in July 1926 under which the minister proclaimed what was the fair market price, and we received protection. During the shipping seasons of 1926 and 1927 we were reasonably protected from the dumping of these foreign fruits and vegetables.

In the minds of those who are opposed to our way of thinking, apparently the two main objections which are raised to this anti-dumping duty are first that it is wrong in principle and second that the consumer pays more. With regard to the first I infinitely prefer the view adopted by Mr. Fielding, that we have to meet conditions as we find them and that our actions should be in accord with those conditions. With regard to the second point, I maintain that it is wrong in fact. There was a dumping restriction in 1926 and 1927; if it is true that the consumer always pays more when dumping is restricted surely we should expect to find the prices paid by the consumer in those years higher than in preceding years, yet while there are many factors which affect the price paid by the consumer I maintain that you can go through the whole list of fruits and vegetables and you will find that the consumers in Canada did not pay more; frequently you will find that they paid less. I submit that it is a fallacy and has been proved to be such time and again that of necessity the collection of dumping duty means that the consumer pays a higher price.

There are reasons why in my opinion the producer of perishable products should receive perhaps greater attention than the producer of products which are not perishable. The latter does not need to market his products immediately they are ready; the wise business man, with his finger on the pulse of the market, is able to realize when something is backing up, and perhaps he can move his operatives or change his machines to some other article for the time being. That is not the case with the producer of perishable products, and most emphatically is it not so in the case of the tree fruit man. In my orchard I prune my trees, irrigate them, cultivate them, spray them, thin the fruit and plant crops between the trees to plough in and enrich the soil, but I have no control over the blossoms. I do not know in the least what proportion of those blossoms will bring forth fruit. A bountiful crop comes along and naturally I am pleased, although with it my expenses in thinning, hauling and packing go up. However, that is perfectly all right so long as when I come to market my produce I find that there is a reasonable opening in the Canadian market for me to sell that fruit. I have to sell it when it is ready or make use to a slight degree of the very expensive assistance of cold storage, but in the main I have to sell it when it is ready, and if when I come to sell it I find the market already full of or threatened by the produce of another country I maintain that I, a Canadian producer responsible for developing a little piece of Canada, am not getting a square deal.

There were no orders in council passed from 1922 to 1925; the clause placed on the statute books by the Liberal party was not made use of for our benefit, and yet the Prime Minister to-day asks us to realize that there has been a great deal of misunderstanding, that really nothing is changed, that the provision is still on the statute books and that if we apply to the minister with a good enough case and the minister can get council to adopt his view, council will proceed to pass one of these orders in council. Remembering the past, is it reasonable for the producers of fruits and vegetables to look with any satisfaction on assistance which the government say we may receive? Surely we should not have to wait until the damage is done. The wise man does not wait until the fire has started to provide himself with a fire extinguisher; surely he buys his fire extinguisher and has it loaded and primed and ready to use as soon as the first wisp of smoke appears. I maintain that we must have this protection not only against actual damage but also to take care of the threat of damage which is hanging over us.

Conditions have changed since 1904, and within the last few years a special custom has come into being. In the United States today it is customary to roll cars to a certain concentration point, and we will take Chicago as an example. From many states of the union hundreds of cars of perishable products are rolled to Chicago, and the shippers of those cars hope that before they reach Chicago the cars will be sold. In the majority of cases they succeed, but many cars which are not sold, reach Chicago, and as the contents are perishable something must be done with them. They cannot glut the tracks in Chicago; they must be sent somewhere. Where are they sent? Do they send those cars into an American market which has a sufficiency of that article already? They do not; those cars are rolled into Canada, and if there is no restriction against that rolling into Canada they come into a portion of our Canadian market which probably already has a sufficiency of that article.

This difficulty that we have to contend with is not a new one. We had it last year, and we had it the year before in many different kinds and varieties of fruits and vegetables; we know we shall meet it again. In the central parts of British Columbia this year we are looking forward to one of the most bountiful crops of tree fruit that we have ever seen; everything indicates that. This also applies to the three Pacific states just south of the line. We know it is their intention to put their C grade apples into our Canadian market, so that they may leave their own great city markets of the middle west and the Pacific coast free for their own extra fancy and fancy fruit.

Let me read this letter, dated Kelowna, B.C., April 6, 1928, addressed to myself:

> I hear rumours that there is a possibility of the federal government removing the Anti-dumping Act. I trust this is not to be.
>
> I am back recently from a tour of the orchard districts in Washington and Oregon. I had many conversations with officials, growers and shippers; they all report that the crop in sight this year is the largest on record.
>
> Wherever I went I was asked about the committee of direction. They appeared to be interested at hearing it had functioned well for its first year, but they remarked, "You had an easy proposition, since our crop was so short we had no fruit to spare for Canada. What will happen this year with our bumper crop in sight? We will have to put a lot of our fruit into Canada to stabilize our own markets." Some of them admitted it was good policy on their part to pour fruit into Canada even at a loss, simply to keep it off their own markets and so get a good price the year round in their domestic market.
> There is no doubt in my own mind, should the dump duty be removed, no matter how well the committee of direction may function they will never be able to get the home grower even the cost of production for his fruit.
>
> Does the federal government want to see the fruit industry in British Columbia prosper or not? If they do, then for goodness sake urge on them the vital necessity of retaining the dump duty.
>
> Yours sincerely,
> A. HARMAN.

This man is a prominent fruit grower about ten miles north of Kelowna. He has served his term as director of the Kelowna Growers Exchange, and for two years he was the chairman. He knows just exactly what we have suffered from, and he also saw in the seasons of 1926 and 1927 that we had reasonable protection from this dumping. With the splendid looking crop in sight, he fears for the future.

These indications do not only come from the British Columbia fruit section. I have a letter here from the secretary of the Medicine Hat chamber of commerce, addressed to my leader. I wish to quote a couple of paragraphs from it, as follows:

> Medicine Hat and the immediate surrounding district is noted for the production of vegetables which are marketed at an earlier date than in any other part of the prairie provinces.
>
> The profit from these early vegetables to a very large extent enables the truck gardeners to compete against the importations from the United States during the whole of the growing season in Canada. As it is only the better off classes than can afford to purchase the early grown vegetables that are necessarily sold at a much higher price than those that are grown at a later date, we fail to see how the cancellation of the dumping duty on vegetables will benefit the population as a whole, but it will, undoubtedly, be a benefit to the growers in the United States and equally a detriment to the growers in this and other parts of Canada.
> We trust that you will give your earnest consideration to the above and realize the necessity of replacing by order in council the provisions of the act applicable to fruits and vegetables, thereby enabling a large and hard-working class of agriculturists to prosper.

That is largely our contention, Mr. Speaker, that we, the producers in Canada, should be able to look with reasonable satisfaction to the possibility of marketing these products in the Canadian market. It is not in our interest, nor do I think there is any evidence that we have been guilty of deliberately attempting, to raise the price to the consumer. I have said in this house more than once before that my earnest desire is to increase the quantity that I sell, and I will not do that if I raise the price. I have certain overheads to meet; the organizations which handle the packing and selling of my fruit have certain overheads to meet, and it is to our advantage so to satisfy the Canadian consumer that he will absorb double the amount that we have been selling him.

The fruit and vegetable growers throughout Canada were distressed at the news that the government had cancelled the orders in council which enabled that restriction to be effective in 1926 and 1927. A large and responsible delegation came to Ottawa, consisting largely of farmers from Quebec and Ontario, with some representatives from other parts of Canada. They met the Prime Minister and nine of his colleagues; the most noticeable absences being the French ministers from the province of Quebec. They put forward their case, and I am within the facts when I say that they were disgruntled at the rather brusque interruptions from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb). It was noticed that the minister was not sure of his facts, for he said that the orders in council had not been cancelled. The Prime Minister drew attention to the fact that there was a misuse of terms in the minds of the speakers. I think the delegates realized that they were coming to this place of acts and clauses and orders in council, and I do not think it was to be wondered at that their tongues got twisted. What they endeavoured to put forward was that the fear of the loss of the effect of the dumping restriction was in their minds.

The Prime Minister, when he came to reply to the speakers, read a letter from Mr. Blake Robertson of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, but he did not say to whom it was written. He drew no conclusion from that letter, but left us to draw our own. He then proceeded to draw attention to the fact that the telegrams which he had received in considerable numbers were in identical language. That statement was not accurate, but I am quite ready to admit that probably the majority of them were. Why was that? Those of us who represent the fruit and vegetable growers thought that it was merely our duty to prepare a statement to be sent to the various associations throughout the length and breadth of Canada. We, who should know orders in council and clauses, endeavoured to put forward a correct statement of what had happened—the three clauses involved, the orders in council, and the cancellation thereof—in an endeavour to place before the producers in Canada a correct statement of facts with regard to these things. We suggested that they should telegraph the Prime Minister, and follow their telegrams up with a letter, particularly drawing attention to the interests of their own districts. I pointed out that we were sending this out to laymen and that we should indicate in a skeleton telegram what should be placed before the Prime Minister. I am in the judgment of the house whether that was a wrong thing, an inadvisable thing, in any way a reprehensible thing to do. I take it that it was but reasonable to get those people to act along the correct lines in regard to the facts. The Prime Minister drew no conclusions from those two incidents, but I want to assure him, if his friends have not already done so, that the producers of fruits and vegetables are seriously alarmed and deeply concerned at the turn of events, because looking back over the years since 1922 they cannot but think that the Liberal government has shown a callousness of outlook towards the producers of fruits and vegetables in Canada.

The Prime Minister then proceeded to make an astounding statement, and I could hardly believe my ears when I heard it. When I read it in the stenographic report next day I still found it difficult to believe that the Prime Minister could have used those words. I read from the stenographic report as follows; and I will give the immediate context:

> Now, I say this, that that order would never have got past any treasury board, would never have got past the cabinet, if a single minister of the crown in it had ever dreamed that the passing of such an order was going to be interpreted by the officials of the department of customs in the manner in which it has been, that is, to fix duties at the present time on asparagus, on hothouse tomatoes, on canteloups and articles of that kind, some of which are not even grown in this country.

I examined the appraisers' bulletins to refresh my memory and I could find no articles that could be so described. I telephoned to the department, read the Prime Minister's words, and asked them to what could the Prime Minister have been alluding. They said: We do not know. I suggest that in that the Prime Minister has made use of an inaccurate statement which has gone out into Canada and with which the truth will never catch up. I do not think I am stretching imagination to the breaking point when I say that that will go out to the dark places of Canada where free trade is still worshipped as a fetish and a man will say to his fellows: See what these protectionists have done now! They have put this over a minister! The minister has collected a dumping duty on fruit which is not even produced in Canada. The Prime Minister says so. So one more fallacy in lieu of argument will be used to hammer the protectionists and that fallacy is written on the account of the Prime Minister of this country.

The right hon. gentleman proceeded and I think a fair summary of what followed was this: that when the government discovered that the minister had assumed under the orders in council a greater power than parliament intended him to have, they cancelled the orders in council, but that there was nothing to prevent a grower or anybody else from laying his case before the minister when the damage had begun and that if the case was strong enough, the minister would then proceed to approach council with a view to getting an order in council. We suffered in that way during the regime of 1922 to 1925. I remember an occasion when application was made to the Minister of Customs at Ottawa. Possibly it was the month of August and the ministers had dispersed. Possibly the minister was away on a trip, but he could not even be found and I presume that even this hardworking cabinet must sometimes take a holiday. I can imagine the circumstances in the summer months when it might be extremely difficult to find in Ottawa a quorum of council and there would be the danger that that quorum might consist of the free trade section of the cabinet.

Towards the end of the proceedings of that delegation the attention of the Prime Minister was called to a letter from the Justice department that the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) read a little while ago. He was asked what the position would be or words to this effect: Supposing it was definitely shown that the legality of that clause was in doubt. The answer of the Prime Minister roughly was that if it was in doubt parliament only could set it right. This I consider to be a most ominous phase of the situation. We are at present told that we must rely on a government whose immediate predecessors were the authors of this clause, a government which in previous shipping seasons never put an order in council into being, and that we must trust that government, even though the legality of the clause itself be in doubt, to take care of us in the Okanagan who see that magnificent crop ahead and who know that the fruit crop across the line is ready to come into Canada. It is not reasonable to expect that the producers of natural products in this country will be satisfied with that view. I do not consider that the government could be condemned more strongly for anything else than for their inaction if this session is allowed to end without effective restriction having been provided to take care of the situation which will arise if, when we come to market our produce in the markets of Canada, we find those markets full of the produce of another country.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr Speaker, before dealing with the amendment under discussion I should like to make a statement on behalf of the poultry industry of British Columbia. Perhaps I am going too far in claiming to represent all the poultrymen, but I certainly can speak for those in my own district and as conditions on the whole of Vancouver Island and the lower mainland are exactly similar to those in my district, I may be said to represent their views also. I am approaching the subject entirely from the point of view of the poultry producers. I am not going into the fruit and vegetable aspect of the situation. I notice with interest that the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) in the midst of his enthusiasm, speaking with all the religious devotion of a fiscal fanatic, never pleaded, never could, and never dared, state that the dumping duty had been improperly enforced as regards eggs. He confined his whole remarks to that phase of the matter as represented by fruit and vegetables, and very properly so, because it would have been impossible for him, even with his ability and with his peculiar point of view, to have made out a case as regards eggs. I might put the case concisely by reading the terms of a resolution which I put on the order paper when this matter first came up, but which I was prevented from moving because of the progress of the session and private members' days having been taken away. I will read the resolution as I intended to move it in the house:

That whereas a dumping duty was imposed in January, 1927, on imported eggs—

I should like to remind the hon. member for Weyburn that this was introduced not by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) but by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell), and, I venture to think, very properly so.

—and whereas it was applied with such moderation that, although checking wholesale importation at low prices, it allowed eggs to come in freely when the price rose above forty-five cents per dozen.

And whereas in its most extreme application it never reached, together with the ordinary duty, to as high as 10 cents a dozen;

And whereas while affording some protection to the poultrymen of Canada, it did not unjustly increase the price of eggs to the consumer;

And whereas the operation of said dumping duty was withdrawn by order in council on or about the 29th March, 1928;

And whereas such action is not called for by any body of consumers or justified by the present price of eggs and the present conditions of poultry farming in Canada.

Therefore be it resolved this house is of the opinion that the government should consider the advisability of reimposing the dumping duty on eggs, as formerly imposed, or, alternatively, increasing the ordinary duty on eggs imported into Canada.

That puts the case, so to speak, in a nutshell. I should like now briefly to elaborate one or two points.

Regarding the method by which the dumping duty is applied, the hon. member for Weyburn has correctly explained, I think, the greater part of it, only perhaps he confused the situation by referring to section 47a. It would be better to keep to the section as it is now, section 43 of chapter 42 of the revised statutes. The method by which this duty is enforced is by the application of section 43 of chapter 42 and by section 6 of chapter 44 of the revised statutes of 1927. These sections are still the law, but the orders in council made under them have been cancelled. The clause which deals with dumping is, taken alone, of no use at all to improve the situation, because eggs, for instance, as well as manufactured goods, in order to come within the meaning of section 6, have to be sold cheaper in Canada than in the United States, and they were not being sold cheaper in Canada than in the United States. Therefore you could not apply the dumping duty. It requires the two together; it requires the application of section 43 as well as of section 6. Section 43 alone is of no use because it only says that the minister, as instructed by order in council, can declare the fair market price. It needs co-ordination between the two to make the application of the duty effective. We are told that these two sections are still the law. So they are, but the law is a dead letter, and will be a dead letter because the orders in council passed under them have been cancelled. It is all very well to say: There is the law; you can take advantage of it. If a hurricane blows the roof and walls off my house, it is small comfort to me to be told that the framework is there and that if I wait long enough another hurricane may perhaps blow them back again. That is hardly likely, and it would be a very poor bet. Or if a man finds that all his silver plate has been stolen, you can tell him: There is your house, and perhaps the thief will bring it back. Well, miracles are not unknown, but I think it is extremely unlikely that Lloyds would insure a chance of that kind, and so it is with the dumping orders in council. After having been taken away in the last month, what reasonable likelihood is there of their being reimposed? If that were done, the whole of this amendment falls to the ground, of course.

Another point. Supposing the government were so impressed by the particular case that may be made out to-morrow or next week that they wished to apply the dumping duty; it would be impossible to apply it because the two sections are illegal. That is the ruling that has been given by the Justice department, as mentioned by my hon. friend from Weyburn, and it does not need a lawyer; even a layman can see that the two are separate and distinct and lack co-ordination. Section 43 says that you can declare the fair price, but it stops there. Section 6 says you can put on the dumping duty. But there is a lack of co-ordination between the two. Half a dozen words added to section 43 would bring it into the scope of section 6, and the two would be legal. But to-day, as they stand, we have the opinion quoted by my hon. friend from Weyburn the opinion given by the Deputy Minister of Justice, that the two are not co-ordinated enough to make the imposition of the dumping duty legal, and with that opinion before them the government dare not impose the duty again because they would be open to any shipper taking action against them for damages, and possibly heavy damages. If that is so—I would like to be contradicted, if contradiction is possible—it is useless to say that we have retained section 43 and section 6. We were told no later than Friday by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) that it was not the intention of the government to bring down any new legislation. Any amendment to these sections certainly would be new legislation. So we are faced with this condition; it is not the intention of the government to amend these two sections, and therefore they are practically useless.

Turning to another phase, I stated in the resolution which I have quoted that this method had not been abused so far as eggs were concerned, and that statement is absolutely beyond challenge. The Minister of Agriculture in his wisdom, and I use the word advisedly, put the fair market value at such a moderate price as to prevent the method being abused. He fixed it at 45 cents, and it is not possible at that figure, with the dumping duty and with the ordinary duty as well, to impose more than 9¾ cents per dozen, or say not more than 20 per cent. The hon. member for Weyburn talks of 70 and 80 per cent.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): And in some cases 100 per cent.

Mr. NEILL: That may be on fruits and vegetables, but on eggs it was not more than 20 per cent. If the price got over 45 cents, the whole thing went by the board, and the whole duty, except the statutory duty, was automatically cut off. That had a better effect in its operation than an ad valorem duty, because as we all know an ad valorem duty is on a percentage basis, so many cents on the dollar. With eggs selling at 25 cents a dozen and the duty at 10 per cent, that would be 2½ cents, and that is at the very time when they can stand the duty, but when eggs go to 75 cents the duty is increased accordingly, and the man who wanted to buy eggs at that time would have to pay a heavier duty. Whereas under this system, as soon as the price gets over 45 cents, which is not a high price for eggs, the operation of the clause automatically ceases and eggs come in without any dumping duty at all.

It has another advantage. It has the advantage that it lets in eggs when the price goes up, and it keeps out the lower grades of eggs, because the duty on the low-priced eggs is quite considerable. You can understand that a duty of 9 cents a dozen on low-priced eggs would be comparatively heavy, and it did keep out the refuse of the American eggs, the low grade eggs which flood the market and reduce the price of all our product; and above all, it did keep out the Chinese fresh eggs almost entirely.

I should like to quote a very few figures. I do not believe in quoting a mass of ill-digested figures, because you can place almost any interpretation upon them. Our importation of eggs in the shell from the United States in the year ending March, 1927—that was before the dumping duty went on—was 3,100,000 dozen. Last year it was 940,000 dozen. There was a big drop from over 3,000,000 to 940,000. Last year the importation of Chinese fresh eggs amounted to only 175 dozen; in the previous year, 2,000 dozen; the year before, 2,100 dozen and the year before, 78,000 dozen. That was not all due to the dumping duty; it was due partly to the introduction of the egg-grading regulations, which were prohibitive against these very low grade Chinese eggs, but the dumping duty did have the effect of bringing the importation down from 2,000 to 175 dozen.

[Mr. Neill.]

Mr. McGIBBON: Does the hon. member think that these Chinese eggs are fit for consumption under any consideration?

Mr. NEILL: No, I do not, and if the hon. gentleman will allow me some of his forty minutes to dilate on that subject, I shall be very glad to do it, because I have studied the question, not intimately, but from a distance—I would hate to profess an intimate knowledge of the inside of any Chinese egg. The importations from all countries show the same relative drop. In 1927 the importation amounted to considerably over 3,000,000 dozen, and they went down the next year to 1,000,000 dozen, or a drop of 2,000,000 dozen in one year. So that shows it was doing some effective work. I may say that I am not dealing with frozen eggs, which come in under a different duty and under different circumstances altogether. I have in my possession—I do not have it before me—a poultry journal, enjoying a large circulation in the United States. They are putting on a most intensive campaign to influence the president to increase the duty on eggs. Why? They ask it because of the enormous importations of Chinese eggs. The eggs that were denied admission into Canada have been going into the States, and the American poultry men are asking for an import duty—not of ten or twenty cents a dozen, but of twenty-five cents a dozen on all eggs; and with their well-known fiscal views in that country they are quite likely to get it. Then where will those Chinese eggs of the poorest quality find a market? They will come back into Canada again, the door having been opened for them by the lack of this legislation. Already there is evidence that they are coming in at prices utterly impossible for us to compete with. They have been offered laid down in Winnipeg at a price which would mean 15 cents a dozen for our eggs to compete.

I would ask this further question. I say that the dumping duty did not unduly increase prices. Well, did it? Here is evidence. I hold in my hand a publication issued by the Department of Agriculture called the Egg and Poultry Market Review. Under date of April 3, which was about a day or two after these orders in council were taken off, I read as follows:

> Car lots of eggs have been offered in the west at—extras, 31 cents; first, 29 cents; seconds, 26 cents per dozen, f.o.b., freight charges extra.

You see, Mr. Speaker, while the minister had power to put on 45 cents as the fair market price, British Columbia was offering eggs with the dumping duty on as low as 29 cents for firsts, which would be the average grade. Does anyone think 29 cents per dozen, ex-Vancouver, is too big a price to pay for that class of eggs? Surely the price has not been unduly increased by this dumping clause. Then again, did the removal of the dumping clause do harm? I will quote the next sentence in this same government report:

Sales have been made on the basis quoted above, but large numbers of these have been cancelled following the notice of the removal of the dumping duty on eggs.

This is a government publication which says, and says truly I have no doubt, that those sales at a fairly low basis were cancelled as soon as it was known that the dumping clause had been removed. In a later issue of the same paper I find:

In large measure the removal of the dumping duty is responsible for the present easiness.

I would call it "uneasiness" so far as the poultrymen are concerned. So we have the evidence out of the government's own paper that the price was not unduly raised, and that it fell away as soon as the dumping duty was taken off.

I have before me the Vancouver Province, a well-known paper, giving the market prices. The price to the farmer for his eggs ran from 24 cents down to 18 cents a dozen, or an average of 21 cents. Would anyone of us like to raise eggs at 21 cents a dozen at the prices for feed that I will now quote from the same paper? No. 2 wheat sells for $2.50 a hundred pounds. May I inform my friends from the prairies that No. 2 wheat in British Columbia does not mean No. 2 Northern. It means No. 6, or sometimes a grade lower than that, a mixture, and sometimes, if the feed merchants feel good-hearted, No. 6 with a mixture of No. 5. We pay $2.50 for that in Vancouver. The price is also quoted for a hundred pounds of oats—$2.70. Some of our older men may go back in memory to the days in Ontario when they could buy eggs for 15, or perhaps as low as 10 cents a dozen; but the farmers did not pay $2.70 for a sack of oats to feed their hens. You never can raise those eggs at 20 cents a dozen. I should like to quote two reputable men. I do not propose to give their names, but I know them well. One has got something like five thousand birds. He writes me:

Last month—

That is March.

Last month I shipped over 10,000 eggs, and I only received over the cost of the month's feed bill $14.20, for a month's work every day, including Sundays, 7 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Fourteen dollars and twenty cents a month. Who would not go poultry farming? He goes on to say:

Something will have to be done soon or B.C. will be shipping eggs from the United States for home consumption.

What the other man says is even worse:

My last shipment of eggs netted me here just 16.59 cents a dozen.

About 16½ cents a dozen. He continues:

That is the average. I continually see at wharves and stations on Vancouver island thousands of fine-looking birds being shipped into Vancouver markets, birds in the pink of egg-laying condition being sacrificed after a winter of high-priced feeding. This can only mean that hundreds of poultrymen all over the country are going into the cities again in search of work. Is it not pitiful?

He adds:

There is a great movement to bring more people into the country, for the benefit of the Canadian Pacific and railway companies I suppose, and dump them on the land. What for, for heaven's sake? I am strongly tempted to write the European publications warning them against this step. I feel it as a kind of duty.

I do not know but what he is right. I should like the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke) to listen to that. There is a popular feeling that if you throw a man out of the land, success and prosperity is bound to be his.

The argument is sometimes raised, and possibly will be to-day, that we must consider the question of cheap food for the workingman. I have always found the workingman to be no fool. He is strongly against sweated labour; that is, goods produced by labour sweated to the extent that it is very poorly paid. I am quite sure his sympathy will go out to the poultryman who worked a whole month for $14.20. His labour is sweated to the extent that payment for it disappears entirely. No Canadian workingman would stand for a proposition like that. Moreover, our workingmen are quite smart enough to know the inevitable result—the elimination of half the poultry growers, followed by increased prices for eggs and poultry imported from the States.

Another point I made in my resolution was that this action was uncalled for. I certainly would ask this question: Who wanted this action taken? Where did those people come from and when did they ask for it? I do not think the government could possibly answer the question. There was no agitation, no feeling of ill-will, no feeling that anybody was paying too much for eggs. The removal of the dumping duty came as a bolt from the blue, and was thrown in, so to speak, to remedy some possible injustice in connection with these other natural products; but it does not apply to the question of eggs, and I protest eggs being included in this matter.

I am not here to discuss the question of tariff. I am not in favour of a high tariff. Some time ago a body of economists, more or less under the aegis of the League of Nations, went on record that it would probably be better for the world at large if a system of free trade were adopted. Yes, the League of Nations is strongly in favour of disarmament, but I never heard them say that only one nation should disarm and the rest should be armed to the teeth. I do not think those economists would ever have seriously put forward the thought that one nation should be the goat of this idea of free trade—and not only one nation, not only one industry in that nation, but one part of the industry in that nation. That was never contemplated by those men. So long as we have a tariff—and it cannot be denied that we have, with every prospect of keeping it for many years to come—then the farmer and egg producer is as much entitled to his share of that tariff as the manufacturer. And we are not asking for very much, not for the 25, 30 or 35 per cent that the manufacturer gets; we are only asking for what at most comes to 20 per cent, and that only under occasional circumstances.

An hon. MEMBER: Adequate protection.

Mr. NEILL: No, I will not split hairs. In desperation we have turned to the market in New Zealand and have sent a shipment there. But what do we run up against in New Zealand? A 20 per cent ad valorem duty. And what have we in return to protect us?

There has always been a dumping duty under every government, Conservative and Liberal alike, but section 6, the dumping clause, is powerless alone. The Conservative government, recognising that fact, passed an extra measure providing for the imposition of an arbitrary dumping duty. The Liberals also recognized it when they took similar action in 1923. We need this extra legislation to give the dumping clause teeth, so to speak.

One word more as to the value of the industry. As I mentioned before the delegation, the egg industry alone—not including poultry—last year in Canada produced something like $80,000,000. This was the revenue from the humble hen. The royal commission on fisheries reported the other day that so great was our fishing industry, so vast its importance, that they would recommend a special department, with a minister at the head of it, to deal with fisheries alone. And what was the output of our fisheries last year? Only $56,000,000. The egg industry alone, on the other hand, produced last year some $80,000,000. Perhaps we need a ministry of eggs as well. I do not think I am beside the mark when I say that there are probably a quarter of a million of people dependent upon this industry. which is supposedly a side line.

What do we want? We want legislation introduced correcting section 43 and bringing it into line so that section 43 and section 6 may be enforced legally. And we want an assurance that the two will be applied, because nothing else will suffice. If the government gives us that assurance, then this amendment falls to the ground. That is all we want.

I come now to the resolution itself. We are told by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) that he regards it as a want of confidence motion, and I know it is the custom so to regard such resolutions. But there is nothing in the rules that compels us to treat it as a want of confidence vote. I remember a resolution which we attempted to put through this house some years ago, providing that a government's defeat on a question of this kind should not be held to be a vote of want of confidence, unless followed by a specific resolution to that effect. Had that resolution been adopted, I venture to say that many more hon. members in this house would vote for this amendment than will do so. I submit that this resolution should not necessarily be considered a vote of want of confidence. The very language of the motion indicates that such is not essential. It declares that "in the opinion of the house necessary action should be taken." There is no condemnation of the government for something they have done in the past, which is the usual form of motions of want of confidence. The resolution merely asks that something be done in the future. There are on the order paper probably thirty resolutions which are couched in the same terms, many of which we have discussed. Not one of them would involve the defeat of the government if it carried, for the simple reason that these resolutions are academic. But they would bind the government to some action if they passed. Well, the resolution now before the house is of the same character; it is couched in similar language.

There is one thing which I like about this amendment and which I do not often see in the budget amendments of my hon. friends opposite, and that is its clear-cut and definite nature. Generally speaking, the tariff amendments of my hon. friends opposite are so vague, so comprehensive and so partisan that it is almost impossible for anyone, trying to look at them from a non-partisan point of view, to make up his mind whether to vote for them or not. In this case it is not so; the resolution is confined to one statement of fact, a definite condition which exists, and it asks that this condition be remedied. It is, as I say, clear-cut, and it is easy to decide on the point. It is easy for every hon. member to say, "I am going to vote for or against a proposition which may mean the preservation in Canada of an industry on which a quarter of a million people are dependent, and of which the output is something like $80,000,000 a year".

I have no quarrel with my hon. friend from Weyburn—with whom, I hope I may say, I am personally friendly—or with any other hon. member if he takes a different view of the matter, provided he is satisfied that he is expressing the views and voting in the interests of his constituents. So far as I am concerned, the interests of my constituents are so plain, the pledge I made them—practically the only pledge I did make—being that I would put their interests first in my consideration, that I cannot do anything else than support the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Anderson).

Mr. ECCLES J. GOTT (South Essex): It seems to me that there seems to have been a general disposition, if not an effrontery, on the part of the government to evade the issue that has come before the country through the cancellation of order in council 1088, implemented by authority entrusted to the Minister of National Revenue in section 47a of the Customs Act, now 43. In order to remove any misconception or general misunderstanding as to what had actually been done, I asked the following question of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler) on the orders of the day, on April 25, page 2368 of Hansard:

Has the authority given to the Minister of National Revenue to determine the value of fruits and vegetables for the purpose of applying the special or dumping duty been cancelled?

Further I said—I wanted to make the question specific and definite:

By this I do not mean, has order in council 1088 been rescinded, but has section 47a of the Customs Act been so amended as to take away this authority from the minister?

The reply I received from the Minister of National Revenue was:

There has been no amendment to the act whatever. The order in council authorizing the minister to fix values has been cancelled.

I quote from the Border Cities Star, of April 21, the report of a meeting of the Independent Order of Daughters of the Empire held at Hamilton, one of the main consuming centres of Ontario. A despatch dated from Hamilton, April 20, reads:

Yesterday, the final day of the three-day annual meeting of the Provincial Chapter, I.O. D.E., a resolution was passed which will be sent to the federal government asking for a reconsideration of the rescinding of the dumping act in order that the fruit and vegetable growers of Ontario may be protected.

The resolution reads: "Whereas the special dumping act will not be applied during the coming season in the matter of fruits or vegetables; whereas, in consequence our growers will suffer, the Provincial Chapter, I.O.D.E., views with alarm this condition of things and would respectfully urge the government to seriously reconsider this matter, feeling that the Canadian fruit and vegetable growers have every right to protection.

On the order paper I put certain questions appearing as question No. 16, as follows:

1. Has order in council No. 1088 been rescinded and cancelled?

The answer was, "Yes."

2. When was same rescinded and cancelled?
Answer: March 19, 1928.
3. When did the rescission and cancellation become effective?
Answer: March 19, 1928.
4. Has the tariff board made any recommendation regarding protection for early Canadian fruit and vegetable growers, seasonal or otherwise?
Answer: The subject is under inqury.

There are hundreds of other questions that have come before the tariff board which are still under inquiry.

5. If so, what was the substance of such recommendation?
Answer: Still under inquiry.
6. Is the government aware that resolutions are being passed by boards of trade, town and city councils, chapters of the Daughters of the Empire and other bodies, protesting against the government's action in rescinding order in council 1088?
Answer: Some resolutions have been received.

Despite this, the Minister of Finance had the precipitance and temerity to tell the delegates who assembled here that this order in council had not been cancelled. This is what he said when speaking to Mr. Fisher, a member of the delegation. Mr. Fisher said:

Now that privilege has been taken away and we feel that we have been discriminated against.
Hon. Mr. Robb: Wait a moment. Who said it was taken away?
Mr. Fisher: Well, maybe I have not used the right word but the order in council making it effective has been withdrawn, as we understand it.
Hon. Mr. Robb: No.

This was said after the Minister of National Revenue, in answer to a question put by myself, stated definitely that it had been cancelled. Now I want to put on record samples of the resolutions which have been received by the government, and first I would refer to one or two which were sent out before the delegation came to Ottawa. The first is dated April 10, and comes from Grimsby:

The fruit growers understand that the order in council authorizing the Minister of National Revenue to fix values for fruits and vegetables under section 43 of the Customs Act, Revised Statutes, has been cancelled.

Realizing from their experience of the dumping act as administered in former years and as administered in the past two years during (which latter period the minister was authorized to fix values) the apparent impossibility of getting action quickly enough to be of any practical use, they feel that they are virtually being left without the protection of a dumping act unless the power is again given to the minister to fix values.

The very rapid changes which take place in the supplies available and prices in these very perishable lines render it more necessary to have an efficient dumping act in operation to protect this industry than almost any other.

How badly the home market is needed for the industry can be easily verified by application to either loan companies loaning in the fruit areas or banks operating branches in these areas. During the last five or six years there has been a steady shrinkage of the quantities grown in Canada and a big increase in the quantities imported from the United States.

The industry is in vital need of an efficient dumping act and the Ontario growers hope that their members will help to procure for them an anti-dumping clause for their industry which will be effective.

I am going to put one more resolution on record, dated April 17 of this year and coming from the Grimsby chamber of commerce:

Re Cancellation of Special or Dumping Duty

It is with surprise that we learn of the cancellation by order in council of that portion of the dumping act applicable to the fruit and vegetable industries.

Under existing conditions we are satisfied you cannot help but admit that the fruit and vegetable industries of our Dominion are insufficiently protected to warrant increased production on the part of all agricultural branches of the industry, and the government's recent action is certainly most detrimental. Without the protection which formerly existed all products grown in the United States will have free access to our Canadian markets, whereas the act as previously administered offered a seasonable relief, but with this eliminated you will realize without doubt what will happen to the fruit and vegetable industries.

I direct the attention of the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister to the next part of the resolution:

During the week ending April 11th, 1928, Dominion market reports show importations into Canada of two hundred and eleven cars of fruits and vegetables of a class or kind grown in Canada. These features considered you can readily realize as the season advances, and our fruits and vegetables grown in Canada by Canadian producers and largely for Canadian consumption, what the result will be under the present existing circumstances. We submit that the Canadian consumer would be materially benefited, if our producers were only given the advantage of the act as formerly in force, thereby stabilizing conditions to the betterment of all, which fact can be verified by statistics of the past four years.

We solicit your preferred consideration of the above, and trust in your wisdom you will realize the necessity of replacing by order in council the provisions of the act applicable to fruits and vegetables, for without prosperous agricultural conditions we cannot have a prosperous Dominion.

Thanking you in anticipation of your prompt attention and adjustment, thereby maintaining this Canada of ours for the Canadians.

Yours very truly,

Grimsby Chamber of Commerce.

In the report of the proceedings which took place when the delegation was present in Ottawa, I find that the Prime Minister used the following words:

Now that is the only point at issue at the present time that in any way as far as I can see it, is creating a conflict in the minds of some who are interested in this matter.

Under that clause there was passed an order in council. Just how it came to be passed I am not in a position to say. An order in council was passed on the 13th day of July, 1926. That was the first one. That order reads as follows:

Whereas the acting Minister of Customs and Excise reports that from information in his possession it is established that fruit and vegetables of a class or kind produced in Canada are being imported into Canada from glutted markets in the United States, at values such as prejudicially or injuriously affect the interests of Canadian producers;

Therefore His Excellency the Governor in Council under and by virtue of the provisions of section 47-A, hereby authorizes the Minister of Customs and Excise to value such fruits and vegetables for duty notwithstanding any other provisions of the Customs Act, the values so determined to be held to be the fair market value thereof.

The Prime Minister said he had no knowledge of where the order in council came from. I would like to have his attention just now, because I took occasion to put this on record once before, and I would like to show him the origin of this order in council. Under date of June 30, 1926, I received the following telegram from the Seacliffe Growers in the riding which I have the honour to represent:

We respectfully wish to draw your attention to the fact growers here have been seriously handicapped by heavy importations of southern cucumbers and tomatoes which have severely hurt marketing of our hothouse crops in this district. We are now about to begin heavy shipments of field crops such as cabbage and tomatoes and if above unfair competition continues serious losses will be sustained by our growers. We would ask you to use every influence to remedy these conditions.

This telegram was passed over to the Minister of Agriculture, who wrote me saying he had referred the question to the Minister of Finance who in turn referred it to the tariff board, that inactive body which was not, and is not, functioning. On July 2, 1926, I received another wire from the Seacliffe Growers, as follows:

Cabbage crop nearly unsalable. Prices offered would not net growers one cent per pound. Tomatoes in much same position. All owing to import of American stuff which is being dumped in this country at prices that take such low duty that there is no protection to our growers. Cannot something be done to enforce anti-dumping act. This situation has already entailed serious loss to producers in this county.

I would direct attention to the following figures, which probably explain the state of affairs responsible for these telegrams. During the week from June 24 to July 1 inclusive, 1926, there were imported into Canada 128 carloads of tomatoes, which arrived at their ports of entry free from duty, or at least under such low rates of duty as gave no protection to our growers. I would ask the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young), who says there were no importations, to try if possible to grasp these figures. In seven days, the cars received at the different points were as follows:

Montreal	79
Toronto	35
Winnipeg	8
Ottawa	6
Total	128

During the seven consecutive weeks from May 12 to June 30 of the same year the importation of 1911 carloads of early vegetables threatened destruction to this industry in Canada. Here are the figures for the weeks ending as follows:

May 19	205
May 26	230
June 2	365
June 9	220
June 16	260
June 23	217
June 30	414
Total	1,911

I ask the hon. member for Weyburn if there were any importations during that period.

Fortunately for the farmers of Canada, and particularly the farmers of South Essex, whose interests I was trying to protect at the time of this disastrous flood of importations from the United States, a change of government was taking place. The Hon. H. H. Stevens was appointed Acting Minister of Agriculture in the new government. I returned to my riding and went into the fields of the respective municipalities and ascertained the exact conditions that existed. Under date of July 10, 1926, I wired the Hon. H. H. Stevens as follows:

Vegetable growers of South Essex have drawn my attention forcibly to glutted conditions of their markets making it impossible to dispose of their produce with the result that crops are being left in the field. Government reports issued by the Fruit branch department of Agriculture show hundreds of carloads of competitive vegetables imported weekly—see telegraphic report No. 14 showing 414 cars imported into eleven Canadian centres during the short period of one week. American reports show such crops in the United States being shipped at prices that do not pay cost of transportation to market, far less cost of production, with result that ad valorem duty imposed by our government and based on invoice price at point of production means absolutely no protection against heavy importations. These deplorable conditions existing now with reference to hothouse tomatoes, cabbage, and beans will continue with reference to main crops of field tomatoes and potatoes which are now ready to be harvested, unless some immediate action is taken now by our department. On my return to Essex county I made a personal canvass of the district and find conditions exactly as represented in this wire.

This is the wire that produced order in council No. 1088, for it was passed three days following.

Under the authority of section 47a of the Customs Act and order in council No. 1088, dated July 13th, 1926, the Hon. Acting Minister of Customs and Excise valued certain fruits and vegetable products when imported from the United States, as follows, per pound net:

Tomatoes, 5 cents.

I will ask any hon. member opposite if 5 cents a pound is too high a valuation to put on tomatoes.

Cucumbers, 3 cents.
Cabbage, 1¼ cent.
Celery, 2 cents.
Onions, 1¾ cents.
Potatoes, 2 cents.
Asparagus, 10 cents.
Carrots, 1½ cents.
Beets, 2 cents.
Lettuce, 3 cents.
Spinach, 3 cents.
Cauliflower, 2½ cents.
Peaches, 4 cents.
Raspberries, 17 cents.

It was held that these values should be the fair market value thereof for purposes of application of ad valorem rates of duty and special duty. I have here the bulletin known as appraiser's bulletin No. 3209. The bulletin quotes section 47a of the Customs Act, and explains the application of the special duty, or dump duty, and shows its effect in the following conclusion:

At present Mississippi tomatoes in 4-basket crates (15 pounds net) are selling and imported at 60 cents per crate, which is less than the fair market value set above (75 cents per crate). The duty would, therefore, be assessed as follows:—

Regular duty, 30 per cent of 75 cents, 22½ cents; special duty, 15 per cent of 75 cents, 11¼ cents—total 33¾ cents.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) takes exception to my referring to the warehouse which he built at Leamington as a shed. This was built by the Minister of Agriculture, and I believe he was sincere when he built it. I do not think there is any man in public life who is more sincere with his work than the Minister of Agriculture. When he built this onion warehouse he thought he was doing the onion growers of South Essex a good turn. What the onion growers of South Essex want is the implementing of this order in council which took the duty or tariff on onions from 30 cents to 58 cents. We do not want an onion shed to store our onions in until such time as the American, Spanish and Bermuda onions are on our market, underselling our Canadian farmers. We want the right to have our own market, which is the best market we can have. We want protection and tariff on onions.

I would like to say to the hon. member for Weyburn and to the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans), who quoted the high prices that were being paid for Canadian products, that after order in council No. 1088 became effective—it took some time to get it effected, but I wired from Windsor to the customs department that order in council No. 1088 was not being properly and sufficiently enforced as intended—the importation of surplus produce from the United States ceased almost immediately after it became effective. The producers and consumers in South Essex were both benefited. The producers got more for their products and the consumers paid less, simply because the middleman was eliminated. The consumer also got fresh vegetables every day direct from the farm.

There is not a farmer in South Essex, whether he is Liberal or Conservative, but who is in favour or order in council No. 1088. I sincerely wish that protection in this country was employed in such a way that only the people who vote for it could benefit thereby.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will detain the house only a very few moments. I observed from the debate this afternoon that everyone seems to be desirous of helping the producer, though there are some who have a different idea of how to go about it. This government has been attacked this afternoon for not protecting the farmer; not doing anything, according to the arguments of the hon. gentleman opposite, to help the farming industry. I also recall that on other occasions this government has been attacked for giving everything to the farmer, and we have been attacked for sacrificing other interests of the country to the farming industry. Hon. gentlemen opposite have attacked us not only in our tariff changes, not only in our reduction of taxes as it applied to farm products and the required farm implements and utensils, but as it applied, in some cases, to the freight rates given to help that industry. Not only in this house, but on the platform during two successive elections, this government has been attacked because of its attitude towards the farming industry. The representatives of the Tory party placarded the billboards of the country advocating—and also in their speeches they advocated—a tariff policy against the United States, a brick for brick policy.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. ROBB: Will any person deny that?

Mr. McGIBBON: The Right Hon. Arthur Meighen denied that in this house dozens of times. It was brick for brick only as applied to agricultural products.

Mr. ROBB: That is just what I want, and in a few moments I will show how this brick for brick policy would affect Canadian industry. It has occurred to me that this is but a repetition of the budget debate and the resolution now presented for consideration might very properly have been introduced at the time the budget was introduced. I do not raise this as a point of order; we are not afraid of the vote; we want to know just where the house stands on this particular question. But I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is very questionable whether this resolution is in order, because it is practically and to all intents and purposes the same resolution as was introduced on the budget debate.

I wish just for a moment to deal with the observations of the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling) who very frankly admitted that he and some of his associates had worked up that flood of telegrams that came to the Prime Minister and all the other ministers for a time. My hon. friend, however, as well as the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Gott), who has just sat down, apparently misunderstood a statement that I made when the delegation waited on the government some time ago. I told that delegation very frankly that the law remained on the statute book just as it stood before. It is true that the order in council enabling one minister of a government, or officials acting for the minister, to fix values was changed, but the law remains as it has been for some years. If hon. gentlemen wish me to take up time in reading it, it is probably just as well to put it on Hansard. This is the law as it stands on the statute book to-day:

If at any time it appears to the satisfaction of the governor in council on a report from the minister, that natural products of a class or kind produced in Canada are being imported into Canada, either on sale or on consignment, under such conditions as prejudicially or injuriously to affect the interests of Canadian producers, the governor in council may, in any case or class of cases, authorize the minister to value such goods for duty, notwithstanding any other provisions of this act, and the value so determined shall be held to be the fair market value thereof.

That is section 43 of the Customs Act. The producers of vegetables and fruits in British Columbia, besides the protection contained in the federal law, now enjoy a certain protection through the provincial government, and I should not be surprised if hon. gentlemen at some time, maybe before the end of 1929, will be attacking the provincial government for the very act which that government has in force now, protecting the fruit and vegetable growers of that province.

The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) regards this not as a want of confidence motion and I imagine he is quite sincere in his view. But looking into the faces of hon. gentlemen opposite I can see that they have no doubt as to what the resolution means. If the amendment carries and the government is defeated on the motion to go into supply in order to vote money to carry on the affairs of the country, my hon. friends opposite will immediately rise and claim that this was a vote of want of confidence in the government, so my hon. friends have no doubt whatever about the matter.

Mr. GOTT: The Prime Minister himself so stated.

Mr. ROBB: I am not going to go into any details of figures because some of these have already been given, but I observe that the mover of the resolution as it was presented to the house the other day has no doubt about what they desire. It is not the dumping duty that my hon. friend desires to be imposed; it is an increase in the tariff, because my hon. friend (Mr. Tolmie) stated clearly:

The value of a dumping clause depends, first of all, very greatly upon its continuity and steady enforcement, so that a man is enabled to figure from one year to another, whether he is a buyer of these products, a dealer, or the producer on the land.

Mr. TOLMIE: Would that not be clearly shown if we were dead sure of having a dumping clause applied every time that it was necessary? It would be necessarily a fixed tariff if we knew the dumping clause was to be applied when it was necessary. When the Americans were aiming to dump goods into this country it would be ample assurance for the buyers to go ahead and for the producers to produce.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend's friends and our friends, the growers of vegetables and fruits, now have an inquiry going on before the tariff board. They have already had three hearings and the hearings are not yet completed. This is a large country and interested parties from all sections have not yet been heard. I am very frank to say that in some cases in this wide country there might be something to be said for a seasonal duty, but I propose to show hon. gentlemen opposite who are arguing for a brick for brick policy against the United States, that they are arguing for a policy that in some cases will not increase but reduce the Canadian tariff.

Mr. GOTT: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. ROBB: I will put this on record and later on I will answer some questions for my hon. friend. What are the Canadian tariffs and the United States tariffs on the items that have been complained of during the debate this evening? The tariffs are as follows:

Commodities

Canadian tariff—United States tariff

Apples: 90 cents a barrel; 25 cents a bushel.

Or about 66 cents a barrel.

Apricots: ½ cent a pound; ½ cent a pound.
Blackberries, gooseberries and raspberries: 2 cents a pound; 1¼ cents a pound.
Pears: ½ cent a pound; 1 cent a pound.
Strawberries: 2 cents a pound; 1¼ cent a pound.
All other green fruits, n.o.p.: 25 per cent; 35 per cent.
Cabbages: 30 per cent; 25 per cent.
Potatoes: 35 cents per 100 pounds; 50 cents per 100 pounds.
Tomatoes: 30 per cent; ½ cent per pound.
Turnips: 30 per cent; 12 cents per 100 pounds.
Vegetables, n.o.p.

And this is the big item.

30 per cent; 25 per cent.

So that our tariff in many cases is at present higher than that of the United States. But I observe that hon. gentlemen opposite who are asking us to protect hothouse products are the same gentlemen who have been urging that we should put a higher tariff on coal, making it more expensive to produce these hothouse products.

Hon. gentlemen have talked much of the importations coming in here from the United States. Let me say that Canada is not only an importer of fruits and vegetables, but she is an exporter of fruits and vegetables as well, and for the nine months of the fiscal year 1928, from April until December, I find that our imports of fruits were greater than our exports, our imports being $5,993,494, and our exports $3,166,697. But of vegetables we imported $4,614,980 and we exported $6,103,502, or about $1,500,000 more of exports than of imports.

Mr. BENNETT: Potatoes and turnips.

Mr. ROBB: There were some potatoes and turnips, but those were not the only products we exported. My hon. friend will be interested to know that we exported strawberries, for instance.

Hon. gentlemen have referred to the imports of eggs. I find that the imports of eggs from April to December, in 1927, ran in value per dozen from 86 cents to 89, 59, 44, 43, 42, 43, 50 and 49 cents, and the average price of our imports of eggs for January, February and March of this year was 48 cents per dozen.

Mr. BENNETT: That is fixed by the minister.

Mr. ROBB: I do not know that it was fixed by the minister.

Mr. BENNETT: Under the order in council.

Mr. ROBB: I imagine that some of these eggs that came in must have been high-priced eggs for hatching.

Mr. LADNER: Surely the minister does not contend that that has any bearing on this question, because the dumping duty does not apply to prices over 45 cents. I do not see the relevancy of the minister's figures at all.

Mr. ROBB: Nobody is going to get hurt very much with eggs coming in at these prices. My hon. friends opposite are always afraid that something is going to happen in the future, particularly with this government in power. I recall that in 1924, 1925 and 1926, and right up until recently, we have been attacked, particularly by our friends from British Columbia, because we had ruined, they said, a great industry through making the Australian treaty. The British Columbia hen was not going to cackle any more because of the Australian treaty. As a matter of fact, we have not brought in one single egg from Australia since that treaty came into effect.

Mr. GOTT: We have from China.

Mr. ROBB: That does not cut any figure; the Australian treaty did not apply to Chinese eggs.

Mr. LADNER: Will the minister give the figures for the months from January to April when eggs were down to 27 cents, and great importations took place? Why did he omit these months?

Mr. ROBB: I have not those figures.

Mr. LADNER: Those are the ones you should have.

Mr. ROBB: I have the figures here of the price of eggs in the New York market and in the Canadian market.

Mr. LADNER: For what month?

Mr. ROBB: They are in the Toronto Globe of Friday last. I find that eggs were selling in New York at 32½ cents and were quoted in Toronto at 31 cents, so that nobody is getting hurt very badly.

Mr. LADNER: What about January, February and March?

Mr. ROBB: We are dealing with present conditions.

Mr. GUTHRIE: With seasonal eggs.

Mr. ROBB: Our friends opposite have attacked us many times for helping the farmer.

Mr. BENNETT: You are hurting him.

Mr. ROBB: No. I recall that we were attacked for having helped the farmer on his freight rates, coming out of the Okanagan valley and other parts of the country. I recall that at one time this government had to meet a resolution introduced by hon. gentlemen opposite. We reduced carload freight rates to Vancouver from 49 cents to 45 cents; to Calgary, from 138½ to 104 cents; to Saskatoon, from 162½ to 150 cents; to Regina, from 162½ to 150 cents, and to Winnipeg, from 162½ to 150 cents, and we were attacked by our hon. friends opposite.

Mr. BENNETT: Would the minister mind giving particulars when that attack was made.

Mr. ROBB: The change rates became effective in November, 1922. That is when the attack was made.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The house was not sitting then.

Mr. STEVENS: May I take the liberty of interrupting the minister? He is surely not serious in saying that there was an attack made on the government because of the freight rate reductions quoted by him. I submit to the minister that no such attack was made.

Mr. ROBB: My recollection is that it was, and my recollection also is that we were attacked when we reduced, as we did, the tariff rates on the requirements of the farmer, particularly for the orchardists and farmers of British Columbia. Then we reduced the sales tax. There was an exemption of sales tax granted in 1924 from thirty-four articles, and hon. gentlemen opposite attacked us for the reductions and exemptions we made in the sales tax. Hon. gentlemen opposite also attacked us on account of egg grading.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. ROBB: Yes, you did, and my hon. friend who sits to the right of the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Guthrie) moved a resolution protesting against the egg grading.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The courts said it was illegal.

Mr. ROBB: No, they did not.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes, they did.

Mr. ROBB: Every session since 1922, we have heard these tales of woe from hon. gentlemen opposite, and yet the industry continues to grow and prosper. The act remains there. We have on the statute book right now all that is required to protect these industries. It is the policy of this government to find larger and wider markets for the products of the farmers and gardeners of western Canada, indeed of all Canada, but we have also some obligations towards the consumers, and when prices become unduly high, as they sometimes do, is it not reasonable that the government of the day should take the responsibility of having brought to them recommendations before applying the dumping duty? I say now that whenever it becomes apparent that the dumping act should be applied in the interests either of the producers or of the consumers, this government in the future as in the past will not be afraid to do its duty.

Mr. LADNER: Before the minister concludes, may I ask a question, which I think is very pertinent to the point of his remarks? Do the government maintain that they have power under the statute to apply the dumping duty as they formerly did?

Mr. ROBB: The statute has not been changed in any way whatever; and if my hon. friend questions our right to do it, then he is questioning the right of one of his own friends, who at one time did introduce this.

Mr. LADNER: I am not questioning anybody's right. I believe the right is there. But in view of the words of the minister—they were not very definite—I desire to ask him whether the government think they have the right, under the existing legislation, to apply dumping duites as they did before. That is a simple question, and it seems to me it goes to the root of the whole matter.

Mr. ROBB: Let my hon. friend submit a case to the government and see how quickly we will test it out.

Mr. LADNER: Why does the minister evade my question?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. LADNER: What is the use of discussing these matters if we go round in circles?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. LADNER: I have asked the minister a straight question.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. gentleman may not exercise his right to speak by putting questions.

Mr. LADNER: I am merely asking the Minister of Finance a question.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is out of order.

Mr. TOLMIE: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. TOLMIE: In the event of a carload of fresh vegetables appearing at the boundary line to-morrow morning, have you the machinery to put the dumping clause into effect right away?

Mr. ROBB: We have the same legal machinery that has always existed in the act.

Mr. TOLMIE: That is by order in council. It would take forty-eight hours to put it into effect.

Mr. GOTT: The hon. minister said he would answer my question.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. LIGUORI LACOMBE (Laval-Two Mountains) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I am anxious to take part in this discussion because, I think, that the question introduced in the house by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Tolmie), has a very important bearing on our tariff policy. Our most distinguished statesmen have always endeavoured to find a solution to this important problem and quite naturally the question again crops up in the house. As representative of a riding almost exclusively agricultural, especially in that part of the county of Laval-Two Mountains which is known as the garden of Montreal, I wish to request from the government the greatest possible protection, assistance and fairplay on behalf of the farming population of my riding. I further wish to request, and in so dong I am but echoing the eloquent words expressed by the hon. member for Laprairie-Napierville (Mr. Lancotot)—I wish to request a seasonal tariff for the truck farmers of the county of Laval-Two Mountains and the province of Quebec. Perhaps the government will soon adopt this policy; I hope that such will be the case in the interest of the farming classes.

Let us bear in mind, sir, that the farming class controls the basic industry of this country. Should agriculture fail, our prosperity will dwindle. That is why the motion introduced by the member for Victoria, bears upon one of the most important aspects of our economic life.

I wish to point out to the house, that it is in the interest of all the people in this Dominion, consumers as well as producers, that new markets be found for our natural products which, according to certain specialists on statitsics, could feed 35,000,000 people, while we are barely 9,000,000.

I do not entirely agree with the views of my colleague, the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young), when he states that we should equally consider the welfare of all classes of society. Among these classes, which one toils the most? Is it not the farmers who, when dawn is breaking are already on their way to the fields to prepare and put in the seeding? Is it not the farming class which work not 300 days only in the year but 365 days? The farmer has not even his Sundays to himself. The farming class is the one which feeds the people of Canada and the whole world. It is therefore entitled to the greatest possible assistance and fairplay on the part of our governments. That is why I request for the truck farmers of Quebec and the riding of Laval-Two Mountains especially a seasonal tariff which would abolish the disloyal competition of the United States, our wealthy and powerful neighbours who have climatic advantages over us.

I have already given my views on this question. When the budget was brought down in the house, the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan), introduced a similar motion. I voted against such an amendment because I considered that class and sectional interests should give way to considerations making for the general welfare of the country. For the same reason, I shall again support the Liberal government, which offers to the people of this country a sincere and sound administration. I must add that I cannot place my trust in a possible return to power of our hon. friends of the opposition. because in the past they never raised that tariff. I believe that this motion is simply introduced in the house with a political purpose. Having full confidence therefore in the distinguished men who are at present directing the destinies of this country, I shall support the government.

Mr. H. J. BARBER (Fraser Valley): Mr Speaker, I wish to add my protest on behalf of the producers of my district in particular and of those of the province of British Columbia in general. I join with my good friend the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling) in calling the attention of the government to the result of their action of last month in removing by order in council the powers of the Minister of National Revenue to fix the fair market value of fruit and vegetables, eggs and poultry. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb), referring to the representatives of British Columbia, said that they protested against the action of the government in bringing in the Australian treaty so far as eggs were concerned. I do not think that any great protest was made in regard to eggs; we did not paint any picture of the future of the poultry industry as being affected by that legislation. But we certainly did point out what the effect would be on the dairy industry, and the picture we painted at that time is quite visible to-day. So far as these other industries are concerned, they are vitally affected by the action of the government.

The minister referred to certain machinery set up in British Columbia to deal with this great problem of the fruit growers and he observed that no doubt, before next fall, many of us would be condemning the provincial government for its action in introducing that legislation. Let me direct his attention to the fact that the Premier of British Columbia is to-day telling the people and the press of that part of the country that he is keeping the wires to Ottawa hot in protest against the action of this government in cancelling the order in council under discussion. More than that, according to a despatch in one of the coast papers, he made the statement that he had wired to his Minister of Lands, Mr. Pattullo, requesting him to join the large deputation that waited upon the government asking for a restoration of this legislation. We find, however, that Mr. Pattullo was not present in the delegation, although the people of British Columbia believe he was.

I am not going to discuss section 6 and section 47a; these two sections have been fully dealt with to-night. I should like to know, however, who suggested that the government should take this action, or for what reason they did so. There has been no demand from the consumers of the country. This order in council fixing the fair market values of the products affected has gone a great way towards stabilizing industries during the last two years. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) the other day intimated, I think, that no request had been filed with the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler) this season, or within the last few weeks, to have an order in council passed in regard to fixing fair values. I hold in my hand a telegram bearing date April 25 addressed to the hon. member for Yale, as follows:

Armstrong, B.C.

Have wired Minister of Customs to have fair price of asparagus dumped in from America set at twelve cents pound. Unless this is done it means ruination to B. C. Growers. We have half ton daily to ship from Armstrong. Please use influence to have this effected immediately.

Poole,
Fairfield Ranch.

This was a request from the growers in Armstrong, and they say that they have forwarded a demand to the Minister of National Revenue asking him to take the necessary steps to have an order in council passed fixing the price of this particular commodity. Then we have a request from the Canadian horticultural council, filed with the minister, bearing date March 12 and setting forth suggested prices and seasons. This was filed not only with the Minister of National Revenue but, as well, with the Minister of Agriculture. I will not read it, but I may point out that, in regard to strawberries, it was suggested that they be valued at ten cents per pound for duty purposes, from June 1 to July 31, while raspberries were fixed at fifteen cents, from June 15 to July 31. And so on down the list. These are two requests that have been filed by the producers and the representatives with the department up to the present time.

I have had several protests from my district, copies of which, I believe, have been forwarded to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of National Revenue. I will not deal with them all; I intend to touch upon one or two only. I have one from Mission City dated April 13. This communication states that at a meeting held on the date mentioned, some 2,000 fruit and vegetable growers of British Columbia were represented, and that they earnestly endorsed the application already made by the associated growers requesting the immediate restoration of the order in council as provided in section 47a, now section 43 of the Customs Act. The present indications are, it is stated, that there will be a heavy dumping of American produce on the Canadian market, whereas the production in British Columbia will be in excess of the requirements of the prairie provinces. This is signed by the following: Fruit and Mercantile Exchange, Ltd.; Wilson Fruit and Produce Limited; Central Fruit Distributors Limited; Maple Ridge Co-operative Exchange; Japanese Consolidated Farmers Exchange; and Dewdney Rhubarb Growers Association.

I have another telegram from New Westminster embodying a resolution of a large mass meeting of poultry farmers, held there on April 23, protesting against the removal of the dumping duty; also a telegram from Port Haney, intimating a unanimous request on the part of the Maple Ridge Poultry Association that the federal member lodge a protest with the Minister of National Revenue, in the name of the association, urging that every effort be made to have the dumping duty restored, or a higher duty imposed on eggs coming into Canada from the United States.

A question has arisen, with some of our friends opposite, as to the principle of the matter; they are apparently opposed to anti-dumping legislation. The hon. member for Yale has already referred to the economic conference under the auspices of the League of Nations, and the Prime Minister has discussed the subject on more than one occasion in dealing with tariff matters. I wish to refer to the final report, at page 35 of which there is a statement regarding indirect means of protecting national trade. Section 2, which refers to dumping and anti-dumping, is as follows:

The conference recognizes that the question of dumping is of particular importance to those countries which have adopted a liberal tariff policy, and lays stress on the fact that, although the consumer may secure, as a result of dumping, certain transitory advantages as regards price, there can be no doubt that dumping creates a state of insecurity in production and commerce, and can therefore exercise a harmful influence quite out of proportion to the temporary advantage resulting from cheap imports.

The same applies to dumping employed by powerful firms or commercial combines in one or more countries to destroy the similar industries of another country, and thus to enable them afterwards to raise the price on the market of that country.

It is certain that dumping is facilitated by the existence of high import duties in the countries practising it, and that it may lead to the introduction of high defensive duties in the importing country.

The conference considers that dumping must be reduced to a minimum, and that in order to attain this object, every possible measure should be taken to establish universally stable conditions of production and commerce and to reduce the excessive customs tariffs of exporting countries.

The conference recommends, however, that importing countries which find themselves compelled to take defensive measures against dumping should not resort to excessive, indirect or vexatious measures which would have a more far-reaching effect than is intended.

I think everyone will agree that the request we are making to-night on behalf of the producers of vegetables and fruits in this country is not unreasonable or excessive. The Minister of Finance has said a great deal about the tariff and has tried to drag the tariff across the path as a red herring. It is not a matter of tariff; it is a matter of fixing something upon which we can base a tariff. For instance, as it was explained the other day, a commodity may come to our borders which has no fixed value on which an ad valorem duty can apply. The idea of section 47a, and the reason for the power given the minister under that order in council, is to have a fair market value set upon that article on which a duty may be collected. This not only protects us from a cheap grade of fruits and vegetables but enables us to fix a basis upon which our duty can be collected, and on behalf of the producers of my district and those throughout the country I feel it my duty to support the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Anderson).

Mr. W. K. ESLING (West Kootenay): If the producers of natural products in Canada are not to be encouraged at least to the extent of having their own home market, one naturally wonders why this government is spending about $3,000,000 a year to bring in immigrants to go on the land. In 1922 Hon. Mr. Fielding took exception to the provisions brought in by the Conservative government in 1921 to protect our markets against being flooded by fruit and farm products from the United States. Mr. Fielding contended that those provisions were not workable, while the fruit growers and farmers took the stand that they were not only workable but were of great value in stopping the flooding of the Canadian market with fruits and vegetables from the United States at a time when the markets of that country were glutted. The then Minister of Customs, in keeping with Mr. Fielding's suggestion, brought in this amendment which has been known as section 47a and which is now section 43. When this session of parliament opened one of the first resolutions on the order paper was in the name of the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young), asking the government to rescind the order in council making it possible for the Minister of Customs to fix values for the purpose of customs duty. The hon. member suggested that it had been intimated from this side of the house that the withdrawal of that resolution was the result of threats, but I do not think the government has any fear of threats to-day, since they have a good majority in this house. However, the conclusion is general that the hon. member withdrew that resolution more particularly for the purpose of saving this government considerable embarrassment, because we must not forget that this very order in council which has been rescinded was authorized by the section passed by the present government, with the approval of the Prime Minister and all his colleagues in the cabinet. I think this action was taken not only to save the government from embarrassment but to relieve hon. members from Quebec, many of whom would have had to vote against the government; and it also saved the Ontario Liberals some embarrassment. We must not overlook the Minister of Health (Mr. King), in whose political waverings I am always very much interested. When section 47a was introduced, in defending it he said it was for protection against unfair and unreasonable competition, and that the amendment was only intended to overcome conditions which arose at certain times when there was an unfair competition under which the grower of natural products could not exist.

To be very brief, I simply wish to voice the protest of the farmers, fruit growers and poultry raisers of my district against the cancellation of this order in council, and I hope the government may find some means of restoring it.

Mr. J. A. FRASER (Cariboo): As the case has been so admirably presented to the house by the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling) and other speakers, I do not propose at this time to go into the question of the dumping clause at any great length. The fruit and vegetable industry of this country is sufficiently important that a person who represents a district which produces fruit should have something to say on this matter. The fruit and vegetable industry of Canada produced $48,500,000 last year, of which British Columbia produced $13,500,000, or about 28 per cent of the total fruit crop.

My district is inhabited to a very large extent by fruit growers, especially in the neighbourhood of Shusway lake, down to the end of the district near Yale. It contains a very valuable fruit-growing area, and, in deference to the wishes of the people who live in that section I wish to protest against the removal of this dumping duty. I should like to put on file some of the telegrams which I have received from that district. The first is from the Shusway Lake Co-operative Growers, and reads as follows:

> Strongly endorse attitude of associated growers of British Columbia on question of dump duty. Rely on you to do utmost to get dumping protection as before.

They are simply asking for the dumping protection they had before.

Then I have another one from W. Crossley of Kamloops, as follows:

> On behalf of Clearwater strawberry growers please protest vigorously against removal of dumping duties. Will mean ruin to us if duties removed as American late season rubbish spoils our market on prairie for high grade berries. Last year, although American growers got $5.50 per crate, when our crop ready they dumped several carloads on prairie market and forced price down to $2.75. This was to put us out of business. Urge application of dumping duty two weeks before our season opens and prevent unfair competition.

This shows the attitude of the strawberry growers of that district.

Then I have a letter from the British Columbia Fruit Growers' Association, protesting in the same way. Then I have another letter from the Salmon Arm Farmers' Exchange, protesting against the removal of the duty, and also a letter from the Associated Growers of British Columbia, Limited, representing the fruit growers in my section of British Columbia.

We find a peculiar situation in regard to some of the criticisms which have come from the other side of the house as to this duty. For instance, the member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) complains that the fruit growers of British Columbia co-operate in selling and distributing their fruit. I think they have a perfect right to co-operate in selling their fruit. You do not find British Columbia saying anything against the wheat pool on the prairies, and the fruit growers of that province are just trying to do for themselves what the prairie men have been so successful in doing, and no more.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): The pool is not enforced by fine and imprisonment.

Mr. FRASER: There is no fine and imprisonment in connection with the British Columbia fruit growers.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): There is.

Mr. FRASER: Then we have the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) at which I am rather surprised. The Minister of Finance said that the fruit growers of British Columbia enjoy protection from the provincial government. I have the annual report of the Interior Tree, Fruit and Vegetable Committee of Direction, and I want to read a few paragraphs from that report for the benefit of the Minister of Finance. One paragraph, under the heading of "Setting of Prices", reads as follows:

> The committee is charged with setting prices, "which shall be fair to the producer, retailer and consumer." This is not a particularly easy thing to do. In the last analysis it is the consuming public who, at least, limit the prices obtainable. Again, the committee has felt that it may serve the industry better by helping obtain wide and sustained distribution at reasonable prices than by possibly restricting sales to merely a portion of a crop in an attempt to obtain spectacular prices.

That is, the object of the committee is to obtain reasonable prices in order to get wide distribution. Then it goes on to say:

> It cannot always control the prices at which products must move. These are controlled by competitive or, sometimes, weather conditions, but it has certainly stabilized the industry and market to a noteworthy degree.

That is all the fruit growers of British Columbia are attempting to do, and I think it ill becomes either the Minister of Finance or the people of the prairie provinces to find fault with an organization which is only attempting to do what the wheat pool has done. No person in British Columbia has anything to say against the wheat pool; they all commend it and they are glad to see the people on the prairies enjoy the benefits from it, but we would like to have a little reciprocal treatment so far as our effort at co-operation is concerned.

I want to draw attention for a few moments to the attempt of the Prime Minister to make the delegation which waited on him a few days ago believe that the order in council was an attempt to fix duties or that the Customs officials were given the privilege and were using it to fix the tariff throughout the year. In his remarks to that delegation he went on to say that the government was under the impression that the Department of National Revenue were given the power to fix the tariff. He said also that he was very much surprised to see they were exercising the right to fix the tariff to extend over the entire year, and he emphasized the fact that this order in council was giving them the power to fix the tariff throughout the year. At another place he said:

I wanted to bring out, and I think it has been brought out clearly—and if it has not been brought out clearly up to the present, I would be glad to be interrupted by anyone who does not see it—that what the government is taking exception to is the giving to the Minister of Customs power to fix the duty on any classes of products that are named in these orders, notwithstanding the duties that are already fixed by parliament in the Customs Act.

At another place he goes on to say:

The government's attention has been drawn to the way in which this order in council was being applied by the officers of the Customs department. The order was never intended to give such power as that to the Minister of Customs, and the officials of his department, and if there is any doubt we had better have the orders cancelled altogether.

That is again pointing out the fact that they are fixing the tariff. The orders in council have been dealt with several times, but I want to point out that that is an entirely misleading statement for the Prime Minister of this country to make. There is no power to fix the tariff in any part of the orders in council. Power is given to fix the valuation for duty purposes, but not to fix the tariff. It is entirely a misrepresentation of the orders in council to say that that section fixes the tariff.

On motion of Mr. Fraser the debate was adjourned.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Tuesday, May 15, 1928

The house met at three o'clock.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Fourth report of the select standing committe on railways, canals and telegraph lines.—Mr. Young (Saskatoon).

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST READINGS—SENATE BILLS

Bill No. 303, respecting a certain patent of Anchor Cap and Closure Corporation of Canada, Limited.—Mr. Clark.

Bill 304, respecting The Cumberland Railway and Coal Company.—Mr. Ilsley.

[Mr. Fraser.]

TECHNICAL EDUCATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (South Wellington): I would like to ask my right hon. friend the Prime Minister a question in regard to the grants to the provinces for technical education. I was not present in the house on the 4th of May, when a statement was made on the subject by the Prime Minister, but I gather from it that the government intends to continue the grants to those provinces which have not yet received grants for ten years under the act. Does that exclude the other provinces, or does the government intend to continue the grants to the other provinces in the future, that is, to Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and any other provinces that have received the grants for ten years?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I do not know that I quite understand my hon. friend's question. The act was passed some ten years ago, and the opportunity was given to the different provinces to apply to receive the grant for each year in proportion to what they themselves contributed. Any province that has taken advantage of the act for the period of ten years will not receive any further advances, but the provinces which have not up to the present time availed themselves of the opportunity of receiving grants in aid for the period of ten years may receive additional aid for such period of time as would be necessary to complete the full ten years. The government has not yet decided the latter point, but I think I can assure my hon. friend that it will receive favourable consideration.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Does the government intend to discontinue the practice of making these grants to the provinces in aid of technical education?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The government does not intend to introduce any new legislation.

KINGSVILLE, ONT., DREDGING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, in reply to an inquiry yesterday by my hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. Gott) with regard to dredging at Kingsville, I beg to report that on the third instant the district engineer at London was authorized to accept the offer of the Chatham Dredging Company to remove six thousand cubic yards scow measurement of class B material, involving an expenditure of $4,800, to enable a subsidized boat to operate from Pelee island to Kingsville.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT

INVESTIGATION OF SUBSIDIARY OF TELEPHONE OR TELEGRAPH COMPANIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. GEARY (South Toronto): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) if order No. 31 under public bills and orders, being a bill to amend the Railway Act to give jurisdiction to the railway board to investigate subsidiaries of telephone and telegraph companies, will receive the favourable attention of the government? There seems little likelihood of the bill being reached during the remainder of the session, and as it is a general amendment to a general act, I should be glad to know if he would consider its adoption as a government measure, and introduce legislation which would have a chance of passing before the end of the session.

Hon. CHARLES DUNNING (Minister of Railways): Mr. Speaker, I think under public bills and orders there are in the neighbourhood of five bills to amend the Railway Act. Frankly, up to the present time I have not considered adopting any of them as government measures.

Mr. GEARY: Would the minister take them into consideration with a view to expediting them in some way?

Mr. DUNNING: I will bring the matter to the attention of the government.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

DISMISSALS OF CIVIL SERVANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. E. KAISER (Ontario): On April 30, Mr. Speaker, a question of mine with regard to certain dismissals from the civil service was passed as an order for return. As yet I have received no notice of the return. When may I expect it?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What department?

Mr. KAISER: The Department of Finance, I imagine.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): I am not aware, Mr. Speaker, of any dismissals in my department, but I will look into the observations of my hon. friend and give him a reply to-morrow.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. W. D. EULER (Minister of National Revenue) moved the second reading of bill No. 291 to amend the Department of National Revenue Act.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we are still opposed to the principle of the measure as introduced, and by concurring in the bill being sent to committee we must not be taken as agreeing to the principle. That is all I desire to make clear.

Motion agreed to on division and bill read the second time.

Mr. EULER moved that the house go into committee on the bill.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. BENNETT: On division.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Minister may nominate certain officers, etc.

Mr. STEVENS: As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, section one comprehends the whole bill.

Mr. EULER: There is only one section.

Mr. STEVENS: This bill is most difficult for the house to consider, for this reason. The minister, with obvious sincerity I think, assures us that he requires the powers contained in the bill in order properly to administer his department. Any minister coming to the house with a claim of that character necessarily commands our sympathy and attention. I believe he has given very earnest thought to this measure; but there are certain features contained in it which we must most carefully consider. My main objection is that in part, if not in its entirety, the bill departs from the principle of appointment through the Civil Service Commission, and what is known as the merit system. I am aware that my statement may be called in question as regards the merit system, because the minister declares—I think sincerely—that he is desirous of making appointments. It is pretty hard, Mr. Chairman, to talk against the whole house. If we cannot have better attention I shall sit down.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. STEVENS: I say the minister might very properly challenge the last statement, claiming that he is proposing this method of appointment in the interests of efficiency. However, I wish to bring to the attention of the committee some matters in connection with this very drastic and serious change which I believe ought to be considered most carefully before we agree to the bill.

Let me say in a general way that I would not see so much objection to the bill if the process proposed permitted the appointments to be made by the Civil Service Commission in consultation with the minister. But unfortunately the bill does not so provide. It really places the power of appointment practically entirely in the hands of the minister, and the Civil Service Commission are reduced to the rather invidious position of being invited to acquiesce; if they do not acquiesce, then there is no remedy so far as they are concerned. If the principle of appointment were changed so that the appointments were made by the Civil Service Commission in consultation with himself or his officers, a large measure of the objection would be removed.

I think it desirable to bring to the attention of the committee certain evidence, if I may so term it. For instance, I propose to quote briefly from an editorial in the Winnipeg Free Press, for it is indicative of what is the opinion of the informed public. Quoting the Winnipeg Free Press, I shall at least be acquitted of any desire to be partisan. The Winnipeg Free Press, on May 2, in a rather lengthy editorial, from which I shall read only one or two excerpts, has this to say:

> The country will keep a sharp eye on the move made at Ottawa to remove the appointment of certain officials of the Department of National Revenue, mainly in the Customs department, from the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission.

Then they go on with quite a long argument on the subject, which I shall not read but which is very interesting and, I think, illuminating. They conclude the editorial with these two paragraphs:

> Outside of party heelers, this country is pretty well satisfied with the work and functions of the Civil Service Commission. It offers equal opportunity for all young Canadians to enter the service of their country if they have the necessary qualifications. It is a safe guess that the merit system has brought into the service a better qualified and more energetic type of young man and woman than ever came in under the patronage way of handing out government jobs. Any action at Ottawa that appears to strike a blow at the underpinning of the merit system is likely to be regarded with grave suspicion throughout the country. The present government at Ottawa is reasonably suspected of itching to get its hands on civil service patronage. Its record in this respect is not altogether aboveboard, due largely to the performances of the Postmaster General, which is one reason why the public will be highly suspicious of the present move that would give the cabinet minister the authority to hire anyone to whom he might take a fancy, or who might be forced on him by local party organizations. The government would be well advised to leave civil service appointments to the body set up by parliament to attend to that department of the national service.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Some hon. gentlemen laugh, but these are not my own observations; I am quoting from an editorial in the Free Press for what it may be worth.

Mr. EULER: I do not like to interrupt, but I think that editorial was based on the resolution itself, which went a great deal further than the bill. I have heard no adverse comments, nor comments of any kind, since the introduction of the bill itself.

Mr. STEVENS: My object in reading the editorial, and in the remarks I am about to make, is to establish the statement I have made, namely, that we must preserve the status of the Civil Service Commission. That is my point; that is the light in which we should consider the bill.

I wish now to quote briefly from the observations of certain individual members of the government. I shall quote now from Hansard, page 2847, May 2, 1921, in which the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), then leader of the opposition, is reported, criticising what was known as the Spinney bill. That bill, as hon. members will recall, removed from the Civil Service Commission certain classifications. Whether that was right or wrong is not the point; what I intend to show is the opinion which the present Prime Minister held at that time. He said:

> This bill specifies three classes of appointments which are to be taken out of the hands of the Civil Service Commission and transferred to the government, thereby permitting the government's followers, in all certainty, to make recommendations which the governor in council will act upon. That is a step entirely in the wrong direction.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What government introduced that bill?

Mr. STEVENS: Let me assure the Prime Minister that I am shielding no one. The bill was introduced in 1921 by the Conservative government, when the right hon. gentleman was leader of the opposition. It was introduced by the Union government, and my right hon. friend was then speaking as leader of the opposition. Now, we have before us to-day a parallel case: the government of the day proposes, to use the Prime Minister's own words, to take certain specified classes of appointments out of the control of the Civil Service Commission. And this he described on that occasion as "a step entirely in the wrong direction". I am merely giving his own words. On the public platform in 1926, the Prime Minister also said, according to the Ottawa Citizen:

I stand strongly, and have always stood, for the merit system and promotion on a basis of merit, and will do my utmost to see that that is maintained.

That was what the Prime Minister said at that time.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Before my hon. friend leaves me, may I ask him whether there is not this difference in the present case, that what the government is now suggesting is to carry out the findings of a royal commission appointed to improve the customs service? This is one of the suggested improvements; at any rate it is what the commission have recommended.

Mr. STEVENS: I shall come to the royal commission in a moment. As a matter of fact, the Prime Minister's statement is scarcely correct. I am not desirous of being too narrow in my criticisms, but the right hon. gentleman's observation is not quite accurate. But at the moment I am merely showing what the Prime Minister had to say in the past as regards the principle that should govern, whether it might be the government of that day or any other government. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) on the same occasion made this statement:

I do not believe in political patronage.

I commend that to the colleagues of the hon. gentleman, the present Minister of Justice.

Mr. McINTOSH: What about your own colleagues?

Mr. STEVENS: What has that to do with my argument?

Mr. McINTOSH: It has a lot to do with it.

Mr. STEVENS: Not a bit. My hon. friend will have the floor shortly, but the interjection was not very apt, to say the least. The present Minister of Justice, as I was saying, made this statement in 1921:

I do not believe in political patronage. It has been tried in many countries in the world, and it has been found wanting everywhere.

The present Minister of National Revenue, on the same occasion, had this remark to make:

So far as I am personally concerned, I am opposed to the system of political patronage as it obtained in the past. . . . The Civil Service Act may have its drawbacks, but even then its advantages, in my opinion, far outweigh its disadvantages.

That statement was made by the minister who is proposing the bill now before us. Now I come to the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke)—and I am glad he is in his seat. I invite him to listen to his own observations. Mark you, the Minister of Immigration is in accord with this bill and is supporting the change therein proposed. On February 2, 1923—Hansard, page 41—the present Minister of Immigration said there must be no return to patronage:

A return to patronage is unthinkable.

I ask the hon. gentleman to cogitate on that statement while he sits sombrely in his seat. Then the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) this year made the following statement, referring even to labourers on canals:

I would be very happy to have the whole situation left to the Civil Service Commission.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) was chairman of a parliamentary committee which in 1923 reported as follows:

Your committee is of the opinion that the two fundamental principles of the Civil Service Act are the merit system and the system of appointment by competitive examination, and that both these principles must be preserved.

I have read these opinions for the purpose of placing before the government the position which its own members have taken from time to time in regard to this question. Now I wish to turn to a reason advanced by the minister, and which I think had a good deal of influence on members of the house, when the resolution was under consideration the other day. The Minister of National Revenue, discussing the matter on May 8, referred particularly to appraisers. He said to the house:

And remember, these were appointed by the Civil Service Commission.

He was dealing with the report of the parliamentary committee of 1926 investigating the Customs department, and he was speaking of those who were recommended for disciplinary treatment or for discharge, stating that they were appointed by the Civil Service Commission. I have before me the names of those gentlemen who were included in that report.

Mr. EULER: I do not think I made reference to any particular persons at all.

Mr. STEVENS: The minister referred to the report of the committee and to those persons recommended for discharge. He had particular reference to appraisers when he asked the house to bear in mind that all these gentlemen had been appointed by the Civil Service Commission. At the time I was a little doubtful as to the accuracy of his statement and the soundness of his position. I am not going to read the names of these men because I do not think it desirable to put their names on Hansard; they have been dealt with once and we should let them go, although if it is requested I will read them. I have before me the names of nine men, not one of whom was appointed by the Civil Service Commission, all having been appointed under the old patronage system. When the minister brings forth the argument that there has been dissatisfaction with certain persons, that they were appointed by the Civil Service Commission and that therefore he would change the system, then I suggest that this point be kept in mind. These men were not appointed by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. EULER: Would the hon. gentleman permit me to interrupt? I do not pretend for one moment to disclaim any responsibility for anything I may have said the other day, but I say to him now that when I made that statement I did not have in mind any particular persons, and certainly not the persons to whom he refers. I had in mind that the appraisal system was not what it should be, and that the appraisers in general had been appointed by the Civil Service Commission. I was not referring to these particular men at all.

Mr. STEVENS: As a matter of fact, and I say this because I am trying to be fair with the minister, when he makes a statement such as he undoubtedly made at page 2782 of Hansard to the effect that these men were appointed by the Civil Service Commission, he should be sure of his facts. That is all I desire to establish in that regard.

Now I want to come for a moment to the question of the appointment of appraisers, and whether or not it is desirable that they should be appointed altogether apart from the Civil Service Commission. In the same discussion which took place on May 8, the minister made this statement:

> My opinion is that the Dominion appraisers . . . . are best qualified to make selections.

What method would be followed and what process would be adopted by the Civil Service Commission in making these appointments? I am informed that the method is this: A civil service board of examiners would be appointed, and in this instance one member of that board undoubtedly would be a Dominion appraiser. That is, they take an officer of the department affected by the appointment; if it were the preventive service the chief preventive officer would be a member of the board, and for the appraisal service undoubtedly it would be a member of the Dominion appraisers. Included in that board would be a representative of the private business affected by the appointment; in other words, if a drygoods appraiser were to be selected, undoubtedly a member of the board would be a representative business man in the drygoods trade; then there would be a member of the civil service examining board and a representative of the Canadian Legion, who would have no vote but merely a voice in the committee to protect the interests of the returned men. That is the process adopted, and I submit to the minister that with a board of that kind selecting the appraisers, bearing in mind the fact that a representative of the board of Dominion appraisers would be a member of that board, then the Civil Service commission may well be entrusted with this task. I would be willing to say this: If after such a board decided on a certain person as being suitable for the position, while the minister was firmly convinced and had good reason to believe that such an appointee would not be suitable for the position, then I am prepared to say that the minister might have some remedy by which he could extricate himself from that difficulty. But if these appointments are to be made by the reverse process, if the minister is authorized to say to the Civil Service Commission, "Here is a man whom I want as a drygoods appraiser," and then if the Civil Service Commission refuse to appoint that man after examination, the minister can insist on the appointment, I submit that is merely a method of eliminating the Civil Service Commission and its authority.

Now we come to what the Prime Minister mentioned a moment ago, and in this connection I have before me a report which was tabled on May 7 last. This is the report of a sub-committee appointed by the then Minister of Customs, when I held the office, for the purpose of examining into the system and organization of the Customs department in Ottawa. This committee was known as an advisory or consultative committee consisting of Mr. Dilworth, of Clarkson, Gordon and Dilworth; the chairman of the Civil Service Commission, the Auditor General of Canada, Mr. Breadner, who is now the commissioner of customs and Mr. Taylor, commissioner of excise. This was the committee appointed by the government at that time to examine into the Customs department and to recommend a method of reorganization, and I want to say that the report they made will well repay study. This report, in so far as it deals with the subject now under discussion, differs from the report of the royal commission which, as the minister correctly stated, frankly said that these selections should be made independent of the Civil Service Commission. I submit to the house, without going into an examination of the report of the royal commission for the moment, that the final report did no great credit to that commission; I submit that it has every evidence of having been hastily prepared. There was an interim report dealing with specific cases which is very much more worthy of attention and study than the final report. The report of this advisory and consultative committee has this to say:

Mr. ADSHEAD: Was that the report made by Clarkson, Gordon and Dilworth?

Mr. STEVENS: No, this is a report which was tabled on May 7 and which has not been printed. I think hon. members would do well to secure it and read it carefully, because it is perhaps the best of the series of reports which have been made on this subject. Under the heading "Selection and Appointment of Preventive Staff" a paragraph is included which is very interesting, on one or two points of which I will lay some particular stress:

As the men on this work have to work often on their own judgment and initiative and to act at times with the greatest promptness and without first reporting to their superior officers, their selection should be most carefully made and have regard to their intelligence, integrity, capacity and general suitability to the work and to no other consideration. For this reason we most strongly recommend that the selection be made by the Civil Service Commission and the chief of the preventive service.

Then they refer to the report of the special committee which made recommendations in a similar vein.

—and that the chief of the preventive service should have full power to remove for cause any officer or other employee while temporarily employed.

That is the recommendation of the special committee, composed of the gentlemen to whom I have referred, and who gave this subject careful study. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that that is the course that should be followed. Let the preventive officers and the appraisers be selected by the Civil Service Commission, the former in consultation with the chief of the preventive staff and the latter in consultation with the Dominion appraisal board. Let the investigators also be selected by the Civil Service Commission, in consultation with the head of the advisory staff. In all these cases the minister is certainly to be consulted; that is, he is ex officio in all these conferences.

Now, I wish to deal with another feature of this matter. The other day the minister declared that there was no desire to interfere with the principle of appointments by the Civil Service Commission. I am not desirous of attacking the minister's good faith, because I appreciate that he is labouring under most difficult circumstances. We credit him with an earnest desire to make the best appointments possible, but the house must remember that when enacting a statute of this kind we are laying down a system that will be followed by other ministers than the present incumbent of office. At the present moment, under the stress of the last couple of years of scrutiny and investigation of the department, it is quite likely that the minister will bestir himself to keep within the bounds of—what shall I say, decency?—but when things have quieted down and we get a little farther away from the cause of revision of this section of the civil service system, it follows, I think, as a matter of course that we simply go back to the patronage system, in all its simplicity and with all its evils. Undoubtedly the patronage system had more evil attached to it than merit. Appointments under the patronage system are made for the purpose—I think I can put it simply and plainly—of giving jobs to those who are in favour with the ministry of the day, whatever ministry it is. It may be argued that under that system good appointments have been and will be made. I am not disputing that, but the point is that the principle—or lack of principle—is in that it is for service to a given party, whatever party happens to be in power at the time.

Years ago we departed from or abandoned the patronage system. My own opinion is that we went too hurriedly, and in our efforts to install or inauguarate a complete system of civil service in Canada we laid on the Civil Service Commission at the commencement too heavy a task, and it has taken years to build up an equitable and reasonable system. I do not suggest for a moment that the civil service system as we now have it is entirely satisfactory. They are human, and undoubtedly they have made mistakes. In connection with the appointments to which I referred as not being made by the Civil Service Commission, the minister might very well say to me, "Hold on, some of those were undoubtedly promoted by the Civil Service Commission of the day." That was disclosed in the inquiry, and it was brought out in a manner that led to the retirement of two of the commissioners. Undoubtedly the Civil Service Commission is not without the possibility of fault. We do not assert that. These two commisisoners were retired, and replaced by two others; and I think it was because they had more or less trafficked in the question of promotions. It showed the resentment of parliament and of the country against such a procedure by a civil service commissioner; it does not challenge the soundness of the system that two gentlemen went somewhat wrong in the discharge of their duty. And so I say to the minister that so far as I am concerned I am opposed to this bill to the extent that it departs from the principle of appointment by the Civil Service Commission. I say again to him, as I said in my opening remarks, that if this bill were so drafted that the appointments should be made by the Civil Service Commission in consultation with the head of the branch to which the appointee is to be sent, then I have little objection to it. But in its present form, where the Civil Service Commission play no major or primary part in appointments, I am opposed to it.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, I have just a word to say in answer to my hon. friend. I have listened to his remarks with great attention. I know the first officer of the Department of National Revenue very well. I am not acquainted with the commissioner of customs, but I know he is a most remarkable man. When Mr. Good called a meeting of the public accounts committee some years ago, Mr. Breadner was asked some questions. He had apparently no information with him, but he answered them from memory, and I think he answered them very successfully. He is a very straightforward man, and I am pleased to say the same thing about Mr. Taylor, the commissioner of excise, and also of Mr. Walters, the commissioner of income tax. These three gentlemen are very able men; I do not think anyone will question their ability. But they were appointed not by the Civil Service Commission, but by the Minister of National Revenue, and he deserves praise for that. I remember at the time that I read several editorials in Tory as well as Liberal papers, congratulating him on those appointments. I do not believe any member will come back at me when I say that one of those papers was the Ottawa Journal, which is not a Liberal paper. I remember also that the Montreal Gazette published editorials, praising the minister. We must not overlook the fact that the task of the Minister of National Revenue is a rather ungrateful one, because instead of spending money he has to collect it. He has met with very good success, and the amount of the last surplus collections, $14,000,000, should be considered. The Department of National Revenue is directed by an able minister, assisted by able men, and those men can be entrusted with the confidence of parliament. No one can reproach them for doing anything they should not do. They are upright men; they do their duty well; they are conscientious, and I am sure they are acting to the best of their ability. I am not in the habit of paying compliments to people but I take this opportunity of saying all the good I think of them. In such matters as these every member is entitled to say a word about the competency of the man who applies for any of the positions to which this legislation refers. Anyone who is recommended should merit that recommendation and no one knows better the character and competency of the applicant than the member for the constituency in which such an officer is to be appointed. When a man is recommended by a member as being an able person, the minister knows that recommendation is worthy of consideration and he acts accordingly. I am sure my hon. friend (Mr. Stevens) who now is afraid of the bill, who thinks it will not work well, will at the next session praise the minister for having brought such a measure before the house.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. ADSHEAD: I have been looking into this bill somewhat further and I agree with the conclusion come to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth); but it seems to me that what the minister has agreed to entirely covers the case. The royal commission states:

> We are of opinion that all appointments to the office of appraiser at the different ports of the Dominion should be made by the minister after examination of the applicants by the board of appraisers.

I do not see any provision made for the appointment of a board of examiners for the appraisers. I gather from the remarks of the Minister of National Revenue that he intends to appoint a board of appraisers as a board of examiners and then the names of applicants who have successfully pased the board of appraisers will be submitted to the Civil Service Commission. If that is the case, that fulfils in all respects the desirability of submitting these applicants to an examination instead of simply having them appointed by the minister.

Mr. EULER: There is already in existence a board of appraisers which is not complete but which will be completed in due course.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Is there anything in the bill which covers what I have suggested?

Mr. EULER: No. That would be a matter of regulation.

Mr. ADSHEAD: I would suggest that the minister insert in the bill a clause stating that the board of appraisers should be a board of examiners to examine the applicants and that the names of the successful applicants will be submitted to the Civil Service Commission with the approval of the minister. That will exactly cover the case. If the minister intends to appoint a board of appraisers as a board of examiners, that will disarm any criticism we have of the bill.

Mr. GARDINER: I am absolutely opposed to the principle of the bill as it stands at present, because in my opinion it leaves the appointment of these officers to all intents and purposes under the patronage system. I believe the minister in years gone by has stood up in the house and upheld the Civil Service Commission and the elimination of patronage. I regret very much to see the minister changing his mind even to the extent he is doing in this bill. There is no doubt this is patronage pure and simple.

Mr. EULER: It is not intended as patronage pure and simple.

Mr. GARDINER: Unless it is so stated and provisions are made in the bill there is only one thing we can claim for it and that is that it is patronage pure and simple. If the minister intends to move any amendments to the bill I shall be glad to listen to what he has to say. As the minister is shaking his head I infer this is a bill which he intends to force through the house.

Mr. EULER: Not force through the house.

Mr. GARDINER: Subsection 4 reads:

The minister may, after such examination as he may prescribe—

The minister is going to prescribe the examination. There is to be no provision in the bill as to how the examination will take place. If the minister is in a position to prescribe exactly the mode of examination I contend that under those circumstances he has all the elements of patronage. There is nothing to prevent the minister from examining and selecting these men himself and he may nominate whoever he thinks suitable. The bill does not state that the minister shall take any particular line of action to secure a board of examiners and he may do the examining himself.

The hon. member for Vancouver Centre has already placed on the record the opinions expressed by different members of the cabinet in years gone by and it is very illuminating to notice the change of front which they take now that they are in office as opposed to the attitude which they took when in opposition. It appears to me that this is a very retrograde step and I am sorry indeed that the minister is dealing with the matter in this way.

Referring back to the customs inquiry committee I believe it is reasonably understood —and I have heard no criticism to the contrary—that practically all the men who were retired as not giving the proper service that they were expected to give to the country, were to all intents and purposes appointed under the patronage system. Possibly some of them were promoted from the ranks, but primarily they were appointed under the patronage system and not by the Civil Service Commission. There is no doubt the Civil Service Commission is the proper body to make these selections, and when the resolution was under consideration before the house a few days ago I suggested it would be advisable for the minister to allow the commission, with proper representation from the board of supervisors on the examining board, to make the appointments. I trust the minister may still see his way clear to propose some such amendment.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I cannot let the opportunity go by without saying that I oppose the bill because, notwithstanding the assurance given by the minister, it is nothing more than an attempt to return to the patronage system in regard to the appointment of these particular officers. If this principle is adopted in regard to these officials of the department it may equally be applied to other officials and employees in the same department. More than that, this same principle can be extended on exactly the same reasoning to other departments of the government. The principle involved is whether appointments shall be made by the minister. The minister, of course no matter how fine a man he may be, no matter how intelligent and capable he may be, no matter what qualifications he has for making appointments, is necessarily lacking in information in regard to the fitness of the applicants for the positions, and he must act upon the recommendations which he will receive. This particular service extends all over Canada. It may be that so far as Ottawa is concerned the head officials of the department may be able to advise the minister as to the proper officers to be appointed, but what about the rest of Canada?

Mr. EULER: The board of appraisers travels all over Canada, visiting the various ports, and becoming acquainted with the officers.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Does the minister presume to suggest that this board will be in a position to see the applicants?

Mr. EULER: Yes.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Does the minister presume to suggest that the board will see all applicants and be in a position to inquire into their qualifications? I think not. I think that what will happen will be just what happened in the past, namely, recommendations will be made to the minister by those in control of the patronage in the various constituencies. In what way does this bill differ from a bill providing directly for appointments by the minister? I cannot see any difference at all.

Mr. EULER: There is not much difference; we quite admit that.

Mr. McQUARRIE: The minister admits that. Here we have the minister suggesting to the Civil Service Commission the names of the men he wants to appoint. If the Civil Service Commission does not make the appointments accordingly, what happens? The governor in council makes the appointments on the recommendation of the minister. It simply seems to me that this is an attempt on the part of the minister so to arrange the wording of the bill as to deceive the public.

Mr. EULER: No.

Mr. McQUARRIE: No other conclusion can be reached.

Mr. EULER: You do not believe that yourself.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I believe it. I do not see that there is anything else to it. Otherwise why should the bill be drawn up in this manner? Why does not the minister come down with a bill providing directly that the appointments shall be made by the minister without reference to the Civil Service Commission at all?

Mr. EULER: Would the hon. member prefer that?

Mr. McQUARRIE: Certainly not; I do not believe in it; I do not think it is right in principle, and that is why I am opposing this bill. I know the desire that there is on the other side of the house for the abolition of the Civil Service Commission altogether. There are a great many members over there who desire to get back to patronage; there is no doubt about that at all, and they say that they are in a better position to make recommendations for appointments than any civil service commission can be. That is the principle that is involved here, and if you do this now, you are simply inserting the thin edge of the wedge, and on exactly the same reasoning you can apply this same principle to all other departments of the government, and so get away entirely from the Civil Service Commission.

I know that there is great objection to this bill taken by the civil service organizations. I have received communications from the organization in my constituency, and they at least look upon this as an attempt to return to the patronage system.

Let us consider for a moment just what the situation is at the present time in regard to appointments. Appointments are made by the Civil Service Commission upon the results of examinations which are held in accordance with the regulations, examinations which have been worked out after a number of years of experience. That does not mean that the department has nothing to say in regard to the appointments. In the first place, if appointments are made which are not acceptable to the department or to the minister, he can refuse to accept the recommendations of the Civil Service Commission. In the next place when the examinations are conducted, the officers of the department usually have something to say in setting those examinations, and in fact, they conduct them to a certain extent. In all the large centres all over Canada the officers of this department and of other departments have a good deal to do with the holding of examinations. More than that, in regard to promotions, which come under the head of appointments, the Civil Service Commission is guided to a large extent by the ratings which are recommended by the officers of the department involved, and appointments are usually made according to those ratings. It does not seem to me that that is objectionable in any way.

I do think that this bill is wrong in principle entirely. It is objectionable not only to the civil servants of this country, but to the public generally. It is a step in the wrong direction. It is nothing more or less than inserting the thin end of the wedge, and the minister is attempting to do that under the guise of the necessities of this particular department, which are no greater than the necessities of a great many other departments of this government.

Mr. MANION: I wish to say just a few words, not many at this late stage of the session, on this bill. My hon. friend who has just taken his seat says that this is the thin edge of the wedge. I am a little afraid that it is the thick edge of the wedge, because for some time now we have been getting a good deal of this in the various departments. The other day I asked some questions on the order paper regarding the appointment of a postmaster in a little village in the western part of Ontario, somewhere near Sarnia; I do not remember the county or the town at the moment, but I do happen to know the facts, and the facts were that a returned soldier was recommended for the position by the Civil Service Commission, and yet in spite of that, the Postmaster General overruled the commission's recommendation and appointed somebody else that suited him. Referring to this matter, I said to the Postmaster General, as reported in Hansard, of May 3:

> The reason I asked the question is that I have just received a reply to a question on to-day's order paper showing that the Civil Service Commission recommended a returned soldier for a job, and my hon. friend and his department refused to accept him.

And the Postmaster General replied:

> Under the act the Postmaster General has the power to refuse to accept the certificate of the commission, but the act does not give him power to classify the employees.

In other words, at the present time on some occasions at least, if not on many, recommendations of the Civil Service Commission are being ignored by some of the departments. The minister who is conducting this bill came into the house at the same time I did, eleven years ago, and during the many years when he was just an ordinary member of the house and a supporter of the government, he was quite independent in his attitude because I remember him on one or two occasions voting against his party. That takes courage; I tried it myself once or twice, and I know something about it. At any rate, the minister, of whom personally I am very fond, is not showing in this bill, I think, the same independence that used to characterize him in the days before the lust of office reached him. He is, I think, building up for himself troubles which he may have difficulty in overcoming, because as these positions are thrown open he will find members on his side of the house seeking positions for friends of theirs, and if—

Mr. EULER: They do now sometimes.

Mr. MANION: I have no doubt; and if he should find perchance that some Conservative was as well qualified for the position as a Liberal applicant—or better qualified, because he would have to be to receive any attention at all.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MANION: Well, we will say for the sake of argument that some Conservative was better qualified for the position than some Liberal, and the minister tried to appoint him. Then he would find that he had stirred up a hornets' nest. But if the Civil Service Commission were allowed to make the appointment, to some extent on his recommendation, he would be able to shelve that responsibility on to their shoulders. In all seriousness I regret to see him laying up this store of trouble for himself, for undoubtedly that is what he is doing.

Referring again to the patronage system, during all the years I have been in the house, whether one party or the other was in power, this system to a large extent did not exist.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MANION: I say that seriously. The patronage system of appointments has largely not obtained within the last ten or eleven years. The system may now exist; that probably is what my hon. friends are laughing at. I mean that up till recently the patronage system had not been resorted to.

Mr. DONNELLY: If there was no patronage system in operation, how does my hon. friend account for the fact that all the postmasters appointed in my constituency after 1911 were Tories?

Mr. MANION: Undoubtedly the government of the day picked out the very best men that they could find in the constituency. But I must confess that seeing my hon. friend on that side of the chamber I wonder how, with so many good Conservatives in that section, he was returned to the house.

Mr. DONNELLY: I wonder at it myself.

Mr. McINTOSH: They are mostly all in the post offices.

Mr. MANION: To members who have entered the house in recent years, I desire to say that patronage is to a large extent simply work cast upon the shoulders of the member.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MANION: Take my own experience. I do not presume, although mine is a very fine constituency, that the people there are higher minded than elsewhere, but they do not bother me for positions. To-day practically all appointments are made by the Civil Service Commission, and this has been the practice since the formation of the commission. I find that with rare exceptions the people are satisfied with this method. I believe a similar condition exists throughout the country to a large extent, and that the people by and large heartily approve of the elimination of the old patronage system, although probably it was abused more than it deserved to be. In this view our people are in harmony with public opinion in England, the United States and other countries. Because of this strong public opinion in favour of the merit system under the Civil Service Commission, I think the iminster should hesitate long before going back to a system which, rightly or wrongly, has become discredited. On the whole I believe the Civil Service Commission have given the country reasonably satisfactory service, and whatever faults they may have—and no doubt no commission is perfect—those faults are few and slight compared with the condition of affairs under the old system. I repeat, by this bill the minister is laying up a store of troubles, and I think later on he will deeply regret not leaving these appointments almost entirely in the hands of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. POULIOT: Suppose two men equally qualified applied to my hon. friend for a position, one a partisan, the other a non-partisan, which man would he appoint?

Mr. MANION: I say without any hesitation at all that if I were making the appointment, and the partisan was just as good a man for the position as the non-partisan applicant, I would without question appoint my friend. Please note, I say if I had the making of the appointment. The appointment should be left to the Civil Service Commission. But let me remind my hon. friend who is such a loyal supporter of the Prime Minister, that on one occasion I heard the right hon. gentleman abuse us on this side as though we were pickpockets because we had the temerity to appoint Conservatives to the Senate. In his view that was one of our greatest crimes. At a meeting a few days later I frankly stated that I wondered if he expected us to appoint Liberals. That was the idealistic attitude taken by my right hon. friend, and in view of his opinions in those days I think he should support me in my stand that the Minister of National Revenue should leave to the Civil Service Commission the appointments dealt with in this bill.

Mr. POULIOT: There is always sound sense and good humour in my hon. friend's remarks, even when he speaks seriously.

Mr. MANION: Good humour is one of the blessings of life.

[Mr. Manion.]

Mr. EVANS: Mr. Chairman, I raise my voice in protest against this bill. Subsection four of section one provides that:

> The minister may, after such examination as he may prescribe, select and nominate suitable persons for appointment by the Civil Service Commission.

In my opinion nothing could be better calculated to undermine the work of the Civil Service Commission. Year after year we have seen numbers of civil servants withdrawn from the control of the Civil Service Commission. These withdrawals total several thousand, and simply mean a return to the old patronage plan. I realize that in this we are face to face with one of the most important but intricate functions of government—the control of the civil service. Having at great expense set up the machinery for the filling of all offices in the civil service, we find whichever party happens to be in power year after year taking away from the control of the Civil Service Commission many civil servants.

I am surprised at the Minister of National Revenue bringing in a measure of this kind, for only lately I read his sentiments regarding this question as expressed by him in 1921. I believe with the member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) that what the minister is seeking will undoubtedly lead him into trouble. The whole country is alarmed at the attitude which the government is taking towards the Civil Service Commission, and I shall be only doing my duty by reading a letter which I have received from the Saskatchewan Customs and Excise Officials' Association. This is dated April 27, and is as follows:

> As you are no doubt aware the honourable the Minister of National Revenue introduced a resolution in the house on the 30th ultimo seeking to amend the Department of National Revenue Act granting authority to enable him:
> (a) To appoint and pay certain officers (appraisers, special excise officers, investigators of values and drawbacks, etc.).
> (b) To grant gratuities to officers in lieu of leave of absence, in order to permit replacing such officers so retired immediately.
>
> (c) To arrange such promotions and transfers as are in the public interest.
>
> The adoption of this would be a radical departure from the present system of making appointments through the Civil Service Commission, so far as paragraphs (a) and (c) are concerned; with paragraph (b) we are in accord.
> This association views the resolution with deep apprehension, and cannot conceive of it as being in the best interests of civil service reform. We further believe it to be unnecessary, as the method of filling vacancies, promotions, etc., administered under the Civil Service Act at present is adequate and just to all concerned.

I have been asked by this association to lay our views before you on this matter, trusting I am not assuming too great a liberty, and that your view on this may agree with ours.

I am,

Yours very truly,

T. W. McPHAIL,
President, Sask. C. & E. O. Assoc.

The government, in my opinion, is taking a retrograde step. For many years, in the west particularly, farmers' associations have had as one of their chief planks the abolition of patronage. I view with apprehension the present proposal and, I repeat, the government is taking a retrograde step. With others who have spoken against the proposal I therefore protest against the bill in its present form.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Why is the minister using the name of the Civil Service Commission in the bill as draughted, leaving them without power? Why did he not bring in a bill simply to give the government power and the minister authority to appoint these men, not mentioning the Civil Service Commission at all?

Mr. EULER: When the resolution was under discussion the other day, I think I explained the provisions of the bill fairly fully, and I believe I also anticipated to a large extent the objections that have been raised to-day. For that reason I do not propose to review them at any length; but I might perhaps make one or two observations, called forth by some of the remarks we have just heard. Let me deal in the first place with the question raised by my hon. friend (Sir George Perley) which was asked the other day and to which I replied. The hon. gentleman asks why, instead of taking the recommendation of the Civil Service Commission, the minister does not himself make the appointment. That is the question as I understand it. I said the other day, and I say again, that this provision was included at the suggestion of some of my friends in this house who felt that if the minister were obliged to make a recommendation to the Civil Service Commission it would at least act as a check, or a brake, as I described it then, upon him if he desired to make any political appointments. That is the sole purpose of the insertion of this requirement, that the nomination shall go first to the Civil Service Commission. Moreover, it places on them a certain responsibility, and, after that, a responsibility on the minister and the government itself, because the minister himself does not make the appointment. Even if the Civil Service Commission declines to make the appointment it goes to the governor in council, and that again constitutes a second brake upon the activities of the minister if he is exercising them in a wrongful way.

I really propose to answer only one objection—the main objection. I believe there is only one objection, and that is that this is an attempt to interfere with or to wipe out the principle of the Civil Service Commission. Let me say that this is not such an attempt; it is not intended to interfere with the principle under which the Civil Service Commission operates. And this is not the first occasion on which an exception has been made.

Mr. KENNEDY: Does not the minister think that while it may not be his intention—I do not believe it is his intention—to open the door to patronage, it actually does open the door to any future minister who may wish to take advantage of it?

Mr. EULER: If the hon. gentleman will permit me to go on I will answer that question. That is not a departure at all. There are exceptions to practically all rules. The mere fact that there is an exception presupposes that there is a rule, and the rule is not abolished because an exception is made to it. Some years ago, after the Civil Service Commission had been established and after the Civil Service Act of 1918 had been passed, I was a member of the house when, in 1921, an effort was made by the then government, the Union government, in what was known as the Spinney bill, to make exceptions which were far wider in their scope than this little bill of mine. In fact, as I remember—and I was a member of the committee that considered that bill—the Spinney bill proposed that the appointment of certain technical officers throughout the whole service, not only in the Customs department, but in the entire service, should be removed from the control of the Civil Service Commission and be vested again in the ministers, under what you may term patronage, if you care to do so.

The statement has been made to-day that the minister has reversed his position—that although I have been always in favour of the Civil Service Commission I have changed my mind. Now, if my experience showed me that I was wrong in anything, I hope I should have the courage to admit that I was wrong and that I should not be afraid to say that I had changed my mind. But in this particular I have not changed my mind. I can quote from the very speech from which the hon.

member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) and, I believe, the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Manion) quoted, to show what attitude I then took. I quote the following:

I understand—

I said.

—that the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Calder) proposes another amendment to the effect that during the recess the deputy ministers and the Civil Service Commission may get together to decide as to what other employees should properly be exempted from the operations of the commission.

Quite plainly there was an effort then to remove from the control of the Civil Service Commission certain employees. I said:

Now, I quite agree with that suggestion—I made it myself—

I had made it in committee.

—but there is this difference between us: the minister would give the commission power to make these exemptions, in other words, to have an accomplished fact and to report to parliament. My contention was that they in their wisdom should come to a decision so far as was thought advisable in regard to what changes should be made, but that they should not have the final say, but should come with their recommendations to parliament, and that then parliament should deal with those recommendations on their merits.

That is exactly the position I take to-day. The exemptions we make to-day do not go so far as the exemptions then proposed, and my proposal is that parliament, rather than the Civil Service Commission, shall pass upon them. I am to-day just as much in favour of the principle of the Civil Service Commission as I have been at any time, but I hope I do not propose to drive a theory to an absurd conclusion if experience shows me that there may be advantage in a slight modification of it. And the fact that there is some modification of it does not, I contend, destroy the principle.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Is it not a fact that this bill will eliminate the preference which is given, under the Civil Service Act, to returned men? Would the minister consider a suggestion that he provide in this bill that this preference shall be retained?

Mr. EULER: I have answered that question before. There is no intention on the part either of the minister or of the department to discriminate against returned men. Other things being equal, they are supposed to get the same preference now as they got before. And the same applies to those already in the service.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Will the minister put that in his bill?

[Mr. Euler.]

Mr. EULER: No, I will not. As I have already said, there is only one reason for this bill. Until some months ago the customs department was being severely criticized for inefficiency and other things; it was criticized by parliament, by a parliamentary committee, by the press and more recently by a royal commission which investigated that department. Many changes have been made, I think for the benefit of the service; in accordance with some of the recommendations made by the commission the department sees other ways in which improvements can be made in the service, and I hope hon. members of the committee will believe that is our only purpose in introducing this bill and suggesting these changes, which are very moderate in themselves. With that I think every member of the committee will agree, although I will admit that there may be honest differences of opinion as to the method which should be followed.

As I have already said, the bill is very moderate in its scope; it does not go nearly so far as the recommendations of the royal commission. The hon. member for Vancouver Centre quoted from the report of a committee appointed by himself, which I continued after I came into office; the report of that committee does not agree entirely with the reports of other committees. We have another body known as the Commercial Protective Association, which took an entirely different view, going even further than anything we have embodied in this bill. Better than that, and I think I may say that fairly, a deliberative body was appointed by this government consisting of three judges, who made a most exhaustive investigation extending over about a year; they recommended that the minister be given control over these appointments as well as over appointments to branches of the department other than appraisers and investigators. Although this may be contradicted in a sense, the minister takes no responsibility and no power for making these appointments.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Will the minister repeat that last statement?

Mr. EULER: The minister takes no power to make appointments himself; he first makes recommendations to the commission. As far as I am concerned, and I think this would be carried out by any other minister, that course will be followed, and I think the house should admit that when men come into positions of responsibility they at least feel that responsibility to the country and are not constantly thinking of ways to exercise political patronage and so on. If in order to obtain the results we all desire in connection with the reorganization of the department it is necessary to depart in a small degree from the exercise of a general principle such as is contained in the Civil Service Act, I have no apology to make, and I say that quite frankly. To me, the object to be attained is more important than slavish observance of a principle—not a moral principle—if it is shown that by such a slight deviation from that principle, in peculiar circumstances, we can obtain better results. Surely we should learn something from experience. I can say that in the short time I have had some responsibility in the matter I think I could make even some further suggestions than those contained in this bill, all of which would be for the benefit of the service. The point I desire to make is this: There is no attempt to drive a horse and wagon through the principle of the Civil Service Act; this bill merely establishes an exception to the general rule, as has been found advisable through experience. I might appropriately quote that old saying: "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath." I think that applies equally in this case; I am not criticizing the Civil Service Commission, but it was made for the good of the public service, and the public service was not made for the good of the Civil Service Commission.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I would just ask a question there. Let us suppose that next year one of the minister's colleagues wishes to bring in a similar bill with regard to his own department in order to control appointments. What would the minister say?

Mr. EULER: If he could make a case as good as I think I am making I believe parliament should grant his request. Now let us see for a few moments what is actually in the bill to which so much objection has been taken. It proposes that out of the 5,500 odd employees of this department some 200 or possibly 250 positions shall be taken from under the control of the Civil Service Commission. There are not more than 250 appraisers and special investigators throughout the service, not only in Ottawa but in the various ports throughout the Dominion. Most of these men will remain where they are; I do not even say that any of them will be removed from the place they now occupy, so only a small percentage of those people now occupying the position of appraisers will be actually affected by the enactment of this law.

Mr. McQUARRIE: There is also the preventive service.

Mr. EULER: Yes, but that is now under the control of the minister, and the minister proposes to take that away from himself and give it to the governor in council.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Why?

Mr. EULER: I will come to that in a moment. He is doing that because he desires to exercise patronage as little as possible, although I am afraid my friends will not believe that.

Mr. BENNETT: Afraid to be responsible for these appointments?

Mr. EULER: As I have said, for these positions, which—outside the preventive service, which is already under the control of the minister—total some 200 or 250 officers, the minister may make a selection, nominate a man, and recommend him to the Civil Service Commission, which shall make the appointment within a stated period. If the commission refuse to make the appointment, the minister makes it himself, not as recommended by the various commissions but through the governor in council. I will freely admit that the bill in effect places the power of selection and appointment of this small class of officers in the hands of the department or of the minister, if you like it that way, because if the minister has the confidence of his colleagues I should think and expect that when he makes a recommendation to his colleagues in council, in the great majority of cases they would accept that recommendation. If council did not do so I think it would be an intimation to the minister that he did not enjoy the confidence of his colleagues.

That is the one vital thing in the bill; that small class of officers in the service, the appraisers and the investigators, in effect shall be appointed by the minister, upon advice of the board of appraisers, if you like to put it that way, through the governor in council. Now the question arises as to why we should make a change in the method of appointing these appraisers. This is done primarily because of the absolutely vital importance of an efficient appraisal staff. If that staff is not what it should be, if the men are not experts skilled in the work which they have to do, the result will be a great loss to the revenues. The tariff is based directly on valuations of goods; if these valuations are too low it is not necessary to point out that the revenues must suffer very seriously. Unless the appraisal system is excellent, and better than it is to-day, we are not going to receive the revenues we should receive, and my protectionist friends would be justified in saying that the manufacturers of this country did not receive the protection to which they were entitled. Let us see for a moment what the different commissions and others think of the necessity for a proper appraisal system, although I do not desire to delay the committee at any great length because I think most hon. members are already seized of the importance of this matter. First let us consider the Commercial Protective Association, whose representations received very great attention from the parliamentary committee. Speaking of the board of appraisers, they say:

That the board be given power to retain such appraisers as they deem competent and qualified and to appoint, with the minister's approval, and notwithstanding the provisions of the Civil Service Act, such further appraisers as may be required from time to time—

Then a little later:

In dealing with important merchandise and in ensuring that the full duties provided for in the law are collected, it is above all things essential that there should be an efficient system of appraisal by competent appraisers.

The appraisal system is the very heart of the whole system of the collection of customs revenue, and if the appraisal system is not sound there is bound to be inefficiency and failure to detect frauds.

The Canadian appraisal system is lamentably weak. At many ports there are not a sufficient number of capable and efficient appraisers to give that prompt service which is so essential to the conduct of business. At the smaller ports men are acting as appraisers in addition to performing other duties—men who have not had the training to fit them for their duties as appraisers, and at all ports the rate of pay is so inadequate that trained experts cannot be prevailed upon to enter the service.

The parliamentary committee reported as follows:

First, the methods of appraisal are exceedingly careless and fail to safeguard the interests of the importer, or the revenues of the country from being defrauded by undervaluation, and, secondly, persons appointed as appraisers are in many instances untrained in the branch to which they are appointed.

And the royal commission reported as follows:

This question touches not only the administration at the department in Ottawa, but extends through all the ports in the Dominion.

It has been recognized and must be admitted that a proper system of appraisal lies at the very base of the customs administration. It is almost axiomatic that the staff of appraisers should possess the necessary expert and technical knowledge to enable them to discharge their duties efficiently. The present system fails to provide a staff of appraisers to meet these requirements.

Our inquiry has shown that the present system of appointing appraisers or other officers requiring expert or technical knowledge is unsatisfactory, and we are convinced that where expert and technical knowledge is required, the examination of the applicants for positions should be conducted by those who are specially qualified to act in the premises.

We are of opinion that all appointments to the office of appraiser at the different ports of the Dominion should be made by the minister after examination of the applicants by the board of appraisers.

We quite recognize that this method of appointment would conflict with the system now in vogue under the Civil Service Act, but notwithstanding this we are of the opinion that this method should be adopted.

This was also the opinion of the Commercial Protective Association.

The present system has been wrong. It has been possible to do this, and it has been done: A man, we will say, was appointed to the position of customs truckman, an important and respectable position. Then he might be promoted to be a computing clerk, in which position he would learn about the various rates in the tariff, but he would not learn one thing about the values of goods, or the worth of commodities. And yet, that man might be, and has been, appointed to the office of appraiser in an important port. You cannot expect this man to detect undervaluation.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: But he could not be appointed without the approval of the minister.

Mr. EULER: I think you will find that only in a very few instances do the ministers desire to reject appointments that are made by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. BENNETT: There was a very good illustration of that the other day right in this city.

Mr. EULER: You have not found very many in the Department of National Revenue. To appraise properly, a man requires to have expert knowledge of commodities, which only a skilled and qualified man possesses. I am not here to criticize the Civil Service Commission. I think they are doing a good work, but I do say this: they are not as well qualified to pass upon the merits and qualifications of appraisers as the officers of our own department. The matter of personality enters into it also to some extent. Our board of appraisers are personally acquainted with men expert in the valuation of commodities throughout the whole country. They become personally acquainted with the men that are already on the staff. I may say, to quiet the fears, perhaps, of some of our own officials, that we have no intention of calling in men from the outside if we have men in our own service who ought to be promoted and who have full knowledge of the work we want them to do. But I will also say that if we find we have a peculiar position, a position that requires a peculiarly intimate knowledge of some particular commodity, and we cannot find the man in the service, or cannot find him among the returned men, we will have no hesitation, and I think we would be justified, in going outside to find a man that can do the work properly, and thus protect the revenues of the country.

Mr. Chairman, that is practically the whole story. The royal commission says, the Commercial Protective Association says, the executive officers of the department say, and the minister believes that competent appraisers can be selected most successfully by the experienced officers of the department. They know those within and outside of the department who are best qualified.

I just want to repeat, in conclusion, that after all the minister has delegated some of the powers that he now has, or that might have been assigned to him by the recommendations of the royal commission. This power has been delegated, in part, to the Civil Service Commission, and finally to the governor in council. The commission recommended that the auditors under the Special War Revenue Act, commonly known as the Sales Tax Act, should be appointed by the minister. The minister has not chosen to follow that recommendation, but preferred to leave it with the Civil Service Commission. I believe that the matter of the appointment of auditors will be worked out properly by the commisison. I do not desire to interfere with the function of that commission any more than seems advisable.

With regard to the preventive service. As it stands now, the special preventive service, consisting of a force of some 300 men, is appointed by the minister himself. In the future, if this bill passes, the appointments to the preventive service will be made in the same way as it is proposed to appoint appraisers and special investigators. Again, to that extent, the minister has divested himself of the powers which he has had.

I have stated before that the provisions of the bill are very moderate indeed, and we are going to observe the principle of merit and promotion. I believe in the principle of the Civil Service Commission; I cannot say that too often. I have no desire to interfere with the commission, but I also believe that there are exceptions to every rule. I do not believe in following a theory at all points merely in order to be consistent; I believe in the exercise of common sense, where practical experience shows that the theory does not always serve the purposes of efficiency.

Mr. CLARK: Why does the minister so emphatically refuse to insert a provision similar to that in the Civil Service Act, relating to returned soldiers?

Mr. EULER: I do not think that any bill should be burdened with too many provisions. If the minister desired not to obey that, there would be absolutely nothing to prevent him from exercising favouritism as against returned soldiers. I do not see where it would have any practical effect.

Mr. CLARK: As it now stands, it gives the minister every opportunity of exercising discrimination against returned soldiers.

Mr. EULER: Which he would also have in the other case.

Mr. CLARK: If there was an expressed statutory requirement that returned soldiers should be given preference, all things being equal, the minister would be bound to give preference to returned soldiers.

Mr. EULER: Who would be the judge as to whether all other things were equal?

Mr. CLARK. That is just the point. The minister is admitting now that he is not a fit and proper judge.

Mr. EULER: I am admitting nothing of the sort.

Mr. CLARK: I cannot take it to be otherwise.

Mr. EULER: If the minister desired to use his position in a wrongful way, to discriminate against the returned men, he could do it just as well when the provision was inserted in the bill. It would still be entirely within the judgment of the minister himself as to whether the returned men were fit for the positions. If he did not want to appoint them, he would say that he would not recommend them as fit for the positions.

Mr. CLARK: We may assume, at any rate, that every minister will exercise an honest judgment, and not one of prejudice. If he does that, and if the statute requires him to give that preference, then his own honesty will dictate that course and he will give the returned soldiers the preference.

Mr. EULER: His own honesty ought to dictate that course anyway.

Mr. CLARK: Certainly it ought to dictate the course in any case, but if there is in the legislation a provision similar to that in the Civil Service Act, it will be a guide which will restrict all ministers to a principle; and I hope we may assume that this minister and all succeeding ministers will be honest in the way in which they carry out the spirit and intention of the act. I believe that in all the findings of the royal commission no returned soldier was involved in the customs scandal, and I think the same preference should be given to them in this regard as in employment generally throughout the civil service.

Mr. TOLMIE: I am glad to say at the outset that this is one occasion upon which I find myself in entire accord with the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans). Perhaps we have not agreed very often in the past. What has not been made clear by the minister is whether or not with his selections as proposed in the bill he is going to improve conditions. I do not see why the Civil Service Commission, properly equipped and furnishing itself with proper information necessary to fill each one of these positions, cannot make just as good a selection and perhaps a more independent one than is suggested under the bill. The admission of the minister in response to the inquiry of the hon. member for Argenteuil (Sir George Perley) is a clean-cut indication that this is only the thin edge of the wedge, as has been suggested by some of the previous speakers. The minister replied to the effect that if some other minister next year applied to have a similar change introduced into his department and put up a good enough talk, such as our friend has done, there is no reason why that minister should not be granted the same privilege. This might be carried all the way down the line. One of the strongest recommendations for the use of the Civil Service Commission is the fact that the great body of civil servants of Canada appear to be thoroughly satisfied with the scheme and also satisfied that it is an improvement on the old patronage system.

This bill has created a good deal of speculation, and doubt, as to just how far it is proposed to proceed. It is looked on in some regards with a good deal of suspicion. I rose just in order to make very clear my position as being opposed to the return of the old patronage system. Having occupied the position of a civil servant for many years, I feel that appointments should be made as have been done in recent years, namely, by the Civil Service Commission. Civil servants should be permitted to retain their independence, and I do not know of anything more humiliating to the service than to have to approach some politician hat in hand to ask for a job for which he has every right to apply. I believe in those positions being filled by the Civil Service Commission in a clean-cut, impartial manner. So long as the Civil Service Commission makes the selection, let them select the best man and get efficiency at any cost, and let us not return to the old system of patronage which has been so unsatisfactory in the past.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I must congratulate the minister on his mode of presentation. He can say in a very mild and moderate manner the most dangerous things. That is just the trouble at the present time. He says that this is not a new departure. As a matter of fact that is quite true. Last year or the year before the minister came to parliament in the same way asking that preventive officers should be taken out of the civil service.

Mr. EULER: They were out already.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I can remember very distinctly—and I think I am correct in saying this—that a new force was to be put on comprised of men who would not come under the civil service, and who would be freer to act than civil service appointees would be.

Mr. EULER: Just to put the matter right, I think my hon. friend should understand that it was merely proposed to add to the number of the special preventive force, the nucleus of which had been appointed the year before by the minister himself. It was merely adding to that; it was not a new creation.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It was a distinct extension of the scheme and would result in putting a larger number of people outside of the civil service. I can remember some of us opposing it at the time and pointing to the disastrous results in the United States where the preventive service had been taken from under the civil service organizations and had become essentially a patronage organization. I say again, unfortunately this is not a departure, because again and again and again during the last few years there have been attempts on the part of the government still further to extend the number of those groups of government employees who come entirely outside of the civil service. I have under my hand a list of such exemptions. It has been placed on the record repeatedly and I do not think it is necessary to do so again, but it shows clearly that this is by no means a departure but seems to be a part of the policy of the government. The minister said very mildly that he believes the object to be attained is more than slavish maintenance of a principle. If I made such a statement as that I am quite sure that many hon. gentlemen would rise and quite rightly to object to such a dangerous doctrine. Slavish maintenance of a principle! Some of us are inclined to think that we must stand by our principles and that the government ought to stand by its principles, if it has any, in such a case as this. The trouble is that this is throwing the door wide open to expediency of every description; if this can be done in one case it can be done in others, as the minister himself has admitted. He says: If this particular thing can be better done in this way, by all means let us choose this way. That doctrine could be applied to-day in every department of the government service. We are told with regard to one particular matter: Oh, well, this is a very high appointment; we ought not to trust it to the hands of the Civil Service Commission; it is too technical a service; it is too exalted a position; it must be decided by the government itself. Then the next thing that comes up is the question of digging mud in the banks of the Rideau canal, and we are told that this is an exception; that really no board could determine whether or not men are fitted to dig mud, to dig ditches, and that appointments must be made by the government. So in regard to department after department, the same argument is applied. I mention again this dangerous statement of the minister: "The object to be attained is more important than a slavish maintenance of a principle". That is a very fair statement of the position of the government in this case.

There is one other statement that the minister made, that I should like to repeat. He made this also in such a very moderate way that it sounded very well in the house. I am not quite so sure that it will—I was going to say "sound well" in print, but I had better put it, I am not so sure that it will appear to quite such advantage in print. He said:

> It is of vital importance that there should be an efficient appraisal staff.

It seems to me that the minister in making such a statement as that is in reality indicting the Civil Service Commission. If the Civil Service Commission are not in a position to make appointments that are efficient, then I say let us get rid of the present commission, because I quite frankly confess that it is quite possible that the personnel of the Civil Service Commission leaves much to be desired.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That is quite possible, and the government has that matter in their own hands. But the way to secure reforms is not to set aside the principle that is behind the establishment of the Civil Service Commission. The way is open to the government to deal with the Civil Service Commission itself. That is what I should like to emphasize. It may be that around the Civil Service Commission there has grown up a certain kind of patronage. We hear that about the corridors, and it may be quite true. It may be that there is favouritism shown by the Civil Service Commission, and there might very well be an investigation held in connection with such matters, because these charges are heard in so many quarters that probably there is some basis for them. I say, let the government investigate the work of the civil service commissioners, their methods and so forth, but let us not set aside the principle underlying the Civil Service Commission.

The hon. member for Vancouver Centre has presented the case for the maintenance of the principle of competitive examination and of freedom from patronage in such a clear and able fashion that I do not think it is necessary for any of us to say very much more along that line. As far as my own part of Canada is concerned, we are absolutely opposed to breaking down the idea behind the Civil Service Commission—absolutely opposed. The Free Press has been quoted; the Tribune might also have been quoted. These, I take it, are fair expositions of the general attitude of the people in my own city and throughout the west.

As far as the employees of the Dominion government are concerned, I have had a number of communications from various parts of the country and from different organizations. I shall content myself with reading one, which I think is fairly typical of all. It is one coming from my own city of Winnipeg, and from an organization that is closely affected by the changes proposed in this bill. It is from the Manitoba Customs and Excise Officers' Association, signed by the secretary, and reads:

> Reference resolution fifteen March thirtieth now before parliament dealing with certain amendments to the National Revenue Act. Manitoba customs excise officers' association wish to go on record as being opposed to any departure from the present system of appointment and promotion by merit in the civil service. We are of the opinion that the passing of this resolution would be detrimental to the efficiency of the service by removing the incentive of promotion, and because there is no safeguard in the resolution that appointments and promotions would be made to qualified appointees. We are unalterably opposed to anything that might leave an opening for the return of patronage in the civil service. Kindly take up with all Manitoba members with request for support.

I would simply in these few words add my protest against that movement which seems to be growing at the present time to disregard the principle underlying our Civil Service Commission.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I think that this marks the minister's retreat from the high standard which he has taken in the past in regard to governmental matters. Some members of the cabinet have openly confessed that they retreated long ago, and that they have adopted the principle of destruction of the civil service commission. But in this case the Minister of National Revenue tries to hide his retreat behind the declaration that he does not want to appoint anybody. He says that the minister will not appoint; that the governor in council will appoint. Now when he retires within the secret council chamber, what will be the conditions there? He will ask the Minister of Immigration to appoint an appraiser of silk goods. He will ask the Minister of Agriculture to recommend the appointment of an appraiser in Paris hats and costumes. He will ask the Prime Minister possibly to appoint an appraiser in knitted goods, or silks, or stockings, or something of that kind.

Mr. EULER: On what does my hon. friend base a statement of that kind, that any individual member of the cabinet will be asked to make a recommendation?

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I am putting it in that way so that the minister will see the ridiculous position in which he is placing himself.

Mr. EULER: The hon. gentleman is putting himself in a ridiculous position.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The suggestion is ridiculous, of course, because nobody but the minister himself will make the recommendation. Then why resort to the camouflage of saying that the governor in council will do it? It is the minister himself, and no one else, who will make the recommendations. If he did not, he would have to resort to the ridiculous procedure I suggest, such as asking the Minister of National Defence to recommend an appraiser for musical instruments, or the Minister of Justice to recommend an appraiser for oriental rugs, and so forth. The thing is so ridiculous that one must laugh at the minister, and wonder if he can really believe that the members of the House of Commons are so innocent as to accept his statement.

Passing from that, because I recognize that it is the minister's retreat that is shown in his acceptance of this bill, I would ask that in his retreat he will nevertheless boldly stand out for the returned soldier, and see that he is placed in the same position in which he stands under the Civil Service Act. I ask him now in his retreat simply to see that an amendment to that effect is placed in this bill before it receives its third reading.

Mr. McQUARRIE: The minister has made his position perfectly clear in regard to returned soldiers, that he will not include in this bill a provision such as is contained in the Civil Service Act giving a preference to returned men.

There is another matter which it seems to me should be taken care of in this bill, and that is the preference that is given under subsection 3 of section 21 of the Civil Service Act to residents of localities where the appointments are to be made. That subsection reads as follows:

> Except as to appointments to positions in the headquarters of the several departments and other portions of the civil service at Ottawa, the appointments to any local positions in any province shall, so far as practicable, be made from bona fide residents of such locality.

I remember when that provision was put in the Civil Service Act. As a matter of fact, I myself moved that this particular provision be inserted and was responsible for having it embodied in the act, and my reason for doing so was that we had found that men and women from other provinces were being brought into British Columbia to fill civil service positions there. That was most objectionable because we considered that we had in the west people who were quite capable of filling these positions, and I remember giving certain instances at that time of appointments which had then recently been made. It seems to me that that principle is being departed from in this case. It is a principle that I think should be preserved in this bill. I believe that, so far as practicable, appointments should be made from among the residents of the locality where the vacancy occurs. I would ask the minister if he is willing to consider an amendment to his bill to take care of that principle.

Mr. EULER: I would say in reply to my hon. friend that the whole purpose of the department in this bill is to try to secure the most capable men for these positions. If it should be found necessary in carrying out that intention to take a man from one part of the country and put him in a position in another part, if I thought that the interests of the service would best be served by so doing, I would have no hesitation in making such an appointment. I should hope that ordinarily men would be taken pretty generally from the district in which they live, and in all probability it would be so done in the great majority of cases; but I do not desire to lay down an absolute rule which would merely destroy the purpose of the bill.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Would the minister embody in his bill subsection 3 of section 21 of the Civil Service Act?

Mr. EULER: No.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Subsection 4 of section 1 provides that:

> The minister may, after such examination as he may prescribe, select and nominate suitable persons for appointment,—

And so on. I understood the minister to say that in the regulations to be prescribed he intends to have the board of appraisers conduct the examination of candidates. If so, why not substitute for "such examination as he may prescribe" the words "examination by the board of Dominion appraisers"? If he intends to put this in the regulations, I do not see why he should not embody it in the bill.

Mr. EULER: Ordinarily we should not attempt to clutter up a bill with what might much better be dealt with by way of regulations; otherwise statutes would be burdened with a great deal of unnecessary matter. But I presume what is in my hon. friend's mind is that the recommendation should go direct from the board of appraisers to the Civil Service Commission in order to avoid what he fears, that the minister himself might exercise political patronage. Am I correct?

Mr. ADSHEAD: It would certainly exclude any supposition of that kind.

Mr. EULER: My answer is this. The purpose he desires to serve would not be served by inserting in the statute the words suggested, for the simple reason that the members of the board of appraisers are appointed by the minister. If he desired to use his power in a wrongful way, he could use it just as easily through the board of appraisers as in any other manner.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Surely if the board of appraisers recommended certain candidates, and the minister did not want them, he would not go to the extent of dismissing the board.

Mr. EULER: No.

Mr. KENNEDY: On several occasions, Mr. Chairman, the minister has stated that it is not his intention to exercise political patronage—to give jobs as rewards for political services. I do not imagine it is his intention; I never did. But at the same time the house is putting him in the position under this bill of being the one who shall determine what candidates shall be appointed. For instance, the Civil Service Commission may not appoint the person named by the minister in the first place. Then of course there is what the minister terms an additional safeguard; if the appointment is not made by the commission it is made by the governor in council. But there is no use for any of us to think that the governor in council will call candidates and examine them. It is simply a question of accepting or not accepting the minister's recommendation; and he has stated that they will accept his recommendation. Undoubtedly this constitutes patronage, in that it gives him power, as head of the department, to make appointments. The burden of his argument is that he needs qualified appraisers. If that argument is sound, I may point out that a similar argument has been used in connection with the preventive service, and to-day the minister stated that he intended to put the preventive service back under the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. EULER: No. I stated that appointments to the special preventive service, now entirely under the minister, would be made in exactly the same way as appointments of appraisers.

Mr. KENNEDY: The member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) on April 23 inquired of the ministry with regard to the preventive service. That return has not yet been brought down, although it passed the house some time ago. Whatever may be said with regard to statements made by the minister and other members of the government when they were in opposition, I think it is easy to demonstrate by referring to the debates of this house that all ministries handle patronage appointments in a way that they would not readily admit should be handled by the representatives of another party if it was in power. That seems to be the general attitude. Most of the declarations read this afternoon were made by members now sitting to the right of the Speaker when they were in opposition.

I think it will be generally conceded that not only the people, but civil servants themselves, are afraid of patronage. In the abstract, patronage has been condemned by everyone except those who for the time being have been handling it. I have before me two telegrams that were sent to my desk-mate (Mr. Garland). He is not in the house this afternoon or doubtless he would be reading them himself. The first telegram is as follows:

E. J. GARLAND,
House of Commons,
Ottawa, Ont.

Understand resolutions before parliament affecting appointments and promotions in Department of National Revenue. This association believes appointments and promotions under Civil Service Commission as at present preferable to anything savouring of return to patronage, and beg that you use your influence accordingly.

GEORGE EDGECOMBE,
Secretary,
Northern Alberta Customs and Excise Officers Association.

The other message is from Quebec:

E. J. GARLAND, M.P.

With reference to proposed amendment to National Revenue Act introduced by honourable Minister National Revenue, we respectfully submit that if resolution is carried in its original form the very object which the Civil Service Act nineteen eighteen had in view would be defeated; and we respectfully draw your attention to the fact that if said resolution is pressed in house same should be strenuously opposed, because if carried would simply mean a return to patronage, a state of affairs which we believe to be detrimental to the service, as it would deprive an officer of incentive in the way of promotion and tend to lessen the morale of the service and impair its efficiency.

Quebec Customs and Excise Officers Association.
J. A. YOUNG, President.
W. P. FITZPATRICK, Secretary.

There is no question, Mr. Chairman, that the minister is asking for power that in the hands of his successor might be used to set up a system of patronage in the department. The minister is quite emphatic in his refusal to consider any amendments regarding returned soldiers or tending otherwise to restrict the power under this bill to determine who shall be appointed to the positions dealt with. For that reason I am opposed to the bill. Of course the minister may be quite confident that he has the necessary majority to vote the bill through anyway. But we have taken a stand against anything of this sort in days gone by, and I think it is only proper that we should stand by the Civil Service Commission until we can see it demonstrated, by reference to past experience, that it has been better for the civil service and for the revenues of the country that civil servants should be appointed on any other principle than the merit system. Of course, it is easy to show that mistakes have been made in the past under the merit system. No system is perfect. But after all we are dealing with patronage versus the merit system, and I do not think there is anyone to-day, in a responsible position, who will stand up and defend patronage as against the merit system.

Mr. EULER: I decline to be put in the position of appearing to be opposed to any preference being given the returned men, or of desiring the abolition of the merit system. I want to say emphatically that such an attitude is entirely foreign to my intention. It is merely a question of embodying an amendment in the act, and I do not see how any such amendments as my hon. friends suggest, incorporated in the act, would ensure against a minister who deliberately desired to exercise discrimination either against men already in the service or against returned men.

Mr. KENNEDY: The bill gives the minister power to ignore the commission.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not propose to trespass long on the time of the committee, but I do submit that the minister has approached the matter from the wrong standpoint. He has endeavoured to make an exception to the rule; what he should endeavour to do is to bring all appointments within the rule. That is what he should be labouring to accomplish to-day instead of seeking to discover exceptions to the rule. I find that when the Spinney bill was considered by parliament it was based upon a report submitted by a select committee, of which the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler) was a member; and in making a speech on that occasion in reference to the report, the hon. gentleman said:

> Technical, professional and scientific employees, it was generally felt, should be appointed with the advice of the deputy heads of the departments.

It is for that principle that we on this side of the house contend; that is to say, that technical and professional men should be appointed with the assistance of deputy heads of the departments. But the appointing power should be with the Civil Service Commission. Any departure from that principle is wrong, and in this instance the minister is departing from it, although he is endeavouring, by a clever use of words in his bill, to utilize the Civil Service Commission in order to give an air, shall we say, of fairness to proposals that are purely political.

Now, we are not dealing with the minister himself, if he will only bear that in mind. We are not dealing with the hon. gentleman personally, but with the Minister of National Revenue, in relation to the question of appointing professional or technical men with the assistance of deputy heads of departments. That is the subject matter of the discussion. We desire efficiency in the public service. How shall that efficiency be secured? It has been decided by this parliament times without number—and in very many instances owing to the urgings of members who now sit opposite—that the Civil Service Commission provides means whereby efficiency may be secured without recourse to political patronage. That is the principle underlying the Civil Service Act. A departure from that principle is now proposed. That departure, the minister says, is an exception to the rule. But we submit that the method by which the position of the civil service can best be maintained is a simple one: all you have to do is to ask the board of appraisers to set the examination and let the candidates write them as they please. Let the Civil Service Commission conduct the examinations, so far as responsibility for them is concerned, and make the appointments, giving the preference, as the Civil Service Act provides, to returned soldiers. Is it beyond the reach of the Civil Service Commission to get a gentleman from Montreal who was an assistant buyer in a great departmental store to be an appraiser of leather values? Is it impossible for the commission to get one who had been for six or seven years in a trust company, and who in years gone by was associated with the textile industry, to be an appraiser of the products of that industry? Could not the Civil Service Commission do that as well as the minister and his commissioner? The question is a simple one. If the Civil Service Commission is to function, and parliament intends that it shall make the appointments, let the board of appraisers set the examinations and have the commission assume responsibility for them and for the appointments.

As regards the second question—giving preference to returned men—this is a principle in the Civil Service Act which, we contend, should be maintained. If maintained in its integrity it would have the result of retaining in Canada a large number of returned men who are now in another country. All you need to do is to ask for the returns and you will find how many Canadians are receiving pensions in the republic to the south of us and who should be getting them in Canada.

Under these circumstances, so far as we on this side are concerned, the minister may take his bill out of committee, and on the third reading we will offer the two amendments to which I have referred. On the third reading it will be recorded whether or not this house proposes to revert to the old system of patronage which in practice has been so disastrous to this country, and to take from men who have deserving claims on the country the preference which the Civil Service Act now gives them.

Mr. EULER: May I ask a question?

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly.

Mr. EULER: In connection with the appointment of returned men, and giving them preference in positions such as appraisers, is it the hon. gentleman's intention to move an amendment to the effect that returned men shall always receive the preference, although we might find some man in civilian life peculiarly fitted for a particular position as an appraiser? My purpose is to get the best men available.

Mr. BENNETT: Surely—for the salary you will pay. There were nearly half a million returned men in this country, which is substantially one-eighteenth of the population, and in that half million there are individuals equally qualified with any man who may be secured by the department for the salary offered, to serve the purposes mentioned. That is my answer to the minister's question. The preference given to returned men under the Civil Service Act is all we intend to ask for. We do not intend to ask that any new standards be set up. We merely desire to make sure that the standard heretofore observed shall prevail under the act, and that the provisions of the act in its integrity shall be observed.

Mr. EULER: If they are equally qualified they will receive the preference.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the section carry?

Mr. BENNETT: On division.

Section agreed to on division.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the title carry?

Mr. BENNETT: On division.

Title agreed to on division.

Mr. EULER: Shall we go on with the third reading when the bill is reported?

Mr. BENNETT: No, at the next sitting we have two amendments to offer.

Mr. EULER: You can offer them now.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Bill reported.

PENSION ACT AMENDMENT

The house resumed from May 14 consideration in committee of Bill No. 289, to amend the Pension Act—Mr. King (Kootenay)—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 5—Commission attached to department.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): When the committee rose we were dealing with sections 5 and 30; it was suggested that these sections stand for further consideration. I have given the matter some thought, and I think the section as drawn is quite proper and does not in any way curtail the activities of the Board of Pension Commissioners; in fact, it places in the statute the conditions under which we are operating to-day. In 1920 the government of the day brought into the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment those officers who were formerly attached to the pension board; the only mistake they made at that time was to make the medical officers and investigators departmental officers. As I explained to the house, it is my purpose to leave with the commission those officers upon whom they must depend for information on which to base their judgments, and these are principally the medical officers and investigators. These officers will be under the control of the pension board and will report directly to that body. The other officers, the clerks, stenographers and other employees of that kind, will be in the office of the commission but will be employed by the department. I now move that subsection 4 of section 5 be amended by striking out the words "for the purposes of the department", in the fifth line.

Mr. GEARY: I have one or two remarks to make in connection with section 5. In order to function quite properly and to the satisfaction of those with whom it has to deal, the Board of Pension Commissioners should be a body within itself and should not be controlled by any other body, least of all by any department of the government. Thus far we have had an independent Board of Pension Commissioners. Of course objections have been taken to some of the rulings of that board, and officials who have to deal with applications for pension, as in the case of other applications for relief, are not always as popular as they might be. However, I think perhaps we might say that some of this unpopularity, if such there be, has been caused through the fact that the board stands up so straight that it leans backward. I think it cannot be accused with cause of consciously exercising favouritism or discrimination.

The orders in council to which the minister referred were passed in 1920 and 1921, and authorized the transfer of certain officers of the board to the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment. I think the minister is right, as far as my information goes, when he states that practically all the officers were transferred with the exception of secretaries and the medical advisers. However, the minister must be aware of the fact that this did not work out well and was the cause of an increasing dissatisfaction which culminated in the investigation conducted by Mr. Scott of Montreal into the working of the department. Mr. Scott made his report in October of 1927; certain contentions of the board were before him and probably formed the basis for his investigation and finding. It was alleged, and I think upheld by Mr. Scott, that opinion and advice was deliberately given by departmental officials to applicants for pension, and in many cases this advice was erroneous. Contrary to the provisions of the statute, pensions were diverted by the department, without the consent of the board, in order to recover departmental outlays and expenditures for hospital maintenance, medical attention and so on, and I think I am right in saying that diversions were made to reimburse certain advances made from the disablement fund. These matters were gone into, and Mr. Scott recommended inter alia as follows:

> (1) The Board of Pension Commissioners should be given such staff or medical examiners, investigators, and clerks as will enable them to function as an independent body for the purpose of,—
> (a) Collecting all necessary information and evidence relating to matters relevant to the eligibility of ex-service men and their dependents for pensions, rendering decisions thereon, and calculating the pensions payable.

I submit to the minister that his proposed bill does not give effect to this recommendation; in other words, it perpetuates the very evil which Mr. Scott found to be more or less rampant in the administration of the department. The commission is no longer nominally possessed of the independence which it formerly had, and it is now definitely attached to the department. The bill says in terms, "The commission shall be attached to the department." I do not know what that means, but certainly it is open to the interpretation that the board is now under the department in exercising some of the functions which it must exercise.

Mr. KING (Kootenay). Section 6 of the original act did the same thing.

Mr. GEARY: I have not bothered to read the whole section, but it is as follows.

> The commission shall be attached to the department and the expenses required to be incurred for the discharge of its duties, including the salaries of its officers, clerks, and other employees shall be met out of the moneys provided by parliament for the purposes of the department.

I submit that this is an entirely different kind of attachment from that which existed heretofore and the tendency, if not the fact, is to remove the independence of the tribunal which has been set up and to make that tribunal more or less subservient to the control of the department which is a part of the government; in that way pensions will be brought into politics. If there is one thing on which I think I can speak for the men of the forces, one thing in which they are vitally interested, it is that pensions never should get into politics; pensions must be kept out of politics and there must be a feeling among the men that everyone is being treated on his merits, with no bias, no discrimination and no favouritism. I do submit to the minister that this section is inclined to place this important department under and attached to the new Department of Pensions and National Health, and in fact strikes a blow at the independence heretofore enjoyed by that board.

As I understand it, the appropriation for the board is now voted by parliament; we have the say as to what money they may spend, and having that say we can also control how they spend it. Now it is proposed to do away with the appropriation for the board; under this act it will be transferred to the department, and the staff at present under the control of the board will be placed on the departmental pay roll. I submit that that is an evasion; it is not good, and it is not conducive to the proper determination of applications. It does not give the men the independent tribunal to which they are entitled. I think it follows that the board will be entirely in the hands of the department, as to what staff it may have, and what staff is to be loaned to the board by the department. That is a most important matter. They should not be limited to the staff that the Department of Pensions and National Health chooses to let them have. The Department of Pensions and National Health may let the board have only such staff as will do the work the department wants it to do, and no more; that is, the board may not be allowed to have a sufficient or properly appointed staff.

Then, there is no provision made for an annual report, as it will be absorbed in the report of the Department of Pensions and National Health. I submit that the whole status of the board will become that of a commission within the department. It will not be a commission outside the department, a commission standing on its own feet, and functioning independently—it has no allowance by this government in the way of funds—but it will be a commission of some sort or other within the department. No one has been able to convince me, and I have discussed this matter, that it will not tend towards the board gradually coming under the dominance of the department, and so pensions will be put in politics. I do not know whether I understood the minister to say that the status as a deputy head is to be cancelled.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): It is not usual in a case of this kind.

Mr. GEARY: It is not usual, but it has worked out very well; it should have the status of a deputy head of a department.

I think the minister will agree with me that the commission's power will be curtailed to that of merely giving decisions upon medical examinations and investigations, on reports not obtained by itself, but obtained and made by officials over whom it has no direction or control; officials of the Department of Pensions and National Health. That is a decided change. In speaking of this Pension Act, the minister has said, as appears on page 2571 of Hansard:

> The pension commission will remain as they are at present, independent, but it is true that this department, in the course of its administrative work, will pay the cheques after the adjudication has been made.

I submit that this bill, as it is brought down, is not in accordance with that statement. I do not say that the minister has ignored that in drafting this section, but I do think that if he considers the objections I have raised—just to give him something to reply to; we will discuss it more in detail as time goes on—he will find that the whole trend of this section is to destroy that independence which is so precious, and which should not be touched in the slightest degree. I think he will come to the conclusion that he has gone too far in this bill, and that the power of the commissioners has been seriously interfered with. It is quite likely that it will become a mere adjunct politically, instead of an outstanding independent body.

I submit that the matter is of the highest importance to the men, women and children who are concerned with pensions, and this section should not be passed without the very closest scrutiny and consideration. I bespeak the co-operation of the minister in giving sympathetic consideration to what has been said. I do not want him to feel that he has to stick to something that he has done, but I ask him to keep an open mind so that as the discussion proceeds and he finds possibly that we are right he may be prepared to modify the section to meet our views. I speak for what I consider the best interests of the soldiers, some at least of whom feel very much alarmed about this section. I do not want him to shake his head at this moment, because the discussion will probably go on for some time, and I hope he will see the light before we are finished.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I think my hon. friend is labouring under a misapprehension. If he will read the old section and then the new one he will find that we have tried to embody in the latter what was covered by three or four sections heretofore. As far as the commission is concerned, it is an independent body; we have nothing to do, and will have nothing to do, with its adjudication or consideration of pension cases. All we propose to do, under this amendment, is just what we have been doing heretofore, with the exception of a small personal staff of clerks and stenographers here in Ottawa. I cannot conceive why the payment and auditing of those salaries should not be done in one department rather than in two and that that is all that is intended by this amendment.

In regard to the medical staff required for investigations and examinations, I think the commission should have this staff and, in fact, it has been the practice in the department since the Scott report. These officers are now under the immediate direction of the board and if it requires any officers of ours at any time it merely makes the request, and the officers become all officers of the Pension department and report to the pension board.

I am sure there is no desire on the part of the government, and it certainly is not my desire, to encroach in any way upon the pension board, or to interfere with its independence. It has been the desire of parliament since its inception that such a thing should not occur, and I am satisfied that desire still exists. In the administration I believe a great saving could be made and overlapping prevented. I cannot see where the making out of the cheques in the department will in any way interfere with the activities of the commission, or with its independence.

At one time the pension board had some four or five hundred employees scattered throughout Canada. In 1920 the government of that date did not hesitate, by order in council, to strip the board of those employees, leaving only a small group here at Ottawa. As I said before, I think probably a mistake was made at that time when they did not leave the medical officers within the control of the pension board. The section does not materially affect the administration as it has been carried on in the past, and will not affect the independence of the pension board.

Mr. GEARY: Section 7 of the old act reads as follows:

> Subject to the provisions of this act, and of any regulations made under the provisions of this act, the commission shall have full power and authority to deal with all matters pertaining to pensions, consider all applications for pension, and to award, refuse, cancel, pay and administer pensions.

Section 5 of the new act reads as follows:

> Subject to the provisions of this act and of any regulations made thereunder, the commission shall be charged with the duty of considering and adjudicating upon all questions relating to the award, increase, decrease, suspension or cancellation of any pension under this act and effect shall be given by the department to the adjudication of the commission.

What do you mean by "effect shall be given"? It was final before, but now you say "effect shall be given". I do not know how far you are going to give effect to the findings.

Amendment agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. BLACK (Yukon): I think the minister agreed yesterday with the suggestion that subsection 1 of the old section 5 would be rewritten in this amended act. The minister did agree yesterday, and to-day was of the same opinion, that the words "for the purpose of the department" must come out in the proposed section 4. Yesterday his suggestion was that we could insert the old section which reads:

> The commission shall have all the powers and duties of a deputy head of a department for the purposes of the Civil Service Act.

It seems to me that section 5 as proposed is practically right, with the elimination of the words—

> For the purposes of the department.

—and with the insertion of subsection 1 of section 5 of the act as it now stands. After all, under the act as it stands, the report of the commission to the minister is such report, statement or information as the minister may require. He indicates to the commission what they shall report to him. It is thus under the act as it is now that the annual report is provided for and it is a separate report by itself, whereas under the proposed amendment the minister determines what portions of that report may go into the annual report of the department to parliament. I do not know that that is of very great importance, but the elimination of subsection 1 of section 5 is certainly of importance and changes the effect of the act. It takes away from the commission the powers and duties of a deputy head of a department for the purposes of the Civil Service Act, and reference to the Civil Service Act will show that the powers and duties of a deputy head are very important. If as a matter of policy the minister is of opinion that those powers should be taken away from the commission, that is a different matter; but if it is not his intention to take those powers away, subsection 1 should remain in the act.

Mr. RALSTON: With reference particularly to subsection 1 of section 5, I just had occasion to look up the act with regard to the railway commission, which I suppose would be in somewhat of an analagous position as a judicial commission attached to a department, and I found that there was no subsection such as the one which appears in this legislation with regard to the Board of Pension Commissioners. Therefore it would seem that the purposes of administration are well served by the elimination of that subsection. As I say, the Board of Railway Commissioners do not have it, and I think that is a commission which stands practically in the same position with regard to judicial matters in relation to the Department of Railways as the Board of Pension Commissioners does in relation to the Department of Pensions and Health. There is therefore a good precedent for not including that subsection.

As my hon. friend says, I do not think there is very much in the suggestion about reports. One can well understand that the reports of the Board of Pension Commissioners and of the Department of Pensions and Health would be duplicated in many matters and the idea is that the annual report of the Department of Pensions and Health shall contain in regard to the Board of Pension Commissioners such information as may seem necessary and at the same time not duplicate information that is already given with regard to the general affairs of the department. My hon. friend will remember that the operation of the department has to do with activities with regard to treatment. Those activities with regard to treatment depend upon the decisions of the Board of Pension Commissioners, so that when the Department of Pensions and Health make reports with regard to treatments they are really covering part of the activities of the Board of Pension Commissioners as well which are included in their report and therefore should not be contained in both.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING (ON DIVISION)

Bill No. 157, for the relief of Sydney Franklin Lankin—Mr. Geary.

BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF CANADA

The house resumed from April 10 consideration in committee of Bill No. 43, respecting the Bell Telephone Company of Canada—Mr. Edwards (Ottawa)—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Power to increase capital.

Mr. CHURCH: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The promoter of this bill, the junior member for Ottawa, is not present, and under the rules of the house no one else can endorse the bill, so I submit that it is not properly before the committee. The name of the junior member for Ottawa is on the back of this bill, and the bill, I submit, will have to be re-endorsed before it can be considered in committee. I ask for your ruling, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CHAIRMAN: The practice in this house has been for the sponsor of a bill to entrust it in his absence to some other member. The hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Rouville has stated that he has been entrusted with the charge of this bill, which is now before the committee.

Mr. IRVINE: The junior member for Ottawa is also the sponsor for the preceding bill, relating to the Canadian American International Bridge Company. Why was not that bill taken up by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Rouville, if he is taking charge in the absence of the junior member for Ottawa?

Mr. MORIN (St. Hyacinthe): There was no one to take charge of that bill, but there is in this case.

The object of this bill, Mr. Chairman, is to raise the capital of the company from $75,000,000 to $150,000,000. The company operates in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario. This is the part of our country which is the most densely populated; the telephone service in that territory is expanding from day to day and in a proportion much greater than the growth of the population. The increase in the demand for additional telephone service comes from the cities and from the rural parts of the country. The farmers all want to be able to communicate quickly one with the other and with the cities and towns where they market their products.

This expansion necessarily involves large expenditures every year and the capital to provide for these outlays can only be obtained in two ways, by borrowings and by the issue of additional capital. Expanding continuously from year to year the company must get its funds on the money markets, whatever may happen to be the conditions of these markets at the time. To do this successfully, it must be careful to maintain its credit at a very high level. That is for it the thing of paramount importance, the maintenance of its credit. Its borrowings, therefore, must remain within a very conservative margin of its physical assets. If the company exceeded that limit, and thus impaired its credit, the public would be the first to suffer by it.

The only other source of funds is the issue of capital. The company, having practically exhausted its present authorized capital, and having to meet the demands of the public for additional service, must therefore be authorized to increase its capital.

The increase asked for may at first sight be deemed excessive, but a short examination of the records of the company and of its present situation should convince any unprejudiced mind that the amount is not exorbitant. It is calculated to provide for the needs of the company during the next ten years.

The last increase in capital took place in 1920, and it was for $45,000,000. During these eight years that amount was subscribed by the public at par, or above par, and was invested in the plant; it provided for the natural development of the operations of the company. There is no complaint at all about the use which was made of that money. This amount was not the only investment in additions and extensions to the plant. In 1920 the bonded indebtedness of the company was $16,750,000. That was raised by $23,250,000 to $40,000,000, so that the total capital expenditures on additional plant and equipment amounted to $68,000,000, apart altogether from investments of the depreciation fund.

The average increase in telephones during these years was 38,000 per year. Last year the capital expenditures of the company amounted to $18,000,000; the construction program of the company for the next five years calls for capital expenditures of 102 million dollars. Under such conditions the increase asked for seems to be normal and justified.

A refusal to pass this bill would mean that parliament would intervene to prevent the company from providing the additional telephone facilities demanded by the public. This is a public utility company; it is compelled by its charter to extend the service to whoever asks for it if he complies with certain conditions. After having put this obligation upon the company should this house refuse it the right to issue the additional capital which it requires for that very purpose, it would be a most unfair situation, and as a representative of the province of Quebec I protest against such a stand.

This bill was referred to the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. It was a fairly large and representative committee. A number of questions were put by members of the committee and all were answered, apparently to the satisfaction of the members of the committee, since the bill was carried without amendment. The company was represented before the committee by its officers, who were prepared to give all data and information which the committee might require.

The bill has already been before this committee once and a discussion of forty minutes took place. Some statements have been published from a few members that they intended to kill this bill indirectly by talking it out. This is not a fair way of dealing with a bill of this nature. The company is entitled to fair play and the public which is served by this company is also entitled to fair play.

Mr. CAHAN: Is not the hon. gentleman now talking it out to the best of his ability?

Mr. MORIN (St. Hyacinthe): Under these circumstances, and at this stage of the session I feel justified in moving that the bill be now reported, and I make a motion to that effect.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): I desire to second the motion, that the bill be now reported.

The CHAIRMAN: The motion does not require a seconder. It is not debatable.

Mr. GARDINER: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The sponsor of the bill

(Mr. Edwards, Ottawa) is not in the house, and no evidence has been given to the committee that the hon. gentleman who has just spoken has permission or authority to sponsor the bill.

Mr. MORIN (St. Hyacinthe): The point of order has already been raised, Mr. Chairman, and settled by you.

The CHAIRMAN: That is correct. The point was raised on a former occasion by the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church). The hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Rouville (Mr. Morin) has announced that he is in charge of the bill, having been entrusted with it by the original sponsor, the member for Ottawa (Mr. Edwards). It has always been the practice to accept the word of an hon. member that he is in charge of a bill when its sponsor is not present. Under the circumstances I must rule that the point raised by the hon. member for Acadia is not well taken.

Mr. CHURCH: I move that the committee rise.

Mr. GARDINER: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I ask you to require the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Rouville to produce his authority to act as sponsor of this bill.

Mr. MORIN (St. Hyacinthe): The hon. member must know that I have the necessary authority, since he was in the committee of railways, canals and telegraph lines when this bill was under consideration, and I then presented the bill for its sponsor.

Mr. IRVINE: I rise to discuss the bill, Mr. Chairman, I am not speaking to the motion at all.

The CHAIRMAN: The motion is not debatable.

Mr. IRVINE: I am not debating the motion, I am speaking to this bill. The bill has not been dealt with by this committee.

The CHAIRMAN: We have to dispose of the motion that the bill be now reported. If the motion is negatived the hon. member will have a right to speak, but that time is not now. Mr. Morin moves that the bill be now reported—

Mr. GEARY: I beg to move, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) be now heard. This motion is in order at any time. I am not debating the motion before the committee. I am making a substantive motion that the hon. member for Wetaskiwin be now heard.

The CHAIRMAN: I have to inform the hon. gentleman that only one motion can be considered at a time. The motion of the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Rouville was before the committee. I allowed the hon. member for Acadia to rise to a point of order, which probably I should not have done. But the motion which is before the committee at the moment is that this bill be now reported. That motion is not debatable. Those in favour of—

Mr. GEARY: Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GEARY: I demand the right to speak on a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN: There is no point of order before the committee; there is a motion, which is not debatable.

Mr. GEARY: My point of order, Mr. Chairman is that your ruling is wrong. If you will consult the Speaker or the Clerk of the house you will find that I am perfectly in order in making that motion, and it must be heard. There is no question about it.

The CHAIRMAN: The point of order is not well taken.

Mr. GEARY: I could equally well move, Mr. Chairman, that you leave the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: We have to deal with the first motion, that the bill be now reported.

Mr. GEARY: Mr. Chairman, I desire to take the necessary steps to appeal from your ruling to the house.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. gentleman knows that the motion is not debatable, and that his appeal is not in order.

Mr. GEARY: I am not debating the motion.

The CHAIRMAN: It is for the committee to decide whether or not this bill shall be reported. If the committee decides in the negative, then the hon. gentleman can raise his point of order, but he cannot do so now.

Mr. CHURCH: I rise to another point of order.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. Those in favour of reporting this bill at this time will kindly say "aye".

Some hon. MEMBERS: Aye.

The CHAIRMAN: Those opposed will kindly say "nay".

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

The CHAIRMAN: In my opinion the ayes have it.

Mr. McGIBBON: Mr. Chairman, it is quite plain that our proceedings are becoming a farce.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I declare the motion carried.

Mr. McGIBBON: Parliament is becoming a joke.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Bill reported.

The SPEAKER: When shall the report be received?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Now.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Never.

Mr. GEARY: Mr. Speaker, am I in order—

Mr. SPEAKER: There can be no debate on receiving a report. Is it the pleasure of the house that the report be received now?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Mr. SPEAKER: There is nothing else to do but to ring the bells and call in the members.

Mr. GEARY: What is the question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house that the report be now received?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: A division is unavoidable; It is impossible for me to ascertain whether the ayes or the nays have it, though in my humble opinion the ayes have it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: Call in the members.

And the members having been called in:

Mr. SPEAKER: The chairman of the committee of the whole having reported Bill No. 43, respecting the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, I have asked the house whether the report shall now be received. It is actually impossible for the Speaker to ascertain the sense of the house in this matter, except by a division.

And the question being proposed to the house by Mr. Speaker: "When shall the report be received," and Mr. Speaker being unable to decide from the ayes and nays the sense of the house as to the time for receiving the said report, he submitted the question to the determination of the house, "That the said report be now received;"

[The Chairman]

The house thereupon decided the question in the affirmative, on the following division:

Mr. SPEAKER: Next sitting of the house. I should explain that although the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) voted twice, that fact is easily explained. In fairness to the hon. gentleman I might say that he did not hear the motion as put, and made a mistake in his vote. I think he meant to vote against the report being received.

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER BRIDGE COMPANY

The house resumed from May 1, consideration in committee of Bill No. 71, to incorporate the St. Lawrence River Bridge Company—Mr. Smith (Stormont)—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Incorporation.

Mr. CHURCH: When this bill was before the committee last I had spoken for four or five minutes, and stated that this bill should not be allowed to pass. Governor Smith of the state of New York has taken the stand that such international bridges should be built by the state or federal authority or by the municipal authority, and this parliament has jurisdiction over bridges which are international or interprovincial or which affect navigation. In this connection I would like to quote the words of Governor Smith:

> Such bridges should be built by the state or states or by one more governmental subdivisions or by a public municipal authority similar to the port authority," the governor declared in his blanket veto of the three measures. "If such a bridge is to be built over international waters it should be constructed jointly by the United States in conjunction with the Canadian government or by the state of New York in conjunction with the Canadian province affected."
> Such projects, the governor felt could be financed at lower cost by the state or federal governments, while, he added, "they are in their very nature public; to authorize privately-owned toll bridges is a step as backward as to authorize privately-owned highways, under the wording of these acts, the franchise is practically made perpetual."
> "If it pays private corporations to erect these bridges," the governor's memorandum continued, "it will certainly pay the state to do it. If tolls are to be charged, the state should be the recipient of the tolls, and they should not be in excess of what is required to operate and maintain property, pay the interest on the bonds and make the necessary annual contributions to the sinking fund for their retirement."

I contend that since this public policy has been laid down by the governor of the state of New York we should not pass this bill tonight. In addition to that we must remember that there is considerable dispute with regard to the rights of navigation in this case; which should be paramount in any event over the interests of anyone's private bill. This is contested international territory running from Brockville through Cornwall to the great port of Montreal. The rights of navigation are paramount. This is an international stream, and it is contended that it is subject to the rights of navigation. The surplus waters belong to the province subject to navigation and the bed of the river, the banks and rapids.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, this question should not be considered at the present time, until the decision has been given by the Supreme Court of Canada, as referred to in sessional papers No. 50, P.C. 115, dated January 18th, 1928. As this is an international question, affecting both countries, I cannot understand why there should not be a special sitting of the supreme court to hear and determine this question and not lay it over until the fall. The delays are not at all creditable. The provinces of Quebec and Ontario and the government of Canada will be represented by counsel on this hearing, and no matter what the decision is regarding the jurisdiction of this parliament, they will not be satisfied and there will be an appeal to the Privy Council.

One of the matters involved is this particular question of the erection of bridges and other erections on international streams affecting navigation. These various questions have come up for a decision by the supreme court, because of the order in council to which I referred, and which reads as follows:

Does the ownership by the province of the bed of any stream, whether such bed be level or sloping, give to the province the ownership of water powers:
(a) created thereupon by Dominion works for the improvement of navigation; or
(b) existing thereupon by nature?

Clause 2 of the reference covers the particular bill now before the chair. Clause 3 reads as follows:

Has the province any proprietary interest in or legislative control over:
(a) the canals, with lands and water power connected therewith, and the lake and river improvements which were conveyed to the Dominion by section 108, schedule 3, of the British North America Act, 1867, or in or over the disposal of any water powers created thereby or existing thereupon from time to time; or

This particular bridge will extend from the province of Ontario over to the state of New York, and it is covered by the four corners of this particular reference. The clause continues:

(b) water-powers created by works for the improvement of navigation constructed by or under the authority of the Dominion since confederation; or
(c) works constructed wholly for power purposes by the Dominion out of moneys appropriated by parliament for such purpose?

All of these subsections have to be read together, regarding the erection over international streams of public works, of bridges or similar structures, and an application is further necessary under the Navigable Waters Protection Act. The fourth clause of this particular reference also covers this bridge, and reads as follows:

Has the Dominion exclusive legislative power to regulate waters for the purpose of navigation:
(a) in navigable waters; and
(b) in non-navigable waters?

This particular river is navigable right at this point. If this erection is allowed by an order in council of this government, or is allowed after a proper hearing with all parties present, under the Navigable Waters Protection Act such an erection will come within the four corners of this clause. Another reason why the bridge is within the reference is because of clause 5, which reads as follows:

[Mr. Church.]

Where the Dominion, for navigation purposes, expropriates or uses any part of the bed of any stream vested in the province, is the province entitled to any compensation for such expropriation or use?

Then clauses 6 and 7 read as follows:

6. Has the Dominion the exclusive legislative control over and proprietary interest in water-powers brought into being by works authorized by parliament to be erected in an international stream for the purpose of carrying out an agreement between Canada and any foreign country looking to the erection of joint works for the improvement of navigation in such stream? If not, what are the powers and rights of the province with regard to such water-powers?

7. Where the bed of a navigable stream is owned by the province or by a private individual, is the title of such owner subordinate to the public right of navigation, and to the provision of any statute which may be enacted from time to time by parliament, within the powers conferred by section 91 (10) of the British North America Act, 1867.

This particular reference of a public matter affects the body politic of Canada. This matter is now before the Supreme Court of Canada on a reference, and is sub judice and this parliament should not forestall what action the Supreme Court of Canada would take in that particular case regarding the right to cross this navigable stream to the state of New York by a private bridge. The rights of navigation are paramount, and a structure cannot be erected there without joint consent of Canada and the state of New York. I contend that it is against public policy; it is contrary to public policy that private parties should be given extraordinary powers such as this legislation proposes to give.

Well, the bill goes to the foot of the list, and it will not do any harm if it never gets up again.

PENSION ACT AMENDMENT

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. 289, to amend the Pension Act—Mr. King (Kootenay)—Mr. Johnston in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose at six o'clock we were considering section 5. An amendment had been adopted.

Mr. BENNETT: I suggested to the minister yesterday that there should be included in the new bill a provision whereby the commission would be given the powers of a deputy minister, and he seemed to be favourably inclined towards that suggestion. I understand that from to-day after mature consideration he is not disposed to accept it. We can only protest against the measure as it stands and since the majority is ample to effect the purpose which the minister has in mind, when the third reading of the bill is being moved, we will move that subsection for the purpose of adding it to the bill. That is the easy and simple way and it will shorten the discussion.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): Will the hon. member move that to-night?

Mr. BENNETT: No, on the third reading of the bill. If it is desired we will move it now as an amendment, but in view of what has been said by the minister it is a waste of time to do it, and we will therefore move it on the third reading.

Mr. McGIBBON: The minister is rather stretching the spirit of this whole legislation. When the bill was referred to the special committee on pensions I raised the point whether that committee was going to have the final authority on everything. We were told that we would have and that the recommendations of that committee would be adopted in toto. The minister has on a number of occasions broken faith with the spirit of that agreement.

Mr. RALSTON: Will my hon. friend give one instance in which the recommendations of the committee have not been carried out?

Mr. McGIBBON: I have already brought up two or three of them.

Mr. RALSTON: Will my hon. friend suggest one?

Mr. McGIBBON: I can suggest one. There was an amendment made last night.

Mr. RALSTON: What was it?

Mr. McGIBBON: In regard to the information that the pension board was to give to the applicant for pensions.

Mr. RALSTON: On the suggestion of my hon. friend.

Mr. McGIBBON: Yes, but the point is that it was not in the bill.

Mr. RALSTON: I beg my hon. friend's pardon. The recommendations of the committee came up without that suggestion. My hon. friend suggested that it would be well to have that information, and the suggestion was accepted by the minister.

Mr. McGIBBON: That was not the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. RALSTON: I have the recommendations of the committee under my hand.

Mr. McGIBBON: Pardon me. The minister has not. He has the recommendations as they appeared before the house.

Mr. RALSTON: I beg my hon. friend's pardon. I have under my hand the recommendation of the committee on that particular point. I am reading from page 318 of the votes and proceedings. If my hon. friend will look at the bill as it came to the house yesterday and follow the wording, he will find that the recommendation of the committee is word for word in the bill as it was presented to the committee.

(b) The medical classification of the injury or disease causing the disability or death in respect of which the application has been made;

(ii) The medical classification of such injuries or diseases as have been dealt with by the commission in connection with the application;

(iii) Whether the injury or disease resultant in disability or death was or was not attributable to or incurred during military service or whether it pre-existed enlistment and was or was not aggravated during military service.

Those words exactly were incorporated in the bill brought down by the government and introduced by the minister. In addition to that my hon. friend suggested yesterday that the grounds for refusal or acceptance of the pension should also be stated, and that recommendation was accepted by the minister.

Mr. McGIBBON: It is better for a man to know exactly what he is talking about. The recommendations of the committee were not put in print and consequently the minister does not have them. The recommendations of the committee were turned over to a subcommittee to draft them and they did not draft them in the spirit or the form in which they were given. That was the point I brought before the committee last night.

Mr. RALSTON: If I may correct my hon. friend, all I have before me is a copy of the votes and proceedings of April 30. I was not on the committee. On page 317 under the heading "Recommendations" I find these words:

The recommendations of your committee are as follows:

They proceed to give recommendations up to page 328 and they conclude with a recommendation for printing. That report was laid on the table and unanimously adopted by the house. I do not know what more we can have as the report of the committee. I should like to know whether we are being presented with something spurious in the votes and proceedings.

Mr. McGIBBON: I will leave it to the judgment of the committee that the recommendation in printed form was not what was given to the subcommittee. The recommendations were sent to the subcommittee to redraft them. I am not complaining. I said the other night that I was not complaining, but when at the very outset I raised the point, we were told that the recommendations of that committee would be accepted in toto. The chairman of the committee will bear me out in that, because I raised the point on the second reading. I say that the spirit of that agreement has been broken.

Mr. RALSTON: I know my hon. friend is under a misapprehension. There is no recommendation by the committee in regard to the subject with which we are now dealing. The recommendation of the committee with regard to pension legislation is word for word in the bill as it appears in the report. My hon. friend must be fair about this matter. The section now being dealt with is not in the recommendation of the committee; it was not dealt with by the committee in any way. It is a matter of administration which the minister said would be dealt with on the floor of the house and before this committee. The special committee has not dealt with it at all. This is the only committee that has discussed it and we are now dealing with it here. I do not think my hon. friend should charge bad faith when the special committee had nothing to do with it at all. It was not referred to them.

Mr. McGIBBON: It is a departure in this way, that it is something new. It never came before the special committee.

Mr. RALSTON: Does my hon. friend suggest that it is not competent to bring before this committee and before parliament something that does not happen to have been the law before with regard to pension matters? With all due deference to the committee, the chairman and the members of it, I ask him: Does he think the report of the committee is to be the last word on pension regulations and is to exclude everything else with regard to these matters?

Mr. McGIBBON: That was absolutely the promise.

Mr. RALSTON: As one member of parliament I do not propose to be bound by any promise that may have been made that a special committee is to be permitted to make recommendations and that no one else is to have a word to say on subjects not dealt with by it. That is a most preposterous suggestion.

Mr. POWER: I think the hon. member for Muskoka is under a misapprehension. Matters relating to pensions and other things which interested soldiers were referred to the committee of which my hon. friend is a member. But it was never promised that if there was anything that we left out, the minister or somebody else could not make a suggestion. We were not speaking ex cathedra or as being infallible in all respects. As chairman of the committee I am not prepared to say that the very last word in legislation regarding soldiers was brought down by that committee. Indeed I think within a very few years we shall probably have to revise a great deal of the legislation which has been brought down this year.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Next year.

Mr. POWER: Let us hope not next year. I never understood from the minister that it was not his intention to add to our recommendations in a way that would be beneficial to the administration of the act and that would not be inconsistent with our recommendations. We dealt in so far as we could with amendments to the Pension Act dealing directly with soldiers. We endeavoured as far as possible to make this legislation more workable. If the minister comes and tells us that the departmental administration could be better carried on under such and such circumstances I do not see that that is in any way a violation of any promise which might have been made either to the house or to the members of the committee. We were not asked to deal with these matters. It was not suggested before the committee that we should deal with details of administration and we did not deal with them. I am not familiar with the amendment proposed by the minister. If it is not a good one I see no reason why any member should not get up and object to it. If it is a good one let us not object to it on the ground that the few of us who were members of the committee were not consulted about it. I do not think such a procedure would be fair to the minister; I do not think it is fair for us to endeavour to throw a monkey wrench into the administration of the department.

Mr. McGIBBON: We all appreciate the remarks of the hon. member for Quebec South. I think if he will refer to the stenographic reports of the proceedings of that committee, he will find that everything I have said is backed up by those reports, and there was no member of that committee more strenuous than the hon. member himself in stating that the committee would have the whole say as to the bill that was going to be brought in.

Mr. POWER: My hon. friend will see in the report of the committee these words:

Your committee has not dealt with such amendments to the Pension Act as might be advisable in view of the proposed amalgamation of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment with the Department of Health.

We specifically state in our report, which was concurred in by the house, that we did not deal with those matters, and I cannot understand the position taken by my hon friend. As chairman of the committee, I state publicly and before the house that we did not deal with those matters, and all during the discussion, so far as it was possible, we got away from matters which were purely of an administrative nature. We thought that we had done our job sufficiently well when we brought in amendments to the act relating directly to the welfare of the soldier, relating more directly to his welfare than questions of the kind which have arisen now. That must have been well understood by members of the house, because when the bill was first brought down over a week ago, the hon. leader of the opposition and other hon. gentlemen opposite on various occasions stated, "If this is the recommendation of the committee, it will pass; if it is not, let it stand for discussion." There was no suggestion that only matters referred to by the committee should be legislated on this year. There are, of course, many matters relating to soldiers on which legislation could perhaps be brought down this year which would be beneficial to the soldier, but we could not possibly deal with all matters relating to or in the interests of the soldiers. But we are dealing with as many as we can, and if there are any others, I do not see any objection to the minister making any suggestions along that line.

Mr. McGIBBON: I do not want to get into an argument over this. I think most members of the committee tried to help out the chairman and the government and I would like to bear witness here to the impartiality of the chairman during all the meetings of the committee. But I think it is rather late for him now to hide behind the fact that the report was adopted unanimously by the house, because it was at his suggestion that we on this side allowed the report to be adopted unanimously. Certainly he did give us to understand, speaking on behalf of the government—I brought the question up myself—that nothing would be in the bill that had not been considered by the committee.

Mr. POWER: I want to check up the hon. gentleman right there. I stated that the government had given me an undertaking that they would put into effect and bring down legislation ratifying and confirming everything that was in our report, but I did not say that the government would not bring down anything else, and if my hon. friend wishes to be fair, I think he will admit that that is the case. If not, I do not know what to say about it.

Mr. McGIBBON: I do not think I need to take any lessons in fairness from the hon. member for Quebec South. I think my reputation in that regard will compare favourably. I remember notifying my hon. friend the evening before that I was going to bring this matter up, for the very reason that I had heard that the government was going to bring in a bill and had matters under considreation which were not going to be submitted to the committee. That was at the first or second meeting of the committee. I told the hon. gentleman the evening before at a social engagement what I was going to do, and if he did not give the rest of the committee to understand that we would have the final say as to the bill, he certainly gave me that impression. I think if he wishes to be fair, he will agree that we did all we could to enable the chairman and the rest of the committee to bring in amendments that we thought were fair and reasonable, and to present an non-partisan report, and we refrained from making any minority report because we wanted to present a united front to the house and the country on this question, which is not a political one.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 30—Federal Appeal Board.

Mr. BENNETT: This stands in the same position. This is not a committee recommendation; it is a departmental section, and the question of the Civil Service Act applying to these employees is also in issue here, is it not?

Mr. KING (Kootenay): The clerical service for the appeal board has been supplied from the department. If in the reorganization it is found advisable to make some of the clerks and stenographers permanent within the department, that will be done, but I do not think it is the desire of parliament or of the people of this country at the present time to look upon the appeal board as a permanent board. This is merely to control the services which are now being given to the board through the department; it is simply confirming what is being done at the present time.

Section agreed to.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): My hon. friend from Vancouver-Burrard has suggested that he would like the committee to reconsider section 25. This section was passed some days ago. It is a section coming from the committee, and it is supposed to be in accordance with the unanimous recommendation of the committee. I hesitate after the discussion of a few moments ago to open up any section that has been passed, but if it is thought wise, I shall be glad to hear from my hon. friend.

The CHAIRMAN: I might point out that section 34 was allowed to stand.

Section 34 agreed to.

On section 25—No pension to widow unless married before disability, or living with or maintained by pensioner.

Mr. CLARK: I am very glad that the minister of this department and the Minister of National Defence and the chairman of the pensions committee are so broad in their views in regard to this act, and that we may introduce matters other than those considered by the committee if it appears that something has been omitted.

I have two suggestions to offer in regard to section 25. The first is in the nature of a legal amendment, and the other one affects the principle of the act.

Taking first the legal amendment, I submit that this section can have no effect as it stands. Paragraph (b) (i) reads:

> Provided that a pension shall be paid when a member of the forces on and after the coming into force of this act secures from the commission a certificate showing that any pensionable injury or disease from which he was suffering at the time of the marriage would not in the opinion of the commission result in death.

The intention of the committee I know was that the words "on and after the coming into force of this act" should mean the coming into effect of this amendment, whereas if the section is passed in its present form it becomes a part of the principal act and will be read as a part of that act, and the words "on and after the coming into force of this act" will mean the 7th of July, 1919, the date on which the principal act came into effect. I do not want to elaborate on this argument. There are decisions of the courts on the point, but unless it is necessary—

Mr. POWER: That question has been submitted to the Department of Justice, and their report is in accordance with the view of my hon. friend, that we should substitute the words "on and after July 1, 1928," for the words "on and after the coming into force of this act."

Mr. CLARK: I was just going to suggest that the words "the coming into force of this act" be struck out in each of the sub paragraphs.

Mr. RALSTON: I drafted an amendment referring to each of the lines.

Mr. KING (Kootenay): I move, Mr. Chairman, that the section be reopened for the consideration of this amendment.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. RALSTON: I move to amend section 25 by striking out the words "coming into force of this act" in line 2 of subsection (b) (i) and substituting therefor the words "July 1, 1928"; by striking out the words "coming into force of this act" in line 3 of subsection (b) (ii) and substituting therefor the words "July 1, 1928"; by striking out the words "coming into force of this act" in lines 3 and 4 of subsection (b) (iii) and substituting therefor the words "July 1, 1928"; and by striking out the words "coming into force of this act" in line 3 of subsection (b) (iv) and substituting therefor the words "July 1, 1928".

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. CLARK: Before the section is agreed to I wish to bring to the minister's attention something else which I think is very serious. As an illustration, take the case of many soldiers who returned, say, in 1918, before the passing of the main Pensions Act, and who married after their return, probably as the result of an engagement made prior to the war, in ignorance of the provision that the widow would not be entitled to a pension if she married a disabled soldier after the appearance of the disability; in fact she probably married him when he was apparently quite fit and without any expectation of death as a result of the disability. How is that case provided for under these amendments? Take subsection (i).

Mr. RALSTON: Subsection (i) applies to future marriages. Subsections (ii) and (iv) are applicable.

Mr. CLARK: Subsection (ii) provides:

> That a pension shall be paid in the case of a member of the forces who has married before the coming into force of this act, and who has obtained from the commission a certificate showing that any pensionable injury or disease from which he was suffering at the time of the marriage, would not in the opinion of the commission result in death.

Nearly ten years have elapsed, and I should say that hundreds of these men have died as a result of the disability referred to, and their widows are not receiving a pension. How can you provide for such cases under that subsection? Obviously they are not provided for, and those men who married in 1919, before this act came into force, are surely the most deserving of all, for they married in ignorance of any prohibitive provisions. Now take subsection (iii):

That a pension shall be paid in the case of a member of the forces who has married and who has died of a pensionable disability prior to the coming into force of this act,—

Perhaps this is the clause which is intended to apply:

—if, at the time of the marriage, the condition of such member of the forces was such that the prospective wife after making reasonable enquiries would not anticipate that the injury or disease would be a substantial factor in causing death, provided, however, that it shall be conclusively presumed that such injury or disease was not a substantial factor in causing death, if at the time of the marriage there existed no resultant pensionable disability from such injury or disease.

Just picture a woman who married a returned soldier in 1918 now proving that she made reasonable inquiries which led her not to anticipate that the injury would result in death. Why would she make "reasonable inquiries" as to the expectation of the man's life? I think the suggestion really is not fair. It is rather ridiculous to expect that the wife would make such inquiries, for there was nothing in the law at the time to make it necessary for her to do so. That argument might be used after the main Pensions Act came into effect, when she would be warned that if she married after the appearance of the disability she would get no pension; but for those cases where marriage took place before the passing of the main Pensions Act it is not reasonable. Now subsection (iv):

That a pension shall be paid in the case of a member of the forces who has married prior to the coming into force of this act and who fails to apply to the commission for a certificate showing that any pensionable injury or disease from which he was suffering at the time of the marriage would not in the opinion of the commission result in death and who subsequently dies of a pensionable disability if at the time of the marriage the condition of such member of the forces was such that the prospective wife after making reasonable enquiries would not anticipate that the injury or disease would be a substantial factor in causing death; provided, however, that it shall be conclusively presumed that such injury or disease was not a substantial factor in causing death, if at the time of the marriage, there existed no resultant pensionable disability from such injury or disease.

The same argument applies to this subsection. I would make two suggestions. First, that we adopt the provision which was embodied in Bill No. 70 in 1925 which passed this house, and which provided:

That a pension shall be paid when the marriage takes place prior to a date one year after discharge of a member of the forces.

That would cover the cases I have mentioned of men who married before the coming into effect of the main Pensions Act, and would give them a year after their discharge within which to complete the contract of marriage and protect the wife. The other suggestion is that the words:

—or if the member of the forces was not in receipt of a pension at the time of the marriage.

—be added at the end of paragraphs (iii) and (iv). Then the last sentence in each paragraph would read:

—provided, however, that it shall be conclusively presumed that such injury or disease was not a substantial factor in causing death, if at the time of the marriage there existed no resultant pensionable disability from such injury or disease, or if the member of the forces was not in receipt of a pension at the time of the marriage.

It would have this effect. As it stands now, if there is a pensionable disability for which the man has not been pensioned, the widow is out of luck and can never receive a pension. It seems to me that the words "or if the member of the forces was not in receipt of a pension at the time of the marriage" ought to be conclusive and the wife should be entitled to a pension should he die as a result of this disability. This section is a very complicated one and requires some mature consideration on the part of the minister and of the law officers of the crown. The section should stand until the minister has had a chance to reconsider it. I firmly believe that there are two or three points in it which have escaped the attention of the committee and which ought to be reconsidered before the section passes.

Mr. RALSTON: As regards the case where marriage was solemnized soon after the termination of the war, or soon after discharge, the sections as drafted are, I think, intended to cover every case. The section to which my hon. friend refers, embodied in the bill of 1925, is now covered by the sections before us. What the 1925 bill did was to make it absolutely sure that where a woman married within a year after discharge, in the event of the death of her husband she would be entitled to pension if there was a total or a pensionable disability. Now it depends on what seems to be the really logical factor in deciding these cases. My hon. friend knows, as does the house, that the reason for the section as it originally stood was the desire to avoid a repetition of the experience of other countries; so that this country would not be paying pensions in cases where the marriage was, or might be said to have been, a death bed marriage. The result of this practice in the republic to the south of us has been that they are still paying pensions on account of the civil war.

I would point out to the committee that this section is much broader than the provisions in England. In England, if the marriage took place after the discharge of the soldier or after the end of the war, no pension is payable to the widow if the man dies from a pensionable disability. We are going much further, and I for one am very much pleased indeed to see that we are adopting the principle contained in this section. But the principle is that there must be some examination of the circumstances under which the marriage was performed; and if the marriage was performed under such circumstances that the woman could reasonably anticipate that the injury or disease from which her future husband was suffering at that time—if it happened to be a war disability—would eventually cause his death, then no pension would be paid, inasmuch as it involved a liability not contemplated at the time of enlistment. That is the principle of sections 3 and 4.

There is another provision to the effect that the spouse may make the thing more certain by going to the Board of Pension Commissioners and asking them to inquire into the circumstances of the husband's physical condition at the time of marriage, and give a certificate that at the time of marriage the injury or disability was not of such a nature as, in the opinion of the commission, would result in death. Under either of these circumstances the pension is payable, and in a number of cases I have examined it would appear as if a great many of those who heretofore have been denied pensions will get the benefit of the amendment which is offered. May I say further that the effect of the amendment is not simply to provide for cases where death occurs at some time in the future, but to permit widows who have already made applications, and whose applications have been refused, to come now to the board and say, "We are able to prove the circumstances which are required under these sections and are therefore entitled to pension".

Mr. BENNETT: That would be since the act came into force—since 1919.

Mr. RALSTON: No; my hon. friend did not get the effect of the provision.

[Mr. Ralston.]

Mr. BENNETT: I read it carefully.

Mr. RALSTON: The effect of the first section is that in the case of all past marriages—

Mr. BENNETT: Regardless of time.

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, so long as they were before July first, 1928, as now provided by the amendment suggested by my hon. friend from Burrard. So that everyone gets the benefit of it whether the marriage takes place within a year or two years or three.

It is now ten years after the war. I may say to the committee that in the United States, under their pension legislation, the right to pension of the widow of a soldier ceases, as I understand it, ten years after the war. If the marriage takes place any time after ten years subsequent to the war, the right to pension goes. So that we are doing better, because by this act if marriage takes place fifteen years after the war, provided a certificate can be obtained, the widow can still claim pension. I do think the section ought to commend itself to the committee, and in the interests of those whom it is sought to benefit it would be inadvisable to attempt to incorporate in it any arbitrary provisions. We have already tried to deal, under the meritorious clause, with the cases which my hon. friend from Burrard has mentioned. The hon. member probably knows of cases of men who were engaged before they went overseas and who have applied under the meritorious clause, and some cases have been granted.

Mr. BENNETT: And some refused.

Mr. CLARK: Would they come under this section?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes; look at subsections (ii) and (iv); they are covered in both. If they are still living they may go to the Board of Pension Commissioners and get a certificate; and it is provided that even if they do not get a certificate and death occurs subsequently the widow may still go to the board and say, "At the time I was married to my husband this was his physical condition and I had no reasonable ground for expecting that it would cause his death." In either case the pension is granted, so that the section covers the case mentioned by my hon. friend. The section to which the hon. gentleman has referred did not meet with the response which this country desired, and I hope that this section will have a more favourable response. This is word for word in keeping with the report of the committee, except for the fact that we have substituted July 1 for the words "before the coming into force of this act", and I feel that substantial relief is being afforded.

Mr. CLARK: The minister says that this provision covers the case I have mentioned. I thought I had made it clear that it does not. What woman, before there was a pension law, would make reasonable inquiries as to the expectation of life of her fiancé? Yet this is what is required here. The only other provision under which she can secure recognition is this:

Provided, however, that it shall be conclusively presumed that such injury or disease was not a substantial factor in causing death, if at the time of the marriage there existed no resultant pensionable disability from such injury or disease.

But if the pension board, subsequent to the marriage, finds that the man, prior to the marriage, was suffering from a disease which afterwards progressed to such an extent that he became pensionable after marriage—although the disease pre-existed marriage—then under the subsection referred to the woman will not be entitled to pension.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend is taking the proviso the wrong way; it is a proviso for the benefit of the wife, and it states that in certain cases it is conclusively presumed that the disease did not contribute to death. It does not say that in other cases it may not be proved that the disease did not contribute to death. If it comes under this proviso, if it is conclusively presumed, that does not stop her from proving it quite apart from that.

Mr. CLARK: If there is no resultant pensionable disability.

Mr. RALSTON: But this does not say that because there was a resultant pensionable disability it is thereby presumed that that disability was going to cause death.

Mr. CLARK: As I said before, this is very complicated; I see it one way and the minister sees it another. This is how I see it: If no resultant pensionable disability existed at the time of marriage the woman may qualify for pension, but if after the marriage it is ascertained that a disability existed prior to the marriage for which he was afterwards pensionable, under that subsection she cannot qualify for a pension.

Mr. RALSTON: Under that proviso she does not get the benefit of that conclusive presumption, but she may show that the disability was not one which would likely cause death.

Mr. CLARK: Now the minister and I are in perfect agreement. Now, show me the woman who, in 1918, before there was a pension law, would think of making reasonable inquiries as to whether or not her fiance had a reasonable expectation of life. No man or woman would ever think of such a thing.

Mr. POWER: Why does my hon. friend mention 1918?

Mr. CLARK: I mention it for the reason that many men returned from the front in 1918 and many were married in that year but the Pension Act did not come into effect until July 1919.

Mr. POWER: There were pension regulations before that, and there was the old Militia Pension Act.

Mr. CLARK: Yes, but the difference is this: They would have notice of an law on the statutes, but they would not have notice of any regulations. Ignorance of the regulations might be excused, but ignorance of the Pension Act would not excuse them.

Mr. RALSTON: That applies to anybody married up to July 1, 1928, or until to-night, when we are discussing this matter. These people have had no notice of this, but my hon. friend will remember that the situation suggested is whether a prospective wife made reasonable inquiries. Perhaps there were no inquiries necessary, but I would have thought that if the prospective husband suffered from a severe disability it would be reasonable to assume that the two of them together would consult a doctor as to what effect that disability would have, whether in 1918 or 1929.

Mr. CLARK: No, the minister does not get my point. In 1919 there was a statute passed, which said they were not entitled to a pension if they married after the appearance of the disability, but they did not know of that in 1918.

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, the same provision was there.

Mr. CLARK: But it was not on the staute books.

Mr. RALSTON: Does my hon. friend think either one of the parties read the statutes or the regulations?

Mr. CLARK: There is a difference in the legal position, and that makes their case so much stronger. I feel that the words "or if the member of the forces was not in receipt of a pension at the time of the marriage" should be added at the end of the sections (iii) and (iv). That does not make any very material difference, but it will clear up that point about the resultant pensionable disability. I ask the minister to take that under consideration and not press this section through to-night.

Mr. POWER: The principle involved in this section always has met with my bitter opposition ever since we have had pension committees. I have supported the principle that any widow who married a soldier after the appearance of his disability was not entitled to pension in case her husband died. That is the opinion held in England as laid down in the statutes of that country, and I have been one of those who fought against the adoption of that principle here. This is the principle which was also adopted by the senate. I would call that fact to the attention of my leader, hoping that some day it might qualify me for a place in the senate. However, this year I allowed myself to be convinced that possibly a good case could be made out for the widow who married after the appearance of the disability.

Mr. CLARK: Does my hon. friend think it would be possible to arrange for a seat in the senate right away, in order to let us get this measure through?

Mr. POWER: I heartily endorse that suggestion. I do not know whether there are any vacancies from my province just now, but if my hon. friend would help me out we might create one.

Mr. McQUARRIE: My hon. friend can reform the senate then.

Mr. POWER: Certainly it would be a good senate then. However, I was prepared to accept the principle that in certain cases a widow who marries a man whom she knew to suffer a disability should get a pension; the thought I had in my mind and which was entertained by many others was to get away from the danger of death bed marriages and of perpetual pensions going on for years after the death of the soldier, benefiting people who could not be considered to have helped the soldier in any way while he was at war. The government of this country promised the soldier when he went away that they would look after his dependants, his wife and his children, but they did not promise to look after any wife he might marry after he returned.

I am free to admit that a case has been made out with respect to the returned soldier when we say that if in the event of his death we deprive his widow of a pension, in certain circumstances possibly we deprive him of a chance of getting married, although I do not believe this country would think very much of the woman who would refuse to marry a returned soldier on the ground that she would not be in receipt of a pension in case he died.

However, that principle has been accepted, and I submit to this committee that it should be restricted in every possible way in order that this country may not be burdened for years and generations to come with pensions which have not been earned but which may be paid to people who have no possible right to them. So we are surrounding this measure with certain restrictions.

It was proposed to the committee that persons who could prove a bona fide engagement to marry before the soldier went overseas should be entitled to pension. That contention received strong support from the National Council of Women and from a great many members of the committee, and I think would receive support from the public also. However, it must be remembered that here would be involved the question of evidence of an engagement to marry, which is a very difficult thing to prove. In many cases, the soldier being dead, the only evidence we would have would be that of the person claiming pension, and without saying anything derogatory to the soldier who went overseas, I submit that we would have hundreds of applicants who would come before the Board of Pension Commissioners and produce affidavits to the effect that in London they became engaged to marry a certain soldier who was afterwards killed overseas, or who returned to Canada and afterwards died as the result of a disability incurred overseas. I think to have admitted that principle would have made the act unworkable.

Other suggestions were made; it was suggested that in the case of soldiers who married within one year after their discharge and afterwards died the widows should be entitled to pension. I submit that if we place any such time limit it will be extended again and again, as has already happened this year in another connection. So the committee thought it advisable, instead of playing with questions of limitation, to remove them altogether in almost every case. In my opinion, if we are going to lift the restrictions which are placed about this section, we might just as well say to the house, "Let us do away with the principle, so that every woman who marries a soldier who returned from overseas and later died would be entitled to pension." It seems to me, however, that this section, drafted as it is, is one which could be accepted. It restricts in one way, and in another way it is far broader in its operation than any section drafted along the lines of the suggestions made in recent years that there should be a time limitation, or that those who married prior to the coming into force of the act of 1919 should be entitled to certain benefits. This protects the widow from the time the soldier was wounded, provided the conditions specified herein are adhered to.

After all, we want to be of some practical benefit to the soldier, and I think the committee laboured with that end in view. On four separate occasions amendments to the Pension Act covering this matter were passed by the House of Commons, and were rejected by another house. It is at least possible that if the act seemed too wide, this section would benefit, I would almost say, hundreds of cases, and may appear to our friends in the other house as a less innocuous form. Personally I think it goes very far, and the legislation is at any rate based on a principle other than that of time limitation. Every member of this house knows that that is useless from the standpoint of restriction, and it is also arbitrary. I heartily commend the section to the house, if it is intended to do anything which may be of use to the soldier. With the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Clark), which makes clear the intent of the act, I think that the section should be accepted as it is, and should be passed. It was fully discussed in the committee. There were different opinions; I think a number of the members did not agree that this is the best possible section, but they all agreed that something should be done for the persons concerned.

Mr. BOYS: As I understand it, the member for Vancouver-Burrard wants to know why it is the burden of proof is placed upon the widow, and that also puzzles me a little. Why should it not be up to the department in the first place? The marriage is proved; it is proved that a member of the forces died; then comes the question, shall the widow be entitled to a pension? Why should she not be entitled? Then you say, "You shall not have a pension unless you can show that prior to marriage you made certain reasonable inquiries, and after that you did not anticipate that the injury or disease would be a specific factor in causing death." When she shows that she was married, and her husband died from the injury, why should it not be up to the department to show that any reasonable inquiry on her part would have disclosed that death would likely result from the injury from which her husband was then suffering? You are putting the burden of proof upon the woman. Why should it not be upon the department, when she once establishes the fact that she was married to a soldier, and that he died from his injury?

Mr. POWER: Is my hon. friend referring to the words after the word "provided?"

Mr. BOYS: I am referring to the words which appear in subsection (iii), paragraph (b) of section 32; section 25 of this bill. I will read it to make it clear:

> That a pension shall be paid in the case of a member of the forces who has married and who had died of a pensionable disability prior to the coming into force of this act, if, at the time of the marriage,—

I understand there is a change there.

> —the condition of such member of the forces was such that the prospective wife after making reasonable inquiries would not anticipate that the injury or disease would be a substantial factor in causing death.

The point I am trying to make is that the burden of proof should not be put upon the woman in that respect. I do not think any woman would be apt to know anything about this law. I suppose she would satisfy herself that she wanted to marry the man, and perhaps would know that he had some injury or trouble of some kind, but I do not suppose she would go any further, and I do not think she would ever make any such inquiry.

Mr. POWER: It would be reasonable for her not to go any further.

Mr. BOYS: I do not think it would be reasonable for her not to do that, when she would not know anything about the law. I will admit that if the man was suffering from an injury or disease which any reasonable person would expect might cause death, perhaps she should not get a pension then if she married him. But my point is that it should be up to the department, and not up to the woman. You say to her: "You have qualified in every way, but you have not made inquiry, and because you have not you must suffer."

Mr. POWER: I would go so far as to say that it would be reasonable for her to make no inquiry at all and she would be entitled to pension.

Mr. BOYS: I do not think my hon. friend would seriously suggest that any board or commission would come to the conclusion that a person who had made no inquiry had made reasonable inquiry.

Mr. McGIBBON: I am not opposing this suggestion, as I think it is of considerable merit, but I made a proposition to the committee that I thought was simpler and probably more effective than this one. If you put all the women on an equality and restricted them to the first marriage after discharge, I think you would simplify it. It is something you can justify without any discrimination.

Mr. McQUARRIE: I submit that the hon member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) has taken a wrong view of this matter. I understood him to say that he had always been opposed to granting pension to the widow of a soldier who had a pensionable disability at the time of marriage.

Mr. POWER: Where she married him after the appearance of that disability.

Mr. McQUARRIE: Or who had married the soldier after the appearance of the disability. I think that is going a little too far. I quite agree that in the case of death bed marriages, as they are called, where, for the sake of getting a pension a woman marries a man who is just about to die—if there have been such cases, and I doubt very much if there have been many—she should not be entitled to the pension. In the ordinary case, where a man has a pensionable disability and gets married and has children, a situation arises which, to my mind, constitutes an anomaly. As I understand the act, in such a case there would be a pension allowed in respect of the children, but no pension would be given to the mother of those children. The pension would not be sufficient to enable the mother to pay her full living expenses and also the living expenses of the children; it would be sufficient only to provide for the maintenance of the children. I do not think a marriage of that kind should in any sense be termed a death bed marriage. It was a marriage which took place in the usual way, and there is no question that the mother of the children of a man who fought for this country in the war should receive special consideration.

I have in mind a case which may or may not have been brought to the attention of the committee—I was not on the committee myself—where a man and his three sons went to the war voluntarily. One of the sons was killed in the war and there was no pension in respect of him because he was not married. Another son, after I think two years or more of service in the hottest part of the fight, received a pensionable disability and he was invalided back to Canada. On his return he set about pursuing his ordinary occupation and he was able to carry on for some time. He got married; he had three children, and quite recently he died leaving a widow and three children with nothing at all to take care of them except the pension which would be allowed in respect of the children. It is quite true that the man at the time of his marriage was receiving a pension and I presume it would also be held that in his case his disability constituted a factor in the causes which brought about his death. It seems to me, however, that that is a case which should be provided for and I would suggest that it would be only fair and reasonable for us to provide for payment of a pension to a widow where one or more children are involved. I quite agree with the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Clark) that the clause as it reads is not satisfactory, because, as he pointed out, what has to be shown is not that the man was receiving a pension at the time of marriage, but that he had a pensionable disability. That seems to be very unreasonable. I understand that if a pensionable disability existed at the time of the marriage, the widow is not entitled to a pension. I do not think that is what was intended by the committee. It would be more reasonable if it was provided that the man was receiving a pension at the time. In that way the clause would mean something because it is a difficult problem to decide whether the pensionable disability actually existed at the time of the marriage or not. If the man was receiving a pension then of course there could be no dispute about the matter. But even in that case I think the committee has not gone far enough and the people of Canada as a whole are willing that pensions should be allowed on a reasonable scale and that we should not be too technical in considering applications for pensions.

I have had a good deal of experience in dealing with pension cases and I am afraid I shall have to admit that I have come to the conclusion that the pension authorities have adopted a policy to the effect that they will if possible refuse to grant a pension. I do not know whether such instructions were issued or not, but it seems as if they were imbued with the idea that it was their duty to keep down pensions as much as possible. That is not what we should have in this country at all. That is not what the Canadian people desire. I would suggest that we should perhaps go to the other extreme; that we should be liberal in granting pensions and that there should be authority or jurisdiction or power in the pension commission to grant pensions in cases where there is a real necessity for them.

SUPPLY—DUMPING DUTY

The house resumed, from Monday, May 14, consideration of the motion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) for committee of supply, and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Anderson (Halton):

That all the words after the word "that" be stricken out and the following substituted therefor:

"In the opinion of this house the necessary action should be taken by the government forthwith to effectively control the importation into Canada, either on sale, or on consignment, of natural products of a class or kind produced in Canada under conditions which prejudicially or injuriously affect, or threaten to prejudicially or injuriously affect, the interests of Canadian producers."

Mr. J. A. FRASER (Cariboo): When the house rose last night I had made reference to the declaration of the Prime Minister that what the government objected to in the presentation by the delegation was that they were asking the government to give the Minister of National Revenue and the officials of that department authority and power to fix throughout the year a tariff on the natural products of the Dominion of Canada. I listened very attentively to what the delegation had to say, and let me point out that the delegation made no such request of the government at any time. My observation would lead me to believe that the delegation was a company of reasonable and intelligent people, and that they did not come to Ottawa for the purpose of presenting to the government any request that would make them look foolish. These gentlemen knew perfectly well that they had been enjoying protection by virtue of some statute or regulation or order in council. I quite admit that they may have been confused as to the correct name to give to some of these statutes or regulations or orders in council, but they knew perfectly well that for the two preceding years they had been enjoying certain benefits by virtue of the application of some law or regulation or order. They were also of the opinion that they were entitled to the continuance of the benefits they were receiving under the law or regulation or order, because it is and has been the settled policy of the government of the Dominion of Canada ever since confederation to give protection wherever protection is necessary and reasonable. The manufacturers have been enjoying that privilege for a great number of years, and if the manufacturers are entitled to it, there is no reason why the farmers and producers of all kinds should not be entitled to protection. They may not have had a clear appreciation of the order in council, but they understood perfectly the application of its cancellation. They knew that their protection had vanished, and they came to Ottawa asking for the restoration of the protection which they had enjoyed.

I make the statement that the Prime Minister in making the statement he did, that this delegation came to Ottawa seeking authority for the customs officials to set a tariff or impose a duty, did not place the request of these gentlemen in the proper light. He put an improper interpretation on the request that had been presented to the government. In addition to that, he practically told them that he did not propose to accede to their request. Let the producers of the Dominion of Canada just analyse the statement which the Prime Minister made on that occasion, and I think they will agree with what I have said. I will quote from the stenographic report of the statement of the Prime Minister. He said:

I hope you will go away feeling that the government is only too delighted to have this opportunity of hearing your representations, and of stating the situation to you in the light of the facts as they are. And what I hope you will carry away with you is the correct impression, not that any statute has been repealed, and not that any power given to the governor in council has been repealed. That all remains, and will continue to remain as it is. All that has been repealed is what we have been obliged to recognize was an interpretation that was leading to extremes, in a manner which, speaking for myself personally, seemed to be highly prejudicial to the very interests that it was intended to safeguard.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Hear, hear; that is all right.

Mr. FRASER: That was the statement made by the Prime Minister, and I want the producers of this Dominion to note exactly what the Prime Minister states. He states that the statute has not been repealed, that the power given under the order in council has not been repealed, that all remains and will continue to remain as it is. Remember, when the Prime Minister was speaking, the order in council had been repealed, and he makes the statement that it is going to stay repealed, because he says, "and will continue to remain as it is."

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No. The powers given under the statute remain as they are.

Mr. FRASER: The power of the governor in council has been repealed, and it was repealed at the time the Prime Minister made that statement.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No; my hon. friend is mistaken. What was repealed was the order in council, not the power given to the governor in council. The power given to the governor in council remains, but the particular order that the minister recommended under that power was repealed—not the power that the governor in council has.

Mr. FRASER: The order in council has been repealed. Therefore section 6 and section 43 are inoperative.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No.

Mr. FRASER: That was the effect, and the Prime Minister stated that that state of affairs was going to remain. That is my interpretation.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Let me give my hon. friend the right interpretation. Section 43 remains in the statute. That section gives certain powers to the governor in council. That section still remains, and those powers still remain. Under that section a certain order was passed by the government, at the instance of the minister. That particular order has been repealed, but the minister to-morrow can bring another recommendation before council and the governor in council can pass an order under the general power that still exists.

Mr. FRASER: I am well aware of that, but, with all deference to the right hon. the Prime Minister, I maintain that when the order in council had been repealed the legislation was inoperative.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, not the legislation.

Mr. FRASER: Yes, the legislation, and you cannot put it into effect.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is where the whole confusion has arisen. The legislation is still there which gives the governor in council power to pass any order in council under it.

Mr. FRASER: It is still there, but what good is it? It is not operative. You cannot operate under it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, we can.

Mr. FRASER: No sir, you cannot, without another order in council.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We could put through another order in council in five minutes.

Mr. FRASER: I do not know that you can. The Prime Minister says that he could put an order in council through in five minutes, but he sat in power from 1922 to 1926, and he did not pass such an order in council.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There was no need for it.

Mr. FRASER: No need for it? I know that the fruit growers of British Columbia were complaining during all those years of exactly the same thing, and they were asking for this relief. I still maintain that the statement made by the Prime Minister shows that the legislation is not operative. It is not working, and he says that it is going to remain that way. So the fruit growers of British Columbia cannot look to this government for any remedy under the existing conditions.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is quite wrong.

Mr. FRASER: I am sorry, but I must disagree with the Prime Minister.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is quite wrong, and the best appeal is to the statute itself. The statute is still there.

Mr. FRASER: That is quite all right. I am not contending that the statute was repealed, but let me ask the Prime Minister this question: Are you going to put into effect another order in council to-morrow, as you state you have power to do?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, the very minute the minister comes to council and gives us reasonable grounds for putting that order into effect, the governor in council will I believe act on the advice of the minister.

Mr. BENNETT: That will not please the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young).

Mr. FRASER: What are reasonable grounds?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: When the purpose of the statute is to be invoked.

Mr. FRASER: In view of the repeal of the order in council, the legislation is inoperative so far as giving protection to the fruit growers of British Columbia is concerned, and I would ask, what are the chances of the fruit growers getting the benefit of any such order in council and getting the benefit of this legislation provided this government remains in power? We can only judge them by their past performances. This order in council and this statute continued in existence from 1922 to 1926, and the Liberal government of those days made no move to provide the growers of fruit and vegetables with any protection at all. They were voted out of office, and it was not until their successors had got in the saddle that any protection was provided for those engaged in this industry. I challenge any member of the government or any of its officials to deny that statement. I say they sat for four years with this machinery at their disposal, but they absolutely refused to make it effective in any shape or form. Now, do the fruit and vegetable growers of this country expect to get legislation or orders in council from this government to protect their industry?

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Was there not a duty of 30 per cent in effect all those years?

Mr. FRASER: I am not talking about the common, ordinary duty at all. I am talking about the application of the special duty under section 6 and section 43, and my hon. friend from Weyburn knows it very well.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): The dumping duty goes on without the necessity of an order in council.

Mr. FRASER: Well, the dumping duty that I am talking about was not on.

An hon. MEMBER: You are talking about your own.

Mr. FRASER: No, I am talking about the dumping duty under 47a. Now, 43 was not put in operation.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): Section 43 cannot and does not provide for a dumping duty.

Mr. FRASER: It provides for a special duty.

Mr. YOUNG (Weyburn): No.

Mr. FRASER: You are tangling this thing up so we cannot tell what you are talking about. The fact remains that the Liberal government did not provide any protection for our fruit and vegetable growers, and they will not provide it now. I challenge contradiction of that statement.

Mr. ILSLEY: There is protection of 90 cents per barrel under the general law.

Mr. FRASER: I am not talking about that, I am talking about the special, or dumping, duty.

Mr. ILSLEY: But you are saying—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. ILSLEY: Will the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FRASER: Certainly.

Mr. ILSLEY: What is the protection afforded by the general law on a barrel of apples; how does it compare with the United States tariff?

Mr. FRASER: We do not talk of barrels of apples in British Columbia, we talk of boxes of apples.

Mr. ILSLEY: My hon. friend knows that the tariff deals with barrels of apples.

Mr. FRASER: Yes.

Mr. ILSLEY: Does he not know that the tariff is 90 cents per barrel?

Mr. FRASER: I think that is correct.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is 20 cents higher than the United States tariff—one of the highest tariffs in the world on apples.

An hon. MEMBER: What has that got to do with it?

Mr. ILSLEY: My hon. friend was saying that no protection was afforded, and—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. FRASER: Now then, the Prime Minister stated to the delegates that the statute was going to remain as it is. It would have been just a little clearer to them had he added "as it is and was from 1922 to 1926." Then they would know exactly what he meant, which was that the statute was not going to be put into operation. I interpret the action of the government as an acknowledgment that they are impotent to put into effect that special duty on fruits and vegetables on account of the peculiar situation, half of their support being free trade and the other half protection. The Prime Minister also said that:

> The authority under the order in council was applied in a manner which, speaking for myself personally, seemed to be highly prejudicial to the very interests that it was intended to safeguard.

That is, the Prime Minister told the fruit and vegetable growers, after they had been enjoying the benefits of that protection for the last three or four years: You were not enjoying any protection at all; you only thought you were enjoying it. But as a matter of fact they were actually enjoying the protection, because he says here that it was—> —highly prejudicial to the very interests that it was intended to safeguard.

Now, I want to ask the fruit and vegetable growers of the Dominion if they think that under the operation of the order in council and the appraisers' bulletins they were pre-judicially affected; or were they benefited. I am confident that every fruit grower will say: Why, for the last two years we admit that we have been enjoying benefits, and that is what we are coming here for. These practical men know perfectly well that they have been enjoying benefits under that condition of affairs. Not only has the producer benefited, but the consumer has not complained of the duties that were imposed under that section. I will refer to this a little later.

I say to the fruit and vegetable growers of the Dominion: As long as this government is in office the powers under those sections of the act are dead and will not be revived. In my opinion the Prime Minister wishes that order in council buried forty feet deep in the fertile soil of fair Saskatchewan, and he certainly will not erect over it a monument with the inscription, Resurgam. He would like to see it buried there forever.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But not the statute. Leave the statute with its powers.

Mr. FRASER: You cannot get me as badly balled up as you got the delegation the other day; I have studied it pretty closely since that time.

Now, I should like to address a few remarks to my hon. friend from Laprairie-Napierville (Mr. Lanctot), who spoke last night on the effect of this section and pleaded eloquently for protection for the fruit and vegetable growers in his section of Quebec. How does he expect to get it from this government? I do not think he has a chance in the world. Under present conditions it is an impossibility for the government to provide it. The translation of his speech appeared this morning, and he said something like this: After the session is over I expect to come down to Ottawa with a delegation and put my request before the Government, and I think the Government will see that it is granted. Well, I do not think anything of the kind. I am confident that the government has no intention of restoring the order in council which would bring into operation the special duty. Therefore it seems to me it is impossible for the hon. gentleman to vote against this amendment.

But there is also another angle to this controversy. It is a matter in regard to which the cabinet itself is not of one opinion. That may be all right; I am not finding any fault with it. But I am pointing out to the people of this Dominion the existing conditions so far as the cabinet is concerned in relation to this legislation. You will find in the same report from which I quoted a few minutes ago a statement made by the Minister of National Revenue towards the close of the delegation's visit. I wish to read that statement, and you will bear in mind that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) had stated that the customs officials—the Minister of National Revenue and his officers—were not applying this act as the government had intended, but that they were fixing the tariff throughout the year, and that he did not think this was a proper application of the order in council. What had the Minister of National Revenue to say in that regard?

> In the first place, 47a, the law under which the minister could be given authority to fix values, gives the governor in council or the cabinet authority to empower the minister to fix the value.

The Prime Minister in speaking to this delegation emphasized the fact that they were fixing the duty; the Minister of National Revenue says that they are fixing the value.

> The authority to fix values is not in council at all, is not in cabinet. The power that is in council is to give the authority to the minister to actually fix the value. I think that should be understood.

The Minister of National Revenue, whose duty it is to interpret the act and to interpret the intention of the government, as well as to apply the act to the existing conditions, gives that interpretation. He says that the law empowered the minister to fix values. He states that the authority to fix values is not in council at all; it is not in the cabinet. The power that is in the council is "to give authority to the minister to actually fix the value" He goes on:

> The one misconception, or possible misconception that I would desire to remove is this: that whereas the order in council did give the minister power to fix values, and did not state for what period those values should stand, it should not be assumed that these values were fixed by the minister for the whole year, and they stood all the year round.

That is to say, notwithstanding, as the Prime Minister pointed out, that these officials were to fix the duty for the year round, the Minister of National Revenue declares that such should not be assumed to be the case. He goes on:

> The orders in no case, I think, were fixed to stand for a whole year. I think it would be very, very difficult for any minister to come in and say that he has fixed the values to, say, the months of July and August. . . . The whole idea of the minister and his officials is to endeavour to keep those values in force only for such time as such emergency exists. I do not think that there were any instances where it was kept on the year round. I think some of the trouble arose out of this fact: We did fix the value of lettuce, and through an oversight in the department—and I am quite willing to take responsibility for that—at the time it was recommended to us that the fixed value should be taken off the lettuce, through an oversight it was not done, and that value was left on the lettuce for a period longer than it should have remained. I have no great knowledge of the details of all this, but I do know that the department officials do try to carry out the intention of the law and I think that we have been fairly successful in doing that.... I think we have been fairly successful, from the fact that, so far as I am aware, there was never any objection made to it on the part of the consumer.

That is what the Minister of National Revenue said. He went on to say:

I do not want the impression to go abroad that values which had been fixed were fixed for the year. We have in this country a Department of National Revenue. We are collectors of revenue; that is practically our job, and this is one of the things that has been wished on it. However, I might say that we have taken the word of those who know the conditions. My friend the Minister of Agriculture advises me that he thinks a duty should be put, or a higher valuation should be put on certain goods, on vegetables, or on eggs, we will say. He makes the recommendation to the Minister of Customs. The Minister of Customs has been merely the instrument in carrying out the desires of that department.

There you have the Minister of National Revenue at variance with the Prime Minister of the country. More than that, the Minister of National Revenue absolutely ties up the Minister of Agriculture as the party responsible for recommending values. He finds that an emergency exists and then he passes on a recommendation as to value, and the Minister of National Revenue imposes it. What about my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell)? I thought he came from Saskatchewan. And I thought my hon. friend from Weyburn (Mr. Young) was from the same province. The hon. member for Weyburn complained that he could not get information. I think there is an explanation. The Minister of Agriculture has been playing the game of hide and seek with Mr. Weyburn, and Mr. Weyburn says, "I spy". That is the explanation. That is why the hon. member could not get his information.

I have just a few more words to say in conclusion. The district I have the honour to represent contains a great number of fruit and vegetable growers. I had the opportunity of passing through the apple district when the order in council was passed in 1926 fixing the price of apples. If the government could get in contact with the people and could realize the satisfaction which they derived from the imposition of that order in council I think they would reconsider this question and again fix the values of these products. The apple growers at that time, from one end of the valley to the other, made the same comment without any variations. They said: "We are glad that that value has been fixed, because we know now that we are going to get a certain minimum for our apples." For the last two years the trouble has been this: We packed and shipped our apples but we did not know whether there would be any return on them. The apple grower shipped these apples, and out of the first receipts he had to pay for these special charges, and in many instances the amount the apples sold for would not cover the charges. The result was that the grower actually had to dig down into his pocket, after cultivating his orchard and gathering and packing his fruit and shipping it. Apart from losing the whole of that fruit he was out of pocket in connection with the cost of these charges. If this government would realize these conditions and look carefully into the situation I believe they would reconsider the passing of the order in council as it applied from 1926 until the other day.

Mr. F. W. GERSHAW (Medicine Hat): Those who have taken part in this debate have wandered far afield and the discussion has developed into a free for all on the old subject of the tariff. The hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling) last night, in his clear and concise way, quoted at length from a letter written by the Secretary of the Medicine Hat chamber of commerce. I wish to say that this chamber is not a partisan body, and I am sure it has no desire or intention to provide campaign propaganda for any political party. I am sure also that it would be the very last body to claim that it represented the real feeling of the majority of the people in that district. There are many people there —consumers—who believe that they should have the privilege and the opportunity of purchasing fruits and vegetables, when they come in, at reasonable prices and not at prices greatly enhanced by the tariff.

It seems that a wrong impression has gone abroad in two respects, and I believe that impression has been due to the material which has been broadcast so generally on one aspect of this question. The first impression, which in my opinion is wrong, is that the members of the Liberal and Progressive groups are not looking after the interests of the producers, the farmers. These groups, I might mention, were some years ago responsible for retaining the Crowsnest rates. These rates constitute the bill of rights of the Canadian shipper and have resulted in the saving of much money annually to those producers in the prairie provinces. Since the imposition of the Fordney-McCumber tariff against our cattle, grain and other farm products, farmers generally are realizing that we need wider markets, and consequently we have been constantly searching for such markets for our products. Not so long ago the Liberal party went down to defeat in an endeavour to secure a reciprocity arrangement with the United States to give wider markets to our producers.

The second impression which has gone abroad, and which is not correct, is that early fruits and vegetables come in free of duty. Now, let me say that, rain or shine, in season or out of season, this parliament maintains a duty against the importation of these commodities. It is mentioned by the Minister of Finance last night, and I repeat the list now. The duty on apples is ninety cents a barrel; the duty on blackberries, gooseberries, raspberries and strawberries two cents per pound; and all other green fruit not provided for 25 per cent; cabbages, 30 per cent; potatoes, 35 per cent; tomatoes, 30 per cent; turnips, 30 per cent; and vegetables not otherwise provided for 30 per cent. These rates seem to me to be fairly substantial. In addition, it is quite clear that the government, who possibly at most removed the power which the minister or some officer in the department had, at a stroke of the pen, of changing the value or increasing it for duty purposes, surely have the power to impose that duty again by order in council at any time. I believe that the tariff in this respect may work in a way which is of no benefit to the producer, and it will certainly increase prices to the consumer. One case was mentioned last night where the peach producers sold 50,000 boxes of peaches in the prairie provinces, and yet the people had to pay a duty on something like 400,000 boxes, which was the amount used. It seems to me that in the interests of the people generally, this dumping clause should be invoked only when very special conditions arise; and I believe that in connection with such things as food products, and especially fresh fruits and vegetables, which are so necessary to the health of the people, the dumping duty should be imposed—in addition to the duties which are always in existence—only when very exceptional conditions arise.

Mr. C. H. DICKIE (Nanaimo): I will not detain the house very long. The hour is late and, I understand, it is expected to have a division on the question this evening. Coming as I do from a district in which they raise a considerable quantity of fruit products, a district also in which there is considerable activity in poultry, I feel I should be remiss in my duty if I did not say a word or two against the cancellation of the order in council imposing the dumping duty. From just one little part of my district last year there were exported 40 carloads of strawberries alone. We also have large chicken ranches throughout the country. The poultrymen are in despair because of the fact that immediately there is a surplus of eggs in Seattle they send them over to the markets of Vancouver and Victoria, and down goes the market for our eggs. Last year we imported from the United States 3,000,000 dozen eggs. They came in at a very inopportune time so far as our poultrymen were concerned. The remedy for such a condition is easy indeed. When we have a surplus we cannot send our eggs to the United States because we are faced with a duty of eight cents a dozen. But we allow their eggs to come into this country at three cents a dozen. I know no argument in the world against our having a duty as high as the Americans impose against us in regard to eggs.

This matter of fruit and vegetables has been gone into thoroughly by men more conversant with the subject than I am. The hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling), the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Gott), the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Barber) and others have gone comprehensively into the matter and their arguments have been very convincing indeed. I cannot see why the government should not act on their advice. I have received communications by the dozen from boards of trade and chambers of commerce as well as from agricultural societies and individuals, all protesting against the removal of the dumping clause.

Let us get down to the kernel of this matter. The kernel of the matter is this: Out of deference to the wishes of a small group of western farmers the government removed the dumping clause. That is the explanation of the whole thing. And when this is done, what guarantee have we that protection will be given when we need it? Protection cannot be given without offending my smiling friend from Weyburn (Mr. Young) and his colleagues. I say, it is out of deference to their wishes that the dumping clause was removed. The representatives of the good people of Quebec will vote against this amendment and take their medicine with a smile. While voting against it they are voting for the importation of vegetables and fruits from the United States. We have heard that 79 carloads of vegetables rolled into Montreal in one week from the United States—vegetables that could have been grown in Quebec. The members from Quebec, if they vote against this amendment, will simply be voting for a handshake and good-bye to their sons and daughters who will be obliged to cross the line and follow the money we are sending into the United States for fruit and vegetables. I can hardly understand the attitude of the people of Quebec with regard to this matter. I cannot understand a protective people bowing down to the dictates of a small coterie of people from Saskatchewan who believe otherwise. As I say, these members from Quebec will take their medicine lying down, and in the meantime the western free trade winds are wafting their kindred across the line to the United States. How long will they stand it? I feel sorry for them in their humiliation. Soon you will see a cartoon of Jacques, good fellow, with the hon. member for Weyburn over him, his foot on his neck, saying, "You have to take this because it is what we want in Saskatchewan".

We in British Columbia are prepared to pay $1.75 or $2 for our wheat. We wish to see the people of Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba successful and we are prepared to pay more for our bread and for our chicken feed, of which we use a lot in British Columbia, because we want to see the people of the prairies successful. But whether the winds of the prairies have dried up the milk of human kindness in their breasts I do not know. The fact is that whenever we try to sell them our fruit they object; they want to buy from the United States if they can get it a little cheaper. We are willing to buy anything they produce and pay good prices for it because we realize that they deserve all they can get. But what is the situation now. We are going into the highways and byways of the world cajoling people to come into Canada to settle on the land, and when they come here why do we not tell them the truth? Why do we not say to them: "You will not need to milk cows in the chilly eve or dewy dawn, because we get our butter from New Zealand. You do not need to be 'the man with the hoe', because we get vegetables from the United States. We are importing our eggs from the United States. All you have to do is to go into the prairie country and raise wheat, which will take you five or six months in the year, and the rest of the time you will have a chance to gather in the communal halls and talk radicalism, or whatever you might term it."

We have a great country in Canada, but we have got to consider the necessity of compromise. No one will deny the fact that our fruit growers in British Columbia have had a very hard time. We did not coax these people to come; we did not pay their way in, but they came in with money, and millions of dollars were spent in trying to make fruit raising a success in the Okanagan valley. These men are still there trying to do business, and they want you to buy their apples. They demonstrated last year that you did not have to pay any more for their apples because of the fact that you did not buy from the United States. This year, as the hon. member for Yale has told you, they are faced with a great crop, and they are faced with a great crop in the United States. The prairie provinces will be flooded with their C grade apples, and that will prevent the British Columbia growers having a market for their good grade apples. No man knows the fruit indutry better than my good friend, the member for Yale. The hon. member for South Essex placed the vegetable question fairly before you.

For once the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) did not launch his lifeboat and come to the rescue of the government, but he gave a splendid argument in favour of protecting the interests of British Columbia. While he was speaking I could almost hear the Prime Minister murmur, "You too, Brutus!"

As I say, we want relief, and we want the spirit of compromise. We want to buy all we can in Canada and keep our money here. Unless we keep more of our money in Canada we have not a chance in the world of making this the great nation which we desire to make it. We are told by Mr. Frederic Hudd, the statistician of the United States government, that last year our adverse trade balance with the United States was $360,000,000—our statistician puts it a little less. Let us take the American figure of $360,000,000. If we put that $360,000,000 into circulation, have it percolate into every nook and cranny of the business of Canada, you would have 500,000 men at work here. You would have the men returning from the United States, and you would make this country worth while. Why should we have an adverse balance of trade with the United States, Mr. Speaker? We are a country of 9,500,000 people, sending over $800,000,000 to the United States, and they send $457,000,000 of their money here. I have used that argument in the house before, but it is a good argument and I am going to use it again. We should have a favourable balance of trade with these people instead of an adverse balance. We should conserve our raw resources and patronize home industries and we would have the people flocking from the United States instead of going from here to the United States.

If we pay a little more for our apples; if we pay a little more for our eggs, or a little more for our butter, it will be worth it. I know the working men of British Columbia are willing to do so. We want the purchasing power, and we do not mind paying good prices. If the farmers succeed; if the vegetable growers succeed, and if the poultry men succeed, they will erect buildings and give work to carpenters, painters and plasterers. They, in turn, will erect buildings, and that is how an industrial community is built up.

There is no argument at all against a seasonal tariff on vegetables coming into this country. There is no argument against an effective duty on eggs coming into this country from the United States. Take the case of butter and eggs alone. When we entered into that very foolish—I won't say treaty—arrangement with New Zealand, which gave the same terms to them as were embodied in the treaty with Australia, we in British Columbia were going through a rather trying time. The dairymen had not succeeded, but times were getting better. Wages were improving, and people were eating more butter, and the dairymen began to succeed. When we entered into this treaty with Australia the Americans saw the danger. They had a duty of 8 cents a pound against us for butter, but, notwithstanding that duty, in 1925 we sent over $2,500,000 worth of butter to the United States. They saw that butter would be coming in from New Zealand, and they immediately placed a duty of 12 cents a pound on that commodity. That meant that we lost that $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 of trade with the United States, and the arrangement with New Zealand meant that 14,000,000 pounds of butter came into British Columbia and Halifax in seven months. That meant disaster to the dairy people. As has been stated in this house more eloquently than I can put it, all through Ontario they sold their stock, and in British Columbia they went out of the dairy business. If you go there now you will see them going out of the poultry business just the same.

Why, Mr. Speaker, can we not take a leaf out of the book of the people south of us? We have been acting as an immigration agent for them for years. They have attracted our people; they have been getting our population. We spend millions of dollars to induce people to come and settle in Canada. We can bring about the repatriation of many of our people; the members from Quebec can bring back thirty or forty thousand of their compatriots if they would just agree to adopt legislation along the lines I am so clumsily trying to place before you to-night. We have the raw material here; we have a great agricultural country, and we have many other resources.

On motion of Mr. Dickie the debate was adjourned.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, May 16, 1928

The house met at three o'clock.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Third and final report of the select standing committee on industrial relations, with the evidence upon which the report is based—Mr. McIntosh.

PRIVATE BILLS

REFUND OF FEES

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni) moved:

That as it appears by the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of April 25th and 26th, 1928, that the preamble of Bill No. 16, an act respecting certain patent applications owned by the British Steel Piling Company, Limited, was reported as not proven by the committee on miscellaneous private bills of that house, the fees and charges paid thereon be refunded, less the cost of printing and translating the said bill.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. DAVID SPENCE (Parkdale) moved:

That, in accordance with the recommendation contained in the eighth report of the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills presented on the tenth instant, the additional charge paid on the following bills be refunded, namely:

Bill No. 262 (Letter F7 of the Senate), intituled: "An act for the relief of Louise Morris Hays Grier," and Bill No. 282 (Letter B8 of the Senate), intituled: "An act for the relief of William Henery Leonard Gale."

Motion agreed to.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

DISMISSALS OF CIVIL SERVANTS

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Kaiser) made an inquiry regarding civil service superannuation and contributions to the superannuation fund, and I promised him a reply to-day. The information I have is that the matter is now being assembled by the Department of the Secretary of State; the work is not yet completed.

May I take this opportunity of saying to hon. members who probably are peeved at the delay in bringing down returns, that we are advised by the different departments that the extraordinary number of returns required this session and their voluminous character have added materially to the expense of carrying on the work, and we are further advised that some of the departments must have either more time or more help to enable them to complete the work.

TRADE AGREEMENT WITH RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle): Will the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) lay on the table, first, the orders in council which preceded the trade agreement between Canada and Russia, and, secondly, the notes exchanged in London relating thereto? I might observe, with regard to the latter documents, that they are referred to in several of the despatches which have been brought to the house on motions by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer) and the hon.

member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) respectively. Regarding the orders in council, there is no objection to tabling them right away; and so far as the notes are concerned it should be only a matter of form to have them brought down after communication with London.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I see no objection to promising to lay the orders in council on the table. I do not imagine there will be any objection to tabling the notes either, but I should like to communicate with the British government first.

STRUCTURAL STEEL WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Toronto Northwest): I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan) to a very serious strike of structural steel workers employed on an important public work in Toronto, which strike is likely to spread throughout Canada. These workers do not come under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act unless both sides consent. What is the situation, and what has been done or is being done by the minister in the matter? The minister, I understand, is going away to-morrow. May I inquire what action will be taken?

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Minister of Labour): The government has done now about all it can do in the matter. We have no authority but we have offered our offices between the parties to the dispute, and I expect to have them on the telephone within an hour in order to discuss the matter with them again.

Mr. CHURCH: That is not going very far.

Mr. SPEAKER: Orders of the day.

Mr. CHURCH: I should like to find out who is the acting minister.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

STATEMENTS OF R. McCLYMONT

ATTENTION CALLED TO PUBLICATION OF ADVERTISEMENTS IN THE PRESS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct the attention of the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) to the fact that for some ten days or more a series of advertisements has been appearing in local newspapers which reflect seriously on the honour of members of this house. I refer to advertisements that have been signed by one Richard McClymont. Obviously that sort of thing should not continue indefinitely, and while I do not expect the Prime Minister to give an answer immediately, because he might like to consider the matter, I think it of sufficient importance to direct his attention to these advertisements and to ask him whether he does not think some action should be taken to protect, if not the members of this house, at least the vast number of civil servants that are affected by implications in the statements that are made in the advertisements in question. I leave the matter with the Prime Minister for his consideration.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Everyone who has seen the advertisements must have formed in his own mind some impression of the individual who is inserting them and spending his money for such a purpose. I really think it is attaching undue importance to him to direct any attention to the matter.

SEVEN SISTERS FALLS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) whether or not the Seven Sisters waterfalls has been leased, alienated or parted with?

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): I can say the Seven Sisters are still intact and have not been leased.

CHINA-JAPAN RELATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): The other day I asked a question in regard to the trouble between Japan and China and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) replied that he had no official information. As I understand it, Canada is to-day a member not only of the assembly but of the council of the League of Nations, and it seems to me that by this time we should take some cognizance of the situation which is commonly known to exist. Article X of the Peace treaty reads:

> Members of the league undertake to respect and preserve, as against external aggression, the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league.

In view of this provision I should like to ask the Prime Minister what action is being taken in this very serious situation.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The situation in China, as I understand it, is in the nature of a civil war, and the action to which my hon. friend refers is not so much, from the point of view of Japan, active external aggression as it is action taken to defend some of its nationals in a particular area. China and Japan are both members of the League of Nations, and if China felt that she was being attacked aggressively I assume that she would have made some representations to the League of Nations. The provisions of the league require that when any request of the kind is submitted all countries which are parties to the league shall be so informed. Canada has received no information from the secretary general of the league that any representations have been made by China that she is being attacked, and certainly this government has not felt that Canada has any special responsibility to take action while all other nations refrain from so doing, or await representations by China on her own behalf.

MEMBER VOTING INADVERTENTLY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. W. BIRD (Nelson): Yesterday while a vote was in process the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) voted contrary to his intention. Beauchesne states the usage of the house very clearly on this point, and it is a fact that when a member makes a mistake of that kind his vote must stand as originally recorded. In this case the rule has been ignored; I notice that the reports in Hansard and in the votes and proceedings record this vote according to the intention of the hon. member. I am aware that Your Honour made some remarks in explanation of the mistake, but I do not think those remarks could be construed into an order to change the record. However, if that is the case, I would ask if this ruling will change the usage of the house in future. Hon. members will remember that two years ago this rule was applied to me with all its rigour, in consequence of which I became the victim of certain gentlemen whose idea of sportsmanship is somewhat attenuated at election time.

Mr. SPEAKER: The ruling I gave in the case of the hon. gentleman was a sound ruling, and I will live up to it in the future. Last night, when I saw the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) rising I felt very sure, as everyone felt, that he had not heard the question as put. I need not stress that point; the hon. gentleman is deaf and therefore did not hear the question as put, because he had expressed to me and to others his desire to vote against the bill in all its various stages. However, his vote should not have been changed in the votes and proceedings, because May, Bourinot and all the other authorities on parliamentary procedure state that once a vote is registered in the House of Commons it cannot be changed in the report.

Mr. HOCKEN: As I recall the circumstances, the conditions in this case are quite different. My hon. friend from Toronto Northwest voted both ways, but the hon. member for Nelson (Mr. Bird) was paired when he voted.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. W. D. EULER (Minister of National Revenue) moved the third reading of Bill No. 291, to amend the Department of National Revenue Act.

He said: Although I am asking now for the third reading of the bill, I have requested my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) to move the house back into committee for the purpose of introducing an amendment. In the debate yesterday I was asked whether in the appointment of certain officers specified in the bill by the governor in council, or by the Civil Service Commission, returned men would receive the preference. I think I stated very distinctly and emphatically that we did so intend to continue that preference provided other conditions were equal with regard to the qualifications necessary. It was suggested, I think by my hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. McQuarrie), that this might be very well included in the bill itself. I felt at the time, and I am not sure that I have really changed my mind, that it was not necesary so to do, but I think possibly it may meet the wishes of most of the members of the house, and perhaps the returned men themselves will be more reassured on the point, if such a clause is inserted in the bill. The amendment which will be later moved in committee, if the house goes into committee will provide for that.

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Finance): At the request of my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Dunning, that Bill No. 291 be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole with instructions that they have power to amend by adding the following paragraph to subsection 4 therein:

Provided that in the appointment of officers under the provisions of this subsection, other qualifications being equal, preference shall be given to persons who have been on active service overseas on the military forces or who have served on the high seas in a seagoing ship of war in the naval forces of His Majesty during the war, who have left such service with an honourable record or who have been honourably discharged.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I congratulate my hon. friend the Minister of National Revenue on having tardily recognized the soundness of the suggestions made to him yesterday. Had he adopted them then it would not have been necessary to move his bill back into committee. It is very satisfactory to know that the minister has discovered that after all some good may come out of Nazareth, and that we on this side of the house at times do make suggestions which are sound and in the public interest. I congratulate the minister for having accepted our suggestions in that regard.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Johnston in the chair.

On section 1—Minister may nominate certain officers.

The CHAIRMAN: An amendment has been moved by the Minister of National Revenue, as follows:

Provided that in the appointment of officers under the provisions of this subsection, other qualifications being equal, preference shall be given to persons who have been on active service overseas on the military forces or who have served on the high seas in a seagoing ship of war in the naval forces of His Majesty during the war, who have left such service with an honourable record or who have been honourably discharged.

Mr. POWER: I think the minister will agree that he should add such words as would indicate that these men should have served in the military forces of Canada. I do not know the feeling of other members of the house with regard to this matter, but personally I am very much opposed to men who have served anywhere in the military forces of the empire coming here to Canada and taking positions which belong to Canadians.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): In my judgment there is a weakness in the wording of this amendment, as far as the returned soldier is concerned; apparently it holds out to the returned soldier a preference because of his service overseas, but it is not so worded as to give him that preference beyond any doubt. I refer particularly to the words, "other qualifications being equal." It would be very easy to tell a returned soldier, "Yes, you have the qualifications necessary to fill this position, but your qualifications are not so great as the qualifications of another man." It does seem to me, if you want really to give the soldier the preference to which he is entitled, you should specify that he possesses the qualifications necessary to fill the position. For example, you might have a returned soldier who was thoroughly qualified to fill the position. He might be put in competition with a man applying for the same position, and who was a graduate of a university. From an educational standpoint, I suppose the second man would be superior to the first, and yet the returned soldier might possess all the qualifications required satisfactorily and effectively to perform the duties of that office. It leaves it open to the minister or to the board to get out of giving the returned soldier the preference to which he is entitled.

Mr. CLARK: I would just like to say a word with regard to the suggestion of the member for Quebec South (Mr. Power), and point out that many Canadians served in the British army, and did not serve in the Canadian army at all; he would discriminate against them. Similarly, many Englishmen and Scotchmen served in the Canadian forces and, if his principle were adopted, we would discriminate against them. Personally, I am opposed to any such idea being embodied in the legislation of this country. Let us treat on the same basis all residents of the empire who served the empire in the Great War.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. POWER: Would my hon. friend be prepared to allow Americans who served in the Great War to receive preference? Under the amendment, as proposed, I think they would.

Mr. CLARK: The hon. member's proposal would do that very thing. We all had Americans serving in our units, and they are eligible, under the proposal of the member for Quebec South. The Canadians who served in the British army would be barred by the suggestion of the member for Quebec South.

Mr. POWER: I am prepared to go so far as to say that residents of Canada who served in the British army shall be eligible. After all, the principle underlying my suggestion is that positions in the civil service of Canada shall be open to Canadians.

Mr. CLARK: What are you going to do with those who are in the service already?

Mr. McGIBBON: Might I remind the member that the Civil Service Act protects them; they must be Canadian citizens.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle): Since no devout supporter of the government has enough gratitude in his heart to congratulate the opposition, I think it belongs properly to one who is not affiliated with either party, to outline once more the curious influence which Toryism exercises upon certain departments, and upon certain members of the government.

The question of whether the returned soldier should be given preference or not is a very wide one. I think we have gone far enough in that direction. I am second to none in rendering honour to Canadians who served in the army, but, at the same time, there are many good Canadians who served their country by working in Canada and for Canada. We are undermining to a large degree the sense of patriotism and citizenship by always bringing to the front the soldiers, whether they belonged to the Canadian army or to the British army, as people who deserve gratitude and preference over the Canadian citizen who has worked all his life in perhaps a simpler capacity, but certainly in as useful a capacity, as far as Canada is concerned, as by serving in the army.

Some hon. MEMBERS: A safer capacity.

Mr. BOURASSA: Safer for Canada, yes. I fail to see where many of the most outspoken and especially noisy upholders of everything militaristic have, either in the last war or in preceding wars, given evidence of their desire to serve in a non-safe capacity. I have noticed very frequently that the real soldier, the man who went to the fields and fought battles, is usually more modest than the politician who makes such a noise about it. That is one point.

The other point is the one raised by the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power). Are we going to allow the habits of the administration to grow to the extent where no difference is to be made, in preferment, or otherwise, as between the men who acknowledge themselves servants of Canada primarily —whether they believe in the co-operation of Canada in British wars or not, whether they take the point of view of Canadianism or that of British imperialism and Imperial co-operation, is an entirely different question— and the British soldiers?

Consider what the government of Great Britain does for its own people, and what the government of Australia does. I do not think you will find in any statute of Great Britain or of Australia any disposition to put on the same footing as their own people Canadians who may have served accidentally in the army of Great Britain or the Australian militia. You would not find it in India; you would not find it in South Africa, and you would not find it in any British statute. Quite properly, the British look to their own people first; Australia looks to its people first, and South Africa does the same. I think the Canadian government and the Canadian parliament should look to their people first also.

Therefore, the proposal made by the hon. member for Quebec South should recommend itself to the attention of the house, and I think to the attention especially of the members sitting to the right of the Speaker. Perhaps the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler) may be able to take some little inspiration from his friends, rather than to give way so complacently to the opponents of his government and of his party.

Mr. POWER: I have an amendment to the amendment, as follows:

That the said amendment be further amended by adding in the fifth line thereof, after the words "military forces", the words "of Canada".

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac). I would suggest to my hon. friend from Quebec South that he call this question especially to the attention of the Postmaster General (Mr. Veniot). My reason for that is that his remarks a short time ago seemed to be generally accepted by hon. members on that side of the house. The Postmaster General was not present. If he had been present he could not have given his approval in view of the action which he has taken in times past and, indeed, not very long past, because I can give the committee a case where the Postmaster General turned down the application of several Canadians who served overseas in the Canadian army and gave the position to a man who served in the British army.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): What is out of order in that? I do not know whether hon. gentlemen opposite characteristically want to exercise their lungs or not, but there is no reason or common sense back of their cries. I am calling the attention of the committee to the fact that a few months ago the government itself did not feel inclined to follow out the suggestion made now by the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) and I am prepared to give a specific case in which they departed from that very principle which is now so loudly applauded on the other side of the house.

Mr. POWER: It may be a reform from within.

Mr. EDWARDS (Frontenac): The policy followed by the government in the past has not been that proposed by the hon. member for Quebec South. The policy has been on the contrary to recognize returned soldiers who served in the British army and who after the war came to Canada and took up their residence here in preference to those who served in the Canadian army.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Does the amendment to the amendment include Canadians who served in the air force?

Mr. POWER: My amendment is by no means perfect. I am going only as far as I can in the short time I have at my disposal. If any hon. member wishes to add any other class, I have no objection to giving that my support.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Perhaps the hon. member had better hold his amendment for a while and make it perfect. If these men are not included I wish to protest because some of the best Canadians served in the air force. As there was no Canadian air force they served in the British army and we have hundreds of them here. The bravest, most courageous Canadians served in that force and I object to their omission from the amendment.

Mr. POWER: Will my hon. friend agree to some such subsection as this:

Or being resident in Canada at the outbreak of the war, served in the forces of His Majesty.

Or some words which would indicate that they are Canadian citizens and not citizens of any other country:

Or being resident or domiciled in Canada at the outbreak of the war, served in one or other branch of His Majesty's forces.

I am prepared to add that to my amendment.

Mr. KAISER: The subamendment is not clearly understood. I am first and foremost a Canadian. Nothing appealed more to me than to find so many native-born Canadians enlisting in various branches at the time of the war and I would be inclined to give a preference to Canadians who were resident and domiciled in Canada at the outbreak of the war over any other returned soldier who may have later on become a Canadian.

Mr. McQUARRIE. I appreciate what the minister has done but it is not entirely in accordance with the suggestion that I made. What I suggested to him was that he would include in his bill the provision in the Civil Service Act in regard to returned soldiers. The section to which I referred is subsection 4 of section 29 of the Civil Service Act. As it is rather long I will not read it, but there is one class that is not taken care of in the amendment. It is included in these words:

Or when any persons who have served as aforesaid have died owing to such service, the widows of such persons.

The widows of those who served in the war should be given a preference but they are left out. I would suggest that the minister include subsection 4 of section 29 of the Civil Service Act in his bill.

Mr. EULER: My hon. friend would hardly think widows would be acting in the class of officers such as are mentioned in the bill, namely, preventive officers.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: I wish to second the amendment of the hon. member for Quebec South and I congratulate him upon bringing forward such an excellent amendment. We all say that charity begins at home; but too often we find that our returned soldiers are not given the preference but that some who served in the British army and who are not citizens of Canada are given the preference. The hon. member for Frontenac-Addington stated a few minutes ago that the preference was not always given to the returned soldier.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Would the hon. member consider changing the word "charity"? I do not think any soldier wants charity.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: I think we have confidence in the minister that he will not make such a mistake as the Civil Service Commission too often makes and that he will see that the preference is always given to returned men resident in Canada.

Mr. McQUARRIE: In regard to the remark of the minister that I could not expect the widows to be employed in the preventive service, I might point out that women are now employed in the customs service and also in the preventive service. It seems to me that in some cases they would be very useful.

The CHAIRMAN: The amendment moved by the hon. member for Quebec South now reads:

That the said amendment be further amended by adding in the fifth line thereof after the words "military forces" the following words: "or being resident or domiciled in Canada at the outbreak of the war, served in His Majesty's forces".

Subamendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. EULER moved the third reading of the bill.

Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): In amendment to the motion for the third reading of the bill now proposed by the minister, I propose, seconded by Sir George Perley, the following amendment:

That the said bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole with instructions that they have power to amend the same by providing that (a) customs appraisers of all classes whether serving at the various ports and places of entry or as dominion appraisers; (b) All officers in the customs-excise preventive service; and (c) All officers assigned to duty as investigators of values and claims for drawback, shall be appointed by the Civil Service Commission after public competition and examination by the Civil Service Commission in association with such representatives of the department as may be named by the minister and any others that he may think necessary to properly determine their qualifications.

I do not propose to trespass upon the time of the house further than to say that it is essential that we should maintain in its integrity the principle of appointments to office being made by the Civil Service Commission. I yesterday directed attention to the observations made by the hon. Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler) when as a member of a select committee in 1921 he pointed out that technical and professional positions should only be filled after consultation between the Civil Service Commission and the deputy head or head of the department that might be affected.

The amendment which we now propose is one that in practice has been found to work out satisfactorily. Upon inquiry I find that only within the last three weeks or less it has been necessary to appoint appraisers, and that an examination was conducted by the Civil Service Commission, with the aid of officials named by the department, together with two business men in Toronto, who assisted in determining the qualifications of the various applicants.

What we ask is that in a matter of this kind, where very important interests are involved, there should be afforded the opportunity by public competition to select those persons who, by reason of the examination they have passed, and the demeanor they have shown before the minister or the deputy or the persons named by him and such other persons as may be selected for the purpose by the minister, have demonstrated their fitness to discharge the duties of the position. Appraisers, drawback investigators, and those in the preventive service, will thus be selected from a body of men whose political faith need not and will not be considered at all. The bill as it now stands provides that the recommendations shall be made in a certain way, and that really the minister himself shall determine who shall be appointed, and the Civil Service Commission is merely mentioned for the purpose, as I said yesterday, of permitting some use to be made of its name without in fact any value being attached to what it may do. Under these circumstances, without trespassing further on the time of the house in view of the engagements of the minister, I merely content myself with moving the amendment, and protesting against removing from the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission the appointment of these appraisers and drawback investigators, who will deal with very important matters in which political consideration may prevail, as well as in the performance of their duties by members of the preventive service, which is so very important.

[The Chairman.]

Hon. W. D. EULER (Minister of National Revenue): The hon. leader of the opposition was very kind a few moments ago to congratulate me upon accepting an amendment which supposedly came from the other side of the house, and for which I was rather mildly censured by my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), but which, by the way, leaves me quite unmoved. I wish I could congratulate my hon. friend similarly upon the introduction of his amendment, but I regret that I am not able to do so. I am not going to rehearse the arguments advanced yesterday. There is really nothing new in what the hon. leader of the opposition has suggested. He has simply put into formal words the objections which were voiced yesterday and to-day. I think there is nothing to be gained by arguing the matter any further. I would merely say this, that if the amendment were accepted, it would absolutely negative and defeat the purpose of the bill. There would really be nothing left. The purpose of the bill is to place in hands other than those of the Civil Service Commission the appointment of this small class of officers. That is the effect of it, and if the amendment were accepted, it would merely leave these appointments exactly where they were before, and for that reason I cannot accept it.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): I do not feel that I can allow this bill to be finally decided upon by the house without at least placing myself on record with respect to it. I was somewhat astonished at the closing remarks of the minister who is in charge of this bill. He has just said that the amendment of the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), if accepted, would negative the whole purpose of the bill. A hasty scrutiny of the debate yesterday rather led me to the momentary conclusion that the minister's whole argument yesterday was that the purpose of the bill was to improve, if possible, the personnel of his staff.

Mr. EULER: Quite so.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In other words, that he would maintain the merit system. That was the impression he intended to give to the house. But now he says that the actual application of the merit system under the Civil Service Commission would negative the purpose of the bill.

Mr. EULER: I say nothing of the kind.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is the effect. I think it would pay hon. members, it would pay me at least, to scrutinize for a moment or two the bill itself, and to find out where it is going to lead us. We find, in the first place, the motive behind the bill, and we conclude that the Minister of National Revenue must have no confidence in the present Civil Service Commission. If he has confidence in the Civil Service Commission and in their ability properly to examine and select the individuals required by his department, then naturally there would be no object in this bill whatever. Therefore I am fair in asserting—I await contradiction from the minister if I am wrong—that he has no confidence in the present Civil Service Commission, in so far as their ability to select the personnel of his staff is concerned. All right. That being the case—

Mr. EULER: You are assuming too much.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): —the minister says, I am going to erect a suitable body of examiners within my own department. I am going to establish an examining body within the Department of National Revenue, and ask them from time to time to examine and make selections from those who may apply for these positions. That will be a body in which I have confidence, and naturally I shall feel that the persons they select will be of value to me. But before adding them to the personnel, I shall refer their names to the Civil Service Commission for a decision from that incompetent body from which I am taking away the whole administration of this work. He is in effect saying: I have a board within my department in which I have confidence, and which is competent to select the proper applicants, but in order to delude the public, in order to blind their eyes to the real facts of the matter, I am going to refer their names to the Civil Service Commission with the proviso that if within fifteen days they do not approve of the nominations by the departmental advisory board, the governor in council shall decide. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have my own opinion about the decisions of the governor in council. In effect, this is patronage at its very worst. The situation then, briefly, is this. The minister is going to place these particular positions which are mentioned in this bill definitely under the administration of wide-open patronage.

I think it would be as well for the minister before voting finally on the bill—although I have no hope of changing his course—to turn his attention for a moment or two to the situation in the United States. It is not all that it might be, but it is a good deal better than it was some time ago. We all know of course that whatever government is in power seeks to restrict the operation of appointments under the merit system. All governments, irrespective of party, desire more definitely the restoration of the patronage system, but particularly is this the case with the present government. In fact its predecessors introduced the merit principle. In the United States I find that exactly the same excuses were used for the continuation of patronage in making appointments to the civil service that the minister is now using for wide-open patronage in his department. When the Volstead Act was passed by congress appointments to the prohibition enforcement bureau were exempted from the provisions of the civil service law, on the plea that it would be necessary for the executive to be free to get men of character to enforce the law. I need not call the attention of the house to the results. They were certainly notorious and hopeless, and were best descirbed in the organ, known as Good Government, published by the Civil Service Reform League of the United States, in these terms:

> Everyone knows that a large proportion of that force is composed of grafters, thugs and miscreants, who not only take bribes, but are guilty of unlawful acts of violence.

And further:

> In the beginning the league pointed out the probability of this result if the positions were exempted from the provisions of the civil service law, and has endeavored constantly to procure an amendment of the law which would classify the entire prohibition force without covering in the present members. . .
> Certainly a force appointed after competitive civil service examination, and investigation of the character of the applicants by an independent body such as the Civil Service Commission, would eliminate a large proportion of such scalawags as are now appointed on political recommendations, and would vastly improve the character of the service.

The Winnipeg Tribune, commenting upon that article, states:

Abandonment of the merit system and resort to patronage in precisely that arm of the service which is most exposed to temptation, and resort to patronage where the work demands the most absolute integrity, is inexcusable. It is amazing to find responsible cabinet ministers so blinded by partisan prejudice and so self-complacent.

Very strong words. They are words that I would accept and voice as my own. It is not necessary, of course, to convince students of political science that the patronage system is not the system by which you will get men of high moral character and the best qualified for responsible positions. Contemporary history shows us that. As an illustration—I think it was used by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) yesterday—I was interested in finding out just how many of those persons who were recommended for dismissal by the customs commission had been appointed under the old patronage system or by the Civil Service Commission. I wrote to the commission under date of April 17 last, and I have their reply in my hand, signed by the secretary, Mr. Foran:

Dear Mr. GARLAND,

In reply to your letter of the 16th instant, I beg to say that of the customs employees who were recommended for dismissal or retirement by the customs committee, not one was an appointee of the Civil Service Commission. As regards the other employees who were mentioned in the evidence before the committee, I am not in a position to say whether or not any of them were appointees of the commission, but if you could furnish me with the names in question, I should be glad to have the necessary inquiry made,

Yours sincerely,

W. FORAN,
Secretary.

Not one was an appointee of the Civil Service Commission. I am not going to be so discourteous to my hon. friend as to suggest for one moment that the appointments he is likely to approve of will be of the scalawag or the notoriously immoral or bad type; but I say definitely to him now that he is opening the way to the widest kind of patronage, which in the very course of human nature will lead to just that condition of affairs at some time or other—possibly not during his control of the department. I hope not, at least, for I have a good deal of confidence in him. But he is weakening not only the position of the government with respect to the Civil Service Commission, but their declarations of their belief in the merit system.

The organ to which I referred just now, Good Government, reported in its issue of December, 1922 that:

The federal grand jury of New York denounced as "disgraceful" the management of the federal prohibition offices in New York city under the two chief enforcement officers, and gave as the reason for this condition the fact that appointments of prohibition agents and inspectors are made without competitive civil service examinations.

Mr. EULER: It may not be pertinent at this point, but may I ask my hon. friend this question: Would he say that the service in the province of Alberta from which he comes, and the government of which he supports, is so bad? Because there, I understand, it is entirely a matter of political patronage.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I seek no shelter in the matter. I am absolutely opposed to political patronage in my own province, and I am using every effort I can with my own colleagues and friends to institute a civil service commission in Alberta. I am absolutely in favour of the merit system. The hon. gentleman can never frighten me with any references of that kind.

Mr. EULER: I disclaim any such intention.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I would apply the principle of merit to every single appointment within the power of governments. The article goes on to quote the grand jury letter as follows:

Apparently the agents selected for active work of suppressing illegal traffic in whiskey have been chosen principally for political reasons when it was necessary to select men for this work who are worthy of confidence and of such stable character that they would not yield to the temptations to which it was well understood they would be subjected.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, is there any other occupation in the public service to which men are so subject to bribery and every other subversive influence that may induce them to forswear allegiance to their particular occupation as those employees to which the minister refers in this bill. I say the whole principle of the bill is unsound. It is a reversal of the policy to which hon. members opposite gave lip service in the past. I regret that they do not give more than lip service to it to-day.

I now take the attitude of the Citizens' Research Institute of Canada in this connection. Resolution No. 3, passed at one of their recent conventions, reads as follows:

Whereas, the effect of political patronage in the appointment and administration of the personnel of the civil services of Canada has been condemned by public opinion, and was abolished in the federal services by the Civil Service Act of May, 1918;

Therefore be it resolved that this civil service research branch of the Citizens' Research Institute of Canada record its firm opinion in favour of the fullest application of the civil service law where it now prevails and the extension of the merit principle therein embodied to other government services, provincial, municipal, etc.

With that resolution, Mr. Speaker, I am in complete accord. It is not my desire or purpose to delay the house unduly on this question. My opinion on it is well known. I have never hesitated to state unequivocally my views regarding the merit system versus political patronage. But in order to overcome any obstacles that might be raised on practical grounds, I took the trouble a year ago to ascertain from the Civil Service Commission just exactly what steps they would pursue if they were instructed to undertake the examination and appointment of such a personnel as is mentioned in the bill. I have in my hand the letter which I received at that time, and which at my request was renewed a few months ago in order that it might be absolutely up to date. The answers to my questions are:

In view of the unusual importance attaching to the problems arising out of the customs investigation, I think it is necessary to again outline the procedure the Civil Service Commission would follow if it were called upon to select officers for the preventive service of the Department of Customs and Excise.

Exactly the same method would be applied to the appointment of appraisers or of any other officials that might be required by the hon. Minister of National Revenue. I ask particular attention to these words, because in every case they meet the points raised by him:

1. Applications would be openly invited throughout Canada from persons qualified to perform the particular type of work in question.

2. Those candidates who did not possess at least the elementary education required, or were otherwise obviously unfitted for the special nature of the work, would be eliminated from further consideration.

3. The qualifications of the remaining applicants would be considered—

Note this.

—by an examining board on which the various interested parties would be represented. These would include the Department of Customs and Excise, presumably in the person of the chief of the preventive service—

And in the event of appraisers, the chief of the appraisal staff.

—or such other officer—

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is partly reading from a letter and partly interpolating something of his own. Does that letter refer to the appraisers?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I had not even gone to the trouble of securing an expression of opinion in writing from the Civil Service Commission in regard to the appointment of appraisers, but about a week ago I went over there personally and interviewed Doctor Roche and Mr. Foran on the matter and they stated definitely that exactly the same system of examination will apply to appraisers that applies to the preventive service. That answers my hon. friend's question.

Mr. DUNNING: It is much better to read the letter.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am glad my hon. friend has called my attention to the point. The letter states:

These would include the Department of Customs and Excise (presumably in the person of the chief of the preventive service, or such other officer as might be designated by the deputy minister), the Commercial Protective Association, or such other body or bodies as might be necessary to represent the interested manufacturers and retailers of Canada, and the Civil Service Commission; and assistance from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and trained investigators such as Mr. Walter Duncan would also be enlisted.

4. The factors on which applicants would be examined and on which the selection for appointments would be made would include: experience in investigational work; intelligence and powers of observation; knowledge of criminology and customs problems; integrity and good moral character. I need not add that an examination is not necessarily academic in character, but that its subjects vary according to the qualifications required for the proper performance of the work, and that "scholarship" in the accepted sense of the word, "essay writing" or "ability to count in decimals," as quoted in your letter of March 19th last, would form no part of an examination for this type of position.

5. Those candidates finally selected would be subject to a rigid investigation as to their integrity and trustworthiness; and on the basis of an examination conducted as above, with the sole aim in view of securing the best possible men available in Canada for this important work, and with freedom from pressure of personal or other considerations, I am confident that the right type of officers, satisfactory alike to the department and to the public, could be secured.

There was one other point which, as it happened, I took care to raise with the commission—a point that was raised last year. I refer to men whose names, because of the nature of the occupations they fill, the department prefers as far as possible not to make public. I took up that point with the Civil Service Commission and the following is the answer:

The necessity for the publication of the names of the successful candidates in the Canada Gazette could readily be obviated by the insertion in the item of the estimates providing the necessary appropriation of a clause "These appointments shall be made under the Civil Service Act except as regards section 39 (1)," this being the clause in the act providing for the publication in the Canada Gazette of the names of the successful candidates.

Yours truly,

W. FORAN,
Secretary.

That, to me at least, provides a conclusive answer to practically every argument raised by the Minister of National Revenue yesterday.

Now I am not going to quote what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) has said in the past, nor am I going to quote the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Forke), and others whose statements have already been given. But I do not think that the complete statement of the Minister of National Revenue has yet been put on Hansard this year. It would not be fair to him to have a sentence or two torn from the context and the public left to draw their own conclusions therefrom. I shall therefore quote from Hansard, pages 4414 to 4417, June 1, 1921. The Minister of National Revenue, then plain Mr. Euler, said:

For my part, I believe that the amendment proposed to section 38 of the present act does make it possible to destroy the vital principle of the act, namely, the abolition of political patronage . . . I am under the impression that the commissioners have tried to carry out the act honestly and in accordance with what was expected of them by parliament.

The only change that has taken place in the commission since that day is that two of the members of the then commission have been dismissed and their positions filled by my hon. friends opposite. The hon. member continued:

It is quite conceivable that we may have a majority of the members of the Civil Service Commission composed of men who honestly believe that the civil service should be controlled by political patronage. There are members of this house who believe that and they have a perfect right to that belief. But if we had that condition we would necessarily find that the commission would divest itself of all its powers and the whole civil service would lapse back into the old practices of political patronage. I do not see how it could be otherwise.

Mr. Calder then interrupted:

The hon. gentleman forgets that parliament sits from year to year.

Mr. Euler: If, as I begin to suspect, a good many members are rather in favour of the return of political patronage, that perhaps would not be a safeguard.

Mr. Sexsmith: Is it the hon. gentleman's information that under the old law political patronage was done away with?

Mr. Euler: I am not qualified to speak on that but I know it is done away with as far as I am personally concerned. I never was given the opportunity to exercise it, nor do I desire it . . . So far as I am personally concerned I am opposed to the system of political patronage as it obtained in the past. . . . It is nevertheless true that the advantages of that system are far outweighed by its disadvantages.

Those are the words of the Minister of National Revenue who to-day is asking the house to give third reading and sanction to a bill which has within it the widest type of political patronage in its very worst aspects, because not only does the minister quite frankly come out and say, "I am seeking political patronage in the matter and I want to have the administration of all appointments in my department", but he attempts to befog the question in a peculiar paragraph wherein he undertakes to refer to the Civil Service Commission for a period of three weeks or fifteen days, the names of those whom he has selected.

Let me say frankly that I have known the hon. gentleman for some seven years and have admired his political record. But I had not thought that he would ever, simply by joining a government such as the one we have opposite, come to such a pass as to attempt to deceive himself, in spite of his own convictions, in a matter of this importance. I had placed in my hands this morning a little note with reference to this question. It is of such merit that I feel it ought to go on the record. It reads:

This is the age of wonders! Among the more recent marvels is a new complete compilation of the Standard Dictionary, Noah Webster's and all other kinds of English speaking vocabularies. Supporters and voters of the present Liberal government will hear with justly inflated pride that this work is being undertaken by the cabinet of the present administration. Slow but sure is the motto, or one word at a time, and the launching of the plan has been entrusted to the Hon. Mr. Euler, Minister of National Revenue. The word he has chosen for the initiation of his prodigious effort is the word "merit."

The former and now archaic meaning of "merit" is well known. As applied to government service it used to imply competition for positions, open and free to all alike, and the Civil Service Commission was utilized to see that this was done.

Our modern Sir Galahad of pure English has changed all this. In future Mr. Euler will write as follows to the Civil Service Commission:

"Dear Commission:—Some of our good friends in the maritimes, who are staunch adherents of our heaven-born party, have asked me to appoint a zealous party worker as an appraiser, in the civil service. His name is Hurry Makemvote. I will be obliged if you will put your convenient rubber stamp on this name within 15 days, or, if you do not, I will have the governor in council do so for me."

We are familiar with the Liberal arts and artifices. Now observe the fine, complex of this Liberal-party rendition of generic definitions. Mr. Euler elucidated his expansive theory as to the new meaning of the word "merit" in the House of Commons on Tuesday, the 8th instant. Referring to the plan outlined in the above proforma letter to the commission, he said:—"There is to be no interference with the Civil Service Act."

Mr. EULER: May I ask my hon. friend from what he is quoting?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am just quoting a letter which an indignant supporter of my hon. friend's party placed in my hands this morning, and I suggest that it shows the public attitude in regard to this matter.

Mr. EULER: Surely if my hon. friend is going to read a letter in this house he should state from whom he received the letter.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Let me put the mind of my hon. friend at rest by taking responsibility for it myself.

Mr. EULER: Then my hon. friend wrote it to himself?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): We will so assume, for the purpose of this discussion. Now if my hon. friend is satisfied perhaps we can continue:

> Old meanings are as chaff to this new Liberal school of thought. The magician has waved his wand and presto! words renounce their parent derivations and become converts to the exact reversal of their original meaning.

That is the fact; that is why I noted with astonishment the opening and closing remarks of my hon. friend this afternoon in answer to the leader of the opposition.

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South): I rise to a point of order.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Just wait till I finish.

Mr. POWER: I am rising to a point of order. Some years ago Mr. McMaster, the then member for Brome, read what was said to be an imaginary letter having reference to the actions of a certain Mr. Wigmore.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): This is not an imaginary letter; it is right here, and my hon. friend can see it with his own eyes.

Mr. POWER: It was said to be an imaginary letter, or at least a letter written by some person with an imagination. A letter somewhat similar to that which the hon. member now seeks to place on Hansard was read by Mr. McMaster. Debate with regard to the propriety of such an action took place in the house and the Speaker, Hon. Mr. Rhodes, ruled that this letter could not be read into Hansard, and I believe on the following day he ordered it to be deleted. I now ask Your Honour for a ruling in connection with this letter.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. gentleman has reference to a letter written by a former Minister of Customs, I may say that I read that letter myself in the course of a debate in this house.

Mr. CANNON: That was the letter which brought on the incident, but it is not the letter to which my hon. friend is referring.

Mr. SPEAKER: What is the point of order? What is the objection to the hon. member reading the letter?

Mr. POWER: The point is this: I am under the impression that my hon. friend is reading into Hansard an unsigned letter which he says we may take as coming from himself. For all practical purposes it is an unsigned letter, and the hon. gentleman refuses to reveal the name of the author. I submit, sir, that he has no right to read such a letter into Hansard. If he is making a speech of his own, let him do so, but if he reads a letter he must say from what source it comes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The letter which I am reading is one for which I take the full responsibility, and if it will ease the mind of my hon. friend I will sign a copy and give it to him as a souvenir.

Mr. POWER: I do not think my hon. friend can write letters and put them on Hansard.

Mr. SPEAKER: A moment ago I heard the hon. gentleman say that the letter was from himself; if he now says the letter is unsigned it is a different matter. Such a letter should not be read into Hansard; all letters when read must be signed and they become part of the documents of the house. Am I to understand that the hon. gentleman has not signed the letter?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): If that is required to comply with the rules I have no objection to signing the letter.

Mr. SPEAKER: Very well; there is no objection.

Mr. EULER: I would like to know whether the hon. gentleman will say whether or not someone else has signed that letter.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No, it is unsigned.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Then how can you say it is from an indignant supporter of the government?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I would refer the minister's obtuse mind to the extraordinary terms used in the letter; if that does not satisfy him that the supporter is indignant, nothing will satisfy him.

Mr. LAPOINTE: He may be indignant, but it does not satisfy me that he is a supporter of the government.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that the letter is signed by the hon. member?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): May I ask to whom the letter is addressed?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): My hon. friend should not worry so much about it; the letter is not addressed to anyone. The continuation of this excellent contribution to this discussion deals with the remarks made by the Minister of Justice, the Prime Minister, the Minister of National Revenue and others, in this way:

Mr. Lapointe said in 1921, "I do not believe in political patronage."

Now we begin to see just exactly what he did mean. We really thought at the time he did not believe in patronage, but now we find that he is going to vote for this bill, which is nothing else but political patronage. We find that the Prime Minister a few years ago said that he stood strongly for the merit system, but now we find him throwing those sentiments to the winds. What did he mean? Then the Minister of National Revenue stated, in absolutely unequivocal terms, that he never wanted to exercise political patronage in any shape or form, but now he sets up a system within his department under which he brings within his control or the control of the cabinet the appointments to these positions.

Mr. EULER: Does the hon. gentleman say that the Minister of National Revenue is deliberately doing this in order to exercise patronage?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Not at all.

Mr. EULER: That is the impression my hon. friend is seeking to leave.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): There is no doubt that patronage will be exercised; I am sure the minister has no delusions in the matter. I ask him frankly to state definitely to the house that patronage will not be exercised and that he will not befriend his friends.

[Mr. Lapointe.]

Mr. EULER: There is only one primary principle which will be observed, as I said yesterday; efficiency will be the determining factor in the appointment of these officials.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have suggested to the minister a method by which the Civil Service Commission can make these appointments with exactly the same result.

Mr. EULER: Does my hon. friend think the evidence of prejudiced parties should be received with the same respect accorded evidence from anyone else?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River). Is not my hon. friend a prejudiced party?

Mr. EULER: The minister is responsible for the department, while the Civil Service Commission is not.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): They are both government bodies. Arguments of that kind are ridiculous, and indicate the paucity of argument which can be found in support of this bill. The conclusion to which I have come, and to which I have been coming during some seven years in this house, is that the Liberal party have definitely foresworn their alleged adherence to the merit principle as far as federal politics are concerned, due to the very force of opinion within the party. The ministers are slowly and steadily invading the rights of the commission, depleting those rights and emasculating that commission so that, if this government remain in power much longer, when they are defeated there will be no Civil Service Commission left, or such a useless commission that it will be a joke to the public of this country.

Mr. DUNNING: Will my hon .friend permit a question there? He has been speaking of the principles of political parties in relation to this matter. What are the principles of the United Farmers of Alberta in this regard?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have stated exactly my position.

Mr. DUNNING: I asked my hon. friend his party principles; he has been discussing ours.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I do not know. I do not represent the United Farmers of Alberta in the provincial house. I represent an organization which has declared, time and time again, definitely against patronage in any form.

Mr. DUNNING: There is then a difference in the United Farmers of Alberta?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister is attempting to draw a herring across the trail, but he cannot do it in this case; he is not going to delude me at all. I will say to the Minister of Railways that I believe, if he were permitted to undertake the organization of a proper civil service commission, in which he would have some control and could oversee the appointment, he would, having the experience he has had in this country in respect to the question of political patronage, support the merit principle. I think he will admit that he is behind the merit principle himself.

Mr. DUNNING: Any man who is responsible for the administration of any business wants to apply the merit principle, but he may desire to apply the merit principle by appointments in connection with which those who have responsibility for the administration will have something to say. The question is not one of the merit principle, but it is as to who shall determine who has the necessary merit; that is all. We may not be so far apart as my hon. friend may think.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have given the minister an excellent illustration from the Civil Service Commission themselves of how they can serve the purpose to the very end which the government state they have in view; yet they reject that and proceed with this scheme. The appointment of appraisers, preventive officers and investigators is to be accomplished within the department. The department will refer the names they may select to the Civil Service Commission, but if they do not appoint them within fifteen days, then they will be appointed by the governor in council. I heartily support the motion of the hon. leader of the opposition, and I hope this bill will be voted out.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Railways and Canals): I would just like to say a word in connection with the arraignment of the political parties by the hon. member who has just sat down.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I rise to a point of order. I did not criticize the political parties; I have criticized, throughout my entire statement, the application of patronage by political parties.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend arraigned the Liberal party, and I am in the judgment of the house whether he did or not. I asked a question as to what principle the United Farmers of Alberta followed in regard to this matter, and my hon. friend's answer was in relation to his own personal principle. I would respectfully point out that apparently the United Farmers of Alberta have one policy provincially, and the policy advocated by my hon. friend with reference to federal affairs is another policy in connection with the same matter.

When my hon. friend is accusing me on this side of the house, belonging to this party, as being insincere in the matter, and using the expressions that he has, I think it is only right and just that there should be given, as a matter of public record, the position of his own party in the matter.

Mr. IRVINE: Will the minister describe how the United Farmers of Alberta appoint civil servants in Alberta?

Mr. DUNNING: I know very well that principle advocated by the member for Bow River does not exist in Alberta—my hon. friend from Bow River will be the last to deny it, because he admits himself his party is not operating in Alberta by the application of what he describes as the merit principle —because if my hon. friend is advocating, in the provincial field, the application of such a principle, surely that is evident that it does not exist there to-day.

Mr. IRVINE: It does.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It does not exist to the extent that we have not yet a civil service commission. My information is that the Alberta government has a committee appointed for the purpose of deciding whether it will be advisable to have such a civil service commission there or not.

Mr. JOHN EVANS (Rosetown): Looking on this bill, as I do, as being a retrograde step on the part of the government, after the operation for some years of the Civil Service Commission, I may be pardoned if I wish to take a few minutes in recording my views on this question. I would ask also that the views of the customs officials of my own province, and other western provinces, be recorded.

The Minister of Railways just asked what was the principle of the United Farmers of Alberta regarding this question. I think that he of all men should know that the large organized farmer bodies in western Canada have for years advocated the adoption of the merit system. He has been a member of these bodies, and the Canadian Council of Agriculture has for many years maintained as one of the planks in their platform abolition of political patronage.

I cannot help but remark that there has been a tendency for some years to discredit the work of the Civil Service Commission, and the cabinet now seems disposed to make all the appointments possible, and to ignore the Civil Service Act. It is surely admitted that since confederation the need has been felt for one central co-ordinating body, to take cognizance of the various departments of the public service, to harmonize and to give system and unity to the whole administrative organization.

In looking up this question during the past few days I find that Sir George Murray, in his report of 1912, emphatically declared that duplication and topheaviness in the various departments was due to the want of some co-ordinating authority empowered to deal with the staff and organization of the department, so as to secure the utmost economy and efficiency in the public service. I feel that the present dissatisfaction—indeed, I was going to say chaos, and perhaps that word is not too strong—is due to the want of a body whose authority and jurisdiction would cover the whole service. I think it is wrong at the present time to undermine the work of the Civil Service Commission by an act of this kind.

In the report of the commission in 1918 regarding the printing bureau, I find they said that under any but governmental ownership the sheriff would long ago have closed the door. In the report of the parliamentary committee of 1923, the question of the co-ordination of the activities of the government was dealt with at considerable length, and several precedents were quoted. In this connection the following recommendation was made:

> Another proposal which merits exploration, is an appropriate adaptation of the so-called "Business manager plan" which has evoked universal commendation in its application to municipal government.

It is to be feared that during the life of the last parliament some of the evils were accentuated by the fact that too many appointments were made notwithstanding the Civil Service Act. I cannot look upon the present bill but as a part of a plan for the continuation of that practice.

A man who has been in the civil service in Ottawa for a good many years came into my office a little while ago and said that he was tired of the whole thing. He stated that in the room in which he worked there were as many as eleven employees and he assured me that seven or less would be sufficient to do every bit of the work that was needed to be done in that room. He was an honest boy and the impression he left was that he was never allowed to do his best and that he was tired day after day of having to kill time.

Instead of the government taking upon itself the appointment of civil servants to administer certain branches in the several departments, it should without delay so augment the commission, if need be, that some co-ordinating method might be adopted in the service either by a kind of general manager or some central authority who could oversee the work of all the departments and branches without the terrible waste and overmanning which now exist and which in themselves are not only very expensive for the country but degrading to the employees themselves, as the effect must be detrimental to the character of everyone. As I said the other day, it has surprised me that a bill of this kind has come forward, especially seeing the views of the ministers so well recorded in Hansard some years ago. I first of all look at the words of the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), who expressed himself on March 11, 1921, as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, I endorse the remarks of the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Lemieux) and I am opposed to the resolution moved by the hon. member for Victoria. I do not believe in political patronage. It has been tried in many countries of the world, and it has been found wanting everywhere. I think that positions should go to merit and never to influence, on the part either of the candidates themselves or of their families, and I am opposed to nepotism in the distribution of public offices. . . There is one matter I wish to deal with for a moment or two, and that is the fact that this government is not giving proper support to the Civil Service Commission.

Those are the words of the present Minister of Justice. Then again I have the words of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), and while I do not want to read the whole of the paragraph which I copied from Hansard some time ago, I will read one sentence. On May 2, 1921, he said:

> If there is need for consideration of any amendments to the Civil Service Act, let it be undertaken by a committee of the house formed for that particular purpose, but do not let us proceed with a series of destructive enactments in the form of a bill, everyone of which tends to weaken the scope, the authority and the usefulness of the Civil Service Commission.

Surely one cannot help wondering now that the whole cabinet are behind a bill of this kind which is absolutely contradictory to their own words, views and sentiments and, one would have thought at the time, to their action had they been in a position to put their words into effect. Instead of co-ordination and elimination, what do we find? There is a tremendous waste of time and money and many hon. members have advocated a return to the old patronage methods. This is surprising to some of us on this side. It may be that in the past we have not had the right men on the Civil Service Commission, but before I would blame that body for all the ills existing in the public service to-day I would blame some of the shortcomings of the government in not upholding the hands of the commission in their duties. Moreover the commission undertook to direct a work that had been carried on for a number of years under perhaps the most debasing system that was prevalent in any country, the old political patronage system, which I believe was carried on to its fullest extent in this country with all its resultant work of favouritism and inefficiency. This class of appointment is the very last that should be put outside of the scope of the Civil Service Act and I am more than surprised at the Minister of National Revenue coming forward with this bill. I have looked on the debauch in the service of collecting the national revenue during these years as practically traceable to the patronage system and I am surprised that the minister himself to-day would want to assume responsibility for the appointment of those officers who perhaps are more responsible for the efficient collection of the revenue than any others.

According to the bill the Minister of National Revenue will have a board of examiners set up to determine the fitness of applicants, a board not responsible at all to parliament or in a way to himself, a board which will not be in any sense responsible for the work of the appointees. The Prime Minister, as reported on page 2847 of Hansard of May 2, 1921, used these words in a discussion on the Spinney bill:

> This bill specifies three classes of appointments which are to be taken out of the hands of the Civil Service Commission and transferred to the government, thereby permitting the government's followers, in all certainty, to make recommendations which the governor in council will act upon. That is a step entirely in the wrong direction. . . Now, Mr. Speaker, these facts make it wholly apparent that if a measure of this kind is permitted to pass even the second reading it is setting back in a very real and substantial way the efforts of the past few years in the direction of civil service reform. .

If the whole responsibility of the civil service was on the commission, that body would at once take means to eliminate the overmanning, duplication and inefficiency. It is one of the most deplorable features of our civil service that all underlings are likely to be placed in a position that prevents any development in ability, because they are not allowed to do their best; and inefficiency must be the result. That this is the case I have been convinced. Can anyone imagine what the detriment to the individual character must have been in the printing bureau before the last reorganization took place? From an editorial in the Toronto Globe of June 4, 1926, I gather that the sum of $744,000 was saved by that reorganization, and that economies and adjustments made in the Post Office department have affected a saving of $850,000. From the same paper, of the same date, I read these words:

> If economies in the Interior department were effected similar to those in the printing bureau, as estimated by Dr. Roche, it would mean a saving of at least $1,000,000 or more a year.

Again, from another journal, a supporter of the government, I believe, the Ottawa Citizen, I read that it has been conservatively estimated that $25,000,000 could be saved by a thorough reorganization of the public service and the adoption of efficient business management. I think the average taxpayer would say that the money was needed, and was worth saving, and it could be applied to the reduction of the national debt.

From the tone of the government during the last six or seven years, one is bound to come to the conclusion that their desire is to return to the old patronage system. I should like to see the control of the civil service free entirely from party politics. There must be a connection somewhere, but in any event the Civil Service Commission should in no way be subject to the party in power, but should be composed of men who would make of the commission a body independent and responsible. A recapitulation of the facts of the last few years I think would show that our civil service is practically made subservient to partyism, and I think that the minister of National Revenue in the enactment of this bill is only creating for himself great difficulties in cleaning up his department of some abuses which we know to exist, and this bill will only make it harder still for him to get efficiency. That the civil servants who are in the customs service in Saskatchewan and Manitoba realize this is evidence I think that they see a danger ahead in this respect, and I would ask the government even at this late date to reconsider before placing an act of this kind on the statute book. I cannot but look on it as a part of a scheme to undermine the work of the Civil Service Commission. I felt that I could not let this opportunity pass and that I would not be doing my duty if I did not raise my voice in protest against such a thing.

Mr. HENRI E. LAVIGUEUR (Quebec-Montmorency) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, if I am not mistaken this bill has for its object to amend the Act concerning the National Revenue Department so as to remedy the situation in regard to certain appointments among the higher officials in that Department. Among other things, it is stated:

"(4) The Minister may, after such examination as he may prescribe, select and nominate suitable persons for appointment by the Civil Service Commission, to positions appertaining to any of the following classes of offices,—

(a) Customs appraisers of all classes whether serving at the various ports and places of entry or as Dominion appraisers;

(b) All officers in the Customs-Excise preventive service;

(c) All officers assigned to duty as investigators of values and claims for drawback.

If such appointment is not made by the Commission within fifteen days from the date of notice to it of such selection and nomination, the Governor in Council may, on the recommendation of the Minister appoint during pleasure any such officer.

The officers so appointed by the Commission or by the Governor in Council, as the case may be, shall be paid such salaries or remuneration in accordance with civil service regulations as may be determined by the Commission or the Governor in Council respectively, and the Minister may appoint the times and manner in which the same shall be paid.

Mr. Speaker, what influenced the hon. Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler), to introduce this amendment to the Act concerning the National Revenue Department, was that after the famous inquiry on the administration of the Customs Department, the Commission carrying out this inquiry, recommended particularly to the government that a reorganization should be carried out.

Furthermore, such recommendations were made by the Commercial Protective Association. The minister accepted the recommendation of the Commissioners, and also those of the Association, and after giving them careful consideration, he thought fit to introduce this bill, so as to co-operate in the appointment of the higher officials in his Department. In my opinion, this does not take away from the Civil Service Commission the right of making the appointments, seeing that they are to be asked to make such appointments; but the Department would co-operate with the Commission in selecting the most capable, competent and qualified persons to fill these positions.

The Minister as well as the heads of his department are acquainted with the needs of the department; they have a knowledge of the important duties to be carried out; they certainly are in a position to advise the Civil Service Commission or the Governor in Council in regard to these appointments.

The hon. Minister of National Revenue in introducing this measure, thought it would be in the interest of both his department and the country. He informs us that it is not done with the object of bringing about political patronage; I am satisfied of this fact.

I find it strange that the leader of the opposition and his first lieutenants so strongly oppose this measure. Evidently these gentlemen do not always practice what they preach, because I remember that at the last general election, and previously, candidates of the opposition taunted us in this way: "You are in power since 1921. When we were at the helm of affairs we tried to decrease the powers of the Civil Service Commission, in 1921, by a bill introduced by one of our leaders the Hon. Mr. Spinney, and purporting to take away from this Commission, the authority of making appointments which it was not in a position to judiciously make, and you were opposed to it. You are in power since 1921 and you have kept up the Civil Service Commission. We pledge ourselves that should we be returned to power in 1926, one of the first acts of the conservative government will be to dismiss the Civil Service Commission.

I myself heard Conservative candidates make this statement and on many occasions at political meetings. To-day, the Minister of National Revenue in the interest of his department and the whole country, wishes, not to ignore the Civil Service Commission, but to co-operate with it in order to select the best officials available for his department, and this, as I have previously mentioned, to conform with the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry and those of the Commercial Protective Association. Well, Sir, I repeat again to those who so strongly oppose this bill, that they are not sincere and consistent, since their candidates proclaimed the contrary at the last general election.

My views, Sir, as regards the Civil Service Commission are well known. I had the opportunity of referring to it many times in the house, and I shall never let the occasion slip by to state that I am absolutely opposed to that Commission.

I congratulate the hon. Minister of National Revenue who is seeking to remove a certain control and prerogative from the Civil Service Commission. I should like to see all his colleagues in the cabinet follow his good example and act in the same way for each of their departments.

Why do our hon. friends of the opposition, who are so strongly in favour of the Civil Service Commission and taunt us when we dare criticize the Commission, not ask that all appointments be made by the Commission? Is it not a fact that all the most important appointments are made without consulting it. When it is a question of appointing a judge, it is not the Civil Service Commission that makes the selection but the government, and I believe that all such appointments have been judicious ones. When it is a question of selecting higher officials such as deputy ministers, the clerks of both houses, the Civil Service Commission has no word to say in the matter, they are appointed by the government. The same thing happens when ministers' secretaries are appointed and this procedure is followed for many other appointments.

Would our friends of the opposition approve of having all appointments made by the Civil Service Commission, even those of judges, senators and all positions pertaining to the administration of the country? Such is not my opinion and I have often stated so in this house. I think that the minister who devotes his time to the interests of his department and makes a complete and serious study of it, is better qualified than the Civil Service Commission to select the best officials for his department.

I feel confident, Sir, that the house will approve the request of the hon. minister of National Revenue and will support the measure which I consider of the utmost importance and in the interest of the whole country. I shall therefore give it my entire support.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Bennett) which was negatived on the following division:

SUPPLY—DUMPING DUTY

The house resumed, from Tuesday, May 15, consideration of the motion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Robb) for committee of supply, and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Anderson (Halton):

That all the words after the word "that" be stricken out and the following substituted therefor:

"In the opinion of this house the necessary action should be taken by the government forthwith to effectively control the importation into Canada, either on sale, or on consignment, of natural products of a class or kind produced in Canada under conditions which prejudicially or injuriously affect, or threaten to prejudicially or injuriously affect, the interests of Canadian producers."

Mr. C. H. DICKIE (Nanaimo): I had about concluded my remarks last evening but there is one matter to which I had not time to refer, and which I shall just mention to-day, because I presume the house will be ready for another division as soon as I am through. This was the asparagus situation in Canada. It will be remembered that a Mr. Fisher appeared with the representatives of the fruit growers in a meeting not long ago and inquired what action could be taken in order to prevent cars of asparagus from coming in after the asparagus in Ontario was ready for the market. I do not recollect what the answer was. However, the Ontario asparagus was ready for the market on May 4, and on May 7 one car of asparagus from California was unloaded at Montreal. There have been several cars since. The government might have taken cognizance in some way of the inquiry of Mr. Fisher. I have here a telegram protesting against the importation of Washington asparagus into British Columbia when our British Columbia asparagus is also on the market. This matter I will take up with the minister. With these few remarks I conclude.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Anderson, Halton) which was negatived on the following division:

Has notice of this amendment been given?

Mr. CHURCH: I have another amendment of which I gave notice yesterday.

Mr. SPEAKER: I declare the amendment out of order.

Mr. DUNNING: The member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. Church) cannot now move another amendment. He has exercised his right to speak on the third reading in moving the amendment which has been declared out of order.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): There may be other amendments to which the hon. gentleman can speak later on.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): In many respects I regret that I find it necessary to oppose the bill before the house. The chief reason why I regret it is I believe that the hon. gentleman who is sponsoring it has overlooked certain things in regard to it. His position in the house is not doubted by anyone, and I believe he is sincere and has the good of the public at heart. But while this bill was before the committee of the whole the hon. gentleman's actions were not the best that might have been hoped for. Such a bill as this involves the public interest to a very large extent, and should be discussed fully. I question very much whether it ought to be passed at all, but certainly it should not be passed in its present form. There are amendments which should be introduced, and which should have been moved in the committee of the whole where they could have been discussed thoroughly.

We in this corner of the house have been accused of talking the bill out. I want to dissociate myself from that insinuation. I think that hon. members should be free to offer any criticism which they feel should be made regarding any bill, without the imputation that they are adopting blocking tactics. Personally I have no interest at all in talking out this or any other bill, but certain things in connection with the public interest apply to this bill which I think should be fully discussed on the floor of this house.

When the hon. gentleman moved in the committee of the whole that this bill be reported, I do not think that was good tactics. One of Disraeli's biographers, in discussing Mr. Gladstone, said that people did not object to Mr. Gladstone so much because he usually had a trump card up his sleeve which he applied at the proper time, but they objected because he usually said that the trump card had been placed there at his disposal by Providence. I do not object to the hon. gentleman playing this trump card which he had up his sleeve, but when it is argued that such trump card is in the best interests of legislation, and the best interests of the country, I very much doubt it.

We are passing, Mr. Speaker, gradually from the old competitive system. The competitive system is yielding to great mergers and combines. When this system was at its height we had competition in services and competition in prices, which was an effective check upon overcharges. I do not wish to return to that old system where we had numerous small businesses trying to compete with each other; I think that day is well past. However, competition did check exorbitant charges, and since competition has yielded to large mergers, interlocking directorates, subsidiary companies, and so forth, there must be substituted some check to take the place of the competitive method which governed charges in the past. We have passed into a condition where monopolies are prevalent.

The company involved in the present bill is virtually a monopoly. The Bell Telephone Company is, I believe, controlled very largely by the American Telephone & Telegraph Company. In turn the Bell Telephone Company controls the subsidiary company from which it receives a great part if not all of its supplies. That subsidiary company practically controls the supply of all the supplies for the telephone service, so that this monopoly, unless the government takes some definite action to control it, is left uncontrolled.

It is public knowledge that less than a year ago the railway commission, on the request of the company in question, increased the telephone rates in Ontario and Quebec. Those telephone rates were increased so that those provinces had to pay what might be regarded as a tax of some $2,600,000 extra last year for telephone service. I understand that the railway commission, when the rate question was before it, refused to allow representatives of the various provinces to present the case of those provinces, and the increase was granted. I presume it was granted on the grounds as presented by the company, namely, that their overhead and so forth warranted them in asking for the right to make higher charges, and I think it will not be difficult to see that if the present capital increase is granted the company will have a greater ground to ask for still further increases.

Let me come to the bill itself and the chief points in respect of which I wish to raise objection. The bill proposes to increase the capitalization of the company by $75,000,000. In this connection let me remind the house that the act incorporating the company was a special statute according to which the company must, if required, submit to investigation. We have a right to investigate that company as to how it has previously disposed of its stock. We have a right to know to whom the stock was sold, how much was paid for it and what was done with the proceeds. These questions in a utility of this kind, the profits of which are practically guaranteed by the public, should be thoroughly investigated. I suggest to the house that an increase of $75,000,000 in capitalization should not be authorized by parliament until a thorough investigation has been made into the company's history of stock selling. I believe at the present time the company has some $12,000,000 of unissued stock. It may be argued and argued successfully that a large company of this kind may have a legitimate right to ask for an increase of $75,000,000 in capitalization, but when we look at the facts we will begin to doubt whether or not this is so. In the past the company has had the habit of issuing its stock to its own shareholders at the par value of $100, while the market value has been ranging from $125 to $193. It can be readily seen that a much smaller issue of stock than $75,000,000 would bring into the coffers of the company the same amount of money that would be brought in by its past methods of issuing stock, so that we ought to be assured that the stock will not be issued to the shareholders of the company in this manner, but that it will be left open to be purchased by the public in general. That is one of the amendments which should be passed if this bill is to go through parliament and now we have no opportunity even to move it. That is one reason why I wish to protest against the methods which were adopted in putting this bill through the house. In respect to what I have just said, I wish to quote a very short extract from an article in the Toronto Globe, written by Mr. Reid, who I believe was counsel for the province of Ontario before the railway commission when the matter of telephone rates was up for discussion a short time ago. He says:

> The history of its stock issues shows that the company has been making a regular practice of issuing stock to its shareholders at par of $100 per share when it was listed and selling on the exchanges at market prices, forty per cent, fifty per cent, sixty per cent, seventy-five per cent, and in one instance in the year 1899 at ninety-three per cent higher than its par value, and in each of such cases the shareholders were given a bonus of $40, $47, $50, $60, $75 and $93 per share, in addition to the regular dividend of eight per cent.

Parliament has a right to safeguard the public against the continuation of this practice. If the company really require $75,000,000 increase in capital we should know in the public interest whether that sum of $75,000,000 is to be divided out to its own shareholders at a par value of $100, when the stock is worth $193. If parliament allows the bill to pass without safeguarding the public in that respect, it will be remiss in its duty. It is clear to everybody that the dividends must be paid on the stock issue, and if dividends are to be paid on $75,000,000 worth of stock that may not be required, where are the dividends to come from? The dividends can come only from the telephone charges, so that if the telephone charges are not sufficiently high now to afford such dividends, another appeal will be made to the Board of Railway Commissioners for an increase and thus we shall be placing a still greater burden upon the users of the telephone system.

Let me come to the second point to which I object in respect to the bill. I have referred already to its subsidiary company the Northern Electric Company. This company sells practically all the supplies which the Bell Telephone Company require. I am given to understand that it is possible—and perhaps there is more than a suggestion that this is being done—that in purchasing supplies from its own subsidiary company the Bell Telephone Company may pay a much higher price than it ought to pay were it buying at a fair market value. Thus it reduces the profits which will appear on the books of the Bell Telephone Company and gives an excuse for increasing the rates, although meanwhile it is taking in its profits by means of the subsidiary company. With regard to the subsidiary let me remark that the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary) has before the house a bill which will grant the right to investigate telephone subsidiary companies. For some strange reason or another that bill is now under public bills and orders and it will not be reached this session, but if the bill under discussion is to become law, the bill to which I have referred should also be passed this session. We ought to have a right to investigate the subsidiary companies in order to make sure that none of this sort of practice is going on, or, if it is going on, that it should immediately cease. But if we sit quietly by while a bill of this character is railroaded through parliament, what opportunity have we, as representatives of the public, to safeguard their interests in this respect? If the bill is to be proceeded with, we have a right to ask the government to guarantee to us that the bill to which I have referred shall be placed before parliament this session and that we shall have an opportunity to deal with it.

With regard to the extravagant prices which are alleged to have been charged by the subsidiary company, I wish to quote a paragraph or two from an editorial in the Toronto Globe:

> If the relations between the Northern Electric and Bell Telephone companies are such that the rates which the Bell Company charges are used in part to enhance unduly the returns of the former, telephone users are entitled to protection from the railway board. The public has sanctioned the operation of the Bell as a monopoly and is guaranteeing its dividends, and has a right to know whether it is paying its money for service, or also for the support of a subsidiary on which there is no check.

Further it says:

> The public wants to know, first, why the vast amounts of materials which the Bell Company purchases come from the one source, and whether the conditions imposed are such that there can be little or no competition.

In this connection I desire to point out that it is alleged that the subsidiary company makes a practice of selling its old, second-hand, worn out goods to the Bell Telephone Company at first class prices. That is another method by which it is alleged this company may cover up its profits. I believe also that the western provinces, although they control publicly their telephone service, are practically compelled to buy from this subsidiary company of the Bell Telephone Company, and the charges of the publicly-owned telephones are consequently made higher through these overcharges.

I do not wish further to delay the business of the house. I think that my hon. friend will not charge me with trying to talk out this bill. I have placed before the house the two main points of objection I have to this bill: First, that the method of the company in issuing its stock is not sound, that it issues stock to its own shareholders at a par value of $100 when the value of the stock on the market is much higher, and in so doing not only slices a melon amongst its shareholders, but increases the charges for telephone service in order to pay dividends on unnecessary capital. Second, I say that the subsidiary company, the Northern Electric Company, is controlled by the Bell Telephone Company, and in selling its supplies to the Bell Telephone Company may overcharge, and thus excuse the company for seeking higher rates for telephone service. For these reasons I say that this bill should either be defeated entirely by parliament, or be so amended as to safeguard the public in the respects to which I have referred.

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): I want to take this opportunity of expressing my sentiments in criticism, not only of this bill, but of the rules of this house as they have been used during the last two weeks to stop public discussion on bills that are of public importance.

There are certain rules that cut off public discussion when in committee. Such a rule has been used three times during the last few weeks. There is another rule which can be used, if need be, on the third reading to cut off discussion. This house is supposed to be a place of free discussion, where we can debate the merits of the various questions that come before us, but under the rules as they have been used of late we find ourselves in this position, that it is possible for the government with a majority of even one, if they care to bring in legislation in the names of private members, to press that legislation through the house from beginning to end and through the committees of the house without any discussion at all. That has been completely proved to us during the last two weeks.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): In connection with what legislation has that been proven?

Mr. SPENCER: Now that the hon. gentleman has called my attention to it, I would refer to one of the worst bills that we have ever passed, that with regard to the Niagara bridge.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Government legislation?

Mr. SPENCER: I did not say it was government legislation.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): The hon. member said the government passed it through the house.

Mr. SPENCER: I said that the government could, if it saw fit, with a majority of even one, bring in legislation in the name of private members and press that legislation through the house irrespective of the opposition there might be to it.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): How could the government do it unless the members of this house sanctioned it?

Mr. SPENCER: Fifty-one per cent can sanction it.

Mr. YOUNG (Saskatoon): The government do not happen to have fifty-one per cent.

Mr. SPENCER: They have more than fifty-one per cent of the membership of the house supporting them.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Does the hon. member mean to tell this house that the government can pass public measures in the guise of private measures, and force them through this house without discussion?

Mr. SPENCER: I will tell my hon. friend exactly what I do mean. A private member may bring in what is termed a private bill, but which is of public importance—

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): But not the government.

Mr. SPENCER: A private member on the government side of the house and the government and its supporters may be behind that measure, and if they have a majority of only one in the house, then irrespective of what opposition there may be to that legislation, they can force that legislation through the house without proper discussion, and that has been done during the last two weeks.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend keeps using the word "government". What he really means is that fifty-one per cent of the membership of the house, wherever derived, may do that with respect to a private bill. But for the hon. member to keep on using the word "government" with respect to private bills is distinctly unfair.

Mr. SPENCER: I will put it in words that the minister can accept. I will say legislation that is supported by those on the right of the Speaker.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend will admit that the fifty-one per cent might be partly on this side and partly on the other, as in fact was the case with the very bill which my hon. friend has used as an illustration. He is reflecting unnecessarily on the government. He should reflect on the majority as it happened to be made up at the time.

Mr. SPENCER: I do not wish to reflect on the government in the slightest, but one can see the danger of the rules as they have been used in the last two weeks in shutting off discussion in this house. I do not take up much of the time of the house, but on two or three bills in the last two weeks I have wanted to speak for about ten minutes, and I was absolutely refused the opportunity of speaking to them. On two of those bills the discussion was cut off without a single clause being considered at all, and in the case of the third we were given the opportunity to vote on the legislation without proper discussion.

It has been claimed that the hon. members who sit in this corner of the house have been responsible for holding up legislation and talking out bills. I absolutely deny that, and an hon. member in this part of the house will in a few days put that on the record, giving actual figures and the amount of space taken up in Hansard. If they have talked to a bill, as they have a perfect right to do, it is because they have disagreed with it, and if they have moved an amendment to a bill, whether public or private, that is also their right.

Mr. BRADETTE: They have the right to kill it, too.

Mr. SPENCER: They have the right to kill it, if they wish. I do not object to any reasonable discussion on any bill, whether it is my own or anybody else's, but I am taking advantage of this opportunity to point out what I consider the serious position in which we are in under the rules as they have been used of late: first, which provides that a member may move that the bill under discussion be reported; and second, the rule in respect to moving the previous question. Not only can these rules be used in the house to cut off discussion, but they can also be so used in the special committees of the house. If we allow these rules to continue unchanged our proceedings become a farce. All business that comes before this house is supposed to be subject to full discussion, but this is not the case under what I might call these eccentric rules.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Has the hon. member's statement anything to do with the bill now before the house?

Mr. SPENCER: I well know that my remarks are probably not altogether pleasant to some hon. members who are trying to interrupt me.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege, I resent the hon. member's imputation. He knows that his statement is not correct as far as I am concerned. I ask for your ruling, Mr. Speaker, that what the hon. gentleman is discussing is not relevant to the bill, and is simply obstructing and blocking the business of the house, whether intentionally or not.

Mr. SPEAKER: No hon. member should be accused of blocking or obstructing the business of the house. On the point raised by the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. McLean), I think the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer) is speaking to the third reading of the bill and complaining that he has not had sufficient enlightenment because there was no discussion of the bill in committee. He is perfectly in order.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege, do you rule that the hon. member for Battle River is in order in attributing motives to those who interrupted him?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. gentleman himself attributed motives.

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not think the hon. member for Battle River has said anything against the character of any hon. gentleman. In any event I hope he will not attribute motives.

Mr. SPENCER: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your ruling. I am quite sure that were the hon. member for Melfort in my place, and had been shut off for the last few nights when he attempted to express his views, he would be just as determined to speak to-night as I am. I admire his ability, and I think I know him sufficiently well to be certain that he would not meekly submit to what he considers a wrong. Before dealing with the bill I should like for the moment to attempt—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. SPENCER (Battle River): Before I continue my discussion of the bill I wish to say a word to the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Rouville (Mr. Morin) who is in charge of this measure. As has already been said, I do not suppose there is a member on either side of the house whose ability and sincerity is more appreciated, and I do not wish to reflect on him for a moment; but I do think his tactics the other night were ill-advised. There is criticism of this legislation because the company seeking it is a semi-public company, and I think the hon. member was wrong in the course he took last night, which prevented the bill being discussed in committee, clause by clause.

Mr. MORIN (St. Hyacinthe): Now is the time to discuss the bill; you are doing it.

Mr. SPENCER: But not clause by clause. I think the hon. member was very wrong last night in cutting off discussion. This company is seeking power to increase its capital from $75,000,000 to $150,000,000. As I have said, it is a semi-public company. Its rates are regulated by the railway commission, and are so fixed as to insure a return of 8 per cent on the capital stock. That being so, I think the people through their representatives in this house, should have the fullest opportunity of discussing this bill. As we have been told, there are certain subsidiary companies operated more or less in sympathy with the Bell Telephone Company. A short time ago when the Bell company made an application to the railway commission for increased tolls, the municipalities who opposed the application asked permission to investigate the books of one of the telephone company's subsidiaries in order to support their contention that the application should not be granted, but the railway commission moved that under the Railway Act they had no power to investigate this subsidiary company. There is on the order paper a bill standing in the name of the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary) to amend the Railway Act so as to empower the railway commission to investigate subsidiaries of telephone and telegraph companies, and I think in fairness to the public that bill should have been proceeded with before this measure engaged our attention.

This increased capitalization of $75,000,000 is to be issued, I understand, in one hundred dollar shares, that is, 750,000 shares. The shares of the Bell company I thought were quoted at a premium of $60, but I am told that they are really at a premium of $90.

Mr. MORIN (St. Hyacinthe): No, the statement is wrong.

Mr. SPENCER: I shall be glad to be corrected. Is the stock at a premium of $60?

Mr. MORIN (St. Hyacinthe): At the present time the stock is selling at about $170.

Mr. SPENCER: To be well within the mark I will put the premium at $60. But these shares will be sold, not to the general public, but to the present shareholders at $100 a share. So we have this extraordinary situation, these 750,000 shares being sold to the shareholders at par, although the stock is at a premium of $60—in fact I understand it is $72 and a fraction to-day—which means a division among the shareholders of no less than $42,000,000. In other words, this is purely a case of melon cutting. It is manifestly unfair to allow any semi-public company to water its stock to this extent, when it is operating in a monopolistic way in Ontario and Quebec, and is allowed to charge tolls that will guarantee a return of 8 per cent on its capital stock. We should first of all discuss this bill clause by clause, but before passing it we should deal with the bill to which I have already referred empowering the railway commission to investigate subsidiary companies of the Bell company. For these reasons I protest against this legislation having been rushed through the committee stage last night, and I desire to direct the attention of hon. members to the fact that with the information at our disposal it is against the public interest to pass this bill in its present form.

Mr. M. N. CAMPBELL (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, unlike the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) I have no regrets to express or apologies to offer for my opposition to this bill. Indeed, I consider the bill is not in the public interest, if I have any conception at all of what constitutes the public interest, and I would owe an apology to this house, to my constituents and to my conscience if I did otherwise than oppose its passage.

I wish at the outset to take issue with the Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning), on the implication of his remarks, that the government accepts no responsibility for bills of this nature. In the case of every bill coming before this house, whether it be a public or a government bill, or a bill introduced by a private member, the moment the minister leading the government rises and takes a definite stand on it he gives a lead to his followers. And those of us on this side know that in almost every instance, no matter who is leading the government, should that minister take a definite stand on any measure, when it comes to a vote every man on the government benches supports it. Indirectly therefore it becomes a government measure and the government must accept the responsibility for it. I say therefore that the government must accept responsibility for every measure before the house whether it be a private or a public bill.

Mr. CANNON: That is a new theory.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) is fond of referring to what he calls the will of parliament. Theoretically, under the rules of the house, the Prime Minister is simply a member as I am, and my rights would seem to be the same as his. In reality, however, when I express my opinion I carry no weight—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. CAMPBELL: —beyond that of a private member; I say that quite frankly. I have no responsibility such as the Prime Minister has, for when he gets up he speaks as leader of the government and his followers naturally support whatever stand he takes. No one will seriously question that statement and therefore, I repeat, the government is responsible for this bill as well as for every other bill of a similar nature that comes before the house.

An hon. MEMBER: Not a private bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Yes, just as well as any other bill.

Mr. HEPBURN: Does not the hon. gentleman's remarks apply to his own group? Whenever his leader gets up his followers support him.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Not to the same extent. The fact is, the chief accusation which our hon. friends opposite have brought against us in the country is that we cannot be disciplined. From one end of the province of Saskatchewan to the other that is the argument that has been advanced to defeat the Progressive candidates—that we did not obey our leader. That is the principal argument. The hon. gentleman says that when our leader gets up we naturally follow him. Well, it does happen that we are elected on a common platform and that we subscribe to a common set of principles. That is true. But there are often variations and differences of view within that platform, and my hon. friend has only to look over the pages of Hansard in the last six years to confirm this statement. Our hon. friends opposite have used this argument against us in the country and they have always been able to quote Hansard to show where the Progressives have split and divided on various questions.

[Mr. Campbell.]

Mr. BRADETTE: Is the Prime Minister responsible for divorce bills that come before this house?

Mr. CAMPBELL: Frankly, I should say yes—indirectly. If the Prime Minister rose in his place, during the passage of a divorce bill, and opposed that bill what would my hon. friend do? Undoubtedly he would follow his leader and the bill would be defeated. Now, the bill under discussion seriously affects the interests of Ontario and Quebec and indirectly as well those of western Canada. May I be permitted to quote from a letter which appeared in the Toronto Globe of May 8, 1928, written by a Mr. R. A. Reid of Toronto, dealing with this bill. This gentleman says:

> A new and increased burden of annual taxation amounting to $2,600,000 per year having just been imposed upon the people of Ontario and Quebec through increased telephone rates and charges, by and with the sanction and approval and under instructions of an order in council issued by the Dominion government of Canada, through its agent the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada, the necessity for any such rate increase is now to be investigated by means of a proposed statute or law authorizing an inquiry into the Northern Electric Company, which is entirely controlled, operated and owned by the Bell Telephone interests, and which receives over 90 per cent of its telephone apparatus business and materials revenue from that company annually.

I submit that until this Northern Electric Company is thoroughly investigated this parliament is not doing its duty if it grants further concessions to the Bell Telephone Company. When, a year ago, an application came before the Board of Railway Commissioners for an increase in rates by the Bell Telephone Company that board took the attitude that they were limited by law to an investigation of telephone companies and telephone companies only in that particular connection, and that therefore they could not inquire into the operations of subsidiaries of telephone companies. To get over this difficulty, Bill No. 63 was introduced into the house by a private member. The object of that bill is to empower the Board of Railway Commissioners to investigate not only the telephone company but any of its subsidiaries, so as properly to determine whether or not the shareholders of that company are getting a proper return on their money and whether or not the company is entitled to an increase in rates. Until this question is disposed of, and that power is granted to the Board of Railway Commissioners, this house should not pass the bill under discussion at the present time. Let me quote further from the letter to which I have already referred:

What, then, becomes of any judgment founded on such false bases? Where there is no evidence as to acutal cost, factory cost and cost of raw material and ultimate cost of production and profit by an unregulated and uncontrolled monopoly like the Northern Electric Company, which hides itself behind a high protective tariff wall of from 27 to 32 per cent, there can be no reasoned judgment as to prices charged the Bell Telephone Company of Canada. More especially is this the case where as in the present instance, the prices charged are monopoly prices for apparatus and equipment manufactured under monopoly-owned patents the greater portion of which cannot be purchased from any other source, and are so priced and charged by a controlled company to its parent and controlling dictator, as in the case of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada and the Northern Electric. Such a condition does not, and can never, lend itself to a logical finding of "reasonableness" or "reasonable" unless the whole truth be made known as to earnings, etc., and be proved in evidence. And for the above reasons the Board of Railway Commissioners declined to go into these questions because they said that their present authority was limited by law.

I wish now to quote from remarks made by Commissioner Oliver, who dissented from the majority report, taking the stand that until the subsidiaries of this company were investigated the board should not grant the desired increase. Commissioner Oliver said:

There was no means of definitely establishing at the hearing whether the prices paid by the Bell were fair and reasonable or not.

The Bell owns 50 per cent of the stock of the Northern Electric. The Western Electric Company of Chicago, which is a subsidiary of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, owns 43½ per cent. The remaining 6½ per cent is said by counsel for the city of Toronto to be owned in part by the directors of the Bell Company, thus giving that company control of an actual majority of the stock of the Northern Electric. As the Northern Electric is a development from the Bell and in its earlier days was owned entirely by the Bell, it can only be concluded that it is now a subsidiary of the Bell Company of Canada and that its activities are in fact directed by the management of the Bell.

The Bell is therefore in the position of being both chief customer of and controlling shareholder in the Northern Electric.

Further, Commissioner Oliver says:

The decision not to distribute this among the shareholders, of whom the Bell was chief, but to carry it into the surplus of the Northern Electric, was in the hands of the Bell company through its control of a majority of the stock.

Further he states as follows:

The only inference I am able to draw from the ascertained facts is that the Bell has made a contract with its subsidiary, the Northern Electric Company, whereby unduly high prices have been paid for material and equipment, and that the Bell, as the controlling shareholder in the Northern Electric, has not permitted itself to benefit from the undue profits reaped by the Northern Electric. So long as the situation between the Bell and the Northern Electric remains as it now appears to me to be, I am unable to find justification in the financial position of the Bell company for an increase in rates over those at present in force.

That is what Commisisoner Oliver has to say with respect to this application for increased rates. Now, sir, we find that the subsidiary of the Bell Telephone Company, the Northern Electric Company, has been making very large profits and increasing its surpluses at an astonishing rate. These surpluses and these profits should be properly distributed, and in that proper distribution the Bell Telephone Company would benefit to a very large degree. If that had been done prior to the investigation by the Board of Railway Commissioners, and if those profits had been shown as they should have been shown, there is no doubt that this increase in rates never would have been granted. Until those profits are fairly and properly distributed no fair decision can be made as to the right of the Bell Telephone Company to increase its rates and saddle extra taxation on the users of telephones. Millions of dollars of earnings have been held back undistributed by the Northern Electric Company, and of course those amounts have not been shown in the balance sheets of the Bell Telephone Company.

Now I quote from the brief presented and the arguments advanced on behalf of the government and the Attorney General of the Province of Ontario, in opposition to any increase in telephone rates. This is a document which was filed with the Board of Railway Commissioners in connection with this application:

What a public scandal this is, to have the same directors sittting on the board of the Bell Telephone Company and also on the board of the Northern Electric Company, buying from and selling to themselves, with the assistance of Western Electric Company directors, and fixing the prices among themselves that the poor milch cow, the Bell Telephone Company, shall pay for such apparatus, equipment and supplies. Is it any wonder the treasury of the Bell is depleted systematically when any money appears, and the contents pipe-lined over to the treasury of the Northern Electric and ultimately into the treasury of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company. As a glaring instance of this, let me illustrate by citing the annual dividend payment of 8 per cent and 2 per cent bonus, or about 10 per cent paid by the Northern to the Bell on the latter's share holdings in the former, amounting to $3,000,000. The dividend payment would be about $300,000. This amount is no sooner paid to the Bell than it is sluiced across the international boundary line and into the treasury of the American company as a payment under the 1923 service contract.

Bill 63, which is now on the order paper of this house and which under the rules will not likely come up this session, proposes to solve this problem by granting to the Board of Railway Commissioners the right to investigate such companies as the Northern Electric Company and determine whether or not the Bell Telephone Company is entitled to any consideration. I quote again from the letter to which I referred:

> Professor Lamar Lyndon, one of the finest public utility experts in the United States, in his work on public utilities says: "The interrelationships of the local Bell companies with some district organization and of the district organization with the American Telegraph and Telephone Company make it almost impossible to determine true costs and overhead charges for a local exchange.
> In fact, for accuracy, nothing short of an investigation of the entire Bell system, the American Telephone and Telegraph Company and the Western Electric Company would serve to disclose the exact facts.

That is the situation in the United States, and that is equally true of the Bell Telephone Company and its subsidiary, the Northern Electric Company, in Canada. The Western Electric Company manufactures all the material used by the Bell Telephone Company in the United States, and is practically the only source of supply.

Let me take a moment to consider the Northern Electric Company in Canada. Fifty per cent of the stock of that company is held by the Bell Telephone Company, 6 per cent or more by the directors of the Bell Telephone Company and the balance by the Western Electric Company in the United States. The Western Electric Company, in turn, is owned by the American Telegraph and Telephone Company, which owns the Bell Telephone Company and so on, so everything paid into the treasury goes to this company in the United States. Of course, to be fair I must say that that would not apply to any shares held in Canada, but these are comparatively few because the stock is controlled as I have outlined. Quoting again from this letter, I read:

> The Bell Telephone Company of Canada purchases its telephone materials, apparatus, supplies, plant and equipment from the Northern Electric Company of Montreal. This latter company was organized, financed, and built up with the money, property and assets of the Bell Telephone Company. It was wholly owned originally by the Bell Telephone Company, but by some financial arrangement a large part of the assets of the Bell Telephone Company in this Northern Electric have disappeared to the extent of over 40 per cent, and this remains unexplained. What has become of the original 100 per cent ownership of the Northern by the Bell? Who profited by this transaction at the expense of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada and deprived it of its assets and property? This is a very serious matter. It remains shrouded in mystery.

[Mr. Campbell.]

The policy appears to have been to keep the profits of the Bell Telephone Company at the very minimum, so that in appearing before the Board of Railway Commissioners the company would find no difficulty in obtaining authority to increase its rates. In that way they could hide their profits and keep them hidden indefinitely. This could be easily carried to a point where the Bell Telephone Company would show no profits at all, and even if we increased rates it could be still carried on so that no profits would be shown. That is, they could pay more for their equipment secured from the Northern Electric Company, leave all the profits there and get them by indirect means. Of course I do not say that that will be done, but unless something is done to prevent it that remains possible. Again I quote from this letter:

> All this is done and is aided by hiding behind a 25 to 30 per cent tariff wall on telephone apparatus and equipment. It would still remain a monopoly without any tariff, and yet prevent the duty being added to the price. The government telephone services of the three provinces of western Canada are all tied by this same yoke.

That is where I have a very direct interest. It might be easily said that the Bell Telephone Company operates only in Ontario and Quebec and that this increase in rates affects only the people of those provinces, but I say that in a larger way this whole question which is opened up by the discussion of any concessions granted to the Bell Telephone Company does very materially affect the interests of the people of western Canada. Fortunately we have publicly owned telephone systems in those three provinces, of which we are proud; these systems are owned and controlled by the people and are giving splendid service. But, sir, of what avail is this to us when we find that the source from which we must obtain all our supplies is controlled by the Bell Telephone Company of eastern Canada? By raising the price they can make us pay whatever they wish for the use of our telephones in those three provinces, because they enjoy what is a monopoly in supplying telephone equipment in this country. In 1925 the Northern Electric Company sold $12,000,000 worth of supplies to the Bell Telephone Company. There is very little doubt that excessive prices were charged for these supplies to leave a profit in the hands of the Northern Electric Company rather than in the hands of the Bell Telephone Company. At the end of 1925, the Northern Electric Company had a reserve and surplus of $8,409,000, where the total value of the property and plant was only $9,882,000; the surplus and reserve being almost equal to the entire value of their plant. I will quote from this newspaper again:

If we take the depreciation reserve alone for 1925, it is over 100 per cent, and nearly 125 per cent of the plant. For the year 1924 the depreciation reserve represented 100 per cent of the plant and equipment. For the year 1923 it was also over 100 per cent, for 1922 it was also 100 per cent, for 1921 it was also 100 per cent depreciation reserve in relation to their plant, while for the year 1920 the depreciation reserve represented 129 per cent of their plant and equipment.

This looks very much like the old scriptural tale of turning water into wine, only in this case it is turning water into gold. All these surpluses have been built up from profits and earnings made by the company, and contributions made to that end not by the security holders but by those who patronised the company; they have all been built up by profits made in the operation of the company.

On December 31, 1925, the statement of the Northern Electric Company showed a building and real estate surplus of $5,388,000; depreciation reserve of $5,564,000, and an undivided surplus of $2,844,000, nearly all of which was earned from the users of the Bell Telephone Company. There is nothing at all to prevent the Bell Telephone Company from earning no profits at all, allowing this to be done by the subsidiaries to such an extent that the original company would show no profit. If we permit this sort of thing to continue there will be an excuse for a regularly increasing scale of rates, which will have to be paid by the people of these provinces.

I would like to quote further from this letter. This particular paragraph refers to the question of giving the Board of Railway Commissioners power to investigate the subsidiary company, the Northern Electric Company. It reads as follows:

And that is just what we are going to do, with the help and assistance of the bill now before the parliament of Canada, and in this connection I may say that the United States senate recently ordered an investigation of this very same nature to be gone on with, and the city of Boston, and a number of other large centres have filed printed indictments and complaints with the Interstate Commerce Commission at Washington, asking for a United States-wide inquiry of these same matters for which the parliament of Canada is now being asked to pass a bill in order to commence a similar investigation in Canada.

The bill that we are now discussing provides for a new stock issue. This would be perfectly all right if the company sold its stock on the market and put the proceeds into its treasury to be used in the extension of its service, but we have no guarantee that this is not just a means of hiding further profit. We have no guarantee that they are going to show some of this as profit, for, as the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer) has said, it will probably be sold at par value to the shareholders, and the opportunity for turning between $40,000,000 and $45,000,000 into the treasury will be lost. There is nothing to prevent them making a stock bonus, handing some of this stock over to the present shareholders, and using that as a means to pay out dividends on stock that was not covered by the investments of the security holders.

We have no right to pass this bill until such time as the operations of this company and its subsidiaries are thoroughly investigated. On December 31, 1925, the depreciation reserve of the Bell Telephone Company amounted to $23,295,000, and the surplus to $6,800,000—this in addition to the fact that a lot of their earnings have been withheld from them. In spite of that, we still find the company with this very comfortable surplus of nearly $30,000,000, all of which is built up not by the investment of the security holders, but by the tolls paid by the users of telephones in Ontario and Quebec.

We propose by this bill to give the company the right to capitalize their surplus, or what is ordinarily called stock watering. We propose to allow them to issue stock bonuses against this surplus, and allow them to capitalize it. I do not say that they will do so but the users of the telephones might easily be in the position of being compelled to pay dividends on the very surplus which their contributions to the company have created.

Western Canada, as I said, is indirectly interested in this whole thing, because we buy our supplies from the same source. As conditions exist to-day, the Bell Telephone Company is in the position of fixing the prices that our government-owned systems in the west must pay for the supplies they purchase from the Northern Electric Company.

May I quote again from the brief and argument on behalf of the province of Ontario, when they appeared before the railway commissioners to oppose an increase in telephone rates. This is what it says:

This is the most barefaced piece of villany and imposition ever attempted upon a free people, and its exposure before this honourable board will not be the last this corporate monopoly will hear about it.

This is not something that has come from the so-called radical farmer governments of the west; this is not a public statement by the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Evans), but it is a statement of the representative of the Conservative government of Ontario before the Board of Railway Commissioners. The people of that province protested against an increase in rates, but it was put through in spite of that. That increase in rates has gone into effect, and I call upon my hon. friends to my right who come from the province of Ontario to stay behind their own government, representing their own people, and make some attempt to impose upon this company restrictions which will prevent increases of this nature in the future, and see to it that this company and its subsidiary will be properly investigated.

Mr. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): I do not wish to take the time of the house to any great length. I am in favour of this bill, and I believe that the increase in capitalization asked for by the Bell Telephone Company is necessary in order that they may carry out and perform an efficient public service. At the present time they are under the control of the Board of Railway Commissioners. Their profits from telephone service are regulated by that board; their dividends upon their capital stock are, in a like manner, regulated. The basis of that regulation is that every $100 of capital stock shall be represented by $100 cash paid into the treasury of the company. That is secured by the bill in the form in which it is now presented to the house, and if the company is earning from its telephonic service as a public utility a larger rate of dividend than should be paid on a share of stock which represents $100 in cash, that is a matter which can and which will be from time to time regulated by the Board of Railway Commissioners.

I do not intend to discuss at the present time another bill before the house which would give to the Board of Railway Commissioners the power of investigating subsidiary companies. When that bill comes before the house I shall be prepared to discuss it. I do not believe in making invidious distinctions in such matters, and if the act constituting the Board of Railway Commissioners is to be amended, let us deal fairly with all public utilities coming before that board and let us make the same provision apply to all public utility companies. I see that grave distinctions may be drawn. I do not see why freight rates over the national railway system should depend upon the amount that its subsidiary companies, hotel companies, are earning. I do not see why freight rates on Canadian Pacific railway should be governed by the amount of profit on the Canadian Pacific steamship lines. There are such considerations which must receive from the house due attention when it has before it that other bill to which reference has been made, which was introduced by the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary) and which, I have no doubt, will receive fair and adequate consideration by the house. But an increase in the capital of the Bell Telephone Company is in my opinion absolutely necessary in order that it may perform the public service which it has undertaken to perform, which the public are demanding should be performed in the way of extensions to its lines and to its business.

The matter of the relation of the Northern Electric Company to the Bell Telephone Company came before the Board of Railway Commissioners in 1921 and I will read just a very short extract from the decision of that board under date of April 1, 1921. The board said as to the relation of the Northern Electric Company to the Bell Telephone Company—and I am reading from the decision of the commissioner who gave the judgment:

> As the matter presents itself to me, this is a phase of company management into which the board is not authorized to go. What the board is concerned with in the public interest is to see that reasonable prices have been charged, this having a necessary bearing on the question of the position from a net revenue standpoint of the company purchasing materials.
> On consideration of the evidence, and bearing in mind the supplementary comparative material as to prices which the board has obtained, and which is referred to in an earlier connection, I am of the opinion that it has not been shown that the prices charged are unreasonable.

That is, the prices charged on the material purchased by the Bell Telephone Company from the Northern Electric Company. I am not going to follow the various judgments down to the present time, but I will call attention for a moment to an extract from the majority judgment of the Board of Railway Commissioners rendered on February 21, 1927. I prefer that majority judgment to the rather extravagant assertions of counsel for any authority who appeared before the board. At least, after the commissioners had heard the arguments of counsel, this was the considered judgment of a majority of the board:

> It has been established that the prices charged by the Northern Electric Company, under the most favoured customer's clause, were lower than those which the Bell Telephone Company would have been obliged to pay to other manufacturers.
> It also appears obvious that the Northern Electric Company is able, on account of its mass production and volume of trade, to manufacture and sell at a lower cost than the Bell Telephone Company could manufacture or purchase if it were limited only to its own requirements.
> There is no evidence of any improper financial arrangements between the two companies, and the agreement and the supplementary agreement which govern their relations are distinctly advantageous to the Bell Telephone Company.

The board can be concerned only with the effect of the Bell Telephone Company's purchase of materials, from the standpoint of its net revenue.

On consideration of the evidence, one is compelled to reach the conclusion that it has not been shown that the prices charged were unreasonable; on the contrary, it was shown that such prices were as low or lower than those charged to other customers.

In view of that considered judgment I think the house should not commingle the two considerations.

Mr. DUNNING: That is the point. I was just about to raise a point of order on the very matter that my hon. friend is now mentioning, because we are in danger of drifting into a debate, precipitated by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Campbell), on another bill which is on the order paper, and I am sure my hon. friend does not desire that.

Mr. CAHAN: No. I am simply returning to the consideration that in view of that considered judgment the house, with due respect to the judgment of its own court, should now eliminate all questions as to the purchase of materials, because those can and will be dealt with from time to time under other statutes. Therefore we have to come back to the consideration of the merits of the bill. This increase of capital is necessary. It was proved to be necessary to the satisfaction of the railway committee of this house and the bill was reported unanimously, if I remember correctly, by that committee. It has been considered and it has been reported by the committee of the whole house by a very large majority. Under those circumstances I do not intend to take further time to justify my position in voting wholeheartedly for the measure.

Mr. BROWN: Before the hon. member sits down, would he make a little clearer the point to which he referred in the beginning of his speech when he said that it was provided in the bill itself that for every $100 share, $100 should go to the treasury of the company.

Mr. CAHAN: Under the Bell Telephone Company's acts of incorporation as they are amended down to the present time the stock can be issued only for cash. There are in those acts of incorporation no such provisions as we have seen in some recent bills before the house for the issue of stock for other considerations.

Mr. BROWN: I ask that question because the objection has been raised that in this particular bill that is not made clear.

Mr. CAHAN: The whole scope of the act renders it impossible to issue stock for other considerations than cash.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): I was under the impression, Mr. Speaker, that the sponsor of the bill was about to answer some of the arguments that have been levelled from this part of the house at the bill.

In the first place, let me say very definitely that I have examined at considerable length this bill and the affairs of both companies on which discussion has taken place, and I am not yet convinced that the increase in capital asked for is at all needed. I will give my reason for that in a sentence. At the present time the Bell Telephone Company has power to add to its capital to the extent of $48,000,000 without issuing one dollar's worth of new stock. It can increase its capital by $48,000,000 without any amendment to its original charter. The stock capital issued is about $62,000,000, and there is still allowed to be issued under the original charter about $13,000,000. The bond issue is $40,000,000. So the company can issue in bonds around $35,000,000 more, and $13,000,000 of stock, or a total of $48,000,000. Would that be good business? Is it good business for a corporation of this kind to carry fifty per cent of its capital in stock and fifty per cent in bonds? There is no question as to the opinion of authorities on that point; they are agreed that it is good policy. The company have even admitted that is good policy before the board of railway commissioners. So here you have a company that at the present moment has power to increase its capital by $48,000,000 coming to parliament and asking for the right to increase its stock capital by the amount of $75,000,000 more before it has exhausted its power in respect of the original capital by $48,000,000.

Let the house not forget this fact that every $100 share of capital stock carries eight per cent interest. That eight per cent is absolutely guaranteed by the Board of Railway Commissioners. It the company's earnings are less than eight per cent, all that it has to do is to make an application to the Board of Railway Commissioners and prove that it is not earning enough to pay eight per cent with the present rates for service, and immediately those rates are increased. So the effect of the whole regulations under which this semi-public utility is operated is to guarantee to the shareholders of the company eight per cent on their stock. But the bonds carry only five per cent. Now I ask any hon. gentleman a simple question: Will it be better for the users of telephones in this country that the interest charges on the capital shall be five per cent or eight per cent? Obviously the rates must be higher the more stock that is out at eight per cent, than if that capital were out at five per cent. That is clear. Of course, another question may arise as to the proper use of bonds and stock, but that is not yet an important factor because the company has not yet brought its bond issue to the same amount as its capital stock issue.

Let us examine the company in some detail for a few years back, and find out what has been the percentage issued in bonds and stock:

	Bonds Per cent	Stock Per cent
1919	33	67
1920	47	53
1921	38	62
1922	34	66
1923	30	70
1924	26	74
1925	38	62
1926	38	62
1927	43	57

It will be clear to the house that the company is rapidly coming to the point where the balance between the bonds and stock issued would, in the opinion of experts, be just about right for a company of this kind. Why then, should this house now increase the capital stock by $75,000,000, on which the company will have to pay eight per cent interest, thus increasing the overhead charges on the operations of the company, possibly leading to a further increase in the charges to the users of the service later on.

There is a principle involved in this whole business to which the house should in my opinion direct attention, and that is whether we are going to permit any longer public utility corporations whose earnings are guaranteed, whose interest is guaranteed, whose cost of operation is guaranteed by the rates which they are permitted to charge under a monopoly, to issue stock to its own shareholders, who are now making excellent dividends, at present rates. A rate of eight per cent is not a rate to shut your eyes to. In addition to that, how long are we going to allow them to take from the users of telephones, gifts through the stock being issued to the shareholders at a lower price than the market price of the stock to-day? Let me give an illustration of what I mean. If this bill passes, there at once becomes available a stock issue of $10,000,000. The shareholders can buy that stock at $100 per share, and under the present market valuation it is worth $172.50. So the shareholders—and this privilege of buying the stock at $100 per share is restricted to the present shareholders—by virtue of this first claim on the stock get not only $100 worth of stock earning eight per cent interest, but a gift of $72.50 as well.

Mr. CAHAN: Provided the market holds.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It may be said at once that the market will not hold. I grant you that if you offer this stock for public subscription, the market will not hold. What will happen will be that the stock may slump to some degree, but immediately if the stock were offered to public subscription the coffers of the company would be benefited by $50 to $60 a share more than if the stock were issued at par to the private shareholders of the company. That is a principle which this house sooner or later will have to consider seriously with a view to amending the charters under which all such companies operate, in order to prevent the issuing of stock to its own shareholders at par. All the stock of companies of this kind should be sold at open auction, so that it can get out on the markets of the world. If that were done in the case of every company whose interest and earnings are guaranteed, there would be a greater return to the treasury of the company than there is under the present system of issuing stock.

Recently, as has been pointed out, the rates of the Bell Telephone Company were increased in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec to an extent that simply meant an additional burden of taxation upon the telephone users to the amount of $2,600,000 a year. I venture to assert that if the stock of the Bell Telephone Company had been selling on the open markets since the outset, there would not have been the necessity for this increase of rates, because there would have been more money in the company carrying a lower rate of interest if bonds were issued, and certainly there would be more money in the company if the stock had been sold at the market price instead of at the par value of $100. This application of the Bell Telephone Company for increased rates, which was acceded to by the Board of Railway Commissioners to the extent to which I have stated, was made really by the American Telephone and Telegraph Company of New York, but through, of course, the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, which it controls. I am informed that the Board of Railway Commissioners definitely refused the people of Ontario and Quebec the right to argue their case in person, and that this attitude of the board was upheld, on appeal, by the government. Here is a condition of affairs, again, to which public attention should be directed. Here is a situation to which the public cannot be blind. Here was an application by a public utility company in which the public are very much concerned, and yet the public were denied the right to present their case in person.

It was conclusively proven at the same hearing to which I have referred that the Bell Telephone Company did issue its stock at par, $100 per share, to its shareholders. The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) is quite correct in stating that the stock was sold for $100 in cash, or its equivalent, and that that actually went into the coffers of the company; but the hon. gentleman did not add that in every case of stock issue that has come to my attention there has also been a gift, depending on the market price of the stock, ranging from $23 to $93 per share. In every case of that kind a part, if not all, of the increment should have gone into the treasury of the company, and so have prevented an unnecessary issue of stock. Hon. members do not require to examine into this procedure very far to see that if the company wants $15,000,000 of stock for development purposes, they can sell their stock at $150 on the market, and will not have to issue as much of it as if they were selling it to their own shareholders at $100 per share. In that way you keep down the fixed charges because of the lesser quantity of stock issued.

Under the present stock issue to the shareholders of the company, if it was all issued at the market valuation of to-day it would mean a gift direct to the shareholders of several million dollars, off the bat. That is a pretty nice little gift. In my opinion no public utility company should be allowed to do this. Its stock should not be available as a gift to the shareholders; it should be sold on the open market. Moreover, as I have said, less stock would be required if the company was obliged to sell it on the open market. This form of stock issue amounts to stock bonusing, although not by a direct stock bonus issue. It was largely because of this method of keeping the increment for the privileged shareholders that a larger stock issue became necessary than would otherwise have been the case, always followed, of course, by a corresponding straining of the earnings to meet the dividends on the increased quantity of stock outstanding. It is therefore quite apparent, Mr. Speaker, that so long as this company is permitted to make presents of its increment of stock to its shareholders there will be maintained as high, or even higher, rates than are now charged the users of telephones. Inevitably in the long run the telephone subscribers must pay for these periodical gifts to the stockholders.

This is a special form of legalized brigandage of the highest order. The other day my attention was called to a press despatch from New York, from which I learned that some four or five men had raided a candy factory and made away with $7,500, if I remember correctly, but the pursuit of the police was too close and the alleged bandits abandoned their car and their booty. The police continued their chase and left the car standing in the road. The nice, good men in the street promptly helped themselves to the money, and when the police got back to the car there was only $200 left. In my opinion as between the two types of thieves, the man who frankly went out and faced society as his enemy and took his chance was more courageous and of as high moral standing as the sneak who stole the money from the car. So I say, Mr. Speaker, that members of the community in Canada or in other country who continue to steal, from the users of telephones, gifts in the way of stock issues of this kind are as much brigands—although within the law unfortunately— as the men who entered the car and helped themselves to what had already been stolen by somebody else. The sooner this sort of thing is stopped the better it is going to be for the country. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I now move:

That the said bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole for the purpose of amending it by adding the following section:

3. No issue of the capital stock of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada shall be made except by way of offering the same to the public for subscription.

Hon. members will notice that I am not giving the bill the six months' hoist, I am not attempting to block its passage. All I am asking is that the stock be made available to the public for subscription, instead of apportioning the stock to the shareholders at par when it has a value of $170 on the open market. It is a fair proposal, and I feel satisfied that the thinking element in this House will support it. I feel satisfied that hon. gentlemen who have the public interest at heart, and who believe in the interest of the consumers rather than in the interest of the shareholders will support my proposal.

There is nothing further I can say on this matter, Mr. Speaker, except to urge that is would have been much wiser altogether for this house to have delayed the third reading of this bill until after we had dealt with the other bill that is on the order paper in the name of the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary). The hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Dunning) a moment ago was afraid that there might be introduced into this debate another and entirely foreign issue. Into the merits of his objection I need not now enter. All I wish to say is that the two bills are absolutely inter-related; one inevitably affects the other. Whether this house would in its wisdom pass the Bell Telephone bill after we had sanctioned the bill of the member for South Toronto is a very serious question in my mind. I do not believe the house would pass the Bell Telephone bill until the railway commission had had an opportunity of investigating the affairs of the Northern Electric Company.

I cannot agree with all that has been said by one or two members that have preceded me with respect to the profits that may have been made by the Northern Electric Company from the sale of standard goods supplied to the Bell Telephone Company. I have studied the evidence in the matter, and I agree with a statement made by the hon. member from St. Lawrence-St. George. It has not been brought to my attention at least that there have been any excessive charges by the Northern Electric Company. But the principle of the thing is what interests me. It is wrong in my opinion that a subsidiary should be allowed the possibility of milking a parent company. That is what I object to. I wish to direct the attention of the Minister of Railways to a statement in a report of the Public Service Commission of Virginia. In 1922 that commission had occasion to deal with this very question and an order was made directing disclosure of the factory and production costs and profits of two companies affected, and ordering them to prove that the public was not being imposed upon. The commission in its judgment said:

> To hold otherwise would be to hold that the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, a public service corporation, having obtained practically a monopoly of the telephone industry, may charter the Western Electric Company, a non-public service corporation, own 98 per cent of its stock, absolutely control its operation, policies and charges, and use it with impunity as a milkman to milk the funds of its local operating companies (which are public service corporations) into its own pail, without any possibility of control or restraint from this commission or any other governmental body, regardless of the extent to which the milking process might be carried.

Just in passing I would direct, as I say, his attention to statements of other commissions.

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend will permit me a question for my own information: He surely does not suggest that the same conditions apply in Canada, under the present law in relation to the railway commission, as are there depicted by the West Virginia body?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I will answer the question by saying this: The Northern Electric Company in Canada has virtually a monopoly of the handling of standard telephone equipment. Yes, they have. The hon. member shakes his head, but he is absolutely incorrect.

Mr. DUNNING: I have merely the experience of having been Minister of Telephones in my own province and of having bought equipment elsewhere than from the Northern Electric, having been able to get it in competition with them.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): My hon. friend is incorrect. The Northern Electric has a virtual monopoly—those were the words I used—in this country, because of the nature of its standard equipment. I have a very vivid recollection of an attempt made not long ago by a British telephone manufacturing company to invade this country and set up in business. First of all it had to climb over a tariff wall of from 20 to 27½ per cent, and after it got here it had to face the concentrated efforts of this one great corporation which has practically a monopoly of standard telephone equipment in North America—in Canada certainly. That being the case, and inasmuch as the directors of the Northern Electric are the same men who are on the directorate of the Bell Telephone Company, does the minister mean to assert for a moment that it is beyond the bounds of possibility that these directors would milk the subsidiary Bell Telephone Company for the good of the shareholders of the Northern Electric? An hon. gentleman suggests that it is the other way around; it might be. The minister has too much knowledge of modern commercial practice to assert that it is not possible for them to do this. It is a common practice to-day, and the reports of commissions which I have will testify to it. I have given one. It may not be an absolute analogy but it is of the type of practice to which I have referred.

I do not wish unduly to delay this bill going to a vote, and I will conclude with this remark. It is my sincere hope that hon. gentlemen opposite who in the past have joined with us in our opposition to the undue inflation of stock and to the unfair milking of the consumer will now support a simple amendment of this kind. It does not prevent the bill from being passed; it does not prevent the bill going through and the company getting the increase in capital. All it provides is that future stock issues must be made available for public subscription and not be given in part as gifts to private individuals.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): If much that has been said, and a great deal more that has been implied, regarding the Bell Telephone Company were accurate I should feel fully persuaded to resist this bill with all the vigour that has characterized the speech of my hon. friend from Bow River (Mr. Garland), who has just taken his seat. If the directorate of the Bell Telephone Company and the directorate of the Northern Electric were brigands and pirates—I believe that was the term used—then of course parliament ought properly to be alarmed at a bill of this character. I think however that possibly it was the anxiety of my hon. friend from Bow River to impress his views upon the house that led him to indulge in rather strenuous language in his expression of those views. The hon. gentleman is possessed of a degree of facility of speech which in my opinion made unnecessary the extreme statements to which he resorted.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I would remind the hon. member that counsel for Ontario, before the board, used language just as strong.

Mr. STEVENS: I heard some language read, emanating from an apparently very able legal representative before the railway board, and I must say I was mildly surprised, to say the least, at the vigour of it. I confess to having indulged in a similar practice myself occasionally, and I realize that when you have a rather weak case you can sometimes conceal its weakness by injecting into your language a little more mustard, shall I say, than perhaps would otherwise be necessary. I am free to say that it is with no great degree of pride that I look back upon those occasions upon which I have had recourse to this practice. And now that we are in this happy frame of mind, I may observe that the finest speech I ever made in my life, out of the few thousands that I have made, was of about five minutes' duration and of a character entirely different from that which I am now describing.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Give us another one.

Mr. STEVENS: I will try to do so, and I hope it will be as effective. There are a few points which I think the house might keep in mind in considering this question. In the first place, this is a public utility company, and under the statutes incorporating the company parliament has placed it, in so far as its rates and its dealings with the public are concerned, under the control and direction of the Board of Railway Commissioners. In all matters appertaining to its dealings with the public this company must submit itself to the railway board.

I propound to the house this question: Are we to accept the decisions of the railway board only when such decisions meet with our peculiar and particular views, whatever they may be? Let me make a slight personal reference by way of illustration. For many years I had the firm conviction that certain railway rates were inequitable and unfair, and yet those railway rates were on several occasions maintained by the railway board. It does not follow that you must refrain from appealing, logically, legally and reasonably, to the board to secure redress. That does not follow. But it does follow, I think, that we ought not in some other place to attack or discredit the decisions of the board. So far as this question is concerned, therefore, I take this position, that the railway board having dealt fully and carefully with this company in the matter of rates, I accept their decision.

In the second place, the railway board determined that it was fair to permit this company to earn 8 per cent on its investment. For the moment that is not in question. It might be a proper thing to say that their finding in that regard was unfair to the public, and to go before the board and say, "We believe it should be 6 per cent or 5 per cent" That is a reasonable position to take. But I do not think that we should say that the company constitutes a form of brigandage which is "milking" from the public unfair earnings, so long as it keeps within the decision of the board.

Another question has arisen, the question of the market price of stock. I wish to say one or two words on that point. It has been stated that the present market price of this stock is $165 or $170; I do not know whether or not that is correct but it will do for the purposes of argument. It is said that the price being $165 or $170, this stock therefore, should be issued only at that rate. What fixes the market value of stocks? There are two main factors, first the earning power of the stock, and then the value of money in the money markets of the world. When money is being loaned at the rate of 4 per cent, when prime securities are earning 4 per cent in the money markets of the world, a stock with a fixed earning power of 8 per cent will sell at a good deal more than par value. That is obvious. If in the course of a few months or a few days the money markets change, as they did a few years ago when government securities rose to 5½ per cent or 6 per cent, that stock with a fixed earning of 8 per cent will drop correspondingly. So it will go up and down, not particularly because of the condition of the company but because of the value of money in the markets of the world, which will regulate to a large degree the price of that stock which has a fixed earning power of 8 per cent.

There is another point to be considered; there is the element of risk to the owners of this stock in regard to earnings. Someone described this as a guaranteed stock. It is not guaranteed at all; it is a stock upon which the railway board have said they will permit earnings up to 8 per cent. Let us assume that a period of depression sweeps over the country and a large number of people give up their telephone service, which naturally follows during a depression. In such a case the earnings of the company might fall; that might be reasonably expected, and the earnings upon the stock would fall correspondingly. The owners of the stock take that risk of a drop in the earnings of the company. It is true that at present Canada is a young and growing country and that this company is constantly expanding, but it is not unreasonable to expect that during some period in these alternate cycles of prosperity and depression the earnings of the company may fall much below 8 per cent.

Mr. ADSHEAD: Then would they not immediately ask for an increase in the rates?

Mr. STEVENS: Possibly they would, and in such a case the railway board would take the whole situation into consideration and would determine as a judicial body whether or not that application should be granted. I think that is not a question with which parliament should concern itself. Seeing that the question has been raised, although it is not our business, perhaps we are justified in asking whether the rates are unreasonable. I have already said that we are not the body to determine that point; the Board of Railway Commissioners say the rates are reasonable, and I understand that they have increased these rates within the last year. Perhaps it is interesting to note that the rates paid in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec where the chief operations of the Bell Telephone Company centre are lower than those charged by any other telephone system in this country. That is worthy of being taken into consideration. I do not offer that fact as evidence that rates are fair, because the Board of Railway Commissioners have determined that point, but I do say that it is evidence that the rates are not highly unfair; it is evidence that this company is not being controlled by a band of brigands, and I submit that point for the consideration of the house.

Now we come to the question of the distribution of this stock. Some hon. members say the stock should be sold only to the public. I confess that that sounds not unreasonable, because during the past years it has come to be a common practice for companies to cut melons, to use very ordinary language which will be understood by everyone. This company does not cut a melon; its stock is sold. The question then arises as to whether or not they are selling it in an unreasonable way. To whom are they selling it? It is being sold to their own stockholders. I have taken the trouble to look up certain information from what was placed before the committee and what appears in the records of the Board of Railway Commissioners, and I find that 95 per cent of the shareholders of this company are in Canada, and over 65 per cent of this stock is owned in this country. Some hon. gentleman said a moment ago that this company is controlled by the American Telephone and Telegraph Company; that is not the case.

Mr. GEARY: That is the case; it has been so admitted by the Bell Telephone Company.

Mr. STEVENS: I will not argue with my hon. friend; I did not ascertain that from the evidence, although I frankly confess that I did not go through it very carefully.

Mr. GEARY: It has been admitted.
